What is happening to-day? Those people are doing scarcely any business. The people who do buy from them wait until late Saturday afternoon so that they may get something for nothing. In fifty per cent of the cases the farmers carry back most of their produce to be fed to the animals. They come back with their pockets empty because they have been unable to sell what they had produced on their farms. This condition is due solely to the great corporations coming into the market and taking part in every business under the sun—of course they have not attacked the sun or the moon. The result is that not only have they brought fear to the hearts of the farmers but they have brought unhappiness to the farmers' homes. The resoluteness of the farmer is gradually dying; the young men and women are leaving the farms and going to the cities and towns, even at the risk of facing unemployment.

In speaking about western beef this afternoon the Minister of Agriculture said that "the markets were practically controlled by Toronto and Montreal." Why should they be controlled in that way? Why should provision not be made under this very item for quotas from those provinces which produce cattle of a kind suitable for shipment to the old country? If such provision were made, there would be some impetus given to that kind of business, a trade which through no fault of their own the farmers have permitted to fall by the wayside. Such provision would give them and those who came after them some encouragement to stay on the land, and not to go the cities and towns to seek a precarious livelihood. I said to the Premier of Nova Scotia, Mr. Macdonald, that I thought there was one way of overcoming the difficulty, and that was to put a heavy tax on corporations such as Eatons Limited and Simpsons Limited. My observations are not directed particularly against those two companies; I am referring to other companies as well which are driving the farmer out of business.

The old merchants of Halifax are a thing of the past. You may go along Barrington street or along Granville street outside Wood Brothers, and you will not find any of the old firms left. The only wholesale house doing a drygoods business in Halifax to-day is the house of J. & M. Murphy, which is one of the oldest and weathered the gale. When we think of those old merchant firms we think of Mr. T. E. Kenny, who was once a member of this chamber and an honoured citizen, and we think of Burns & Murray, Doull & Miller. I look back upon those old reliable firms which were carrying on when I was a boy; at that time also there were ten or twelve wholesale grocery merchants in Halifax, but only one or two have survived. They are gone. Our industries are gone. Two or three are left, but the rest have been taken holus-bolus to Montreal. That is not the cattle industry either.

I would say to the minister that if they had remained, cattle would be used, cattle would be bred and cattle would be purchased from our own farmers. I do not desire to take a sectional view of this matter; I want to consider it broadly. However, we are at the extreme east of this great dominion. This is the time when there are differences between the various provinces as to the question of jurisdiction under the terms of the British North America Act. A royal commission, at the head of which is Chief Justice Rowell, is now sitting to consider these matters. There is a great diversity of opinion among the provinces, and one of them has come before the commission and said, "No, we will give you no information." This is a critical time in the history of Canada, and the country is not being welded into a whole as it should be.

The CHAIRMAN: I would point out to the hon. member that he is not confining his remarks to the item before the committee which has to do with live stock and poultry.

Mr. FINN: I have all due deference for your rulings, Mr. Chairman; but as I said once before, matters have been discussed which involved in their finality the very matter to which I am referring. If I am not in order, if I cannot extend my remarks to the ultimate goal and the ultimate finish, then let me say that while I have not gone the distance I might have gone, I believe I have said sufficient to bring this matter to the attention of the committee, and the people whom I represent. I am on the right road, and I shall go the limit at the proper time when the order paper is clear and no question can be raised as to whether I am in order or out of order. I am looking to the ultimate results that can be achieved by a proper development under this item which has to do with live stock and poultry.

I have a suggestion I should like to make to the minister and to the technical officers of his department. If it is possible to do so, a quota should be allowed to the farmers and poultry raisers in Nova Scotia. An officer of the department should go there to see what cattle would be acceptable to the markets of Great Britain or Europe, we should not forget that the nearest point of shipment is Halifax. I am not talking against the port of Saint John or the summer ports on the St. Lawrence river; I say this in order that our people may feel that some interest is being taken in their welfare. A survey should be made of the possibilities of these maritimes. I know the Minister of Agriculture is interested in this matter. He has assiduously and fearlessly addressed himself to the problems involved. Through personal contact he has kept in touch with the markets abroad. He has studied these problems in the best way possible, and I believe the matter is safe in his hands and in the hands of his technical advisers.

I submit that the people of the east, particularly those in Nova Scotia and in my own constituency, should be given a chance. If they can produce live stock and poultry which come under this item, they should be allowed an export quota. If that were done, it would offer them considerable encouragement and would be better than any "back to the land" sign you could put up. It would illustrate that "back to the land" means something. The people on the land would be able to feel the coin in their pockets, and others would see possibilities of making a living by going back to the land.

Mr. THOMPSON: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the dissatisfaction that exists throughout the farming community in connection with the grading of hogs. The farmers who have been in the bacon hog business for years know a select hog better than do some of the graders. Some of them have been taking particular pains to feed and breed these hogs, but when they send shipments to the abattoirs they find that they have only one or two selects. There is a strong suspicion that some influence is brought to bear upon the graders who are at the abattoirs all the time and that the farmers are not getting a square deal. I find this dissatisfaction existing all over the country. I know of one farmer who had a lot of some twenty-five bacon hogs. I looked at them and I judged that at least twenty were selects. They were Yorkshires and had been fed and bred in the proper manner. When this man got his return from the abattoir he found he had only three or four selects. Will the minister investigate this matter because I feel an injustice is being done to the producers of bacon hogs.

Mr. FINN: Just before the minister answers that question, may I say I was developing a point and I do not want to leave a wrong impression. I was referring to a conversation I had had with the premier of Nova Scotia in connection with imposing a tax. That tax was not to prevent the concerns to which I referred from doing business. The suggestion was that they should make a statement to the provincial secretary of the cattle and other farm products purchased in the province, and the tax would be lessened by the amount purchased to a minimum which would be fixed, and that would be the business tax.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): What progress has been made in the grading of hogs on the rail instead of on the foot?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): There are two methods of grading hogs; one is to grade them while they are still running around, and the other is to grade them after they have been hung up on the rail. It is much easier to grade them after they are on the rail because they can be fully examined. For a considerable number of years before I was in the department, it had been promoting the idea of rail grading. There was considerable opposition to this at first, as there is to any idea being introduced for the first time. However, there has been an increasing satisfaction with rail grading as compared with grading of the hogs while they are still alive. The figures indicate this growing satisfaction. In 1935 the number of carcases graded on the rail was 115,209; in 1936, 447,493; in 1937, 1,002,541. In those three years the figures have risen from 115,000 to over 1,000,000. Those are very satisfactory results, encouraging people at least to accept rail grading. It is much easier for any person to be satisfied with the grading when it has been done in that way.

But there has been objection taken to rail grading by those who are in the trade, and on occasion also by individuals; the objection is based largely on the idea that our hogs are purchased mostly by private packers, and some people maintain that they would much prefer to have the hog graded while still running around and while they can dispose of it in some way, to having it hung up on the rail in a packer's plant and graded there. Rail grading has been developed to the highest point, I think, in Denmark where, as I said the other day, hogs are bred by the co-operative, in the first instance; where they are fed by the cooperative, and sold and marketed by the cooperative, the whole process right through being carried on in that way, and where that is done there is no difficulty in rail grading even up to 100 per cent. But here it is a case of persuading the people to accept rail grading as against the grading of the hog while still alive. I personally have had my own doubts. I sell some hogs from time to time from my own farm, and I do not know that I have been entirely satisfied that I got all the selects I should have received. I doubt very much if any of us are entirely satisfied with the grading of our live stock, or our grain, for that matter, unless we get top grade all the time. It is just possible, nevertheless, that there are some things which can be improved upon in connection with the grading, and an attempt is being made from time to time to make those improvements and to make it more easy to avoid mistakes, to put it mildly, in the grading, or an attempt on the part of some to take advantage of the fact that the farmer does not always know what the grade is.

Mr. BARBER: I think the province of British Columbia has not been considered a very heavy producer of swine, and there have been reasons for this in the past. One was the high cost of feed and other conditions that prevailed in some dairying districts, but of late years there has been a great effort made to revive and bring about an increase in the production of hogs. I was reading in the paper only to-day of one hog farmer in the lower mainland of the province who is producing about one thousand head a year, and another one about five thousand. But when one looks over the statistics one finds that we are importing into the province about 99 per cent of the ham and bacon we consume. The minister is aware of the fact that this industry is being organized on a large scale; that associations have been formed, and that a large number of farmers in the lower mainland of the province have joined these associations.

I notice that swine graders are being provided for in the item before us. Let me remind the minister that during the last two or three months representations have been made to the live stock branch by the swine associations of the lower mainland for the appointment of a field man or a swine grader. I should like to know if the minister has taken that into consideration and if any provision will be made in the estimates to provide for such an official in that district?

Mr. GARDINER: Arrangements are being made at present to have a man established in British Columbia who will take charge of the grading of hogs in that province. That service was not previously given by the department in British Columbia; but the numbers produced, as has been indicated by the hon. member, have increased, and we feel now that we should give that service to the province.

Mr. BARBER: Will this official be grading on the rail at the abattoirs or will he also act as a field man, so that the farmers could get some information on the type of hog they should raise and how to improve them?

Mr. GARDINER: The one man at that particular point will do both. He will grade in the stockyards on the hoof, and also grade in the packing plant on the rail.

Mr. THOMPSON: Has the farmer any say at the present time as to how these hogs are graded? Can he have them graded on the rail or graded on the hoof as he desires?

Mr. GARDINER: It is for the farmer to decide whether they shall be graded on the hoof or on the rail.

Mr. THOMPSON: When he sells to the drover, and the hogs go into the stock yard, has the farmer the right to say: "I want these graded on the rail," or "I want them marked," and then have them forwarded on as they are to the abattoirs?

Mr. GARDINER: It is a deal between the drover and the farmer. They can be graded on the rail if he makes that deal with the drover.

Mr. THOMPSON: He has the option?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON: I think every encouragement should be given to the farmer because if the dairy cow and the bacon hog in eastern Ontario are eliminated, the farmers would go bankrupt. Those are their greatest assets, and I am pleased to know that the minister is giving the matter his consideration and giving more thought to the grading of hogs.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Finn) and the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) as to the number of cattle that can be shipped from Nova Scotia, I have the figures here from 1932 to 1936. Beginning with 1932, the number of cattle exported from Nova Scotia to all other markets was in that year 999; in 1933, 213; in 1934, 918; in 1935, 765; in 1937, 1,007. As to the number sold directly to the packers, I have not the figures for 1932 or 1933; but in 1934 the number was 1,275; in 1936, 102; in 1937, 370. That is, as the numbers exported went up, the numbers sold to the packers apparently went down. The grand total of cattle marketed in the different years, according to these figures, was in 1932, 240; in 1933, 212; in 1934, 2,210; in 1935, 955; in 1936, 1,409. As against that, store cattle were brought in, in 1933—I have not the figures for 1932—to the number of 36; in 1934, 64; in 1935, 46; in 1937, 1,365. It will be seen that the number of cattle brought in during 1937, 1,365, is about 100 less than the total number marketed through the packers or through export. This indicates that practically all of the cattle which are produced in the province of Nova Scotia are slaughtered locally and consumed locally.

Mr. KINLEY: How many were brought in from the drought area?

Mr. GARDINER: I should judge that most of them were, but that illustrates the point which was up this afternoon and again this evening. It would be very difficult to select 1,300 cattle from Nova Scotia to be shipped out, even under the test we are following, if we took all that were available. There has been only one year when that number was shipped from Nova Scotia.

Mr. FINN: Why would that be?

Mr. GARDINER: The chief reason, I suppose, would be that they have been gradually going out of the production of cattle, and agriculture has been somewhat backward in the province from time to time.

Mr. FINN: Lack of markets.

Mr. GARDINER: But I do not know why that should be the case. My views about that are pretty much the same as those of the hon. member for Halifax. The people of Nova Scotia are located close to port. Some of the cheapest feed which can be found in the world can be shipped to Halifax at a lower price than it could be shipped anywhere else in Canada; even if they are not breeding cattle and producing them there themselves, I cannot see any reason why there could not be developed a good feeder industry in Nova Scotia, and it is in the hope that we may be able to develop that industry that we have been encouraging the shipment of cattle from the west to Nova Scotia and to New Brunswick during the last few years. I think this figure for 1937 will be accounted for largely by the fact that we have been encouraging these shipments. The increase from a few hundred a few years ago to 1,409 last year is probably partly accounted for by that.

Mr. FINN: The minister said that the figures he gave included shipments to Europe as well as —?

Mr. GARDINER: That is all the exports out of the province.

Mr. FINN: Not to any particular place. Then, might I ask the minister with reference to the 1,007 in 1937, an appreciable increase and pleasing to hear about. Were the cattle which were sent in for that purpose sent to people who were raisers of cattle in Nova Scotia, or did they go to special interests there?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the figures before me as to how many cattle which went in under the special policy adopted two years ago are included in these figures, but a considerable number of cattle were purchased in the drought area of western Canada both for Nova Scotia and for New Brunswick in the fall of 1936 and again last year.

Mr. FINN: That is, by the agriculture department?

Mr. GARDINER: No. The Department of Agriculture pays the fare of an individual from eastern Canada who wishes to purchase a carload or more in the west, and then the person purchasing the cattle comes back with the cattle; so that the fare of the individual is looked after in going west to buy cattle in the drought area. Then we paid one-half the freight provided the individual kept the cattle for three months and fed them; at the end of the three months we paid one-half the freight on the cattle shipped through. That was done particularly for the purpose of assisting people in getting rid of their cattle in the drought area and for the purpose of encouraging people in the far eastern part of Canada to import cattle from that area and become feeders of cattle.

Mr. FINN: Would it be possible to obtain from the statistical branch of the minister's department, as regards the 1,007 cattle that were shipped in 1937 from the drought area to Nova Scotia, who were the purchasers of those cattle, where the freight was paid or partly paid, the fare of the person who went for them, where he came from and who he was, whether he was a farmer or just some person who went out like a cattle buyer or a horse buyer—they are sometimes called something else?

Mr. GARDINER: These figures can be obtained. I have not them here with me this evening, but the information with regard to the individuals who purchased cattle and obtained payments can be furnished.

Mr. FINN: Thank you.

Mr. MacKENZIE (Lambton-Kent) I am not quite clear what the departmental rulings are with regard to the marking of hogs. Formerly a drover bought hogs from the farmer and graded them in the pen or the shipping yard before they left the shipping point. I believe that is still the practice in some places. The instructions which the department is now sending out are that each buyer must mark the hogs individually and make payment for the hogs on the basis of the official grading returns. This has caused a good deal of dissatisfaction in some places, and I want to know if that is the universal ruling of the Department of Agriculture or if it is simply applicable in some places.

Mr. GARDINER: The regulation is that all hogs have to be graded. If there is any doubt with regard to the grading, it can be required that the hogs be marked, and when they go to the central point they are regraded; but the general practice is that when the drover buys hogs he marks them, and there are very few people who raise complaints. The idea is that when he once takes them in at the central point they are his hogs; but the regulations require that if the person is not satisfied with the grading, he can have the grading checked.

Mr. MacKENZIE (Lambton-Kent): The understanding I have is that the department has sent out instructions to the buyers that they must mark all these hogs separately, individually, before they leave the shipping point, and they are paid for on the basis of the official grading returns as they are killed in the abattoir.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is some difficulty from time to time, and I am informed there has been some in the area from which my hon. friend comes; but my information is that wherever difficulties of that kind have arisen—and it applies to the case in question—the department has insisted that these hogs be marked, and that has been done in at least some cases in the area to which he has referred.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Would the minister consider the advisability of a regulation to have all hogs graded on the rail, in the interests of the export end of it and in the interests of the hog industry generally?

Mr. GARDINER: We have considered the advisability of it. We have not felt that public opinion is sufficiently behind it to warrant doing it at this time. When we are convinced that the public are ready we shall, of course, be prepared to make any further provision necessary.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): The department more or less agrees that this is the more efficient way?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; the department agrees that it is the more efficient way.

Mr. THOMPSON: Regarding hog grading, I might say it was customary for the drover to grade the hogs, but one can understand that the drover gets in wrong with a great many of his customers if they think they have not as many selects as they should have; the majority of the drovers do not care to grade these hogs when they buy them, so they are marked and sent on to the abattoirs, where the government grader grades them, but the raisers of the hogs have to wait until the next shipment before the drover gets back his returns and pays them $1 apiece for their selects.

I see by this item that there are senior swine graders, swine graders and junior swine graders, and I should like to know the difference between them. There are three senior swine graders, fourteen swine graders, and twenty-five junior swine graders, and they are all paid different salaries. What is the difference?

Mr. GARDINER: The names applied to them describe pretty clearly what the difference is. The junior man is the man with the least experience; he has not as great a responsibility as the senior. The junior has the least experience, the swine grader next, and the senior swine grader is the most experienced.

Mr. MacKENZIE (Lambton-Kent): There is an impression in our part of the country that the premium of $1 a hog is not large enough to encourage the farmers to produce the proper type of bacon hog.

Mr. GARDINER: The amount now is $1 a hog.

Mr. SENN: What control, if any, is exercised over the differential in the different grades of hogs? It is true that the premium for select hogs is $1; but when you get light hogs, even if they are the right type and the proper conformation, sometimes there is a differential between the bacon price and the price of the live hog; and similarly with heavy hogs. Sometimes the differential is quite large. In some instances this creates a certain amount of dissatisfaction in the minds of the farmers. Does the department exercise any control in that regard?

Mr. GARDINER: The only control is in the matter of the premium of $1. As regards other differentials in other grades, that is a matter of agreement between the buyer and the seller.

Mr. SENN: What progress is being made in the grading of beef? I understand that an attempt is being made to grade beef and to have certain grades established.

Mr. GARDINER: There are two established grades, and in British Columbia, in three cities, they are establishing four. Those are compulsory. There are two optional grades established by the federal government.

Mr. SENN: I know there are two grades of beef, different labels, but I want to know what progress is being made by the department towards the universal grading of beef. Is any attempt being made to make it country-wide?

Mr. GARDINER: The question of expansion has been considered from time to time. What is now being done in British Columbia is only an experiment, and if it works successfully it probably will be more widely applied across Canada.

Mr. SPENCE: I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate, and to me it is wonderful the number of friends the dear farmer has in this house. If the farmer is not doing the drover, the drover is doing the farmer; but for my part I have never yet seen a farmer that anybody could do, and except for the last three or four years I have been dealing with them for thirty or forty years. If ever I was trimmed it was by a farmer, because I have always watched the business man or the dealer, but I never thought of watching the farmer. That is why I got trimmed.

Mr. FINN: Who watches you?

Mr. SPENCE: If you try to trim me, I may try to trim you; but if you give me a square deal I will give you one. I am willing at all times to make contributions or grants or subsidies to the farmers in order to assist the country, because without happy, contented farmers we cannot be happy; but I do not want to make the farmer so helpless that he will not be able to do anything at all for himself. If we go on in this way, doing, necessary work for everyone, I am afraid we shall become a nation of imbeciles who will not be able to think for themselves, and that is bad policy.

I congratulate the hon. member for Halifax upon the remarks he made in regard to conditions in that old city which I knew so well years ago. There were quite a number of respectable wholesale houses there, but they were driven out by the chain store system. In my opinion, that system has done more to ruin the country than anything else. It is the same with big combinations of packers. They will drive out ten or fifteen wholesale business firms, respectable businessmen of high integrity, and they will do it ruthlessly. They steal all the business they can from everyone. I have absolutely no use for the chain store system, and in my opinion the government should have taxed them $1,000 for every store in Canada over one store in any city or town. If that were done, the country would be much better off. Money used to flow freely through everyone's hands; but to-day it is confined to a few, and it is in the control of big packers and the big interests. You can blame governments and no one else for this condition. You can talk until you are crazy and you will not get governments to take action.

An hon. MEMBER: What has that to do with the marketing of live stock and poultry?

Mr. SPENCE: It applies to the marketing of beef, which the Minister of Agriculture is trying to assist.

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order is not well taken.

Mr. SPENCE: I understand that the minister is trying to assist in building up a market for meat killed in Canada and shipped to the old country. Is that right?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SPENCE: I endorse all that, but I will not endorse the establishment of a big abattoir at Halifax or Saint John, because I know something about abattoirs. I was in the city council of Toronto once and we established one. It was said that it would reduce the cost of living, and the city of Toronto paid from $50,000 to $200,000 a year loss. That is what will happen in connection with this proposal. No doubt the minister will agree with the abattoir that they should take over the offal, and they will get a considerable sum from that. They will get a good deal of money from the hides and so on.

Mr. McNEVIN: Will the hon. member permit a question?

[Mr. Spence.]

Mr. SPENCE: No; sit down. To-day there is a duty of 3½ cents a pound on animal fat going into the United States. Fat here is very cheap and still we are bringing in vegetable oil free. I am afraid that if we get mixed up in the running of an abattoir, no one will know what the loss will be. It is suggested that the farmers should be reimbursed for their loss, but who will say what the loss is? If you kill twenty-five or fifty head of cattle and ship the product to the old country, every farmer who owned any of the cattle would demand compensation for loss. I submit that those who are charged with the responsibility of handling public money should handle it as carefully as their own. If the department is endeavouring to obtain the highest possible price for a farmer's cattle, expending the country' s money in that effort, then I think he ought to be ready to take a chance too, and has no right to be reimbursed. It seems to me that we are getting more and more to the stage where apparently no one is fit to do his own business. Even men who think themselves smart are advocating that sort of thing in this house.

As I say, I am willing to do anything within reason to assist the farmer. In fact, I have made my living off the farm and you will not find any man in the province of Ontario who will say that I ever gave the farmer anything but a square deal. So I do not want it said that I am criticizing money spent to help build up business between here and the old country, because that is where we should build up our business, and not so much between Canada and the United States. I think we should pay less attention to the United States, because it is a most unstable market. They will take your goods for a week or so, if they need them; then, overnight, when you are caught at the border, they will put on an embargo or, if they do not put it on, they will ask the railways to do so. I remember that once, some years ago, I went to Winnipeg to buy ten carloads of western potatoes to be shipped to the United States. I had three carloads at the border, I think it was near Detroit, when I wired my son in regard to the potato market in the United States. He wired me at once to get away from the potato market, that the United States had gone hooey and there was no market for potatoes, so I was stuck with those potatoes at the border. That is the way in which the United States does business, and we should treat them in the same way. We are not looking after ourselves in this country at all; we are just hewers of wood and drawers of water, raising families and educating them in this country, then sending them to the United States to build up industry there. That is what we have been doing for many years, but now they do not want our people any more. They did take our best educated people, however, for many years, and we kept this country poor educating them. In Canada we have men equal to those anywhere in the world; you cannot get better. I do not want to start saying that our people are so much better than those in other countries, but they are a very high type of people, and we do not realize just how good we are.

An hon. MEMBER: What about poultry?

Mr. SPENCE: I do not know anything about poultry, so I am not going to talk about it. But I do know something about abattoirs; I was for some time chairman of the abattoir committee of the city council of Toronto; I visited that abattoir every day for two years and saw what was going on. It was an absolute mess, and if you get into that business you will get into another mess. Let somebody run the abattoir who knows how to run it, and if you can, tie him up so that he cannot do anything wrong. That will be difficult, however, if you are dealing with Canada Packers, because I have no faith in them at all. However, I am not here to criticize the packers any more than anyone else. I am certainly opposed to monopolies of all kinds; I have always been opposed to them. I say to-day the individual should get the chance to do business, but he is not getting it. The man with the best brains, the man who works the hardest, should be allowed to make some money. To-day you cannot make money unless you are a monopolist and have barrels of money. A few hundred thousand dollars is not enough; men with millions of dollars come along and drive you out of business. That is what is happening to-day in Toronto and Montreal. Hon. gentleman do not realize just how bad things are in the business world. I am not going to cry blue ruin, but just watch what may happen in the near future.

Mr. McNEVIN: I take no objection to the hon. member for Parkdale not desiring to answer a question, Mr. Chairman. In fact I am in agreement with him in regard to the erection of an abattoir at the Atlantic coast. I think it would be an expensive experiment at the present time. I rose to point out that I think there was a period in the history of the Toronto civic abattoir when, under efficient management and without interference from the city hall, that abattoir operated successfully and showed a profit.

Mr. SPENCE: It always lost money.

Mr. McNEVIN: Will the hon. member just do as he requested me to do when I asked him a question—kindly sit down and let me finish?

Mr. SPENCE: I shall keep quiet.

Mr. McNEVIN: I am also in agreement with the idea that to a large extent we have a meat monopoly in the Dominion of Canada, and I do not think any monopoly operates to the best advantage of the majority of the citizens of this country.

Mr. PERLEY: Mr. Chairman, it has been interesting to listen to the discussion this evening. I must say that I am not wholly in agreement with the hon. member for Parkdale, and I do not like to disagree with him, because I am generally in accord with his views.

Mr. SPENCE: The hon. member wants to be spoon-fed all the time.

Mr. PERLEY: Well, certainly I do not agree when he says that he was always done by the farmers. I do not think the farmers intend to do anybody. I believe if a census of the honest people of Canada were taken, you would find as many honest farmers as you would find honest men in any other line of business.

Mr. SPENCE: I did not say anything to the contrary.

Mr. PERLEY: It was interesting to hear the minister give the results of the trial shipments of fresh beef, and I certainly commend the department for what it is endeavouring to do in the way of shipping fresh beef to Great Britain. I would support many of the suggestions of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie. The figures quoted to-night in regard to the shipment of live animals show that there has been no continuity in these shipments, with a very great differential between the high and low marks. For instance, in 1934 there were some 53,000 animals shipped. In 1935 that dropped to about 6,700. Then in 1936 it went up to 38,000, while in 1937 it was back to 9,000. It is quite apparent that you cannot have a market of any real value when there is such a fluctuation from one year to another, and I agree with the minister that it is quite proper to endeavour to develop a market for chilled or dressed beef. We might keep our shipments of live cattle to an average number, maintaining continuity in that respect, and then I think we could find a vast market for our dressed and chilled meat.

I want to refer briefly to dressed poultry. Saskatchewan is noted not only for its wheat and beef but also for its poultry I would remind hon. members of this committee—and no doubt the record can be found in the Department of Agriculture—that under the former Minister of Agriculture, Hon. Mr. Weir, a trial shipment of dressed poultry was sent to Great Britain, I think in the fall of 1931. That shipment, which consisted of some 800,000 pounds of dressed poultry, principally turkeys, was accompanied by an official of the department. I believe at least 80 per cent of that shipment came from the province of Saskatchewan. The poultry was dressed under the instructions of the officials of the department, and according to the report that came back the shipment was well received. The Saskatchewan birds found a ready market, and compared favourably with the home grown birds. I wish the minister would pursue some experiments, make some further trial shipments, with respect to poultry.

I might also remind the committee that in 1931, owing to the efforts of the government of that day and particularly of the Department of Agriculture, the embargo on cattle entering Great Britain was removed or the time within which they had to be slaughtered was extended. At that time I believe the live animals were permitted to enter and go to feed lots or to pasture. I think the records can be found in the department showing that a trial shipment was made of two carloads of cattle, one of which I think was of the Poll-Angus breed. One carload went to the feed lots and the other carload turned out to pasture, and the result was extremely favourable. Apparently the grass cattle took to the pasture over there readily and made wonderful gains, and that was also the case with the feed lots. That would open up a market for a different quality or weight of animal, and I understand if the right type and grade of live animal is shipped, a market might be developed for that lighter weight animal. Those are matters in connection with which the Department of Agriculture should be commended. There is a great market over there, and I trust the minister will bend every effort towards making further trial shipments and further experiments with respect to this matter.

Could the minister give the committee some information with respect to the number of cows shipped to the United States in 1935, 1936 and 1937?

Mr. GARDINER: With respect to dressed poultry may I say that in 1931 the total number of pounds shipped to all countries was 298,000. That is a greatly reduced figure from those which prevailed about 1925; considerable quantities were being shipped at that time. The figures respecting shipments to all countries are as follows:

Year	Pounds
1933	1,552,000
1934	1,688,000
1935	3,164,000
1937	4,139,000

The quantities to the United Kingdom are as follows:

Year	Pounds
1934	1,428,000
1937	3,509,000

The amount of dressed poultry shipped to the United States is very much less, but a great volume of live poultry is shipped to that country. I believe there is a greater volume of live poultry shipped to the United States than of dressed poultry to Great Britain.

Mr. PERLEY: What have been the results of shipments to Great Britain? Are they living up to the trial shipments so far as quality is concerned, and how were those shipments received?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; the quality is improving as they go along and as they obtain more experience. When I was overseas two years ago I found that the main criticism with respect to our poultry was not as to quality but as to the fact that it was not standardized. When the British retailer buys a box containing two or three dozen chickens he wants to know how much each will weigh when he takes it out of the box. Those chickens are sold to families of a certain size which require birds weighing a certain amount. The main criticism with our production was that while our poultry would come over in even better condition than the poultry from central European countries, it did not sell as well, because when the box was opened the merchant never knew what the size of the chicken was going to be. On the other hand, the chickens coming from central Europe were of uniform weight, and the weights were marked on the ends of the boxes. That seemed to be the main criticism, and we are attempting to overcome it by trying to improve our own packing. Grading has been developed along the same lines as the grading in connection with other products, and is gradually improving.

Mr. PERLEY: Was there any way by which the people could tell from what part of Canada the different shipments came?

Mr. GARDINER: No; they are just marked "Canadian"; that is the only mark placed on them.

Mr. THOMPSON: In view of the fact that the quota to Great Britain has not been filled, can the minister say why the hog population of Canada decreased in 1937?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the figures for 1937, but I am informed there was no decrease in the number in that year. On the contrary, there was a slight increase, although it may not have been as great as in previous years.

Mr. THOMPSON: How many trial shipments of fresh eggs were sent to England in the last year?

Mr. GARDINER: In answer to the hon. member's former question the figures show that in 1935 the hog production amounted to 2,957,000; in 1936, to 3,796,000, and in 1937 to 3,966,000. It will be seen that there were about 170,000 more in the last year than in the previous year.

Mr. THOMPSON: I asked for the hog population.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Those are production figures.

Mr. GARDINER: Those are the figures for hog marketing. I am not just sure as to how the population stands.

Mr. THOMPSON: Would the minister answer my question as to how many trial shipments of fresh eggs were sent to Great Britain last year?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been a total export of a million and a quarter dozen. Four carloads were assembled in Montreal.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Were any trial shipments of fresh eggs made by the government last year?

Mr. GARDINER: The shipments are not made by the government. They are made by the packers, but the government assists in the assembling and grading of them.

Mr. TUSTIN: In connection with the grading of hogs the minister said it was not compulsory to have hogs graded on the rail. If a farmer brings a load of hogs and the drover grades those hogs on foot, how must the drover sell them to the abattoir? Does the abattoir accept his grading, or are they graded on rail by the abattoir?

Mr. GARDINER: The hogs are graded under government direction, and the packer accepts the grade given by the government inspector.

Mr. TUSTIN: But where the drover buys hogs and grades them himself, on foot, will the abattoir accept his grade when he sells them to that abattoir, or do they grade them on the rail?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand the abattoir accepts only the government grade.

Mr. TUSTIN: Do I understand that they do accept the government grader's grade on foot?

Mr. GARDINER: The packer must accept the government grade.

Mr. TUSTIN: According to the report of the committee which studied marketing in England, we find that each egg was labelled "empire." Is that still done, or has there been any amendment to the regulation?

Mr. GARDINER: The regulation is in the old country, not here. I know, however, that they must be either graded with the name of the country from which they come, or marked "empire." Canadian eggs can be marked either way, but they must be marked one way or the other.

Mr. TUSTIN: There is no regulation in the department stating they must be stamped with the word "Canada"?

Mr. GARDINER: If the regulations are applied to eggs, there will be, when the new regulations go into effect. But up to date there has not been any.

Mr. TUSTIN: I know several shipments have been made from Napanee. As a matter of fact, fifty cases of fresh eggs were shipped last week to the old country and each egg had stamped upon it the word "Canada."

Mr. GARDINER: They would have to be stamped one way or the other.

Mr. SENN: The other evening we had some discussion about our shipments of bacon to the mother country. There is no doubt that this forms one of the most important items of export to Great Britain. The prices we receive in Great Britain do not compare very favourably with the prices received for bacon from Denmark and other countries. It has been said, I believe with a great deal of truth, that the prices received for our Wiltshire sides of bacon in the English market determine to a great extent the prices paid to the farmer in Canada. If we were receiving the same prices in England for our bacon as is received by Denmark and other countries, it would mean possibly a cent or more added to the price of hogs in Canada. Whether the difference would be as much as that, I do not know, but there is no doubt that there would be some difference, to the benefit of the farmer. In the report known as the Shaw report there is a good deal of discussion about the type of bacon that goes to the mother country. I notice that under the heading, Selection and Grading, the following is said:

> The grading and selection of Canadian bacon are not entirely satisfactory and must be improved. Selections are occasionally mixed, and, less frequently, grades are inaccurate.

The other night I made some reference to the fact that our bacon is not all inspected as it goes out for shipment to the old country; that there is simply a sample inspection. There are not too many abattoirs in Canada from which shipments of bacon are made to the old country. We already have government graders and inspectors at the abattoirs, and I think it would be possible to see that the very best grade of bacon is baled. While I am on my feet I should like to refer further to this report. The statement is made that there are not enough Wiltshire sides shipped to the motherland, but that there are large quantities of what are known as box cuts and hams being sent to this market. The statement is made by the wholesalers over there that the large quantities of Canadian cuts have a depressing influence on the price of Canadian Wiltshires. It seems to me that something might be done, perhaps more than is being done now, to ensure that more Wiltshire sides of the proper size and grade are sent to the motherland. I have in my hand a pamphlet entitled, A Letter on Canadian Live Stock Products, dated February, 1938. Some reference is made to the size of bacon sent to the old country. There are three grades, and I understand within each grade there are three sizes. The standard grade runs between fifty-five and sixty-five pounds to the side. This is what is said in this letter:

> In 1937, the bacon from Canada was exported in two grades, "A" and "B." Of the total shipped, 84 per cent was grade A and sixteen per cent was grade B. But only twenty-five per cent of the total export was of grade A sizeable, No. 1 selection, and sixteen per cent grade A sizeable, No. 2 selection.

The No. 1 selection is that which runs between fifty-five and sixty-five pounds. It goes on to say:

> Considering the matter of weight alone, only 58 per cent of our bacon fell within the sizeable range of fifty-five to sixty-five pounds.

I cannot understand why that should be. This letter lays the blame largely at the door of the farmer, stating that he is marketing his hogs in sizes from which it is not possible to get this size of Wiltshire sides. I believe there are sufficient hogs slaughtered in our abattoirs of select and bacon grades from which could be obtained sufficient of this size to fill all shipments. I wonder what is being done by the department to rectify this situation? So long as we continue to send undersize bacon and bacon of lower grades to England, we shall never realize the price for our bacon that other countries are getting. So long as we are getting a lower price than we should be, our farmers will not be realizing the prices they should. Just what is contemplated to remedy this situation?

Mr. GARDINER: There is a representative of the Department of Agriculture in London who checks this bacon as it comes over. It is quite true it is only a sample check as one man could not check it all. Where there is any reason for criticism, that criticism is sent back to the department and forwarded to whoever may be concerned. An attempt is made to have only the best quality shipped, and I think eventually that is what should be done. Only the best of our bacon should go to Great Britain. There is some question in the minds of those who wrote the report just referred to as to whether we can meet the demands which have been created by the development of that market up to the moment. However, an effort is being made to see that only the best goes forward.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): What were our exports last year?

Mr. GARDINER: 192,000,000 pounds.

Mr. SENN: The minister says an effort is being made, but what are the efforts?

Mr. GARDINER: In the first place, an effort must be made by the man who produces the hog. In the second place, an effort must be made by the man who feeds the hog. In the third place, an effort must be made by the man who houses the hog to see that it is housed properly. The only way to meet the competition of Denmark is to do what they do. The Danish people have a line of hogs which have been bred up to standard during the last 200 years. It is sometimes thought that the small shoulder and parts of the back having to do with the grading of the bacon are due altogether to the breeding, but I am informed that this is not the case. I am told that the manner in which the hog is housed has just as much to do with it as anything else. When a hog is allowed out to root around it develops a large neck, as people do who do other things, and it also develops a large shoulder. The Danish people stop the hog altogether from digging. They put him on cement where he can not work. All he does is eat the proper foods. The hogs have definite rations dealt out to them. When our hogs are let out to root up roots and other things they develop large shoulders and necks and all that kind of thing. It is absolutely impossible to get a standard slab of bacon with that kind of production. We shall have to start with the breeder and follow it through to the housing and feeding. We must get our people producing the one type in the one way all across Canada if we are to meet the competition of a country like Denmark.

Mr. SENN: I would not want the minister to leave the impression that the farmer is entirely to blame for this situation. I notice on page 958 of Hansard of this year an answer given by the minister to a question asked by the hon. member for York East (Mr. McGregor). The information is given that there were 714,847 hogs officially graded as selects in Canada in 1937. I do not know whether they have the heavy shoulders of which the minister speaks. If they had, I do not think they would be classed as selects. In addition, there were some 312,000 that were classed as A grade. In either one of these grades of hogs perfectly good Wiltshire sides can be obtained. There were only one million hogs shipped to England last year altogether, in the form of Wiltshire sides, so the minister's explanation that we are not shipping enough Wiltshire sides over there and laying the blame on the growers is not altogether warranted. I believe there is some difficulty within the packing industry itself, because no doubt they have to cater to the Canadian trade to a certain extent.

Mr. GARDINER: I thought that was what the hon. member advocated, that this was the trade to which we ought to cater.

Mr. SENN: Certainly, but we have also a surplus that we must dispose of, and when the price we get in the British market determines the price which the farmer in Canada receives for his hogs, I do not think it is wise for us to send over bacon which is not going to command the highest price in the British market. If we cannot export a small quantity successfully, what are we going to do when we get a much larger hog population in this country? I am not particularly condemning the department. I am simply pointing this out to the committee because I believe there is something that can be done by way of inspection and supervision over the exports, and I am afraid that to-day this is left altogether too much in the hands of the packing industry itself, instead of having a supervision that might very well be undertaken by the department.

Mr. PERLEY: I asked the minister for the number of cows shipped from Canada to the United States in 1935, 1936 and 1937.

Mr. GARDINER: We had that information in front of us a moment ago. While it is being looked up, I might say in reply to what the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) has just said, that to supply the weight of bacon which was exported to Great Britain last year would require 1,600,000 hogs—

Mr. SENN: I said Wiltshire sides, not the total amount of bacon.

Mr. GARDINER: If we were going to sell all Wiltshire sides, we would have to have that number of hogs in order to send the sides forward, and even the figures that were indicated are not sufficient to do that Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Of the select quality?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. In reply to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, the number of dairy cows shipped from Canada to the United States in 1935 was 6,752, and in 1936, 6,549.

Mr. PERLEY: What was the number of dairy cows in Saskatchewan in 1936 and 1937?

Mr. GARDINER: We have not the provincial figures.

Mr. PERLEY: If the information could be made available, I should like to have it in order to see whether there has been a decrease in the number of dairy cows in the province in the last two or three years.

Mr. GARDINER: I have not those figures, but I could get them some time later on.

Mr. PERLEY: Has the minister the number of cows that were shipped last fall under the regulations reducing the herds in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: I have the total number of cattle, but I have not the figures broken down showing the number of cows.

Mr. HANSON: I think the committee has now been given a great deal of information on hogs and cattle, and we should consider human beings for a while.

Item agreed to.

Production services—Production services administration, $60,700.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Again I wish to draw the committee's attention to this document that was presented instead of the Shaw report.

Mr. GARDINER: That does not come under this vote.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): This deals with production services.

Mr. GARDINER: I was asked by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) to allow item No. 12 to stand, and what my hon. friend has in mind would come under that item.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I was going to speak of one feature of production, and I shall not hold the item further than to refer to paragraph 4 on this famous page ten of the minister's document, which I do not think is included in the original report. Page ten gives the proposals of the Shaw committee which have already been made effective, and paragraph 4 on page ten says:

> The seed of a particularly promising new variety of tomato has been purchased. It has been distributed among canners throughout Canada who have undertaken to have the crop produced and processed under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture.

This afternoon, under another item, the minister stated that the seed had not been distributed except to the experimental farms.

Mr. GARDINER: I think it would be well if this discussion came up under item No. 18, which deals with seed. I think we had really better wait until we reach that item.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Very well.

Item agreed to.

Health of Animals—Administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act, $1,625,610.

Mr. PERLEY: What is the number employed under this vote?

Mr. GARDINER: The details appear on page 59 of the estimates.

Mr. PERLEY: How many veterinary inspectors are employed?

Mr. GARDINER: The number is 262 veterinary inspectors this year as against 270 last year, and the complete service comprises 437 this year as against 447 last year.

Mr. PERLEY: Were any of these veterinaries employed at the Carberry pasturage last year?

Mr. GARDINER: A few of them, in connection with the testing service. We tested all the breeding stock that passed through the pasture for Bang's disease and T.B., and there were veterinaries there carrying on that service.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Would the minister explain the great reduction in the compensation for animals slaughtered? I see it is less than half what it was last year.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: The custom has been to deal in the supplementary estimates with the final amount necessary. This vote provides only the original appropriation.

Mr. STEWART: Has the department any plan for eliminating Bang's disease in certain areas in a manner similar to the policy adopted for the eradication of tuberculosis in different areas? I know that certain resolutions have been passed by municipal councils and other organizations urging the government to adopt a policy similar to that which has been so successfully adopted for the elimination of tuberculosis.

Mr. GARDINER: We have not gone so far with this as we have gone with tuberculosis. As my hon. friend will recall, at the beginning of the activities in connection with tuberculosis there was considerable doubt whether the tests made were satisfactory and whether they were always reliable. We are experiencing exactly the same thing in connection with the Bang's. There is a great deal of disagreement at the moment as to whether the method followed to detect the disease and deal with it is satisfactory. Until that is fairly well established in the minds of breeders it is impossible to apply it in the same way. But we have, I understand, a number of herds that we are using at the present time in order to try to establish certain information, and consideration is being given to adopting certain areas and trying to clear Bang's disease out of those areas.

Mr. STEWART: Where are the herds? I mean, are they in Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: The herds are in the vicinity of Ottawa, by private arrangements with the owners. I was just questioning the advisability of naming the owners.

Mr. STEWART: No; I am not asking that. I was asking if they are in Ontario.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SENN: What investigational work is being done, if any, to ascertain just how far this disease has extended? From what I know of it, it seems to me that the ravages of the disease are more serious than even tuberculosis in its worst stage. There seems to be some hesitation on the part of those whose herds have the disease to let it be known, and I wonder if there is any investigational work going on to find out just how extensive this disease is. While I am on my feet, might I ask what work is being done by the department to develop new serums to combat the disease and to provide a better method of testing for it. I understand that the province of Ontario, particularly through the college at Guelph, is doing quite an important work in this respect. Whether this department is cooperating with them or not, I do not know. I should like the minister to say what is being done both in the way of ascertaining the extent of the ravages of the disease and as to the reliability of the test, and to produce serums or some kind of inoculation that will do away with the disease.

Mr. GARDINER: The tests that we have conducted in connection with the first question, that is as to the extent to which the ravages of the disease are found, show about two per cent. Fifteen thousand have been checked, and out of the fifteen thousand we found two per cent. We checked all of the females that passed through Carberry pasture. They were gathered from a very large area in the western part of Canada, and that test showed 1·7 per cent, which is less than half of the reactors in tuberculosis, on an average, in the different areas. This would indicate that so far as investigation has gone the ravages of the disease are only about 50 per cent of what they are through tuberculosis. As to the reliability of the test, as I said a moment ago, that is something upon which all persons are not agreed. But I think the officials of the department are fairly well in agreement that the test which is being used is at least as satisfactory as can be expected.

Mr. BARBER: What is being done in British Columbia in regard to Bang's disease? I think I drew to the attention of the minister last year that certain serums could be purchased across the line which veterinaries claimed were very effective, but they were not permitted to be brought into this country. Have they been investigated, looked into more thoroughly?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that there has been some discussion with regard to calf vaccination with the hope of preventing the disease, but that is still in the experimental stage. We have about ten or twelve herds under observation at present in connection with the use of these serums. We are not yet in a position to state whether the serums are satisfactory or not.

Mr. BARBER: There is a matter I discussed with the officials of this department a few days ago. A disease which is quite prevalent in certain parts of British Columbia is what is commonly known as red water, and I understand that the department about six years ago leased or took over a farm on the lower mainland of British Columbia at which they were to carry on experiments. I believe they have demonstrated in the first place that the disease is not contagious, and also that it did not develop under certain conditions which were supposed to have caused its development. Of late it has been demonstrated, I believe, and the veterinary in charge is convinced, that it is more prevalent on what are known as rolling farms, where sloughs exist or similar conditions retain water for a certain length of time. What I want to impress upon the minister is the importance of carrying on that part of the investigation, at any rate of proceeding with it a little further. When I was at home at Easter I visited a number of farms, and it was suggested to me that on one of these farms a few acres might be leased—which could be done for fifty or sixty dollars a year—and some of the cattle taken from the farms located on the lower mainland, and placed on that land. The particular farmer's loss, I believe, runs to about twenty-seven cattle in the last ten or twelve years. Another farmer lost twenty-eight. One farmer I know of told me that his losses ran to somewhere about $200 or $250 a year. It is estimated that the total loss through this disease alone in the lower mainland will run to somewhere about $100,000 a year. The minister will, therefore, understand that it is quite important that this investigation should be pursued still further, and I trust that he will see fit to extend this research work in connection with the disease.

Mr. GARDINER: The research work in connection with the disease is being continued, and as has been suggested, every opportunity is being taken of trying to meet the disease and find ways and means of preventing its development.

Mr. STEWART: I notice that in the item of temporary assistance this year as compared with last there is an increase of approximately $80,000. Why is there such a large proposed increase in this item?

Mr. GARDINER: The increase in the temporary service is largely due to the fact that we have to set up organizations to take care of the inspections in connection with tuberculosis areas. The numbers vary from time to time, depending upon the amount of money that is voted by this committee for that purpose. If we get the amount we are asking for this year we shall do a certain amount of work, but if we are refused that amount we shall have to cut down on our staff. The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered, and

I cannot say what the extent of the work will be this year. Last year we obtained the amount we thought was necessary, and of course our temporary staffs throughout the country had to be increased to take care of the work. We do not put on permanent appointees to do all that work. The same applies to the inspection of meat. When the marketing of meat at a certain point is fairly high we have to have some inspection service, and that requires new help. Where new abattoirs are opened, as in the last year or so, we have to supply a service there.

Mr. SENN: I would be glad to think that Bang's disease is prevalent only to the extent which the minister outlines, namely, two per cent of the cattle of the country. My impression was that it was much worse. What regulations are in effect for the shipment of cattle to the United States so far as Bang's disease is concerned? Is there any arrangement between the two countries? If so, what is it? I am under the impression that the regulations have been tightened up to some extent, and I believe they have also been tightened up with regard to cattle coming from the motherland. Can the minister give us any information?

Mr. GARDINER: The federal regulations for cattle going into the United States are the same as the regulations for cattle coming from the United States to Canada, but some of the states have regulations that differ from the federal regulations, and in those cases there may be greater difficulty in getting cattle into those states than there is in bringing cattle into Canada. The regulation is that breeding stock must be tested before it goes from Canada to the United States.

Mr. SENN: If they pass the test, are they accepted?

Mr. GARDINER: The federal government will accept them, but some of the states have additional requirements.

Mr. SENN: Have there been any changes recently in the regulations for cattle coming here or leaving the country?

Mr. GARDINER: There have been no recent changes so far as the federal governments are concerned.

Mr. SENN: What about cattle coming from England? I was under the impression that some changes had been made and that cattle that had been found free in England have now to be kept in quarantine.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: Great Britain does not require a test for either Bang's or tuberculosis, but we do make the test. Cattle coming from Great Britain to Canada must submit to the test for Bang's and tuberculosis.

Mr. SENN: Is that in the motherland, or after they come here? I believe that originally they could be tested in England, but now they have to be tested in quarantine here.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; they are kept in quarantine here.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): How does the minister arrive at the two per cent he mentioned?

Mr. GARDINER: That is, two per cent of the 15,000 that we have tested. We do not know whether those herds may have been tested before and some weeded out. I should not like to say definitely, but I think the closest check so far as the west is concerned is the one made at Carberry where we gathered without selection every heifer or cow that came into the pasture, no matter where they came from, and checked them before they went out. That was less than two per cent, and it was a fair test of that particular area.

Mr. STIRLING: What number did that cover?

Mr. GARDIER: Approximately 2,000.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): The minister said that if the amounts asked for were not granted the number of inspectors would have to be reduced. I do not agree with those who believe that we have too many inspectors. In all our criticisms of the estimates so far it will be observed that very little has come from any part of the house with reference to the amounts expended or proposed to be expended. Personally I am sorry that the government sees fit to budget for only a little over $9,000,000 total expenditure in agriculture. I see no item in the estimates that looks too large, and in fact I would be glad to see the government take a more active part in connection with inspection generally, extending it until all the live stock of the dominion are covered. It is all the more important with reference to the export trade.

ONTARIO-QUEBEC BOUNDARY LINE ON LAKE ST. FRANCIS AND ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. CHEVRIER:

1. Is the government aware of difficulties arising among residents of Ontario and Quebec over the exact location of the boundary line between these two provinces on lake St. Francis and the river St. Lawrence?
2. Is the government in possession of any old maps showing the exact location of the interprovincial boundary line between Ontario and Quebec on lake St. Francis and the river St. Lawrence?
3. If not, can it point to any act or statute, save the statutes of Upper Canada and those of Lower Canada, demarcating this boundary line?
4. In view of the islands in this vicinity owned by the government as trustees for the Indians, is it not desirable that it should be known whether these islands are in Ontario or in Quebec waters?
5. Has a commission ever been set up to delineate this line? If so: (a) by whom, and (b) what was done?
6. Were the commissioners able to agree on the whole or any part of this boundary line?
7. If the commissioners were unable to agree, can the government not do something to bring about a solution of this boundary dispute?
8. Could the government not invite the provinces to submit the question to the Supreme Court of Canada for adjudication?

Mr. CRERAR:

1. Yes.
2. No.
3. No.
4. Not particularly important at the present time.
5. Yes. (a) By the governments of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario; (b) Unofficial information has been received that surveys were made and some monuments erected but no advice has been received that any final agreement has been made and confirmed.
6. Information has been received that the commissioners were able to agree on a part of the boundary line.
7. It is considered that the initiative in this matter should lie with the governments of Ontario and Quebec.
8. Answered by No. 7.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

AGREEMENT FOR JOINT OPERATION BY TWO RAILWAY COMPANIES OF CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS HOTEL IN VANCOUVER

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley):

For a copy of all papers, letters, telegrams, and other documents, dated from January 1, 1937, to date, relating to the agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways for the joint operation of the new Canadian National Railways hotel in Vancouver.

Mr. HOWE: To the best of my knowledge this agreement has not as yet been completed. As it is a joint agreement, the decision as to whether or not it should be tabled is a matter I shall have to refer to both railways. It is not a document of the department. However, if the motion is permitted to stand I shall take the matter up with the railway companies.

Motion stands.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

THREATENED PICKETING OF DEPARTMENTAL WORKS EMPLOYING CIVILIANS IN HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. EARL LAWSON (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). It has just been brought to my attention that a veterans' organization in the maritime provinces protested to the Minister of National Defence by wire on May 2 and again on May 16 with reference to the employment of civilians on works of that department at Halifax. In view of the fact it has been published that a meeting is called for to-morrow night at Halifax for the purpose of arranging to picket the works, would the minister care to make a statement to the house with respect to the situation, and as to any facts he has available in connection with the matter?

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understood from the telegram I received that the agitation was with reference to projected works, and not with regard to actual works in operation. I want to say immediately that the Department of National Defence will not be influenced in the slightest degree by very extreme suggestions of that nature. We have tried so far as possible to give every possible and reasonable benefit to ex-service men. Extreme agitation of the kind indicated will not have support from the Department of National Defence.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SUGGESTED FIXING OF MINIMUM PRICE AND ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATES AS OF AUGUST 1

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Euler). In view of the fact that soil and moisture conditions in western Canada are good and the acreage sown promises a good crop; in view also of the fact that the wheat board is to remain intact, would the minister give a statement or promise the farmers of western Canada that the government will allow the board to fix a minimum price and issue certificates as of August 1, 1938? This is an important matter from the point of view of the farmer.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As the hon. gentleman knows, his question involves a matter of policy and I am sure he will realize that I cannot give an answer offhand. I shall try to give him an answer in a day or two.

JACQUES CARTIER BRIDGE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF TOLL CHARGE TO ST. HELEN'S ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VITAL MALLETTE (Jacques-Cartier): La Presse of Montreal, a very important paper, contained a report last night to the effect that the government would be asked to have the toll gates on Jacques Cartier bridge removed and placed so as to give free access to St. Helen's island. Could the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) advise whether the government intends to take such action?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): Nothing of this kind has been brought to my attention personally, but it is possible it may be in the department. I shall make inquiry and give my hon. friend any further information I am able to obtain.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, we were dealing with item No. 14 last evening, but the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) finds it necessary to leave this afternoon and he has some remarks he would like to make on item No. 12. I suggest that we revert to this item.

Marketing services—Marketing of agricultural products including temporary appointments that may be required to be made notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, the amount available for such appointments not to exceed $50,000, $200,000.

Mr. MASSEY: Mr. Chairman, I hasten first to thank the minister for his courtesy in this matter. I appreciate his action in permitting me to speak at this time. I rise to offer to the minister and to the government what I feel are one or two constructive suggestions. It is not my purpose during the course of the remarks I shall make either to criticize or to condemn. I am seized with the feeling that the position of agriculture in this country is of such vital importance to the dominion as a whole that every possible assistance should be given to the farmer, in connection with both the production and the distribution of his products at fair and reasonable market prices. It will be impossible in the time at my disposal to cover the subject with anything like completeness, and accordingly my remarks will of necessity be confined to one or two of the major points in the case. I am sure the minister will appreciate that I am addressing this committee fully conscious of the fact that what I may say will be only a small part of the story which should be told, a story which is of vital importance to the dominion.

There are two factors that should be taken into consideration at the commencement of any discussion of Canadian agriculture. The first is that the Canadian farmer is without a peer in the world. He has demonstrated again and again that not only can he produce products of high quality, but that he personally possesses the characteristics which tend to build up the back-bone of a nation. He has faced, as has his fellow Canadian, the industrial worker, the most difficult and trying of times. He has maintained his equilibrium in the face of extraordinary difficulties and hardships. Not only has he to face, as I said the other day in this house, the economic hazards of his high calling, but he is also beset by those factors which have been styled "acts of God" and which are completely beyond his control and the control of those who are responsible for government.

Second, this country is fundamentally agrarian. I have in my hand a record of the 1935 production, both primary and secondary. The primary production for that year was as follows:

Agriculture	$ 622,722,000
Forestry	227,500,346
Fisheries	34,427,854
Trapping	8,877,331
Mining	238,581,268
Electrical power	125,123,078
	$1,257,281,877

In the face of such figures and with the knowledge of the facts of the matter in regard to the importance of agriculture in this country, so readily apparent from these figures, all members of this committee, whether they represent industrial, urban or rural areas, must concern themselves with the problems of the farm, because it is apparent from these figures that agriculture comprises 50 per cent of the primary production of this country. Industrial Canada is directly dependent upon agricultural Canada, and agricultural Canada is directly dependent upon industrial Canada. So we face this whole question, not from any sectional point of view but from that of the loyal and true Canadian.

In December of last year there was released over the signature of the Minister of Agriculture a report which has since become known as the Shaw report. It was a most interesting document prepared by a worthy committee after an investigation of the possibilities of further developing the markets of the United Kingdom for Canada and particularly Canadian agricultural products. Recently, indeed within the week, a further bulletin was released, again over the signature of the hon. minister, which is essentially an illuminated edition of the Shaw report. It is changed slightly here and there, but in the main it embodies a record of the findings of the Shaw committee. I do not wish to repeat here any of the discussions which have been carried on in your committee, Mr. Chairman, within the past week in regard to this new bulletin; I shall deal with it upon its face value and with reference to the factual information that it contains.

This report reminds us that the agricultural activities of Canada are as diversified as it is possible to have them. Within climatic restrictions, the Canadian farmer from Halifax to Victoria engages in the production of all agricultural products. We are wheat farmers, dairy farmers, fruit farmers, potato growers, vegetable growers, truck gardeners and all the rest. However, we have always regarded ourselves primarily as wheat producers. With changing world conditions which have brought about accompanying changes in our wheat markets, with the increase in importance of the dairy production of the eastern provinces, our agrarian picture is indicating a slow—perhaps not so slow—and certain change. Further, extraordinary calamities in western Canada in what have been termed the drought areas have brought all thinking Canadians face to face with the problem of finding a solution of the difficulties which the western farmer, through no fault of his own, has to face, difficulties brought about by two factors, first, the loss of a substantial proportion of his foreign market and, second, a limitation upon his activities as a result of changing climatic and soil conditions. What, then, is the future of the Canadian farmer? What is the future of the western farmer? Yes, and what is the future of the eastern farmer?

Let me deal specifically with three of our important products, Canadian-wide in their production—eggs, butter and bacon.

Let me deal, first, with eggs. In 1935, 24,594,000 Canadian hens produced 223,540,000 dozen eggs at seventeen cents a dozen, to a total value of $37,763,000. Here is a product that is obviously of great importance to the Canadian farmer. It is interesting to note that of these eggs we exported only 1,300,744 dozen, while our domestic production per capita amounted to 22·39 dozen a year. Unquestionably one of the most important markets available to us for this product is that of the United Kingdom; for hon. members well know that Canadian eggs enter the market of the United Kingdom duty free. As one reads through the bulletin to which I have already referred, so recently released by the minister, and turns to page 48, which deals with eggs, one realizes at once that the domestic production of eggs in the United Kingdom is far below their own requirements even though there has been a sharp increase in their production in the past few years; but in spite of this increase we find written in this report at page 48:

> On this basis of production home supplies accounted for about three-fifths of the total consumption in 1936, or 38 eggs out of every 62 consumed.

Thus it is that in spite of what has been done in the United Kingdom to increase the production of eggs, only thirty-eight out of every sixty-two eggs consumed there are produced within its boundaries. Then, if we turn to the appendix to the report, at the top of page 77 we find that in 1936 there were 24,653,000 great hundreds of eggs imported into the United Kingdom from many different countries, among which there were as important factors the Irish Free State, Australia, Denmark, Poland and the Netherlands. Of this import of 24,653,000 great hundreds of eggs, Canada exported only 103,000 great hundreds, or 0·4 of one per cent. The minister may say at once that our own domestic requirements run so close to our own production that we have not available for export eggs in any outstanding quantity. But why is it, when we realize that we are such an insignificant factor in the British egg market, that Canadian agriculture cannot take advantage of the fact that the mother country prefers to buy from within the empire if at all possible, especially if the quality of the empire product is equal to that of the product of other countries. On pages 49 and 50 of the minister's bulletin there appear the recommendations of the Shaw committe which tell us in part:

1. Canada's eggs at present are not only sold as a cold storage product, but because of our method of grading are classified as "Grade B" storage.

Further:

2. It would appear that for a certain part of each year—at least 5 or 6 months—Canada could successfully ship fresh eggs to certain United Kingdom markets.

And further:

3. The majority of Canadian eggs at present are shipped in crates bearing attractive labels such as "Canadian eggs" but each egg within the case bears the stamp "Empire."

And still further:

Further investigational work should be carried on (possibly by the national research council) in connection with temperature and humidity control during periods of storage and transportation of the product with a view to the elimination of losses due to moulds, spots, etc.

Those are the recommendations of the Shaw report, and there would appear to be no extraordinary difficulty to be overcome. The case is quite clear. We are facing essentially two problems in connection with the export of our eggs to the United Kingdom: (1) We as yet do not produce in volume sufficient to export in large quantities; and (2) such eggs as we do export at the present time are relegated to the limbo of cold storage grade B eggs.

Let me deal now with a second important product, butter. Hon. members must be fully conscious of the subtle and veiled attack that is to-day being made upon the animal kingdom of Canada. It is not going too far to state, Mr. Chairman, that the Canadian dairy farmer is in a most hazardous position as a result of the threat, insidious and unrecognized in altogether too many cases, against the dairy cow. The vast and staggering increase in the production of vegetable oils throughout the world is challenging the production of butter in a manner that must not escape the attention of this government, or of any government for that matter. Canada is certainly not in a position at the present time to have her animal kingdom decimated by the vegetable kingdom. One does not wish in any way to impede progress; but in these days when the dairy farmers of Canada are faced with and are facing such extraordinary circumstances, we must regard with extreme seriousness what is happening in the far corners of the world. I make these remarks by way of introduction to my comments on our butter production.

In 1936 there was produced in Canada a total of both creamery and home made butter of 380,290,500 pounds, of which we exported only 7,697,000 pounds. Our domestic consumption amounted to 340,439,540 pounds, or 31·13 pounds per capita. If we turn to the minister's new bulletin, page 43, we find that the market of the United Kingdom imported no less than the extraordinary amount of 1,092,228,816 pounds of butter from many different countries, chief among which were Australia, New Zealand and Denmark. Canada exported to the United Kingdom in 1936 only 0·42 of one per cent of the total butter imported by Great Britain. The recommendations of the Shaw committee in this connection are also to be found on page 43 and read as follows:

While it appears that Canada's exportable surplus of dairy products to the United Kingdom markets will be for many years in the form of cheese, yet, due to changes in the relative values of cheese and butter in Canada as well as to other influences, it may be necessary during some years to export surplus butter.

Butter makers should continue their efforts to improve the quality of the product, not only on account of the better prices which may be realized for the relatively small quantities which may be exported, but to a greater extent on account of the effect of the export value on the price of the much greater quantity marketed in Canada during periods of export movement.

Again, we must bear in mind that our butter enters the United Kingdom duty free, and that we have here an opportunity to develop this product of our dairy farms for that market; but at the present time, consuming as we do the vast proportion of our own production, we have little surplus butter available for export to any country, let alone the United Kingdom. I fully realize the implication of the recommendations of the Shaw committee when it is stated that for some years to come cheese will be the important export from our dairy industry. Nevertheless we must bear in mind that we are still a negligible factor in a market in which we have free entry and which is certainly available to us.

Against this situation I return to the point I discussed at the beginning of my remarks on butter, and that is the staggering, vast and frightening increase in the world's production of vegetable oils. For example, let us take palm oil. In 1920, in Sumatra, 360 tons were produced; in 1936, 196,996 tons. In the Malay peninsula in 1920 no palm oil at all was produced, but in 1937 42,935 tons were produced. On the west coast of Africa in 1920 there were produced 119,312 tons as against 244,647 tons in 1937. And here, Mr. Chairman, I have taken only one source of vegetable oil, and that is palm oil. For Ceylon, Java and the Philippines, in the production of cocoanut oil a similar story can be told. Let it be remembered that we are continuing to import into Canada increasing quantities of these oils, which in the manufacture of shortening replace lard and butter, and in the manufacture of soap replace animal tallow and grease.

Then consider for a moment the importation of vegetable oil into Canada last year. These figures are as I stated, staggering:

	Pounds
Palm and palm kernel	50,700,000
Crude peanut oil	65,300,000
Peanut oil for soap and fish	5,400,000
Cotton seed and olive foots	4,600,000
Cocoanut oil for soap	27,800,000
Cocoanut oil not edible for refining	10,000,000
Crude cotton seed	15,500,000
Olive	800,000
Soya bean oil	2,200,000
Vegetable oil, n.o.p.	2,400,000
Vegetable oils, for food	4,700,000
Total	189,400,000

Let me for a moment turn to the production of bacon, the last of the three products I have selected upon which to make a few recommendations to the minister. Canadian bacon is excellent bacon, and the bacon producers of Canada are to be sincerely congratulated on the quality of their product. When it is considered that there is one pig in Canada to every three persons, one can realize how important is our bacon and ham and pork industry.

In discussing this major product, produced in all parts of Canada, we will recall that Canadian bacon enters the United Kingdom duty free, but that we have no tariff preference provided in either of the Canada-United Kingdom trade agreements of 1932 or 1937, although continuance of duty free entrance is assured. Further, the United Kingdom agreements with Canada have assured us of a quota of 2,500,000 hundredweight per annum. As we survey the export figures from 1928 on we realize just how important the United Kingdom market is to the producer of Canadian bacon. In a few moments I shall place upon Hansard the record of our export production, but sufficient be it to say for the moment that from a low in 1931 of 41,595 hundredweight of 112 pounds, our production has increased until in 1937 we exported to the United Kingdom market 1,387,006 hundredweight. But hon. members will note that we have barely passed the half-way mark in our quota.

[Mr. Massey.]

Again turning to the minister's bulletin, this time to page 28, we will note that whereas Great Britain has in six years more than doubled her domestic production of bacon, nevertheless she is producing only a fraction of her total requirements and is still a substantial customer of many different countries, of which Canada is one. As the Shaw report well reminds us, on page 27 of the minister's bulletin, there is a prejudice against Canadian bacon because immediately after the war much inferior bacon was sold, and this, having been held in storage for some time, seriously damaged the reputation of Canadian bacon.

Let me again remind the committee that the facts of the matter are that whereas we have a quota of 2,500,000 hundredweight against Canadian bacon we have yet only reached the half-way mark in filling that quota. If we turn to pages 33 and 34 of the minister's latest bulletin we shall find a series of recommendations, among which we will read the following:

> We feel that action should be taken to develop better merchandising methods. . . .
> A careful survey of Canadian bacon as it is handled in the United Kingdom retail shops failed to convince us that it was being merchandised in the best possible manner. On very few occasions was it advertised or sold as Canadian bacon. . . .
> Standards of quality must be maintained and improved.
> As volume and continuity of supply are essential other efforts will be nullified unless this can be accomplished. . . .
> A much higher percentage of sizable Wiltshires is desirable in Canadian exports. . . .
> The grading and selection of Canadian bacon has greatly improved in recent years. . . .
> Canadian bacon frequently discolours too quickly after being cut. Necessary investigation to be undertaken to ascertain and remove the cause, if possible. . . .

Now, Mr. Chairman, in what I have said so far I have had a definite purpose in mind. I have considered only three of the important agricultural products of this country—eggs, butter, and bacon; and these I have selected deliberately because of the potential possibilities that they present in the development and advancement of Canadian agriculture. Last summer I spent considerable time in Denmark conducting an extensive and intensive investigation of the methods employed by the government and other agencies for the development of Danish agriculture to its position of great importance in the market of the United Kingdom. The minister realizes as well as if not better than any member of this committee the substantial portion of the British market in eggs, butter and bacon claimed by the farmers of Denmark. Here is a little country of only 17,000 square miles, which means that twenty-four kingdoms of Denmark could be put into the province of Ontario alone. Of Denmark's population of 3,700,000, twenty-three per cent live in one big city in the country, the city of Copenhagen; thirty-nine per cent live in small towns, and the balance of the population, thirty-eight per cent, live in the country. They are a people completely homogeneous, and of Gotho-Germanic origin, possessed of high character and a deep moral sense, and their honesty is outstanding. Their educational system, as a result principally of the activities of Bishop Grundvik, in the latter part of the nineteenth century, is extraordinarily efficient in the development of the young Dane into full citizenship, with a sense of moral responsibility, not only to his country but to his neighbour.

Let it be remembered that Denmark, as an important factor in the agricultural markets of the world, has been built out of what were virtually the ashes of a country. Disastrous wars with Prussia and Austria had deprived Denmark of her most fertile territories, Schleswig and Holstein, and, further, as a wheat growing country she had lost her markets. Here then in the later half of the nineteenth century was a country that had been soundly defeated by her two arch-enemies, had lost her most fertile territories, and had been deprived of the outlet for her only major product, wheat. Her people were little more than serfs, lacking both in intelligence and in pride, all of which combined to build down to a nation that was on the verge of disaster. But to-day Denmark, primarily agrarian as she is, is one of the leading agricultural countries of the world, whose products are justly famous for their quality and consumer acceptance. It has been during the last sixty years that she has built herself into a country where 98 per cent of her farmers own their own land; where her agricultural products are of the highest quality and kind; a country in which a new nationalism has sprung up; a country which can boast of a system of social insurance governing sickness, accidents, old age, and all the rest, more widespread than any voluntary system in the world; a country in which only one in a thousand cannot read or write; a country in which there are no immensely rich people or any very poor people. Her farms are not large. There are 204,000 of them in this little kingdom, one-half of which are less than twenty-five acres in size, only twenty-three per cent of them being more than 150 acres. Twenty-nine per cent of her exports to-day are bacon, meat and other slaughtery products. Her butter, cheese and milk comprise twenty-five per cent of her exports, and eggs eight per cent. Fifty-four per cent of her total exports go to the United Kingdom alone.

If we consider such a country perhaps we are too ready to say that any comparisons between the agricultural development of Denmark and the agricultural development of Canada are too remote to be worthy of the attention that we might give to them. On the contrary, strange though it may seem to say it, the comparison is not so remote as one might at first think.

In Canada there are 729,000 farms; in Denmark there are 204,000. But if we compare the Danish live stock population with the human population, we shall see that their agricultural set-up, if I may so call it, is not so different from our own. In Denmark there is one horse to every six persons; in Canada there is one horse to every four persons. In Denmark there is one head of cattle to every person; in Canada there are four head of cattle to every five persons. In Denmark there is one pig to every person; in Canada there is one pig to every three persons. In Denmark there are seven chickens to every person; in Canada there are five chickens to every person. And yet, keeping in mind that their farms are small and also that many of our farms are vast in area, hon. members will realize from the figures I have given that the Danish set-up for the production of eggs, butter and bacon is not far removed in relative contrast from that of Canada.

But Denmark's approach to her markets in the United Kingdom has been dissimilar to ours. Realizing the position in which she was placed in the latter part of the nineteenth century as a result of the factors I have already mentioned, through governmental agencies she approached the United Kingdom to ascertain the type of product that would be most acceptable in the British market. Note that she did not develop her product and then endeavour to sell it in the United Kingdom; she went first to the United Kingdom and determined the quality and kind of product required, and then went back to her farms to develop that identical product. In this aim she has been most extraordinarily successful. In other words, she realized that the Danish farmer back on his little farm could not possibly know what kind of bacon would be most acceptable to the British market, for example. The government, however, was in a position to find out and to tell him, and that is exactly what the government did, with the net result that, realizing that quality was the only basis upon which she could possibly hope to compete in the market of the United Kingdom, Denmark has developed for that market a product which has wide acceptance in competition with the product of every other country in the world.

It will be interesting to all hon. members, I am sure, to hear the figures I am about to give. In 1936 Denmark exported to the United Kingdom 100 million dozen eggs, while Canada exported one million dozen eggs. In other words, for every one hundred Danish eggs sold in the United Kingdom one Canadian egg was sold. And Danish eggs were sold at a premium of ten per cent. In 1936 Denmark exported 2,172,000 hundredweight of butter to the United Kingdom, while Canada exported 40,000 hundredweight; and the premium on Danish butter, even above New Zealand butter, was no less than twenty per cent. In 1936 Denmark exported to the United Kingdom 3,373,000 hundredweight of bacon, while Canada exported 1,092,000; that is, we were outsold three to one. And the Danish price was twelve per cent higher than ours.

Let us also realize the handicap under which Denmark has been operating. Our eggs have free entry into the market of the United Kingdom, whereas the duty against Denmark on this commodity is one shilling per great hundred. Canadian butter enters the British market duty free; the rate of duty against Danish butter is fifteen shillings per hundredweight. As regards bacon, it will be recalled that in the agreement with Denmark the United Kingdom among other things undertook not to regulate imports of bacon and ham unless necessary for the regulation of the marketing of domestic supplies, in which case the Danish allocation was not to be less than 62 per cent of the total permitted imports from foreign countries. With the permission of the committee I should like to have this table placed on Hansard in tabular form, giving as it does exports from Canada and exports from Denmark of bacon, butter and eggs from 1928 to 1937.

The CHAIRMAN: With the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. MASSEY: It is very brief.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. MASSEY: What shall I do?

The CHAIRMAN: Unless there is unanimous consent, the hon. member will have to read it.

Mr. MASSEY: I shall take the time to read it, then.

[Mr. Massey.]

Mr. GARDINER: Take it as read.

Mr. MASSEY: The figures are given by the dominion bureau of statistics:

A further point that should be borne in mind is the extraordinary development of Danish cooperatives, a factor that has been of the utmost importance in the rise of Denmark to her present position. To complete the story within the limits of the moment is difficult; but let it be sufficient to say that it was in 1882 that the first cooperative was set up, while to-day there are 1,400 of them patronized by 192,000 out of the 204,000 farmers. The cooperatives to-day handle 90 per cent of the milk supply, 85 per cent of the bacon, 50 per cent of the butter, and 65 per cent of the feed and grains. Through the cooperatives the Danish farmer is assured of his market and the transportation of his products to it. He has no worries in regard to rates of foreign exchange or the problem of the middleman or shipping. If he is efficient, he gets the top price. If he is not efficient, he has only himself to blame; for every possible aid is given him directly and on the ground by the educational branch of the cooperative societies, which societies are well backed up by and receive energetic support from the government. The result has been essentially the standardization of Danish agricultural production. A small farm set-up of ten acres will have four cows, two horses and three pigs. A medium sized farm, of seventy acres, will boast twenty-five cows, six horses, and twenty-eight pigs, and will also employ four labourers and one maid. So scientific is the farming in Denmark that virtually the cow may be regarded as a machine and the pig as raw material.

I have already stated that the whole basis upon which Danish agriculture is predicated is quality. Let us see for a moment what is done in regard to the three products we have discussed. Every solitary, single one of the 1,200,000,000 eggs which left Denmark last year for the United Kingdom was lamp-tested by government inspectors. Every barrel of butter that leaves the country is also passed by government inspectors; every pound of bacon the same. And not only are the pigs examined on the hoof by veterinary surgeons, but every part of that pig is also examined by a veterinary surgeon in the course of its passage through the slaughtery. Thus, if at any time an egg or a barrel of butter or a side of bacon fails to come up to the rigid standard set by the government, and is turned down by the inspector, that egg, that barrel of butter or that side of bacon does not leave the country.

From the farmer's point of view the cooperative is a tremendous boon. Take the story of cooperative butter making. The farmer, or probably his wife, milks night and morning of course, and puts the milk in cans at the farm gate in the morning. The truck from the local cooperative picks up the cans shortly afterwards and takes them to the creamery where the milk is made into butter under the most rigid inspection. Next morning, when the cooperative truck again stops at his farm, it leaves the cans of the day before, this time full of the skim milk, picks up the whole milk cans and carries them to the creamery. That is all the farmer has to do with the processing and marketing of his butter, but he receives back the skim milk which he feeds to his pigs.

A similar story can be told in regard to bacon. As a quota is placed on the market so is the production controlled; the farmer each year receives so many "pig cards," which permit him to export as bacon to the United Kingdom the number of pigs for which he receives cards, nine, fifteen, twenty-five or whatever it may be, depending on the size of his farm. His pigs are bred only from government registered stock. Let me say in passing that every head of live stock and even every chicken in Denmark is registered. Unless the farmer can prove beyond doubt that not only the parents but also the four grandparents as well of his animals are approved by the government, the farmer cannot breed from that stock. It is only from government approved stock that breeding is permitted. Thus the strain of Danish cattle, horses, pigs, sheep and chickens is maintained to an amazingly high degree of perfection and efficiency.

To come back to the pigs, the farmer feeds his pigs in accordance with the best recognized methods. When they reach the weight of 170 pounds he rings up the cooperative slaughtery, which calls for them and takes them to town. On the hoof they are examined by a veterinary surgeon; if they weigh between 168 and 172 pounds and pass the inspector, they are slaughtered. If the pig weighs less than 168 pounds, it is returned to the farmer for further feeding; if it weighs over 172 pounds, it is also returned to the farmer; but in this case he cannot attempt to reduce its weight, he will fatten it and send it to Germany, where a fatter bacon is desired.

Hon. members will recognize from what I have said as briefly as possible that the Danish government has taken extraordinarily effective steps, working in conjunction with the cooperatives, to develop a great product which is acceptable in the market to which it is sent.

All that I have said thus far is in no way intended as criticism of the efforts of the Canadian farmer.

The CHAIRMAN: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that he has exhausted his time.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. MASSEY: If I might have just about five more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN: With the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. MASSEY: I appreciate your courtesy, Mr. Chairman, and that of the committee. As I have said, and I repeat, the Canadian farmer is himself without a peer in the world. But it seems to me that the government of this dominion can take many steps which have yet to be taken to assist the farmer in the development of his products, so that they may be acceptable on a basis of quality and kind to the consumers of the market to which they are sent. What I have endeavoured to point out is that the Canadian farmer possesses potentialities which have not been fully developed. Our farmers have done their best and done it well; what remains to be done it seems to me is the direct responsibility of the government. The example of Denmark is before us when it was realized that the Danish farmer on his farm could not possibly know the quality and kind of product required for successful marketing in the British market. His government ascertained that, conveyed the information to him, and gave him every possible assistance in attaining that standard.

The minister, in speaking last evening, as reported on page 2992 of Hansard, said:

> The Danish people have a line of hogs which have been bred up to standard during the last two hundred years.

Perhaps the minister will permit me to disagree with that statement. The Danish hog of fifty years ago was completely dissimilar to the Danish hog of to-day.

Mr. GARDINER: Is that not the way you get a different type, by breeding up to it?

Mr. MASSEY: Yes; I was referring only to the length of time taken.

Mr. GARDINER: I have the official report which indicates it has been 200 years

Mr. MASSEY: Let me describe the Danish hog of 1880 and now. The 1938 model of Danish bacon hog is long and deep of body, with flat back, lean, and short of leg, whereas the Danish hog of the 1880's was thick, short, big of body, arched of back, and long of leg. The 1938 model is essentially a streamlined model. Bacon from the 1880 model would not find a place on the English breakfast table of to-day. Accordingly the hog that one now sees in Denmark was developed so that its bacon would find that place which it has found.

Eggs, butter and bacon are the only products which I have discussed this afternoon. In the case of eggs and butter our surplus is comparatively small; therefore we export comparatively little. But is it not a government responsibility to take the steps necessary to create an increasing demand for Canadian eggs, butter and bacon in the United Kingdom, and thus open up to the Canadian farmer the possibility of marketing these products on a larger scale? There is no reason why we should produce only so many eggs, or only the amount of butter or bacon that we do produce, except the restriction of the market available. The farmer himself cannot develop the market, but the government can. I am not for a moment losing sight of the fact that our domestic market has been, is and always should be our most important market; but there is no reason why Canada cannot take full advantage of the possibilities of an export market as safe and secure as that of the United Kingdom, made possible to us under the agreements of 1932, reaffirmed in 1937.

Any thinking Canadian who considers the trends cannot but be alarmed at the rise of urbanization in this dominion. During the last eight or nine years there has been a sharp increase in our urban population at the expense of the rural population. That obviously means one thing, that those who would normally remain on the farms are forsaking them and coming into the cities to seek their fortune there. Hon. members know too well that there is great difficulty to-day in keeping the farmers' sons on the farm. Why? Not because farming is unattractive; not because the difficulties of farming are too much for our younger generation—far from it—but because farming in so many cases has proved unprofitable. Therefore, what might be a gainful and worthy occupation appears as wasted drudgery to the young people. What makes it unprofitable? The fact that the prices of produce are out of line, for one thing, and loss of markets for another. These two combine to promote hard times for the farmer.

The unemployment situation in our urban centres continues to be one of our greatest national problems. For that problem there is only one solution; that is jobs. If farming can be restored to the position of a profitable and gainful occupation, it will go an immeasurably long way towards solving our unemployment problem. Again let me quote Denmark. There the government has acquired large tracts of land, which it breaks up into ten and fifteen acre farms. The would-be young farmer merely has to show that he has $200 or more in his possession and the necessary qualifications to be a farmer. He is then given a ten or fifteen acre farm, completely equipped with barn, house and live stock. He does not have to pay back a single penny except as he earns. I am not suggesting that such a course could be followed here; but I am sure hon. members will agree that some steps can be taken in the development of our markets, in the stabilization of the prices of farm products, which will make farming attractive, and this will not only tend to retain our farming youth upon the farms, but will also further attract many of the farming youth, who have come to our cities, back to the farm, thus relieving the acute unemployment situation existing in our cities to-day.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, permit me to state that I am not unmindful of the burden of the recommendations of the Shaw report, or the proposals already claimed to be made effective by the minister, as reported on page 10 of his recently released bulletin; but I find, looking through the recommendations and proposals of the Shaw report, a great lack of two factors which, it seems to me, are the most singularly important part of any governmental effort directly to assist the Canadian farmer. That is, namely: (1) a program designed to raise the standard of Canadian live stock and thus, Canadian products, by direct assistance to the farmer—a program designed to make sure, beyond peradventure, that the efforts of the farmers are directed in the most profitable channels to produce butter, eggs, bacon, cheese and other such products adequately suited to the market to which they are to be exported, and (2) a program to stabilize farm product prices.

In regard to the first factor I earnestly urge upon the minister, with all the earnestness of which I am capable, that he give immediate thought to a governmental program of direct educational assistance to the Canadian farmer that will permit him to take advantage of the markets which are open to him, particularly the market of the United Kingdom. We must, perforce, realize that important and all as it still is in the development of Canada, we cannot depend upon wheat alone as the outstanding product of our farms. Through no fault of our own we have lost many of our best customers for this commodity. Thus, further steps must be taken forthwith to take up the slack in agriculture, and it would seem to me to be of the utmost importance to the dominion as a whole that this entire matter be given the full and concentrated attention, not only of the government of the day, but of the governments that are to follow; for prosperous farms in Canada mean a prosperous Canada.

The Canadian farm and the Canadian farmer form, together, a part of Canada of an importance that cannot be overestimated. Justly we are proud of the progress we have made through the years; but in the discussion which the committee has permitted me this afternoon I have tried to throw out to the government of the day a suggestion or two which, if applied in practice, will result in the even higher development of the Canadian farm, and which will help relieve the difficulties which our farmers have been forced to face.

In regard to the second factor, no mention is made in the report of what may be regarded as the greatest problem faced by agriculture to-day, namely stabilized prices. There could be no more efficacious boon to the Canadian farmer than efficient steps taken toward the stabilization of prices of farm products.

An hon. MEMBER: What steps?

Mr. MASSEY: As I have already stated in this chamber, I do not pose as an economist, but I fully realize that the law of supply and demand as it at present operates in this country is operating to the severe detriment of the Canadian farmer. Other factors as well, which need not be discussed here, have tended toward extraordinary low levels in the prices of our farm products. Surely, it must be by this time obvious to the government of the day that some artificial means, through legislation or otherwise, will have to be employed to stabilize prices. And, Mr. Chairman, we must all recognize that the lot of the farmer in Canada will never be very much better than it is to-day until these steps are taken.

In speaking in this chamber, not so long ago, the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) used language as reported at page 101 of Hansard to which I direct the attention of hon. members. To this I shall add nothing further, but merely say, as I take my seat, that I urge upon the government that a program designed to aid the farmer directly by assisting him in the development of his product to fit the market in which he sells be stimulated at once, and that some plan be formulated and put into effect to stabilize farm product prices. To this there can be only one result—a more stable and more secure Canada, and a greater and more united Canada.

Mr. MacRAE: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson) speaking on the question of marketing, painted a rather gloomy picture of the activities of the cheese producers' association. I should like to make a few remarks with regard to this question.

For many years the dairymen had two organizations in Ontario, the eastern and the western Ontario dairymen's association. I believe they served a useful purpose for a considerable length of time. But the farmers of the eastern district formed the impression that those associations had survived their period of usefulness, and the feeling sprang up among the dairymen that they needed a newer and more active organization to further their interests. Because of that the cheese producers' association came into being.

The first encouragement received was from the Hon. Mr. Weir, the minister of agriculture for the dominion at that time. The first financial assistance was received from the provincial department of agriculture operating under the Hon. Thomas Kennedy.

Their first objective was to have all cheese boarded, thereby cutting out factories selling on board rulings with the idea of stimulating a healthy competition among the buyers. Secondly, they wished to ascertain by trial shipments to Great Britain if there was too great a spread between the price paid to the producer in Canada and the price paid by the consumer in Great Britain. They made a small profit on this experiment in 1936, and sustained a loss in 1937. While there was a small loss suffered in 1937 the thought lingers in the minds of the producing farmers that the cheese exporters narrowed their margin of profit when the cheese producers made their trial shipments to the old land, with a view to driving the producers' association out of the picture, and although it appears as a small loss it may be an actual gain in dollars and cents to the farmers of Ontario.

The Ontario Marketing Act gave them the power to collect five cents on each hundred pounds of cheese manufactured, which works out at about half a cent per hundred pounds of milk. The national dairy council have been depending on voluntary contributions and the response has not been as generous as they would like. By this method of financing the association everybody makes a fair contribution to the expenses of the association and more general satisfaction is promoted among the farmers.

I have made these observations in order to convey to the committee the actual situation in regard to cheese associations.

Mr. NEEDHAM: What does the hon. member for Greenwood say would become of Denmark if we were to secure the market they have at the present time?

Mr. MASSEY: I do not consider for a moment that the market of the United Kingdom has been exhausted. There is room for both Denmark and Canada.

Mr. SENN: It seems to me the discussion which might have taken place under this item was pretty well exhausted under another item discussed some time ago. Hon. members may think there has been undue discussion, but since this is an entirely new set-up within the department I think it is fair to say we were entitled to the information for which we have been asking.

It is my intention at this time to direct only one or two questions to the minister, and then I shall have finished with at least this part of the discussion. There are some points in regard to the set-up which are not yet clear in my mind. For instance, at the heads of the different branches of the department we have gentlemen who have served in their capacities for some time. Are those gentlemen now acting in a dual capacity; that is, are they serving, for instance, under the marketing services branch and under the production services branch, or has their work been changed so that each serves under one branch?

Mr. GARDINER: These men are not serving in two capacities; they serve in one capacity in administering the work of a certain branch of which they are in charge. For example, Doctor Hilton is still in charge of the health of animals branch, but his work is carried on under the director of production. That is just an illustration.

Mr. SENN: Does the dairy commissioner act in a dual capacity, or does the head of the sheep and swine division?

Mr. GARDINER: Practically all of our services having to do with dairy products relate to marketing. The greater part of the production is attended to by the provinces. We take care of the marketing end, and look after inspections which have to do with the grades of products, a service which is considered to be part of the marketing operation. Naturally that work is carried on under the marketing branch.

Mr. SENN: I thank the minister for the information he has given. I should like to make one more reference to the mark which has been discussed under another item. Clause (c) of the recommendation states that the right to use this mark, where it is not compulsory, will be granted only to producers under licence. I should like to know why the producers are put in a different class from exporters generally and commission men. It looks to me as though there is discrimination or a monopoly is being set up.

Mr. GARDINER: As I said earlier, the details have not been worked out completely, but if there is to be licensing, it will apply right through. Anyone using the mark will have to be licensed to use it, whether he is a producer or a jobber.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Has any program been devised for the stabilization of prices?

As one having a direct contact with farming operations, it is my opinion that if we could stabilize prices to any satisfactory degree, our production would far outstrip our ability to sell. In the area from which I come the productive power is tremendous in eggs, bacon, beef and everything that we have been discussing. Just about the time a farmer gets into pigs, as they say, just about the time that he equips himself so that he can produce, for some unaccountable reason prices come down and stay down until he is forced out of swine production. Then prices go up again when the farmer has no equipment with which to take advantage of the increase. There may be some inevitable and insuperable natural law which brings this about, but I seriously doubt it. If we could tackle the problem at that point it seems to me we would be well on the way to a solution of our difficulty.

Then there is another obstacle facing the farmer. Frequently when prices rise to a point at which farmers can "make a go," as they say, when they reach a point at which they can make things pay, then the prices of feeds and other ingredients that go into their production begin to rise. I have heard many good farmers say that by no means whatsoever can you figure your way out to a profit. So long as such conditions exist our productive power will simply be lying dormant.

Mr. GARDINER: There has been no concerted effort, other than that which was put forth under the Natural Products Marketing Act, to stabilize prices. As the hon. member knows, that act was declared ultra vires, but certain activities have been carried on by the provinces since it was declared ultra vires. However, there has been an attempt made in other directions indirectly to stabilize prices upward. Attempts have been made to improve the grades and increase the consumption of certain of our farm products, and the result has been an improvement in prices. I think I am correct when I say that the increase in the annual per capita consumption of butter in Canada was 4·06 pounds from 1925 to 1936. The fact that our butter was improved in quality had something to do with the greater consumption in Canada. The fact that we have had a greater consumption has had something to do with prices having been better in recent years.

I do not know that I can say much more in regard to the point raised. It is always a question whether you can set a price for a product and maintain it. I presume that if a country is sufficiently small and the product is sufficiently standardized you might be able to do it, provided all of the output is consumed within the country. But even a country as small as Denmark, which markets its product in Great Britain, is not able to say what price is going to be paid in Great Britain. Their prices go up and down just as ours do. Britain has much more regulation through cooperative organizations than we have, yet they have not been able to stabilize prices. The most they have been able to do is to stabilize their commodities and create a demand in a market that is more or less constant.

Some of us listened to an address to-day by an extremely well informed man from Great Britain, Sir Reginald Dorman Smith. He took a different position regarding some matters referred to in the speech of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) in connection with the relationship between Great Britain and Denmark and other countries. I am not prepared at the moment to say which point of view is the correct one. However, the remarks made on that occasion would indicate that this stabilization is more nearly possible in a country that consumes all its own agricultural products than it is in one that consumes only seventy per cent of its production and sells the other thirty per cent outside the country. It is probably even more difficult to do it in a country where you consume only thirty per cent and ship out seventy per cent of your production, as we do with one of our products. These are some of the difficulties with which we are confronted. I do not think there is any one standard that can be set in a country with an area so widespread as ours in connection with price control or the standardization of products. However, we are attempting to accomplish results by applying suitable remedies to the varying conditions that exist in this country.

Mr. COLDWELL: I wish to direct the attention of the minister to a demonstration of price stabilization of farm products which has taken place in New Zealand. New Zealand produces large quantities of cheese and butter and exports the bulk of this production. Yet she has successfully stabilized the prices of both butter and cheese. She is able to guarantee a price of twenty-five cents for butter and something like fifteen cents per pound for cheese, using the current rates of exchange between New Zealand and the motherland. New Zealand, with a small population but producing vast quantities of these commodities, has demonstrated very successfully that a certain amount of stabilization can be undertaken under conditions dissimilar to those outlined by the minister. This is not the time to enter into any academic discussion or we shall never reach the end of these estimates, but I wanted to draw that to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. STIRLING: It is not any too clear to me just where the dividing line is between the marketing activities of the Department of Agriculture and the marketing activities of the Department of Trade and Commerce, but it is quite obvious that the intention of the minister is to improve the opportunities of marketing our products. I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the difficulty we have had in the past of informing the buying public of what we have to sell and where it can be bought. I shall deal with one side of this question as it applies to this country. For many years past we have tried to sell British Columbia fruit in the prairie provinces, and I know of no more annoying type of letter to receive than the one which contains the statement, "Your fruit is fine but we do not know where to get it." When we take that difficulty back to those who are responsible for distributing the fruit or vegetables, as we always do, we are informed that apparently that whole prairie country has been divided up into territories and adequately served, and in some cases I must say that when the matter is run down to the bottom we find that the consumer did not use any too much gumption in endeavouring to obtain that produce. But still the difficulty is there. Where the produce is available it seems to be very difficult to get it into the head of the consumer that there it can be bought, and any assistance the minister is able to give through his officers in informing the buying public of the produce there is to sell, so much the better for the producer.

I want for a moment to refer to the other side of it, and that is the difficulty which occurs in Great Britain, in informing the British public of the produce Canada has to sell. I notice in the April number of Overseas an article headed, Empire Table Exchange. It is a description of what had recently been seen by the writer at the British Industries Fair, and I want to quote a couple of paragraphs:

> Decidedly, Canadian bacon was the best on show. (The whole Canadian exhibit was first class.) I asked where it could be procured in London, and was told "at any big shop." I tried at a shop which is among our biggest, and has a transatlantic name. It was selling only Wiltshire and Danish. Danish bacon is excellent, but I asked why the money shouldn't be kept in the family. I was then asked, seriously and with a wish to know, whether Canadian bacon was good, etc. In the long run I received a promise that it should be available in a week. But why did the B.I.F. Canadian officials think it could be bought when it couldn't?
> This leads directly to a consideration which I hope overseas readers will pardon to an ardent friend of their produce, who wants to see Empire Table Exchange becoming more intense and more fruitful every week. I do not know what overseas housewives are like as regards new comestibles, but at home in England they are absurdly unadventurous, largely because the Englishman is very conservative in his food. They see a new thing (as once they must have seen the first tomato, as some time before Nell Gwynn they must have seen a fruit that they didn't then know was an orange), and they say: "What's that?" and the greengrocer says: "I don't know, mum; I bought a couple on chance." She doesn't buy any, and he purchases no more.
> The relatively small expense of sending quantities of leaflets with empire exports to England (and to inter-empire markets) should be no hindrance to an activity of which the importance cannot be exaggerated. It is not enough to say that this tuber can be treated in various ways; a half dozen amusing, interesting recipes (and printed on good paper, in clear type, and clearly set out) will help the retail seller and the ordinary customer to increase the market. We all want to vary our menu, we all want to buy empire; but you have to help us. I think that even Canadian apples, which are so attractive to look at, ought to wear a badge of "for dessert," "for baking."

As I said when I commenced, I do not know because I do not understand the dividing line between the minister's department and Trade and Commerce in this matter, but the object of his marketing branch is undoubtedly to foster marketing, and if the minister would take into consideration the desirability and the possibility of increasing the information which reaches the prospective empire buyer in Great Britain he will have accomplished a great deal.

Mr. BLANCHETTE: Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that I can be justly accused of having taken too much of the time of the house since my arrival here, but I should like to make a few remarks upon this particular item, affording as it does the opportunity to give expression to views which I have held now for some few years with regard to agriculture, and in particular dairying, coming as I do from a dairying section of the country.

Agriculture, as we all know, is the oldest of human occupations, and it would appear to me that it should be the most paying of all human activities. But unfortunately it is not. The whole nation, and I might say the whole world, should be keenly aware of the importance to all the people of a prosperous agriculture. But unfortunately this conviction does not seem to prevail amongst all, because it has been stated, and quite truly, I believe, by Sir Josiah Stamp, that:

> The world as a whole, over a given length of time, has almost certainly been fed below cost for the last hundred years.

The farm problem can be stated in four words: Farm profits are inadequate. The disparity between the income of farm enterprise and the returns from the investment of equal labour, capital and managerial ability in industrial effort, is apparent to all those who have examined the facts; and neither the welfare of the people directly nor the national good itself can decently suffer the agricultural population to continue under the definite handicap of producing below cost.

I understand that the farm problem is not simply one but many. There are some forms of assistance that take effect quickly, and others only in the course of time. Amongst the aids in the former category I might mention transportation as being vital to agriculture. In the United States six per cent of the gross annual production is said to be absorbed by freight rates. Commercial attachés should find and develop a market as "international trade is primarily dependent upon international understanding and amity." More can be done to educate foreign peoples to a taste for the foods from Canadian farms. Probably the most important of all steps towards creating a permanent and growing demand for Canadian food-stuffs on the menus of the world is the maintenance of world peace and the diffusion of friendly understanding. Other means are agricultural colleges, research work and extension services.

Agriculture needs the greatest consideration from all governments, and especially is this true with respect to dairying, which represents nineteen per cent of the total agricultural revenue, whereas wheat represented in 1930 only fourteen per cent of the total agricultural wealth of the country. The dairy farmer has been losing money for a number of years, and the loss has been heavy enough for the farmer who can ship to the fluid milk market, but more has been lost by the dairy farmers who have been shipping to local cheese and butter factories. In support of my statement that the dairy farmer has been losing money, I should like to cite data obtained on two surveys in the province of Quebec in 1931-32, which are reported on in the report of the minister of agriculture for the province for that year.

The first data, which I shall present in a very cursory way, relates to the fluid milk market, and the second data to the dairy farmers who have been shipping their products to local cheese and butter factories.

In 1931-32 an economic investigation was carried on in the Montreal district and in the counties around the city of Montreal. The number of farms investigated was 182, and the number of animal units 4,106. The report of this investigation was to the effect that in 1934 fluid milk sold at Montreal for $1.44 per hundred pounds, whereas the cost of production was $1.97 per hundred pounds. A similar investigation was carried on in the county of Megantic, comprising fifty farms in that county; its object was to determine the cost of the production of milk by farmers selling to butter or cheese factories, and the gist of this report was that it cost the farmers $1.44 to produce one hundred pounds of milk, and at that time the gross selling price of that one hundred pounds of milk was 72 cents, a net of sixty cents, showing thereby a loss of 84 cents per hundred pounds by each dairy producer. I believe these figures show that the assertion that the dairy producer is producing at a loss is well founded. I trust that it will be the endeavour of the Department of Agriculture to do all that they can to enhance the revenue of the farmers and especially the dairy farmers of the country.

Item agreed to.

Compensation for animals slaughtered, $200,000.

Mr. SENN: Could the minister give the committee information as to how may areas are now under inspection and how many have not yet been started for which application has been made?

Mr. GARDINER: Those accepted but not yet tested are: Quebec 4, Ontario 6, Manitoba 10, Saskatchewan 2.

Mr. SENN: How many areas are complete?

Mr. GARDINER: It is the total number up to date that the hon. member desires—not only last year, but the total number?

Mr. SENN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: The best I have is the districts that were tested last year. By provinces: Quebec 3, Ontario 7, Manitoba 1, New Brunswick 4. These were started last year and completed. Those that are being retested are: Quebec 10, Ontario 9, Manitoba 7, Saskatchewan 5, British Columbia 1.

Mr. SENN: Does the minister contemplate that when he brings down his supplementaries sufficient money will be forthcoming to carry on activities in all the districts that have been accepted, or will some of them have to lie over for another year?

Mr. GARDINER: We are hopeful of getting sufficient money to take care of all those with which we can deal with our present staffs. It will probably not be possible to cover all the districts that have been accepted, during this coming summer.

Mr. SENN: The minister said something about retests in the areas that have been under accreditation for some time and are restricted areas. In the light of past experience, how nearly is this test satisfactory and how nearly have the restricted areas been kept clean of tuberculosis?

Mr. GARDINER: I think the best answer to that is to call attention to what has happened in some districts where the work has been carried on.

Mr. SENN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: This list shows the restricted areas for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis in which infection has been reduced to one half of one per cent and less. In Prince Edward Island the entire province, comprised of the counties of Kings, Queens and Prince, has been reduced to one half of one per cent. In New Brunswick nine counties have been similarly reduced; in Quebec 16; in Ontario 6; in Manitoba 1; in Saskatchewan 13; in British Columbia 1.

Mr. SENN: That seems to be a very satisfactory situation. Can the minister give us any information as to what happens in the case of accredited herds that are not in restricted areas? Has the experience been similar in that respect?

Mr. GARDINER: The results in those are almost identical.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would the minister give us the names of the six areas in Ontario which have been accepted but not yet tested?

Mr. GARDINER: Province of Ontario: Peterborough county, Lanark county, Island of St. Joseph, Simcoe, Victoria and the Rainy River district.

Mr. EDWARDS: Waterloo is not included?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. SENN: Or Haldimand?

Mr. GARDINER: It is not in that group.

Mr. HAYHURST: We have heard considerable this afternoon about streamlining of the pig. I wondered if that has affected the general health of the animal.

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed that it does not affect the health.

[Mr. Senn.]

Mr. LEADER: Judging from the information given by the minister we are quite a way behind meeting the demands of the cattle breeders in this country. Many of them think that a more determined effort should be made to eradicate tuberculosis. I have been in close touch with the cattle breeders of Ontario this winter, as well as with those in the western provinces, and I know that they are exercised about the inability, shall I say, of the department to keep up with their demands. For that reason I support the suggestion of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) who believes that we should have a larger appropriation for this work. I am not going to enlarge upon that phase of the subject to-day, but there is one observation which I wish to make in this connection. Yesterday the minister, in answer to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) I believe, said that the experimental stage in connection with Bang's disease was about the same as it was in connection with tuberculosis some years ago. That, I believe, is true. For that reason we cannot undertake a wholesale policy to eliminate Bang's disease, but I suggest that we might follow a policy such as we adopted in regard to tuberculosis and start with accredited herds. After all, that is the nursery of the whole industry in Canada, and in my opinion we should begin with those herds in attempting to eliminate Bang's disease. We have been successful in eradicating tuberculosis because we had the cooperation of the breeders as well as of the government departments, and it seems to me that we must also have the cooperation of the breeders if we are to eliminate Bang's disease. I do not believe that we will get that cooperation.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is it not a fact that the treatment of Bang's disease is still in the experimental stage?

Mr. LEADER: Yes, I agree with that; and for that very reason I do not think that we shall get the cooperation of the breeders. Farmers who have valuable live stock will not have their cattle condemned for Bang's disease unless they receive some compensation, and that is why I suggest that we should start with the accredited herds and pay compensation to breeders, who will get at least something for any loss they may sustain if their cattle are slaughtered. I suggest that the minister seriously consider the advisability of compensating farmers for the loss of cattle on account of Bang's disease, and that he should start with the accredited herds of the country.

Mr. EDWARDS: Has the regulation been changed to give compensation for grade cattle?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. In the accredited areas they get compensation for grade cattle as well as the others. I have here a list of tests made for tuberculosis beginning in 1915-16. In that year there were 2,937 and this last year the number was 1,349,468. The development has been gradual from 2,937 in 1915-16 up to close to a million and a half last year, and I think that illustrates in another way the position we are in in relation to Bang's disease. The authorities in the first instance had to convince the breeders that the test was a reliable one. I find that in every delegation of breeders who come to my office to discuss the matter there is a difference of opinion among them as to whether the test is reliable or not. As regards tuberculosis they readily admit that twenty-five years ago they did not believe that the test was reliable. The first task of the department is therefore to establish confidence in the minds of the breeders that the test is reliable and when that is done, the next step might be given consideration. For the time being, however, the department is trying to establish that confidence in the minds of breeders.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Is there a reliable treatment?

Mr. GARDINER: The department thinks so, but we have not been able to convince everyone else. We have not been able to convince the majority of those interested in herds that it is.

Mr. PERLEY: The statement the minister made a little while ago would indicate that Saskatchewan is pretty healthy so far as cattle are concerned. Do I understand that in the retesting there was less than one and a half per cent?

Mr. GARDINER: It was one-half of one per cent.

Mr. PERLEY: That makes it better. What was paid in Saskatchewan by way of compensation in the last year, and what is the average?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not that information here, but I could get it compiled.

Mr. SENN: The minister says that the department is attempting to establish confidence not only in the test for Bang's, but also in the treatment. I understand that the treatment is a serum which is injected. Is the federal department taking any steps to supply that serum when it is applied for, or is that left entirely to the provincial authorities?

Mr. GARDINER: So far as the test is concerned, the remark I made a few moments ago in reply to a question by the hon. member for Swift Current was that the department was fairly confident that the test was reliable. So far as the treatment is concerned, the serum provided for injection into calves, that is purely in the experimental stage, and we are not in a position to make any pronouncements. It is merely a matter of checking the serum at the present time.

Mr. SENN: Is the department taking any steps to provide the serum or is that left entirely to the provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: The department is not supplying it to the provinces but only to institutions under the control of the department itself, so that we may experiment with it.

Mr. SENN: But I understand that a serum is being used extensively in the country. Where is it obtained? I believe it is being used with very beneficial effects.

Mr. GARDINER: Bringing it in is prohibited by law. I am not in a position to say whether someone is bootlegging it into the country and using it. It is illegal to use it.

Item agreed to.

Live stock and poultry, $829,170.50.

Mr. SPENCE: What is the reason for this excessive increase of $95,000? Is there going to be no end to increases in the amounts voted to the Department of Agriculture? No one can understand it. It is difficult for the taxpayers to be continually contributing to other things when in the meantime they are losing money themselves. Items of this sort should receive mature consideration, and money should not be wasted on such matters, if it is wasted. Is this because of an attempt at marketing, or what is the reason for it?

Mr. GARDINER: The increases are all explained later.

Mr. SPENCE: You can explain them faster than I can read them.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, it has nothing to do with marketing. This is the production end. We have covered all the marketing activities to date. In permanent salaries the increase is $12,438.

Mr. SPENCE: Does the minister think increasing salaries is justified in these times? They should be decreased instead of increased.

Mr. GARDINER: The increases come under the regulations of the civil service commission, and by the return of the five per cent deduction. The increase in temporary salaries is $2,175; in telephone, telegraph and postage, increase $3,000; equipment, increase $15,093.

Mr. SPENCE: What does the equipment consist of?

Mr. GARDINER: Such equipment as cars, typewriters—

Mr. SPENCE: Limousines for the stenographers!

Mr. GARDINER —recording machines and that sort of thing, and material equipment as well, such as bulls loaned. Then there are prizes, bonuses and premiums, increase $26,662.50; buildings and lands, increase $11,000; miscellaneous including professional services and rents, $1,138; supplies and materials, $3,000 Freight, express and cartage is the same. In travelling expenses the increase is $20,606. The total increase amounts to $95,112.50.

Mr. PERLEY: I assume some of that was in connection with the situation in Saskatchewan last fall.

Mr. GARDINER: No; this is for the coming year.

Mr. PERLEY: In connection with the bull loaning scheme, not long ago I mentioned in the house that applications had been made by different groups of farmers in the west to secure a bull under that scheme. Is it possible for the department to cope with that situation this year? I understand there are 200 or more applications from Saskatchewan alone.

Mr. GARDINER: We get more requisitions for this service than we can fill with the amount of money that is voted. We do the best we can, keeping within proper bounds in the different parts of the country.

Mr. SENN: How much money is set aside for that?

Mr. GARDINER: This year $40,000 is set aside. The increase is $5,446.

Mr. SENN: Is any time limit set within which applications will be considered? Usually the bulls are purchased in the spring or the early winter.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no actual date set, but the department insists on the applications coming in early in the spring, and then they are dealt with in the order in which they are received.

Mr. PERLEY: There is a serious situation in Saskatchewan, brought about to a considerable extent by the policy adopted last fall of shipping cattle out of the drought areas. The policy which was adopted by the provincial government and endorsed and carried out by the federal Department of Agriculture dealt a very serious blow to the live stock and dairying industry in that province, a blow from which I do not think they can recover in the next ten years. Early last fall when this policy was adopted many protests were made by individual farmers, rural municipalities and boards of trade. I had many protests come to me asking me to make representations to have the department change their policy. The minister will remember that early in September I wrote him asking that he give consideration to the dairymen, especially the small men with eight or ten or twelve cows in the eastern part of Saskatchewan. He was good enough to reply stating that the matter was more or less up to the provincial government. I had also taken it up with them, and their reply was that they had to enforce their rules strictly, cutting down the stock to not more than four cows on a farm in that district.

Mr. GARDINER: I hope I did not say it was up to the provincial government.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister referred me to the minister of agriculture for Saskatchewan. Mr. Taggart replied to the effect that he did not think it would be possible to supply sufficient feed.

Mr. GARDINER: That is different from what the hon. member was saying. I understood him to say that I said it was up to the provincial department.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister's letter referred me to the department of agriculture in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: To put the record right, the hon. member is making a speech which might be presumed to apply to one thing when it probably applies to another. As far as the movement of live stock out of the drought area is concerned, the federal government is absolutely responsible for that policy; the Saskatchewan government had nothing to do with it.

Mr. PERLEY: I have here form 626B37 issued by the provincial government—

Mr. GARDINER: Moving the cattle out of the drought area was a policy decided upon by the federal government entirely. We asked the province to assist us in carrying it into effect; but no responsibility for the policy rests on the province; it rests entirely on this government.

Mr. PERLEY: Well, that makes it all the worse. I suppose the minister would say it would be impossible to get feed to maintain any more than the number allowed to be kept; that is, four on a farm. I made certain investigations with respect to feed that could be procured, in Manitoba particularly; individuals and representatives of rural municipalities had gone down there and were putting up feed, and I also drove through part of the country myself. I think if proper steps had been taken at the right time of the year feed could have been procured, and many of the smaller herds would have been saved to the extent that farmers would have been allowed to have kept three or four more cows than they were allowed to keep. This is a serious matter, and I take this opportunity of expressing my disapproval of the policy carried out last fall in this respect. We know the importance of dairying; we know what it means to the farmer who has been milking eight or ten cows, and who must meet grocery bills and other expenses. It has meant considerable to him to have had a reduction in stock.

Mr. GARDINER: We have spent the greater part of the week discussing marketing, and have disposed of the item. But at this time the hon. member is again talking on the subject. I would ask the Chair to keep the hon. member within the limits of the item under discussion.

Mr. PERLEY: We are on the item having to do with the production of live stock. If the production of dairy cows does not come within that item, then I must ask the Chair to give a ruling. I am discussing the production policy carried out by the government, as it affects the production of dairy cows in the province.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Does the hon. member object at this time to the removal of cattle out of Saskatchewan last fall to the feeding grounds in other provinces?

Mr. PERLEY: No, not at all; what I object to is the almost complete removal of dairy cattle from the southern and south eastern parts of the province. Farmers who had in the neighbourhood of ten or twelve dairy cows, which they were milking, were forced to reduce their herds to not more than four. Since that time, owing to the fact that they have not sufficient feed, there will be no dairy production in the area this year. Every farm—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I believe the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is now discussing a matter pertaining to agricultural distress, a subject which has been before the house for a considerable length of time this session, and one the discussion of which lasted a great many days. I have listened carefully to the hon. gentleman's observations, and I must ask him to confine his remarks to the item under discussion, namely live stock and poultry, production services.

Mr. PERLEY: If the Chairman rules that the production of dairy cattle does not come under this item, then I certainly am out of order.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): It seems to me there is a good deal in what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has said with respect to the supply of bulls for the production of cattle. He raised the point, as reported in Hansard at page 2540, and received the following reply from the minister:

> I regret very much to have to advise that it is not possible to encourage the farmers in the Alexander district to organize an association to apply for the loan of a pure bred bull from this department this year. We have already received from Saskatchewan applications greatly in excess of the number of suitable bulls which it will be possible to purchase, and have been under the necessity of refusing consideration to nearly two hundred inquiries received from Saskatchewan alone.

This reply would indicate that the government has reached the point of frustration, and something determined should be done to remedy such a situation. Has the minister's department investigated the possibilities of artificial insemination. Science has indicated that artificial insemination is entirely practical, and I am informed that successful practice is not attended by any very technical difficulties. If this matter were studied, and some move made in connection with it, we might solve some of the present difficulties in the situation. We might not have to wait a matter of ten years before increasing the number of cattle to a normal point.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand Russia claims to be producing successfully through the process of artificial insemination. Our department is keeping in close touch with activities in that direction, but at present we are not in a position to deal with a situation such as that existing in the west.

With regard to that portion of the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle which have to do with the bull policy, I would say that under the policy we are putting more bulls into Saskatchewan than we are putting into any other part of Canada. The reason is the one which has been outlined, namely that great difficulty has been experienced in the feeding of live stock in that province in the last few years. There is probably another reason why we should be very careful. Probably in days past we have made some mistakes in certain parts of Saskatchewan. Only a few years ago one could walk into a bank in Saskatchewan and see on the walls an invitation to borrow money to secure bulls. That may have had something to do with our having so much live stock in certain sections that it was necessary to move it out. More careful investigations will have to be made when we begin to reestablish the herds in those areas, and we shall have to decide whether or not it is good policy under existing conditions to reestablish them in certain sections. In order to meet the situation which exists in the area in which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is interested, an area in which it has been pretty well established that stock rasing in a substantial way is a proper part of the agriculture of that district, something should be done to reestablish the herds. But there are certain sections to which we shall have to give very close investigation before proceeding.

Mr. COLDWELL: I believe in the past year there has been a change in the policy of the department in connection with stallions in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Complaints I have had were that the notifications regarding clubbing were received by owners too late in the season. Would that come under the federal department, or was that decision promulgated by the provincial department of agriculture?

Mr. GARDINER: The premium was paid on a fifty-fifty basis. The province pays $2.50 and we pay the same amount. However, the clubbing policy is under federal jurisdiction, and is still being carried on. The premium policy has been discontinued in Saskatchewan, our main reason being that we were carrying on both activities in that province and were not doing so in the other western provinces. We are now confining our activities to the one branch in Saskatchewan, as is being done in the other provinces.

Mr. COLDWELL: When was that notification made?

Mr. GARDINER: I think it was some time in February. There was some difficulty in some of the areas in forming clubs after the notification went out. I know, however, that quite a number did form clubs after that time.

Mr. COLDWELL: There was considerable difficulty in some areas. I am thinking of an area in my own constituency where on account of weather and other conditions the owners did not receive notification until a time too late in the season to form clubs. The result is that these horses are in the barns. The owners have been suffering from drought, and they really cannot afford to maintain the animals and give the service they have been giving for the past several years.

Mr. SPENCE: There must be some duplication in connection with the vote for live stock and poultry. I notice that under item No. 11, which deals with live stock and poultry under the heading "marketing services," there is an increase of $54,928. Then we come down to item No. 16, and we find that it deals with live stock and poultry, under the heading "production services," and shows an increase of $95,112.50. The minister has been good enough to give the details concerning the $95,112.50, but I have not heard anything about the other amount. I do not wish him to repeat what has been said—probably I should have been in the house—but I should like to know why on the same page there should be two items with respect to live stock and poultry, one for about half a million and the other for almost a full million, one with an increase of more than $54,000 and the other with one of more than $95,000. The minister goes on to tell us that there has been an increase in the cost of automobiles as well as for prizes, bonuses and premiums. There is an increase of $11,000 for buildings and lands, but that is not much in this committee. Then there is an increase of $20,000 in travelling expenses. Is the business increasing so rapidly that travelling expenses must increase to such an extent? What are we getting out of all this? If any one is receiving a benefit, I have no objection, but I am afraid a lot of it is being wasted. The minister has not the time to go into all these matters in detail, and I think an investigation should be held into them. I do not accuse any one of doing anything wrong, but if this sort of thing is going on there is not much use in hon. members protesting against it all the time when no attention is paid to their protests.

Mr. GARDINER: This goes back to the question that was raised a few moments ago, I think by the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn), as to the division between marketing and production. I think the discussion we have just had with regard to bulls and stallions is a clear indication of the difference in the two policies. For many years the federal Department of Agriculture has been taking an interest in the improvement of live stock in Canada, which is purely a production activity. We have just passed a vote having to do with the health of animals, which work is carried on for the purpose of improving production. We are now dealing with a section of the vote which concerns the breeding of live stock and the production of better bulls, better stallions and better sires generally. Any activity in connection with the marketing of this stock comes under the marketing branch. I do not think there should be any difficulty about understanding this. There may be some opposition to the amount we are spending, but I cannot see why there should be any difficulty in understanding the difference between marketing and production.

Mr. SPENCE: Are results being obtained from the marketing branch?

Mr. GARDINER: Our friends who have been speaking seem to think we are not doing enough. Whenever we have tried to cut down in this work, objections have been raised. When we attempted to cut down in the work in Quebec in connection with the supplying of bulls, strong objection was made. I think it will be found generally across Canada that these services are quite necessary. The demand from one end of Canada to the other is for an extension rather than a discontinuance of the services.

Mr. SENN: I am quite in agreement with what the minister has said. I think these services are quite necessary. If I were to offer any criticism of the department, it would be that not enough money is being expended on this work. The minister stated that the premium policy in Saskatchewan has been discontinued in connection with rams and boars.

Mr. GARDINER: The premium policy applies all through eastern Canada, and there has been no change in that. In the western provinces we have had a club policy which suited their conditions better than the premium policy. About four or five years ago there was some activity started in Saskatchewan in connection with a premium policy, and this year we took the position that either one of two things must be done—we must have both policies all the way across Canada, or we must continue either the one or the other in the province. We decided to discontinue the premium policy in Saskatchewan.

Mr. SENN: What results are being obtained from the experiments which are being conducted in connection with landrace hogs? Perhaps this question might better be asked under the experimental farms vote.

Mr. GARDINER: I think it would be better to leave it.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister give us the latest figures with respect to the number of horses and dairy cows in Saskatchewan?

Mr. GARDINER: An order for a return was asked for, I believe by the hon. member, which would contain those figures. I have not them available at the moment.

Mr. PERLEY: I regret that we cannot get the information we ask for with respect to items of this kind.

Mr. GARDINER: I am quite sure that if the information has been asked for, it will be obtained eventually. The estimates referred to in the order were not these. There will be plenty of opportunities to discuss these matters when the supplementaries are brought down. There was also an opportunity earlier in the session when we were discussing the warrants.

Mr. PERLEY: What item is that in the supplementaries?

Mr. GARDINER: Provision will be made for all the matters that were discussed a few moments ago.

Mr. PERLEY: That item in the supplementaries passed at one sitting of the committee, and on the suggestion of the minister it was allowed to go through. Certain details were asked for which we could not get on that occasion, and the minister promised that on a later occasion they would be provided.

Mr. GARDINER: That will all come up under the supplementaries covering similar work.

Mr. DUFFUS: I notice there is a sharp division of opinion among the members of the official opposition in connection with these expenditures I dare say that if a comparison were made of the expenditures on agriculture with those of other departments, serious discrepancies would be disclosed.

Item agreed to.

Plant inspection, insects and diseases, $246,127.

Mr. SPENCE: There is another large increase in this item and perhaps the minister could give us some explanation.

Mr. GARDINER: The particulars are:

Salaries, permanent	$ 5,142
Salaries, temporary	6,187
Wages	1,110
Telephone, telegraph and postage	560
Equipment, including supplies and materials	3,310
Buildings and lands, including rents and taxes	150
Freight, express and cartage	190
Travelling expenses	8,033

Mr. STIRLING: What care is being taken at our ports of entry to prevent tourists and travellers bringing in fruit which might contain dangerous insects?

Mr. GARDINER: There are men located at the important ports where the traffic is heavy to check fruit plants that might be subject to disease. At points where men are not located, the customs officials cooperate in checking everything that enters. If there is necessity to refer anything for further inspection, this is done.

Mr. STIRLING: Are we as stringent on this side of the line as they are in the United States? I am thinking particularly of the state of Washington. I was referring to the small parcels of fruit that the tourist might have in his car. He may eat some of this and then throw the rest away.

Mr. GARDINER: There is practically the same condition prevailing in connection with fruit as there is in connection with animals. We have reciprocity with the federal government of the United States as far as regulations are concerned, but the regulations put out by the different states might not conform exactly with ours.

Mr. STEVENS: Would this item cover the inspection of containers such as sacking and other things of that kind?

Mr. GARDINER: Wrappings and that kind of thing are taken care of by the inspection under the health of animals vote. That inspection is carried on to prevent the entry of foot and mouth disease and diseases of that kind which might be carried in on the wrappings of plants.

Mr. STEVENS: That item passed, I understand.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister permit me to make one very brief observation?

Mr. GARDINER: Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not complaining about the officials of the department doing their duty. I think it is very necessary and very desirable to guard against the entry of materials in the form of wrappers or packing for any class of goods that may contain disease from some other country. But a case came to my attention recently, and I could cite a number of them, where I think the department by cooperating with the importer could quite effectually safeguard our country against the inroads of disease, and at the same time not put the importer to such a very great expense as he is sometimes forced to incur. To give one illustration, some bauxite, the raw material for aluminum, was shipped to Canada in sacks from a country which I think was classed as infected, and the importer was forced to send the shipment back to Great Britain, I think it was, and to have it resacked in new sacks, and brought out again. There was another case a few years ago which I mention just to illustrate my point; some cotton came in, wrapped in burlap, and a similar dispute arose. My suggestion to the minister is not that there should be relaxation of the necessary precautions, but that in such a case the importer might be permitted to repack the goods on the wharf, and the packings that came in could be destroyed; in other words, that some effort be made to minimize the loss to the importer, while at the same time adequately safeguarding the health of the animals of this country by preventing the inroads of disease from some other country. I believe that a good deal could be done along that line.

Mr. GARDINER: I can only say that there are countries which are ravaged by disease like foot and mouth disease, countries which if we had an outbreak of foot and mouth disease would probably put an embargo on our cattle for as many years as it was maintained at one time previously in our history. We must be very careful in connection with shipments that come in from a country so infected. A few shipments have come in, in second-hand gunny sacks which had been used for some other purpose before, in contravention of the well-known regulations. It has been considered advisable to have such shipments returned and not allowed to enter this country at all. The department is very exacting about that, and I do not know that it would pay us to remove any of these restrictions. We would be running the chance of suffering very great inconvenience ourselves in a very short time just to accommodate one or two individuals.

Mr. STEVENS: I think if the importer were put to the trouble and expense and delay of repacking the goods and destroying the containers right on the wharf it would be a sufficient penalty to make him more careful next time; but a rigid enforcement of the law, compelling the importer to ship back the whole thing, might seriously affect business in other lines, and sometimes the shipment may have come in quite innocently so far as the importer is concerned. The exporter in a foreign country cannot possibly be as familiar with our regulations as the importer on this side, or know how exacting the department is, and there are bound to be cases where there may seem to be a disregard of the regulations but where there was no intention of breaking them at all. I do submit that with a little cooperation the loss to the importer could be minimized and other lines of business not seriously injured, as they well might be by a rigid adherence to the regulations.

Mr. GARDINER: I am informed that there is a good deal of cooperation and that every case is considered on its merits. There are cases where the very thing my hon. friend suggests is being carried out, but there are other cases where conditions perhaps are such at the point where the goods came from that we do not want our own officials or anybody here to handle the commodity at all, and where it is returned for repacking. There is a great deal of risk taken in connection with such a shipment. The number of cases such as my hon. friend mentions must be very limited, but I shall be glad to take into consideration what he has said.

Mr. STEVENS: I have heard of a goodly number of such cases.

Mr. EDWARDS: What progress has been made in the control of the corn borer in western Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been considerable improvement since the days when the farmers in that section were considering going out of growing corn because of the corn borer, but the greater part of that work is done by the provincial government. They ask for assistance from us through services that we can give through this branch, and that assistance is given in cooperation with them. But the main activity is carried on by the provincial government.

Mr. BARBER: Can the minister tell us something about the control methods that have been adopted in regard to the pea moth? In the lower mainland of British Columbia there has been a considerable loss because of the depredations of the pea moth; in fact, they cannot grow peas at all in that section. I should like to know what is being done to control this pest.

Mr. GARDINER: Will the hon. member let his question stand until we reach item 30, dealing with entomology?

Mr. STIRLING: Do grasshoppers come under this vote?

Mr. GARDINER: No, under the entomology item.

Item agreed to.

Seed, feed and fertilizer control, including grant of $18,900 to Canadian Seed Growers' Association, $546,403.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would the minister explain the increase of $38,396?

Mr. GARDINER: There is an increase in certain activities amounting to $58,396, and a decrease in others of $20,000, making a net increase of $38,396. Salaries for the permanent staff are increased by $19,801, and for the temporary staff, $29,595; subsidies and contributions, a decrease of $20,000; maintenance of buildings and lands, an increase of $1,800; professional and special services, an increase of $6,000; travelling expenses, an increase of $1,200.

Mr. McKENZIE (Lambton-Kent): A question was asked in the house not long ago as to what size of farm is the most profitable to operate. It entirely depends on the line of farming you wish to follow, whether it be tobacco farming, fruit farming, mixed farming, and so forth. The farmer realizes that the farm is productive only to a certain degree, and that certain types of soil require certain kinds of fertilizer. I believe that provincially some help has been given, but I wonder what the dominion government has been doing along that line—speaking primarily now of Ontario and eastern Canada. I asked the bureau of statistics what the average production was of grains per acre in Ontario, and I learned that during the past twenty years the production was: barley, 29 bushels, oats, 36 bushels, and wheat, 23 bushels. I submit that if the right types of fertilizer were used that productivity could be increased, because in eastern Canada particularly we have abundance of rainfall; I believe we could almost double that yield. No matter what the production per acre, we have the same amount of taxes to pay on the land, and the same amount of work to do. In my opinion fertilizer should be provided at a reasonable cost, enabling the farmer to purchase it at a reasonable price. Very often the farmer has used his fertilizer without knowing just what type is required for his particular soil. I believe that at one time the department put in some mixing plants to make fertilizer available for the farmer at cost or nearly so.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand that that work so far as Ontario is concerned is being carried on through the provincial government, largely at the Guelph farm. Soils are sent in for analysis; it is determined what type of fertilizer should be used, and as a result the farmer can purchase the type he requires. It is just possible that there are many farmers who do not take advantage of this service; also there may be many who do. Sometimes I go up to the western part of Ontario, and I find that some of the farmers there are having their lands tested continuously and the proper fertilizers placed upon them.

Mr. SENN: Certain criticisms have been levelled directly and indirectly against the department for changing the regulation during the past year with respect to the colouring of seed coming from Great Britain and New Zealand. I believe that that regulation, which had been in effect for some time, enabled the farmer to know whether he was buying imported seed or Canadian seed. There may be a good reason why the change was made last year, but I think the minister would be wise to let the committee know just what were the circumstances which led to that decision, because I have heard complaints about it.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there was a change in the regulations which was intended to result in a different colouring being used for English seed from that used for seed from other countries. That was in effect for a short time; it was found to be unsatisfactory, and the present recommendation is to return to the old colouring and that all imported seed be coloured.

Mr. SENN: Did I understand the minister to say that there has been no seed imported from Great Britain and New Zealand which was not coloured? I understood that that regulation had been suspended in the meantime.

Mr. GARDINER: For one year prior to January 1 it was possible for the seed to come in without any colouring, and from January on this special colouring was adopted. Now it is recommended that we go back to the original regulation regarding staining.

Mr. SENN: What reason was assigned for that?

Mr. GARDINER: It was intended to be a courtesy to the British seed grower, but in practice it was found not to be practical. The desire was to give some consideration to the British seed grower.

Mr. COLDWELL: I notice the minister said there was a reduction in grants. Would he give us some particulars of the reductions?

Mr. GARDINER: The subsidies and contributions show a decrease of $20,000. The amount was previously provided under this vote as a contribution to seed distribution policies in western Canada. This work is now largely covered by the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, therefore the item for subsidies and contributions has been reduced accordingly.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is really a removal, not a reduction?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. There is much more than that being spent under the rehabilitation policy.

Item agreed to.

Administration of grants to fairs and exhibitions, $14,240.

Mr. HAYHURST: What is the reason for the grant to the Saskatoon winter fair being $9,500, while to the Edmonton winter fair it is only $5,000? That appears on page 64. Why this great difference between Saskatoon and Edmonton?

Mr. GARDINER: It is because they operate a winter show at Saskatoon. The grant is the same as for the "A" shows, $4,000, and $5,000 for the winter show.

Item agreed to.

Grants, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $318,500.

Mr. STIRLING: Is the status of the "A" and the "B" classes just as it was? Are there any alterations in either of them?

Mr. GARDINER: The status is the same for "A" and "B" fairs as it was last year. There have been no alterations.

Mr. SENN: Do all fairs that comply with the regulations and give the proper amount of prizes get the grant, or are there exceptions?

Mr. GARDINER: That is the policy. There is an attempt to have them all live up to it. There may be a little deviation here and there, just a slight difference which is not held against them, but the intention is to make them live fully up to the requirements.

Mr. HAYHURST: On page 64 I notice an item, Advanced Registry Board for Swine. I was wondering if there are any registered Cumberland pigs in Canada. Are there any herds of Cumberland pigs kept in this country?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand not.

Item agreed to.

Grants to agricultural organizations, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $42,350.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister give us an explanation of what is necessary to qualify for these grants?

Mr. GARDINER: I do not know that I can say that there is any particular line of policy. Certain organizations have been supported over a long term of years because of the services they give. The nature of them is pretty well indicated in the names: the horse parade at Ste. Anne, Canadian Council on Boys' and Girls' Club Work, the Advanced Registry Board for Dairy Bulls, Eastern Canadian Live Stock Union, Western Canada Live Stock Union, Canadian National Live Stock Records, Canadian Saddle, Hunter and Light Horse Improvement Society, Advanced Registry Board for Swine. The British Columbia ploughing match is out this year. There is the complete list.

Mr. SENN: It seems to me that the eastern and western Canada live stock unions are very estimable bodies and should be supported. Why has the grant to those two bodies been reduced when these are the only reductions that have been made?

Mr. GARDINER: There are nine which have been discontinued altogether. For some time we have been considering cutting down on these grants with the idea that the money could be used to better advantage elsewhere. The eastern Canadian live stock union grant has been reduced from $1,500 to $1,000, and the western organization grant has been similarly reduced. We felt that we were justified in making these reductions in order to keep the expenditure down and use the money elsewhere.

Item agreed to.

Experimental farms—Experimental farms administration, $51,180.

Mr. COLDWELL: The other day I asked a question which the minister said could be better discussed under experimental farms. I understand that a number of graduates in Saskatchewan holding various degrees from western universities are employed in the soil surveys work and for several years have been paid on the basis of fifty-five cents an hour as graduate labourers. These men are doing very important work, and some of them are now getting into the thirties and still doing this work as graduate labourers. Are men who come within this category going to receive some consideration this year? In common with other members of the house, not only western members, but generally, we regard the survey of these western soils as of paramount importance to the dominion. In fact, it is unfortunate that the surveys were not undertaken years ago. Saskatchewan has done a great deal with the small appropriations available, and it seems to me that this work should be extended to cover the entire western area so that we may be prepared when we come to rehabilitate the country, as ultimately we shall have to do, because I have disquieting news from parts of Saskatchewan where there were copious rains. Some consideration should be given this particular staff, especially those of the university of Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: These men were previously working on the fifty-five cents an hour paylist, but their positions have been classified under the reorganization, and as they qualify through length of service and the necessity for their work is realized they will come under that classification. Some are already under it.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to know that. I was not aware that the reclassification had taken place.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): The salary of the director of experimental farms is $7,500. Last year it was $6,000. Is there any reason for the increase? The minister will find the details on page 64.

Mr. GARDINER: The actual increase is only $500. Previously $1,000 was paid out of another service, which made his salary $7,000. Now it is $7,500.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): Last year, according to the estimates, his salary was $6,000, and from now on it will be $7,500.

Mr. GARDINER: It will all appear in one vote now. As a matter of fact, he was receiving $7,000 last year, though the salary for the position of director was $6,000. He obtained another $1,000 from another source, so that his salary was actually $7,000. Now it is being consolidated and there is an increase of $500.

