CHARLEY'S LUCK.

Charley Wiburn and I are seem to belong to the family at all. We had no end of relations, and he was a general favorite with all, telt ashamed of myself; nor, when I regarded the major, and noted the open, manly look the fine old soldier gave back to me, could I bring myself to think of him as a scheming old fortune-hunter.

Such good friends did we three become that I lingered on in the company of the soldier gave become that I lingered on in the company of the major.

You might not think it enough."

"How much is it, then?" I asked.

"Fifty thousand pounds!" said the major.

And this is what Charley lost and I gained by that journey—

Milly (worth more than all) and £50,000.

I shook my head. "Have heard much as mentioned. of him; never saw him," I said. since I was a boy. It's a rare and always will be, I suppose."

consent—as I generally did where Charley was concerned.

I took the lawyer's letter, as a sort of credential, and set out, grumbling a good deal at what I considered Charley's "cheek" in thus making use of me. If I had it was only because I had worked at it anore constantly, and now instead of reaping the advantage in the shape of a few days' rest, he made it an excuse for sending nue

FLOUR FEED, HAY, OATS, MOLASSES, OILS, TOBACCO, CIGARS, CONFECTIONERY TEAS, HAM, BACON ETC. ETC. off on a lugubrious mission like down: this; and Charley would, no doubt, "I think you had better speak to; have a good lagacy, too, out of it.

"I don't suppose it's much," he said to me. "Perhaps a hundred or two—hardly worth going down or two—hardly worth going down or two—hardly." I rapturously exclaimed; "What!" I rapturously exclaimed; "Go you really bid me hope, Milly? Do you really think there is a Certain thoughts are prayers. There are for, you know!"

IMPROVED PREMISES So I had to go-with no legan, in view at all, small or large! However, as I have said, I set out for the place—it was Devonshire—and in due course I arrived at the little town and put up at an hovel for the night. The funeral was fixed for the following day, and on inquiry I learned that the house I had to go to was only a short distance away.

The next day, therefore, saw me
