

Good has resulted from it already. We have found it pleasant to work together, and hope that soon a union may be effected, for carrying out other schemes of benevolence.

If we are the servants of the same Master, why should we not unite in carrying on the common work? There is no better ground, on which all may meet, than the spreading of the pure Word of God. Surely no one who has felt how refreshing to her own soul have been the words drawn from that Sacred Fountain—who has felt that for every sorrow, every discouragement, every doubt, every fear, there is some sweet promise there,—will hold back, if she have the time at her disposal. "My grace is sufficient for thee; for my strength is made perfect in weakness."
