The Mystery of Rutledge Hall

—OR—
"The Cloud With a Silver Lining"

CHAPTER XXXIII.

"You were sure the inquiry could lead only to one result?"

"Yes. There could be no doubt of this. Sometimes I think that she herself, poor child, has no doubt of it, and it is that that is killing her."

"Did she care for him so much?" said Lloyd, looking up suddenly.

"I think so," she cared for him; and a woman like Sidney loves like that only once."

The rest of the brief journey was performed in silence, both men seeming preoccupied, and absorbed in the papers they held open before them.

But in reality neither was reading. The lamps were being lighted in the Queen's Road as they drove away from the station, and the Parade was comparatively quiet and deserted. It was a fine evening, clear and cold; the houses along the Parade were lighted up, and at the door of the house that Sidney occupied a gay party of equestrians had just alighted, and were going up the steps, while the grooms were leading away the horses.

"Why, here is Stephen!" said Robert Burton, turning as the cab stopped, and there were merry greetings in the hall and gay voices and some noise, which Dolly checked by saying they would startle Sidney.

"Sidney has not been out to-day," she said to her brother; "she has a slight cold, and we thought she had better remain at home. Argie is with her."

Even as she spoke, a tall, graceful, fair girl appeared, coming down stairs—a gentle-loving girl, with lovely gray eyes, and a profusion of fair brown hair—Lady Agnes' eldest daughter.

"Sidney wanted to know what all the noise was about," she said. "Stephen, is it you? Oh, I am glad! Will you come up? Sidney was afraid something had happened," she added; and Stephen followed her up-stairs. "She has not been very well all day, and is easily startled, you know."

Easily startled—evidently, judging by the intense palor and wild, frightened eyes of the face which was turned toward the door as they entered.

while the little lips were trembling so that speech was impossible.

"You see there is nothing wrong," Agnes Burton said, gently—"quite the contrary; Stephen and Mr. Milner have arrived."

"I thought—I thought—something had happened," Sidney faltered, her little hands closing over her husband's with a feverish clasp, as if they would never let him go, as he bent over her.

"I am absurdly nervous," she added, trying to laugh. "Did you leave all well at Ashford, Stephen?"

"Yes—all well," he answered, cheerfully, and then sat down by her sofa and asked her one or two questions about herself; and Argie went away and left the husband and wife together, thinking that she pleased them both by so doing.

"You will like some tea," Sidney said, eagerly—"it will refresh you after your journey—and the girls will like some after their ride. Ring for it, please."

Tea was brought, and the young people made a simultaneous appearance. Dolly and Jessie Burton still in their habits, rosy and bright from their fast ride through the keen air, the young men animated and cheerful, although Robert Burton, who had a strong inclination to fall in love with Dolly, was rather reserved in his manner toward Lloyd Milner.

Agnes poured out tea, and the young men made themselves useful in handing the cups and the macaroons and bread and butter, and the drawing-room was bright and cheerful with light and gay chatter, the principal topic of conversation being a fancy ball to be held at the Pavilio during the coming week, which the young ladies were looking forward to with great eagerness.

Neither Stephen nor his wife took much share in the conversation. He still retained his place beside her sofa, and Sidney was lying back on her cushions, looking pale still, but calm and quiet. She wore her favorite black velvet gown with a fleecy white shawl over her shoulders, and she lay listening absently to the chatter, smiling faintly now and again as some of the young men's witticisms amused her for a moment.

To all outward appearance, it was a very happy and careless group of young people who were assembled in Sidney's drawing-room, and the chat and laughter were very general. Lloyd Milner, joining in it gayly, had yet time to keep rather a close scrutiny of Sidney Daunt, looking at her now and again with a new interest and sympathy on his pleasant face, and eyeing her with a watchfulness which he carefully concealed however, and which only Dolly noticed.

After a time the conversation began to lag a little. The ball and the costumes had been exhaustively discussed, and the girls were beginning to think of going up to change their riding-habits and dress for dinner, when Lloyd Milner took up a book from a table near him and glanced at the title.

"Who is reading 'Our Mutual Friend'?" he asked, in a careless tone. "I have been reading it to Sidney," Argie Burton said, glancing across the room from her seat by the fire.

"It is a charming story," he went on, turning over the pages—"one of Dickens's best, I think."

