Wood, and High Ground to the north of the village—a position known as the Crucifix. Large numbers of Germans were killed and wounded, but the gar-rison of Fricourt maintained a very stout resistance, and until this morning the British attacks did not succeed in taking this stronghold, although it was nearly surrounded.

Heroic acts were done by the assilants, as I know from comrades who were with them. One boy, of eighteen, to give only one instance, was so good a captain, although a private soldier, that when the officers of his platoon were fallen he rallied the men and led them forward.

"Come on my lads," he cried. "We'll get them out."

A pipe major of the Royal Scots led this battalion forward to an old Scottish tune, and during the attack stood out alone in No Man's Land, playing still until he fell wounded.

Early this morning a fine flanking attack was made on Fricourt by the men, who had held onto their ground during the night, and the crucifix trench was taken after the explosion of two big mines. Heroic acts were done by the asasil-

The attack then closed in, one body of troops working around to the north and another fighting their way around the south side in order to get the village within a pair of tongs. These operations succeeded, and the village was taken, but the fighting still went on to gain possession of a high ridge above.

A whole company of German soldiers were seen to come suddenly across the open with their hands up. Other men struggled singly over the shell-beaten ground to surrender to the British, but the German guns put up a heavy bar-

Here, then, are some scraps of fact about the battle still in progress and covering a wide stretch of ground, in which many separate actions are taking place. It is impossible for an eye-witness to see more than a corner of these bat-tlefields and at this hour for one man to write a clear, straight chronicle of so reat an adventure.

I have been traveling today the lines, trying to gather the threads to-gether, talking to many of the fighting men, going among the wounded and pris-ners, and in the intense and immediate nterest of this great drams of which is all about me, and trying to t the latest facts of the British prong, heroic story which must be written ter with further knowledge of the men

Only one thing is really very clear and hining in all this turmoil of two days f battle—it is the unconquerable spirit

The water in the streams up river rose rapidly on Tuesday, and it was feared there would be a break in the main South West boom, as the water there was higher, than at the time of the big break last year, but the water is falling gradually today and the logs appear to be safe.

The drives which were hung up this spring are all coming on well now. According to latest reports there is better water now than at any time this spring.

Down the coast the storm was the worst for many years, and the fact that it broke on Monday would keep the fishing fleets in the harbors. Otherwise a large number of boats would have been caught outside with their fishing tackle, and the loss of life would have been beavy.
