Women Begin Health P

From the tiny Virgin Islands to the West Indies to China, America came last week. Schulterbrandt, the pediatric director of the program in that country.

Her mission was to attend to the American Psychological Association, to which she was a delegate. In her special section, the topics of interest were related to the specific islands.

Before 1946, the island had no formal aid or study of health. Until Mrs. Schulterbrandt came, she had degrees from Columbia and Harvard. She was in charge of a community education and a psychiatric consultant, among other things.

Another phase of her mission was to recruit a competent and growing staff.

But what of the problem of health in an area so small? Mrs. Schulterbrandt was emphatic about this. "We have to her are a paradise. The part of the world she noted that since the United States took over in 1917, there has been no flames of unrest and disease."

Much more of the problem of the Negro population seeks education now, and where they lead always toward the institutions, the big 10 schools drawing heavily, with concentration in New York seaboard area.

As a tourist mecca, St. John, Thomas and Crockett Island boldly compete with their cousins, and may some day be able to keep step.

This aspect is hopeful, encouraged by citizens of St. John, tiniest of the United States with 1,000 fellers purchasing a passport.

The Carnival of the Virgin Islands is now the major attraction to Eldra Schulterbrandt. She has led the festival spirit, and neighbors to participate. In April, it has launched a campaign for tourism, especially for Americans.

This surge of activity has brought the distinct flow of two presented a bit of contrast. 30 thousand Negroes.

The problem is not therefore the mental health program works from a positive rather than a negative approach. It is on adjustment to change. Preventative against deep demand treatment more.

Next year, Mrs. Schulterbrandt will spend a year in China on a travel grant making comparative cultures, and to see what vestiges of the past are left now in the islands.

Travel is nothing new. The last day Jean D'Arcy was in the most parts of the world. Only last year she was at the World Federation of Health representing the Film Board of the United States Department of Health.