Mr. COLDWELL: Last year and this year again I raised the question of labourers' wages on experimental farms. I understand that the rate of pay was increased for seasonal workers from twenty-one to twenty-five cents an hour, which was something. Many of these men are married and they work only a few months, so that they find it difficult to make sufficient in the summer to carry them through the winter. Moreover, I have been given to understand that conditions on the Scott experimental farm in regard to boarding houses and so on require the attention of the inspectors. I do not know whether complaints of that kind are justified, but recently I received a letter asking me to bring the matter to the attention of the minister. I was going to do so by letter, but the opportunity has arisen this afternoon and I am mentioning the matter. With regard to these men who are working on the farms, the seasonal workers, some further consideration should be given them especially, as was pointed out by an hon. member sitting to my right, in view of the fact that large increases are given sometimes to heads of departments, increases that might well be distributed among the more poorly paid workers. If the conditions at some of the experimental farms in regard to boarding places require inspection, I suggest that the matter might be checked up.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course, complaints do come in occasionally with regard to conditions in boarding houses in connection with all activities, and we receive such complaints in connection with the farms. The conditions are always investigated as soon as possible after the complaints are received and are dealt with. So far as labour on the farms is concerned, there are two sides to the question. We try to pay a reasonable wage, but sometimes we come into conflict with those who are engaging agricultural assistants in the community and who consider that we overpay. We try to strike a happy medium and pay a reasonable rate without doing any injury in the district itself.

Mr. PELLETIER: What happens to produce grown on the experimental farms?

Mr. GARDINER: A great deal of what is produced is used experimentally. Some of it is fed on the farms, and some commodity such as milk is sold in some communities. We try to sell it in such a way as not to create competition with persons engaged in private industry.

Mr. PELLETIER: There must be a vast quantity of vegetables grown on the experimental farms, more than can be used on the farm itself. Is it given away to charitable organizations, or is it sold?

Mr. GARDINER: Some of the vegetables are grown for storage tests and those, of course, are put in storage. Many of the vegetables grown are of so many types and varieties that there is no sale for them in bulk. They are fed, if there is stock to consume them, or they are disposed of in some other way. There is no general policy, there being no sale for them.

Mr. PELLETIER: We have an experimental farm in Ottawa, and undoubtedly they must grow a vast quantity of vegetables of all sorts. There are many people in the city without gardens who could possibly use that surplus. I am not referring to anything of value for experimental purposes, but the surplus that is not used could be distributed to those who have not gardens of their own and who would appreciate a supply of fresh vegetables in the winter. I think it would be a nice gesture for the department to offer to give these surplus vegetables to poor people, until the supply is exhausted.

Mr. GARDINER: There is really only one way in which that could be done without difficulty; that is, to give it to hospitals, or to the Red Cross or the Salvation Army or such organizations to distribute. It would be very difficult for the farmers to distribute it themselves, and decide who is entitled and who is not. The wholesalers take anything that is of value.

Mr. BARBER: Is there some revenue from the sale of pure bred breeding stock?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; there is a certain revenue.

Mr. SENN: I referred a moment ago to the experiments with landrace hogs. Last year we had some startling figures placed on Hansard by the hon. member for Wellington North (Mr. Blair). They seemed to indicate that the early maturing quality of these hogs in comparison with other types experimented with at the farm is almost incredible. Could the minister tell us briefly what experiments have been carried on during the past year and the results in relation to early maturity, and their adaptability for bacon?

Mr. GARDINER: The results of the experiments carried on to date have been given publicity through the press. A complete statement has been put out. I have not the report before me at the moment or I would read it. Generally speaking, the results show that there are some advantages in the type of hog that was introduced, and some disadvantages. From the experiments to date, it is not considered that there is sufficient balance of advantages over disadvantages to warrant attempting to interfere with the type we now have pretty well established across Canada, the Yorkshire type.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): For freight, express and cartage the amount this year is $50; last year it was $490. Would the minister give the break-down of the 1937-38 expenditure, and why he anticipates only $50 this year?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been a redistribution as a result of the reorganization; part of the item is now in administration and part under the central experimental farm.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister give a statement concerning the experiments carried out at Indian Head and other stations in Saskatchewan with respect to rust resisting wheat, and when we may expect to have a general distribution of the varieties being experimented with during the last year?

Mr. GARDINER: That would properly come under the next item or the one following that.

Item agreed to.

Central experimental farm, Ottawa, $594,135.

Mr. GARDINER: As a result of the experiments carried on at Indian Head in connection with rust resistant wheats, there are three unnamed varieties now being carried under numbers. If they prove entirely successful, they will be distributed. There has been some distribution this last year of Thatcher wheat and Renown as well. But these other three varieties being developed we hope will be even better than those which have been distributed.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Would it not be possible, either in the supplementaries or in next year's estimates, to provide for building at least one more large greenhouse at the experimental farm for the purpose of carrying on this work with rust resistant wheat and oats, and also experiments with beans, peas and other plants used in every part of Canada? Some ten years ago the greenhouses were enlarged, and the result has been a tremendous amount of good work done in building up new and better grains for Canada, especially rust resistant varieties. More greenhouse accommodation would not involve a very great expenditure. The department and the men who handle these grains should be highly complimented upon the work they have done. I have heard in the committee criticisms of the salaries paid to men in the experimental farms, but I believe most of these men are not paid enough. If we were to pay more money in these positions, we might have held some of the good men we have lost and be able to keep some of the good men who are coming along. There is no more useful work in connection with agriculture in this country. I hope the minister will soon be able to provide a sufficient sum to give these people more room to work.

Mr. HAYHURST: The work being done by the experimental farms is recognized throughout western Canada as being of a very high order. I wish to add my commendation and that of this group to what has been said. The development of Thatcher wheat and so on has done much for western Canada, and that work is appreciated by the farmers. Anything that can be done to assist the biologists and botanists who are carrying on this work should be done. We know the work cannot be done without greenhouses and equipment.

Progress reported.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. DUBOIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. LUCIEN DUBOIS (Nicolet-Yamaska) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. In an editorial published yesterday on the subject of the national defence estimates, the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit attributed to me and to all my dissenting colleagues, without exception, unjust and humiliating motives.

We have never even thought of taking advantage of any means of evasion whatever.

On my own behalf and on behalf of my colleagues from St. Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Crète), of Trois-Rivières (Mr. Gariépy), of Champlain (Mr. Brunelle), of Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Wilfrid Lacroix), of Portneuf (Mr. Gauthier), of Quebec West (Mr. Charles Parent), of Laval-Two Mountains (Mr. Lacombe) and of Lake St. John (Mr. Sylvestre), I protest against this article. I wish to state once more in this house that our views regarding the increase in the military estimates are the same this year as last.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SUGGESTED FIXING OF MINIMUM PRICE AND ISSUANCE OF CERTIFICATES AS OF AUGUST 1

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday on the orders of the day the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) asked for certain information with regard to the Canadian Wheat board. I desire to say to the house that the government, in accordance with the recommendation of the Turgeon commission, has decided to continue the wheat board for the crop season of 1938-39. The matter of price will be dealt with when the general wheat situation becomes clearer, and well in advance of the crop year.

PRIVILEGE—MR. WALSH

NEWSPAPER REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS ON BILL NO. 4, TO AMEND THE CRIMINAL CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. A. WALSH (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I should like to direct the attention of the house to remarks that I made on Tuesday evening when speaking on Bill No. 4, to amend the criminal code. I said:

It is for that reason that I am prepared to support the bill.

The following statement appears on page 1 of the Montreal Gazette of Wednesday, May 18:

W. A. Walsh, Montreal Conservative, condemned the bill.

I draw this statement to the attention of the house in order that the opinion expressed there will not be regarded as the opinion I expressed in the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): They had to protect the hon. gentleman.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, $594,135.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister explain the increase in this vote?

Mr. GARDINER: There are two items of increase: Permanent salaries, $13,876, and temporary salaries, $18,362, making an increase on account of salaries of $32,238.

Mr. HAYHURST: How many greenhouses at the central experimental farm are used for disease surveys and research work?

Mr. GARDINER: There are two in cereals, two in botany, one in horticulture and one in forage crops.

Mr. WALSH: Are there many people employed at the experimental farm who are not on the experimental staff but are classified as temporary employees, and have been there for a considerable number of years?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the exact figure, but there are very few who have been temporary over a considerable number of years.

Mr. WALSH: I was informed that quite a number of exceptionally well qualified men are on what is called the temporary staff. They are doing good work and have been there, I will not say a considerable number of years, but quite a number of years, and I was wondering what the chances were of their being made permanent in order to get the benefits of that classification.

Mr. GARDINER: Most of them were student labourers who were taken on at the end of their courses. They are now reclassified under the reorganization, and will have a better opportunity of becoming permanent under the new set-up.

Mr. THOMPSON: Driving along Carling avenue I noticed an immense building being erected on the experimental farm. I should like to know why that building was erected, what was the necessity for it and what department it is for.

Mr. GARDINER: It is being erected by the Department of Public Works for the storing of records of the different departments. It has nothing to do with the operation of the experimental farm.

Mr. THOMPSON: I notice that there is an increase in this and the next item totalling $121,000. It is my opinion that there is a tremendous overhead in operating the experimental farm and the branch farms and stations.

Mr. GARDINER: That might perhaps be better discussed under the next item. The one before us deals with the central experimental farm only.

Mr. HYNDMAN: The seasonal labourers at the central experimental farm, who are mostly farmers' sons, receive from twenty-eight to thirty-four cents an hour, while the labourers employed by and under the Public Works department receive forty-five cents an hour. What is the reason for the difference in pay?

Mr. GARDINER: The main explanation is that the labour employed on the farm is agricultural labour. On our farms generally across the country we try to regulate the pay so that it will be somewhat in conformity with the general rate of pay prevailing for that type of labour. The Public Works department have what under their classification are called labourers but they are of a little different type from those we employ for general field work on the farm. There is also in connection with the Public Works classification some provision with which I am not fully familiar which has to do with the granting of holidays, and which works in with the rate of pay.

Mr. HYNDMAN: The seasonal worker at the farm, that is the farmer's son, has to work in the summer time fifty-eight hours a week, and in the winter fifty-three hours, whereas those employed under the Public Works department work only forty-four hours a week, or an eight-hour day. I should like to know why this distinction is made between these classes of labour.

Mr. GARDINER: The reason for it, I suppose, is largely one of custom and practice. In connection with artisans, for example, there is an eight-hour day, and speaking generally we adhere to that as a government. But there are no set hours for agricultural labour, and I think most of us realize that it would be difficult to operate a farm on an eight-hour basis. The farm is operated on a ten-hour basis.

Item agreed to.

Branch farms and stations and illustration stations, $1,365,692.

Mr. PERLEY: How many of these stations are now in operation?

Mr. GARDINER: There are 26 experimental farms and stations, and in addition we have 9 substations and 194 illustration stations.

Mr. PERLEY: Does the farm of Doctor Saeger Wheeler that was taken over at Rosthern come in this list?

Mr. GARDINER: No. My information is that that farm is not included in the figures I have just given.

Mr. PERLEY: Under what branch of the department is it operated? I thought it was taken over as a substation.

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Wheeler, of course, was a very prominent worker in the selection of seed and in the showing of wheat at exhibitions. He cooperated with the department until he reached the age of superannuation, and then he went off automatically. The question whether he should be further continued is still under consideration.

Mr. PERLEY: I have had letters from several persons in that district, also resolutions passed, I think, by the Prince Albert board of trade, asking me to make representations that Doctor Wheeler be continued in the service. I understand that when his farm was taken over as a demonstration farm he was employed as a superintendent at a salary, I think, of $2,200, until he reached the age of seventy. He reached that age last year, I understand, and I am informed by the Prince Albert board of trade that he was superannuated or given a pension of seven-fiftieths of his salary. They think that Doctor Wheeler is quite capable of still carrying on this work; he is very active, and has certainly made an important contribution to agriculture in the development of pure seed, as the minister has just stated. I have been asked to make representations on his behalf that he be allowed to carry on that work at the farm for another few years. He was one of the pioneer settlers; he has certainly made a valuable contribution to agriculture, and I am very glad to make these representations on his behalf. A statement from the minister as to the work Doctor Wheeler is actually carrying on, and whether the suggestion will be considered, would I think be very welcome at this time.

Mr. GARDINER: The department have not had the farm of Seager Wheeler rented. He has been carrying on experiments on his own farm, which I believe is located just across the road from our experimental branch there, and I think for seven years he has been paid a salary by the department to carry on his activities on his own farm and be available at all times for advisory purposes to our station across the road. Until he reached the age of seventy that pay was continued. When he reached the age of seventy the matter of superannuation was considered. The general policy is not to continue men beyond the age of seventy, but representations have been made by the board of trade of Prince Albert and others that we should reconsider the matter. We have it under consideration at the moment, but no further decision has been reached. At present he is superannuated.

Mr. HAYHURST: I notice that there are three branch laboratories in the prairie provinces which are concerned largely with the diseases of cereals. Where are the three located?

Mr. GARDINER: That comes under the next item, science services. They are at Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton.

Mr. PELLETIER: There is a sub-experimental station at Beaver Lodge, Alberta, and from time to time there has been a great deal of agitation to make it into a full-fledged station. The Minister of Agriculture last summer made a tour of the Peace River and has first-hand information concerning the Beaver Lodge substation. Perhaps he is in a position to tell the committee what the government intends to do so far as the establishment of a station in the Peace River country is concerned. That substation has been operated for a great many years by one who is considered to be fully capable of performing his duties. I understand that he is well known to the minister. Apart from that there are the claims of the people of the Peace River country for a full-fledged station; and since the minister made a tour last summer and acquainted himself with the conditions, he may be in a position now to make a statement concerning this matter.

Mr. GARDINER: I did visit this station last summer and found that very valuable work was being carried on there. At the moment I am not in a position to state what the future policy will be with regard to it. I shall be in a much better position to discuss it when the supplementaries are down. Any provision which is made for such an establishment will have been determined at that time. I should much prefer to have the discussion deferred until we have the supplementaries down, and if there is an amount for that purpose in the supplementaries we can discuss it from that point of view. But there is an amount in the general estimates for the enlargement of the work that is being done at Beaver Lodge.

Mr. PELLETIER: That is quite satisfactory. I am quite willing to await the supplementary estimates, provided of course that the minister agrees with me as to the need and desirability of establishing a station in the Peace River country.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no question about the need for a station in that vicinity.

Mr. MALLETTE (Translation): I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) and of the committee to a question of great importance to the farmers, especially the horticulturists, of the district of Montreal which, as you know, includes the county of Jacques Cartier. I have received from the district agronomist a letter from which I quote the following paragraph:

The horticulturists of the counties of Jacques Cartier, Laval, Two Mountains, Terrebonne and L'Assomption would like to see the farm at L'Assomption establish a substation either on the island of Montreal or on Jesus island in order to conduct the experiments required by the horticulturists of the district. We understand that the soil of the experimental farm at L'Assomption is not in all respects similar to that of the farms of most of the above mentioned horticulturists and that it would therefore be desirable for that experimental farm to rent a property on which to conduct its experiments, as the Lennoxville farm does at its substation in the county of Chateauguay.

It is sometimes forgotten in various sections of the country, Mr. Chairman, that Quebec also is an agricultural province. In order to prove that it is, I shall read into the record certain figures published by the Canadian Liberal Monthly and taken from reports of the Dominion Bureau of Statistics:

The following table indicates the value of farm production, by provinces, for the years 1933 to 1937 inclusive.

Gross Value of Agricultural Production in Canada

May I ask the minister to be kind enough to take this matter under consideration?

Shortly, it is this. I have been asked by the horticulturists of my county whether the minister's department would consent to extend the work of the experimental farm at L'Assomption, in the region of the island of Montreal, for the benefit of the horticulturists in that section.

Mr. GARDINER: There has been a separate establishment in the black muck area, in the vicinity of Montreal. Some experimental work is being done there. The question whether we should go further with that work is still under consideration. I do not know that I can say any more than that at the moment.

Mr. MALLETTE: The matter is under consideration?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. MALLETTE: Thank you.

Mr. PERLEY: I think there are one or two substations or illustration stations in the southern half of Saskatchewan, in what are commonly spoken of as the dried-out areas. I understand that some experiments are being conducted there with respect to controlling soil drifting. Could the minister give us any report on the results of those experiments?

Mr. GARDINER: Quite a number of stations have been established throughout the drought area in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta for the purpose of experimenting with ways and means of controlling soil drifting. At some of them, depending on the nature of the district, the idea being promoted is that of strip farming. At others it is the planting of certain types of grasses, or in some cases it is rye in strips two or three feet apart, in order to try to hold the soil and prevent drifting, with the object of getting it re-grassed—with the idea not of refarming it but of finding some way of holding and tying it down so that it will not be blowing over on to the next neighbour's land. Then there are other activities in connection with the ridging of the soil, so to speak, in order to gather a moisture supply and hold it. In addition to that, during the last winter at some of these stations they have been ridging the snow, with the idea that, with the drifting that goes on continuously in the west, and the snow always being so light that it sifts along like sand, a ridge of it can be gathered to the extent of two or three feet of snow upon a piece of land. All that is being done to conserve moisture and improve moisture conditions, which in itself tends to hold soil down and prevent drifting. There are activities in other lines, but these are the main ones, and we are getting very good results from them.

Mr. HAYHURST: Yesterday we were complimenting the officials of the Department of Agriculture upon the splendid work which is being done at the central experimental farm in collaboration with other experimental farms in the development of rust resistant wheat. Is this research work done mostly in Ottawa, so far as the development of rust spores and that kind of thing is concerned?

Mr. GARDINER: About half the work was done at Ottawa, the other half being divided among other places. Some was done in the laboratory at Winnipeg and a certain amount of work was done at the experimental farm at Indian Head. Some work was also done by the university of Saskatchewan, and at branch farms in western Canada certain experimental work was carried on in regard to production and the following up of the crop during the season.

Mr. HOWARD: I wish to say a word on this vote because the experimental farm at Lennoxville comes under it. I have been through the detailed expenditures of the farm there, and the justification for that farm is the service it can render to the community. They want a certain amount of money. In the supplementary estimates the minister might include another $5,000 for the Lennoxville farm in order to carry further some work that is needed in that section. I would refer particularly to the breeding of horses. We have now one breed, Clydesdale, and there is a growing feeling that Belgians should be included; and if this $5,000 could be brought down in the supplementary estimates for experimental farms and added to the budget of the Lennoxville farm, which by the way is rendering excellent service to the community, it would be of considerable benefit to all the people there.

Mr. GARDINER: There is, I believe, about $4,000 of an increase included in the general estimates for the Lennoxville farm. I cannot say at the moment what, if anything, will be in the supplementaries. They will probably be before the house in a few days.

Mr. BLACKMORE: May I express approbation of the work done on the experimental farms and offer a word of encouragement to the minister to go forward, extending the activities of these farms.

Item agreed to.

Science services administration, $25,435.

Mr. HAYHURST: I understand that rust work is carried on at Winnipeg. Have they proper greenhouse facilities?

Mr. GARDINER: There are greenhouse facilities at Winnipeg, but it is a question whether they are as extensive as they ought to be. We could always use increased space, but within the estimates that we have seen fit to bring before the house we have made provision for all the space we can just now.

Mr. CHURCH: I have not asked the minister any questions in connection with his estimates, but under this item of science services, which is the most important one I see in the whole of the estimates for agriculture, I would ask him what he is doing for planned agricultural development for the next twenty-five years. After reading all that has been said, I cannot see that the minister has taken any steps to avail himself of the great opening in England to-day not only for new storage facilities underground, but for marketing, and other features of supplying the mother country with food in days of stress and strain. In the second place, I should like to see under this scientific department a closer cooperation than there has been between agriculture and industry. Last year I said:

I would like to see a maximum production of farm products, and would also like to see a close cooperation between agricultural and industrial producers; for the great and extensive needs of agriculture must be supplied. Prosperous industry depends upon a prosperous agriculture, and the Conservative party has always been associated with the development of agriculture. It is one industry which has not rallied to communist propaganda. I should like to see agriculture in Canada developed by a comprehensive plan, and one which would be adapted to Canada's situation. That could be done by the collaboration of the provincial representatives of agricultural departments with people concerned with industry, and in that way the whole rural population of Ontario would be lifted to a higher collective life. It could be done, not by ruining anybody but by merging single interests into one united national endeavour to develop agriculture in all its forms. In that way we would lift our country to a higher economic and social plane. Every individual should be engaged in this work.

I do not believe that there has been much development in the scientific field of agriculture. The British Minister of Agriculture has had an elaborate inquiry made into this very important question, because agriculture is failing to-day. In this connection I wish to read one or two paragraphs from an article that I came across recently. They apply to Canada's position at the present time. Canada should be supplying the mother country and collaborating with her in the scientific development of agriculture. This article is headed Waste Not, Want Not, and appears in the May issue of the great National Review. It deals with agriculture in the dominions and indicates how the dominions can help the mother country not only at the present time but in times of war and stress. Referring to Canada's scientific development of farming the writer says:

In the Dominion of Canada the fisheries are a declining factor, consequent on the application of a maximum of mechanical aids and a minimum of human power. The prairies in the central regions are losing their fertility in an endeavour to supply wheat for exportation with a maximum of machine power, and a minimum of man power; and the same sequence applies to timber or mineral productions. Over eighty per cent of Canada's exportations are basic raw materials or primary products, and the whole population of this vast extent of the earth's surface is only in the neighbourhood of 11,000,000.

The point which I wish to make clear is that during the last decade, since machinery in the dominion has been employed in geometrical progression towards the destruction of primary natural resources for export, the country has failed to increase in man power. Not only is this the case, but the problem of unemployment is probably as acute in Canada as elsewhere. The same reasoning holds to a more or less degree when applied to other parts of the British Empire from which countries, dominated by industrialism or relentless machine economy, derive their supplies of raw materials. . . .

Despite the Ottawa agreements the outer industrialized world derives infinitely more of its supplies of raw materials from the British Empire than does the United Kingdom. The avowed policy of Japan, Germany, or other countries which clamour for primary products is dictated solely by interests of industrialization or machine economy, and could not fail to have a further sterilizing effect on the growth of British dominions and colonies in population power.

The truth is that the mechanisms begin to exhaust the world's stock of raw materials, and most of the troubles in modern countries under the aegis of machine economy result from a gradually widening deficit of this supply of primary products. . . .

Scientific pundits tell us that they can create a thousand articles out of cow's milk, and india-rubber out of lime, and coal. But, fundamentally they cannot make something out of nothing, and that great metaphysical problem remains. In reality the scientist creates nothing; all he does is to transform one material substance into another; and a spider in the corner can do that without mathematical formulae, test tubes, or extraneous primary products. The scientifically minded, who sport the cap and bells of modern thought in most countries, assume that their transformations of man's natural environment into a state of artificial mechanical flux, wherein man will ultimately find no abiding place, must continue uncontrolled and unchecked. They constantly reiterate that this is progress, and the millenium is around the corner; but to my mind it is not progress which denudes the world's surface and at the same time tends to extinguish human personality and human fecundity. It is not progress which leaves vast areas of the world's surface destitute of natural resources and barren of inhabitants, condemns millions of people to wallow in the misery of forced unemployment, or flings them into the trough of modern war as cannon fodder.

As has been said in that article, "Waste not, Want Not" is not only true in England, but has a special application to the Canadian prairies. I have a number of the reports. I do not wish to be unfair to the minister, but he ought to do something to relieve this situation. Many farmers are going to the United States. For example, we have farms around the city of Toronto; scientific agriculture should not apply only to the prairies; there should be equality of treatment in connection with all these estimates. The minister should consider the suburban areas of Canada scientifically and in every other way. My hon. friends from the west urge a great many problems upon the house; but they forget all about the suburban worker, the truck farmer and many other classes, and transportation which would lower the cost of living. These are very important features. I hope that during the recess the minister will collaborate with the British scientists I have named and with the British government to see what coordination there can be between Canada and the mother country. Do hon. members know that at Easter in 1918 the mother country had only two days' supply of food? She has to import 80 per cent of her food and 100 per cent of her raw material. If a crisis came again, as in 1914, she could be starved out, because she has 3,000 fewer ships to-day than she had in 1914.

Mr. GARDINER: One of the chief ideas we had in mind in sending to London this year a man with some scientific as well as practical knowledge of Canadian agriculture, and one who was himself born in England and had his earliest education there, was to take care of such a situation which has been mentioned. We felt that a man with that experience in different parts of Canada, the United States, and Great Britain, and with a scientific and technical knowledge of agriculture as well, would be in a position to do just such things as it has been stated should be done.

Much of the scientific work in relation to agricultural production is carried on in cooperation with such institutions as agricultural colleges, and the provincial departments of agriculture. Outside of the drought area work the distribution of funds expended for these purposes can properly be said to have been made fairly across Canada. In fact it will be found that most of those expenditures were made in the central part of Canada. That is only natural because much of the fruit and vegetable growing and work having to do with the kind of agriculture particularly concerned is carried on in that section of Canada.

Mr. THOMPSON: While I appreciate that a very excellent work is being done in the experiments carried on at these experimental stations and the central experimental farm, I still fear that we are building up a great white elephant requiring ever-increasing expenditure, and that agriculture is not deriving benefit in proportion to the amount being spent. Our expenditures are far too great for the benefits we receive, great as those benefits have been. This work could be done in such a way as to benefit the farmers, without being so elaborate and expensive. No one can examine into the experimental stations and the central experimental farm or the agricultural colleges without being struck by the fact that there is a great deal of unnecessary expenditure from which agriculture derives no benefit.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am inclined to think that if the words just spoken by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson) are true it is not because the work which is being done by the experimental farms is not valuable, but because of a trip-up somewhere else in our national economy, as a result of which our farm people are unable to derive benefit from the findings of agricultural research. I am sympathetic with the view of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church). I believe we are neglecting altogether too much the consistent development of our agricultural productive power. I fear it is falling into decay. I said something about that the other night, and I do not wish to over-elaborate it; but what might happen should we be subjected to a grave international crisis, with our agricultural productive plant more or less depleted, has been cause for great concern to me. I do not wish now to make any suggestions as to practical steps to be taken, but I feel that the question we were discussing to some extent yesterday afternoon, that of stabilizing prices, making it possible for the farmer to produce, with a fair assurance of profit, swine, butter, eggs and other products, would be a very proper one upon which to centre our attention. I do not wish to say too much about this, but we may come to the point where it will be found altogether in the national interest to subsidize some agricultural industries, either by direct subsidy or by some sort of arrangement with the railways for a decrease in freight rates, or in some other manner to make sure that our agricultural productive plant shall be maintained. The articles read by the hon. member for Broadview indicate that there is growing alarm throughout the empire concerning this question. I commend the minister for his activities. In my judgment he has carried on his work this year with a high degree of efficiency and vision. I wish to assure him that he will receive no opposition from our part of the house when he undertakes to enlarge the activities of his department and go forward in strengthening Canada agriculturally.

Mr. BAKER: As the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Thompson) has said, there appears to be an enormous amount of money being spent, and I accept his point of view as an experienced farmer that it is not producing adequate results. I notice that the total expenditure under the head of agriculture for the year 1936-37 was $1,117,000, and this year it is up to $9,160,000. Is that just because the treasury is receiving more money? Is it not true that much of this work is being duplicated in the different provinces? It is all the money of the public, just the same. I think the hon. member's point is well taken, that there is a good deal of money needlessly spent and without result. From a business point of view there should be much greater economy in this respect on the part of the federal government and the provincial governments as well.

Mr. GARDINER: The figures given by the hon. member in regard to the expenditure are not the correct ones. He compares the estimates of last year and this year, but the expenditure last year was $9,266,476 on the two items we have been considering in the general estimates, as will be seen at the bottom of page 5. The estimated total this year is $9,160,532, which is smaller than the total expenditure of last year, but as yet of course we have not dealt with the supplementary estimates for this year. It is possible that there may be a slightly larger expenditure this year when the supplementaries are brought down, but there will not be anything like the increase which has been indicated.

Mr. THOMPSON: May I ask the minister to explain the increase of $19,396 under this item?

Mr. GARDINER: This is the new branch of the department; that is, we have taken the science services of the different branches and put them all under one head, and of course there is a new administration set-up in connection with that, only part of which existed previously, which accounts for some of this increase. This year permanent salaries amount to $10,280, as against $4,959 last year. Temporary salaries amount to $4,155 this year as against $1,080 last year. In those two items there is an increase of $8,396. Then there are several new items: supplies, $500; printing and stationery, $2,000; travelling expenses, $3,000 and miscellaneous, $500. Those are all new. There is also provision for cooperative investigations, amounting to $5,000; that is new as well. These are the new services in the branch which has been set up.

Mr. DUFFUS: Last evening I intimated that if a comparison of the expenditures of the Department of Agriculture with those of the other departments were made, serious discrepancies might be disclosed. Yesterday we listened to a very well prepared speech by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) which I think should stand him in good stead at the forthcoming national convention of his party. Criticism was levelled at the Department of Agriculture and the minister at present responsible for its administration. It will be recalled that the hon. member for Greenwood recommended that the standard of Canadian live stock be raised by direct assistance to the farmers; that new and permanent markets for Canadian products be found, and that farming be made more profitable. I submit that the department is positively taking steps in that direction. Having been connected with farming either directly or indirectly all my life it is my opinion that this government, and the present Department of Agriculture, have done more to promote the interests of agriculture in a practical, scientific manner than any other department or government since confederation. The policies of agricultural trade expansion and general assistance to agriculture have been most effective during the past three years. The great increase in exports of agricultural products to the United States, to European countries and to Great Britain has in large measure restored the confidence of the Canadian farmer. Improvements in breeding, feeding, housing and the marketing of Canadian bacon hogs have been greatly facilitated by the information which has been placed at their disposal. The instructions and advice that have been given in connection with dairy products have increased the quality and quantity as well as the price. The development of seed grain and its distribution to areas for which it is best adapted has been promoted in a very excellent manner. Inspection, grading, packing and shipping facilities in respect of farm products have resulted in great improvement during the last few years. Dairy herds and soils have been more extensively tested, and I am most grateful to the officials of the department and to the minister for the work that has been and is being done in the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this house.

I am not intimating or suggesting that everything that is necessary has been done. I do submit, however, that commensurate with economic conditions and the available staff, rapid progress has been made in almost every direction. In conclusion I desire to give credit where credit is due.

Mr. BROOKS: I was very much interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Peterborough West (Mr. Duffus); it is very interesting to learn that the department is operating so successfully in his part of the country, but I do not think we in the maritime provinces have been blessed with the same benefits.

I should like to ask a question in connection with the potato crop of the maritime provinces. As the minister knows, we have been having great difficulty in marketing our potatoes during the last few years, and those interested in the industry have been looking for other outlets. One of the outlets that I understood was being experimented with was the possibility of using potatoes for the production of industrial alcohol, which I think would come under this item. I should like to ask the minister what success his department has had in the production of industrial alcohol from potatoes; if it is of any economic value to the farmers, and whether or not these experiments are being carried on at the present time.

Mr. GARDINER: There is an experiment being carried on in connection with the production of alcohol from potatoes, but as yet it has not been determined that alcohol can be produced commercially in that way; that is, in a way that would permit its being used to advantage as against other kinds of alcohol, or, if it is to be used for fuel, in such a way that it could be used as against other types of fuel.

The main service that has been given by this branch has been in connection with the study and treatment of diseases of the potatoes of the maritime provinces and other similar crops. Other services are given as well, such as issuing certificates on seed, which have made possible the marketing of the crop of that area. There has been an inspection service furnished also, which assists in marketing the crop in the central part of Canada. As far as this particular vote is concerned the investigation into the production of alcohol from potatoes, as well as the treatment of diseases, is being carried on just as actively as anywhere else.

Mr. BROOKS: Then the idea has not been abandoned that it may be of value at some time?

Mr. GARDINER: No, the idea has not been abandoned, but we have not yet reached a point where we can report it as commercially possible.

Item agreed to.

Animal and poultry pathology, $147,405.

Mr. THOMPSON: The items "temporary assistance" and "wages" seem to occur frequently in every department. What is meant by temporary assistance and wages?—because salaries are included in the preceding item.

Mr. GARDINER: Temporary service is required in every branch of the agricultural service, as it is in all other departments. We have temporary service due to the fact that persons have been taken on and have not yet completed the six months' probationary period before they become permanent. Then there is another class of temporary service where people are only seasonal employees. There are also those on wages who are engaged from time to time in connection with our different operations.

Mr. THOMPSON: Are those appointments all patronage appointments?

Mr. GARDINER: The temporary and permanent appointments are made under the Civil Service Act. Those who receive wages are taken on from day to day.

Mr. BARBER: Are the activities under this item confined to Ottawa or do they extend right across the country?

Mr. GARDINER: There are two laboratories in British Columbia and one at Calgary where this work is carried on. Then we have work being carried on at Ottawa.

Mr. BARBER: Would that be the one at Agassiz?

Mr. GARDINER: One is at the farm and the other is at Milner.

Item agreed to.

Bacteriology, $39,670.

Mr. BARBER: I understand that there have been some activities under this vote in connection with the dairy industry of British Columbia.

Mr. GARDINER: The activities include the study of problems arising in the processing of milk, in the manufacture of butter, cheese, ice cream, condensed milk, dehydrated milk, casein, milk sugar, fermented milks and by-products, and bacteriological, chemical and other research work for the purpose of establishing sound principles of manufacture in the dairy industry. The group confers with and advises dairymen and managers of dairies and milk product factories in regard to new problems requiring scientific treatment. It is also called upon to ascertain and develop the most appropriate methods to be applied in the making of high grade and uniform dairy products and to investigate and apply remedial measures to new defects which arise from time to time in manufactured products.

Work has been carried on in British Columbia particularly with regard to wood taint and surface deterioration in the storage of butter. The matter of wood taint and surface deterioration in connection with the storage of export butter has become a problem of serious economic importance to the Canadian butter industry and studies have been and are still being undertaken to determine ways and means of overcoming these defects. The moisture content of boxes, the type of wood, the length of storage period, the temperature of storage and the methods of packing have been studied. In addition, the possible methods of treating the interior of butter boxes has been studied and new types of aluminum oil wrapper for storage butter are being investigated further.

Mr. BARBER: They have not arrived at a solution of that particular problem?

Mr. GARDINER: The proper type of box lining is considered a solution.

Item agreed to.

Entomology, $463,121.

Mr. PERLEY: A considerable annual expenditure is made under this item. I am not finding any fault with the work done by the department in an endeavour to control the infestation of grasshoppers, cutworms and so on. I think money spent in this connection is well spent. What proportion of this vote will be expended in Saskatchewan, and how many senior and junior entomologists will be located there? Perhaps the minister could give us some information as to the possibilities of infestation of cutworms and grasshoppers. There is a possibility that there will be an influx of political grasshoppers into Saskatchewan in the next two or three weeks, and I understand that these are more dangerous to the people than some of the bugs that have troubled us in previous years. I do not expect that the minister will give us the amount of money to be expended in controlling this latter grasshopper pest, because I realize that he may be one of the principal grasshoppers in that province. However, all jokes aside, I think that this is an important work being carried on under this branch.

Mr. GARDINER: The expenditures under this item in Saskatchewan are:

Saskatoon
  Field crop insects, $26,210.
Indian Head
  Forest insects, $7,278.

There will be other expenditures made in connection with field crops, such as:

Alberta, $20,939.
British Columbia
  Vernon

Some of the investigations to be carried on outside Saskatchewan will be beneficial to that province. It is feared that this year the infestation of grasshoppers will be more widespread—I am speaking now of the variety that really hop—than in previous years. There is also the possibility that the same may be said with reference to the cutworm. During the early part of the season this year in the southwestern part of the province there seemed to be great danger of prevalence of the cutworm. I do not know whether the scientists will agree with me, but it has been my practical experience that in the years when you have considerable rainfall the grasshopper does not make the same inroads as in other years. That is also more or less true of the cutworm, although not to the same extent. I suppose we shall have to wait for developments to see whether either insect will make greater inroads this year.

Mr. STIRLING: To what extent does the dominion government assist in the control of grasshoppers?

Mr. GARDINER: We provide those who have the scientific knowledge to advise, but the real cost is carried by the provinces.

Mr. BROOKS: We have had very few pests, human or otherwise, in my province—

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): From or in?

Mr. BROOKS: Both. But the cutworm has been committing ravages in the province in the last few years, and I would ask what the prospects are for the present year, whether the cutworm has been pretty well controlled or is likely to be bothersome again this year?

Mr. SPENCE: I am not getting on my feet, Mr. Chairman, to condemn the entomological branch, because they are doing a splendid service, but I do condemn the increase I see in the ten items on this page of approximately $300,000.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): The total is down $100,000.

Mr. SPENCE: There may be decreases in other items which I did not deduct, but in the ten items there is an increase of about $300,000. My hon. friend from Lanark (Mr. Thompson) has made some observations this afternoon to which I think the department and this house should give serious consideration. He is a farmer of repute, who has made a success of farming, and he also knows something about business, and men of his type are very scarce in this house.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. SPENCE: Oh, yes. I think the rural members of this house, generally speaking, would vote to give the Minister of Agriculture the clock on the tower of this building if he asked for it, and then tell him he had not asked for enough and vote to give him more. The hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) asked for the stabilizing of prices, but it is impossible to stabilize the prices of perishable articles. It cannot be done. That is just bunk.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is what the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) wants.

Mr. SPENCE: I do not care what the hon. member for Greenwood says. I have had some experience in this business, and the hon. member for Lethbridge has had very little.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is what you think.

Mr. SPENCE: My hon. friend may have had experience in other lines. It is a shame that we are wasting so much money on experimental farms. I think it would be no substantial loss to the country if we had no experimental farms at all, particularly the central experimental farm at Ottawa. If you had smaller farms spread all over the country they would give the public greater service, but here you have this great, big expensive farm at Ottawa, and only a few years ago, when the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) was Minister of Agriculture, we bought the old Booth farm to add to the central experimental farm—

The CHAIRMAN: I regret to have to interrupt the hon. member, but we have passed the items for experimental farms.

Mr. SPENCE: I apologize, Mr. Chairman; I was trying to accomplish something worth while, but if I am not permitted to talk a line of good sense I will sit down.

Mr. GARDINER: In answer to the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks), there was a severe outbreak of the cutworm in a certain section of New Brunswick last year. A small infestation developed during 1937, but substantially no crop was destroyed in the greater part of the area infested. An annual survey is made of the abundance and life history and cultural conditions which make for outbreaks of this insect, and this helps in curbing it.

Mr. SENN: Two or three years ago a new kind of insect appeared that infested apples. It was called the apple maggot, and for a while there was grave danger that it would interfere with our export market because the regulations against infected apples going into the United Kingdom were very strict. I wonder what progress has been made in eliminating that pest. It appeared in certain sections of Ontario as well as in Nova Scotia.

Mr. GARDINER: The maggot is in existence. An attempt has been made to get it under control, and while its prevalence has been considerably decreased it has not been completely wiped out.

Mr. SENN: It threatened to make very serious trouble for our apples in the British market. Another insect which infected peaches appeared in the Niagara peninsula two or three years ago, and its ravages threatened for a short time to be very destructive. I wonder if the minister could say to what extent that pest is being controlled.

Mr. GARDINER: The oriental peach moth has been creating some trouble, but there is a parasite which has pretty well cleaned it up. The shipment of our apples to Great Britain is protected against infestation of maggots through our inspection system. A very close check is kept of all apples that go out of a district which is infected with the maggot.

Mr. GRAYDON: What progress has been made in controlling the warble fly? It is of considerable importance in our section of the province.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a very inexpensive liquid which will destroy it. It can be purchased and is being used by those who are desirous of destroying the warble.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What cooperation is there between provincial governments and the federal department in connection with these scientific services?

Mr. GARDINER: There is very close cooperation between the officials of the federal department and any officials provincially employed in agricultural colleges, schools and elsewhere; but the greater part of the expense of this service is carried by the federal department.

Mr. BARBER: Yesterday I mentioned an investigation into the destruction caused by the pea moth, and the minister said he would give me some information when we reached this item. I wish he would tell the committee something about the activities of his department in the lower mainland of British Columbia, and what results have been obtained in controlling the pea moth.

Mr. GARDINER: I have a memorandum here on the pea moth:

The pea moth continues to be of serious import in the pea-growing areas of Gaspé, Quebec, and the lower Fraser valley, British Columbia. In both areas, however, the pest was at somewhat less than its usual abundance, the loss in Gaspé for the whole district being about one per cent, and in the most severely infested districts approximately ten per cent, with many growers, however, being unable to continue the growing of peas for market.

The same is substantially true in the lower Fraser Valley where in large districts dried pea growing has practically stopped due to the infestations in the past. An entirely satisfactory control has not yet been worked out, though certain cultural operations and oil emulsion sprays in British Columbia and the selection of sites for the pea plantings in the Gaspé country indicate that the infestations can be very materially, if not entirely eliminated, thus effecting a saving of many thousands of dollars to the industry.

That is a short review of what has taken place. There has not been any great progress made in meeting the infestation.

Mr. STEWART: I notice that under the item for entomology the staff seems to be the same as last year, 87, but in the item of temporary assistance there is a substantial increase, from $107,000 odd to $133,000 odd. This, I assume, is a summary of total salaries and wages. What is this temporary assistance, and why is there so much of an increase in the expenditure this year over last year?

Mr. GARDINER: Practically all of that increase in temporary staff is due to the infestation of sawfly in the lumbering areas. In cooperation with the lumber industry, we are attempting to meet that infestation. Most of the additional expenditure for temporary employment is for that purpose.

Mr. STEWART: Well, hasn't anything been done in that direction in the past?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, something has been done in the past, but the infestation is growing more widespread and more difficult to handle, and we think a real attack should be made on it.

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury): I should like to mention the very valuable services of the entomological station at Fredericton, New Brunswick. Our city is particularly noted for the elm shade trees along the streets. A pest attacked those trees, particularly last year, and Mr. Balch, the head entomologist at Fredericton, from his research was able to show what would eradicate it. His advice has been taken by the city, and it is expected that as a result the trees will be saved. Not only shade trees but the forest trees are being cared for through the advice and information given by the departmental officers at Fredericton.

Have arrangements been made for improving the building occupied by the entomological branch at Fredericton? It is located on the campus of the university of New Brunswick. A mistake from an architectural standpoint was made in an addition to it, and situated as it is, that mistake should be corrected. It would not cost very much. The matter has been taken up with the department, but no progress has been made. I am sure that it would be in the interests of the department to see that that mistake is corrected.

Mr. GARDINER: I can only say that there is no amount in these estimates to take care of any improvement at Fredericton, but the matter is under consideration, and when the supplementaries are down we shall be in a better position to discuss it.

Mr. BARRY: What steps have been taken in the province of New Brunswick for the control or elimination of the sawfly. The minister a moment ago made some mention of the matter; I wonder if his statement could be made more complete?

Mr. GARDINER: The headquarters of the forest insect investigation work is at Ottawa, but there is a branch laboratory at Fredericton which takes charge of that work in New Brunswick and the Gaspé peninsula. The headquarters for the parasite work is at Belleville. There has been imported into Canada a parasite which destroys the sawfly, and this year 70,000,000 of these parasites were distributed. The Belleville plant not only has imported the parasite but multiplies them there, and distribution is made to different places, including New Brunswick.

Mr. STIRLING: What can the minister report with regard to the infestation by other insects than sawfly affecting the other conifers —the tamarack in the west, and the spruce and the red pine?

Mr. GARDINER: The two chief parasites are the larch sawfly, which is being dealt with through a parasite in much the same way as the other sawfly—and I understand that a distribution of that parasite has been made in British Columbia to deal with the larch sawfly—and the bark beetle. There is a method available of dealing with the bark beetle, and anyone communicating with the branches concerned can get information in that regard.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister gather that the infestation is growing rapidly? Is it sweeping up through the north, or what do the surveys indicate?

Mr. GARDINER: We have no definite report on that. We are not in a position to say whether or not it is extending northward.

Mr. PERLEY: This is the last item of the minister's estimates, and I know that he will be pleased, perhaps for more reasons than one, that he is through. I think he will agree that we have more or less facilitated the passage of his estimates. This is, I believe, only the fifth day they have been before the house. I can remember occasions under the previous government when they were held up for many days.

Under one or two items the question of relief was discussed, and the minister stated that Doctor Stapleford's report was in his hands and would be distributed.

Mr. GARDINER: No—just by way of correction—I did not say it would be distributed. I said it is in my hands; the question of distribution has not yet been discussed.

Mr. PERLEY: If it is at all possible, will the minister make a copy of that report available to at least the members who are interested? Would he also have tabled the order in council, if one was passed, appointing Doctor Stapleford? Also will he state whether any sittings were held outside the city of Regina, and was any evidence taken under oath?

Mr. GARDINER: An order in council was passed—I do not have it here with me—appointing Doctor Stapleford. I do not know that there were any sittings. He was appointed not as a commissioner to investigate but simply to gather the information necessary and get opinions from organizations as to the administration of relief and as to what the best methods might be.

Mr. SENN: I suppose the order in council would include a statement of his duties?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. SENN: Why not table it?

Mr. GARDINER: The other matter with regard to the report has not yet been submitted to council and I cannot say whether it will be distributed or not. As to the discussion of any other matters having to do with relief, that will naturally come under the supplementary estimates, which have yet to be considered.

Mr. PERLEY: Could we have the order in council tabled?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; I will have it tabled.

Mr. HAYHURST: I congratulate the minister upon the general work that has been done by the Department of Agriculture, but there is one matter regarding which I should like to have some information. I refer to the white grub, which affects the wheat of western Canada. If the department has a pamphlet on the subject I should like to know what it is. Could it be sent to the farmers who are directly interested in this particular insect infestation?

Mr. GARDINER: The department have publications dealing with the insect referred to and information may be obtained by application to the publicity and extension branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Mr. HAYHURST: What is it called?

Mr. GARDINER: It deals with that insect. I do not know the name.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Canadian travel bureau service—to assist in promoting tourist business in Canada, $250,000.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister give a brief description of the work done by the travel bureau? What is the size of the staff?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): The amount asked for is to provide for the administration of the Canadian travel bureau for the fiscal year 1938-39. Further extension of Canada's tourist business is an essential part of the work of national development and indicates a clear way in which Canada can largely increase its national revenue. Practically every country is now recognizing the tourist traffic as a main item of trade, and the matter of attracting tourist travel has become a highly competitive business, with the governments of various countries either directly or indirectly carrying on tourist promotional work. Of this amount of $250,000 approximately $185,000 will be utilized for direct advertising in newspapers and magazines. Of this amount approximately $165,000 will be spent in advertising in United States papers and periodicals. The United States is the country from which Canada draws by far the greater number of its tourists, and approximately ninety-five per cent of the tourist expenditure in Canada is by tourists from the United States. That country is, however, the object of aggressive tourist propaganda by every other leading tourist country; consequently if Canada is to extend its present tourist travel from that country, or even to hold it, it is necessary that the stimulation of interest in the recreational attractions of the dominion be strenuously continued. During 1937 the bureau carried advertisements amounting to 302 insertions in sixty-three newspapers in the larger cities and 127 insertions in fifty magazines, most of them with nation-wide circulation.

During the year 1937 the bureau received a total of 75,196 inquiries as compared with 52,668 received in 1936, an increase of 42·7 per cent. Of these 75,196 inquiries 66,207, or 88 per cent, were the result of direct advertising.

This year we are devoting about $25,000 to the initiation of a campaign in the British isles, and we are already receiving very satisfactory returns therefrom. The campaign is carried out under the supervision of Canada House and under the immediate supervision of the Hon. Vincent Massey, high commissioner. This is a new departure, and if the results after the tourist season warrant, we may ask the house next year for an increase in the vote. To-day, we regard the effort in Great Britain as largely experimental.

The bureau has nine of a permanent staff, and during the tourist season, the rush season, we have a temporary staff of nine more.

Mr. GREEN: I take it from what the minister has just said, and also from the report of the department, that the work of the bureau is largely publicity, advertising, publications and work of that sort. I wonder whether the minister has read that portion of the report of the national employment commission, the Purvis commission, dealing with the tourist business. We have had so many reports this year that perhaps he has not read that particular one, but I would call his attention to a suggestion contained on page 10 of the Purvis report. Referring to the tourist trade the report states:

> Because the trade benefits all the people of Canada, and because tourists visit Canada, not provinces of Canada, and tour at will across provincial boundaries, the commission is of the opinion that the dominion government might be well advised to bring about a coordinated national effort to stimulate the tourist trade.

In other words, that the dominion might give national leadership in building up the tourist business. The report goes on:

> To this end the commisison recommends that the dominion government set up a national advisory tourist committee, representative of all the provinces, to advise governmental and other interested bodies respecting policies and administration of such phases of the tourist trade as come within their respective jurisdictions or as may be deemed wise to be brought under dominion jurisdiction, such advisory committee to be composed of a minister from each provincial government, a limited number of citizens interested in developing Canada's resources as attractions, representatives of the Canadian Association of Tourist and Publicity Bureaux, together with one or more ministers of the dominion government.

That seems like a reasonable suggestion. Has anything along that line been done by the government? I take it action would come under the Canadian travel bureau.

Mr. HOWE: The purpose of this vote, which was initiated in 1934, is exactly that described by the hon. gentleman. It was never its purpose to do all the travel advertising of the dominion. It has been set up for the purpose of coordinating the work of other agencies. Each province spends a considerable appropriation for the same purpose, each of our railways has appropriations much larger than this, and our steamship companies also have appropriations. The purpose of this vote is to coordinate the efforts of all agencies in the dominion seeking to develop the tourist trade, and to this work the dominion bureau is largely confined. The bureau directs the advertising; usually an advertisement from the dominion bureau is accompanied by one or more of other Canadian advertisements, either of provinces or of the railways. The purpose of including the federal advertising is that if the other advertisement does not meet a particular need it is apparent to anyone reading the advertising that there is a central agency at Ottawa from which information about any part of the dominion may be obtained. The principal work of the dominion bureau is to act as a clearing house. Provinces which receive inquiries relating to districts beyond their own areas forward them to the dominion bureau.

It is my own opinion after closely observing the situation that tourist development as far as advertising goes is highly technical work. The director of our branch works with directors of other agencies. It is an association of technical men, and it is my opinion that the situation could not be greatly improved by adding to that group men who have only a general knowledge of the subject, as suggested in the Purvis report.

Mr. GREEN: At the present time there is no such thing as a national advisory tourist committee. Would it not help if some such committee were set up?

Mr. HOWE: At every dominion-provincial conference the ministers concerned with tourist traffic discuss the matter. I have attended two such conferences, and I think they meet the need. I doubt very much whether duplicating as a dominion affair the travel bureaux found in every city in Canada would be much help. I should not be disposed to take the initiative in setting up the sort of organization my friend suggests.

Mr. GREEN: There is a further suggestion in this Purvis commission report, which I think could be worked on by the travel bureau.

At page 10 it says:

The commission submits that the following matters should be explored and advised upon—
National tourist highways;
Retail articles attractive to tourists on which import duties should be adjusted to reduce the sale price;
Souvenirs, in order that they may be symbolic of the products, history or art of the dominion;
Handicrafts, in order that the native crafts and skills may be taught, demonstrated, and their products exhibited so as to stimulate their production and sale;
Historic forts and sites, their restoration and marking;
Sports and competitive sports projects;
Accommodation improvement.

These suggestions are made by what we all admit was a very representative commission. It seems to me the travel bureau might well investigate these different suggestions and thus give a lead to the tourist bodies across Canada.

Mr. HOWE: Every detail of that work is carried on under the proper department of government. For example, our national parks provide for the sale of Canadian products for tourists visiting the parks. The government is assisting in the construction of highways, has done so for many years and will probably continue to do so. I see no purpose in putting any of that work under the direction of a tourist bureau, which is formed for an entirely different purpose, that of directing travellers to the attractions of Canada. The creation of the attractions is being adequately taken care of by the proper department of government.

Mr. GREEN: My idea is that the Canadian travel bureau should head up the development of the tourist business right across Canada. This report states that the value of the tourist business to Canada is over $300,000,000 a year. Perhaps the minister will not dispute that figure.

Mr. HOWE: Not at all.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that he give these recommendations serious consideration. In the report of the bureau itself for the fiscal year 1936-37, at page 112 of the annual report of the Department of Transport, we find this statement:

Particularly interesting were the large number of inquiries regarding a trip across Canada, and a small folder descriptive of the trans-Canada highway trip was issued to provide information on this subject.

I have the folder on the trans-Canada highway trip. It bears the name of the minister and the deputy minister, but the automobile trip includes 250 miles by boat across lake Superior from Sault Ste. Marie to Fort William, and another 90 miles by rail in British Columbia where the Big Bend highway should be and is not. I have asked two ministers already what the present position is with regard to the trans-Canada highway, where gaps are still uncompleted. Could the minister give the committee that information?

Mr. HOWE: My friend has given it himself. There is an uncompleted part between Schreiber and somewhere in the Michipicoten area, about 250 miles in extent.

Mr. GREEN: That is the 250 miles mentioned in this pamphlet, the water trip between Sault Ste. Marie and Fort William. That does not refer to the uncompleted portion of the highway.

Mr. HOWE: The uncompleted portion is less than 250 miles—about 100 miles. I think work is proceeding at both ends to join in the middle. In the Big Bend section in British Columbia there is a gap, but work is being done there, divided, I think, between the Department of Natural Resources and the British Columbia government.

Mr. GREEN: When is it expected that the uncompleted part in northern Ontario will be finished? Is any definite effort being made to close it up quickly? It seems to me that both this government and the previous government have been very slow about getting the trans-Canada highway completed.

Mr. HOWE: As my hon. friend knows, the provinces have control of the highways, and allocate the funds, their own and the contribution of this government, as they see fit. I think both provinces are making an effort to close the gaps, and we are assisting them to do so.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister indicate when it is expected that the gap in northern Ontario will be closed?

Mr. HOWE: I am not in a position to say that at the moment.

Mr. GREEN: This tourist vote has been the same for several years, and the industry is becoming increasingly important. Is the minister satisfied that the vote is large enough?

Mr. HOWE: We should like at least a million dollars; I am sure my staff could spend it very well. Since the tourist vote was inaugurated the tourist business has about trebled, so we think excellent results are being obtained with the present vote.

Mr. GREEN: Surely you are not taking credit for all that?

Mr. HOWE: My director claims credit for every new tourist coming in.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Of the funds contributed by the dominion government is any amount earmarked for any particular highway?

Mr. HOWE: All funds of that kind are spent under an agreement between the dominion and the provinces. An agreement is made each season, and the funds are allocated to different projects.

Mr. HAYHURST: When does the minister expect the road to be finished between Jasper and lake Louise? That will be one of the finest scenic highways on the North American continent. Thousands of tourists anticipate taking a motor trip through that country as soon as it is finished.

Mr. HOWE: The work on that road is under the Department of Mines and Resources, the estimates of which will be brought down shortly, and the minister of that department can give a better answer than I. But I know it is expected that it will be finished.

Mr. DUFFUS: Do the provinces contribute to the development or maintenance of our national parks?

Mr. HOWE: Not the national parks. The federal parks are the sole property of the federal government, and all expenditures are made by this government. There are, however, some provincial parks where the opposite is true; all expenditures are made by the provinces. The federal parks are maintained by the federal government.

Mr. LAWSON: What are the functions and duties of the official listed as an investigator in the travel bureau?

Mr. HOWE: Our department is constantly extending its list of tourist potentialities, and the investigator visits new roads that have been opened up or new sports resorts and places of that kind in order to collect information which may be sent out by the bureau in pamphlets or otherwise to tourists, and generally acts as a sort of development man for the industry.

Pensions and other benefits—Railway employees provident fund—

To supplement pension allowances under the provisions of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway employees provident fund Act so as to make the minimum payment during the period January 1, 1938 to March 31, 1939, the sum of $30 per month instead of $20 as fixed by the said act, $26,300.

Mr. WALSH: This item has particular reference, I presume, to certain railways that were taken over with this obligation attached?

Mr. HOWE: This dates back to legislation passed in 1907. At that time the minimum pension of the Prince Edward Island Railway was $20 a month, and it was decided that owing to an increase in the cost of living the minimum should be brought up to $30 a month. At that time parliament undertook to provide the difference between the $20 and the $30. This fund is now closed and is declining slowly. It will disappear possibly in the course of another fifteen years.

Mr. LAWSON: What about the item labelled with an S, government employees' compensation; what does that relate to? I notice a very substantial increase there. If it is statutory there would not be an increase of $30,000 in one year, would there?

Mr. HOWE: That does not belong to this item.

Mr. LAWSON: I thought it was part of the same item.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to explain it. This item applies to all employees of the federal government. We do not insure directly under the various provincial workmen's compensation acts, but we do treat our employees just as the provinces treat other employees who are insured under those funds.

Mr. LAWSON: That is in case of injury?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, in case of injury to a dominion government employee. The reason for the increase is that the national harbours were brought into this fund last year, adding a considerable number of employees who previously had not come under this provision. Up to that time each harbour took care of its own employees, but now that is administered by this fund.

Mr. LAWSON: This would not relate to all departments, would it?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, we administer this fund for all dominion government employees.

Mr. WALSH: And the insurance is carried in recognized insurance companies?

Mr. HOWE: No, Mr. Chairman; there is no insurance. If a case occurs it is settled under the laws of the particular province applying to workmen's compensation; we pay on that basis. The dominion government pays the money out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. WALSH: Then it does not represent premiums?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. LAWSON: You are your own insurers?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. FINN: Might I ask what classes of employees of the harbours board come under this pension fund?

Mr. HOWE: Any employees who would come under the provincial acts. I think in some provinces it is employees getting up to $2,400 a year, while in others I believe the limit is $1,800 a year. It covers all employees of the dominion government while in the employ of the government, subject to such limitations as each province may determine.

Mr. FINN: Not necessarily civil servants?

Mr. HOWE: No, any employee.

Item agreed to.

Canadian National Railways—
Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals —capital construction and improvements, $35,000.

Mr. WALSH: In the railway committee I discussed a matter pertaining to the Prince Edward Island ferry. At present I understand that there are two ferries there. Is that correct?

Mr. HOWE: There are two ferry boats.

Mr. WALSH: And do those two boats operate the year round, or are both operated only in the summer time and only one in the winter time, or what is the service given?

Mr. HOWE: Heretofore the newer boat has performed the service except during the periods of lay-up. The older boat has been used to take over while the other boat was being dry docked, as it must be each year, and also as a stand-by in case of accident. However, due to the increase in the tourist business arrangements have been made this year to put on a second boat to supplement the services of the newer boat during the tourist season. The purpose of this item, which was passed by the special committee on railways, is to take care of the necessary alterations to enable the older boat to handle motor cars efficiently.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What was the capital cost of each of these boats?

Mr. HOWE: I have not the exact cost here, but the new boat cost about $2,700,000, and from that I should say the other boat cost about $700,000.

Mr. WALSH: The service in the summer time is provided by the regular operation of two ferries, with one standing by in case of accident to either of those boats. Is that it? I presume that is in June, July, August and probably September, but during the remainder of the year there is only one ferry actually operating. Is that correct?

Mr. HOWE: There are two boats and up to the present only one has been in service at one time. The distance is only nine miles and of course this one boat makes a considerable number of trips per day in the ordinary course. However, it was found at the peak of the tourist travel last year that there were quite serious delays in handling the automobile traffic, so commencing this year both boats will be in service during the tourist rush. As I say, we are fitting up the older boat so that it will have conveniences for handling automobiles equal to those on the new boat.

Mr. WALSH: No doubt the minister is just as familiar as I am with the terms under which Prince Edward Island entered confederation. The word "efficient" was used in the contract under which they came into confederation, and they were also guaranteed continuous communication with the Intercolonial railway and the railway system of the dominion. It appears to me that during the greater part of the year there is no efficient service provided, and there certainly is not the continuous communication that was promised. I feel that we in this parliament are obligated by the contract entered into between the fathers of confederation and those representing the island. It may be that the service given to-day compares favourably with what was promised in 1873; but we have gone ahead considerably, and I do not think the connections between the island and the mainland are of that degree of efficiency and provide that continuity of communication which was contemplated when Prince Edward Island entered confederation.

I understand that in certain seasons, if you leave Montreal on the train that leaves around the noon hour, you are likely to have a wait of twenty hours at Sackville before you can make ferry connections to the island. That information was given to me by a gentleman who should know the conditions existing. He lives on the island and is actively associated with the board of trade in Charlottetown. He did not intend that this information should have any political significance. I do not want to discuss this item at any length, but I do want to lay this suggestion before the minister. I have not had as much time as I should like to have had to digest the information. It came in the mail only the day before yesterday, but it looks as though a serious effort should be made to live up to our contract to provide ways and means of making the means of communication to and from the island more readily available.

The population of the island is shrinking, and I sometimes wonder if this is not due to our neglect of the opportunities to be found there. It is only an island, but it is one of the provinces of this dominion. I do not like to make comparisons between provinces because I remember what a certain author said about comparisons, but I do feel that the people of Prince Edward Island have put up with conditions that the people of other provinces would not put up with. It may be that they feel they have had to do this because their population is shrinking and they have not the voice in the affairs of the dominion that other provinces have. I know, if the hon. members from the island were present, they would associate themselves with me when I make the suggestion that we should do something. It would not cost a great deal of money to provide better travel facilities between the island and the mainland.

In the railway committee I suggested that the railway connections should be speeded up in order to assist tourist traffic and industry in general. The island has no great number of industries, but it is a rich farming country. I believe its farming population could be increased if conditions were more favourable. I also believe we could stop the shrinkage in the population and perhaps bring about an increase. I do not criticize the department or the minister; I am simply doing my duty to the island that was the cradle of confederation. I think we owe this to the island from the historic and economic point of view. I agree that the ferry service from the cape to the island could be quite good if the railway company would do its share and cooperate a little more in connecting with the ferries. But that is only in the summer months. For eight months in the year travel is made difficult through lack of proper facilities to get to and from the island and to make the proper connections with the railways. I leave this suggestion with the minister in the hope that it will receive the consideration it deserves. I feel sure the minister knows it deserves consideration. I do not want my remarks to be taken merely as criticisms directed at the department or the government.

Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited—Advances to Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, repayable on demand with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council upon such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine and to be applied in payment of capital expenditure in connection with vessels under the company's control during the year ending December 31, 1938, $24,000.

Mr. GREEN: Is this West Indies service operated at a profit?

Mr. HOWE: It shows quite a considerable operating profit. It pays its interest to the public and this year returned $180,000 to the government to apply on old deficits.

Mr. GREEN: What is the total indebtedness to the government?

Mr. HOWE: The total capital invested is $10,954,000.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why the decrease?

Mr. HOWE: These are capital items, and they are rather misleading in that they come out of the earnings of the steamships. No money can be appropriated for capital purposes, either by the railroad or by the steamship company, without a vote of parliament. This item represents additional capital funds that the steamship company has applied for to be used during the current year. It represents money to be spent in improving the boats.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is it intended to extend this service, that is, to add more boats and extend their activities?

Mr. HOWE: There has been a suggestion to that end. This is a profitable service at the present time, but no plans have been formulated to put on additional boats.

Mr. STEWART: I understand that this is in the nature of a loan made each year to the steamships for carrying on their business during the year. Was the full amount of the loan made last year repaid?

Mr. HOWE: This is more or less a permission to spend money for capital purposes. The steamship company have the money out of earnings; we simply appropriate it to capital as we do on the railways, and neither the railways nor the steamship company can spend their money for capital purposes without a vote of parliament. It is really a loan from the government, but they pay the money back to us, or it adds to their indebtedness to the government.

Mr. STEWART: I wanted to know to what extent similar repayments were made last year.

Mr. HOWE: They paid us $87,000 in cash last year.

Mr. STEWART: On an advance of how much?

Mr. HOWE: We appropriated $98,500, but it runs in my mind that they did not spend the full amount. This was all gone into in committee when we had the officers there.

Mr. STEWART: My recollection is that they balanced up pretty well last year.

Mr. HOWE: Yes; I think they paid us more money than we gave them.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The consolidated profit and loss account shows a loss of $481,000, and I understood the minister to say there was a profit.

Mr. HOWE: There was a balance payable to the dominion after paying interest to the public. I did not say there was a profit including interest to the government, but last year was the first year they were able to take care of all their obligations, outside interest to the government, and pay some money to the government on account of interest.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): They should make a profit on operation, including interest owing to the government. It really is a loss on account of operation.

Mr. HOWE: The interest due the government is largely interest on accumulated deficits; in other words, it is interest on money that they lost. Only a small part of it is interest on government funds that went into the purchase of the line. The line was purchased from a bond issue which was sold to the public and is still an obligation of the company, which they are taking care of; but in the earlier years considerable deficits were piled up, and the interest due the government is, in part, interest on money borrowed from the government to pay operating losses.

Transport — departmental administration, $373,124.

Mr. GREEN: The details of this item are on pages 208 and 209 of the estimates, and include $30,000 odd for miscellaneous expenses. What are covered by miscellaneous expenses?

Mr. HOWE: The miscellaneous item is to provide for any special investigations or examinations that may be required in connection with matters administered by the department, also legal expenses and expenses of arbitration proceedings and for the advice and assistance of experts, damages, and for general expenses not otherwise provided for. We have in this department the administration of steamships, and occasionally special investigations are required or unexpected legal expenses incurred, for which payment must be made. This general item covers these expenses. Included in this vote is $10,000 to be paid to the Canadian National Railways for expert services in connection with the reorganization of the filing systems of the department. We had three filing systems to consolidate. All were different systems, and some were very old, so we brought in experts from the Canadian National Railways who are revising the entire system.

Mr. GREEN: Since the minister took over the department, has any investigation been made into the advisability of removing Ripple rock in Seymour narrows between Vancouver island and the mainland of British Columbia? For many years there has been an agitation to have the top of that rock cut down because it is quite a menace to navigation, but so far the work has not been done.

Mr. HOWE: Our officers have investigated the situation, and as far back as eight or nine years ago a recommendation was made to the Public Works department that they put it on their list of projects. Nothing has been done about it recently.

Mr. GREEN: Would it not be possible to have it done this year? What cost is involved?

Mr. HOWE: Around half a million dollars, I believe. I cannot say whether anything will be done this year or not.

Item agreed to.

Canals service—Canals—Operation and maintenance, $2,177,450.

Mr. STEWART: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. HOWE: The increase is due in part to the restoration of the salary deduction, $32,708.39; statutory increases, $15,125; staff increases, one stenographer at $1,380, two bridge men at $755.75 each, one bridge man of $604.60; total staff increases, $3,496.10. Then there are certain contracts and agreements entered into for the improvement of roads, usually in cooperation with the towns. There is an item of $25,255 for roads on canal properties. There is a decrease of staff amounting to $6,048, and a decrease due to the payment of the minimum salary, where those at the maximum salary are being replaced, of $6,205; decrease in amount required for temporary assistance, $9,212; decrease in materials and supplies, $19,499; sundry decreases amounting to $943; making total decreases of $41,900, and a net increase of $34,675.

Mr. STIRLING: The principal item is the Welland canal and the Sault Ste. Marie canal?

Mr. HOWE: The St. Lawrence canal is also quite expensive. Then there are the Cornwall, Soulanges and Lachine canals; St. Peter's canal in Nova Scotia, the Welland and Trent canals in Ontario. The expense is less on the smaller canals.

Mr. STIRLING: There is also the Rideau.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Is there any revenue from the canals?

Mr. HOWE: There is a revenue of one million dollars odd from the Welland canal from the sale of water rights and the lease of certain canal property. That is the main item of revenue. There are no tolls.

Mr. McNEVIN: Do I understand that the dredging operations at Bobcaygeon are to be continued this summer?

Mr. HOWE: That is to be continued this summer.

Mr. STEWART: There is some revenue from the Rideau canal, is there not, some tolls or fees?

Mr. HOWE: There is the water power on the Rideau and also on the Trent. There are no tolls.

Mr. STEWART: No lockage charges?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Item agreed to.

Canals—Improvements, $347,200.

Mr. STEWART: I notice that recently some additional power development was contemplated at Kingston Mills or near there. Could the minister give any information in connection with that?

Mr. HOWE: A small individual lease had fallen into disuse, and it was leased to the Gananoque Light and Power company.

Mr. STEWART: What was the extent of water power under the old lease which has fallen into disuse?

Mr. HOWE: Thirty-five horse power.

Mr. STEWART: Only thirty-five horse power?

Mr. HOWE: A very small lease.

Mr. STEWART: Is that all the additional power that has been turned over to this company?

Mr. HOWE: No. The new lease provided for about two hundred horse power, and it was made possible by turning in an old contract where the water was not used very efficiently; we were able to develop about two hundred horse power, which we sold to the Gananoque company.

Mr. STEWART: Have any additional works been undertaken by the department in order to provide this increased water power?

Mr. HOWE: No. The development is to be entirely by the company. We simply sold the water rights.

Mr. STEWART: What is the nature of the work that the company is doing? They are constructing a power house, I know.

Mr. HOWE: They are building a new dam and power house; that is incorporating the power house in the new dam.

Mr. STEWART: And where is the new dam to be constructed?

Mr. HOWE: About two hundred feet below the government spillway at Upper Brewers' Mills.

Mr. STEWART: Is there a development of power at that site?

Mr. HOWE: The old development was at Brewers' Mills, I understand.

Mr. STEWART: The thirty-five horse power?

Mr. HOWE: The thirty-five horse power. They are going below that to put in a dam which will develop two hundred horse power.

Mr. STEWART: At that point?

Mr. HOWE: Just below the old location.

Mr. STEWART: Substantially the same point. What is the rental of that power?

Mr. HOWE: It is in the vicinity of $500 per annum. It is about $2.50 per horse power for the water rights.

Mr. STEWART: And what is the length of the lease?

Mr. HOWE: Approximately twenty-one years. It parallels another lease that the Gananoque Power Company have.

Mr. STEWART: I do not want to seem to be asking too many questions; perhaps the reason I am asking so many is that I did not make a complete statement and ask the minister these things all at once. How does that rate compare per horse power with the average rate on the same canal?

Mr. HOWE: This is the standard rate for all new water powers on the canal. There are some very old leases with lower rates, but this is exactly the standard rate which has been charged for water powers since the canal water rates were put on a uniform basis.

Mr. STEWART: I think a survey by the department and a revision of the rates took place some years ago.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: About when were the survey and the revision of rates made?

Mr. HOWE: Approximately fifteen years ago.

Mr. STIRLING: Why is item No. 399 kept separate from item No. 398? Is this capital expenditure?

Mr. HOWE: Canal improvements; that is capital. It is not treated as capital, of course, in the government books, but it means that it is spent in improving the canal system. Of course the government books treat as capital only capital which has a direct return to the government, interest bearing capital. But this is a capital vote.

Mr. CLARK (York-Sunbury): What is the meaning of the item "contributions"?

Mr. HOWE: We have a considerable number of highways on canal property, and these highways are often used by municipalities in which the property lies. For a number of years the department has followed the policy of making arrangements with the towns, usually along the line of putting the highway in fair shape and then turning all its obligation over to the town. Similarly, with regard to bridges on public highways, we contribute in the case of a new bridge the cost of the draw span, that is the cost of the work incidental to the canal, and usually the province or possibly the town builds the abutment of the bridge with the help of the contribution we make on account of the movable span.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What would the deficit be on the canals of Canada in a year?

Mr. HOWE: I think our upkeep cost is about $1,000,000 a year. The cost of operating and extras runs to about $2,500,000 a year. Our revenues are about $1,000,000 a year.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Has the minister any idea upon which canals the deficits occur? How much, for instance, would the deficit be in the case of the Welland or the Sault canal?

Mr. HOWE: Of course the hon. member can get the figures quite easily from the report of the department. We show separately the cost of operating each canal and the revenue from each canal. I shall be glad to give the hon. member the figures, though it may take a little time. They are in the report of the Department of Transport.

Mr. GREEN: How is that particular vote to be apportioned between the different canals?

Mr. HOWE: Ontario, St. Lawrence canals: For the Cornwall canal, $7,000. Quebec canals: For the Carillon and Grenville canals, $4,800, plus $3,000; for the Chambly canal, $4,500 and $2,300 and $3,100; for the Soulanges canal, $12,000. For the Rideau canal the amount is $16,000. For the Trent canal the amount is $46,000, and for the Welland canal, $248,500.

Mr. STEWART: I was made aware, in years gone by, of some grievances in connection with the Rideau system owing to the operation of the power plant at Kingston Mills. The contention was made that the operation of this plant had the effect of lowering the level in some of the other reaches to the detriment of navigation and of cottage and other owners along the Rideau system. I assume that attention has been paid to these complaints, because the department must have been made aware of them, and I should like to know what action has been taken, if any, to remedy these real or alleged grievances. Are any complaints of that kind coming in under existing conditions? The idea was that the party having the lease of the power development at Kingston Mills, which of course is fed from the higher reaches, was really getting more water than he was entitled to under his lease, with the effect that I have suggested. Of course, the right of navigation is superior; it is the first right, and the department has, I assume, to maintain a level sufficient for navigation. But will these grievances remain?

Mr. HOWE: I am told that in the low water season the power company can obtain practically no water at all. We do our best to maintain navigation levels, but the shortage is due to evaporation. The power company are now building two storage dams off our property altogether in branch streams, and it is expected that when they are finished they will be able to regulate the levels there so that there will always be water available for power purposes.

Mr. STEWART: Another matter I wish to bring up in connection with the Rideau canal system is the condition of a bridge over the canal at Newboro. I corresponded with the minister about the matter. The difficulty arises in this way. There is a provincial highway leading from Westport to Newboro and on to Brockville, and during the winter there was the usual demand that the highway be kept clear of snow and ploughed. The provincial department does that work, but this bridge was not of sufficient capacity to permit of the passage of a snow plough over it, the result being that on the five or six mile stretch of road from the canal to Westport the road was not ploughed. There was some correspondence about the matter and letters appeared in the press. I should like to know what position the department has taken towards the improvement or the reconstruction of this bridge. Its capacity is extremely limited in any event; it is narrow. In my opinion it is inadequate for the traffic of these times on the provincial highway and it should be improved. What is the rule or regulation or policy of the department when an improvement of that sort is required on a provincial highway?

Mr. HOWE: The matter came up some three years ago, I am told, and at that time we offered to pay the cost of replacing the present bridge with a stronger structure. We consulted the Department of Justice as to what our obligations were and agreed to make a contribution in keeping with the views of that department regarding our obligations. That offer still holds.

Mr. STEWART: The effect would be that the new span would be ample for carrying all modern traffic, including the snow plough?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: And that would be paid by this government to the provincial government?

Mr. HOWE: The provincial government, of course, can build as wide a span as they like, but our contribution is limited to our obligation, which is to maintain an adequate bridge of the present width. We offered to make that contribution to the province.

Mr. STEWART: The dominion then would pay the whole cost of the span required for modern traffic?

Mr. HOWE: No. This occurs very frequently. Whenever a new bridge is built, obligations of the dominion arise, and that is the practice which was decided on years ago by the department in consultation with the Department of Justice. We have a policy in all these matters and are applying it in this instance.

Mr. STEWART: On what basis would the department determine the obligation of the dominion at this time when a new bridge is needed, the old one being entirely inadequate for modern traffic?

Mr. HOWE: We are willing to replace the present bridge with a bridge adequate for present needs. We limit the cost to the width of the present bridge, the Department of Justice having advised us that our obligation does not go beyond that.

Item agreed to.

To provide for expenses in connection with St. Lawrence ship channel surveys and investigations, $3,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: How is that survey proceeding?

Mr. HOWE: Nothing new is being done, but we are making continuous records of flow information in that section. Of coures, it is the section that would be involved in the St. Lawrence seaway if we were proceeding with that.

Mr. MacNICOL: East of Montreal?

Mr. HOWE: Upriver, between Montreal and Kingston.

Item agreed to.

To provide for the carrying out of flow measurements and other expenses connected with the department's supervision and control over the hydro-electric power development of the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited, $5,000.

Mr. HOWE: This is to cover the cost of administering the dominion government agreement with the Beauharnois Light, Heat and Power Company, Limited.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why do the Beauharnois company not pay the expense themselves? They get the water.

Mr. HOWE: It is provided for by order in council P.C. 504 of March 1, 1932. Section 21 provides:

The minister or his authorized representative shall at all times be empowered:

1. to have free access to the works of the company;

2. to control the operation of the compensating or regulating sluices wherever situated;

3. to measure the discharge of the various sluices, turbines, penstocks or other water passages forming part of the company's works;

4. to control the opening and closing of gates in the control dams, and;

5. to adjust the flow of water in the interests of navigation.

Mr. STIRLING: The canal remains entirely a private work; the dominion government has no say about it?

Mr. HOWE: The ownership of the canal is vested in the dominion government. It was built privately, but under an agreement which provided that the ownership should pass to the dominion government when it was constructed.

Mr. STIRLING: Then the government is responsible for the maintenance?

Mr. HOWE: No; the power company is under obligation to maintain it, but the canal property is vested in the crown. The operation is by the Beauharnois company, except that we keep a man there to supervise the operation in the interests of navigation.

Mr. MacNICOL: What salary is paid that man? In the list of expenses, page 218 of the estimates, I note: Temporary assistance, $1,000; travelling expenses, $2,300; materials and supplies, $700; and sundries, $1,000. Why do the Beauharnois company not pay all that?

Mr. HOWE: This man simply goes down to check the operations of the company. It is the travelling expenses of men from Ottawa who go there to see that the canal is being operated as we desire, and for various other purposes. It does not cover the actual operation of the canal in any way, but is to check the company's operations and issue instructions to make sure that the regulations of the dominion are carried out.

Mr. MacNICOL: How many times a year does he inspect?

Mr. HOWE: Every three or four weeks.

Mr. MacNICOL: The travelling expenses are pretty high, $2,300 for twelve trips a year to Beauharnois.

Item agreed to.

National harbours board — Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures during the calendar year 1938 on any or all of the following accounts:

(a) Retirement of maturing debentures—
Halifax, $1,700,000.
Saint John, $60,256.94.
Quebec, $400,000.—Total, $2,160,256.94.

(b) Reconstruction and capital expenditures (revote $36,000)—
Saint John, $130,000.
Chicoutimi, $12,000.
Quebec, $365,500.
Trois Rivières, $160,000.
Generally unforeseen, $100,000 — Total, $767,500.

Total, $2,927,756.94.

Mr. GREEN: How are the items set out in subparagraph (a), retirement of maturing debentures, handled? Is it a case of the dominion paying off private bondholders and so assuming the liability?

[Mr. Stirling.]

Mr. HOWE: Yes, this represents financing carried out some four or five years ago. As these bonds mature they are taken up by the dominion government and carried as a loan to the national harbours board by the government instead of by the public. This item includes $1,700,000 for Halifax, five year debentures series "M" and "D" for the cold storage plant bought in 1933 by the then government; for Saint John, $27,756, five and a quarter per cent debentures and $32,500 six per cent debentures issued originally by the city of Saint John. When the harbour commissioners took over the property they assumed liability for these bonds. The bonds mature this year and the indebtedness is being transferred to the crown. Also included in this item are $400,000 four per cent debentures issued by the Quebec harbour commissioners.

Mr. GREEN: Do the different bonds carry different rates of interest?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: When the government takes over the indebtedness, does it continue to charge those rates to the respective harbours, or a standard rate?

Mr. HOWE: An agreed rate of three and a half per cent is charged on all new loans to the national harbours board.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the government receive any real return in money; if so how much?

Mr. HOWE: All the national harbours except one show an operating profit. I might give a little statement of what has been accomplished in the two years.

The principle of central control of Canada's national harbours has now been in effect considerably over two years. At first the administration was under a temporary board, but since October 1, 1936, the permanent board appointed pursuant to the provisions of the National Harbours Board Act has been in charge.

Without going into details of the many steps taken by the board to improve the position of our national harbours both from the point of view of efficiency and dispatch and from the financial standpoint, I should like to draw the attention of hon. members to a few figures indicating the substantial and gratifying progress which has been made thus far.

Taking each of the harbours that have been administered under the new system throughout the past two years, and comparing the results in 1937 with the situation in 1935, the last year the harbours were under the administration of local commissions, we find as follows:

At Halifax an operating deficit of $3,915 in 1935 has been turned into an operating surplus of $152,268 in 1937. At Saint John the operating surplus in 1935 stood at $50,094. In 1937 the operating surplus had increased to $195,650, an increase of $145,556. At Chicoutimi an operating deficit of $7,073 in 1935 has been turned into an operating surplus of $7,389 in 1937. At Quebec the operating deficit in 1935 stood at $315,284. Last year the operating deficit was $124,554, an improvement of $190,730. At Three Rivers an operating surplus of $45,239 in 1935 became in 1937 an operating surplus of $154,286, being an increase of $109,047 in operating surplus. At Montreal, leaving out the Jacques Cartier bridge, the operating surplus in 1935 was $1,637,803; in 1937 it was $2,240,550, or an increase of $602,747. At Jacques Cartier bridge, Montreal, the operating surplus in 1935 was $202,259; in 1937 it was $339,235, representing an increase of $136,976 in operating surplus. At Vancouver the operating surplus in 1935 was $800,490; in 1937 it was $927,818, representing an increase of $127,328. The Second Narrows bridge, Vancouver, showed in 1935 an operating surplus of $42,085; in 1937 an operating surplus of $102,288, representing an improvement of $60,203. In each of the above cases substantial savings in operating and maintenance expenditures contributed materially to the improved showing.

Speaking generally, the result of two years' operation under the principle of national central control of national harbours may be stated thus: In 1935, the last year the harbours were under the administration of local commissions, aggregate operating revenues stood at $7,427,454.77. In 1937 the aggregate operating revenues were $8,262,221.63, an increase of $834,767, or 11 per cent. During the same period operating and maintenance expenditures were reduced from $4,975,755.52 to $4,268,675.25, a decrease of $707,080, or 14 per cent. In other words, while the business of the ports increased by 11 per cent, operating expenses were cut by 14 per cent. In 1935 the aggregate operating income of the harbours of Halifax, Saint John, Chicoutimi, Quebec, Three Rivers, Montreal and Vancouver was $2,451,699, and in 1937 it was $3,993,546, being an improvement of $1,541,847, or 63 per cent in the net position.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is in the net operating position?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, the net operating position; in other words our net improved from $2,451,699 in 1935 to $3,993,546 last year. This increase reflects only the relative operating position. Notwithstanding this improvement, when proper allowance is made for depreciation, and interest is charged on capital, there still remains a net income deficit, as shown by the accounts of the board for 1937, of five and a half million dollars. I might say that this deficit is after charging proper depreciation at the several ports and also charging the interest due the public and the government on loans from both sources.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister deserves credit for the improvement in the net operating position. It would be very fine if he could suggest to the committee some way of improving the total, real position in view of the loss resulting from depreciation and interest. Surely there must be some way to overcome that deficit of five and a half million dollars. If that could be done in some way, I should say there would be a real, marked improvement all along the line.

Mr. HOWE: Well, if my hon. friend is a constant reader of the Montreal Gazette or the Quebec Chronicle-Telegraph, he will find that steps have been taken recently to do that very thing.

Mr. MacNICOL: As a matter of fact, I have not had time to read the press at all during the last few days.

Mr. HOWE: We had a readjustment of rates this spring which, I think, will help considerably.

Mr. FINN: What is the operating cost of the centralized board at Ottawa?

Mr. HOWE: The head office expense, including engineering supervision from head office, amounted last year to $130,909.

Mr. FINN: That is the centralized cost of operation, is it?

Mr. HOWE: That is the cost of the head office; that is head office expense, including salaries, $89,060; travelling expenses, $7,010; advertising, $2,026 and office expenses, chiefly engineering, $13,891.59. Then the treasury office—that is the finance department, who handle the accounting—charged back to the harbours board $18,920.27 as their cost of accounting services to the national harbours board.

Mr. FINN: What was the operating cost of the harbour boards during the last year they operated?

Mr. HOWE: All harbour boards?

Mr. FINN: Yes.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. GREEN: This afternoon the minister dealt with operating and maintenance expenses, which I take it are expenditures made in making repairs, improvements to wharves and so on. I wonder if he could give us the picture of the administration expenses? For instance, I notice that the administration expenses for Vancouver show an increase in 1937 over 1936 when there was actually a decrease in the business done. It would appear that there has been some carelessness there or that would not be the situation.

Mr. HOWE: There is no actual increase in the total. There has been a reclassification of expenditures, and I think my hon. friend will find that certain work which was formerly charged to maintenance is now charged to operation. If he will compare the total of the three items last year, he will have an accurate comparison. The new classification which applied throughout 1938 has somewhat changed the break-down of the three items.

Mr. GREEN: On page 57 of the national harbours board report for 1936 is shown the operating expenses. Administration expenses of $106,000 odd are shown, and operation and maintenance, $612,000 odd. The same division is made on page 80 of the report for 1937. The administration expenses for that year are $119,000 odd, or an increase of about $13,000. I should like to have the administration expenses for previous years because I believe they are considerably higher under the national harbours board.

Mr. HOWE: The difference lies chiefly in the charge-back of head office expenses. In 1936 the port was operated by three civil servants and their expenses were charged direct to the department. In 1937 we got things on a permanent basis, and that portion of the head office expenses applicable to Vancouver were charged to that port. The fact that it was a transition year accounts for the increase.

Mr. GREEN: What are the administration expenses for 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1935?

Mr. HOWE: I have prepared a statement in answer to a question asked by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Finn) just as six o'clock was called, and perhaps it will answer my hon. friend's question. Before the committee rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Halifax inquired as to the comparison of present head office expenses of the national harbours board with the amounts formerly expended by the separate commissions. Prior to 1936 the salaries of the various commissions aggregated $73,000 annually. In addition, the commissioners received automobile allowance of an additional $15,000, making a total of $88,000. The comparative figure under the present board is $30,000 for salaries, a saving of $58,000. Further substantial economies are shown in entertainment expenses of commissioners and staff, which in 1935 were over $18,000, as compared with $1,500 in 1936, a saving of $16,500. Travelling expenses of the commissioners and staff, which in 1935 were $24,000, compare with $7,000 for the board and staff in 1937. In addition to this, there will be a small amount of travelling expenses for the staffs at the harbours, of which I have no record at the moment.

Other economies which might be mentioned are the entire elimination of residence telephones at public expense, which in 1935 cost $2,200; advertising and printing reduced from $52,500 in 1935 to $14,600 in 1936; charitable donations and contributions $24,000 in 1935, which have now been eliminated. These items —and they are all representative of the economies made by the board—which have now been eliminated or reduced, aggregate $185,000, made up of $88,000 for commissioners' salaries and automobile allowances, $16,500 reduction in entertainment expenses, $17,000 reduction in travelling expenses of board and staff, $2,200 saving in residence telephones, $38,000 in advertising, etc., and $24,000 for donations. As the total head office expenses in 1937 were $130,000, including central engineering and central accounting services, it will be seen that the whole expense of the board and its headquarters staff can be met out of the savings which I have enumerated above, and leave a substantial margin of $50,000.

Mr. GREEN: Could the minister not give us the administration expenses of the port of Vancouver during those years?

Mr. HOWE: In 1934 the total current expenses were $703,137; in 1935, $736,554; in 1936, $718,997; and in 1937, $708,830.

Mr. GREEN: That must be the operating expense.

Mr. HOWE: That is the total operating expense. It is difficult to give the administration expense. As I say, there is a different classification. There was no break-down at that time comparable with the present breakdown, and I do not know how we can break down the figures to give my hon. friend the information he desires. I am giving him the total operating expenses, which would be comparable.

Mr. GREEN: They are really not comparable. It may merely mean that there is less work being done about the harbour.

Mr. HOWE: I can give the revenues of the harbour which would be an indication of the work done.

Mr. GREEN: Not necessarily.

Mr. HOWE: I think so.

Mr. GREEN: How is the headquarters expense in Ottawa apportioned among the harbours? How much is charged to each harbour?

Mr. HOWE: The division is made according to the revenue and expenditure.

Mr. GREEN: What was apportioned last year to Vancouver?

Mr. HOWE: We budgeted last year for $28,000, but the actual amount was somewhat less. We budgeted for 20 per cent of the gross.

Mr. GREEN: That was charged to Vancouver?

Mr. HOWE: Charged to Vancouver.

Mr. GREEN: How is this net income deficit of $5,000,000 odd charged to the different harbours?

Mr. HOWE: There is a separate accounting for each harbour. The figure the hon. member has is the total for all harbours.

Mr. GREEN: What was the deficit for each harbour?

Mr. HOWE: The net income deficit for Halifax was $603,837; Saint John, $849,132; Chicoutimi, $208,416; Quebec, $1,485,361; Three Rivers, $92,008; Montreal, $1,066,514; Vancouver, $471,289.

Mr. GREEN: Vancouver is paying its way far better than any of the others.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It always did.

Mr. HOWE: Its figures in red are smaller anyway.

Mr. WALSH: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to the committee, and especially to the minister, about the port of Montreal? As we all know, the port of Montreal is of vital interest to the whole Dominion of Canada. It reflects the trade of our country to a marked degree, and anything that is done by the Department of Transport or the new harbours board affecting the port of Montreal affects naturally the whole dominion.

There have been certain changes made in the port of Montreal in regard to rates and fees, and I want to refer particularly to the changes recently made in connection with grain shipments through the port of Montreal. As the minister is aware, for over fifty years it has been the custom at the port of Montreal, and I assume also at the port of Quebec, although as to the latter port I am saying only what I believe to be the case, to levy certain charges for lifting the grain from the canal boats into the elevator and certain charges for delivering the grain out of the elevator into the ocean boats, the charges being split between the two boats concerned. In the early history of these ports, particularly the port of Montreal, this charge was half a cent a bushel, and at that time it was equally divided between the lake boats and the ocean boats. To-day, of course, on account of the increased costs, the charge per bushel has also increased, so that we have a total charge of $10.25 per 1,000 bushels. This $10.25 is apportioned between the lake boat and the ocean boat as follows: $6.25 per 1,000 bushels is payable by the lake boat when the grain is unloaded, and $4 per 1,000 bushels is payable by the ocean boat when the grain is delivered to it.

In addition to the service which the elevator performs of unloading the grain from the lake boat and delivering it to the ocean boat, it stores the grain free of charge for a period of ten days. After that, there is a charge of so much per bushel according to a rate schedule in operation at the present time. The service of loading and unloading has apparently worked very satisfactorily in the ports of Montreal and Quebec over a period of fifty years. The method of apportioning the charge for this service and the method of collecting it have been very satisfactory. As far as I understand the situation, there have been no complaints from the grain trade, no complaints from the owners or operators of the lake boats, and no complaints from the ocean boats, most of which are in the category of tramps.

But there has been a change made quite recently, and the change amounts to this: As far as the lake boats are concerned they proceed in the usual way and pay their $6.25 per 1,000 bushels. But so far as the ocean boats are concerned the method of collection has been changed. The collection is now made a charge on the owner of the grain, a charge of $4 per 1,000 bushels. Previously this charge had been levied against the ocean boat taking possession of the grain, and was collected from that source. I want to emphasize again that apparently there had been no complaints, and no reason was advanced for making this change from a practice which had been in operation for over fifty years and had proved satisfactory to all parties concerned.

I mentioned that this change was made rather suddenly. I understand that an order in council, P.C. 721, was passed on April 5, 1938, and published in the Canada Gazette of April 9, 1938, cancelling the previous order in council, P.C. 2162, dated August 27, 1936. The main effect of that cancellation was to make that charge of $4 per 1,000 bushels collectable against the owner of the grain rather than against the boat which was receiving the grain. The method of collecting does not matter very much, so far as the port of Montreal is concerned, as long as the charge or fee is collected; at least I would assume that would be satisfactory to all parties concerned.

But the main effect, so far as the grain brokers are concerned, is this, that the $4 is now charged against the grain. There has been no corresponding reduction in the freight rates of the ocean vessels taking possession of this grain. As most hon. members realize, a grain broker in selling grain operates on a very small margin, and this charge of $4 per 1,000 bushels, which the broker himself now has to pay and charge against the grain, means the complete wiping out of his prospective profit, and means in some instances an actual deficit so far as his transaction is concerned.

We are all aware of the fact that the grain exporter does not sell wheat or corn, or whatever other grain it might be, overnight. He is busily concerned during the winter months and during the early spring months in getting the grain, in securing orders for grain, in making his arrangements with the lake boats to carry his grain from the lake ports to the port of Montreal, and in arranging with ocean-going boats, principally tramps, for the carrying of the grain from Montreal to its destination. He makes his commitments well in advance, and most grain brokers have made their commitments up to the end of the season of navigation in the port of Montreal. This charge is sprung upon them, and in making it the harbours board have worked an injustice not only on the grain brokers who are concerned with this trade, but on the port of Montreal itself, as I shall point out a little later. They have also worked a hardship on the people in western Canada who produce this grain. A levy of $4 per 1,000 bushels amounts to a considerable sum, and is quite an appreciable amount as far as the western farmer, the grain broker, or anyone else connected with the production or shipment of grain, is concerned.

Mr. LEADER: Does the hon. gentleman not think that the extra charge of $4 per 1,000 bushels would be placed on the grain grower and not the broker? Will not the grain grower ultimately pay the charge?

Mr. WALSH: That is what he will do. That is the point of my criticism, and I am glad that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie has helped me to emphasize it. This year it will be borne by the grain broker; next year and each following year it will be borne by the western farmer. It is natural to expect that. The result will be $4 per 1,000 bushels less for the western farmer. One might not object so strenuously to that, because we hope and expect that there will be an increase in the production of grain this year and that the price will be a reasonable one, were someone in Canada getting the benefit of that $4, but who gets it? Not Canadian steamships. Tramps and tramp owners, ships belonging for the most part to foreign firms, are getting the benefit. The presumption, of course, was that this sum would be handed back by the owners of the tramp steamers in the form of lessened freight rates, but do you find owners of tramp steamers which come into the port of Montreal offering to give a rebate or to reduce the rates they think they can get for carrying grain from Montreal to a foreign port? They are not built that way. Anyone who has had experience in dealing with owners of tramp vessels, particularly ocean-going tramps, knows they are a very difficult body to do business with. It is impossible to collect back from them in the way of reduced freight rates this $4 per 1,000 bushels, which this year must be borne by the grain trade but next year will be borne by the farmers of western Canada. I emphasize this particular condition so that those who represent western constituencies will realize the importance of the grain trade to the port of Montreal and what a tremendous difference will result from any shifting of the burden of taxation in this way; for, after all, the $4 per 1,000 bushels will be in the nature of an additional tax on grain produced in western Canada.

As regards the port of Montreal, all who have had anything to do with the shipping of grain understand that the export of grain is a business which is highly sensitive. It requires very little change in rates to take away from one port the volume which is passing through that port and transfer it to another. I can see this taking place. The grain, instead of being directed through the port of Montreal, will be forwarded through a United States port where there will be a difference sufficient to give the grain broker a better break as far as price is concerned. That is what we in Montreal are nervous about. Naturally we are jealous of our port. It is not a natural harbour; it is a harbour which has been built up at tremendous expense to this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. WALSH: It is a harbour which has to be maintained at tremendous expense to this country.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear!

Mr. WALSH: It represents a huge investment so far as the Dominion of Canada is concerned, and no one appreciates that fact more than do the members for the Montreal district. We realize the amount of money which has been sunk into the St. Lawrence channel to make the port of Montreal possible. At one time it was a natural port; but as vessels increased in size it became necessary, in order to keep Montreal on the map, to increase the depth of the channel so as to bring these larger vessels up to the port of Montreal. That reacts, of course, to the advantage of Canada. We have one of the largest seaports in the world. At one time it ranked either fourth or fifth among the world's ports. We want to maintain our prestige in this respect. But if the Department of Transport are going to interfere constantly with the course of business through that harbour, they will gradually create a condition under which tramps and other steamers will not make that a port of call; for no longer will it be profitable for them to come to Montreal with cargoes in order to take up other cargoes. I emphasize that point because I feel that the action taken by the national harbours board was quite unjustifiable; it has provoked a condition which is wholly unnecessary. It is difficult enough to obtain business under any circumstances, and it should be the duty of the board to facilitate business and not to place any impediment in the way of developing it.

I mentioned that the grain trade in particular is a highly sensitive business. It reacts very quickly to changes in conditions. I intend to point that out later to the Minister of Transport, under another item, but I draw attention to it at this time in order to lead up to another point. We do not want to lose any trade from the port of Montreal, even to any other Canadian port.

An hon. MEMBER: A little selfish!

Mr. WALSH: A little selfish, but we have such a tremendous investment there that we cannot afford to jeopardize the port.

Mr. POTTIER: Who is "we"?

Mr. WALSH: But I am afraid, in fact I am led to believe that there will be less trade going through the port of Montreal this year as a result of the action, which is both unnecessary and unjustifiable, of the national harbours board. United States ports are going to get the benefit of what Montreal will lose. That is a consequence we should do our best to avoid. I do not suppose the Minister of Transport had any idea of diverting trade from the port of Montreal to any of its United States competitors; but as surely as he allows the board to do what they have done, he is in accord with their apparent policy, through enforcing this new regulation, of allowing trade to be diverted.

In order to show that there has been a realization of what might happen, the order in council which was put through and which it was assumed, would be made operative at once, will not be made effective until November 13. As a result of negotiation; as a result of placing the parties concerned in that predicament, the conditions that prevailed last year will continue more or less until November 13 of this year. After November 13 the conditions I have outlined will become effective. The effect will be that a custom known to those who use the port of Montreal as one which has been established for over fifty years will be broken. I grant you it is not a matter of law; but any custom which has been established for a period of fifty years has the force of law behind it, and I say that this particular custom of the port of Montreal, in existence for all that time, will be broken. After November 13, for about two weeks in this season, the change in levying the charge on ocean-going vessels in connection with wheat is going to go into effect. This change will then be known as the custom of the port of Montreal. That is where the danger lies—the effect on the port of Montreal towards the close of this season and during the next season and every season to come.

In conclusion, I would ask the minister why this change was made and who asked for it. Was the grain trade consulted by the national harbours board when the change was made?

Am I to assume that the change was made under pressure from the ocean boats in their complaint against the increase in port dues? I would point out in passing that the national harbours board increased the charge in the different harbours under their jurisdiction by increasing wharfage dues, port dues and harbour dues. In some instances tramps loading grain will be assessed from $250 to $300 more than was paid during the previous season. If they are relieved of the necessity of paying $4 per 1,000 bushels, it means a saving to them of something in the neighbourhood of $1,000 per season per trip. In other words, the harbour dues were increased, and then I assume there was a vigorous protest and the suggestion that they would cease to use the harbour of Montreal, with the result that this other change was made, which will not only relieve the tramp of these extra dues, as far as the harbour is concerned, dues which would have amounted to between $250 and $300, but will give him an additional amount in the neighbourhood of $1,000 per season per trip.

It occurred to me to ask the minister whether that increase in wharfage dues at the port of Montreal had anything to do with the change in the assessment against the loading of ocean vessels leaving the port of Montreal, which used to be assessed at $4 per 1,000 bushels against ocean vessels and paid by them, and which is now to be assessed against the grain itself.

I leave these questions with the minister with the request that he make some reply in order that I may have an understanding of exactly what actuated this sudden change, which will react disastrously upon the port of Montreal and upon the shippers of grain from that port.

Mr. HOWE: I have listened to a most extraordinary speech. Not one single fact stated is true, unfortunately. My hon. friend has taken—

Mr. WALSH: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I do not like to do so, but I did not expect any member of the house to suggest that I was trying to mislead the committee or even one member of the committee by any misstatement of facts or any misplaced figures.

Mr. HOWE: I withdraw the statement; I did not intend to say it in that way. I intended to say that not one statement which my hon. friend made was in accordance with the facts, and I shall now proceed to give him the facts. As a matter of fact, certain changes were made in the tariffs of Montreal and all the other eastern ports. All the port charges in eastern Canada are now on a parity, with one slight exception. The change was made after months of consultation with every interest affected. The best rate-making ability we could find was brought to bear upon the problem, and now that the new charges are in operation every user of the port will say that we have a far more satisfactory system than previously. The order in council to which my hon. friend referred was carried out to the full, and not the slightest change has been made in it.

Let us refer to the situation which, he declares, has caused the brokers tremendous losses and will cost the farmers of western Canada untold millions. We hear from some people, when it suits their purpose, that the charge is assessed against the western farmers when it is taken off the boats; or, when it suits their purpose to put it the other way, if it is not taken off the boats it is still charged against the western farmers. It works both ways.

Mr. PERLEY: The farmer always pays.

Mr. HOWE: Yes; but he pays double according to who says it. The reason for the change is this. The National Harbours Board Act contains the following provision in section 15:

> 15. (1) The board may levy such rates and tolls as are fixed by by-law and may, with the approval of the minister, commute any rates or tolls so fixed on such terms and conditions and for such sums of money as the board deems expedient.

The next subsection is the pertinent one:

> (2) The rates and tolls on goods landed or transhipped in or shipped from any harbour under the jurisdiction of the board shall be paid by the consignee, shipper, owner or agent of such goods, and goods shall not be removed from the harbour until such rates or tolls are fully paid or security for payment accepted by the board.

That subsection represents the only basis on which tolls can be collected. From whom can they be collected? They can be collected from the consignee, the shipper, the owner or the agent; that is all. The act does not say anything about being able to collect from the vessel.

Mr. WALSH: That is the change which went into effect this year?

Mr. HOWE: No; it is not a change that went into effect this year. This is the National Harbours Board Act, assented to on June 23, 1936. What happened? The board has no legal right to assess charges other than as provided in the act. The old tariff in Montreal provided for payment of an elevation charge of $6.25 per 1,000 bushels by the vessel unloaded. It also provided for a loading charge on export grain payable by the vessel loaded; on domestic grain payable by the shipper. The board had no right under its act to assess the charges against a vessel. Therefore, liability for the charges was changed to accord with the act. The charge of $6.25 per 1,000 bushels for unloading, elevating and weighing grain from vessels is now payable on unloading. The charge for delivering grain to vessels, $4 per 1,000 bushels, is now payable on shipment. That is the change my hon. friend has been speaking about so eloquently. It was carefully explained to the grain trade, months in advance, that it was necessary to make the change in order to avoid using a tariff which we could not legally enforce under the National Harbours Board Act.

What about all these losses? There has been no change whatever in the practice. The act does not require a change in the practice. The lake boat that brings the grain down is still paying $6.25 per 1,000 bushels when it reaches Montreal. The tramp steamer or passenger liner or whatever boat takes the grain out is still paying $4 per 1,000 bushels when it takes that grain aboard. So all this injury to the brokers of which we have been told just did not happen. It is recognized by all that considerable notice must be given before a change of that kind can be put into effect. Naturally, when next season's rates come out, the $4 per 1,000 bushels charge which is now added to the ocean freight rate will be deducted from that rate, and the new tramp rates published next year will be ex loading charges, just as today they are marked "plus four-tenths of a cent per bushel."

I have heard my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) argue that all the charges go back to the farmer. One is asked to believe that savings never go back to the farmer. That is about as ridiculous a statement as one can imagine. What is the change? There is no change, and there will be no change except this, that in future Montreal will be just as other ports in every part of the world except the St. Lawrence river have always been. They have always charged the elevation charges against the grain. Where is the elevation charged in Winnipeg; where is it charged in Fort William, Halifax, Saint John, Vancouver? Always against the grain. In Montreal there was a situation that everyone has objected to ever since I heard of the port of Montreal. Compare the ocean rate to Montreal with the rate to New York. Why was the rate to Montreal higher than to New York? We have heard various explanations, but the truth is it was because there was a charge of $4 per 1,000 bushels in that rate which represented a payment to the elevator by the boat for the elevation of the grain. There was a differential between the rates to Saint John and Halifax and the rate to Montreal for the same reason, that in the old days the boat rate to Montreal included an amount of $4 per 1,000 bushels for elevation of grain. Next year we shall have a rate structure which places Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers and Sorel on a parity with the rest of the world as far as ocean rates are concerned, and then we shall see whether the port of Montreal has been discriminated against as compared with other ports. If the grain is shipped out of New York, who pays for the elevation? The owner of the grain. If it is shipped out of Baltimore, who pays it? If it is shipped out of any other port in the whole, wide world, who pays it? The owner of the grain.

We are told that this has caused a great diversion of grain through United States ports. What are the facts? The bookings on the St. Lawrence river to date of American corn from Chicago amount to about 80,000,000 bushels, a movement we have not seen in this country since 1928. How much of that is being diverted to New York?

Mr. WALSH: Later I am going to ask the minister why there was such a huge shipment of grain, corn in particular, through the port of Quebec during this last season.

Mr. HOWE: I shall tell the hon. member that too. He made his speech; now suppose he lets me make mine.

What about package freight? True, we have raised the rates on some classes of package freight, and lowered them on others. For instance, the wharfage charge on an automobile in Montreal was $5.50. In Saint John the wharfage charge on the same automobile was $2.75, and in Halifax, thirty cents. Surely one was too high or the other too low. It was the same automobile loaded into the same boat. In that case we worked out the rate at $3 per automobile for all the ports. I could give other examples. I could tell of rates which were considerably higher in Halifax than in Montreal, for no reason that we could discover. Those rates were examined, the background looked into, and they were adjusted. There were extraordinary differences between different ports on the river St. Lawrence, differences of 100 or 150 per cent in wharfage charges on the same commodity.

To-day a shipper can deal with any of our Atlantic or St. Lawrence ports on an equal basis.

A rate structure is a very difficult thing to alter. We have been working on this problem since this national harbours board was formed. Last February we sent out proposed tariffs to the trade and invited comment. Meetings were held, two I think in each port; every interest affected met together with the board and their views were examined, written briefs were invited, and in the latter part of March we brought down our final tariff. As a result of the hearings and discussions the tariffs were revised. We based our tariffs on the best information available and then submitted them to the port users and invited their representations. In many instances, as a result of representations, the rate was adjusted. To-day in the ports of eastern Canada we have a sound tariff, which will stand analysis.

As for loss of business, the St. Lawrence ports have now been open for business about a month. I have yet to learn of one pound of freight that has been diverted from any of those ports as a result of the new tariffs. I do not know of a single ship that has been diverted from the St. Lawrence ports. I have before me the figures to the end of April; that is, for the first two weeks of the season. In that time cargo tonnage at Montreal increased 126,757 tons or about 25 per cent over a similar period last year, which was a very good year.

I was asked why the harbour of Quebec is handling United States grain, and I shall tell my hon. friend. Naturally, when it became apparent that there was going to be a European demand for American corn at the opening of navigation, exporters began to worry about congestion on the St. Lawrence. As they came to us we took up actively with them the use of the port of Quebec, which for a number of years had not been used as it should have been. We asked them to give us the reasons why Quebec should not be used to the extent the other ports were used, and they pointed out to us the difficulty of using a port where grain is shipped by tramps only as against a port handling both liners and tramps. The disability resolved itself into this, that in assembling grain to fill a tramp cargo storage rates accumulate which never could accumulate in a liner and tramp port. Of course it is understood that the ten days of free storage is availed of, so that as grain is shipped out it is applied on the older billings, and that in a port such as Montreal practically no storage is collected during the operating season. The turn-over is rapid, and it is owing to some lack of vigilance on the part of the handler of the grain, as a rule, if any of his grain becomes liable for storage charges.

We recognized this disability at Quebec and took up the matter with the board of grain commissioners, requesting permission to publish a tariff for Quebec which would abolish the storage charge on full cargoes of export grain moving from that port until August 31 of this year. We first inquired as to the practice of other elevators handling tramp cargoes exclusively, and found that they had been forced to adopt the same practice; that is, not to accumulate storage against grain moving in that way in the active season. Of course this has nothing to do with winter storage. The result is that we have one or perhaps two customers using the port of Quebec. They feel that by so doing they will avoid the congestion which they expect along the river. We are glad to have the business distributed in this way for the same reason, since congestion has rather far-reaching results. We believe we have a much improved situation on the river this year over any that has obtained for two or three decades.

I do not know that I have covered all the points raised by my hon. friend. If I have not, I hope he will repeat his question.

Mr. WALSH: After listening to the minister and very carefully analyzing what he has said, I do not think there is anything whatever in his remarks to bear out what he said at the very beginning of his speech.

Mr. HOWE: Just to correct that statement, let me run over the points my hon. friend raised. In the first place he said that a rate of $4 per 1,000 bushels was assessed against the broker, against the grain. That is not true; it is not a fact, as I have pointed out. The boats are still paying that charge. My hon. friend then said this meant that grain was being diverted through the United States. As a matter of fact, exactly the opposite is happening; as far as I can find out all the United States grain moving at this time is going through Canadian ports, and I think that situation will largely obtain until this movement is over. Further, my hon. friend said we had published an order in council and then had not put it into effect. The order in council went into effect the day it was published; it is still in effect. The shipping companies have agreed that the tariff would not come into operation this year, so there would be no embarrassment in connection with existing contracts, and that when the new rates are published by the Tramp Shipping Federation, as they are once a year, this rate will be published ex elevation at St. Lawrence river ports. I think those were the only statements my hon. friend made, and I think they are all wrong.

Mr. WALSH: The minister has suggested only two points, and one is in connection with this $4 rate that, for a period of over fifty years, was charged against and paid by the ocean carrier. Under this new regulation, the order in council amending by-law No. 85, dated April 5, 1938, and put into the hands of the grain trade in Montreal on April 12, that charge is levied no longer against the boat but against the owner of the grain. It was only after a considerable amount of negotiation that they got the owners of the boats, and in particular the tramps, to defer the action they proposed to take. In other words, they proposed, when this order in council was put into effect, to take full advantage of it and allow the grain owner to pay the $4 per 1,000 bushels.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend makes a dogmatic statement, that the tramps and liners proposed to do something. How does he know they proposed to do it?

Mr. WALSH: No; after negotiation they did not. I have the details here.

Mr. HOWE: The details the hon. member got were from the editorial column of the Montreal Gazette, and they are not correct.

Mr. WALSH: I have not even seen an editorial in the Gazette bearing on this matter; I want the minister to accept that statement as the truth and the whole truth. I have not obtained my information from that source, though I can say this—

Mr. HOWE: I accept the hon. member's apology.

Mr. WALSH: I can say this, that I would far rather accept detailed statements found in the editorial columns of the Gazette than statements coming from very many sources quoted from time to time in this house. I want to emphasize this point again: It would have been discrimination against the port of Montreal and eventually discrimination against the grain growers of western Canada if this rate had been put into effect. Action was deferred until a certain date. Then, after further protests, it was further deferred until November 13 of this year. The season does not close until December 1. The minister made the statement that this rate of $4 per 1,000 bushels would not be collected from the grain during this season; yet the agreement with the grain brokers and shipowners of Montreal expires November 13, and the rate goes into effect after that date. I think the minister will agree that my information is correct in this instance.

Mr. HOWE: It was determined that there was absolutely no contract outstanding beyond November 13. If any shipper wishes to have the steamer pay his elevation after November 13, all he has to do is write it into the charter.

Mr. WALSH: I know the grain brokers of Montreal will be happy to have the intimation from the minister that there will be no change in the assessment of that $4 per 1,000 bushels during the course of the current shipping season.

Mr. HOWE: I would not bother to convey that information because I do not think they would value my hon. friend's information on that point. I never saw a man with less background for work of this kind.

Mr. STEWART: Well, now—

Mr. WALSH: They have a high regard for the Minister of Transport. If the Minister of Transport considers that I have no background for a discussion of this kind, I am sorry he has formed such an opinion. On many occasions I could have made the same suggestion, but I would not do it. I have a high regard for the Minister of Transport and I hope he has the same for me. If his attitude is the condition which must prevail in this committee; if we must carry on debates in that frame of mind, I am not unwilling to carry on in that way. I am willing to take my share of abuse along with any other member of this house.

Mr. ANDERSON: There is no necessity for abuse.

Mr. WALSH: The minister has suggested that no grain was diverted. I grant that there has been none diverted yet because of the arrangements that have been made, but there will be if something is not done to adjust them. I still want to emphasize this fact: Why was it necessary to make this change in a custom that had prevailed for fifty years? This had worked satisfactorily, but suddenly there is a diversion of this $4 charge from the ship to the grain owner. Why not leave things in status quo when they have been working so satisfactorily? The minister suggests that next year the rates on tramp steamers carrying grain will be lowered to cover this charge of $4 per 1,000 bushels. Why not leave matters alone when things are going along satisfactorily? Why make a change? When nothing is to be gained, why break a custom that has prevailed in this port for many years? If we were to have increased revenues as a result of this change, then I would say, make it, but there is nothing being accomplished this year except disturbance. I do not think the Minister of Transport should countenance a change of this kind simply for the sake of making a change. Changes are not always good; some are bad. I consider that this change is unnecessary. I believe it will work out to the detriment of the port of Montreal. The minister suggested that the harbour commission had no legal right to collect this $4 per 1,000 bushels from the ocean boats. They collect $6.25 per 1,000 bushels from the lake boats.

Mr. HOWE: Let me correct that. They collect only as long as the lake boats agree to pay it. We collect from the parties named in the act, the consignee, the shipper, owner or agent. If some one else pays it, that is simply a matter of arrangement among the parties concerned.

Mr. WALSH: When a lake boat brings down grain they quote the grain broker a rate from the lake port delivered into the elevator at Montreal. That freight rate includes this $6.25 per 1,000 bushels. That has always been done, and it is still being done. That has been the custom for fifty or sixty years, and no change is being made. Apparently it is considered legal for the harbour commission to collect that $6.25.

Mr. HOWE: I am sure my hon. friend would like to have the facts. Exactly the same change was made in connection with inbound grain as was made in connection with outbound. I shall read the charges again as I think the hon. member should have them in his mind. The old tariff stated that the charge for unloading grain from vessel was payable by the vessel unloaded. That is the charge of $6.25 to which the hon. member is referring. The new tariff states that the charge for unloading grain from vessel is payable on unloading. It does not say by whom it is payable; it simply says it is payable on unloading. The change in connection with outbound grain is exactly the same. The old tariff states that charges in connection with export grain are payable by the vessel unloaded and charges in connection with domestic grain are payable by the shipper. The new tariff states that the charges are payable on loading. It does not say by whom they are payable, any more than in connection with inbound grain. The situation to-day is that the boats pay the inbound charges because they quote a rate to a shipper or make a charter party which includes the cost of unloading at Montreal. If the charter party includes elevator charges, they will be paid by the ship just the same, but our security for the charge must, under the act, be the grain.

Mr. WALSH: I can only go back to the statement made by the minister, that it is not legal to do it.

Mr. HOWE: It is not legal to do what?

Mr. WALSH: When the grain is unloaded from a lake vessel into the elevator the Montreal harbour commission makes out a bill against the owner or the agent of the vessel, not against the owner of the grain. But in the case of an ocean vessel, the bill for unloading goes, not to the owner or the agent of the vessel but to the person who has the grain in the elevator. Apparently that is the only difference between the minister and myself, despite my lack of background.

Mr. HOWE: May I correct that? The account goes to the owner or agent of the grain. We do not care who pays for it because everyone's money looks the same. The owner or the agent of the grain is billed in connection with incoming and outgoing grain.

Mr. WALSH: I have seen a bill which was sent to the owner of the vessel. When wheat is delivered from a lake boat into the elevator the bill is not made out in the name of the owner of the grain; it is made out in the name of the owner or agent of the vessel and collected as such.

Mr. HOWE: The explanation is that the owner or agent of the grain has arranged a charter for the lake vessel which includes elevation and has asked the elevator to bill the lake boat as a matter of convenience. But if the lake boat does not pay, the owner of the grain will find a bill in his hands in short order. He is the responsible party under the National Harbours Board Act. There is nothing in the act that states that we can hold a boat responsible for elevation or other charges.

Mr. WALSH: We shall let that point go. I am perfectly satisfied as to the actual conditions. I believe that the point raised by the grain brokers of Montreal and other points and those interested in the port is well taken. It is unfortunate that all this trouble should have been caused merely for the sake of a bookkeeping entry. After all, that is what it amounts to. In one case one source is held responsible and in another case, another source is held responsible for the payment of the bill. This custom has existed for fifty years. The minister quoted in connection with the port of Montreal certain figures which showed an increase in freight movement during the first two weeks in April. Naturally those figures speak for themselves, but he must remember that in the early part of April last season there was very little grain shipped through the port of Montreal. The increase shown is not a real increase.

Mr. HOWE: Let me correct that. As a matter of fact shipments of grain in the first two weeks of last year were quite heavy, and there is very little difference between the grain shipments of the first two weeks of this season and the shipments of the first two weeks of last season. The increase is almost wholly in other commodities

Mr. WALSH: Has the minister the figures on that?

Mr. HOWE: I have them in my office. I do not know that I have them here. I get a daily statement, and I am quoting from that. I saw it only this morning, and I think my hon. friend should know the figures because he is making these dogmatic statements.

Mr. WALSH: I am inclined to make dogmatic statements, but the minister is not.

Mr. HOWE: I have the figures before me.

Mr. WALSH: The minister has access to the figures and I have not.

Mr. HOWE: Why make statements if you have not the figures?

Mr. WALSH: I am giving the minister the information which I have received, which I believe to be correct, and it is for others to judge which is the correct information. The minister is in a better position to get the figures than I am. I can get only certain figures, and I am giving them. I cannot agree with the minister; I am sorry I cannot.

Mr. HOWE: He cannot agree, but has he seen the figures?

Mr. WALSH: I have sufficient figures here to show me that this differential of $4—

Mr. LAWSON: What are the minister's figures? He is a responsible minister of the crown.

Mr. HOWE: For the first two weeks of the shipping season, 26,759 tons or about 25 per cent, until the end of April. So there is a very slight difference, and I am making a statement which I can verify. This happens to be the statement of May 16.

Mr. LAWSON: We were dealing with the first two weeks of April in 1937 and 1938.

Mr. HOWE: I shall be glad to put that on Hansard this evening.

Mr. WALSH: Would the minister explain in just a few words why, and at whose instigation or suggestion, this change was made?

Mr. HOWE: I have tried to explain—

Mr. WALSH: Just in a very few words.

Mr. HOWE: The very few words are these: Under the old tariff, had a ship refused to pay the charges, we were out our money because we had no legal right to make a ship responsible for the payment of elevation charges. The agent, owner or consignee of the grain are the only people from whom we can legally collect. Why put in the tariff something that you cannot enforce? Why say that a man is responsible for charges when you have no legal right to make him responsible?

Mr. WALSH: Why have you not a legal right to make him responsible when that was the practice which prevailed over a long period of years ?

Mr. HOWE: We are working under the act passed in 1936, and the Department of Justice advises that we have not the legal right to make the ship responsible. We asked for an opinion from the department when we discovered the discrepancy in tariffs, and we were told that we had no legal right to collect from the boat owners if they did not pay of their own free will.

Mr. WALSH: You can refuse clearance to a boat if it refuses to pay.

Mr. HOWE: We cannot collect by legal methods a charge illegally made. You cannot do a thing indirectly, legally, that you cannot do directly.

Mr. LEADER: I am not sure that I have this straight yet. This $4 was formerly charged against the boat owners, illegally, the minister says, and that is why the change was made.

Mr. HOWE: Correct.

Mr. LEADER: And now it will be a charge against the owners of the grain?

Mr. HOWE: Quite.

Mr. LEADER: What I am concerned about is the farmers of the west. Does the minister not think this charge will be levied against the farmer's grain when he sells it to the broker? Does he really not think so?

Mr. HOWE: How many speeches has the hon. member made in his life in which he suggested that all charges, including freight, were made against the farmer?

Mr. LEADER: Quite so.

Mr. HOWE: If we take the $6.25 off the boat carrying the grain down, naturally the freight will be $6.25 less. It is freight plus elevation; that is the way in which rates are quoted and charters are made. Similarly you can look up the rates published by the tramp shipping administration committee in London, and you will find the rate quoted for St. Lawrence ports is the freight rate plus $4 per 1,000 bushels elevation. If it is quoted the other way, these charges will not be included. It will be a flat charge as it always has been from Saint John and Halifax, and if you compare the rates from Saint John and Halifax, you will find that they vary by exactly that four-tenths of a cent per bushel. My hon. friend knows something about grain handling and how rates are charged at country elevators and at Fort William and Vancouver, and he knows that the elevation charges are always assessed against the grain.

Mr. LEADER: I am not clear yet. This $4 that was formerly charged against the boat owners will now be charged against the owner of the grain, who in the first place will be the farmer.

Mr. HOWE: The farmer does not own any grain in Montreal harbour. Of course, my hon. friend may say that all the charges follow the grain, and that is absolutely true.

Mr. LEADER: I was prompted to ask my question because of an editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press, which is in pretty close touch with matters of this kind, and I am just giving the committee the effect of that editorial on me. It warned members of parliament to watch when this matter came up in the house, and to get the assurance that this $4 charge would not be levied back against the farmers.

Mr. HOWE: You have that assurance now.

Mr. WALSH: I am glad that my hon. friend was in the house, and I had hoped there would be more western members who would realize my point of view. The minister says that next year this $4 will be seen in a reduction of the freight charges charged by tramp steamers coming into the port of Montreal. On what authority does he make that statement? Has he definite information from the association which fixes the freight rates for tramp steamers plying between different ports, that the freight rate next year is going to be reduced $4 from the freight rate charged this year to the port of Montreal? Because if he has not that definite information from the association, the charge will still be there; if it is not taken off the freight rate somebody will have to pay it, and the only person left to pay it is unfortunately the one who supplies the goods that are going to be transported. If the minister can give us a definite statement from the association which controls the freight rates for tramp steamers that they are going to make that reduction, I feel sure that the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Leader) and members from other parts of western Canada will then be in a position to assure the growers of wheat that they need not be nervous about this $4 charge; that it is going to be taken off the freight rate, and that, therefore, it is just a matter of shifting the charge from the freight rate to the owner; that it appears in one column to be taken off another column in the way of reduced freight rates. I should like the minister to give us a definite assurance that he is absolutely certain that this is going to be done.

Mr. HOWE: The rates next year, I am told —and I have every reason to believe it— will be quoted ex-elevation, just as they are quoted to-day with elevation.

Mr. WALSH: They will be $4 less than the actual freight rate this year?

Mr. HOWE: Well, now—

Mr. WALSH: I am sincere, but if the minister cannot understand a proper question—

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member wants me to promise him that rates will be the same or less next year. The differential as between the Atlantic rate and the St. Lawrence river ports rates will be wiped out because the St. Lawrence river ports will no longer carry elevation. The hon. member wants me to say that the rates on tramp tonnage will be the same next year as this year?

Mr. WALSH: No. I want the minister to say that the actual freight rate which tramp steamers are going to charge will be $4 less than the actual freight rate is this year. The minister made a statement to the effect that this was going to be done.

Mr. HOWE: What is the hon. member asking me to say? That the rate a year from now will be $4 per 1,000 bushels less than it is to-day? Is that true?

Mr. WALSH: Yes.

Mr. HOWE: Well, now, has the hon. member any reason to suppose that next year freight rates may not be half what they are this year, or double what they are this year, because very often there is a 50 to 75 per cent variation between seasons.

Mr. WALSH: That is not the point. The point the minister made was that I was creating the impression that the western farmer was going to have to pay $4 more, and the minister made the statement that he would not, because the $4 would be off the freight bill.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. WALSH: And I asked him where his authority was for that. He makes the statement that you cannot guarantee freight rates for next year. I grant that. That is why I doubt whether these tramp steamers will reduce the freight rate next year, despite the statement of the Minister of Transport.

Mr. GREEN: It might be beneficial if we were to go over to the balmy air of the Pacific for a few minutes. I should like to ask the minister what is the present trend with regard to wheat shipments through the port of Vancouver. I believe that almost none of the 1937 crop has been shipped out that way.

Mr. HOWE: There was a certain amount. The situation was disturbed about a year ago or perhaps longer by the abnormally high freight rates. As my hon. friend knows, freight rates soared about 100 per cent on everything, on both the Atlantic and the Pacific. The effect was felt more on the Pacific than on the Atlantic, because the normal rates on the Pacific are higher, and when they double the effect is felt more out there. I am happy to say freights are back to normal or what was considered normal before that increase took place, and as far as anyone can judge we can expect a very large movement of grain through Vancouver this winter, as was usual years ago. At least we think there is no reason why the division of the crop as between movement east and movement west will not apply this year as it applied in other years.

Mr. GREEN: What portion of the 1937 crop was carried through the port of Vancouver?

Mr. HOWE: The 1937 shipments were 23,749,000 bushels. In 1936 they were 64,000,000 bushels; in 1935 46,000,000 bushels; in 1934, 51,000,000 bushels; in 1933, 68,000,000 bushels; but of course a very large part of the reason for that difference is that last year Saskatchewan had very little wheat to export, and Alberta also had a very small crop. Manitoba, on the other hand, had a good crop. That would account for some little discrepancy as between the east and the west.

Mr. GREEN: Of course we on the Pacific coast have always felt that, with the line of division running north and south pretty well through Swift Current or Moose Jaw, the quantity of grain shipped through Vancouver should not have decreased so much in the last two years, whereas the amount shipped through Montreal has increased. The figures for Vancouver for 1937, as the minister said, are about 23,700,000 bushels, whereas in 1936 they were 64,000,000 bushels, and yet we find that for Montreal the figures were 92,600,000 bushels in 1937 and 87,000,000 bushels in 1936. It may be just a coincidence, but those are the years in which the national harbours board has been in charge of our harbours. I do not suppose we can blame them for all the difficulty, but I suggest to the minister that the fact has some significance. Our problems are those of a Pacific port. Ours is the port farthest removed from Ottawa, and I do not believe that sufficient attention is being paid to its future. The members of the board, living here in Ottawa, are not in a position to be in contact with developments on the coast. I suggest to the minister, as I have done at two previous sessions, that there should be a local honorary advisory committee set up in Vancouver, whose main job would be to think of the future of the port and to tackle such a problem as the one which is before us now, namely the reasons why shipments of wheat through Vancouver are falling off, while shipments through the eastern ports are increasing. It may be that the national harbours board could do a great deal to remedy that situation. I ask the minister whether he will not give serious consideration to setting up such a local committee to help the board here in considering the peculiar problems that face us on the Pacific coast.

Mr. HOWE: As regards local advisory boards, a year ago the Canadian chamber of commerce met in Vancouver; one of the resolutions—I received notice of it—was that the chamber should recommend that local advisory boards be established at the principal national ports. The fate of that resolution was very interesting. It never got outside the resolutions committee. The Vancouver members were unanimously against it, according to what I was told—and I made a little analysis because I was rather surprised—Montreal could not carry it by a majority of the delegates, and outside those two cities there was no interest in the matter so far as the chamber of commerce was concerned. So I believe that the hon. member who asks for a local advisory board will find that the interests most directly concerned with the subject are definitely against the proposal.

As for shipments of wheat through Vancouver, naturally in a poor crop year—and conditions before that were somewhat confused on account of large carry-overs—all ports suffered. The figures my hon. friend looked at relating to Montreal shipments last year were increased to the extent of about 25,000,000 bushels by reason of Argentine and South African corn moving into the United States, which, of course, distorts the picture of the ordinary movement. Montreal and every other St. Lawrence port suffered just as the port of Vancouver did because of the short crop. This year, I believe, there will be movement enough for everybody. I anticipate an excellent grain year in all our national ports.

Mr. GREEN: For instance, in this vote no provision whatever is made for capital expenditures at the port of Vancouver. There may be an explanation for that, but it seems strange that other ports which are not doing the business—except the port of Montreal—are all having capital expenditures made, while there is nothing for Vancouver.

Mr. HOWE: We have just finished spending $650,000 there. We have a further item this year; it has not appeared as yet. Naturally we make expenditures in ports, not for the sake of spending, but to provide some facility which is demanded by business, and there have been no demands by business that seemed to warrant a large expenditure at Vancouver this year. When that type of expenditure is indicated, my hon. friend may be assured I shall recommend the vote with a great deal of pleasure, because I have a friendly interest in Vancouver by reason of my long association with the port.

Mr. GREEN: The chairman of the national harbours board has just returned from Vancouver, and I believe that while he was there the request was made to him that the board build a fish dock on False Creek, the city to lease a site and operate the dock after it had been built by the national harbours board. As the minister knows, the situation in that part of the harbour is very bad. Something should be done about it at once; there is one development in which the board could help.

Mr. HOWE: The chairman of the harbours board states that no definite proposal was made to him in that regard. Our only interest in False Creek is in the matter of navigation, and Granville island. The part of the harbour he refers to is wholly owned either by the city of Vancouver or by the province of British Columbia. The Canadian Pacific railway also has some holdings. The board has no property in that section of the harbour.

Mr. GREEN: Would the board consider the erection of a fish dock there? After all, it would serve the fishing fleet and it is very badly needed.

Mr. HOWE: We shall give it very careful consideration after we receive a proposal from the owners of the property.

Mr. GREEN: There are two other difficulties that have occasioned a great deal of trouble in connection with the harbour. One is the lack of police protection. Thousands of dollars worth of goods have been stolen on the harbour front, and probably a good deal of harbour board property has been taken in that way too. The other point is the lack of fire protection. We have yet no fire-boat in the harbour. I raised that point last year. We are still unprotected. What is being done in regard to these two problems?

Mr. HOWE: The city and the harbour board have been in conference for a considerable time over that problem and have arrived at a settlement which both regard as satisfactory. Part of the settlement is that the city shall assume full responsibility for police and fire protection as it does for any other taxpayer of Vancouver.

Mr. ISNOR: Coming from the Pacific to the Atlantic for a moment, when I listened to the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh) telling us about the wonderful harbour at Montreal and also admitting that there were millions of dollars sunk in that harbour, I was reminded of an item I saw in Seaports for the month of March, written by a travelling reporter—Activities of a Shipping Reporter, by Austin F. Cross. That writer was asked the question: "What do you do in winter"? and the thought passed through my mind, What does Montreal do in winter? I can assure the hon. member for Mount Royal that while the harbour of Montreal was covered with twenty-four inches of ice, ice did not prevent the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) from sailing from Halifax overseas, nor did it prevent the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) sailing from Halifax overseas, nor the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) from going on his recent trip. I would say, therefore, that notwithstanding the glowing description of the port of Montreal, we have in the extreme eastern part of Canada the port of Halifax which is open all the year round. In fact, the harbour is so well known; its advantages are so outstanding, that it does not require a speech in this house to place it where it rightly belongs as the outstanding port of the dominion.

May I now say a few words in regard to the general policy of the national harbours board? The committee will remember that I took strong exception to and was critical of the policy inaugurating a national harbours board under the present system. I took the view that we in the east and the people in the extreme west would not profit to the same extent as would the ports in central Canada. I am inclined to think, looking at the matter from a broad point of view rather than simply from the standpoint of the port of Halifax or of any particular section, that the policy adopted has been a sound one. I say that in all fairness because of my opposition in the past. As a business man I cannot help realizing that the national harbours board under the administration of the present minister has made an exceptionally creditable showing in the past year. When one realizes that the revenue for 1937 amounted to $8,262,221 as compared with $8,030,600 in 1936, or an increase of $231,621, showing an increase of three per cent as a revenue producer, and when one realizes further that the expenditures in connection with operations showed a decrease of $226,038, or five per cent, one must admit that it is a sound business policy. That is what the average business man is anxious to do—increase his revenue and at the same time decrease his overhead or operating expenditures—and for that reason I say that the national harbours board has made a creditable showing.

