TIMOTHY SEED, RED and ALASKA CLOVER SEED,

WANTS VERSUS INCOME.

The Standard of Living Must be Governed by the Salary.

(Charles L. Tuck.)

There is, perhaps, no question affecting family life, more often discussed, or one that calls for more diverse opinions, than that of the income necessary to support a family. No amount can be given that will be adequate to meet the wants of every family, even if all were in the same grade of society. Families, like individuals, differ in taste and what is a luxury to one is but a necessity to another. The income of the family does not decide whether the family shall live in rest and comfort, but the wants of the family; when they are allowed to exceed the income, there can be neither rest nor quiet. If the income of a family is $5,000 per year, and the wants require an income of $10,000, there can be no more peace in the family than in that of the day laborer whose family demands $8 per day comforts at $1.50 per day income. The secret of contentment lies far more in the curbing of wants than in the increasing of income.

The standards that people make decide the question of whether their income is sufficient or not. If the family compelled to live on a thousand dollars a year makes an eleven hundred standard of living, they are always $100 dollars a year the standard, they are always $100 ahead. It is possible for a family to live on $1 a day and pay all expenses, but it takes a long time to do it. The standards that people make decide the question of whether their income is sufficient or not. If the family compelled to live on a thousand dollars a year makes an eleven hundred standard of living, they are always $100 dollars a year the standard, they are always $100 ahead. It is possible for a family to live on $1 a day and pay all expenses, but it takes a long time to do it.

HOME RULE RESOLUTIONS.

Blake Moves his Home Rule Resolutions.

And Costigan Makes an Amendment.

Discussed by Several Members of Parliament.

OTTAWA, May 6.—In the house of commons to-day, the entire session was devoted to the discussion of the Irish home rule question. Hon Mr. Blake said that as he had not received any pretexts as to any modification of his resolution, he would present it anew as a substantive motion; he then moved the resolution presented by him at Tuesday's sitting.

Hon. Mr. Costigan followed, and referred to the arguments he had set forth in his reply to the deputation of Irishmen, which had waited on him, to persuade him to take the matter up himself a few days ago. It was not true that he refused to do so, because he was afraid the motion would be defeated. Considering the opinions of the people generally, and of his countrymen in particular, regarding this question, he could not say, although he would not support such a motion from whatever source it might come. Irishmen would not care in what form the motion was passed, as long as they were assured of the sympathy of Canadians. He then proposed an amendment to Mr. Blake's motion, and if Mr. Gladstone had so appreciated the congratulatory received from Americans, how much more valuable would be accounted the support of this parliament at the present time, especially considering the large conservative majority in the house. It would then show that the fitness of home rule for the people of Ireland was recognized by both political parties in Canada. That this would be appreciated was evidenced in Gladstone's recent manifesto where he states that he never knew a question which had taken such a strong hold on the public mind. Congratulations had been forwarded from Quebec, Washington, Boston and Cincinnati. He characterized hon. member's excuse as of the most flimsy description. He (Costigan) referred to the mutilated resolution, but the leader of the opposition had accepted it as it was, rather than cause any effect that the motion should not be addressed to her majesty. He
