Of course, the fact that we like John Smith does not of neces-sity mean that we will like all of John Smith's friends or that they will like his Consequently. rather nerve-racking thing to face having to make their acquaintance, knowing that your friend is anxious to have you like each other, and knowing that you are being weighed in the balance by them.

If your friend's liking for you is ground, and sincere—and I take for genuine and sincere-and I take granted that in this case it must be, or you would not call your host an intimate friend—he should not be influenced by the opinions others whether or not friends of longer duration than you.

In spite of the fact that he should ot be influenced by their none of us can help feeling tha many people are so influenced. And if you are really quite fond of the man in question, you are, naturally, anxious to make a favorable impression on his friends.

Leads to Stiffness,

This has a tendency to make some sople a little stiff and self-conpeople a little stiff and self-con-scious, which is always a mistake. Affectation or posing will undoubt-edly make a bad impression on hit-and gain you nothing with hi-friends. Above everything, be nat-At first, at any rate, until begin to have some knowledge of the friends, take a passive rather than aggressive position in the conversaaggressive position in the conversa-tion, being interested (or outwardly interested, if not inwardly) in the conversation that they and your nost nav commence.

Above all, no matter now much you might prefer to talk to your friend, don't do it except in general conversation, if the other couple are man and wife. It is the evening you man and wife. It is the evening you must devote to pleasing and entertaining his friends, and in that way furthering your friendship with him. Not Congenial.

As I have already said, it may happen that you and they are not at all congenial. That is neither your fault nor theirs, and should have no effect on your friend's feeling toward you. But irrespective of whether you ever see them again, in as superficial an evening as that of a first meeting, there is never any reason for you to leave them with anything meeting, there is never any reason for you to leave them with anything but a pleasant impression.

In other words, even if they do not at all attract or interest you, even if you disagree with their ideas, do not in any way show it. This is not being hypocritical, for on first acquaintance there is no reason to being hypocritical, for on first acquaintance there is no reason to show your feelings or argue about your opinions unless you feel attracted towards, or interested in, the reacted towards, or interested in, the new acquaintance. ELIMINATE STRAPS. Special to The Advertiser.
London, Dec. 22.—Half a dozen smart shops are making a specialty of the strapless undervests at present. These garments are so constructed, with a straight neckline and by means of elastic inserts, that the straps are eliminated.

'XMAS ENTERTAINMENTS IN EXETER CHURCHES

Exeter, Dec. 21.—Caven Presbyterian Sunday school entertainment on Thursday evening was a great success. The scholars were treated to a supper and to candy and oranges. Superintendent J. G. Stanbury, B.A. acted as chairman. The feature of the evening was the pantomime entitled "Hely Night," which was well put on. Special to The Advertiser.

Main street held their entertainment on Friday evening, when an ex-cellent program was presented, after which Santa Claus unloaded the tree.