Before leaving the port of Montreal I would remind the hon. member for Mount Royal that, if he were sailing to Glasgow, he would have to travel 2,693 miles from Montreal, whereas if he took the ocean limited and sailed from the well known harbour of Halifax, the distance would be 2,407 miles; or making the comparison with Liverpool, from Montreal to Liverpool it would be 2,966 miles, and from Halifax to Liverpool, 2,485 miles. I would call that mileage to the attention of the Minister of Transport. Halifax is the eastern terminal of the Canadian National Railways, and he, as Minister of Transport, should bear in mind that the greater the amount of traffic that goes over the Canadian National railway system, the greater the revenue to that system; more than that, employees all along the line would benefit.

At the same time I call his attention to the question of the shipment of cattle from Halifax. Last evening we were considering the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and at that time the question of cattle came up. We have in Halifax sheds which will take care of 1,000 head of cattle, and once again the question of transportation comes into the picture. I suggest to the minister that he bear that in mind and try to divert some of the cattle shipments through the port of Halifax. May I also remind him of the cold storage warehouse with 1,000,000 cubic feet of storage space, completely fitted with freezing, storing and packing equipment and with ample rail connections. I believe the minister is familiar with these features of the port of Halifax. I simply remind him that we have at Halifax all the necessary facilities to handle shipments of cattle and grain from the west as well as package goods for export.

May I refer also to the showing of the port of Halifax in regard to tonnage last year. I regret to learn that Vancouver did not enjoy the prosperity that we did. I am more modest than the hon. member for Mount Royal; I do not say Halifax is the best port in the world, I just say it is one of the best. I was happy to note the increase in revenue last year; not only was there an increase in revenue but there was a drop in the cost of operation. The revenues of the port last year showed a net increase of about 13 per cent over 1936. I was glad the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) mentioned a fish pier. I believe the minister would be well advised to look into the possibilities of the construction of fish piers on both Atlantic and Pacific coasts. It would be an advantage to us in Halifax and to the whole of Nova Scotia if we had not only a fish pier but a public fish market. It would bring fish buyers from the New England states and lead to an increase in the sale and production of fish.

I did not intend to make a speech on these questions. I had some questions to ask the minister on various items as they came up; but when the hon. member for Mount Royal painted such a glowing picture of Montreal, I could not resist drawing his attention to the fact that we have an all year round port on the Atlantic as compared with his six months' port in central Canada. With a greater degree of cooperation by the national harbours board, travelling from one part of Canada to another and adjusting matters which may arise from time to time, and cooperation between the harbours board, the province of Nova Scotia, the city of Halifax and the board of trade, I believe we shall not only continue the amount of shipping out of Halifax but enjoy a large increase in tonnage, particularly of package goods which, after all, is what we are after.

Mr. BROOKS: For fear the committee may think there are only three ports in Canada, namely, Montreal, Vancouver and Halifax, I should like to say a word regarding the port of Saint John. The people of Saint John have been rather disappointed in recent years that the construction of the piers on the west side has not gone ahead a little faster. When the docks were burnt a few years ago, it was understood that new docks would be built before this. But since 1935, when this government came into power, there has been, with the exception of possibly some $25,000 or $30,000, no money spent outside the contracts which had been let before that time. Some hon. members remind me that there was an acclamation in Saint John. In that connection may I say the opposition party in that constituency felt that it might be good business for the port of Saint John to allow a government supporter to go in by acclamation in the hope that something would be done in that port during the present year. But nothing has been done. It was interesting to hear the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor) expressing his approval, which, however, I think is not joined in by all the people of Halifax, of the amount of freight which the port of Halifax has been handling. I have seen editorials in some of the Halifax newspapers complaining bitterly that that port had been neglected, particularly with reference to wheat, during the last few years. I should like to give some figures as to the export of Canadian wheat from the different maritime ports and the port of New York. For 1937 the figures are:

	Bushels
Saint John East	150,715
Saint John West	9,618,809
Halifax	1,623,931
New York	17,297,192

That is to say, New York is exporting about one and two-third times as much Canadian grain as the ports of Halifax and Saint John combined. This seems to be very poor business for our Canadian ports. The people of Saint John feel that the facilities of that port should be increased so that we can get some of this business which is going through New York. I have the figures for January, 1938, for the export of grain. They are as follows:

[Mr. Isnor.]

	Bushels
West Saint John	2,115,668
Halifax	47,994
New York	1,309,315

There is not much cause for rejoicing on the part of the people of Halifax in those figures. For January New York exported 1,309,315 bushels of Canadian wheat in comparison with 47,994 bushels from Halifax. For February, 1938, the figures were:

	Bushels
West Saint John	1,746,285
Halifax	16,040
New York	1,782,423

Surely some of this grain which now goes to New York might be sent through our Canadian ports.

Mr. ISNOR: Will the hon. member give the total tonnage?

Mr. BROOKS: I am giving the bushels of grain. Grain is not shipped by tonnage as far as I know.

Mr. ISNOR: I asked for the total tonnage of shipments that went through the two ports.

Mr. BROOKS: I am discussing grain. The people of Halifax are very much interested in this question. I saw a cartoon in a Halifax paper showing cobwebs growing over the elevators in that city, and over the railway from Moncton to Halifax, indicating lack of business for that port.

Mr. ISNOR: I still say the tonnage was greater in 1937 than in 1936.

Mr. BROOKS: Would it affect the tonnage of other freight to ship more grain through Halifax? Will the hon. member not agree with me that the port of Halifax should be receiving more grain shipments than it is, some of the grain shipped through New York?

Mr. ISNOR: Absolutely.

Mr. BROOKS: I should like to point out also that frost-proof sheds are very necessary at the port of Saint John. We are trying to expand our export of potatoes from New Brunswick, and in order to facilitate that movement we must have frost-proof sheds.

Mr. HOWE: We thought of that before my hon. friend did, and if he will look at the estimate under discussion he will see an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. BROOKS: Thinking of it does not build the sheds.

Mr. HOWE: Providing the money does.

Mr. BROOKS: I refer to shed No. 8 which I understand is not to be frost-proof, although particularly requested by the mayor of Saint John. If that statement is not correct, the minister may correct it. I do not think there is anything further I have to say, but I do hope the minister will look after the interests of Saint John, which may not be the greatest port in the world but which is one of the finest ports in Canada.

Mr. McIVOR: We have been hearing about single ports and single places in Canada, but at the head of the lakes we have two ports that will compare favourably with the best in Canada. We have the biggest elevators and the best grain handling equipment in the world. I should like to tell the hon. member for Vancouver South why Manitoba grain was not shipped by the Pacific coast last year. It is a shorter haul by way of Fort William, and it is a safer route.

Mr. GREEN: If I may correct the hon. gentleman, we do not expect Manitoba wheat, but we do expect Peace river wheat, Alberta wheat and part of the Saskatchewan wheat.

Mr. McIVOR: There was very little wheat west of Manitoba; that was the reason. A few moments ago I heard an hon. member say, "Vote Liberal and get action." I should like to tell the committee that if there is one department of the government from which we have had action, and honest action, it is the Department of Transport; judging by the spirit of the minister to-night we are going to get plenty of action and it is going to be straight. I should like to say, for the two ports at the head of the lakes, that we feel we are in the safest possible hands; the minister is a business man, an honest man, a brainy man and a good man, and we are proud of him.

Mr. PERLEY: The short statement just made by the hon. member for Fort William was interesting, but I was very much surprised that he did not make a stronger plea for the ports of Fort William and Port Arthur.

Mr. McIVOR: It is not necessary.

Mr. PERLEY: I have been listening to this discussion concerning the different ports and the different rates, the elevation rates, freight rates and ocean rates. I believe this question could be easily solved if the minister would give consideration to the idea—and it will not be long until he will have to give consideration to it—of deepening our waterways and having ocean going vessels go right through to these ports at the head of the lakes. Then we shall get away from this difficulty as between the ports. That is what will come about; we shall have one good port and we shall know who is absorbing all the rates between the prairie farmer and Liverpool. I have been connected with wheat for quite a while, both producing it and handling it in elevators, and I have always found that the farmer absorbs all the rates, elevation, freight, handling, ocean rates and so on, from the day the wheat leaves his farm until it reaches Liverpool. So I was surprised that the hon. member for Fort William did not make a plea of that kind for his ports.

Mr. NEILL: A few hours ago the minister gave a statement of the revenue deficiencies of the various ports in Canada. I was wondering how the port of Alberni showed up in that regard. I think there should be a surplus there, not a deficiency. Has the minister any of the figures for last year at hand?

Mr. HOWE: I am sorry to say that the port of Alberni does not come under this item, and I have not the figures here. There is no possible way to have a deficit at a port which is administered under the Harbours and Piers Act. We go on the principle of no money, no pay; in other words, the expenses can be paid only out of the revenue. The port of Alberni has shown quite a considerable increase in revenue, and I think, when I give the hon. member the financial statement in regard to that port, he will find it very satisfactory.

Mr. NEILL: That may be due to the fact that we have no harbour board there. We have a competent harbour master and a good superintendent, and the result appears to be no trouble, no graft and a profit.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have listened to everybody talking about ports all over this country. I notice that the port of Montreal had a total of some sixteen million tons, and I was interested to hear the minister say he was partial to that port. Then he said the port of Vancouver had a total of some 6,900,000 tons, and again he said he was interested in and partial to that port. We in Toronto are rather jealous; we had a total of 3,700,000 tons. In fact, Toronto is the third largest port in Canada. We have always had great consideration from the minister, and I know he likes to come to Toronto. We do not trouble him very much; but when we do come to the minister and want something for the port of Toronto, I hope he will always remember—and the house will always remember—that Toronto is the third largest port in Canada, and that the little we do want from time to time we expect to get.

Mr. WALSH: I would not care to create the impression that I deprecated the growth or development of any port in Canada. I hope the trade and commerce of our country are going to increase to such an extent that every port on the eastern and western borders will receive a satisfactory share of the commerce that is carried on. But I should like the minister to tell the committee the agreed rate for lifting from lake boats into the elevator and from the elevator into ocean boats, at the port of Quebec, that is to be paid by the Dreyfus Company during this current season.

Mr. HOWE: The tariff for the port of Quebec is exactly the same as for all St. Lawrence ports. The amount that Dreyfus and any other customer of the port of Quebec is paying is $10.25 per 1,000 bushels. It is exactly the same in Montreal, Three Rivers and Sorel.

Mr. WALSH: Then there is absolutely no truth in the statement which appeared in the Montreal press that this company had received a special concession for shipping an agreed amount of grain—that is corn, I understand—through the port of Quebec during this season, supposed to be a difference between $10.25 and the $1.25 per 1,000 bushels? There is absolutely no truth in the statement that appeared in the press some few weeks ago, leading one to believe that those special arrangements had been made to persuade this company to ship through the port of Quebec this season?

Mr. HOWE: No truth in it whatever. I ask my hon. friend if he objects to seeing a little movement of grain through Quebec.

Mr. WALSH: Absolutely not.

Mr. HOWE: Why so much talk about it?

Mr. WALSH: I am not talking about it; I am asking for information.

Mr. HOWE: The hon. member made the statement earlier that Quebec was getting an undue proportion.

Mr. WALSH: The minister will understand in a few minutes why I ask for this information. He realizes that at the beginning of the season the water rate to Quebec from lake ports was five cents a bushel. This was increased to 5½ cents a bushel, and then to six cents a bushel.

Mr. HOWE: What rate is my hon. friend talking about?

Mr. WALSH: On grain.

Mr. HOWE: From where to where?

[Mr. Ross (St. Paul's).]

Mr. WALSH: From lake ports to the city of Quebec. The rate was increased from five to 5½ cents, and then from 5½ to six cents. I understand that was as a result of certain arrangements made by the Department of Transport in order that this Dreyfus Company could move grain through the port of Quebec at a special rate which they could not obtain through other ports on the St. Lawrence. The minister has suggested that this is not so, but the fact is that we had this increase in the rate on grain from lake ports to the port of Quebec. I was wondering if there was any significance in the increase made since the season opened.

Mr. HOWE: As a minister of the crown I told my hon. friend that the rate for Quebec was $10.25, which is exactly the same as the rate for Montreal. Is he prepared to accept that? He seemed to doubt it in his last statement.

Mr. WALSH: I accept it. When an hon. member makes a statement in this house I accept it.

Mr. HOWE: When the rates first came out there was a half cent differential in the rates published for Quebec and Montreal. We took vigorous steps to have that differential removed. We took the position that for many years the river ports of Montreal, Quebec, Sorel and Three Rivers had been quoted uniform rail and water rates. The water rates are not controlled to the same extent as the rail rates, because there is no rate making authority. We took prompt and vigorous action to have the differential removed, and in a short time we succeeded in our efforts. As a matter of fact, no grain moved at the higher rate. The differential was removed as quickly as it had been set up. The rail companies took joint action, but not to the extent of publishing a tariff. They threatened to take action in the same way and put a half cent differential against Quebec, but we threatened to apply to the board of railway commissioners and they changed their minds. We did exactly for the port of Quebec what we are prepared to do for any other port; we did everything to preserve its parity with competing ports.

Mr. WALSH: Had not arrangements been made in the interim to transfer this grain from the Georgian bay ports to the elevators at Quebec by rail at much reduced rates in order to meet that increase by the lake carriers? I am referring to an article that appeared in one of the Montreal papers, I think about two or three weeks ago.

Mr. HOWE: I cannot answer everything that comes out in the Montreal papers. I did not realize they were so unreliable. I can say that we had made no arrangement about rail rates. We did intervene, as I have indicated, to put a stop to the proposed differential in the water and rail rates as between Quebec and Montreal. I believe in taking that step we acted in the best interests of transportation in this country.

Mr. WALSH: I am sorry that everybody and every source are unreliable except the minister. However, I must take my information where I can get it.

Mr. HOWE: The only difference is that when I make a statement I must be responsible for it.

Mr. WALSH: I try to be responsible for any statement I make. I am seeking information. My curiosity was aroused when I read that report and heard these matters discussed by those who are interested in this particular differential. Let me ask the minister one further question. As he knows, in the port of Montreal and at other ports on the St. Lawrence grain is stored free of charge for ten days, after which storage is charged. Is that condition to prevail in the elevators of the city of Quebec, or have arrangements been made to give free storage for longer than the ten days usually allowed?

Mr. HOWE: I feel something like a squirrel in a cage when I answer these questions. I gave an elaborate statement in connection with that situation in which I said that a special tariff had been filed at the beginning of the season to apply until August 31, which provided that during that period there should be no accumulation of storage against full cargoes of export grain at Quebec. We understand that the same practice has been in effect at Sorel and at Three Rivers. The reason for this is that shipment by tramps usually necessitates payment of storage charges which is generally avoided in a port where both liners and tramps are loaded. The position is this. We do accrue that storage at the port of Montreal for periods longer than ten days, but we do not accrue it at Quebec for the period which I have stated. That is provided for in the tariff approved by the board of grain commissioners, and it is available to any one who cares to ship through the port of Quebec.

Mr. WALSH: The minister will appreciate my inquiry in this respect after what was reported in the papers. The people interested in the port placed a great deal of reliance on the statement that was made when the national harbours board was created. This statement was that the harbours board had stated on innumerable occasions that their intention was to stabilize charges through the different ports and make them uniform. I am glad to have that statement confirmed by the minister. I am glad to hear him say that this is the basis upon which the national harbours board are working. I know the people interested in the port of Montreal and in other ports on the St. Lawrence will be glad to have a denial of any rumours and a confirmation of the arrangement that was entered into when the national harbours board was put in charge of the national harbours of the Dominion of Canada. I feel quite certain that, as a result of the discussion to-night, the atmosphere in and around the port of Montreal will be to some extent clarified. I feel all will realize that the Department of Transport is making a serious effort to adjust satisfactorily any differences that might exist and is not attempting to create traffic in one port to the detriment of another. The minister knows as well as I do how these rumours get about and how disquieting they are upon the public. He realizes that if anything is done to create traffic through a particular port by giving special advantages, it will upset the whole scheme and there will be general dissatisfaction and mistrust in connection with the national harbours board. The minister has not given me credit for very much to-night, but I think he will at least give me credit for having supported the bill which set up this national harbours board. At that time I made only two suggestions: First, that there should be an advisory committee made up of representatives from the maritimes, the St. Lawrence and the west; or, failing that, that the port managers be given wide authority to work under certain general rules and regulations and not be considered as merely glorified office boys. These were the only two stipulations I made; and I agree with what the minister is doing. I am glad that the national harbours board is working out so satisfactorily, judging by the statement of the minister, but I hope something will be done so that the cities where the harbours are situated will have more direct contact with the harbours board so that these ports can develop. At the present time there does not seem to be any rivalry between ports, and the result is that a few ports seem to get the bulk of the business that passes through eastern or western ports. I know the feeling in my own city is that they would like to have more direct contact with the board, and that feeling must be much stronger in Halifax, Vancouver and Saint John, because Montreal is much closer to the centre of things than these distant ports. I know of cases, however, that come up in Montreal, as the minister well knows, where decisions have to be arrived at almost overnight or otherwise there would be a loss, and I hope that the port managers will be given more latitude or that an advisory committee will be given authority to be consulted in these various areas instead of having everything decided in the city of Ottawa.

Mr. HAYHURST: I should like to correct one or two misstatements that have been made. One would think, listening to the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor), that all the wheat producers of western Canada were in Manitoba, whereas the fact is that Alberta last year produced as much wheat and coarse grains as all the rest of Canada put together.

While we have no seaports in Alberta, we have airports, which are the ports of the future. Listening to the discussion, I came to the conclusion that each member was speaking for his own particular port and considered it the best port in Canada, but the minister realizes that what we really need in the interests of Canada as a whole is the development of our best harbours, wherever they may be, for the shipment of our commodities. Some people talk of the survival of the fittest, and they think the fittest should be considered to be this harbour or that, whereas the survival of the fittest should mean that those ports should survive which give the best service, and I commend to the minister those which are giving the best service to the country.

Mr. DUFFUS: We have heard considerable criticism about the amount of Canadian grain that is going through United States ports. Can the minister give some idea of the amount of United States grain going through Canadian ports?

Mr. HOWE: There is no uniformity about the thing because it varies with marketing conditions and a number of other factors. For a number of years more United States grain went through Montreal than Canadian grain through New York, and that is likely to be repeated this year. On the other hand, in the winter months the liner demand for wheat for ballast results in a low rate being quoted which attracts some Canadian grain to the port of New York. That has always been and always will be the case. It is dictated by the situation at the moment, and I do not think there is any particular patent on it. But it has been a very unusual year when Canada has not exported far more United States grain than the United States has exported Canadian grain.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain the vote listed under item No. 436, paragraph (b)? How are these amounts to be spent? For example, I might mention the item of $130,000 for Saint John and that of $365,000 for Quebec.

Mr. HOWE: The roadway in the rear of berths Nos. 8, 9, 10 and 11, requires an expenditure of $46,000, and frost-proofing shed No. 13 requires $84,000. The roadway is to serve the new berths.

Mr. GREEN: Is the item of $100,000 for "generally unforeseen" available to be spent in any port?

Mr. HOWE: Yes; that is a floating fund to take care of business requirements which develop between times. It is available for any port.

Mr. GREEN: The whole $767,000 will be added to the indebtedness of the national harbours board?

Mr. HOWE: Quite.

Mr. GREEN: What is the total indebtedness to the government and to private individuals?

Mr. HOWE: The total interest bearing indebtedness of all ports to the government is $148,244,183.83.

Mr. GREEN: How much is owing to private individuals as distinguished from the amount owing to the dominion government?

Mr. HOWE: There is, in addition, indebtedness to the public amounting to $23,218,994.76, including the Jacques Cartier bridge.

Mr. GREEN: Is the same rate of interest, which I understood the minister to say is 3½ per cent, charged on all indebtedness to the government?

Mr. HOWE: No; the rate of interest has varied depending upon the cost of money at the time the loan was made. Current loans are at 3½ per cent, but some are as high as 5 per cent.

Mr. GREEN: Seeing that the indebtedness is all owing to the dominion government, would it not be as well to charge the same rate of interest, 3½ per cent, on the whole amount? It seems a little unfair that some ports should be paying more than that.

Mr. HOWE: The loans were made in accordance with the statutes, and the statutes specify the rate. But we are studying that situation, and it is part of our program to get it adjusted and possibly make changes in the capital structure.

Mr. GREEN: Are the net income deficits added each year to the total indebtedness of the respective ports, and interest charged on the whole amount?

Mr. HOWE: No; we do not capitalize deficits. The deficit is always charged up to the treasury.

Mr. GREEN: And paid out of consolidated revenue?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. MacNEIL: I should like to inquire further about the fire protection problem in Vancouver. The inference to be drawn from the minister's remarks was that the present arrangements there were satisfactory, but as a matter of fact it has been impressed upon me that by reason of recent experience there is considerable apprehension that valuable property may be endangered. There have been several hair-breadth escapes from serious conflagrations. Do I understand that the harbours board does not consider it necessary that additional fire protection should be provided? After all, however efficient a city fire department may be, they cannot protect shipping adequately unless facilities are provided for fighting the fire from the waterfront itself.

Mr. HOWE: As I said before, an agreement was made between the mayor and city council of Vancouver and the national harbours board by which there was a division of responsibility. In that agreement, which was a mutual one apparently advantageous to both, the city assumed full responsibility for fire and police protection of harbour property in return for the right of taxation of crown leaseholds.

Mr. ISNOR: In view of the statement made by the hon. member for Royal—I know he would want to be fair—as he gave certain figures, I should like to put on Hansard a statement showing the total quantity of water-borne cargo tonnage landed from and loaded into vessels at the harbour of Halifax during the calendar years 1936 and 1937: 1936, 2,140,458 tons; 1937, 2,376,200 tons; or an increase in 1937 over the year 1936 of 235,742 tons.

Mr. STEWART: I have been an interested and a patient listener to the minister's statements in connection with the cost of moving grain in and out of the harbour of Montreal, and the conclusion I have come to, with which I think the minister will agree, is that it costs just as much to move a given quantity of grain into the harbour and out of the harbour under the new rates as it did under the old. They are just the same.

Mr. HOWE: Exactly the same.

Mr. STEWART: And the argument is whether it shall be paid in one way or in the other, but the net result is that the cost to some person, whether it be the farmer, the purchaser, or the vendor, is the same.

Mr. HOWE: Exactly the same.

Mr. STEWART: There has been superimposed both upon the harbour of Montreal and over it, the Jacques Cartier bridge. The minister stated that there was an operating surplus. I take it that there is an over-all deficit.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: What is the amount of the over-all deficit?

Mr. HOWE: The deficit over-all for the year 1936 was $745,935, and that is after crediting $300,000, paid half by the province and half by the city. The year 1937 is a trifle better; the over-all deficit was $693,479.

Mr. STEWART: The minister says there is an over-all deficit after crediting a contribution made by the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec. That contribution is because of the deficit in the first instance, is it not?

Mr. HOWE: By agreement when the bridge was built, yes.

Mr. STEWART: But the real deficit, then, is the amount of the two items?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: The amount of the net deficit plus the amount of the two contributions.

Mr. HOWE: The sum of $993,000 in 1937.

Mr. STEWART: How much?

Mr. HOWE: Practically a million dollars in 1937.

Mr. STEWART: That is what I thought. How does the amount of that deficit compare with the deficit the year before? Is it improving?

Mr. HOWE: Improving a little. Traffic is better.

Mr. STEWART: Was there any contribution direct or indirect towards the maintenance of the bridge that is not included in the operating expenses? Was there some contribution for the relief of unemployment?

Mr. HOWE: Not since 1935, I think. I believe there was some painting done in 1934-35.

Mr. STEWART: By way of contribution?

Mr. HOWE: Yes. Nothing made since.

Item agreed to.

Loans and investments—Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures during the calendar year 1938 on any or all of the following accounts (revote $268,100):

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—

Montreal, $1,297,500.

Less amount to be expended from replacement fund, $367,700—Total, $929,800.

Mr. GREEN: What is this to be spent for?

Mr. HOWE: For Montreal harbour:

Reconditioning downstream side of Alexandra pier	$ 535,000
Windmill Point wharf, upper end of basin	50,000
Sawtooth wharf No. 1, sections 30, 31	190,000
Raising wharf at sections 46-49	300,000
Dredging, drilling and blasting (revote $42,000)	69,600
Water service to wharf, sections 56, 57, 58	4,500
Driveway to wharf, sections 56-58 (partly revote)	2,500
Provision of water gauge (partly revote)	4,800
Completion of No. 5 extension (revote)	50,000
Provision of double track at shed, No. 5 extension, and paving	6,600
Provision of provisory surfacing of Sutherland pier	6,500
Completion of Imperial Oil wharf (revote $68,000)	78,000
Total	$1,297,500
Total revote, $268,100.
Less amount to be expended from replacement fund	$ 367,700
Net total	$ 929,800

Mr. GREEN: Are any of the supplies for these ports purchased by the harbours board? During the Easter recess I had a complaint about seals for freight cars, of which a great number are used, being purchased in the United States. A seal which was brought into my office had stamped on it "Made in U.S.A." That may have been just a lone instance, but is there not a policy of the board that all supplies shall be purchased in Canada?

Mr. HOWE: Yes, entirely. I think the harbours board would not buy seals. It must have been—

[Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. GREEN: Freight car seals.

Mr. HOWE: —freight car seals, possibly from ex-American lines. But I think the harbours board would not be a purchaser of freight car seals.

Mr. GREEN: New seals used in sealing up freight cars.

Mr. HOWE: If I am not mistaken, they would be supplied by the railroad. In any event, all harbours board material and supplies are purchases of Canadian origin.

Mr. STIRLING: Why is item No. 439 separated from item No. 436, and would the minister explain how it comes about that nearly a million dollars of last year's vote was not required?

Mr. HOWE: That arises from a difference in the treatment of public accounts. Certain harbour assets are carried in the public accounts as active assets, and certain others are carried as inactive assets. The ports of Montreal and Vancouver are carried on the public accounts as active assets because over a period of years they have been able nearly to pay the interest. The other ports are carried as inactive assets because they have not been able to pay more than a small portion of the interest, or none at all.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Services to veterans and dependents—Grant to the last post fund, $75,000.

Mr. MacNEIL: How is this apportioned to the provinces?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): It is not apportioned.

Mr. GREEN: What check is made by the department on the operations of the committees that deal with the last post fund?

Mr. POWER: An auditor's report is received.

Mr. GREEN: Last summer I attended a funeral arranged for out of the fund, and it seemed to me that the intent of the founders of the fund was not properly carried out. There were two returned men buried at once, one from my own battalion and one from the inland water transport, which looked in the first place as if someone was trying to do it on the cheap. Though there was an organ in the undertaking parlour, one of the best undertaking parlours in Vancouver, there was no music at all and the whole procedure made one wonder whether somebody was trying to save money at the expense of these unfortunate men who died in such tragic circumstances. The department should check carefully the spending of this money.

Mr. POWER: The trustees in British Columbia are: President, Colonel St. J. Montizambert; Rev. C. C. Owen; R. F. C. Letson; honorary treasurer, Major R. H. Tupper; secretary-treasurer, V. J. Lewis. The amount paid for a funeral must not exceed $100—$50 for the funeral, $25 for the grave including opening and closing; and the cost of placing of a marker on the grave. That is standard from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. GREEN: The men whose names the minister has mentioned are among the very best in the city. I do not think they knew anything about this.

Mr. POWER: It is their duty.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that some check should be made, because people get careless as time goes on. It is time there was a close check-up on the way in which these services are conducted.

Mr. POWER: I shall be glad to bring my hon. friend's complaint to the attention of Colonel Montizambert and Mr. Lewis, if he desires. I do not know the gentlemen.

Mr. GREEN: Has the department not an official who could take the matter up in Vancouver instead of making a cold complaint to the trustees? I do not want any complaint made to them in that way.

Mr. POWER: There are no representatives of the department on the board of trustees at Vancouver. We have a representative of our department on the board at headquarters.

Mr. GREEN: But could not some official from the Department of Pensions and National Health in Vancouver do it?

Mr. POWER: Who could do it better than the minister? I shall be glad to send a copy of Hansard to Colonel Montizambert.

Item agreed to.

Sheltered employment, $72,560.

Mr. GREEN: Before the minister takes up this vote, can he tell us whether it is the intention to bring in amendments to the Pension Act this session?

Mr. POWER: That has nothing to do with this vote.

Mr. GREEN: But some suggestions were made with regard to doing away with crown appeals and wiping out the deadline for applications for pension by men who served in actual theatres of war, and for dealing with nerve cases and widows' pensions. Is it intended to amend the act this session?

Mr. POWER: I suggest that the hon. member endeavour to stick as closely as he can to the vote. He will admit that we have given the widest latitude in all this discussion ever since we started this session. I have no objection to telling him that the matter is still under consideration—

Mr. GREEN: That is all I want to know.

Mr. POWER: —but I think we should stick as closely as we can to the votes if we hope to get through some time this session.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister tell us something about this particular vote?

Mr. POWER: This is the "vetcraft" vote. We have vetcraft shops at Montreal and Toronto. This is for accommodation and equipment and other expenses; for provision for sheltered employment for returned soldiers in vetcraft workshops; for cost of transportation for blinded or totally disabled pensioners requiring the services of an escort; for payments to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind for the training of and services rendered to the blind, and payment to the Red Cross which operates the factory at Victoria, also salaries of instructors, and wages of operatives.

Mr. MacNEIL: How many men are given employment under this plan?

Mr. POWER: There are about 124 employees at the present time.

Mr. MacNEIL: What are the rates of pay?

Mr. POWER: Thirty-three cents an hour.

Mr. LAWSON: Are there 124 men in all Canada?

Mr. POWER: Altogether, yes.

Mr. LAWSON: I thought there were a great many more.

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. MacNEIL: In connection with the national institute for the blind, how many men are provided for and on what terms?

Mr. POWER: The department pays the Canadian National Institute for the Blind a proportionate amount of the cost involved in the after care of the blind. This is for the maintenance of the library and radio services, expenditure, etc. Accounts are submitted monthly amounting to $300 or $400.

Mr. GREEN: There is no intention of taking care of any unemployed veterans?

Mr. POWER: Not under vetcraft.

Item agreed to.

Pensions branch—Pensions branch administration, $837,262.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain the increase?

Mr. POWER: Offhand I would say that it is due largely to the restoration of the five per cent deduction and the annual increases. The five per cent deduction accounts for $25,000 odd, and there is $7,525 for salary increases.

Mr. GREEN: In the details given on page 151 of the estimates there is listed one registrar of correspondence at $3,720 a year. What are his duties?

Mr. POWER: He has charge of the central registry.

Mr. LAWSON: Is the increase in respect of pension commissioners the same statutory increase, or is there an additional commissioner?

Mr. POWER: There is no additional commissioner; there has been a decrease in the number of commissioners.

Item agreed to.

Direct payments to veterans and dependents —Hospital and other allowances, $1,075,000.

Mr. GREEN: What is the explanation of the decrease?

Mr. POWER: To some extent a decrease in hospital strength, although I think the hospital strength is about the same. It runs about 2,400 in the winter, 2,200 in the summer. Possibly the pensioners who in former years went on pay and allowances are either stabilized on pension or do not return to hospital. Our hospital population is becoming more and more veterans' care, and different classes which do not carry pay and allowances. The decrease may be in part due also to the fact that generals, colonels and other officers of high rank no longer receive the pay of their rank, as they did before I came into office.

Mr. GREEN: The reduction on that account would not amount to very much.

Mr. POWER: Well, seven or eight hundred dollars a month was a lot of money to pay to one man. They are not getting it now.

Mr. GREEN: What is the present position in regard to giving dental treatment? That is becoming a serious matter. It was specifically referred to in the report of the veterans' assistance commission. Apparently a great deal of hardship is suffered by veterans through lack of dental treatment.

Mr. POWER: That does not properly come under this item. The question of dental treatment would come under item No. 223, care of patients, which will not be taken up to-night. But, generally speaking, we give dental care when the disability from which the man is suffering is in some way related to his teeth. We have extended that considerably in the last three or four years. We give all kinds of dental treatment to anyone who happens to be in our hospitals, whatever dental treatment is required. There has been some difficulty, which still exists, with respect to dentures and matters of that kind when the pensioner or patient does not reside in a locality where we have a hospital or a contract hospital or a salaried medical officer of the department. I am endeavouring to place more salaried dental officers in different districts more or less remote from the large centres, so that it will be possible to extend dental treatment to those who require it, even though the dental condition is not directly connected with the disability from which the patient is suffering.

Mr. GREEN: Would it not be possible to have this work done by local dentists? Is it necessary that there be a departmental dentist in each case?

Mr. POWER: Frankly, it is rather difficult to check up. We do a good deal of it; but the hon. member will realize that there is no treatment which can run the expense up more, sometimes without much justification, no other treatment which is harder to control than dental treatment; and if we gave it indiscriminately throughout the country, it might get out of control. But we are studying the matter and hope to find a more satisfactory system.

Mr. GREEN: Then we hear complaints about regulations being too strict. For instance, we hear that if a man has a couple of teeth left, he cannot get a plate. The situation may not be as bad as that, but we hear of restrictions that are much too severe. Can the minister tell us what they are?

Mr. POWER: I shall be glad to give more detail on that vote. I have a statement on the whole dental situation; but I left it with my other documents relating to treatment, because my hon. friend requested that I do not discuss treatment to-night.

Mr. MacNEIL: There has been considerable alarm among ex-service men with regard to substantial reductions in this item and the item, care of patients. I would appreciate it if either on this vote or the other the minister would give a general picture of the situation. It was reported that for March, 1936, the cost of hospital treatment was $2,760,866; and for March, 1937, it was $2,732,087, a decrease of $28,778. For hospital allowances the figure for March, 1936, was $1,315,347, while for March, 1937, it was $1,083,919, a decrease of $231,427. Hospital admissions in March, 1936, were 10,411 and 9,486 for March, 1937, a decrease of 925. The minister will remember that in the proceedings of the special committee in 1936 certain stated questions were submitted to the officers of the department regarding P.C. 91, asking for assurance that there would be no restriction under that order in council as compared with the one previously in force. Would the minister, either now or under another vote, tell the committee whether there has been any transfer from class 1 to other classes, thereby reducing the number of men eligible for allowances as class 1 patients?

Mr. POWER: My hon. friend will notice that this year the estimates are set out in a different way. In other years the two items, care of patients, and hospital and other allowances, were bulked. The total amount provided in the estimates for these two items was in excess of the actual expenditures incurred for these activities during the past fiscal year. There was an unexpended balance in the vote. I have a comparison here. For 1936-37 the actual expenditures were:

Hospital and other allowances..	$1,083,919
Care of patients..	2,989,446
	$4,073,365

In the 1938-39 estimates, vote No. 221, which we are now considering, the figures are:

Hospital and other allowances..	$1,075,000
Care of patients, vote 223.	3,045,287
	$4,120,287

An increase of approximately $50,000 for the two votes put together.

Mr. MacNEIL: Has the minister the figures of hospital admissions during the last year?

Mr. POWER: I have that somewhere, under care of patients. But the average is about 2,400. It ran to about 2,580 during last winter and is gradually coming down; I suppose it will reach about 2,200 to 2,300 during the summer.

Mr. MacNEIL: Has there been any substantial transfer from class 1 to other classes under P.C. 91? Are the figures available of those who have been admitted under the various classifications?

Mr. POWER: As far as I can get those figures. I shall bring them.

Mr. MacNICOL: What attention is given to returned soldiers who die suddenly, away from the hospital? I know of a returned soldier who had a job in northern Ontario; he left his place of employment, had to walk some twenty-four miles to the station. About halfway there was a stopping place where he stopped overnight. Next day he started for the station. He had been subject to fainting spells and falling, as the hospital records show; apparently he had one of these spells on the way to the station that day and was frozen to death before he was found. After the post mortem, however, the doctors said he had died as a result of being frozen to death. Personally I do not believe that; the doctors may have been right; but since the man was troubled with fainting spells he might have had one at that time, and not being able to get up again he froze to death. I want to know under what item I should bring this matter up.

Mr. POWER: I think it might be properly discussed under the item relating to pensions, since I take it my hon. friend proposes to make claim for a pension on behalf of the widow of the ex-soldier who died under those circumstances. As the hon. member knows, the Canadian pension commission has full authority and jurisdiction, without regard to the minister or anyone in this house, to judge whether or not the widow would be entitled to pension.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have always found them very satisfactory.

Mr. POWER: Then I commend my hon. friend to the pension commission, where I have no doubt he will get satisfaction.

Mr. MacNEIL: On the question of class 1 allowances I wish to refer to a matter which was referred to previously. Order in council P.C. 91 definitely includes a disability resulting from aggravation while on service. No distinction is made; that principle has been accepted. I think on previous occasions the assurance has been given that there would be no restriction under P.C. 91 as compared with the previous order in council regulating government medical treatment. A number of cases have been brought to my attention recently of men who have been denied class 1 treatment and have not secured the allowances, because the disability resulted from aggravation on service. I shall not take up the time of the committee at the moment to refer to a case cited previously, No. 103431—

Mr. POWER: Is that a Halifax case?

Mr. MacNEIL: No; a Seattle case, in which the departmental medical authority definitely stated that since the condition antedated enlistment, and as it was aggravated only to a very slight degree as a result of service, the man should not be entitled to class 1 treatment. I should like some assurance from the minister that no distinction is made in regard to aggravation cases.

Mr. POWER: I think we offered to bring that man back to Canada, but he would not be hospitalized in Canada. Is that the case?

Mr. MacNEIL: No. If the minister will permit me, the department offered to have this man treated in the outdoor department in Seattle, and the United States veterans' administration replied on January 5 of this year that they had no facilities available for outdoor treatment for such a severe degree of disability. That was dealt with in connection with other matters, but I am asking for some assurance that no discrimination will be made in reference to aggravation cases in regard to pay and allowances, and treatment as a class 1 patient.

Mr. POWER: I am informed, and I have some recollection of it, that the man eventually did get his treatment, did he not?

Mr. MacNEIL: He got an increased pension instead.

Mr. POWER: I can reiterate my assurance that when P.C. 91 was passed there was no intention to restrict in any way the rights which ex-soldiers had previously enjoyed, and whenever any case like that is brought to my attention I do the best I can to rectify the difficulty.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is there any arrangement with the imperial government for giving allowances to imperial ex-soldiers under this item?

Mr. POWER: As my hon. friend knows, the imperial ministry of pensions have an office in Canada, at Ottawa, and they make arrangements with their own men. Whatever arrangements are made are as between the ex-imperial soldier and the British ministry of pensions.

Item agreed to.

Services to veterans and dependents—Employers liability compensation, $40,000.

Mr. GREEN: How much of this vote was spent last year?

Mr. POWER: We expended everything but $2.60.

Mr. MacNEIL: Has the department given consideration to extending the benefits of this compensation? Several recommendations have been made in regard to widening the scope of this regulation.

Mr. POWER: I do not want to criticize any of my commissions, but when they made those recommendations I do not think they understood what this was about.

Mr. GREEN: The minister should have instructed them better.

Mr. POWER: I tried to, but still they did not understand. They seemed to think this was a form of group insurance. Frankly, as I have already stated, I do not believe very much good is done ex-service men by means of this $40,000. We pay the claims that are made on account of injuries to ex-soldiers who have been injured in industrial employment. It applies only to those who receive a 25 per cent pension or more. The recommendation, as I understood it, was that this should apply to all ex-soldiers; but under the present set-up of workmen's compensation boards throughout the whole country, as I have already said in the house, the industries are largely insured by industries, and no employer is going to take a new man into his employ simply because he has the assurance that compensation in case of injury will be paid by the government of Canada. The only people who seem to profit by it are the provincial workmen's compensation boards, who are only too glad to make claims on us. We pay the provinces; we have never done anything else. On various occasions I have said I would like to drop this vote; but for some unknown reason there is always a row about it, and it is hardly worth while. We simply give that much money to the provinces. I would say, I think, without fear of contradiction, that in the last ten years not one man has obtained employment on account of this provision.

Mr. GREEN: Would any man lose employment if it was cancelled?

Mr. POWER: I do not think so. It has been urged that perhaps some of the railways, such as the Canadian Pacific or the Canadian National, might dismiss a man who had more than a 25 per cent disability if his industrial compensation was not covered by this item. That might be so, but I doubt it very much. I do not think the railways would do that.

RADIO BROADCASTING

FINAL REPORT OF SELECT COMMITTEE PRESENTED

Mr. A. L. BEAUBIEN (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present the second and final report of the select committee on radio broadcasting. This report is unanimous, and copies are being printed in English and in French.

The select committee appointed on radio broadcasting to consider the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and to review the policies of the corporation with special reference to revenues, expenditures and development, begs leave to present the following as its second and final report:

Your committee held seven meetings and had as principal witnesses the chairman and vice chairman of the board of governors and the general manager. During seven sittings, an exhaustive examination was conducted. All information required by the committee to carry out its terms of reference was supplied, confidential information not susceptible of publication in the public interest being made available privately. The committee was impressed by the ability and frankness of the principal witnesses.

The bulk of the evidence concerned the program, technical and financial policies of the corporation. Your committee is of the opinion that these policies are well designed to carry out the purpose for which the corporation was created. Your committee is also of the opinion that the policies of the corporation are being executed in a businesslike fashion.

With respect to programs, the corporation's policy is to utilize Canadian talent in the development of Canadian programs of distinction and quality, and to make available to Canadians the best programs from the United States, Great Britain and elsewhere. With the resources at its disposal, your committee believes, the corporation can give Canada satisfactory broadcasting service, while at the same time enabling Canada to create programs worthy of exchange.

With respect to the corporation's plan of national coverage, involving the ownership of high power stations and the extension of CBC coverage to reach all parts of Canada, your committee wishes to indicate its approval. It is considered that the development of this plan is of great importance in the national interest. Your committee is of the opinion that while private stations will continue to serve a useful local purpose, the corporation urgently requires its own comprehensive facilities for distribution. At the present time, large areas of Canada, particularly in the maritimes, the prairies and British Columbia, receive somewhat scant and spasmodic service of CBC programs.

Your committee is satisfied that the financial policies of the corporation are sound and that the administration is being conducted in a prudent and efficient manner.

Your committee considered carefully the present and future revenue requirements of the corporation. It is of the opinion that present sources of revenue should be sufficient to maintain and develop the projected plan of national coverage.

With respect to revenue for capital purposes, your committee is of the opinion that consideration should be given to the provision by loan or grant, of sufficient capital funds to enable the corporation to complete its plan of national coverage at the earliest possible moment.

Your committee is of the opinion that the present scale of licence fees of $50, for privately owned broadcasting stations of hundred watts or under is adequate, but believes licence fees should be increased on higher powered stations servicing densely populated areas.

Your committee recommends that the incidence of the application of the licence fee be carefully reviewed by the Department of Transport in the light of this year's experience, with a view of effecting a reduction of the licence fees.

Your committee was impressed with the importance of the establishment, at an early date, of a high power short-wave broadcasting station. Such a station, your committee believes, would be a great utility in interpreting and advertising Canada abroad and in facilitating an exchange of programs between Canada and other broadcasting systems. Canada, your committee was informed, is the only major trading nation without such facilities. It is submitted this should be financed as a national project, operated and controlled by the corporation.

Your committee believes that the constitution of the corporation, ensuring a proper division between policy and management and a degree of flexibility and independence essential to the medium of broadcasting, together with ultimate parliamentary control, is well suited to the purpose for which it was created. Public service broadcasting in Canada must necessarily continue to be free from partisan control, and your committee is gratified to report that the activities of the CBC have been free from any nature of partisanship whatsoever. Your committee also wished to pay its tribute to the governors of the corporation for their vision, public spirit and efficient conduct of the trust imposed upon them by parliament.

In conclusion, your committee wishes to express its belief that the broadcasting system emerging in Canada is, and can increasingly be, an important factor in creating a sense of national unity and approves the general policy of concentrating on a national system of high power stations.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Government of the Northwest Territories: general administration, operation, maintenance and improvement of services, including Wood Buffalo park, $245,320.

Mr. PELLETIER: Would the minister explain the increase of $30,714.50 in this item?

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): The increase is due in part to the restoration of the salary deduction that was in effect for several years prior to last year, and to the annual statutory salary increases. There is also an increased amount for supplies and materials. In previous years practically all the government drug supplies required in the Northwest Territories were provided through the Indian Affairs branch, but under a rearrangement the Northwest Territories vote is charged with the amount this year. There is also an increased expenditure for provisions for destitute people in the Northwest Territories. Hon. members are familiar with the fur cycles in the Northwest Territories; these cycles come and go, and last year and this the cycle has been at a very low point; consequently the revenue derived by individuals from trapping has been reduced and more cases have required assistance from the administration. These are the main increases. There is also a small increase for hospitalization and an increase to restore fire fighting and other equipment at Fort Smith and Wood Buffalo park. Fort Smith is the administrative headquarters of the Mackenzie district.

Mr. PELLETIER: There has been a good deal of talk and speculation, mostly in the newspapers, concerning the desire of British Columbia to annex certain portions of northern territory. Would the minister be kind enough to make a statement concerning any negotiations which have been carried on up to the present time, and what the probable outcome will be?

Mr. CRERAR: No negotiations have taken place on the matter to which my hon. friend alludes. Any discussions with British Columbia regarding the Yukon, which I understand the hon. member includes in his question, were brought down in a return to the house several months ago.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): I see on page 112, itemized, a reduction in the number of head clerks from six to five at $3,000, $15,000; last year there were six, the amount being $16,500, a difference of $1,500. Will the minister kindly explain why the reduction is only $1,500? Were the six clerks in receipt of $3,000 each?

Mr. CRERAR: I am advised the explanation is that there is one clerk less this year.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): Yes, I see that. It is shown in the estimates. But the difference is only $1,500.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Mr. CRERAR: I am advised that the clerk who has retired was paid $1,500 retiring leave which was coming to him when he retired. That is the explanation of the difference.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): He had worked only part of the year?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. SPENCE: Where is Wood Buffalo park located?

Mr. CRERAR: Wood Buffalo park is located partly in northern Alberta and partly in the Northwest Territories on the west side of the Athabaska river. It is a very large park, set aside many years ago. I am advised that it comprises 17,300 square miles. It was set aside for the purpose of providing a sanctuary for the wood buffalo. In more recent years some buffalo from the prairies have been moved to that park. It is really a game sanctuary, located in the northern part of Alberta and, to the extent of roughly one-third, in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. PELLETIER: I mentioned a moment ago the desire of British Columbia to acquire more northern territory. That brings to mind an agitation which has been going on in parts of northern Alberta and northern British Columbia to form a new province in certain areas of those two provinces and to include in that new province certain parts of the Northwest Territories. I understand that petitions have been forwarded to the government and resolutions have been passed by various boards of trade advocating such a project. Would the minister tell us how far negotiations have gone and exactly how much there is to this agitation to form a new province by taking parts of northern Alberta, northern British Columbia and a part of the Northwest Territories? Has the matter been brought to the attention of the government? What action has been taken or what consideration is the government giving to a scheme of that kind?

Mr. CRERAR: Some petitions may have gone to the Prime Minister's office. I do not recall that any came to the Department of Mines and Resources. As my hon. friend is, of course, aware, governments receive petitions and resolutions on all sorts of questions. I am aware only through the press that there has been some discussion in part of Alberta emphasizing the importance and desirability of creating a new province in that part of Canada. I would doubt if the circumstances are such as to warrant the greatly increased expenditure which such an undertaking would involve. All I can say is that I am certain that no negotiations have taken place, although I should think it possible that some petitions or resolutions may have found their way to the office of some department of government.

Mr. PELLETIER: I quite agree with the minister. My opinion is that we have a sufficient number of governments in Canada at the present time without creating any more: We have enough taxing bodies, without adding devices to increase taxation. I do admit, however, that eventually, when development has progressed, the time may come when such a new division of territory will be required in Canada for the purposes of administration. But what I wanted to know from the minister was if there were any official negotiations, and I understand there are none—simply resolutions passed by various organizations demanding consideration of this problem. I agree with the minister that perhaps it is a matter for future consideration, but that at the present time the country has not developed sufficiently to justify consideration of the formation of a new province in that part of Canada.

Mr. CRERAR: Of course no such step could be taken without legislation passed by this parliament. Whenever the time comes, if it is ever considered, it will have to be approved by parliament.

Mr. PELLETIER: To put the matter simply, there has been no official communication to that effect?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Mr. STIRLING: Have the Eskimos begun yet to make use of the reindeer for food and clothing?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes. The reports that we get of the value of the reindeer quite support the view which was held when they were originally introduced to that part of the Northwest Territories. They are providing not only food but clothing. Consideration is being given to providing some of the more advanced Eskimos with a few head of reindeer with a view to domesticating the animals, as has happened in certain parts of Europe.

Mr. STIRLING: That was the idea originally, was it not?

Mr. CRERAR: I do not know that any concrete steps have yet been taken with regard to it. I understand that a small experiment is to be carried on in that direction this year. We are using the Eskimo wherever possible in herding the deer and looking after them, and in that way they are getting an acquaintanceship with them which, we hope, ultimately will bring about a condition whereunder the Eskimos will have their own small herds and be dependent upon them. Not only can they get food and clothing by this means, but they probably can use them for transportation purposes, as they are used, I believe, in Lapland.

Mr. STIRLING: Are the reindeer being allowed to spread and breed and so populate the areas further north?

Mr. CRERAR: No, up to the present time they have all been kept in herd. That has to be done in order to protect them from the wolves, and to build up the herd.

Mr. PERLEY: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a request which I have had from the young men's section of the Saskatoon board of trade to convey to the government their desire to retain a certain wild life exhibit in Prince Albert national park. I can place the case before the minister best by reading a letter I have received from the young men's section of the Saskatoon board of trade. It is addressed to myself and is as follows:

> This exhibit is of great educational value and has proven an outstanding attraction for tourists and visitors to the park. We understand that Mr. Lund has received offers for his exhibit from United States interests and we believe that if no action to retain it is taken by the dominion government, it will be lost to Canada.
> We feel that the dominion government should consider, as part of their policy to build museums throughout Canada, the possibility of constructing a building at the Prince Albert national park. Arrangements could be made with Mr. Lund for his exhibit and for himself to act as curator.
> If this suggestion is carried out, the exhibit could be moved for the winter months to some larger centre in Saskatchewan for the benefit of winter visitors.
> We strongly protest the action taken in asking Mr. Lund to remove his exhibit from the park and would greatly appreciate any assistance you may be able to give to have this fine exhibit retained in Canada and in Saskatchewan.

Can the minister give us any information with regard to this matter? Would they consider retaining that exhibit? It seems to be of great value from the tourist point of view.

Mr. CRERAR: The information in the letter read by my hon. friend is not quite correct. Mr. Lund was not asked to remove the exhibit from the park. There were some negotiations with him with regard to the amount of money he should receive. The park officials thought the consideration he was asking was rather large, and, of course, if they had been unable to get together the exhibit would have been removed. But arrangements have been made with Mr. Lund to leave the exhibit in the park on the same terms as last year. The matter will be before me probably to-morrow, I am advised by my officials, and the arrangement will be carried through on that basis. The exhibit will remain in the park on the same basis as last year. There was no request to Mr. Lund to remove it from the park. I wish to make that very clear. There was a difference as to the amount of consideration that Mr. Lund thought he was entitled to, but that has been smoothed out in the way I have indicated.

Mr. PERLEY: My letter is dated May 3.

Mr. CRERAR: That probably explains it.

Mr. HAYHURST: How many reindeer are in the Northwest Territories at the present time and what success has been achieved?

Mr. CRERAR: Will the hon. member be good enough to speak louder. There is a lot of talking going on.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I would request that there be less talking among hon: members. It is difficult to hear those who are speaking.

Mr. HAYHURST: I was asking whether the minister could tell us the number of reindeer in the Northwest Territories at the present time.

Mr. CRERAR: A few months ago on the last report there were over 4,000. When they were brought into the region east of the Mackenzie delta there were 2,300 odd in the herd and that has increased now, according to the last report, to something over 4,000. The fawning season is on now.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): Will the minister please give me a breakdown of hospitalization, professional and other special services, grants to schools, assistance to industrial homes, $54,810? What does "professional and other special services" mean? Would that be medical and dental services?

Mr. CRERAR: These are the figures for Anglican missions: Hospitals, $13,245; day schools, $1,537—I am giving only the dollars—residential schools, $9,137, a total of $23,919. For the Roman Catholic missions in the western Arctic: hospitals, $10,877; day schools, $1,750; residential schools, $10,360, or a total of $22,987. There is just a little less than $1,000 difference in the amounts contributed under the various headings to the Church of England and the Roman Catholic missions.

Mr. PELLETIER: There has been a great deal of development in the mining areas in the Northwest Territories in recent years, and one of the great difficulties is the matter of hospitalization and medical assistance. I know that the government has been kind enough to give grants to various institutions that are carrying on that work; nevertheless the minister will undoubtedly agree with me that with the intensive development of the Northwest Territories additional hospitalization should be provided. Conditions in that part of Canada are not as elsewhere. The people are situated many hundreds of miles from any medical assistance whatever, and because of the value which northern mining has added to Canada's wealth I believe it is a matter which the department should seriously consider. Perhaps the minister would give an outline of present hospitalization plans which are fostered by the department in the Northwest Territories, at what places they are functioning, and the services they are rendering.

Mr. CRERAR: It is rather difficult to give any precise information at the moment. Mining development in the Northwest Territories is taking place of course, in the Great Bear Lake region where the Eldorado mines operate, and to the north of Great Slave lake in what is known as the Yellowknife country. The Eldorado mines have their own doctor at the mine and a small hospital with a few beds to look after those who may be suffering illness. That service, however, is confined almost entirely to their own employees. Outside that, the population in that particular area is small. When we come to the Slave lake country we find that development is only in its initial stages. The question is being studied by the officers and the council of the Northwest Territories administration, to make provision for what may be necessary in that regard. We aim to get the administration of these things on the most efficient basis possible. We are trying to plan a little ahead.

Mr. PELLETIER: The policy of the department in the past I believe has been to provide hospitalization for the Indians and the Eskimo in the northern part of the country by giving assistance to various missions. I commend the government for that. But I point out that times are changing, mining development is increasing, and now there are others in that country who perhaps have a claim on the department for additional assistance so far as hospitals and medical service are concerned. Some mining companies maintain their own doctors, who can render assistance in case of emergency; nevertheless in order to encourage development and take care of the people coming into the north country, including the increasing number of prospectors who go in on their own, not for any company, facilities should be provided at certain points. I believe at present there is an opening for a doctor attached to the Northwest Territories administration. Does the department intend to fill that position? Instead of curtailing the services the department should realize the increasing needs and enlarge the services it has provided in the past.

Mr. CRERAR: We do not ourselves operate hospitals in the Northwest Territories; they are built either by the Anglican or by the Roman Catholic missions. In some cases we give a grant to assist in construction. For Indian patients and indigents who receive treatment in the hospitals we pay a per diem charge to the hospital. It is probable that a doctor will be appointed to the Fort Norman district before very long; the matter is now under consideration.

Mr. HANSELL: Does the construction and maintenance of highways in the national parks come under this item?

Mr. CRERAR: It comes under a later item.

Mr. PERLEY: Who makes the appointments in the national parks? Are they generally made through the recommendation of private members?

Mr. CRERAR: Practically all the appointments on the clerical and engineering staffs and that sort of thing are under the civil service commission certification. The expenditures under special supplementary estimates, and prior to that under the Public Works Construction Act of the late government, were exempt from the civil service commission's jurisdiction. Then there is another class, the labourers in the parks, who are not under the civil service commission. I can assure my hon. friend that we endeavour always to get the most capable men we can.

Mr. PERLEY: But who makes the appointments?

Mr. CRERAR: The appointments are made in the way they have been made for many years past. They are made by the superintendents and by the engineers.

Mr. BARBER: Are they not made by the minister?

Mr. CRERAR: Sometimes on the approval of the minister, but I can assure my hon. friend that the practice in that respect is precisely what it was before.

Mr. PERLEY: Does the recommendation of a private member go very far?

Mr. CRERAR: Sometimes it is considered.

Mr. PERLEY: I think I have evidence that the private member's recommendation does not go very far. I have here a photograph of a letter signed by an hon. member of this house. It is dated April 8, 1937, addressed to Fred Duval, and reads as follows:

Dear Fred:

I have your letter of recent date re a position in the national park.

In reply, may I say that the only way you can get a position in the national park is to be recommended by the Prince Albert federal Liberal executive. I cannot see why anyone writes to any of the federal members of Saskatchewan about a position in Prince Albert national park when there has not been one position given in the park outside of the Prince Albert riding since it was started. Any person who tells you that anything else is different is just "passing the buck." That is all. Will you kindly go to the president of the federal Liberal executive of Prince Albert and take up the matter with him to see what can be done. That is the only way action can be got.

An hon. MEMBER: Who signed that?

Mr. PERLEY: It is signed "Cameron R. McIntosh."

Mr. CRERAR: I have no doubt that my hon. friend will place that in his archives and look at it occasionally with some satisfaction. I know nothing of the letter; this is the first time I have heard of it. But I repeat what I said a moment ago, which is as patent to the hon. member as to many other hon. members of the house, that the appointments in Prince Albert park are made in precisely the same way as they were made during the regime of the late government. In fact I would say there has been a substantial improvement as to the methods.

Mr. SPENCE: More Liberal appointments now.

Mr. CRERAR: No, no. This question may have its lighter aspects, but probably no one knows better than the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) the procedure which has usually obtained in these appointments. We do aim as far as possible to get those who are unemployed, and to the best of my knowledge there has not been discrimination in that respect.

Mr. PERLEY: This letter just sets out the procedure in getting appointments. Possibly some Liberal members from Saskatchewan can say how they are making out when they make recommendations.

Mr. MacNEIL: To what extent has it been possible under that method of making appointments to maintain the preference for ex-service men?

Mr. CRERAR: As far as my knowledge goes that preference has been maintained.

Mr. STEWART: The minister I am sure will forgive me if I again remind him of the importance of establishing a national park on the Thousand islands in the St. Lawrence river adjacent to the fine new international bridge that is being constructed there, and which will be opened in August. I cannot add much to what I have already said in that connection. The attraction in connection with the tourist traffic cannot be over-emphasized. A very large proportion of the population of the United States and Canada is situated within three hundred miles of this bridge, which will be about eight miles long from one bridgehead to the other. In that eight miles is of course included a considerable mileage of highway, there being five or six spans in the bridge. Representations have been made to the minister, I know, from different sources in this connection, and the one thing I do urge upon him is prompt action in connection with the securing of Hill island as part of this park. It has been recommended that a number of other islands be secured also.

Mr. CRERAR: Who owns that island?

Mr. STEWART: It is used as farm land. There are no very valuable houses on it; the assessment is low; the valuation cannot be very high, but in the meantime interests may be created, purchases may take place that will make the acquisition of that land a more expensive matter than at the present time. If this property is to be preserved from commercialization for undesirable purposes, this very beautiful bit of scenery in the heart of the Thousand islands, it is absolutely necessary that some action be taken, and I suggest that the minister consider the matter.

I am aware that in the main the policy of the department is that the provinces acquire the land to be used for national parks, and turn it over to the dominion, but a return was brought down showing that in several cases land has been expropriated directly by the dominion government for park purposes. This return is sessional paper No. 242, brought down on April 25, 1938. The question was whether the dominion government has purchased or acquired by expropriation any lands for public park purposes since the year 1900; if so, what lands were purchased, where they were located and what price or compensation was paid for them in each case. That return covers nearly two pages and shows that in a number of cases the government has expropriated land, thus making an exception to the general rule that the land must be acquired by the provinces and turned over to the dominion. Land has been acquired in the Riding Mountain park for that purpose. In Georgian bay twenty-nine islands were purchased at a cost of $30,000. Then in the same area, I think, there was an exchange of land for other land. Land was purchased for the national historic park area at Louisburg in Nova Scotia at a cost of $23,250. At Banff national park lands were acquired in exchange; at Buffalo park and Elk island land was purchased costing $4,000. Then in British Columbia, in the Kootenay district, land was expropriated, and in the St. Lawrence area islands have been acquired from the Indian department. I understand, and in fact I know, that the policy of the government has been that islands in the St. Lawrence are preserved for park purposes, and inasmuch as Hill island was originally, as I recall it, the property of the dominion and was sold by the dominion, possibly being Indian land, I suggest that there is perhaps a little additional obligation on the dominion to contribute to the establishment of this park.

The minister has promised to go with one or two of his colleagues in the near future and look over the situation. I hope when he does so he will be favourably impressed, and in the meantime I urge that he consider the wisdom, almost the necessity, of issuing notice of expropriation in connection with this one island. There is not so much hurry about the others, not so much danger that they may be commercialized or that values will increase by any transfers that may be made in the meantime anticipating that ultimately the government will acquire the land for park purposes.

Mr. CRERAR: The point my hon. friend raises is rather interesting. Of course the practice has been that in connection with what are really national park areas the provincial governments supply the land that is to be converted into the national parks. So far as I am aware there have been no exceptions to that rule in the strict sense. My hon. friend has cited some instances from a report brought down in the house earlier this session. In western Canada, for instance, I know of several parks that are under the administration of the national parks branch which really were secured as wild animal sanctuaries. For example, when the small herd of buffalo were brought back to Canada from Montana in order to preserve that distinctly national animal in this country, an area was set aside at Wainwright; but that was wholly a dominion government undertaking. Strictly speaking Wainwright, and Elk island as well, are not national parks in the real sense of the word; rather they are sanctuaries for the perpetuation and maintenance of certain types of animals which otherwise might become extinct. I have not the particulars of the other cases at the moment, but probably some equally good explanation would be available as to why the federal government spent money to acquire either new areas or additions to existing parks. Some of these matters really had to do with Indian lands, I think.

If the principle were adopted in this particular case—and I am not urging this at the moment as a reason for saying "no" to my hon. friend's request—the question would be raised at once in other parts of Canada. For instance, at the present moment New Brunswick is studying the question of recommending a suitable area in that province to the general parks administration. A few years ago Nova Scotia spent a very considerable sum of money in acquiring an area which could be turned over for development as a national park, and I think we have to adhere pretty strictly to that principle. Under that rule in practice, quite obviously if the area to which my hon. friend refers is desirable for national park purposes it should be secured by the government of Ontario.

As my hon. friend probably knows, we have a number of islands in the St. Lawrence river at the present time, a dozen or so, which constitute a national park, and I understand the request to be that Hill island be secured and added to those we already have. I propose along with one or two of my colleagues, if I can induce them to go with me, to visit that district just as soon as we can get a little relaxation from the strenuous work of the house. It is my intention personally to examine the problems the hon. member has raised.

Mr. STEWART: With further reference to the suggestion that the province should acquire land for this purpose, I wish to point out that a new highway is being constructed for a good many miles along the river front, leaving a narrow fringe of what is really park land between the highway and the river. I understand that the provincial government is going to acquire and set apart that fringe for just this very purpose, namely to prevent commercialization and the destruction of natural scenery. That would be the provincial contribution. Under these circumstances I believe I might very fairly urge that the dominion make a similar contribution.

The return to which I have referred reveals that fourteen islands in the St. Lawrence between Brockville and Kingston were acquired in 1904. There is an acreage shown of 180·8, and an expropriation and purchase price of $9,150. I know these are the islands to which the minister refers as having been set apart for park purposes. Pavilions and small wharves have been established upon them; they are open and accessible to the public and are very much appreciated. A great number of people use them.

I find another item with respect to twenty-nine islands in Georgian bay, acquired in 1929. Those islands had an acreage of 2,959·47 and a purchase price of $30,205. I am not familiar with the Georgian bay islands, but I do know that the islands in the St. Lawrence are suitable only for park purposes. They are not game preserves, or anything of that kind, but are connected with the tourist business, a business which all governments are seeking to promote and develop. The federal government has placed great emphasis upon the value of that business.

I am glad to learn the minister intends to make the trip in the near future, because I am sure nothing but a visit to the place will give him a proper conception of the situation. I trust when he does go and has an opportunity to review the whole situation he will be convinced that in the interests of the dominion, and following the precedent which has been set in other cases, there is justification for acquiring at least this one island. Representations have been made that many of the islands should be acquired, and that course is no doubt desirable; but for the present Hill island is the one which should be kept in mind. Steps should be taken to prevent an artificial increase in value between now and the time the government takes it over. I say that because I am sure some government will take it over.

While the general policy is that the province should provide park sites, this case is exceptional. We know that the St. Lawrence river is exceptional in that it is an international stream. The federal government has acquired islands in circumstances similar to these. I am informed the government of the United States is doing something along the same line on the part of the highway which is in that country. Some of the islands desirable for the same purpose are located in the United States. I am assured that the proper authorities in that country are taking steps to establish these islands as national parks, and have indicated a willingness to cooperate with the dominion government in that connection.

I thank the minister for his promise to visit the area, and I am hopeful that when he does understand the whole situation he will become convinced that while it may be necessary to make an exception, action here similar to that taken in connection with other islands in the St. Lawrence and in Georgian bay would be justified.

Mr. CRERAR: I appreciate what the hon. member has said, and would add for the information of the committee that the islands to which he referred in the St. Lawrence river and in Georgian bay were held by the Indians, and in effect there were transfers from the Indians to a government department. They were not acquired from private interests, according to the advice I have received. I assure the hon. member I will give consideration to the representations he has made.

Mr. STEWART: My only reason for making the statement was that in the return I find the expression "expropriation and purchase"; the word "purchase" is used.

Mr. CRERAR: Of course a sum of money had to be paid to the Indians.

Mr. STEWART: Exactly, although I do not know that that makes much difference.

Mr. STIRLING: The road at the east side of the Big Bend highway on the Columbia river was built by the dominion government because that road lay within the park. To what point is the public allowed to drive cars? Is the bridge erected at the north, where the Canoe river comes in?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: How far can the tourists drive north, across the river and then south?

Mr. CRERAR: I cannot give the precise distance.

Mr. STEVENS: About ninety miles.

Mr. CRERAR: I should think a tourist might go ten or fifteen miles.

Mr. STEVENS: More than that.

Mr. STIRLING: From the north?

Mr. CRERAR: From where the bridge crosses the river at the extreme northern point. That is more or less a guess on my part. Part of the road which is under construction tourists are not encouraged to use. But I can assure the hon. member that from Donald to Canoe river the road is in first class condition. I have been over it myself. May I call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have before us the item respecting the administration of the Northwest Territories. There are several other items under which parks administration could be discussed.

[Mr. Stewart.]

Mr. HAYHURST: Has the government under consideration the addition of Cooking Lake forest reserve to the Elk Island national park?

Mr. CRERAR: I understand some discussion in that connection has taken place with the responsible minister in Alberta.

Item agreed to.

Eastern Arctic expedition, $27,000.

Mr. NEILL: Perhaps the minister would tell us what is to be done in the eastern Arctic?

Mr. CRERAR: This item concerns chiefly the Royal Canadian Mounted Police posts maintained in the far north to exercise our sovereignty over the country. The Hudson's Bay Company take in supplies to the eastern Arctic every year, and we have an arrangement with them whereby the supplies to be sent in for the mounted police, for hospitals, for scientific expeditions and scientific purposes, are carried on the Hudson's Bay Company's boat. The arrangement is one that we consider quite satisfactory for the government. This item is practically all for that purpose.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minister give the assurance that there is no effective challenge of Canada's sovereignty over that vast northern area? I ask the question because we frequently see in periodicals of other countries reference to expeditions, the language of which would indicate that they consider that territory as open, not attached to any country, whereas my understanding is that Canada claims full sovereignty over the area lying in the Arctic north of Canada. It is a subject that I think should not be allowed to drift, and a frank declaration from the minister now would not be harmful. I have no desire to criticize or to press the matter further than to request a statement from the minister.

Mr. CRERAR: I know of no challenge that has been made to Canada's occupancy or ownership of the whole area lying to the north. Certainly when any person from any other country desires to fly over that area or visit it, the permission of the Canadian government is first asked. The principles upon which sovereignty has been claimed over the area in the remote north which may not have been visited by man, say between the northern shores of Baffin Land and the pole, have been fairly clearly established in international usage, and under those principles, according to the advice that is given to me, Canada's position in regard to this area can, I think, be regarded as secure. Certainly at the present time no challenge has been made so far as I am aware to our right of occupancy and ownership of the area in question.

Mr. STEVENS: Is Wrangel island in Canadian territory?

Mr. CRERAR: No, Wrangel island is Russian territory.

Mr. STEVENS: We have admitted that?

Mr. CRERAR: I am advised that we never claimed it.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Would the minister state whether any new occupancy is being entered upon by the northwest mounted police?

Mr. CRERAR: There is a police post at Craig harbour on Ellesmere island; Bache peninsula port was the most northerly that has been established, although they have been further north than that, I am advised, and planted a flag or erected a mound or something of the kind on that territory. I think our possession of the territory is pretty clearly established. We have some mounted police there; my colleague the Minister of Justice tells me that they always carry out their duties very thoroughly and completely, and I have no doubt that our interests are fully protected.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): The point is whether you consider the occupation complete enough to justify yourself in the minds of other governments.

Mr. CRERAR: I think the fact that they apply to us for permission to go into or fly over the territory is a recognition of our sovereignty. When the Russian flyers, for example, came over the North Pole and succeeded in getting as far as California, and another expedition that was lost last August, I think it was, wished to fly over that territory, they applied in both cases to the Canadian government for permission, which I would consider a more or less formal recognition of our rights in this region.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Do our friends to the south also ask the same privilege?

Mr. CRERAR: Oh, yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Is there not international recognition of the fact that we have a sort of sovereignty over the triangle bounded by the Alaska-Yukon line, continued to the pole, and then to the west coast of Greenland? Is not that internationally accepted?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes. What is known as the sector principle, in the determination of these areas is now very generally recognized, and on the basis of that principle as well our sovereignty extends right to the pole within the limits of the sector. My own view is that our supremacy there is established to a point where it could not be successfully challenged by any other country. I do not know that I can add anything further.

Item agreed to.

Government of the Yukon territory: administration, $48,000.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to embarrass the government or delay the estimates but I should like to seek information as to the method employed or that should be employed in connection with the proposed transfer of the Yukon to the British Columbia government. The correspondence was brought down in the house, and while I have not it before me at the moment my recollection is that it consisted of one or two quite casual letters between the premier of British Columbia and the minister, dealing with the matter very much along the line that might be followed by a man buying a city lot. One man asks the other how much he will pay for it, and the other man says that is not enough, then there were some negotiations, and finally they agreed to take over the Yukon, as I said, like a man buying a city lot. Is there no custom of law or comity of nations by which the people are consulted when their territory is handed over to another jurisdiction? I cannot find from my observation in British Columbia that the province wanted the Yukon, and there is considerable evidence that the Yukon does not want us. Are not the common people, who after all are the people concerned, to be consulted before anything like that goes through? What is the situation?

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is aware that no transfer of the Yukon to British Columbia can take place without appropriate legislation by this parliament and appropriate legislation by the legislature of British Columbia. The matter is not terminated with the exchange of letters that was tabled in the house some time ago. As I recall now, and I think I am correct, the suggestion was made that the matter might rest until after the Rowell commission had reported. I do not recall whether it is in the correspondence or not. The premier of British Columbia has made the suggestion that British Columbia should be extended eastward to take in part of the present Mackenzie river basin. However, so far as the people being consulted is concerned, they would be consulted in the way that they are consulted in respect of any legislation passing through either this house or the legislature of British Columbia; that is, before the transfer could be effective, legislation would be required not only in the federal parliament but in the legislature of British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: There did not appear in the correspondence any evidence of consulting anybody. It cannot be sold off like a sack or a ton of coals. It was said, "For a fixed sum you can have the Yukon." There was no suggestion about any local jurisdiction in the Yukon, for instance. It seems as though two hon. members got together and the one sold the property and the other agreed to take it over for a lump sum.

Mr. CRERAR: I can assure my hon. friend that it was not so casual as that. The plain fact of the matter is, of course, that any arrangement which might be entered into between the federal government and the government of British Columbia could not be made effective until the appropriate legislation had been passed in both jurisdictions.

Mr. NEILL: And would the Yukon council be consulted?

Mr. CRERAR: Not necessarily.

Mr. NEILL: "Not necessarily"?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Mr. NEILL: Well then, where do the people's rights come in?

Mr. CRERAR: I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. NEILL: Where do the people's rights come in?

Mr. CRERAR: Well, that is a question. While my hon. friend says they might not be consulted—

Mr. STIRLING: The minister said that.

Mr. CRERAR: —I say that any representations made by the Yukon council or any other interest in the Yukon would be given full consideration. But if the hon. member meant his question to imply that their consent was necessary, then I say it would not be required.

Mr. NEILL: I hope we won't wake up some morning and find you have traded off British Columbia to the States without our knowing anything about it.

Mr. CRERAR: I can assure my hon. friend that should there be any project of that kind he will have plenty of notice so that there will be opportunity to raise a protest.

[Mr. Crerar.]

Mr. STEVENS: Now that the question has been raised regarding even any remote consideration of the taking over or absorption of the Yukon into the province of British Columbia, I certainly wish to register a very strong protest against the matter being advanced to any great extent without its being fully discussed in parliament—I mean, in advance of legislation. Because if the government of the dominion and the government of British Columbia come to a definite understanding and each one presents a bill before its legislature, obviously the government stands or falls by the passage of that bill.

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. STEVENS: The whole subject then becomes merely a question of the government securing the support of its partisans in the House of Commons, which is an entirely wrong basis upon which a matter of this kind should be considered or discussed. I am disturbed by the answers the minister has given about the paucity of discussion or consultation; therefore, I wish to say a few words on the subject at this time.

In the first place the administration of the Yukon over the years, and certainly for a great many years past, has been marked by a degree of efficiency and economy which is highly commendable. In a sense it is a small thing for the dominion, and the department might conclude that if they could shuffle it off upon some other authority they would be pleased to do it. But that is not the way in which the matter should be approached. The fact remains that there has been effective, sane and economic administration of Yukon affairs. While it is remote, it is a part of the country which has very considerable significance. In the past it has produced much wealth, and as the years go by and the movement is northward, as all who are acquainted with western and indeed general Canadian problems expect it to be, the Yukon will become more and more important. Its wealth possibilities are considerable, and not only in respect of minerals. The experiments which are being carried on by the United States, although in their initial stages they may not be wholly successful, indicate the existence of other possibilities.

The other side of the picture is this: British Columbia is an exceedingly large province, and that section of it, constituting at least half, which lies north of the Canadian National Railway is very sparsely developed. It is now entering upon an era of development, and so far as the province is concerned it has a vast territory of new country where it can expand its energies, and its surplus wealth if it has any, and its powers of administration. In my opinion there are no sound economic reasons for the amalgamation at the present time of the Yukon and British Columbia. The other side, the human side of the story, ought to be considered. In the last forty years or more there has grown up in the Yukon a population which, although small in comparison to the rest of the country, has its rights, its peculiar sentiments and attachments, and certainly should not be disturbed unless it so wishes. The opportunity of handing over a comparatively small responsibility, administratively speaking, to the province should not be a determining factor. The determining factors should be economic advantage, whether economies can be made, and most important of all whether the people of the Yukon themselves desire it.

The Yukon is not a burden upon this country. The idea that it is has, in my belief, no foundation. It has produced a tremendous amount of wealth and will produce a great deal more. May I add that the officials, not only those who are carrying on at this time but those who for many years back have been attached, here in Ottawa, to the Yukon administration, and Yukon councils past and present, deserve a measure of commendation for their administrative work.

It would be most unfortunate and unfair if the question should be approached in the way indicated in the correspondence cited by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill).

Mrs. BLACK: I wish to thank the last speaker (Mr. Stevens) for his very kind words. Naturally this is a subject about which I feel very keenly, having resided in that territory for forty years this month. There has been, as the hon. member who last spoke pointed out, a mistaken idea that the Yukon has been a burden to this country. It is not so. I have seen year after year in the estimates certain parts of the expenses of British Columbia lumped in with the expenses of the Yukon—for instance, the telegraph line. The telegraph line in the Yukon begins midway between Atlin and White Horse, but we pay for the telegraph line in that vast hinterland of British Columbia. For the last forty years we in the Yukon have had almost no crime. People who come from the coast in British Columbia, reading their papers as they are published day after day, will see reports of horrible crimes committed by boys and girls ranging from twelve to twenty years. We have nothing of that sort in the Yukon. Our children are put to work. They have to work or they go hungry; that is all there is to it. The boys and girls born in that country know that they have to work for their living, if they do nothing but shoot game in the winter for the family table. In that way they learn to be self-reliant. Those of us who are in the Yukon, if there were a thought of annexation with some province that carried itself, that was not head over heels in debt, might feel interested. But I should like to know what we have to gain when somebody comes and says, "We will take you over so that you can clear off part of our debt." You do not see that in ordinary business life and certainly we do not want it in the life of our great northern country.

We have no fault to find with government as it is carried on in the north. We have had no complaints since the early days when the Yukon was so far out of the world that people who went there thought that they could do almost anything. Government has been carried on decently and honestly and as economically as possible. In the early days we went in over the trail on foot. We climbed those mountains and came down the waters of the lakes and rivers and went down in small boats. We became self-reliant. We knew what it was to get along without many of the amenities of so-called civilized life, and our children who live there now, though they may have the benefit of electricity and running water, still know that they must carry on as their parents did if they wish to accomplish anything in life.

As I have said so many times before, if we are only let alone to work out our own salvation we shall be a credit to the government of Canada as we have been in the past. We shall take pride in our government, I do not care on which side it sits. We simply want to work out our own salvation with the very small amount of help that we have had for many years. Individually we may not care for those who are administering the territory at this time, or that time, or at some other time; but no matter what our personal feeling is I am free to stand here and say that as far as humanly possible the administration of the territory, whether under Liberal or under Conservative government, has been decent, fair, square and honest. All I ask of the government is that they allow it to remain so, and not to trade us to any province that is head over heels in debt.

Mr. GREEN: What is the attitude of the dominion government, as the governmental body in charge of the Yukon, towards the proposal to build a highway from the state of Washington to Alaska?

Mr. CRERAR: I do not know that we have any particular views on that question. It is regarded as a British Columbia matter. I suppose if British Columbia can borrow money, and wants to build a highway through the province with the cash it gets, that is its affair, and I do not think the federal government would have any right to intervene.

Mr. STEVENS: Would not the federal government have a right to intervene if the money were supplied by and in agreement with a foreign country?

Mr. CRERAR: I did not refer to money being supplied by a foreign country. I presume that if British Columbia borrowed money in a foreign country in the ordinary way it would be their money to do with as they pleased.

Mr. STEVENS: It would not be in the ordinary way.

Mr. GREEN: What about the Yukon? The road would have to go through the Yukon, and so far as the Yukon is concerned that is of concern to the dominion government. What would be the attitude of the dominion government towards such a road being built through the Yukon?

Mr. CRERAR: If the British Columbia government wished to build a road through a small part of the Yukon to reach its ultimate end, I do not think any question would be raised about that.

Mr. GREEN: Would the dominion government be willing to cooperate in the building of such a road through the Yukon?

Mr. CRERAR: That is a question of government policy and I am sure my hon. friend does not expect me to reply to it.

Mr. GREEN: The minister said he would be willing to allow British Columbia to build the road.

Mr. CRERAR: I said that if British Columbia went into the money market and borrowed money to build a road from the southern to the northern boundary of the province, that would be British Columbia's affair, not ours.

Mr. GREEN: Even if it were a military road?

Mr. CRERAR: I cannot conceive why British Columbia would be building a military road. They would be building what is termed the Alaska highway.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister conceive why the Americans would want to build a military highway?

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. CRERAR: That is another question upon which I have no opinion to express. It is a question of public policy which is not germane to the discussion of the estimate before us.

Mr. GREEN: The sum and substance of it is that so far as the Yukon's part in such a highway is concerned, the dominion knows nothing about the plan, has not had it under consideration, and has no ideas at all. Is that correct?

Mr. CRERAR: Speaking for myself, all I know about the matter is what I have seen in the newspapers. I can assure my hon. friend that the federal government is not considering the expenditure involved in the building of a highway through British Columbia to the Yukon, or in the Yukon section of it, for that matter. If I were to hint at such a thing, even in the most remote manner, the Minister of Finance would demand my head on a charger at once; consequently I can assure the hon. gentleman that the government is not considering the possibility of embarking on that enterprise.

Mr. FINN: I was very much interested in the remarks of the hon. member for the Yukon (Mrs. Black). When the matter was once up in the house before—it was in the house, not in committee—I expressed the hope that, the occasion being Mrs. Black's birthday, she would long live to represent the Yukon in this house, and I very much regret to hear that she has made up her mind that she will not sit for the Yukon after this parliamentary term. I hope that decision is not irrevocable.

The absorption of the Yukon territory by British Columbia is not a matter for British Columbia alone; it is a matter for all the provinces of Canada, and one that would have to be considered by the government of Canada in relation to all the provinces. When the two new provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were carved out, they were carved out of public domain that belonged to the whole of Canada, and the development from east to west has come up to expectations so far as the problem of transportation through the provinces to the coast is concerned. When the Yukon is tired of governing itself it should have something to say about the matter. I would add that when the people there are tired of self-government they should hand back that territory to be part of the public domain of Canada. We in the maritimes were not adjacent to any of this territory in the west, formerly part of the federal domain, out of which the great provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were carved, or the hinterland given to Ontario, or that strip of country extending up to Hudson bay given to Manitoba, or that country rich in timber and water powers, Ungava, given to the province of Quebec. We had to sit by and keep our hands in our pockets for fear that what little we had might be extracted at the same time. We do not desire a further condition of that kind to arise. We hope the hon. member for the Yukon will come back representing the Yukon. Let them hand the land back to Canada as part of the public domain, and then this parliament will decide what to do in the light of the respective interests of all the provinces.

Item agreed to.

Dominion forest service—general scientific, economic and administrative services, $131,660.

Mr. SPENCE: Why is there a large increase in this item?

Mr. CRERAR: Last year part of the expense under this vote was in special supplementaries; this year it is included in the main vote. The combined total last year was a little in excess of the amount in the main estimate which we are considering at the moment.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Has this forestry service any control over the forests of the provinces? For instance in connection with the importance of forests to the watersheds of the country, and the large depletion of pulpwood in Ontario, is there any control over the cutting down of trees by the department, or over the export of raw pulpwood from Ontario?

Mr. CRERAR: The provinces control their resources and consequently control the timber. But there have been five areas set aside where forestry experimental work is carried on under this department. In addition certain national parks are of considerable area and contain substantial forests. However the forest resources of a commercial kind are in the main under the control of the provinces. I understand they are at liberty to permit the export of pulp made from the wood cut in these forests if they wish. As far as I am aware no restriction has been put upon them in that respect.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Can the minister tell the committee how long the pulpwood resources of Ontario will last at the present rate of depletion?

Mr. CRERAR: I am sorry I cannot give that information.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The Canada Year Book says that the depletion of the forests of Canada is about four billion cubic feet per annum. Has the minister any idea what the annual increase is? Is it true that we are cutting down in Canada about seventy years' growth for every year's growth that we replace?

Mr. CRERAR: I do not know how accurate that estimate of annual depletion is. The total depletion each year, including that cut and that destroyed by fire and insects, and particularly the annual increment, are very difficult to determine.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is it not very important to Canada to know with fair accuracy what the depletion of our pulpwood is? We have mills dependent on the supply; we are at present exporting raw pulpwood to the United States to be manufactured into paper in competition with that produced in this country. Is there no way we can find that out?

Mr. CRERAR: The total annual depletion, caused by cutting, fire and insects, and timber past maturity and merchantable condition through age, has been estimated at about 3,800 million cubic feet. I do not see here any estimate as to the annual increment.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Closely connected with the depletion of our forests is the effect upon our watersheds and navigable waters. Has the government no control of the forests in that regard? What cooperation is there between the dominion and the provinces with respect to fire prevention activities and generally in connection with the depletion of our forests?

Mr. CRERAR: There is no division of responsibility between the provincial and federal governments either for protection from fire or for protection of watersheds. The timber resources are under the control of the various provinces. We could not go to the provinces of Quebec or British Columbia and say to them: You must administer your forests in such and such fashion. That is outside of our power. As far as fire prevention is concerned the federal government has for several years made a study of fire hazards and the conditions under which the fire hazard increases in our forests. It has been a scientific study, and very useful results have been obtained; so useful, in fact, that the data gathered in this way through our forest experimental work has been made available to provincial governments and also to private companies operating timber limits for the purpose of manufacturing lumber, pulp or the like. In many cases they have made practical use, with very beneficial results, of the data that we were able to supply as a result of the experimental work done in this way.

The general question raised by my hon. friend is of quite considerable importance. Without doubt there is much destruction by fire each year, and through publicity work of one kind and another we have endeavoured to impress upon the Canadian people the importance of guarding against forest fires. I think I am correct in saying that eighty per cent of the fires that destroy our forests have their origin in the carelessness of some human being. The only way to overcome that, I suppose, or at any rate one way to help overcome it, is by impressing upon the people in every way possible the importance of exercising care if they are travelling through the woods; if they are camping, or if their activities are such that they may be the means of starting a fire in our forests. All that work we are endeavouring to do. We give a grant, as will be noted under a later item, for the purpose of spreading popular education through the Canadian Forestry Association. It is only a small amount, but that association derives some of its support from private sources. In all these ways our department is doing what it can not only to aid the industry but also to create that wider public opinion that will have its effect in lowering the percentage of fires that have their origin in carelessness.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Cooperation between the federal and provincial governments is most important. There should be strict cooperation among the provinces as well. A fire starting on the border of Ontario might well go into Quebec, so that the closest cooperation is necessary. If it is left a purely provincial matter as between Ontario and Quebec there is a possibility that it might not be taken as seriously by one province as by another; but I congratulate the minister on what has been done.

I should like to ask one more question, with respect to pulpwood. Is it within the competence of the dominion government to prohibit the export of raw pulpwood from Canada?

Mr. POWER: An order in council was passed in 1924, I think, prohibiting the export of pulpwood from private lands; of course we cannot prohibit the export from provincial crown lands. I am not quite sure whether the order in council was ever proclaimed, but as far as I know certainly this house has full authority to prohibit the exportation of pulpwood or logs from private lands.

[Mr. Crerar.]

Mr. REID: I think that information should be given more publicity, because in British Columbia there has been considerable agitation to stop the export of logs from that province; and in debating the question many people hold the belief that it is a matter for the dominion government. Our information this afternoon is that the province of Quebec has the power to prohibit the export of logs and pulpwood, and if that is so I see no reason why British Columbia should not have the same right.

Mr. POWER: Since 1906, there has been a prohibition of the exportation of pulpwood cut from crown lands in the province of Quebec, and that order in council is still in force and effect.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to draw the attention of the government to the necessity of preserving the pulpwood limits of Canada for the benefit of Canadians. I do not think very much benefit accrues to the individual Canadian by the cutting down of a tree and the shipping of that tree to some other country. I should like the government to look into the question whether or not they have the right to prohibit the export of raw pulpwood from Canada.

I should like to ask another question while I am on my feet. Could the minister tell me the present status of the forest experiment stations, at Petawawa, Kananaskis, Duck Mountain, Valcartier, and the Acadian, the one at Fredericton.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not think I quite get the point of my hon. friend's question. Did he ask what is the status of each of these experimental stations?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Yes. As the minister knows, the dominion government owns certain lands on which experimentation had been carried on. Is that work being continued and, if so, to what extent, or has it been dropped?

Mr. CRERAR: The work is being carried on at each of these experimental stations. Naturally the conditions in Manitoba vary considerably from the conditions in Ontario. There are different types of trees and so on, and these stations were established originally with the idea of conducting a study that would not overlap as between stations but that would fit together to give a general picture of the value of our forest woods, the best methods of protection, the rapidity of growth under varying conditions, and like matters. That is the type of work that is being carried on at each of these forest experimental stations. The data is gathered together and compared, and from it very useful conclusions can be drawn. I understand that in some cases these conclusions have had practical value and are being applied by the forest woods industry in its various branches in Canada. These stations vary in size, Petawawa I think being the largest. The one at Petawawa is roughly one hundred square miles; the one at Kananaskis in Alberta is sixty-seven square miles, and the Acadian station in New Brunswick is seventy square miles. The others are smaller.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The work being done in connection with these experiments is indeed excellent and I should not like to see any lessening of efforts in this direction. I trust the department will bend its efforts towards increasing the work, in view of the depletion of Canada's forests.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Reverting to the question of the export of logs from crown granted lands, I sincerely hope the government and the minister will pay earnest attention to this serious matter. In British Columbia the situation is urgent. The period of availability of logs and timber generally is not more than fifteen years. An extended availability does not exceed twenty-five years. In view of the fact that public opinion in British Columbia is being very strongly awakened, and the further fact that the federal government does have some responsibility and has acknowledged its power to prohibit the export of logs, it seems to me the matter should be taken in hand very early. I say that because one of the greatest areas in British Columbia, one no less than forty square miles in extent is being logged by Japanese loggers for Japanese owners, for purposes of export to Japan. Even from the standpoint of a consideration of the preservation of our own resources the matter merits the earnest consideration of the government.

Mr. DUNNING: When the question was discussed a few moments ago it occurred to me that perhaps the discussion was a little in reverse. As to the federal powers in connection with controlling the export of any commodity in Canada, wherever or however produced, I suppose one might say that in this parliament there is no doubt we could make general laws covering the export of any commodity. I am not a constitutional lawyer, but I doubt whether any province could deal with the export of a commodity. But, owning the lands upon which the timber grows, the province sets the conditions of cutting, and of course in setting the conditions of cutting in its own judgment it can determine whether or not the timber cut from lands owned by the crown in the right of the province shall be used for this or that purpose. That could be a condition precedent to any extension of the cutting right.

But when we come to privately owned lands —I believe it was these the Minister of Pensions and National Health had in mind—and whether under the circumstances the province could impose on those private lands cutting conditions which would have the same effect with respect to exportation as would conditions set by the province with respect to cutting on crown lands, I think we get into a rather involved constitutional question. The matter is of course one of some difficulty, but this parliament acting for the country generally has not yet, so far as I know placed an embargo on the export of any commercial commodity. There is the question whether any laws affecting the export of commodities could apply nationally with respect to a commodity which came from a particular place, as distinct from the same commodity which came from another place; because the dominion's power undoubtedly is exercisable with regard to the commodity as such. To identify a particular log as having originated in a particular place, or to attempt to apply to lumber which is exported from one part of Canada export regulations which would not apply equally to lumber exported from another part of Canada, or to go further and to consider applying export regulations with respect to commodities destined to a particular foreign country as distinct from export generally, are all very involved questions of constitutional and international law, and of trade generally.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I thank the Minister of Finance for his explanation. It was the observations of the Minister of Pensions and National Health which brought me to my feet. I quite agree with what the Minister of Finance has said: the question whether or not we have any power to place an embargo upon the export of privately owned material is an involved one. But the question arises: Are those materials more necessary for the people of Canada than for people outside Canada? It was a consideration of that question which prompted me to make my observations. I do not agree with the procedure of enforcing embargoes; I believe free manufacturers and free producers have a right to export, and in that I respect the statement of the minister.

Mr. POWER: At one time this parliament prohibited the export of liquor to the United States; at that time it was dealing with free manufacturers.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the export of pulpwood and logs has an effect on the watersheds and navigable waters of the country. There is no doubt that if the forests become depleted the waters in the navigable streams under the control of the federal government will be lowered. We can see that happening in Canada at the present time. No doubt the export of forest products must in some degree lower the waters in the St. Lawrence waterway system from lake Superior to the ocean. It seems to me the federal government should take under advisement the question of the lowered water levels and the depletion of the forests.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): It is not the export of pulpwood or logs but rather the cutting and removal of those logs from the land which affects the water or climatic conditions in an area. The export of the forest products to a profitable market does not injure the coverage of the soil to any greater degree than it would be injured if those forest products were sold less profitably at home. The greatest damage is done by fire, which destroys not only the useful pulpwood logs and timber suitable for lumber but also the weed growth and the less valuable trees. I suggest the export of logs and pulpwood need not be considered in connection with the preservation of watersheds.

Mr. PURDY: I notice the present estimates call for an expenditure of $359,300 for forestry projects. While there is some increase over the amount voted last year, to my mind the sum is most inadequate, having regard not only to the direct value of the forest industry to the country but also to the indirect value for the conservation of water and wild life, the attraction of tourists, and the availability to our people of a free means of healthy recreation.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the hon. member referring to item 140?

Mr. PURDY: Yes; I am speaking generally with respect to the items dealing with forest preservation. If you wish, Mr. Chairman, I shall proceed under the next item.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member may continue.

Mr. PURDY: I have said that the forests provide a free means of healthy recreation.

Mr. SPENCE: Louder; we cannot hear a word.

Mr. PURDY: Listen, then.

Mr. SPENCE: We are trying to listen.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. PURDY: I think the direct value of the forests and forest industries of Canada are well summed up in the closing paragraphs of a book recently published by the Department of Mines and Resources, entitled, Economic Aspects of the Forests and Forest Industries of Canada. The summary is on page 53 and reads as follows:

> The products of the forests and forest industries provided the largest favourable balance in external commodity trade during the period 1931-35, and stood second in this respect to agricultural and vegetable products in 1936.
> The United States and the United Kingdom are Canada's best customers for forest products, and also supply the larger part of her import requirements.
> Of the total volume of wood taken from the forests from 1931 to 1935, over 92 per cent was either consumed in Canada or subjected to further manufacturing processes before being exported.

I draw that to the attention of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Ross) who has spoken of wood products being exported in the raw state. I continue the quotation:

> The estimated net average value of forest products consumed annually during the same period was 132 million dollars, which included imports valued at approximately 14 million dollars. The value of Canadian products consumed at home was, therefore, 118 million dollars, and the additions to the wealth of Canada, accruing from forests and forest industries, averaged 275 million dollars annually.

From the same publication I observe that 13·8 per cent of the total car loadings of Canada originate with this industry, and therefore it has a very important bearing on the income of our railroads. I would suggest to hon. members who have not already obtained a copy of this publication that they do so, because it is of exceptional interest.

There is another important fact brought out in this book which would seem to substantiate my claim for further consideration for the industry, and that is that approximately one-fifth of the value of the primary production of Canada originates in the forests. I suggest that that is a very modest estimate because I observe from the last issue of The National Revenue Review that of our total exports of Canadian produce in April 1938, amounting to $51,248,752, a total of $11,668,934 came from this industry.

I quite appreciate the fact that in most of the provinces a large percentage of the forest lands is still owned by the crown in the right of the provinces. But the situation in the province of Nova Scotia is entirely reversed, and 87·6 per cent is owned by private parties. It is with privately owned lands in Nova Scotia that I would like to deal for a few moments.

I would first like to point out that some 40,000 of our farms consist in part of cleared land and in part of wood lots, and I would throw out the suggestion to the government that in these wood lots, and in other wood lots privately owned, they have an opportunity of doing for Nova Scotia what they have done and are endeavouring to do for the west in the matter of agriculture. If the west is adapted to the growing of grain, then surely we in Nova Scotia can say with equal truth that our land is adapted to the growing of timber, and claim equal recognition and consideration on this ground. Nova Scotia spruce, pine, birch and maple are by-words in the markets of the British Isles and also of the United States, and if this government would take steps to maintain and increase the supply of these woods it would go a long way towards rehabilitating the rural sections of this province.

With no portion of our province more than thirty miles from tidewater and none of our land inaccessible for operating purposes, it will easily be seen that having regard to the increasing demand for these products from abroad, the expenditure of moneys for the development of forests in the province of Nova Scotia would give a greater return than in any of the others. In addition I think it is recognized that on account of climatic conditions tree growth is more rapid there than in most other places in Canada.

For the year 1937 it is estimated that in addition to firewood the products of our forests and forest industries were in excess of the equivalent of 500,000,000 feet board measure. While accurate figures are not available it is conceded from all sides that this cut was greater than the natural increase and that if we were to continue at that rate for many years our forests would be depleted.

On the other side of the picture, however, we have between twelve and fifteen thousand square miles of timber land or land suitable for growing timber. Experience has shown that under natural conditions many lots which were cropped forty years ago or less have in the past few years produced a crop of from 4,000 to 5,000 board feet per acre, and in many cases far in excess of this.

It seems to me that with proper care and study we have sufficient land in the province to give us an annual cut in excess of the figure named above, and it is toward this end that I would urge on the government the necessity and advisability, as a first step of the establishment of an experimental forest station in this province. Or perhaps a series of demonstration stations would be more suitable, so that the farmers of the various districts could be educated to look upon their wood lots as a portion of their farms the same as they do their cultivated lands, harvesting each year only the trees ready to be cut and improving the growth of the remainder by scientific methods.

Full utilization of the waste products of the industry now destroyed or left to decay could in my opinion, with some assistance, be made to give gainful employment to a large number of our present unemployed.

I shall not further take the time of the committee to enlarge on the subject or to point out the many advantages that would accrue if these schemes could be worked out. I sincerely trust, however, that the minister will give the matter his careful consideration, and I can assure him that he and his officers will receive full cooperation from the provincial department.

Another point I would like to stress in favour of growing timber instead of growing grain, is that if the demand is poor, cutting can be curtailed with benefits to the stands, whereas in agriculture this is not possible. Further, when the time comes for the selection of sites for these experimental stations and the minister sends his officials to Nova Scotia, I trust that they will not overlook the constituency of Colchester-Hants, which is the biggest lumber producing constituency in the province.

Mr. CRERAR: I will certainly give consideration to the representations my hon. friend has made. I might mention that Cape Breton Island park is now under development, covering an area of five hundred square miles, and we have under consideration making some study within the park area of the timber growth and other resources relating thereto.

Mr. PURDY: The minister's officials, when they visit Cape Breton national park, will find that the woods there are entirely different from the growth on the mainland, and that the land within the park is not very well suited to the production of useful timber.

Mr. CRERAR: I am glad to have that suggestion from my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

Forest experiment stations, $77,520.

Mr. SPENCE: I presume I am the only one who attempts to criticize increases in estimates. I should like a little information on the reason for this one. It seems to be the government's policy that all estimates shall be increased. Here we have increases in this department, following the many increases that were made in the Department of Agriculture. Why almost $36,000 should be added to the expenditure on forest experiment stations I cannot understand. This is no time for increasing experiments. Money should not be spent to-day unless it will bring work and wages to the unemployed. But this is pure experimental work, and I suggest that the government do not waste $36,000 more on experiments of this kind.

Mr. CRERAR: I might make to the hon. member the same remark I made to the committee on an earlier vote. In last year's estimates, with which he makes a comparison, he is dealing only with the main estimates; and if we take the total spent last year in main and special supplementaries, and set that against the amount in this vote, this vote is actually less than it was a year ago.

Mr. SPENCE: Your estimates do not show it this year.

Mr. CRERAR: I know, but if we take into account the special supplementaries voted last year—

Mr. SPENCE: Oh, well, I do not have them here.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I notice that the hon. member for Melfort is not in the house; but in answer to what he said, I should like to remark that the necessity of keeping our pulpwood and manufacturing paper in this country and not exporting it, is that we have in the pulp and paper industry an investment of some $175,728,000, and it is necessary to keep the supplies for those mills in Canada. We can manufacture it here just as well as they can in the United States, and with more benefit to Canadians.

Item agreed to.

Forest Products Laboratories, $148,500.

Mr. MacNICOL: We should like to hear what the minister has to say about this; what are the laboratories doing? The minister is probably familiar with the laboratory at Madison, Wisconsin, where wonderful work along this line is being done. I should like to know what work is being done in Canada in this respect, and upon what all this money is being spent.

Mr. CRERAR: There are three of these laboratories. One in Vancouver, one in Ottawa, and one in Montreal.

Mr. MacNICOL: What are they associated with?

Mr. CRERAR: The study of the utilization of forest products. For instance, studies are being conducted as to the strength of woods, how woods can be most economically used, for example, in various building materials. Then there is the study of the utilization of waste material from wood, such things as sawdust and bark and slabs, which a few years ago were considered as waste material altogether; also, the study of lumber seasoning; how our forest products can be best manufactured to suit the markets to which they may be going. These matters are studied particularly at the Vancouver and Ottawa stations. The Montreal laboratory is devoted almost entirely to the pulp and paper business which forms such a large and important part of the industry in both Quebec and Ontario. Scientific experiments are carried on with a view to the improvement of the quality of the paper by treatment of pulp. All that sort of thing is carried on in Montreal, and the department has had a definite recognition from the pulp and paper industry of the value of the government's contribution to this laboratory. I might say, as was pointed out in discussions of similar estimates in previous years, that the Montreal laboratory was begun through the cooperation of McGill university, the pulp and paper industry, and the federal government. To the costs of operating this particular laboratory the pulp and paper association make a contribution, in addition to that which comes from the federal government.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is there a revenue from it?

Mr. CRERAR: No. You do not derive much direct revenue from experimental stations.

Mr. MacNICOL: This is not an experimental station. This is a laboratory.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, I mean from laboratories.

Mr. MacNICOL: The United States government receives considerable revenue from a similar line of work at its great laboratory at Madison, Wisconsin. When that laboratory renders a service along the lines the minister has outlined, and along scores and hundreds of other lines, it makes a charge for it. All that the minister has said is very largely the sort of information which has been handed down from the research bureau here, so that if these experimental stations are doing the same work, that is, only a duplication of what is being done here, then what is the research bureau doing?

Mr. CRERAR: The research bureau is not doing research work in this particular field.

That is being done by the laboratory at Montreal. The same applies to the forest laboratories at Ottawa and Vancouver. That field is not being duplicated by the national research council.

Mr. MacNICOL: Do they also inquire into the proper kind of wood or lumber to be used for shipping purposes, for crating and so forth, so as to advise manufacturers of the strength of certain kinds of wood for certain lines of shipments, whereby they are able to reduce the weight and thus reduce the freight charges?

Mr. CRERAR: Those matters are studied not only in the Ottawa station but in the Vancouver station as well. Studies are also made of the lasting qualities of various kinds of woods, and what treatments can be given them to increase their length of usefulness. All these matters, which are purely scientific, are under investigation at both Ottawa and Vancouver. As I stated a moment ago, the Montreal establishment confines its activities very largely to those problems which relate to the pulp and paper industry in Canada.

Mr. BARBER: How much was expended last year on the Vancouver laboratory?

Mr. CRERAR: The vote this year is divided as follows: To Vancouver, $34,572; to Montreal, $38,829; and to Ottawa, $75,099.

Mr. BARBER: The minister said that experiments were carried on in connection with waste material such as slabs, sawdust and so forth. What has been the result of those experiments? Is there any result from them so far?

Mr. CRERAR: I cannot say that so ar there have been any practical results.

Mr. BARBER: How long have they been carrying on these experiments?

Mr. CRERAR: I am informed that it is only within the last year that work of this kind has been undertaken.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Are there any field research units associated with these laboratories, outdoors?

Mr. CRERAR: The officers in these various laboratories go out and have contacts with the people who are actually in the industry. If that is what my hon. friend means, the answer is yes.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Not exactly. What I am trying to discover is whether any of these departments are directing themselves to the comparative advantages of natural or ordered reafforestation.

Mr. CRERAR: That comes under the various experimental stations. It is not related to the work under this particular vote.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Is anything being done in that direction?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes. A study is being made at these various experimental stations. There is one in New Brunswick, one at Valcartier, one at Petawawa, one in Manitoba and one in Alberta. Experimental work is carried on as to the rate of tree growth, the conditions under which growth is best promoted, the matter of fire hazard and how it can best be provided against, and so on. All these matters are under constant study at these experimental stations. For instance, plots will be thinned down to a certain number of trees per acre to ascertain the relative rate of growth as compared with a stand which is much thicker. In a general way the work carried on is directed as far as possible to wholly practical ends, and when the data is accumulated it is passed on to those engaged in the industry in various parts of Canada. As I said earlier, we have had from people engaged in various branches of the woods industry commendations regarding the practical value they have received from the work carried on at these stations.

Mr. BARBER: Where is the laboratory in British Columbia located?

Mr. CRERAR: In the university grounds in Vancouver.

Mr. HAYHURST: What varieties of timber of economic value are found in Alberta, and for what purposes are they used?

Mr. CRERAR: We have no laboratory in Alberta. Conditions in the three western provinces are fairly similar so far as the type of timber produced is concerned. There is, of course, an experimental station at Kananaskis, but there is no laboratory.

Item agreed to.

Grant to Canadian forestry association, $1,620.

Mr. BLACKMORE: What are the objects of this organization, and what has it done?

Mr. CRERAR: It was initiated under prviate enterprise to bring home more clearly to the Canadian people the value of the forests and the need of fire protection; in short, to develop a sort of forest consciousness in the people. It has largely been supported by private effort, and grants have been given for a considerable number of years, not only as a recognition of the useful work that the association is doing but as a practical aid in carrying it on.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Perhaps hon. members have not been sufficiently impressed with the serious depletion of the forests on the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains in Alberta, and the effect which this may have on the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba. We are going forward with a prairie farm rehabilitation scheme which, I am sure, will be extended as the years go by, the object being to bring under irrigation a large part of what is now semi-arid land. The water with which these projects will be carried on must come from the eastern slopes of the Rocky mountains. It happens that some of them are in my constituency and others in Macleod riding, and therefore I am familiar with them. There is grave danger of forest fires crossing the mountains and destroying these forests. Such a thing has happened many times. I am informed that there is scarcely sufficient forest supervision to ensure ability to stop a fire soon enough to prevent a disaster. I understand that it takes about one hundred years for a burned forest to be replenished. These facts are sufficiently serious to make us stop and think. It would be far wiser to spend some extra money in protecting the forests as they are now, and some money in encouraging reafforestation so as to preserve the water, before it is too late. The Saskatchewan river, the South Saskatchewan particularly, and other great rivers flowing down the eastern slopes depend largely upon forests for their water. There is a genuine problem there. At present the task of looking after these forests is in the hands of the province.

Mr. CRERAR: They own and control them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I realize they do, but in these times when the provinces are in such straitened circumstances financially it would seem the part of wisdom for the dominion to make sure that there shall be no lack of adequate forest supervision. I emphasize this because, if these forests are destroyed and that water supply is in considerable degree diminished, it will long be a matter for regret; for it will be a loss that we shall not be able to replace.

Item agreed to.

Land registry: Land registry, seed grain collections, administration of ordnance, admiralty and public lands, $64,000.

Mr. STIRLING: It seems a curious thing to mix up seed grain collections with administration of ordnance lands.

Mr. CRERAR: It arises from what is left of the land administration of the old Department of the Interior. This land registry has several activities. It is responsible for the administration of federal lands reserved under the natural resources agreement; it has the handling of military reserves that may have been abandoned for that purpose, of the issue of letters patent for lands in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, and the administration of ordnance and admiralty lands on the east and west coasts and also on the great lakes. There are still some remnants of those old lands. Generally speaking, it is an office of record for all the lands controlled by or under the federal administration. It is a sort of omnibus item carrying everything that could not be attached anywhere else.

Mr. STIRLING: From whom are the seed grain collections made?

Mr. CRERAR: On advances made many years ago, some as far back as 1914, I think, in the prairie provinces. My officers tell me it goes back as far as 1876; I do not think there are many of those, but some old claims date back to 1914. They are endeavouring to collect these; in some instances compromises are reached on the amounts.

Item agreed to.

To provide for expenses in connection with the determination of boundaries of ordnance and admiralty lands in the province of British Columbia, $3,000.

Mr. CRERAR: This is an item which has been in the estimates for a good many years. We have not been able to make much progress with the British Columbia government in getting the matter actively in hand to have the boundaries of some of these lands delimited, but we may be able to make some progress this year.

Mr. SPENCE: How many pieces are there in British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: About fifty, I understand.

Mr. STIRLING: Why only in British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: I understand this arises out of some provision in the act transferring the Peace River block and the railway belt to British Columbia. Provision was made then for the settlement of these boundaries. I am told that in some instances Indian reserves are involved. The matter has been under discussion with the British Columbia government; but they and the department here have never been able to agree on it, although it has been under discussion for several years.

Mr. NEILL: Can the minister hold out any hope that they will ever get the matter of the Indian reserves in British Columbia settled, concerning which there was an agreement made, known, I think, as the McKenna agreement, which originated about 1918? I know a large, expensive delegation went about British Columbia and made arrangements to cut off land from some large reserves not needing it and add land to others; the province agreed to surrender those lands necessary to be surrendered by it, and the dominion agreed to reciprocate, but as far as I know the matter has never been settled. There seems to be an almost childish sort of dispute in connection with some of the terms. If the matter has been settled, I should be glad to know, and, if so, when the settlement was reached. The delay is holding up a lot of progress that might be made. Parts of these reserves could be sold to public advantage, but sale cannot be carried out because no one has a title; the dominion does not have it because the province will not sign, and the province is still retaining it under a sort of pledge to give it to the dominion.

Mr. CRERAR: The matter is now under negotiation with the British Columbia government. Various efforts have been made to settle it, but without avail. I personally discussed the matter with the premier of British Columbia on his recent visit to Ottawa, and urged that it should be settled.

Mr. NEILL: What is the trouble?

Mr. CRERAR: It is hard for me to say. Apparently there is in British Columbia some official view held rather strongly on the question. But I believe there is no good reason why it should not be settled. The basis of settlement was agreed upon. I urged upon the premier of British Columbia that it should have the immediate and careful consideration of his government, and he assured me it would be taken in hand. I hope when we come to consideration of these estimates a year hence the committee can be given the information.

Mr. DUNNING: I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day, in order to permit of the tabling of the supplementary estimates, and also a statement of the Minister of Labour in connection therewith, the intention being to ask the Speaker to leave the chair immediately after the message of his excellency has been received, and to call an item in the Department of Labour.

Progress reported.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1938-39

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1939, was presented by Hon. Charles A. Dunning (Minister of Finance), and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the message of His Excellency, together with the supplementary estimates presented this day, be referred to the committee of supply, with the exception of items Nos. 633, 634 and 635, which I would ask the house to refer to the standing commitee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister kindly explain his reference just now to the fact that it was the desire of the government to call an item under the Department of Labour. Surely that is quite an unusual thing to do, with the supplementaries laid before the house now for the first time.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry; I thought I had made that clear. It is the intention again to call committee of supply immediately; and when the chairman is in the chair we shall call an item in Labour merely for the purpose of enabling the Minister of Labour to make a brief explanatory statement with respect to the estimates now being tabled, but with no intention of going further than that in the discussion of the items. I am sorry I did not make that clear previously.

Mr. STIRLING: Labour has been called already?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes.

Motion agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

International Labour Conference, $15,000.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, in view of the questions raised during the recent debate on unemployment, I believe it will meet the wishes of the committee if a brief statement is made at this time with respect to the supplementary estimates which have just been tabled.

In these estimates provision is made for work-creating projects amounting to a total expenditure of over $40,000,000. This is in addition to work-creating projects in the main estimates amounting to an almost equal sum. Apart from expenditures on public buildings in the various provinces and the normal outlay for the repair of wharves and breakwaters, the larger items in these estimates carry out the policy of the government to stimulate basic industries and broaden the foundations of a long range program of conservation and development. An amount of $1,310,000 is set aside for improved road transportation into new mining areas, and there is a further supplementary vote for geological surveys, in addition to the $300,000 appearing in the main estimates. The total of proposed expenditures on highway improvements apart from mining roads is over $3,500,000. Of this total there is a new item of $1,000,000 to reduce the menace of level crossings as a supplement to the contribution of $500,000 to the grade crossing fund already made in the main estimates. Over $3,000,000 is assigned to trans-Canada and tourist highways and national parks. Another item in the group of expenditures designed to assist the tourist industry is the sum of $450,000 for the restoration and development of historic sites.

Over $7,000,000 is to be spent on special projects of harbour and river development, including a contribution of $300,000 to the Grand River conservation project in Ontario. There are substantial construction outlays for harbour improvements at Halifax, Saint John, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Vancouver.

The sum of $1,000,000 is also to be spent on canal improvements in addition to the expenditures appearing in the main estimates.

The sum of $650,000 is to be spent for the encouragement of the fishing industry.

The expansion of facilities for air transportation is given a prominent place in the development program. The sum of $800,000 is allocated for the construction and improvement of airports along the trans-Canada route and an additional $500,000 for assistance to municipal airports. This is in addition to the sum, in the main estimates, of $1,722,400 for the construction of airports, and $800,000 for assistance to municipal airports.

As announced in the speech from the throne the youth training plans are to be extended. The sum of $2,250,000 is included in the estimates for training projects for unemployed young people and older unemployed persons. A considerable portion of this amount will be used for forestry training and conservation.

To provide for rehabilitation and water storage in the prairie provinces under the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act the sum of $3,500,000 is included in the supplementary estimates. This amount will be expended largely in the drought areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta.

[Mr. Rogers.]

New expenditures are included for forest conservation and fur conservation.

It is also possible at this time to make a further announcement which, I believe, will be welcomed in the house and in the country. In accordance with the principles laid down in the recommendations of the national employment commission, legislation will be introduced at the present session to provide additional encouragement to low cost and low rental housing. Legislation will also be introduced to provide low interest loans to municipalities for self-liquidating projects. These important developments of the government's program are designed to give further stimulus to the construction industry and to provide additional employment through private and public enterprise in large centres of population and in localities which may not benefit directly from the construction of public buildings and other works projects.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the minister one question? Until these projects get under way, has the government made any provision for the emergency situation that prevails in Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg, Windsor and, in fact, nearly all our larger centres, where there are large numbers, especially of single men, who are not to-day provided for?

Mr. ROGERS: Although the supplementary estimates remain to be passed providing for grants in aid to the provinces, those provinces concerned have the assurance that when the grants in aid are passed they will be made retroactive to cover the months since the expiration of the last fiscal year. There has been a difficult situation in Vancouver during the past few weeks. As I have stated before in the house, the government of British Columbia has been dealing with the situation in consultation with the Department of Labour here, and of course I am aware of the measures that have been taken in that province to deal with the immediate situation. As far as the other cities mentioned by my hon. friend are concerned, I know of no emergency situation which is not being met in the ordinary way through the provision of direct relief or in such other ways as have been employed by the provincial governments for that purpose.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wonder if the minister would go a little more fully into the Vancouver and British Columbia situation. I notice by this morning's newspapers that the minister of labour of British Columbia made the statement that 1,800 single men who came into the province at the end of last year were to be returned to the provinces in which they may have domiciles, and that if they did not accept that offer they would receive no more relief. From the same press dispatches I understand that the western cities or other provinces to which they are to be returned are objecting to that being done. Are any steps being taken to ensure that if these men are compelled to leave British Columbia, they will be maintained in the other provinces to which they may be sent or to which they wish to go?

Mr. ROGERS: I should be inclined to answer that question in this way: The men to whom my hon. friend has referred received employment in forestry conservation camps during the winter months. The dominion government contributed to the maintenance of those camps, which were carried on cooperatively by the dominion and provincial governments. These men received wages at the prevailing rate of thirty cents an hour while they were in the camps, and a portion of their pay was deferred and made payable to them after they left the camps, in the form of post office vouchers. Had these men who came from other provinces chosen to return to those provinces at the conclusion of the work in the forestry camps, no possible objection could have been taken by the authorities in the provinces from which they had come originally. That, as I understand it, is what is now proposed by the provincial government; that these men who came to these forestry camps from other provinces shall be granted transportation to their homes. I have the assurance that in determining the destinations of these men to whom transportation will be given every possible safeguard is taken to see that they are sent to their own homes, or, in other words, to the places from which they came to enter the forestry camps in British Columbia during the past winter. As a matter of fact, my information also states that of those who have applied for transportation almost all have indicated as their homes smaller centres of population in the prairie provinces. So that up to this time we have no indication that there is likely to be a large concentration in the cities of western Canada. The number mentioned by the hon. member is also, I believe, something in excess of the actual number who would qualify for transportation under the plan proposed by the minister of labour of British Columbia.

Mr. MacINNIS: No doubt the minister has seen the press dispatches and realizes I mentioned the number indicated in those dispatches.

Mr. ROGERS: Quite.

Mr. GREEN: Are those the steps to which the minister referred when he said the provincial government had taken steps to deal with the situation? I ask that because I have understood that there were several thousand men assembled in Vancouver and the shipping back of 1,800 or 1,900 of them still leaves a large number in that city who will have to be cared for by the citizens. For instance, last Saturday a tag day was held at which the sum of $4,000 or $5,000 was raised. To a certain extent by threatening the city permission was obtained to hold the tag day. Is it the intention to reopen the forestry camps until these works projects are started, or is the government taking any other steps in the interim to meet the situation.

Mr. ROGERS: The government of British Columbia in dealing with this situation at close range—not a new situation entirely, but something which has developed from time to time in recent years—has decided it will be possible to absorb in employment in the province those who were formerly in the forestry conservation camps and who were residents of British Columbia. As a matter of fact, the experience of last year suggests that this has been done. About 2,500 men who were in the forestry camps of British Columbia last winter did not return this winter. The clear inference is that they had either found employment elsewhere or returned to their homes in the prairie provinces. As I have said, the province of British Columbia is able to judge as to the best measures with which to deal with the existing situation. As I understand the situation, it is not the intention to open forestry camps.

Mr. GREEN: As the minister must know, there is far less employment in the woods of British Columbia this year than last; that will mean less opportunity to place these men.

Mr. ROGERS: I am not able to give a definite opinion on that point. I have understood that there was a certain slackening in the forest operations in certain parts of British Columbia, but within the last few days I have heard evidence to the contrary. At all events, the statement made by the minister in the British Columbia government suggests that in his belief it will be possible to find employment for those formerly in the camps and properly resident in the province.

Mr. GREEN: The minister is satisfied that the difficulty has been settled in the coast cities, then?

Mr. ROGERS: I am afraid I am never satisfied that difficulties of this kind are settled. To some extent they are chronic, and inherent in the problem with which the country and government is dealing at the present time; but I believe I can say—and perhaps this is known to members of the house—that many of those young men were induced to remain in Vancouver. They are organized in the relief project workers union, and I believe the efforts of the leaders in that union were directed toward dissuading those young men from returning to their own homes when work in the forestry camps was ended.

Mr. DUNNING: It is not the intention to press passage of the item at this time. After the hour for private bills has expired, it is the intention to proceed with the estimates of the Department of Fisheries.

Item stands.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

FARMERS' CREDITORS ARRANGEMENT ACT

AMENDMENTS AS TO DEFINITION, BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS, REHEARING, ETC.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 16, an act to amend the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934.—Mr. Douglas (Weyburn).

Mr. SPEAKER: When this bill was last called, it stood in the absence of the sponsor. That has happened twice.

Mr. DUNNING: Mr. Speaker, the bill amending the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act has passed, and I think for that reason we might very well drop this order from the order paper.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is quite right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: Then there should be a motion to discharge the order.

Mr. DUNNING: I move, Mr Speaker, that this order be discharged.

Motion agreed to and order discharged.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED APPLICATION OF CROWSNEST PASS RATES ON GRAIN WESTWARD AS WELL AS EASTWARD

The house resumed from Friday, May 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reid for the second reading of Bill No. 18, to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) was speaking at the expiry of the hour for public and private bills when this motion was last before the house. He is unable to be present to-night, and has requested me to say to the house on his behalf what he would have said had he been able to be here and conclude his remarks.

The Minister of Transport says that when he last discussed this bill he had arrived at the point of making some remarks on the major contention of the member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) to the effect that mill feeds should move from the mills to consumers in British Columbia at rates now applicable to feed grain. The minister had pointed out that the hon. member for New Westminster was in error in stating that such a movement now takes place on a domestic rate for milling grain, as in fact the movement is now carried out on the balance of the through rate from the point at which the grain itself originates, and this balance of the through rate is usually lower than the domestic grain rate, and often as low as or lower than the rate on feed grain.

The Minister of Transport has conferred with both railways on the matter of the contention of the hon. member for New Westminster and has pointed out to them that a grievance, although the railways claim it is not a very real one, is still a grievance and should be removed by every means consistent with maintaining a reasonable rate structure. The railways are disposed to accept the minister's view of the situation, and after giving the matter full consideration both railways have authorized the Minister of Transport to make the following statement, which in his opinion concedes the demand of the hon. member for New Westminster and those who support his view so far as rates on mill feeds are concerned. The following is the statement of the railways handed to the Minister of Transport:

The railways will make provision in their tariffs that on straight carload lots of feed forwarded from the milling point, the balance of the rate as applicable under the railway regular milling and transit arrangements will not be in excess of the feed grain rates from the milling point. The railways will also provide in their tariffs applicable on feed grains that the rates named therein will apply on straight carloads of mill feeds from specific points at which mills are located in Alberta and Saskatchewan to points in British Columbia. The above special rates will be withdrawn if it forces reductions generally on feeds between points in western Canada.

The Minister of Transport states that it is only fair to point out once again that the present rates on feed grain were agreed to by the railways with the understanding that they represented a compromise between the demands of the four western provinces and the then existing tariffs. It is the minister's understanding that this compromise was accepted by each of the four western provinces, and having accepted the compromise, the minister doubts the propriety of further demands within the previous settlement. It is now the opinion of the Minister of Transport that the fact that both railways are willing to introduce the new rate voluntarily should be accepted as an indication of the desire of the railways to meet the needs of the agricultural development of British Columbia, and the minister suggests to the hon. member for New Westminster that he should withdraw this bill with the understanding that the new tariffs on mill feeds will be published without delay.

The minister desires to point out to members of the house that the very low rates now applicable on natural products moving for export are made possible only by a reasonable balance between export traffic and the movement of more valuable commodities within Canada. Truck competition has made heavy inroads on that kind of traffic, while drought conditions have reduced the export volume of grain. These two situations combine to create Canada's railway problem. The railways have every desire to meet the needs of agriculture. Ton mile rates in Canada for the products of the farm are far lower than for parallel lines in the United States, and are in fact the lowest rates in the world. While moving traffic at these rates, we expect our railways to produce a balanced budget, and the Minister of Transport suggests that we should not ask the impossible in further reduction of rates that are now well below the cost of the service given.

Western Canada has always been ably represented on the board of railway commissioners, and the minister believes that no one can claim that the railway board has not understood the needs of western Canada and given sympathetic consideration to those needs.

In conclusion, the Minister of Transport desires to state again that parliament has constituted the board of railway commissioners the final authority to adjudicate on railway rates, and he expresses the hope that in future members of the house will address matters of rate adjustment to the board of railway commissioners rather than to parliament itself.

That is the end of the statement, Mr. Speaker, which the Minister of Transport desired me to make on his behalf.

On my own behalf may I say that I have a vivid recollection, going back through the years, of the continuous struggle in connection with this matter of westbound rates on feed grains. In fact, my recollection goes back vividly to the original fights with respect to the Crowsnest rates eastbound, of which it might be said that the bills introduced year after year by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) have been a by-product. I think all of us would agree in principle that parliament, having delegated the responsibility for rate making to the board of railway commissioners, should not, unless under exceptional circumstances, constitute itself the judge as to what a given freight rate should be on any commodity between points in any part of Canada. I speak, of course, subject to the fact that certain statutory rates enacted by this parliament before the board was created do exist and have been a ruling factor in relation to the commodities and the geographical areas with which they deal, even though the board has since come into existence for the purpose of regulating rates generally in Canada. I hope that the hon. member for New Westminster will regard the further concession which the railways have authorized the Minister of Transport to offer as sufficient warrant to justify him in withdrawing the measure which is now before the house. By so doing we shall avoid further parliamentary adjudication with respect to railway rate matters, which, as I have said, all of us regard as undesirable generally. Of course parliament is the highest court in the land, and there is no means of preventing discussion of these matters in parliament, nor is there any desire on the part of anyone to prevent such discussion. Nevertheless, parliament having created a body and clothed it with the necessary authority, it is desirable, generally speaking, that that body should be left as free as possible in order that it may exercise its jurisdiction equitably on behalf of the people of Canada whom it is appointed to serve.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): The decision of the government, as indicated in the statement read by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), is an extraordinary one. I agree with the minister and have always held that the question of fixing rates ought to be left to the railway board. The first speech which I made in this house, in the autumn of 1911, was on that subject, when the late Mr. MacLean, from Toronto, introduced a resolution calling upon parliament to take some action with regard to fixing rates. I then took the ground I did because I had faith in the railway board as an institution. I believe that the board, on the whole, has been one of the fairest courts in the land. It is, of course, more a court of equity than a court of law. It has earned for itself a record of justice and fairness, and in the choice of its chairmen the country has been singularly fortunate. I appeared before it years ago, when the late Mr. Justice Mabee was the presiding official, and before him Mr. Justice Killam, as well as those who have followed. In all instances, I believe, the gentlemen who have been the chairmen of the board have been distinguished by their fairness and their sense of equity. Therefore I have never felt comfortable when these bills were brought before parliament. It is true that on certain rare occasions when freight rates have been discussed, I have taken a stand in the house in regard to them, but in my opinion it has been more or less unfortunate that they should have been introduced into this house.

Having said that, I confess to a considerable disturbance of mind in witnessing a government—to judge from the document which was read—actually having discussed the matter and brought pressure upon railways in order to overcome an inconvenient measure which was brought before the house by one of its supporters. I suppose we might liken the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) to the importunate widow who by her persistent attempts at last won some attention.

Mr. DUNNING: There was similar action on a former occasion in the same matter.

Mr. STEVENS: Oh, yes, there have been many agitations of this kind.

[Mr. Dunning.]

Mr. DUNNING: No; similar action.

Mr. STEVENS: Well, there was action taken on one occasion, which I think in itself was a mistake, on the Crowsnest rate, which, according to law cited properly by the minister a few moments ago, in its statutory form covered certain territory in certain directions. Then that was applied on movements west. I do not object to the effect of it, but I object to the form of it.

Here is another consideration. The hon. member upon one or two occasions has appealed to the governor general in council, as was his right. I believe it would have been far better for the governor general in council, in accordance with the law, to take some action on appeal from the board of railway commissioners, than to have the matter dragged into the house and made more or less a political football, because that is what it amounts to. It will be quoted in the country as evidence of what can be done in parliament by anyone who wishes to be persistent and, shall I say, sufficiently embarrassing to the government. In my opinion it is an unfortunate precedent that the government should have given way, although in the concluding remarks of the minister's statement he made a pious appeal to all hon. members that in future they would be good boys and not embarrass the government in this way any more, but leave the subject to the board of railway commissioners. That is the substance of the closing remarks of the appeal. It is not an elevating spectacle for parliament. Either this thing is right or it is wrong. The rates should have been granted before or, they should not be granted to-day; the rates should have been granted by the board of railway commissioners or, on appeal, action should have been taken by the governor general in council. I am not condemning the hon. member for his action, other than to say this, that I do not agree with this form of rate making. In his desire to gratify his ambitions he has a perfect right to embarrass the government he is supporting; but it is a poor line of business and an unfortunate precedent to establish in the house that if an hon. member can make himself enough of a nuisance to the government in some way or another, he will get his wishes and his demands gratified.

Mr. DUNNING: When I spoke of this not being the first time that similar action had been taken on this matter, what I had reference to was a previous occasion when a similar bill was before the house. The hon. member informs me that it was in 1933. On that occasion a compromise was reached between those sponsoring the bill and the representatives of the four western provinces who were interested. The decision of the railways on that occasion—a voluntary decision —was communicated to the house, as I am communicating this decision to-day. That was what I meant when I said that similar action had been taken previously.

Mr. STEVENS: I still submit that is not a sound practice.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend was a member of the government that did it.

Mr. STEVENS: That is true enough, but I do not think I took any part in that particular matter. It makes no difference, however; the two incidents do not make each other right. I have always held that it is better to leave matters to courts that are set up to deal with them than to bring them here. What I am deploring is not this particular incident but the fact that a concession should have been granted in this way. It should have been done by the governor general in council upon appeal from the board of railway commissioners. That is the proper way, and if the government had decided to follow that course it would have been better to invite the hon. member to reopen his appeal before the governor general in council and have action taken in that way.

It is not adding either to the dignity of, or to public confidence in, the board of railway commissioners. Here are two railways coming and saying, "We have been harassed about this matter, and now we shall give so much if you will withdraw the bill and not bother us about the rest." In the statement read a few minutes ago they intimate that the moment there is any agitation in the territory with respect to intervening points they will withdraw this concession. The whole thing is on the basis of log-rolling, whereas it should be on the footing of the findings of a court of equity and should stand as a matter of justice. It should be a matter of justice, or it should not be done at all. Either the rates are justified or they are not, and the board should be behind them.

This board is at the present time in a state of transition. Under the transport act it is going to become the board of transport and to it are to be handed enlarged powers to administer not only the railways but water-borne traffic, air traffic and other matters. In other words, the powers and jurisdiction of the board are to be extended; but just at the time of transition we find the board, a court which as I say has earned for itself a right to the confidence of the country, being brushed aside and a set of rates fixed by a log-rolling process. It is that feature of the matter to which I object. I suppose the hon. member who introduced the bill and who has been so assiduous in his advocacy of it in the house, where a good many of us feel it should not be, will receive some encomiums for having achieved a great victory. I do not believe, however, that victories of that kind should be achieved in this house at the expense of constitutional and proper methods and at the expense, further, of public confidence in our judiciary, because if you are going to do this sort of thing in this instance you might just as well do it in some other matter.

All the talk about this being the high court of parliament, this high-sounding phrase, makes me a little weary. If there is a body in this country less fitted to be a court, it is this house, and we might as well admit it.

Mr. DUNNING: I said so.

Mr. STEVENS: What is the use of talking about this being the high court of parliament? This is not a judicial court. Unfortunately, even the proper and legitimate functions of parliament are not discharged in the best possible form because of the introduction of patronage which has grown up over the years. To call this a court similar to courts of justice, or to suggest that it could take the place of a court of justice or a court of equity is, of course, silly. It is not a court in that sense. Courts have been established and the confidence of the people has reposed in those courts. That confidence should not under any circumstances be disturbed. If there is one thing that we should be proud of in Canada, it is the respect which, down through the decades, the people have had for the courts of the land, and unfortunately these are times when loosely expressed opinions have a tendency to disturb the confidence of the less informed people of the country in our courts. Those of us in whose hands rests the responsibility of leadership in Canada should be extremely careful not to lend any colour to the disturbance of public confidence in the courts. I say this with particular emphasis with reference to the board of railway commissioners, which, as I said in the committee the other day and as I repeat here, is a body whose work I have followed with great care for many years and for whom I have nothing but praise. I deplore that this matter should have been dealt with in the way in which it has been to-night.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There is one matter—

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member spoken? If so, he cannot speak again.

