In the Foreign Office the print is done exclusively by an old and trusted compositor in a private and carefully-guarded room When it is necessary to give the work to one of His Majesty's printers, as in the case of the draft of a long bill, the copy is given in minute sections, not exceeding three lines of type, to a large number of composito a. The arrangement of these sections in proper order is the duty of a highly responsible and trustworthy overseer, who alone knows the contents of the bill. And the moment the necessary proofs are printed the type is broken up and distributed.—

matter of fact, however, it was Lord Abardeen, the Foreign Secretary, who let the cat out of the bag," within a few hours of the Cabinet decision, by taking the news to The Times' editor himself.

There is no doubt, however, that Mrs. Norton and many another society lady have exercised their charms and fascinations in the discovery of Cabinet secrets, and have made substantic additions to their pin-money by the process.

But so varied are the ways in which these secrets may leak out that the wonder is they contrive to conceal themselves to well.
