THE JERSEY COW.

The Jersey cow, which until recently was generally considered "more ornamental than useful," is fast becoming a general favorite, not only as a family cow, but as a valuable adjunct to the dairy. The delicate objections as to her being very delicate and requiring extraordinary care do not apply to the animals raised in this country, where they have to contend with the extremes of heat and cold of our northern climate, and live on the same kind of food as the other cows in the herd or dairy. Doubtless some cows are more hardy than others, and this applies to cows of any and every breed as much as to the Jersey. Even in the Jerseys imported direct from their native home, a little island from where they derive their name (being one of the Channel Islands, a small group on the coast of France), there are some hardy cows of the mountainous district, and the larger and softer breed of the warm and sheltered valley, differing widely in color and structure, but always possessing the same dairy qualities. One of the principal characteristics of the Jersey is her persistent and continuous milking qualities, even when very young. To illustrate from personal experience, the writer bought a Jersey heifer that had been in milk about five months, and was supposed to be pregnant, but in the spring, when she should have been near her time of calving, it became apparent that she was not with a calf. She continued to give milk through the summer and winter, falling off to about three quarts when only about six weeks from calving, and never going dry, even for a single day; and not only so, but her milk contained the finest quality of butter to the last day she was milked, only ten days before calving. Thus for fully twenty-three months a heifer that had but one calf continued to milk, and so efficiently was continued in churning butter throughout the entire winter. Since calving last spring this same cow has continued to give from eight to ten quarts of milk per day, and to make from six to eight pounds of butter a week.

FOUND IN A DREAM.

One of the most peculiar freaks of psychological phenomena ever brought to light has recently culminated near Phoenix, Arizona. In 1859 two brothers, A. B. and Luther Ellett, lived in Nemaha county, Kansas. Luther chose the part of the warren and went west, presumably to Colorado, and nothing more was heard of him except vague reports that he had been killed by Indians. The war was over and A. B. Ellett served four years in the army, coming out in 1865 completely broken in health. He returned to Kansas and settled down on his farm near Sabetha, where he remained until recently. He accepted rumor as truth and not getting any letters from the brother, regarded him as dead. In 1889 he was afflicted by the breaking out of an old wound and was confined to his room for many weeks. During that time he dreamed that his brother was alive and in Prescott, A. T. It seemed that they were together in the mountains, and in passing down a canyon they discovered a rich gold mine a few miles from an old abandoned shaft once owned by Luther. The dream made little impression on him, but the next night it was repeated, and even the trees and the outlines of the mountains were perfectly impressed on his mind. He did not heed other side of the mine being there, for the smell of gold had never been out of his nostrils, and he did not know quartz from lava, but he thought it worth while to make some inquiry about his brother, which he did. A letter directed to the position that his brother was an old resident, but was then out in the mines. A correspondence began between the two brothers, and during its course the part of the dream relating to the mine was divulged. Being in that vicinity one day Luther Ellett looked for the mine but found nothing. The matter passed along until a month ago, says the San Francisco Chronicle, when the Kansas brother concluded to visit his relative in Arizona, and at the same time to look for the mine. He still had an inclination to look for the mine but was ashamed to own it. His brother met him in Prescott, and after staying a few days there they went to the mountains and visited the old abandoned mine.

AFRAID HE WOULDN'T PASS.

He was a man well along in middle age and was willing to be insured. The agent had prepared his application, and turned him over to the searching scrutiny of the accomplished medical examiner. "I might as well tell you, doctor to begin with, that our house has been a family of fatalities and sudden deaths," said the applicant. The examiner looked serious as he replied: "Why, you seem to be in excellent condition. What did your father die of?" "Heart disease," he replied. "That's bad. How old was he?" "Ninety-two." "Um! And your mother?" "She's gone, too. Killed at a crossing." "And her age?" "Mother was a little over seventy." "Do you know the age and cause of your grand father's death?" continued the examiner. "Yes, indeed. Father's father died just after his ninetieth birthday. They said he used too much tobacco. Mother's father was killed by a falling log. Father got into trouble there, called a drunken man a liar and was shot. Henry was drowned at sixty-nine trying to help save two young fellows that couldn't swim. Sister's alive. She's awful careful, at a lot of green stuff the day of her golden wedding, then danced in the evening with the old fellows out on the lawn, even after it was raining, took her two days to get over it. She'll go in a hurry like all the rest of some of these times."

WILLED HIS HEART TO HIS WIFE.

Major Earl Brandt, an old German newspaper man, who died recently at St. Louis, left a will containing a queer bequest. He bequeathed his heart to his wife, and left directions for placing it in her possession. It seems that Major Brandt married twice a young man, and his wife is still living in Germany. For some reason his married life was unhappy, and he came to America, leaving his wife in the old country. Though estranged from her for life, it seems that his love for his wife never ceased, and he frequently declared that as his heart was still hers she should have it after his death. In accordance with the provisions of the will, the heart has been removed from the body, and forwarded to Mrs. Brandt.

TONS OF DEAD CROWS.

Thousands of dead crows lie upon the ground under the trees on the mountain side of Frush Valley, Pa., beyond McKnight's Gap. This place has been a roosting place for crows for many years. The unusually cold severe winter and the deep snow have killed the birds. There are said to be tons of them scattered about the mountain at this famous roosting place. The coldness has blinded many of them so they cannot find any food.

BLANKETS.

How can farming be made to pay? It is still an open question, and to many thousands of farmers it will continue to be "the unknown quantity in an intricate problem" until some means is devised by which the winter season can be made sufficiently profitable to meet at least the household expenses of the farm, instead of consuming in winter what is made in summer, as is too often the case at present.
