ONCE A LEADING BOXER, NOW REAL ESTATE MAGNATE

Recalls Great Battles Between Leach Cross and Bud Anderson.

Occasionally letters reach New York from Dr. Louis Wallach, who is spending a pleasant and extended vacation in Paris. Dr. Wallach is a former dentist and is at present a real estate operator in Los Angeles, the owner of apartment houses and a man of wealth.

Incidentally he was once known as Leach Cross, lightweight pride of the East Side.

Up in the northern part of the State of Washington is a little truck patch cultivated by a broad shouldered, still youthful man, who wears faded overalls and a straw hat. He hasn't very much money and he seldom gets away from the grinding labor of his little farm. His name is Bud Anderson.

There doesn't seem to be much in connection between the wealthy cosmopolitan and the laborer, but there is.

Ten years ago it might have been hard to tell which would be the successful man of the future. It isn't very difficult to mark the difference between their standings now.

A decade ago Cross was one of the finest lightweights in the east. He had fought the best of them, and the only black mark on his record was a forty-one round knockout that fighting Dick Hyland scored over him when he was a comparative youngster.

Anderson was the lightweight sensation of the Pacific Coast. He was a magnificent developed young Viking with powerful, rippling muscles, speed and a terrific punch. The folks on the Sundown Slope thought that he was the certain champion of his class.

Cross and Anderson were matched, Bud was the blond handsome son of the outdoors. Cross was black-haired, wide-nosed, thick-lipped, a product of the ghetto, who had been brought up in the teeming streets of the East Side.

These two widely different types of men stepped into the ring to oppose each other in a fight that each fondly hoped would bring him a step nearer the championship he craved.

Anderson was the better developed, the handsome physical specimen. Cross, strong and wiry, had far more brains packed in his skull. But for half a dozen rounds it was hard to say whether brains or brawn would emerge the victor.

In the seventh Bud landed his wallop. It was a big hit, but it sent Leach sprawling against the ropes, from which he slipped to the floor. He came up, dazed, and Cross stepped forward, apparently on the verge of a knockout.

Smelling victory, Anderson tore in, swinging wildly. And in that moment Cross, who had been feigning defeat, let loose his own terrific punch that clipped Bud Anderson squarely on the jaw.

It was all over in ten seconds. The blond Viking landed on the back of his head and scarcely moved while the referee was counting him out.

He was in the first round when he recovered, and landed on another bout. It was arranged and Cross stopped him again. That ended his career.

Leach, with his brain that had been sharpened by contact with other youngsters of the streets, had hoped for a championship, but that was not to be. He had seen clearly that prize fighting was only a step upward in the long climb to success; that the day would come when he would have to seek other fields. To that end he had studied dentistry and equipped a fine office.

Though he never won a title he made large sums of money in the ring. The fame he gained there brought many patients to his office. And his trips to the coast for his health and his wife and Anderson had given him the respect for the possibilities of the western country. So with the money he had earned from boxing, Leach went to California and made a fortune in the real estate game, where he won his thousands more.

Now, though he lives on the sunny side of forty, Leach Cross has made a solid success of life. He won at fighting, dentistry and real estate—his only three endeavors—and he can't ask more of a man than that.

Bud Anderson, on the other hand, had planned only on the boxing game. Toward it he had given the best of his heart and hand. But he didn't look beyond it to the time when his speed and punch would wane.

So when Cross sent him skidding down pugilistic's ladder he hadn't thing to break his fall. He had no training outside the ring. He had no particular amount of money when he wrests a scanty living.

READY FOR BIG LIGHTWEIGHT BOUT

Terris and Vicentini Expected to Put Up Great Battle.

A lightweight battle of unusual importance is scheduled for Wednesday night in Madison Square Garden, New York. The contestants will be Sid Terris, the fast and clever east side youngster, who is regarded by many as the most promising prospect for a class championship in his class, and Luis Vicentini, hard-hitting Chilean lightweight, whose punching prowess has brought him to the forefront of contenders for the title now held by Benny Leonard. They are to box twelve rounds in the feature engagement of an attractive card.

Terris will enter the ring favorite over Vicentini. The east side lad's supporters, however, will troop to the Garden prepared for many anxious moments while the fight is in progress. In hitting power, however, Vicentini enjoys the advantage. In his battles around here the Chilean has hinged one of the hardest punches in the lightweight division. He has the reputation, too, of being more dangerous when stung by an opponent than under ordinary circumstances.