Mr. REID: The hon. gentleman has spoken. I am not objecting to his speaking again, but I am watching the time because I should like to have this matter finished to-night. The hon. member spoke on a previous occasion, when he said he would support the bill.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Did I speak in support of it?

Mr. REID: Yes; the hon. member said he would support it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I lost track of it.

Mr. W. K. ESLING (Kootenay West): Can the minister interpret in dollars and cents this compromise rate? That is to say, what is the saving from the mill in Alberta to the coast, and does this compromise also apply to intervening points? I understand that it does not. What about the numerous poultry farmers in the interior of British Columbia, and many cooperatives too, who would like to bring in cargo lots? I take it from what has been said that they do not participate in any of these benefits. Am I right?

Mr. DUNNING: I have exercised my right to speak and am debarred, as the hon. member for Lethbridge is, except by unanimous consent.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: The minister may speak with the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry I cannot go into details. As I indicated at the outset, I was placed in the rather embarrassing position of endeavouring to perform a service for the Minister of Transport, who desired to make the statement communicated to him by the railways. I cannot answer my hon. friend's question in dollars and cents. Perhaps if I read again slowly the statement of the railways' contention which is here categorically stated, it may answer at least part of what he desires to know. It says:

> The railways will make provision in their tariffs that on straight carload lots of feed forwarded from the milling points, the balance of the rate as applicable under the railway regular milling and transit arrangements will not be in excess of the feed grain rates from the milling point. The railways will also provide in their tariffs applicable on feed grains that the rates named therein will apply on straight carloads of mill feeds from specific points at which mills are located in Alberta and Saskatchewan to points in British Columbia.

Mr. STIRLING: All points?

Mr. DUNNING: I am reading what is here.

[Mr. Dunning.]

> The above special rates will be withdrawn if it forces reductions generally on feeds between points in western Canada.

I am sorry I cannot elucidate that any further; I have no more information about it than the statement contains.

Mr. STIRLING: There was a statement also that if this matter were raised again for intermediate points, the arrangement would not live. If we do not know what the destination point is, then we do not know what points are intermediate points.

Mr. DUNNING: The statement is:

> The above special rates will be withdrawn if it forces reductions generally.

I take that to mean, in case the rates here voluntarily put into force result in a ruling by the board of railway commissioners in future that because of their existence, rates between points on the prairies should be reduced to a similar level.

Mr. ESLING: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member has spoken on this already. He can do so again only with the unanimous consent of the house.

Mr. ESLING: I did not get an answer.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must remind hon. members that the house is not in committee.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think there is no record of my having spoken before on it.

Mr. REID: With all deference to the hon. member, I have just checked up and I find that page 2642 of Hansard shows that he spoke on it, and I was agreeably pleased to hear him say he was in support of this bill.

Mr. BLACKMORE: And I was.

Mr. REID: The reason I was rising to object was—

Mr. SPEAKER: Before the hon. member speaks, I call his attention to the fact that if he speaks now he closes the debate.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister made in respect to the bill of the hon. member for New Westminster a statement which is not correct.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order. He has already spoken.

Mr. PERLEY: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a statement was made a few minutes ago by the minister with respect to the voluntary arrangement brought into force between the provinces and the railway companies with respect to a rate in 1933. The impression was given—

Mr. DUNNING: Is this a point of order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: No; it is not.

Mr. PERLEY: The statement is not true; it is not a fact, and I think I am within my rights when I make that plain.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not a point of order.

Mr. PERLEY: I think a statement that is not correct should not be allowed to pass.

Mr. McLEAN (Melfort): What is the statement?

Mr. PERLEY: The statement that in connection with the bill of the hon. member for New Westminster in 1933 the then Minister of Railways advised the board of railway commissioners to bring into force a voluntary agreement between the provinces and the railways with respect to a reduction of rates.

Mr. DUNNING: No, no.

Mr. PERLEY: I have here Hansard of 1933—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order.

Mr. DUNNING: May I say, on the point of order, that I did not intend to refer to any particular hon. member, I referred to a similar happening. That is what I meant to convey, and I think I did.

Mr. PERLEY: The hon. member for New Westminster suggested that it was on his bill.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member speaks now he closes the debate.

Mr. REID: The reason I rose to object when the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) began to speak was that I was watching the clock, and it is not the first time we have been accused in the public press of talking out our own bills. I want it distinctly understood that I have no intention of talking out my own bill on this occasion. I thank the hon. member for Lethbridge for his remarks when he last spoke that he was in favour of this bill. But I was surprised at the interjection of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) that he was not aware that he spoke on this bill a few weeks ago, when the fact is that on that occasion he practically ridiculed the bill. The speech of the hon. member appears on page 2640 of Hansard.

Mr. PERLEY: I knew quite well I had spoken. I wanted to correct a misstatement.

Mr. REID: I am going to correct the hon. member on a few things before I conclude my remarks. He is one who needs correcting.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. REID: Just listen to what I have to say, and if hon. members do not agree with me I shall withdraw anything they do not like. Before dealing with the proposition put before the house by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) on behalf of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Howe), let me deal briefly with the history of my efforts in this matter, and with statements made, particularly by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. When he spoke on the bill a short time ago he made two definite statements. On page 2642 of Hansard he is reported as saying, in reference to myself:

> I understand that during the campaign of 1935 he assured the electors in the province of British Columbia that if there were a change of government and his party came into power there would be no difficulty in having the government accept his bill or bring in a similar measure.

The hon. member had better look it up, because he is still doubtful whether he spoke.

Mr. PERLEY: I am not in doubt whether I spoke.

Mr. REID: That statement which I have read I unequivocally deny. The one promise I gave to the electors since I entered public life was one of service to the people. And I do not think any hon. member will challenge my statement that I have endeavoured to carry out that promise faithfully. Let us proceed. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle also said, as reported on the same page:

> In conclusion I wish to say that I am heartily in accord with the hon. member's bill.

I was glad to hear that. To continue, he stated:

> I regret that he did not see fit to support me when I was introducing resolutions providing for practically the same thing as his bill.

In the light of that statement I can well understand his rising to-night and denying that he had spoken already.

Here is the brief but correct history. In 1932 the hon. member for Qu'Appelle moved a motion, and the then Minister of Railways objected to it and practically tore it to shreds. His resolution read:

> That in the opinion of this house the domestic freight rate on grain and grain products moving from any point in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia to a point in any of the said provinces, or from one point to another point in any one of said provinces, be substantially reduced.

Referring to page 863 of Hansard of 1932, hon. members will find that the member for New Westminster spoke, and my first remark was that I was pleased to support that resolution. Yet the other day the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said I never supported it. But where was he when the bill came in? He was absent when the vote took place. That resolution of his was talked out and the question not put.

Mr. PERLEY: Was the hon. member ever absent when a vote was taken?

Mr. REID: You just take it. You started this and you will now get the truth. Carrying on the history to 1933, we find it is still very interesting. That year he altered the resolution which he introduced, and instead of saying "be substantially reduced" he put it that it be 50 per cent of the differential then existing between domestic and export rates. Well, there was a statement by the then Minister of Railways, Mr. Manion, and the debate was adjourned by two hon. members; at least two rose to move the adjournment. That year a freight rate bill was again introduced by myself, and both the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) voted against it.

Just to clear up a little matter that, I think, should be cleared up, in regard to what results were obtained in 1933, I do not think it is entirely fair to give the credit to the Minister of Railways of that day, Mr. Manion, for what took place. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) put the situation well when he said this bill embarrasses a government. The bill I introduced in 1933 certainly embarrassed the Conservative government, and I do not think I am revealing secrets that should not now be told when I tell the house that if there is any credit to be given it should go to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), because he told me personally that if Mr. Beatty would not agree to do something in the way of reducing the freight rates on grain he would do it himself; and at that time he instructed the then Minister of Railways to take up the matter with the railway companies and see what could be done. And let me tell the house that if Mr. Manion had been fighting valiantly on behalf of the people of Canada and particularly of the prairie provinces and British Columbia in the matter of reducing freight rates, I think at that time we might have had mill feeds included as well; but when the railway companies proposed the reduction only in feed grains, he accepted the offer right away, without further protest.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. REID: If it is short.

Mr. PERLEY: Does the hon. member not think, if the bill introduced this year had been in the same terms as the bill introduced in 1933, it would have embarrassed the present government as well?

Mr. REID: I think I can deal with that later on. I am dealing at the moment with the history of the matter, and I am dealing with the record of the hon. member, which takes some dealing with, especially when he rises in his place in the house and makes the accusation that I did not support his resolution. That is untrue, and the hon. member knows it. If he does not, I will send him the Hansards.

In 1934 the freight rates bill was again introduced. At that time an amendment was moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Barber) that the subject matter of the bill be referred to the board of railway commissioners. On that occasion several hon. members took the stand that this was not the place to debate freight rates; that the railway commission was the place for that, and so an amendment was moved. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle and the hon. member for Fraser Valley both voted for the amendment, which was carried by 78 to 44, thus killing my bill. The division, however, came on a ruling of the Chair, not on the bill itself; the resolution was agreed to on division. That year the hon. member for Qu'Appelle did not speak in support of the bill or in support of lower freight rates.

The amendment introduced by the hon. member for Fraser Valley was that the matter be referred to the board of railway commissioners. That resolution, so amended, was agreed to on division; but, Mr. Speaker, it never was referred to the board of railway commissioners by the Conservative government. In 1935 my bill was again introduced. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle did not speak on it, and again he was not in the house when the vote was taken. That year, however, the hon. member for Fraser Valley voted for the bill, though previously he had voted against the same bill. I do not suppose the impending election of that year had any bearing on the fact that he voted for the bill at that time.

Mr. BARBER: This is for consumption in your own riding, I suppose.

Mr. REID: I will take you one at a time. It is just about time somebody got after you two members, because you have been making statements in this house—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. REID: I am sorry they cannot stand it very well, but now the truth is coming home. To proceed further, in 1936 there was a resolution introduced by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, and for the third time there was a change. His resolution read:

That, in the opinion of this house, the domestic freight rate on grain and grain products moving from any point in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia to a point in any of the said provinces, or from any point to another point in any of the said provinces, be adjusted or reduced to at least not more than three cents per hundred pounds over the existing export rates.

Three times he introduced that resolution, and each time it was different. Evidently he really did not know what he wanted in the matter of a reduction in freight rates, as is evidenced by the changes in the resolution.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the hon. member tell us just what happened to that resolution?

Mr. REID: You sit down. I haven't time.

Mr. PERLEY: Just tell us what happened to that resolution.

Mr. REID: Yes, I will tell you; I am going to.

Mr. PERLEY: It was ruled out of order.

Mr. REID: I am going to tell the exact truth. I am not like you; I will keep to the record of Hansard.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PERLEY: I appeal to the Chair; I think the hon. member should withdraw that remark.

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the point of order?

Mr. PERLEY: The point of order is that the hon. member should withdraw the statement that I was not telling the truth.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think the hon. member meant that.

Mr. REID: I mean that when the hon. member spoke the other evening and said I did not support his resolution, he did not keep to the record. That is as far as I can go, according to the rules.

Let us proceed. The motion was ruled out of order on division; objection was taken under the rules of the house because it was similar to the freight rates bill. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle was asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) which had been on the order paper first, the bill or the resolution. It is true that the resolution was sent in some time before the house met; but my bill was placed here immediately after the previous session and could not be placed on the order paper until after the house met, so the hon. member could say that his resolution was first on the order paper. Under the rules a resolution can be printed the first day, while a bill cannot. The speakers on that occasion were myself, the hon. member for Outremont (Mr. Vien), the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill), the Minister of Transport, the hon. member for Fraser Valley and the hon. member for Souris (Mr. McDonald). At that time the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was silent, but I notice that though, by the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley in 1934, I had been advised to go to the board of railway commissioners, the hon. gentleman keeps chiding me because I took that advice and went to the board. However, that is just the way they act; I have more important things, however, than that to say, and I see the time is going by.

Reference has been made to appeals to the board of railway commissioners. I have brought this matter into the house because we find it useless to go to the board of railway commissioners and ask for a reduction in freight rates on grains to the province of British Columbia. It is interesting to note that a change is now taking place, and if the transport bill passes the board of railway commissioners will become the new transport board. When the railway commission was appointed it was set up to protect the public of this country; the new bill, however, in my opinion is going to protect the railway companies, which is an entirely different matter. What chance of success shall we the public have if we go to the new transport board for a reduction of freight rates, when their duty is to protect the railway companies instead of the public? So I have no apology to make for bringing this matter up in this house.

In 1925 the house dealt with this very question but omitted to put in a clause which would have given British Columbia the same equal treatment that the other provinces have enjoyed for many long years. This has placed on the people of British Columbia a greater load than is borne by the people of most of the other provinces. Even in our flour requirements we pay $450,000 a year more than is paid by the other provinces. The estimated population of British Columbia is 700,000 or more. The estimated amount of wheat required for each individual is five bushels. That means 160,000 tons, and with a differential of $4.30 in favour of the domestic rate it means $450,000 more for flour requirements alone.

I have not time to go into all the matters I should like to deal with, because I do not want to be accused again of talking out my own bill. The railways require traffic these days, and I know of no better way to get it than by encouraging the movement of grain to British Columbia so that the poultrymen and dairymen of that province may produce more eggs, poultry, butter and cream. We have lost a great market in the old country; we are sending only one-half of one per cent of their total requirements in eggs. The British market takes 240,000,000 dozen eggs a year, but last year Canada only supplied approximately one and a half million dozen. In 1928 the railways received $298,000 in freight on eggs alone leaving the province of British Columbia for other markets, whereas last year they received only a total of some $7,000. In 1927 the number of laying poultry in British Columbia amounted to 2,750,205, whereas in 1936 the number had dropped to less than 1,500,000. In 1927 we produced 27,500,000 dozen eggs, whereas in 1936, the latest year for which I have the figures, the number had dropped to 15,800,000 dozen.

I should like to mention one point here. Perhaps this may be not pertinent to the discussion on my bill, but I believe it should be brought to the attention of the house. British Columbia is bringing in this year, and brought in last year, many bushels of wheat. They brought it from Yakimo, a distance of 634 miles, to Cloverdale, near my own home town, at the rate of 34 cents per 100 pounds. That comprised No. 2 and No. 3 grades of wheat. And, note that it was brought in from across the line. We might also commence to grow in the province of British Columbia, and particularly in the Fraser valley, hard wheat. In my own constituency we have the world's champion grower of hard wheat who won the Chicago world's championship last year. The gentleman's name is Mr. W. G. Gibson, and I have a sample of his wheat in my hand. It is called Reward, and those who have sampled or looked at it, including the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), believe it is harder than the wheat grown on the prairies. Bear in mind that this wheat was grown at sea level, right at the coast, and that is something unprecedented in wheat production. I think it is only right and fair that some honourable recognition be given to the man who produced this fine quality of hard wheat, Mr. Gibson of Ladner.

Mr. Speaker, my time is passing, and I should like to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. PERLEY: You had better hurry; you have only a short time to withdraw.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. REID: Yes; you are now at your usual interjecting. No matter what claims have been made by Conservative members in connection with the rates given on feed grain by the railways in 1933, I maintain that the bill introduced by myself had considerable effect on what was done in that year. My bill had to be voted on, whereas the resolution of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was disposed of by being adjourned or talked out, and was therefore not so embarrassing to the government.

Mr. PERLEY: It got results, though.

Mr. REID: It was a concession to my bill, and has saved the people of British Columbia a considerable sum of money. Mill feeds might also have been included in the same manner, had the then Minister of Railways demanded that they be put in the agreement. The proposal to include now mill feeds and carry them at the same freight rate as feed grain, while it is not as much as the people of British Columbia would like to obtain, still it is a considerable concession, and I believe it would be much better to accept what has been offered than to refuse the bill altogether. As mill feed constitutes fifty per cent of the feed requirements of the poultrymen and dairymen of British Columbia, the proposal will mean an annual saving of approximately $100,000. I am disposed tonight to accept that proposal. It will also mean a saving of around $5,000 annually to the members of Fraser Valley Surrey Farmers' Cooperative Association. It will certainly mean a considerable saving to the 600 members of that association.

It has been a long battle to obtain what has been accomplished, but I believe the fight has been a worth while effort on behalf of the people of the province. I wish to say tonight that in agreeing to withdraw the bill I am not agreeing to discontinue the fight. I am willing to accept half a loaf, so to speak, in the belief that it is better than no bread. The saving of $100,000 annually is certainly, I must say, a worth while concession in the meantime. But even that is not what the people of British Columbia want.

Had I had time I should have liked to go into the loss to the railways. It has been pointed out that the freight rates in the United States are higher than those in Canada. I should like time to meet that argument, because I dispute the statement to that effect made by the Minister of Transport. May I give one instance of what is taking place right now, to show where we are losing a great deal of trade because of high rates in Canada. I have before me an invoice of a piano shipped from Toronto to Vancouver. That piano weighing 550 pounds was sent at the regular freight rates, and the freight bill amounted to $33. The same company brought a grand piano from the same point, namely Toronto, shipped it by way of Chicago and Seattle, then completed the shipment by re-shipping by regular freight rates to Vancouver. The grand piano weighed 700 pounds, or 150 pounds more than the other, but it was carried the whole distance at a cost of $19, as against $33 over the Canadian route.

I have in mind another case which will perhaps be known to the hon. member for Fraser Valley. The greatest rose grower in British Columbia, Mr. H. M. Eddie, possibly the greatest in Canada, who lives in the constituency the hon. member represents, wanted to ship rose bushes from that point to eastern Canada, and particularly to Toronto. He was quoted a rate of $3.58 per 100 pounds by the Canadian railways, and the United States railways quoted a rate of $1.58 for the same distance. The United States railway landed them in Toronto at that rate and in about the same time. I mention these facts to show that it is about time we reconstructed the rate structure, and had something more in keeping with the times.

I am sorry I have not more time to develop further arguments, because I had much more to say, but I realize it is almost nine o'clock and I am afraid that again I might be accused of talking out my bill.

The SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house that the hon. member have leave to withdraw his bill?

Mr. SENN: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. SPEAKER: The bill will be withdrawn.

Mr. DUNNING: Discharged.

Bill withdrawn.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

Lands, parks and forests branch—To provide for expenses in connection with the determination of boundaries of ordnance and admiralty lands in the province of British Columbia, $3,000.

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Chairman, we were considering this item when my progress in connection with the estimates was interrupted. I had given an explanation of the item.

Mr. STIRLING: I think I was asking the minister with regard to the location of these lands, and he had said that the delineation of boundaries was an old matter. I wonder where the difficulty lies in connection with boundary delineation? There must be some plans. Is there difficulty in connection with actually laying them out on the ground?

Mr. CRERAR: I am informed that the procedure involves a search of old records and old titles that are in the records office of the legislature of British Columbia. Altogether there are now fifty parcels; originally there were 170 parcels.

Mr. SENN: In British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: In British Columbia altogether, and there are about fifty of them left. We hope to make some progress with the matter this year; in fact, we had hoped to make some progress last year and did not, and consequently we have this item in the estimates again this year to cover the expenses deemed necessary in clearing the matter up. I hope I may be able to report to the house next year, if I am still responsible for this department, that the matter has been disposed of.

Mr. SENN: The statement just made by the minister brings up a question about which I had a word or two to say last year. The minister has told us that originally there were over a hundred parcels in British Columbia, and that now there are approximately only fifty. Evidently some of them have been disposed of in the meantime. I know that in Ontario applications have been made from time to time to the department for the purchase of some of these ordnance lands which lie along the shores of the great lakes, and the minister was quite firm at that time that there was no chance and no inclination on the part of the government to dispose of any of these lands. In Ontario there have been disputes over the boundary lines because these lines lie adjacent to farmers' property. Whether these ordnance lands have been encroached upon or whether the boundaries have never been clearly established I cannot say, but I would ask the minister why, if ordnance lands have been disposed of in British Columbia, it is impossible for applications for ordnance lands in Ontario to be granted at any time.

Mr. CRERAR: These were disposed of in British Columbia years ago. I am not at the moment familiar with any difficulty in Ontario.

Mr. SENN: I do not know that at the moment there is any difficulty over boundary lines.

Mr. CRERAR: My information is that there is not; but these cases in British Columbia are still outstanding, and we think their land department has been rather dilatory in doing its part. Perhaps this may be regarded as unfair criticism. I do not so intend it. As I have said before, I discussed this matter with the premier of British Columbia when he was here recently, and we hope to make some progress this year.

Mr. STIRLING: Does the minister expect eventually to dispose of these lands, or is this merely for the delineation of the boundaries?

Mr. CRERAR: This is to get the boundaries determined and the titles cleared up. After that, the question of what might be done with these lands will be considered. There will also be the question, I am advised, of their need or suitability for defence purposes. But the problem at the moment is to get the boundaries and the titles cleared up.

Mr. STIRLING: Is some of it city property?

Mr. CRERAR: I am advised that none of these lands is in that category now. There were some in the past but the province disposed of them, but the titles to these parcels have yet to be fully cleared up. Quite frankly, I think it is a matter that should have been settled years ago.

Mr. SENN: My reason for speaking on this item, Mr. Chairman, is that along the north shore of lake Erie and lake Ontario, but lake Erie particularly, there is a number of summer cottages strung all the way along the lake shore, and in many places there is ordnance property which would make an excellent site for a summer cottage, but the department in the last few years has consistently refused to make any arrangements for the sale or transfer of these properties. My idea was that in case of war or these properties being needed by the government for some purpose, they could be expropriated if necessary, but in the meantime they are lying idle and are overgrown with weeds which are more or less a menace to the neighbourhood. It would be much better if the department would take into consideration the disposal of such of these properties as are not necessary for ordnance or defence purposes.

Mr. CRERAR: I shall be very glad to take the suggestion of my hon. friend into consideration. At the moment there are no questions at issue so far as I know.

Mr. SENN: I have had applications, not this last year, but within the last two or three or four years, from people who were anxious to purchase and were unable to do so.

Mr. CRERAR: We are not selling ordnance lands, and that has been the policy not only of this government but, I think, of preceding governments; but I am advised that a lease may be granted on these lands, and I suppose that applications for the lease of some particular piece of property for the erection of a cottage or for some other purpose would be considered. My hon. friend says he made reference to the question last year, but this is really the first I have heard of it. There is in regard to these ordnance lands in Ontario no difficulty such as I mentioned in connection with the lands in British Columbia.

Mr. SENN: My only reason for mentioning the matter was that the minister had said that there had been over one hundred parcels of these ordnance lands in British Columbia, and now there were only fifty. I supposed some had been disposed of, and I wondered why one province was being treated differently from another.

Mr. CRERAR: There has been no change in the situation in British Columbia for many years. These lands originated, I dare say, even before the provincial government was formed, away back in the time of Governor Douglas in British Columbia. The matter has dragged along and really should be cleared up. I do not know that I can add anything further.

Mr. ESLING: Would the minister tell us if the title to the foreshore of navigable rivers is vested in the federal government or in the province, and is there any difference between such lands in front of municipalities and those in front of unorganized territory? To be more explicit, take the Columbia river, which is a navigable stream. In which government is the title to these foreshores vested?

Mr. CRERAR: That lies wholly, I think, with the province of British Columbia. The Columbia river flows through that province; they own the land on either side of the river and, I think, the foreshore rights as well.

Frankly, I am not familiar with the legal position of the matter. But my information now is, and certainly my impression is, that in the case cited by the hon. member the foreshore rights would lie with the province of British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: Does the riparian owner not own out to the middle of the stream or creek or river?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes; I should think probably he would. I do not know whether that answers the point raised by my hon. friend. If a riparian owner has bought a river lot in British Columbia, I suppose under provincial law that would carry certain rights out to the middle of the stream, but the authority to dispose of that lies, and has lain in the past, with the province.

Item agreed to.

National parks bureau—National parks and historic sites services, $1,383,500.

Mr. CRERAR: This is a general item dealing with the administration of all the national parks in Canada. There are now altogether about twenty of these national parks established, embracing an area of roughly 12,500 square miles. The purpose of this vote is to pay for the administration costs of the parks, and improvements within the parks such as maintenance of roads and, in some instances, the construction of new roads. The increase as indicated in the estimates arises in the same way as one or two other increases I referred to earlier on other items: that is, we have included in the estimates this year for national parks considerable sums which heretofore were either in special supplementaries or, under the late administration, under the Public Works Construction Act. After we combine all the figures there is an actual decrease in the vote as compared with a year ago. That, of course, does not include the supplementary estimates which were tabled this afternoon.

Mr. SENN: Would the minister give us the number of historic sites? He mentioned the number of parks. I imagine that will include the historic sites as well.

Mr. CRERAR: I find in the report of the lands, parks and forests branch for the year ended March 31, 1937, that at the close of the fiscal year 1936-37 a total of 239 sites of national importance in Canada had been acquired by the department. Of this number 235 have been marked by the erection of suitable memorials on the recommendation of the historic sites and monuments board of Canada.

Mr. SENN: Is that pamphlet available for anyone who desires it?

Mr. CRERAR: Oh, yes. It is an annual report of the lands, parks and forests branch. It is incorporated in the report of the Department of Mines and Resources. There is a great deal of useful information in that report.

Mr. MacINNIS: When can the minister give any information about the Garibaldi park area near the city of Vancouver, British Columbia? I understand that area was offered to the federal government for a national park some seven or eight years ago. Has it been accepted as a national park area?

Mr. CRERAR: No. Garibaldi park is, I understand, a provincial park under the control of the provincial government. Suggestions have been made that it might be taken over by the federal government and incorporated in the national parks of Canada. It is an interesting suggestion, and some day, probably, it will be acted upon. But, after all, in the development of national parks we have to cut our coat according to the measure of our cloth. The decision was reached a few years ago to establish a national park in Nova Scotia, and development in that park is taking place now. Prior to that, parks were established in Manitoba, and in Saskatchewan north of Prince Albert, within the last ten years. The development of national parks is progressive. Obviously, as I stated a moment ago, we must have regard to the amount of money we have available to spend for this purpose. I should say that some time in the future—I am not going to predict when—the Garibaldi park proposition might be considered. I know the view is held, particularly in Vancouver, that Garibaldi park would be a desirable acquisition for the national parks system of the dominion. But according to our information quite a considerable amount of money would be needed to make any appreciable development in the park, principally in the way of constructing roads to it, as well as carrying on other necessary developments. At the moment we are not in a position to undertake that development.

Mr. MacINNIS: I quite understand that the government could not take over and develop all the land which might be available for national parks in the dominion, and that development must necessarily be fairly slow, but I believe there are, in connection with this area, circumstances that the government should take into consideration in the very near future. The late Doctor Tolmie, when he was premier of British Columbia, definitely offered the area to the federal government to be developed as a national park. It is one of extremely fine scenic beauty, and it is only about fifty miles from Vancouver. As a tourist attraction so close to the largest city in British Columbia, I do not suppose there is anything else to equal it. I hope the minister's department will give consideration to it, as there is a strong desire in British Columbia, and particularly, as the minister himself said, in Vancouver, to have this area opened up as a park.

Mr. CRERAR: We shall be glad indeed to give consideration to the suggestion of my hon. friend. I might point out to the committee, though, that there are already four national parks in British Columbia: Kootenay park, the Yoho, Glacier, and the park at Revelstoke. These embrace altogether an area of about 1,700 square miles. And we have requests for the establishment of national parks in provinces in which there are not any. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) was urging this afternoon consideration of the establishment of a national park in the area along the St. Lawrence river below Kingston. Well, Ontario has a few, small national parks. There is a small park at Point Pelee, which is the most southerly point in Canada on lake Erie, and there are the islands in Georgian bay which belonged originally to the Indians and were secured from them many years ago for national park purposes, and the islands in the St. Lawrence river. Quebec has not yet a national park, although the Quebec government has broached the question of establishing one. New Brunswick has not yet a park, although the matter of selecting a site is under consideration. When there are four national parks already established in British Columbia and none in some of the other provinces, my hon. friend will appreciate some of the difficulties that we would face if we attempted to ignore New Brunswick, for instance, or Quebec, and proceeded to establish a fifth park in British Columbia. I know that he will appreciate the problem which would face the administration in that respect and I hope he will sympathize with me.

Mr. McGEER: I suppose the reason why the department cannot assume responsibility for developing Garibaldi as a national park is not merely the fact that there are already some other parks in British Columbia, but that the limit of the financial resources allowed by the government to the department has been reached. May I take this opportunity to direct the attention of the department to two matters. In the first place, I would point out that the parks in the Rocky mountain and Selkirk mountain areas were never developed as British Columbia parks. They grew out of a great conception that Sir William Van Horne had that those parks would be a real asset to the Canadian Pacific railway, and then the idea was copied into Jasper park, not as a British Columbia park but as a park that would be a real acquisition in the development of traffic for the railways. The fact is that there are no national parks in British Columbia in the sense that national parks are established in other places.

With regard to the question of finance, it seems more than strange that, when we realize that through national parks can be sold to the greatest advantage Canada's chief export asset, namely her tourist trade attractions, some recognition of the tourist trade of Canada is not given in appropriating moneys for the development of further tourist trade attractions. The figures indicate that out of a total revenue of some $300,000,000 from tourist trade there is an actual profit to the dominion of somewhere between $160,000,000 and $180,000,000. I venture to say that this favourable balance, which is so essential to a nation carrying so heavy a load of foreign debt, would not exist at all if it were not for the park facilities and the natural attractions that Canada enjoys at the present time.

There can be no good reason why a nation that enjoys a revenue of $300,000,000 a year from the tourist trade cannot appropriate to the development of national parks and of highways leading to them, the funds that are necessary to make them as attractive as possible. As a matter of fact, the policy which is being pursued here is one that is probably costing the dominion anywhere from $200,000,000 to $500,000,000 a year, because it is a policy which persistently refuses to recognize the fact that Canadian credit can be properly and safely invested in the development of those Canadian assets which will increase foreign revenue and develop revenues from abroad. I happen to be interested in Garibaldi park because it affects, by reason of its lack of development, the economic life of the city of Vancouver and of a substantial portion of British Columbia. Today, for want of the kind of attraction that Garibaldi would offer, thousands upon thousands of Canadians from Vancouver and British Columbia generally are now going across the boundary line and finding that entertainment both in summer and in winter in the great parks of Mount Baker and Mount Rainier in Washington. That drift southward will show, I think, that British Columbia of all the provinces of Canada has an adverse balance of tourist trade. I am confident that, if Garibaldi park were opened and developed as it could be, instead of Canadians going south by thousands they would find better entertainment in that park than they can get elsewhere, and because of that thousands upon thousands of United States citizens would come north where we to-day are going south.

There is another reason why Garibaldi should be developed. The government, quite wisely I think, has recognized the fact that to serve the 130,000,000 people in the south who own and operate some 28,000,000 automobiles, it is good business for the administration to cooperate in building highways through gateway points into various sections of the dominion. If we could get a highway connection from the boundary line at Blaine, through Vancouver, across the First Narrows bridge now being built by private capital, and up Howe sound to Garibaldi park, recognizing that as the first link in the Alaska highway from the southern boundary line, we could show the government a possible revenue in tolls if it were necessary, and certainly in the way of tourists from the south, which would make it a good, sound, self-liquidating investment and turn an adverse balance of trade into a favourable one. I should like the minister to take up the question with his colleagues, and particularly the Minister of Finance, and ascertain why it is that this nation of ours, richer in proportion to its population than any other nation in the world, cannot find the means to develop those attractions which are essential to the advancement of our international trade. Why is it that nations like Germany and Italy can find money without limit to finance an aggressive program of armament, while we Canadians cannot find a few million dollars for the development of our national parks and roads? There is no good reason why any Canadian should look either to the soviets or to Germany or Italy for lessons in finance. Let us forget the dictatorships and ascertain from our own Department of Finance why it is that Great Britain, hopelessly bankrupt in 1931, to-day can stand forth and meet the threats of almost the whole world ranged against her and finance a great program of social reconstruction, of rehousing, of national defence, carrying her obligations clear out to the enormous Singapore base in the far east. If the 45,000,000 English people can do what they are doing, why have we to stand shivering in impotence, unable to develop assets like Garibaldi park in British Columbia, which are just as necessary in the interests of Canada and of every province from ocean to ocean?

The time may soon come when we in Canada must look at what is going on elsewhere in the world, and particularly in Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand. Our Canadian people are not going to remain satisfied with answers such as we have had to-night. With our government in possession of all this wealth, boasting of a favourable trade balance of hundreds of millions of dollars, of a favourable balance from tourist trade last year of $160,000,000 odd, and more this year, I am satisfied that our Canadian people will not accept as reasonable the statement that we have not the money to put our unemployed men, who are ready and anxious for employment, to work in developing the kind of thing that experience and records of performance prove will pay and pay well. We have no reason to be afraid of the future, unless those in the seats of government have lost confidence in the possibility of future development of this nation's wealth. If the government lose faith in the nation, it is impossible to expect others to have confidence.

But I do congratulate the Department of Mines and Resources upon the splendid work it has been doing and the splendid results it has achieved. I venture to say that, of all the things accomplished, the opening up of roads and trails and the development of highways from the international boundary to our national parks has given the best kind of employment and been probably the best practical service, not only in eliminating immediate unemployment but in removing unemployment as a continuing evil, of any step this government has taken. My hope is that, in view of the splendid results which have been achieved, those of us who have faith in the great program the minister is carrying out will rally to his support and do all we can to guide the Department of Finance out of that swamp of financial ignorance in which it seems to be lost.

Mr. HANSELL: How much of the roads in the Banff national park and the Waterton lakes national park is hard surfaced?

Mr. CRERAR: So far we have no hard-surfaced roads within these park boundaries.

Mr. HANSELL: I would not criticize the type of roads that are in the two parks I have mentioned. I have been over nearly every road in the Banff national park except the one now being constructed up to Jasper—

Mr. McGEER: Do not miss that; that is the best.

Mr. HANSELL: I hope it will be. The roads are in good condition; but there are, and will be every year, spots in them that need considerable repair, because notwithstanding the fact that the roads are graveled and well scraped and oiled, they do deteriorate. There was a time when tourists and citizens going into those parks used to talk about the terrible roads until one got to the gates of the parks, and then one could depend upon the roads being good. But now the picture has to some extent changed. As far as the Alberta side of those two parks is concerned—and some credit is coming to this government for the assistance they have given—the road from Calgary into the Banff park is now hard surfaced and is a splendid road. When you come to the gate of the park the road is fair to good, but not hard surfaced. If you are going into the Waterton lakes park from the east or northeast, the road is now hard surfaced from Macleod into Pincher Creek; from Pincher Creek on the road is fair but not hard surfaced.

Following the remarks of the last speaker concerning the tourist trade, I suggest to the minister that I believe no better circle tour could be found, from the many points of view I have in mind, than the one from Calgary through to Banff and down the Windermere highway, and return by way of Macleod and Lethbridge. You can take a number of side roads if you wish; but the route I have in mind is through to Cranbrook, east through the Crowsnest pass, visiting the Waterton lakes national park, then up to Macleod or through by Cardston and Lethbridge and back to Calgary. I believe that is one of the most wonderful tours in Canada, from the standpoint both of scenic beauty and of what one might learn of the wealth and industry in different parts of this territory. From Calgary west through the Cochrane district there is a most wonderful ranching country, with eighty or ninety miles of good, hard-surfaced road. We know what is at Banff; that has been well advertised, and I shall have something to say in that connection later on. The road through the Banff national park and down the Windermere highway certainly is beautiful, and I want to compliment the minister upon the continual improvements that are being made in various projects within the park. Then, coming through the Crowsnest pass, we get a glimpse of the coal mining industry of Alberta. It is in the mountains, but tourists are interested in other things than scenery. If you go through to Pincher Creek, down to Waterton Park and back again either by way of Macleod or through Cardston and Raymond, you go through a magnificent stretch of farming country. I would even go so far as to mention that it has been said that the Mormon temple at Cardston is one of the unique buildings in the British Empire. Certainly it is a point of interest. Then there is the Raymond sugar factory, which is another point of interest, as well as all those irrigation projects in and around that district. If one wanted to take a little side trip from Lethbridge into the Taber district he would see a canning factory, and it is no little two by four factory. They can put out vast quantities of fruit and vegetables from that place. If you go north towards Calgary again, whether you take the route by way of Macleod or by way of Lethbridge, you will go through one of the greatest wheat growing areas you could find anywhere. It has been said that in the Champion-Vulcan district, and to the north, as much wheat can be produced from a given area as can be produced anywhere in the world. Of course, in the last few years we have experienced a good deal of drought there, but in good years, Mr. Chairman, we can certainly grow wheat. In Vulcan, which is a small village, there are nine large elevators. In Nanton, which is about the same size, I think there are about nine elevators also. I should not forget to mention that before entering Calgary you can go through the famous Turner valley oil fields. That is a sight to behold, a sight that any tourist coming to Canada will love to see. This is a circle tour within which you find all these points of interest.

I should like to say another word in this connection. I have not received a copy of the supplementary estimates, but I notice the Evening Citizen mentions that in them $40,000,000 is provided for public works. Perhaps we can discuss that at another time; but I would say to the minister, and to the Minister of Labour, that there could be no more profitable project undertaken in Canada than to see that the highways in that circle tour are hard surfaced. I realize that this is partly a provincial responsibility; but if the sum of $40,000,000 is to spent on public works in an attempt to put the unemployed to work, I believe the government would be well advised to spend some of the money right there. They would get it back in a few years, through the tourist trade that would come to this country.

I should also like to compliment the minister upon that project in the Banff national park known as the "Cascade of Time." I fancy that project comes under this department rather than under the town of Banff. Of course, at the present time it is not much more than a beautiful garden; but a good deal of work is being done on it from year to year, and certainly it is becoming a real beauty spot.

Before resuming my seat, I should like to ask the minister if he is able to give the committee any information as to whether or not some of the money that is to be spent for public works—I am talking now of the $40,000,000—will be spent on the roads I have mentioned. Would the minister care to make a pronouncement on that point? I know it is pretty early to say very much about it.

Mr. CRERAR: No; at the moment I am not in a position to make any definite statement in that regard; but doubtless my hon. friend will get the information in good time, when the supplementary estimates are under consideration. This year we are planning to do some hard surfacing in Banff, and also to carry on with the work that has been in progress for a few years now, designed to create a hard-surfaced highway from Kingsgate north to Cranbrook and into the park system at Radium Hot Springs, then out to Calgary over the road my hon. friend has mentioned; from Calgary south to Waterton lakes and on to the Glacier national park in the United States. We are making progress with that. I quite realize the importance of the point raised by my hon. friend as to the value of hard-surfaced roads for tourist traffic; I think there is an increasing realization of the importance of such roads. I have no doubt we shall progress steadily and, I hope, fairly rapidly, in the future in the creation of these roads.

Mr. HAYHURST: What has been said to-night rather reminds me of what was said yesterday: Each man for his own part of the country. It would seem that the members from the maritimes have not yet spoken on this subject, and I know they are anxious to do so. We have heard members from central Canada, from the prairies and some from British Columbia. As hon. members know, the greatest and most beautiful road in the world is now under construction, namely the road from Jasper to Banff, following the Columbia glacier. It presents the most magnificent scenery, so far as mountains are concerned, and would connect with the road system to which the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) has referred. It also connects with the Jasper highway which goes directly to Edmonton.

Yesterday we heard a great deal of talk regarding the amount of money used for advertising in the United States and Great Britain to bring people to Canada to see the beauties of this country. From letters I have received from both the old country and the United States, I am certain a large number of people are waiting the completion of this road which would go from Jasper to Lake Louise, following the ice-fields. I would ask the minister when he thinks the road would be completed, because I believe the work done on that road would prove most profitable in the near future through the number of people it would bring to that part of the country. Not only would it carry tourists, but it would also accommodate geologists and scientists. I know that at one time while I was in the mountains a thousand students came from the various universities of the United States to study geology, the ice age and so on. The road runs right along the great glaciers and, as I have said, it presents the most magnificent scenery in the great Rocky mountains system. I speak from knowledge, because I believe I have travelled from Utah north, through most of the mountains in the great Rocky mountains chain, and also along the coast range. If the minister could have the work completed quickly, it would prove most beneficial to that part of the country. Probably he is in a position to give the committee some information with respect to the road from Jasper, following the Columbia glacier to Lake Louise.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Hon. members in this section of the house do not wish to monopolize the attention of the committee, but I must remind hon. members that Alberta has a tremendous number of scenic beauties. We must not allow anybody to forget that, not because we wish to boast about it but because those beauties are a great national asset. I believe there are more parks in Alberta than in any other province. We are strategically located, particularly because we are near the Yellowstone national park. People come from all parts of the world to visit the Yellowstone park, from which with modern automobiles it is not a difficult or forbiddingly long trip to Glacier park. If there were a hard-surfaced road from the border towns of Coutts and Carway into Lethbridge and Cardston, it would invite many tourists who are now turned back as soon as they look across the Canadian border and see roads which yield dust. So important is this matter that I am taking it upon myself to burden the committee a bit to-night by adding a third voice from Alberta urging that something be done soon. A good many people—and I do not include members of the house—do not realize that the tourist trade affects our trade balance.

Mr. DUNNING: No, not our trade balance; it affects our balance of payments. That is a different matter.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes; but there is an international balance between nations which is affected seriously.

Mr. DUNNING: Of payments.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Which is our chief anxiety.

Mr. DUNNING: One of them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: In the last analysis it is the balance of payments which bothers us, and here is an excellent opportunity of overcoming what might become an adverse situation for Canada. Inasmuch as in this very year there are grave indications that we may have very trying times economically before we come together again, it might be worth while to readjust our plans to some extent this year so as to permit of the finishing of these roads from Coutts and Carway. It is not very far from Coutts to Lethbridge or from Carway to Cardston, and it would not be difficult to hard-surface the Kennedy creek cut-off road, which is another scenic attraction. I believe no expenditure in Canada would bring greater returns, unless it would be that particular portion mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer), a portion with which I must admit I am not familiar.

I wish to add my voice to those which have been lifted in commendation of the efforts of the minister. So far as I have been able to find out, I believe, considering the money he has had at his disposal, he has administered his department very well. Nevertheless, I feel we will strengthen his hand with his fellow colleagues if we state that he needs even more money for the development of these roads and the encouragement of the tourist industry in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: I wish to say just a few words which may be as much out of order as the remarks which cause me to make them. I gather that in the previous discussion the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard indicated that many desirable things could be done if it were not for—and I am not sure that this is the exact language—an inadequate Minister of Finance, and that he and other hon. members in the house would undertake to help the Minister of Mines and Resources in bringing about a reformation in that regard. In that connection I merely desire to point out that reformation is a very easy matter, if the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard is speaking for any substantial number of members on the government side of the house, or, in fact, for any substantial number of members in the house. We still have responsible government in this country. The financial affairs of the country must be conducted in accordance with the principles of responsible government.

I do not believe that in those remarks the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard spoke for any considerable number of members supporting the government. Further, I do not believe that he spoke for the people of Canada. It will be very easy, Mr. Chairman, to discover either of those things. The hon. member has an opportunity of demonstrating the extent of the support which he could get for getting rid of the present Minister of Finance and the present financial methods of the country, and I hope he will attempt it, because then we shall have the house clearly on record as to whether the somewhat vague proposals of so-called financial reform, which I personally regard as financial reaction and not financial reform, should be applied in the proper constitutional manner by the government of Canada.

So far as I am concerned, I do not count. At this time I have a responsibility. It is not a responsibility which any man would seek in these times. It is a responsibility which I feel very keenly because of the debt I conceive I owe to Canada. In discharging it, I discharge it according to my conscientious belief as to what is best for Canada. But it is the function of this house to decide what is best for Canada; it is not my function or that of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard. This house having decided what is best by way of financial policy, then the man who occupies the position which I occupy should be in accord with that policy. I am in accord, naturally, with the policy at present being followed.

Mr. LANDERYOU: Not in Alberta.

Mr. DUNNING: In the Dominion of Canada. Most certainly I am not in accord with the policy being followed in Alberta. But I am not responsible to the people of Alberta, as a province. I am responsible to them merely through their representatives in this house, in the same manner as I am responsible to the people of Canada through all the other representatives in the house. If at any time, which I would sincerely regret in what I believe to be the best interests of Canada, my hon. friends opposite who now occupy a few seats in the far corner should occupy the majority of seats in this house, they would expect to have a man sitting here who would carry into effect the policies in which the majority of that house believed. I am sure they would. I sincerely believe that I am putting into effect, and the government on my advice is following in matters of finance, a policy which is in accord with the wishes of the majority of members supporting the government in this house, and, indeed, far more than that. But I rose simply to say that there is an easy way to demonstrate whether or not that is the case.

Mr. McGEER: In my few remarks this evening I regret very much that I have precipitated what appears to be a crisis in the government.

Mr. DUNNING: No crisis in the government.

Mr. McGEER: I would never have thought that Garibaldi park would have figured so prominently in the politics of the dominion as that. I do want to take this opportunity of complimenting and congratulating the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) upon the courageous and magnificent way in which he defends his conception of what his responsibilities are to this house, to his government, and to the people of the Dominion of Canada. But may I offer the suggestion, Mr. Chairman, that upon this question of public finance there may be good reasons why men even on the same side of politics may differ in the interpretation of the policy upon which this government was elected. It seems to me that I remember standing before my own electors, speaking throughout the province of British Columbia, and declaring that we were going to establish a reformed monetary system under which we were going to issue currency and credit through a national bank in terms of public need.

Mr. DUNNING: Which we are doing.

Mr. McGEER: And in terms of the social, economic and domestic needs of this nation.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Ninety per cent of the Liberals thought that.

Mr. McGEER: I want to say to my friends on the other side that I never knew of any suggestion on our part that we were only going to give national credit away for nothing.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Will the hon. gentleman take his seat for a moment? I think this discussion is entirely out of order. It is quite true that the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard did bring in the monetary question. The Minister of Finance was not in his seat, and later he made a short reply, but this is not the time for this discussion. We are on the item, national parks bureau—national parks and historic sites services.

Mr. McGEER: And the financing of them, as I understand, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: No. Order, please. I would ask all the members of the committee to confine their remarks to the item under discussion.

Mr. ISNOR: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. McGEER: Wait a minute, please. I am not put out of the house just because I am out of order. Now that the Minister of Finance is in his place, may I offer to him for his consideration that if we could get the means of incorporating Garibaldi park within the administrative authority of the national Department of Mines and Resources, and if the same good policy of parks development and highway development to the parks were undertaken, it might prove a source of revenue that would more than justify the expenditure.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not what I was commenting on at all. I take no exception to that.

Mr. McGEER: If we had this done, possibly we would find a source from which the revenues of the Department of Finance could be greatly enhanced.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly.

Mr. McGEER: I am satisfied that if the Minister of Finance were convinced of that, he would not hesitate to make the investment, because I think everyone will agree that even in national finance an investment that returns revenues, particularly when it is an investment that eliminates unemployment, and particularly also when it establishes a national asset of enduring value, is within the limits of the soundest and most orthodox finance. If I have any complaint to offer against the department, it is that they have not been awake to the opportunities of improving the revenues of the dominion, and I believe that Garibaldi park stands out as only one example of many that may be found in every province. May I say further to the Minister of Finance that such a program of development will meet with the unanimous approval of the whole people of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: You take in a lot of territory there.

Mr. McGEER: I think what I have suggested is so sound that everybody would approve it. But when I rose to speak, I really did not have in mind the precipitation of any discussion on the administration of the Department of Finance per se, and may I apologize to the minister for having carelessly let go one or two shots that probably should have been reserved for the budget debate.

Mr. DUNNING: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you will allow me to accept the apology, and to say that I had no reference whatever to Garibaldi park or any other park but was referring simply to the suggestion made by my hon. friend that "we will make this antiquated Department of Finance" do something or another, and I was merely pointing out to the committee that there is a simple way for a majority of the members on this side of the house to determine the financial policy of the country. I was explaining how my hon. friend could obtain his wish. He will forgive me if I say he was taking in rather too much territory when he said: "we" will. "He" would, I have no doubt, but I doubt very much if he could associate with himself a sufficient number of members who think as he does to bring about the change which he indicated he so heartily desired.

Mr. McGEER: Oh, do not take it too seriously.

Mr. LANDERYOU: I am not going to refer to the promises of the Liberal party before the election or get into a discussion of finance. I was interested in the observation of the minister that this year he expected to complete the road from Banff to Calgary, from Calgary to Waterton, and to connect up with the Glacier national park in the United States. Am I right?

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is not quite right. I referred to the hard-surfaced road, all within Canadian territory, which was being constructed north of Kingsgate, and which, when completed, would lead into the parks system at Radium, out again to Calgary and on to Waterton lakes, then on to Glacier national park in the United States. That road will cover about six hundred miles, and I hope the program of work of hard-surfacing will be completed in a year.

Mr. LANDERYOU: Then I am right in saying that as far as the expenditures this year are concerned, no money will be spent in connecting these parks with the boundary to the south; that is, outside the parks themselves?

Mr. CRERAR: No; I did not say that. Part of the work will be carried on this year. It was carried on last year and the year before. We hope to finish it next year.

Mr. LANDERYOU: I notice in the supplementaries that there is considerable money to be spent. That road to which the minister is referring is mostly in British Columbia. I am talking about roads in Alberta connecting the boundary line with the parks. Will there be any work done on those highways?

Mr. CRERAR: That work was carried on last year and the year previous under an arrangement with the Alberta government; that is the hard-surfacing from Calgary south to Waterton Park, and I expect that it will be continued this year. The national parks have the responsibility of doing the work from Waterton lakes to the international boundary, and we hope to get a start made on that this year.

Mr. BROOKS: It has been interesting to listen to the remarks with reference to national parks in different parts of Canada and to hear the extravagant language used in describing each particular section—"most beautiful," "most magnificent," "most grand," an so on. But I wish to say, in the words of the poet Guest, that "you ain't been nowhere, you ain't seen nothin'," until you come down and see some of the beauties of the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. DUNNING: And then go on to the Island.

Mr. BROOKS: A very good idea. Unfortunately, they are doing that now.

An hon. MEMBER: For a rest.

Mr. BROOKS: The minister has told us that the proposed park in New Brunswick has been under consideration for some time. This, unfortunately, is very true; it has been "under consideration" now for at least three years, and it does not seem to be any nearer development now than it was three years ago. I am not blaming the federal minister for the situation, but I do blame those in authority in New Brunswick. I believe the interests of that province are being sacrificed by the provincial government, through the sectional jealousies and whims of various members of that government. When I make that statement I feel that, in the light of what has been happening for the past three years, I am doing no injustice to anyone.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard pointed out—a fact we all know—the great benefits which are being derived in Canada from our tourist trade. I believe he said that $300,000,000 is the revenue we receive from this source, and that possibly $180,000,000 of that was net revenue to the people of the dominion. I want to point out to the committee that we in New Brunswick are not receiving a dollar of that revenue as far as parks is concerned. The importance of national parks cannot be overemphasized. There is at least one park in each province with the exception of New Brunswick and Quebec. I believe the minister earlier in the evening said there are twenty national parks in Canada, with an extent of some 12,500 square miles. A number of sites have been under consideration in New Brunswick. I do not think it should have been so difficult as it has been to decide upon one of those sites. When the matter of a national park for New Brunswick was considered, the neighbouring provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island were also considering national parks. Both of them have already established their parks, and development is well under way. I understand that Nova Scotia has one of the finest sites in Canada.

But I want to point out this: We have heard much about the construction of roads to give access to national parks. We in New Brunswick have been spending in the last few years millions of dollars in hard-surfacing roads, and at the present time we are doing it simply in order to send tourists to the national parks in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The situation is very unfair, and I hope that the minister, if he has any influence with the authorities in New Brunswick, will exert it and see that the injustic which is being done to our province is remedied as soon as possible.

The importance of this matter in connection with the relief problem was emphasized this afternoon by the Minister of Labour when he stated, if I understood him correctly, that $3,000,000 would be expended on relief projects throughout Canada with relation to national parks. We in New Brunswick have not had direct relief in the last two years, though I venture to say that there has been as much destitution and as much need for relief in that province as in any other province of the dominion. It is a crying shame that the labouring men in New Brunswick are not in a position to-day to take advantage of some of this money which is being expended in different sections of Canada in developing parks. What is the situation at the present time with reference to the development of a national park in New Brunswick.

Mr. CRERAR: The problem in New Brunswick is one of some difficulty. I understand the delay is due to the fact that, whatever site is selected, a considerable amount of private property will have to be re-possessed. My hon. friend is aware that the requirement is that the provincial government shall supply the area for development and convey the title to that area to the federal government, whereupon the federal government will undertake the work of development.

Mr. BROOKS: Pardon me; is that not true of every national park which is established in Canada?

Mr. CRERAR: Quite.

Mr. BROOKS: Is the situation in New Brunswick any different from that in any other province?

Mr. CRERAR: If my hon. friend will allow me to continue for a moment, that was true—taking it as an illustration—in the Cape Breton island park in Nova Scotia, but in New Brunswick the matter of securing an area involves, as I understand it, re-possession by the government, through purchase or expropriation or whatever means they may take, of the private property at present within the area of the park which might be selected. As I understand it, that applies to any one of the areas which may be chosen. I appreciate the difficulties of the provincial government in that respect, because I understand the government of New Brunswick is a prudent government that does not wish unnecessarily to spend the taxpayers' money, and perhaps the worst criticism that might be directed against it is that it is proceeding with too much caution. However, I have no doubt that if that or any other criticism can be leveled against it for being rather dilatory in the matter, my hon. friend will take good care that the facts are presented to the people of New Brunswick as he has presented them here to-night, which of course is his privilege.

Mr. BROOKS: It is not facts of that kind the people of New Brunswick want. It is a park they want.

Mr. CRERAR: I quite understand that. After all, it is a matter of the province getting the area, and that is their business. I do not wish to criticize them, and certainly I have no wish to instruct them as to how they should proceed. What they should do is their business, not the business of the parks administration.

Mr. BROOKS: Is there anything further that the federal department needs to do?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Mr. BROOKS: How many sites were inspected in New Brunswick, and what was the order in which they were selected by the federal department?

Mr. CRERAR: My recollection is that four or five were examined, but at the moment

I cannot recall the order of priority in which they were placed. My recollection is that that information was given in the discussion of the estimates a year ago.

Mr. BROOKS: No doubt the minister has the record there, and perhaps he will give it.

Mr. CRERAR: I am sorry I have not that information here; but when the supplementary estimates are up, there will be an opportunity again to raise the question and I shall then have the information for the hon. member.

Mr. BROOKS: There was a vote of $25,000, I believe, either last year or the year before. How much of that has been expended, if any?

Mr. CRERAR: The vote was $25,000. It was put in for preliminary surveys that would be necessary before the active work of development would be undertaken. A similar vote is in the supplementary estimates for this year. It appeared in the special supplementary estimates a year ago. Once the area is selected, an accurate survey and an examination of the physical characteristics may be made, so that development can proceed in the best way in order to give the maximum result for the money expended. The amount in the supplementary estimates will cover the initial work in that respect, and that is the manner in which we have proceeded in all these matters. Once the initial survey is made and the data correlated, the parks officials are in a position to recommend the type of development that should take place in order to get the maximum effect from the expenditure of the money.

Mr. BROOKS: I understand that the money provided in the supplementary estimates will be spent on an initial survey in New Brunswick. Is that correct?

Mr. CRERAR: We have included in our supplementary estimates the sum of $25,000. If the provincial government is in a position to turn over the area to us, then the money is available, once we know where we shall work, to make the initial surveys and to do the work I have mentioned.

Mr. BROOKS: Is it necessary for the provincial government to pass an act in the local legislature?

Mr. CRERAR: I understand that they have passed an act which will enable them to take appropriate action.

Mr. ISNOR: In addition to the item covering national parks we have also historic sites service. When we were dealing with a different vote, No. 70, under the Department of Finance, I brought to the attention of the committee a matter which, I thought, might possibly receive consideration in connection with the particular item we are now considering. I refer to the citadel at Halifax. Several requests have been made from time to time, covering a period of three or four years, and I was reminded of that this evening when a publication was passed to me:

> Come to Halifax and enjoy the unspoiled beauty and charm of hospitable, historic Nova Scotia—of the lovely land of Acadia—where the long Atlantic rollers break into yeasty foam against rock-shaded beaches of silver sands. Come to Nova Scotia, where yesterday and to-day blend gently into to-morrow, where life is even-paced and restful—the happiest, healthiest holiday land on earth.

With that in mind, I would say to my hon. friends from Alberta that in addition to the Cabot trail national park in Nova Scotia we have historic sites that appeal to tourists. I would urge upon the minister the importance of providing funds for the maintenance of that historic spot, the citadel at Halifax.

In another publication, issued by the Canadian National Railways, which was also on my desk this evening, reference is made to the citadel in the following words:

> The citadel, which crowns the heights of Halifax 275 feet above the harbour, is one of the most interesting fortifications on the American continent.

In my opinion it is these interesting spots that attract United States tourists and tourists from other countries to the various provinces of the dominion. Halifax was regarded as a definite link in the British scheme of imperial defences from its founding in 1749, and from that date until the present time the union jack has flown over the citadel at Halifax. It ranks with the citadel at Quebec, dating back something like 200 years. We spend $75,000 a year on battlefields; during the past ten years or so we have spent for this purpose $750,000 in Quebec. While I have no objections to that, I believe we are justly entitled to make representations on behalf of the city of Halifax in regard to the citadel.

Halifax was an important imperial station during the American war of independence and the war of 1812; and from 1749 to the latter date, and, indeed, until the present time, the British flag has floated over citadel hill. After the war of 1812 an elaborate system of defences, involving both the Canadas and the maritime provinces, had been recommended by the Duke of Wellington, and although the whole plan was not adopted, various forts and citadels were erected, the chief of which were the citadels of Quebec and Halifax. These two were regarded as of equal importance and involved almost equal expenditure. The citadel of Quebec cost £236,540 or $1,181,700; and the present citadel of Halifax, which was built progressively between 1828 and 1861, cost to the latter date £233,882 or $1,169,410.

The minister is familiar with the various facts. They have been outlined to him from time to time in letters and in representations made by various organizations including the historic sites society branch in Halifax. I would respectfully ask him to give this matter serious consideration, and possibly include an amount for it in the special supplementary estimates which will be tabled later. The minister knows the importance of this site from the tourist standpoint, and of linking up the mainland with the island of Cape Breton where the national park is situated, thus bringing in added revenue to our dominion, as so well expressed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer). I look upon such an expenditure as this not so much as an outlay as an investment which will bring three, four or fivefold returns. I trust the minister will give the matter careful study and consideration and that action will result.

Mr. CRERAR: The hon. member may not be aware that the supplementary estimates were tabled this afternoon.

Mr. ISNOR: I said the special supplementaries.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not think there will be any further supplementaries, but he will observe that there is in the supplementary estimates an item for historic sites and monuments. I think I can say that when it comes to the allocation of that vote, the citadel at Halifax will not be overlooked.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What is the amount of money to be expended on each of the three national parks in Ontario?

Mr. CRERAR: Does the hon. member mean out of this vote?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Yes.

Mr. CRERAR: On Point Pelee park in lake Erie, $22,200; on the St. Lawrence islands, $3,500, and on the Georgian bay islands $4,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The Thirty Thousand islands district in Georgian bay is a very fine tourist centre, but those who live on those islands have much trouble in getting there on account of the difficulty of the channel. Tourists come there in great numbers from the United States as well as from Ontario, travelling by the boat from Midland. The difficulty is much greater at night. Would it be possible to have the channel through those islands between Midland and Parry Sound, and up by Pointe au Baril, better buoyed? And if the channel were better lighted at night, many more people would be attracted to the islands.

Mr. CRERAR: The Department of Mines and Resources has nothing to do with the marking and lighting of channels. However, I shall be glad to bring my hon. friend's remarks to the attention of the Minister of Transport, whose department has charge of that work.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I thank the minister for that assurance. I understand that one of the buoys marking the channel to Penetang harbour was taken away last year. I do not think it would cost very much to place more of those light buoys in that channel.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Are any negotiations being conducted with the province of British Columbia about a national park on Vancouver island? There is no need for me to descant on the glories of that place, after every other part of Canada has had its day. But some attention should be paid to the question of a national park on Vancouver island, especially now that we have learned that there are no national parks in British Columbia; that they are merely railway parks.

Mr. CRERAR: I do not agree with the view of the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer) in that connection. It may be that in the remote past, in the genesis of these parks in British Columbia, there was something to support the view he expressed, but I can assure the committee that now, at any rate, they are national parks. We realize they are when we have to devote money every year to their maintenance and administration. They are not in any sense railway parks.

As far as a park on Vancouver island is concerned, I think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) a year or two ago advanced the claims of Vancouver island for recognition in that regard. Nothing further has been done. Of course the island itself is one vast park, and I do not know that an expenditure of federal money could very greatly improve its well known attractions.

Mr. GREEN: Has work been commenced yet this spring on the gap in the Big Bend highway?

Mr. CRERAR: No. The vote for that work is in the supplementary estimates which were laid before the house this afternoon. I expect the work will start very shortly. The plans for it are complete, but we like to preceed in a manner that will not excite criticism on the part of our hon. friends opposite for proceeding in a non-orthodox fashion, and so we did not start this work until we had at any rate the estimates before the house. If my hon. friend feels like giving me an assurance that he would not criticize me for starting the work before the estimates were passed, we might consider getting it under way next week.

Mr. GREEN: If I may interrupt, let me say that I would never criticize this government for moving too fast in anything.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend, I am afraid, has not as much imagination as I thought.

Mr. GREEN: One would need a lot of imagination to see any fast action in this matter.

Mr. CRERAR: If my hon. friend will survey the record of the past two years of this department, I do not think he can seriously level that criticism against it. However, speaking more seriously, we do hope to get the work there started very shortly.

Mr. GREEN: I was in Revelstoke during the Easter recess, and people there told me that conditions were such that the work could be started, but nothing had been done, and apparently it takes some time to get the work camps established. Is it the intention of the government to complete the gap this year? I believe there are only about thirty-three miles to finish.

Mr. CRERAR: I am afraid it cannot be completed this year. There is a good deal of very heavy construction, and it is through difficult country, as my hon. friend knows. If you have to push your work and machines and equipment very far in advance of the road as completed, it adds greatly to the expense. We shall not be able to complete it this year, but certainly it is the intention to have it completed next year. I am a little disappointed that we have not made more rapid progress; but last September I went right to the end of that road, where they were pulling out stumps, cutting down great, heavy trees and clearing rock cuts from Revelstoke north. I saw for myself the extremely difficult nature of the country through which they are building, and taking all the facts into consideration I think the progress with that road has been very good.

Mr. GREEN: I realize that is an extremely difficult piece of construction, but I would suggest that the minister give serious consideration to finishing the gap this year. I am quite sure that once the gap is completed, a great deal of the difficulty mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard will be done away with, because then the people of the coast, not only from British Columbia but also from the Pacific states, will be able to drive up to the national parks. Then we shall realize that the parks in the Rockies are really British Columbia parks.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, I should like very much to see that completed this year, but I would not be quite frank with my hon. friend if I gave him any impression that this would be the case. Quite frankly, I do not think it can be, but as I said a moment ago I certainly hope it will be completed next year.

Mr. HAYHURST: How is the work progressing on the road between Banff and Jasper national parks, and when will it be completed.

Mr. CRERAR: Precisely the same conditions are met with there that we find on the so-called Big Bend road; that is, the Jasper-Banff road has been built from both ends. Work has proceeded from the Jasper end and from the Banff end ever since the road was started, and there is still a considerable gap remaining; I believe some thirty miles remain to be completed. That, also, is very heavy construction. I may tell my hon. friend that I was also over both ends of that road last September. I like to get out and see the work that is going on and the nature of the difficulties that have to be overcome. The remaining portion of that road is very heavy construction, a great deal of it being rock work and the clearing of timber. In that class of construction, unless you are prepared to throw money around rather freely, it is not possible to make rapid progress, but I think I can say to the committee that it is the intention to have that road also completed next year.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): May I ask what the amount of $22,200 for Pelee island is expended for, and also the $4,000 for the Georgian bay islands and the $3,500 for the St. Lawrence islands?

Mr. CRERAR: It is for general administrative work. The administrative costs in the islands, both in the St. Lawrence and in Georgian bay, are not very heavy, and consequently the vote is small. At Point Pelee, as my hon. friend is probably aware, there is heavy tourist traffic during the summer months, and the cost of administrative work is heavier. The amount is divided thus:

Management and clerical work, $8,900; public services, $11,200; and those comprise water, roads and bridges, health, sanitation, camp grounds, gateways and information bureaux. The other items are: Stores and equipment, $2,000, and a small item for garage and repair shop, warehouses, stores and mechanical equipment. This amount has been increased in the supplementary estimates which were tabled this afternoon.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is this expenditure on the Thirty Thousand islands of Georgian bay in connection with game wardens or something like that?

Mr. CRERAR: I can give my hon. friend the particulars: Administration, $3,190; office expense, $400; garages and repair shops, $200; warehouses and stores, $210.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to say a further word in regard to the Georgian bay lights. Very often in that country one cannot get down in the daytime, but the wind goes down at night and you can get through. I think lives would be saved if there were lights so that people could travel at night rather than during the daytime. I want again to urge the importance of better lighting for the channel through the Thirty Thousand islands and also around by Point au Baril.

Mr. CRERAR: I shall see that my hon. friend's suggestion is placed before the Department of Transport, which has to do with these matters.

Mr. STIRLING: I should like to ask one more question about the Big Bend road. Is British Columbia contributing any portion of the cost on the west side?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Mr. STIRLING: It is entirely borne by the dominion government?

Mr. CRERAR: That expense is borne by the federal government.

Mr. STIRLING: That agreement fell through?

Mr. CRERAR: My recollection is that the arrangement was made by the late government to build the west leg. The original arrangement was made when my right hon. leader was Prime Minister previously, to build the east leg, and the provincial government is bearing no part of the cost of construction. Under the agreement, when the road is constructed it will be taken over by the provincial government, and of course thereafter the cost of maintenance will be their responsibility.

Mr. STIRLING: From the edge of the park?

Mr. CRERAR: No; from Golden to Revelstoke.

Mr. STIRLING: Through the national park?

Mr. CRERAR: No; we did not undertake the obligation to build the portion of the road from the west gate of the park to Golden. The original arrangement covered from Donald to the crossing of the Canoe river. Later, that was extended to cover the portion between Golden and Donald. Then, during the administration of the present right hon. leader of the opposition the arrangement with British Columbia was extended to cover the portion of the road from the crossing at Canoe river down to Revelstoke, and the expense of that construction is being wholly borne by the federal government.

Mr. POTTIER: Since some of the discussion on this item has developed in connection with points of interest having particular reference to historical spots, I want to bring to the attention of the minister a place in western Nova Scotia where it is claimed the first white man landed in North America. There are records in the old country describing the voyage and the shore where the landing was made, and that description exactly fits this location in western Nova Scotia. We also have a runic stone, where they are supposed to have landed, bearing an inscription which they marked at the time. According to the records, that landing is presumed to have been in the year 1006, the first landing of the Norsemen in North America, actually the first white men to come here from Europe. I have no doubt that the development of a place of that kind would prove a spot of historical interest, and would help develop the tourist trade.

Item agreed to.

Administration of Migratory Birds Convention Act, $51,000.

Mr. CRERAR: This item has to do with the administration of the migratory birds convention between Canada and the United States. In the present year there is a slight increase in the vote. I assume at least part of that is due to the restoration of the salary cuts and to the ordinary statutory increases in salaries. I believe there was the appointment of one additional stenographer. That is an expense which under the Migratory Birds Convention Act we are obligated to carry out.

Mr. GREEN: I have no fault to find with the vote, but the report has got about in British Columbia that there is a chance of the administration of this act being turned over to the provinces. I have a protest from an angling and game association in Vancouver against the administration being turned over to the provinces. I hope there is no question of that being done.

Mr. CRERAR: The hon. member's remarks are the first I have heard to that effect. I can assure him there is no intention of doing anything of the kind. As a matter of fact, I do not think we could turn over to a province the administration of an international obligation with the United States.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It has been called to my attention that last year two or three hunters got into trouble through lack of knowledge of the law. We realize, of course, that is no excuse. The laws with respect to duck shooting were published by the province of Ontario. There are also certain variations or extensions in the law which are made under the Migratory Birds Convention Act. I understand the regulations are posted up by the federal government, but it is very difficult for a hunter to look on the telegraph posts to find out what those regulations may be. Could some arrangement not be made between the provincial and federal governments for the combining of the provincial and federal laws?

I should also like to learn how the enforcement of the act is carried out. Do the provinces do it; is it a combination between the provinces and the dominion, or is it done by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. CRERAR: In most provinces the regulations agreed upon by the federal and provincial authorities are enforced by the province. There are certain cases where enforcement is carried out by the mounted police. We aim to get cooperation with the provinces, and have been very successful in that regard. The regulations framed from year to year govern particularly the hunting of wild fowl. We have not run into any difficulty in connection with the administration of the act. I think almost everyone from one end of Canada to the other is seized with the importance of preserving the migratory birds. I might point out further that opinion in the United States has crystallized into a more strict enforcement of regulations than obtained several years ago. I believe they are now doing their full share.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is there any danger from the shooting of ducks and other types of game which takes place in James bay? In the minds of some people there seems to be a certain amount of apprehension with respect to the preservation of ducks and other types of wild fowl. They feel that the hunting in the feeding grounds in James bay will have a serious effect on the wild fowl population.

Mr. CRERAR: That matter has been discussed with the Ontario authorities; but, for the greater part, I believe the migratory birds go farther north for nesting and rearing their young. I am informed that the James bay situation, to which the hon. member has just referred, is being discussed between the Ontario government and the federal department.

Mr. BROOKS: Were any new bird sanctuaries established during the past year?

Mr. CRERAR: I am advised there were a few established, but I cannot give the hon. member exact information in that regard. I should be glad to supply it when the supplementaries are under consideration. If the hon. member will raise the question at that time, I shall be pleased to answer it.

Mr. BARBER: I believe that during the last few years there has been some conflict in connection with the game regulations in British Columbia. I have received representations similar to those indicated by the hon. member for Vancouver South, and I endorse the statement that the administration of the act should be carried on by the federal government. I should like to know what the conflict was; I know there was some conflict in connection with the game regulations.

Mr. CRERAR: The only question of conflict which arose was that some of the hunters in British Columbia were not quite satisfied with the periods of open and closed seasons which were established. It is only very rarely that all of the regulations in any province are accepted without at least some criticism. I must add, however, that the general good sense of the public supports the regulations as they are framed from year to year.

Item agreed to.

Grant to John Thomas (Jack) Miner, $4,000.

Mr. CRERAR: This is the usual grant.

Mr. STEWART: I suppose there will be supplementary estimates under which we shall be able to discuss almost anything pertaining to the department.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: If not, I would ask the minister to leave an item open so that there may be general discussion.

Mr. CRERAR: Practically all of these items will reappear in the supplementary estimates for additional votes. I would be very glad to accede to the suggestion of the hon. member, and I would do so particularly because I know of the interest of the right hon. the leader of the opposition in the Banff national park and in western parks generally.

Mr. DUNNING: There will be plenty of opportunity.

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, there will be plenty of opportunity, under the supplementary estimates, to discuss these matters.

Item agreed to.

Mr. CRERAR: Mr. Chairman, I wish to express my appreciation to the committee for the assistance they have given in getting these votes through.

Progress reported.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Leeds): Can the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) inform the house when the budget will be likely to be brought down and whether we may expect it before the Saskatchewan election?

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): The Saskatchewan election, of course, has nothing to do with the budget, but negotiations which have been proceeding for some time in Washington, looking to the conclusion of a trade treaty, have everything to do with it. The government has thought it would be desirable, if possible, to include the results of those negotiations in the budget, and while it is as yet uncertain whether that can be accomplished, the government does desire to give as much time as possible to permit it to be done. I shall certainly endeavour to give sufficient advance information as to the date of the budget.

UNEMPLOYMENT

CONCENTRATION OF SINGLE UNEMPLOYED MEN IN VANCOUVER—OCCUPATION OF HOTEL GEORGIA AND OTHER BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. J. O'NEILL (Kamloops): In this morning's newspaper I find that aldermen of the city of Vancouver have paid $500 to a group of unemployed men who had taken possession, practically speaking, of the hotel Georgia in Vancouver. The hotel Georgia is the second largest hotel in Vancouver, and I think that everyone will appreciate just what this action on the part of the men will mean to the business of that establishment. Everything was conducted in very orderly fashion. These men were in the hotel for practically twenty-seven hours and there was neither riot nor disturbance, but I should like to know what is being done to prevent a recurrence of this incident, because it might very well result in riot and bloodshed.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): In answer to the question just put by the hon. member for Kamloops, I may say that it is within the knowledge of the house that during the past few days some 1,500 single, unemployed men have been demonstrating in the city of Vancouver. The occupation of the hotel Georgia and of the post office and the art gallery was apparently a part of that planned demonstration. We are informed this morning that the hotel Georgia has been vacated by the men in an orderly manner, as stated by the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. O'Neill). I understand that the post office and the art gallery are still being occupied by these single unemployed men.

So far as the maintenance of law and order is concerned, that is a matter for the police authorities; and as regards the present situation I have already informed the house that the Minister of Labour in British Columbia stated on Tuesday, May 17, that in the opinion of the provincial government it would be possible to deal with the single unemployed who were properly resident in the province. The Minister of Labour of British Columbia was of the opinion that employment could be found in due course for these men. He stated at the same time that some 1,500 men had come into British Columbia and into the forestry camps which were maintained by the dominion and the province during the winter months, and that British Columbia was not prepared to find employment for these men during the coming summer. In that situation he stated that the province was willing to assist these men from outside the province of British Columbia in returning to their homes, and that policy appeared to be a sensible method of dealing with the immediate situation.

The demonstration conducted by the relief project workers' union in the city of Vancouver has clearly as its object the provision of work for these men. I should like to say simply in that connection that in so far as there are unallotted items for works in the supplementary estimates which were tabled on Friday these will be apportioned in accordance with the actual unemployment situation in the various provinces, having due regard to particular situations which may exist in certain provinces. I should like to make it equally clear, however, that in such apportionment of unallotted items for unemployment works, this government will not be influenced in the slightest degree by threats or by any form of mass demonstration either in British Columbia or in any other province of Canada.

Mr. MacINNIS: Would the minister answer a supplementary question? Over the week-end I have received a number of communications from Vancouver in this regard and I had intended to take the matter up on another occasion. I should like to know, because of the importance of the question, whether the government will arrange a time for discussion of this matter, because it is one in which the city of Vancouver and the province of British Columbia are vitally concerned.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): As my hon. friend knows, there is always opportunity to discuss any of these matters when the house moves into committee of supply. It is the intention of the government to continue supply during the present week. We may be expecting it each day so that my hon. friend will have an opportunity then to bring the matter up if he so desires.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was afraid I might be prevented on such an occasion because of its being raised now.

SUPPLY

UNEMPLOYMENT—CONCENTRATION OF SINGLE UNEMPLOYED MEN IN VANCOUVER—STATEMENT OF MR. MACINNIS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Before you leave the chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in connection with the matter raised a moment ago by the hon. member for Kamloops, (Mr. O'Neill) and replied to by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers): For some weeks past a serious situation has been growing in British Columbia and particularly in the city of Vancouver. On several occasions during the past month the matter has been brought to the attention of the government by other members from British Columbia as well as by myself.

It is all very well for the minister to say that the government will not be influenced in the slightest by any demonstrations of the kind that are now taking place in the city of Vancouver, but that does not solve Vancouver's problem. It does not provide for these people who are unemployed, and until we make some satisfactory provision for the unemployed, we shall inevitably have difficulties of this kind. As a matter of fact the situation to-day reminds me very much of the condition that prevailed in the spring of 1935, which culminated in the riots at Regina on the first of July of that year. Surely this government with the experience before it which the previous government had, is not going to let matters drift until real trouble develops as in 1935. That is what we must avoid, and if drastic steps must be taken, then let that be done. But first we should make sure that there is no other way by which we can find a solution for our difficulties. I do not believe we have made sure that there are not other ways by which we can deal with this question.

Yesterday I received the following wire from Vancouver:

> That 1,500 single unemployed including a large non-residence proportion are occupying the Hotel Georgia, the post office and the art gallery as means of drawing their plight to public attention. We feel that assurance of work from the government upon a government plan or any assurance of work will meet situation. Otherwise fear serious consequences will ensue. Urge immediate action.

This telegram is signed not merely by one individual but by fourteen people prominent in the civic life of Vancouver and in the legislature of British Columbia. It is signed by six out of the eight aldermen in Vancouver, and by seven members of the provincial legislature, including Liberals, Conservatives, and members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, also by one British Columbia cabinet minister, as well as by the chief of police, W. W. Foster, of the city of Vancouver.

I submit that the statement made in the house to-day by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) is not a satisfactory reply in relation to the problem which to-day confronts Vancouver. If it was not the intention that these men should establish domicile in British Columbia they should not have been given employment in the first place; since they were employed for the whole or part of the winter on the forestry projects in that province, I do not think it is a satisfactory way of dealing with them now to say that they shall not get relief and shall not be given government employment in British Columbia.

When we were debating the unemployment relief and agricultural assistance bill the member for the Yukon (Mrs. Black) made a striking appeal to the members of the house to be sympathetic and to go easy with the Minister of Labour. I did not say anything after the member for the Yukon had spoken, although I thought a great deal; and contrasted the position of the Minister of Labour with that of thousands of young men in this dominion. It is true that the minister works very hard, but it is equally true that he has many compensations for his hard work.

Mr. ROGERS: I have made no complaints.

Mr. MacINNIS: Certainly not, and I think the minister will also agree that the discussion that took place and the hammering he received, such as it was, was not directed at him personally; it was done simply because many of us felt that it was a duty we owed to our constituents to bring their difficulties to the attention of the minister and of the government.

Let us look at the situation as far as these men are concerned. Young men, after four and five and in some cases six years of unemployment, are now facing the same hopeless conditions. Here they are in the spring of the year, when all nature is bursting into life, when people ordinarily should feel the stirrings of new life in their being, compelled to look forward to another hopeless summer and an equally hopeless fall and winter, and possibly nothing better next year. Let me say again that the minister's statement is not a satisfactory reply.

Mr. ROGERS: If my hon. friend will permit a question, would he be inclined to alter what he has just said if he accepted the truth of my statement, which comes from the Minister of Labour of British Columbia, that of the men who were in the forestry camps last year some 2,500 did not return this year, the obvious inference being that they had either returned to their homes or found employment elsewhere in the interval. I do not think it is proper, in other words, to suggest that all these men have not other means of finding employment or shelter.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not know that the minister's remarks have altered the situation in any way whatsoever. If these 2,500 men who did not return to the forestry camps this year after working there last year found work somewhere else, of course, that is all to the good, but what avails it? Others have taken their place. I have not the figures before me at the moment showing the numbers unemployed in 1937 and in 1938. Nevertheless the fact is that we have about an equal number, possibly more, possibly less, and we are still confronted with the same conditions. If we do not do something the authorities in British Columbia and in Vancouver will have to take some action, and it is just possible that the dominion government will be drawn in. Would it not be far better for this government to take action now while the men, if in a determined mood, are yet in a mood for conciliation and settlement? I do hope that we shall get from the government something more satisfactory to the people of Vancouver than the statement which has just been made by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. C. G. MacNEIL (Vancouver North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis). I do so because of communications I have received from responsible citizens of Vancouver, and also because, as the minister is aware, I had very close contact with the negotiations in connection with similar situations which have arisen in previous years.

I am disappointed in the statement made by the minister. The information that reaches me shows that the situation to-day is almost an exact repetition of those which have occurred in previous years. If we have learned anything from the most distressing experiences of previous years it is the necessity of dealing promptly and in a satisfactory way with this problem which is peculiar to the city of Vancouver.

May I point out to the minister that this is not an organized concentration of unemployed transients in the city of Vancouver. He must be well aware that this is a very natural gathering of men who, under the policies of the government—not only this particular government but because of economic conditions that exist in Canada—in their effort to secure casual employment find that city the terminus of their drifting as transients. They find casual work in other portions of the province and drift along, but at various times there is a gathering or concentration of men, due to economic and employment conditions in British Columbia and the adjacent provinces. It is hardly fair for the minister to reply to-day and say he is depending on the assurances of the Minister of Labour in British Columbia; for, as I am well aware from experience in the past, the Minister of Labour in British Columbia and the civic authorities cannot act, cannot devise a satisfactory plan, until they receive a very definite assurance from the dominion government of some form of cooperation, some disposition to share the responsibilities which are not properly those of the city of Vancouver or the province of British Columbia.

The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) brought this matter to the attention of the minister earlier in the session, but again may I remind the minister that when I was called upon to interview him at the hotel Vancouver shortly after his return from Geneva, on behalf of the men, for week after week the social service agencies of Vancouver, by dint of strenuous effort—and possibly gambling on some support from unknown sources—had looked after the men who were without food and shelter, in order to prevent any open disorder. The moment the minister announced the agreement with the provincial Minister of Labour and informed the delegation representing the men that they could register to receive temporary food and shelter, at that moment the disorder or any suggestion of disorder ended. The men quietly registered and accepted the plan devised, but during those weeks of delay riots did occur. Men were sent to gaol; some three hundred were sent to Oakalla, and two men were sent to the British Columbia penitentiary. I submit that these men would not have been sentenced and that this disorder would not have occurred if action had been taken earlier, and I think the same may be said of the situation which arose during the previous year.

At this time, because of our experience on past occasions, I earnestly implore that the minister lay aside some of the usual constitutional objections with regard to negotiations, admit that a very definite problem exists there that may result in serious disorder, and recognize all the facts and circumstances. There are men in Vancouver at this moment without food and shelter; otherwise the city of Vancouver would not have permitted a tag day the other day, nor would the citizens of Vancouver have supported that tag day so generously. The plain, ugly fact is that men are without food and shelter, and naturally if they cannot successfully negotiate in their own interests they may resort to methods which to-day the minister says he cannot countenance.

The transportation plan is equally unsatisfactory. As the minister is well aware, by reason of economic and employment conditions a large majority of those men have sacrificed their right of domicile at other points. If they returned to any points designated, they would be denied any form of relief or employment. Coupled with that situation, as the minister tacitly admitted, there has been a break-down of the Employment Service of Canada. No satisfactory provision has been made for the dovetailing of seasonal employment, and certainly if employment is available at other points in British Columbia in my opinion there are no adequate facilities for providing transportation to such points. I also direct the attention of the minister to the fact that I have received a telegram from the provincial president of the Canadian Legion in British Columbia, who says that included among these unemployed is a large number of ex-service men. I think the minister, in consultation with his colleague the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Power) should give some consideration to that aspect of the situation. Surely those men cannot be held to have sacrificed their domicile and be denied relief because they naturally seek employment in a climate where they will not be unduly handicapped by their disabilities.

I do urge the minister to drop the usual official attitude and not be unduly harsh in dealing with this situation. Open up channels of negotiation with the men immediately with respect to all deserving cases, that is, men without food and shelter who cannot establish domicile and secure relief or employment at other points; and I urge that some temporary provision be made until satisfactory employment projects are worked out in consultation with the provincial authorities.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): Before the minister deals with the question I should like to make one or two observations. A moment ago the minister said that the government would not be influenced by demonstrations. As a matter of fact during the last four or five years the history of this unemployment problem has shown that the government has been influenced by demonstrations. It was not until after a considerable demonstration last autumn that there was a reopening of the camps and some forestry work supplied. Then we had the very tragic case of the Regina riots. I think it was in 1935 that there were riots in Vancouver, when five thousand men marched through the Hudson's Bay store and did considerable damage, though much less than one probably would expect under the circumstances. But it has been as a result of demonstrations of this kind that action has been taken.

As a matter of fact we are training these men to demonstrate; that is the unfortunate part of it. We have known, the minister has known, the province of British Columbia has known, and the country generally has known, that these men began to congregate in Vancouver after the camps were closed on May 1, a matter of two or three weeks ago. The time to have anticipated this trouble was a couple of weeks ago, but now that the men have taken possession of a large hotel—and it is a large hotel—and of the post office, it becomes a pretty serious matter. The strange part of the whole thing is that where these men have demonstrated, either in these circumstances or at other times, comparatively speaking the demonstration has been orderly. These men are learning that it is better to do it in that way, but the long and short of it is that all they want is a job.

A moment ago the minister said—and I ask him to correct me if I am wrong, because I noted his observation—that some 2,500 men had gone out of the camps and many of them apparently had found work. He cited that, to use his own words, as an indication that these men have other means of finding work.

Mr. ROGERS: I said employment or shelter.

Mr. STEVENS: But they have not; that has been demonstrated clearly. We know that not only in this instance but at other times in the past men of this class—in this case some 1,500, last fall a couple of thousand and numbers running on other occasions into several thousands—had no shelter and no food until citizens, and very responsible citizens, acted on their behalf. Steps were taken by boards of trade and others; on two or three occasions the clergy of the city of Vancouver sent forward urgent appeals, and it was not until after appeals by organized groups of citizens, apart from the men themselves, that action was taken and food and shelter supplied. Then we had the tin canners, as we called them—men standing on street corners holding tin cans trying to get enough money for food. I stated in the house, I think last session, that I had personally investigated a number of these cases. I talked to the men and inquired into their circumstances, where they came from, and so forth, and as far as I could judge—and I am a fair judge of men of this type—I did not find a case where the man was not entitled to the opportunity to work. In other words he was not what we commonly call, in crude language, a "bum" or a vagrant. He was a man out of work, though wanting work and willing to work. I will not say they are all that way, because we know there is always a certain type which will enter into a demonstration of that kind. But I would say that ninety per cent of them, and probably more, are simply men who want jobs.

Another observation of the minister which I think cannot be allowed to pass without some measure of challenge was to the effect that the maintenance of order is the duty of the police. Technically and constitutionally speaking that is true. But what are the police of a city like Vancouver to do when one or two thousand men gather together in a body to make a demonstration? The only crime they are committing is that they are hungry and have no shelter. I submit that the police, who after all are human beings with human feelings, know that these fellows are not criminals. They know these unemployed men are not trying to break the law. Naturally the police stand by. Certainly they stand by until something in the nature of a riot happens. But what a terrible thing a riot is! I suppose most hon. members have had some experience with them. Unfortunately in the last number of years we have had several in Vancouver.

Riots occurred when men reached the point where their anger got the better of them; all restraint was gone and we had angry mobs. I do not know of anything more terrifying than an angry mob.

We do not want these men to be reduced to a condition where the police will have to use their batons to maintain order or to oust them from some shelter. No one will justify their taking possession of a hotel. But I suppose the obvious answer would be: Where can we go? The local people say, "We are willing to take care of our share of the unemployed." The provincial authorities say, "We are willing to take care of our people." But a census has been taken and it is shown —I understand the minister has the precise figures—that at least 1,500 are men who have domiciles elsewhere, who do not belong to British Columbia at all, and have no real claim upon that province. But they are there. They have been in the camps all winter, and it is not fair simply to say to the police of Vancouver, "Your duty is to maintain order." They know that. And it is not fair to say to the government of British Columbia, "It is your task to take care of these unemployed."

The minister said a moment ago that he had made certain provision by items in the estimates; I suppose he meant the supplementary estimates—in fact he said he meant the supplementary estimates. Let us look at those items; let us see where he is going to provide for this emergency which is immediately before us. The first item is "To provide for commitments under relief settlement agreements with provincial governments." That item cannot be drawn on.

Mr. ROGERS: May I correct the hon. member?—because I know he wishes to get at the truth. I referred to the supplementary estimates in general. As he knows, there are expenditures under various departments including a number of larger items which are not assigned to particular projects or areas. So that in whatever the hon. member is doing obviously he should not confine himself to the estimates of the Department of Labour.

Mr. STEVENS: That of course has some force. I was looking at the minister's own estimates.

Mr. ROGERS: No; I was referring to the supplementary estimates generally.

Mr. STEVENS: That rather amuses me, because I have had experience for a great many years with estimates, both in putting them through and in criticizing others who have been trying to put them through. I have read over these estimates; I believe they convey about as much to me as they do to any other hon. member, and I imagine one can look closely and with microscopic care without finding very much in them which would meet the present situation. I find page after page containing votes for wharves, buildings, and this, that and the other thing, distributing moneys very wisely, or with a great deal of skill—I shall put it that way—to the different constituencies. I imagine a number of members will feel more or less pleased when they see the contributions made to their ridings in these estimates. But if we were to say to the 1,500 hungry men in the city of Vancouver that somewhere hidden away among these pages there is an estimate in which some money can be found to deal with their case, I imagine they would not be satisfied. The minister has failed to meet the emergency; not only has he failed, but he has repudiated responsibility. The position which I mentioned earlier in the session is the one which has been taken right along. I am not fastening this particularly on the minister, because I know the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) takes and the former government took the same position, namely, that the responsibility rests upon the provinces and municipalities. That is the constitutional position, and I am not disputing it. But when you come to an emergency of this kind it is of little value to say to 1,500 hungry, destitute and homeless men that "the constitution does not permit us to do anything."

We cannot wait for the Rowell commission. Representations have been pouring in to the commission from every province in Canada, from almost every city the commission has visited—some of them on this very point, namely, the inability of municipalities and provinces to carry the burden of relief. They have not the resources. We might as well face the issue.

But the thing which disappointed me to-day was the stand taken by the minister. He takes a defeatist attitude, an attitude which does not recognize the fact that we have not yet approached a solution of the problem. We have not seriously attacked the problem or thought out a solution.

Mr. ROGERS: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. STEVENS: Yes.

Mr. ROGERS: Does he believe that to create a preferred condition for transients with respect to works in British Columbia would help the transients problem in that province? I should like to have an answer to the question.

Mr. STEVENS: I will answer it, very readily and without hesitancy. The first thing that must be done is to see that these men do not go hungry and are not deprived of the ordinary shelter required by human beings. That is the first thing. I recognize the fact that behind all this there are great economic problems facing this and other countries. My complaint and my quarrel, if I may say so, with the government—with parliament, if you like—is that we of the parliament are not tackling the underlying problem. Until we attack the underlying problem and move steadily towards a permanent solution, then obviously we must take the responsibility for the emergencies which face us while we delay doing so. That is the position I take. I say to the minister that we cannot and we dare not in this instance, and in similar instances which first thing we know will arise elsewhere, disregard these things. I deplore leaving the matter until men get desperate and see fit to occupy a hotel. I was shocked when I learned what had happened. It seemed to me that even at desperate local cost an effort should have been made to head off action of that kind. But it has occurred.

I remember a couple of winters ago many of these men used to walk into restaurants, eat their food and then say, "We have no money; what are you going to do about it?" Of course arrests were made, men were sent to prison, and all that sort of thing. But, Mr. Speaker, that is neither allaying the trouble and lessening the discord and bitterness nor finding a solution. I would urge upon the government that it should not try too much the patience of these unfortunate men.

I know what will be said. Some will say that this is really stirring them up. But frankly we have to face the facts in the house. We must be realistic. Where it is known and admitted that there is a body of men who have no just domicile in the city, those men should not be left on the doorstep of the city for maintenance and care. It is not inconsistent with what parliament has done for eight years, namely, to recognize that there is a national emergency in connection with the unemployment problem, and to take up the slack. We have done it, but, as I said a moment ago, the trouble is that we have usually waited until an emergency arose and some violence was shown before stepping in. That is only encouraging men to indulge in these things. While I am all with the minister that we should not be dragooned into action, if we precipitate action by our negligence and refusal to recognize a situation, then we as the parliament of Canada must take more responsibility than the men themselves.

As one of the hon. members who spoke before me said, the minister should notify the local authorities in British Columbia at once that the federal government will take up the slack in this case immediately and that they have in mind some solution of the problem. It has to be done. These men cannot starve. I can remember in the old days men used to drift off and scatter around the country and get something to do. But those days have passed; men cannot go out now and pick up a job here or there. Our whole economic structure has changed, and these conditions that some people treat somewhat lightly are really more severe than seems to be realized. The great bulk of these men are unable to get work, but they are willing to work and I do not think parliament can sit here and quietly pass over the matter with a disclaimer of constitutional authority.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at once that there has been no disclaimer on the ground of constitutional authority. That phrase has never been used by me in relation to this matter. As I have stated before to the house, the men who are the subject of this discussion were given employment during the winter months in dominion-provincial forestry conservation projects. They were not paid merely a sustenance allowance; they received thirty cents an hour during the time they were in the camp.

Mr. LAWSON: How many months would they be there?

Mr. ROGERS: The camps were opened about the middle of October and were closed on April 30. This has been the practice followed in previous years. This project was designed rather as a winter relief project for single homeless men. Some portion of the pay of these men was deferred and made payable to them in the form of post office vouchers after their employment in the camps had ended. Some 4,700 men were sheltered in the camps during the past winter months, which is somewhat less than the number sheltered in similar camps during the previous year. While the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) was speaking I indicated that the Department of Labour in British Columbia had kept an accurate record of the men who had passed through these forestry camps. It is a matter of some significance that 2,500 of the men who were in the camps in the previous year did not return this year. Clearly they have either found employment in British Columbia or returned to their homes in other parts of Canada.

I should like to make this point clear. Nothing has been said here this afternoon which would suggest in any way that this government has been indifferent to this special problem. As a matter of fact I am quite sure that I can convince hon. members on all sides of this house that we have dealt with this special problem in a sound and constructive way. Some time ago we had these large concentrations of single unemployed men in all the cities across this country. You do not find that to-day. During the past year it was only necessary to establish special projects to deal with this problem in the prairie provinces and in British Columbia. In the prairie provinces we used a farm employment plan under which some 45,000 men were placed during the winter months. I have not the actual figures before me, but I want to say that a gratifying proportion of these men have been enabled to remain in farm employment after the government bonus was withdrawn. Some little while ago the mayor of Regina stated that it was apparent that many of these men were remaining with the farmers who had employed them upon the basis of their receiving wages from the crop expected this autumn. The special payments to these men and to the farmers ceased on April 30. Only the other day I received a statement from the Minister of Labour of Manitoba to the effect that just under 3,000 of the young men who had been placed with farmers during the winter months had made wage contracts with those farmers and are to remain in their employ. Our information, which is based upon authoritative grounds, is that the problem of the single unemployed men in the cities of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta is less acute this year than it has been for many years.

Under the plan which gave single men employment in forestry conservation camps in British Columbia we created what might be termed preferred conditions in that province. I am not quarrelling with what was done, but the fact is that we paid the prevailing rates of wages, which was much more than was received by the men working under the farm employment plan in the prairie provinces. In the very nature of things this became known throughout the prairie provinces and we had a certain movement, particularly from the drought areas and the cities of western Canada, to British Columbia in order that the higher wages might be received in the forestry camps. As I have said, we closed the camps this year in substantially the same manner as they had been closed in other years. They were not continued through the summer months in other years. When the camps were closed the men had deferred vouchers coming to them for a period of weeks.

Mr. LAWSON: Approximately what percentage of the wages was deferred?

Mr. ROGERS: I have not the actual percentage. A man paid seventy-five cents a day for board, and I believe about half of what was coming to him was held back in the form of post office vouchers.

Mr. LAWSON: Surely it would not have been possible for a man to spend half of what he earned between May 1 and May 23.

Mr. ROGERS: The men were not all continuously employed during the entire period the camps were operated. There was a rotation of the men, but when they left the camps they had some resources in the form of these post office vouchers. We have found from previous experience that this was the best method of dealing with this particular situation. The same thing was done in connection with the closing of the relief camps and the special maintenance work on the railways. I do not think there is any doubt that these men were induced to remain in Vancouver in order that through the strength of numbers and the influence which numbers might bring to bear upon governments, either the forestry camps would be reopened or some special project would be created for their employment. That suggestion is supported by circumstantial evidence. I am not implying that there is anything criminal in that action, in so far as it merely expresses the desire of those men that they should have these special projects provided for them.

As to the question whether or not this government has sought in any way to escape its responsibility for dealing with this question, I should like to make it clear that from the beginning of this month we have been keping closely in touch with the situation. But I am sure it must appeal to the reason of everyone here that those who are actually face to face with the situation—the provincial government, for example, and its officials—who have to deal with this transiency problem from year to year in that province, are in a better position to advise as to the course of policy than we who are three thousand miles away. Mr. Pearson, the Minister of Labour of British Columbia, made a public statement on Tuesday, May 17, with respect to this question. I propose to place this statement on Hansard. It is brief; on the other hand, it is put in very definite, unequivocal terms:

During the winter season of 1937-38 the provincial government in cooperation with the dominion government, have provided relief through our forest development plan to 1,800 single homeless men who were recent arrivals from other provinces and in the province before November 1, 1937.

We believe that during the summer months it is possible for these single men who are our own residents to find sufficient work to provide for themselves during the summer and in many cases also during the winter, but the added burden of the accumulation from other provinces makes it difficult for our own residents to get the work that is available.

The province of British Columbia does not intend to make provincial forest development projects available to those from outside the province next winter, nor to provide any other form of assistance for them.

We feel that it is desirable that the 1,800 men who have been supported in this province during the past winter in forest development projects should return to the province from which they came as rapidly as possible.

In order to make this possible the provincial government will assist those men to return to the province of previous residence, and it is requested that these men make application to 581 Homer street, Vancouver, for such assistance.

That was the statement made by the Minister of Labour of British Columbia. There is nothing in it that is provocative; there is nothing in it that is callous; there is merely the statement that in the view of the government of British Columbia the most sensible way to deal with this situation was to afford transportation to their homes to the former members of the forest conservation camps who had come from other provinces.

I had occasion some time after that statement was made to say that it appeared to be a reasonable way of dealing with the camp situation and that it had my full support as Minister of Labour of the dominion government. I believe that upon reflection one must acknowledge that what we have here to deal with is the problem of transiency. Do you want to take action which is going to increase transiency, or do you want to take action which is going to decrease transiency? If you adopt a certain policy with relation to this matter, if you put transients in a preferred position, or if you place the province of British Columbia with reference to these men in a preferred position, can anyone urge reasonably that this is going to correct the transiency situation in British Columbia? On the contrary, is it not obvious that to create preferred conditions of that kind in British Columbia will attract transients to that province from other provinces and in the long run you will have an aggravation and not an improvement of the situation? That is why in the opinion of the province of British Columbia the best way to deal with this situation was to afford these men the opportunity to return to their homes so that British Columbia could deal with its own residents, even as other provinces are dealing with their own residents.

I should like to express satisfaction that in the discussion of this question so far there has been no evidence of bitterness or of undue indignation. We have discussed it in a temperate and moderate way. Surely that is the manner in which these questions ought to be discussed. But may I suggest that one does not solve these problems by sudden concessions to immediate demands. You may by such concessions create more difficult problems than those you seek to solve. And if one follows this whole question through, I believe it cannot but be admitted that the proposal made by the Minister of Labour of British Columbia was a sensible proposal in the circumstances, and I feel that those who have urged these men from other provinces to remain in Vancouver under existing conditions have not given good advice.

Before I close I should like to remove any doubt in the mind of any hon. member, particularly of those from the city of Vancouver who have spoken, that there is any lack of sympathetic understanding of this problem upon the part of this government. What I said with reference to our not being influenced with respect to the apportionment of estimates in this or that area or to this or that project because of mass demonstrations or intimidation is a statement which no one can question. A government that surrenders to threats what it cannot concede to reason has already abdicated. That is abundantly clear. We will at all times seek to deal with this question upon a basis of consultation and cooperation with the provincial governments. And we believe that up to this time the measures proposed by the provincial government have been measures which deserve the support of those immediately affected.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will the minister permit a question before he completes his statement? In the first place, do his reports indicate whether or not a large percentage of these men are without relief vouchers which would supply them with food and shelter? Secondly, is it not true that a large number of them cannot designate any home; that they are actually without homes and cannot return to any particular area where they will receive aid in the way either of employment or of relief?

Mr. ROGERS: On that point I have the assurance of the provincial government that when these men entered forestry camps a record was taken of the place from which each one came, and there is every reason to believe that on the basis of those records their transportation can be effected in a way which will safeguard them and the communities concerned. As to the other question, that of relief to be afforded to them in the meantime, that is a question in the nature of things which has to be decided at the instance of the provincial government. As I understand it, the provincial government have made it clear that they are able to deal with those transients, former members of these forestry conservation camps, who were resident within the province, but they have stated at the same time that the non-residents ought to accept the offer of transportation to their homes. When that is done and these men do return to their homes the provinces concerned will be in a position to decide the manner in which they will deal with individual cases.

Mr. LAWSON: Would the minister permit another question? I have to ask it now because it may be that under the rules the minister will not have an opportunity to speak again if someone else gets the floor. There must be data available in the minister's department which would indicate to hon. members who are sincerely seeking information in connection with this situation the average amount of money in deferred pay which these 1,500 men would receive or should have received or have received between the first and the twenty-third of May, if the camps closed on April 30. I would ask the minister to make available to the house any information that his department has of that kind. One factor in our consideration of the degree of sympathy which should be extended to these men would be some indication as to whether their being without food and shelter by the twenty-third of May was justified by circumstances beyond their control.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): While the treatment I have received from the departments of immigration and fisheries would make me feel like taking advantage of any opportunity to throw bricks at the government, yet a saving sense of fairness leads me to say a few words in support of the attitude of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) although he appears to be abundantly able to take care of himself. It is easy for us here to find fault with the Minister of Labour. He is here, he is before us, and he is at one end of a 3,000 mile string; and we are not in as good a position to know what is going on at the other end as we might be. But I ask myself this question: Does no blame attach to the officials in British Columbia? The minister has been kept informed of what has happened, yes. We can all do that; the newspapers will inform us. But was he not entitled to what I might call "advance information"? People who are paid to be in the position of the Minister of Labour and those under him are supposed to keep their fingers on the pulse of public sentiment whether it be on the street or in labour camps.

Mr. ROGERS: I would certainly not wish to do any injustice to the officials of the Department of Labour in British Columbia. I did inform the house that I had been kept advised of developments in Vancouver through the Minister of Labour of British Columbia. I have been in communication with him by telephone on several occasions and I was aware of the statement he made on Tuesday, May 17, which I have placed on the records of the house.

Mr. NEILL: Yes. That was made on the eve of a provincial by-election. I was not referring to a statement of what was happening but rather to what was going to happen. Was the minister advised that action of the kind indicated was anticipated?

Mr. ROGERS: The action set forth in this statement? Yes.

Mr. NEILL: I beg your pardon?

Mr. ROGERS: I say, I was advised that action of the kind set forth in this statement was anticipated. I had no preknowledge of later events that have occurred in the last three days.

Mr. NEILL: I am not talking about what action the minister would take, but what the men were likely to do.

Mr. ROGERS: I had no foreknowledge of that.

Mr. NEILL: That is what I am trying to get at. The British Columbia minister should have been in a position to advise the Minister of Labour and to keep their fingers on the pulse of the situation. I have no doubt that any of us representing Vancouver and adjacent districts who had been out there would have seen that. The point I am making is this. It is easy to be wise after the event, after the minister has been informed; but what are we to do when a difficult situation of this kind arises. The Minister of Labour of British Columbia has the reputation of often making wise decisions, but quite as often he makes them ten days too late; and in these days of crisis, when feeling runs high, quick action is just as desirable as wise decisions.

Let me suggest what the situation was, and I think it is obvious; it is obvious to those of us who come from that province. These men were presumably transients, and not all with homes in the prairies. Probably a considerable number of them would be without any real domicile because of the transient way in which they have been living in the last two or three years. At any rate, the minister, in collaboration with the Minister of Labour of the province, made provision for them to be in camps in the winter months. I visited one of these camps two years ago and was more than intrigued to see the splendid results being obtained. There was no suggestion of military discipline or coercion; the men were treated in a fine spirit. I went unexpectedly and had lunch with them and saw what they had to eat, and I found that the discipline in the camp was just such as one might expect to find in an ordinary logging camp. These young men were given the best training so that when they left the camp and tried to get a job in the bush they could say that they knew something about handling a saw and an axe, and other accessories of the logging industry. That part was all right. Then it was arranged apparently that they were to be paid so much an hour, a certain proportion to be deducted for board and a certain proportion set aside, so that when they were turned loose on the 30th day of April they would have a sum calculated to provide them with $4 a week so as to keep them going until they had a chance either to obtain work or to return to their homes.

At this point I consider that the department in British Columbia was lacking. They were not all in one camp, but in various camps, and all these men were allowed to leave the camps on a given day with the result that they congregated in the city of Vancouver. The authorities practically threw them there; at any rate, they were compelled to go there. It was unanimous action even if they were not animated by one object. Here are these men, with a few dollars left in their pockets, milling around Vancouver, with a few agitators in their midst—and one agitator can do more harm than a hundred honest men—stirring them up and telling them what they ought to do.

That is not the way in which the situation should have been handled. Of course, it is easy to talk about it now, after the trouble has been precipitated, but certainly these men should have been released in staggered groups. and they should have been approached and asked for statements as to where they came from, and so on—

Mr. ROGERS: The lay-offs were staggered through March and April.

Mr. NEILL: —and then advised to go to their homes, with such assistance as might have been given them. But no attempt was made to handle the situation along these lines.

Mr. ROGERS: The departure from the camps was staggered through the months of March and April. The men began to leave the camps early in March and the final number left at the middle of April.

Mr. NEILL: Had any considerable proportion left before the end of the month?

Mr. ROGERS: Yes. I have not the actual figures, but the movement out began in March.

Mr. NEILL: But the final disruption took place in one day, on the 30th of April, and then the men congregated in Vancouver, where they produced the situation which is now before us. If the matter had been handled in the manner I have suggested the minister would have found, as he will still find, that a certain proportion of the men—and they are probably the men most open to suggestion from agitators and others of that sort—have no homes to go to. They have been travelling around as transients so long that neither Regina nor the province of Saskatchewan will recognize them and they will be repudiated there, so that they will certainly have to be taken care of in the province of British Columbia. However, we are faced with the situation and something must be done about it, and I am going to make a suggestion which I think might be considered.

These men have been excellently trained in bush work, logging and so on, a training that is of no use to them in the prairies. But there is plenty of work of that kind under government auspices that could be initiated at this moment, and I would mention one in particular. A number of years ago a lighthouse and wireless station was established at a place called Estevan Point. The coast is rocky and it is difficult to land supplies, so that lighthouse tenders were delayed on many occasions. It was decided to establish a better landing at a greater distance. The suggestion was made that, naturally, they would need communication in order to get oil, coal and other supplies, and against my strong recommendation it was decided not to build a light steel railway as had been already done for a shorter distance, but to make a road. I do not think it is unfair to say that this work was carried out in the worst possible manner. The road was carelessly located in the wrong place where it was foredoomed to failure and liable to be washed out. The result was that after a while we had to patch it up, and we are now patching up road that we first put down. As a matter of fact, we have not yet done the whole road. I drove over it in a Ford truck some time ago and covered the five miles in an hour and a quarter in low gear. That will give you an idea of the sort of road it is. I took the matter up with the department and in the course of time they recognized the mistake they had made. They had their engineers report on it and it was agreed to locate the road over a new site on a higher level; where for an expenditure of $30,000 originally a real road could have been made, a road that would cost almost nothing to maintain. As a matter of fact, we spent $15,000 to begin with and have been spending $3,000 every year for ten or fifteen years, and have nothing to show for that expenditure except a very bad road, indeed the burlesque of a road. The department concerned put an item of $30,000 in the estimates, but it does not appear in the supplementaries so I presume it fell by the wayside in that mysterious place known as the treasury board. That is money that could have been spent, not just to make work, but to make money for the government because once spent they would not have had to meet this annual maintenance charge. This is the season of the year that the work should be done, early summer coming on and the best of labour conditions. It is no good doing the work in the winter, with the perpetual wet that prevails there. You have these men idle in Vancouver, and probably half of them would be willing to go back to their homes, Those who have no homes but have this technical training in such work could be put to road building, which is exactly the work they have been trained for, and that would meet the emergent situation.

As the members from Vancouver have said, the situation is there and you have to deal with it now; it is no good theorizing about it. If that $30,000 had been set aside, or to use the minister's words that amount of unallocated funds had been used to go on with the building of this road, the province of British Columbia has road-building machinery available and the money would have been spent with the best posible benefit, and with a very big return from the $30,000 expenditure, and it would meet the situation in Vancouver to-day. But if you go on simply talking about it and passing resolutions and saying what ought to have been done, what is going to be the situation in Vancouver? What damages will be collected from some government for the damage done to the hotel owing to its occupation by these men? I understand that the member for Kamloops (Mr. O'Neill) said that the aldermen united and gave $500 to get these men out. Who is going to pay the damages to the hotel? And who is going to get the men out of the post office? These questions are urgent and are here to-day. There is that road waiting to be built. It is not a political thing at all; it is intended to be done, and there are the men able and willing to do it and urgently needing the work. I suggest that the minister should consider it. It need be only a matter of hours before the work could be started. There is a report in the department by a competent engineer laying out where the route should be and its advantages over the present site.

Mrs. MARTHA LOUISE BLACK (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I need offer no apology for my courteously sympathetic words to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) the other evening. In fact, I can quite imagine myself at times feeling sorry for the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) for perhaps a different reason. But we have on the coast, in Vancouver, a sore that is fast degenerating into a running sore. It is worse than a double nettle, and we have got to make up our minds to get rid of it. Undoubtedly many of these men who left the camps after a winter there had a little money, but I know from experience that men coming in from logging camps, where many of them have been working for high wages, spend practically every cent they have with them in a week or ten days or less than a month, and then they come to the agency begging for an advance on the work they are going to do next season. Youth is hot and adventurous and spends money freely on what we perhaps of the older generation call nonsense and foolishness.

I feel that I can speak fairly plainly now because the boy of mine who went over a year ago used frequently to visit the camps of the unemployed under the previous government, and speaking in confidence to his mother he said, "Mother, the men in these camps are far better off than the privates in the army. They get money. They have the camps. They can come and go as they please. They are under no discipline. The privates in the army are in camps but they are under a very severe discipline." And he said, "My idea"—and it is my own idea now— "is that these men should either be put in camps to work constantly or join the army." We are begging men to join our army because we may need them some day. Why should we do that when we are taking care of men who are doing nothing? Far be it from me to advocate a Hitler or a Mussolini in this country. But when I hear young children to-day telling their mothers to "shut up"— "I hate you"— "I won't do it"—I wonder, Mr. Speaker, what we are breeding and what we are going to have in this and the coming generation? As I said the other day, boys in Vancouver, in British Columbia, from twelve to twenty years of age, are disobeying the law and being sent to the gaol and the penitentiary. Why? Because in the first place they have not been brought up properly at home. I am not ashamed to say now that when I was seventeen years old I spoke most disrespectfully to my mother, and my father knocked me down. When I gathered myself up he said, "Go to your room. Never let me hear you speak to your mother again in that manner." It was pretty hard discipline for a young girl, but I look back now and I thank God that I had such a father to discipline me, and he disciplined us all. If the children of to-day were disciplined as the children of that day were, we would have a better race. They are in some families.

On the coast of British Columbia, in Vancouver, we have a climate far better than any other climate in Canada, and naturally people tend to migrate there. I don't believe at all in saying, because you come from Saskatchewan, I in Alberta am not going to give you a mouthful; or, because you come from Nova Scotia, I here in Ontario will see you starve. Because, after all, we are all people of Canada. It is a federal matter. People should not be allowed to starve as long as they are willing to work. I do not care who the minister is, I do not care who the man or the woman is, whether it be prince or pauper; I can offer my sympathy to them when they are in personal sorrow or when they are labouring under great mental stress. A mother's heart perhaps is a little softer than the heart of an ordinary member unmarried or one who has no children. She may be foolishly sentimental, according to others, but at the same time we can see far into the future. This is a marvellous land. From east to west there is everything to make the country desirable. We have unlimited resources, we have members from both sides of the house talking about the development of these resources, but they can be developed only by our hands. It is up to our younger people to have the opportunity to develop these resources, and surely the minister and the government will evolve a way of developing them.

I thought when relief was given in the first place, many years ago, that it was a mistake. I have never had anything for nothing; I have always had to work for it. I think all ablebodied men and women and children should have to work for all they get. It is a different matter with men who are not well and with women who are unable because of family duties to go outside and work, and we should have a paternal attitude towards them. But just as sure as there is a heaven overhead, if we are not going to go a little deeper into this matter of unemployment, some day we are going to have a revolution. I am not so much afraid of a revolution in this country as in a country where people have more of the Gallic or high-strung temperament. We shall be slow, but eventually we must look out for our unemployed or there will be trouble.

In British Columbia there is always more or less crime. The police of the neighbouring state of Washington shove their undesirables over to us, and in turn we shove our undesirables over to them, so I can well imagine that many of these unemployed men may not come from Ontario or Saskatchewan. They may come from the other side of the line; it is difficult to tell. But surely we cannot allow men to go in and take possession of a federal building. After all, that is ours, yours and mine; it is not the property of the people of Vancouver alone. Surely we cannot allow that to happen. We must not have riots, with broken heads, broken hearts and perhaps men killed now and then. We must think; we must work hard, and I have enough faith in the government of to-day to believe that they are doing the very best they possibly can, if not for the sake of the unemployed, if not for the sake of the individuals, at least for the sake of their own reputations. I cannot look at one side of the house and think those men are all the best that God put on earth, any more than I can look at the other side of the house and think those men are all the worst. I think perhaps when hon. members criticize me and other hon. members of this house, in their hearts they may have the idea that they know what is right, or that they could solve the problem. I have no such idea. I do not know, and I feel sorry for those who have that burden to bear, but it is a burden they must assume. They have accepted these positions and they must bring us out of the mire of despond in which we now find ourselves.

Many of these unemployed men went to Vancouver with money in their pockets. With care that money might have lasted two, three or four weeks, or perhaps two months. But, as I have said, young blood is hot, and the money goes quickly. Then they are led away by agitators, of whom, alas, there are far too many, not only on the prairies or in British Columbia, but all over Canada. Somebody with a glib tongue comes along to stir up those who are less glib or those not so well balanced.

Mr. T. J. O'NEILL (Kamloops): In asking my question to-day I seem to have stirred up a field day at the expense of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers). I assure him I had not that intention, but in this discussion I have noticed something that I think should be mentioned at this time. The supplementary estimates have been just brought down, providing quite a large sum of money that will be used principally to relieve the unemployment situation. But it is now almost June 1. A good deal of that money is for public buildings, and after these estimates have been approved by the house plans must be prepared, tenders must be called for, and in all about three months will elapse before construction is actually started. By that time unfavourable weather conditions will have set in, and either the projects will have to be abandoned until next year or men will have to work under very adverse conditions and at much greater cost to the government than would be the case if we were ready to start work now.

I am not particularly directing these observations against the present government, because this sort of thing has gone on in this country for years and years. I do not know whether or not it is because of the fact that we have the fiscal year ending at the wrong time; I do not know whether that has anything to do with it. Personally I do not see why there should be any difference between the end of the calendar year and the end of the fiscal year, but certainly we should be starting work on these projects now instead of possibly the first of September. I know we cannot correct that situation this year, but I think it is something every hon. member should take into consideration, to see if there is not some way of overcoming the difficulty so that work may be started in the spring of the year rather than in the fall.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I think there is a good deal of force to the remarks of the last speaker (Mr. O'Neill) but in considering the difficulty to which the hon. member has referred it may be helpful if I point out that with respect to the supplementary estimates now before the house I know that many departments have their plans well advanced in order to enable quick action to be taken with respect to many of the projects contemplated under the supplementary estimates. In order still further to facilitate action along that line I hope to ask the house either to-day or to-morrow for interim supply on the main estimates—this being necessary, of course, because of the near approach of the end of May, which is the limit of our present authority in that regard—and also for a proportion of the amounts involved in the supplementary estimates, in order that work may be provided as quickly as possible in connection with projects as to which the preliminary work has been done by the departments concerned.

The criticism of my hon. friend is quite proper and does apply to government work generally. You cannot proceed until you get your authorization; and even in asking for interim supply of course it must be a condition that the granting of such supply does not debar criticism or consideration of any individual item. That is the usual condition, but I just wanted to assure my hon. friend that every effort will be made by the departments concerned to get under way immediately with projects for which definite plans exist; and they do exist with respect to quite a number of matters contemplated by the various departments.

Mr. R. E. FINN (Halifax): When we consider this question of unemployment, which has been brought up on the motion to go into supply by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), supported by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens), answered by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) and dealt with by the various other hon. members who have spoken this afternoon, including the only lady member in the house to-day, the hon. member for Yukon (Mrs. Black), I think it well that our attention should not be directed only to the three or four provinces west of Ontario. I think we should have a thought also for the great provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and the maritime provinces as well.

I well remember walking out of this house after prorogation last year with my hon. friend the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). I was afraid that the closing of the camp at Halifax, on Citadel Hill, might be a mistake, that the expectations of the Minister of Labour might not be realized, and as we walked along I said to the Minister of National Defence, "Close it if you will, but keep it in such condition that if it is necessary to reopen it there will not be a single man forced to walk the streets, and there will be no crimes committed," such as we have heard mentioned this afternoon as having been committed in Vancouver. The minister did not make a positive reply, but what was said made me think, "Well, Citadel Hill, that great promontory in the city of Halifax, no longer will be used for this purpose even if we find that unemployment is inevitable," and unemployment apparently has become inevitable, not only in the city of Halifax. It has come to us through our fishermen along the shores of Halifax county. From Ecum Secum for a distance of one hundred and fifteen miles to Dartmouth, and from Halifax city to Hubbard's Cove and the indented bays there has been this relentless enemy which has been ever at the door. I do not say this government has been wholly responsible, but I have read scrupulously the order in council passed by the late administration under the leadership of the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in reference to trawlers. The Minister of Fisheries of that time was the Hon. E. N. Rhodes who, I regret to say, is ill. He stood tenaciously to protect the interests of the fishermen as against those of capitalists who had been responsible for the sores and the hurts in the minds and hearts of the fishermen along the shore. There came a day, there came an hour, and there came a moment when the present Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Michaud) came to a decision. His decision was absolutely against the fishermen and in favour of the privileged interests, in favour of the capitalists, and particularly the National Fish Company and the Maritime Fish Company organizations which have grown prosperous in the city of Halifax.

The fishermen were left where? They were left where they are at the present moment, with starvation in some of their own homes, with their boats and fishing gear swept away by the southeast gales. Some of them lost their lives, never to return to their homes. In this connection, I believe I can give one of the best illustrations possible of description by the human mind or heart. In a little fishing village on the west coast of Halifax, a place which was once prosperous but is prosperous no more, a fisherman had lost everything, and had not the money wherewith to repair his humble little fishing home. During the late war a building had been erected in that small village, and when he wrote me the building was uninhabited, unoccupied and not being used in any way. This man told me that it was impossible to repair his home so as to make it habitable, that he had a wife and eight children and wanted to know if it would be possible to buy that building or to have some charitable person buy it for him so that he and his family might live in quiet comfort, and not be put out in the cold. When I received the letter I wrote to the minister I thought would be in charge, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). He replied properly and correctly that the matter came under the jurisdiction of the military gentleman who was responsible for salvaging, and that the building would have to be put up to tender. That was done, and the man in question bid $42. He was met by a bid of $44 from another person, a man who did not need it. That man got the building, and the man who needed it did not get it.

Has everything the government has done been done by contract? Has that been done in all departments? "Necessity knows no law," and when it comes to a case of necessity I will get what I need to subsist on. There should be no need in this Canada of ours, a country with great prospects, expansive areas and a great future. When I think of our relations with the country to the south of us, a country smaller in area than Canada, but with a population of 130,000,000 people as against our 11,000,000. What is our future? We think of those who have lived in past days and who were the great builders in this great confederation. We think of the ideals of Sir John A. Macdonald, the ideals of Hon. Joseph Howe, the ideals of our great leader who has departed, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the man who envisioned the building of the Transcontinental railway so as to gather the maritime provinces under the wing of Canada and to bring them nearer the great Canadian centres in order that those eastern provinces might participate in the great Canada of the future. One need only read the schedule to this act respecting the Transcontinental railway to realize what happened. In that schedule it is stated in no uncertain words, in words that are true, that unless otherwise specifically routed by the consignor, all goods shipped from Canada shall travel through Canada to Canadian ports. The development of Canada was to come through that. What has happened? He who runs may read.

I was deeply interested when a few days ago in the house a discussion arose between the Minister of Transport and an hon. member, and at that time I was reminded that in my belief the unmaking of Canada is that we own that stretch of the Grand Trunk running between Chicago and Detroit. If one studies the statistics respecting trade through Canadian ports he will find one thing and one only, namely that the stretch of railway between Chicago and Detroit helps the port of Montreal and American ports.. I am not opposed to that port. We realize that while our railway is within the confines of that country, and until we pass Windsor, at which time we come within the jurisdiction of the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, we are subject to the interstate law of the United States. Their law is their law, and not ours. Notwithstanding the judgment of Mr. Fairweather, notwithstanding the judgment of the president of the Canadian National Railways system, I say it would be far better to sell that stretch of railway in the United States, to get what it is worth, and to have Canadian owned railways in Canadian territory, managed by Canadians and subject to the supreme will of Canada. Unless we do that we will have a misnomer in the life of the future Canada we shall not live to see. Some of the younger hon. members may live to see that day; I hope they will.

When I look across the floor of the house I am reminded that when I attended La Salle Academy in Halifax there was an oratorical contest for the gold medal donated by the then Archbishop O'Brien. One of the judges was the present member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan), the late Secretary of State. Later, when I came to parliament again in 1935, I was walking out of the house one day during the first session, and the hon. gentleman said to me that he recalled the incident and said, "I made up my mind then that some day you would be in the parliament of Canada, but I never thought I would live to be here with you." He had thought he might have gone to that great bourne from which no traveller returns. But to-day he sits there, with his years, lovely and beautiful, in the knowledge that he has tried to do his best for Canada and for the little province of Nova Scotia, down by the sounding sea, in which he was born. He has tried to make it the finest and best of that galaxy of provinces which make up our great dominion.

There is one thing I would urge upon the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers). There is no hon. member of the government who is more assiduous in his duties, there is no one who applies himself more directly and effectively to the great problems that confront Canada in connection with labour and unemployment than the Minister of Labour. That work is his love. When the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mackenzie King) called upon him to enter his cabinet he left the great university where he was teaching to come to teach all those in Canada that there is a broader field to greater knowledge. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that unemployment is ever existent. At times it has been characterized as a sore. I do not call it a sore, I consider it the inevitable aftermath of war. After the great war of 1914-18 we had a survival in business, but then came the great depression of 1929. We are now in the midst of what a very able exponent of peace, an hon. gentleman who guides the destinies of young Canada to-day, only a few days ago said, that it might be the dust of Canada that would turn the scales from peace to war.

In Great Britain we have that able, astute Prime Minister, Mr. Neville Chamberlain. He is uncompromising and what is more necessary, he is unbending. He will not yield to the foe, although he is always ready to give consideration to the different views of all parts of the British Empire. He should not be too trustful of those who might attack us behind our backs to-morrow. As Cassius said to Brutus:

> There is my dagger,
> And here my naked breast; within, a heart
> Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:
> If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;
> I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart;
> Strike, as thou didst at Caesar; for, I know,
> When thou didst hate him worst, thou lovedst him better > Than ever thou lovedst Cassius.

I differ with the statement made this afternoon by the hon. member for the Yukon (Mrs. Black), and I think in retrospect she will agree with what I am about to say. I understood her to say that a man who could not give value deserved to be idle.

Mrs. BLACK: If he was in good health.

Mr. FINN: If he was in good health. Speaking for my own province, and particularly for the city and county of Halifax, I may say that there are many people there who are in good health and who would like to have employment. I have always taken the stand that no man owes anything to any government, be it Liberal, Conservative or a government made up of some particular groups, as may happen sometimes. When a man is willing to work, then the nation owes him a living. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) stated a short time ago that it was the intention of the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) to put the unemployed of Canada to work by means of the main and supplementary estimates. I was pleased to see that the supplementary estimates contained the means for providing employment throughout all the provinces of Canada, both according to the needs of the individual and according to the requirements that should be lived up to in connection with public works.

The glorious duty of every hon. member who sits here is to serve his country. We who sit here have the confidence of the people. We should address ourselves to the problems of our constituents and endeavour to get at what might be called the foundations of unemployment. I can remember one Sunday evening a week before that grand old man, the leader of Liberalism, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, died. I was sitting with him in Laurier House and he said something to me that I shall never forget. He said, "My dear Finn, hold on to British institutions. They are the finest and the best; they give us constitutional liberty and the finest thoughts that a Canadian could have as a member of the British Empire." That great man was misunderstood at times, and I know that if those words could have been spoken to someone who was not his friend, politically, he would have been even more admired before he died. But he has never been forgotten by those who loved him and many of whom pass daily by his monument which looks out on the city of Ottawa. Monuments are wonderful things, but the joyousness of doing something is within the power of the government, the Minister of Labour and the members of this house.

There are many homes in this country where all are sad when the father who has been looking for work comes home and says he has been unable to find it. There is hunger in these homes, not only of the stomach but of the heart. This is what is happening in the city of Halifax and in the county of Halifax. Yet the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Michaud) dealt a tremendous blow to the fishermen along our coast when he granted trawler licences to the great interests in the city. Not only did he do that, but he placed on a pedestal my colleague (Mr. Isnor), who turned from the fishermen to the capitalist with the excuse that there was $1,400,000 invested which he would have to look after. He was not interested in the fisherman. But there is always a day of reckoning; there is always a reply. I thank God that in my public life of nearly twenty-five years I have always stood for the underdog without being unfair to the upper dog; and as the leopard cannot change his spots, no more can I. I wish there was a right of recall in this country. There is not, but I say sincerely that if my course in this house is not one that meets with the approval of the people who sent me here, let them make it known to me, and, Mr. Speaker, within the twinkling of an eye I will tender you my resignation, but there will be attached to it one principle conforming with a high standard of public life. I will hand back to my constituents the confidence they gave to me, but I will say when I am resigning that I think it would be proper, real and honourable that he who is elected with me, who was my helpmate by my side during the campaign, should also tender his resignation, and we would both go back to the people who sent us here. If he does not come back then he is wrong; if I do not come back I am wrong.

An hon. MEMBER: You are both wrong.

Mr. FINN: But there will be a sense of responsibility.

An hon. MEMBER: You will both come back.

Mr. FINN: We shall both come back? I want to say that if that is so, I don't want to come back. Open confession is good for the soul. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." You must either stand for a principle or you must be against it. That was the great thought of Him who died for us all; they could not be for Him and against Him. Therefore there is the great dividing line, as there is on this green carpet, a dividing line between ourselves and the hon. gentlemen who sit opposite, but there is not sufficient room on this side of the house for all who think as we do, therefore some have to sit opposite and cast their lovely shadows on those who are doing their duty as members of the opposition and of the various groups who are intelligently giving themselves to their arduous tasks in the hours when parliament is dealing with these tremendous questions.

The thought I should like the Minister of Labour to convey to the Prime Minister and to that sturdy, wonderful man who comes from the province of Quebec, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), is that, the steady tide of criticism notwithstanding, his shrewdness, his boldness, are not begotten of something which is not within himself; God and nature endowed him with one thing—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FINN: Do not speak to me, Mr. Speaker, when I am speaking about God. God and nature endowed him with one lovely quality, and that is justice, as Minister of Justice—justice to all, fairness to everybody, and kindness to the whole of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Departmental administration—further amount required, $7,350.

Mr. STEWART: On Friday evening I asked the Minister of Finance what the business for to-day would be, and his reply was:

On Monday we might be prepared to take any bills on the order paper, and supply, Fisheries, Pensions and National Health, National Revenue and Finance.

Mr. Neill: In that order?

Mr. Dunning: If possible, in that order, but I am not sure about some of the ministers.

Now apparently it is proposed to take up a department which is not named here—agriculture. The situation is this, that some of the hon. members on this side of the house who are responsible for intelligently discussing these estimates and getting them through in the shortest space of time because of the knowledge they have of the subject, are not here to-day. I suggest to the minister that we should probably make more rapid progress if we took some of the departments which he mentioned. I know that as regards some of these agriculture items there are hon. members who are not here to-day who desire to discuss them at some length.

Mr. DUNNING: I really cannot complain of the criticism of my hon. friend opposite. I remember that on Friday night I was pretty tired and was somewhat embarrassed to answer the usual question with respect to what items would be taken up, and I did not mention agriculture. As a matter of honour, when one does not indicate a department in supply on the previous evening it should not be taken up if there is objection from the other side. Would there be any objection to going on with agriculture this evening? Possibly some of the hon. members to whom my hon. friend is referring will be here on the afternoon train. We should like to make progress on some of these more important supplementaries having to do with works which it is intended to get under way as speedily as possible, and perhaps this evening we could take up agriculture. At any rate I ask my hon. friend to give consideration to the matter between now and then.

Mr. STEWART: We wish to facilitate as far as possible, of course, the transaction of the business of the house, and certainly I shall give the matter consideration. But if the government proposes to go into supply again to-morrow I think we should be in a better position to facilitate the passing of these estimates then and would probably make just as much progress.

Mr. DUNNING: There is some doubt about going into supply to-morrow.

Mr. STEWART: If there are any items which are not controversial, perhaps they could be dealt with.

Mr. GARDINER: If it would be satisfactory to go on to-night and there are any items in the agriculture estimates which it is desired to have held over, I would be quite prepared to let those particular items stand.

Mr. STEWART: I shall be pleased to look into the situation in the light of what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture have said and see what we can do to facilitate the work of the house.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

Fisheries inspection, including fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services, $1,000,000.

Mr. NEILL: When this estimate was before the committee on the last occasion there was some discussion of fish traps in British Columbia, and I would refer again briefly to that matter. I do not propose to rehash the whole subject. It would take hours and the matter would be unsuitable for a committee of this size. That is why a special committee was instituted for the discussion of all such matters. To-day I simply want, so to speak, to begin where the committee left off. The committee submitted a report, the first recommendation of which reads:

That no more trap licences be granted in British Columbia waters except in the so called Sooke area, and concerning which we are unable to come to a decision as to whether they should be continued or not, without the opportunity of securing further information.

There were some other recommendations, and the last one indicates that a check should be made on fish caught and the details carefully collected. I maintain that the report in its essence, although the word was not used, was an interim report. It was so regarded by the committee. It stated that the committee were unable to come to a decision as to whether the whole matter referred to them should be decided or not without opportunity of securing further information, and they recommended that the department should secure that additional information. Some of that information has been obtained and I have it here now. Speaking on this subject, the minister made a statement which I wish to quote. I asked that the data which the committee had recommended should be collected, and which had been collected, should be referred to the committee, and the minister made this statement:

Mr. Michaud: That is a matter which my hon. friend should refer either to the house or to the committee. As far as the department is concerned, the recommendations made last year by the committee were carried out. I feel that is all that should be expected of the minister or the department.

