Report condemns Columbia admin

NEW YORK (CUP) - The Cox commission, established to study the Columbia University revolt last spring, lashed out at the university administration and New York police in its report released Oct 5.

The administration, the report said, "conveyed an attitude of authoritarianism and invited mistrust": the police used "excessive force" and "engaged in acts of individual and group brutality causing violence on harrowing scale.'

tactics" but said the brutality of the police was not warranted.

The acting president of Columbia, Andrew Cordier, warmly thanked the commission for its work and siad the university "was indebted" to the commission

On the other fronts, criminal court justice Arthur H. Goldberg dismissed criminal trespass charges against 87 Columbia students arrested last spring.

The report also indicted He did so despite complaints students for their "disruptive from the Manhatten district attorney's office that the university had been made a testing ground for those engaged in the politics of "intimidation, revolution and violence."

The charges were dismissed, after a university dean said the administration had its own means of discipline and pleaded for leniency. It is expected that the remaining 313 cases of criminal trespass will be dropped as well.
