English Settlers.

There are two English gentlemen here, whose names we withhold for the present, each looking for a farm and cottage on the environs of the city to buy. One is a young man and a very accomplished artist. Should he succeed in getting a suitable place, he will send for his wife and child who are in Eng-land: the other is an old gentleman of con-siderable means who wishes to buy a farm for his son, who with his sister is with the old the poor. his son, who with his sister is with the old gentleman.