Dealing with the first sentence, I would point out that it was impossible for me to refer the matter to the committee because a private member cannot refer a matter to a committee without the consent of the minister concerned, and that was lacking. I had written and asked him whether he would refer it to the committee and he refused. To say that I can refer it to the house means that I can bring it up only now when conditions are not favourable for a detailed debate. I would call attention especially to the remarkable sentence in which the minister says that all that can be expected of the minister of a department is to carry out the recommendations made. That, to my mind, illustrates a distinct failure to appreciate the purpose of the investigation, which was to decide whether we should continue the use of fish traps in British Columbia, and we decided in our wisdom that we could not make that decision for lack of further information. The minister now proposes to rest on his oars and say that he has done all that he was asked to do and will not do any more. At page 2297 of Hansard it will be seen that I sent the minister a letter asking him whether he would refer the matter to the committee or stop the traps, and he replied that he would do neither. I think it is very much up to the minister to inform this committee to-day why he refused to comply with the terms of a numerously signed petition presented to the house, or, failing that, if he deemed that the matter was not thoroughly threshed out, why he did not refer it again to the committee. Why did he refuse to have the matter referred to the committee and in that way close it out entirely from further debate? I would ask him for an explanation.

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries): There are two aspects of this question in which my hon. friend is interested. The first is the question of the petitions which he laid on the table of the house shortly after the opening of parliament, and the second is the report of the special committee which sat during last session. The reason why the department did not take the initiative and refer again to the committee the whole question of the advisability of discontinuing the issuing of licences for fish traps in the Sooke area of British Columbia, and the matter of the petitions, is that since last session no new facts have been brought to my attention, no new evidence which would have justified me in asking for the committee to sit again this year to consider the matter. It is true that we had petitions; but in those petitions there were no new facts disclosed which had not been brought to the attention of the department some years ago and which have not, from year to year since, been submitted to us. The facts which were gathered by the department during the recess, at the request of the committee, were brought to my notice, and I did not think they disclosed anything different from what had been submitted to the committee last year and had been discussed for a considerable time, forming the basis of the committee's report. So that if the hon. member was in possession of some new evidence, I think it was up to him either to bring it to the attention of the house or to ask that the committee be called together—

Mr. NEILL: I did.

Mr. MICHAUD: —and the matter brought before the committee. My hon. friend says he did. If I remember rightly, he asked me in a letter whether the petitions which were submitted by him to the house would be referred to a committee, and I replied that in view of the fact that the petitions disclosed no new facts I did not think it my business to call the committee again to deal with a matter that had been dealt with last year.

As to the data collected by the department during the recess, I never understood that my hon. friend asked me to refer it to the fisheries committee, and this is the first time that I understand he intended to have this data, passed on to him at his own request, referred to the committee, because, as I said before, in my opinion it did not seem to disclose any new facts upon which the committee would be justified in changing the recommendations they made last year.

Mr. NEILL: The minister says that he did not refer the matter to the committee because there was not new evidence which in his opinion justified its being referred to them. But I humbly submit that there was new evidence, and I have it under my hand. One of the main questions brought up in the committee was as to the number of fish caught, the varieties and so on. The contention on both sides centred repeatedly on that point—exactly what was caught in those traps—and we recommended that information should be obtained as to what was caught. And that information was obtained, because I have it before me, and in my humble opinion it constitutes new evidence if anything could be called new evidence, because it was something that was not before the committee previously. The minister says that no new evidence was disclosed—in his opinion. But the matter has gone beyond the question of his opinion. A committee was appointed to consider the matter, and that committee was entitled to go on and conclude it. The minister says that I did not ask that the matter be referred.

Mr. MICHAUD: I did not make that statement. I said that I did not understand my hon. friend to request that this particular evidence should be referred to the committee.

Mr. NEILL: Not this particular evidence, but all of it. I have here the letter I wrote, and I have what the minister said. He guards himself by a general statement—he is not sure. Well, he knew that the estimates were coming down to-day and that the matter would be brought up. I venture to say that my letter is before him at this moment. Then he makes statements that give a wrong impression of my letter. This is my letter, dated February 28—long enough ago:

Honourable J. E. Michaud, Minister of Fisheries,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Michaud:

With reference to the question of fish traps at Sooke, you will recall that the report of the committee last year stated that we leave the question of traps at Sooke open for further consideration.

Since then, I presented a petition the other day containing nearly 10,000 names, and I still have petitions coming in asking for their abolition.

Might I inquire what your policy in the matter is? Are you disposed to give them notice—

[Mr. Michaud.]

That is, the trap owners.

—that they will not be allowed any for or beyond this year, or do you propose to refer it again to the fisheries committee of the house?

The minister replied that he was not going to do either one or the other. How I could have put it more plainly I cannot conceive, or how he could have stated more definitely that he was not going to do it. The fact remains that the minister has not allowed the matter to go to the committee. There was new evidence, evidence that was not before us before. Did we have any evidence before—I ask any member of the committee—that whales had been caught in the traps last year or ratfish or porpoises? We had this new information, and the totals of salmon caught, and it should have been submitted to the committee. There the matter ends so far as I am concerned at the moment. I am not going to prolong this debate indefinitely, and the committee would not be interested. But I charge the Department of Fisheries with straight neglect of duty in this matter, and there I leave it, for the issue to go before a higher tribunal, perhaps.

There is another matter in connection with fish traps which is more important and which touches to a certain degree the honour of this house. My information is not simply something I have heard, but what the minister himself says. Speaking in the house on April 26 last, he referred to these petitions about which I spoke, and then he said, as reported at page 2296 of Hansard:

Some petitions containing the same heading were forwarded to my office, I suppose inadvertently. These contained the post office addresses and occupations of the people who signed them and I found that they contained the signatures of more chicken farmers than fishermen.

And I replied:

Certainly.

The reason is that the population of British Columbia was much greater than that of the fishermen, and the people who would sign the petition would naturally be more numerous than the numbers of the fishermen because the petition was signed by the residents of British Columbia. The point I draw to the attention of the committee is this, and I would draw it to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), who is leading the government. The hon. Minister of Fisheries admitted the receipt of some of the petitions with the same heading. I have the petition here. It is addressed, "To the Honourable House of Commons in Parliament Assembled." That is, it is addressed to only one body, and that is the body sitting here.

It is the law, is it not, Mr. Chairman, that when letters are inadvertently delivered to the wrong person they shall be immediately handed over to the person to whom they were addressed? There are three members of this house with names very similar: O'Neill, MacNeil and Neill, and in the course of time, perhaps through the carelessness of clerks or because of the letters being wrongly directed, we get each other's mail. But I would be astonished if anyone suggested that we did not, all three of us, immediately turn such letters over to the person for whom they were intended and who owned them. Postal rule 244, I think it is, lays down that a letter once posted is the property of the person to whom it is addressed. The minister says himself that he got a number of these petitions. I do not know how many but I did have a kind of sneaking suspicion that something of that kind had happened because copies of some of the petitions I had sent out seemed to be missing. The matter was brought to his attention evidently, because he investigated and inquired into the occupation of the signatories. This is the point, and I think I shall raise it as a matter of privilege in the house: What did he do with these petitions which were addressed to the House of Commons, which came into his possession, and which he did not deliver to the House of Commons? The situation is very simple, and he is self-condemned. I ask for an explanation. The dignity of the house is concerned. What did he do with these petitions?

I immediately asked in the house for a return to be brought down that would indicate the facts. I asked for the return on May 2, and it was simply a matter of bringing down these papers which were entirely within the bounds of the Department of Fisheries. There was no going around to other departments to collect information. That was on May 2; this is May 23, and the return has not been brought down yet. Therefore I do not know how many petitions there were or how many signatories, and the house does not know what has become of its property, which is its property because the petitions were addressed to the house. I suppose the return will not be brought down until the day after this estimate has gone through. I asked the minister how many petitions he received, how many signatories were on them, and just what he did with the petitions.

Mr. MICHAUD: Mr. Chairman, first regarding the advisability of turning over to the fisheries committee the facts that had been gathered by the Department of Fisheries, I must repeat that I did not consider it worth while to turn over to the committee these facts, which did not disclose anything new beyond what had been brought to the attention of the committee last year. It is true that this statement shows that during the recess there was one whale caught in the fish traps which was later sent to a museum, but I did not think it a matter of such vital importance that it should be drawn to the attention of the fisheries committee. There might have been some facts disclosed in this statement; there may have been facts brought to the attention of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni that would have warranted the sending of this statement and these facts to the committee. But the hon. member had the right and the privilege, if he was not satisfied with my attitude, to call the matter to the attention of the chairman of that committee and to some of the members of it, and to have the committee called together, or he could have brought my attention to the fact that he wanted this information disclosed to the committee. The committee would then have been summoned, and he would have had every chance to bring before the committee facts which he thought of importance. But he did not do that. He simply wrote me a letter. I replied to him, but he did not show me any facts which, in his opinion, were of sufficient importance or vital enough to be brought to the attention of the committee.

As to these petitions which were received by me, and possibly inadvertently forwarded to me by some of the people to whom they had been sent for signature by the hon. member, I recall that there were two or three of these printed sheets of paper, with the heading printed on, on which names had been signed. They were put on my desk some time prior to the time I addressed the house, because I mentioned the matter. I looked at them and they were addressed to the house. They were filed away in the office, and when I had occasion again to refer to that file I saw them and immediately forwarded them to the clerk of the house, to whom they were addressed.

Mr. NEILL: When?

Mr. MICHAUD: Some time after the matter was mentioned in the house.

Mr. NEILL: Have they been received?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; an official of the house told me he had received them; he came to my office to tell me. There is nothing mysterious or secret about the matter. These were three of the many sheets that were sent out by the hon. gentleman to be signed by people in British Columbia. They were sent back to me, and I read them; that was how I knew what was in them. I saw the names and occupations of the persons who had signed them, and after my hon. friend had referred to the matter in the house I returned to the office and called for the file having to do with that matter. I found them on top of the file.

Mr. NEILL: They are still there.

Mr. MICHAUD: Oh, no; I immediately sent them where they should have gone in the first place. There was no reason for keeping them; there were hundreds of them forwarded to the house and laid on the table. I sent these sheets to the clerk of the house, or asked that they be sent to him, because that is what should have been done with them when they were first received. Inadvertently they were kept in the office; but they were sent to the clerk at that time, and they must be on file somewhere, because I was told by an official of the house that they had been received.

Mr. NEILL: The minister spoke a true word when he said they must be somewhere. Dealing first with the question of going to the committee, the minister is perfectly aware that neither I nor any other private member has the right to call a committee together. Further, the minister knows very well that under the rules no special committee deals with anything that has not been referred to it by the house. The procedure is for the minister or someone acting with his consent to rise in his place and ask that the matter be referred. That is the only way in which any committee can deal with a matter. The minister is just as well aware of that as I am. Let that go; I do not think the situation has been improved by piling on these contradictions which are so obviously unfounded.

With regard to these petitions, the minister says they are on file somewhere. They are not on file here, or I should have noticed them. They remained in the minister's office for four months, and I suggest that there was never the slightest intention of sending them where they should have been presented, where they would have had some weight and effect, where they would have added to the number of petitions presented, until the matter was brought up in the house and I challenged the minister about it. Then he goes to his office, finds them on the file, and tells a clerk to send them somewhere. Apparently they have not been sent to the clerk of the house. If they had been sent to him they would have been presented, and if they had been presented they would have appeared in the votes and proceedings. I suggest that this is a very serious matter, having to do with the honour, reputation and privileges of this house. I would ask that this item stand over until that return is brought down, so that we may see just how many petitions there are. The minister has a vague idea that there were two or three, or some number. There may have been thirty sheets on which there were certain signatures. I am so dissatisfied with the statements the minister has already made in connection with this matter that I would be much easier in mind if I saw the petitions. Having asked for the return a month ago—or, to be exact, twenty-one days ago—I think I am entitled to have it before this matter is discussed. I think the house is entitled to have it, in order to learn what has been done. This is a petition addressed to the house, and the best explanation the minister can give is that it is on the files somewhere.

I ask for your ruling, Mr. Chairman, or in the alternative I appeal to the Minister of Finance whether this item should not stand until we get the information indicated in the return for which I asked on May 2, which covers the whole situation; or, perhaps, until we get the petitions presented to the house. Apparently they are in some stage in between heaven and hell; the minister says they are not in the department; and they are not in the house. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that it is a very serious matter, and that the situation can be best dealt with by merely adjourning the debate on this item until a later occasion.

Mr. DUNNING: My hon. friend seems to me to be dramatizing what would appear to be a very simple matter. If petitions do reach a department through being addressed in some unusual manner, it would not surprise me a bit to find a mail clerk putting them on the file in the department. I do not think there is anything to be so wrought up about in that situation. As to transferring these petitions to the proper place, wherever that may be, the minister states he did so as soon as the matter was brought to his attention by the hon. member. That being so, they must now be in possession of the clerk of the house, and therefore should be available to my hon. friend. With respect to the return I understand that the minister has already forwarded to the Secretary of State the material required from his department by the return. The minister stated that to the hon. member, and the minister cannot say more.

Mr. NEILL: He did not tell me that.

Mr. DUNNING: I certainly understood him to say so, but he can speak for himself.

Mr. NEILL: He did not.

Mr. MICHAUD: I am answering now; the hon. member did not give me the chance to say it before.

Mr. NEILL: The Minister of Finance is putting the words in his mouth.

Mr. MICHAUD: The return moved for by the hon. member on May 2 is a voluminous document, as I think the hon. member knows.

Mr. NEILL: I do not know.

Mr. MICHAUD: Well, the hon. member must know; he should know. It has been forwarded through the proper channel from our department to the Secretary of State, and we no longer have any control over it. I remember that last Saturday, in the office, it was brought to my attention that the return was ready, and I gave instructions that it be forwarded immediately. I am informed that it was sent to the Secretary of State, which I understand is the proper procedure to follow. The return will be laid on the table in due course by the Secretary of State, and I have no further control over it.

Mr. NEILL: I have just one last question to ask the Minister of Finance. I wonder what he would do if he accidentally received a letter addressed to me.

Mr. DUNNING: Addressed to my hon. friend personally?

Mr. NEILL: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no doubt what I would do; I would return it to the post office.

Mr. NEILL: Or to the person to whom it was addressed?

Mr. DUNNING: No, I would not presume to forward it to the person to whom apparently it was addressed. It is the function of the post office, not mine, to find the party.

Mr. NEILL: After the letter is opened?

Mr. DUNNING: Yes; after the letter was opened.

Mr. NEILL: I do not think it would hurt to allow this item to stand. I understand that there is always one item left for further discussion, and if we leave this matter over until we get these petitions, possibly the situation will present itself in a less dangerous light than I have been suggesting. The minister says it is a trivial matter, but I do not think it is. If it turns out to be a matter of only a few names on a sheet of paper, it may be all right, but I want to see those petitions and I shall not be satisfied until they are presented to the house.

Mr. MICHAUD: I hope the hon. gentleman does not intend, or does not want, to convey the impression that the petitions, which were in printed form and intended for the house, were opened by me when they were not addressed to me. They were addressed to me by the senders, and after they were opened in due course they were placed on my desk by the clerks of the department. I found that they were for the attention of the house; that they were in exactly the same form as those presented by the hon. gentleman some time ago, and they should have been forwarded to the house immediately.

Mr. NEILL: Hear, hear.

Mr. MICHAUD: But inadvertently they were placed on the file in the department, and it was only when I had occasion to refer to that file that I found them. I immediately ordered the clerk to send them to the clerk of the house, and I know that was done because an official of the staff of this house came to me and said he had received them. I did not follow the messenger who had taken those three sheets of paper to the clerk, to find out whether or not he would deposit them; but I do know they were taken.

Mr. NEILL: Can the minister indicate the date when this occurred?

Mr. MICHAUD: It was shortly after the hon. member called my attention to the matter by mentioning it in the house. It would be after the first or second of May; I am not quite sure of the exact date. It was on the evening of the day on which the hon. member spoke in the house; I am sure of that. The next morning I referred to the file to find these things and immediately gave instructions that they be forwarded to the clerk of the house, because they were addressed to the clerk of the house. I have now sent a message to get the files, to ascertain whether or not they are on the files.

Mr. NEILL: It is unfortunate that they have not turned up, because if they have not they have fallen by the wayside. Everything addressed to the House of Commons is presented next day.

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not know whether they were presented or not.

Mr. NEILL: No; they were not.

Mr. MICHAUD: In any event they must be on file somewhere in the office; we shall get them.

Mr. NEILL: I accept the minister's promise, and I hope he will implement it.

Mr. MICHAUD: I have given all the information that I have. It was unfortunate that this happened.

Mr. NEILL: To deal more particularly with item No. 78, may I say that there is an increase of $70,000 in the amount to be voted. Ordinarily, being interested in the fisheries, I am glad to see further attention given to them, and under ordinary circumstances I would be glad to see that substantial increase. But my pleasure is to some extent modified when I find the purposes for which the increase is to be devoted. Details of the item are to be found at page 83 of the estimates, and according to those details I find that the great bulk of the $70,000 is to be spent not in the field of practical work, and in the conserving of the fisheries, but in adding to the ever increasing army of permanent, paid officials. The officials have increased from 127 to 139, or by twelve. Of the total of $70,000 it is indicated that the amount for guardians has risen by about $11,000, while paid salaries have increased by about $17,000. Apparently it takes $17,000 for paid officials in the offices to look after expenditures of $11,000 on the ground.

I have always and ever maintained that the proper plan of spending money on fishing is not to spend it in the offices in the Hunter block, or in Vancouver—and particularly in Vancouver—but to spend it on the grounds in preventing poaching; because one can go in at night and in a few hours undo the good the department has done in three or four years. A man may put a net across the mouth of a little river or creek and clean it out. The result is that next year, instead of the fish going up by thousands they go up by scores, and it takes four or five years to regain the run. Therefore I say it does not pay to preserve a fish run for three or four years and then, through lack of a guardian at a particular point, to allow a poacher to come in and destroy what has been done. I say that because people will poach, and it is inevitable that if they are given the opportunity they will clean up the river. So I say as long as the money is spent on fish guardians, more power to them, because they are doing real good. It is not a question of wanting to get jobs for my friends, but rather a question of having the fish protected. The money can be spent, as well as on guardians, on the sea plane patrol, which is doing a very useful work. While it is expensive, I believe it has done good work.

[Mr. Michaud.]

I have received from the hand of Providence—I do not know what other hand put it here—three copies of the petition we have been talking about. There are three signed sheets.

Mr. DUNNING: In view of what the hon. member said regarding the minister, I suggest he might tell us where they came from.

Mr. NEILL: They appear to have floated down upon my desk. They were just placed here a moment ago.

Mr. DUNNING: And they were apparently in the hands of the clerk, where they ought to have been, and the messenger who went for them found them there.

Mr. NEILL: Is that where they were?

Mr. DUNNING: The hon. member should tell us that.

Mr. NEILL: Why were they not presented to the house?

Mr. DUNNING: Dear, dear, dear! At least the minister did tell the truth, and there was no great crime attached to what he did, as the hon. member's language would seem to indicate.

Mr. NEILL: We shall deal with the statements the minister made. He said, "I have this petition; I have looked it over, and I find that they are chicken farmers, and not fishermen." I shall read them. I shall not bother with the names, but I shall give the facts on which the minister must have based his statement that the petition was signed by chicken farmers rather than fishermen. I find that they are listed as poultryman, postmaster, clerk—the next is unintelligible—clerk, poultryman, clerk, egg grader, photographer, carpenter, clerk, clerk, logger, mechanic, logger, farmer, stenographer—

Mr. DUNNING: Everything but fishermen.

Mr. NEILL: Game warden, carpenter, farmer, logger, builder, fisherman, fisherman, fisherman, fisherman, fisherman and logger. There are only two poultrymen.

Mr. DUNNING: How many fishermen?

Mr. NEILL: I have read them all. I have read out every name. There were one or two concerning whom the occupations were not indicated. For instance, I find Ganges; that is not an occupation, it is an address.

Mr. DUNNING: But there are very few fishermen.

Mr. NEILL: More than chicken farmers. We shall come back again to the item we were discussing. Will the minister explain the substantial increase, one which on general terms I would be gratified to see, but which, in the present instance, in view of the fact that so much of it is devoted to an increase in the salaries of paid officials, does not please me. The money is being spent on the payment of officials rather than for practical work on the ground. What is the need for the increase of twelve officials in Ottawa, for example?

Mr. MICHAUD: The increase at Ottawa is not an increase in the number of officials, although the statement appearing at pages 83 and 84 of the estimates would lead one to believe that there has been an increase by twelve. There was a change made by the civil service commission. The persons involved were temporary employees of the department who have been made permanent. Although they were temporary they occupied permanent positions. Under the provisions of the Civil Service Act I understand that in due course they had to be made permanent. They have been made permanent, and now appear on the list of permanent officials. Last year they were classified as temporary.

Mr. NEILL: But the expenditures increase by $17,000.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; I shall come to that. The increase of $70,000 in the branch is due, first, to the annual statutory increase amounting to $2,760. There is the restoration of the five per cent deduction, amounting to $17,827. Then, there are salary increases, in addition to the annual increases, amounting to $7,390.

Mr. NEILL: Salary increases?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Annual increases?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; these are in addition. They apply to temporary employees who are receiving higher wages. Then, there is an increase of $2,000 for equipment. This involves new radio equipment on the Malaspina.

Mr. NEILL: But that is not under this item?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; it comes under this item.

Mr. NEILL: Would we find details of the equipment under the heading of fisheries inspection?

Mr. MICHAUD: Under the vote for fisheries inspection would be included the cost of running the boats used in the service as well as the pay of the employees. A new hull is being provided for the Elkhorn at a cost of $5,000. That is protection service. A new engine is being supplied for the Clupea, a patrol boat on the Pacific coast, at a cost of $5,000. Increases in the administrative and boat services generally amount to $30,023. Those would be for protection and patrol services, and make up the total of $70,000.

Mr. NEILL: The minister has given me particulars of increases in connection with boats. Where would they show under this item? Would they appear under temporaries? I thought there was a special item for these boats.

Mr. MICHAUD: No.

Mr. NEILL: There used to be.

Mr. MICHAUD: Item No. 78 reads:

Fisheries inspection, including fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services.

Mr. NEILL: Where are the details shown on page 83?

Mr. MICHAUD: They are shown under the details of the items.

Mr. NEILL: These details must be shown on either page 83 or 84. They must be included in some bigger item if they are not shown in detail.

Mr. MICHAUD: On page 83 we have, "fisheries inspection, including fishery officers and guardians, fisheries patrol and fisheries protection services." Then on page 84—

Mr. NEILL: Stenographers, watchmen and master mechanics. I think we had better call it six o'clock so that the minister may look over the book to see on what pages they are.

Mr. DUNNING: I suggest to my hon. friend that he must give the minister an opportunity to make his statement. The minister is not a criminal being cross-examined by a criminal lawyer. Surely he should have an opportunity to make a statement.

Mr. NEILL: I was trying to help him by giving him a little leisure. He does not seem to be able to indicate the place and it must be somewhere.

Mr. DUNNING: If my hon. friend will give him the ordinary courtesy which ought to be accorded to members of the house, he will probably be able to find it with the assistance of his officer.

Mr. NEILL: I was simply trying to be courteous.

Mr. MICHAUD: It does not look like it. The boat does not appear in the book, but the salaries of those working on the boat and the expenses incurred for repairs would appear in the book. You cannot put the boat in the book.

Mr. NEILL: I do not mean the boat itself, I mean the expenses connected with the boat. The minister says they do not appear in the book. They must appear somewhere, and that is why I suggest we call it six o'clock.

Mr. MICHAUD: On page 84 the hon. member will see an item, "total salaries, $629,508." That item would include the salaries of temporary and permanent employees. If the hon. member wants any information as to any branch of the service, I can give it to him. This item refers to employees on the boats and in the offices. The whole item refers to the protection service and includes the salaries of those who are employed on the boats or who have any connection with the protection service.

Mr. NEILL: The minister does me less than justice. Just a few minutes ago I asked him if the expenses connected with these boats were included under temporary assistance, where apparently they are included, but he said no. I then asked if they would appear under the item dealing with total salaries.

Mr. MICHAUD: My hon. friend said he said it and it must be true.

Mr. NEILL: It is in Hansard.

Mr. MICHAUD: I did not understand the hon. member and he probably did not get the answer he expected.

Mr. NEILL: We probably did not understand each other. Will the minister now tell me if these items of $5,000, $6,000 and $7,000 come under the heading, total salaries?

Mr. MICHAUD: No.

Mr. NEILL: Where do they come?

Mr. MICHAUD: We have an item for sundries, $224,815.

Mr. NEILL: The minister has stated there has been no increase in the staff; that the increase in the amount of the vote is due to the circumstances which he has related. I notice on page 83 that provision is made for seventy-four fisheries inspectors this year, whereas last year there were only sixty-nine. Are these fisheries inspectors not permanent employees appointed under the Civil Service Act? They are not temporaries who have been converted into permanents?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. MICHAUD: I think that is what happened.

Mr. NEILL: Temporary fisheries inspectors?

Mr. MICHAUD: When a man is appointed by the civil service commission, he is appointed as a temporary for six months or a year. He remains a temporary until he receives a certificate of permanency. I understand that is what happened last year. A number of new appointees were appointed as temporaries for the year and were then transferred to the permanent staff.

Mr. NEILL: I am quite willing to accept that statement as a plausible and reasonable one.

Mr. MICHAUD: It is the fact; I cannot change it.

Mr. NEILL: I am quite willing to accept it as a plausible and reasonable statement. Can the minister give us any assurance that some of this extra $70,000 will be used for that practical work on the Atlantic and the Pacific which is so dear to my heart? Will there be something extra available for guardians and airplane patrols?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Will the amount be considerably larger?

Mr. MICHAUD: The amount for both coasts is a little over $30,000.

Mr. NEILL: Together?

Mr. MICHAUD: Together. I can give my hon. friend the details of what we expect to expend in each district.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: Item No. 78.

Mr. DUNNING: We understood that we should go ahead with agriculture to-night. This item was pretty well discussed, I should like to pass the one item under fisheries and then, if it is agreeable, proceed to agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN: Item No. 78 stands.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. NEILL: I want to say a few words, and then I shall not bother the minister on this item any more. The minister said just before six o'clock that out of the increased vote he had got a sum of $30,000 which would be applicable to fisheries guardians and such like work on the ground. I wanted to thank him for that, and to congratulate him. That is the way in which I want to see the money spent, because it is the most effective way. It might have been more, but it is a great deal better than if the amount had been $30,000 less. However, I desire to make one other criticism, if he will accept it in the friendly spirit in which it is offered. The item we are now discussing is a very large sum, and it comes under one general head, in which it names half a dozen different items, among them the fisheries patrol. The details on page 83 of the estimates give the names one by one; even although there is only one officer, his salary is set out there. But when it comes to the money spent in British Columbia, and I suppose elsewhere, on vessels, it is a different proposition. In British Columbia the government owns over a hundred vessels in connection with the patrol of the fisheries service. Two of them are big boats, and the maintenance of those two boats alone will come to something like $110,000 a year. The other boats are much smaller. But the maintenance expenses would aggregate about $250,000. A quarter of a million dollars is a pretty large sum, and I do not think it is unreasonable to suggest that we should have a more detailed statement of it. When we turn to page 83 we find that they are not itemized except in a very general and vague way. For instance, part of this $250,000 is taken out of the vote for temporary assistance, part comes out of the vote for total salaries, and a large part comes out of the vote called sundries, which amount to $234,000. I trust that another year the minister may see fit, considering this involves a vote of about $240,000, to have a separate item for this service. It is the people's money we are spending, and is a pretty vague way to wrap up part of it in the vote for temporary assistance, part in the vote for sundries, and part mixed up with another vote for wages. I am not criticizing the minister. Probably this system has been there since time immemorial; but I suggest that it is not a very good one, and that he look into it in the interim and consider whether it would not make the accounts clearer if he had one item for these votes.

Mr. MICHAUD: Of course my hon. friend realizes that the Department of Fisheries is not responsible for the way in which the estimates are presented to the house. We have to follow certain rules set by the treasury board, and we have followed them so far. As he stated, the method we have adopted this year, the previous year, and the year before that is exactly the method that was followed from time immemorial. But as far as the Department of Fisheries is concerned, we prepared all these estimates in the detailed form which has been suggested by the hon. gentleman. I have before me 129 typewritten pages of details regarding this very item. If it is thought advisable next year by those who are responsible for preparing the book of the estimates to publish all these details, or any part of them, the Department of Fisheries will be only too glad to supply the material to enable them to do so.

Mr. BARBER: There is a matter I should like to draw to the attention of the minister, and I think it comes under this item. It is in regard to the transfer of the control of sport fish.

Mr. MICHAUD: Oh, no.

Mr. BARBER: What item would it come under?

Mr. MICHAUD: Under the item of fish culture.

Mr. BARBER: This is not "culture"; it is regulations regarding the agreement entered into with the province of British Columbia relative to licences and so forth.

Mr. MICHAUD: I have no objection to my hon. friend discussing it now, but it comes under item No. 81.

Mr. DUNNING: It had better be discussed then.

Mr. BARBER: Very well.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I understand this item is being allowed to stand.

Mr. MICHAUD: No.

Mr. TAYLOR: (Nanaimo): Well, then, if the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has completed his address to the committee—

Mr. DUNNING: The jury.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo):—the jury, yes, on this question of fish traps, I think something ought to be said on the other side.

Mr. NEILL: Come on!

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I had a long fight last year in the committee, and I am still in a fighting mood. I cannot understand that this petition which was presented to the house was anything but an emotional petition. I find that many of the statements are not in strict accordance with the facts.

Mr. NEILL: Order.

Mr. STEWART: It is not necessary in a petition, anyway.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Some of them are not entirely correct; that must be quite obvious to any discerning reader. I want to draw to the attention of the committee one or two of these statements which, I think, should be modified. If a wrongful petition has been presented to citizens, who have signed it, believing that it contains facts, and if those facts are subsequently disproved, then the whole petition falls by the board. I contend that in large measure that is actually the fact in connection with the petition about these fish traps. I want to read a statement which will give some denial to the statements in the petition. This comes to me from Mr. Charles F. Goodrich, who was one of the principal witnesses for the traps in the committee meetings last year. His letter is dated September 23, 1937. It is not necessary to go over the whole letter; but if hon. members ask for it, I shall be very glad to place it on Hansard. In the meantime, this is, in part, what he says:

It is true that some three years ago there was enacted in the state of Washington what was known as initiative No. 77, which by its terms abolished fish traps in that state.

This was a bill sponsored by the sport fishermen, sporting goods dealers, fishing resort owners, boathouse proprietors and others, and by its original terms was to apply to purse seiners as well as fish traps.

Because it was deemed unlikely that the bill in its original form could be passed, it being obvious that it was intended to do away with all commercial fishing, the bill was changed so as to apply to fish traps only. By this means it was possible of course to secure the active cooperation of the purse seiners on Puget sound and to augment their campaign fund by substantial contributions from the Japanese fishermen on the Fraser river.

Under the laws of the state of Washington no bill enacted by initiative can be repealed by the legislature for a period of two years after its enactment. Last year, therefore—

That would be 1936.

—was the earliest date when an attempt could be made for its repeal. An effort was made last winter to repeal this bill but failed for political reasons. The effort will undoubtedly be repeated with every prospect for its ultimate success. In the debates on the floor of the state legislature, however, no mention was made of whether Canada did or did not license fish traps.

So much for the history of trap net legislation in the state of Washington. It is not true that "the Americans took out all their traps in Puget sound numbering 219." It may be true that at one time there were 219 trap net licences taken out, but the larger part were primarily for protection and there were only about 75 traps actually in operation.

[Mr. J. S. Taylor.]

We can rest assured that if and when the state of Washington is convinced that it cannot catch 50 per cent or better of the sockeye run to the Fraser river without trap nets it will reestablish trap nets without regard to whether four or five traps are licensed in British Columbia or not.

Unless Canada is given positive assurance that traps will not be reintroduced on Puget sound, there can be no good reason to legislate against our own interests by abolishing ours.

Notwithstanding the statement in the petition that "there is no truth in the allegation that traps are the only means by which salmon can be taken in our waters, in that neighbourhood, as it has been demonstrated that it can be fished by seines, gill nets and trollers," the fact remains that the statement is true and can be easily verified. The presence of the traps in this vicinity does not act as a bar to other gear. Purse seine boats have repeatedly had their licences transferred to this area and have attempted to operate, but have in every case failed and have gone to other districts better adapted to this mode of fishing.

Some experiments were made some years ago with gill nets but absolutely without success. Trolling on any extensive scale is unprofitable as compared with other localities on the west coast, and what trolling is done is successful only while the traps are in existence. Sockeye, pinks and chums—

Three of the varieties of salmon—

—do not take the hook, and as these varieties are the principal cannery fish, trollers would be no help in maintaining a cannery even if they were to operate.

A most significant phrase is used in this same paragraph. In making a claim that other gear could be used, the petition states that to this gear the "Americans would have no objection." If, as stated in the petition, the Americans have for the past 20 years or so taken about 70 per cent of the Fraser river sockeye catch—

Mr. NEILL: Will the hon. member allow me a question? Is he reading from Mr. Goodrich's statement, or is he making his own?

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I am reading from Mr. Goodrich's statement.

Mr. NEILL: What is the date?

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): December 23, 1937. I have already given that information to the committee.

If, as stated in the petition, the Americans have for the past 20 years or so taken about 70 per cent of the Fraser river sockeye catch, just where would they acquire the right to "have objections" to any gear Canadians find it desirable to use? Has Canada delegated to Olympia the right to legislate for Canada in this or any other matter, and must Canada confine its fishing operations to gear to which Americans have no objection? After Canada shall have enjoyed 70 per cent of the catch of Canadian spawned fish for 20 years, it will then be ample time to consider destroying any branch of the Canadian fisheries for the benefit of the fishermen of Puget sound. Certainly, however, the mere fact that for the past two or three years its proportion of the catch has shown some improvement should occasion no qualms of conscience on the part of Canada.

When the member for Comox-Alberni originally made the statement on the floor of the house that traps were the most destructive form of fishing, as they fish day and night, while every practical fisherman knew it to be untrue, the member was given the benefit of the doubt and it was assumed that the statement was made from ignorance or misinformation. At the committee hearings at Ottawa last winter, however, this error was pointed out and since that date the member has had ample time to correct his misstatement. When he now sponsors a repetition of this falsehood, he leaves no alternative than to believe that he does so deliberately and wilfully.

I am sorry, but that is in this statement.

Traps do not fish day and night in British Columbia or elsewhere. The Sooke trap nets are so constructed that they fish only on the flood tide, and they can fish effectively only from four to six hours even in daylight. Phosphorus in the water makes night fishing out of the question and traps are invariably closed during the hours of darkness. As to the statement that nothing escapes the trap or gets through, fish once taken by any type of gear are not expected to get through. However, about 98 per cent of the fish get by as shown by the records.

Records of the catches of springs and cohoes, while not as complete as the records of sockeyes show conclusively that the proportion of the total catch of these varieties taken by the Sooke traps is not far different from that of sockeyes.

Nothing justifies the statement that abolition of traps would lead to any increase in employment, but on the contrary, it is definitely known that it would immediately result in throwing out of employment forty or fifty men now profitably employed at Sooke, owning in most cases their own homes and knowing no other means of livelihood. It would be simply a case of a repetition of the old fable of the dog dropping his bone to grasp at its reflection in the water.

Tourist fishermen now find the local waters an attractive field for sport fishing. During the past season many excellent catches were made. These were principally the spring and cohoe salmon.

Commercial fishing for these varieties by the troll has increased tremendously in the past few years and large catches have been made by Canadian gear on the west coast of Vancouver island and by American gear off Swiftsure banks.

There are no records available showing the landings of cohoes by the Canadian trollers. The state of Washington fisheries department show the landings by American gear, and the figures are published in Biological Reports 35A and 36A.

I have these Biological Reports, in case any members of the committee would care to see them.

Following is a comparison of the catch of cohoes by American gear and the catch of the Sooke traps:

	1935	1936
American gear..	874,380	451,231
Sooke traps..	50,117	36,391

The records as regards spring salmon are a little more complete than cohoes, but still no figures are available showing the catch on the Fraser river.

Following is a comparison of the catch of spring salmon on the west coast by Canadian gear, the catch off Swiftsure bank by American gear and the catch of the Sooke trap nets:

	1935	1936
American gear. ..	232,199 or 56·2%	314,378 or 65·8%
Canadian trollers..	160,200 or 39%	147,461 or 30·8%
Sooke traps.	19,810 or 4·8%	16,297 or 3·4%

To suggest practising conservation entirely at the expense of a type of gear which is only taking a toll of from 3·4 to 4·8 per cent is so manifestly unfair as to require no comment.

I do not propose to read it all. This entire trap net question was thoroughly investigated last winter by the fisheries committee at Ottawa, and the opponents of trap nets were given every opportunity of presenting their case. At the request of the fishermen the expenses of two men of their own choosing were paid by the government to come to Ottawa, and present any facts they desired. It was conceded that the case against the traps was altogether unconvincing, and the best that the sponsors of the investigation could get was a recommended increase in fishing licence fees and certain minor changes in the regulations, all of which have been complied with. After all, this is purely an administrative matter, and one which can be left in the hands of the Minister of Fisheries, whose department has made an exhaustive study of this and all other fisheries matters. The rest of the letter can be seen by any hon. member desirous of studying it closely.

Referring later to the fact stated in the petition, that the associated boards of trade of Vancouver island had voted against fish traps, I have this letter dated February 28, 1938, in reply to my statement, from the same gentleman, Mr. Charles F. Goodrich, of the Sooke Harbour Fishing and Packing Company, Limited, Victoria, British Columbia:

We note that Mr. Neill states that this petition was signed by Mr. W. W. R. Mitchell, president of the associated boards of trade of Vancouver island and 9,594 others, "all citizens of British Columbia."

The reference to Mr. Mitchell's office is entirely gratuitous. He was never authorized by the associated boards of trade to sign in his official capacity. It is true that a resolution against trap nets was railroaded through at a meeting of the associated boards at Nanaimo at Mr. Neill's instigation last June in violation of the rules previously adopted governing such matters. It is also true that this action was promptly disavowed by unanimous vote of the Victoria chamber of commerce, by far the largest body composing the associated boards. It is also true that at the last meeting of the executive held at Nanaimo on January 26 last all further action with reference to trap nets was postponed until June next.

Then follows other matter, which is at the disposal of any inquiring member of the committee.

This is really a very serious matter, and it should not be hastily judged by hon. members in committee. They should go into the whole matter very seriously, because, as I tried to point out to the committee last year, it involves the life history of the various types of salmon, which in turn involves an understanding of the biological history of these fish, and unless one can see precisely what is going on it is useless to attempt to decide whether or not traps or trap nets should be abolished at this particular point. They were established at Sooke after long and close investigation some twenty-five years or more ago, and they have remained there because of the peculiar strategic condition which obtains at that point. The strait of Juan de Fuca is approximately eighty miles long, and varies in width from ten to eighteen miles, having an average width of, say twelve miles. Hon. members can reduce that strait to the compass of this house, which is ninety-two feet long between doors and sixty-one feet wide between panels beyond the curtains. If you then take four and a half lengths of this house you have the length of the strait, with the width of the house as the width of the strait, roughly speaking. All these trap nets occupy a space within half the length of this house. The shortest of them is no longer by comparison than the length of a man's hand, and the longest of them, 2,000 feet, is no longer than the length of a man's arm. So, if you can visualize in the width of this house the length of a man's arm stretching out from the panels at the wall, you visualize the longest trap in its relationship to the width of Juan de Fuca strait. If you visualize the length of a man's hand sticking out from the panels, you can see what is the obstruction in the strait of the shortest trap net at Sooke. These things are worth noting. All that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has said is not proof to a discerning individual that these traps should be abolished.

He made quite a joke of the fact that a whale was caught in these traps. Surely; a whale would be caught in any net strong enough to catch him, and if we say that all kinds of fish were caught in the traps that is equally true of all kinds of fishing gear. Very, very rarely when fish are running are they running pure to type. There is always an admixture; there are always camp followers, always fish of other types than those running. But the peculiar feature of the whole thing is that in the eighty mile stretch of the strait there comes a point at which fifty miles from the entrance the salmon leave their general run and turn south in order to pass down into Puget sound. The Juan de Fuca strait runs practically east for fifty miles and then makes a sudden turn to east northeast, and it is at that point of departure that for some reason or another the fish turn down into United States waters. It was for this reason that the traps were permitted to be constructed at Sooke, roughly speaking, in the first instance. What causes the fish to go down there I have not been able to discover; but the chances are that inasmuch as they have, roughly speaking, 150 to 250 miles to travel before they reach the mouth of the Fraser river, it may be conceded that they are not yet ready to enter fresh water, and that immediately they taste the fresh water from the Fraser river, which throws its influence right away down, they turn off into the salt water leading down into Puget sound. Whether or not this is so, the fact remains that this change of direction into United States waters gives the fishermen their chance, and gives the traps their opportunity. These traps in United States waters are not like the traps at Sooke, for they are planted quite definitely in the shallow channels between the various islands.

Now let me read one more quotation, from the Pacific Coast News of Thursday, February 10, 1938, in which there is an article entitled:

Sockeye problems reviewed in booklet.

The article continues:

"Net Profits" is the name of a booklet just off the press, published by the national resources bureau in Vancouver under the auspices——of the British Columbia fishermen's protective association.

Note this.

I do not propose to read all this article. It continues:

The discussion on "modes of fishing" is supported by a memorandum from Major J. A. Motherwell, chief supervisor of fisheries, setting forth the times of fishing and close seasons.

The reader may gain a clear understanding of the various types of fishing and arrive at the conclusion that while each fisherman would like to believe that his type of gear is beyond criticism there is room in the industry for all types depending on location subject to limitation only for their abuses.

Then, further on:

Perhaps the most vital matter presented is the firm suggestion that status quo be maintained in the sockeye fishery now that the commission has appointed the advisory committee.

Let it be remembered that the international salmon committee has already appointed an advisory committee of which the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) is a member.

The suggestion is made that party politics and other external influences not be permitted to lessen the prestige of either the commission or the advisory committee through forcing any changes whatsoever, now that the facility of these two bodies operating under an international treaty have been set in motion to perform the task which confronts them.

Unquestionably that is a most important statement. We have an international commission and we have appointed an advisory committee to assist it, so there is no reason for attempting to interfere until they have made their findings. I bring these matters to the notice of the committee in what is after all a fairly cursory manner, because I am convinced that unless hon. members definitely apply themselves to a study of this whole matter and refuse to give a decision without ordered and considered judgment, they can have no idea how to deal with this question of fish traps at Sooke.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, I think in the thirty-eighth chapter of Job, the second verse you will find these words:

Who is this that darkeneth counsel by words without knowledge?

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): The hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. NEILL: That was one occasion when my hon. friend spoke out of the fulness of his heart. I find that my hon. friend according to what has been called in this house the stud book, is a student of comparative religions. I understand that more recently he has become a student of political parties; that he is gradually making a circle and ultimately will come back to where he belongs. I think the minister will now see that I was right when I said, in opening this matter this afternoon, that I would not turn this house into a debating society and try to rehash the whole subject again, because the opportunity did not exist for cross-examination and so on. I said it had been thoroughly threshed out in committee and that a committee was the place to do it, and to that extent, and to that extent only, I regret that my hon. friend has opened up the whole subject.

I observed that, I think for the first time, I was accused of presenting something in the house that was of an emotional character. I studied the petition very carefully, but failed to see, and the hon. member failed to point out, where the emotion presented itself. I noticed that my hon. friend was careful to refer repeatedly to the facts contained in the petition. Yes; they are facts, and, after all, if a thing is a fact it is true. You cannot have such a thing as a false fact. My hon. friend tried to show that the facts were false, but of course there can be no such thing.

It would be impossible and highly undesirable for me to go all over the ground my hon. friend covered; but I want to say that the great bulk of his presentation to-night was an ex parte statement drawn up probably by a lawyer but at least sent to him by the very man whose interests are so vitally at stake, Mr. Goodrich, and Mr. Goodrich has an enormous interest at stake, because he is in possession of an enormous privilege belonging to the people of Canada, out of which he is making a whale of a lot of money. Naturally he will draw up a statement that at least will look plausible as against this petition. But he had his chance before the committee, and there he showed up very differently from the fancy picture he draws in the letter which has been read to the committee to-night. He repeatedly contradicted himself. Frequently he said, "I will not tell that." "Do I have to tell that?" Finally he admitted that he paid an income tax so large that it was very easy to figure the profits of that company. He was asked whether these things were true. Some friend of his on the committee said, "Beware Neill is trying to lead you into a trap," a different kind of trap. They said to him, "You are under oath; is it true that you paid that much in income tax?" He said, "Yes; I think it was rather more." One member of the committee said, "You are sort of sitting pretty, aren't you? You made an investment of so much, and each year you are making more in profits than your total investment." Once you regard that letter as a very ex parte statement, a great deal of the weight of the letter disappears.

My hon. friend went on to make the statement that the traps did not fish at night. They do fish day and night; they fish whenever the tide is most suitable, as any other fisherman does. They can fish twenty-four hours a day, and it is not correct to say they are closed at night, because they are not. If they are closed at all, it is only because of the weekly forty-eight hour requirement of the dominion government.

Then my hon. friend said we would throw a lot of people out of employment. He knows better than that; he is not doing himself justice when he makes that statement. At the very most it would throw forty-one people out of employment, the people who signed the petition as employees of the company, who naturally do not want to lose their jobs. But man after man rose and stated that it would enormously increase the employment of fishermen if these traps were done away with. A member of the committee—I shall not mention his name, because I know he is a modest man—rose and said, "I am getting a little tired of this line of talk. I own a cannery, as you all know. If I could have a trap at my door, the same as these gentlemen have, I would only employ from twelve to fifteen men a year, whereas now I have to employ between 200 and 400. But I am willing to do it because I am giving employment to fishermen. "But," he said, "I do feel like asking this: If this gentleman has to have a trap, why should not the other thirty-eight canneries which do not have traps also have them?"

That is on record in Hansard. Then the hon. member said the arguments advanced against traps were entirely unconvincing. Were they? That is remarkable, is it not? Yet we presented a report—he says so himself—recommending that the licence fees should be raised from $50. They had seven licences. They did not use them all, but they hogged them to prevent anybody else from using them. Those seven licences they obtained at $50 each, making a total of $350. We recommended that the fee be raised from $50 per licence to $500, and they did not make any objection. They were glad to pay that enormous increase. I do not know whether my figures of percentages are correct or not; it is a 1,000 per cent increase, if my figures are correct. Anyway it is certainly a great increase, from a total of $350 to one of $3,500, and they did not make a chirp of objection. They were only too glad to get away with it at that price, when they were getting this enormous privilege from the people of Canada. We were getting $350 out of them, and we were paying an overseer about $700 to look after matters. Now we are getting $3,500.

The hon. member says one of the things misstated in the petition was that the associated boards of trade at Vancouver Island at their annual meeting in June last passed a resolution asking for the abolition of the traps. That is actually and entirely true and can be easily and regularly proved. The hon. member's ignorance on that point is as great as his ignorance on the point as to where the meeting was held. He says it was held at Nanaimo, and it was actually held at Port Alberni. He tells what took place. I was there and he was not; I know what happened, and as God is my witness I shall give the exact facts.

There was a resolution on the agenda of the meeting of the associated boards of trade of Vancouver island, and that resolution dealt with traps. The custom or the rule is to circulate the agenda beforehand, and that resolution was circulated with the rest. But even if it is alleged that it was not on the agenda—and it was; it was certainly on the one we used at the meeting—it was made official at any rate by the credentials committee which adopted it, and passed it unanimously and without protest.

The resolution was brought up in the meeting. There were two delegates at the meeting from the Victoria chamber of commerce; there may have been more, but I know that there were at least two of them. When the resolution was brought up, one of those gentlemen rose and said, "There is a point about this thing I am not quite clear on." He might have said more than that; but I do know that was said, and he indicated that he wanted further knowledge. The chairman said, "Mr. Neill is in the audience; he is familiar with the situation and can give the information you wish." I asked what he wanted to know. Replying to him I spoke only a few moments, and before anything further could be done that same man said "Carried," and the resolution went through unanimously. There were no other protests whatever.

Then the traps interests got busy. They have powerful interests in Victoria, and they got the chamber of commerce to repudiate the action of their delegates. They said that the delegates had no business to do as they had done, because they had been told not to vote on anything of a controversial nature. The matters could not have been very controversial, because the vote was carried unanimously, and there was no objection other than the one I have stated.

Then they got busy. In the interim there was a semi-annual meeting of the executive, and it was said that if they did not repudiate the action of the associated boards of trade —which they were not able to do, because they were only the executive—the Victoria chamber would withdraw from the affiliated boards. In other words, "If I don't get my way I won't play in your back-yard." It is not the first time that the Victoria chamber have adopted that hoggish attitude if they do not get everything their way. It would not hurt the rest of us on Vancouver island one little bit if they did withdraw. We would get along better without them. They demanded that the decision of the board be upset. The executive was then called together, and they decided that the matter would be brought up again at the next annual meeting, but there was not the least suggestion of repudiating it, or that it was done in the wrong way, at all.

Then he tries to make something of the fact that Mr. Mitchell's name was on it. Yes, Mr. Mitchell's name was on it, and there is no use in trying to suggest something else. Mr. Goodrich suggests there was something phoney about it. I say that Mr. Mitchell's name was on it; I saw him sign it myself. The clerk can get the record, and he will see that he approved it. What is the use of saying he did not sign it. He did sign it, as a matter of fact.

Just another point, the suggestion is made that it was "railroaded" through. This discussion I have told the committee about, and which the hon. member has been speaking about out of the fulness of his ignorance —he says it was "railroaded" through at Nanaimo; he was referring no doubt to what took place at Port Alberni.

Then he talked at great length to show something else. He drew a fancy picture by using the curtains in some mysterious way. What he really was trying to get at is this: He was drawing a picture or trying to as to the width of the strait of Juan de Fuca at that point. Then he made a comparison of the length of the trap, which runs out perhaps a couple of thousand feet, as compared with the strait, and indicated that the fish really did not need to go into the traps unless they were determined to do so, because the 2,000 feet was such a small percentage as compared with the total width. Well, I suppose he does not know better than that, and I shall not attack him on the point. He has never been a sockeye salmon; that is quite evident. I hope he will never be.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Has the hon. member been, by any chance?

Mr. NEILL: Have I been one? If I were a sockeye I would—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I do not mind the argumentum ad hominem; you may go ahead with that as far as you like; it will not hurt me. But are we not discussing traps?

Mr. NEILL: Certainly we are. But when false arguments are put forward by an hon. member, I have, I think, a right to dissect them. I was not talking to the hon. member at all. I was speaking about his arguments concerning the percentage of lead compared with the width of the straits. As I say, if he were familiar with the habits of sockeye he would know something about its homing instinct. It spawns, goes to sea and stays there four years. At the end of that period, in spite of hell and high water, it will come back again, and it will go to only one place; it will go back to the place where it was spawned and it will go nowhere else. It will not go ten or twelve miles away to another stream, but it will come right back to where it was spawned. It is a biological urge within it which comes on at the end of four or five years.

These traps are put out at the good headlands, where the fish will come around the headlands. If I were going around the corner of that table and wished to go to the minister's seat, I would not go around by the seat of the hon. member for Nanaimo, would I? I would have all that width, if I wished to use it, but naturally if I were walking to the minister's seat I would do as I would if driving a car. I would hug the right-hand corner, or keep to the right of the road. That is exactly what the fish do. They go to the headland, and when they go to the right they find a piece of wire-netting sticking out. They cannot go up on the shore; so they go along in the opposite direction, poking along, until they come to the trap. That is the end of it. Of course they could back up and go out to sea, but it is not their custom—and you cannot make a salmon do something different from its natural instinct, or different from that which nature intended it to do. That is the explanation of the percentage.

Then, although I did not hear him accurately, I believe he was reading from a reprint of a Pacific coast fishing newspaper, a memorandum or a brochure got out in the early spring dealing with various matters in connection with Fraser river salmon and, incidentally, with other matters as well. He took out of that certain sections of the tract which were in favour of the traps. I read that tract, too—I got it before he did—and I say that "tract" is the right word for it, because it was an example of propagandizing and evangelizing. I discovered that the publication of that pamphlet was financed by three of the large canning companies. The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Taylor) does not know that. I was not told which three they were, but considering that a large proportion of that pamphlet was in the direction of continuing the fish traps, one might perhaps make an invidious suggestion. Now I just want to say what I had intended to say in the beginning. I had intended to meet the hon. gentleman's argument in just one point, but I was led astray to answer some of his vagaries. I hold in my hand the report of the proceedings of the marine and fisheries committee of March 22, 1937. At that time I was in my poor way summing up my argument against the traps. I had asked for a return in the house of certain correspondence which the minister kindly brought down. That correspondence, therefore, became official, and I quoted some letters contained in the return. One of them was from a gentleman named J. S. Taylor, member of parliament. At that time I took the privilege of quoting that letter, and I shall quote it now. If it does not answer all his argument, well, then I am sorry. He is writing to Mr. William Vowles, general secretary, Sooke and Milnes Landing Branches, Workers and Farmers Protective Association, Sooke, Vancouver island, British Columbia. The vital portion of that letter reads:

> From seventy per cent of the fishing catch becoming American it is now, United States forty-seven per cent and Canada fifty-three per cent, and neither country can complain of this division. You see, therefore, that the anomaly of the trap situation at Sooke must be grappled with from the general public interest. If the Sooke traps are allowed to remain, an excellent excuse can be advanced by the United States fishermen for the reestablishment of American traps.

Mark that.

> The Sooke workers appear to be falling between two stools and I say, in all kindness, that there is no commercial justification for my advancing any arguments to destroy the position taken by the fisheries department.

At that moment the fisheries department had given orders that there were to be no more trap licences issued.

They are—

That is the fisheries department—

> —manifestly doing their plain duty when they protect the larger interests in the community, and it would appear that the economic necessity of forty men at Sooke cannot rate against the economic necessity of 5,000 fishermen definitely affected by the elimination of the trap system.

It would be superfluous if I said anything after that. That is the hon. member's own letter, a copy of which he was kind enough to send to the minister. He stated he could not put the economic necessity of forty men at Sooke against the economic necessity of 5,000 fishermen who would be beneficially affected by the removal of traps. That is all.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I just want to explain—

Mr. NEILL: If you can.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I still stand by that letter.

Mr. NEILL: Thank you.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): It was written at a time when I believed that the abolition of the traps at Sooke was a fait accompli. When it was pointed out to me that there was more to learn and more to be decided about the matter, I went into the fight with a clear determination to know what I was talking about. I think the facts which were brought out in the fisheries committee last year demonstrate that I did know what I was talking about. Let me tell this committee that a prominent member of that committee, when I pointed out the physical change which took place in the fish on their way to the spawning grounds and described the sharpening of the teeth and the extension of the lower jaw, stated quite definitely, "Who in the world ever heard of a fish having teeth." That remark was expunged from Hansard: but, believe me, I have not forgotten it. Unless hon. members apply themselves with equal determination to find out the facts of the case, they cannot be expected to know the true situation at Sooke.

Mr. MacNEIL: Mr. Chairman, I think the trend of the discussion gives considerable force to the argument raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) earlier in the day, that the proper place to thrash out this problem is in the committee on fisheries. I am at a loss to understand the attitude of the minister in denying us an opportunity to continue the investigation initiated last session. I was one of the members who wrote to the minister urging that course earlier in this session, and I resent very much the remark he made this afternoon. The minister stated that it was the privilege of hon. members of the committee who were not satisfied with his attitude to call the matter to the attention of the chairman of the committee for some definite action. I think the minister is aware, as we are, that the chairman of the committee has acted with strict impartiality and unfailing courtesy in connection with this matter, but he could not very well act in the matter unless reference had been made to the committtee by the house with the sanction of the government.

I am at a complete loss to understand why the minister has disregarded the intentions of the committee which sat last year. It is true the findings of the committee were inconclusive as to whether the traps at Sooke should be abolished, but it was clearly understood that further evidence would be procured through the department and that the members of the committee would be afforded an opportunity to settle this matter in a more satisfactory way. Hon. members have stated on their responsibility as members of this house that these traps were a menace to the fishing industry of British Columbia, and it is hardly good enough to hear the minister say, as he said this afternoon, that the additional evidence and the expression of public opinion in the petition were not sufficiently worth while to justify further investigation.

May I point out that the further evidence required is strictly of a technical nature and that it can be obtained only from the experts in the employ of the department. It was understood that they would continue the investigation and make that information available so that this matter might be settled in some judicial fashion. Evidence has been submitted that two companies are enjoying a privilege or a monopoly at the expense of the workers in the industry, workers who must face daily hazards to get the slender remuneration they receive for their labours. I consider the attitude of the minister in this regard to be rather high-handed. We have the unique spectacle in this issue where he extends special protection to privileged interests, to two companies, to exploit the resources of the Dominion of Canada with enormous profits to themselves and disregard the welfare of the workers dependent upon the industry.

In past years the Department of Fisheries has followed the excellent practice of giving the organized workers in the industry an opportunity to discuss any contemplated changes in the regulations. The workers have been permitted to advance their views as to how the proposed changes might affect their interests. But in this particular instance the minister has broken faith with the workers in order to protect these two companies which enjoy a special privilege which menaces the fishing industry of British Columbia. When I say the industry in British Columbia, I mean the very livelihood of thousands of fishermen. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that this is a clear illustration of protection for monopoly on the part of a government department with a total disregard of the interests of the workers. It is a menace to the livelihood of the workers.

Two companies established at Sooke, with quite a large capital investment, have been fishing with fixed traps, that is traps which are fixed to shore, a privilege denied the operators of all other types of gear and in violation of well established principles of conservation of the industry. A very definite effort has been made to secure the cooperation of all sections to maintain these principles of conservation as expressed in the regulations of the department, and it is extremely difficult to advocate the support of these principles when we have this glaring illustration of protection of operations which do definitely violate the principles of conservation of the fishing industry. It is a menace to the livelihood of the workers in the industry, because it affords a pretext to interests in the state of Washington to reestablish traps in United States waters where they can successfully intercept the main movement of sockeye salmon into the Fraser river.

As has been mentioned, on one occasion a widespread agitation was under way for the repeal of legislation in the state of Washington and leading to the reestablishment of traps there. If those traps are established in United States waters, this will deal a most disastrous blow to the fishermen who depend for their livelihood upon gill netting in the Fraser river. In my opinion, if this privilege is now extended to the two companies established at Sooke, there is no logical reason why other companies should not be later afforded the same privilege of establishing traps at strategic points in the coastal waters of British Columbia; and if that is done, it will completely wipe out the livelihood of many thousands of fishermen in that province.

For those three main reasons the continued operation of these traps is a distinct threat to the industry. The minister, in the attitude he has taken, I think has broken faith with the members of the committee and with the workers in the industry in order to protect those special interests. There is nothing more at stake at Sooke than the employment of forty men. Those forty men, as experienced fishermen, could easily be absorbed in other branches of the fishing industry. The capital invested at Sooke could easily be diverted to other types of operations such as purse seining in other waters. No distinct hardship would result if the minister decided to discontinue the issuance of licences for the fish traps at Sooke, and I think the minister owes this committee a more adequate explanation than he has yet given as to why he has not seen fit to refer this matter to the committee for thorough inquiry, place at the disposal of the committee the additional technical evidence which might have been procured, and enable a satisfactory settlement of this issue to be made.

It is not good enough to speak with derision of that petition. I have some knowledge of the circumstances under which signatures were obtained to it. It is true they are not all signatures of fishermen, but to a very large extent they are signatures of people in communities which depend in very large measure upon the prosperity of the fishing industry and realize the menace of the fishing traps. The minister cannot hope to dispose of the question in the way in which he has attempted to do so this afternoon. Public sentiment is aroused through these communities as to this issue, and will ultimately demand a more satisfactory settlement. I urge the minister to take steps to have this matter brought before the standing fisheries committee at some appropriate time and have it investigated thoroughly in the light of the technical evidence that his department is in a position to procure.

Mr. MacLEAN (Prince): Even though some of the members of the committee had requested that it should be convened, I think my hon. friend will appreciate the position in which I, as chairman, would be. We could have called the committee together, but when we met we would have found ourselves without any reference from the house or any special subject to consider. I just wish to point out to my hon. friend that even if we had convened, we had no reference from the house or anything of a special nature to take up.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Will the hon. member for Vancouver North permit a question? On the Swiftsure banks outside the strait of Juan de Fuca, fifty-two United States purse seiners sit and fish. Only twelve Canadian purse seiners were there at the same time. If this is such a valuable water for seiners, why were not more Canadian boats at those banks?

Mr. MacNEIL: I think the answer is fairly simple. Canadian operators have enjoyed the special privilege, with less effort and less expense, to establish six traps at Sooke, and none of the Canadian operators has had the enterprise indicated by the United States operators to construct and operate the type of craft which could successfully fish off the Swiftsure banks.

Mr. MICHAUD: Before we proceed any further on this point, I wish to repudiate the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver North, that the minister "broke faith" with the committee or did not carry out the directions of the committee. I feel that the recommendations made by the committee last year which appear on the records were carried out to the letter by the minister and by the Department of Fisheries. Second, there was no refusal on my part at any time to refer the matter to the committee. What took place is this, that I think both the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and the hon. member for Vancouver North wrote asking me if I would refer to the committee the petitions that were presented to the house. That is my recollection of it.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will the minister permit an interruption?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. MacNEIL: My suggestion was that the whole question, a continuation of the inquiry of last year, should be referred to the committee.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, and I think I replied to both gentlemen that, in my opinion, nothing new had been brought to my attention or no new evidence or facts placed before the department which would justify me in my capacity as minister to take the initiative of calling together the committee and referring matters which, in my opinion, had been thoroughly investigated last year. If either of these two hon. members or any member of the house had asked me to refer a special matter to the committee, I could not have refused him that privilege because it was not in my power to do so. There was no intention on my part or on the part of the department to prevent anybody from bringing to the attention of parliament through the committee any new matter respecting the question of fish traps in British Columbia. This is not a new matter. There have been fish traps at Sooke for thirty-four years.

Mr. MacNEIL: Too long.

Mr. MICHAUD: All governments prior to this year have received at different times petitions and requests for the removal of those traps, and the best opinions have been taken into consideration. It has not been thought it was in the best interests of the fisheries to do that, and until such a conclusion is warranted I do not think any minister will take the responsibility of changing an order of things which has been going on for thirty-four years. It might be in the interests of some branch of the fisheries on the coast of British Columbia to remove the traps; but as I said, they have never been able yet to convince me, and they have never been able to convince any of my predecessors for the last thirty-four years, that it was in the best interests of the industry to remove those traps. Any hon. member besides the hon. members for Comox-Alberni and Vancouver North could have had the matter referred to the committee when these petitions were laid on the table of the house; they could have moved, if they had desired to do so, that these petitions be referred to the committee on fisheries for investigation and further inquiry. I would have raised no objection. As I said before, I have no objection whatever, and it is not in my power to raise any. Indeed, it is not too late now. Why do not these hon. members do it? I shall not take the responsibility for calling the committee together again to go over matters which, in my opinion, were thoroughly gone into last year. If any hon. member has any new matter which he thinks ought to be considered, it is for him to ask that the committee be called together. I would be delighted to appear before the committee and listen to any arguments advanced and to carry out any recommendations made, just as we carried out the recommendations that were made last year.

Mr. NEILL: The minister has made one statement which cannot be allowed to go unchallenged. He said that these things have been going on for over thirty-four years. Is that correct?

Mr. MICHAUD: That is my information —that there have been traps there since 1904.

Mr. NEILL: Yes. Well, for some periods during that time—for many periods in fact —I made no objection to the traps being there. But surely the minister knows the reason why the agitation was started. As we are threshing this matter out, very regrettably I shall have to give the history of it. There has always been an agitation by the cannery men for traps, because they are a quick and effective way of catching fish, though disastrous to the fishermen and the fish alike. From 1907 onward this question has cropped up from time to time. There were traps at Sooke and other places; some time around 1924 or 1925 or 1926 the cannery men conceived the idea that they would like to have traps in the northern part of British Columbia, and so they got a commissioner appointed, a gentleman who had been a lawyer for one of the canning companies. He went there and made an elaborate report. He reported that the run of fish was such that it was highly in the interests of Canada to allow traps there because it was the last chance to get hold of any of the fish, for otherwise the Americans would get them in their traps on the American side in Alaska. I got hold of the evidence and, with the support of two Conservative members then in opposition, we tore the report to pieces, for the simple reason that it did not gibe with the evidence. The evidence was all the opposite way. We showed by the evidence that the fish did not run north but came south, and as a result of the representations we made the then minister announced that he would not allow the traps there. The traps remained at Sooke, however. Why? For these reasons: The run of salmon on the way to Fraser river, their homing ground, is through the strait of Juan de Fuca and past the headlands referred to in the neighbourhood of Sooke; then, for some unknown reason, instead of heading straight for the Fraser river, they go on to the United States side. But they do not spawn there. They go around Puget sound, running the gamut of the United States traps every few yards, and those that are left came back to the Fraser river. It was known that the Americans were taking an enormous number. The Americans were taking 79 per cent of the total catch of fish spawned in the Fraser river. Taking the Sooke catch, the United States catch and the Fraser river catch, the Americans were said to get 70 per cent, while we were getting 30 per cent. The reason why the preceding Minister of Fisheries never cancelled the trap licences was simply this: It was argued that as fish were being caught in such enormous numbers on the United States side, we might as well catch what we could before they went over.

But then the situation changed. The Americans had seines, but we did not allow seines in the Fraser river and the argument was that as the Americans had seines and traps we should have seines and traps. We allowed the traps but not the seines. Then, for reasons which I need not go into, because they are not material to this argument, the people of the state of Washington got up one day and by means of the initiative got a bill passed. If it secures a sufficient number of signatories, it becomes law in spite of the legislature. They got up a bill by initiative and it went through at once. They obtained the requisite number of signatures in a few days, or at any rate, in a few weeks. That bill called for the abolition of traps in United States waters, and just about the same time we allowed seines in our waters. In other words, the conditions were reversed altogether; the tables were turned. Here was our opportunity. The Americans had taken out 219 traps—that is their own record—and the query was, "Is not British Columbia going to play her part and take out the four or five she has"? Of course, the trap interests on the United States side, the capitalist interests, were keen to get their traps put back, but once the law is passed by initiative it cannot be repealed for two years. It was brought up this spring in the legislature of the state, and the strongest argument used by those who wished to restore the United States traps was that Canada had not played the game. The Americans said that they had taken out 219 traps and Canada had not taken out the seven or eight she had. The result was so enormously to our advantage that instead of getting 30 per cent, we caught on our side 86 per cent of the total catch. It was, therefore, so very much to our interest as a nation to have removed the traps that it would have paid us to pension the forty-one men in order to ensure that the United States traps would be kept out. I met a cannery man last winter in Alberni. He said to me, "I was over in Seattle the other day where I met one of the biggest trap owners in Puget sound and he said to me he was glad that we in Canada had not taken out the traps, and they did not want us to remove them, because at the next meeting of the legislature they would use that fact as an argument in support of the restoration of the United States traps." That is why I say the conditions are different. If we do not remove our five or six traps the Americans will restore their traps.

In my letter to the minister I said:

> Might I inquire what your policy in the matter is? Are you disposed to give them notice that they will not be allowed any for or beyond this year, or do you propose to refer it again to the fishery committee of the house?

I cannot see that any language could be plainer, and his answer was that he did not consider it necessary. Now I shall read the last letter, of which there are five copies in existence. The hon. member for North Vancouver has one, the Kyuoquot trollers cooperative association has one, and I have here the one sent to me. It is dated February 7, 1936, and is from the deputy minister:

> Dear Mr. Neill,—
> I wish to revert to your letter of June 25 last—

That would be June, 1935.

> —endorsing petition by the Kyuquot trollers cooperative association, urging that licences for salmon trap nets in the portion of the south-west coast of Vancouver island be discontinued.
> The question has been receiving careful consideration and, in the light of all the circumstances, it has been decided to continue such licences for 1936. Notification is being given the licensees, however, that thereafter such licences will not be granted. If trap nets are reintroduced in the state of Washington the question of reallowing them in the above area will again be reconsidered.

Trap nets have not been reintroduced in the state of Washington, and therefore it was not necessary to reconsider the question of reallowing them. The hon. member for North Vancouver, with a copy of a letter like that in his possession, is justified in saying that the fishing industry has not been treated fairly in the matter.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will the minister inform the committee of the manner in which the recommendations of the committee have been implemented? I would ask the number of licences issued and the total revenue in the way of licence fees, and also as to what provision has been made to alter the opening in the lead of the traps in order to comply with the suggestion of the committee.

Mr. MICHAUD: My information is that the same number was issued this year as last year and for the last few years, and the licence fee of $500 has been collected on each as recommended by the committee. As soon as the recommendation of the committee was made, an order in council was passed changing the regulations and the licence fee accordingly. Five licences were issued this year at $500 each. As to the recommendation that an opening in the lead be made, my information is that a larger opening than that recommended by the committee has been made.

Mr. MacNEIL: Have steps been taken to ensure that those charged with the enforcement of regulations are entirely free from influence by the company? The astounding revelation was made before the committee last year that the man charged with enforcement of the fisheries regulations in connection with the traps was in the off season in the pay of the company; a very questionable situation. I should also like to know whether the department can give assurance that the regulations as they apply to operators of other types of gear are now applied to the traps. That is, when the traps are fishing for springs, are they allowed to catch sockeye in advance of the season in which other operators are allowed to spread nets for sockeye?

Mr. MICHAUD: Regarding the statement that astounding disclosures were made before the committee last year, I think that is in line with other statements made by my hon. friend. The only astounding statement which I recollect was that apparently one poor guardian during the season when he was not employed by this department had been employed by one of the companies operating traps. This year we have taken every precaution possible to see that no one who had at any time been employed with the operators of the traps would be employed as guardian.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member for Nanaimo (Mr. Taylor) was pleased to read a long treatise from Mr. Goodrich. I am going to read a very short statement from him, made under oath on February 22, 1937. The witness C. F. Goodrich was recalled; he had been previously sworn. I will shorten it. He said he was going to read a wire received from his accountants in Victoria in regard to the set-up of his financial affairs. This is the telegram:

In accordance with instructions we have examined records of Sooke Harbour Fishing & Packing Company, Limited—

That is only one of the two concerns.

—from 1918 to 1935 and find dominion income tax paid, $63,053; provincial income tax paid, $48,439 . . . paid-up capital, $24,800; surplus, $76,517. . . .

Later on, one of the committee, the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Kinley), asked the witness, as reported at page 159 of the proceedings, whether that $25,000 represented all the money put in; "Did you put any more money in than the $25,000 of stock?" And the answer was, "No." Hon. members can get an idea of the income from the amount of income tax paid for that period. I submit it must have been substantially greater each year than the total investment of the company in the business. No wonder they are anxious to hold on.

Mr. MICHAUD: Another question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil) was whether the operators of the trap were permitted to catch one species of salmon in advance of the season. Under the rules this is not permitted. If during the cohoe season some sockeye are caught in the traps, they must be liberated.

Mr. NEILL: Liberated; is that what was done with them?

Mr. MICHAUD: I understand it was; yes.

Mr. NEILL: My information is that they were seized by the fisheries department and given to a hospital.

Mr. MICHAUD: If they are taken out of the water dead, of course we cannot liberate them; it is better to give them to hospitals than to throw them back in the water. I mean, if it is possible to liberate them and save them, they are thrown back in the water.

Mr. NEILL: The fact of the matter, then, is that a trap is allowed to catch them during the close season for those classes of fish. That is the point.

Mr. MacNEIL: The minister must be aware that he is not on safe ground in his statement. They are not aware that sockeye salmon are caught in the trap out of season until the brail is lifted, and then it is surely impossible to liberate them; they are dead. That clearly is an admission by the minister that they are violating the regulations in a way that would be severely penalized if carried on by other fishermen. That is one of the main objections to the trap.

Mr. MICHAUD: Surely the hon. member understands that all species of salmon in British Columbia waters do not run at the same time. It may be that during a run of one species, like cohoes or springs, a relatively few of other species may run at the same time. But if they are caught and it is possible to liberate them alive, they are liberated. If they are dead, they are given to hospitals or other charitable institutions.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will the minister place on record such data as have been secured in regard to the catch in the traps last season?

Mr. BROOKS: I am not going to speak about sockeye salmon. Seemingly it is very difficult to close the trap, whether you are fishing or talking sockeye salmon. But I did want to discuss briefly the report on the illegal fishing and canning of lobsters in the maritime provinces. I think that comes under this item. The minister will recall that last year there was appointed a commission to investigate illegal lobster fishing in the maritime provinces, particularly in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. For six weeks an investigation was carried on by a supreme court judge, Mr. Justice Le Blanc. He had with him as counsel Mr. Bridges from Moncton. Both of these men are estimable legal gentlemen, but I think the minister will agree that they know very little about lobster fishing. The impression in New Brunswick, and I think also in Prince Edward Island, where this investigation was conducted, is, that the facts which this commission undertook to obtain could very easily have been obtained by some member of the minister's department. The facts which were brought out were known by every man, woman and child in those sections. Everyone knew that there was illegal lobster fishing in New Brunswick on Northumberland strait and also on the shores of Prince Edward Island. This fact-finding commission, which spent six weeks or more in these two provinces, did not, as far as can be made out, do much but pile up a big bill.

Mr. SPENCE: That is the customary thing.

Mr. BROOKS: The cost of the commission, as given by the minister in answer to a question, was $9,186.68. In the destitute condition in which the fishermen of these provinces find themselves, this money could very well have been used to aid them in buying nets and equipment for their work. I wish to quote from the report. One of the first references to the commission was:

Whether or not there was this year a serious amount of illegal lobster fishing and canning in lobster fishing districts Nos. 7 and 8.

The answer is that in lobster fishing district No. 8 there was not a serious amount of illegal lobster fishing in the year 1936. The report continues:

There was not a serious amount of illegal lobster canning in that district in 1936, if reference is had only to lobsters illegally fished in that district in that year. But one cannot shut his eyes to the fact that lobsters illegally caught in lobster fishing district No. 7, in 1936, were brought and canned in one factory near the Chockpish line in lobster fishing district No. 8 in sufficient amount to fill 456 cases in the open season. In Prince Edward Island enough lobsters illegally fished on the north shore of the island, in lobster fishing district No. 7, were carried by car to a factory at Brae Harbour in lobster fishing district No. 8 to permit the canning of 125 cases also in the open season. That represents 63 tons of lobsters. To the question implied in the first matter of the inquiry relating to illegal canning, any answer in a negative way would be robbed completely of all emphasis by that quantity of poached lobsters.

The answer must be that there was a serious amount of illegal canning of lobsters in lobster fishing district No. 8 in the year 1936.

In lobster fishing district No. 7 there was a serious amount of illegal lobster fishing and canning in the year 1936. It is only fair to state here that it was confined to that section of lobster fishing district No. 7 extending from and including Escuminac to the Chockpish line in New Brunswick, and in the sub-district of West Prince in Prince Edward Island.

The second matter of reference was:

Whether any of the local employees of the Department of Fisheries concerned accepted bribes of any kind to connive at illegal practices.

I need not expatiate on that, Mr. Chairman, because the answer is no. The third matter the commission had referred to it was as follows:

Whether such employees fairly and efficiently discharged their duties, and if there was an unusual amount of illegal lobster fishing this year what were the main causes thereof.

[Mr. Brooks.]

The commissioner goes into the history of illegal lobster fishing in the districts concerned and states that this illegal fishing had been carried on for a good many years in those districts. He further states:

"But the answer must be that they did not efficiently discharge their duties."

The commissioner found a good many excuses and pointed out extenuating circumstances as to why these men might be excused for not carrying out their duties. For one thing the commissioner pointed to the great depression which has existed in the fishing industry in the maritime provinces and said that these men, many of them with large families, were quite poverty stricken, and were more or less justified in using any means possible to obtain a livelihood. He also pointed out that in 1936 lobsters sold for a fair price, which had not been the case in previous years. He also quotes this as a possible reason, though not an excuse, for more illegal lobster fishing in 1936 than in previous years. I should like to quote just one more paragraph in regard to the destitution of the fishermen, particularly those of the area investigated:

It was stated under oath, and I believe it, that from Campbellton on the west side of Prince Edward Island to Alberton on the east, sixty per cent of the fishermen were in destitute circumstances.

I might just interject here that in the face of so much poverty among the fishermen of the maritime provinces it was hard for them and the people in general to understand why the vote of $500,000 last year to aid fishermen was not used for that purpose.

The commissioner goes on to suggest that in order to assist in clearing up the situation in this area some sort of educational program should be instituted; that the people should be shown that by continuing this illegal practice of catching lobsters out of season they are, to use the term of the commissioner, killing the goose that lays the golden egg. Just to show the system that has been in vogue in regard to the appointment of officers to look after lobster protection in these provinces, I should like to quote another statement by the commissioner:

A strong factor that has contributed as much as any other to a disregard of fishery laws, consequently to something like a recognized modus vivendi, under which poaching is robbed of a considerable amount of the opprobrium attached to it, is the manner in which the fishery guardians and other officers not coming under the Civil Service Act obtain their appointments. Their tenure of office is very insecure, but not because of any failure on their part to discharge their duties.

Many of the guardians alternate from the position of fishery officers to that of poachers and vice versa.

That is, they may be fishery officers one month or at one time, and poachers at another, and the officers are very often recruited from the ranks of the poachers themselves.

It is quite a common occurrence to see that a guardian finds himself presiding over the protection of lobster fishing in a section where he has been very successful in poaching the year before. And if anything is needed to make the situation worse, it is the fact that his appointment as guardian has been obtained by him through the influence of men who are poachers in the very district assigned to him for lobster fishing protection.

In this report there is a good deal more along the same line, but it is not my intention to weary the committee with further quotations. I think the report is in the hands of all hon. members. The commissioner brings out a number of points; he does not recommend them as a fact-finding commission, but I should like to ask the minister just what action is being taken in connection with these suggestions. The commissioner brings out the fact that the fishermen are not altogether to blame; that if it were not for the canning factories in these areas lending money to the fishermen, encouraging them to sell their lobsters during the closed season and assisting them in every way possible, probably the men would not be engaged in this illegal work. I want to impress upon the committee that this is a very important matter for the fishermen in this area. As far as financial returns are concerned, I think lobsters rank very highly in the maritime provinces, and something must be done along the line of education. We know what has happened to the lobster fisheries of the New England states. We are told on good authority that these fisheries are practically depleted, and if something practical is not done to protect the lobster fisheries of the maritimes, I am afraid we may find ourselves in the same position.

Mr. KINLEY: The report from which the hon. gentleman is reading is the report of a commission which investigated conditions in Northumberland strait only?

Mr. BROOKS: And Prince Edward Island.

Mr. KINLEY: It does not refer to southwest Nova Scotia.

Mr. BROOKS: No.

Mr. KINLEY: There is no such condition on the south coast of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BROOKS: No such condition perhaps, so far as illegal lobster fishing is concerned, but I want to say to the hon. member that if he reads his papers—and that is not necessary, because he lives there—he will find that the condition on the south coast as far as poverty and depression are concerned is as bad, if not worse than the condition in New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island.

Mr. KINLEY: No, not as regards illegal fishing.

Mr. BROOKS: Not as to illegal fishing, but as to poverty among the fishermen. I would advise the hon. member to visit the fishing villages, or to read the Halifax Herald, the Halifax Chronicle or any paper published on the coast. If what I am saying is not true, I shall be very much surprised. I do not wish to divert, but I could quote, for the information of the hon. member, the report of Mr. MacDonald of St. Francis Xavier university who is an authority on the matter.

Mr. KINLEY: He is in another part of Nova Scotia.

Mr. BROOKS: He speaks for the province of Nova Scotia generally, and about the intolerable condition in the industry of the province.

But I am getting away from the point. Is the minister taking any steps to see that the officials who are supposed to look after the guarding of the industry are men who are not engaged in poaching? I would suggest the guardians should be placed under the civil service commission. It is not fair to the men themselves, to the industry or to the provinces that the men should be recruited from the ranks of the fishermen. Then, what is done in connection with controlling the sale of lobsters to the factories in the closed season? It is a well known fact that if the factories were not allowed to buy, the fishermen would not sell. I should like to know particularly whether fisheries protection is being taken out of patronage and put under the civil service commission.

Mr. MICHAUD: The hon. member has been very fair in his criticism, with the exception of his opening remarks which, under the circumstances, are excusable. He started out by saying that the expenditures incurred in connection with the lobster investigation were not justified, and that an official of the department could have verified the facts just as well as a royal commission. That is possible, but we must not lose sight of the circumstances under which the investigation was promoted and carried on.

Prior to the investigation we were told that the supply of live lobsters, on the coasts of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island more particularly, was gradually disappearing, and that the industry and those who lived by it were about to go out of existence. What we did was to call a conference of the packers and the fishermen, and ask them to discuss the whole matter in an effort to arrive at conclusions as to the causes of the situation. At that meeting some made allegations that the situation was caused through overfishing, illegal fishing and illegal packing. Immediately the fishermen said the allegations were not true, and the packers in turn told the fishermen that they were not doing any illegal packing or canning.

The result was that public opinion was not made aware of the facts, and in our opinion it was impossible to effect any reforms in the district. We believed that if we increased our strength and prosecuted the fishermen for violation of the law, on a large scale, we would be accused of persecuting a class of people who were in great need. We thought that in order effectively to carry out a program of reform we would have to have public opinion in our favour. We thought it was best to show the public what was going on, and that is why we appointed an independent investigator, a judge of the superior court of New Brunswick, to bring out the evidence. It was made known to the public that we would act on that evidence. That is what was done.

I believe that from that point of view the investigation was a success. Newspapers of all shades of opinion in the maritime provinces admitted at the time the investigation was in progress, and at the time they published the evidence in extenso, that no one had any idea of the extent to which illegal lobster fishing and illegal lobster canning were resorted to in that district. Not long after the investigation closed the season opened, and it was remarkable to note the change in the attitude of the public towards the question. We were enabled to change some of the officials who, we thought, were not rendering the service we expected of them; we were enabled to increase our protection; we were enabled to change the boundaries between districts 7 and 8, and enabled to close the canneries which were operating on no-man's-land, or on the dividing line between the two districts. As a result, we have testimonials in the department that in the first season after the investigation the change in the administration was most beneficial to the fishermen of the two districts, and there was a marked evidence of the increase of lobsters in the fishing season which followed. As it happened, there were several months between the two seasons.

We were able to close the packers, the big fellows as they were called, who were taking advantage of the dire circumstances of the fishermen, who were inviting those fishermen to violate the law and offering to buy and can their catch surreptitiously. I think we have performed in that respect a great service for the fishermen. In order to enable them to carry on while they were prevented from fishing illegally, in cooperation with the governments of the provinces in which they lived we extended help, so that they may be prevented from exercising their illegal business during the closed season. Not only were we satisfied with strengthening our force and making the changes which I have just enumerated, but we carried on an educational campaign among them. We organized them into study clubs, and sent among them some educated men who placed the facts before them and showed them where they were, as the hon. member has said, killing the goose that laid the golden egg. Further, we lent them money at very moderate cost to do their own packing legally during the season. We also gave instructions to have a better class of guardian appointed to watch the fishing grounds during the closed seasons.

We have not been able to accomplish that which many people have thought would be desirable, that is, to place these temporary employees under the civil service commission, but we have seen that a thorough investigation was made by the officials of the department before the appointments were put through. We have had reports that quite a change has taken place during the last two seasons and, what is perhaps more worth while, we believe we have behind us a strong public opinion. I can assure the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Brooks) that this investigation was beneficial. I believe the expenditures in connection therewith were warranted and the fishermen will receive greater benefits than they would have received by the distribution of money for temporary relief. An effort has been made to preserve their source of supply and to keep it intact in order that they may carry on the calling which they have carried on for generations back.

Mr. DUNNING: It is the desire of the government to get through an interim supply bill to-night if possible, and I would ask that this item stand in order that the committee of supply may give attention to the two resolutions necessary in order to enable the interim supply bill to be passed.

Item stands.

INTERIM SUPPLY BILL

Mr. DUNNING moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $39,057,624.49, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted as set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1939, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1939.

Mr. DUNNING moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $17,751,572.68, being one-sixth of the amount of each of the several items to be voted as set forth in the supplementary estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1939, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, be granted to His Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1939.

Mr. FINN: When such large amounts as these are going through, I think all hon. members should give way to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning), otherwise all the money will slip out of the pockets of the poor people of Canada.

Mr. STEWART: Mr. Chairman, I can understand quite clearly the desire of the Minister of Finance to have additional supply voted at this time. We have already voted one-sixth of the supply for the present year, and now we are being asked to vote another one-sixth of the main estimates for the same year. In addition, we are being asked to vote one-sixth of the supplementary estimates that have been brought down. In connection with these supplementary estimates the government finds itself in this rather unfortunate position. Bill No. 105, for the relief of unemployment, was not introduced until April 25. A year ago the estimates embodying items for purposes similar to those referred to in Bill No. 105 were introduced on March 12. When Bill No. 105 was before the house hon. members were insistent in their demands for information as to the amounts to be expended, the nature of the undertakings and other particulars. This information was not forthcoming. We were told that we had to wait for the supplementary estimates.

In looking over these supplementary estimates it is to be noted that the total is $106,509,436.10, a large amount. However, upon examination we find that government owned enterprises require $44,413,714, leaving about $61,000,000 for all other purposes. As a rule, the main estimates are smaller than those of last year. When one goes through these supplementary estimates one of the striking features is the large number of items that might very well have been included in the main estimates and which, in the ordinary course of events, would have been there. We find page after page of items covering public buildings which should have been brought down in the main estimates.

Mr. DUNNING: They never have been.

Mr. STEWART: I would say that larger amounts have been brought down in the main estimates than is the case this year. As the minister says, we have always had supplementary estimates for public buildings, harbour improvements and so on; but with the experience of the last few years and the necessity of initiating work for the relief of unemployment as early in the season as possible, I do suggest that the government should have been in a position to include in the main estimates a larger number of these items than they did. I am not complaining that they are there, but the fact appears to be that these items have been included to swell the amount of money made available for the alleviation of unemployment under Bill No. 105. When you deduct the amounts I have mentioned from this large total of the main estimates; when you consider the items that should have been included in the main estimates, the remainder is not so large after all. I hope it will be sufficient for the purposes, but I have my doubts.

As I have said, it is unfortunate that these estimates were not before the house when we were considering Bill No. 105. The items are scattered through this rather bulky volume of supplementary estimates, and we shall desire to discuss them in the light of the provisions of Bill No. 105. We shall want to point out where we believe they are inadequate or where we consider they are not exactly suitable to existing conditions, where they do not go far enough or where perhaps the expenditure is not, as we believe, in the public interest or best calculated to accomplish the purposes outlined in Bill No. 105. I say it is unfortunate that we have not had that opportunity earlier in the session and that this amount of money was not available earlier in the season.

For these reasons, and while reserving all rights to discuss any of these items and to object to any of them, I feel that at this stage we are bound to comply with the request of the minister for this grant of one-sixth of these supplementary estimates; but as I have said, it must be without any prejudice whatever to the conditions that we have made in connection with Bill No. 105 and without waiver of any rights that we might have exercised if these estimates had been brought down much earlier and we had had ample opportunity to discuss them in the light of the provisions of Bill No. 105.

With these reservations, I have not anything further to say on the minister's motion for one-sixth of the supply in the supplementary estimates, and what I have said with regard to those would apply with equal force to the criticisms which we may desire to make of any other items that are not in any way related to the program outlined in Bill No. 105.

Mr. DUNNING: I only desire to say that all the reservations mentioned by my hon. friend, which are the usual reservations made by the opposition with respect to interim supply, are readily conceded by the government, and I appreciate the cooperation extended in passing interim supply.

Motions agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. DUNNING moved:

Resolved that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1939, the sums of $39,057,624.49 and $17,751,572.68 respectively be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Mr. STEWART: I intended to ask the minister if these supplementary estimates cover all that are likely to be presented to the house this session for the year 1938-39, or may we expect other supplementary estimates? We were given to understand that the estimates in connection with Bill No. 105 were delayed until all the estimates might be brought down at the same time.

Further I should like to say to the minister that it might not be unreasonable, if he could do so at this stage, to outline what other legislation is likely to be brought down this session. We are now well on into the session, and the order paper has not any more legislation standing for consideration. I probably should have mentioned this on the other motion, but I should like to inquire now of the Minister of Finance if he can give an indication of what important legislation is likely to be brought down.

Mr. DUNNING: With respect to the first question, as Minister of Finance I can assure my hon. friend that these are all the estimates I expect to table this session. I know that sometimes one's hopes in that regard are disappointed, but the intention of the government is that these supplementaries represent the last of the session. That, of course, is always to be qualified by the happening of something which cannot be now foreseen.

With respect to my hon. friend's second question, regarding legislation yet to some down, I think that question had better be directed to the attention of the Prime Minister. I shall be glad to do that. Some of the legislation, of course, was indicated the other day by my colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers), with respect to housing and with respect to municipal improvements. I hope to have financial resolutions relating to matters of that kind on the order paper within the coming week, but I shall direct my hon. friend's question as to legislation generally to the Prime Minister.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported, read the second time, and concurred in. Mr. Dunning thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 122, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1939.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Departmental administration—further amount required, $7,350.

Mr. FINN: I understand from the Minister of Finance, who is leading the house to-night, that we were to go back into committee for the purpose of further considering the item that was under discussion in the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. Now I see that we are shifting to agriculture. I cannot quite understand the minister's assurance.

Mr. DUNNING: I am sorry my hon. friend got the wrong impression from what I said. I said that we would be going back into supply, but the Minister of Fisheries has just advised that he has no hope of getting the item through to-night and that progress might be made in agriculture. The Minister of Fisheries does not wish to go on immediately, and the Minister of Agriculture is ready.

Mr. FINN: That explanation is perfectly satisfactory to me, and I sincerely hope that to-morrow the Minister of Fisheries will get through the committee the item we were on, and others.

Mr. STEWART: Looking at the supplementary estimates, one finds that the total amount for agriculture, under the heading of agriculture, appears to be included in items Nos. 475 to 502, making a total of $6,742,059.71. Looking over these items in detail, one is struck by the large number of items that are simply supplementary to the regular administrative items of the department. I find: Departmental administration, further amount required, $7,350; publicity and extension division, further amount required, $5,640; then, passing over the next four items under the heading "special," we come to the heading, "marketing services," and we find a further amount required of $7,000 odd for agricultural economics. Then we find dairy products, further amount required; subsidies for cold storage, further amount required of $178,000; fruit and vegetable products, further amount required of $4,972; live stock and poultry, further amount required of $7,040. The next is production services, and we pass down through these, a considerable number of items, and then come to experimental farms and then science services. The same remark applies to all these. It seems to me that the minister in preparing these estimates should have been able to anticipate these amounts which he now asks for in the supplementary estimates. The only two headings under which apparently there are special items for carrying out the purposes of Bill No. 105 are to be found under the headings "special" and "marketing services." As to the first item, administration, further amount required, I would ask the minister to look at the main estimates and compare the total for 1937-38, which is given as $9,266,476 with a total for 1938-39 of $9,160,532. Shall we find that in the total for 1937-38 there are included all the items that were voted in the special supplementary estimates for the relief of unemployment distress and that sort of thing under the Department of Agriculture? If not, how much in addition to the amount appearing on page one of the main estimates was voted in special estimates last year for that purpose?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Generally speaking, to answer the last question first, the amounts that were in special estimates last year are under the heading "special" in these estimates on page one; that is, such amounts as were voted for paying freight on live stock and paying feed and fodder, and providing resettlement and prairie farm rehabilitation. These amounts were voted in specials a year ago.

Mr. STEWART: But are they included in the total in the main estimates?

Mr. GARDINER: No; they are not included in the total in the regular estimates. I am informed that resettlement was included last year, but the others were not.

Mr. STEWART: What was voted altogether for 1937-38, made up of the amount appearing in the summary of the main estimates for this year, of $9,266,476? What amount was administered through the Department of Agriculture in addition to that? Will the minister give that information so that we shall have the total for that year as compared with the total for this year?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount that was provided last year in special supplementaries included $2,000,000 for rehabilitation and $500,000 for feed and fodder.

Mr. STEWART: For what?

Mr. GARDINER: For feed and fodder and rehabilitation. I do not recall what the amount was for paying freight on live stock back to areas, but it would be less than the $100,000 here. I understand that it was all in the feed and fodder appropriation last year, which would make the amount $100,000 less than the two amounts this year.

In order to answer the other question raised with regard to the comparatively small amounts through quite a number of branches, that is explained by the fact that at the time the regular estimates were being made up the reclassification of the service as a result of the reorganization was being carried on by the civil service commission, and it was impossible for me at that time to get the reclassifications complete. For example, in the first item, No. 475, $7,350, I find there are twenty members of the service involved in that reclassification. Increases are provided for with regard to eight of them as statutory increases, and eight are salary adjustments of small amounts; $180, $120, $120, $240 a year, and so on. Four of them are for salaries not provided in the main estimates. The others are these small amounts of increases I have indicated. That will be true through practically all the items; it was a reclassification carried out by the civil service commission as a result of the reorganization, which brought changes in salaries here and there, and adding an occasional salary where an additional official was required.

Mr. STEWART: When was that reorganization completed, and what will be the total amount for departmental administration for the current year as compared with the total for last year?

Mr. GARDINER: The amount for administration in the regular estimates for 1938-39 was $112,655. That is an increase of $15,234.75 over the previous year. This amount of $7,350 will be added to that, making $22,584.75.

Mr. STEWART: Is that the increase in the cost of administering this department over last year, or the year before? As I understood the minister, there was an increase last year over the year before?

Mr. GARDINER: A small one.

Mr. STEWART: Yes. Again this year there is another increase, $22,584. The reorganization apparently has not brought about economies.

Mr. GARDINER: The whole expenditure in the department, as I remember the figure for three years ago, was $7,000,000 odd, and this year it is over $9,000,000, or an increase of perhaps 30 per cent. But it is not yet within $2,000,000 of where it was at its peak. The expenditure was cut greatly around 1932, and has been gradually increased since.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister's explanation just now of the increase as shown on the details on page 24 of the supplementaries I understand was with regard to the first line, "salaries, reclassification and increases," but is the increase in temporary assistance also dependent upon the reorganization, which was not then complete, or is this further temporary assistance required?

Mr. GARDINER: It is both. In some places it is a case of additional temporary assistance, and in other places it is a matter of an increase in the amounts given to those already temporarily employed. In this particular item there is only one increase in temporaries; one who is on the staff temporarily has had an increase of $240. There are four not provided for previously in the other estimates. I understand they were just omitted from the previous estimates; they had been on the list.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. PERLEY: What is the nature of the services they rendered before?

Mr. GARDINER: The first is a stenographer, grade II; the second is departmental librarian, grade I; the third a clerk, grade I; and the fourth a stenographer, grade III.

Mr. BARBER: Are the chief, dairy products, marketing and merchandising service, and the chief, consumer service, new appointments?

Mr. GARDINER: They are not in item No. 275.

Mr. THOMPSON: Why were the increases for departmental administration in the general estimates over last year, $15,234.75, and this amount of $7,350, not included in the former estimates? Or is this new work?

Mr. GARDINER: The explanation is that which I gave a moment ago, that it was impossible to include these at the time the general estimates were made up because the information was not then available. The civil service commission was going over the reclassifications resulting from the reorganization of the department.

Mr. STEWART: Could the minister tell the committee of any additional activities or widening of the scope of the work of the department that has been undertaken as a result of the reorganization?

Mr. GARDINER: The largest increase in activity, as I explained on the main estimates, has to do with the marketing activities. There are, of course, increases in general activities all along the line. There is an increased number of illustration stations and experimental stations, and an increase in the activities in connection with the promotion of live stock.

Mr. STEWART: This increase is in connection with administration, which I take to be largely at the head office here. One would have thought that increased activities through the country might have been carried on very largely under the same organization.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course there is a limit to the amount of work which an administrative staff can do. When you add services you naturally have to add more or less to the administrative staff. If there is more investigation going on, it makes more work for stenographers and clerks.

Mr. STEWART: Under this item we might discuss almost any activity of the department. As I have intimated, there are perhaps some hon. members who may wish to ask questions, who are not prepared to go on to-night. If the minister would agree that under some of the items which he has kindly consented to allow to stand we might discuss any matter which would properly come under this item of departmental administration, I understand some sort of undertaking was given on one of the main estimates that an item might be left open for that purpose.

Mr. GARDINER: There was an undertaking given on the main estimates that opportunity would be given to discuss all matters having to do with relief and those things particularly relating to the drought area in the west. That will all come under the special estimates. I had not intended to-night to proceed with the special estimates. If it would meet with the approval of the committee, though I do not think we shall reach it to-night, when we reach item No. 502, which is for $76,700 and which concerns buildings all the way across Canada in the different branches of the department, at that time there might be a discussion of anything at all in the department. Perhaps that would be satisfactory.

Item agreed to.

Publicity and extension division—further amount required, $5,640.

Mr. PERLEY: I see two appointments shown at page 24 of the estimates. Are these new appointments?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; these are both new positions.

Mr. PERLEY: Where do they carry on their publicity work?

Mr. GARDINER: They are what are called publicity editors. Their duties will be carried on in the main building here. Their work is chiefly to prepare printed literature to be distributed.

Mr. STIRLING: In pamphlet form?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Not articles to the press?

Mr. GARDINER: Well, there will be articles to the press in connection with agriculture generally, but also pamphlets.

Mr. MacINNIS: How has this work been done in the past?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been a certain amount of it done, but it is a growing activity in the department and two additional men are required for it.

Mr. THOMPSON: How is the mailing list for these publications prepared?

Mr. GARDINER: Of course I do not know when the nucleus of the list was established in the department; I assume that was many years ago. The list is made up of officials of agricultural organizations, those connected with agricultural colleges, individuals who belong to agricultural associations or societies that hold exhibitions here and there across the country, and a great many people who apply from time to time to have their names placed on the mailing list in order to obtain different publications of the department. A list has been built up gradually, and from time to time it is revised in order to strike off the names of those who may have died or moved elsewhere, or to insert the names of new officials of different organizations.

Mr. STIRLING: With regard to the articles which appear in the press and which are sent out by the department—I am thinking principally of the weekly press across Canada—does the government pay for the space when it is desired to have such articles appear in the weekly press?

Mr. GARDINER: No; the space in the weekly press is not paid for when anything in the nature of news is sent out. Space is paid for only when advertising is carried on.

Mr. TUSTIN: Are there to be new publications sent out, or are we to continue with just the publications we have now?

Mr. GARDINER: Whenever any new information is available, a new pamphlet is published. It is one means of putting out information gathered from time to time through experimental and other work.

Mr. STEWART: How many of these publicity editors will the department have when these two are added? Are they appointed by the civil service commission?

Mr. GARDINER: There are three at present, and they are all appointed by the civil service commission.

Mr. STEWART: As to the paid advertisements, about which the minister spoke, would these be prepared by these publicity men or by an advertising agency?

Mr. GARDINER: In both ways. There is an advertising agency that prepares some of our advertising, and these men do some of the work as well.

Mr. LOCKHART: The pamphlets that have been prepared in the past have been very useful in a general way. How is the public reached in order to get these publications across to them? Is it done through cooperation with the provincial government men who operate in the provinces, or how are these publications put into the hands of the people back in the rural areas?

Mr. GARDINER: The question that was asked a few moments ago by the hon. member for Lanark I think pretty well explains that. There is in the department a list that has been established comprising the names of officials of agricultural organizations and others who have applied to be placed on the mailing list, members of parliament, members of legislatures and others, and that official list is used as a means of distributing the literature of the department.

Mr. LOCKHART: Is there a system of cooperation between the provincial representatives and the federal department? I am just wondering how that has worked out, because I have been asked that question in my own district.

Mr. GARDINER: There is some cooperation. Wherever provinces indicate a desire to have certain publications distributed, that is done.

Mr. LOCKHART: Is that in effect in Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; in every province.

Mr. THOMPSON: I suppose any man engaged in agriculture or any other citizen who so desires may write to the department asking that his name be placed on the mailing list; or is it confined solely to officers of agricultural organizations? Can individual farmers get on this list if they apply to the department?

Mr. GARDINER: Any individual who has an interest in agricultural matters may apply for and obtain these publications.

Mr. BARBER: I understand that a list of the publications of the department is compiled and sent out. The minister does not mean to suggest that all the publications contained in that list are sent out free to all those on this mailing list? I was under the impression that this list of publications was sent out and those on the mailing list chose what publications they desired to obtain.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a list sent out, of which the greater number are distributed free. Some of the more expensive publications are sold, and the department also follows the practice of sometimes selling them in bulk. A considerable number may be sent out for distribution to a particular organization.

Mr. BARBER: What is the revenue from that?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the exact amount, but the revenue is very small.

Mr. STEWART: The minister said the department used an advertising agency or agencies in certain cases. What agency or agencies are now used for the purpose of departmental advertising?

Mr. GARDINER: We used Cockfield-Brown of Toronto until about three or four months ago. I think we have been using the Canadian Advertising Agency of Montreal for the last three or four months.

Mr. STEWART: You are only using one?

Mr. GARDINER: Only using one at a time. We used Cockfield-Brown at one time and have been using the Canadian Advertising Agency since. By way of correction I should say that there were some small matters of advertising looked after by a firm in Winnipeg in connection with our cattle movement and things of that kind.

Item agreed to.

Production services—Health of Animals—Administration of Animal Contagious Diseases Act and Meat and Canned Foods Act—further amount required, $39,800.

Mr. EVANS: Has anything been done in regard to the sore mouth disease in lambs. I understand there has been quite a loss in the prairie flocks on account of this disease, and I should like to know if any work is being done towards getting a vaccine, or something of that kind, to control it?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is a recommended treatment for the disease. The department has been asked to bring in a serum with living virus in connection with the disease, but so far it has not agreed to do so. The department does not agree with that method of dealing with the disease. There is a recognized treatment for it.

Mr. EVANS: Is there any objection to bringing in the vaccine that is being used in the southern United States?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is objection to bringing in vaccine from the south. It is based upon the idea of treatment through the use of the living virus in the vaccine. The health of animals branch of this department have never used that method of treatment in connection with any disease having to do with animals. They object to it, and they have not brought in vaccines based upon that principle.

Item agreed to.

Compensation for animals slaughtered—further amount required, $110,000.

Mr. STIRLING: Have these animals all been slaughtered since the main estimates have been prepared?

Mr. GARDINER: Every year we have followed the practice of waiting for the supplementaries with the idea that there would be more information at that time as to the number of districts which would be included for investigation during the coming season.

Mr. STIRLING: There was a vote of $200,000 in the main estimates, which showed a reduction of $269,000.

Mr. GARDINER: Those are the districts which had to be reinvestigated or rechecked. The sum of $200,000 was provided in the main estimates to deal with districts which have been gone over at least once. The retesting work is to take place this year. The sum of $110,000 will cover the number of districts we bring in to test for the first time.

Mr. STEWART: I suppose some of those items have been standing for some considerable time, subject to negotiation, correspondence and so on?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. Speaking from memory I would say that as a matter of general practice the counties made application. They have to go through the form of getting petitions. They are at certain stages at different times, and it is only after they have gone through all stages that we include them in the estimates for expenditures during the year.

Mr. TUSTIN: What counties are to be tested this year in Ontario?

Mr. GARDINER: The new areas which have been established but not yet tested are as follows:

Quebec:
- Frontenac
- Papineau
- Joliette
- Montcalm

Ontario:
- Peterborough
- Lanark
- Island of St. Joseph
- Simcoe
- Victoria
- District of Rainy River

Manitoba:
- City of St. Boniface
- Rural municipality of North Cypress
- Part of the city of Winnipeg

Rural municipalities:
- Whitewater
- Edward
- Charleswood
- Ritchot (west of Red River)
- Oakland
- North Norfolk
- Cameron

Saskatchewan:
- Rural municipality of Macleod
- Estevan (comprising the rural municipalities of Coldfields, Estevan, Cambria, Browning, Benson and Symria.

Mr. TUSTIN: Is Lennox county included this year?

Mr. GARDINER: No; I understand Lennox county is not yet established. They have not yet gone through the full process of establishing themselves as a district.

Mr. STEWART: Has there been any change in the basis of compensation for animals slaughtered under the provisions of this act, and of compensation for pure bred and grade cattle?

Mr. GARDINER: There is provision for $150 for pure bred stock, with a two-thirds valuation, making a full compensation of $100. For grades the amount is set at $60, with a two-thirds maximum compensation of $40.

Mr. STEWART: The maximum might not be paid in all cases?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. STEWART: Who determines the value of the animal slaughtered? If the owner insists the animal is extremely valuable, and the department thinks it is not so valuable, how is a value arrived at?

Mr. GARDINER: A specially appointed veterinary surgeon really makes the valuation. If there is any dispute, a second one may be called in; but the valuation by the department is final.

Mr. THOMPSON: Is it the intention to have the counties just named thoroughly checked during the coming summer, or in what manner does the department proceed? No doubt these counties have gone through the necessary requirements in connection with restricted areas.

Mr. GARDINER: The work will probably be started in all of these counties just as soon as we can get at it, during the early part of the summer. Some of them will be completed, but possibly not all. The endeavour will be made to get over them, and to complete the first inspection during the coming summer, if possible.

Mr. TUSTIN: When is the second test made?

Mr. GARDINER: The second test is supposed to be made sixty days after the first one. A period of sixty days must elapse, and the test is not made until the expiration of that time. In some instances it might not be completed during the year, but would be carried over into the following year.

Mr. LOCKHART: My experience leads me to believe that objections have been raised in some areas. Could the minister tell me what the objections have been to the establishment of restricted areas. I have in mind one county which has raised considerable protest.

Mr. GARDINER: There are very few objections made to the establishment of these areas, but where it is made it is usually by those who are raising cattle for beef purposes. Very seldom do we have objection from those raising cattle for dairy purposes. The other evening I read into Hansard a statement showing the results in a great many districts. If the hon. member would turn up Hansard, on the date our main estimates were before the committee, he would find a statement indicating that great progress had been made in the matter of eliminating tuberculosis from all those areas.

Mr. LOCKHART: I have read the statement referred to by the minister. There are still some areas where it is proposed to put these regulations into effect, and some objection is made, more particularly to the rates of compensation. Would it be possible to increase the compensation?

Mr. GARDINER: I can quite understand that where an animal valued at from $200 to $300 is slaughtered and the owner receives no more than $150, there would be cause for complaint. However, the department has always taken the position that where an individual allows tuberculosis to develop in his herd he should assume some responsibility. The limit of compensation has been set at $150, and it has been found over many years that this is accepted fairly generally as liberal compensation.

Mr. WARD: It might be of interest to some hon. members from agricultural districts to know the experience I had in connection with tuberculosis. In 1921 I had a herd of pure bred cattle which were tested for tuberculosis, and I lost almost $6,000 worth. The last animal reacted in 1922; my herd is still under the dominion government accredited plan, and I have had no reactors since. Apparently the serums used are perfect. At that time the maximum compensation allowed was $160. I lost several animals ranging in value from $1,000 down to $400, but I was perfectly satisfied with the settlement. As the minister has said, I felt that I should accept some responsibility for the fact that I had a herd with a number of tubercular animals in it, and I have never regretted having cleaned up my herd at that time. My advice to anyone who has not had his herd tested is to do so without delay and come under the dominion government accredited plan.

Item agreed to.

Compensation to owners of animals affected with diseases coming under the operation of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, which have died or have been slaughtered under circumstances unprovided for under the above act and regulations thereunder, $1,200.91.

Mr. STEWART: This is a small item, and the only comment I have to make is in connection with the last few lines which read:

—which have died or have been slaughtered under circumstances unprovided for under the above act and regulations thereunder.

If they do not come under the act or under the regulations, what claim have these people for compensation?

Mr. GARDINER: Strictly speaking, for the owner to receive compensation under the act, an animal must be slaughtered. There have been instances where animals have died immediately after they have been tested. Such animals are not slaughtered, and this is to provide for compensation in such instances.

Mr. BARBER: Would that take care of compensation for hog cholera?

Mr. GARDINER: No; tuberculosis only.

Mr. STEWART: Is the payment on the same basis as though the animal had been slaughtered?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; on the same basis.

Mr. STIRLING: With the exception of one in New Brunswick and one in British Columbia, all the amounts are to be paid in Ontario and Quebec. Why is this?

Mr. GARDINER: It is just a matter of chance. For some considerable time the maritime provinces have been an anti-tuberculosis area. It just happens that more work has been carried on in Ontario and Quebec.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, May 24, 1938

The house met at three o'clock.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

MISCELLANEOUS ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES INVOLVING NO ALTERATION IN RATES

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 123, to amend the Excise Act.

He said: The bill simply contains a number of miscellaneous amendments to the Excise Act. They are almost entirely if not entirely administrative and involve no change in the rates of duty. It is very difficult to summarize the bill in any other way.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT

POWER OF MINISTER TO PROTECT PUBLIC AGAINST ABUSES OF EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS

Mr. PAUL MARTIN (Essex East) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 124, to amend the Copyright Act.

He said: The purpose of the amendment is to give the minister administering the Copyright Act power to protect the public against abuses of the exclusive rights conferred upon copyright owners by the act. It is merely an extension of the powers conferred now upon the minister by the compulsory licence section of the act. The section proposed to be amended is applicable only to Canadian citizens, and consequently the amendment will not in any way affect international conventions. It is intended by the amendment to incorporate in the act remedial provisions analogous to those already in the Patent Act, 1935, to give relief against abuses by patentees.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. MARTIN: With the unanimous consent of the house I should like to move that this bill be placed on the order paper for second reading at eight o'clock this evening.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. RINFRET: It is not customary to accede to such a request. Moreover I would point out to the hon. gentleman that there are already on the order paper several bills that are very likely to be taken up to-night and it will make no difference if this bill is placed on the order paper to-morrow.

FOREIGN POLICY

QUESTION OF DISCUSSION BY REPRESENTATIVE OF FOREIGN GOVERNMENT OF POLICY OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): According to the press the new Japanese minister has publicly approved of the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in a recent debate in this house. That may be personally gratifying to the Prime Minister, but I should like to ask whether, in view of differences of opinion in Canada and in view of the delicate international situation, it is proper that the representative of a foreign government should discuss the policies of Canada.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): What is the particular policy to which the hon. gentleman refers?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The newspaper of yesterday—

An hon. MEMBER: Which one?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am quoting, I believe, from the Globe and Mail. This dispatch is from Niagara Falls:

> Baron Tomii, who is accompanied by his wife and eight year old daughter, expressed appreciation of a recent utterance of Prime Minister Mackenzie King with regard to the Sino-Japanese conflict.
> "I don't remember the exact words, but they were to the effect that Canadian people should be very careful in making remarks concerning the hostilities now going on in China," said the Baron. "I do realize how difficult it would be for people living thousands of miles away to understand fully the situation that exists in the Far East."
> Discussing the mooted boycott of Japanese goods in Canada, the newly appointed minister said it would be ineffective as no boycott could be successful unless all countries embarked upon it simultaneously. He expressed complete confidence in an early Japanese victory and said he did not expect the "full-dress war" would be prolonged very long.
> "When the military situation is cleared up, which I am confident will not be very far in the future, political stabilization and economic rehabilitation will follow," he said. "Japan will cooperate with the Chinese regimes recently established in Peking and Nanking. While we sincerely desire that these hostilities will come to an end as speedily as possible, Japan is fully prepared to meet a prolonged war."

And the interview proceeds on more general subjects. My point is that Japan is now at war with a recognized member of the League of Nations, a friendly country, but the new minister comes here—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My point is, Mr. Speaker, that his first utterance is to commend one particular point of view that has been set forth in this house. I think it is rather serious, since there are many in the house who do not agree with the view to which the baron made reference.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member must not make a speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was asked to explain my reference to an interview, which I have tried to do.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I asked my hon. friend to state what statement or attitude or policy of the government it was which had been alluded to by the Japanese minister, as the one to which the hon. member took exception. As I gather from what my hon. friend has read, it was the attitude taken by myself as leader of the government with respect to the Sino-Japanese war. I have taken a certain attitude in this house on the responsible discussion of foreign relations which would include the Sino-Japanese conflict, and I have not known any hon. member of the house to take exception to it, and I think possibly the Japanese minister in the circumstances was quite justified in saying that an attitude to which no exception had been taken in this house, an attitude expressed by the Prime Minister of the country, was one he was right in seeking to follow.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If I may make just one other reference—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I think the hon. member has stated his point.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sure the Prime Minister has not answered this point. The statement to which exception was taken is that we in this country should not discuss affairs that are going on in other nations. That view was expressed in connection with the debate on radio broadcasting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say at once to my hon. friend that I have never made any statement of the kind. He says that statement was made in the debate on radio broadcasting. No such statement was made in that debate. In the first place, in the discussion that took place during an afternoon I was not in the house, an allegation was made in the first instance that what I had said had reference to debates that had taken place over the radio. I had no thought in my mind of any debate that had taken place over the radio. The question of the debate which had taken place over the radio a few nights before, in which some hon. members of the house had participated, was not in my thoughts, and I do not think it is possible to gather from my remarks that I was in any way referring to anything of that kind.

What I have said in regard to foreign policy is this, that I think it necessary at all times to be guarded in one's utterances. I have said that the government had to take full responsibility for what it said, and at a critical time like this hon. members must expect that the government will be very guarded in its language; also that in discussing the foreign affairs of other countries I believe that the greatest service that can be rendered to Canada and the other countries themselves would be that we should do nothing in our discussions, whether in this parliament or over the radio, which will cause embarrassment.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Should not that apply to a foreign minister?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It should apply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The observations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in my judgment necessitate my making at least one statement. I am wholly opposed to any minister of a foreign power coming into this country and stating that that power proposes at an early day to defeat a country which, with this country, is a member of the League of Nations, particularly in view of the fact that a committee of that league has determined that the attack upon that other country was unprovoked and unwarranted. In view of that fact I desire to make it quite clear to the Prime Minister that I do not share his views. I think any statement made by the representative of a foreign power which, unprovoked and without warrant, attacks a friendly power, a member of the League of Nations, in view of its adherence to the Kellogg-Briand pact and the declaration made at Washington, is one with which I cannot associate myself and to which I must immediately say I am opposed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my right hon. friend that the statement I was replying to was the one that had reference to my statement of policy in this house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, no.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, that was the question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As a matter of privilege, my objection was to the minister from Japan endorsing publicly a certain statement of the Prime Minister an ex parte statement—well it does not make any difference what kind of statement. The point is that I am not discussing the Prime Minister's statement; I am discussing the statement of the minister from Japan publicly endorsing one particular Canadian policy.

PENITENTIARIES COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. H. MITCHELL (Medicine Hat): Could the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) indicate to us when we may expect him to table the report of the penitentiaries commission?

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I think it may be possible to lay the report on the table this week, or the beginning of next week. It is a voluminous document, and the work of printing and translating it has taken some time.

UNEMPLOYMENT

CONCENTRATION OF SINGLE UNEMPLOYED MEN IN VANCOUVER—MR. HUMPHREY MITCHELL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) regarding a Canadian Press dispatch indicating that Mr. Humphrey Mitchell, "director of labour transference in the federal Labour department," is in Vancouver consulting with the mayor and other authorities. My question is, what are the instructions that Mr. Mitchell has in this matter, and what is the attitude of the government to-day in regard to this very perplexing question, which according to the dispatch has not made any progress towards solution?

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Mitchell, who is an officer of the Department of Labour, left for Vancouver on May 7. While in Vancouver he has been assisting in providing the Department of Labour here with information with respect to developments there. As I stated to the house yesterday, we have been proceeding upon the basis of consultation and cooperation with the provincial government in connection with this question of the single unemployed who are now in Vancouver. Mr. Mitchell has been a means through which that consultation is being effected.

As to the situation in Vancouver, I am informed that it has not changed since the statement I made yesterday.

Mr. STEVENS: Would the minster say what Mr. Mitchell's instructions are? He is described as "director of labour transference in the federal Labour department."

Mr. ROGERS: I have nothing to add to what I have already said on that point. Mr. Mitchell is there to keep in touch with the situation and to keep me advised of any developments.

SUPPLY

FOREIGN POLICY—STATEMENT OF MR. MACKENZIE KING ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members of the house are aware, I had intended to make a statement on external affairs at about the time of the Easter recess. One circumstance or another has rendered it inconvenient or inadvisable to make that statement until to-day.

In view of the very serious condition of affairs in Europe and the grave unrest that exists in many parts of the world, I am not going to attempt this afternoon to rely upon my memory for what I have to say. Rather I shall follow somewhat closely what I intended to say in a statement which I had prepared several weeks ago. It may be that the statement will be the more significant in the light of events of the last few weeks. I shall endeavour in what I say to be as concise and at the same time as comprehensive as possible. By that I mean I shall endeavour not to omit any of the subjects which I believe hon. members will wish to consider in discussing foreign policy or, better, external affairs. I use the words "external affairs," because our relations with different parts of the British Empire are affairs which lie beyond the dominion; they could hardly be called foreign affairs, but they are external affairs, while our relations with other countries come under the heading of foreign affairs. I shall endeavour, as I say, to anticipate what may be in the minds of hon. members in the way of questions as to the attitude and policy of the government with respect to situations that have arisen in which Canada may be expected to have some interest or to take some part.

It may be desirable at the outset to make some observations of a general character in view of the concern which events abroad have caused in all our minds. We look out upon a disturbed and seemingly chaotic world. Bitter and destructive wars are being waged in two continents. Force is openly glorified. Solemn pledges are disregarded. Armaments are mounting to fantastic heights. A war of propaganda is filling the air. We ask ourselves, how, within twenty years after a war to end war, is the war spirit so strong in many quarters? Why, after a war to make the world safe for democracy, has dictatorship attained such acceptance and momentum?

It is not possible to give a short answer to such questions. It is clear that no one factor and no single country can be held responsible. The fact is the great war never completely ended; the world is still suffering from its consequences. The effects of four years of world struggle and destruction and convulsion did not end in 1918. The results of a great war are usually entirely different from the intentions and the objectives of any of the peoples who embark upon it.

For a time after the war it appeared that a stable world might shortly be attained. A genuine passion for peace spread through all the countries engaged in the war, the losers as well as the nominal victors. In great part this new will to peace found embodiment in the League of Nations, but it found expression in many other movements as well. No one who visited Europe in the middle twenties could doubt the strength or the genuineness of that desire. But meanwhile other forces had been at work which in time overcame this will to peace in many quarters. Over a great part of Europe, except the democratic states fronting on the Atlantic, political and social revolutions were in progress. Countries which had not been fortunate enough to work out political freedom and economic progress by gradual effort found themselves compelled to face these belated tasks through revolution. The war had broken down the accepted social structure, the habitual conventions and restraints. The new controls were established by violence, by dictatorship of a class, dictatorship of an individual. New men, with new ambitions and new methods, were thrown up in the conflict; masters of violence and propaganda were given free hand. Inevitably the revolutions and class conflicts which have dominated the internal affairs of three countries out of four in central, eastern and southern Europe found reflection in their foreign relations as well. The new religions of race or class or social doctrine were as explosive, as expansive, as intolerant as Islam was a thousand years ago. The world was called upon to subscribe to their new creeds of communism or fascism or other isms.

The peace settlement had left problems and grievances which these explosive forces turned to account. It solved some territorial grievances, some nationalist aspirations, but it created new problems. Some countries or minorities when given freedom denied that freedom to others. Some countries which had lost territory or prestige were stirred up to plan for vindication and revenge. Some of the victors could not forget their fear or their pride. The fact that the earthquake of the war had disturbed the existing balance of world power, had given America and Asia new power relatively to western Europe, further complicated the organization of peace.

I do not believe these forces would have reached the explosion point if economic depression had not swept the world in 1929 and the years that followed. Depression sharpened every problem, shook the individual's security, increased the tension of international intercourse, provided the unemployed and discontented recruits for the new gospels. That depression, at least in its magnitude, was also a delayed consequence of the war, the war that left a crushing burden of debts and reparations, that broke down international credit and currency arrangements, that created new customs boundaries and new vested economic interests.

It may be that if the world had the last ten years to live over again the present breakdown might have been averted. A realistic settlement of war debts and reparations might have been effected. Trade barriers might have been reduced. Some would say the league should have attempted more strenuously to put down force by force, notably in Manchuria in 1931, while others would say the trouble lay in the very attempt to use collective force to maintain the Versailles settlement. Perhaps if any single cause and time might be isolated, it would most reasonably be held to be the failure, during the disarmament discussions in the early thirties, to recognize the futility of maintaining against Germany the one-sided policy of disarmament prescribed by the treaty of Versailles, the failure to make moderate concessions to a democratic regime in Germany, which later were grasped and far exceeded by a dictatorial regime.

It is a dark outlook, but not one that calls for despair. Some measure of internal stability survives even in states that have suffered many shocks. It may be years, however, before freedom and tolerance revive.

The equilibrium of military force, which might have been secured at a moderate height five years ago, will be secured at a much higher level. Where resort to arms appears to be inevitable, every effort should and, I believe, will be made to circumscribe the area of conflict. The reversion to pre-war or pre-modern age standards of internal and external conduct has not materially affected the western or north Atlantic world. No country in which democracy was firmly established has given up its ideal and its practice of liberty at home, its ideal and its practice of peace abroad, even if that peace has had to be assured by new outlays for defence.

The question is asked, What is Canada's foreign or external policy in such a world? In some quarters it is contended that Canada has no foreign policy, a contention which on analysis usually turns out to mean that the Canadian government does not make weekly announcements about other countries' foreign policies. Too often it is assumed that foreign policy is something that must be made in Geneva, or in London, or in Moscow, according to the centre of the speaker's interests, and that Canada should line up in support of or opposition to other countries' foreign policies.

May I refer to some observations on this subject which I made at a conference in England some years ago. I intend to embody in what I have to say quotations from speeches made at imperial conferences in Great Britain and at Geneva, and some references to statements of policy made in this house at different times in the past. I do that lest it be assumed that what I am setting forth at this time is set forth in the light of conditions as we see them and know them to be to-day. I prefer rather that what has been set forth in the past as a statement of our position should be made clear at this time, particularly as I have had reason to say with pride and satisfaction that our foreign policy has remained to the present what it has been in the past.

This statement was made at the imperial conference of 1923:

> Foreign policy I conceive as simply the sum of those dealings or relationships or policies which the government of one country carries on with other countries. It is in large part an extension of domestic policy. It depends upon the balance of social and political forces, upon the industrial organization, upon the whole background of the people's life. . . . Foreign affairs nowadays have to do largely with economic questions, trade or tariff, oil or railway concessions, international debts, migration, fishery or power or navigation rights in boundary waters. They are largely neighbours' disputes, arising naturally most frequently with the countries with which there is most intercourse. The question whether a certain matter in dispute will lead to friction, or even to war, is frequently not so much a question of the character of the specific issue, as of the spirit and traditions and supposed general interests of the countries concerned.

No two countries have the same neighbours, the same relationships; no two countries can have the same questions to deal with, the same policies for their solution. Argentina and Finland, China and Switzerland, have widely different preoccupations. There are of course world movements, trade, cultural, military, which affect every country, affect all countries increasingly, but they affect no two countries alike or in the same degree. And so even in times of world disturbance, the policies of no two countries can be alike, provided they are rooted in their own interests or the ideals in which their interests are sublimated, and are not merely echoes of the policies of other countries.

So far as Canada is concerned, the question of foreign or external policy is at once extremely simple and extremely complex. Our direct and individual relations with other countries are important; they involve difficulties and differences of opinion; but the issues are issues within our knowledge and competence, issues for which we can find our own solution. Our indirect relations, as a member of the League of Nations, as a member of the British Commonwealth of Nations, present issues of a more varied and complicated character.

Our direct relations with other countries are increasingly important. In large measure they are relations with one or other members of the British Commonwealth of Nations. Questions which arise with these communities are frequently difficult, frequently involve, particularly in trade matters, conflicts of opinion between different sections or interests in our own country; but the frank and friendly attitude which exists, the understanding based on similar political and social and ethical standards and ways of life, ensure a settlement.

In large measure also our external relations consist of our relations with our great neighbour. These relations are so intimate and continuous that some people in Canada seem to imagine they are not foreign relations at all, that they do not constitute foreign policy at all; they unconsciously assume that foreign policy should mean to us the relations and issues involved in some other country's foreign policy, or that our foreign policy should mean only relations with distant countries with which we have little contact and connection.

These relations with the United States, which constitute and always will constitute by far the most important part of our foreign policy in the strict sense, have not always been easy to carry on. Real differences of interest arise from time to time; these differences are expressed with an openness and frankness that leave nothing concealed; constitutional divisions of authority complicate agreement. Within our memory a good deal of friction has existed, exclusive trade policies and pin-pricking attitudes have roused resentment. But that attitude has largely disappeared. On both sides of the border there is a realization of common ideals and common interests, a genuine friendliness and increasing understanding, which facilitate agreement on most issues that arise and make it no serious calamity if for the moment agreement is not reached on others.

Incidentally, I may say from my experience, and I am sure the right hon. the leader of the opposition would say the same from his experience, the existence of a Canadian legation at Washington and a United States legation at Ottawa have greatly aided in the growth of this understanding and the prompt and effective consideration of questions that arose. It is one of our national assets—and we need all our assets to offset some of our liabilities—that we have a good neighbour—a neighbour that any free country in the continent of Europe or elsewhere would thank its stars to have.

I need not refer to our increasingly close relations with other lands in Europe, particularly France, and in Latin America and Asia. They are largely, but not wholly, relations of trade. Here I might point out that the increasing intervention of the state in business in many countries abroad, the growth of exchange controls, of quota regulations, of state monopolies, make it increasingly difficult for the business man to do business in the old way, require the intervention of his government with the government of the other country to ensure a reasonably fair and definite opportunity to carry on business.

The Secretary of State of the United States, in the significant address which he delivered a few weeks ago on the foreign policy of the United States, declared:

> The primary objectives of our foreign policy are the maintenance of the peace of our country, and the promotion of the economic, the social and the moral welfare of our people.

Within our more limited range of activity, we could, I think, say much the same thing. Our foreign and external policy is a policy of peace and friendliness, a policy of trying to look after our own interests and to understand the position of other governments with which we have dealings. It is a policy which takes account of our political connections and traditions, our geographical position, the limited numbers and the racial composition of our people, our stage in economic development, our own internal preoccupations and necessities—in short, a policy based on the Canadian situation. It is not and cannot be under these conditions a spectacular head-line policy; it is simply the sum of the countless daily dealings with other countries, the general resultant of an effort to act decently on every issue or incident that arises, and a hope of receiving the same treatment from others.

Canada, it is hardly necessary to say, cherishes no design of aggression or expansion or revenge. We have no ancient grudges, no envy for others' possessions, no ambition for controlling others' destinies. We know and the world knows that we have neither the power nor the will to attack any other land for our own ends.

Nor are we inclined to organize or join in crusades in other continents. We are a part of the modern world. We cannot help but be affected in some measure by the policies and actions of other countries. We cannot be indifferent to the fate of democratic institutions, the suffering of unfortunate minorities elsewhere. But we must keep a sense of perspective. Resolutions or speeches on affairs in Austria or Spain or Santo Domingo may afford an emotional outlet, but they do not give our country any power to shape the destiny of other peoples. We have a tremendous task at home. Our eleven million people are trying to develop half a continent, to find a decent livelihood, to build up a distinctive national life. We have neither the power nor the knowledge to settle the destinies of countries thousands of miles away. We are no more likely of our own motion to intervene in Europe than Sweden or Bulgaria or Switzerland is to intervene in America. It is sometimes forgotten that in Canada itself we have an area as large as Europe, with problems of communication, of development, of adjustment of sectional and cultural groups quite as difficult to deal with as many of the problems of adjustment which the different parts of Europe are facing, and which constitute a great part of European "foreign affairs," that we are not asking and will not receive any help from outside in meeting these difficulties, and that we are unlikely to have any surplus of statesmanship or good fortune to bestow elsewhere.

If we are unlikely of our own motion to take part in wars of conquest or wars of crusade, it is equally unlikely that at the moment, with the world as it is to-day, any other country will single out Canada for attack. The talk which one sometimes hears of aggressor countries planning to invade Canada and seize these tempting resources of ours is, to say the least, premature. It ignores our neighbours and our lack of neighbours; it ignores the strategic and transportation difficulties of transoceanic invasion; it ignores the vital fact that every aggressor has not only potential objects of its ambition many thousands of miles nearer which would be the object of any attack, but potential and actual rivals near at hand whom it could not disregard by launching fantastic expeditions across half the world. The truth of this is recognized in every country. At present danger of attack upon Canada is minor in degree and secondhand in origin. It is against chance shots that we need immediately to defend ourselves. What may develop no one can say.

Thus while it is well we should see our country and its security as viewed from other lands we should also have a clear vision of how dangers that threaten in other parts of the world may expand under circumstances which lie beyond any control of our own, and be prepared to meet any situation which may arise in a world of the character that our world is to-day.

If we are not likely to be directly involved in a conflict, are we likely to be drawn into European conflicts indirectly, for example, through our connection with the league? That is an important question which I think many Canadians are asking at the moment. I have pointed out that so far as we ourselves are concerned, being a country by ourselves, if we were confined to looking after ourselves we have little to fear. But we have other associations and out of those associations arise obligations. The question naturally arises as to what, in determining our attitude, the significance of those associations may be.

We are a member of the League of Nations which was founded for the purpose of advancing international cooperation and world peace. From the beginning, wide differences of opinion have existed as to the means by which those ends were to be sought and achieved. Successive Canadian governments have supported one of those views. In this house in June, 1936, and at the assembly of the league in September of that year, I restated that view. Developments since that time have only served to confirm the soundness of the position then taken.

Briefly, the Canadian government believes that the only feasible and constructive basis of league activity under present conditions is to develop all its possibilities of conciliation, all its possibilities of cooperation in agreed tasks, all its possibilities of shaping and focusing world opinion. As indicated in a statement made on behalf of the present government in October, 1935, we are convinced of the value and necessity of the league "as an indispensable agency for organizing and strengthening the forces of good will in the world, and for effecting the essential adjustment of conflicting national aims." As Lord Curzon declared at the first session of the council of the league, which has just held its hundredth session:

> The League of Nations is the expression of a universal desire for a saner method of regulating the affairs of mankind.

That desire, that need, continues. In some way we must adjust our international relations to the economic forces, the scientific inventions which have made all nations neighbours, adjust our theories and practices of national sovereignty to the requirements of world cooperation. It is not a task which can be performed in a day. It is not an end which can be attained by shutting our eyes to facts, by assuming that nations are ready to-day to resign their sovereign right of decision to a world superstate. We must build on what exists, must extend the habit of cooperation in steadily wider fields, must seek to remove the causes of friction and fear.

