A Little Story of two Mount Allison Men WHO HAVE DIED IN BATTLE.

When he was a student at Mount Allison a few years ago Lieutenant John L. Godwin, recently killed in action in France achieved very little personal success in athletics and yet it was through him that a weak spot was plugged in a 'varsity football fifteen and a player developed who subsequently became one of the star full backs in the Garnet and Gold history. And like Lieutenant Godwin that full back has now given his life for the Empire they both were proud to serve.

It was in the season of 1909 that the football people at Mount A. were at their wits' end to find a full back. A half dozen players had been shifted from other positions in efforts to plug up that hole but none of them filled the bill by a long way. Leaving that one position out of the question, the team shaped up badly enough but with glaring weakness in the last defence—well, 'Jimmy' McWilliam, the quarter-back captain, was a worried sort of person. And he wasn't the only one.

Then, one evening Godwin strolled into McWilliam's room and listened to the football groans. "Why don't you try that Trappell," he said finally. Godwin didn't know much about football but when he and most of the other fellows had left the room McWilliam and one or two football men talked over his suggestion. They didn't think much of it—to tell the truth—but something had to be done. Next day Trappell was turned out at full back. He was surprised, no doubt, but he was a silent sort of a chap and made very few comments when the order came.

And maybe he didn't wake people up! His work wasn't "finished" but it was mighty promising. Don Trappell played through that season at full and next year he showed up in great form, saving Mount A. in more than one tight hole. And if it hadn't been for John Godwin some of the people who thought they knew more about football in a minute than he did in a year would probably never have turned Trappell out at all in that 1909 season.

Trappell, a Newfoundlander, went across the water with the First Canadian Expeditionary Force and gave his life for the Empire in the early fighting in which the Canadians took part—falling in battle about the same time that 'Dicky' Boone, of St. John's, and Verne Eldorin, of Parrsboro, two of his Mount A. chums were killed. Godwin went overseas with an artillery battery some few months ago and was killed a short time after his brother, Lieutenant C. Godwin, made the great sacrifice. — Amherst Guardian.

No Tin Mugs Now.

An Instance of General Brusiloff's Thoroughness.

Early in the war General Brusiloff discovered that the tin drinking vessels, or canteens, carried by the soldiers glistened in the sun, and so revealed the presence of the wearers, and drawing the enemy's fire. So he sent to Petrograd for half a million yards of grey felt, and in less than forty-eight hours every canteen was covered in it, and rendered, from the military point of view, invisible.

There are plenty of men now serving in the British Army who remember when our canteens were carried on the packs—uncovered. Moreover, the rule was that they had to be polished to the brightness of burnished silver. A more tempting mark, or one more likely to attract the roving eye of an enemy sniper, it would be almost impossible to conceive.

For instance, at Loos a British soldier fired at a round shining object which showed itself for a few moments above the edge of a German trench, without, however, in the least knowing what it was. A little while afterwards the trench was taken by assault, and the soldier went to see what he had fired at.

He found a German lying there dead, shot through the brain, and clonched tightly in his hand was his little tin drinking cup, the bottom holed by a bullet. The unhappy man had incautiously raised the cup in drinking, and his head with it, and the same missile had pierced them both.

In the Boer War, again, a marksman on the British side was responsible for an even more extraordinary eventuality of the kind. Firing at the glint of a tin canteen at something over eight hundred yards range, he hit it.

The owner of the canteen who, like the German mentioned above, was in the act of raising it to his lips at the time, was un wounded. But the impact of the bullet drove the food it contained into his gullet with such unexpected force and suddenness that he was choked to death by a piece of meat—some accounts say a crust of bread—which became fixed in his windpipe. — Pearson's Weekly.

"Life of France Depends on England."

Rotterdam, August 8.—Major Mohr writes as follows in the Berliner Volkszeitung:—

"The life of France depends upon England taking a further part in the war, and whether it is still prepared to shed more blood.

"England is apparently determined to set the future of the war on this card. First Lord of the Admiralty Balfour confirms that unbroken stream of men and munitions is being carried across the channel. For us this is a reminder that we must, as far as possible, break this undisturbed communication between England and France. Only when we have carried out our threat against English communication with the continent can we reckon upon relief on the Somme.

"In this Somme district the English heavy guns spit day and night on our trenches, positions and every visible place of communication for our trenches with such fury as was never before experienced. Although hundreds of thousands of projectiles explode without effect, there still remain zones of fire, the horrors of which can only be imagined by those who have been there."

Fashions and Fads.

Square parasols are in fashion. Wide silver ribbons are good for girdles.

Many of the new blouses are skirted.

Nose veils will probably be worn all winter.

Cape collars are features of autumn coats.

Metal brocades are in high favor among silks.

None but the slender should wear the founced skirt.

Kid shoes, with ornaments of cretonne set in are new.

There is a new clear blue among the millinery velvets.

More cotton waiats than usual will be worn this autumn.

Many coat sleeves are cut with a flare below the elbow.

Many of the coats of the fall suits are fitted to the figure.

The novelties for autumn neckwear are almost bulky.

Feather Surgeons.

Snipe and woodcock have often been taken with a mass of feathers on one of the legs. This mass when examined has always been found to cover a broken bone. The feathers have been carefully and neatly twisted round the part where the limb was fractured in such a way as to prove that they had been put on intentionally as a bandage or splint, and the repairs have been made quite as skillful as if performed by a qualified surgeon.

A well known naturalist actually watched a woodcock through his glasses drag a broken leg to the margin of a stream. There the bird took some clay and, after working it into a paste with its beak, smeared it round the leg in layer after layer, adding a number of downy feathers which it plucked from its own back and breast.

When the operation was finished the bird stood still for more than an hour, no doubt to give the plaster time to set.

Wounds on other parts of the body have also been found plastered in the same way. — London Answers.
