

Essay published by the American Public Health Association.—This is really a small, practical cook-book, which explains carefully much of the chemistry of cooking, and gives in a condensed form a great deal of valuable information about the wholesome and economical preparation of food.

Heath's Modern Language Series. German Literature. By Prof. Carla Wenkebach, of Wellesley College. (Boston: D. C. Heath & Co.)—This is a new text-book of German literature, written in German, and intended for the use of advanced students in colleges and academies. It is intended to issue the work in three parts, covering respectively the periods to 1100 A.D., from 1100 to 1624, and from 1624 to the present time. The authoress has availed herself of the latest result of German literary study and criticism, and we have no doubt that the book will be found of much value by students.

Mechanics. By Prof. Wallace Wright, of Union College. (New York: D. Van Nostrand Co.)—It is a pleasant task to review an excellent mathematical text-book written by a Canadian. Professor Wright has prepared a work on "Mechanics" for the use of students which will bear comparison with the best text-books already issued on the subject, and although he has availed himself of the progress recently made in physical science, he has not fallen into the mistake of changing for the sake of change. Sufficient attention is given to the practical parts of the subject and a large number of typical examples are introduced. The chapters on "Friction" and "Work and Energy" are especially good. Students intending to take up engineering and kindred subjects will find this book good preliminary work.
