THE FUNERAL OF CAMPBELL Chain Cables, Anchors, Tin Plates, &c. The subscriber is now landing ex the Barque Ware, from Liverpool-10,000 Bars of Common Escusa IRON, well

BY CHARLES SWAIN. When England's shore lay wild and dark, Save the far bacco's misty spurk. Like mourners round the fowers bark, The waves same rolling solemnly.

And all the winds were breathless bow'd With we too lasting to be loud, And lay the Bard within his shroud, When waves were rolling solemnly.

While slow the funeral vessel swept. Hope kneft, where cold her minstrel slept, And o'er that brow of genius wept The tears of immortality.

The flag that England's valour bors Mid ocean-blast and battle's roar, Wken left the bearse that wailing shore, Droop'd mid the death-gloom drearily.

Mourn, hapless Hohenlinden, mourn ! Thy bard to dust and darkness borne, Whose voice can never more return To breathe the hymn of liberty.

Mourn, mourn for him, Britannia's isle, Whose harp is reft, and mote the while. That sang ' The Baltic' and ' The Nile,' With Nelson's fame exultingly !

Years, years shall roll, and stars may throng Around the classic heaven of song. But never Fame hear one prolong

"Fis morn : the sunlit clouds have thrown A solemn grandear half their own O'er abbey aisle and scalptured stone. Where England's dead rest gloriously.

There, mid the mightiest bards of earth, The few that centuries gave to birth. All crown'd around with classic worth, Our Campbell sleeps eternally.

Though darkness wrapt the poet's mould Till time hath heaven's decrees unroll'd, Still fature ages shall behold The bard of Hope's ascendency.
