

One, indeed, has gone from amongst us, of whom it has been a common remark that, "take him for all in all, we shall not look upon his like again." This feeling has been produced by the rare combination of good and attractive qualities which found themselves so happily associated together in our estimable Dean. As a professional man—and he was that before all things—in how many ways was he an example to us all,—able, skillful, devoted, untiring towards his patients—courteous, generous and invariably considerate towards his confrères—energetic, zealous and enthusiastic in all touching the progress of the medical art and science—always upholding, by word and deed, the dignity of that profession to which he was proud to belong—kind and encouraging to every brother honestly practising his profession in a straight path, but an uncompromising foe to every kind of professional dishonesty or hyprocrisy. No wonder that there gradually grew up for such a man a feeling of rare warmth and affection, a feeling which we know to be shared by all within our ranks. No matter how else divided, on this point there was unanimity, viz., that in Dr. Campbell we recognized a noble example, whom to imitate was to do right.

With Dr. Campbell has passed away one of those links, now so few, which joined the present generation of medical practitioners to a past one. Possessed of the best technical education which was afforded at that day, Dr. Campbell came to this new country to make his own way in the world. How well this was accomplished, and what well-merited success he met with, is known to all. Whilst thus pursuing his way to name and fame, no selfish aims were ever allowed to obstruct his exertions in the common cause. Endowed with great strength of character, combined with an excellent judgment in all the ordinary concerns of life, he always interested himself in every
