

Beaver Flour

makes more bread to the barrel than any other flour on the market—bread that takes up water readily, 'stands up' well in the oven, looks well, tastes well and is light and nutritious.

Being a carefully prepared blend of Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat, Beaver Flour is also an ideal pastry flour, making the most delicious cakes, pies and biscuits.

Keeping two flours—one for bread and one for pastry—involves unnecessary expense and bother. Beaver Flour is best for both.

CHAPTER VI.

TEA AT HOME.

'Aunt Honor, I think he's right. Let's go home,' said Lewis; 'and Aunt Delia can come and pay us a long visit!'

'Jeanie and Maud would like it; but you might think them tiresome. They fiddle half their life away,' said Miss Honor.

'We are very good friends. I should like them; besides, Aunt Honor, I do dread the empty rooms.'

Now Mrs. Hamilton, Jeanie and Maud, Aunt Honor and Lewis had all settled themselves at Waycott Hall, and the effort having been made, Lewis began to realize that property rights over its owner, and that to shirk responsibility is an unprincipled as using it badly.

But it was Toney's appearance and Toney's talk which had at first drawn him out of himself. The idea that the family foe had saddled herself with such a relation was an idea too comical to be hidden.

'We don't want to see Lady Dove,' said Jeanie, and Maud echoed the sentiment.

'Well, I'll go with you,' said Miss Waycott, 'I shall have to go some time.'

'Maud you will enjoy it,' said Lewis to the youngest cousin, who was dauntless and pretty.

'Oh, no, Cousin Lewis. Tea parties are very stupid at Aldersfield.'

'Aunt Delia, can't I persuade you?'

'I'll call with the girls on a fine afternoon,' said Mrs. Hamilton smiling.

'You'll make her your enemy for life, Delia,' said Miss Waycott;

Why Not be Well and Strong

When weak and run down DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD will help you back to health.

This letter tells of two women who have proven this.

Mrs. D. Stott, Cobourg, Ont., writes: 'After recovering from typhoid fever I was left in a very low state of health. I was weak, nervous and not fit to do any work. A friend of mine, Mrs. G. M. Brown, had used DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD and told me that it benefited her wonderfully. I took courage and began the use of the medicine. After taking the first box I began to feel an improvement in health and now after using four boxes I am completely cured. I now feel like myself once more and believe that I can attribute the cure to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.'

Life is too short to spend weeks or months dragging out a miserable existence of weakness and suffering. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures by forming new rich blood and building up the system. You can depend on it to benefit you, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Toronto.

and Jeanie added.

'I think that won't hurt us very much. Last time I went Lady Dove asked me if I intended earning my own living now that we had lost our money in Carel's bank.'

'And what did you say?' asked Lewis.

'I said that Maud and I were preparing for the musical profession and she said, 'A very bad one indeed, Miss Hamilton.'

'Horrid old thing,' said Maud colouring, for she could not bear to be reminded that they were now poor.

'I wonder that you are so anxious to go,' said Miss Waycott, turning to Lewis.

'It is the place of the youngest family foe to make advances. By the way, Field tells me we are still disputing with the Doves about that mill stream. It's Lady Dove's doing and she says Sir Evas must go to law.'

'How foolish!'

'Extremely; but that is what we must expect! I will order the pony carriage at four o'clock, and we will go round the park road and into the village before going in to Aldersfield.' Lewis went off for a ride, and his cousins returned to practice their violins in a large room now called the schoolroom, for the girls were not to come out till the following June, when Jeanie would be nearly eighteen.

Lady Dove spent the afternoon in paying one of her periodical visits to the village school. She thought her duty to inspect the girls' needlework, and to hear a few of them repeat something. Miss Mellish, the schoolmistress, dreaded these visits because her ladyship managed to make everybody cross, herself included.

When Toney came in from her ride on the rocking-horse, as she expressed it, she found Miss Crump, with a pale face on which was a slight frown, looking despairingly at the flower vases in the drawing-room. She had not had one moment all day to enjoy the sweet spring air, and now the result of her afternoon's work looked dreadfully ugly.

'What's the matter, dear Crump? Do you know that is a jolly name for you? Soft—and well, you know! You don't mind, do you? It's a pet name.'

'Oh, Miss Antonia—the flowers are not, I am sure, well done, and Lady Dove will—it's something in my fingers, though I took as much pains as I could, and Lady Carew has a very keen eye for beauty, Lady Dove says.'

Toney ran up to a tall jar into which Miss Crump had, with great perseverance, inserted a poundweight of flowers.

'It is like a cabbage top, isn't it? Wait, Crumpet dear, I'll make this right. Pups said flowers knew me.'

