Public Men, Fast and Present.

The Toronto World very properly rebukes the ghoulishness of some newspapers, which have been canvassing, with ill-concealed satisfaction, the prospect of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's retirement through ill-health. "Any party," says the World, "which banked upon the physical weakness of its opponents would be in a very miserable position." The World adds:

"It would be a source of regret to The World to see Sir Wilfrid Laurier, or any other man of distinction, disappear from politics, whether it approved or disapproved of his conduct and policy. Public life in Canada has been cheapened and impoverished by the disappearance of men like Edward Blake and D'Alton Mc-Carthy, and John S. D. Thompson and Oliver Mowat and William R. Meredith. You might find fault with these men, and dissent from their views, but you felt that they were big men, that they were worth listening to, and that they broadened and illuminated everything they touched. "It is a rather unpleasant truth that 'the growing time' has not brought us any growth in the size of public men. The day of the old union was supposed to be the day of small things. Yet the public men of that day were Baldwin and Draper, William Hume Blake and Sullivan, Macdonald and Brown, Lafontaine and Cartier and Dorien. Mowat began his career long before Confederation, and the minds of Edward Blake and Cartwright were formed in the same period. Who is there now to compared with them? Laurier and Cartwright are two of the very few men of distinction that are left, and it will be a matter for regret when they pass away, come that day

The World is too disparaging of contemporary public men. When they have finished their life work and have passed from the stage it is probable that another generation will hold some of their names in honor and say there were giants in those days. We are too close to them now; they will be measured more accurately in the perspective of history, just as Canadians of today can appraise the services of Brown, Dorien, Lafontaine, Macdonald, Mackenzie and Cartier more justly than their contemporaries did. If there are fewer outstanding figures now, it may fairly be claimed that the level of ability and capacity | Carolina has shot an editor. It was proin public life has not fallen. The present House of Commons is a more capthe union. One thing is certain, there is far less rancor in politics, less personal antagonism and a wider tolerance than in the stormy days before Confederation.

Tarte's Transfiguration.

The London Free Press, which used to picture Hon. J. I. Tarte with horns and hoofs, is now painting halos round his head. When Mr. Tarte was in the Cabinet the Free Press blackguarded him day and night. He was the evil genius of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the fountain-head of corruption and the source of all political impurity. Our contemporary now discovers that Mr. Tarte was not the Mephistopheles, but the good angel of the Government.

"It is now said at Offawa that the greater part of the antipathy to Mr. Parte from within the Cabinet arose from his too great readiness to expose the tricks and wiles of those would exploit the treasury for their own ends. The 'strike' of his six colleagues, who insisted on his dismissal, was prompted more by their fear and dislike of his energetic vigilance than of his glibness in stating immature policies. With one so watchful loquacious near by as an onlooker it is a dangerous game to organize

The same journal says there is a feeling in Ottawa and the large commercial centers that with Mr. Tarte removed from the Cabinet, certain deals are about to be advocated anew; mililons are involved in the new schemes, and the same persons will be on hand to pocket the proceeds! "If Mr. Tarte will show up the rascalities that have attended these exploitations. of the Dominion treasury there need be no doubt of his future in the politics of Canada!' If Mr. Tarte has any sense of humor, he must be enjoying life when he finds himself canonized today by those who yesterday were consigning him to the the lowest circle of the Inferno. The Tory press, which now describes him as having been watch-dog of the treasury, a few months ago would have depicted him with a dark-lantern and a

The thought suggests itself that if some newspapers are now telling the truth about Mr. Tarte, they have been lying about him for six years.

Temperance Legislation Promised

The temperance deputation which upon Premier Ross and his colleagues yesterday practically asked that the liquor act of 1962 be enforced great ability, who has had a successful on the strength of the affirmative vote in December. A branch of the temperance organization, represented in this city by the London Referendum Association, dissociated itself from this course, in the belief that it was premature, as the temperance people of the province had not had time to ripen their plans. The tenor of the speeches drinks and never swears-indeed, he verterday was more temperate than has no bad habits." on some former occasions. There was a better feeling all round. Rev. Dr.

press their opinion at the polls. This had been one of the chief points of attack on the Government. The Premier had been roundly denounced for not coupling the referendum with the municipal elections. He was accused of deliberately choosing a season of the year when the roads would be bad in the townships and many would be deterred from going to the polls. The Premier in replying to the deputation yesterday, commented on this change of opinion which was highly gratifying to him, after the manner in which his motives had been aspersed. He promised that temperance legislation would be introduced at the coming session, adding: "My duty in connection with this question is to consult my supporters, and that I shall do at the earliest opportunity. The earliest opportunity will be when the house meets, when we shall see how far the members will support the Government in implementing that vote. That is the only position I can take today. hope we will secure such legislation as will meet with the approval of the country. I would feel humiliated if you thought we would play fast and loose with this question, or any

The Late Dr. Proudfoot.

The late Rev. Dr. Proudfoot was one of the most venerable figures in the Presbyterian Church, a divine of the old school, of the robust type fashin Knox College until within a year of to the Red Chamber. his death. His father, Rev. William Proudfoot, who came to Canada in 1333, as a missionary of the old Secession Church, was also a character of strong fiber. In a published biography of one of his sons, Hon. William Proudfoot, the following reference to Rev. William Proudfoot appears:

"This old secession minister was a staunch Reformer, and naturally came under suspicion when almost everybody who dared to differ from the dominant party during the troubles of 1837 was suspected. He, however, boldly met the aspersions of his political enemies, and secured himself from molestation."

Toronto will ask for a special municipal charter. Let the Government grant it by all means and save the Legislature from being pestered for fool legislation by that city year after year.

The steam laundries of Toronto are forming a trust. A laundry monopoly, without a conscience, might drive many to do their own washing, with farreaching social effects. Society, as everyone knows, is divided into three classes: Those who send out their washing; those who do their own washing, and those who take in washing.

The County of Simcoe is the latest to go in for a system of good roads, and win the Provincial grant. The Government's good roads legislation was laughed to scorn by the Opposition, but it is doing more to improve the highways of the Province than years of agitation could have done. Ninetyseven townships have now abolished the statute labor system.

> Curzon's Superiority. [New York Post.]

Lord Curzon has a great fondness, as well as a great talent, for state occasions, and is said to have remarked that the recent gorgeous ceremonial at Delhi placed him upon the pinnacle of happiness. He is splendidly fitted to preside at a durbar, where he is thought to be particularly "august." His stiff and somewhat haughty manners rub some English subordinates the wrong way, but are supposed to be just the thing to impress the Oriental imagination. Lord Curzon appears to have been majestic from his youth. Some unpublished Oxford verses, in his un-Some dergraduate days, deal freely with this characteristic of his:
