

The orthography adopted in the former work has been adhered to in the present one, the h being uniformly rejected after t. The Latin characters, having been so generally welcomed, have also been retained. The special features of the Notes and Glossary, in respect to accentuation and fulness of grammatical information, have also been retained, and even extended. With respect to the former point, much greater accuracy has been attained in the present work than in the former, in spite of the very great typographical difficulties which presented themselves. These have been successfully surmounted by the exceptional skill of the printer, to whom it is but due that this slight acknowledgment of his ability and fidelity should be made.

For pupils and teachers who have already used the former work, it is hoped that the questions (chiefly on construction) which we from time to time suggested, will prove acceptable. Occasional use has been made of Schlottmann's edition of "Das Wirtshaus im Spessart," from which this tale is taken; but due acknowledgment is made in each case.

To Mr. W. H. Fraser, B.A., of Upper Canada College, the editor's thanks are due for assistance in reading the proofs of the Glossary, and for many valuable hints.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, TORONTO, }
August, 1886. }