With agile fingers she drew out those flowers which did not tone with the others, picked out here, put in there, rushed to pick a trailing creeper, and in ten minutes the vase looked beautiful.

'Oh,' said Miss Crump, 'and it took me such a time; if you would give a touch to this stand, Miss—'

'I won't unless you call me Toney.'

'Then Miss Toney—'

'No—Toney, Crumpet dear. You know I'm a poor relation; I don't want to sail under false colors.'

In her heart Miss Crump was amazed. In spite of her humility, she so much resented being a poor companion, that she could not understand Toney's frame of mind.

The girl's agile fingers were again soon at work, and only when the distant figure of Lady Dove was seen did Miss Crump speak again.

'Oh, now you must go. You are not dressed. Your riding skirt, I see, is still on. Give me those flowers, I'll throw them away!'

'Throw them away! Oh, Crumpet! How dreadful! What will they think? You must burn them. A funeral pyre, you know, is a very honourable way of dying, or else you must bury them underground, as we do.'

'Bury dead flowers?' said poor Miss Crump, too much astonished to notice Lady Dove's near approach till the carriage wheels were audible; then she exclaimed, 'Oh, do, do go; what will—'

Toney laughed; but in pity for Crumpet hurried off to attire herself in her simple morning dress. She had a 'Sunday' frock; but that, she thought, was quite unnecessary for any number of ladies and gentlemen, and only strictly necessary for going to church.

Miss Crump, in the meanwhile, made herself as small as possible, and shrank behind a large ottoman as Lady Dove and several ladies and gentlemen entered. It must not be thought that Lady Dove was always disagreeable. On the contrary, she could, at pleasure, put on exquisite manners, and Lord and Lady Carew, who now entered, were people to be treated with great respect, at least to their faces. She was now all smiles and affability, doing the honors of the bright spring day and of the sunshine as if she had created them on purpose to give Lady Carew pleasure.

'I really am glad to give you a fine day, Lady Carew. This peep is quite beautiful isn't it?'

'That sheet of water is certainly the glory of the neighbourhood,' said Lord Carew.

'So delightful for skating in winter,' said his wife.

'That careless husband of mine promised to be in,' said Lady Dove. 'I wonder where he is. No, that is not Evas. It must be our young Vicar, Mr. Hales. We gave him the living last year. He was in reduced circumstances.'

'Ah!' said Lady Carew, 'the clergy are very poor now what with glebes and dilapidations, Arthur says.'

'And they are so extravagant! Their wives and daughters will dress in the latest fashion. Ah! there is Sir Evas!'

Sir Evas came in and with him Mr. Hales and his mother. Lady Dove's greeting to them was cold and distant, and not calculated to set them at their ease, though she hastened presently to say:

'I must thank you for agreeing to my request about this unfortunate young relation. Of course we mean to do the best we can for her; though she has no real claim at all on Sir Evas—none.'

Mr. Hales bowed slightly, and then Sir Evas took him off to introduce him to Lord Carew. When tea was served, Miss Crump's duties began. She was expected to see that no one was in need of anything, and her shyness made this task very painful.

Other callers dropped in, and lastly, Lewis Waycott and his aunt were announced. Lady Dove managed to get near Miss Crump, and to whisper to her:

'Where is Antonia, Miss Crump? Why did you not see that she was ready? I—I told you especially to—'

At this moment, however, there was a sound of Trick's joyous bark outside, and a girlish, musical voice remonstrating audibly:

'Trick, go back; indeed, you must. You have not been invited.'

A loud bark followed as if in contradiction to this remark.

Then the door was burst open and Antonia and Trick seemed to come in together; the laughter and the bark in strange union.

It was indeed a most unfortunate moment for Lady Dove. Her face became crimson, and a young lady standing near the door giggled outright. Toney was dressed in her Norfolk jacket, and short skirt, as simple an attire as could possibly be imagined; but the bright color on her cheeks, the curling picturesque hair, and above all the expression of irresistible fun and good nature, added to the real beauty of the bright eyes, made a most attractive picture, delighting the eyes of the fashionable company.

Sir Evas came to the rescue.

'Toney, I beseech you, take the dog away.'

'But he won't ever go back, Uncle Dove. His motto is 'onwards.' It's Trick's peculiarity. Do run and open the window for him, and then he'll go, if he doesn't see a pair of tempting heels on the way. Oh, Trick, you have disgraced me! You know this was not in our time-table.'

To be continued.

Through the Postern Gate. This romance is in every way worthy of the author of the Rosary; wholesome, sweet, instinct with nobility, throbbing with life and with love. The confident wooing of the hero has in it much of unspiced human nature, and the hesitation of the heroine so much of tender foresight and solicitude, that one cannot but wish that life might often bring one in contact with characters of such rare naturalness and beauty.
