At the evening service, Mr. Hunter commenced a series on "Beacon Lights of Sacred History." The first Lights of Sacred History." The first was "Cicero, Who Saw the Stars." In this, he made a stirring appeal to young men and women to become allied in early life with the great spiritual forces which make for righteousness. He pointed out to them how the individual of indifference or neutrality with regard to Christianity must sooner or later have something of the experience of Christianity, for the great moral forces, he said, were organized and forces, he said, were organized and re-inforced by contributions from their forefathers in bringing the
