A Seaman named Peter Kelly, belonging to the Schooner Vivian was knocked down, rendered senseless and robbed, in this city on Sunday night. He is now in the hospital suffering from the effects of the assault. He states that about nine o'clock Sunday evening he was going down Queen Street, intending to board his vessel. He saw a number of toughs at the corner of Queen and Water Streets, who had previously dunned him for money. To avoid them he started to go through a lane from King to Water streets, behind Riley's tobacco factory. He saw no one in the lane, but all at once he was struck on the forehead with either a brick or a bottle, and rendered senseless. He remembered nothing after that. Some time afterwards he was discovered, as if dead with his pockets turned inside out and all his money, $45 gone. The police were notified and the injured man removed to a place where medical aid could be procured and was afterwards taken to the Charlottetown Hospital. This is a pretty serious piece of business and we hope the perpetrators of the dastardly deed will be discovered and punished as they deserve.

DIED

Suddenly at his home on Weymouth Street, Wednesday 25th October, Augustus Morris aged 73 years. In Montreal on Thursday, October 29th, 1903, Honoria M. Thresher, widow of the late Mr. J. W. Morrison, in her 85th year.

Fire in the Vatican Palace.

At half past eight o'clock on Sunday evening feast of All Saints, fire broke out in that portion of the Vatican containing the Hall of Inscriptions, where the Pope gives his audience and which is adjacent to the famous Pinacotees, or gallery of pictures. The alarm caused much confusion and excitement in the Vatican. Strenuous efforts were made to control the flames, and the firemen of Rome were called to lend their help. At a quarter past eleven the fire was under control. No lives were lost. No idea of the damage can yet be obtained. The Pope came to the scene in person and remained until the arrangements to fight the fire were completed. At a little after eleven o'clock the fire was under control. The museum of inscriptions, the room of Father Ehrle, part of the library and the printing-presses were entirely flooded with water. Many things that escaped the flames were injured by water, especially the precious library of Pope Leo, which Father Ehrle was in the midst of rearranging in accordance with the last wish of the late pontiff. The fire caused greater sensation in Rome than has any other event since the death of Pope Leo. The outbreak of flame in such a conspicuous place wherein were many celebrated treasures brought out great numbers of anxious people, in spite of a torrential rain. The safety of the Pope was the first thought in everyone's mind, but this was soon assured. The first intimation of fire was had when smoke was seen issuing from the apartments of M. Marle, the celebrated French restorer of ancient manuscripts and illuminated books. The famous Bramante staircase leads to the part of the Vatican where the fire broke out. The gardener broke in the doors of M. Marle's apartment and found him in a heavy sleep. It is supposed that he retired and forgot to take proper precautions with his kitchen fire, which probably blazed up and ignited some nearby hanging. The fire rapidly assumed such proportions that the gardener gave an immediate general alarm. News of the fire was immediately conveyed to the Pope, who was found kneeling in his chapel for his usual evening prayer. He insisted upon going at once to the scene notwithstanding the fact that he was begged to first think of his own safety. When he arrived at the fire the gravity of the situation was seen by him and he ordered that the firemen of Rome be called. Meantime the flames had begun to break out the windows of M. Marle's apartment and were destroying the roof. They lighted up the entire district and gave the impression that nothing could stop the fury. The Pope withdrew as soon as he saw that everything possible was being done to fight the fire.
