If You Lag Behind and Don't March Shoulder to Shoulder With Your Husband in the Progressive Parade-Someone Else Will.

This, is the story that the woman told in that mystic hour in which nen let down their back hair together and tell the secret of their souls. The talk had run upon a tragic story engrossing the interest of that particular group, of a middle-aged man who had forsaken his dull, middle-aged, devoted, domestic wife for a fascinating young vamp. The condemnation of the man had been sweeping and severe until, at last, woman with the contented eyes and the wise smile spoke:

"I am not excusing the man," she said. "Undoubtedly he is greatly to blame. And perhaps he is most to blame in this: that he made the situation possible. He did not make his wife keep step with him. He let her lag behind, and drop out of the procession, and so they were no longer comrades, marching shoulder to shoulder. That was the beginning of the end, for when a woman ceases to be a companion to her husband, there nearly always enters into his life

"When John and I were married," she went on reminiscently, were very much in love with each other, very companionable, and happy. That first year was a glorious time of planning, and studying, and reading ther, and going to lectures, and seeing good pictures, and plays, and having thrilling discussions over them afterward

Then the baby came, and like most women with their first child, I became nothing but a mother, and I offered up the whole world as a sacrifice before the cradle. I had an idea that if I was not spending every minute doing something for the baby, and giving every thought to him, that he would perish. So I quit going about with John because I couldn't leave the baby. I quit reading because the baby left no time for it. I quit dressing up because the body rumpled my hair and tore at my chiffons.

"I became nothing on earth but a nursemaid, and I was just about as interesting as one, for my whole conversation was about the baby, and was about as stimulating and lacking in pep as a bottle of sterilized milk, "Finally, John said to me, Betty, I wonder if you realize how you have let yourself slump? You are not reading anything. You are not have let yourself slump? You are not reading anything. You are not studying anything. You have lost all of your ambition. You are getting dowdy, and dull, and tiresome, and, if you let yourself go on as you are doing, in fifteen years more you will be a fat, frowsy, middle-aged woman who babbles about her children and her house because she doesn't know anything else to talk about, and who is such a bore that people weep tears of self-pity when they see her coming.

"Now let me tell you this, my girl. You may stay put, just conference.

When the procession had rounded the two blocks scheduled for it to cover, returning to the church by way of Dufferin avenue, there was a general scramble for seats. Wesley Hall holds but one thousand people, and by the time the children and some of their mothers had been crowded in there wasn't much room left even on the window sills.

"Now, let me tell you this, my girl. You may stay put, just where you are, if you want to. You may be content to just be the baby's mother, but I am not going to be satisfied with just being the baby's father. I am going to try to do something to make him proud of being my son. I AM GOING ON. AND YOU CAN EITHER KEEP UP WITH ME, OR BE LEFT BEHIND. The choice is yours. What are you going to do about it?

'And if you won't keep up with me, don't expect me to be faithful to you, for I will be out hunting up some woman who interests me, and who can think my thoughts, and talk my talk.'

"Well," continued the woman, "you can imagine that that speech gave me a jolt that brought me to my senses. Thereafter I devoted less time to me a joir that brought me to my senses. Increater I devoted less time to my baby and more to my husband. Instead of holding the baby's hand while it slept, I parked him in his little crib, and water-waved my hair. I put less handwork on the baby's clothes, and more brain work on books, and on studying the subjects in which my husband was interested.

And it wasn't long before I was calling his attention to new books and he was talking over his law cases with me, and we were back again in that most delightful and satisfying of all relationships, that of the husband and wife who really stimulate each other.
"But I shullder now when I think how r arly I came to losing out, for a woman never does lose her husband until she ceases to interest him. A man never gets tired of a woman until she begins to bore him.

"Oh, I know that we women think that it is beauty that counts with men, and that we lose our husbands' affections when we lose our complexions and our girlish figures, but this isn't true. Good looks attract a man, in the first place; but it takes intelligence to hold one. No man can sit and look at a living picture without yawning in its face. He wants something living about him, something that keeps him diverted, and wondering what's coming next.

"The woman who is vivid and vital; the woman who is gay and amus fng; the woman who is full of spicy and entertaining gossip, and who cannot go down the street without having an amusing adventure; the woman whose home dinner table sparkles with wit, and good humor, and good conversation; the woman who takes an intelligent interest in her husband's business, and plans, and ambitions, can snap her fingers in the face of the most beautiful siren who ever lived. She couldn't lose her husband if she tried because they have got too much in common, and because he can be sure of never having a dull moment in her society.

"I know that a lot of women think that being a wife and mother is a good excuse for dropping out of the procession," concluded the woman with the contented eyes and the wise smile, "but they forget that their husbands are marching on, and that if they don't keep step with them, they'll get left."

Prof. Yohan Masih Addresses Assemblage of Children in Wesley Hall.

MARCH IS UNIQUE

The hustling crowd of Saturday afternoon shoppers and theatregoen was brought to a standstill about 3:30 clock when 800 children, all in narching order, appeared around the orner of Wellington street and bean to proceed west on Dundas street, neaded by the Salvation Army Band. Street cars were delayed, automobiles were held up, while the people gathered along the curbs to watch this altogether unique spectacle. It was preliminary proceeding to the children's mass meeting held in Wesley Hall in connection with the World's Mission Conference.

The children had gathered at the church and were now parading the streets with their own particular message to the people of Londo prominently displayed on a great banner which they carried at their banner which they carried at their head:

"And a little child shall lead them."

By the time the head of the procession had reached Clarence street its rear-guard was barely rounding the Wellington street corner. This gives some idea of the immensity of the parade, for the little marchers were five abreast and in massed formation. The timest tots came first, 4-and-5-year-olders, close to the music, which preceded them, and directly behind them were Ross Mc-Kay and Willie Fisher, the proud bearers of the great banner. In the very front of all, leading the band, was E. L. Brown, who has been conducting the song services for the conference.

in there wasn't much room left even on the window sills.

And such a meeting as they had! The children sang: "We've a Story to Tell to the Nations" and "Jesus Loves Me." And as they sang their small voices sounded amazingly sweet I through the large hall. Inspector V. K. Greer had charge of the program, and the children were never so delighted as when he introduced to them a real flesh and blood Hindu, Prof. Yohan Masih of Malwa Theological Seminary, Indore, India.

Prof. Masih hadn't a very large space on the program, but his bright yellow turban will be long remembered by the boys and girls, as will also his message to them—that if they ever make a call to a foreign country in the interests of Christ's kingdom they should remember India. Other speakers of the occasion were Rev. D. Norman, D.D., of Japan; Rev. Dr. Annis of China and Dr. J. M. Waters of India, all of whom appeared in the costume of the country which they represented. As the speakers told about the wonderful lands in the Orient, they illustrated their words by referring to beautiful colored views thrown on the screen.

The meeting was arranged by the Children's Work Board on the suggestion of the Ministerial Alliance. The alliance was represented by Rev. Matthew Kelly and the Children's Work Board by Miss Mayme Young, the success of the rally being largely due to their energetic work on its behalf.
