WATSON: "I'm sure I can't say much. He looks like a business man to me: probably a banker, and a man of decision.'

HOLMES: "Quite right, my dear Watson; but surely that isn't all. Observe his hat. There is much to be learned from the hat a man wears. I intend writing a monogram on the subject one of these days. It is one to which I have given intensive thought and study. Our man seems to be a free and easy sort of individual, accustomed to take life as it comes; note the debonair way the hat is tilted on his head. Precise and accurate; see how nicely the dent is made, extending almost three-quarters the side, yet not broken or irregular; certainly a neat person. Critical and conservative, the shape he wears is an established one, not freakish or extreme. Good judgment, shown when he selected the style that suits him admirably; see how finely the brim is curled, agreeing with the contour of his face. A man of means and one who chooses good clothes wisely; the hat is an expensive hat-a Bond Street product; note how wonderfully preserved the colour, though worn a long while, proven by the state of the inside band when he saluted that lady, yet the outside hasn't changed. Yes, that hat he wears is a

At the Majestic.

Frank Keehan, in "Thoroughbred," was seen at the Majesic Theatre last evening, when the acting of this splendid movie favourite was well liked by everyone present. picture, which is laid in the Southern States of America, Keehan is seen as one of the typical, gambling, horseracing, devil-may-care fellows that are always associated with the south. He is an enthusiast on horse-racing, and possesses a thoroughbred-Miss Minta-which he is intending to enter into the big annual horse race of the State. Meanwhile, the pastor the town, a young man, himself, strange to say, virile and red blooded is forcefully agitating against horse racing and all that it implies, and eventually the fight is won and racing prohibited by law. Suddenly Meehan is notified that his finances have run very low, and that he is practically ruined. The only thing hat could save the situation would be the winning of the race by Miss Minta. The big race has been arranged for in a bordering state, but through lack of money with which to pay the entrance fee, Mechan is unable to compete with his thoroughbred. How pastor, for love of Meehan's young daughter, voluntarily offers to pay the entrance fee, in defiance of his erstwhile openly expressed views agaainst racing, how Miss Minta wins the race and how happiness is restored all round make good seeing, and the picture a good success. A 2 reel comedy and an educational film make up a splendid show. To-night this will be repeated.
