The Crimson Slipper.

BY DORA LANGLOIS.

(Continued.) "There's old Halliday's mill, sir," he answered, cheerfully. "I don't know that it's picturesque, but it's the only one hereabouts. There's a footpath behind the post-office, and anyone will show it to you." I thanked him and hurried on with new hope. Since the miller's name was Halliday, Howell and Herman were doubtless watching his house, and I might possibly find some of them there. I was not to be deterred by this, but I went into a little stationer's shop and bought a sketch-book and pencil before making my way to the mill. I had no difficulty in finding someone to direct me, and a brisk walk soon brought me to the mill itself. There it stood, a little old mill, the only one in the place. The miller's house was a small, one-story affair, built of red brick, with a chimney on the roof. The mill was a simple wooden structure, with a large wheel on the side. I went up to the miller's house, and found the miller sitting at a table. He was an old man, with a white beard and hair, and a friendly expression. He greeted me warmly, and I explained to him that I was looking for a place to live. He told me that the miller's house was the best place to live in the place, and that he would be glad to let me live there. He showed me the house, and I saw that it was a simple, comfortable place. I thanked him for his help, and he wished me good luck. I went back to the miller's house, and found that the miller was still sitting at his table. I went up to him, and he told me that the miller's house was the best place to live in the place, and that he would be glad to let me live there. He showed me the house, and I saw that it was a simple, comfortable place. I thanked him for his help, and he wished me good luck. ANNAPOLIS.

ANNAPOLIS, May 8.—A meeting of the fruit growers around Annapolis was held in the Town Hall on Friday evening last, for the purpose of discussing the extensive and extensive rates charged for the transportation of fruit to the English market, and to devise ways and means whereby the same could be remedied. R. H. McKay, of Lequille, was appointed chairman, and F. C. Whitman, secretary. The chairman in a brief speech stated the object of the meeting to be the cooperation of the fruit growers of the county in an organization for the purpose of devising ways and means for the cheapest transportation and marketing of fruit shipped to the English market. He believed that this could best be done by the cooperation of those engaged in that industry. He was followed by James Whitman of Round Hill, Judge Owen, F. C. Whitman and others, after which a branch of the Fruit Growers' Shipping Association was formed, for the purpose of acting in conjunction with the Round Hill organization and other branches that are likely to follow throughout the county. The subject of the reduction in cost of transportation of fruit from the time it leaves the producer until it reaches the consumer, doing away with the profits received by the middle men. STURDIER PEASANTS NEEDED

The sturdy English race of former times is becoming almost extinct, says the Contemporary Review and is replaced by a puny, stunted, sickly, narrow-chested, weak-bodied, short-sighted, and rotten-toothed race. "What Great Britain requires for the salvation of her agriculture is, in the first place, the gradual creation of a substantial peasant class, who work with their own hands on freehold agricultural properties of moderate size."
