JACK McLEAN A FIGHTER.

Has Bested Kid McCoy and May Have a Try at Jeffries—May Be Champion.

That St. Louis is now the home of the man who may some day wrest the title of the world's championship from James J. Corbett is the opinion held by Tom Corbett, says the St. Louis Republic.

Corbett, who has watched the rise and fall of many of the great gladiators of pugilism, says that Jack McLean, the giant backstop of the Cardinals who has played in St. John several seasons, is the most likely looking pugilistic aspirant now before the public.

The Republican's comments concerning an athlete so well known in St. John will be amusing reading to many hereabouts. The Republic says: "Recently he donned the padded mitts with McLean, and after boxing with the young Hercules, stated that he believed McLean had as good a chance as any man in the world to beat Jeffries."

McLean is a larger edition of Jim Corbett. In his stocking feet this young giant stands 6 feet 8 inches, and he is built in proportion. He tips the scales at more than 230 pounds. Not only is McLean a boxer and ball player, he is also an all-round athlete.

While "Kid" McCoy was touring the country he butted into McLean. He saw McCoy's predicament, and chopped several minutes. After their impromptu bout Corbett said McLean would do.

McLean is firmly convinced that he can beat many of the heavy-weights now masquerading around as possible opponents of Jeffries. When McLean was in the city he paid a visit to the baseball grounds. He was pointed out to McLean, the big ball player, and suggested a bout to try out the big ball player. The former champion and McLean went at it for several minutes. After their impromptu bout Corbett said McLean would do.

When Jim Corbett was in the city recently he strolled out to the baseball grounds. The former champion was struck by McLean's wonderful strength and suggested a bout to try out the big ball player. The former champion and McLean went at it for several minutes. After their impromptu bout Corbett said McLean would do.