Equally definite is our belief that at the present juncture of world affairs it is not possible to make the league an international war office, an instrument of force, military or economic. As I said at Geneva in 1936:

> There is a general unwillingness of peoples to incur obligations which they realize they may not be able in time of crisis to fulfil, obligations to use force and to use it at any place, any time, in circumstances unforeseen, and in disputes over whose origin or whose development they have had little or no control. This difficulty of automatic intervention increases rather than decreases when conflicts tend to become struggles between classes, between economic systems, between social philosophies, and, in some instances, between religious faiths, as well as between states.

In recent years the peoples have become more aware of the difficulty of localizing and restricting a war once it has begun. They have come to realize that the consequences of wars are different from either their real or their alleged objects, that war is war regardless of the labels and the slogans devised at the outset. They have become more aware of the horrors and suffering involved for any people at war from indiscriminate air and gas attack. They have become aware of the strain on national unity and social order a long struggle may involve. They have become aware of the uncertainty, the very grave uncertainty, whether in any country engaged in a long war individual liberties can be maintained. They realize more clearly the difficulty of putting on economic sanctions unless the countries doing so possess overwhelming force and are firmly bound to apply military sanctions if the occasion arises, and prepared to exchange firm and explicit territorial and military guarantees among each other in advance.

In Mr. Eden's words in the British House of Commons last December:

> There are two possible forms of sanctions, the ineffective, which are not worth putting on, and the effective, which mean the risk, if not the certainty, of war.

After stating:

> I say deliberately that nobody could contemplate any action of that kind in the far east unless they are convinced that they have overwhelming force to back their policy.

Mr. Eden continues:

> Do right hon. gentlemen opposite really think that the League of Nations to-day, with only two great naval powers in it, ourselves and France, have got that overwhelming force?

In other words, Mr. Eden recognized that a league which fell far short of the universality contemplated by its founders, could not hope to carry out the role of universal policeman.

In the statement at Geneva from which I have quoted, I made it as clear as possible that Canada could not accept the theory of automatic commitment to the application of force, economic or military.

The covenant as originally drafted provided alternatively for peace by conciliation and peace by collective coercion.

In its original conception the covenant was predicated upon the practically universal acceptance of its provisions. Without this assumption, the latter alternative of seeking peace by collective coercion, embodied in articles 10, 16 and 17, would not have found place. It was recognized that formal amendment of the covenant by the removal of those articles was not possible in view of the difficulty in securing action by the requisite two-thirds of the members even on amendments on which there is general agreement in principle. Nor was it necessary:

> The powers and duties of the league—

I quote now from what I said at Geneva.

> —develop by usage and experience as well as by explicit amendment. What its members will and will not do can be read more clearly from what they have done and not done than from the text of the covenant. What is now called for is to register in the light of actual facts the position which has developed during sixteen years of league history by the interpretations given and the action taken or not taken as occasion for decision arose.
> It is a fact, as has been indicated by representatives of the Scandinavian countries and other members of the league, that many provisions of the covenant have not been observed, or have been applied unequally or ineffectively. The pledge of reduction of armaments in article 8 has not been honoured. The provisions for the revision of treaties "which have become inapplicable," contained in article 19, and which were in form and fact an essential complement to the provisions of article 10 for the maintenance of the territorial status quo, have not yet been applied. The sanctions provisions of article 16 were tacitly recognized at an early stage as unworkable in their entirety, and were modified by the assembly resolutions of 1921. Modified, or unmodified, sanctions against an aggressor have never been tried when the conflict took place in Asia or America. Applied once in an Afro-European conflict, they failed and were abandoned because of general unwillingness under the conditions of the day to press force to the point of war.
> It has been alleged by some strong advocates of the collective coercion theory in Canada that Canada is responsible for wrecking this conception of the league. That view is part and parcel of the exaggerated idea of Canada's power and duty and the unwillingness to face the realities as to the attitudes of other states that underlies the advocacy of the 100 per cent sanctions doctrine. The influence of any small state at Geneva is definitely limited, except occasionally when it acts in the direction of one or another of the great powers' wishes. Every member of the league, whether from Europe, or from South America, or from Asia, has its own approach to the problems of the league, its own views of its interest or the league's interest. The Canadian government did not cause those countries to take the action or lack of action they have taken. It did in some measure realize what that course of action was likely to be. It was apparent years ago that in the opinion of many of the countries most influential in the league, the covenant was intended to be a one-way street, operating toward Europe, not from Europe. Chaco and Manchuria only confirmed that analysis. Ten years ago, the Canadian government, in a communication to the government of the United States on the relation between the covenant and the Kellogg pact, declared:
> It is plain that the full realization of the ideal of joint economic or military pressure upon an outlaw power, upon which some of the founders of the league set great store, will require either an approach to the universality of the league contemplated when the covenant was being drawn, or an adjustment of the old rules of neutrality to meet the new conditions of cooperative defence.

Not all the forecasts we and others made in 1928 have required as little alteration as that one.

As relatively little attention has been given the matter in Canada—itself a significant fact—it may be worth while to refer to the latest occasion on which the varying views of members of the league on this question of sanctions were set forth.

The whole question was reviewed in the January meeting of the council, this year, and in the proceedings of the committee of twenty-eight in January and February. This committee, it will be recalled, was appointed by the 1936 assembly to explore the whole question of the application or reform of the covenant. Every phase of that question—the problem of universality, cooperation with non-member states, regional or continental organization of the league, methods of amending or interpreting the covenant, article 10 (territorial integrity), 11, 12, 13, 14 (intervention in disputes), 16 and 17 (sanctions), and separation of the covenant from the peace treaties, were studied by special rapporteurs.

The first question, the possibility of securing the participation of all states in the league, was surveyed in a report by Lord Cranborne, who envisaged three types of league, (1) a coercive league, (2) a non-coercive league, and (3) an intermediate league, in which any members would retain the right to apply sanctions in cases where they considered it advisable. This report on universality was the only one which was formally before the committee on January 31 and February 1, but the discussion covered the whole range of the covenant and particularly the question of article 16; it was impossible to consider whether it was desirable to bring all states into the league without considering what changes would be necessary to accomplish that end, and whether such changes were desirable or practicable.

The discussion brought out radically different points of view, but on one point there was little dissent—namely, that article 16 had never been enforced in its entirety and only once partly attempted; that there was no proposal in any quarter to apply it in the conflicts now waging, and that member states are not now prepared to regard the provisions of article 10 and article 16 as binding. The delegates of Sweden declared:

> The league in practice has ceased to be a coercive league. . . . By the force of events, without any amendments to the covenant, the practice has been established according to which members of the league do not consider themselves bound to undertake coercive action against an aggressor state.

That position was not seriously challenged. There was, however, wide difference of opinion as to whether a coercive league was or was not desirable, and whether or not the existing practice should be translated into amendments to the text of the covenant. Mr. Paul Boncour admitted there was some ground for the fear of certain small powers that the great powers which had shown little zeal for article 16 might demand its strict observance in conflicts in which they themselves were concerned. Some small states also appeared desirious of maintaining the possibility of sanctions being used in their support, though not ready to pledge their use when others were in need.

Broadly speaking, the U.S.S.R., France, Spain, China, Iran (or Persia), Czechoslovakia, Mexico, Colombia, New Zealand, indicated they were convinced that ultimately, if not now, sanctions might be workable, and that it would be a mistake to take article 10 and article 16 out of the covenant in response to what might prove a temporary difficulty. Sweden, and in other connections the other Scandinavian states, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, emphasized the danger of the present ambiguous position. Sweden and Holland proposed that article 16 be formally recognized as being at present optional and not obligatory in character. Poland indicated definite qualifications. Chile urged the removal of all sanctions to facilitate the entry or return of all countries to the league.

The Canadian government, through its representative on the committee, indicated its belief in the necessity of attaining substantial universality for the effective working of the league. It did not consider, however, that it was now possible to obtain universality by putting through formal amendments to the covenant. Some members of the league had indicated they were not prepared to consent to the explicit changes in the sanctions article necessary if some great countries were to enter. On the other hand, some countries outside the league had indicated their unwillingness to enter or re-enter the league, whether organized on a coercion or on a conciliation basis. The Canadian government therefore believed it desirable to keep the league operating as effectively as possible within the scope which experience had shown to be practicable, and to seek at a more opportune time such formal adjustments as may be required to secure the cooperation of all states which are prepared to renounce aggression and to cooperate in the peaceful settlement of international problems. Meanwhile, it was stated, the position of the Canadian government as to sanctions and the sanctions articles remained as set forth by the Prime Minister in the assembly in September, 1936. As has been indicated, no one in the recent discussion at Geneva ventured to hold that the sanctions articles were now in force. It would have taken considerable hardihood to make such a contention in view of the absolute refusal of league members, great and small, to invoke sanctions in the present conflict between Japan and China.

In fact, the present situation as to the interpretation of the sanctions articles was well summed up by the representative of Belgium in the committee of twenty-eight:

> To-day is a grave conflict, the anxiety is to avoid procedures that might lead to the application of article 16, because account is taken of the obstacles that would be met with in its application.

At the same time, the possibility must be taken into account, that, in the phrase of another speaker, the article may be resurrected, or, as it has been put elsewhere, may be taken out of cold storage when it suits the interests of some of the members that now completely ignore its existence.

To avoid any possibility of ambiguity or misunderstanding, it is therefore desirable to repeat that the position indicated in the assembly of 1936 and in this house earlier in the same year remains the position of the Canadian government. We recognize the honesty and the idealism of those who call for a universal and automatic application of sanctions. We do not consider that it would make for honesty or decency or good will among nations to attempt an in and out interpretation of the covenant, based on the varying interests of some of the members of the league. So far as the Canadian government is concerned, the sanctions articles have ceased to have effect by general practice and consent, and cannot be revived by any state or group of states at will.

Now may I pass to the question of our relationship to the foreign policy of other members of the British commonwealth of nations, and particularly the United Kingdom. The task of the United Kingdom in the field of foreign affairs has been an extraordinarily difficult one of late years. Its own position has been modified by shifts in the balance of power throughout the world and the invention of weapons of war which have ended its own insularity, and introduced new factors into the Mediterranean area. As one of the great powers, it has had to consider not only its own protection, but the maintenance of peace throughout the world and particularly on the continent of Europe. There may be differences of opinion as to the wisdom of some of the policies adopted to secure these ends in the twenty years since the war, but I think there can be little question of the unremitting care and anxiety which those responsible for the foreign policy of Britain have devoted to their task, or of their strong and determined effort to establish peace and maintain respect for solemn pledges and the principles of law.

No course of action adopted by the United Kingdom in foreign affairs can fail to have repercussions, great or small, upon Canada and the other members of the commonwealth of nations. The problem of adjustment this fact presents is one of the most difficult and complicated that faces Canada and other parts of the commonwealth as well. A number of courses have been urged or practised. It may be helpful to review these briefly. I believe that all of them have been mentioned in this house in the course of discussions on defence matters and other questions. They have been mentioned by one or another member who has been prepared to support the point of view he urged.

One attitude that has been proposed is to say that we will accept any policy adopted by the British government of the day, and give it our support, regardless of our own views and interests, and regardless of consequences.

It is only necessary to spell out the implications of this view to make it clear that even its exponents would hesitate to adopt it in all cases. The goal of United Kingdom policy may remain the same, but the paths by which that goal is sought vary widely. The view which I have mentioned would involve being prepared to follow every variation in the trend of British policy due to changing situations on the continent, changing party fortunes or changing ideas of national advantage. It would mean one year following a Conservative government, next year a Labour government; one year leaning toward collective security, next year perhaps toward isolation.

A second course would be to say that we will accept the policy of Great Britain whenever she acts through the league and in accordance with the covenant.

It was held in some quarters some years ago that the fact that all parts of the commonwealth were members of the league and that Great Britain would not go to war except under a league decision and in accordance with a covenant binding all parts equally and automatically, had conveniently and permanently solved the question of intra-commonwealth war relations. Experience has shown that no such automatic solution is afforded by the league, that it does not operate automatically, and that the question whether an attempt is to be made to set its sanctions or war provisions in action depends in last analysis on whether influential European members of the League wish to invoke these provisions.

A third course that might be advocated is to say we will advise Great Britain as to what course she should follow, so that we will not be involved in the consequences of a policy we thought wrong. I believe that position has been stated many times in this house.

This attitude has more to be said in its favour. Occasions arise where consultation is both necessary and possible, and where it will be open to each government and sometimes necessary for each government to indicate its attitude. The difficulty, however, is that a United Kingdom government, for example, must be responsible to its own people for its actions. The direct and main responsibility for its policy must rest with its own parliament. They are closer to the danger point, and must bear the main brunt of any misjudgment or failure. They might be prepared to take advice which fell in with their own views; but otherwise they would find it difficult to do so unless the adviser could guarantee them against the consequences. It could not be anticipated that Canada and South Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Ireland would always advise the same way. The necessity of the United Kingdom consulting certain other powers in Europe would not be affected. The danger would arise of intervening in controversies between the government and the opposition in Westminster. In many cases, there is not time or opportunity for such consultation or advice. A policy is not adopted at one stroke; it is the sum of many actions, accumulating decisions on what often appear points of detail, ordinary routine. Daily and sometimes hourly new situations must be faced, conversations held, decisions taken.

Again, it has been urged that we should say we will declare here and now our neutrality in any future conflict, decline to take part under any circumstances in any conflict in which the United Kingdom may be engaged.

I stated the government's position on this proposal last session in the following terms. I have stated it in similar terms in other sessions:

> This would amount to tying the hands of parliament regardless of the circumstances of the war or the participants, what interests of Canada may or may not be involved. Over and over again we have laid down the principle that so far as participation by Canada in war is concerned, it will be for our parliament to decide. Having taken that attitude in respect to participation, I think we might well take a similar attitude with respect to neutrality. At the present time there are no commitments, so far as Canada is concerned, to participate in any war. Equally there are no commitments . . . whereby we agree to remain neutral under all circumstances. The policy of the government with respect to participation and neutrality is that parliament will decide what is to be done.

That position has not been changed. To make such a declaration would be unjustified by the policies of British governments. It would be an unwise encouragement to potential aggressors.

Finally, we may take the position that parliament will decide upon our course when and if the emergency arises, in the light of all the circumstances at the time. In the meantime we should endeavour to keep informed upon the situation, to keep in touch with the United Kingdom and other countries striving for peace, to carry through a reasonable and effective defence program of our own, to support any constructive program of conciliation and removal of economic barriers to peace, and to strive in our own relations to build up friendships which will serve our need and the need of others.

I made a statement at Geneva in September, 1936, in the presence of British ministers and representatives of other nations, which later, on January 25, 1937, I declared was "a statement of the present administration's policy and the policy which the present administration intends to follow as long as it remains in office." It was as follows:

> The nations of the British commonwealth are held together by ties of friendship, by similar political institutions, and by common attachment to democratic ideals, rather than by commitments to join together in war. The Canadian parliament reserves to itself the right to declare, in the light of the circumstances existing at the time, to what extent, if at all, Canada will participate in conflicts in which other members of the commonwealth may be engaged.
> The Canadian House of Commons by unanimous resolution has made the adoption of undertakings to apply either military or economic sanctions subject to the approval of parliament.

What I have said and quoted—

I am still quoting what I said at Geneva two years ago.

> —does not mean that in no circumstances would the Canadian people be prepared to share in an action against an aggressor; there have been no absolute commitments either for or against participation in war or other forms of force. It does mean that any decision on the part of Canada to participate in war will have to be taken by the parliament or people of Canada in the light of all existing circumstances; circumstances of the day as they exist in Canada, as well as in the areas involved.

It will be argued, it has been argued, that it is not satisfactory to postpone decision until the eve or the fact of an outbreak of war, that under such circumstances calm decision will not be possible, that the decision should be made in advance.

I do not agree with that view. In the first place it would be impossible to frame to-day the questions which might have to be decided later. Many "inevitable" wars have never happened. The opponents of one year may be the friends of the next. It is impossible to forecast what the issues abroad, the alignments abroad, the situations at home, may be in a year or five years from now. In Mr. Hull's address on foreign policy on March 17, to which I have already referred, after indicating his country's firm adherence to the faithful observance of international agreements, the settlement of international issues by peaceful negotiation, the scrupulous observance of the rights of others, and the maintenance of international law and order, he continued:

There is one thing that we cannot do. And that is, to prepare and place before every government of the world a detailed chart of the course of policy and action which this country will or will not pursue under any particular set of circumstances. No man, no nation, can possibly foresee all the circumstances that may arise. Moreover, to attempt to make such a detailed chart of future action would merely result in impairing our effectiveness in working for the one objective toward which we constantly strive and on which, I am certain, there is not a vestige of disagreement among the people of our country—the establishment of durable peace.

In Mr. Chamberlain's speech of March 24, referring to suggestions of assurances to France regarding Czechoslovakia, or assurances of military assistance direct to Czechoslovakia, Mr. Chamberlain declared:

From a consideration of these two alternatives it clearly emerges that under either of them the decision as to whether or not this country should find itself involved in war would be automatically removed from the discretion of His Majesty's government, and the suggested guarantee would apply irrespective of circumstances by which it was brought into operation, and over which His Majesty's government might not have been able to exercise any control.

Again, it should be plain to everyone, it is explicitly recognized by some of those who urge a decision now, that to force an issue like this upon the country would bring out deep and in some cases fundamental differences of opinion, would lead to a further strain upon the unity of a country already strained by economic depression and other consequences of the last war and its aftermath. To invite this risk on a hypothetical question would be as great a disservice to Canada as any government could render.

It must be recognized that this policy is not wholly satisfactory, not free from difficulties, not a completely logical position. Like many other policies it is not an ideal solution; it is only the best of the available solutions. That, however, is not the fault of the policy. It is the inevitable outcome of the present stage in the relations between the several parts of the British commonwealth. It is inherent in the contradiction between the recognized independent responsibility of the several members of the commonwealth, "equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs," to quote the declaration of the imperial conference of 1926, and the possibility that war proclaimed by the king as regards part of his dominions may involve other parts in the conflict. In other words, we have worked out a satisfactory and enduring solution of the relations between the several members of the British commonwealth in peace time; we have not yet worked out a completely logical solution of the position in war time.

Now may I turn briefly to some more specific comments on developments abroad, and first, the Sino-Japanese conflict. The terrible war now waging on the soil of China has aroused intense interest and concern in Canada. It is a conflict of great moment for the future of the Pacific and of the relations between the countries that border on the Pacific. It is a clash between two ancient and distinctive though allied civilizations, in which all the powers of destruction and terror which western civilization has made available to the whole world are being employed. Canada has many close ties with both countries—cultural and church and trade associations. The immediate tragedies have stirred deep feeling. Similar conflicts, with similar losses of life, have been waged in Asia over many thousands of years, but to-day the telegraph and the camera and moving pictures have brought home to millions on this continent a direct and poignant knowledge of the suffering and the horrors such a conflict involves, both for the tens of thousands who die in battle and for the tens of millions who are driven from their homes to wander and to starve. A distinguished Chinese visitor to Canada recently stated that he did not wish to dwell upon charges of atrocities in the conflict. It is true that, once the die is cast and war is entered upon, the difference between a humanely conducted war and an inhumanely conducted one may not be very great, though it will still be significant. Some armies may show greater arrogance, greater callousness in battle, greater recklessness as to attack on civilians, but with airplanes and bombs and gasses available, no modern war can be anything but mass slaughter, mass destruction, mass suicide.

It is natural that many Canadians have asked what they could do, what the government and parliament could do, in the face of this calamity.

So far as the government's action is concerned, Canada has a direct interest as a member of the League of Nations and as a signatory of the nine-power treaty. The covenant of the League of Nations provides under article 10 that the members of the league agree to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the league. Article 11 provides that any war or threat of war is a matter of concern to the whole league, which shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations. Articles 12 to 15 of the covenant providing for means of peaceful settlement of disputes between members of the league, and article 16 providing for sanctions in the event of a member of the league resorting to war, do not directly apply, as Japan is not now a member of the league. Article 17, however, provides that in the event of a dispute between a member of the league and a state which is not a member, the non-member shall be invited to accept the obligations of membership. If it does not accept and resorts to war against a member of the league, the provisions of article 16 shall be applicable against it.

On September 12, 1937, the Chinese government appealed to the league under articles 10, 11 and 17. The assembly was then in session, with Senator Dandurand, Mr. Ilsley and Mr. Massey representing Canada. The council referred the question direct to a far eastern advisory committee of twenty-two members which had been set up in 1933 to deal with the previous Manchurian conflict. Canada is a member of that committee. On september 27 the advisory committee which included the United States, passed a resolution which was accepted the following day by the assembly condemning airplane bombing of open towns and cities in China by Japanese aircraft. On October 1 a sub-committee was set up, on which Canada was not represented. Four days later the sub-committee brought in two reports, the first setting forth the facts of the present situation in China, and declaring that the action by Japan was a breach of its treaty obligations and could not be justified. The second report expressed moral support for China, recommended that members of the league should consider how far they could individually extend aid to China, and further recommended that the signatories of the nine-power treaty should be asked to examine the situation. The report and resolutions were adopted by the assembly on October 6 with the approval of all members represented except Siam and Poland, which abstained.

It must frankly be recognized that the league's treatment of the situation has not proved of very material benefit to China. The question whether the sanctions provisions of article 16 should be invoked was studiously avoided. The plain facts were, first, that with more than half the great powers outside, there was not the concentration of potential force within the league that had been contemplated when the covenant was framed, and, second, that given the unrest and the threats to peace in the Mediterranean and central Europe, the European countries that were in the league were not prepared to weaken their own position at home by taking steps which might involve having to despatch a large and possibly still inadequate part of their forces to the other side of the earth.

The league assembly, as has been noted, proposed that the question be further considered by the signatories of the so-called nine-power treaty. That treaty was one of the series of inter-related treaties and agreements signed at Washington in the winter of 1921-22, with the object of bringing about stability and security in the far east. It was signed for the United Kingdom and Canada, Australia, New Zealand, The Netherlands, Portugal, and Japan and China, and was later accepted by other powers. The contracting parties undertook to respect the independence and territorial integrity of China, to seek to maintain the open door in China and refrain from seeking for special privileges, or spheres of influence. Article 7 provided that when in the opinion of any signatory a situation arose involving the application of the treaty, there should be "full and frank communication between the contracting powers concerned." In view of some misunderstanding on the subject, it is necessary to remember that this treaty, unlike the covenant, included no provision for sanctions against a signatory which broke its pledges. It bound each party to refrain from aggression and intrigue, it provided for consultation if peace was threatened, but it did not involve joint action against a violator.

The conference met in Brussels early in November, on an invitation by the Belgian government issued at the request of the British government and with the approval of the government of the United States, for the purpose "of examining, in accordance with article 7, the situation in the far east and to consider friendly peaceable methods for hastening the end of the regrettable conflict now taking place there." All the countries which signed or adhered to the treaty were represented, with the all-important exception of Japan. Earnest and repeated efforts were made to bring the warring parties into consultation. The services of the other signatories, or alternatively of a small group of states, were offered in an effort to suspend hostilities and work out a lasting settlement. Japan refused to take part, declared she was acting in self-defence and that the conflict therefore lay outside the scope of the treaty, and that a solution could be attained only by efforts between the two parties directly concerned. The conference found itself at an impasse. The members of the conference, with Italy definitely opposing and the three Scandinavian countries, while sympathetic, abstaining from voting on account of their limited direct interest, declared their right and interest to intervene in the issue, their condemnation of force and breaking of pledges, their rejection of the view that direct negotiation between the two parties could achieve a settlement, and their readiness to continue further efforts for suspension of hostilities and negotiation. They then adjourned at the call of the chairman. In the circumstances, nothing more was possible; it was probably worth while holding the conference to determine whether more was possible. Canada concurred in the action taken. It did not think less could be done; it did not urge the great powers represented to do more.

There is another phase of this question about which a good deal has been said in Canada. I have received a good many communications protesting against the shipment to Japan of munitions and of raw materials available for war purposes. Many of those communications reveal a common inspiration from sources more concerned with the welfare of certain other countries and systems than with Canada's welfare. But many are genuine, based on an honest hatred of war, disgust at atrocities, unwillingness to see profit made out of others' misery. Those views I respect. I think we all share the feelings that lie behind them. But they are also based on erroneous ideas as to the facts both of Canada's position and the position of other countries, and erroneous assumption as to what action by Canada alone would effect.

Perhaps before I give the facts with regard to shipments of munitions and the like I had better touch on the other conflict, the civil war in Spain, because what I have to say with regard to the shipment of munitions has a direct bearing on both. In Spain, the conflict is in form at least a civil war, not a war between independent states. It is not the first conflict that has marked the history of that unhappy country. The transition from mediæval feudalism to a modern social order has been a slow process, marked by more than one civil war, more than one armed revolt. The conflict which began in July, 1936, has been particularly destructive because of the nature of modern weapons of warfare, and because of the intervention of outside governments in the struggle, the Italian and German governments directly assisting the insurgents and the soviet government assisting the government. There was imminent danger of the conflict spreading into a war of isms, of class conflict and of conflict of national strategic interests. On the initiative of the governments of France and Great Britain, a non-intervention committee of twenty-seven European states was formed to endeavour to prevent or restrict outside participation in that war. The committee has not succeeded in preventing continued extensive participation by outside states, all members of the committee. Its critics in England and France contend that it was unfair to put an unrecognized insurgent force on a par with a recognized government, that the committee has merely furnished a veil, an excuse for shutting one's eyes to a flagrant invasion of Spain with plane, tank, and heavy artillery, and that a serious danger exists of a threat to British and French communications in the Mediterranean and on the Atlantic coast. Its sponsors contend that it has lessened the amount of such intervention, that it has prevented an open break which would have led inevitably to a general European war, and that whatever the outcome and whatever the assistance received, no Spanish government, when firmly in power, will tolerate outside control.

Canada of course did not take part in the establishment or the work of this European committee, nor did any other non-European country. But when the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries had prohibited the export of munitions to Spain, the possibility arose that orders for munitions might be diverted to Canada, and in order that the efforts to localize the conflict in Spain might not be frustrated in this manner, an order in council prohibiting such imports was passed in July last, under the authority of the amendment made last year to the Customs Act.

Mr. BENNETT: When my right hon. friend said "imports," was he not referring to exports?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exports from Canada, but imports of the country in question.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Similarly, in order to prevent Canada from being drawn into this European struggle by the recruiting of Canadians for service in Spain, an order in council was passed in July, applying the Foreign Enlistment Act to the Spanish conflict, as had previously been done in the United Kingdom and administratively in the United States, and early in August the issue of passports to Canadian nationals proposing to go to Spain for the purpose of participating in the conflict was prohibited.

As there is some misunderstanding on the subject of both these measures, it may be advisable to refer briefly to their scope and subsequent application. The purpose of both measures was to prevent Canada from being drawn into foreign conflicts by the actions either of manufacturers of munitions or of organizers of recruiting.

The provision for the control of exports was based upon the reports of a Geneva committee, and an examination of the practice of other countries. An amendment to the Customs Act, which took the place of an old section which was comprehensive but not adapted to present conditions, empowered the governor in council to set up a system of permits or licences for the export of munitions or food or raw materials; to provide publicity for exports or imports of munitions; to register persons engaged in manufacturing or exporting munitions, and to prohibit the exportation of munitions or war materials. Under this authorization a system of permits was subsequently set up to regulate the export of arms and munitions, the definition of which was based substantially on the recommendation of a League of Nations committee.

No exports of munitions to any country can be made without a permit, and statistics of such exports are made public by the enforcing agency, the Department of National Revenue, every month. The licence system, it will be noted, applies to arms and munitions only. Further, the discretionary power given the government to prohibit exports, has, as I have already indicated, been applied to exports of munitions in the case of Spain. The prohibition in this case does not apply to raw materials or any other class of goods—solely to arms and munitions as defined. The power thus given has not been applied by Canada, or any other country, as regards either munitions or any other materials, in the case of the Sino-Japanese conflict.

The Foreign Enlistment Act of last session, which took the place of an old act of the parliament of the United Kingdom extending to Canada, made it unlawful for a Canadian national to enlist anywhere for service against a friendly state, or for any person within Canada to induce any other person to enlist. This act contains many collateral provisions and empowers the governor in council to provide for its application to a civil war, and to facilitate these purposes by passport control.

An organized campaign for recruiting Canadians and foreigners living in Canada was under way, and a substantial number of persons had left Canada and proceeded to Spain. Since August no passports for Spain have been issued to Canadian nationals, though a small number of Canadians and of foreigners have made their way to that country by indirect routes.

I now come to a consideration of the shipment of munitions. First, as to Canadian exports. Arms and munitions are not made in Canada in any appreciable degree, and our export trade in this field is still more negligible. So far as exports to Japan are concerned, I am informed that the only shipment has been a single plane ordered before the war; to China, a few planes ordered since the war.

It is, however, the trade in raw materials and particularly in non-ferrous metals, against which complaint is mainly directed. Our exports of lead, zinc, aluminum and nickel to Japan are substantial, and take a leading place in the list of our exports to that country. They have increased since the war broke out, though in some cases they are again declining. The exchange restrictions introduced by the Japanese government before the war, in the endeavour to conserve its declining gold supply, have given that government a power of discrimination, and altered the proportions of the commodities imported into Japan. To China, our exports of these commodities are much smaller. It has been contended in some quarters that Canada's supplies and Canada's supplies alone are vital to the continuance of Japan's war effort, and that it is our duty as it is within our power, to take action to end this effort.

Let us first get the facts in perspective. Our total exports to Japan have increased rapidly, but they are still far below the total of 1929. The recent increase in that trade is part of the general improvement in exports as a result of the industrial revival of recent years. Our exports to all countries are much nearer the high water mark than our exports to Japan:

	Canadian exports to Japan	Canadian exports to all countries
1929..	$37,504,692	$1,182,412,313
1932..	11,995,887	493,808,841
1935..	14,915,577	729,293,800
1937..	25,851,829	1,110,192,151

In our exports, as in our production, and in fact in the revival of prosperity and stability in Canada, minerals have come to hold a relatively greater place in recent years as the result of new discoveries mainly in the pre-Cambrian shield. We are now among the world's important producers and exporters of gold, silver, platinum, copper, lead and zinc, as we long were of nickel. In many cases, as is generally known, these are joint products, lead or copper or zinc being found in the same veins with silver or gold, and recovered in the same operations.

So far as our exports of lead, zinc, aluminum, copper and nickel are concerned, there is nothing special in our shipments to Japan. Of nickel in the last two years we exported ninety-eight millions in all, of which only five millions were to Japan; of aluminum twenty-five millions, of which five million were to Japan; of lead, twenty-one millions, of which seven were to Japan; zinc, twenty-two, of which two were to Japan; of copper, over ninety-one millions, of which less than one million was to Japan. Incidentally, over 75 per cent of all these exports went to the British empire and the United States, (less than 10 per cent to Japan, Italy, and Germany, and the balance to other foreign countries). It is true we are the largest exporters of nickel to Japan as to most other countries, and important suppliers of aluminum and zinc. But it also is true that of iron and steel and scrap, and of copper, we supply only an insignificant fraction. (One single country's exports of iron and steel and scrap alone are three times in value our total exports of all goods whatever to Japan). It is also true that of the oil, coal, cotton and rubber which are equally necessary for mechanical operations, whether in war or in peace, we supply nothing whatever, nor of the wool necessary to clothe the armies in the field.

Some misconception exists regarding certain figures given out at Brussels by the Chinese delegation to the conference, showing the percentage of certain materials—oil, coal, cotton, rubber, wool, iron, aluminum, antimony, manganese, tungsten, chrome, copper, zinc, tin, etc., exported in 1936 to Japan, with the object of showing that an embargo on exports would be effective if imposed by all parts of the British commonwealth, the United States, France, Holland and a few other countries. Canada was said to have supplied 71.7 per cent of Japan's imports of aluminum, 97 per cent of the copper and 34.5 per cent of the zinc. It may be pointed out first that the figures referred to 1936, a period of peace; that only three items were listed affecting Canada, and that as regards copper, the statistics were highly erroneous, the percentage from Canada being one-half of one per cent instead of 97 per cent. These misconceptions formed the basis of much of the demand for a Canadian embargo on raw materials.

Having noted the facts in some perspective, the implications that are drawn may next be considered. In the first place, it is erroneous to assume that metals such as lead, zinc and nickel are used only for armament purposes; quite the contrary is the case; the vast bulk of these three metals is used for industrial purposes, though it is of course true that when a country is at war, the industrial uses will be rationed and restricted. In any case, an embargo would be economically futile. It must be evident to anyone familiar with foreign trade that no system of administrative control which we could devise in peace time could hope to prevent Canadian nickel, lead, zinc, copper, aluminum, scrap-iron, and the rest, sold to purchasers in third countries, from reaching Japan. Once these commodities leave Canadian territory and enter into the commerce of another country, this parliament has not and cannot have any further control over them.

It is equally evident that, except in the case of nickel, of which Canada produces about 90 per cent of the world's annual production, this country has no monopoly, nor even an approach to a monopoly of production. There are, with respect to all these commodities, including nickel, other producing countries, alternative sources of supply, to which Japan, or any nation desiring to place an order, could easily turn. In addition to other sources of production, there are—and this aspect of the question is frequently overlooked—enormous stocks of all these metals readily available, stocks far more than sufficient to fill any possible Japanese demand. It is clear, therefore, that an embargo on the export to Japan of nickel, lead, copper, zinc, aluminum, and other commodities necessary to the production of war supplies, on Canada's part alone, would not achieve the ends proposed.

As to concerted action for that purpose, there is no present prospect of such a policy being adopted. No proposal for an embargo either on munitions or on war materials was made either by the league assembly or by the Brussels conference. No country has placed an embargo on shipments to Japan or to China. In the circumstances it would appear there is nothing in Canada's position which would make isolated action on our part either necessary or effective. It has been stated that New Zealand has placed an embargo on exports to Japan. This is not correct. Last year a New Zealand labour union refused to load scrap-iron on a vessel sailing to Japan. The New Zealand government induced the union to abandon this action. Later, the government prohibited the export of scrap-iron to any country. No embargo has been imposed on the export of wool or any other commodity to any country.

I have spoken of the conflict in the orient and of the civil war in Spain. But Spain is not the only troubled area in Europe. There are few countries on the continent that are not undergoing a social and political revolution. In some, the revolutionary forces of the left or of the right have already attained power more autocratic than the regimes they have displaced; in others, the struggle still continues; and even in those countries that still seek progress by ordered freedom, the repercussions of the upheavals elsewhere spread fear and confusion. No country, however distant and however preoccupied by its own problems, can be unconcerned with the revival of violence, intolerance and disregard of the rights of weaker states. To countries in the whirlpool or on its verge the situation is particularly disturbing and of overwhelming import. It is not surprising that in democracies such as Britain and France the imminence of these threats to national and social and individual security, and the close association and sympathy of groups in each country with one or other of the forces and theories warring in central and eastern Europe, have led to a wide and violent conflict of opinion as to the policy that should be adopted to meet these new conditions. There are many shades and variations of opinion, but two main tendencies have developed.

In the opinion of one group, Armageddon has already come, the forces of light and darkness are irrevocably swinging into battle line for the final test of destiny. Europe and liberty, it is contended, can be saved only if the democracies firmly and unitedly call a halt here and now. The other widespread attitude is to recognize the situation as dangerous, but to insist that the policy of dividing Europe or the world into two antagonistic camps, organizing a holy alliance against fascism, would be still more dangerous, and is neither possible nor necessary. There is no warrant, it is urged, for fighting a preventive war or for seeking to form a hard and fast alliance against the authoritarian states. If such an alliance could be formed, it would only drive the fascist countries into firmer alliance and put any possibility of peaceful settlement out of the question. The wiser policy, it is urged, is to try to bring all Europe back to sanity, to emphasize and strengthen the points of agreement, not of difference, to seek to adjust each specific difficulty in turn. In what I have just been saying I am not stating my own views, I am stating the views which I believe are contending against each other in Europe to-day.

I am sure that every government in Great Britain since the war, and certainly not least the present government, has striven for peace. Differences of opinion may exist as to the wisdom of the policies adopted toward that end at different times. Governments may have failed to appreciate the strength and trend of changing forces, but taken broadly they have shown a realism and a patience that few if any other countries can equal.

I do not consider we are called upon to pass judgment or to take sides in United Kingdom discussions. Inevitably the rise of such contentious issues, such party cleavages, lead to efforts to secure or to claim the support of Canada or Australia or South Africa or New Zealand for one or other view. Statements appear in the British press that the dominions demand this or that, that Australia supports the government or that New Zealand supports the opposition view. So far as the Canadian government is concerned, it does not consider that it is in the interest either of Canada or of the commonwealth to tender advice as to what policy the United Kingdom should adopt week by week, or become involved in British political disputes. We have expressed no opinion on that policy, and no one in London is authorized or warranted in interpreting us as doing so.

Incidentally, may I say that the time has come to cease speaking of "the dominions" as if they were some peculiar half-fledged type of community, and all alike in their interests and views. Such a usage leads to confusion at best, and to alibis and misrepresentation at worst. South Africa is South Africa, New Zealand is New Zealand, Australia is Australia and Canada is Canada, and it will help to good understanding if that elementary fact is borne in mind.

We have made clear our own policy as regards the league. We have indicated our own attitude toward the frequent demands that we should thrust ourselves into the European picture, take sides in the struggle of ideologies, make commitments in advance. We have equally made it clear that we are opposed to making in advance proclamations of neutrality or abstention that would be used to encourage aggressive designs. We shall try to maintain old ties and old friendships and at the same time be ready to enter into friendly relations with every country that will reciprocate. We shall try to keep in mind the difficulties and dangers that other countries are facing, but we shall not assume that it is our duty or within our power to work out their problems for them, to make over their social structure or their political ideas or their racial attitudes. In seeking within our own country, which constitutes half a continent, to build up a genuine democracy, to promote sound social relationships, to develop a tolerance and readiness to work together in achieving unity and furthering and maintaining the ties with the other members of the commonwealth, and the most friendly relations with our immediate neighbour and with all other countries, we shall be doing the task that lies to our hands, our Canadian task.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to make any extended remarks. The party with which I am associated meets in convention at a not distant day, and will doubtless make a declaration regarding the foreign policy of this country. The views I express to-day are my own personal views and not necessarily the views of my party. I think every hon. member will understand quite clearly why I should make that statement.

I have listened, as every member of the house has, with very great interest to the observations of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). With respect to much of what he has said I think there can be no possible differences of opinion, but there are some matters about which our views are widely divergent.

In the first place, I wholly agree that it is not probable that this country, of its own motion and in the exercise of a choice, will be compelled to go to war. I cannot conceive it likely that the Dominion of Canada would find it necessary to resort to arms with respect to any matter that might arise in the conduct of its affairs. But I am not ignorant of the teachings of history, and it well might be that by reason of Canada's trading and other relations with the nations of the world a situation would be created which would make the alternatives a resort to arms or the loss of prestige by the commonwealth of nations.

Yesterday I saw an issue of the New York Times, I think of Saturday or Sunday. On one of its pages devoted to foreign affairs was a map of the world. Radiating from Washington there were straight lines to all the centres in which the United States was vitally concerned and interested, and there was not one of them upon the north American continent—not one. There is one in South America. And there was concern in Mexico if you regard it as part of the north American continent; their interests were with China, Japan, Spain and elsewhere—in countries, ten I think in all. And not one of those points in which the United States was vitally interested at the moment was, with the exception of Mexico, on this continent.

How did that condition arise? It arose because of conflicts of interest, because of the activities of citizens of the United States in trading and commerce, because of matters of nationality, the position of her people, in some cases missionaries—all these problems had arisen by reason of the United States being a world power and carrying on its operations in every part of the globe.

Now it well might be that the Dominion of Canada, with its business transactions extending to every part of the globe, if we carry out the idea that is suggested not only, I think, in the speech to which we have listened but by many members of this house, as to our complete isolation, our complete independence, might find that the situation which has developed in the United States has its counterpart in this country. To my mind there is no gainsaying that fact. Upon that first point to which I direct the attention of this house, I have no hesitation in saying that very many people in this country have forgotten that it is because we are part of the British Empire that we have attained the position we enjoy to-day in doing business abroad. Let there be no misunderstanding about that. Why is it that when questions arise affecting the position of our citizens, questions in connection with trade, commerce and nationality, the power which protects is not that of Canada? A frank recognition of that fact, sir, is essential to any understanding, in my private opinion, of the foreign policy of Canada,—the fact, whether we accept it or not, that to-day we are the trading nation we are and enjoy the privileges and advantages we enjoy because we are part of the British Empire. If any gentleman questions that statement, I invite him to study the historic position of this country. I will not traverse it myself to-day, but I invite him to consider it carefully, and as he does so I am sure he will be satisfied that our position to-day as individuals as well as that of our country is attributable to the fact that we occupy a place amongst the commonwealth of nations that is known as the British Empire.

But I accept and always have accepted as a foundation point of my conception of national policy that it would be an extraordinary situation which would drive this country into the position of having to resort to arms. That is the direct side of our foreign policy. The Prime Minister referred to the implications of certain activities of ours; and there is clearly an implication there. It was contended in this house by an hon. member, and it is frequently stated outside,—indeed the Prime Minister this afternoon directed attention to the fact—that the likelihood of our being engaged in war arises from our peculiar relationship to other parts of the world. He dealt with that from two angles: first, our position with respect to the League of Nations; second, our position with respect to the British Empire.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, in this house on more than one occasion that in my judgment there would have been no League of Nations had it been thought by those who were responsible for its creation that the United States of America would not become a continuing member of it. I have grave doubts whether the United Kingdom or many parts of the commonwealth of nations would have become signatories to the covenant had they not believed that the great republic to the south was to become one of the dominant figures in the league. When the president of the United States executed the covenant, when he succeeded in inducing other nations to agree to its being made a part of the treaty of peace, they had the clearest view that it would be accepted and adopted by the country which he represented. It was not accepted, and from that refusal consequences have flowed that are of the gravest moment to the world. To-day I do not personally regard it as of tremendous importance, because the League of Nations has fallen to pieces. The withdrawal of Germany and of Japan, and I think one might say the virtual withdrawal of Italy, means that the League of Nations has ceased to function for the purposes for which it was created. Therefore, our obligations to the League of Nations have become much less than they were when in the full flood of public opinion it was launched upon the world as the organization that would cure many of the evils from which we suffered.

Its history has been very interesting. I am still an incorrigible optimist with respect to some of its operations. I believe that consultation, discussion between the representatives of the nations of the world, and cooperation of a limited character have achieved very beneficial results. That these results can no longer be very important follows, I think, as a necessary corollary from the fact that the United States is not a member of the league, and that other great powers have withdrawn from it. It is very difficult to think that our relationship to the League of Nations could indirectly impose upon us military operations. But, sir, I must deal very briefly with one point raised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and that is with respect to sanctions. For it is a matter about which so much has been written and said that it might appear that I was endeavouring to escape making any observation about it at all if I did not refer to it.

Everyone knows that a statute without sanctions is valueless. I can remember reading a great address by Edward Blake dealing with the question of the value of sanctions with respect to legislation. What good is it to place upon the statute books a number of prohibitions unless you also provide that a breach of them shall involve penalties and punishment? "Thou shalt not" was thundered from Sinai, and has found a place in our statute books; but unless there is some punishment following a breach of any prohibition, whatever it may be, then the prohibition becomes of little value.

A sanction determines largely the value of a statute. If you read the criminal code you will have a clearer appreciation of what I mean. For the breaches of statutes we provide adequate penalties. The sanction for non-performance of an obligation in our criminal law is well understood, and a sanction sounding in damages in civil matters is not unknown to most of us. But I will agree with every member of this house that sanctions no longer became a reality with respect to the covenant of the League of Nations when the United States withdrew, when Germany withdrew, when Japan withdrew.

What was the whole theory of sanctions? The whole theory of sanctions as expressed in the covenant of the League of Nations was that an offender should have the world massed against him. And he could not withstand it; certainly he could not withstand it. With all the might and power of Great Britain, the United States, France and Italy—Germany was not then in, but came in later—with all the power of these nations massed against the wrong-doer, who could stand against it? It was an application of something that is the basis of all our law. We talk about our liberties. They are grounded, our freedom is grounded, in respect for law and order and the orderly administration of the law of the country; and the law of the country depends upon an enlightened public opinion providing sanctions for violation of provisions made by the people themselves. Whether they make them in parliament or whether they are the growth of common law matters not. There you have on the one hand the great body of common law, which includes part of the criminal law of England, and on the other hand you have statute law as embodied in criminal codes; and behind it we have an enlightened and powerful public opinion. That public opinion provides the sanction that enforces the penalties for breaches of the law.

When this covenant of the League of Nations was prepared, when the nations of the world met together and agreed unanimously what action should be taken against nations who violated the provisions, then the sanctions provided by the covenant of the league were all-powerful—the massed power of the world, the massed public opinion of the world. The power of a world demanding peace, a world weary of war, shocked beyond expression at the results of war, the destruction of millions of men and of billions of treasure—all this found expression in that enlightened and ennobled public opinion that was embodied in the covenant of the League of Nations. I think therefore, without going into the matter in detail, that one might say that the likelihood of Canada being involved in warlike activities by reason of our relationship with the League of Nations is very remote. In fact, it is so remote as to be almost improbable. But we come to what is after all the vital point in the foreign policy of this country. We are part of the British Empire, and that relationship involves responsibilities. I wonder whether we have clearly appreciated what the responsibilities are that we have accepted. They were not imposed upon us. They were of our own seeking. We settled them in 1926. The long process of evolution, the long years of effort, the resentment against what we regarded as subordination, the desire for equality of status, the desire for self-expression; all these, coupled with our magnificent achievements during the great war—the achievements not of Canadians alone but also of the thousands of Australians who crossed leagues of sea; of the New Zealanders; of the great Botha and Smuts, in crushing not only a rebellion at home but the German power in southwest Africa, the first victorious campaign of all the war—all these united to induce the representatives of the dominions in conference to suggest that the time had come when we should endeavour by some form of words to define our relations one to another. You will recall, sir, it was suggested that after the war there should be a great empire constitutional conference. But conditions in South Africa hastened the search for a solution. I have no doubt that the Prime Minister has been told by General Hertzog, as I have, that but for the settlement of 1926 he believed that civil war would have been inevitable in South Africa. I think that view was also held by General Smuts.

When the imperial conference was held in 1926, attended on behalf of this dominion by the right hon. the present Prime Minister and others, an effort was made to formulate an expression of the position and mutual relations of the various parts of the British Empire. If, sir, you ask me what the foreign policy of this country is, I say that is found in the declaration of 1926. I listened this afternoon to the Prime Minister reading a portion—and a portion only—of that declaration. I now propose to read it in its entirety. In the report which was made by the committee presided over by the late Earl of Balfour, the second section deals with the status of Great Britain and the dominions. It proceeds:

> The committee are of opinion that nothing would be gained by attempting to lay down a constitution for the British empire. Its widely scattered parts have very different characteristics, very different histories, and are at very different stages of evolution; while, considered as a whole, it defies classification and bears no real resemblance to any other political organization which now exists or has ever yet been tried.
> There is, however, one most important element in it which, from a strictly constitutional point of view, has now, as regards all vital matters, reached its full development—we refer to the group of self-governing communities composed of Great Britain and the dominions.

I interpose there to point out that the words are "composed of Great Britain and the dominions," placing Great Britain and the dominions upon a parity.

Their position and mutual relations may be readily defined. They are autonomous communities within the British empire, equal in status, in no way subordinate one to another in any aspect of their domestic or external affairs. . . .

It is not sufficient to stop there. That ended the declaration of position. There follows a statement of responsibility:

. . . though united by a common allegiance to the crown, and freely associated as members of the British commonwealth of nations.

What are the governing words of that section? "Freely associated"—not by force, not by coercion, but freely associated together. And free association means that in every action that is taken there is at least an understanding with the persons with whom you are associated.

Let us proceed a step further. It continues:

A foreigner endeavouring to understand the true character of the British Empire by the aid of this formula alone would be tempted to think that it was devised rather to make mutual interference impossible than to make mutual cooperation easy.

Such a criticism, however, completely ignores the historic situation. The rapid evolution of the oversea dominions during the last fifty years has involved many complicated adjustments of old political machinery to changing conditions. The tendency towards equality of status was both right and inevitable. Geographical and other conditions made this impossible of attainment by the way of federation. The only alternative was by the way of autonomy; and along this road it has been steadily sought. Every self-governing member of the empire is now the master of its destiny. In fact, if not always in form, it is subject to no compulsion whatever.

But no account, however accurate, of the negative relations in which Great Britain and the dominions stand to each other can do more than express a portion of the truth. The British Empire is not founded upon negations. It depends essentially, if not formally, on positive ideals. Free institutions are its life-blood. Free cooperation is its instrument. Peace, security, and progress are among its objects. Aspects of all these great themes have been discussed at the present conference; excellent results have been thereby obtained.

And mark these words:

And though every dominion is now, and must always remain, the sole judge of the nature and extent of its cooperation, no common cause will, in our opinion, be thereby imperilled.

Equality of status, so far as Britain and the dominions are concerned, is thus the root principle governing our inter-imperial relations. But the principles of equality and similarity, appropriate to status, do not universally extend to function. Here we require something more than immutable dogmas. For example, to deal with questions of diplomacy and questions of defence, we require also flexible machinery—machinery which can, from time to time, be adapted to the changing circumstances of the world. This subject also has occupied our attention. The rest of this report will show how we have endeavoured not only to state political theory, but to apply it to our common needs.

That declaration of 1926 was a declaration in which the present Prime Minister took his part. The right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) took his part in formulating it. In its ultimate expression and form it contemplates complete autonomy and freedom of action on the part of the dominions, subject to limitations, each of which is expressed so clearly that he who runs may read—"though united by a common allegiance to the crown," and "freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations"; (1) a common allegiance; (2) a free association. Association does not mean separation. It means unity of action and of purpose.

I recall the language used by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) in making his statement to this house on March 24 last. What did he declare to be the security for Canadians on the high sea? He reviewed our foreign trade and referred to our position as an exporting country. Then he used these very impressive words, at page 1650:

In regard to the exact position of Canada it is only fair to say that to-day the main deterrent against a major attack upon this country by a European power is the existence of the British fleet in north Atlantic waters.

He referred to that fleet again in these words:

Just as the British navy on the Atlantic is our greatest security in that quarter—

Then he went on to say that we might have some hope that our neighbouring friends would not desert us in time of peril. The British fleet! Who maintains it? Who is being taxed to death that it may live? From what quarter is it maintained? Yet, speaking for the government of this country in a moment of great peril and crisis, we are told that the British fleet is to protect us on the Atlantic. Sir, there you have the application of the declaration of 1926, "free association." Just as the minister pointed out that we would freely associate with others in maintaining our position, so he relies as of right, because of free association, upon the British fleet to protect our great trade and commerce to which he referred as being largely an export business sent from these shores. Have we not there, Mr. Speaker, the foreign policy, the external policy of Canada?

Then the Prime Minister put to this house five propositions, at least one of which I think must have been the creation of his own mind; for I have not heard anyone in this house suggest that we should supinely follow the policy of the United Kingdom in any matters of foreign concern. In fact the whole conference of 1926 was the negation of that. The Prime Minister said there was a certain class who accepted any policy of Great Britain, regardless of what it might be, and followed it blindly. Well, I have not seen any people of that sort in this country. In that regard I recall a communication sent to me by the late Sir Robert Borden containing a letter which he had received from the late Sir Austen Chamberlain. It was a very simple statement, but it embodies the very view that I have expressed so poorly. These were the words, and they were written in February, 1931:

> If I allowed myself a further observation, it would be this. As regards the liberties and status of the Dominion of Canada you have achieved all that you set out to secure. But your policy had two sides—while insisting on the one side on the rights of Canada, you consistently coupled them with the duties and responsibilities which were inseparable from the exercise of those rights.

That again is but an expression on the part of a foreign secretary, to one who had been prime minister of this country, of the thought contained in those words "freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations."

I proceed a step further. That first class of persons to which reference has been made, who in peace or war would blindly follow any policy initiated by the United Kingdom, in my judgment are not to be found in this country; at least if they are, I have not come across them. Then there was the second class of persons to whom the Prime Minister referred, who accepted Great Britain's policy when it was within the principles of the League of Nations. I agree with what has been said in that regard by the Prime Minister, and I need not do more than say that when it was suggested that because all the dominions of the British Empire and India were, with Great Britain, members of the League of Nations, any action that might be taken looking toward conflict was action that could be taken only with the approval of the league, and therefore there was no further necessity for our giving great concern to our inter-imperial relations, since they were covered and governed by the provisions of the covenant of the league.

The third class referred to was the class that would consult and advise with Great Britain through the governments of the dominions and thus hope to be able to arrive at a common policy. Well, I think that is not an unsound view to take. I cannot but think that in view of what we said in 1926 it would be the essence of sound common sense that we, by kindly suggestion and by discussion antecedent to events, should arrive at a common policy with respect to matters touching the life itself of the British Commonwealth of Nations. I think most people believe that possible and desirable.

Then as the fourth class the Prime Minister suggested those who believe in the complete neutrality of this country. That raises an issue at once, sir, of tremendous import. The late Sir Wilfrid Laurier regarded that as hardly worth even discussing; for he held the view that when any part of the British Commonwealth of Nations was at war Canada also was at war. He expressed that view in this house in terms so clear as to admit of no possible doubt. How could this country be neutral and remain in free association with the other members of the commonwealth of nations? Yet it is to this free association that the Prime Minister very properly committed this country in 1926. It is to this that the house gave approval. It is this that parliament has accepted. How, sir, could you have anything such as the neutrality of Canada and a free association with the other members of the commonwealth, which includes the United Kingdom?

Then there was the fifth class of citizen to which reference was made, and that reference was summed up by the statement of the Prime Minister that parliament would govern. He said that we would keep in touch with the other dominions, but that parliament must determine these issues. If the view taken by Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a sound one—and it was a view which was accepted by constitutionalists in every part of the world—then, sir, this parliament would in such event be dealing with a reality, not a theory. For if war were to result by reason of difficulties between any of the other self-governing dominions or Great Britain and any other part of the world, then, as Sir Wilfrid pointed out, we also would be at war, and parliament would be dealing with an actuality, not a theory.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): But he said more than that.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, much more than that; but I am talking about what he said in this connection.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): But that was not the whole sentence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier. He said, "but it does not follow that Canada will participate in any war."

Mr. BENNETT: I was just coming to that point, and I thank my right hon. friend for bringing it to the attention of the house. He made a declaration, one which I say is accepted by constitutionalists as sound, that if any part of the British Empire were at war—and within that expression we of course are included, as is the United Kingdom—then also Canada is at war. But whether or not Canada should participate in that war is a matter to be determined by the Canadian people and the Canadian parliament.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is right.

Mr. BENNETT:: There never has been a doubt about that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was my fifth point.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sorry it was not put quite in that way.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That was the intention of it.

Mr. BENNETT: I think what my right hon. friend said was hardly consistent with just that view, but I will accept at once his statement that that was what he intended to say.

Now, sir, there are some lessons we might learn from the last war. How many members realize that mines were laid by the Germans within a few miles of the coast of Nova Scotia? How many realize that some of our ships were destroyed by mines laid by the Germans off the coast of Nova Scotia? The Minister of National Defence will know it because of his access to his archives. But I suggest there are very few hon. members in the house who realize that off the coast of Nova Scotia the Germans were able to sow mines, after crossing the Atlantic ocean. I wonder how many realize that batteries planted, for instance, on Anticosti Island would completely command the St. Lawrence river? I wonder how many have realized that a dozen shells fired from ten miles at sea would make the habitation of great cities impossible, through the destruction of sanitary amenities? I wonder if it is realized that, in the language of the late Lord Asquith just before he died, science has been but lisping the alphabet of destruction?

To-day we know about the great progress that has been made in instruments of destruction. We know the effectiveness of bombs. The other day a high military officer said that the effects of one bomb would be felt for a distance of fifteen miles or more. When I read that statement I regarded it as almost incredible; I think yet there must be some error in connection with it. But, be that as it may, we know from the Ethiopian campaign the power of gas. We know for instance what bombs may do, from the recent campaigns in China and Spain. We know what submarines almost did to Great Britain. All you have to do is to read the life of Jellicoe and you will learn how nearly—how very nearly—that submarine campaign succeeded.

All these are matters we must think about very carefully. For while we may not participate in a war, let it always be remembered that the nation or nations opposed will participate against us. It is their participation I am concerned about. This parliament is not going to be able to prevent an enemy from throwing shot and shell, bombs and gas, if that enemy is at war with the British Empire. It was that point which the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Miss Macphail) brought out the other day in this chamber in the clearest fashion I have ever heard it put. It was, sir, in essence, that because we are part of the British Empire we are subject to that risk and danger, and it is a question of balance. We must not delude ourselves. Beautiful phrases and platitudes will not save us. I wonder if anyone has forgotten the language of Chatham? No, that will not save us. We are confronted with a possibility as real as any possibility can be, and it is this, that if any part of the British empire is engaged in war, we are subject to the operations of the modern scientific devices and the forms man has created for destruction through harnessing those great inventions of the human mind for destructive purposes.

I am not thinking about our participation; that is for parliament to decide. But what I am thinking about is the participation of our enemy, and that is what we should be thinking about. Who planted the mines off the coast of Nova Scotia? Was it the parliament of Canada? Did the parliament of Canada have anything to say about it? Did the parliament of Canada raise its voice and say, "You cannot put your mines here?" No; the German high command placed their mines off the coast of Nova Scotia, and our shipping was destroyed. True, only a small quantity was destroyed, but the fact remains that the mines did have their effect. There is the record. Therefore I say when we speak of participation we can only ask ourselves this question: What shall we do in self-defence?

That is all it is, stripped of everything. It is not for this parliament to say whether or not we shall permit our shores to be invaded, our commerce to be destroyed, our ships to be blown to pieces, our population to be gassed or bombed. That is for the enemy.

But it is for us to say: Shall we defend ourselves? That is what we have to say,—and how shall we do it?

I wonder if my fellow members from Quebec realize how great an achievement was that of Sir George Etienne Cartier in the framing of the Militia Act? It is true he was defeated; but he left behind him a Militia Act which is practically the act of to-day. What does it provide? It does not provide for a foreign policy being made by parliament, for parliament never makes a foreign policy. His majesty's advisers make the foreign policy of the country and parliament approves or disapproves. Parliament says yea or nay. That is the old constitutional practice, a practice as old as the hills themselves. Ever since our institutions have developed to what they now are we have provided that his majesty's government, always with a majority in the commons, shall initiate and formulate policies—foreign policies. It is not given to me nor to any private member of this house to indicate the foreign policy of Canada. You can express your views, as I am expressing mine; you can offer your criticisms, as I am, but the declaration of external policy in this country must come from his majesty's advisers, the government, the crown in reality. You will find the matter much discussed in the speeches that took place in the time of Palmerston. It is the crown's policy. The crown no longer speaks as the sovereign; the crown speaks on the advice of the ministers of the crown, and the policy is the policy of the government of the day.

Let us see how that was exemplified in the Militia Act of long ago. Let us see how it still finds its place in the statutes of our country. The Militia Act is chapter 132 of the revised statutes of Canada, of which section 63 reads:

> The militia or any part thereof, or any officer or man thereof, may be called out for any military purpose other than drill or training, at such times and in such manner as is prescribed.

Then follow the sections which recognize that the foreign policy of the country is the policy of the crown as advised by the government of the day. Section 64 reads:

> The governor in council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency.

The true significance of this section is to be found in the words, "and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof." I have endeavoured to make clear the point that participation in war was determined by our enemy and not by our parliament, and that the question to be considered was the question of the defence of our country. The government of the day is clothed with authority to defend this country. It may be that defence will be made, as it was, in the fields of France, or Flanders; it may be on the high seas; it may be somewhere in Africa; it matters not where it may be as long as the government of the day risks its life and stakes its fortune upon the policy of defence of Canada beyond her shores.

But it is not left to chance that parliament shall control. I accept the statement of the Prime Minister, although I do not think he made it quite clear, that at all times since the passing of the Militia Act this parliament has been in control. Section 66 of the Militia Act reads:

> Whenever the governor in council places the militia, or any part thereof, on active service, if parliament is then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire within ten days, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of parliament within fifteen days, and parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit and act in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued to the same day.

It must be within the memory, Mr. Speaker, of some hon. gentlemen present this afternoon that that is just what took place in 1914. There is a provision in the Militia Act for a levée en masse, for the calling up of every able-bodied man under the age of forty-five years and over the age of eighteen, I think, for the defence of the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Eighteen years and upward, and under sixty years.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought it was under forty-five years?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Sixty years.

Mr. BENNETT: Thank you. That being so, let us recall what happened in 1914. At that time the government of the day took appropriate steps to offer to defend this country abroad and to raise a contingent for that purpose. Parliament had not assembled when Sir Robert Borden sent that cable. He thereupon called parliament to meet at once. Notwithstanding the fact that parliament may formally stand adjourned to a day far beyond the fifteen days, this section provides that it shall be called together within fifteen days. So parliament met and many of those who were present will never forget the unanimity with which parliament approved of the action taken by the government. For my own part

I can recall, as can many of the hon. members whom I see about me, Sir Wilfrid Laurier standing in his place and making his declaration of support of the action of the government of that time.

When you leave the field of military endeavour and go to that of naval operations you find the same provision. As I have endeavoured to explain, that statute was not the outcome of bitter partisanship, it was a real effort to provide that we should arrive at a common understanding, supported by all the peoples of the country. Of course, there is one step further. You get back to the root principle that you cannot escape the responsibilities of government whether you would or not. For the crown must take the action and the crown is advised by the government. The government places its life at stake in the House of Commons of the day. Just as on that occasion Sir Wilfrid Laurier supported the government, I doubt not that if the time should ever come again when it should be thought essential to take steps for the defence of Canada abroad, there would be such unanimity of opinion as to make it quite apparent that we had a common purpose and a common need to serve, namely, the maintenance of the integrity of our people and our country.

If I have been correct in what I have said, and I have endeavoured to put it as fairly as possible, it will be necessary to depart from the general plan followed by the Prime Minister and refer briefly to the present situation. It must be known to all that it was five years after the armistice was signed before the last treaty of peace was signed with an enemy. The treaty of peace with Turkey was signed in 1923, after five long years of uncertainty, unrest, discussion and negotiation. Then followed, during the twenties, what the Prime Minister has designated properly as an era of peace-loving activities on the part of the peoples of the world. Peace, peace—public opinion wanted peace. With peace you had the demand for disarmament, and the action taken by the League of Nations looking to that end. The covenant of the league provided for disarmament. I have always thought, and I still think, that a great mistake was made in not making it perfectly clear that while we were going to disarm Germany, we would also undertake to disarm ourselves. When I say "ourselves," I do not mean the British Empire; I mean ourselves, the rest of the world, the world in arms. It did not happen. And there gradually grew up, instead of that demand for peace, a sense on the part of Germany's sixty million people that they had not been fairly treated, until in the end Germany began to rearm.

Then Great Britain—let us not limit it to Great Britain—the British Empire, including Australia, New Zealand, Canada, South Africa, each of which was thinking not of arms or armaments, but of the creation of a public opinion, for peace, good will cooperation, expansion of trade and business, of the time when the war drums would throb no longer and the battle-flags would be furled, was confronted with this new condition. We saw gradually growing up in Germany and other countries that sense of injustice whose final outcome we see to-day. This great commonwealth of nations found itself unarmed and unprepared. It had kept its word, and it had created a public opinion such as the world had never seen before. I wonder if it is generally realized what was meant by that great ballot which took place in England, a year and a half or more ago, when public opinion demonstrated its desire for peace, a desire shared by all the countries of the commonwealth.

But to-day, sir, I say deliberately that the German will or mind is the will for war, not the will for peace. My observation as well as my reading lead me to that conclusion. Instead of the old theory that prosperity and peace go hand in hand, we see feverish activity in arsenal and factory, the creation of artillery and bombs and aircraft for the purposes of destruction, and appeals to that sentiment which since the dawn of history has been one of the most powerful to which an appeal can be made, the appeal of patriotism; of achievement by force of arms; the broadening of acres; the extension of the national territory. So to-day we find a situation which I shall not discuss, any more than to say that I entirely agree with the statement concerning it which has been made by the Prime Minister.

In this very country to-day there are emissaries of Germany—I say that on my responsibility as a member of this house—talking to minorities about their rights. A friend of mine in the legal profession was consulted on this matter by an old German; it is the younger ones, not the older men who are swayed and moved by such appeals. Look at what has developed in Czechoslovakia. A minority is demanding—what? Action on the part of its national homeland, military action if necessary, for the purpose of giving that minority what it desires. No language that can be used in this house would be too strong a statement of the difficulties of the situation in Europe.

I shall not deal with conditions in Spain. I have always looked upon the Spanish trouble as a civil war in which, unfortunately other nations have supported the warring factions. The committee of non-intervention have had indifferent success in their desperate efforts to achieve a certain measure of restriction of the warring operations. Ships have been sunk in the Mediterranean. Nationals of other nations have been killed. The situation has developed in such a fashion that some untoward or unseen act might be a spark which would cause an international explosion. I do not desire to say anything which might add to that difficulty.

I hold strong views, Mr. Speaker, personally, with respect to the Sino-Japanese situation. I listened with great attention to the language of the Prime Minister. I must say that I found it a little difficult to agree with him. Having read the letter written, when he was Secretary of State, by Mr. Stimson, after listening to his discussion of the nine-power agreement, remembering speeches made in this chamber expressing sincere belief in the Kellogg-Briand pact, the pact of Paris, with respect to resort to war as an instrument of national policy, and remembering that a Canadian sat at Geneva on a committee of the League of Nations which unanimously condemned the unprovoked and unwarranted attack upon China by Japan, I find it difficult to stand in this house and say that we can have anything like the state of mind which has been suggested. Is no value to be placed upon the plighted word of a nation? Are treaties to be scraps of paper? We went to war on that issue. Is the language employed in the Kellogg-Briand pact to be entirely forgotten? Are we to condone this nefarious conduct, reminding us of the barbarous days of the middle ages when nations treated agreements as merely scraps of paper? Can I forget the Washington treaty, the nine-power treaty? Have we forgotten how solemnly Japan promised she would protect the integrity of China? Can I as a Canadian forget that? Our government signed it on behalf of Canada. Can I disregard it? Can I treat with those people as I would with the power which they have struck down without notice?

China is invaded, destroyed, and I am asked to condone it, and to say, "We must be very careful, though it is true that we are co-signatories; though it is true that, according to a decision of the committee of the League of Nations on which Canada was represented, Japan has violated that treaty."

[Mr. Bennett.]

I honour the action of the Canadian who sat on that committee. I believe his finding was right. I believe that in Senator Dandurand, for instance, we have as skilled a man with respect to these matters as any man in this country. He has been dealing with the League of Nations all these years. And when I find his condemnation of that unprovoked and unwarranted action against China, I cannot place myself in a position where I am prepared to have the minister of the other nation stand in my country and say, "We are going to defeat these Chinese." "We are going to defeat them!" There was no declaration of war; there has not been one yet; and still they talk about "defeat" and "the end of the war." Sir, we either are a nation or we are not. We either respect ourselves or we do not. We have a sense of honour or we have not. For my own part, and speaking now for myself alone, I say I cannot bring myself to a state of mind other than a feeling of deep-rooted resentment against the violation of its plighted word by that great people, the Japanese, who have invaded China, sacked its cities, murdered its civilians, and now talk in Canada about the ultimate "defeat" of their "enemy" and victory for their cause.

I have not forgotten Manchuria. I have not forgotten the Lytton report and its findings. Has any hon. member forgotten it? Sir, it is there that the right hon. the Prime Minister and I part company.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my right hon. friend, I hope no word of mine can be construed as in any way condoning what Japan has done. The very opposite is the case. I agree entirely with him in his denunciation of the action that Japan has taken. I agree with everything that was done at Brussels, what was said by the leader of the senate; in fact, he took his instructions from the government here. No words of mine are capable of the interpretation that is being put upon them.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

SECOND READING

Bill No. 120, to incorporate The Workers Benevolent Society of Canada.—Mr. Thorson.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS OF CHINESE IMMIGRATION ACT, REVISED STATUTES, 1927, CHAPTER 95

The house resumed from Tuesday, May 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Neill for the second reading of Bill No. 11, respecting Japanese immigration.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I am closing the debate on the second reading. I understand I have twenty minutes to go, but I intend to take much less than that. I have gone over the matter already and I am not going over it again. I only want to introduce two new points. In the debate on the second reading of this bill in its earlier stages the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) said he could not approve it unless it contained a provision that it would not come into effect until July, 1939. By referring to page 2740 of Hansard he will find that I then made a definite pledge to accept that amendment in committee. The other point I should like to introduce is a statement contained in a Canadian Press dispatch. Canadian Press news as regards international affairs are generally reliable, because they are checked up, and if they are not correct they are contradicted. This is from Geneva, May 13:

> . . . Chinese sources declared some powers, including Great Britain and France, had agreed to grant China credits for purchase of arms and also assurance of aid in getting the arms into the country. In a secret session the council arranged to go on public record as refusing material aid to China. . . .
> Doctor Wellington Koo, Chinese delegate, who had asked the council to help organize an international boycott of Japanese goods and to forbid league members to sell war materials to Tokyo, was said, however, to have won the war credits fight in behind-the-scenes negotiations.

That has not been contradicted. I might make this point, that if the British government grant a credit to buy arms, and give assurance that they will be delivered, they surely cannot be seriously embarrassed if Canada takes a step towards taking possession of her right to control immigration into her own country.

This bill comes before us after nearly four months of stormy passage and many vicissitudes. Another private member's bill introduced the next day passed all stages in two hours. I fear the vote to-night will be an adverse one, judging by what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) stated, unless, as I hope, he has been influenced by many representations that I know have been made to him from British Columbia and elsewhere. I made a serious attempt to meet his objection by the introduction of Bill No. 112. But that was thrown out by a strained interpretation of the rule which, if impartially administered, would have also killed nine other bills, six of them important government measures. However, the race is not always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. The treatment accorded those two bills I find has created a wave, first of interest and then of sympathy, throughout Canada—not British Columbia alone—which no effort of mine could possibly have secured, except by the exercise of an eloquence which I do not possess and a strenuous campaign which I could not have undertaken. I am myself surprised at the telegrams and letters I have received expressing approval, promising support and asking me to address meetings and so on. The Canadian temper was rather sleepy at first, but was first stirred, then it murmured and then woke up with a roar to a consciousness that the rights of the people, the privilege of a free people to express their wrongs through their elected representatives, were in danger. The people of both east and west became interested; they realized that it was no longer a British Columbian question but one of interest to all of Canada. Many editorials on the subject were printed. The Sun, a leading paper in British Columbia, in a long editorial some weeks ago, used this language:

> . . . a grave doubt arises in our minds as to the democracy that exists at Ottawa. Do the men we elect to parliament represent us or do they not represent us? . . . Do they go down there as free men representing a free people or under the handicap of being able to say or do only what the Prime Minister permits them to say or do?

They ended by expressing the opinion that the attitude taken to the bill savoured more of tyranny than democracy. Then an eastern paper, after going very fully into the matter and supporting the stand I took, ended with these significant words:

> But the government had to throw over an old friend. Neill had to be sacrificed to appease the Japanese government.

Well, I want no loftier epitaph on my political tombstone than those words, "sacrificed to appease the Japanese government." Very often these forlorn hopes require a martyr, and perhaps I might start a movement which, when I am no longer here, will go on to success.

I do not want to detain the house. Therefore, with no sense of bitterness to the government or threats of reprisal, I only want to appeal for the bill on its merits. I have an appeal which I think should be made all across Canada. I appeal to the maritimes; we demand their sympathy because they are a sister province; they too go down to the sea in ships and do business in great waters, and they know what an influx of a couple of thousand fishermen voting and acting with one mind would mean to their interests. I appeal to the province of Ontario, the home of industrial workers, getting more and more powerful in their unions; they know the effect of allowing a large influx of oriental labour with its low wages and low standards of living. They are beginning already to experience the effects of the competition of Japanese-made goods, sold in Toronto at prices for which the raw material could not be purchased there. I appeal to hon. members from Quebec, that home of Canadian chivalry, and I tell them they have no more loyal friends in Canada than the people of British Columbia, who will be beside them in any movement in support of minority rights, because we too are a minority and we feel that we too should get such treatment as our special conditions require, just as the people in Quebec ask the government that they shall be given such treatment as their traditions and history warrant. We ask their sympathy in that regard. As far as the prairies are concerned, it is a matter more of self-interest because, being nearer to British Columbia they visit backward and forward, and they are beginning to realize that what is our trouble to-day will be theirs to-morrow; they will be the next victim.

As regards British Columbia, I do not need to appeal to them, because they know. I voice the sentiments of British Columbia, I speak with the united voice of British Columbia to-night. It may be asked, by what right do I, an ordinary private member, claim such a right. I have no written authority from the people as a whole, other than those of my own district, but I do voice the sentiments of a man fully qualified to speak for the people of British Columbia, that is their premier. What is his record? He was elected by a large majority at a general election held some eight months ago. He presented his brief not long ago to the Rowell commission; I have a synopsis of it here, and the very first item on it was: Oriental immigration prohibited and orientals returned to their home countries. Since then he fought a by-election about a week ago, and that program was a prominent feature of the campaign. He won an opposition seat, and this program formed perhaps a not insignificant part in that victory. Therefore I quote him; only I am asking something much more moderate than he asks.

There is growing up in British Columbia a feeling that will not be allayed by promising them a commission of three members to investigate themselves. The time for that has gone by. I am going, if the right hon. gentleman will allow me, to plagiarize a sentence from the speech delivered by the leader of the opposition before six o'clock this afternoon. Speaking of post-war conditions in Germany he said: "There gradually grew up in Germany a feeling that they had been unfairly treated." That is the situation in British Columbia. There is no more fatal and bitter resentment than that caused by the gradual growth of a feeling that people have not been fairly treated. It is far more desperate and dangerous than a sudden flare up of resentment over a single overt act; there is no question about that. It may be that the Canadian historian of the future, when he comes to record the dismemberment of the nine provinces of Canada, will have to begin a paragraph or chapter with these words: "There gradually grew up in British Columbia the feeling that they had been unfairly dealt with." And that feeling is there. It is not confined to British Columbia alone; it exists for other reasons on the prairies as well, and it would be well if the government took steps to quench that flame before it reaches a point at which it cannot be quenched.

I am going to leave the issue to the house. Democracy, according to the dictionary, is a system of government under which the power rests in the hands of the people and is exercised directly or indirectly by them. In my own language it is the duty of the government to carry out the wishes of those governed. To support my views I quote the Bishop of Liverpool, who in a recent speech said:

> —it was a democratic principle of this country that if a sufficient number of people wanted a thing sufficiently and pressed for it, they would get it.

If not, as one man wrote me, it ceased to be democracy and became "demockery." I await the issue of the house on this bill with the anxious hope of an innocent man on trial for his life; but I tell the government that the people of British Columbia are determined to get some measure along the lines I have indicated. The issue is now up to the house and the government.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENT OF PROVISION RESPECTING PROHIBITED CLASSES

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni) moved the second reading of Bill No. 112, to amend the Immigration Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is Bill No. 112, and it is really a revival of Bill No. 38. As I spoke fully on Bill No. 38, I shall not detain the house by talking for another forty minutes as the silly rules would allow me to do.

However, for a few moments, for the benefit of those who were not here on that occasion, I shall go over it briefly. The former discussion is to be found on Hansard at page 2735 and following. For many years in the Dominion of Canada we have had an immigration law which prohibits the entrance into Canada of people able to see but unable to read the English or French language, or any other language or dialect. That has been our established law for many years. I am amplifying that law to the further extent that the other language in addition to English or French must be one commonly spoken in some portion of Europe. Whatever may have been said against the previous bill does not arise in connection with this one. It is not aimed directly or indirectly against any one nation. It applies to 74 per cent of the world's population, and does not name any one nation. It merely applies the educational test, one which has been in effect in New Zealand and Australia for twenty years or more. This provides for about the same test, only in Australia it is somewhat more drastic. That is the only difference.

This is a way out which would meet the situation, be a stepping-stone to peace in British Columbia, and yet avoid any suggestion of international complications. The British Columbia government voiced their views before the Rowell commission and asked for something much more drastic. I might say that the word "exclusion" is not used, nor indeed is exclusion effected except by virtue of an educational test. It does not say that this or that nation shall be excluded; it provides merely that an educational test shall be applied. This test would apply equally to our own vast sister dominion of India; it would apply also to Australia, to New Zealand, to China, to South America, to the Malay peninsula and to those countries neighbouring thereon. There is no suggestion of an attempt to discriminate against Japan or any other nation, either directly or indirectly. The law is of general application and is similar to that which has been enforced for thirty years in New Zealand and Australia. It is ridiculous to say that we shall offend anyone by exercising the provisions which have been applicable to orientals for many years so far as Australia and New Zealand are concerned. When the bill was up the other day I moved the second reading and there was no discussion as a point of order was taken. I shall say no more at this time, reserving my right to close the debate should any debate take place.

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I desire to say immediately that whatever merits the previous bill which we have just discussed may have had, and I believe it has many, this bill has nothing by way of merit. In the first place, it would bring about the very opposite to what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) seeks to attain. The implied inference of this bill is to achieve a measure of exclusion by means of a language test. Any one who compares this bill with the legislation in force in Australia will realize immediately that there is a great difference between the two. The prohibition brought about by the legislation in Australia is well known to everyone here. This bill names the two languages which must be known, and it would be the simplest thing in the world for an oriental nation to train its intending migrants in the use of either one of the two languages mentioned here. Instead of having only 130 immigrants a year from the nation not named but designed to be named, we might have thousands and thousands coming into British Columbia under the provisions of the bill now before the house for consideration.

I was prevented from speaking on the previous bill because a point of order was raised the other night, but I desire to say now that after twenty years in public life in British Columbia I yield to no one in my realization of the gravity of this oriental problem. I desire to say further that this problem cannot be solved by the present measure of exclusion. It is a deep economic problem affecting the life and welfare of the people of British Columbia. I may say that I am charged with certain responsibilities as a minister of the crown, particularly with reference to the province of British Columbia, and there are certain aspects of the work of my department which at the moment I do not care to emphasize. It was with a full consciousness of those responsibilities that I took the somewhat difficult step of opposing the measure introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. Considering the problems that face us at the present time in this dominion, I am convinced that I have done the best thing for British Columbia and for the Dominion of Canada.

I shall go even further than that. We heard a most glowing and eloquent appeal this afternoon by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) in connection with the responsibilities that must be ours as Canadians for the preservation of the interests of the British Empire. He quoted with emphasis some of the words of the declaration of 1926 with reference to the evolution of responsibility in connection with that famous declaration known as the Balfour formula, the reference to free association within the British Empire. My right hon. friend might have gone further and read the preamble to the constitution of the Dominion of Canada. The preamble of the British North America Act contains these words:

> And whereas such a union would conduce to the welfare of the provinces and promote the interests of the British Empire.

We have two great duties to perform to-day in Canada. First, we must preserve the welfare of the union of confederation, the British North America Act itself. Then we have another duty, and in this I agree largely with what my right hon. friend has said, to preserve and maintain the interests of the British Empire. After twenty years of public life, I feel confident that the people of British Columbia know my feelings with reference to this matter. I feel confident I have taken the right position with reference to my province, with reference to my country and with reference to the interests of the British Empire. I feel I have taken the right stand in connection with this important but delicate, difficult and complex situation.

At the same time I desire to make this further observation. No government of the Dominion of Canada can afford to ignore this problem. If this problem cannot be solved by the means offered by the hon. member at the present time, it must be solved by other methods by whatever government is charged with the responsibility of the administration of the affairs of this country. I agree with my hon. friend in what he desires to achieve, but I believe that conditions are too grave and too serious at the present time to achieve the objective he has at heart by the method he has offered. From the point of view of British Columbia in particular this bill would make our position many times worse than it is to-day. This is a long range economic problem, and I hope that those of us who represent British Columbia in this house, regardless of our political persuasions or associations, will be as one in a desire to arrive at a real remedy that will be in the best interests of British Columbia, of the Dominion of Canada and of the British Empire.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago I voted in favour of a bill to exclude, but I shall have to vote against this bill. Perhaps it is only fair to give my viewpoint and reason for taking an action that may seem to be not quite consistent. In the first place, I do not think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) has been quite candid in presenting his bill. He says that there has been no attempt to discriminate against any one nation. We all know that the Chinese are excluded; we all know that there is an arrangement under which the people from India do not reach Canada; we all know that in practice the only people from the orient who are coming in are the Japanese. I believe if I had the hon. member for Comox-Alberni by himself he would admit quite frankly that this is an attempt to exclude the entry of Japanese.

Mr. NEILL: That would be incidental.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes. I shall leave the hon. member to put that in his own way Perhaps I could use the phrase used a good deal by my legal friends and say that this bill comes close to being colourable legislation. It is an attempt to achieve something which could not be accomplished by more direct action. I do not like the idea of rigid exclusion, but knowing British Columbia as I do, and as I have known it for some years, I realize that a feeling exists there at the present time that makes it unwise to allow any more Japanese to enter that province. We have to be realists in this matter; we have to recognize that there are a considerable number of Japanese already in the province who have not been assimilated. Under these conditions I do not think it would be in the public interests to admit more orientals to British Columbia.

I believe, and I have long urged, that those who are there should be admitted to the full rights of citizenship. I do not think we ought to allow people to come to this country, and become naturalized here, and have children born here and then deny them and their children the full rights of citizenship. As we in this corner have said again and again, we do not think there should be a law by which those people should be placed in an inferior position. But that is a different matter from allowing any large number of orientals, or any number, I think, at the present time, to come to Canada.

I agree with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) that this bill would not in effect accomplish the purpose for which it is designed. Several years ago I spent some time visiting Japan, and in the larger cities I did not find any great difficulty in getting around by myself because such a large number of the people spoke English. If I recollect aright, English was a second language in the high schools, at least it was very commonly taught in the schools. As the minister suggested, it would be comparatively easy to train people in a knowledge of the English language; in fact, I do not think they would need to be trained, and hence there might be a much larger influx than under the present arrangement.

It seems to me that we have in this bill a great many undesirable features. If there is likely to be any criticism from Japan of our actions that might be dangerous in these critical times, undoubtedly the same criticism would apply to this type of legislation.

Under these circumstances I personally feel that I shall have to vote against this measure.

Mr. NEILL: Will the hon. member allow me a question? Does he not realize that the bill would not take the place of a quota agreement; it would be extra?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know whether I quite catch the import of the hon. member's question.

Mr. J. S. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): I feel that before this bill goes to a vote I should say a few words. On a former occasion I took the very definite stand that no people should be allowed in Canada as citizens of this country who were not assimilable; and I cannot find in ethnological history any definite instance of Asiatics being fused with Europeans. I think that should be very carefully borne in mind, because the two continents are juxtaposed; and if the peoples, in thousands of years of association with each other have not produced a definite fusion, how can we expect orientals to fuse with our own European peoples? On these larger issues I very definitely pronounce myself opposed to the idea of introducing into Canada Asiatics to become citizens with ourselves. But if Japan, China or any other country having nationals in this country will forsake them, and if they will be prepared to qualify for citizenship in our country and be prepared to be assimilated into the citizenship of Canada, then I have nothing to say against them. But on principle I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. SPEAKER: I draw the attention of the hon. member to the fact that if he speaks now he closes the debate.

Mr. NEILL: I shall take only a few minutes.

The argument put forward by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) is undoubtedly founded upon a misconception of the situation. That is astonishing to me, he being a lawyer. The Immigration Act, chapter 93 of the revised statutes, contains a list of prohibited people; some are lunatics, some persons of other descriptions, professional beggars and so on; and then it says that people who cannot read are excluded The gentleman's agreement existing with Japan to-day would still exist, under which it is supposed that not more than 150 come in. This does not take the place of the gentleman's agreement; it would be on top of it, and it would say that of those 150 allowed to come in under the gentleman's agreement, so many must be cut out because they cannot read. It is ridiculous and unfair and most unwarranted to suggest that this would allow the influx of a huge mass of orientals—not to mention that you cannot train orientals in the English language in six months, and in six months' time or perhaps a little longer there will be a general election, and British Columbia will have pronounced itself with such force and energy that the succeeding government will hurry to bring in legislation such as was turned down a few minutes ago. And whose blame is it? The minister himself says he preferred Bill No. 11. He very nearly voted for it. I could see his conscience working on him; but some more subtle influence overcame his natural goodness of heart and intelligence, so he says he preferred the other one, and he very nearly voted for it. Now, however, he says I am "all wet" in introducing this second one; but whose blame is it? If Bill No. 11 had gone through, this one would not have taken its place. I quite admit that. I preferred Bill No. 11 to this present one.

As regards the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), he said he had an objection, and one which many honourable men do have; I believe it is expressed in a principle of law that you cannot do a thing indirectly which you cannot do directly.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear, hear.

Mr. NEILL: My hon. friend, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) says, "Hear hear."

Mr. LAPOINTE: (Quebec East): Is there anything wrong in that?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. NEILL: We are informed that that is a fundamental basis of law.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. NEILL: And yet our statute books are full of evasive legislation whereby we do something indirectly which we cannot do directly. Look at our tariff laws. How many of these tariff items are worded with the idea, as the phrase goes, of "trying to whip the devil around the stump,"—get at the object to be attained without interfering with some other rights such as favoured nation rights? Our tariff is full of things like that. Or take the exclusion of our own nationals from India, to some extent people of our own race, because one or more of the nations of India can be called Aryan in their origin, and ethnologically they are white people, yet we exclude them. How do we do it? We exclude them by an obvious trick—that is just the word to use—which the Minister of Justice says cannot be done because it is doing indirectly what we cannot do directly.

We cannot pass a law preventing our own fellow subjects from coming into Canada, so how do we keep them out? I do not want this to be used against us in the years to come because we had a satisfactory arrangement; that is, it has given satisfaction. We made objections to their coming, and we passed a law that they would have to come in a ship directly from the country of origin. We had not the courage or we had not the legislative authority and jurisdiction to say flatly, "We will not let natives of India, a part of the British Empire, come into another part of the empire," so we introduced this ridiculous theory that they had to come in a boat directly from the country of origin. Can you, Mr. Speaker, conceive of any condition which would make a man a more desirable immigrant to Canada if he came in a boat which started at Bombay and docked at Vancouver than if he went from Bombay to Hongkong and then took the regular line of steamers from there to this country?

But we went further than that. Shortly before the great war broke out, a boat full of natives of India, appeared in Vancouver harbour. I forget their particular nationality, whether they were Hindus or Sikhs; I think they were Sikhs. There was a large number of them; they had come direct from the country of origin in a boat; and it was more than hinted, it was currently believed, that they had been financed by the German empire with a view to promoting discontent in India and in Canada, because it was not desired to admit a couple of thousand of these immigrants, and if they were sent back they would be a fruitful source of discontent and dissatisfaction in India. I forget the exact method we adopted in order to stop them, but I remember that fire hose figured considerably. After a good deal of discussion the boat did go back to India, and no doubt the purpose intended by the people who instigated the affair was served, that is to say, of causing a great deal of discontent in the Indian population.

That evil was foreseen as was also a recurrence of it, and we wondered what we could do about it. We again used that subtle, indirect method which the Minister of Justice says we must not use—we made an addition. We said that not only must the native of India come in a boat directly from the country of origin but he must also obtain a ticket direct from the country of origin to Vancouver. I do not know how we managed it, but I assume it was by arrangement with the consular agents. At any rate, we saw to it he could not get a ticket right through. If that is not an indirect way of doing something which we cannot do directly, I do not know what is. And that is with our own nationals in our own country. But there are a great number of other instances that could be given.

I go back to the suggestion emphasized by the Minister of National Defence, that they would be entering in hordes. May I point out that you cannot teach a horde of orientals English in a short time. It is true that in Australia it was provided that they might use some language—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Specified.

Mr. NEILL: —some language specified by the government. The government took care to specify some language which the man seeking entry into Australia could not read or write, and if they found that he could write one language they tried him with another. As I told the house on a previous occasion, some inspired Scot tried an unhappy Chinaman with Gaelic. The Chinaman took the matter to the courts, and it was decided in the higher courts of Australia that the Gaelic language was not a language of Europe. And then the trouble broke out. The wigs were on the green; kilts were donned; the pipes were played; the claymores were in evidence, and there was very nearly a revolution. The government hastily got the cabinet together, capitulated, and agreed that at the next session of the legislature they would bring in legislation to do away with the provision for specifying a language of Europe and would simply provide that any language might be specified. The result is that now Gaelic may be specified as a test. In New Zealand there was not a similar incident, so that the provision there still is that a language of Europe may be specified. An attempt was made by a Japanese in Australia to establish the claim that he could specify the language and that also was taken to the higher courts, but it was decided that the government alone had the power of specifying. I do not know whether that was not taken to the privy council. Then a rule was passed that until there was legislation which defined the language, the immigration officer in question had the right to do the specifying.

If there is anything at all about this bill which the Minister of National Defence does not like, all he had to do was simply express his desire in the committee and we would have amended it. It would have been easy to put in words similar to those used in Australia if he so desired. He says that he will not be satisfied, that British Columbia will not be satisfied, until this matter is settled on a right basis. I agree with him. Then, why not let us do something about it? Why should we simply talk about it? The other day we had an illustration in British Columbia of what happens when there is too much talk; there was too much talk about the labour situation and it resulted in an unfortunate occurrence.

I am not at all pessimistic, but the feeling in British Columbia in this matter is becoming intense. There are two things more than anything else for which a man will fight; that is, the protection of his wife and family and his home; and if he thinks that his wife and family and his home are in peril, and he believes that a government three thousand miles away is indifferent or is not showing that concern for his welfare that it should, while a menace is threatening him across the ocean, he is more than likely to take steps to protect himself. That would be very lamentable in this case, something that might lead to riots and to far more international trouble than anyone might anticipate from Bill No. 11. Of course, it is too late to go back and revise our opinion about that, but even now the government could bring in a measure sufficiently different from my bill to conform to the rules of the house.

I do plead with the government to do something. I am not going to quarrel with them about the nature of it, the means they take, so long as they do something to meet the situation. Simply sending a delegation of three people to British Columbia to investigate the activities of officials will not placate the people of that province. As the minister knows, they are not in their childhood; they are not lacking in intelligence, and they will resent any suggestion that they can be placated as children can be by being given a toy as a means of getting them to think of something else.

British Columbia wants legislation to exclude Japanese. Vancouver is the third biggest city in Canada; probably one-quarter of the population of British Columbia is centred there. Well, did we not find the city council, composed of all varieties of political opinion, passing unanimously a strong and vigorous resolution, containing half a dozen whereases and concluding with the declaration, "We want the total exclusion of orientals from British Columbia?" That is what the city of Vancouver wants, and no eloquence from the Minister of National Defence, who is far more able than I am to smooth over these difficulties and troubles, will alter that bedrock fact.

SUPPLY

FOREIGN POLICY—STATEMENT OF MR. MACKENZIE KING ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Dunning for committee of supply.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): At six o'clock I was referring to the Lytton report as indicating the reason why I found it so difficult to follow certain aspects of the attitude of the government with respect to the present situation in China and Japan. It will be recalled that that report was made to the League of Nations and that after very careful investigation by a well qualified committee it was found that the action taken in Manchukuo by Japan was wholly unwarranted and was unprovoked. The effect was that in the end Japan left the League of Nations. Therefore we still continue to be a member of the League of Nations. Our signature still remains upon the Kellogg-Briand pact. Our signature still remains upon the Washington nine-power treaty, and we adopted the Lytton report, whereupon, as I say, Japan withdraws. And that country, which has dishonoured its obligation and its signature in the manner I have indicated, is bold enough to send to this country an emissary who a few days after he arrives makes a statement which is a far more offensive observation than that made by Sackville-West which resulted in his recall from Washington. I mention that because frankly I cannot understand it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Perhaps my right hon. friend will allow me to say a word?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: When my right hon. friend was speaking earlier in the evening, and took exception to the government's attitude, I was not aware whether he was referring to what I said in speaking on external affairs, or whether it was to what I had said in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) this afternoon. I gather it is what I said in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not so much a question of reply, as the language itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, what I want to make clear at the moment, and to have the house understand, is that my right hon. friend is not taking exception to what, in speaking on external affairs, I said in relation to the Sino-Japanese war, but rather to the remark I made or something I failed to say in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre on the orders of the day. May I say at once that when the hon. member asked the question he did of me I had not seen, nor had my attention been drawn to the statement made by the Japanese minister. That was why I asked my hon. friend what statement it was he alluded to. He said he was referring to the Japanese minister having said he agreed with the statement I had made in this house, a statement of policy. I am prepared to stand by any statement of policy I have made in this house as to the attitude we should assume towards other countries.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My criticism was not with regard to the Prime Minister's statement of policy, but rather that the Japanese minister had commented on what had been said in a debate in this house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I was trying to find the particular point to which reference was made. However, I have since obtained the reported statement of the minister from Japan. It appears in the press as follows:

Baron Tomii, who is accompanied by his wife and eight year old daughter, expressed appreciation of a recent utterance of Prime Minister Mackenzie King with regard to the Sino-Japanese conflict.

"I don't remember the exact words, but they were to the effect that Canadian people should be very careful in making remarks concerning the hostilities now going on in China," said the Baron. "I do realize how difficult it would be for people living thousands of miles away to understand fully the situation that exists in the far east."

In the first place I think hon. members will agree that while I have made a statement as to the attitude which should be assumed generally towards critical situations in other countries, I have, as far as I can recollect, made no statement referring particularly to the hostilities now going on in China, as suggested in the words attributed to the Japanese minister. My statements from time to time have been that in dealing with critical situations that exist in other parts of the world we in Canada, which is a neutral country, should be particularly careful in our discussions in this house, or over the radio or in the press or elsewhere, to be guarded in our utterances and not say things which may unnecessarily embarrass those who have to deal with these situations. That is the kind of statement I have made, and I think it is what the minister from Japan must have had in mind, because I see in another paper, the Ottawa Citizen of yesterday, the minister is quoted as follows:

When asked about the situation in China, the minister quoted Prime Minister Mackenzie King's remark made recently in the House of Commons that it was misleading and caused "a suspicion of our neutrality" for Canadians to comment on the foreign policies of other nations.

Evidently the same thought was in the mind of the minister when speaking in the one case at Niagara Falls and in the other at Ottawa. What doubtless the minister had in mind has been some statement that in relation to these two countries which are at war we are neutral; Canada is not at war with Japan; Canada is not at war with China; and our position of neutrality should be respected.

I want to say at once that I think the Japanese minister, if, as reported, he went beyond that statement and began to speak of the hostilities as between China and Japan, and indicated what he thought would be the outcome of the war, and referred to China in the course of his remarks, was forgetting the very attitude and policy which I had suggested here should be followed.

Mr. BENNETT: And which he himself had taken.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, quite so, which he himself had taken. In that I think he was entirely wrong; I do not for a moment hesitate to say that. Perhaps I might add that an almost humorous aspect is given to what is perhaps a very serious matter, by the fact that when the new Chinese consul arrived in the city some little time ago he made some remarks at a luncheon reflecting pretty strongly on his country's enemy, and it was thought at the time that those remarks should not have been made.

Mr. BENNETT: He was only a consul.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. I think, however, that they have now had a sufficient round of controversy in our country, and I hope no further reference will be made by any foreign representative in this country reflecting upon other lands with respect to which we are trying to preserve as impartial an attitude as possible.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure every hon. member will be pleased to think that the interruption of my remarks has afforded an opportunity for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) to make the observations he has made. I found it a little difficult to accommodate my mind to the thought that we in this country were to listen to a statement of the war aims of a country which had signed with us a document at Washington agreeing that it would protect the integrity of the country with which it is now waging war. That is my trouble; and I deny the right of any man, whose nation has signed a document guaranteeing with the Dominion of Canada the integrity of China, to come here and talk about the defeat of China in a war which was not declared and for which there is no justification. That is the reason I made the statement I did. The Prime Minister is right when he assumes that I was not criticizing him for not having complained of the action of the minister from Japan in pointing out that he agreed with the Prime Minister, although frankly I would not feel at all complimented by having one who represents a country which has violated every international obligation it has entered into saying how much he appreciated my attitude of mind towards anything. I desire to make that observation as strong as it is possible for me to make it. I am not one of those who believe that you serve any useful purpose by forgetting your own dignity and the honour of your own country in order to placate any power, however powerful it may be. As I was sitting here I could not but recall the words of a great Englishman who was attacked in Germany by von Bulow. He said, "I am answerable to my sovereign, and not to the citizens of a foreign country." I feel perfectly certain that in our desire to maintain neutrality the Canadian people have no desire, in the interest of trade expansion or otherwise, to sacrifice their sense of national honour and of the decencies of international relations.

There is only one more thing I desire to point out, and it is that when dealing with a certain phase of the situation, in my judgment—and I express it only as my judgment—the Prime Minister entirely overlooked the fact that we have bound ourselves, in a manner that was acceptable to all governments, to successive parliaments and to the Canadian people, to a free association with the other elements of the British Commonwealth of Nations. I cannot but think that this was not answered by the language of the Prime Minister when he said, "Canada is Canada; South Africa is South Africa; Australia is Australia, and we have no interest in United Kingdom policies."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I never said we had no interest in United Kingdom policies. We have interest in the policies of all countries.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I shall put it in this way, that while the Prime Minister says we have an interest in the policies of all countries, he made it clear that we had no special interest in the policies of the United Kingdom—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: —or of the other component parts of the commonwealth of nations, and he developed the idea—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I rise to a point of order?

Mr. BENNETT: Surely.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. leader of the opposition cannot misinterpret what I said and expect me to remain silent.

Mr. BENNETT: I would not expect it and would not want it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have made no statement of a character that would permit such an inference to be drawn. I have given the house every reason to understand that we have very special cause and every desire to cooperate with all parts of the British Empire and to be interested particularly in matters that pertain to any part of the empire.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I was dealing only with the speech I listened to, not with the observations just made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hansard will show it.

Mr. BENNETT: Hansard will abundantly clarify any difficulty there may be on that point, for the speech was prepared and typewritten; therefore it cannot be subject to any difficulties of expression. What was said, as I took it down, was: Canada is Canada; South Africa is South Africa; Australia is Australia; the United Kingdom is the United Kingdom, and that with respect to the policies of the United Kingdom it was not for us to make representations or in any sense to interfere in their expressions of policy.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my right hon. friend that he entirely missed the point that was being made. I was at the time taking exception to the dominions being lumped together as one and to their policies being regarded as essentially one, to be described in that way. I did not even refer to the United Kingdom. I was pointing out that each dominion of the empire has matters of immediate concern to itself.

Mr. BENNETT: It is so unfortunate that it was not so stated in the speech. I think the Prime Minister should be very grateful to me for having, by not being able to follow him, afforded him an opportunity thus to clarify something that might be regarded as a little, shall we say, cloudy in expression.

If anything was clear during the progress of the observations made this afternoon by the Prime Minister, it was that it was for the people of the United Kingdom, of Australia, of South Africa and so on to determine their own policies, and that Canada was Canada, Australia was Australia, and so on and so on. I only desire to make clear that for good or ill this country saw fit in 1926 and 1930 to declare for free association between the component parts of the commonwealth of nations known as the British Empire. In order that there might be no misapprehension about that, I thought I would look up the Statute of Westminster itself during the recess. I find that the statute, which is chapter 4 of the statutes of 1931, contains this preamble:

> Whereas the delegates of His Majesty's governments in the United Kingdom, the Dominion of Canada, the Commonwealth of Australia, the Dominion of New Zealand, the Union of South Africa, the Irish Free State and Newfoundland, at imperial conferences held at Westminster in the years of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-six and one thousand nine hundred and thirty, did make certain declarations and resolutions, which are set forth in the reports of the said conferences. . . .
> And whereas it is meet and proper to set out by way of preamble to this act, that inasmuch as the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, and as they are united by a common allegiance to the crown, it would be in accord with the established constitutional position of all the members of the commonwealth in relation to one another that any alteration in the law touching the succession to the throne or the royal style and titles shall hereafter require the assent as well of the parliaments of all the dominions as of the parliament of the United Kingdom.

The words there to which I direct attention are, first, "the crown is the symbol of the free association of the members of the British commonwealth" and, second, "they are united by a common allegiance to the crown." Compared with the language used in the declaration of 1926 we have only a reversal in words; that is, the allegiance to the crown is first and the free association is second.

All the nations that comprise the commonwealth, Canada, Australia and the others, agreed to the preamble to that statute. It is true that the present Prime Minister was the head of the Canadian delegation at the time of the declaration of 1926. It is true that another government was responsible for the acceptance of the preamble in the Statute of Westminster in 1931, following the conference of 1930. But I point out that running through the whole, from the beginning of the conference of 1926 which had to deal with these matters because of the conditions in South Africa, is the commitment to a free association between the members of that commonwealth. I always like to refer to it in terms of a family. It may well be that many hon. members do not quite accept that view, but I have always thought that we might refer to this commonwealth of nations composing the British Empire as a family. Some might say it is more a partnership than a family, but I like to think that the members of the family are of varying ages and that they represent different forms of development of our common civilization.

The oldest member of the partnership, or the head of the family if you will, is Great Britain. We are the senior dominion, the other dominions being junior to us, and this family is scattered throughout the world. The partnership extends over the world, and freedom of association upon which the declaration is predicated is a freedom that, in my judgment, contemplates consultation. It contemplates solidarity; it contemplates unity of purpose and harmony, and it contemplates unity of action. That is how I have thought of this family, this partnership of ours in which we share with the oldest member of the partnership certain obligations and responsibilities; in which the oldest member, by reason of her great age and her long series of accomplishments, is looked to by us, as the minister speaking for the government said the other day, for support on the Atlantic; just as General Smuts down in South Africa said, we have told the other members of this commonwealth that we can care for our part, South Africa, on land, and we rely upon the other member of the family or partnership, namely Great Britain, to supply the navy. That is what we are doing here. But this, in my judgment, involves consultation. It involves not criticism after the event. It involves in every question that affects the well-being of the Dominion of Canada as a world entity consultation with those other entities which comprise the British Empire or the British Commonwealth of Nations.

That consultation at times is difficult; it is not as easy as some people suggest, and I am not for a moment minimizing the difficulty. But in these modern days of wireless telegraphy, in these days of the telephone, it is not very difficult to maintain communication between every member of this family, between every member of this partnership. I recall that at the imperial conference in London the Prime Minister of Australia was frequently in communication by telephone with his government. I recall that I was able to speak from Cape Town to Ottawa, without difficulty. I know how frequently we are in communication with Great Britain by telephone and by other means as well—because government communications on the wireless have priority.

These consultations should be held and should be maintained, as I say, antecedently to action being taken, so that the free association, referred to in the extract of the letter of Sir Austen Chamberlain which I read this afternoon, which indicates responsibilities and duties, should not be lost. That is what I meant when I said that the foreign policy of Canada has been determined by the unanimous action of governments—in 1926, in 1930 and by the Statute of Westminster in 1931. But how that policy shall be carried into effect is a matter with which successive governments must deal. I think it is so abundantly clear as not to require discussion—the mere statement is sufficient—that the foreign policy of the government is not made by parliament antecedently to being a policy. I wonder if my right hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) does not at once realize that the foreign policy of this country has been made by the governor in council and approved by this parliament during the last eighteen months?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I do not know, but I should like my right hon. friend to illustrate what he has just stated, namely that the foreign policy of Canada was determined in 1926, meaning that from 1926, on, we have had to abide by the foreign policy which is framed in Great Britain.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no, not at all.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Then what does my right hon. friend mean?

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure the right hon. the Minister of Justice is far too astute to assume that I would even suggest anything of that sort. I have already indicated to him that Great Britain is not making our foreign policy. I have indicated to him that we are not making Great Britain's foreign policy. But I have endeavoured to point out that in 1926 we undertook to be freely associated with one another, and that free association means just what it says—consultation, understanding and cooperation. That is what it means. I am not going to redevelop that point, but I would point out that we have a declaration of what we received, and the conditions under which we accepted it, namely that we are united in our allegiance to the crown and freely associated together as members of this commonwealth of nations, which sometimes I have referred to as our family.

The method of giving effect to a foreign or external policy is one which varies with the government which gives effect to it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The foreign policy itself is a method. The foreign policy of the country is the aggregation of the measures and methods by which that country is dealing with another country.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. I think perhaps my right hon. friend misunderstood me. For instance, we are the Dominion of Canada; we have imposed upon us the obligation to maintain its status and its integrity. The methods to be devised to accomplish that end vary with governments. Some practise one method and others practise another.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is different from a foreign policy.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Oh, yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It just falls within the ambit of my statement, namely that we in 1926 and 1930 made a broad and comprehensive declaration. That declaration involves (1) common allegiance to the crown and (2) freedom of association of the members of that commonwealth. That is the broad declaration. How Canada may desire to effect that purpose is a question that we shall describe as the foreign policy of the government. But the foreign policy of the government can never be antecedently declared, and no one has learned that better than the Prime Minister with his wide experience; for he established this afternoon that the government had passed orders in council dealing with questions of foreign enlistment, with questions connected with neutrality, and with questions of exports.

All these are matters on which the executive, the advisers of the crown, take action. These policies are the policies of the crown. His majesty's government in Canada assumes the responsibility for making the proper recommendations, and the orders in council that are passed are the visible evidence of that policy. Then it is for parliament to declare whether or not that policy meets with its approval. The Prime Minister knows that not only have those policies to which I have referred met with the approval of a majority in this house, but in the main they have been commended unanimously, because they represent the considered opinion of both the larger parties, and many members of the other parties in the house.

For instance, no one has heard a complaint from any hon. member with respect to the order in council concerning foreign enlistment passed by this administration. Then, with respect to the type of goods which might be exported we know there have been some comments and some criticisms on details—concerning nickel, lead and copper, with which the Prime Minister dealt this afternoon—but on the principle involved there has been general unanimity. Questions of licences, questions of authority, questions of limitations and of prohibitions—all these are questions to which the executive—and, mark you, the executive are the advisers of the crown—have given effect by order in council. And they have risked the approval of this house by their action. They have never had reason to contemplate any possible difficulty on the score, because they have always secured it.

That is what I mean when I endeavour to make it clear that foreign policy cannot be anticipated. It is quite clear the Prime Minister was right this afternoon when he said that you cannot declare the details of your foreign policy in anticipation. I have heard some suggest that it could be done, but obviously that is impossible. Why? Because from day to day events occur which necessitate the cabinet meeting together and discussing and considering just what action shall be taken, whether or not this or that shall be done, or whether some other action should be taken. All these are questions which the executive, the advisers of the crown, must consider. And they finally conclude to give their advice. That advice is not the advice of one man; it is the advice of the government as one government, the government as a whole, the advisers as one of the crown. Upon that you have your indication of policy. I submit there can be no successful denial of that fact. Every day this government has been formulating its foreign policies. It has been formulating its policies external to Canada and within the British Empire by orders in council, by the advice tendered and reduced into form by those orders in council. This parliament, if it had so desired, could have taken action to indicate its disapproval of the action thus taken. It seems to me that is the basis of the whole of our position.

It is quite obvious, without tiresomely reiterating and restating it, that with respect to most nations of the world this country cannot develop a foreign policy until we are in position to be recognized as a power, about which I shall speak again when the estimates of the Department of National Defence are under consideration. All the nations of the world, even those with populations half that of ours, even those with populations one-third that of ours, have found it esential to provide themselves with those means which are necessary for self-defence. That is the reason why you find them able to speak through their consular agents at various places, whereas we have none. We have our trade commissioners, but we have no consular agents. We rely upon the assistance given by other members of the British commonwealth to help and sometimes even to guide us in our new ventures or endeavours. It seems to me that is all that need be said so far as those factors are concerned.

I should like to summarize my own appreciation of the situation, and I think I can do this by stating a few propositions. First, it is the duty of government from time to time, in the light of facts as ascertained, to determine its policy and to submit that policy to the judgment of the House of Commons, within which at all times it must be able to command a majority. Second, with respect to matters affecting our external relations with foreign powers, as well as with other members of the commonwealth of nations, I submit that we have committed ourselves, and properly so, to consultation and cooperation. From free association there arises the duty and responsibility of consultation, cooperation and maintaining at all times the fullest possible information with respect to every matter that has to do with the welfare of the Canadian people in connection with foreign countries. And with respect to the nations that comprise the commonwealth, the same may be said, although it is impossible that the same results may accrue in the one case as in the other, from failure so to do.

The third proposal is that so far as it lies within our power, having regard to the obligations of free association which we have assumed, we should maintain our neutrality to the fullest possible extent, remembering that there can be no neutrality, in so far as being involved in conflict is concerned, where any part of this commonwealth of nations becomes involved in war. And lastly, that participation in any conflict always rests with parliament, which means the people. But no action that we can take while still remaining within that empire or within the commonwealth will preclude or prevent those who are opposed in conflict to the empire or to any part of it from taking such steps against us as they may be advised and think desirable as belligerents.

I conceive this to be not an unfair statement of our position. Far be it from me to indicate that it is a policy. It is not a policy at all in the narrow sense of the term because I have pointed out that policy changes from day to day in the light of events that control policy. But it is a broad statement of the position which the Dominion of Canada occupies in the northern half of this continent.

We have our alternative. We have always had an alternative. There is no power that keeps Canada within the British Empire or within the commonwealth of nations. Canada has had the right to withdraw from the British Empire, and successive British statesmen have said that if we so desired they would not raise a finger against our starting our own household and setting up our own establishment. It was said as far back as the days of Mr. Gladstone and it was said at one time by Disraeli, who modified his statement in his later days. It has been said by more modern statesmen. But let it not be forgotten for a single moment, that this must be the free choice of the Canadian people. For myself, I do not believe that in my lifetime they will make such a choice. I cannot speak for another generation.

I believe we were endowed with riches that were purchased at great price by men who gave their lives and their treasure to accomplish these things. It must not be forgotten for a single moment when we speak of our great mineral resources, as the Prime Minister did this afternoon, that at one time they were the property of the crown in the right of the sovereign at Westminster. But when the sovereign sent his representative abroad with the commission in his pocket to govern any part of his dominion, before confederation, he had the power to alienate the land, the mines, the resources, and he alienated them to those who were entitled to them under regulations made, not in London or "Downing street," but by his advisers in Canada.

So we Canadians were given this heritage. England, about which some critical reference was made by a gentleman not long since, spent not thousands but millions of pounds on fortresses and guns and ships, for instance at Esquimalt and at Halifax. Those fortifications were paid for by the British taxpayer. In the year after confederation—I will go back just to that year—the British taxpayer provided more money for the construction of defences in Canada than we did for many years afterwards. It is within my memory when British garrisons were withdrawn from Halifax and Esquimalt. I can recall also when the north Atlantic squadron ceased to be based on Halifax.

These were contributions made by the British taxpayer to the maintenance of Canada. These vast expenditures were the free gifts of the British people to those who settled and made here a new home. That leaves out, of course, the part of the province of Quebec where French sovereigns had made grants long prior to that time, which of course were recognized, at least to some extent, by the treaty of 1763.

So we to-day still have the choice—unity in common allegiance to the British crown, freely associated as members of the British Commonwealth of Nations or, for a time, an independent nation. And I believe, sir, rightly or wrongly, that as we preserve and maintain that association, so we shall assist in preserving the peace of the world.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me say that I appreciate keenly the difficult position in which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is placed in these critical times. He must carry a very heavy responsibility. I congratulate him upon the general survey of the international situation which he gave in the earlier part of his speech this afternoon. It seems to me that the debate to-day marks a decided advance in the conduct of the affairs of our country. I have known sessions when the estimates of the Department of External Affairs were passed without any discussion whatever. Surely we have passed beyond the stage where that ought to be possible.

The speeches which have been given thus far in the debate by the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) reveal very divergent points of view with regard to what ought to be the foreign policy of this country. It seems to me that nothing is gained by minimizing the differences which exist in Canada. The Prime Minister speaks about the policy of his government being one of peace and friendliness. Well, I assume that we can all subscribe to that, but as soon as we begin to get down to concrete cases we shall differ very widely indeed. I would urge that to-day phrases are not enough; that the situation is too serious, and that we must try to outline much more definitely than we have yet done what is to be our policy in future. Personally I am inclined to think I would be much nearer the policy of the Prime Minister than to that of the leader of the opposition, —I was going to add, if I knew what the Prime Minister's policy really was!

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would, however, say very frankly that I appreciate the forthright way in which the leader of the opposition has set down his policy. We know where he stands; and I think it is time that the whole country knew where the government stood as regards this and also some other matters.

There was one thing said by the Prime Minister which, I think, was advanced for the first time, and that is that foreign nations are not likely to pick out Canada for attack. I am glad he has taken that position, because in a great many quarters the main reason for an enlarged defence program has been that we might be attacked in force by Japan or by some other nation located a long distance away. If the Prime Minister is correct, we may very well ask why we should have any very considerable defence in this country, and we should require that what defence is necessary in the opinion of those who advocate defence, should be limited to one particular kind.

The Prime Minister, I thought, stated one matter very clearly when he asked, are we likely to be drawn into war through our connection with the league? And he came to the conclusion, after considerable argument that he did not think we would be. I might point out that if we in Canada interpret in future our obligations as lightly as we have done in the past, I can easily understand that the keeping of our obligations is not going to get us into any difficulty. However, that was the conclusion arrived at by the Prime Minister.

But there was another proposal which he did not put quite so clearly, and that, is this: Are we likely to be drawn into war through our connection with the empire? For me that is a much more important question. I think the leader of the opposition is right when he said that that is the vital point. Yet that point, in my judgment was evaded, consciously or unconsciously, in the Prime Minister's speech, and that is the thing which sooner or later will have to be settled. It is all very well for the Prime Minister to say that the solution of our relationship to the empire has been worked out so far as peace time is concerned, and he has no doubt that some solution as to our relationship to the empire in war time will also be worked out. But it is going to be a great deal more difficult than that, and now is the time to set up whatever machinery is necessary or to come to whatever understandings are necessary so that, if war should come, we should at least know where we stand.

I am not sure that the leader of the opposition is right when he says that there are simply two alternatives—either that we must be wholly in the empire or that we must withdraw. As a practical matter, I do not believe that we are faced with these alternatives, but I do urge that the present relationships between the dominions and the United Kingdom are very unsatisfactory and may lead at any time to considerable difficulty. If we do not propose to participate actively in another war, that is, if we are not, to use the Prime Minister's phrase, going crusading again to Europe as we did in 1914 to 1918, then we ought to advise Great Britain to that effect and to do so now. That should be clear-cut. If the British depend upon Halifax or Esquimalt as ports into which their ships may come and we declare our neutrality, what will be the situation? There will be a complete mix-up which neither we nor any other nation will understand. It seems to me that the first step which should be taken now if we are indeed a thoroughgoing autonomous nation is to ask Great Britain to revise the agreement with regard to Esquimalt and Halifax and make these entirely Canadian ports. Then we shall be in a better position to say whether or not we wish to maintain our neutrality.

The Prime Minister praised the policy of Great Britain since the war. I shall not attempt in the time at my disposal to enter into that matter; but from my standpoint, I suggest that Great Britain's policy since the war, like the policy of all the great nations, has been one long succession of blunders. I do not think we can very well study the history of Europe since the war without coming to some such conclusion. The Prime Minister is quite right when he says that the war did not end promptly when peace was concluded. The war has not yet ended. If we had been wiser we would have taken a different course. The last war sowed the seeds of the war that is to come.

If I understand the Prime Minister aright, he rather deprecated that in this country there should be discussion of United Kingdom affairs. I cannot quite understand that. If he is going to praise the United Kingdom and suggest that everything it does is for the best, then surely some of the rest of us who have different opinions have a perfect right to voice these opinions, and that more particularly when the action of the United Kingdom, under the conditions that now exist, may drag us into another war.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have never tried to put any bar upon discussion of any question in this house. I have repeatedly said I hoped that the tone of discussion would be such that it would not embarrass very critical situations in other parts of the world. That is the extent to which I have tried to direct discussion. I have no objection, if my hon. friend thinks it best to criticize British policy, present or past, for him to do so; but so far as I am personally concerned, and speaking for the government, I feel that in the light of the knowledge we all have of the situation as it is in Europe to-day, we cannot be too careful of the manner in which we express our criticisms.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite agree with the Prime Minister in that statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is all I suggest.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, if that is all, then we agree; but I certainly thought the Prime Minister meant something more than that. In this connection I think he meant more than that. I am quite sure that what is in the back of his mind is more than that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not reflecting on the Prime Minister, and hon. members need not take me up in that way. My point is that the Prime Minister is constantly taking the position that we, a comparatively small nation, must take a back seat with regard to the affairs of the empire and in the league at Geneva.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No; my hon. friend is quite wrong; I will tell him what is in the back of my mind. What is in the back of my mind is what I read in the dispatches I receive from day to day, sometimes many in a day, all of which emphasize over and over again the extraordinary and exceptionally critical nature of the European situation. That is what is in the back of my mind when I suggest to hon. members to be very guarded in what they say, lest the word spoken here may carry a very different or unfortunate interpretation in other parts of the world.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I quite appreciate the position taken by the Prime Minister in that regard, but I should like to emphasize what is in the back of my mind.

An hon. MEMBER: There is nothing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, there may be nothing, though in that case it would be hard to express it. I do urge that if the leader of the opposition is correct—and I think he is—that if Great Britain is at war Canada is automatically at war, whether or not we participate actively, then we ought, as a more or less autonomous nation and having in our population an intelligent people—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Not more or less, but autonomous.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Autonomous, if you like, and with a population of intelligent people. Under these circumstances we ought to be able to discuss these affairs that concern the welfare of the empire and have some part in them, at least so long as we remain a part of the empire. I do not think we can be both in and out of it; that is what I want to emphasize to-night. But as matters stand we do not quite know where we are.

So far, external affairs and military defence have been very closely related. The time may come when they will be entirely separate, when external affairs will not involve military defence; but to-day they are inextricably involved. I regret that we had the defence estimates introduced this year before we had the discussion on foreign affairs. It seems to me the proper order was reversed, and already we have had to some extent a discussion of external affairs. I will refer to some of the debates of the last few weeks. The hon. member for Beauharnois-Laprairie (Mr. Raymond) says that he will vote for the defence estimates on two grounds. In the first place they are $2,000,000 less than those of last year though they are still $34,000,000. I have some sympathy with him so far as that is concerned, and choosing the lesser of two evils I should have to vote with him for the smaller estimate. He refers to the Prime Minister's stand at the imperial conference and feels confidence in voting defence supply. I wish I could be so reassured. It may be true that, as the Prime Minister has said, we are under no very definite commitments; yet I can hardly help thinking that the very close relationships which exist between our departments and the British departments must almost inevitably involve us in certain responsibilities.

Take the matter of war munitions. We are now making preparations, I understand, for our Canadian factories to ship large quantities of munitions to Great Britain. It is being quietly assumed that Canada is to become an arsenal for Great Britain. That is a very important question of foreign policy, which was not touched on by the Prime Minister and has not been considered by this house. Before long we shall have vested interests at work on the side of war; Great Britain will be looking to us to carry out certain obligations. Again, I have no definite idea why all this gold is being shipped here. I can conceive that probably credits will be needed in this country. Through these international arrangements, whether we like it or not, we are already taking on obligations. Hence it does not mean a great deal that the Prime Minister of Canada says that Canada has no definite commitments. The people of this country and parliament should know definitely where we stand in regard to these matters.

Consider the statement made by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). The Globe and Mail's summary of his speech was, "Canada must stand with Britain." I ask him, is that a fair summary of his speech? He was speaking not for himself but for the government. It is a catchy slogan. But one might ask, which Britain must Canada stand with—the Britain of Chamberlain, the Britain of Eden or the Britain of the Labour party? They represent three very different types of thought in Great Britain to-day. "Canada stands with Great Britain." Has Canada no opinion of her own? We ought to know that. Otherwise it is a case, as in the last war, of "Ready aye, ready." Is that the position at which we have arrived? Has the Liberal government taken that stand? If it has not, I would like the Liberal government to say so.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): My hon. friend is wrong in his history. "Ready, aye, ready" arose in 1923, in connection with the Chanak incident.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I believe that is correct.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): And the government of the day was not "ready, aye, ready."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is quite true. But I say, have we reached to that point? Is that to be our policy? Let me instance another reaction to the statement of the government's policy, an editorial in the Montreal Daily Star of March 25. The article stated that we had had a formal statement of government policy, and says:

> It officially recognized several definite facts which the isolationists, the purblind pacifists and the whole fat-headed fraternity of confused thinkers commonly refuse to recognize . . . it is only fair to recognize the political courage of the ministry of Mr. Mackenzie King in going as far, as fast and as steadily as it is.

So apparently the Prime Minister and French Canada are no longer isolationists, but we are going as far and as fast as we can in the imperial direction. That is apparently the view of the Star, founded upon what was said here a few weeks ago. The same issue of the Star quotes Earl Baldwin:

> Our frontier no longer is at the cliffs of Dover, but at the Rhine.

I would ask, Where is Canada's frontier? Is it the Atlantic or the Pacific, or is our frontier going to the cliffs of Dover, or some other external point? Is it going to be outside of our own geographical boundaries? When I study the details of our defence estimates I have to ask myself that question: Are our frontiers to be the Atlantic and the Pacific, or are we preparing, if occasion arises, again to send troops overseas? After listening carefully to what the Prime Minister said this afternoon, I confess I am still at a loss to know just what our foreign policy is.

I read again a few weeks ago that lengthy speech which the Prime Minister made last year. I shall refer to it, if briefly, rather than to to-day's because I have not the copy of to-day's speech at hand. In truth I do not see that there is any great difference in the point of view expressed this year and last year.

The Prime Minister referred to our obligations under the League of Nations, and spoke of the failure of the league. Referring to the pact of Paris, he said that the nations which were parties to that instrument agreed from that time on to renounce war as an instrument of national policy. He considered that our relationship to the league had become a liability rather than anything else. He took the position that certain nations put no faith in contracts. "Some nations avowedly are placing their confidence in might, not in right; in force, not in reason." He then stated, as he repeated to-day, that economic sanctions would inevitably lead to military sanctions. He spoke of the league in these words:

> But a league which in the light of the developments of the last few years continues to place its reliance on force is going to be a very different institution from that which most of us have conceived the league of nations to be.

If I understand those statements aright, the Prime Minister has come to the rather curious conclusion that since it is wrong for the league to use force it is right for the individual nation to use force. He has apparently come to the conclusion that since some nations have failed to live up to their obligations we should follow suit. I recall a passage in the book of Psalms commending the man that sweareth to his own hurt, and changeth not. I agree with the leader of the opposition when he deprecates the way in which Canada, with other nations, has regarded her obligations so lightly. The Prime Minister I think would take this position; that since, according to Doctor Dafoe, whose words he quotes but whose advice he does not follow, we are back to a conception that excludes all considerations of morality in international relationships, we should, to use the Prime Minister's own words, take cognizance of our obligations in the light of the world situation as it is to-day. I confess that smacks very much of the words which were used recently by Lord Halifax in rejecting the appeal of the former Emperor Haile Selassie who came to make a last plea that the nations would honour their obligations. In that connection I noticed a remarkable statement in the Winnipeg Free Press. I have not been able to get away from the set-up of this page:

> Death knell of a nation.
> "May God forgive them."
> The garden of Gethsemane could not have been more bleak and forbidding than was the council chamber of the League of Nations yesterday when a cold and hostile "family of nations" rejected the last, cogent appeal of a fellow member for consideration at the bar of international justice—an appeal that the nations of the world keep alight the torch of collective security by withholding provision for the honourable recognition of the most dishonourable act of aggression in modern times. But the nations, with two notable exceptions—New Zealand and China—turned their backs on the pathetic, despairing figure of Emperor Haile Selassie of ravaged Ethiopia, too ill himself to deliver his speech but seated there in silent solemnity in the very place once occupied by Italy—and instead they cleared the way to extend the hand of good fellowship to gloating Benito Mussolini of imperial Rome.

And these were the words that were uttered before the blinded Goddess of Justice.

On the one side are set the words of Selassie, and on the other the words of Lord Halifax. At the foot of the special article appear these words from holy writ:

> And He, bearing His cross, went forth into a place called the place of the skull . . . where they crucified Him.

This is one of the few times in the recent history of Canada when I have seen the public press take the stand that something like personal morality must be carried into the realm of international affairs. In that connection I am glad to say that the representative of one British dominion did not agree. Mr. Jordon of New Zealand had this to say:

> This is a return to the laws of the jungle. . . . We sometimes seem to be but little different from brutes. . . . The plan is a direct denial of collective responsibilities which are a fundamental part of the league.

I do not know what part Canada took; so far that has not to my knowledge been divulged to us, but I wish I could have held up this paper to-night and said that Canada had stood out on that occasion as New Zealand did.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is a good explanation. Canada is not a member of the council; New Zealand is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the minister give us a statement as to what the position of Canada is and has been in that regard?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Make your speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am trying to make it, but I should like to know that. It would certainly help me to make my speech.

With regard to empire obligations the Prime Minister said to-day what he has said previously, that he was not in a position to bind Canada to anything; that each member of the commonwealth must decide the nature and scope of its defence policy. Yet the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie) is prepared to accept the assistance of the British fleet, as was mentioned by the right hon. leader of the opposition. The minister declared:

> . . . it is only fair to say that to-day the main deterrent against a major attack upon this country by a European power is the existence of the British fleet in north Atlantic waters. . . . Just as the British navy on the Atlantic is our greatest security in that quarter so I think it might be reasonable to assume that in a major conflagration we should have friendly fleets upon the Pacific ocean. . . . Our major defensive buffer on the Pacific coast is not the Pacific ocean alone but the existence there of friendly fleets.

Last year, when I attempted to suggest that Canada was particularly favourably situated and that we need not expect an attack because we had Great Britain on the one side and the United States on the other, who in their own interests would prevent any major nation from attacking Canada, the Prime Minister said we must not sponge. If my statement was an advocacy of sponging, I wonder what about the statement of the Minister of National Defence. The Prime Minister then said:

> I submit that sponging by a nation is, in the eyes of other nations, exactly the same as it is in the case of individuals.

Yet the Prime Minister, who says that, looks to Great Britain and the United States to defend us in case of emergency. I quote his words:

> While it is our good fortune to have both the United States and Great Britain as close friends ready to come and help us should we ever be the victims of aggression, let us realize that if we are to look to them for help all the more we must be prepared to lend a hand ourselves, and that certainly in the defence of our country.

I should like to know exactly what the Prime Minister means by such a statement. To-day he seemed to imply that we are at the end of our "crusading in foreign countries," as he put it. Well, if we are not going to crusade in foreign countries; if we are not going to come to the aid of Great Britain in other parts of the world, now is the time to say so. I do not think it is of any great help to Great Britain if we encourage the idea that we stand behind her, while at the same time in our own minds we have decided that we will do no more crusading in foreign countries. It is these positions that seem to me so inconsistent. On another occasion the Prime Minister said, "What we are doing we are doing for Canada alone." Are we going to help the other members of the empire if they are in a tight box, or are we prepared simply to look after Canada alone? Frankly, these statements puzzle me; I cannot reconcile them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I ask my hon. friend if he can tell us in advance what the situation is going to be six months or a year hence, or even three weeks hence? How can you possibly decide what you are going to do until you know what the situation is in which you are proposing to intervene or not to intervene?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not suggesting that we can tell exactly what we may do, but I think we can and should determine our general policy. In my judgment that is not clear to-day—despite the lengthy statement of the Prime Minister this afternoon and his statement a year ago. I for one confess my absolute inability to know where the government stands with regard to our obligations to the British Empire.

Mr. MARTIN: Are we to infer from what the hon. gentleman has said that he has changed the position he took last year, that in any event and in all events—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am coming to that I believe a little later. I am discussing the Prime Minister now, and do not intend to be diverted by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). The Prime Minister said, "What we are doing we are doing for Canada alone." For a moment I want to glance at that "Canada alone" policy. A year ago the Prime Minister gave a statement of the Canadian legion which, he said, set forth the views of his administration. It read:

(4) That we, therefore, believe that it is essential that Canada should, forthwith, develop a defence policy which, in the first place, would be designed to enable us to effectively defend our neutrality in case of war and protect our trade and commerce, and ultimately enable us to defend our eastern and western coasts from aggression by enemy forces.

My criticism is that this whole policy is one of compromise. The Prime Minister says:

If we have not proposed more, if we have not proposed less, it is because of that guiding principle, we have sought to keep the country united.

I think the cat is out of the bag. If we proposed more, we would be siding with the imperialists. If we proposed less, the government would be accused of being isolationist; so there is the policy. Let me read the Prime Minister's statement again:

If we have not proposed more, if we have not proposed less, it is because of that guiding principle, we have sought to keep the country united.

It seems to me the government is refusing to take responsibility. It is all very well for the Prime Minister to say that there will be no participation in an overseas war except by the consent of parliament; but if war came, instead of maintaining unity, this country would be split from stem to stern. There is no doubt of that. It would be a reasonable thing for the government to face the question of a diversity of opinion in this country and come out with one or the other policy, instead of keeping us in suspense as to what is the real policy of the government.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Does my hon. friend want to split the country right away?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; I do not want to split the country right away; but I want to know where this government stands, and I think the country has a right to know where it stands. I suggest that the Minister of Justice, after listening to the speech of the right hon. leader of the opposition, would have no doubt where he stands. We know where he stands, but we do not know where the government stands.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I know where I stand.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That may be; I wish the minister would tell us when the time comes. As regards having a war-time election, think what would happen. We would be faced with a fait accompli, and probably we would be into a khaki election. Would that keep the country united?

I should like to direct attention to the resolution of the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil), which I think ought to be considered very carefully. This resolution reads as follows:

That in the opinion of this house the Canadian government should take such steps as may be necessary to make clear to the other members of the Commonwealth and to the world that the right either to declare war or to remain neutral, in any war that may occur, is vested solely in Canada.

I submit that is a step which we should take to clarify the situation. South Africa has done that in her Status of Union Act and Royal Executives Functions and Seals Act. Why do we not do it in Canada? I for one do not want to be dragged into another imperialistic war.

I put briefly two or three considerations, the first of which is that from a military standpoint our defence is wholly inadequate. It must be inadequate. How can we, a comparatively small country from the standpoint of population, a great, scattered country, possibly defend ourselves if, as the leader of the opposition suggested, someone were determined to come in. Let us recognize that fact. We cannot by ourselves have any real measure of security. I will go farther than that and say that to-day no nation can successfully adopt an isolationist policy. We may possibly have to do it for the moment; but I would urge that the world to-day forms a community, and we are all living more or less in that community. No nation, Canada or any other, can for long successfully adopt an isolationist policy.

