

spending an hour or two among its tombstones. The winding walks, the bushes, the evergreens, the mosses, and the multitudes of flowers that grow there, and the multitudes of stately and costly monuments that meet your eye at every turn, are at once imposing and impressive.

There was one monument in particular which never fails to attract the attention of visitors. It is large and plain, and has the scotch thistle on the top of it. The material of which it is built is fine gray granite and was erected to the memory of Robert Wallace, M. P. for Greenock, who died some years ago. He was the descendant and representative of the renowned champion of Scottish independence. This tribute to his memory was erected on the spot chosen by himself before his death. From this elevated point you get a fine view of Port Glasgow, Dumbarton Castle, and a considerable portion of the Highlands of Scotland.

In leaving Greenock we took the steamboat and had a very pleasant sail up the Clyde to Glasgow. It is astonishing to see the number of large iron boats and battering rams building along the side of the river. On the following week I visited Stirling, Perth, Montrose, Aberdeen, Frockheim, and Dundee. There are a great many interesting and attractive objects to take up the attention of visitors in these localities; and one which towered up above all the rest in interest to ourselves was the Wallace monument now being erected near Stirling. I would like to say something about this great work of architecture and other monuments which we saw; but I must for the present close. I shall probably have other two or three articles on my visit to Scotland in the pages of the Star. I may just state here that I returned to Toronto on the 14th of Nov. encouraged and cheered by the success which attended my mission. The amount which I received to help our Church in Toronto was upwards of one hundred and sixty pounds, and after defraying all expenses, will go far to help our infant cause in Toronto out of pecuniary difficulty. I am also fully satisfied that the churches at home in connection with the E. U. denomination will in future take much more interest than they have done in the past in foreign missionary work.

The Spirit knocks at the door of the heart, by means of the events of Providence, to call the sinner's attention to his state before God and God's remedy in Christ. Hence we should be observant of God's dealings with us.