"Do you think so?" Robert Burton said, in surprise. "I fancy you are alone in your opinion."

"I don't think so, Bob," but in his Oxonian brother. "I have heard other people say so. Bella is such a charming character."

"So true to nature!" added his sister.

"Yes," Lloyd Milner said, musingly. "I am always in love with Bella. Do you remember?"—he was still turning over the leaves as he spoke, pausing now and then to read a few lines, and he glanced at Sidney for a moment as he finished the sentence—

"that scene where John Rokesmith is telling his wife that he is suspected of murder? I think it is such a charming little bit of writing."

"Yes, it is very pretty," Argie agreed. "We have not come to that part yet, Sidney," she added. "We shall do so soon."

Sidney made no reply; she was so pale already that it seemed impossible that she should become paler; otherwise Lloyd Milner would have thought that it was so.

"Shall I read it," Lloyd said, glancing up from the book—"just the few lines describing how Bella received the suspicions of her husband? Would you like to hear them, Sidney?"

"Yes," Sidney answered, with white lips.

Lloyd drew near a table on which a reading-lamp stood, and, standing, began to read. It was evident that the words interested him greatly; but there was something besides interest on his face as the light fell upon it, a strange significance, a look as if some thought had struck him and awakened other thoughts.

"But circumstances," John Rokesmith went on—"I can and will disperse them in one moment—have surrounded me with one of the strangest suspicions ever known. You heard Mr.

PAINS ACROSS THE BACK

Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Mitchell, Ontario. "I have taken your medicine for a number of years. I do not take it steady all the time, but I am never without it. I always keep it in the house. I took it first for pains in the abdomen and bearing-down pains, headaches and pains across the back. I have my home to look after and many a day I could not get up at all. I saw the advertisement in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and Mrs. John Miller told me about it, too. Every time I take it, it makes me feel better and I always recommend it to my friends. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about this medicine and you may use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. F. J. WASSMANN, Mitchell, Ontario.

The merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is told by women to each other. Many women know by experience what this medicine will do and they are anxious for other to know. Such testimony should cause any woman suffering from the troubles mentioned to hurry to give this well-known medicine a fair trial.

Do you know that in a recent canvass among women here of the Vegetable Compound 228,000 replies were received. To the question, "Have you received benefit by taking this medicine?" 99 per cent. replied "Yes." This shows that out of every 100 women are in better health because they have given this medicine a fair trial.

Lightwood speak of a dark transaction!"

"Yes, John," said Bella. "You are prepared to hear explicitly what he meant?"

"Yes, John."

"My life, he meant the murder of John Harman, your allotted husband."

"With a fast palpitating heart, Bella grasped him by the arm.

"You cannot be suspected, John!" "Dear love, I can be, for I am!"

There was silence between them as she sat looking in his face, with the color gone from her own face and lips.

"How dare they!" she cried at length, in a burst of generous indignation. "My beloved husband, how dare they?"

"He caught her in his arms as she opened hers, and held her to his heart.

"Even knowing this, you can trust me, Bella?"

"I can trust you, John, dear, with all my soul. If I could not trust you, I should fall dead at your feet!"

"The kindling triumph in his face was bright indeed as he looked up and rapturously exclaimed what had he done to deserve the blessing of this dear confiding creature's heart. Again she put her hand upon his lips, saying 'Hush!' and told him in her own little natural pathetic way that, if all the world were against him, she would be for him; that if all the world regulated him, she would believe him that if he were infamous in other eyes, he would be honored in hers, and that under the worst unmerited suspicion she could devote her life to consoling him and imparting her own faith in him to their little child!"

The reader's voice was a little unsteady as he read the concluding lines, and he did not close the book for a minute after he had finished reading. As he put it on the table and stood erect—for he had been bending slightly toward the lamp—he glanced swiftly and furtively over at Sidney. She was sitting up among the cushions now, her pale face eager, stirred, and moved, her eyes feverishly bright, but even as he looked she sank back upon the pillows, white and still, the light fading from her eyes. For a moment no one spoke; then Sidney said calmly, but in a very low tone—

Brave Shepherd FEEDS FLOCK AFTER BREAKING HIS LEG.