Another point I should like to place before the house. I am sorry I have not time to develop these points further. I would give the warning that if another war does come, that war must mean not merely conscription of men but conscription of wealth. Let us give warning to people who to-day are profiteering out of war. Life is worth more than property. To-day we have returned men begging on the streets, while the profiteers from the last war go still unpunished.

Mr. MARTIN: Who suggested the conscription of man power?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That would come, inevitably, in another war. With that conscription there will come conscription of wealth; I mean by that not merely money, but mines, factories, stocks of goods—all titles to wealth. Gradually there is growing among our young people the realization of the truth that, after all, life ought to be worth more than property. If they are to sacrifice, others will sacrifice with them!

In one of his speeches the Minister of National Defence said:

> The purpose of the armed forces of any country, I think, may be threefold. In the first place to support peace time diplomacy.

Here we seem to be back again to the old power politics. I was told in my childhood days that the custom of shaking hands gradually developed because, if a man stretched out his open hand, he could not keep his hand at his dagger or sword. I do not know whether or not that is correct, but for the purposes of the illustration it is sufficient. We cannot genuinely outstretch our hand in the direction of peace if we keep it firmly on our dagger or within reach of our dagger. We shall have to recognize that, if we are going to bring about peace, we must go a long way in the direction in getting rid of armaments.

The hon. member for Vancouver North put it very well on one occasion:

> I consider that our first line of defence is our external relations, the foreign policy which keeps us out of war and enables us to settle international conflicts and live on terms of peace with other nations.

An hon. member asked me a little while ago as to what our policy would be. In answer I should like to read the policy of the organization with which I am connected, as adopted by resolution of the national convention of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation last year in Winnipeg:

Foreign Policy and World Peace

The imperialist powers have betrayed the principles of the League of Nations and are feverishly preparing for another war. The situation is so serious that it is no longer possible to content ourselves with vague declarations about our devotion to peace. A clear and conscious foreign policy has become of paramount importance.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the consent of the house the hon. member may proceed.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It continues:

Government policy and the people: The C.C.F. strongly condemns the secrecy with which foreign policy has been conducted by Liberals and Conservatives alike. Under Mr. King as under Mr. Bennett, it has been the practice to delay and avoid discussion of what our Department of External Affairs has been doing and of what commitments it may have undertaken. Yet upon these secret decisions may depend the lives of ten of thousands of young Canadians. Such conduct is a denial of all the democratic principles of responsible government. A C.C.F. government will take the Canadian people into its confidence on this as on other matters.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; someone says, "Oh, oh;" I feel like saying it myself. However, I shall continue reading the resolution:

Canada and the empire: At present Canada has not legally achieved complete control over her foreign policy because she is technically at war when Great Britain is at war. The C.C.F. therefore favours legislation similar to that recently passed in South Africa, which will remove the legal and constitutional obstacles to independent action by the Canadian parliament and will make it clear to the world that Canada is free to be neutral in any war, even in one in which the other members of the British commonwealth are engaged.

Mr. MARTIN: That represents a change of attitude.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This was drawn up two years ago.

Mr. MARTIN: And it represents the change of attitude.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, none at all. This resolution was passed, with only one word different, two years ago, and reaffirmed last year. I continue:

Canada and the League of Nations: The C.C.F. reaffirms its belief that the principal causes of war in the modern world are economic competition, the struggle for raw materials and markets, and the class conflicts, which are an essential part of the capitalist system. It is evident that the most socialist countries to-day are the strongest influence for peace, while militarism, aggressive nationalism and war propaganda are flourishing amongst the capitalist and fascist powers. The change from capitalism to a socialist economy planned in the interest of the people will be the best protection against war.

It is however clear that a properly organized league of nations can be of great help in organizing world opinion against war and in establishing a system of collective security to prevent aggression. The present league has failed because imperialist governments have used it as a screen behind which to play the old game of power politics. To be effective the league must provide machinery for the peaceful change of treaties; it must deal fearlessly with economic conflicts arising from trade rivalries and from the struggle for raw materials; it must work out in advance a clear policy for collective action against an aggressor; and its members must disarm. The C.C.F. will actively support any policy which aims at such developments in the league.

Neutrality: The C.C.F. believes that Canada should remain strictly neutral in case of imperialist wars, regardless of who the belligerents may be. The Canadian government should avoid all commitments in any schemes of imperial defence and should confine its defence policy to local Canadian needs.

Mr. Speaker, if the house will bear with me for just a few minutes more—and I appreciate the courtesy it has extended—I shall indicate in a few words my own personal convictions. Perhaps those convictions are more akin to a religious faith than to a political program. Yet I am convinced that they will ultimately prove to be more practical than those generally held.

I should like to adopt as my own, some words I came across written by Lord Lothian:

> The lesson of the last war is that you cannot get democracy, nor liberty, nor peace, out of a world war however noble the ends for which it is fought.

I am firmly convinced that that is true. We cannot get democracy, liberty or peace from war. Again I am firmly convinced that war settles nothing. As I said earlier in my remarks, the impending war is a direct result of the last great war. Then, one other thing—and some may not agree with me—armaments are no insurance against war. If we have a loaded gun, it is likely to go off.

I believe that there are other and more effective methods of dealing with outlaw nations. When the Prime Minister speaks of economic sanctions leading inevitably to war, I commend to him the following statement which appeared in the New York Times of November 30, 1937:

> Understandings on trade, money, and credit will serve as certain weapons against treaty breakers. . . . The sure shadow of economic starvation on spendthrift governments which cannot wage war unless we supply them, and deny supplies to their victims, can be made sufficiently effective as a deterrent without resort to the substance of sanctions or war.

I believe that to be true. We have not tried out such a policy and since the league has failed we have no machinery by which we can apply it to-day.

I urge a scientific approach to this whole problem. We are living in a scientific age and we are accustomed to get at the causes of things. There are very definite causes of war, either psychological or economic. We can do something to avoid the psychological causes of war by speaking cautiously, as the Prime Minister has advised, or by not setting up barriers to trade and immigration, as we have all been more or less forced to do. We can avoid regarding other people as lesser breeds without the law and so on, but undoutedly the main causes of war are economic in character. It is all very well for us to be proud of the British Empire; it is all very well for us to denounce little Japan—I denounce her with the rest—but after all Japan is doing only what most nations did a little earlier.

The western powers control 84 per cent of the earth's surface. Just think what that means. Great Britain controls 25 per cent of the world's population. Do we imagine that situation can go on forever? What should be our policy? First, let me urge that we must set our own house in order. Mr. Harold Burtler, director of the international labour office, says:

> War is not caused only or mainly by lust for territory or booty or prestige; it is also caused by low standards of living, by the feeling of economic insecurity, by the desire for moral or social emancipation. The founders of the organization were right when they discerned an indissoluble connection between peace and social justice.

There you have it in a nutshell—we cannot have peace until we have social justice. As the Prime Minister said recently:

> In all that pertains to justice, we must look to reason rather than to force. Let us never forget that there can be no genuine democracy where the doctrine of force prevails; neither can there be a Christian civilization.

Second, I suggest that we must act as a good neighbour. Canada has refused to submit to any scheme looking to a more equitable distribution of the world's raw materials. Canada, like most other nations, has imposed trade restrictions, which are always the cause of friction. Further, we have allowed certain groups of Canadians to profit out of the troubles of others and apparently are proposing to permit this on a more extended scale. Recently Stephen Leacock is reported as saying: "Europe's preparation for war in a cold, mean, business sense helps us immensely." Something more than a recognition that this is a cold, mean, business proposition is necessary if we would avoid the inevitable consequences of such a policy. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked." That nation which permits its citizens to profit through the miseries and bloodshed of others is headed for disaster and deserves its doom. If we want peace, we must be prepared to pay the price of peace.

Specifically with regard to the league, I would suggest that although it has been a miserable failure, we must try to build up slowly and painfully a reconstructed league. Nations must surrender what they now regard as their sovereignty. I think the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) pointed that out not long ago in a speech which he made. We can no longer maintain absolute sovereignty in a world where we are living in community. We must seek to remove the causes of friction. I do not know whether an international police force would help greatly, but I would rather have an international police force than national armies. Arrangements of this kind must be very temporary because we must depend upon something else.

With regard to the empire, it does seem to me we must recognize that the empire as we have known it was built largely on conquest. Only recently I came across an almost prophetic statement by Sir Thomas More. He said:

> Everywhere do I perceive a certain conspiracy of rich men seeking their own advantage under the name and pretext of a commonwealth.

Read J. A. Hobson's considered statement:

> The decades of imperialism have been prolific in wars; most of these wars have been directly motived by aggression of white races upon lower races by forcible seizure of territory. Every one of the steps of expansion in Africa, Asia and the Pacific has been accompanied by bloodshed.

If I can do anything to prevent it, our Canadian boys shall not shed their blood in any more imperialistic schemes—all under the guise of patriotism.

We must claim our right to be neutral. I have not time to develop this point.

Lastly, as I said before, we must be willing to pay the price of peace. We have been paying an enormous price in attempting to get security through war. Canada is one of the least armed nations, and yet we are paying an amount for war that would largely settle the problem of the unemployed in this country. We are loaded down with debt, a no small portion of which was incurred in the last war. Why cannot we learn the lessons of the past and at least seek a new way? We should be prepared to pay the price of peace.

The thing that most distresses me in my own country to-day is the fact that if we can get orders for raw materials from Japan or for aeroplanes and there is money in it, we propose to get the money. If we can get orders for British munitions, we are willing to head straight into that sort of enterprise. We want to keep out ourselves, but we are not willing to pay the price of losing any trade. It may prove to be a costly price that will have to be paid in order that we can win peace.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Whom does my hon. friend mean by "we."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We in Canada. This government has it in its power to control the activities of industry in this country. In my judgment they should be controlled.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says that we must find a new way, but is not that exactly what the League of Nations sought to do? If the new way was the best and it had the support that it had, why did it not succeed?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think we all recognize that the League of Nations did not have the support of the nations. Mr. Woodrow Wilson, who was so largely instrumental in forming the league, could not carry his own country with him. The great nations of England and France for many a year after the war took the stand that Germany must be punished. I do not need to go into all that. There were the forces on the Rhine, the ships that were sunk, the trade that was destroyed and the colonies that were taken. We were out to punish Germany. In my judgment it was the action of the great empires towards Germany that produced Hitler. One thing has led to another. If we had been a little bit stronger in the case of Manchuria, we should not have had the difficulty which to-day exists in China. However, I do not intend to go into these matters; the house has been very patient.

Undoubtedly the league has failed. The league was based on the idea of force. Perhaps centralized force for such a purpose would be preferable to the national armies which are being set up to-day, although I do not think that primarily the league should have been based upon force. However, if the league has failed, why cannot we reconstitute it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend says "we." That is the point I am trying to get at. Who is "we"?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The world.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the hon. member means the world, I agree with all he says, but if in saying "we" he means Canada I fail to see the point at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: We in Canada can give our assistance.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We always have. We have done the best we could.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; I'm afraid we have not. We have not done the best we could. We have followed almost slavishly the lead of other nations; we have not even been in the forefront in some matters which might be named. I hope the house will not think that I am trying simply to blame. I am not talking party politics at all. If the league has failed, instead of in desperation reverting to the old isolationist position, with the idea of certain groups of nations getting together, of achieving a preponderance of power and playing the same old game again, why should not we in Canada patiently and definitely set ourselves to try to discover some other way.

To-day we are living in peace alongside the great American republic to the south of us—a wonderful example of how nations can live in peace. I venture, however, to say that if cannon were placed on the international border along the forty-ninth parallel we should have trouble. We are at peace because of the very lack of any armaments or border patrols. Think of the effective work of our International Joint Commission. There is not a better example anywhere in the world of what can be accomplished through having a joint body to deal with troubles as they arise. I had intended to go further into that, but I have not time to-night. Why cannot we extend the application of such a principle?

Surely we can do something. If we cannot attain to a world wide league, which perhaps is too much to expect all of a sudden, at least we can build up very friendly relations with a number of the democratic nations, not with the idea of enforcing our own purposes and points of view, but with hand outstretched even to some of those nations whom to-day we must denounce because of their actions. Call this pure idealism if you will, but after the experience of the last war and the misery and tragedy which has come since, surely we ought to try to find some other way. If to-night I proposed to spend $34,000,000 upon a peace program, setting up a peace department, people would simply laugh, and yet, in allocating this money to defence, we are merely going along on the same old lines that in the past have led to disaster. Cannot we use our imaginations a little; cannot we begin, even though in a small way, along lines which may mean material sacrifice to us and which may even be risky? Somebody has to take risks. We take enormous risks when we go to war. Why not take some risks in an effort to bring about peace?

Mr. Speaker, I thank you. I think this is the only time that I have so far transgressed the rules of the house, but the occasion is an important one. I appreciate very much the courtesy extended to me by the house.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): I have neither the will nor the time to offer any extended observations. I merely desire to say a word in answer to one or two remarks of my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and to one remark of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I should not even say "in answer"; I am going to direct a word or two to my hon. friends.

First, I was surprised to hear the right hon. leader of the opposition commend in rather kindly terms the declaration of the conference of 1926, and speak of the obligations which he contends it involves, because of the "free association" which is mentioned in it. Those who were in this parliament in 1927 will remember that my right hon. leader and I were strongly criticized, not perhaps by my right hon. friend—for I do not believe he took part in that debate; he was absent from the house—but by the then leader, the Hon. Mr. Guthrie, and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan). The description which was then made of the work of that conference was that it was a sort of separatist movement from the British commonwealth, and far from being a bond of association, as my right hon. friend has described it to-day.

Further, after the conference of 1929 on dominion legislation, when we discussed the report of that conference in 1930 I well remember the strong words of my right hon. friend at that time with regard to its work. Of course I am not proficient in the English language, and I learned some words as I listened to my right hon. friend. I clearly recall his speech at the time because it was the first occasion when I heard the word "painter." He said that we had "cut the painter and let the mooring go"; that we were drifting from the little island in the North sea, and that sort of thing. That was the description he gave at that time of this beautiful work which now he describes as an association and which confers the obligations of which he has spoken.

Mr. BENNETT: Will the right hon. gentleman permit me? He will recall that in the Statute of Westminster we had inserted a provision that no power was conferred to amend the constitution of Canada. That was the whole point.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is right, but I do not think it has much to do with what I was just saying. We have the right to frame our own policies. We are, as my right hon. friend has said, an association of free states. He said we have to carry on the obligations of the free association. Well, "obligations" and "freedom" do not go very well together. We have the right to devise our own policy in everything; we are autonomous in matters internal and external, and that includes defence policies. I believe that I am really serving the aim of the preservation of that association, of that bond, by claiming absolute freedom in all matters of policy whether external or internal. There could be no more deadly blow to the preservation of the free association than the claim and the contention that Canada or any other dominion should be bound blindly by any policy of the United Kingdom or of any other part of the commonwealth with which we would have nothing to do.

Mr. BENNETT: Has anyone suggested that?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Well, it is really an inference. I am glad that my right hon. friend does not suggest it. If he does not, we are more in agreement than I was afraid we were. I am always pleased to be in agreement with the right hon. gentleman.

Freedom is the bond, and it is the safest guarantee of association and of union between the various parts of the commonwealth. My right hon. friend says, no criticism after the event. Well, the foreign policy of Britain is criticized there every day after it has been devised and framed. Anyone who has read the newspapers lately must have read the violent, bitter words of Lloyd George, of Mr. Attlee, and of other prominent members of the commons with regard to the measures which had been taken by the British government. Is it to be said that here we cannot even criticize the policy, that we have to accept it without having anything to do with it and without having any policy of our own? With that I cannot agree, and if my right hon. friend will permit me, I will say it is very different from the Canada-first policy which I heard so eloquently expressed in 1930.

Mr. BENNETT: And I still make the same contention.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am more Canada-first to-night than my right hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: Not a bit.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): And now a word to my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), for whose views I have every respect. The leader of the opposition is at least logical, but I cannot see the logic of the stand taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He does not like our attitude of saying nothing, doing nothing, not criticizing other countries that are invading some other parts of the world. We ought to be aggressive at least in our words, in our attitude, in our stand; but he does not want us to have anything to do with preparing to defend our own country, or with preparations to guarantee the security of our coast from attack. We will defy the world; we will challenge other countries, but we must not be ready if they take up our challenge.

There is another thing. My hon. friend says that the policy of Great Britain since the war has been a succession of blunders. I do not agree with that. Great Britain has saved the world from war at least twice. The policy of Great Britain has averted war. I have no hesitation in making that statement. I know the criticism that has been leveled against the British government on two or three occasions, and I know that criticism has been most unfair. I will allude to one of them, at the time of the invasion of Ethiopia by Italy. Great Britain has been criticized bitterly even in this parliament. I do not know whether I have the right to say something which is rather of a confidential nature, but I have heard two ministers connected with the foreign affairs department in Great Britain, in answer to a criticism made by one delegate of one dominion with regard to that very matter, make this statement: "Yes, we have done all we could to prevent war, but at a certain time when we were urged by other countries to go to war on that question, we said, 'All right, what help will you give?' And not one of them was ready to give any help." They all wanted Britain to go and wage war in a certain part of the world, but none of those who were so free to offer advice was ready to help. I say that Britain since the war has not deserved the criticism which we have heard in this house and seen in the newspapers and in other countries. I repeat, I believe with all my heart and soul that if the world has been saved from war since 1921, Britain is responsible for having maintained the peace of the world.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And it is equally true to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I think the same is true to-day. It is now eleven o'clock, and I shall conclude with this question: What is the foreign policy of Canada? The foreign policy of Canada is to keep Canada out of war; to try to keep Canada at peace; to be peaceful with all the countries of the world; to have those family relations, of which my right hon. friend speaks, with the other members of the commonwealth; to avoid offensive language towards other countries, and to save Canada for the destinies which are ahead of her.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, May 25, 1938

The house met at three o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following letter:

Ottawa, 25th May, 1938.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that the Right Honourable Sir Lyman P. Duff, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to-day, Wednesday, the 25th May, at 5.30 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. L. C. Pereira,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

PETITION

REQUEST OF HALIFAX EAST INSHORE FISHING INDUSTRY FOR RECONSIDERATION OF TRAWLER LICENSING

On the order for motions:

Mr. R. E. FINN (Halifax): I desire under this order and under the rules of the house—the rule has now been changed—to present a petition signed by 1,500 fishermen along the coast of Nova Scotia in the county of Halifax. In invoking the rule in reference to presenting petitions I desire to present the names of the petitioners, living in these fishing villages from Ecum Secum to Hubbards. I do not desire to take up the time of the house, because the business of the house should be proceeded with; may I therefore, with the indulgence of the house, without reading the names, have them become a part of the record when the petition is laid upon the table? If that meets with the approval of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett), the leaders of other groups in the house, and hon. members generally, I am content to do it in that way.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Read it.

Mr. FINN: "We, the undersigned—

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member should present his petition, and when it is presented it will be considered and he may then move, if he wishes, that it be read by the clerk at the table.

Mr. FINN: I do not propose that. I am well within the rules of the house in presenting this petition under this order. I have a perfect right to invoke the rule in order that I may read the names of these 1,500 people. But I do not propose to do that; all I ask is that the names become a part of the record in Hansard when the petition is laid on the table of the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: It will be in order for the hon. member to lay his petition on the table of the house.

Mr. FINN: With the understanding that it becomes a part of the record.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. FINN: Then I shall invoke the rule and read the names. Hon. members must take one horn of the dilemma or the other.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think it is the practice to read a petition in that way. Petitions are generally presented at the table to the clerk of the house. The other day the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) moved that a petition be read, but it was a short petition—

Mr. FINN: I do not think the length or shortness of the petition alters the rule. I desired not to keep the house from getting on with its business. If the house is agreeable under the rule that these names shall become a part of the record in Hansard I am content.

Mr. THORSON: What rule?

Mr. FINN: I am speaking under motions. I am not going to be cross-fired at by hon. members on this side of the house. It is all very well for them, living inland among the oats and hay and barley. If the hon. member is not able to look up the rule for himself I am not his clerk.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): May I draw the attention of my hon. friend to the rule—paragraph 7 under standing order 68:

On the next day following the presentation of the petition the clerk of the house shall lay upon the table the report of the clerk of petitions upon the petitions presented and such report shall be printed in the votes and proceedings of that day. Every petition so reported upon, not containing matter in breach of the privileges of this house and which, according to the rules or practice of this house, can be received, shall then be deemed to be permitted to be read and received.

In the first instance the petition should be merely presented. After it has been examined and a report has been made upon it, is the time when it will be known if the petition may be read and received.

Mr. BENNETT: It is presented first without comment.

Mr. FINN: If that is the stand of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), I am content.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. FINN: Has this assembly, this parliament, this House of Commons become accustomed to some rules other than the rules of the house? It is too bad that I seem to be in conflict with you, Mr. Speaker, so often. It is not my desire, but this is a very important matter to the people of my county.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have already explained to the hon. member how petitions are presented, and the right hon. Prime Minister has quoted the rule:

Petitions may be either written or printed, provided always that when there are three or more petitioners the signatures of at least three petitioners shall be subscribed on the sheet containing the prayer of the petition.

The next paragraph states:

On the next day following the presentation of the petition the clerk of the house shall lay upon the table the report of the clerk of petitions upon the petitions presented and such report shall be printed in the votes and proceedings of that day.

I think it is competent for the hon. member to present his petition, and then it will appear in the records of the house.

[Mr. Finn.]

Mr. NEILL: May I speak to the point of order. At page 209 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, citation 731 provides:

Every member offering to present a petition to the house, not being a petition for a private bill, or relating to a private bill before the house, shall confine himself to a statement of the parties from whom it comes, of the number of signatures attached to it, and of the material allegations contained in it, and to the reading of the prayer of such petition.

The hon. member would be within the rules if he now read the prayer of the petition, which apparently is what he wants to do.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): He has not asked for permission to do that.

Mr. FINN: I shall read this:

We, the undersigned, have assisted in circulating the attached petition and in securing the signatures which appear on the original petition of which this is a copy. The original petition has been forwarded to the Honourable, the Minister of Fisheries at Ottawa.

Dated April 30th, 1938.

Matthew Boutlier, Mushaboom.
Jacob H. Josey, Spry Bay.
Stanford Josey, Spry Harbour.
Fulton Butler, Pleasant Harbour.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FINN: These are not the names on the petition; this is conclusive evidence, before I lay the petition on the table of the house, that these are the fishermen from East and West Halifax who have interested themselves in going around, seeing the fishermen and ascertaining their views. Then I shall read this:

We, the undersigned, engaged in the inshore fishing industry in Halifax East, urge immediate reconsideration by government, of trawler licensing. Conditions in the fishing industry along this shore, definitely will not permit the addition of further burdens, if we and our families are to live. We believe the reissuing of trawler licences is a direct blow to any hopes we had for a betterment of our conditions this year. We respectfully request that immediate reconsideration be given to the licensing of trawlers, as, unless such licences are cancelled at once, it means an increase in unemployment and depressed prices which we cannot face.

We call upon our representatives in the senate, parliament and local legislature to stand by us at this time.

April 30th, 1938.

DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES

PROVISION FOR WIDENING OF CAUSES FOR DIVORCE IN CASES BEFORE COURTS

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre) moved the first reading of Bill No. 119, respecting divorce and matrimonial causes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think this bill is pretty generally known. It has been discussed for a considerable length of time in the senate. It provides for the widening of the grounds for divorce.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

PRIVATE BILL

FIRST READING—SENATE BILL

Bill No. 121, to incorporate The Roman Catholic Episcopal Corporation of Hudson's Bay.—Mr. Boulanger.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

LUCIEN DANSEREAU

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Was one Lucien Dansereau ever employed by the Department of Transport or the Department of Public Works?
2. If so, in what capacity?
3. What were his duties?
4. What was his salary?
5. Where was he employed?
6. When was he first employed?
7. Was he ever transferred from one department to another?
8. Has he resigned, or been pensioned or dismissed?

Mr. RINFRET: Return tabled.

CANADIAN NAVY—FUEL OIL SUPPLIES

Mr. LENNARD:

1. From what company or companies is the fuel oil procured that is used on the destroyers in the Canadian navy?
2. What price per gallon is being paid for this fuel oil?

CANADA-CUBA TRADE AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I noticed in the Charlottetown Guardian of May 23 the following dispatch:

Ottawa, May 22—Official sources here confirm the report from Havana that negotiations for a trade agreement between Canada and Cuba were in the offing. However, the preliminaries to such negotiations had not reached the stage where any announcement could be made.

The Havana dispatch said that an exchange of Canadian potatoes for Cuban sugar and tobacco was under consideration.

I should like to ask the government or the minister in charge if this statement is correct; and, if so, what progress has been made.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My attention had not been directed to the dispatch quoted by my hon. friend, but I may say to him and to the house that no negotiations for a trade agreement have been initiated either by the government of Cuba or by the government of Canada.

ASCENSION DAY

INQUIRY AS TO CLOSING OF CANADIAN NATIONAL SHOPS AND POST OFFICE IN QUEBEC CITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILFRID LACROIX (Quebec-Montmorency): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) if orders have been issued to close the Canadian National shops at Quebec to-morrow, on account of the fact that it is a legal holiday in that province.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): I have no knowledge of the situation, but I shall make inquiries and advise my hon. friend as soon as those inquiries are complete.

Mr. LACROIX: May I direct the same question, as far as the post office in Quebec is concerned, to the acting Postmaster General (Mr. Euler). Have orders been issued to close the post office to-morrow on account of the fact that Ascension day is a legal holiday in Quebec?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Acting Postmaster General): I am not sure that I can completely answer the question of my hon. friend, since I was given no notice of it. I can tell him that to-morrow in the province of Quebec there will be no deliveries of mail, and postmasters in the various centres are given discretion to serve the public, perhaps with a limited service in some cases or no service at all in others, as may be found desirable.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Production services—Live stock and poultry, further amount required, $24,785.

Mr. SENN: For what is the additional amount required?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): The total amount is $24,785, and the details are given at page 25 of the supplementary estimates. We find that there is an amount of $2,640 for a live stock production assistant, $2,040 for a senior live stock fieldman, $5,280 for two supervising live stock fieldmen at $2,640 each, and one senior poultry fieldman at $2,040. Then in five cases there are reclassifications and increases of salaries totalling $4,785, making a total of $16,785 in salaries. There is a further amount of $8,000 for prizes, bonuses and premiums, making a total of $24,785.

The explanations given when we were in committee before in respect to the first item apply equally to this one. The reclassification and reorganization were in progress at the time the original estimates were brought down, and these are the further amounts required as a result of the completion of the reorganization and reclassification.

Mr. STEWART: How does the total vote for these services compare with the total for similar services last year? I gather from the minister's observation that some reorganization has taken place. To what extent has such reorganization increased or decreased expenditures for these services?

Mr. GARDINER: The total amount in the main estimates for 1937-38 was $734,058. In the main estimates for this year the total is $829,170.50, or an increase of $95,112.50. That is not an exact comparison with last year, in view of the reorganization. Some of the activities are different, but that is as near as it can be traced in the estimates.

Mr. STEWART: Would the minister outline the reasons for the substantial increase in the vote. I have gathered from his statements concerning some of the other estimates that no really new activities have been undertaken, and that there has simply been a rearrangement or readjustment of duties. It now appears that there is a large increase in expenditures for practically the same work.

Mr. GARDINER: The number of services or activities has not increased, but there is an extension of service right across Canada in connection with live stock production.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Are there any new services, or have we only an extension of the old ones?

Mr. GARDINER: That is true of production. There are no what might be called new services in connection with production; it is simply a matter of extending existing services.

Mr. SENN: What are the duties of fieldmen? I understand they undertake certain work in the country, but I should like to know their special duties?

Mr. GARDINER: The men we have out in the field are overseeing or inspecting the live stock production activities in connection with swine, cattle, sheep and poultry, and they are known as fieldmen. Their work is that of inspection and giving advice to farmers with respect to improvement of herds.

Mr. SENN: I understand to a great extent they deal with live stock associations as well as with private individuals. Are those appointments to be made by the civil service commission?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; they are all made by the civil service commission, and these men deal with individuals as well as associations. That is, they are concerned with pure bred herds, and even with farmers who have not pure bred herds but are interested in improving their stock.

Mr. SENN: Will they have permanent or temporary appointments? I see in the original vote there was an increase of about $27,000 for prizes, bonuses and premiums, and in the supplementaries there is a further vote for $8,000. Would the minister explain what these bonuses and premiums, and particularly the prizes, are for? No doubt the premiums are for ram and bull enterprises, and probably bonuses would be in the same category. But I do not understand what the prizes are for. When the minister is answering, would he give the different amounts spent in bonuses, prizes and premiums.

Mr. GARDINER: The amount to provide salaries, as I stated before, is $16,785, and the amount for prizes, bonuses and premiums is $8,000. The sum of $3,000 is required in Quebec in connection with the bull premium policy. A short time ago we had suggested to Quebec that this year we would probably discontinue that policy. It is one which is carried on only in Quebec, and eastern Canada. The policy in connection with stallions is carried on in Saskatchewan, and that is the only part of western Canada in which that policy obtained. It was decided this year to discontinue those two policies. We had to make the decision between extending them right across eastern Canada, so far as the one policy was concerned, and of extending the stallion policy right across western Canada, so far as that part of the country was concerned, or discontinuing them after having tried them out for a year or two.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Why discontinue them?

Mr. GARDINER: We were giving assistance in other directions. This is a policy that extends for two years and the request was made that we pay the premium on bulls this year. When we gave notice that we were likely to discontinue this policy this year, it was pointed out to us that it would not be fair to do so on immediate notice, that we should give at least one year's notice. That was the position when we brought down the main estimates. Had it not been for that decision we would have required to include an amount of $10,000 in the main estimates. We have given notice of our intention to discontinue, and we are providing $3,000 to take care of this year's payments.

Mr. PELLETIER: What about the other $5,000?

Mr. GARDINER: Another $2,500 has to do with the Saskatchewan situation, to take care of new clubs that are being set up to take the place of the premium policy followed before.

Mr. PELLETIER: The minister has said that this decision had not been reached when the main estimates were brought down, that it was arrived at subsequently to that time.

Mr. GARDINER: When the main estimates were brought down we had given notice to Saskatchewan and Quebec that we were discontinuing these policies, and as a result of discontinuing them we did not intend to put anything in the estimates. Since then representations have been made from both provinces that in view of the fact that the premiums carry over a two year period it would be unfair to discontinue without notice. So we have given notice of our intention to discontinue, but we are making the payments for this year. The idea is that there will be no further payments under this vote in succeeding years. In Saskatchewan, so far as the horse breeders' policy is concerned, a club policy has been developed to take the place of the premium policy which is being discontinued. A further amount of $2,500 is required to take care of the additional clubs which are necessary in order that these stallions may go on the road.

Mr. SENN: I have asked the minister already how much was being spent in prizes and what they were given for. I should like to know further if the premium policy in connection with rams is being continued in Ontario and other provinces.

Mr. GARDINER: The premium policy with regard to rams is being continued. No part of this $8,000 will go for prizes. That matter was dealt with in the main estimates. This $8,000 is covered by the explanation I have just given, but the heading under which this is voted is the same as the heading under which the other was voted.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Is there the same policy with reference to hogs?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, a similar policy.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Does that apply all over the dominion?

Mr. GARDINER: There may be some variation in the different provinces, but the policy remains the same as it was previously.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Would the minister explain that policy?

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry but I have not all the details before me. In some provinces we have a distribution of sows, while in other provinces we have a distribution of boars. There are different features in the different provinces.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Is not the same policy followed in all provinces?

Mr. GARDINER: Not exactly the same. We cooperate with the provincial governments in this work. In certain provinces the provincial governments are carrying on a certain line of work, while in other provinces a slightly different line is followed. We cooperate with the provinces.

Mr. SENN: Is the same premium not paid in every province?

Mr. GARDINER: Where the purpose is the same, the premium is the same. Where there is a variation, there would be some variation in the assistance given.

Mr. SENN: I understand that the rams are graded X, XX, and XXX. Would a X ram in Ontario receive a different premium to a X ram in Quebec or Saskatchewan? Who grades these animals? How are the graders chosen? How are they paid, and how much?

Mr. GARDINER: The graders are departmental fieldmen appointed by the department for that purpose. The premium for a X ram in Ontario would be the same as the premium for a X ram in any other province. For similar work a similar premium is paid all across Canada.

Mr. PELLETIER: As a result of representations from Quebec and Saskatchewan the minister decided to continue the payment of prizes, bonuses and premiums. The minister has stated that $3,000 is needed for Quebec and $2,500 for Saskatchewan, but the amount of this vote is $8,000. Have other provinces made a similar representation and, if so, how were their cases dealt with? What was the result of their approaches to the government on the matter?

Mr. GARDINER: The $8,000 is covered by the two groups. Perhaps if I read the outline, it would give the details quite clearly. When it was proposed to discontinue the bull premium policy in Quebec, $3,000 was deducted. As it has been decided that this policy is to be continued it has been necessary to restore that amount. An amount of $10,000 was originally recommended; that is, it would require $10,000 to operate it for one year.

Three thousand dollars is the additional amount that will be paid on the first payments this year. Then, in connection with the horse breeders' clubs in Saskatchewan, provision is being made for the extension of this policy by the addition of twenty-four new clubs which have applied for assistance. These are to take the place of the premium policy which is being discontinued this year in Saskatchewan. This province is coming in under the club scheme which has been taken up by all the western provinces. It will require $2,500 to provide for this. Then we have had to provide for the payment of premiums on the services of premium stallions in Quebec, payment to be on the basis of last year's system of computation. It has been decided that the system of computation should be the same as that applying in the other provinces where the same policy is in effect. Stallions were purchased last year in Quebec on the understanding that the previous basis of computing premiums would apply on last year's services, which premiums would be payable this year. The total of $8,000 is made up by $2,500 for the stallion policy in Quebec, $2,500 for stallions in Saskatchewan and $3,000 for bulls in Quebec.

Mr. PELLETIER: Were similar requests received from any other province?

Mr. GARDINER: These changes in policies affect only those two provinces. That is why we have given notice that we are going to discontinue.

Mr. PERLEY: I notice in the monthly bulletin of agricultural statistics there appears a report of the value of live stock production in the different provinces during 1937. There appears to be a considerable reduction in the value of the production in Saskatchewan, apparently this being the only province in which there is a reduction. I assume that the field men of the department are surveying the situation there, and I should like to know if the minister could give us any report upon this condition.

Mr. GARDINER: It is true that a survey by field men is made from time to time with regard to live stock in the different provinces, and a survey in Saskatchewan showed that on December 1, 1936, the total number of cattle in the province was 1,366,200, and the number of milch cows, 612,600; on December 1, 1937, the total number of cattle was 960,400, and the total number of milch cows, 517,300. These figures show a reduction in Saskatchewan between December 1, 1936, and December 1, 1937, of 29·7 per cent in the total number of cattle, and of 15·6 per cent in the total number of milch cows.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

A survey was also made of the number in June of those two years, and it showed that in June, 1936, the total number of cattle in Saskatchewan was 1,539,000, a higher number than in December of the same year because there are always more cattle in June, the cattle being marketed between June and the first of December; and that the total number in June, 1937, was 1,441,200. In June, 1936, the number of milch cows in the province was 591,000 and in June, 1937, 563,000. This shows a reduction of 6·1 per cent in the total number of cattle between June, 1936, and June, 1937, and a reduction of 4·6 per cent in the number of milch cows between the same dates. It will be noticed from these figures that the reduction in the total number of cattle between June, 1937, and December, 1937, was 33·4 per cent, while the reduction in milch cows was 8·2 per cent. The following statement is made as a result of investigations into these figures.

It is significant that the decrease in the number of milch cows has not been nearly so great as the decrease in the total number of cattle, and that the number of milch cows is still in excess of the 480,286 reported in the 1931 census.

That is, there are still more milch cows in Saskatchewan than in the first year of the drought period.

Mr. THOMPSON: What portion of this grant will be expended on the poultry branch, and what activities are carried on in connection with it?

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there is nothing except one position having to do with hatchery work.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Reverting to the bonus policy for sires, why did the department consider it wise to discontinue the bonus policy? During the last number of years many excellent sires have been marketed at the market price, while a large number of inferior types have been used for breeding purposes, despite the desire there has been for many years to improve the standard of our live stock throughout the country. I would ask the minister to explain why the department saw fit to discontinue the bonus policy in the very years that breeders of live stock needed that form of assistance most.

Mr. GARDINER: We have a bull loaning policy in the different provinces. In Quebec we have been trying out a bull bonusing policy, but we felt that we had come to the point where we should have to make a decision as between the two policies. If we were going to continue the bull bonusing policy in Quebec we thought we should apply it to all the provinces in eastern Canada; but the opinion of the department is that the policy which is being followed in the other provinces is the one we should continue, and therefore we are discontinuing the policy in Quebec in order to bring it on the same basis with the other provinces.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Is the department discontinuing the grants according to the grade of sire under the bonus policy, under which a grant was made to all who wished to buy that quality of sire, and is that policy to be replaced by a bull loaning policy? In other words, are certain clubs and farmers to be given the use of a bull free?

Mr. GARDINER: The bull loaning policy is one under which we purchased the bulls outright and loaned them to clubs. That policy is being continued right across Canada. There is no change in that at all.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Would the minister give us some idea how many bulls are owned by the department now for bull loaning purposes?

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry I have not the number before me at the moment.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): What was the number purchased last year?

Mr. GARDINER: Last year we purchased between fifty and sixty bulls.

Mr. PERLEY: What steps are being taken to meet the serious situation in Saskatchewan because of the demand for bulls under this scheme? I understand that there have been over two hundred applications, and the situation is serious. I think some desperate effort ought to be made by the department to meet these applications.

Mr. GARDINER: We have not been able to meet all the demands in Saskatchewan. I do not imagine we have been able to meet all the demands in any province, but in view of the difficulties experienced in Saskatchewan during the last year or two we have given more consideration to that province than to any other. Applications are being made now for an increase in the number, but we are compelled to deny any increase in what we have been able to give up to the present.

Mr. ROWE: (Dufferin-Simcoe): This appears to me to be a very weak substitute for the bonus policy.

Mr. GARDINER: It is not connected with the bonus policy.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I appreciate that. But the minister has intimated that the bull loaning policy has been selected by the department as being the most helpful to the live stock industry.

Mr. GARDINER: Might I correct that? There has been no bull bonusing policy outside Quebec except in Ontario for about two years, I am informed, but that was discontinued previously. Probably it is the wrong term we are using.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): It is a bull premium policy.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no bull premium policy in Ontario, I am informed, and has not been for some time.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): It does appear to me that this is one of the most essential forms of assistance that could be given to the live stock industry, to improve the sires generally. I think we have been rather slow, under all governments, in our policy of eliminating the scrub sire, as the term is. Steps have been taken to improve sires in the different parts of the dominion, but I find that from 1930 until 1936, years when revenues were low, the department purchased annually almost 500 sires for bull loaning purposes. Now, the minister tells us, despite the report of last year stating that the continued popularity of the bull loaning policy is apparent from the fact that each year applications for assistance are greatly in excess of bulls available, just a few minutes ago we heard from the hon. member for Qu'Appelle that there are 200 applications still unfilled in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps if I just correct the statement I made a few moments ago it will have some bearing on what has been said. When the question was asked by the hon. member for Haldimand how many were purchased last year, the figure given me was between fifty and sixty. What the deputy had in mind, apparently, was the number purchased in Ontario. The total number purchased right across Canada last year was 283.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I might point out that even if the total number purchased last year was 283, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle told us just now that there are 200 unfilled applications from farmers in the drought stricken areas of western Canada who find it impossible to buy a desirable type of sire. I am quite confident that there are over 200 in Ontario who would gladly make application if they thought the sires were available. Again I would point out that 283, the number now given, is scarcely more than half the number which was provided each year from 1930 until 1936. We are told in the reports that the bull loaning policy is very popular and that there is a great increase of applications each year; yet we find the department providing only half the number to maintain a policy which they admit is very popular. I would suggest to the minister, if I can get his attention—

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; I am just looking up what the hon. member has been speaking of.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): —that his department should reconsider their administration of this important policy. As a live stock breeder I regard it as most important that assistance should be given, either by the bull loaning policy or by reinstitution of the premium policy. It is fundamental and basic to the agriculture industry, especially the live stock industry. If we are to meet the market demands which have been spoken about in this chamber we must do it by producing the highest class products, and it seems to me to be a very retrograde step that, while the premium policies are discontinued, bull loaning policies, admitted to be popular and leading to increased demands for such assistance, are to be carried on to only half the extent which obtained in more difficult years. I should like the minister to explain as well what progress has been made by his department with reference to the record of performance clubs for pure bred cattle, and also the advanced registry for dairy sires.

Mr. GARDINER: On the question of the numbers that have been supplied from year to year, I wish to give the following figures:—

Year	Number	Average cost
1933..	348	$121
1934..	403	129
1935..	394	132
1936..	299	133
1937..	283	143

The figures indicate that, while there has been some variation, it is not as great as has just been intimated. The total number in 1933 was 348, and last year, 283.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): If I have been unfair in stating that it was nearer 500, I wish to explain that I took my figures from the minister's report for the year ended March 31, 1937, where it states that:

> The continued popularity of the bull loaning policy is apparent from the fact that each year applications for assistance are greatly in excess of the number of suitable bulls available for purchase by the department.

[Mr. W. E. Rowe.]

Further it states that the purchase of some 2,800 bulls of approved type and quality has been made since November, 1930.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. If you go back to 1930 and follow it right through from that year those total figures would be correct. I note that the hon. member has apparently averaged the figures from the beginning. But in establishing a policy of that kind you would have to put out more bulls per year, and many of the bulls the hon. member has spoken of, that is of the 2,800, are still in service. After the policy has been in operation a few years and these bulls have been established it is not necessary to change them all year by year, or even to purchase as many as you would purchase in the earlier years. The demands are not all being met in any of these services. It would require a great deal more money than I have been able to get through the house for these services if we were to try to provide for all requirements in connection with every service.

Mr. PERLEY: Would the minister give us the number of applications from Saskatchewan in 1935, 1936 and 1937, and how many bulls were supplied?

Mr. GARDINER: The number placed in Saskatchewan last year was 65, in Manitoba, 61, and in Alberta, 78. That is a year ago.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the minister give us the other years?

Mr. GARDINER: In 1936 in Saskatchewan, 70; in 1935, 101; in 1934, 123; in 1933, 97.

Mr. HAYHURST: Does that apply to all breeds? That is all the breeds are together?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, that is the total for all breeds.

Mr. PERLEY: Following out a policy of that kind will certainly decrease the production in Saskatchewan. Only about half as many were supplied last year as in 1935.

Mr. GARDINER: 1934.

Mr. PERLEY: Just half what there were in 1934. I should like to point out another thing. The figures the minister gave us with respect to the comparison between 1936 and 1937 of the number of cattle and the number of cows give a percentage reduction in 1937 in cattle, of 29·7 per cent, and in cows, of 15·6 per cent. There was a reduction in cattle of 406,000 and in milch cows of 95,000. The reduction in milch cows amounted to about twenty-five per cent of the total reduction in milch cows and cattle.

Mr. GARDINER: From June to December 1, 1937, the reduction in cattle was 33·4 per cent and in milch cows 8·2 per cent. That is the period during which we were handling the cattle last fall.

Mr. SENN: I am in accordance with what was said by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) about the importance of this policy and the need for better sires not only in Saskatchewan but throughout the dominion. The report of the department for the year ended March, 1937, states that each year the applications for assistance are greatly in excess of the number of animals available. I believe that animals of all breeds are purchased, and it seems almost incredible that the department could not have found more than 280 bulls suitable for this purpose in 1937. I know of many occasions on which these animals were sent to the stockyards simply because there was no market for them for breeding purposes. I cannot understand why the minister is unable to furnish more money for this purpose. Bulls for breeding are always bought in the early months of the winter, before the estimates are brought down. I am sure money is spent for many other purposes less important than this. What are the determining factors that lead the department to refuse one application and accept another, and who makes the decision?

Mr. GARDINER: Answering the last question first, the general policy is that where the department after investigation is of opinion that the persons concerned are able to and properly should provide their own bulls of proper grade and standard, the department does not undertake to place a bull in that community. The policy really applies in the more outlying districts and places where it is difficult for people to get the services of a high grade bull, and where they are beginning the establishment of herds. Once those herds are established it is not the policy of the department, and never has been, to try to do all the work in connection with raising the standard of cattle.

Mr. SENN: Does the minister suggest that all these applications from outlying districts are filled?

Mr. GARDINER: That is the basis on which they are considered. They might not be what some people would call outlying districts, but districts in which, perhaps because of difficult circumstances, people are starting in to raise such types of cattle for the first time. In connection with this vote, there is an additional amount of $5,446 which would provide for the purchase of about thirty more bulls this year than a year ago. Many of the bulls being put out this year would be purchased out of the estimates of last year. This estimate will be for purchases to be made in the winter months of this year for putting out next spring.

Mr. SENN: There comes a time in the life of every animal when it has to be disposed of. Does the department get any return from these animals when they have to be sent to the stockyards, or what disposition is made of them when the clubs are through with them?

Mr. GARDINER: While the bull is of service he is moved about from place to place; he may be with one club this year and another club next year. The department uses them very much as the ordinary breeder would. When they come to the end of the period of service they are disposed of to the stockyards.

Mr. SENN: Does the department get any financial return for them; and if so, how much? Very often an animal is purchased when it is young, and when it is old it has grown to such an extent that if it realizes a reasonable price it is worth pretty nearly as much as when bought in the first place.

Mr. GARDINER: That is true in some cases, but the great majority of them will be sold as bulls at the market price, and as the hon. member knows, that varies greatly. The market for bulls, I understand, is largely for making bologna. If there is a good market for that class of animal they will sell well.

Mr. SENN: The minister has not yet told us whether the department realizes anything from these animals.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, we realize whatever the market price brings. I have not the figures here.

Mr. CHURCH: What I cannot understand about this department is that in one week we have the main estimates for production services, $829,000, an increase of $95,000, about ninety per cent being for the west and ten per cent for the east; then the next week the supplementary estimates are brought down with further sums for the same thing. There seems to be a total lack of business method in the department. The minister has a very large staff of inspectors, yet he cannot figure out in advance of the meeting of parliament how much money is wanted for these production services. In addition to $95,112 in the main estimates here is another $24,000 in item 489. Why is it? Is it because some more people come down and ask for additional services? A great many of the sober sensible people in this country wonder why it is necessary to have such an elaborate establishment in the federal Department of Agriculture—inspectors for everything agricultural, but for ten million humans no proper votes at all, people dying of diseases of all kinds, and very little help from the federal authorities—only $400,000 a year. There should be some business methods in the department. It is the lack of business methods which keeps parliament meeting month after month because the government is not ready with its program. Here is this department with a very large expenditure, and almost every item in the main estimates is paralleled in the supplementaries. I am not prepared to say that the present minister is to blame, but I object to a lot of these expenditures because there is a lot of duplication of the work done by the provincial departments. Ontario has a minister in Queen's Park doing the same things. The city of Toronto had to build an abattoir and do inspection also, so that all cattle killed could be looked after by the health department of the city. Diseased meat was found and a check-up was made by the health department of all places of sale. The city of Toronto now has to send inspectors out as far as 60 to 110 miles to guard its milk supply, and the same with cattle. You have the dominion, the province and the municipality all adding to the cost of the necessaries of life. No wonder there is complaint before these commissions of over-government and over-taxation in Canada. People are inspected to death; there are about seventy-six inspectors of fruit down in Prince Edward Island, as the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) said the other day, but there are no proper votes to guard the health of human beings. The people are inspected to death, but there are no proper health votes in regard to the health of humans. This item is to recoup the owners of cattle for their losses. If a man loses his children through some fatal disease this parliament does not give a snap of the fingers. In the main and supplementary estimates together we have three and a half or four million dollars for the health of animals. No wonder the people who pay this money are tired of having so many inspectors. These amounts provided in the main and supplementary estimates come out of the income that must be raised by taxation, and that largely comes from the industrial workers of the central provinces. They get only ten per cent of the inspection and the rest the ninety. I would far rather rely on a modern health department than on any inspectors of federal or provincial departments of agriculture. They have a small standing army of inspectors; we are falling all over them. I see them on the trains, travelling all over; I see some of them driving buggies on the highways and byways, looking at the cattle. They say to the animals, "Stick out your tongue," and so on. Is it any wonder the tax rate is going up? I saw a line up of two thousand people in the customs building in Toronto paying their income taxes just to provide fads and frills like this; one of them was the late Mr. Justice Magee, who died just last week. The income tax payers pay for all this.

What are we getting from all this? Does it help us to secure a market in Great Britain in competition with Denmark and the other countries? I would vote to strike out the item entirely if there was such a motion. In the main estimates last week there was an increase of $95,000, and now we have another increase of $24,785. That covers salaries, reclassifications and increases, travelling expenses and so on. Then we have insects; they are going to inspect insects and see if they have any diseases. We have a live stock production assistant; no doubt they need an assistant like that in Saskatchewan at the present time. Then there is a senior live stock fieldman, and $2,040 is provided for him. There is a supervising live stock fieldman; in fact there are two of them, both at $2,640, a total of $5,280. Did not the department know, when the main estimates were being made up, that these two men would be needed? We will never see them in Ontario. What do they supervise? I do not know. I suppose they supervise the inspectors; then in turn they are supervised by the deputy supervisors, and finally they come under the supervision of the department. Then we have a senior poultry fieldman; apparently a junior man would not do. There is $4,785 provided for salaries, reclassifications and increases, and the total salaries amount to $16,785. Then we have prizes, bonuses and premiums, for the star insects, the star bugs, amounting to $8,000. In my opinion this is not worth eight cents to the people who have to raise the money by way of income tax.

If this were a municipal council they would just amend these estimates by striking out the whole item. The department has had twelve months in which to get its estimates ready, and if the department did not know what it wanted it should wait until next year for this amount. I fail to see why we should have such a large department as this, with the machinery we have in the municipalities and the provinces. I believe most of these officers should be over in the health department, helping human beings. We could get along without this department at all. Let the provinces do the work. The dominion is being governed now by the provinces; almost every time a bill comes up we have to get the opinions of the attorneys general of the provinces. Some hon. members who have sat on municipal council would call these fads and frills, and would give short shift to such matters. What insect has a better right to be inspected than the insect which drove so many children from the schools last fall and which, if you can believe what the medical associations say, will drive them away again next fall? There is not a dollar in the estimates for that. On the other hand we have these items and these increases. I do not see why parliament should deal with one of these estimates one week and another similar item the following week. Surely one item should do. Let us do something to stop this over-government and over-taxation. Here is an item which I would vote to strike out, if such a motion were to be made.

Mr. GARDINER: I sometimes think it is a good thing that human beings are not inspected just as carefully as we inspect some of the insects and animals; some weaknesses probably would be found out if that were done. In reference to these estimates coming down within a week of each other, the hon. member who has just spoken is responsible for their being at least three weeks nearer each other than otherwise would have been the case. On two or three occasions very early in the session I did attempt to bring my estimates before the house on Tuesday nights, the only nights of the week when it was possible to get them in. I well remember that on one occasion the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) moved an amendment to the motion to go into supply which took up all that evening, so that it was not possible to get my estimates before the house.

That does not explain the whole matter, however. Every hon. member sitting on the front benches of the opposition knows that the main estimates have to be made up by the officials of the department in the fall of the year; that is, they are made up before the new year commences, and they are submitted to parliament very early in the session. Probably the hon. member who has just spoken was not in the house, but on three previous occasions I explained that the reason for items such as the one under consideration was that a reorganization was going on in the department and that as a result of that reorganization a reclassification of the whole service was being made by the civil service commission. Because of that we were not able to put into the main estimates all the items with regard to staffs resulting from this reorganization. Many items of that kind appear in the supplementaries.

The item now under discussion, having to do with live stock and poultry, makes provision for just such things as we have been discussing this afternoon. I have noted that all hon. members who have spoken, with the exception of the last hon. member, have held the opinion that an even larger amount should be expended under these particular estimates. I quite agree that we could do double the amount of work if we could get sufficient funds, and we could do it to good advantage. At the same time I realize that there is some force in the argument of the last speaker that we should not devote to agriculture too great a proportion of the money that is available from taxation. I should like to see the amount much greater than it is, but other ministers in charge of other departments consider their work just as important for the welfare of Canada, and of course they must have their proportions of whatever amount we feel it is proper to take from the people by way of taxation in any one year.

With regard to the question whether we are dealing with humans or merely with animals, I do not think there is an item anywhere in the expenditures for production services which does not relate closely to the human being. We investigate matters concerning insects because we know a maggot in an apple may affect its sale to the human being in Great Britain or Canada. The same applies to insects which attack potatoes, wheat or any growing crop. We investigate these matters so that the food of the human being may be preserved, and so that our farmers may be in a position to produce to better advantage.

In so far as animals are concerned, may I say that votes having to do with the health of animals are made because of their effect upon the health of human beings. We attempt to destroy tuberculosis in animals because we know the bovine tubercular germ can be transferred to the human being. That, again, is one of the chief reasons why we attack Bang's disease. Another reason is that Bang's disease affects the production of the animal. One could go right through the whole of the work done by the department in connection with diseases in live stock and cereals and one would find that all of that work is related to the human being, either because we are producing something by which the human being is fed or because the disease may have an effect upon his health. I believe it is unnecessary to dwell further upon this matter, more than to say that the work done in the Department of Agriculture is supplementary to that done in the federal Department of National Health and the provincial departments of health.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): The minister was interrupted when he began answering my question of a few moments ago concerning the progress made in advanced registration under the administration by the advanced registry board, of pure bred sires and swine. I believe a record of the performances kept by the registry board is most essential in live stock production.

Mr. GARDINER: The r.o.p. record for cattle, effective throughout Canada, provides for official supervision of production records of pure bred dairy cattle. It is only by the establishment of such records that individual sires for the development of grade herds can be determined. The record as to the number of cows tested is as follows:

April 1, 1932	11,392
April 1, 1933	11,684
March 1, 1934	12,466
April 1, 1935	12,580
April 1, 1936	13,807
April 1, 1937	15,020

The figures for herds under test are as follows:

April 1, 1932	1,578
April 1, 1933	1,500
March 1, 1934	1,634
March 1, 1935	1,652
April 1, 1936	1,716
April 1, 1937	1,805

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): What proportion of them were issued certificates?

Mr. GARDINER: The advanced registry is based on these figures, and there is a special report issued which I have not before me.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): What does the government do to encourage advanced registry?

Mr. GARDINER: We give a grant of $5,000 to the organization.

Mr. PELLETIER: Is it usual to issue a certificate of health before animals are exported?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; there has to be a certificate for all breeding stock exported.

Mr. PELLETIER: Who is in charge of that work in Quebec?

Mr. GARDINER: The work is conducted under Doctor Hilton of the health of animals branch. Doctor Langevin is in charge in Quebec.

Mr. PELLETIER: Has the minister received any complaints about the work performed by Doctor Langevin in Quebec?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; there were complaints. On one occasion he was suspended for a short time, and later reinstated.

Mr. PELLETIER: If the nature of his offence warranted suspension, why was he re-employed by the department. If his work was not satisfactory at one time, what provision was made to ensure that in future it would be carried out properly?

Mr. GARDINER: It is common procedure in the department to suspend men against whom complaints have been made, while investigations are being carried on. Sometimes during the early stages of an investigation we are satisfied a man should not be permitted to act until we have completed all inquiries. If we satisfy ourselves later on that he may proceed to do the work satisfactorily, he is reinstated.

Mr. PELLETIER: I understand that in this particular instance serious complaints were placed before the minister concerning the work done by this official. In one instance it was impossible to find him when he was needed to inspect certain cattle to be exported. The result was that these cattle had to face outdoor conditions, and remain in the yards. An investigation was held, and I believe a report was made to the minister. I was wondering if the minister had gone to the trouble of asking the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the report of their investigation, and thus assure himself that he had all the information in the matter.

Mr. GARDINER: We had all the details respecting the incident. As I recall it, there was no complaint with regard to the work done by the official; rather there was a complaint concerning a dispute he got into with some people, and a complaint as to his actions at the time of that dispute. There was no complaint with regard to his work. We had full inquiries made and satisfied ourselves that he should be given another opportunity to hold his position.

Mr. PELLETIER: Was that decision reached after a second complaint had been received, or as a result of the first one? My information is that there were two serious infractions which resulted in heavy loss to certain farmers in the district. No doubt the minister is familiar with the circumstances. However, that particular instance was permitted to pass without notice being taken, and it was in connection with the second incident he was suspended. Did the minister receive a copy of the report from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who investigated the case, or did he act simply on the advice given by Doctor Hilton at Ottawa?

Mr. GARDINER: I saw all the reports made by any one who investigated the case, including the police.

Mr. PERLEY: How many bulls came through the department under the live stock marketing scheme which operated in Saskatchewan last fall?

Mr. GARDINER: We have no record of that. They were not classified as bulls. All cattle under that scheme were classified as canners, cutters, cows and heifers for breeding purposes, and feeder cattle. Bulls would be sold on the market at the regular prices of butcher cattle.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): The government should consider giving greater assistance to the cattle industry in connection with the breeding of stock. I understand the government still has a swine policy, known as the brood sow policy.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I commend the government for the assistance given in swine production through the advance registry board and other means, but so far as the cattle industry is concerned it seems to be a more or less haphazard policy. We have heard about the bull loaning policy, but this seems to apply only to certain districts. If we are to have greater uniformity and a higher standard in our production, we must have a policy that applies more generally throughout the dominion. Some outlying districts have a few of the cheaper type cattle; others have excellent herds, but we should have a general policy that will give stimulus to the production of better live stock. I suggest to the minister that he should consider adopting a policy of sire assistance. Under the present bull loaning policy it is possible that you may have in close proximity to your club a live stock breeder still using an inferior sire. This practice affects the production of the whole district and brings down the market. There is a mixing of poor quality stock with the better stock produced under the bull loaning policy.

I believe it would be a better policy to provide assistance to any farmer who wishes to buy a good sire. Our farmers would be given encouragement to eliminate their scrub sires and replace them with pure bred stock which had been inspected and accredited by the government. I am not censuring the department for continuing the policy that has been in vogue; I am not condemning the minister and his able officials for the efforts they have made to improve our live stock industry, but I do feel that very slow progress has been made in connection with our cattle industry. The government has very little to show for the assistance which has been given in the last year or so. I have no desire to make a comparison with what was done in 1933 and 1934. The number of bulls bought for loaning purposes in those years was slightly larger than the number purchased in 1936 and 1937. The minister has pointed out certain reasons for this difference. The hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) has pointed out that certain of these sires are put up for sale, and it is quite reasonable to assume that the proceeds of these sales might relieve the department of any great expense in continuing this policy. The present policy is sectional; it assists only a certain class of farmers in the outlying districts who could be assisted just as effectively under a broader policy. As the hon. member for Haldimand has pointed out, many pure bred cattle are being sold as ordinary cattle. If we had an effective policy of providing assistance for the purchase of pure bred sires, it seems to me there would be a greater improvement in our standard. We would be able to develop a uniformly higher grade in this industry.

I suggest to the department that during the forthcoming year consideration be given to adopting a broader policy. In many districts in Ontario, in fact not far from my own district, many pure bred cattle are being shipped for slaughter. Pure bred bulls are being sold at butcher prices when farmers in the same districts are producing a most inferior type of cattle. Sometimes this is on account of their lack of judgment; they assume it to be their own business; but if we are going to compete with countries that have a more rigid enforcement of their laws and regulations, this practice must cease. Perhaps it is too much to suggest to this or any other government that there should be an absolute elimination of scrub sires in this dominion. Perhaps that drastic step cannot be taken in this country as it has been taken in certain others. It may not be considered wise to license producers in Canada as has been done in other countries, but I think we could develop a policy that could be applied more generally. We should have a policy that would be available to Tom Smith and Bob Jones, a policy that would be available to everyone. As the hon. member for Haldimand has pointed out, the present policy seems to be applied in some districts and denied in others. I am not saying it is denied for political reasons; the reason is perhaps that the department cannot afford to buy a sufficient number of pure bred sires. With a proper policy the average farmer would be encouraged to get rid of his scrub sire. With a very little outlay on his part he would be enabled to obtain a pure bred sire.

I do not think the department should be asked to provide absolutely free services to any club under a bull loaning policy. However, the members of these clubs should be given an opportunity of purchasing a sire of an accredited standard at a cost slightly higher than they would pay for a scrub sire. We could have a system of premiums, similar to that already used in the sheep and hog industries. I believe in the hog industry. I understand that under the government's breed sow policy, if a club has fifteen pure bred sows they get the use of a male hog free. Is that not right?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I commend the department for that to a degree because it is going a long way. If a farmer has the assistance of the government under that policy, he can take his own inferior type of hog to market and bring back, after careful inspection by the department, a pure bred female at no cash outlay of his own; and a similar policy with reference to the male is going a long way in cooperating with the farmer and the producer.

If a similar policy were put into effect in the cattle industry, it would mean millions of dollars annually to the dominion. I do not think an expenditure of this kind can fairly be compared, as one hon. member suggested, with expenditures for health inspection. It is really not an expenditure in the sense of some other expenditures, but rather an investment. The oldest live stock producers in this dominion appreciate the value of good herd sires, and on many occasions, as the minister knows, they have paid half the price of their total herd for a high grade sire. Whether it is for the production of pure bred sheep, swine, cattle or horses, a pure bred herd sire is most essential, and no farmer can continue to produce beef at a profit to-day—I will go that far—if he uses a scrub sire. It is unsound, uneconomical and extravagant. Any money spent by the department to encourage the use of pure bred sires should be regarded not as an expenditure but as an investment, and no greater assistance could be given to this important branch of agriculture than the inauguration of a policy that could be generally applied throughout the dominion so that cattle producers in every province who so desired might secure pure bred sires. On the other hand the minister knows full well, from his own knowledge as a farmer and from his knowledge of the department, that there are hundreds of producers of pure bred cattle throughout the dominion who find great difficulty in getting rid of their sires. I do not mean that a special policy should be put into effect for producers of pure bred live stock, but I do submit in all sincerity to the minister and the committee that if you discourage the production of pure bred and better live stock you break the very backbone of the live stock industry in Canada.

I therefore submit, Mr. Chairman, that a policy such as I suggest would cut both ways. It would not only assist the farmer to produce better live stock but encourage the pure bred cattle raisers to continue in the business. I am sure the minister is aware that to-day there are many live stock producers in the dominion, especially producers of pure bred beef cattle, who are having a very difficult time, and I know of nothing more discouraging to a live stock producer of pure bred cattle who has spent years and years in the study and production of a special strain of cattle, a strain that he and his parents before him may have studied and improved for fifty years, than to see five or six excellent young pure bred sires being sent to the market at only so much per pound, while as he drives along the road he sees at the same time scrub sires kept for breeding purposes, lowering the standard of production that he is encouraging to raise throughout the country, and thereby helping to destroy the market by destroying what I might call the national grade of the product we export.

I hope the minister will not feel that I am for a moment critical of the progress he has made in the department in this regard, because I am critical of the lack of progress that has been made under all governments during the last fifteen years. We watched our live stock markets slipping away from us from 1920 to 1930, and during all that period very little improvement was made in the live stock industry in Canada in comparison with the progress made in other countries. Independently of the political effects on his party—and, indeed, it would be all to their advantage—I do submit to the minister that serious consideration should be given at this late date to improve generally the cattle industry of Canada.

I shall say nothing further with regard to the markets we have lost. I think we have all kept pretty closely to the issue before the chair; but I submit that the production of better live stock and better cattle is at the very basis of our production of a more uniform and higher standard of beef as well as dairy products. There has been more progress made in the last year or two, especially in Ontario, and in western Canada, I believe, in the improvement of dairy herds by the advanced registry for dairy sires. While considerable progress has been made in that direction, I would strongly urge the government to reconsider its whole bull loaning policy and reinstating in its place a policy of assistance which can be generally applied, and from which therefore we can expect more general benefits, assisting not only in the production of better live stock throughout the dominion but in accomplishing the several other purposes I have mentioned.

Mr. HAYHURST: I should like to concur in some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). From observations I have made in different parts of the country I know that beef clubs which have been established in the past have done good work, but difficulty has arisen in this way: The farmers in certain areas would sometimes get discouraged, and then we found that the original policy was not carried forward. A club would sometimes start with a shorthorn sire, for example, and probably a few years later turn to an Aberdeen-Angus, then to a Hereford, and perhaps wind up with an Ayrshire or something of that kind, and then we would have a mixture and the scrubbiest of scrubs left, although the club might have started with the finest of intentions. The farmers in certain areas do not seem to realize that something should be done in the direction of the line breeding of cattle, and this applies to all animals. I have had considerable experience in these matters because I have been secretary of different farm clubs, which have had at different times sires of different breeds. This applies to both horses and cattle. The club may have started out with percheron horses or a shorthorn bull; yet years afterwards we have seen all the good work which had been started in that way spoiled by the introduction of another breed of animal entirely, and the countryside would be littered with breeds of animals entirely different from the type with which the club started. Thus the good work which has been started has been nullified.

Therefore I should like to recommend to the minister and his department at this time, when rehabilitation, especially in the west, is taking place, a policy of line breeding by community organizations, to be developed into larger districts, something like the county system which prevails in the old country, where probably two or three counties will raise shorthorn cattle, and others, which are near to large cities, will probably raise dairy cattle. Thus we would have better breeds, more uniform types from various areas, and premiums paid upon them. This seems a most opportune time to carry out a program of this kind, because we find the price of October wheat futures is down to seventy-eight cents, and if wheat goes down and the coarse grains market goes down with it, as it likely will with the large crop that is now predicted, there is going to be an abundance of feed, and we shall have fewer cattle in the west at a time when we should have large numbers. These conditions, of course, have been brought about by causes over which we have no control. However, the fact is that they have created a situation which requires dynamic direction. Throughout the west our organizations, possessed with a new vitality, will go forward in response to direction. They have made mistakes in the past, but they realize what can be done in the future. The Department of Agriculture, with a rehabilitation program ahead, and with a policy of line breeding such as I have suggested, suitable to certain localities, is in a position to encourage this kind of work.

By a follow-up policy we should encourage the good farmers, those farmers who are the back-bone of the country, who raise excellent stock, by giving them a fairly good price for the good stock which they raise. We should encourage them to go on with their work and should thereby stimulate the building up of good communities wherein farming would become profitable. As all hon. members know, farmers in the past have suffered greatly, and their remuneration has been very low. Unless a definite policy of mixed farming is now inaugurated, the country will probably suffer more in the future than it has done in the past. I recommend this development, knowing the minister has thought the matter over, but it has been brought to my attention in so many localities in which I am vitally interested that this would seem an opportune time to present it again and to urge that the department go forward with this policy.

Mr. BENNETT: The province of Alberta has long been famous for its production of pure bred cattle. While I cannot speak as an authority, I desire to direct attention to one phase of this matter as supplying a reason why, even in difficult times, we endeavoured to purchase as many pure bred cattle as possible so that the production should not cease. The minister must know that the spring sales of pure bred bulls held in Calgary have attracted the notice and attention and purchasing power of people from every part of the country. If production falls off because of lack of markets, it takes a long time to restore the market. The government by reason of its purchases has become rather an important factor in the development of the industry. We have bought from year to year in this country from two to five hundred, and sometimes it has not been easy to find the money. But now, in days of expanding revenues, it seems to me that an additional ten or twenty thousand dollars might readily be found for the purpose of providing pure bred stock and the encouragement of those who are engaged in that industry.

Mr. GARDINER: It has gone up $5,400 this year.

Mr. BENNETT: I know. Probably $5,400 means the purchase of between forty-five and fifty head.

Mr. GARDINER: About thirty or forty.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The price has gone up from the period of great depression. The average price was about $125, and I think it has gone up to nearly $140 now.

Mr. GARDINER: One hundred and forty-five dollars, I think.

Mr. BENNETT: That would, as the minister says, involve the purchase of less than forty head. I do not think I can exaggerate the importance of it from the standpoint of the breeder. This purchase by the dominion seems very small; in one sense it is; but it has had a marked effect upon the whole industry in Alberta. It was frequently brought to my attention by those engaged in trying to maintain a very high standard of excellence, that they found this market of tremendous importance, not alone because of the number purchased, but because it gives importance to the industry to have the country as a country making purchases for the purposes which have been indicated here this afternoon. I do not think it is too much to say that the assistance thus given by the government did much to maintain not only a high standard of excellence but the very industry, the pure bred industry itself in that province. I hope the minister may yet be able, if further supplementary estimates are introduced, to bring in an additional sum sufficient to acquire another fifty or sixty head of cattle this year. That would still limit the total purchases to less than four hundred. I believe that somewhere in the vicinity of three hundred have been acquired, if I followed the figures this afternoon. With the additional $5,400 available, the total purchases would be less than three hundred.

Mr. GARDINER: Less than three hundred and fifty.

Mr. BENNETT: Less than three hundred and fifty at the present minute, and I think that if we could bring the number up to four hundred it would be very desirable. Not only from the standpoint which has been so admirably presented to the committee, to which presentation, with my limited knowledge, I could not hope to add, but from the standpoint of the industry as such, the maintenance of the industry, the preservation of the morale of the producer and the incentive to those who have taken a just pride in their production, I urge the minister to consider the possibility of providing for an expansion of purchases. I realize of course that they would not all be made in Alberta; but some of them would, and the fact that some of them were made in that province would be extremely helpful in maintaining and supporting an industry whose value has not, I think, been overstated by my colleague to the right in the very strong plea he made this afternoon for the assistance of the industry.

Mr. GARDINER: I should just like to say, with regard to the remarks made by the leader of the opposition, that we in the department realize the importance of this work. One phase of it probably has not been emphasized. It will be noted that the average price in 1933 was $121; in 1934, $129; in 1935, $132; in 1936, $133; and in 1937, $143.

Mr. BENNETT: Lack of purchasing power in the dark days of the depression, clearly.

Mr. GARDINER: That is true. And there is this to be kept in mind, that when the government goes to these sales to purchase cattle it has a considerable effect upon the price. I think there is a limit to what the government ought to do in that direction, because if we raise the price we may make it impossible for some people to buy bulls. There is much in what has been said as to the necessity for distributing more and more of these bulls, but we have to consider both aspects of the matter in making our purchases.

Mr. SENN: I should like to second very heartily what was said by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hayhurst) as well as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) as to the benefit to be derived from the further distribution of pure bred sires. One has only to go to the Toronto stockyards and look at the cattle gathered there from day to day to realize the very great need for better sires in this province as well as throughout the dominion generally. A large proportion of them are nondescript animals. It is often difficult for a farmer who wishes to buy a carload for feeding purposes to get them of uniform grade. Assistance or encouragement of some kind should be given to farmers to carry on line breeding to a greater extent. At the Toronto stockyards one sees cattle of no breed, animals that are a mixture, and degenerated to such an extent that they are not profitable to raise and not only bring very little return to the farmer but bring the whole cattle industry into disrepute. It would be well if we could have some zoning arrangement by which certain breeds could be found in one particular area—dairy cattle in one, shorthorns in another, and so on. It is essential to encourage as much as possible the breeding of pure bred cattle. Breeders of such cattle have not enjoyed much prosperity in recent years. They have often had to sell them at a sacrifice, particularly the male animals. If the government could take a few more of these pure bred animals off the breeders' hands it would be a great help, and would encourage them not only to carry on but to breed better and better animals. They are the backbone of the live stock industry; they supply the foundation stock for better herds.

Then I wish to refer to the sow distribution policy. I do not know how the government is finding these animals at the present time or where they come from. A good deal of fault has been found by breeders of pure bred swine with the practice of getting these sows from the stockyards. I do not know whether that is carried out at the present time or not.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, that is the way they are secured, from the stockyards.

Mr. SENN: I protest against that system. They may be bought at a little lower price, but what encouragement is given to the breeder of pure bred swine? A large proportion of every litter are sows, and if he cannot sell these for breeding purposes, and the farmers in the district are being provided with "mill-run" sows from the stockyards—

Mr. GARDINER: They are selected, but they are grades; we do not attempt to select pure bred sows.

Mr. SENN: A lot of them are good animals, but it places the swine breeders at a disadvantage. When they have good animals that they have gone to considerable expense and trouble to raise, it is discouraging to have to send them to the stockyards to be sold at no premium over ordinary stockyard prices. I think the department would be well advised to discontinue that practice. If they wish to furnish farmers in the country districts with breeding sows, they should purchase them from the breeders of pure bred animals who have spent their time and money in building up good herds of swine. They can get these good animals in any quantity.

Mr. PERLEY: I wish to endorse what has been said by the last two or three speakers. I would urge the minister to have a thorough survey made of the situation in Saskatchewan. Saskatchewan breeders have been as hard hit as any in that branch of the industry anywhere.

Mr. GARDINER: If I may interrupt, I promised some hon. members of the opposition that I would bring up certain items today, and I think the question which is now being discussed could be better discussed under those items than under the one we are now discussing. I therefore suggest that this item be allowed to stand, and that we take item No. 477.

Item stands.

Special—To provide for the payment of freight on the return of live stock and equipment from places of feed supply to the dried-out areas in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This would seem to be an appropriate place to ask the minister for some information which I cannot expect him to provide at this moment, but which I trust will be made available to the committee before the item is adopted. What quantity of hay and fodder did we import into Canada from the United States? What price per ton did we pay for it? What number of bushels of oats and other grains did we import from the United States? What number of bushels of wheat did we import from the United States? What were the prices paid per bushel for oats and for wheat? What was the cost of transport from the United States to Canada paid by this government for all this feed and fodder?

A further question is: Have these been actually paid? I have received complaints that hay supplied from Manitoba to the government has not been paid for. I assume that cannot mean the federal government. I am also informed that other obligations which have been created in connection with relief granted in Saskatchewan have not been paid, and that some of the corporations which provided supplies have been unwilling to take further treasury bills in payment.

As I said, I do not expect answers to these questions now, but they will be on Hansard, and if the answers are not at once available, the minister will have an opportunity to provide them when the item is next considered. I mention this now because it seems to be an appropriate place, although possibly something might also be said under the next item, No. 478. But this is the information which I am particularly anxious to secure.

Mr. GARDINER: That would properly come under item 478.

Mr. BENNETT: No; that only deals with three months.

Mr. GARDINER: The item we are now considering only has to do with the payment of freight on the return of live stock and equipment from places of feed supply to the dried out areas in Saskatchewan and Alberta. This has nothing to do with the purchase of feed and fodder itself. It is true that the next item covers only a period of three months, but that is the only item left. We covered the rest under warrants earlier in the session, so that would be the only place it could be discussed now. I could secure most of the information asked for; I am not sure that I could secure it all. The provincial government is handling that.

Mr. PERLEY: Could the minister inform us how much was paid each of the railway companies, the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. GARDINER: No, I am not in a position to give that information. That would have to be obtained from Regina. This amount is paid to Regina to assist in doing that work.

Mr. PERLEY: This amount is paid to the provincial government, which disburses it as it sees fit?

Mr. GARDINER: The accounts are submitted by the provincial government to the federal government and the money is advanced by this government to make the payments.

Mr. PERLEY: How many applications were made by farmers to ship their stock to winter feeding grounds, and how many permits were granted?

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the particulars for Alberta, but the outward movement of live stock from the drought area of Saskatchewan last year was as follows: 19,000 horses, 23,000 cattle, 9,300 sheep. Of those, 10,200 horses, 5,400 cattle and 8,000 sheep have been returned. There were 555 haying outfits shipped out, of which 342 have been returned, leaving 213 not yet accounted for by returns.

Mr. PERLEY: Why were they not returned? I notice there is a very considerable difference between the number of horses and cattle sent out and the number returned. Would the minister tell us where the horses and cattle sent out for winter feeding were shipped? Were they all sent to the Carberry feeding grounds or were they distributed to other points in Manitoba?

Mr. GARDINER: There were 19,000 horses shipped out and 10,200 returned; 23,000 cattle shipped out and 5,400 returned; 9,300 sheep shipped out and 8,000 returned to date. In the first instance the agreements were made up to March 31, which is the end of our financial year. In previous years that date has been extended, and that was done this year as well. On request the date for return was extended to June 30. Horses that are not required, young horses not needed for work just now, may be left on the pasture; cattle that are not required except for feeding purposes later on, and cows calving, will be left until the pastures at home become good enough for them to be turned out. All the stock that will be returned has not come back yet, and of course it sometimes happens that all the stock shipped out does come back.

Mr. BENNETT: Some of them die, I take it.

Mr. GARDINER: Some of them die and some are slaughtered, as a matter of fact; they find it better to slaughter them in Manitoba than to bring them home and ship them from there.

Mr. PERLEY: I have received complaints in regard to a man living in Khedive, Saskatchewan, who shipped cattle to the feeding grounds and was not permitted to bring them back this spring when he wanted them. He was allowed to bring back his horses and his haying equipment, but for some reason he was not allowed to bring back the cattle. Was there any rule or regulation governing that, or what would be the reason?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no regulation in that regard, but I presume if the authorities knew, from the fact that they had been shipping feed into that area, that there was not sufficient feed there for the stock if it should be shipped back, they would notify the individual that it was not wise to bring it back. They had paid the cost of shipping the stock out in order to avoid having to ship in feed and fodder, and they would not want the farmer to bring the stock back until there was feed available without its being necessary to bring in feed at a high cost.

Mr. PERLEY: Then we may expect quite a number to be returned in June? Will there be a further amount required or will this cover the entire movement?

Mr. GARDINER: This is intended to cover all the return shipments after March 31. This is expected to cover the full cost of the shipments.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I do not want to hold up this item, but in connection with shipping live stock to Ontario, say, are there special freight rates provided for breeding stock shipped during the whole year for feding purposes, or are they in force just in the fall? For instance, there is a good deal of breeding stock in the dried out areas, pure bred cows and young breeding stock, that the farmers of Ontario might be ready to purchase, and I believe there are special freight rates—

Mr. GARDINER: Down to December 31.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): But is there not a special freight rate in addition from the dried out areas?

Mr. GARDINER: No, this freight rate applies to the dried out areas only, and it applies on feeder cattle and young female breeding stock up to five years of age. It does not apply to any other stock. It is half the freight rate, provided the person who brings it east keeps it for three months.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Then on pure bred live stock the present freight rate is half the normal rate?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, any time and any place.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): So that it would travel on one-quarter fare from the dried out areas.

Mr. GARDINER: No, I understand there was no special provision for pure bred stock. They came down on the half rate.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): Then I would recommend that the government should give consideration to the matter, in view of the fact that there are special freight rates provided when shipping to other districts. There would be considerable sale for pure bred breeding stock in Ontario and, I presume in Quebec, from the pure bred herds of western Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: We do not recall any instance of its having been done, but I believe under the regulations as they are we could do as the hon. member suggests. I believe the regulation provides that we pay half the freight.

Mr. ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I think you could do it, too.

Item agreed to.

To provide for feed and fodder relief in the dried-out areas and to provide for direct relief in the dried-out areas for the months of April, May and June 1938, $2,000,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Probably under this item the information I seek could be made available, because we might as well deal with it now as when the supply bill is in committee. I am not expecting that the information will be provided now, but it seems to me the item should stand until we get it. The questions which arise in connection with the item are these: From what sources are feed and fodder for these months being obtained? Do we pay the money ourselves, or do we merely hand it to Saskatchewan to pay? I notice that we had an inspector at Valley City, North Dakota, in the person of W. Hagerty of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, at $125 per month. He drew $640.94 for expenses during that period of four months. I notice that at Thief River Falls, Minnesota, Mr. O. Parker of Valjean, Saskatchewan, was employed at $125 per month, and that in seven months he drew $1,822.34 for expenses. At Crookston, Minnesota, Mr. Andrews, of Cravan, Saskatchewan, was employed at $125 per month, and in five months he drew $1,590.61 for expenses, or a sum at the rate of something over $300 per month or $10 per day. At Breckenridge, Minnesota, Mr. J. W. Rose, of Markinch, Saskatchewan, was employed at a salary of $125 per month, and in twelve months he drew $1,531.51 for expenses.

These inspectors were apparently supervising our purchases in the United States. Are we merely handing over $2,000,000 to the provincial authorities for these months, or have we assumed any responsibility for the payment of the supplies purchased during that period? I should like to know also from what quarters the feed and fodder have been acquired—what from the United States and what from Canada and from what parts of Canada. What payments per ton or per bushel were made for the supplies thus obtained? How were the sellers selected, and by whom?

Mr. GARDINER: I would have to get a considerable part of the detail from Regina.

Mr. BENNETT: I wanted to know that.

Mr. GARDINER: The persons whose names have been read are some who have been employed as inspectors at different points. I believe two returns asked for by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle have given that information. The first one gives a list of names, and the second gives the salaries and expenses. The payment is at the rate of $125 per month, and the expenses vary from $200 to $300 per month, depending on the area in which they were serving. A man serving in Winnipeg would have a higher expense account than one serving at a smaller point. The greater part of the expense is made up of travelling by motor car at so much per mile. Most of the inspectors have had experience either as elevator men who purchased grain and handled commodities of this kind, or as practical farmers. They were sent to the points at which purchases were being made in quantities, and they graded and inspected the product after the provincial government had made the purchase. That is, the provincial government made purchases of hay, straw or grain as the case might be, and notified our department that purchases had been made at such and such a point from such and such a person. One of our inspectors would go to that point and grade the hay. Following that he would inform us what the grade was, and from that information we got the value per ton.

Mr. BENNETT: Who made payment?

Mr. GARDINER: I shall cover that point as I proceed. When the province notified the department we had inspections made and had the hay graded and priced, as set out in the agreement with the province. The price could not be more than $8.50 per ton. If more than that amount was paid we did not pay any more. That was the limit we had to pay under the agreement for No. 1 hay. Then, it was graded down to lower grades at $6.50.

Mr. BENNETT: Was that f.o.b. cars at point of shipment?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, f.o.b. cars at point of shipment. Costs of baling and that sort of things were taken out. Then the freight was added to that price at the point of shipment, and that freight would be checked. When the provincial department had all their accounts made up in accordance with the transaction they submitted them for payment to the federal government. We had four or five officials at Regina connected with the branch of the comptroller of the treasury.

Mr. BENNETT: That is, the comptroller of the treasury had officials there?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, he had officials there to check these accounts. They were all checked and if found regular the amounts of money to cover payments were then advanced to the provincial government.

Mr. BENNETT: Whose cheque was issued in payment?

Mr. GARDINER: The dominion government's cheque was issued in payment to the province, and then the province paid it out in smaller amounts to the individuals. I believe it was paid by the province.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I was anxious to ascertain.

Mr. GARDINER: That was all checked by our auditors as well as by auditors of the province.

Mr. BENNETT: Because complaints have been made that the persons who supplied fodder in Saskatchewan have not received their payment. That is why I am asking how payment was made.

Mr. GARDINER: Of course there have been cases all the way through in connection with the handling of feed and fodder in this and other years where disputes have arisen between individuals. Sometimes those disputes have been in connection with grades. Our officials would grade a product on the ground; but anyone who has had experience with the baling of hay knows that if you pack snow or ice with the hay there is a possibility of its spoiling. The question then arises at the other end, when it reaches its destination, as to whether payment should be made. There have been cases where payment has been held up either as a result of the condition of the fodder when it arrived, or because of grade, or for some other reason which has caused dispute between the two parties. I would say however that that has happened only in a small proportion of the total number of cases.

Mr. BENNETT: The minister said he was uncertain whether these payments were made by the dominion to the province for the entire quantities of supplies. Take the purchases of feed and fodder for the month of April. Our dominion inspector would certify that everything was in order. What would happen then?

Mr. GARDINER: The province submits an account for the total amount that should be paid up to that date. Our auditor then checks the accounts—I understand that he has been able to check them inside of twenty-four to forty-eight hours after receiving them—and if he is satisfied, he notifies Ottawa and Ottawa advances the amount necessary to cover those particular accounts. The auditor checks further in order to see that the money goes to pay those accounts and not something else.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what I was anxious about.

Mr. GARDINER: I do not think there has been any difficulty about that, either in Alberta or in Saskatchewan.

Mr. BENNETT: I have had complaints that men in Manitoba have not received their money.

Mr. GARDINER: There is just a possibility that the complaints you speak of may be provincial in character. There is what is called a federal and a provincial area. The province carries on transactions with money it itself is handling, apart from what we put up. There may be some difficulty with payments, but I do not know of any.

Third report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. McPhee.

OYSTER BED LEASES

PETITION OF ELLSWORTH GILLIS RESPECTING ASSISTANCE TO LEASED AREAS IN P.E.I.

Mr. A. E. MacLEAN (Prince): I move that the petition I laid on the table of the house the day before yesterday be now read.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am informed that this is the same petition that was presented by the hon. member last week. I believe it was read previously.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved:

VICTORIA DAY

INQUIRY AS TO MAIL DELIVERY IN THE CITY OF HAMILTON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. LENNARD (Wentworth): In view of the fact that there will be no mail delivery in the province of Quebec to-day, and as it is a statutory holiday in that province, why was there one full letter carrier delivery in Hamilton, Ontario, on May 24, which was also a statutory holiday?

Hon. W. D. EULER (Acting Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is no doubt based on a reply I gave yesterday to a question by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Lacroix). I had not had notice of the question asked yesterday, and I stated I was not quite sure of the facts. I should have said, however, that to-day there will be no carrier delivery in Quebec city, that there would be full delivery in the cities of Montreal and St. John, and a partial or no delivery whatsoever in other places, according to the discretion to be exercised by the postmasters at those various points.

With regard to the one delivery on May 24 in the city of Hamilton may I say that the course taken there was the one followed generally throughout the whole of Canada. Ascension day is not a statutory or legal holiday, but it is observed generally as a religious day in the province of Quebec. For that reason discretion was given the postmasters as indicated in my reply of yesterday.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. CHURCH

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE ON MAY 25

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a correction in connection with the report appearing at page 3233 of Hansard. I had intended calling the attention of the house to the point yesterday, but was prevented from doing so just when the message was received from the Senate. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) is reported to have said:

> I well remember that on one occasion the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) moved an amendment to the motion to go into supply which took up all that evening, so that it was not possible to get my estimates before the house.

[Mr. Dunning.]

That is not correct. I never at any time made a motion upon going into supply; it was the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Ross).

MEMBER FOR BEAUCE

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION INTO CHARGE MADE BY PREMIER OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. PELLETIER (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, some time ago the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ilsley) advised the house he would investigate certain charges made by Premier Duplessis of Quebec to the effect that an hon. member of this House of Commons, namely, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix) had defrauded the Department of National Revenue by bringing goods into Canada without paying duty. Has an investigation been made, has the minister communicated with Premier Duplessis of Quebec concerning the matter, and what have been the results of such investigation?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue): I wrote the premier of Quebec shortly after I stated an investigation would be made, asked him to furnish me with details of the charge, and to let me know during what period it was alleged the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Lacroix) imported the trucks in question. I asked the premier to give me the source of his information and the names of any persons who could give any evidence concerning the transactions in question, and any other information which would be of assistance in investigating the charge.

I have never received a reply to that letter, which was written on May 3. A little more than two weeks after I wrote the letter, finding that apparently I was not to receive a reply I instructed the Commissioner of Customs to institute an investigation into the charge and to obtain such information as he could from the files and from any other sources which might be available.

The Commissioner of Customs has investigated the charge and his report dated May 25, 1938, together with appended material, is before me. I may say that so far as can be ascertained there have been no duties either unpaid or underpaid by Mr. Lacroix or by the companies in which he is interested. With the leave of the house I will table copies of my letter to Premier Duplessis and my instructions to the Commissioner of Customs, and I shall table with those communications the original report and annexed material from the Commissioner of Customs.

PRIVILEGE—MR. CAHAN

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE OF 1926—DESCRIPTION AS SEPARATIST MOVEMENT FROM BRITISH COMMONWEALTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): On a matter of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer briefly to a remark made on the evening of May 24, by the right hon. the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). The right hon. gentleman stated that during the debate on the imperial conference resolutions of 1926 the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) was one of those who described the work of that conference as——a sort of separatist movement from the British Commonwealth, and far from being a bond of association, as my right hon. friend—

—referring to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett)— —has described it to-day.

I believe that remark has gone out to the press and has been noted. I think it is an entire misapprehension of the attitude I took at that time. Without entering upon a lengthy discussion I should like to read the exact words I uttered on that occasion, and for that purpose I would refer hon. members to the debates of December 14, 1926, at page 54, in which, in discussing the imperial conference resolutions, I said:

For do not such clauses as those implicitly, and yet emphatically, declare that we are partners in the empire, equal in status, if you will, participating as citizens of that empire in the advantages and privileges—world-extended privileges—which accrue to the position and power of membership in the empire; yet, they express by implication that by moral obligation, by the precepts of common and equity law, we, as such partners, equal in status, are in fact morally bound, by the very implications of the contract, to share in the international obligations of the empire and in the liabilities imposed by such obligations to the extent of our resources; and though, as it is stated in another clause, we are the sole judges of the nature and extent of our co-operation, yet the declaration as to our status is made by the representatives of Great Britain, I believe, in the abiding faith and confidence that no common cause will be imperilled by the lack of our support.

The matter came up in a later discussion in the House of Commons on May 29, 1928. This is what I said at that time:

I assume from the position which the Prime Minister took at the recent imperial conference that he realizes the absolute necessity, if we are to preserve the existing unity of the empire, of consultation and concurrence wherever possible between the governments of the dominions and that of the United Kingdom with respect to matters which appertain to the whole empire to which we belong.

Mr. Mackenzie King: Hear, hear.

Mr. Cahan: I have noticed that certain gentlemen in this country who are admittedly in favour of the early independence of Canada and of breaking the light ties of association which bind us to Great Britain and the other dominions, speak of Canada having become in fact though not in name an independent and practically sovereign state. The imperial conference of 1926 took an entirely different view; as I read it, and I have read it time and again, it seems to me that those who directed the drafting of that report were insisting that all matters which relate solely and exclusively to this dominion should be under the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament and the administration of this country. So, in the negotiation of treaties, our minister or representative abroad, in those matters which relate solely and exclusively to our interests and to our wellbeing, would have exclusive jurisdiction, but when our interests also become matters of interest to the other dominions, to the United Kingdom and to the empire as a whole, it is implied in the imperial conference report that as far as it is possible for honourable and intelligent men so to do, those representing the various parts of this empire, should strive to reach a concurrent view by consultation and concession, so long as they make no sacrifice of the vital interests of any part, in order to promote the general interests of the autonomous dominions and of Great Britain.

I made several emphatic statements to that effect. Perhaps I might read one more, which appears on page 3503 of Hansard of the same date:

Therefore I feel persuaded that the government of Canada—

That was the government of the day, of which the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) was also the Prime Minister——looking at the whole matter, though determined to preserve our autonomous rights, will always be equally determined to preserve the political unity of this empire to which we belong, believing that under present conditions and as far as human minds can see into the future, it is in the paramount interests of Canada that we should preserve that association with Great Britain and the other dominions.

I think these quotations from those two addresses indicate clearly that during the debates on the 1926 resolutions I was not suggesting that they implied a separatist movement from the British commonwealth.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): May I say to my hon. friend that the passages which he has just quoted certainly do not bear out the inferences to which he has referred. Of course,

I am unable to say whether they are the passages which the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) had in mind in the observations which he made. It may well be it was some other reference which my hon. friend made that the Minister of Justice had in his thoughts at the time. However, were the minister here to-day he would, I am sure, be the first to accept my hon. friend's statement that in the course of the debate referred to he had no intention of conveying the impression which apparently the Minister of Justice gained at the time. As my hon. friend knows, the Minister of Justice is absent to-day owing to the fact that he is being honoured by McGill university with the degree of doctor of laws, honoris causa. He will, I am sure, be quick to take notice of what my hon. friend, the member for St. Lawrence-St. George, has said.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Departmental administration, $184,575.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Chairman, on Tuesday last the house listened with rapt attention to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) explaining and defending Canada's foreign policy. It was my intention to say something on that occasion, but time did not permit. There are many points in the Prime Minister's speech and there are many phases of Canada's international relations in connection with which I should like to say something, but at this time I am going to confine my remarks to one aspect of our foreign policy which seems to me to transcend all other aspects, even at this time when we are beset on all sides with questions of very great import. I refer to our policy with regard to Spain. To me our policy in connection with the Spanish situation has been and is devoid of every semblance of equity, justice, fairness or the application of international law. What is true of Canada's policy in respect to Spain is equally true of the policies of those nations which took part in the world's greatest international farce, the non-intervention committee. However, it is with Canada's policy that I am concerned.

To my mind a change of policy on the part of the democratic nations of the world towards Spain is absolutely essential even to a beginning of a settlement of the world's troubles on the basis of international law and international equity and justice. All our prating about peace, all our boasted love for democracy, all our detestation of dictatorships, is just so much piffle unless we right-about face in our attitude towards Spain. To me the Spanish situation is fundamental. The policy of the nations of the world towards war-torn Spain is immoral to say the least. It constitutes a canker that is eating at the heart of all that is left of world democracy. It cannot be defended on any basis whatsoever except that of cowardice and the saving of our own skins at the expense of the blood of the Spanish people.

I wish to pass very quickly over the events in Spain from February, 1936, to the present time. In the Spanish elections in February, 1936, what is generally called a Popular Front government was elected. This government was elected according to the laws and customs prevailing in Spain at that time. It was elected just as legally as the government of this country, as the government of Great Britain or France, or the government of any other country where government is elected by the vote of the people. After the elections the new premier, Senor Azana, outlined the policy of his government in the following words:

> We are not out to persecute, but to apply the constitution and the laws of the land in a spirit of liberality and liberty of conscience. We are persecuting nobody—neither Roman Catholics, Protestants nor Moslems. The people are eager to take part themselves in the work of national reform and progress. Everybody is interested and anxious to help. We are at the beginning of a time of great advance in many directions—cultural, educational, economic, political, spiritual and material.

I am sure that these are sentiments as fine as those uttered by our Prime Minister in October, 1935. But trouble soon developed. A well prepared rebellion broke out on July 18 of that same year. A few days afterwards, on July 25, the first violation, in my opinion, of international law took place. The French government, despite the fact that the "Frente Popular" was the legal government in Spain and that the French government had an agreement to supply the Spanish government with war materials, decided to prohibit the export of war materials to Spain. The general impression, an impression amounting to a conviction, was that Great Britain brought pressure on France which had something to do with her decision not to fulfil her obligations to Spain. On August 2, a week later, the French government addressed an appeal to the principal governments of Europe to organize for the purpose of preventing intervention by the nations of Europe in Spanish affairs. In its appeal the French government said that its purpose was "for the rapid adoption and rigorous observance in regard to Spain of the common rules of non-intervention." But even at that time the French government was well aware that the Spanish rebels were being armed from the outside, and so at the end of its appeal it made it perfectly clear that it was reserving to itself the right of application in regard to the decision.

The farce of non-intervention dragged on month after month, with Germany and Italy, and their ally Portugal, stalling and hedging on every proposal to make the non-intervention pact effective. On July 30, 1937, a year after the non-intervention pact was formed, a year in which the government of Canada had had ample opportunity to see quite clearly that the non-intervention pact was in reality a screen for intervention on the side of the rebels by Italy and Germany, a year in which Canada's delegates to Geneva had every opportunity to hear the plea of the Spanish delegates for the right of their government to buy military supplies to put down rebellion against constituted authority according to the commonly accepted rules of international law. A year after our government had had the opportunity to see all this and did see all this, an embargo was placed by Canada on the export of arms and munitions to Spain. The government of Canada knew that Germany and Italy were supplying the Spanish rebels with arms and men, but there was no embargo placed on arms to Italy and Germany.

Let us contrast the action of the Canadian government in this affair with its action in another affair. In the Abyssinian affair this government objected to oil sanctions being imposed against Italy for fear they might lead to reprisals or to war, but this government was not afraid that our arms embargo against Spain might lead to war. Why? Because Spain is a weak nation. The conclusions which we can draw, then, from the difference in the policy of the Canadian government upon these two occasions is that if a nation is strong enough to retaliate it can carry on all the aggression it likes against weak nations; but if a nation is weak, if there is no danger of retaliation, the government of Canada will refuse it an opportunity even to defend itself. In the case of Spain it does not seem to have made any difference to the Canadian government that the Spanish people were and are defending their homes, defending their families, their institutions, and everything that they as well as we hold dear.

I have said that the government of Canada had an opportunity to hear the plea of the Spanish delegates to the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva. The Spanish government laid its case before the league in September, 1936, very shortly after the trouble started; again in December, 1936, again in May, 1937, and again in September, 1937. It may have taken its case to Geneva on other occasions, but I did not take the time to look them all up.

Now I should like to put before this committee the proposals made by the Spanish government to the assembly of the League of Nations; the report of the committee which examined the Spanish proposals, and the League of Nations' decision in the matter. The report of the committee failed to pass the league assembly by two votes, and I shall show where those two votes came from. I quote from the Monthly Summary of the League of Nations for September, 1937:

In the assembly on September 18th, the president of the Spanish council of ministers, M. Negrin, at the end of his speech on international problems arising out of the conflict in Spain, made the following declaration:

"The government of the Republic considers that it has the right to make the following requests:

(1) That the aggression of Germany and Italy in Spain be recognized as such.

(2) That, in consequence of this recognition, the league examine as rapidly as possible the means by which that aggression may be brought to an end.

(3) That full rights once more be given to the Spanish government freely to acquire all the war material it may consider necessary.

(4) That the non-Spanish combatants be withdrawn from Spanish territory.

(5) That the measures to be adopted for security in the Mediterranean be extended to Spain, and that Spain be granted her legitimate share in them.

In conclusion, having summed up the declarations of the Spanish government, their representative asked that the part of the secretary-general's report on the work of the league which dealt with the situation in Spain and allied questions should be referred to the sixth committee. This was done, and the committee reported to the assembly to this effect:

The Assembly:

(1) Associates itself with the council in recalling that it is the duty of every state to respect the territorial integrity and political independence of other states—a duty which, for members of the League of Nations, has been recognized by the covenant;

(2) Affirms that every state is under an obligation to refrain from intervening in the internal affairs of another state;

(3) Recalls the special undertakings entered into by the European governments, and the London non-intervention committee which, in the intention of the countries to whose initiative it owes it origin, was set up for the purpose of restricting the Spanish conflict and thereby safeguarding peace in the rest of the world;

I wish the committee to pay particular attention to No. 4.

(4) Regrets that not merely has the London non-intervention committee failed, despite the efforts of the majority of its members—

Note, "despite the efforts of the majority of its members."

—of which the assembly expresses its appreciation, to secure the withdrawal of non-Spanish combatants taking part in the struggle in Spain, but that it must to-day be recognized that there are veritable foreign army corps on Spanish soil, which represents foreign intervention in Spanish affairs;

(5) Observes that the council in its resolution of May 29th last, justly described this withdrawal as "the most effective remedy for a situation, the great gravity of which, from the standpoint of the general peace, it feels bound to emphasize, and the most certain means of ensuring the full application of the policy of non-intervention";

(6) Sincerely trusts that the diplomatic action recently initiated by certain powers will be successful in securing the immediate and complete withdrawal of the non-Spanish combatants taking part in the struggle in Spain;

(7) Appeals to the governments, which must be all animated by the desire to see peace maintained in Europe, to undertake a new and earnest effort in this direction;

And I wish the committee to note the next part of this section.

And notes that, if such a result cannot be obtained in the near future, the members of the league which are parties to the non-intervention agreement will consider ending the policy of non-intervention;

(8) Requests the council, in view of the provisions of article 11 of the covenant of the league, to follow attentively the development of the situation in Spain and to seize any opportunity that may arise for seeking a basis for a pacific solution of the conflict.

Thirty-two delegations voted in favour of this report. The report however failed to obtain the necessary unanimity and was not adopted. But it failed of adoption because it was opposed by Albania and Portugal, two countries that were acting merely as "stooges" for Italy. Let it be noted that Canada was among the thirty-two nations voting—for what? Voting for this:

That it must to-day be recognized that there are veritable foreign army corps on Spanish soil, which represents foreign intervention in Spanish affairs.

That is what our delegation voted for in September a month and a half after this government imposed an embargo on Spain the purpose of which was to hinder Spain from helping herself either to put down rebellion within her borders or to free herself from foreign aggression.

There is no question in anyone's mind to-day that the war in Spain has ceased to be a civil war and is now a war of invasion by Italy and Germany. Everything that has happened in the last few months has emphasized that, time and time again. The assembly of the League of Nations accepted the situation, as I have just read, although the recommendation failed technically to pass the assembly. In view of these circumstances I think this parliament would be justified in instructing the government to rescind the order in council which imposed an embargo on arms and munitions to Spain.

During this session, on March 17, in reply to a question by myself, reported at page 1407 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said as part of his reply:

May I add to what I have said in the way of a formal reply to my hon. friend that at this time we are witnessing momentous events on the continent of Europe. We are witnessing also momentous events on the continent of Asia. Canada is a part of the continent of North America. Unless it is the desire to have it appear that our country is anxious to participate in these events, to become a party to or a part of what is happening on the continents of Europe and Asia, it is desirable, I believe, that all persons in positions of authority and responsibility in this country and who have anything to do with the shaping and moulding of public opinion, whether in parliament or in the press, should refrain from taking any steps or making any representations which would appear to have a contrary aim and purpose.

Spain is in the continent of Europe, and as the League of Nations had not taken action in regard to Spain, if we were brought into this situation we were brought into it by the action of the Prime Minister and his government. If the government of this country has the right to bring Canada into the affairs of foreign countries without even asking parliament, without the consent of parliament, surely we have the right to question the action of the government in that regard. If we are now involved—and we are involved by non-intervention—in the Spanish affair, we have been involved by the present government. Either that or, if we can remain neutral only by placing embargoes, we should immediately place an embargo upon the shipment of supplies to Japan. The Prime Minister cannot have it both ways. So, I think that, in order to put ourselves right with the legally elected government of Spain, we should immediately rescind the order in council of July 30, 1937.

We have heard a great deal in this house and in speeches in the country about the necessity of maintaining democracy. I have now before me a statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) who I regret is not in his seat at the moment, during the debate on a resolution proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) on February 4 of last year. I am quoting from Hansard, page 550. The Minister of Justice said:

> But we must be able to defend our citizens against the madness of some present day rulers. If international chiefs or gangsters ever come to assail us in a mad impulse—because the world is mad at the present time—we cannot meet them with a declaration of neutrality.

What about Spain? When Spain was assailed by these chiefs and gangsters how did the Dominion of Canada meet the situation? By imposing an embargo on the means by which Spain could defend herself. If the people of Canada have the right to defend themselves from international chiefs, from gangsters, how can this country deny the right to any other nation to do the same? I think we all agree with the Minister of Justice in the statement I have quoted; but, as I have done, let us compare these fine sentiments with the actions of the government of which the minister is so important and influential a member. As I have already said, Spain is to-day assailed by the international chiefs and gangsters of Europe, and was assailed by the same gangsters in 1937 when the minister made that statement, and the reply of his government to the gangsters was to impose an embargo on munitions to Spain on the means by which she might defend herself.

The Prime Minister on March 17 said that no exports of munitions had been made from Canada to Germany and Italy. That may be true, but the point I wish to make is that so far as this government is concerned, so far as the laws of Canada are concerned, Germany and Italy could buy all the munitions and arms that they wanted to. But there was no reason why Germany and Italy should buy arms and munitions in Canada, because we were shipping to Germany and Italy the supplies from which they could manufacture these things for themselves, and they can do it far cheaper than we can. Germany and Italy may not have purchased arms and munitions, but as far as I know there were no legal restrictions on their doing so. I should like to quote another statement in the speech delivered by the Minister of Justice on February 4, 1937. This quotation will be found at page 547 of Hansard of that date. He was referring to the obligations of members of the League of Nations to help fellow members if attacked, and with reference to the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre he said:

> If this motion is adopted, we go out entirely from the concert of nations, and mind you, Mr. Speaker, it is not only to the League of Nations that we as a country have given pledges. When we signed the pact of Paris we pledged ourselves to consider as a criminal any nation which would try to effect the settlement of an international conflict by means of war or which would accept war as a national policy in solving disputes. In that pact of Paris which we signed and which was accepted here unanimously we declared that any nation taking that position would be an enemy of Canada. That is what is really stated in the pact of Paris, but my hon. friend brushes that aside together with the pact of the League of Nations.

I ask again, how did we come to the assistance of a fellow member of the league? Spain is a fellow member of the League of Nations. Germany is not, nor, technically, is Italy a member of the League of Nations. How have we come to the assistance of Spain? By imposing an embargo upon her and by allowing her aggressors to buy freely of everything they require which we can supply. And then we prate about international law and order and give lip service to democracy, and the Prime Minister says that we must be careful not to say or do anything which might embarrass the countries of Europe which are facing difficulties. He forgets altogether that Spain is the country in Europe to-day which has been facing the greatest difficulties during the past two years and that the action of his own government tended to add to those difficulties, to give encouragement and support and comfort to the aggressor nations, which we, according to our solemn pledges when we signed the League of Nations pact and the pact of Paris, are supposed to consider criminal. Let me say again that Spain is a sister member of the league, to which according to the statement of the Minister of Justice we have given pledges. Instead of denouncing Germany and Italy as criminals, we have acted toward Spain as if she were the criminal in this affair. Let us face the fact that we have made a mistake in imposing an embargo upon Spain, and let that mistake be rectified by the removal of the embargo. In the early days of the non-intervention committee, many thought that it might be used as a means if not of furthering peace at least of preventing the spread of war. A great many people had that feeling and many of them have now admitted their mistake.

Let me refer to a statement made by Sir Archibald Sinclair, the leader of the Liberal party in the British House of Commons, in a recent debate on the Spanish situation. I am quoting from the British Hansard of Wednesday, March 16, 1938. Sir Archibald Sinclair said:

> At the same time, I have never disguised the fact that I sympathize with the Spanish government. I know that other hon. members who are just as patriotic citizens as I am sympathize with General Franco. My sympathies with the Spanish government are due mainly to three reasons: first, that they are fighting for the cause of freedom against a Fascist form of government; secondly, as it seems to me, that the intervention by Italy and Germany in the affairs of Spain is contrary to the efforts which the democratic nations of the world are making to place the relationships between nations on the basis of the rule of law instead of force; and thirdly, that I believe the occupation of Spain by Italian and German forces would be the gravest threat to the national and imperial interests of this country.

Mr. MARTIN: And he might have added, by Russian forces.

Mr. MacINNIS: You are not going to lead me off by a statement of that kind. Russia joined the non-intervention committee, as she stated at the league assembly in 1936, simply because she thought it might help maintain peace. She was willing to observe the non-intervention pact provided the other members of the committee would do so, and there has been no occasion in that connection in which the contrary has been proved with regard to Russia.

Further on Sir Archibald Sinclair states that at one time he felt that a non-intervention agreement by the nations of Europe might help bring about a speedy conclusion of the trouble in Spain and might prevent war, but he says he now realizes that this cannot be done. Let me say again, let us concede our mistake. Let us rectify it at the earliest moment possible. Let it be granted that we were actuated by the best possible motives. Let it be granted that the failure of our good intentions was not our fault. This point has seemed clear to me for a long time. I have watched the Spanish situation I think as closely as anyone could possibly watch it at this distance, and it seemed to me very soon after the trouble started that the policy of the democratic countries towards Spain could only end in one of two ways, by either forcing a fascist dictatorship or a communist dictatorship on the Spanish people. If Franco wins, Spain will be fascist and the forces of fascism will be that much stronger. If the Loyalist forces win, as the situation is to-day, communism will have received an enormous boost, and to that extent the forces of democracy—that democracy we say we uphold—will lose. Those who favour communism in Spain will be able to say, if the Loyalists win—which is not very likely under present circumstances—"You were forsaken by the democratic countries," and they will be right. "They tried to foist upon you the yoke of fascism," and it seems to me they will be right also in saying that. "Democracy is your enemy." Under the present situation what can those of us who favour democracy say? What can we in Canada say or do, except to bow our heads in shame and admit the truth of such statements? Let me again ask the members of this committee, as members of the Canadian House of Commons, to assert their right and make clear their belief in democracy, in justice and equity as between nations, and ask the government to rescind the order in council which imposed this embargo against the legally elected government of Spain.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of following what the last speaker (Mr. MacInnis) has said. We have heard these pacifist speeches in the house before. At last parliament has an opportunity of considering the external affairs of this country, which are a trust administered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). Last Tuesday he brought down his message. I have no quarrel whatever with what he said; my objection is to what he did not say. At no time in the history of this empire has it been more necessary for the Dominion of Canada to give support, even if it is only moral support, to the motherland.

The main statement made by the Prime Minister was that parliament would decide in future, if trouble came, as the circumstances of the case required. In his address there was no such reference as I believe a large majority of the people of Canada would like to have heard, following the imperial conference of last year and the visits of the Prime Minister to Hitler, to France and other places, that we owed the mother country something for what it has done to protect our shores in season and out. I was surprised that something was not said along the line of what Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated, that when England is at war Canada is at war also. I believe if ever the time comes again this country will do its duty towards the motherland, as it has always done it in the past.

The Prime Minister talks about parliament deciding the matter. Why, before parliament could be called together the enemy could have sent an air fleet up the St. Lawrence which in one hour could have bombed and destroyed all the public buildings in central Canada, probably including this house. Before notice could be sent out convening parliament our country could be invaded. There is not only the possibility; there is a very strong probability. The idea of calling parliament together to decide these questions of policy does not appeal to any practical person in Canada. It is impossible. In 1914 Mr. Borden's action was prompt and the country backed him up. In my opinion it will do so again when any responsible government has the courage to assert itself. This question came up nearly thirty years ago in connection with the Laurier naval bill of 1909, and at that time this house practically decided that when Britain was at war Canada was at war. A resolution was adopted by this house expressing the opinion that the Canadian people were ready and willing to make any sacrifice necessary to maintain the integrity, dignity and honour of the empire.

Again I ask: Has Canada a foreign policy, and whither is Canada drifting? If you read the message given to the house the other day by the Prime Minister you will find that Canada has no foreign policy. An enemy invading this country will not care a farthing about the Statute of Westminster, which was passed to please Ireland and South Africa. That statute speaks of consultation, co-operation and understanding. These dictators care nothing at all for that. In the Prime Minister's speech I have not read one word of encouragement to the motherland in regard to the huge burden of debt she has placed on her shoulders in order to look after the dominions, and give them protection, or in regard to what she is doing for democracy and world peace. We are told that Canada has no commitments, and that seems to be our foreign policy; in other words the pen is mightier than the sword. We are a nation only in the mythical sense. We are back to where we were over a hundred years ago, in 1812. We have no army, no navy and no air force. We are completely dependent upon the motherland for our defence on land, on sea and in the air. We saw that the other day when a bill was presented by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) in connection with Japan. Japan has been operating outside the three mile limit in violation of international law. The piracy they have been conducting through their ships which operate beyond the three mile rule is against all known international agreements. They have broken the fisheries laws, the coastal laws and many other laws of the dominion. What do they care for peace pacts or anything of the kind?

What about that glorious French nation towards which the eyes of the civilized world were turned at the time of the great war? We remember the awful privations, the human trials and suffering and the tribulations the French people went through. But they have a policy. They are willing to make commitments. And they will make them with whom? —with Great Britain. If Canada is not content to make commitments she had better get out of the British Empire, and the quicker she gets out the better. If we will make no commitments we are outside the empire. That glorious French nation has made commitments with foreign countries. She has announced that she will defend herself and stand or fall with England. Europe must pay attention to the dictators while Canada stands aloof with a policy of isolation—that is all it is, just a policy of isolation.

The Minister of Justice was more succinct in what he said. His statement was that the foreign policy of Canada was that of keeping Canada out of war, of trying to keep Canada at peace, of acting in a peaceful manner towards all countries of the world, and to have those family relationships with other members of the commonwealth. He said it was a policy of avoiding offensive language aginst other countries, and to save Canada for those days which are ahead of it. Well, if that is the best policy the minister has to offer he will have a rude awakening some day if and when the enemy comes up the St. Lawrence river.

The government seems to have a different policy for all the provinces, so far as foreign affairs are concerned. If we are to read the statement on foreign affairs which has been made we must conclude that our foreign policy consists of nothing but platitudes and high sounding phrases. I feel sure people in England and in Canada hate the very mention of war. The idea of war is detested by all the people in those countries. Nevertheless preparation is necessary. You do not hear a word in favour of war in England or in Canada. But in England it is recognized that questions of defence and the liberty of civilization are at stake. England may have been slow to get started but she recognizes the mistake she made in disarmament. They are now rearming. The Norwich labour union by a vote of 2,500,000 voted in favour of rearmament. That policy has been forced upon England. Neither the government nor the opposition wants a policy of that kind; it has been forced upon them.

We know the terms of the Militia Act, as they are contained in sections 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5 of chapter 132 of the statutes, where the manner in which the militia can be called out for military purposes is described. Then, under section 66 it is provided that if parliament is separated by an adjournment or prorogation which will not expire within ten days, proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of parliament within fifteen days. But before that could be done the country would be invaded.

As was pointed out by my right hon. leader in an address delivered in Chalmers church, this country owes the motherland a great deal for all she has done and is doing. What are we doing in Canada? We have no foreign policy, and we are depending entirely upon the mother country. Our representatives went to the imperial conference last year and took part in the coronation ceremonies. Our troops were in the line. It is true that an imperial conference was held, but in my opinion it was a complete failure. It failed to solve any problem from which we suffer to-day in respect of trade, defence or migration. It failed to solve the shipping problem. The empire has 2,000 less ships than it had before the war. Yet we are willing as a dominion to sponge on the mother country for land defence, and for the air force and a fleet to protect our shores. We were content to have our contingents go to London and to take their place in the ceremonial parade through London's streets; we were prepared to let our ministers take a trip over there. They made many speeches at banquets, and all that sort of thing—even the Minister of Justice made some of them. They proceed to tell what grand fellows we are in Canada, and yet they are not willing to contribute anything to help the mother country in her hour of trouble.

The speech of the Prime Minister is one of isolation. That is the policy of isolation followed by Ireland and South Africa. We have been told that Canada has been advised but not consulted. In my opinion that is a distinction without a difference. If it were not for the mother country to-day we would be neither advised nor consulted by the dictators; they would just drop in by aeroplane, and we would soon learn what our policy of isolation would amount to.

We have nothing with which to back up any foreign policy—nothing but talk and platitudes. Our policy is negative; certainly it is not positive. It is a policy which has been weighed in the balance and found wanting. It was a cold answer in my opinion given by the government to the questions asked last February. At that time an official or semi-official announcement was made in the house, after a statement was made in London, to the effect that the dominion had been consulted last February concerning critical affairs. Ottawa declared at that time that the Dominion of Canada had not been consulted by the government of Great Britain with regard to foreign policy, and did not want to be consulted. No more cold-hearted or icy words could have been pronounced to the people of Canada by a government. The mother country's back is to the wall, fighting dictators. She is confronted by dictators on all sides—by Hitlers and Mussolinis. We let London minister to our curiosity, but that is the extent of our interest in looking after the clash between dictatorships and democracies.

Canada's foreign policy is a myth, because she has no policy. It boils down to consultation, understanding and cooperation, but with whom it does not say. We used to depend upon the league. Canada followed the league and did everything it could. The last two or three governments have cooperated with the league, but what has happened to it? It led the mother country to disarmament, and the result was that Germany crossed the Rhine and invaded Austria; Italy captured Ethiopia; Japan annexed Manchuria and is now capturing China. The government has shifted its position and is now depending upon the Monroe doctrine and pan-Americanism. That seems to be the popular cry to-day in the continent of America, the continent to which we belong, in connection with foreign policy.

If this is all the foreign policy Canada has, then I say the government should defend itself at the polls, and if it does it will not have the majority it has to-day. I condemn this secrecy and this hush, hush policy regarding foreign affairs. This is not only the affair of the officers in the Department of National Defence or the Department of External Affairs. It is a matter which is of importance to and belongs to all the people of Canada, and one in which they are deeply interested. The public should be taken into the confidence of the government, and the matter should not be kept strictly to departmental officials.

Great Britain was wise to forget the past and to make friends with Italy. It was a stupid quarrel in the first place, when the conflict in Ethiopia brought about a strained condition. Mussolini is favourably disposed to a renewal of friendly relations, and that will be a contribution towards the peace of Europe. How did Canada, a country which is supposed to have a foreign affairs department, act regarding Italy? She passed sanctions. When the Prime Minister was away the Minister of Justice had to tell the country that those sanctions had been abrogated and cancelled. It was well that he did cancel them, because certainly we have no force with which to back up sanctions. If the empire or Great Britain fails, our country will no longer exist as a dominion. In my opinion the empire stands to-day as a bulwark of peace and freedom which it is our duty to try to maintain for all time to come. Mr. Chamberlain said the other day that he would fight himself for the preservation of democracy, which means liberty.

As a result of the Statute of Westminster each part of the British Empire has its own foreign policy and its own defence policy. Look at what has happened in connection with Ireland and South Africa. Those countries have been completely out of the empire since that statute was passed. They have abolished the office of governor general, they have abolished God Save the King as their anthem, and they have eliminated the king's head from their coinage. Appeals to the privy council no longer are made by these countries. They are separate sovereign states just like Mexico or Italy. They are free to set up as republics with their own presidents and give no allegiance whatsoever to the mother country. General Hertzog refuses to take the privy councillor's oath. He has announced that no longer will the king's name appear in the statutes of that country. That is the way they have acted.

During the last hundred years we have been completely dependent upon the motherland. I do not believe in this policy of secrecy. As I said the other day I can remember in 1914 when the late Lord Roberts was laughed at because he predicted that a war was coming. A number of public men in Great Britain like Asquith and Haldane and Runciman said that there would be no war. Yet three days before it actually did come, Lord Roberts predicted that it would come. In my opinion, silence in connection with foreign affairs is a mistake. It would be far better if the government took the country into its confidence. We should have had information long ago as to what is Canada's defence policy and what is Canada's foreign policy. I have been trying to find out for the last three or four sessions what our foreign policy is. It seems impossible to get answers to these questions.

Our foreign policy should be wrapped up with that of the mother country. Never has it been more necessary that this should be done than now. There is no use in saying that we can depend upon pan-Americanism and the Monroe doctrine. We depended upon them in the past and they were found wanting. We are entirely dependent upon the mother country for our liberty and freedom. It has been stated that an army, an air force and a fleet is unnecessary. The pacifists in England persuaded the British government to disarm. They carried on this agitation and the motherland threw away the finest navy, army and air force in the world. Such defences are not built up in a day, they cannot be got together in a generation. In my opinion, the people of Canada would like to see this government give some recognition and credit to the motherland for our dependency upon her for the freedom we enjoy. It has been said that we have been given no information. For the past four months this house has been practically tongue-tied as far as Canada's affairs and foreign policy are concerned. We now realize that we are absolutely undefended except for what help might come from the motherland. The people have lost all confidence in the organization of the league.

The mother country has spent $618,000,000 in building up a navy to protect Canada's shores. Great Britain is our only hope, but she has to make up the ground she has lost since 1922 when she threw away all her agencies for defence. Since 1922 we have not only thrown away our defences, we have lost our friends. We parted with our Japanese allies at the conference in Washington. We see the result in Shanghai where we were the helpless witnesses of the destruction of our prestige and wealth. We have quarrelled with Italy, one of our best friends, and have driven her into the camp of our enemies. Not content with these terrible blunders, we have loosened the structure of our empire until the ties that bind us to southern Ireland have disappeared wholly, while those that held us to South Africa are attenuated to a thread held in the hands of a few British and Dutch in that country. Further, our government is coquetting with an American trade agreement which, if successful, will create a permanent wedge between us and the other dominions. They will be encouraged to look elsewhere for support.

The minister of external affairs has a great public trust in his hands. Not only have we assisted the mother country in throwing away her means of defence, but we have thrown over our friends. Canada was represented at the Brussels conference, but it was a complete failure. The speech that President Roosevelt made at Chicago was filled with platitudes. When Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British ambassador at Washington, went to see Mr. Hull to ask if the United States would join in sending a note to Japan, he was told that the United States would act alone. The policy of that country has been isolationist since the days of Washington. The people of Canada are now becoming alarmed.

War will never be abolished until we make a much better job of peace than we have in the past. War would be further off if all the sham in Geneva was eliminated. When men are ready to do their duty by their neighbours, war will go. What is the use of talking, as they do at Geneva, about the mote in war's eye and the beam in the eyes of Geneva and peace? Did we not say in 1914 that it was a war to end war? Let us look at the economic aspects of peace and war. Peace as we have it with all its suffering, all its unemployment and misery, is as dreadful as war in many ways. Those things which are as terrible and evil as war in times of peace are social wars, unemployment, fratricidal wars, every form of racketeering, whether industrial, political or in lines of trade, and other conflicts which are a part of human life. Wars are generally started as the last means of settling a dispute. The League of Nations was formed to avert war; it provoked it. If war could be abolished by a simple formula, it would have been abolished two thousand years ago. Similar leagues in history have failed before.

I have asked in vain: Has Canada a defence policy? Has Canada a foreign policy? Is Canada a member of the league? Is the league still in existence? If so, for what purpose? We have spent nearly $4,000,000 on the league and have got nowhere. I should like to quote from a dispatch from Douglas Oliver when he interviewed the Prime Minister on his arrival at Quebec, returning from the coronation. This dispatch is dated July 8, and reads in part:

> Canada's defence policy has not apparently changed one bit as a result of all the recent imperial conference deliberation over the serious international situation, Prime Minister Mackenzie King indicated to-day.
> In Germany, he had an interview with Chancellor Hitler.

[Mr. Church.]

It is said that it is intended to extend our diplomatic corps abroad. I think the best thing that could be done would be to close up this service altogether. Adequate armaments in this country are necessary, but adequate armaments without adequate man power are ineffective. As the Secretary of State for war in Great Britain said, every gun and every soldier to man a gun bring closer not war but peace. Canada's policy in foreign affairs should be cooperation and coordination with the mother country and with the mother country alone, and should fit in with the policy of the mother country on land and sea and in the air as a distinct unit correlated and interwoven.

We have been told that as a country we shall have to depend for our defence in the future on the people of the United States. That is some of the advice that has been given in the house. There is such a division among Quebec members supporting the government that two of them even read us out of the empire altogether, and one wanted us to cooperate with the United States in a joint defence policy.

I have already said that the policies of Washington have been reasserted by Mr. Hull. That policy is: No entangling alliances. The American people feel that the leaders in Washington may have been listening to war propaganda, and the ex-Secretary of State said that the United States has no such alliances, that their policy is, as it has been in the past from the days of Washington, to go it alone.

Let us look for a moment or two at how the people of the mother country have depended on the United States, and see what it has cost the motherland to have surrendered its own view on national problems and on the peace of the world to the views of the United States. It is well to remember this. It is no criticism of the great people to the south of us. They are thinking only of America first. They are our own kith and kin. But they have an isolation policy, and there are many people in the United States, millions of foreign origin, who think that the policy of the United States has been wrong since Washington laid down the principle that the United States should keep out of European troubles. Let us see how Great Britain has surrendered its views for the benefit of the people of the United States.

The first occasion since the war was the establishment of the League of Nations as part of the treaty of Versailles. Great Britain agreed to this at the behest of President Wilson. France would consent only if Britain and the United States gave her a joint guarantee of security. The league was established, but the ink was hardly dry on the parchment when the United States congress refused to honour President Wilson's word, and they also repudiated the Versailles treaty.

The next thing to please the Americans was done at Washington in 1922, when we renounced our alliance with Japan who had been such an invaluable and faithful ally for twenty years. The result was that we lost Japanese support and gained no other benefits to make up for it.

Then there was the treaty with the Irish. We were told by British people who came over to this side that only by such a treaty would the last resentment of America against England die away. Britain gave way, and the result was that the United States became more embittered than ever, instead of more friendly.

There was another proposal which some people are of the opinion is likely to damage this country. America wants to buy gold. South Africa produces it in large quantities, and Canada and Russia are also gold producers. The motive force behind it is that they want to buy our gold so that we will buy American goods.

There has always been conflict between the United States congress and the administration in Washington. We were told by a French prime minister four years ago that Great Britain was the hardest country in the world to make a treaty with or have an understanding with owing to the dominions having so much to say, and there being so many different views to consult. It is the same in the United States. The president is called the administration, and he makes speeches and has his views, but it is only talk; there is no power over the senate to act. The power is in the senate and congress of the United States. So we have two forces in the United States in foreign affairs working in opposite directions, the administration and congressional sides. The result is that conflict often occurs. We saw it in the Abyssinian crisis, when the administration was hampered by the lack of congressional support, and its proposals met with clear defeat. I am reading three or four comments from the May number of the National Review, which after criticizing the new Anglo-American treaty, goes on to say:

> The new policy will be as fruitless as the former policy.

It goes on to say:

> The administration met with two clear defeats —the first when congress refused to make any change in the temporary "impartial" Neutrality Act then on the statute books, the second when the senate rejected a proposal to join the world court—and suffered throughout from constant opposition. Though the administration were prevented by the Neutrality Act from bringing economic pressure to bear on Italy in co-operation with the league, they attempted during October and November of 1935 to persuade Americans voluntarily to forego "tempting trade opportunities" and not to seek profits "at the expense of human lives and human misery."
> A fortnight after these official exhortations the Secretary of State had to admit that American trade with Italy in such war materials as oil, copper, trucks and scraps was increasing. The attitude of congress made it clear that nothing could be done about it.
>
> During the crisis, as during the present crisis, the attitude of the congressional isolationist towards Great Britain was one of continued hostility. While the administration were attempting, within political limits, to embarrass the league as little as possible, the congressional spokesmen were accusing England of using the league for imperialistic ends.

That is what they said in congress the other day.

The CHAIRMAN: I must inform the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) that he has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. CHURCH: I was just referring—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHURCH: The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) was given forty minutes more. I have not quite finished, and I have never asked for any such privilege before. As a matter of fact, I think I have been speaking for only thirty minutes, but I shall take another opportunity. It is all right; I am not objecting to your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BENNETT: I suggest that the hon. member be allowed to speak a bit further Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Hear, hear.

Mr. CHURCH: I shall not break any of the rules of the house. I do not want any favours.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not a favour. It is a right.

Mr. BENNETT: You are not breaking any rules. I have spoken in between. Go on.

Mr. CHURCH: I was trying to show the futility of this country depending on the United States for our freedom and protection, or on the Monroe doctrine or pan-Americanism instead of, as always before, on the motherland. In the late war the United States could not have transported any munitions or a single soldier abroad without the assistance of the British fleet. And here we are to-day, after the statement made by the Prime Minister, afraid to give one word of moral support, and no material support, to the motherland in this great emergency. We are depending on Washington, where they play politics every time.

Reference has been made in the congressional side at Washington to British propagandists, including the Archbishop of York and Mr. George Lansbury, as being sent to the United States to drag America into a war on England's side. As I said before, I believe the time is coming in this country when we shall have to decide sooner or later where Canada is drifting. In my opinion we made a mistake when we broke our alliance with the Japanese. The year 1937 has seen us with a policy of drift in this country. I asked certain questions about our foreign affairs, and when the Prime Minister came home this was the answer I received:

> It had been my intention to pay a visit to Germany at the conclusion of the assembly of the League of Nations, at which I represented Canada, in the autumn of 1936. This, however, did not prove possible at that time. Following the imperial conference of 1937 I was able to carry out the deferred visit.
> As I have already indicated in public statements, the purpose of the visit was to obtain at first hand, as intimate a knowledge of conditions in Europe as the time at my disposal permitted. After leaving Great Britain I paid brief visits to France and Belgium, as well as to Germany. The British government were fully aware of the intention to pay the visit to Berlin, which occurred on June 27 to 30 inclusive. The interchange of views and information which took place was of a nature which it is not the practice to disclose.

I cannot see any reason for the Prime Minister going there. It was not, in my opinion, the visit of a private individual. He was Prime Minister of Canada, and as such, and as head of the Department of External Affairs, he had obligations to the Canadian people. In my opinion it was not diplomatic on his part to go upon such a visit, and I do not believe this country approved of it; we stand for democracy, not for what that government stands for.

In this connection the Prime Minister answered some further questions, regarding the Pacific. Why was Canada not represented at the opening of the Singapore base?—with British Columbia clamouring for protection, and all this money being spent for defence on the Pacific coast, although it might as well be thrown into the Pacific so far as the protection it will give the people of British Columbia is concerned. Our contributions could better have been made to that great Singapore base. When it was opened the United States, New Zealand and Australia were represented, but Canada did not have even its good-will joy-riding fleet to join the other nations in the opening of that great base for the protection of maritime freedom. Then other questions were asked, regarding our participation at Brussels and many other places, and the same answer is given. In my opinion the people are becoming tired of all this business of legations. Here is Sir Herbert Marler going away down to Houston, Texas, as the representative of Canada, and giving interviews on trade, defence, foreign affairs and treaties. He speaks of Canada selling to the United States millions of dollars' worth of newsprint, and says that no longer is Canada dependent on wheat for a livelihood, and then he gives his views on foreign affairs.

The time is coming when we shall have a rude awakening in this country. It may be soon or it may be later, but in my opinion the day is not far distant when we shall have to face invasion. Not only the possibility but the probability is very strong. The preceding speaker has been referring to the league. Well, the league is dead, and to our sorrow we have seen the British Empire almost dismembered. The finest army, navy and air force in the world have been scrapped for the league's folly and it will cost millions to build them up again. We are to spend thirty-six million dollars this year, and we might as well throw the money away, with a defence force of that size; it will be a mere trifle as a defence policy of any merit.

I am sorry that this country, which did its duty in the late war, is pursuing such an isolationist policy. It will get us nowhere. We are simply following in the footsteps of Ireland and South Africa instead of standing side by side with our sister dominions of New Zealand and Australia.

Item agreed to.

Representation abroad, including salaries of high commissioner, ministers plenipotentiary, secretaries and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments, $434,500.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the increase to provide for another minister?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. That comes in in another place. This increase arises in the high commissioner's office. The intention is hereafter to vote the high commissioner's salary in each year's supply. Heretofore, as my right hon. friend knows, the salary of the high commissioner has been appropriated under statute. We shall have to amend the statute respecting the office of the high commissioner by deleting the provision respecting the high commissioner's salary.

Mr. BENNETT: Did we not vote it last year? My memory is that we did.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We voted $2,000 only, which were in addition to the amount set forth in the act as originally passed.

Mr. GREEN: Has the Prime Minister yet had a report from the committee inquiring into the illegal entry of Japanese into British Columbia? It was headed by a member of the Department of External Affairs, and, I believe, completed its sittings almost a month ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Within the last day or two the committee presented an interim report, but they have not yet completed their inquiry.

