familiar with the functioning of their own government at all levels of operation?

For years, we in the schools have worked at what we have called "life-related teaching," and some outstanding results have been achieved through it.

Under the guidance of educators like Helen Adele Whiting of Georgia, children of the backwoods have learned the relationship between book and tool and field, between blackboard and poster and home and church, between the well-being of the individual, and the well-being of the family and the Nation. City children from "the wrong side of the tracks" have learned these things.

I wonder, sometimes, what happens to these keys to effective living between those early days of personal guidance, and later days when objectives and values appear confused or non-existent; when information, rather than knowledge, seems scattered superficial and unrelated to the basic facts of family and community life? When youth wants to "get somewhere"—anywhere, with no thought of "paying for the ride."

In the secondary and college levels, particularly, our education lacks vitality. It lacks urge and drive and carry-through. We must work to revitalize it. We must teach the youth who sit in our classrooms and around our hearthstones the Keys to the Kingdom of Satisfactory Living cannot be picked up casually, along the way.

For each individual they must be forged from effort spent in selecting a worthy objective, and from the labor of mind and hand and spirit spent in reaching it.
