ONE YEAR EACH.

McGreavy and Connolly Convicted of Conspiracy—Without Hard Labor.

OTTAWA, Nov. 22.—Justice Ross, in passing sentence on McGreavy and Connolly in the conspiracy case, spoke of the various cases he had seen in his judicial life, and how affecting it was to see men like the prisoners in the position into which they had brought themselves.

He would try, however, to meet the ends of justice without exciting too much sympathy. It was impossible, however, not to sympathize with the prisoners in their present condition. He agreed with the verdict of the jury. It was not only morally, but legally right. He did not see how he could suspend sentence unless he did so on every case. If evidence had been taken as to the weight of the offense, it would have been different. The offense was one which affected many, and could not go unpunished. He would not yield to a cry of vengeance because many were implicated. He spoke of the position both men occupied and said that any punishment would be severe upon them. They had already served a long term. The sentence which he passed was one year each in the county of Carleton jail without hard labor. The prisoners were then handed over to the sheriff, but not before many friends expressed sympathy for them.

Hon. S. H. Blake, being interviewed to-night in regard to the Connolly-McGreavy case, said he would arrange at once for an appeal, but owing to the mass of evidence in the case it was doubtful if it could be got before the court in Toronto until February.

HER LAST GOOD-BYE.

Waving a Salute to Her Husband She Fell Four Stories to the Street.

NEW YORK, Nov. 22.—Mrs. Dora D. Kimball, of No. 216 East One Hundred and Eighth street, always waved good-bye to her husband from the window of her home on the fourth floor when he left to go to work. Monday morning, after kissing her, Kimball started away as usual.

As he reached the front door he heard the fall of a heavy body on the sidewalk. He was horror-stricken when he beheld his wife lying in a heap on the sidewalk. She had fallen head first out of the window and was killed instantly. It is supposed that she leaned too far out in her effort to catch a glimpse of her husband, and losing her balance fell to her death. The woman was 38 years old and had recently been in delicate health.

Great Liberal Victory

Winnipeg Returns Hon. Joseph Martin.

Revolution of Public Sentiment in the Prairie Capital.

An Out-and-Out Anti-Protectionist Election by an Overwhelming Majority.

(Special to the Advertiser.)

WINNIPEG, Nov. 22.—The city has never been in such a frenzy of excitement as it is to-night over the election of Hon. Joseph Martin as member for the city in the House of Commons. It has been a most exciting contest, on a voters' list four years old, and therefore believed decidedly against the Liberals.

The Conservatives had the best organization, and thanks to Mr. Nathaniel Boyd, the Conservative whip for Manitoba, who did his work well, a great many outside votes were brought in, nearly 100 Conservatives being conveyed from Ontario on tickets supplied by the Government and its agents. These extra efforts were of no avail, as Martin (Liberal) had 2,076 to Col. Campbell (Conservative) received only 1,647. Thus was a Conservative majority of 509, given in 1891, turned into a Liberal majority of 429 now.

The full vote polled in 1891 was 3,753. To-day 3,723 electors went to the polls. This is an index of the keenness of the contest. To-night the Liberals are frantic with delight, and Hon. Mr. Martin, the successful candidate, is deluged with congratulatory telegrams.

Mr. Martin is a stalwart Canadian, having been born in Milton, Halton county, Ontario, in 1852. He came to Manitoba in 1882 and settled at Portage la Prairie, which for a time he represented in the Legislature of Manitoba, rising to the post of Attorney-General. Recently he moved to this city.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

The total vote polled was—Martin 2,076, Campbell 1,647.

This is the first time in twenty years that a Liberal has been returned for this city. The Grits are very jubilant over their victory, and are holding a torchlight procession in honor of the event.

Vertical Writing.

An Innovation Which is Growing in Popularity.

More Legible, Compact and Speedier Than Sloping Style.

Vertical Writing Almost Antidivulgan—Its Revival, Growth and Popularity in England—Canada Speedily Becoming Permeated—London Teachers Who Use It.

This is pre-eminently an age of reform and change. On every hand ideas which have stood unassailed during a long number of years are being swept away, and the course of the past few decades has been perfecting an existing art is so worthy of consideration, should receive more encouragement than the system of vertical writing which has recently been introduced into certain sections of Canada.

Vertical writing—a phrase which explains itself—is no new mode of transcription thought to paper. Its present prominence is only due to a revival of interest. The origin of vertical writing is lost amid the obscurity of earliest antiquity. Certain it is that up to the sixteenth century such a thing as sloping writing was unknown. The Mexicans and Chinese yield the most ancient specimens of vertical writing, and in England, as well as throughout the whole continent of Europe, all penned communication was in this style until the time of Elizabeth. Then the sloping style of the Italians, commonly known as Spencerian, commenced to obtain. One of its extreme legibility in comparison with all other modes of chirography. And it is peculiarly interesting to observe in specimens of Elizabethan penmanship in which the sloping style was generally used, how the penmanship of the sixteenth century was a far cry from the modern style of the nineteenth century.

Interest in vertical writing of recent years was awakened by the publication in England of a volume by Mr. John Jackson, dealing with the subject. His ideas were explained with a lucidity and power which commanded general attention, and the interest which was thus imparted, has not since died out. Two to-morrow in the Kingston public school, an exhibition of calligraphy at an exhibition in Montreal.

Associating in Montreal. This was all in Spencerian, sloping style. Through some accident applied practically the principle of vertical writing. The latter he now teaches entirely, and his success, it is said, is something wonderful. His own style of penmanship, too, previously clear and legible, is now infinitely more compact.

And these are two of the grounds upon which the superiority of the vertical writing is based—legibility and compactness. These characteristics are prominently obvious in the styles of the two systems. The two styles side by side could reasonably be considered as two entirely different systems. Nor are these the only ones. There is a distinct gain in regard to speed. It is easier to pull the pencil than to push it; and, after careful comparison, it has been ascertained that the pen travels over 20 per cent. less space in upright than in sloping letters. The extreme of transcription from the vertical style is, in the opinion of the writer, a more beautiful and distinguished style than the sloping style. The hygienic excellence of the position in vogue at present is not overlooked. The position at present assumed by people in writing is extremely productive of spinal curvatures. A community of eminent medical men at Vienna held recently a special session for the purpose of discussing the responsibility of this unsound system. In employing the vertical style, the writer is compelled to assume a more healthy attitude, and at the same time a more natural position. The eyes, too, are not taxed to any such extent as formerly.

Vertical writing has not been officially adopted in the London public schools. Several of the principal, however, have investigated the subject. Mr. Alexander of the Askin street school, is one of those who have made a study of the question. Last spring he made a special study of the pupils in his grade modes of writing. Nearly all the pupils are now using the former, and with surprising good results. Mr. McQueen, principal of the Askin street school, is one of those who have made a study of the question.
