It must be borne in mind that the prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta contain 170,000,000 acres of wheat land, and that only about 12,000,000 acres are under cultivation as yet. The land is inexhaustibly productive. This sounds like a fairy tale, but it is true, asserts the London Globe, that all or nearly all of the fruits of this productive soil pass through Winnipeg. There is some excuse, therefore, for the statement of the people of Winnipeg, that their city will some day be larger than Chicago.

CARROLL'S REMEMBERED AT THE LONDON ASYLUM

Man Convicted of Murder at the Soo Was a Patient Here.

William Carroll, who was sentenced to be hanged at the Soo today, for the murder of the asylum authorities. He was brought in last Jan. 12, 1902, from near Lucan, where he had been living for some time and working as a porter.

For some time before he was brought in it had been noticed that he was acting strangely, and when neighbors found him in his house on fire, and saying that he wanted to be hanged up in the fire, they had him placed in the asylum.

Carroll objected very strongly to this and used every effort to get away. Finally, however, he was brought to the asylum and for days he was in terrible fear that he was going to be killed. So great was this dread that he stayed hunched and hawking, and would, however, did not prove a serious one. For some time Carroll suffered greatly from melancholy and depression.

After some weeks' treatment he recovered somewhat, and on July 2, 1902, he was taken to a farm near Lucan, where he was finally located near Lucan with some friends. He behaved himself well, and the doctor who had charge of him, and on Nov. 24, Carroll's discharge papers were made out.

Carroll, it is stated, has a sister residing in London at the present time.

76 POUNDS

be invaluable. The hydrant for this first showed nearly 75 pounds of pressure.

Later three hydrants were opened, and again with three streams playing the pressure showed 76 pounds.

The electrical pumps were shut off and the deluge, set left in operation. The steam shut off, test, but it was still a fine stream. The pressure was about forty pounds.

All those who witnessed the test were amazed with it. Mr. Glauert expressed himself as delighted with the test, and I am sure that the city will have good fire protection now.

"We gave you 76 pounds of pressure at the hydrant," he said. The pressure on the ten streams going was 45 pounds. This I consider an excellent showing. At the station 100 and 100 pounds were registered. We gave 23 pounds more pressure than the best test the underwriters had some time ago. I will guarantee ten pounds additional pressure the next test we make. I have in mind the additional fact that the pumps are a little differently from the present method, and I am confident that they will give at least that much additional pressure. I am confident that Mr. Glauert, I am confident that the city will have good fire protection now.

"The test was very satisfactory," said Chief Aitken. "We had ten streams with plenty of force behind them. We had not the most favorable conditions for the test. The wind was blowing and blowing and that broke the streams up a great deal. However, we all had plenty of water under good pressure, and I consider a fine showing. I am confident that the city will have good fire protection now."

New York, May 11.—Ward Line steamer Merida, which left London today, was due in New York today. The Admiral Farragut is a passenger ship belonging to the American Mail Steamship Company.

The Farragut is bound for Philadelphia, where she is due today.

Later wireless dispatches announced that the Battleship Iowa had gone to the assistance of the Farragut. No details were given as to how badly the latter steamer was damaged in the collision. The Merida, a ship of 3,000 tons, carried about 200 passengers. The Admiral Farragut, a much smaller vessel of only 1,200 tons, carried fewer than 100 passengers.

The Merida sank at 5:45 o'clock in 14 fathoms of water.

A Canadian Aboard
Havana, Cuba, May 12.—On the passenger list of the Ward Line steamer Merida, which sailed from here Tuesday for New York and is reported in collision with the Admiral Farragut this morning, are William White, a Canadian; Philip Lynch, Robert Wright, Mrs. Wright and Anna Wright, Americans.

The Queen of England is being urged to use her influence to induce the King to sign a coronation year by instituting a new order exclusively for women who have distinguished themselves in literature, science, art or public work. It is proposed that the order shall carry with it the title "Lady." If the King is adverse to creating a new order it has been suggested that he might confer titles on several distinguished women, such as Mrs. Humphry Ward, Mrs. J. R. Green, wife of the historian, and Ellen Terry.

In tropical South America, and on some of the islands in the Pacific, is found the beautiful bird known as the Jacana, named after the weekly. It is famous for its so-called waltz dance, which is executed by the males to increase the admiration of the female. When the mating season approaches the Jacana will single out its favorite lady and try to win the admiration of the attentive female with all its bewitching manoeuvres. In the dance the wings are spread and worked in such a manner that the beautiful colored feathers produce a brilliant effect.

Despite the fact that the pumpkin in all its forms has found its fullest and most popular application in the United States, it is by no means certain that the plant has its first home on this continent. Some authorities say it did, and produce evidence to show that the aborigines of North America planted it among their maize. Others contend that it is of Asiatic origin, and still others point out that pumpkins have been cultivated in the country as an article of food in England since 1570.

JOHN RUSKIN; A STUDY IN PERSONALITY

By Robert Lynd, in London Daily News.

"Ruskin: A Study in Personality," by A. C. Benson, Smith Elder, 7s. 6d. net.

It was the "Gleaner" who wrote the funeral with the inscription: "There was a man sent from God, and his name was John." Ruskin's personality was unquestionably that of a prophet. He had even something of the old-maidish prophetic shrillness which Mr. George Moore finds so disagreeable. "I live," he wrote to the Brownings in 1859, "the life of an old lady in a house of wicked children, and do nothing but cry out—they won't leave me to my knitting needles a moment. Like Dean Swift, he belonged to the company of noble spirits who retreat themselves to the point of madness because of evil-doers. People were never more sane than I in my life. I am already quoted, getting a little weary of his viceroy's righteousness, but he was always right. Every one of the right road to a generation of drunken cabmen." Then he throws himself back upon his duties as a painter. Like Dean Swift, he belonged to the company of noble spirits who retreat themselves to the point of madness because of evil-doers. People were never more sane than I in my life. I am already quoted, getting a little weary of his viceroy's righteousness, but he was always right. Every one of the right road to a generation of drunken cabmen." Then he throws himself back upon his duties as a painter.

It was not, of course, in the nature of Ruskin to be comfortable. In the first forty years of his life he had built his own life of study and literature with art and morality as the doorkeepers; but, curiously as he was with the prophetic spirit of benevolence, he could find no peace in it. It was not, as Mr. Benson shows in the seven lectures in this book, the pleasure-house that disintegrated him; it was the people outside who refused his invitation to come in. "His disillusionment came not with art, but with humanity. When he found that the ordinary man did not care for art and could neither be inspired nor scolded into taking it seriously, he plunged into a study of the causes which made men so indifferent, so brutal, so materialistic. His investigations of society resulted in a soul-shaking pessimism about the present world—in a descent into hell such as is the doom of every sensitive idealist. The cruellest punishment he could not sit at his feet, unless he sat blindfolded."

Jack the Giant-Killer.

He now proclaimed, as Mr. Benson reminds us, that the commercial system was based upon the art of killing others, and that the only way to save the world was to save the soul.