LONDON (By Mail)—An old shepherd, George Pearce, who broke one of his legs on the Sussex Downs near Pymcombe, spent hours in making his flock secure before seeking aid for himself.

His first thought was for his sheep. He limped about the downs with the aid of a stick, though suffering great pain, and, with the help of his faithful dog, gathered his flock from over a wide area and drove them into a pen.

This operation, which will be carried on without interruption of the train service, will involve the removal of 100,000 tons of solid rock.

Coffin of King Tut Found

Tut anch Amen's tomb was re-opened Oct. 12, in the presence of Egyptian officials. The lid of the first sarcophagus was lifted, revealing a feather on which were linen coverings and bouquets. These were removed, revealing a work of unexampled beauty. This second sarcophagus bore the empy of the God of Osiris, decorated from head to foot and embellished with multi-

People Eat Food That is Useless

IMPOSSIBLE TO EAT TOO MUCH FRESH FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

Half the ill that flesh is heir to are due to the under-consumption of proper foods and an over-consumption of those things that are not foods. A great many people go into hotels and restaurants and stuff things into their stomachs that have no food value, and are only waste material.

A lecturer at a recent meeting in Rochester remarked that it was hard for the public to know what to eat, for one person would advocate one thing and then another person would get up and pronounce that it was a dangerous thing, ruining the health of the nation, and that something else contained the nutriment necessary for the human system. And so he put forward an old truth in a new way to emphasize the necessity of eating an apple a day. He put it like this: The Creator made man out of the dust of the earth, breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and created the food to maintain him. You remember the trouble that Adam and Eve got into over the apple, but just the same that apple contains many valuable elements, it is one of Nature's tonics, one of Nature's best foods.

"Study Nature, it provides different foods at different seasons. We have in the spring strawberries and other fruits, rhubarb, spinach, lettuce, and so on, but you will find apples, the entire year. God knew that the apple was one of the best of foods, one of delicious taste, not only good for Nature's medicines, highly flavored, satisfying man's appetite, but for the correcting of troubles that might come.

"When the Creator took the dust of the earth to make man, there were sixteen principal elements in that dust. Chemists find those same sixteen elements in man; they also find those same elements in foods. The foods coming from the dust in their natural state come then to man for food, and for that reason God has placed in the dust the elements that are very essential for food."

Need Alkaline.

The speaker deplored that people had gone away from natural foods to refined foods, and often meals were served without an ounce of alkaline food in them. All over the country men and women were suffering from stomach troubles because they did not eat the proper food. People who filled their stomachs with starches, fats and proteins got no nourishment from them if they were not digested, and the only way they could be digested was to have the proper combination of foods to make them digest, and that was got with fresh fruits and vegetables which are rich in alkaline content, vitamins and the mineral salts. A liberal amount of fruits and vegetables is needed every day to neutralize the acid of meat and eggs. Of the two per cent. of ash of the apple 35 per cent. is potassium, 26 per cent. is sodium, 1 per cent. is calcium, and one and a half per cent. is iron.

The apple "as a little more iron than the raisin" of the wonderful elements of calcium, potassium, iron and sodium are essential to the maintenance of "vegetative juices, which keep the system in trim. It is dependent on the daily consumption of potassium and calcium. If your body is normal, two per cent. of light is calcium, and 99 per cent. of it is found in the teeth and bones.

"An extremely delicate operation as the one fitted exactly inside the other and the delicate ornamentation might easily be injured by the slightest touch. By October 22, however, it was possible to remove the cover from the second sarcophagus disclosing a human shaped coffin, covered with a linen shroud, which adhered to it. Around the head and chest was a string of beads and flowers. The shroud was uncovered or not covered, according to the various trans-colored pieces of glass. The sarcophagus itself was veneered with a thin layer of a marble ground and adorned with the wings of the serpent Goddess. Bulo and the vulture Goddess Natchbet. After this sarcophagus had been scientifically examined, it was removed from the first moved, revealing a superb coffin of most artistic design, covered with gold ornaments. Unfortunately a large part of the coffin was marred by a shining black deposit, apparent some glutinous liquid which must have been spilled over it at the time of burial.

The most important question now before the workers is how to remove the human shaped coffin from the second sarcophagus, which, in addition to fitting very closely, has adhered to account of this glutinous liquid.
