THE ADVERTISER BULLETINS ATTRACTED A LARGE CROWD

Many Tributes Paid Service, Which Was the Fastest and Most Correct in City-Traffic Blocked During the Final Sessions of Yesterday's Game.

Probably one of the largest crowds that ever gathered around a bulletin board in London during a world's series or any other sporting event, stood in front of The Advertiser office yesterday afternoon when the reports of the final game were being posted. There seemed to be an even number of Red Sox and Giants' supporters in the throng, and there was considerable cheering when the scores in the final innings were being put up.

The Advertiser's bulletin proved more popular than ever this year, and two policemen were kept busy keeping traffic open along Dundas street. When the ninth and tenth inning scores were coming in, the crowd jammed in so close to the bulletin board that the "cops" were nearly swept off their feet, and for some time all traffic was blocked. As in former years, The Advertiser had the fastest and most correct service in the city.

The bulletins were posted "hot off the wire," and only a few minutes separated the time when the plays took place until the time London fans were reading an account of them in front of this office. Many favorable comments of the service were heard on all sides, and several tributes were paid on the efficiency of the bulletins. The Advertiser sporting extra was first on the street on six occasions, another evidence of the policy of this office in giving the public the very latest in the quickest possible time.

Already arrangements are being made for a "bigger than ever" bulletin service next year when the baseball season starts, and local fans can be assured of something even better if that can possibly be.

duties of a "frat" freshman.

"Answer the doorbell, you big country jake," ordered an upper classman brother. And Stahl obeyed. Thereafter he was "Jake" in college and everywhere else. The name seemed to fit, somehow. Stahl did not flash across the college world like a meteor from the moment he bit the Illinois campus. The first year he ranked as a "prep." He participated in "prep" athletics, but made no stir. In his second year, a full-fledged freshman eligible for varsity athletics, he donned a football suit.

At the sight of him the coaches fell on his neck, placing him at fullback. He played good football but was not a sensation. An error had been made in sending him to the back field. Next he played right guard, where his strength and speed brought him fame. No one thought of Jake as a baseball player. Not until his third year did he muster courage to report to George Huff,

LOUIS SERIES tomorrow must give primary importance to the serious social and economic problems which today confront comorrow must give primary importmic problems which today confront civilization the world over. Mr. Rowell spoke on the question of workmen's compensation, and evidenced his extensive study and thorough understanding of the problem n a speech replete with information oncerning development along the lines of industrial reform both in the old world and the new. "In the past," said he, referring to the situation in Ontario, "we have devoted ourselves very largely to promoting material development. have been concernedd with the creation of wealth. In the days to come we muot wrestle with the equally important problem of the distribution of wealth President J. K. Pickett occupied the chair, and there was an exceptionally large attendance of members present.

Mr. Rowell, who got a flattering reception, entered at once into the discussion of the topic assigned to him. He pointed out, relative to the situation in this province, the rapid decline in rural population, and the more than corresponding increase in urban population. "The problem of the country is serious enough," said he, "but it is with the increasingly important problem of the city that I deal on this occasion." Alluding to the serious social and industrial experiences in the world and the United States, Rowell counselled Ontario to Mr. guided by the experience of older ivilizations. Liability Question.