With all his boxing ability, however, Terris also boasts hard hitting strength. This was shown in his five-round knockout victory recently over Mel Cookman, rugged Brooklyn veteran, and has led some of Terry's core ardents to believe that he is confident of winning by a knockout. The local lad is reported by his manager, Dan Caplan, primed for the battle. Vicentini, too, is in condition, and is confident of power in his mighty right will overcome whatever advantages Terris enjoys in boxing ability.

Montreal, Nov. 23.—Two prize buffaloes, a present from the Canadian Government to the Edinburgh Zoological Society, were shipped from this port for Glasgow on the Donaldson steamer Parthenia.

The buffaloes, which are said to be the first shipment of the kind ever made from this port, were chosen from a prize herd of 300 head maintained at Elk Island Park, near Edmonton. Larger herds exist at Wainwright and Banff, Alberta, and the most perfect specimens are selected from these herds and taken to Elk Island Park for breeding purposes. Canadian cattle to the number of 333 head also have part of the Parthenia's cargo, as well as more than 4,000 tons of grain.

CANADIAN BOXER DEFEATS DRONEY

Philadelphia, Nov. 23.—Clonie Tait, Canadian lightweight, so seriously mauled Tim Droney of Lancaster, Pa., in the course of their scheduled 10-round bout here last night that the referee stopped the fight in the fifth. Tait, a 16-year-old, clever, clever, agile and all-around boxer, was credited to a degree as to make difficult comparison of the two in these essential. In hitting power, however, Vicentini enjoys the advantage. In his battles around here the Chilean has hinged one of the hardest punches in the lightweight division. He has the reputation, too, of being more dangerous when stung by an opponent than under ordinary circumstances.

Y. W. C. A. GIRLS PLAY BASKETBALL

The enrollment of pupils in the Y. W. C. A. gymnasium classes has now reached 208, and the competition among the classes to see which class can bring in the most new members has grown very keen. A handsome shield made by Mrs. R. B. Travis is the trophy for which the classes are competing, and on a playcard suspended from the shield weekly bulletins of the standing of the classes in the competition are posted. This week three classes, the intermediate gymnasium, the intermediate dancing class and the Junior gymnasium class are all tied for first place. The senior school girls' class had moved down to second place, and the advanced business girls' class had third place. The competition closes the week before Christmas. The shield has a silver painted scroll on which the name of the winning class will be inscribed. Beneath the scroll is the coat of arms of St. John and beneath that is the Y. W. C. A. shield.

The organization of basketball teams and the formation of the Y. W. C. A. House League will play the "thirds" girls' rules, and there will be at least nine teams entered, as the present registration indicates a great deal of enthusiasm amongst the members. It will probably be necessary to form a first and second league within the House League, and it is hoped to have the first games of the schedule played in the first week in December.

On Saturday the Y. W. C. A. Beavers basketball team played against the "Redwood girls" team and won by a score of 41 to 10. The referees were Miss Dorothy McArthur and Miss Dennis of Newmarket.

BURNS STAR PLAYER FOR MANY SEASONS

Was Considered One of the Best Major League Outfielders.

George Burns, who was recently released unconditionally by the Cincinnati Reds, was one of the most popular as well as one of the oldest players in point of service in the two major leagues. The former star outfielder of the Giants was considered one of the steadiest batters in the game, as well as one of the star outfielders in the major leagues while he was in his prime.

Burns started his professional career with the Utica Club of the New York State League in 1909, as a catcher. He took part in 74 games that year and had a batting average of .251. In the following year he caught and also played in the outfield for the Utica Club. His batting average fell to .241 that year, but he raised it to .289 in 1911 while playing regularly in the outfield for the same club.

When the Utica Club finished its campaign in 1911 it sold Burns to the Giants. Between that time and the end of the major league pennant races in 1919 and compiled a batting average of .286. He also played in the world's series with the Athletics that year, but made only three hits in nineteen times at bat.

In 1918 Burns became one of the Giants' regular outfielders and he retained his post until he was traded to the Reds after the season of 1921. He played in 160 games with the Giants in 1918 and compiled a batting average of .286. He also played in the world's series with the Athletics that year, but made only three hits in nineteen times at bat.

Burns continued to act as one of the Giants' regular outfielders for the next eight years. He batted .303 in 1914 and 1919 and the only other season in which he batted over .300 while with the Giants was in 1917 when he had a mark of .302. Burns took part in three world's series while with the local National League club. In addition to that of 1913, he also took part in the classic of 1917 and 1921. He batted .227 in the 1917 series and .253 in the series of 1921, which followed his last season with the Giants.

During the winter of 1921 Burns was traded to the Reds with Gonalas and Frisch was then moved over to second base and Johnny Rawlings, the hero of the 1921 world's series, was benched.

Burns has been one of the Reds' regular outfielders for the past three seasons.