Mr. GREEN: Could the interim report be made available now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think it would be inadvisable to present that report at the present time, inasmuch as it discloses the proceedings of the committee in ways that might affect subsequent inquiries.

Mr. GREEN: When may we expect the final report?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The report as given by the committee is very largely a confidential report for the information of the government. Undoubtedly a statement will be made by the government, based on the report. I cannot say at the moment when the final report will be made.

Item agreed to.

To provide for hospitality in connection with visitors from abroad, $15,000.

Mr. BENNETT: How much of that was used last year?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Out of $15,000, $13,543.18 was used.

Item agreed to.

Expenses of Canadian delegates to the assembly, conference and commissions of the League of Nations, $14,000.

Mr. BENNETT: No change in that, either?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No change.

Item agreed to.

Amount required to meet loss on exchange, $120,000.

Mr. BENNETT: What did it cost us last year for exchange? The rate was down a little, I think; it improved somewhat.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The amount submitted in the 1938-39 estimate is $120,000. The amount voted in 1937-38 was $135,000.

Mr. BENNETT: I know. I wanted to know what was spent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: $114,127.90.

Mr. BENNETT: That is an improvement. I suppose the larger proportion of that is in connection with our contributions to the League of Nations?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The itemized statement is as follows:

League of Nations..	$106,253 37
Wheat advisory committee.. ..	1,363 38
International commission for air navigation..	691 01
Paris: salaries and allowances.	1,595 47
Geneva: salaries and allowances	4,224 67
	$114,127 90

Item agreed to.

To authorize payment from the consolidated revenue fund to the Honourable Philippe Roy, present Canadian Minister to France, of an annuity at the rate of $5,000 to commence on his retirement and to continue during his lifetime, $5,000.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there any regular scale of annuities which the government follows; and if so, would the Prime Minister give us the basis on which such annuities are arranged?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend doubtless knows, the present minister in France was appointed some twenty-seven years ago as a commissioner from Canada to France; and at the time that the legations were opened, some ten years ago, Mr. Roy was appointed the first Canadian minister to France. No arrangement was made at the time with respect to any retiring allowance or any annuity. As a matter of fact nothing of the kind has thus far been arranged with respect to the ministers in the diplomatic service. The government has under consideration at the present time the advisability of adopting a plan whereby those who go into the diplomatic service or who may be in the service and are not already in the civil service will be given the privilege of contributing to the superannuation fund and will be entitled to draw proportionately from the fund at the time of their retirement. If they do not wish to contribute to the superannuation fund it is proposed that they will not receive anything in the way of retiring allowance. Those members of the diplomatic service who are members of the civil service do contribute to the superannuation fund and will continue to do so as at present.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is desirable that there should be some regular arrangement, and I think that the Prime Minister is quite correct, that, if the ordinary civil servant is required to contribute, some such law should apply to people who have not been in the service; and further than that, I think that there should be some relationship between the amount granted and the sort of service rendered as well as the length of time in the service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what the government has had in mind with respect to the amount proposed in the estimates in recognition of the Hon. Mr. Roy's services in Paris. Mr. Roy was in Paris representing the government of Canada for some time before and at the time of the great war. Throughout the latter period and subsequently he rendered very great service, not only to our own citizens, but also to many who came from Great Britain and other countries allied with Great Britain in the war. In the long period of time that he has been in France he has been exceptionally generous in the hospitality and service that he has extended to Canadians visiting France. He has not spared himself in any activities which it was possible for him to interest himself in, and which were likely to be of service to Canada. The government has felt, now that he has reached the age of seventy and is retiring, that this recognition is one which the people of Canada generally will regard as well merited.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was endeavouring to point out that there should be some basis on which matters of this kind should be decided. We give pensions to various types of civil servants and the amount given bears some proportion to the amount of salary previously paid. Under what classification does this item come, or is it to be dealt with altogether regardless of other items of this kind?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A deputy minister in the public service, who had been in the service twenty-five years, would receive upon retirement a pension of, say, $5,000, or at least half of his salary.

Mr. BENNETT: For which he had paid.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, from a fund to which he had made contributions, certainly. But the position of a minister in a foreign country would correspond, I should think, more to the position of a member of the government in the importance and responsibilities of the duties he discharges; and certainly in addition there would be obligations upon a minister in the diplomatic service which there would not be in the case of deputy ministers in the public service. If my hon. friend makes such a comparison he will find that what is suggested here in the way of annuity is on a sound and fair basis.

Mr. BENNETT: The only difference between the government and myself with respect to this matter is in the amount that is appropriated. Three years ago I was led to believe that the minister had decided to retire, and I believed, after the most careful consideration with my colleagues, that $4,000 was a fair payment to make. The reason was this. Mr. Roy was a senator. His indemnity would be $4,000; had he continued as a senator he would have received $4,000 during the rest of his life, that being the present rate, though it was not the rate when he left the senate. Now he has made no contribution to the civil service fund, nor for any pension to be paid, nothing whatever, and I think the people of the country in these days would regard $4,000 —certainly I so believed—as reasonable compensation in the way of annuity to one who had rendered twenty-five years of service. The maximum that a civil servant can receive is thirty-five fiftieths of his average salary for a three year period, that is, seven-tenths; and there are very few civil servants who live out the thirty-five years nowadays, because they are retired at the age of sixty or sixty-five, and usually they retire at sixty if they can. Those who get the larger salaries hardly come in before they are twenty-five years of age.

I have no desire to do other than say what I said a few years ago, namely, that I am not unmindful of the service rendered by Mr. Roy. He was rather an extreme partisan, which is something that cannot be readily avoided at times; it is a state of mind rather than anything else at times. But Mr. Roy's contacts with the world in Paris have been of great value to the country, and not entirely lacking in value to himself. I rather think, however, that $5,000 would be regarded by the average taxpayer of the country as a larger pension than one should receive who has made no contribution at all and for whom no provision was made—when he entered the service. He did so with the clear view that there was no pension in sight at all.

I do share the view of the Prime Minister that payments should be made by our ministers if they so desire, and if they do not so desire, then they should be without pension from the state. I am inclined to think that the same principle should be extended to our judges and that we should increase their compensation. I have expressed that view on more than one occasion. We provide pensions for our judges, making it conditional upon certain things happening. It seems to me it would be better if we also provided that the state itself should furnish ministers with an annuity if they paid for it and desired to so provide for, and that this should be part of the contract of service when they enter their employment, and if they did not desire to make a contribution from their monthly cheque to the superannuation fund, then we would have no trouble such as we sometimes have in connection with matters arising out of judicial services.

There is just one matter here that is worthy of very careful consideration. If we select persons who have not been in the service and appoint them to positions of ministers, usually it will be found that their tenure of office is not long. For instance had the course been followed which the minister expected, namely, had he in 1930 been removed from office, or recalled—and it will be remembered that the Minister of Justice made some observations regarding that matter three years ago. Then one realizes how difficult the whole problem is, of providing for retiring allowances for ministers. We appoint untrained, unskilled persons—persons untrained and unskilled in matters connected with departmental work —men who have not been councillors or second in command—usually they enter the diplomatic service of the country at an age past thirty or forty years. It would not seem to me, therefore, possible to provide for such cases by any contributions to a superannuation fund. In the very nature of things they would not expect to remain in office, they would not want to remain in office longer than eight or ten years, or whatever length of time the government that appointed them might remain in office. In my judgment it would be unfair to expect the state to provide them with pensions because their very selection for the post in question involves their being willing to accept it without pension or expectation of pension. That was so in this case, because the office to which the present minister was appointed was the office which had been held for many years by Mr. Fabre, and Sir Charles Tupper held a similar position in London for a number of years. No question of pension as such ever arose, because the office of high commissioner, both in London and in Paris, was regarded as a political one. It was never suggested that the late Lord Strathcona was in any sense qualifying for a pension during his term of service.

The difficulty that arises is also very real if you take the question of appointments within the service itself. In Great Britain it is firmly established; pension is provided for. A man who enters the foreign service of his country knows just what he may expect. He rises from one post to another, and when the time comes for retirement he knows he will receive a definite pension. The limits are prescribed and he knows just where he is, just as much as does the civil servant in the treasury department or any other branch of the public service. As I think the Prime Minister knows, this question has engaged the attention of the permanent officers of the department, and I believe I am within the facts when I state that the view is that all persons connected with the service should make contributions if they expect to receive pensions. I think that is not an unfair statement of the general view held by the permanent officials in this as well as other countries.

I do think the amount is at least $1,000 beyond what it should be, having regard to the conditions to which I refer. It was after much consideration, and with no desire to be niggardly with public money, but with a sense of real responsibility, that the late government concluded that $4,000 was an ample proposal, having regard to the services rendered and to the fact that after all it is what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, namely the determination by the government of the day of the sum they think adequate. It bears no relation to anything but the government's view as to what is an adequate payment having regard to the services rendered and the extent of those services.

This might be the appropriate place to speak about a matter that is engaging a good deal of public attention, that is, the question of his successor. It is quite clear on the part of everybody that Mr. Roy, having reached the age of seventy, will retire. Nothing could be more fatal to the maintenance of our institutions on a sound basis than what you hear, for instance, in travelling over the country. Mr. Justice Turgeon is suggested as a likely appointee to that post. He last discharged his judicial functions in Canada in November, 1935; he has not sat in the courts since. He has been engaged in political work—and I say political in the large, proper use of that word—and it is suggested that he is to be appointed to Paris or, if not, to Belgium. There you have a position which I regard as one of extreme gravity. I am not saying that I attach any credence to these reports, but this is in the minds of people who write me and say "It is your duty to direct attention to these matters." Sometimes one has to speak of these matters as a public duty when it is not the most pleasant thing in the world to do so.

Nevertheless, this foreign or external affairs service of ours is of very great importance; we are at the threshold of the work in all its activities and all its branches, and it does seem to me that we should try to follow, as far as may be possible, a general idea of a measure of permanency. I am quite sure that if conditions had been reversed in 1930 the minister to France and the minister to Japan both would have been recalled, judging by what the Minister of Justice said in 1935. I took the other view. I believed, as I still do, that notwithstanding the known political views of those who held those offices, it was highly desirable, especially when we were just at the beginning of our new experience in appointing ministers, that we should endeavour to do the best we could. I am not unmindful of the censure I received from my own friends, and I sometimes wonder whether or not I was right in taking the view I did. Nevertheless they remained and discharged their duties I think in the main satisfactorily, so far as I know. Certainly the difficult position in one of the countries could be met only by one with a considerable and extended experience there. In Paris I think the situation never was very onerous as far as hard work was concerned. We negotiated a trade treaty, which was largely the work of the commercial side of the legation as well as of the minister of France to Canada and our own people here. But the idea of permanency, the idea of promotion, the idea that men who enter the service in a junior capacity may one day find themselves occupying positions of great authority and importance, I think should be encouraged by every means possible.

I say that very frankly; I say it having endeavoured to practise it. I know how earnestly some of these younger men have striven to do their work, looking and hoping for promotion. In the very nature of things promotion is naturally slow, because we have a very small service, but I could name—I shall not do it this afternoon—numbers of men who are now ministers of Great Britain, some of whom are ambassadors, who started in a very small way. It has not been unusual to go outside the service in that country, of course. There was the case, for instance, of Lord Bryce at Washington; the special mission of Lord Reading for a very few months and the case of Sir Auckland Geddes. These were exceptions that were made because of very exceptional circumstances, and I believe the service itself did not raise any objections. But the general theory of the British diplomatic service is that the man who enters as a junior may look forward to finding himself in the position of minister or ambassador; or sometimes, and not infrequently, they are called to the foreign office itself, where they undertake great responsibilities. My attention was directed, for instance, to the fact that the present minister from Great Britain to Japan went directly from the foreign office, while the minister he succeeded at Tokyo was transferred to Belgium because he had had exceptional opportunities to acquire knowledge of conditions in that part of the world when he was not an ambassador or minister. I think there is no branch of the public service in which there should be greater endeavour, and particularly as it is a new branch, at least to leave the idea in the minds of those entering the service as a career, that there is an opportunity of promotion which may lead them to occupy positions of importance. It should be understood that those positions are not reserved for those who have rendered services, politically or otherwise, but that they would be the meritorious right of those who have really rendered service in the department. Such promotion I believe wiill ensure a better service, and certainly a more contented one.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With most, in fact practically all of what my right hon. friend has said I entirely agree. But when he speaks of Mr. Roy's services as having been of a partisan nature I am afraid we must part company.

Mr. BENNETT: I say, at the start.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend may have forgotten the fact that Mr. Roy was appointed at the beginning of 1909, and that Sir Robert Borden took office in 1911. Mr. Roy's services had already apparently been of such a character that Sir Robert felt it was desirable to continue him in a position which, as the leader of the opposition has said, corresponded with that of high commissioner in London. Mr. Roy was continued through the period of the great war, and after so long as Sir Robert continued in office. When Mr. Meighen succeeded Sir Robert as Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs, he, too, retained Mr. Roy in that position.

My recollection is that after the Conservative government was formed in 1911, the late Sir George Foster went to France on an important mission. Sir George had been strongly prejudiced against Mr. Roy, possibly because he believed there must necessarily be partisanship inasmuch as Mr. Roy was an appointee of a Liberal government, but Sir George came back from Paris feeling very strongly the other way. He had found Mr. Roy's services invaluable, and also that Mr. Roy himself held the confidence of the French ministers to a remarkable degree. I believe at that time it was in large part Sir George's influence which was responsible for Mr. Roy's continuance in office. Sir George was there, and saw and appreciated the nature of the work accomplished. When the Liberal administration took office Mr. Roy was continued, and my right hon. friend retained his services when he took office. I believe Mr. Roy has endeavoured to serve all governments conscientiously and faithfully. There may be some evidences of partisanship which may be in the mind of my right hon. friend, with which I am not familiar.

Mr. BENNETT: There are.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I suggest the long record of a service of twenty-seven years under different governments and through most critical times distinguishes Mr. Roy as a faithful public servant, and one whose exceptional as well as long services to the state are deserving of every recognition.

In regard to the desirability of having a diplomatic service so constituted that men entering the service may look forward to a permanent career therein and to recognition by way of promotion for merit, I am in entire agreement with my right hon. friend. As he has pointed out, however, the service up to the present time is small, and the responsibilities of a minister are great. A minister in Europe to-day is in about as important a relation to his country as a man can possibly be. While it is certainly desirable to find among the younger members of the service those who merit promotion to higher positions, I submit that with world conditions what they are to-day a great responsibility rests upon a government with respect to the character, capacity, experience and particularly the sound judgment of the men to be appointed to the post of minister abroad.

Mention has been made of the name of Mr. Justice Turgeon. I think it is only natural that he should have been thought of. Certainly were he appointed to a position of the kind it would not be as a reward for political service in any way, but because of qualities of exceptional judgment and ability, which are recognized I believe on all sides of the house. As hon. members know, however, it is not possible, until provision has been made for the office, and until the name of whoever is suggested has been approved by the government of the country to which he is to be sent, to say anything about the person likely to receive appointment. All I can say is that in any appointment to be made the government will endeavour to make a selection which will commend itself to the country, irrespective of the political affiliation indicated.

Mr. THOMPSON: What was Mr. Roy's annual salary while he was minister to France?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: $12,000.

Mr. BENNETT: And living and automobile allowances.

Mr. THOMPSON: Then I must register a protest against payment of the amount indicated in the vote. I protest against the payment of these moneys to a man who has been drawing during that time $12,000 a year.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Just in the years he was minister.

Mr. THOMPSON: Drawing $12,000 a year during the years he was minister he should have saved enough to look after himself for the rest of his life. I farmed during my lifetime; I worked hard and saved. Had I not saved something for my old age I would have to go to the poor house. That is all there would be ahead of me. I am decidedly opposed to pensions being paid by the government to people who have not contributed towards them. This pension is to be paid by the already over-burdened taxpayers of Canada. It appears that $5,000 per year is to be given to a man who since 1909—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should have said 1911.

Mr. THOMPSON: —a man who since 1911 has been drawing $12,000 a year and allowances.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: He has not been drawing $12,000 since 1911; he drew that amount in the last ten years.

Mr. THOMPSON: And that makes $120,000. What were his allowances?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I understand they were $13,000 a year.

Mr. THOMPSON: His allowance amounted to $13,000 a year and his salary to $12,000. If you go out into the country and tell the people that a man who has been drawing $12,000 salary and $13,000 allowances for the past ten years is to be given $5,000 a year for the rest of his life you know what will be said about it. I would ask that the item be struck out altogether.

Mr. DUPUIS: What are his annual expenditures due to his functions?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I believe if I were to go into detail it would be found that his expenditures took up most of, if not in some years more than his salary and allowances.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Since I have tried to get some answer to the question as to how the sum was arrived at, perhaps I might be permitted more or less to endorse the view just expressed. I have nothing whatever to say personally against Mr. Roy or his service to the country; I want that clearly understood. Further than that I know there are many people in one way or another connected with the government service whose salaries seem very high in comparison with those of ordinary Canadians. I recognize that. At the same time I do not see any way of bringing the matter to the attention of the house other than by taking it up on a particular instance of this kind. That is the reason I speak at this time. If any one else were involved I would proceed in the same manner.

When I think of the niggardly allowances we give to people on old age pensions, when I think of $20 a month in some provinces being cut down to $15, and when I consider the large numbers of people who to-day are striving desperately to maintain themselves and to educate their children on very small means, I feel the country is not in a position to give large salaries, large allowances or large annuities to any one group, even though that group may be associated with the government. After all, those of us who as members of the House of Commons, or of the civil service, or who serve the country in some other capacity, are drawing public funds must remember that those sums are paid by the ordinary people. The people on the public payrolls are not in a higher position than the citizens at large. Since the great majority of our citizens are not receiving anything like these salaries, I think it is high time that there should be a revision in the whole scale of payment to those who receive their living from government sources.

For example while the internal arrangements of the old post office near this building may have been far from modern, I never go out and see the efforts being made to tear down its walls without feeling that it is wrong that we should act in that way when all over the country there are hundreds of thousands of people with hardly a roof over their heads. We have hesitated to go into a housing scheme yet we do not need to go any further than to lower town in Ottawa to see the wretched housing conditions that exist. I am not oblivious to the need for beautifying the capital. I recognize it should be a beautiful place; these institutions belong to all the people, but we must not forget that in our ordinary affairs we try to place necessities before luxuries. This government ought to be made to understand that the vast majority of the people of Canada are to-day in necessitous circumstances. Hardly a day goes by that I have, not only correspondence but interviews with people who come to me to explain the difficult—yes, almost desperate—situation in which they find themselves. I am frankly taking advantage of this opportunity to bring this aspect of the case before the government. We must take advantage of opportunities like this to drive home a position that is held, not only by some of us as individuals but I am sure by the whole of the people whom we are sent here to represent.

Mr. MacNEIL: Would the Prime Minister explain Canada's position in relation to Mexico, in view of the withdrawal of the British ambassador from that country? In what manner are our interests being represented at the present time?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have a trade commissioner in Mexico who looks after our interests so far as trade is concerned. I doubt if we have sufficient political interests to require special representation in that country at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: Speaking for myself and for many others I say frankly that the appointment of Mr. Justice Turgeon to Paris would be looked upon as an affront to the Canadian people. Since November, 1935, Mr. Justice Turgeon has not sat on the bench, but he has drawn his salary as a justice together with other moneys as well. If he were to be appointed now to represent us in Paris it would have a most serious and detrimental effect upon our institutions and the respect that the people of Canada have for the judiciary of Canada. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. GREEN: What arrangements are made to look after the interests of Canadians abroad, such as in the recent troubles in Shanghai? Refugees have arrived on the Pacific coast from that troubled area and many have complained bitterly of the lack of help and protection given to them by any Canadian officials in Shanghai. If they wanted any help they had to go to the British. Such a situation does not seem right and I should like to know what arrangements are made to look after Canadians who are in distress.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The statement just made by my hon. friend would imply that Canada should have either a legation or a consular service in every country of the world. If we are to look after our Canadian citizens everywhere, as the great powers seek to do, that would be the proper course to follow. I believe the time will come when Canada will have ministers and consuls general in all parts of the world, but I question very much if the Canadian people would approve of the government taking so far-reaching a step at the present time. So far as Shanghai is concerned, we have no minister, nor have we a consular service in China. We have a fund which is used to help in the repatriation of Canadian citizens in different parts of the world where situations arise such as the serious bombardment which took place in Shanghai. We sought to get as full information as possible about Canadian citizens in China and in that port in particular. We gathered such information as we could from bodies and corporations in this country that had representatives in China. We also communicated with the British authorities who were entirely ready to render any assistance that they could to any British subject in China, whether he came from Australia, South Africa or any other part of the empire. Our own citizens who were there in a business capacity rendered what help they could, but no assistance was received from any Canadian minister or any consul general because there was not one there.

Mr. GREEN: Did the Canadian government take any steps to help Canadians get away from Shanghai?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Had we received any communication indicating the necessity for so doing, we would have endeavoured to make some response, but we were not requested to take any steps to that end.

Mr. GREEN: If a Canadian became destitute because of the trouble occurring there, would this government help him to evacuate his family? Is there a fund for that purpose?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is a limited fund that is available for repatriating Canadian citizens who are in distress. Each case has to be more or less carefully examined and the help given would depend upon the circumstances. I would not like to make the general statement that everyone would be assisted; it would depend entirely upon the circumstances.

Mr. MacNEIL: I would appreciate a statement from the Prime Minister as to our relationships with those great powers whose policies may not always be in accord with those of the United Kingdom. In many countries our interests are handled by the British ambassador and there is some concern that should occasion arise to withdraw the British ambassador, it might be considered that Canada was automatically a belligerent nation. Has the government considered the desirability of extending our consular service to certain great European and Asiatic countries?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The question of having a consular service of our own has been under consideration. We have our trade commissioners who perform in considerable degree the duties that consuls general perform. So far as Europe is concerned I question very much whether this would be the best moment in which to institute a consular service. There are times and seasons for all things. I agree with my hon. friend that it is desirable that we should have our own consular service. I have no doubt that we shall soon begin in a small way, as we have with our legations, to have consular representation in different countries.

Item agreed to.

Grant for expenses of Canadian committee of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in connection with summer meeting to be held in Ottawa in 1938, $3,500.

Mr. McCANN: I notice this is a grant for $3,500. Last year when a purely Canadian institute, the Canadian Medical Association, was meeting in the city of Ottawa, the grant was but $1,000, although it is an organization of ten thousand members. I should like to know upon what basis these grants are made from time to time.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This gathering will be international in its character. Where similar gatherings have been held in the United States generous provision has been made for the work of such associations. This grant is based on seeking to do what we regard as right and proper in the circumstances of an international gathering of one of the most important scientific bodies on the continent at a time of its meeting in the capital of Canada. So far as the medical association is concerned, I think my hon. friend said it was a Canadian association being entirely composed of our own citizens. In this case the grant is in part the exchange of an international courtesy.

Item agreed to.

Canada's contributions to maintenance of external organizations—To the expenses of the League of Nations for 1938, including secretariat, international labour organization and permanent court of international justice, $150,565.

Mr. THOMPSON: What amount of last year's grant of $155,000 was expended for this purpose?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The whole amount.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter I should like to bring up which does not come strictly under this item, but I do not know that there is any other under which I can raise it. I asked the Prime Minister the other day with regard to the prospective sale of Anticosti island, and he informed me that the matter was being watched by the government and that he thought the interests of Canada were being safeguarded. Perhaps we might have a little fuller information. It is certainly a matter pertaining to external affairs. From my standpoint, whether or not Anticosti island is going to a German company under whose ownership it might possibly be used for some purpose not for the welfare of Canada, it is highly undesirable in any event that a large piece of territory in Canada should pass into the hands of foreign interests, any foreign interests.

Mr. BENNETT: Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I suggested the other day that there were possibly dangers because of the strategic position the island occupies. I do not know whether it might be made the base of operations or whether certain preparations might be made there that would render the island valuable in time of trouble; but if the right hon. leader of the opposition was right when he said a day or so ago that during the great war mines were laid off our own coast, I think it would be highly undesirable that any foreign government should have a base somewhere near our coast. I do not think the members of this house will accuse me of being in any sense an alarmist; but war is war, and here is an island situated right within our doors and right beside the great United States republic to the south of us. That is one aspect of the case.

Again, if any foreign interests get hold of the resources of that island, they might desire to export them whether or not it was in the interests of this country, and it might be extremely difficult for us to enforce our own regulations under those circumstances. While primarily this is a matter that concerns the province of Quebec, there is a larger question involved. If there is any danger of the island passing into foreign hands, the dominion government should take it over as public property. I do not know if it can be turned into a park; but let it be turned into any sort of asset you please rather than have it pass into foreign hands. The island is too important to pass into foreign hands and under foreign management. Would the Prime Minister inform us a little more definitely on this matter than he did a few days ago in answer to the question I put on the orders of the day.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I think the question he has raised is quite a proper one to raise at this time. As I informed him, the government has been watching the situation as far as Anticosti island is concerned from the time there were rumours that certain foreign interests might seek to acquire the island. Not only has the federal government been watching the situation carefully but also the government of the province of Quebec, of which province Anticosti island is a part. Our two governments have been in correspondence with each other, and I think I may say that we are now of the opinion that because of misunderstandings to which it might give rise it would not be in the interests of Canada to have Anticosti island at this time pass into the hands of a foreign corporation. I think my hon. friend and the house may be assured that such will not be permitted to take place.

I should however like my hon. friend to consider for a moment to what his suggestion might lead if the government were to begin buying up and expropriating properties that corporations were seeking to dispose of to foreigners. Instead of having a possible base established at Anticosti we would be having possible bases established at many points throughout the country. I remember hearing many years ago that the emperor of Korea who had a great dislike for tall buildings, began to buy up all buildings over a certain height. Some of the servants in one of the legations got on to this and combined to build a tall building near the Emperor's palace with the result that the emperor was put to all kinds of trouble as well as expense in acquiring the property. I do not put that forward as a serious example but just to illustrate, certain traits of human nature being much the same in all lands, what might take place in Canada if the government were to expropriate properties because it was thought foreigners were seeking to take possession of them. For many reasons we have to view with great care the acquisition in a large way by the state of great properties in different parts of the country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad the Prime Minister said that he did not put forward that illustration of tall buildings as a very serious argument.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Only as illustrating human nature.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It may have been human nature; but there are ways of overcoming the vagaries of human nature, and the government should see that this is done. This is what was reported at the last annual meeting of the Consolidated Paper Corporation. The president, Mr. L. J. Belnap, referred to the prospective sale of Anticosti island to parties in Holland who several months ago had secured an option.

Mr. DUPUIS: What was the date?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was at the last annual meeting of the corporation, and it was reported in the Montreal Star, but I have not the exact date of the meeting. That is something pretty definite. I think we must recognize that there is not a very large number of Anticosti islands or anything of corresponding size that would be likely to be bought up by foreign interests, with the view of forcing the government into the awkward position of having to buy them. Anticosti island is in a unique position.

Further than that, the Prime Minister said just now that he has been in negotiation in regard to this matter with the premier of Quebec. I think we have a right to know what that negotiation involves. Is the Prime Minister prepared to state definitely that this sale will not be allowed to go on?

Mr. DUPUIS: He just said so.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No; he did not just say so. There is another matter involved. The Belnap paper corporation suggests that to the foreign company there should be added some Canadian directors. In that way, I fancy, it would be quite possible to camouflage the whole situation.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should like the Prime Minister to tell us definitely as a matter of governmental policy whether this government will allow Anticosti island to be sold to any foreign corporation. I want to get an assurance on that. I do not think that is unreasonable. Otherwise the matter is just going to drift and drift, and then possibly some very interested party will bring very great pressure to bear on Quebec, and Quebec, thinking in provincial terms, might very readily allow the transaction to go through. I introduced the matter first on the orders of the day, because I felt that this was not solely a provincial matter, but rather a matter of dominion importance. I think we are entitled to receive an assurance from the Prime Minister.

Mr. DUPUIS: Did the hon. member ever protest when the same island was for many years the property of a Frenchman, Monsieur Menier.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. DUPUIS: Was not the hon. member then a member of this house?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was not a member for most of the time that Monsieur Menier held the island, and I think the Prime Minister, at least, will agree that the situation to-day is very different from what it was when this property was owned by a Frenchman. It is now owned by a Canadian corporation.

Mr. BENNETT: In common, I suppose, with other members of the committee I have received many communications regarding Anticosti island. I treated them at first as being the rather extreme views of people who might be regarded as extreme in their attitude of mind towards the transaction, and I awaited further information. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to give you and this committee the benefit of the information I have. While possibly some of it may be inaccurate, in the main I think it can be relied upon.

First, there is outstanding an option for the sale of that island. Second, that option was given nominally to a Hollander. Third, a committee of foreigners came to this country to inspect that island. Fourth, the investigations made it quite clear that they were men of very great eminence in Germany. When I say "eminence" I mean eminent as militarists, as naval experts rather than as foresters, only one of them, I believe, could be described as a man who had any really high reputation in connection with forestry. The number of these men was very considerable. It was announced in a Montreal daily newspaper that they had arrived. The work they did is well known. The declaration made by the president of the Consolidated Paper company the other day as to the outstanding option removed any doubt, of course, which there might be in the mind of any person as to the possibility of the acquisition of this island by foreigners. I have never thought it was a very serious matter under normal conditions that a piece of territory in a province might be sold to people who were not British subjects. I learned, however, that there might be great importance attached to it. I suppose it is known to very few members of the committee that under the constitution of the state of Washington no foreigner can under any circumstances own a single piece of land in that state.

Mr. DUPUIS: Even companies?

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. DUPUIS: In the United States?

Mr. BENNETT: Neither directly nor indirectly, in the state of Washington.

Mr. POWER: California has a somewhat similar law.

Mr. BENNETT: Theirs is somewhat modified.

Mr. POWER: I think it applies to Japanese only.

Mr. BENNETT: Although I learned this professionally, I suppose there is no reason why I should not mention it. I was representing certain interests who wanted to acquire property in Washington. They were Canadians, and in consultation with the authorities I learned that the supreme court of Washington had decided that there was no means in the world by which a foreigner, a company or corporation or partnership or anything else, could acquire title to a piece of land in that state. In days gone by I did not attach much importance to this question of ownership, especially in view of the fact that companies are mainly the owners.

But now let us go a step further. Had this investigation been limited to the question of the number of cords of wood upon the island, the matter would have been simple. Unfortunately that is not solely what the investigations were about, and if there is any interest on the part of this committee as to the names of the investigators I can give them. I can also give the committee some information as to their reputations in Germany, their high reputations for skill, but not as foresters or as woodsmen. They have very close and intimate associations with the government of Germany. When my correspondents—more than one—saw what took place the other day at the annual meeting, they said, "Now you see how wrong you were. You see how much importance really does attach to this." Now it is proposed to do what was done by aliens in another province. In British Columbia certain aliens acquired interests in a timber limit and in something else which we shall leave out for the moment. They organized a company; of course it was a Canadian company and they had Canadians to act for them. I wonder how many of us have forgotten what happened at the outbreak of the war. I wonder if all of us have forgotten that distinguished German who cut so wide a swath in Vancouver. I wonder if we realize just what we discovered after it was all over.

It is proposed that a company shall be organized, a Canadian company. Well, in this material age Canadians with an assurance of good faith lend themselves to these matters and then endorse the certificate in blank, and that is the end of it; the active management passes into the hands of people who are selected by somebody else, and the purposes are not made apparent.

I suggest to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister of this country that the Expropriation Act, chapter 64 of the revised statutes of Canada, should be utilized. In section 2, paragraph (g), a "public work" is defined as meaning "fortifications and other works of defence, and all other property, which now belong to Canada," etc. There is granted the power of expropriation, fortunately, which enables this government to file in the appropriate registry office a plan—that is all that is necessary—over the signature of the Minister of National Defence, and the property is ours; it is then in the crown in the right of the nation. It does not make any difference whether or not it is crown land in right of the province; it is ours, because the nation requires it for its national well-being. The statute also provides something which I regard as of very great importance. It is not essential that you acquire the whole of the property; only such interest in it need be acquired as may be necessary for the purposes for which it is being acquired.

I therefore suggest to the Prime Minister the desirability of consulting with his officials in the Department of Justice and the Department of National Defence, and filing a plan to-morrow to acquire, not the timber, not the trees, not the forests, but the soil, the land of Anticosti island, making it clear that we do not want the trees. If they desire to carry on their operations they will still be able to do so, but we shall own the land itself in right of the crown. Then the question of taking possession comes up. We have the right to take possession at once when we deposit a plan. We deposit a plan indicating as nearly as we can the land which we are taking possession of—very simple in this case, for it is the land of Anticosti island. Subsection 2 of section 9 provides:

When any land taken is required for a limited time only, or only a limited estate or interest therein is required, the plan and description so deposited may indicate, by appropriate words written or printed thereon that the land is taken for such limited time only, or that only such limited estate or interest therein is taken, and by the deposit in such case, the right of possession for such limited time, or such limited estate or interest shall become and be vested in his majesty.

I repeat that we would get out of a very difficult position by merely expropriating the soil, leaving the trees, making it clear that we are not taking the forests, and that those who are acquiring them, if they desire to do so for the purpose of operating the mills, cutting down pulpwood and doing matters of that kind, may be able to do so. Have it written on the plan that the widest possible facilities will be afforded by the crown to those who may desire to carry on lumbering operations.

Mr. POWER: I am informed that we have some title to the sites of the lighthouses, so that the federal government has at least a foothold. Besides that, the federal government at one time, over my very serious protest, subscribed something like three or four hundred thousand dollars to the harbour of Anticosti, so that we have some claim on the wharves.

Mr. BENNETT: I looked into the wharf situation, and I am bound to say that on a moment's reflection I should have remembered the lighthouses because I have passed by when the lights were shining and I realized that they were under federal power. I should have remembered that, and I thank the hon. gentleman for directing my attention to it. I do remember the harbour; it was assistance given to the enterprise that was undertaking to remove pulpwood from Anticosti, which they said they could not ship because of lack of facilities for doing so. It was essential that they should have a harbour to enable barges to be laden with the wood and towed down to one of the pulp and paper mills. I do not think it can be said that the Anticosti venture has been a great success. I put it as mildly as that and say nothing further about it. But here is an opportunity for us to acquire what I describe as the title to the surface. On the plan we can make it clear that we do not want anything in the way of buildings that are owned by others, or trees, forests or anything else, but that the crown for national reasons proposes to acquire property in the soil. It can be made plain that any use that may be desired for purposes of development will always be facilitated, that any facilities required will be available, and that they will be free to put up a mill or do work of that sort. That has been done in this country.

I suppose it does no harm for one to refer to the fact that when we went to Churchill and chose that as our site we filed a plan. Although there had been a great deal of what might be called speculative buying and selling of that townsite, nevertheless people were awarded $60 a lot by the exchequer court. That is my memory of it. At any rate, it was a very small sum. There may be some members in this house who recall the exact amount. It will be remembered also that when we had to do with the improvements in Montreal, without waiting even for all the details, a plan was filed in the name of the Minister of Railways and all that land was vested in the crown. The present Minister of Finance was then Minister of Railways. The hon. gentleman is now coming into the chamber, and I may tell him I am referring to the plan filed by the Minister of Railways at that time for the acquisition of lands in Montreal in connection with the proposed construction of the terminals there. I was also discussing what was done in connection with the filing of a plan for taking over the townsite at Churchill under the Expropriation Act. A question was raised in the court as to the validity of these actions and the court sustained the action taken by the government, holding that under this very statute it was a valid exercise of power in connection with the Churchill matter.

I suggest that the cost would be insignificant, trifling—why? Because we do not suggest for a moment that we are going to take that to which value has been attached. If all these stories are true, these people are not going in there for anything other than the development of the forest resources of the island; and in the plan that we would file we would make it clear that we did not intend to touch or to interfere with development of anything connected with those resources, and that the surface, to the extent that it might be required to enable them to develop the forest resources, would still be available for them, but that we would be proprietors of the land. There is a special provision with respect to crown lands owned by the province. I make this suggestion to the Prime Minister with much hesitancy. Frankly, I found it a little difficult to bring my mind to the thought that this was worthy of serious consideration, but I am satisfied that it is a serious matter. All you have to do is look at the personnel, if you like, of the whole situation. One does not want to talk about relationship and ties of marriage and matters of that sort, questions of the nationalities of various people. We do not want to discuss that, but if you look into these things you will find that there is ample food for careful thought.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My right hon. friend as well as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has referred to the possible seriousness of the situation. May I say that the government has been fully alive to that aspect of it from the beginning. We have been watching the situation very carefully, and, as I have indicated, have been in communication with the government of the province of Quebec in relation to it. I am glad to be able to say that the government of the province of Quebec and this government are of one view with respect to the importance of that island being kept securely for Canadian interests, and that no foreign interest should be permitted to get any control of it in a manner that could possibly prejudice the position either of the province of Quebec or of all Canada. My right hon. friend has referred to the Departments of Justice and National Defence as departments likely to be principally concerned. I may say that for some time past both departments have been at work on the obtaining of detailed information, and have been carefully considering what steps might be advisable and necessary. I do not think I should say more than that the government itself is considering what is the best step to take and the time to take it in the light of all circumstances. We are not overlooking any circumstances of importance, but in dealing with property in any province care has to be taken to consider the interests of that province and how the province concerned is likely to view any action on the part of the dominion government. If it is found necessary to take action on this matter of the character indicated I hope whatever is done will be done with the full accord of both governments. Certainly that accord exists at the present time with respect to the steps that thus far have seemed essential to protect all interests.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Item No. 45, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: The leader of the opposition stated he had not finished at six o'clock.

Canada's contributions to maintenance of external organizations—To the expenses of the league of nations for 1938, including secretariat, international labour organization and permanent court of international justice, $150,565.

Mr. BENNETT: When Mr. Chairman called it six o'clock I had not concluded what I was saying. The right hon. the Prime Minister spoke after the chairman had said it was six o'clock. I wish to make only a few further observations in connection with this matter. Hitler's personal representative, or a gentleman who at any rate alleges he is such, was in this country on Saturday last, and was in Ottawa on Sunday. He stated he had been down to Quebec to see the premier there. Whether or not that is correct, I cannot say. I only know what he said and that Sunday he was here. The highly intelligent gentlemen of the press seem to have overlooked the fact. Whether it was in relation to Anticosti island or not, I have no means of knowing. But at any rate he managed to escape publicity here.

I have pointed out the method by which the crown can relieve us of any possible anxiety or worry with respect to this matter, and without incurring any very substantial financial obligations. I say that because the statute is framed for the purpose of enabling the crown to acquire a very limited interest or such interest as may be desirable for the purpose of protecting itself from any improper claims. It is needless to say that the island of Anticosti lies in the gulf of St. Lawrence, and not only commands the north and south shores of the river and the gulf, but commands the trade and commerce of the whole of that watershed which is drained by the great lakes and the St. Lawrence. From a strategical standpoint it is of very great importance. I know not of its value from the standpoint of its possibility of production of pulpwood, but I knew something of the circumstances under which it was acquired, and of the surveys which were made at that time. It is very difficult to understand just why soundings, for instance, are so essential now for the purpose of ascertaining the value of an island for timber purposes.

Mr. DUNNING: There is a very important reason there, in that case.

Mr. BENNETT: But I am talking about recent times. I agree that a very substantial investigation did take place, and rightly or wrongly we were induced, in view of representations made as to the situation of the paper industry, to provide money for the construction of wharves at Anticosti island, to which the Minister of National Health referred this afternoon. But more recent explorations in that direction are perhaps a little more difficult to understand.

One word more, and that has to do with our situation with relation to our friends to the south. The importance of the island from the standpoint of an airport or the standpoint of a possible base for many operations must be apparent, and affects as well our relations with the outside world as our relations with our friends and neighbours to the south. It would be an unpleasant situation if it were to develop that we had not protected ourselves to the fullest possible degree. I was glad to hear the Prime Minister say—what I would expect he would say, of course—that he is fully aware of the possibilities latent in the situation.

I am sure anyone charged with the responsibilities of government would realize these possibilities. The steps which might be taken for the purpose of protecting ourselves is another matter altogether. I think the provisions of the statute might easily be utilized so as to protect us, and at the same time not involve any heavy liabilities.

I have not forgotten the tendencies of our friends from Germany. Those who have read the memoranda left by the last German ambassador to Great Britain before the war, Prince Lichnowsky, will realize to what extent he, himself, was the victim of deception in connection with the operations of his own country. I think it is only fair to say that one country house, which was frequently visited at weekends by German representatives, was found to be a vantage point for observations from the roof. The type of men who came here to make investigations which were not made in a corner—in that sense they were done openly—certainly were not Hollanders nor were they Dutch. They were not men who were concerned solely with the manufacture of pulp, as I mentioned this afternoon.

We should not hesitate to take steps which would render it impossible for us to have any further anxiety with respect to the matter. The statute I think provides a remedy, without involving us in any great liability. It is always difficult to know how far one should go in discussing a matter of this kind. There is a public duty with respect to the community at large on the part of those who constitute an opposition, and there is a public duty as well not to arouse unnecessarily public anxiety or even public resentment. But on the other hand I had occasion the other day to refer to what had come to my own observation, and not in this part of Canada, I am perfectly frank in saying. Since then I doubt not that many members of this committee have read in one of the great United States newspapers of the anxiety that is felt there with respect to somewhat similar matters. The far-reaching consequences of the doctrine that has been enunciated by the German Fuehrer in connection with minorities, and the duty to the parent state of all who owe, or whose ancestors owed allegiance to that community, are such as to make one apprehensive under the conditions to which attention has been directed here.

If I have refrained from making statements that I think possibly at the moment might not assist the government in the discharge of its public duty, I do so because, the Prime Minister having stated that the government is fully aware of the circumstances to which attention has been directed, and that it is taking every reasonable step to deal with that situation, I should do nothing which will embarrass the government in that work, except to point out certain difficulties which I think are inherent in the situation itself, and particularly that difficulty which arises out of the organization of a Canadian company with dummy directors, alleging that there is no danger or fear because the Canadian directors or those in charge may have pieces of paper issued to them which they have endorsed in blank and which mean nothing in the world. The whole situation so bristles with difficulties that it does seem to me an easy way out would be to take the appropriate proceedings and expropriate that island; not the property as a whole, but the soil without the forest or the mills or the wharves; just what might be necessary to constitute proprietorship in the crown in the right of the dominion.

Item agreed to.

To portion of expenditure of the imperial economic committee and the imperial shipping committee for 1938, $18,690.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister explain the work of these two committees?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend knows, these are committees that are set up in London, the memberships being made up of representatives of the different parts of the empire. The one committee deals with economic questions, the other with questions pertaining to shipping that affect several parts of the empire. The Canadian representatives on the imperial economic committee are Colonel Vanier and Mr. M. F. Hudd. The work of the committee is mainly the collection and presentation of economic information relating to different commodities or groups of commodities, the general purpose being to throw light on the competition which empire countries are likely to meet. This is done through reports to governments on subjects within the terms of the committee's reference, such as the issue of economic information on the production, trade and consumption of particular commodities. The commercial intelligence service of the committee covers canned and dried fish notes, dairy products' notes and the publication of world surveys of production, trade and consumption of selected commodities, for example, cattle and beef, mutton and lamb and so on. World surveys on apple, pear and fig production are under preparation. Inquiries made at the time of the last imperial conference indicated that the different governments were making an extensive use of the trade information and statistical services of the imperial economic committee.

The Canadian representative on the imperial shipping committee is the high commissioner for Canada. In his absence, he is represented by Mr. MacLeod of Canada house. It may be noted that among the inquiries of the imperial shipping committee involving questions of interest to Canada are Pacific shipping, marine insurance, Hudson bay and St. Lawrence river routes and communication with the British isles.

Mr. GREEN: What is the situation in connection with the purchase of new boats for the Canada-Australia-New Zealand service?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That particular matter would come under the Department of Trade and Commerce. It was a subject of consideration some time ago by the imperial shipping committee. The Minister of Trade and Commerce would be the one to report on the progress of negotiations. I may say to my hon. friend that the matter is subject to negotiations at the present time which have not been completed.

Mr. GREEN: Did this imperial shipping committee report in favour of new boats being required for this service?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The imperial shipping committee is a fact-finding body. It does not report for or against a project; it rather seeks to present an analysis of the situation with a view to enabling the governments concerned to work out the more intelligently and effectively a solution of the problem among themselves.

Mr. MacNEIL: If I might revert to the the previous item, could the Prime Minister advise if Canada has been consulted in connection with the recognition of the Italian conquest of Ethiopia? Has any particular attitude been expressed in that regard?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The governments of the different parts of the empire, including the government of the United Kingdom, are free to take their own course in the matter. The United Kingdom government has adopted its own course. Up to the present we have not had occasion to express any view.

Item agreed to.

International joint commission, 1-2 Geo. V, chapter 28, $75,000.

Mr. BENNETT: This item deals with the expenses of the international joint commission. It is a statutory item and does not require a specific appropriation, but it affords me an opportunity to direct the attention of the government to a matter that I regard as rather serious, especially in view of the decision of the privy council in connection with our right as a parliament in any sense to abridge or lessen the powers of the provinces. Section 2 of chapter 28 of the statutes of 1911 reads:

The laws of Canada and of the several provinces thereof are hereby amended and altered so as to permit, authorize and sanction the performance of the obligations undertaken by His Majesty in and under the said treaty; and so as to sanction, confer and impose the various rights, duties and disabilities intended by the said treaty to be conferred or imposed or to exist within Canada.

This is a direct and clear-cut statement on the part of this parliament that any laws in any province of Canada should be set aside by that treaty. There it is. If the decision to which I have referred is sound, then this statute is useless and our international joint commission has no foundation. In the very nature of things it does deal with matters that are within provincial jurisdiction. As long as it deals with matters within the federal jurisdiction I cannot conceive of any difficulty arising, but the language of that section and the judgment of Lord Atkin are in complete contradiction with one another. Speaking for the privy council he has said that we have no power to abridge, lessen or alter the constitutional rights of the provinces by any treaty that we might make. True, this treaty was made by Great Britain, not by Canada. Lord Bryce signed on behalf of Great Britain and Mr. Root, on behalf of the United States, but that fact does not get us away from the provisions of section 132 of the British North America Act. This is not a matter of a treaty within the empire; it is a treaty that has to do with the United States. On May 19, 1911, we passed a statute that declared:

> The laws of Canada and of the several provinces thereof are hereby amended and altered so as to permit, authorize and sanction the performance of the obligations undertaken by His Majesty in and under the said treaty;

This is so clear that I felt at the first opportunity which offered, namely, when the estimates were under consideration, I should direct attention to it. I should like the law officers of the crown to satisfy themselves as to just what our position may be. Section 132 of the British North America Act reads:

> The parliament and government of Canada shall have all powers necessary or proper for performing the obligations of Canada or of any province thereof, as part of the British empire, towards foreign countries arising under treaties between the empire and such foreign countries.

I take it that it is alleged that under this section of the British North America Act there is power in this parliament to do what is done by chapter 28 of the statutes of 1911. But is that a sound contention? But it does create such a condition, in my opinion, having regard to the language of that judgment, if we give attention to its exact terms, that I venture to believe should receive the consideration of the government. The matter was discussed in this house in 1928 to considerable extent. I took the view then which Lord Atkin took in the privy council, that it was ultra vires for this parliament by legislation to bring about what amounted to an amendment to the constitution of the provinces. The then Solicitor General took another view, contending that section 132 was broad enough to cover the situation. I subsequently modified my view, having regard to the judgment of Lord Chancellor Sankey—

Mr. DUNNING: And you have to change it again.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly, and that is the reason I venture—not expecting the Prime Minister to give an answer—merely to direct attention to the matter in order that it may be looked into by the law officers of the crown, and appropriate action taken. I do not express any opinion as to what, if anything, is essential should be done, but I point out that grave doubts are thrown on the validity of the statute itself, having regard to the terms in which it expresses the will of this parliament with respect to the provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I assume that my right hon. friend in what he has just said did not intend to open a debate on the treaty-making power. It is a matter for the law officers of the crown; I am sure they will be pleased carefully to consider what my right hon. friend has said.

Mr. CHURCH: What has become of the application during the last few years before the international joint commission for additional power in the Niagara river, with a view also of preserving the scenic beauty of Niagara falls? The treaty was before the house a few years ago but was rejected by the United States for some reason. Has anything been done since?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is no application before the international joint commission on the subject to which my hon. friend has referred.

Mr. CHURCH: Regarding the collapse of the bridge at Niagara falls, does the treaty not also give the joint commission jurisdiction as to the kind of bridge that may be erected, and also in regard to obstructions in the river? For example, material escaped and is floating in the Niagara river and away out into lake Ontario as far as Sodus point, and is a menace to navigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The authority is broad enough to permit the commission to make inquiry into any matters of the kind referred to, but the commission would first have to be directed to make such an inquiry, and no such request has been made by either government.

Mr. CHURCH: Has any action been taken by the commission in reference to the lowering of the water levels in the great lakes, brought about by the Chicago diversion? The treaty gives the commission absolute jurisdiction. Is the Canadian section, or the government, or the department, negotiating with reference to the matter of illegal diversion of waters, thus lowering lake levels and doing damage to navigation on the great lakes?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The commission is not dealing with the subject of the lake levels. The matter was dealt with in the St. Lawrence treaty, and it would be that treaty that would govern.

Mr. BENNETT: I think what the hon. member for Broadview was referring to is whether or not any action has been taken or is contemplated by the government of the United States in connection with that agreement which was arrived at between Canada and the United States in connection with the scenic beauty of Niagara falls. It will be remembered that we ratified the agreement, but it was thrown out by the United States senate. Then it was resubmitted, and I am not familiar with what has happened since. I was rather curious to know whether or not any action has been taken, because pieces of rock have fallen off from the face of the falls since then; there has been a gradual destruction by nature of the face of the fall itself. The Prime Minister will remember that Hon. Charles Stewart was then Minister of the Interior, and he negotiated the agreement. He felt then that it was a matter of considerable urgency, and I rather agreed with him. We endeavoured to get it disposed of, but we had no better success than the right hon. gentleman. I was wondering whether it has been cleaned up since then or is in process of being disposed of.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The United States government has presented to our government the point of view that all these waterways matters should be dealt with more or less as one in connection with a coordinated plant. It would involve consideration of questions of diversion and levels, power, scenic beauty and the like, wherever they arise from the head of the lakes to the St. Lawrence, and along its international course. Thus far it has not been possible to reach agreement between the two countries as to proceeding only in that way.

Item agreed to.

Representation abroad, including ministers plenipotentiary, secretaries and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments—further amount required, $60,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This item is to make provision for the legations which it is intended to open in Belgium and Holland. There will be the one minister but two offices. Details are given on page 28 of the supplementary estimates.

As hon. members are aware, it is over ten years since Canada first established a legation at Washington, and we have since established legations in Paris and Tokyo. It has been felt that we ought to extend our diplomatic service somewhat, and our business interests with Belgium and Holland are greater than those with any other countries in Europe or other parts of the world other than those in which we have legations at the present time. For that among other reasons we felt that the next legations to be opened should be in Belgium and Holland. It is customary in the case of many countries to have one minister represent his own country in two different countries.

Mr. BENNETT: South Africa does.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes. The Irish Free State, although it took action subsequently to Canada, has now legations in seven foreign capitals, and South Africa has legations in eight. This will bring our number to five. I might point out that the countries comparable with our own in the matter of population such as Argentina, Belgium, the Netherlands and Sweden, have from thirty-seven to fifty-two posts abroad.

Mr. BROOKS: Will the Prime Minister tell us in which city the legation will have its headquarters; will it be in Holland or in Belgium?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: At Brussels and at the Hague. There will be two offices, but the one minister will be named as minister to both. A chargé d'affaires will act for him in the one country during his absence in the other country.

Mr. BENNETT: It is perhaps in connection with this item that I should have made the observations I did in connection with promotions in the service. I can only express the hope that it may be possible to find a place for one of the members of the service as minister at Brussels and the Hague. I believe there are within the service itself a number of men who are qualified by their long experience to fill with distinction such an appointment and thereby indicate, at least, that there is a career in that branch of the public service.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I should like to add, in connection with the legation at Brussels, that it will be recalled that a year or two ago the Belgian government sent a distinguished representative to Canada. Belgium is at present and has from the outset been represented in this country by Baron Silvercruys.

Mr. CHURCH: With reference to item No. 505, the supplementary vote to provide for:

Representation abroad, including ministers plenipotentiary—

"Envoy extraordinary" has been left out.

—secretaries and staff, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act or any of its amendments—further amount required, $60,000.

I wish to protest against this form of separatism, of dividing Britain's representation and adding a new legation in Belgium and Holland. It is unnecessary. These services are already covered by the British embassies and our own trade commissioners. It means that we are going to open up a legation in a danger spot of Europe, namely Holland and Belgium, which will be a very sad state of affairs for us. The policy I recommend is that we should close up some of these useless legations instead of opening more. I have protested against this form of separatism at every session I have been here. It was made a plank in the platform of the Twentieth Century Liberals last week; they protested against separatism. What has Canada already in Holland and Belgium? Trade commissioners and all classes of commercial agents of the Department of Trade and Commerce are all over Europe. Yet you are opening up an agency there which divides Britain's representation in two, in places where you have no army, no navy and no league to back up what you are doing there. It will simply mean that Canadian nationals will lose the protection they have, and it will cost this country more than $60,000.

I wish to protest against this kind of thing. It is going to bring Canada into all the affairs of Europe. Next year we shall no doubt be asked to establish a legation at Rome. The Prime Minister went to Berlin, and there was a proposal a few years ago and last year to open an embassy in Berlin representing Canada in Germany. If we are a separate country, let us get out of the British Empire. I referred to this matter this afternoon in my remarks; I referred to it last year in reference to Japan. I predicted that we would have trouble in Japan before the year was out, and three months afterwards trouble and war broke out. We have a legation there which does nothing. Anyone who wants protection goes to Shanghai and other places, to the British embassy for protection. We are opening up a lot of useless agencies and providing them with secretaries, a subordinate staff, and all that kind of thing. What good will all this division of authority be? It will emphasize our separation from Great Britain, which enjoys the prestige of protecting Belgium and has treaties with France and other countries in regard to it. Are we to be drawn into establishing legations in every petty country in Europe, when it should be the policy of Canada to get out of the League of Nations as rapidly as possible and bring home our envoys extraordinary and all the rest of these officials?

Just to illustrate the principle, we have Sir Herbert Marler, who went down to the Mexican border the other day and made a political speech at Houston, Texas. He gave his opinion on current events, trade, diplomacy and many other matters. He told the people there how large our trade is and that if people will turn their attention to trade relations, political questions will take care of themselves—all that kind of thing. These ambassadors of ours are just causing trouble. They are not necessary. They divide Britain's affairs. Not by the widest stretch of the imagination can it be said that Canada, a country of ten million people, needs to appoint ministers in Europe in this way. Has New Zealand or Australia an ambassador in Holland or Belgium? No. I protest against this vote on behalf of the taxpayers, in a year in which it is difficult for business men to pay their taxes. In another of his speeches our minister at Washington, addressing a Canadian Club in New York, makes some political remarks; I see references in them to Mexico, the demands for the return of oil profits, and Mexico's row with the oil moguls.

When this legation of ours is opened overseas, on one side of the street will be the British embassy, and on the other side will be the rival Canadian legation, but we shall have nothing with which to back it up If any Canadian national gets into trouble over there, what are you going to do about it? You know the trouble we got into with Italy, through passing sanctions. It was announced with a great flourish of trumpets that we were going to have an ambassador to Italy, and our delegates to the imperial conference went over Europe in part but they did not get as far as Italy; after the imperial conference was over, our emissaries did not see fit to honour Mussolini with a visit.

What is the idea of all this? Are you going to have these useless legations all over the seven seas? We have a Department of Trade and Commerce, presided over by a minister who sends out every month a booklet showing the work done by our various trade agents in the capitals of Europe. Why is that not sufficient? This is just dividing Britain's representation, a policy so fatal in peace, and more disastrous in war.

Dear knows where the next legation is going to be. All this is nothing but straight separatism. Had I been in the house when the legation was proposed for Washington, I would have opposed it even though I had been the only one in the house to do so. What had our minister there to do with the contest of the congressional party versus the administrative party?

In regard to foreign affairs, we know that to-day the British ambassadors to Belgium and Holland are right in the centre of the trouble in Europe; they will be immediately affected if war comes, and war may come at any moment. You have to be ready for it; you have to be ready to meet these dictators. Are we to continue this policy of separatism, dividing Britain's representation all over the world? We have seen the result of it in South Africa. We have seen the result of it in Ireland. Those countries are outside the empire altogether. Ireland proposes to appoint a president; the Irish will not have "God save the King." For our part, we continue this separatist movement and increase these votes every year. I do not know why we belong to the British Empire. The British ambassador to the Hague and Belgium was good enough to look after Canadian interests in the Low Countries for four and a half years, during the war; he also looked after our expeditionary force without any trouble to us.

What do we see happening in this country? Germany had only invaded Austria the day before when, according to the Montreal papers, she hauled down the Austrian flag and put up the German flag over the consulate there. We have gone far enough in getting out of the empire. Let us turn attention to our own country and our domestic affairs. With the trouble we are having in Canada at the present time, with the difficulties our people find in making a living, we should close up these embassies—I would shut up every one of them—and return to the old system of depending on the British Empire and the mother country, not only for diplomatic representation but for an army, air force and fleet to protect our shores.

We are going to provide this new legation this first year with a whole lot of secretaries. I do not know how many there will be. They generally have a first secretary and a second secretary and a third secretary, and a fourth secretary with another degree—that is, he has one more degree than the other gentlemen secretaries from the same or other university—and I suppose they will sit there right in the centre where the trouble is, in Belgium, and study international law. I suppose this policy will extend to Russia, then to Italy; next it will cover the Black sea and we shall find these legations all over the seven seas and the civilized world. But what are they doing? They have large staffs and visitors from all parts of the world, from north and south, from east and west. It seems to me that we are taking on the airs of a nation, while we are doing nothing but sponging on the mother country for protection. We may open up all the agencies we like, but the fact remains that we are not a nation. See what happened in our dealings with Italy. We got into trouble there with passing sanctions, and we had to cancel the sanctions as soon as or shortly after they were passed. We have a minister to Japan. What is he doing there?

These legations were started when the first one was established in Washington; then the policy was extended to France; then someone said that we ought to cross the Pacific, and there was a proposal that we should also have legations in Japan and China. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there is altogether too much interference and too much of an attempt to divide Britain's authority. This is not only fatal in times of peace, but will be absolutely destructive in war. It is having a disruptive effect in Europe at the present time. What both Canada and Britain need to-day is a foreign minister like that great man of a hundred years ago, George Canning, to keep the empire out of trouble and out of Europe.

The United States since George Washington's day will not interfere in European affairs, and it seems to me absurd for us to be establishing a legation in Belgium and Holland at the present time. Belgium is under the protection of two great powers, which have armies and fleets. She is in the danger zone, and what are we doing? We are going over there over the head of the British parliament and are appointing a minister to Belgium. In other words, we are saying that we are not satisfied with the British ambassador. We are satisfied enough while a war is on to have the British ambassador act for us, but now we want our own ambassador. I have no doubt that the next thing will be the establishment of something like Canada house, costing two and a half millions, and they will probably have a Canadian flag flying over the legation, while inside the doors you will find brass railings and fittings and a host of secretaries. The first secretary will report to the second secretary; the second secretary will report to the third secretary; the third secretary will report to the fourth secretary, and finally that dignitary will report to the minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary—and I admit that some of them are extraordinary. Here is a sample of some of the extraordinary things they do, these articles with reference to Sir Herbert Marler. That gentleman at one time represented the constituency of St. Lawrence-St. George in this house, and then he was made a diplomat overnight. I had never known him to be a diplomat; certainly he never looked like one; but, as I say, he was made into a diplomat, and in these articles we see what he had to say with reference to the situation in Mexico when certain British property was confiscated there.

Are we going to open another legation in Belgium and hoist our flag there? I suppose the next thing will be to have legations in all the Balkan states. No doubt after our representative has been in Belgium for some time he will be moved on. He will probably get an order to make room for the ambassador from Washington. That gentleman has been all over the world and he will probably be sent to Belgium. I do not know who will be selected for the post in China, probably the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey). I saw him talking the other day with a couple of Chinamen—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. May I ask the hon. member what item he is discussing?

Mr. CHURCH: A principle is involved in this vote of $60,000 for representation abroad, Mr. Chairman, and I am dealing with that principle, the principle of separatism, and the dividing of Britain's representation in Holland and Belgium. I am absolutely opposed to it, and I believe that the Canadian people will be opposed to it too. No wonder someone made the statement on one occasion that Britain was the hardest country in the world to deal with because of all these embassies. He said it was hard to make a treaty with Britain because Britain could do nothing without consulting the dominions, and the dominions could do nothing without consulting envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary. I am absolutely opposed to all this sort of thing, and if they open an embassy in China I am going to oppose it, just as I shall oppose one in Rome. It was proposed two years ago to open one there, and we know the trouble we got into over the question of sanctions. However, this policy of creating one embassy after another will simply seal the fate of the government when the people understand that the embassies are nothing but mischievous institutions, the practical effect of which is to divide Britain's authority abroad.

Mr. MacNEIL: How will these representatives be designated? Will they both be known as ministers?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There will be one minister who will be Minister to Belgium and also Minister to The Netherlands.

Mr. MacNEIL: Will that mean that they will have power to negotiate matters political as well as with respect to trade?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The political end of it is the more important of the two with respect to diplomatic representation, using "political" in the large sense of the word.

Mr. MacNEIL: Can we have some further explanation as to why Belgium and Holland were selected in this instance, seeing how extremely important it is that we should have our own representatives at Berlin and Rome?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The trade and business that Canada has with Holland and Belgium is more extensive than the business with Germany and Italy. As mentioned a moment ago, Belgium has opened a legation in Canada, in the city of Ottawa. It is customary in diplomatic matters, where a step of the kind is taken by one country, to return its representation. That has not been the governing principle in this case, but we thought that in extending our legations Belgium and Holland, having regard to the important relations we have with those two countries, were the natural countries in which to take the next step. There is this advantage in having an additional minister in Europe, that there are many matters which the government may wish to have reported upon by a minister of its own, and a minister resident at Brussels would be in a position to visit Scandinavian countries if that were thought advisable and to report upon any special matters there, or to visit Berlin or other centres. We have frequently had occasion to ask our minister in France to act for the government at the League of Nations and we have had occasion to have our high commissioner represent us also at the league and in different parts of Europe. The addition of one more minister in Europe at this time will be helpful to the government in obtaining such information as it desires to have from its own source with regard to matters of concern to our own country.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I thought the Prime Minister said a few minutes ago that the functions of these men were to be diplomatic rather than those associated with trade. If that is so, it would seem as if in selecting another country we should select from among the larger countries rather than those of minor importance. I do not think that point was answered by the Prime Minister.

Then there is a second consideration. If I am rightly informed, if war should be declared by a country in which we were represented only by the British minister and that minister were withdrawn, thereby we would be automatically at war. I think this is just one aspect of the matter we were discussing two days ago. If that is correct —and I wish the Prime Minister would tell us, because he is an expert in these matters —ought we not on that account to have ministers at the larger centres? Or are we simply going to throw up the whole thing and say we are automatically at war when Britain is at war? These are rather important considerations, it seems to me, and I should like to have a little more light on the matter than I have at the moment.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is true that we have efficient trade commissioners dealing with questions of trade in a number of countries. However, with the restrictions that are placed on trade to-day, arising from embargoes, quotas, questions of exchange control and the like, many situations are created that can best or only be dealt with efficiently by a minister, with the minister of the department of government in the country concerned. The whole business of international trade nowadays requires more in the way of direct communication between government representatives as distinct from representatives of government departments. A minister has full authority to take up questions of the kind with the ministers of the government of the country to which he is accredited. Without the authority which his rank gives, access to governments abroad is not easily obtained by officials. That is one of the reasons why the question of Canada having ministers in other countries is becoming increasingly important.

With respect to the other point mentioned by my hon. friend, as to whether or not Canada is at war when Britain is at war, I do not see that the situation would be altered in the least by the fact that in the one case you had an ambassador from the United Kingdom who might be withdrawn and in the other case a minister from your own country who might be withdrawn. The broad question of whether Canada is at war when Britain is at war would still remain, regardless altogether of any representation either country might have or cease to have.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. CAHAN: Is it anticipated that Belgium and Holland will each send a minister to Canada and establish a legation here?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As my hon. friend knows, Belgium has already opened a legation in this city. Whether or not Holland will follow the example of Belgium, I cannot say. It is possible that she may, but I do not know.

Item agreed to.

To provide for expenses arising out of the Trail Smelter arbitration, $7,600.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought we were indemnified in this matter. Now that the question has been disposed of, should we vote any money for this purpose? I know we were indemnified against any expense in connection with this arbitration. Why are we voting money for it now? The award has been made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is a system of control that is to be continued for another two years, and this amount is to cover whatever may be necessary in that connection.

Mr. BENNETT: The company pays for it?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Ultimately the company will pay for it; that is correct.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Direct payments to veterans and dependents—War veterans' allowances—further amount required, $1,400,000.

Mr. GREEN: Is this vote intended to meet the requirement of the War Veterans' Allowance Act passed this year?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Are applications being received already?

Mr. POWER: Yes, a very large number of applications has been received. It was estimated that there would be something like five thousand applications, and I think perhaps half of them are in. Some allowances have been actually granted. The act was assented to on April 6, and by the end of April some eighty allowances had been issued. I think we are now up pretty close to one hundred and fifty.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry? Carried.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to protest, Mr. Chairman; I have not even found the items in this book, as it is now arranged. Yet you go ahead, tear off your slip and declare the item carried. That has been done half a dozen times in the last hour or so.

Mr. POWER: This item happens to be in the supplementary estimates. I called the number and said it was in the supplementary estimates; I am sorry if my hon. friend did not hear me.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not think we should be so hasty that members of the committee cannot follow what is being done.

Mr. POWER: It is item No. 557, on page 6 of the supplementary estimates.

Mr. MacNEIL: Has there been any change in the estimate of the number likely to benefit under this legislation?

Mr. POWER: No. When the bill was being discussed in the house it was estimated that there would be approximately five thousand who would come under the war veterans' allowance during the course of this year and that the cost would be something like $2,100,000. Since they will not all come on at once, however, it is likely that the cost this year will be about $1,400,000.

Mr. MacNEIL: Has any step been taken to review, automatically, the files of those who formerly applied for war veterans' allowance and who were refused on the ground that they were not permanently unemployable? A number of men keep writing me stating that they have applied and been rejected. Apparently their files have not been reviewed, and they are at a loss how to proceed. In spite of the excellent work that has been done by the board in distributing information on the subject, there is still some uncertainty. Could there not be some automatic review of applications formerly rejected before the act was amended?

Mr. POWER: I think for the moment the board will have all it can do to deal with the applications which have come before it since the amendment was passed.

Item agreed to.

Pensions branch—Pensions branch administration—further amount required, $30,240.

Mr. GREEN: What is the reason for this vote?

Mr. POWER: This is also in connection with the war veterans' allowance. Under the set-up of our estimates the staff for the war veterans' allowance outside Ottawa is supplied by the Department of Pensions, and this provides for a number of reviewers, stenographers, investigators and so on. The same applies to the next item; only those will be directly under the control of the board here in Ottawa, looking after the applications, which are coming in very rapidly.

Mr. GREEN: I see there is quite a large sum for temporary assistance. What is the nature of that?

Mr. POWER: There are two members of the board at $6,000 each, and then there is the temporary assistance. A very large portion of the staff will be temporary, to deal with the rush we are having at the present time. I may say that in Toronto since April we have had a thousand applications filed, and we need this staff in the worst way possible, as soon as we can get it, to deal with them.

Mr. GREEN: They are all being taken on through the civil service commission?

Mr. POWER: Oh, yes.

Mr. MacNEIL: Under this item could I urge the minister to introduce a bill this session amending the Pension Act? There are certain matters which urgently require consideration, and I think it would be advisable to have them cleaned up as quickly as possible. I refer particularly to the deadline; to some anomaly that exists in regard to the position of widows who were married between 1931 and 1933, and to section 77 of the act.

Mr. POWER: The matter is still under consideration; but I want to be quite frank with my hon. friend, and I must say I hardly think it will be possible to introduce any new pension legislation this year, though the government has not definitely come to any conclusion in the matter. A decision will be reached within a few days.

Item agreed to.

War veterans' allowance board—further amount required, $73,200.

Mr. GREEN: The sum of $45,000 is to be paid to the soldier settlement board for investigation. What is that for?

Mr. POWER: Investigation in rural districts is and has always been undertaken by the soldier settlement board. So far that board have been doing this work without charge, but they have found that they have a lot of work to do in connection with the matter, as well as in connection with several other pieces of legislation—I believe the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the Farm Loan Board are included—so they have asked that this department pay its share for the work being done.

Mr. GREEN: The administration expenses here in connection with the supplementary vote for war veterans' allowances seem higher than they were for the vote in the original estimates. I believe they work out at about five per cent of the amounts to be paid to the recipients. Why is that? I understand it was only about two per cent in the other case.

Mr. POWER: This will be temporary, and as soon as the rush is over the staff will be adjusted.

Mr. BROOKS: What is the basis of payment to the members of the soldier settlement board? Will they be paid on a mileage basis?

Mr. POWER: I have not any idea of that at all. The persons I mentioned a moment ago are not employees of this department. I was merely saying that the Department of Pensions utilizes the services of the employees of the soldier settlement board to make investigations in rural districts, and that for that service the board have asked us to pay a certain amount.

Mr. BROOKS: Is not the minister responsible for paying them?

Mr. POWER: We are paying $45,000 in a lump sum for work they do every day throughout Canada.

Mr. BROOKS: How did you arrive at the sum of $45,000?

Mr. POWER: There was a calculation made as to the cost in each investigation, and I believe it worked out at about $6 or $7 for each one. After considerable negotiation between the departments it was decided that if the Department of Pensions would allot $45,000 to the soldier settlement board, they would be able to do our work for us this year.

Mr. BROOKS: Would the soldier settlement board make recommendations to the department?

Mr. POWER: They merely investigate cases.

Mr. BROOKS: They do not make recommendations?

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): I notice there is provision for two members of the board at $6,000 each. Why is that item in the supplementary rather than the general estimates? Are they new appointees for this particular position?

Mr. POWER: Yes; under legislation which passed the house in the month of April. At the time the main estimates were made up the board consisted of three men; but under the new legislation which passed the house some time in April the personnel of the board was increased to five members, so that we have to make provision for them in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): Do any of the five members of the board receive less than $6,000?

Mr. POWER: No; that is the statutory salary.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to add that the arrangement by which the soldier settlers do this work is an excellent one. They are living in the district and have been familiar with the men for perhaps a period of years. The work can be done more cheaply and more quickly than by an official sent from a distant city. It is a thoroughly good system, and I hope the minister will continue it.

Item agreed to.

Services to veterans and dependents—For the continuation or carrying out of projects or schemes commenced or recommended by the veterans' assistance commission and to authorize the employment or continuation in employment by the governor in council of such extra temporary officers, clerks and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of the Veterans' Assistance Commission Act, $100,000.

Mr. MacNEIL: What are the plans of the department under this appropriation? I would remind the minister that in 1936 the appropriation was $500,000 for the veterans' assistance commission. In 1937 there was a revote of $400,000, plus $250,000 for probational training. This year there is an amount of $100,000 in the main estimates and a further sum of $50,000 in the supplementaries. It strikes me that this is hardly adequate for the work outlined.

Mr. POWER: The hon. member is quite correct when he says the original vote in 1936-37 was $500,000. There was an expenditure that year of $99,572.25. In 1937-38 there was a vote of $400,000, and, according to the latest figures, an expenditure of about $260,000, leaving $140,000 unexpended. In the main estimates of this year there is a vote of $100,000, and if the hon. member consults the supplementaries he will find an additional vote of $50,000, making a total of $150,000. There is also in the main estimates one of $120,000 for probational training.

Mr. GREEN: It is not intended there shall be much extension in the projects to be undertaken?

Mr. POWER: A certain amount was provided last year, and a great many of the projects are being continued from then. As the hon. member knows, the local committees made their recommendations to the veterans' assistance commission here in Ottawa, and they had over a year in which to do it. I do not anticipate there will be many new projects submitted during the present year.

Mr. GREEN: It does not seem reasonable for the government to reduce the vote, in view of the fact the minister has announced he will not accept the main recommendation of the veterans' assistance commission, which was to provide temporary aid for the fit unemployed veterans. The money used last year amounted to $260,000, and yet this year it is to be only $150,000. If there are no new schemes, is not the result that the 10,000 front line men who are fit and the recommendation with regard to whom was refused, will simply remain in the position they are in now, which is on the ordinary provincial or municipal relief?

Mr. POWER: I hardly think so. In that $260,000 there was included a fairly large amount for the purpose of land settlement, and so on. That will not be repeated this year. Besides, the requirements were made largely through honorary local committees. As the hon. member knows, provision is made in these estimates to keep the men working. I am informed that when the commission reported in early January there were placements amounting to 8,000 to 10,000.

Mr. GREEN: Many are just casual.

Mr. POWER: I have not the exact figures here, so I shall not go into details.

Mr. GREEN: Is it intended to create new honorary committees?

Mr. POWER: No; there has been no demand for any.

Mr. GREEN: What portion of the vote is for office expenditures and administration expenses?

Mr. POWER: About $30,000 will be for the payment of secretaries, and so on.

Mr. GREEN: At page 158 of the estimates the temporary assistance is shown at $50,000. Apparently the only portion of the vote of $100,000 available for projects is the sum of $35,000.

Mr. POWER: Plus the sum of $50,000 in the supplementaries.

Mr. GREEN: A total of $85,000.

Mr. POWER: Yes; about that.

Mr. GREEN: How much of that expense is incurred here in Ottawa?

Mr. POWER: Not a cent in Ottawa.

Mr. GREEN: Is there any staff here now?

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. GREEN: No staff working on those projects?

Mr. POWER: I am wrong in that statement; there is a staff of two, namely Mr. B. W. Allen and Mr. L. McKenna.

Mr. MacNEIL: The minister no doubt will agree that the work of the local voluntary committees is extremely important. It represents an effort by businessmen to assume some responsibility with regard to the absorption of ex-service men into industrial enterprises. I scrutinized carefully the statement made by the minister on March 17 when he dealt with the recommendations of the commission certiorari. After consideration of this appropriation I find it difficult to discover what possibilities there are for enlarging the scope of the activities of the Vancouver honorary committee beyond the provision of the corps of commissionaires. As matters stand, I see nothing but to proceed with the promotion of the plan that we started which was especially adapted to conditions in British Columbia.

A second point I have in mind refers to a statement made on the same date by the minister with regard to the tools, equipment and transportation fund. He was good enough to give us his assurance that the recommendation of the commission would be implemented. I had occasion to talk over with the officials of the department the case of an ex-service fisherman. This man had his own boat and required a small loan in order to proceed with operations in the approaching fishing system. I have no criticism to make of the officials of the department as they were extremely courteous. They told me that departmental action was under consideration, but there seemed to be some doubt as to whether the provisions of the last fiscal year would be extended over to the present fiscal year. I think such cases are distinctly worth while. A little boost in the form of a loan would enable this man to secure independence after his first successful fishing season.

Mr. POWER: We have set aside by order in council a certain sum to take care of loans of that kind. I understand that my hon. friend's protege wanted a loan of $500 or $600, whereas the limit was $50.

Mr. GREEN: How is this vote to be allotted to the different projects?

Mr. POWER: We have no definite allotments at the present time; they are only tentative allotments to projects already under way. There is nothing very definite about it. We want to keep a little reserve in case some new project comes up which might be worth while examining into.

Mr. MacNEIL: What portion of this appropriation will be placed at the disposal of the Vancouver local committee? What projects will they be permitted to promote?

Mr. POWER: In December, 1937, an amount of $2,000 was allotted to them to provide for the formation of veterans' auto parking protective corps in Vancouver. In January, 1938, an amount of $2,500 was provided for the establishment of a veterans' night patrol. In January, 1938, an amount of $5,000 was provided for the renting and leasing of suitable parking areas in Vancouver upon which veterans could carry on auto parking services. On January 5, 1938, an amount of $500 was provided in order that fifty or sixty veterans might obtain first aid certificates in conjunction with the St. John ambulance corps to meet the requirements of the provincial government. In March, 1938, a sum of $2,500 was provided to form a veterans' guide and greeter project, which it is expected will eventually employ twenty-five veterans and will be self-supporting. Then $10,000 was provided for the Red Cross Society to assist in the establishment of a veterans' hostel.

Mr. BROOKS: Is there anything left for any place else?

Mr. POWER: I think so.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): How much of this $100,000 is being expended in Toronto?

Mr. POWER: Toronto received $48,000 last year under the land settlement scheme, and $5,000 this year and $10,000 for the poppy fund factory.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): Is that $43,000 less than last year?

Mr. POWER: The expenditure last year was a capital expenditure and will not have to be repeated this year.

Mr. GREEN: What progress has been made in setting up branch corps of commissionaires across Canada? I know from our experience in Vancouver that they are a fine body of men and have done a splendid work.

Mr. POWER: As my hon. friend knows, a corps has been set up in Montreal. Originally, there was a headquarters corps and General King was appointed as chairman, with Major Corrigal as secretary. They travelled across Canada setting up branch divisions. Vancouver has always been independent and has been remarkably successful in that way. I am under the impression that no assistance has ever been asked for or given to the Vancouver division. A division was organized in Calgary and has established a night patrol, and I am informed that thirty-five or forty men are employed at the present time.

Mr. BENNETT: They are doing splendid work there.

Mr. POWER: My right hon. friend says they are doing a very good work.

Mr. GREEN: Are branches being established anywhere else?

Mr. POWER: There are branches in Lethbridge, Windsor, Winnipeg, London, Toronto and Hamilton. I do not think they have been as successful in these other places as in Calgary in placing the number of men. I think Calgary is an outstanding example, and of course Vancouver has been doing this kind of work for several years, as also has Toronto.

Mr. GREEN: Will anything be supplied from this vote for commissionaires?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Some weeks ago the minister suggested that the collection of radio licence fees might be turned over to the unemployed veterans. What progress has been made along this line?

Mr. POWER: I have preached to the veterans' associations that I have met, the benefits of unity. We seem to be talking about unity a great deal these days. I think the veterans might get together as a unit and form some kind of a corporation. Having done that, they could go to the government and undertake, as a corporate body, to collect radio licence fees all over Canada. I have spoken to the minister, and I think he might be interested if he received a concrete proposal. About a month ago when I last visited the Toronto honorary committee we had quite a discussion on the matter. I do not mind saying that I do not think any one association can undertake this work; it would have to be a joint effort on the part of the ex-soldiers of Canada. So far nothing has been done.

Mr. GREEN: Probably it will amount to nothing.

Mr. POWER: I cannot control the soldiers' associations.

Mr. GREEN: The suggestion has also been made to establish highway patrols. What progress has been made in this connection?

Mr. POWER: I know that representations have been made to the provincial government of British Columbia, but I have no knowledge of what the result has been. Strong pressure was brought to bear upon the minister of highways of Ontario. I was speaking recently to one of the men in the voluntary committee in Toronto and he told me that they had called on the minister of highways, but he did not seem to be pleased with the progress they had made. They placed their project before the provincial government. It might involve additional taxation on automobile owners, and perhaps the government did not think it advisable.

Mr. GREEN: These schemes are all very much worth while, but does not the minister think that during this coming year it is likely that very few additional men will be helped by the projects; that it will be largely a matter of continuing help to men already working under them?

Mr. POWER: It is quite possible.

Mr. GREEN: For that reason it seems important that every effort should be made to work up some new projects.

Mr. POWER: I must have a project in order to spend money on it. We have explored pretty thoroughly every project submitted. I cannot just spend money for the sake of spending it.

Mr. GREEN: The result, I suppose, will be that a great many unemployed veterans will not be placed in any work or covered by any government provision.

Mr. POWER: It is quite possible.

Mr. NEILL: Going back for a moment to the radio question, if I may I would sound a note of warning to the minister to go very carefully before he involves the legion in that work. The payment allotted by the government is totally inadquate; a man cannot call four or six or eight times to collect five cents and make money on it, especially in a scattered community. The result will be tremendous discontent and dissatisfaction.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): In regard to that large appropriation of $5,000 for Toronto, from which city I think the largest number of soldiers went overseas, and in which there are the largest number of veterans, would the minister give the break-down of that large expenditure?

Mr. POWER: I do not say that is all that will be spent in Toronto this year, but that is the only thing we have been asked for.

Mr. CLARKE (Rosedale): That is, they do not ask enough in Toronto.

Mr. POWER: That is the trouble.

Mr. MacNEIL: The minister referred to small holdings in Toronto, Windsor and Winnipeg. Has any consideration been given to British Columbia in that matter?

Mr. POWER: No schemes have been submitted to us from British Columbia.

Mr. BENNETT: British Columbia is a nation to itself!

Mr. GREEN: What amount has been spent each year for the different local committees? I believe each one of them has a paid secretary, and the government pays the rent of the offices. Perhaps in some cases there is more than one employee.

Mr. POWER: The offices are obtained through the public works department; in most cases they are in a public building. We do not pay any rental; all we pay is just straight salaries. I have a list of the salaries, if my hon. friend wants them.

Mr. GREEN: Yes.

Mr. POWER: The list is as follows:

Mr. GREEN: In Vancouver last Christmas the department acted in a way which was very harmful to the efforts of the honorary local committee. Each year at that season, there is special work in the post office, and last year I believe two or three hundred returned men were required for that temporary work. We had over five thousand unemployed veterans registered in Vancouver and district with the veterans' assistance commission, and I understood from the minister last session that these post office jobs would be filled through the honorary local committee, apart from politics. Instead, I believe men were called from different soldiers' organizations, but in each case had to get the approval of a representative of the government, or of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie). That sort of thing does not help the honorary local committee to persuade citizens generally to give work to unemployed ex-soldiers. I protest strenuously against action of that kind. I should like the minister to assure the committee to-night that that procedure will not be followed this coming Christmas. I see no reason why politics should enter into the employment of these unfortunate unemployed veterans for a few days around Christmas. That is going altogether too far.

Mr. POWER: These honorary local committees are not patronage committees.

Mr. GREEN: That is why they should distribute the jobs.

Mr. POWER: I would call that a patronage committee. The other day when the estimates of the Minister of National Defence were being considered, my hon. friend complained in connection with a project, at Point Grey I believe, that the Vancouver honorary committee did not have the choice of the men. But it appears that there were forty-eight men employed and all forty-eight were returned soldiers. I do not know what more my department could do or what more the Department of National Defence could do. The object of this commission is to find jobs for returned soldiers, not for the particular returned soldiers picked out by the committee.

Mr. GREEN: But not to find jobs for Liberal returned soldiers.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. POWER: That is not of interest to me, provided the full quota is appointed. If there are forty-eight jobs and they were filled by forty-eight ex-soldiers, I see no cause for complaint. The committee's job is to stimulate the interest of the public in returned soldiers and as far as possible to get them jobs, but not to select those who are to be appointed; otherwise we would make these committees into political committees. I think my hon. friend will be the first to say that ever since the committees were appointed there has been no political interference with them whatsoever. I had nothing to do with the choice of the men on the committees, or of the men who were secretaries, or with the appointment of the stenographers or anyone connected with the committees. In fact, I have been told on many occasions from this side of the house that a large number of members of the committee will be assisting at the Tory convention here in July.

Mr. GREEN: That is because they were the best men you could get.

Mr. POWER: Well, I did not choose them. Many of them are very good men. I think the best I can do is not to interfere with them at all, but let them go ahead. They are doing their best for the returned soldiers, and I deprecate any attempt to drag them into politics. It is unfair both to them and to us.

Mr. GREEN: There is no attempt being made to drag them into politics; it is only common sense. You have a high-class, independent, non-political honorary committee with a paid staff working under them costing this department several thousand dollars, and the whole purpose is to get jobs for unemployed veterans. At Christmas there are openings for 200 or 300 unemployed veterans. They are all registered with this local committee. The local committee knows better than a Liberal henchman whether they are good men or not, whether they deserve work or not; yet this government has a special representative through whom all these unfortunate men have to pass before they get a job, and if they are not Liberals they do not get a job. If that is not dragging the veterans' assistance commission into politics, I do not know what is, and it is one way to ruin its effectiveness; it is one way of breaking down the whole scheme. I suggest to the minister that this practice should not be followed this year.

Mr. POWER: I do not think there has been any complaint that the number of returned men which was required was not obtained. The only complaint has been as to which particular ex-soldier was appointed.

Mr. GREEN: They had to go through the Liberal machine.

Mr. POWER: I do not know that that is quite the case. I do not understand from the Minister of National Defence that such is the case. My hon. friend wrote me about that time, and I obtained a reply from the Minister of National Defence which satisfied me, at any rate.

Mr. STEWART: It would not be hard to do that.

Mr. POWER: The department employing the men, or the contractor, or whoever is the employer, surely should have some right to say which particular man shall be appointed and which shall not. I have never yet heard in this chamber anyone complaining because a Liberal returned soldier was appointed. The great complaint up to the present has been that not a sufficient number was appointed. Once we get this full quota I think returned soldiers should be pretty well satisfied; if they get forty-eight out of forty-eight, I do not think they can complain at all.

An hon. MEMBER: That is quite exceptional.

Mr. POWER: That is what my hon. friend is complaining of.

Mr. GREEN: No. The Minister of National Defence has laid down a rule that he will only hire returned men or militia men on his works projects, but in addition to being returned men they have to be Liberals. That is the position in connection with these post office jobs.

Mr. POWER: I do not believe my hon. friend is serious in that.

Mr. BROOKS: In order that the Minister of National Defence shall not get too much credit, I want to say that down in Nova Scotia, when they were building the Venture for the Canadian government, out of one hundred men employed there were only two returned men. I had letters from a number of returned men who could not get jobs because they were not on the right side of politics.

Mr. POWER: That was done by the contractor, I suppose.

Mr. GREEN: Can the minister say who is the representative in Vancouver through whom these men had to pass last Christmas?

Mr. POWER: I have not the faintest idea.

Mr. GREEN: I suppose the Minister of National Defence can explain that.

Item agreed to.

For the continuation or carrying out of projects or schemes commenced or recommended by the veterans' assistance commission, etc.—further amount required, $50,000.

Mr. POWER: It is the same thing. It is an additional $50,000 to the vote we have just passed.

Mr. GREEN: How is it to be allocated?

Mr. POWER: I have that somewhere. These, as I said, are only tentative: Workshops Limited, Montreal, $25,000; Canadian corps of commissionaires, $10,000; Toronto veterans' committee, $5,000; Toronto amputations placement service, $2,500. Windsor land settlement scheme may require a further amount of about $10,000. At London there is a placement scheme for veterans; the cost will run to about $1,000. From Winnipeg there is a demand for another $1,000. At Regina, for the veterans' workshops there is a demand for $10,000. For the Moose Jaw workshop the demand is $3,000. At Vancouver there is a demand for $1,500, plus a repayment fund of $5,000. This amounts to about $73,000. We are trying to keep some in reserve. I do not say that all this money will be spent—that is why I hesitated to give all the details—upon these particular projects. I am just stating what has been asked for, and we shall have to allot it in the best way we possibly can to reach our objective.

Mr. BROOKS: I did not hear the minister mention any projects in the maritime provinces.

Mr. POWER: There have not been any suggested, unfortunately.

Mr. BROOKS: Well, of course!

Mr. POWER: There is none from Quebec city, either.

Item agreed to.

Direct payments to veterans and dependents—Probational training allowances, $120,000.

Mr. GREEN: Last year there was a vote of $250,000. How much of that was spent, and how was it spent?

Mr. POWER: The estimate of this year is based to some extent on the amount spent last year. We did not spend by any means as much as we anticipated; the amount was $67,209.01. Perhaps my hon. friend will remember that we started a little late. We began about June, and perhaps that was a little late in the season for men to get this probational training work, but we consider it has been highly successful. It has proved very successful as a means of placing a large number of men, and we intend to press it this year.

Mr. BROOKS: Is there any age limit for probational training?

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. MacNEIL: What are the regulations as to eligibility for probational training?

Mr. POWER: There must be service in a theatre of war, and the assurance that a man has a chance of getting a job when the probational training is finished.

Mr. MacNEIL: Is it necessary to have an agreement with a prospective employer?

Mr. POWER: We originally began with the idea that we could get a written agreement, but that regulation had to be relaxed to some extent as we went along. But it is really the work of the honorary committees, and they have been remarkably successful. The three qualifications for eligibility are, that he served during the war in a theatre of actual war, provided (a) that he is registered for employment with the employment service of Canada and/or the veterans' assistance commission; (b) that he is employable, and (c) that he requires a period of probational training to fit him for employment with the industry or firm.

Mr. MacNEIL: I agree that this scheme has been eminently successful. I think it is one of the finest schemes that has been evolved for some time My observation of the cases which have come under my attention is that it has provided not only training but the most satisfactoy approach possible to permanent employment for many men. For that reason I was hoping the minister would increase the appropriation or that the scope of this activity might be widened as far as possible. The results achieved this past year amply justify an extension of this activity.

Mr. POWER: We consider that this appropriation is ample to take care of all who will apply. That is the only reason we did not increase it.

Mr. GREEN: How has the minister dealt with the two recommendations from the veterans' assistance commission; one suggesting that the veteran might be given this training even if he had no prospective employer in sight, if the department was satisfied that such training would more readily fit him for suitable employment; and the other being that the department could pay tuition fees in a worthy case to help the man get the training, for example, for a civil service examination?

Mr. POWER: With respect to tuition. I am informed that we had three cases in which there was a definite undertaking that if the man underwent certain training he would get a job. One was at the Kemptville dairy school in Ontario; another was at Winnipeg, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway shops, with special training on air conditioning, and the other was at Hamilton, with an airplane manufacturer. And they got the work.

Mr. GREEN: And the department is willing to give them that sort of help?

Mr. POWER: It never was intended either by the House of Commons or by the department, or, I think, by the commission, that this money would be employed only for putting men in an assured job. Short of that we can do pretty nearly anything.

Mr. GREEN: I believe the Canadian legion at their dominion convention suggested that the minister should also make eligible those men who served only in England but who enlisted under the age of twenty-one years. In other words, they are a young group of returned men. Has anything been done about that?

Mr. POWER: No.

Item agreed to.

Unemployment assistance, $2,350,000.

Mr. REID: I wish to discuss the condition of a class of ex-service men who until now have been only very briefly mentioned in this house. I refer to that class known as ex-imperials. In doing so I am not unmindful of the plight of many Canadian ex-service men and I realize that our first consideration is for them. But we have now in Canada some 200,000 ex-imperials who, I believe, merit greater consideration than they are receiving. In British Columbia it is estimated that there are at least 50,000 ex-imperials. Perhaps it would be better for me to quote one or two extracts from the brief which was drawn up by them and which, I fancy, explains their condition and the situation in which they find themselves to-day far better than I can. Dealing first with hospitals they say:

In Great Britain all are within easy reach of military hospitals, and in the case of a veteran who is making first application the documents have to be sent for from London, causing considerable delay; and then there is also postal delay in Canada itself. Unlike the Canadian veteran, the British veteran may see his documents which are in the possession of the British ministry of pensions. This is a considerable hardship as the ministry compel one to prove a medical history practically for the whole of one's life, except in the case where there is a definite wound. Further, a British veteran on pension, or allowed treatment, may not be admitted to a military hospital without sanction of the British representative at Ottawa, which causes considerable delay.

There are free hospitals in Great Britain, and in Canada there is none. They say that in Great Britain there are many services in connection with sickness and disablement such as free sanatoria, practically free medical attention, and so on. Then they continue:

The British veteran was encouraged in various ways to come to Canada, but the difference in climate, cost of living, and the cash value of his pension was not fully explained to him. In our opinion Canada must share to a certain extent the responsibility for this.

Many British veterans were advised to commute the whole of their service pension, to come to Canada, no consideration being given to the fact that their long years of army service unfitted them to compete in the business world. Canada again must also share the responsibility for this, as advice on these lines was given at Canada House, et cetera.

I have before me a letter—in fact I could quote many—which will substantiate the contention of the ex-imperials in regard to inducements offered to them to come from Great Britain and take up responsibilities in Canada. I received this memorandum this year and the dates will appear as I read it:

By Captain C. M. Stringer

I enlisted in England on August 4, 1914.

In 1926 I went to B.C. House, London, England and saw Mr. McAdam who was secretary to the agent-general for B.C. I asked him if there were any jobs to be had in B.C. He said that the Bank of Commerce had been asked by a farmer for a man at $5 per month plus board, and he advised me to take it, as it was in Grand Forks, where there was a smelter and sash and door factories. It was a busy town and by having some definite job to go to, I could find something after arrival with more remuneration.

I left my family in England and came to B.C. in June, 1926. When I arrived I found the smelter had been closed eight years and that there were really no industries.

I stayed on the farm till November when the farmer said he could not afford to pay me any more as he was going to lose his farm.

I went to the bank and said, "You got me out here, you must find me a job for the winter." This was done.

In 1927 my wife and two children came out to me. Our lovely home in England was sold. My wife brought several thousand dollars with her at the time.

All this money went and we have suffered since.

My contention is that had I not received glowing pamphlets, which were not true, printed by the B.C. government and reports from Mr. McAdam, I would never have come to Canada.

I had a small pension for two years, after the war, for malaria, but owing to pressure of business, I voluntarily dropped it. I did not commute it.

Since 1924 I have been trying to get it back, but as I cannot show positive of malaria parasite in my blood, the authorities will not give a board.

That is only one of many instances that can be cited, one of many communications that can be quoted with regard to the inducements given to ex-imperials in the old land to come and settle in Canada. However, to proceed with extracts from the ex-imperials' brief:

Many British veterans who had pensions when they came to Canada, and who would still be eligible for pensions if Canadian veterans, lost their pensions within two years or so of arrival in Canada. Further, the British ministry does not pay any pension for injury et cetera that is less than 20 per cent, thus debarring many from the benefits of the S.C.R. relief. A very great many of these veterans are now charges on Canada in various ways, such as relief, hospitals, et cetera. This is of course entirely up to Great Britain, although we consider that Canada should have made some arrangements with the government of Great Britain when she accepted these men, so that when their disabilities bore too heavily on them, they should not have been an entire charge on Canada. . . .

The British government actively assist in sending immigrants to Canada, and where it is necessary, or to the advantage of the veteran, the British government should participate in the cost of repatriation. In this connection the B.C. government in conjunction with local authorities have shown the most commendable spirit, in that they repatriate married families on relief, where the veteran can produce a certificate of employment in the country of his origin. The Canadian government have no such scheme, so that a man living in B.C. and drawing S.C.R. relief, cannot be repatriated under the aforementioned scheme. This works a great hardship on the small pensioner. . . .

In the case of "special campaign pensions," the income of the recipient is taken into account, and in applying for such a pension one has to submit for the relief office, a statement of the amount of relief in cash or kind received during the past year. Only a royal commission could settle this question between the two governments. . . .

With regard to S.C.R. relief, the veteran not being able to see his documents as he must have, or have had a disability pension of 5 per cent. In some cases where a final award has been made, the amount of the remaining disability is stated, but in most cases it is not. . . .

In the foregoing we are being reasonable as we are not even asking for the same treatment as the Canadian veteran as far as pensions are concerned, but we do ask for the same treatment as the Canadian veteran in the war veteran's allowance, S.C.R. relief, and et cetera, as we consider these to be social services as distinct from pensions. . . .

They claim that:

The history of imperial pensions in Canada is a story of the most arrant callousness and neglect. Men who had no knowledge of imperial pensions regulations and no authority to guide them as to their rights were taken advantage of in the most cold-blooded manner. There is no question that, particularly at the present time a resolution in parliament requesting a British royal commission to investigate the case of imperial pensions in Canada would bring results.

They say that while imperial veterans through their organization are asking the Canadian government to grant them certain social services granted Canadian ex-service men, their chief objective at the moment is one that cannot be reasonably denied them by parliament. Here is their request. They are asking this parliament to petition the parliament of Great Britain, requesting that a royal commission be set up in this country to travel from Halifax to Vancouver and Victoria to listen to the grievances of these ex-imperials. It may be said by some hon. members that this parliament would have no right to appeal to the parliament of Great Britain, but this is not the first time in the history of Canada that an appeal has been made concerning matters affecting Great Britain. I hold in my hand a memorandum of a petition that passed this house in 1903, in which this parliament asked that the parliament of Great Britain grant home rule to Ireland. That was passed after a great deal of discussion, and I need not take the time of the committee to read it.

Mr. POWER: It has been suggested to me that if it took as long for the imperial veterans to get their commission as it did for Ireland to get home rule after that petition of 1903, it would not do them very much good.

Mr. REID: I was just meeting the argument that might be advanced, that it would be out of place for this parliament to make such a request. But I shall come a little closer to our own time. In 1934 Australia got some redress from the imperial government with regard to settlers who had been induced to leave England and settle in Australia. A commission was set up by Great Britain in conjunction with Australia, and a total of some £30,000 was granted. There were ninety-two settlers returned from Australia, and 292 British immigrants stayed in that country after receiving some assistance from the British government; but this assistance would not have been procured but for the fact that an appeal was made by the Australian government to the imperial government asking that the commission be set up.

I appeal to the minister and the committee. This is all that the imperial veteran is asking at the moment. He wants this parliament to petition the parliament of Great Britain asking that a commission be set up that will travel across this country and inquire into these cases, many of which are very serious and tragic. I do not think it is too much to ask the minister to give the matter some consideration. He still has time to bring down a resolution or to make an appeal to the Prime Minister. This question has been placed in my hands on account of the fact that in British Columbia we have more ex-imperials than in any other province, and I deemed it my duty to bring up the matter at this time.

Mr. LANDERYOU: May I ask if the minister has negotiated with the imperial government at all in regard to this question?

Mr. POWER: I think the imperial veterans discuss it pretty constantly and persistently with the representative of the British ministry of pensions here in Canada. The British government have a representative of the ministry of pensions in Ottawa, Mr. Owen, who has all to do with imperial soldiers in Canada.

Mr. GREEN: This is the item under which it was arranged earlier in the session we should be at liberty to discuss the report of the veterans' assistance commission. There was some discussion on it one night when the item was up previously, about two months ago, but that was a one-man performance with the minister taking all the parts; he then told us that he was not going to accept the main recommendation of the commission.

Before I proceed to deal with that report, I should like to add a word in support of the suggestion that the government do something to help the imperial veterans. I agree with the hon. member for New Westminster that for many years the lot of the imperial veterans in Canada has been a tragic one, and anything that can be done by this parliament to assist them certainly should be done.

This, I suggest, is the session when the commission chickens are coming home to roost. Two years ago this government quite cheerfully tied several difficult problems to several commission chickens, with the result that they were flown away and did not have to be faced until this year. Now these chickens are back with reports. There is the veterans' assistance commission, known as the Rattray commission; the national employment commission, known as the Purvis commission; the textile commission and the wheat marketing commission, both known as Turgeon commissions, and the penitentiary commission, known as the Archambault commission. Then there is the Rowell commission on dominion-provincial relations just over in the next field, on the way back—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is out of order in discussing commissions not pertaining to pensions and health.

Mr. GREEN: I was just going to say that this Rowell commission threatens to fill the whole barnyard when it gets back. But to get back to the Rattray commission chicken, it had the unfortunate experience of coming back to the doorstep of the Minister of Pensions and National Health. I think that was a very unhealthy place for it to land, for after a certain amount of deliberation the minister proceeded to give its neck a twist by turning down the main recommendation, which was that the dominion government should accept responsibility for temporary assistance to indigent unemployed veterans who are employable; in other words, for unemployed veterans who are fit, with several provisoes: first, that these men must have served in a theatre of actual war, or, in other words, that they must have been front line men; second, that they must have been domiciled in Canada at the time of enlistment; and third—and I point this out particularly—that they must be willing to work. If they were not registered with an employment agency; if they showed any sign of being unwilling to work, then they were not to be eligible for this assistance. It should be pointed out also that this recommendation does not apply to pensioners or to veterans in receipt of the war veterans' allowance as burnt-out soldiers. These groups are cared for in other ways.

The reply of the government to this recommendation by its own commission was definite and complete. I quote the remarks of the minister, which are to be found at page 1040 of Hansard:

> Most hon. gentlemen will agree with me in considering that the one hundred per cent fit man is not the responsibility of the federal government. If he is out of work at the present time it is due to economic causes, and not to war causes.

That is a statement which, I think, needs many qualifications. But the minister went on:

> If a man is absolutely fit to work it is extremely difficult to attribute his unemployability to his war service.

Then at page 1459 the minister said:

> I want to repeat that the government does not think it should accept responsibility for the care and maintenance whether by way of an economic allowance or otherwise, of 100 per cent fit men.

That was a definite and complete rejection of this recommendation, and a denial of any responsibility for the care and maintenance of the fit front line men. It was rather surprising, in view of past events.

The problem of the unemployed war veteran, who was not a pensioner or the recipient of war veterans' allowance because he was brunt-out, came with the depression. It was so bad by 1934 that in that year the Canadian legion made an extensive survey of unemployment among veterans. In January, 1935, they asked the late Conservative administration to have an investigation, and in March of that year the Hyndman committee were appointed. They were instructed to investigate facilities for providing employment for unemployed veterans and also—and I stress this point—to investigate the facilities for the care and maintenance of these unemployed veterans while unemployed, showing that the government of that day recognized the fact that Canada had some responsibility for the care and maintenance of these veterans while they were unemployed.

Late in May of 1935 the Hyndman committee brought in an unanimous report finding that the dominion government should assume some responsibility for these men. I quote the following from page 5 of that report.

> We are of the opinion that Canada as a whole would shrink from any policy which would permit these unemployed non-pensioners to remain in want and dire distress, as some of them undoubtedly do, and would approve of reasonable assistance being extended to them during temporary unavoidable idleness, until such time as occupations suitable to their ability can be found.

They recommended that the government should add to the relief paid to veterans by municipalities where the municipal rate was below that paid by the Department of Pensions to small pensioners. They recommended further that a veterans' assistance commission be set up to help find jobs for these unemployed veterans. Later in 1935 came the election, and I have no doubt every hon. member heard about the Hyndman committee report. Probably many of them undertook to implement those findings.

Then, in the 1936 session this government passed the Veterans' Assistance Commission Act which under paragraph (e) of section 6 provided the following:

> 6. The commission shall,—
> (e) investigate into existing facilities for the care and maintenance of veterans while unemployed and report thereon with such suggestions or recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

This shows that in 1936 the present government realized that Canada had some responsibility for the care and maintenance of these men while they were unemployed. That bill was referred to a special committee of the house known as the committee on pensions and returned soldiers' problems. The bill was approved by the committee and returned to the house with a recommendation in which again responsibility was acknowledged. That recommendation from the committee was as follows:

As representations were made that the existing facilities for the care and maintenance of unemployed veterans were inadequate in some localities your committee would further recommend that the commission, while conducting this survey into the extent of unemployment, should investigate the facilities available throughout Canada for the care and maintenance of veterans and should make such suggestions and recommendations as may be deemed advisable.

The Veterans' Assistance Commission Act became law. The Rattray commission was appointed on July 7, 1936, and shortly afterwards fifteen honorary local committees were set up across Canada—with a paid secretariat and provision made for officers to help carry out the provisions of the Veterans' Assistance Commission Act. The Rattray commission deserves a great deal of credit. With the aid of these local committees, which also have done wonderful work, and for the setting up of which I give the government and the minister all due credit—

Mr. POWER: The commission did that work; I did not do it.

Mr. GREEN: The minister helped to set up the commission. Work was found for many of the unemployed veterans in several ways. For example, the honorary committees went to employers and were able to place many of the unemployed veterans. There is a very cheering word in the report with regard to the attitude of the veterans to work, and the attitude of the prospective employers to the veterans; at page 55 of the veterans' assistance commission report we find this:

Before recommending temporary allowances be granted to single and married unemployed veterans who saw service in a theatre of actual war, this commission established these facts:

1. Veterans are anxious to work;
2. Employers are willing to employ them.

I believe employers across Canada have never been more favourably disposed towards veterans than they are at the present time, on account of the efforts of the Rattray commission and of the honorary local committees.

[Mr. Green.]

In addition, the commission set up different projects which were referred to to-night during the course of the discussion, such as the corps of commissionaires, Workshops Limited, and other projects; and probational training was provided to fit men for work which they could not have done without the extra training.

But in addition to finding jobs for veterans the commission made a thorough investigation of the problem of the unemployed veteran. Early last year interim reports were brought in, and finally in December a final report was presented. Several significant findings were made by the commission. For example, it found that it could do nothing for unemployable veterans, those who were disabled. There was no sense in getting jobs for men who were not fit to do them. Several of us had pointed out to the minister and the government during the 1936 session and again last session that the unemployable men could not be helped by the commission, and that they should be provided for by an extension of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. The Rattray commission found the same thing, and this year the government has extended the act to provide for those men. Then, the commission found that many of the employable men could not be placed either through projects, through direct contact with employers, or by giving probational training. Thousands of these men could not expect to get jobs. To-night the minister frankly admits that the projects the government is financing during the coming year will take care of only a few more of the unemployed veterans, and that there is no legislation being proposed or no provision being made by the government to find jobs for these men.

The commission reported as its main recommendation the following, which will be found at page 63 of the report:

After giving the matter considerable thought and bearing in mind the representation made by organizations throughout the country, by honorary local committees, and information obtained from various sources, the commission has come to the conclusion that it can do no less than recommend that the dominion government accept responsibility for all indigent unemployed veterans who were domiciled in Canada at date of enlistment and who saw service in a theatre of actual war.

But it goes on to state the proviso that the men must be willing to work. That finding is confirmed by the reports of the different honorary local committees which actually had to face the situation. They were composed of men who knew the facts and the Rattray commission had travelled from one end of Canada to the other and knew the facts too. The numbers covered by the recommendation are to be found at page 61 of the report. It is there stated that there are 10,146 men. At page 20 of the report the commission has this to say:

> This leaves about 10,000 men with actual war service who are physically fit, who want work, and up to the present time have not been able to find it.

It will be noticed that the recommendation does not include those who served only in England or Canada, and includes only those imperials who were domiciled in Canada when they enlisted. And I would draw particularly to the attention of the minister the fact that the recommendation that the government assume responsibility for these men is directly in line with the recommendation of the national employment commission, known as the Purvis commission, that the Canadian government should assume responsibility for the unemployed in Canada who are employable. Both commissions recommended that employable men willing to work were the responsibility of the dominion government; yet the answer of the government so far as veterans are concerned is, "We will assume responsibility only for those who are unemployable, who are broken down." In other words, the government's policy is what might be termed a "break-down" policy. There is to be no responsibility for care and maintenance of an unemployed veteran unless he is broken down.

I submit that the policy should be to do everything to prevent these men from breaking down. It is another case of an ounce of prevention being worth a pound of cure. This answer is given by the government despite the fact that it was known from the start that the fit unemployed veterans were the largest group in trouble. It was known that these men could not all be put to work and that the commission would have to make some recommendation for their care and maintenance while unemployed. The principal reason given by the minister in support of the government's action is, "Oh, the soldier organizations have not supported the recommendation; the soldiers are not agreed on what should be done." As a matter of fact, I do not think there were many soldier organizations in Canada that were not agreed that the responsibility lay with this government. There was some disagreement as to the method by which that responsibility should be undertaken, but there was practically no disagreement on the principle recommended by the commission.

Certainly the reason given by the minister is no excuse for doing nothing; it is merely camouflage. No answer is given to the reasons set forth by the commission for the recommendation. The commissioners found that the veterans are handicapped in the labour market because of loss of training; that they were in the army during the time when normally they would have been receiving training; also because they were preaged. The dominion government admitted that the ex-soldier is preaged to the extent of ten years when it made provision that the war veteran should receive an allowance at sixty years of age instead of at seventy, the age at which the civilian becomes eligible for old age pension. Another reason given was the difficulty that these men had in readjusting themselves when they came back from the war; many of them have not been able to readjust themselves up to the present time. It was found that all these handicaps are the result of the service that these men gave to their country. The commission also considered the tendency of the provinces and municipalities to question their obligation to the veterans. It was found that these other governmental bodies take the position that the veterans are not their responsibility; that they are the responsibility of the dominion government. At page 34 of the report of the commission we find these words:

> The whole problem of care of the veteran is complicated by the different, and frequently conflicting, governmental authorities. The dominion government has always assumed full responsibility for its pensioners. Not so, however, in the case of the non-pensioners who are classed as ordinary citizens and come under the same social legislation and benefits as other residents of their respective municipalities and provinces. None the less, the majority of unemployed veterans insist that they are wards of the federal government because they were enlisted by that government, paid by that government, and promised the never-failing gratitude of the country by representatives of that government.
> This attitude is shared by the provinces and the municipalities. True, in respect of the latter there is always the hope that they may succeed in shifting part of the burden of expense from themselves. But apart altogether from this hope, there is a feeling that the federal government has a responsibility towards the veterans that sets them off from ordinary citizens.

Another reason given by the commission for this recommendation is the attitude of the veterans themselves toward relief. The following is to be found on page 19 of the report:

> To the veteran, relief is something which is given reluctantly by a government body—usually his municipality—which he does not consider the governmental authority that really should look after him. The war veteran's allowance on the other hand, is looked upon as a reward for services rendered to the dominion government during the great war. The veterans' assistance commission feels no obligation to defend or condemn these differing attitudes. It wishes merely to point out that they exist.

Another reason was the fact that few of these veterans are of an age at which they can be taken into industry; that the average age of the unemployed veteran is about fifty years, and that there is very little chance of a man as old as that being placed in industry in competition with the young man looking for a job for the first time. The commission found also that the veterans make up a marginal group in the labour market; that unemployment among them will be chronic; that some will get work but others will lose their employment, and that the problem will get worse rather than better. On page 22 we find:

> The commission has already hinted at its feeling concerning the future of our problem. We have no other expectation but that the problem will become graver in the future rather than less serious.

The final reason given for making this recommendation is the honour of Canada. At page 40 I believe the commissioners sum up the feeling that exists across Canada quite accurately when they say:

> We feel, as we are confident the country at large feels, that no matter what Canada has done to requite the services of her veterans, her obligation to them is not discharged while one of them walks the streets vainly in search of work or while one of them is in distress.

They might have referred also to the attitude of the press. I should like to draw to the attention of the minister an editorial entitled The Unemployed Veteran which appeared in the Vancouver Province of February 28, 1938. I think this is typical of the opinion that has been expressed by newspapers across Canada. The last paragraph reads:

> The new principle here is that it establishes the relief of the Canadian war veteran as the recognized obligation of the national government, and doubtless there will be something of a tussle in parliament before that principle is accepted. But surely there is good sense, as well as humanity, in this proposal, which, in the long run, only recognizes that the service which gives the veteran his claim was service to the nation.

And they might have added that there are in Canada to-day between 75,000 and 80,000 men who were wounded but whose disabilities are not sufficient to enable them to obtain pensions. These men all bear wounds upon their bodies and many of them no doubt are in the ranks of the unemployed; yet the dominion government assumes no responsibility.

And finally the commission might have referred to the transient problem which has come to a head so disastrously in Vancouver during the last few days. Upon my return after the Easter recess I warned the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) of what might happen, and yet we have these men in the Vancouver post office and the art gallery. Hundreds of them have been there for five days and yet both governments are simply watching. This government is sitting still and doing nothing because it is 3,000 miles away from the scene of trouble. Among that group of unemployed transients in Vancouver who do not belong to Vancouver or to British Columbia are over 200 war veterans. They were picked out and cared for by the city for many weeks because they were war veterans and in the hope that the dominion government would assume its responsibility and take care of them. Yet there they are now; I hope they are not with those who are demonstrating, but they are among the unemployed transients in Vancouver at the present time and obviously not the responsibility of the city or province.

Perhaps the plan of this commission was not sound, but the minister suggests no alternative. The principle is sound; the plan may not be. But the minister simply says that the government is not responsible. That means hopelessness for the unemployed; it means that these unemployed veterans must wait and suffer until they reach the age of sixty and become eligible for the war veterans' allowance or until they become eligible through disability. It simply means that the fit front line man must remain on the ordinary relief rolls.

There is little one can suggest as a remedy. I do not like to be purely destructive; but with the government taking that attitude, and refusing to face the situation, there is little one can suggest. Nevertheless I do suggest this: With the principle recommended by the commission definitely rejected by the government, the government could at least extend the local committees, set up honorary local committees in other centres. At the present time there are only fifteen. The government could work out more projects for giving these men employment; put through a larger vote, instead of cutting it so that this year only $85,000 is available, and that practically all earmarked already. And the minister could insist that the employment service of Canada be improved. We have the statement of the national employment commisson that the employment service of Canada is antique. Time and again it has been recommended to the government that a dominion employment service should be set up; yet nothing is done. It is very directly the concern of this department, and

I suggest that the minister press upon his colleagues in the government the need for a proper employment service. This problem of the unemployed veteran is not settled. Sooner or later the Canadian government will have to face it again. In the meantime this government is running away from it. We have here another example of the present government furthering and creating disunity in Canada through its failure to give leadership on these problems so vital to the welfare of our people.

Mr. MacNEIL: The minister made a statement on March 17 bluntly rejecting the main recommendation of the veterans' asssistance commission, and we have since had an opportunity to gauge the reaction of the ex-service men and the public generally. There has been found disappointment everywhere at the attitude taken by the minister and his unwillingness to assume additional responsibility with regard to the problem outlined by the commission. The approach to the problem has been very carefully and ably outlined by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), and I wish to support his position and to add a few observations on my own account.

I did hope that as a result of the Hyndman commission report, the work of the parliamentary committee of 1936 and the interim and final reports of the veterans' assistance commission we had now reached the position where this problem could be brought to a stage of finality, where sufficient evidence had been gathered to enable the minister to present to parliament a well-rounded program disposing of the residual features of the situation. As I have said before, inaction or delay in these matters is always more costly than prompt action.

I have perused the report of the veterans' assistance commission with great interest. This report is something more than merely an interesting document; it represents a very careful analysis of the situation in all its aspects. For the first time in recent years it affords a fairly accurate measure of the dimensions of the problem, and also makes concrete proposals for dealing with it. The report deals with the obligations of this country in regard to ex-service men, promises made in years gone by, tells exactly what has been done and what remains to be done, and makes an effective plea for ex-service men, not on compassionate grounds, but for a satisfactory solution of their problems in the public interest.

A very important point it makes is that there are no constitutional barriers in the way of effective action by this government in regard to this problem. In connection with the general problem of unemployment we have frequently been told that constitutional difficulties prevent action by the federal government. This report shows how the government by aiding ex-service men as suggested in the main recommendation could ease the burden resting upon the municipalities and ameliorate much of the general social distress which is apparent across Canada. I was struck with the reminder contained in this report of the promises made to the soldiers and the circumstances under which they were made. May I quote briefly from page 27:

> Sir Robert Borden addressed the Canadian fighting forces at Vimy Ridge in 1917 in words ascribed to him as follows:
> "You are men actually facing the enemy day and night. You are suffering greatly from fatigue, overstrain and lack of rest. The marvel of it is that men could undergo such a strain without breaking; but you have never yet broken, and history will appreciate that in days to come.
> "You men are about to enter one of the most serious engagements that ever faced the Canadian corps. I cannot, at this moment, give any information as to where this attack will be staged; whether it be successful or not, it is to be borne in mind that it will not be an easy success . . . We feel confident that you will succeed where others failed; for you have never yet failed in anything that you have set your hand to as a Canadian corps.
> "You can go into this action feeling assured of this, and as the head of the government I give you this assurance; that you need have no fear that the government and the country will fail to show just appreciation of your service to the country and empire in what you are about to do and what you have already done.
> "The government and the country will consider it their first duty to see that a proper appreciation of your effort and of your courage is brought to the notice of the people at home, and it will always be our endeavour so to guide the attitude of public opinion that the country will support the government to prove to the returned men its just and due appreciation of the inestimable value of the services rendered to the country and empire; and that no man, whether he goes back or whether he remains in Flanders, will have just cause to reproach the government for having broken with the men who won and the men who died."
> In these words Sir Robert, on behalf of the government, entered into a contract every whit as binding as that between Canada and the holder of victory bonds. In a certain sense the contract was more solemn. The victory bonds were, after all, pretty much a business transaction. The contract between Canada and her men going overseas reached beyond business into the realm of the ideal.

The report brings to the attention of the minister evidence that gives an excellent perspective of the entire problem. Boiled down it is this: there are practically 15,000 unemployed men, as far as they are able to estimate, who have seen service in a theatre of actual war; five thousand of this number are likely to benefit under the new amendments to the War Veterans' Allowance Act. There remain approximately ten thousand men who cannot be classified as unfit or partly fit, for whom no provision is made. I would point out the large percentage of these men suffer from disabilities or handicaps as a result of service for which no satisfactory yardstick can be found in existing pensions legislation or in the War Veterans' Allowance Act. There are, for instance, those men who enlisted early in life and sacrificed the formative years of their life, who were unable to gain skill in any trade or vocation, whose educational progress was interrupted, and who since then have never had any opportunity to gain a secure foothold in the economic life of the country. These men suffered more than any other class during the depths of the depression. There are men in this group to-day who are classified as being "too old at forty," who for various reasons are not wanted in our industrial enterprises. They are more or less derelict, drifting, forgotten and unwanted. This report brings these facts to the attention of parliament in a very concise form.

The central issue at stake with regard to the main recommendation is, as has well been pointed out by the hon. member for Vancouver South. Shall the federal government assume additional responsibility with regard to those who are classified as non-pensionable or not elegible under the War Veterans' Allowance Act, and who yet, by reason of war service, are unable to secure gainful employment? I think the tragic feature of the situation is that the minister definitely rejects the main recommendation of the commission, though on several occasions previously he has admitted the existence of this problem in all its most serious aspects, and yet he has not presented to the house any satisfactory alternative as a solution of this problem.

The minister in a statement on the 17th instant, in rejecting this recommendation for a provisional economic allowance, made the definite point that there was little agreement among the organizations of ex-service men. I am bound to point out that the disagreement to which he referred was only with regard to details as to the recommendation. Practically all the national organizations were in agreement as to the principle that the federal government should accept responsibility now for the welfare of unemployed, fit ex-service men.

I think a word should be said here, because of remarks previously made by the minister, as to the attitude of the national organizations of ex-service men. They have painstakingly gathered together evidence with regard to this problem and presented it in a reasonable way to the government. All their proposals have been reasonable. There has been no attempt to create artificially a problem or to foster a general grievance. I think it should be recognized that in their representations, arising from conclusions reached in the units across Canada, they are under great pressure because of the need that exists in all these communities. At every meeting that I have attended of ex-service men I have found pathetic evidence of a large number of men in distress appealing to these organizations for definite aid, and only through these organizations do they find channels of negotiation. Those who serve in the national executives of these organizations do so only because of a desire to assist their less fortunate comrades and at the same time reconcile that service with the public interest.

Coupled with the rejection of the main recommendation of the commission on economic allowance, I am distressed to note the reduction in the provision for special employment projects. The minister has said that while he could not accept on behalf of the federal government any further responsibility for the extension of relief to unemployed, fit ex-service men, nevertheless the government was prepared to accept a full measure of responsibility with regard to provision of employment facilities. There is as yet no evidence that this particular phase of the work will be extended in a manner that will deal adequately with the situation. In this regard I think we should note the position of the local honorary committees. Within those committees there have been recruited representative business men, and I fear that unless adequate funds are provided for the projects outlined by them, there will be a sense of let-down; they will be disappointed and discouraged, and never again will their cooperation be secured for work of this sort.

It is becoming increasingly apparent that ex-service men are at a special disadvantage when unemployed, particularly when it becomes necessary for them to apply for relief. Everywhere I find, as the hon. member for Vancouver South has found, evidence that the municipalities are inclined to refer ex-service men back to the department, to deny any responsibility and to say that they should be provided for by the federal department. Day after day I receive letters from men and meet men who seem to be kicked about from pillar to post. They are told, if they apply for work on the relief projects, that they are medically unfit, that they should go to the federal department. When they go to the federal Department of Pensions and National Health they are told that their disabilities are not such as can be recognized for pensions, war veterans' allowance or unemployment assistance. Their plight is serious in that regard because of the general pressure now being exercised to reduce relief expenditure. For that reason I feel that the minister should not be too blunt in closing the door on negotiations with regard to this problem. The problem has not yet been solved. He rejects the recommendation of the commission in this respect, and if he does not suggest some satisfactory alternative the problem will assume more definite aggravation in the days to come.

I also wish to add a word in support of what has been said about the plight of imperial ex-service men in Canada. Everywhere there is pathetic evidence of their distress—men who, encouraged to come to Canada, have given every evidence of a desire to establish themselves as satisfactory citizens in our community, men who when they left the United Kingdom surrendered what advantages in the way of social services they might have enjoyed if they had remained in their own land. As a parliament we cannot deny all responsibility for their present tragic plight. I do not suggest that the Canadian government should assume full responsibility for their welfare; but I do suggest and urge that the minister take suitable action to enter into negotiations with the British government whereby, with a general cooperative effort, some provision may be made for their needs. Possibly at another time—the hour is growing late—we may have an opportunity of dealing more extensively with this particular problem, which is most urgently demanding our attention in all communities in Canada. The most conservative estimate I have yet seen of the number of imperial ex-service men in Canada is 76,000. I think we owe it to them at least to enter into negotiations on their behalf. The minister stated formerly that he did on one occasion while overseas, interview officials of the British ministry of pensions. May I suggest to him that a passing and more or less casual interview of that sort is hardly sufficient. We have records of negotiations successfully consummated previously with regard to those who served in imperial units, who had pre-war domicile in Canada. Part of that agreement is incorporated in the Pensions Act, part of it stands apart from the Pensions Act; but by reason of negotiations entered into by Canadian government officials it was possible that when the problem has been fully stated on their behalf by the minister or some representative of the Canadian government we may find it possible to evolve some scheme which will ease the tension of the present situation. It is most unsatisfactory at the present time to find so many of these imperial ex-service men in want, in desperate straits, and with no direct avenue of negotiation on their own behalf.

I have just a word to say upon the discussion which took place earlier in the evening with regard to the employment of ex-service men on dominion government projects. In the house the other day some reference was made to the situation in Halifax. Only this morning I received a communication from an organization in that city stating that they have a definite grievance, that when the veterans' assistance commission sends a list of the unemployed ex-service men available for special improvement projects, this must be o.k.-ed by a representative of, or personally by, one of the sitting members for Halifax. When the list is o.k.-ed—on the basis of political considerations, as I am informed—it is then referred to Colonel Vince, the head of the local engineering branch of the National Defence department. A selection is again made from that list, and the definite complaint is that by reason of that procedure of selection civilians are actually placed on the work to the exclusion of veterans who are competent and available. They say that many of those in charge of projects frankly state that they are not prepared to employ ex-service men.

As I have stated, the ground has been thoroughly covered by the hon. member for Vancouver South, and I desire to place myself on record as indicating my support of all the recommendations of the veterans' assistance commission. I find it hard to believe, from what I know of the character of the men who composed that commission, and the nature of the inquiry conducted across Canada, that they would make this recommendation in respect of a provisional economic allowance unless they were earnestly convinced that there was no satisfactory alternative to solve this problem. May I, in closing, quote a few sentences from page 62 of their report:

> We are convinced that we would not have done our duty if we failed to make recommendations that would cover them all—
> Referring to the entire 15,000.
> —and that if we recommended remedial legislation to cover only a portion of the unemployed veterans who saw service in a theatre of actual war, we would not have completed our difficult task.

There is a general feeling throughout the country that unemployed war veterans should be accepted as the responsibility of the dominion government. Particularly is this view prevalent amongst provincial and municipal authorities, and among responsible veteran organizations who have to deal with the class of veteran included in this report.

During the recruiting period in Canada, many war-time promises were made to the troops by men in public life, no doubt in all sincerity at the time, but it would not be correct to say that all of the promises had been fulfilled.

There is no doubt that the veterans keeping in mind these promises, believe that they are and should be accepted as a definite responsibility of the dominion government when unemployed.

It is not altogether surprising that, in view of the attitude of provincial and municipal authorities on this matter of unemployment relief responsibility, veterans, who have to seek local assistance, do so with a feeling of humiliation. Disillusionment and bitter thoughts prevail amongst many of these men to-day, yet they have held themselves aloof from all that is not good citizenship. They stand for law and order, but they feel that they deserve better than their present lot.

Our veterans are a strong moral force in the nation and, during years of depression, their attitude has had a steadying effect on the community in general.

By its efforts to solve the unemployment situation, the dominion government has already recognized that unemployment is basically a national problem. In the case of ex-service men, the commission feels that unemployment is essentially even more of a national problem, because the influences that contributed most to the unemployability of these men had their origin in a national emergency.

I heartily endorse these words.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I do not wish to say much at this late hour, but I do want to associate myself earnestly with the previous speakers. All things considered, our treatment of our returned men has left very much to be desired, and I think something further should be done for them. If this system under which we are living renders Canada incapable of doing more for her returned men, that fact alone stands as a condemnation of the system and for all thoughtful men it should be a sign that the system must be changed. Manifestly a country like Canada can do more for her returned men than she is doing. I shall never be satisfied until at least all that is asked for and recommended by these two commissions is done.

Mr. ISNOR: I realize that the minister is anxious to get this item through, and I do not propose to take up time except to reply briefly to a remark made by the hon. member for Vancouver North. I would hesitate to criticize actions or supposed actions taking place in Vancouver, which is rather a long distance from Ottawa, and still longer from Halifax, and for that reason, without knowing my facts, I would hesitate to make criticisms of conditions at such a distance. I live in Halifax; I am there the greater part of the time, and when I am in Ottawa I keep in touch with matters pertaining to my constituency. I have on my desk and in my file letters from various returned soldiers' organizations in Halifax, and almost without exception they have been good enough to write thanking me and asking me to express to the Minister of Pensions and National Health as well as to the Minister of National Defence their appreciation of the cooperation given to returned men not only in regard to pension matters but with respect to the general employment situation. I hesitate to say that the hon. member for Vancouver North raised the question from political motives. Knowing him, I would not say that he had spoken from that point of view; but in regard to the question raised the other day by an hon. member sitting on the other side of the house, when he asked a question based upon a telegram he had received from an individual in Halifax, it was shown later that the information was not according to the facts.

Last Christmas the complete list of names which was forwarded by the secretary of the veterans' assistance commission was accepted 100 per cent, which shows a willingness to cooperate on the part of those who are in authority in Halifax. I believe the same can be said to a very large extent with respect to various projects now being carried out in Halifax. I say, therefore, with all due respect to the criticisms offered by the hon. member for Vancouver North, I am satisfied that in the very large percentage of cases, almost wholly, this government has the support of the returned men not only in Halifax, but also throughout Nova Scotia.

May I say one word in reference to another criticism offered by an hon. member in reference to a certain undertaking in Nova Scotia. He did not mention the county, but the reference was to the town of Yarmouth. I have been informed that, regarding the recent project in connection with the airport in the town of Yarmouth, a responsible party wrote to the honorary secretary of the veterans' assistance commission in Halifax, stating that fifty per cent of the men on that project were returned men and that a large number of unemployed returned men of Yarmouth were being taken care of. That is altogether different from the picture presented by the hon. member for Vancouver North. The hon. gentleman did not state his authority for the statement he made. Perhaps he will give us the name of the person who sent the letter.

Mr. MacNEIL: I have no desire to question the hon. member's statement. I brought this matter to the attention of the committee as an indication of the general procedure in connection with the employment of ex-service men. The letter is from an organization known as the Veterans of France and is signed by N. M. L. Rolfe over the seal of the organization. The complaint is not against the hon. member or the department, but rather against the procedure. It is that when the list of ex-service men available for work is prepared by the veterans' assistance commission, it is again scrutinized on the basis of political considerations, apparently in regard to their eligibility to share in political patronage, and is o.k.-ed by some representative of the hon. member or by the hon. member himself. Then they say it is again scrutinized by the department, and that by reason of this procedure some ex-service men who might have obtained employment are denied that opportunity. It is just that, with the hon. member for Vancouver South, I protest against such procedure, because it results in the elimination of some men who, I feel, should be entitled to employment. They state definitely that on some of the projects now under way in Halifax a very small percentage of ex-service men are employed. I hope to hear from the hon. member for Halifax a denial that such procedure is followed, and that regardless of political considerations all deserving ex-service men are granted an opportunity to obtain employment on these projects.

Mr. GREEN: What is the present position with regard to the number of pensioners who are getting assistance?

Mr. POWER: There are about 8,500.

Mr. GREEN: Then there has been a substantial reduction in the number of pensioners requiring relief?

Mr. POWER: Yes. A good many of them have obtained jobs and quite a number more received the war veterans' allowance during the past year.

Item agreed to.

Services to veterans and dependents—Care of patients, $3,045,287.

Mr. MacNEIL: The other evening the minister stated that there was an increase in the total appropriation for hospital allowances and care of patients. I have some difficulty in understanding the figures he utilized. Apparently he took the actual expenditures for 1936 and 1937, according to his statement on page 3071 of Hansard, and compared them with the estimate for the present year. But in both estimates, for care of patients and for hospital allowances, there are definite decreases indicated this year. Is it possible for the minister now to give comparative figures for the fiscal years 1936-37 and 1937-38 as regards provision for care of patients and provision for hospital allowances, as well as comparative figures with regard to hospital admissions, with particular reference to class 1 patients?

Mr. POWER: It has been very difficult to get the exact figures, on account of the different set-up of the estimates this year. I do not think I can get that information for my hon. friend without going to a great deal more work than I have had time to do since I last saw him. There has been a change in the system since 1936 in that, as my hon. friend knows, class 5 has been established, which is really a clearing-house for the other classes. So it is very difficult for us to obtain comparable figures.

Mr. MacNEIL: I shall not press the minister if it entails a great deal of work, but I asked for these figures because of the general concern that exists with regard to the application of P.C. 91 as against P.C. 1842. There are some points which have been brought to my attention in dealing with individual cases. It is alleged that a number of men have been transferred from class 1 to other classes and thereby have been deprived of pay and allowances, and there has been some readjustment in regard to reclassification which has reacted to the disadvantage of the men.

The next point was with regard to dental treatment. That was touched upon the other night, but I wish to add that when dental treatment is offered a man living in a remote district, away from a departmental institution, and it is required that he receive that treatment in a departmental institution, no provision is made for transportation expenses, so that it is practically impossible, as I understand the situation, for that man to take advantage of the regulation. The expense of travelling probably would be greater than the expense of having dental treatment at home.

Mr. POWER: I suppose my hon. friend knows that under P.C. 1842, the former order in council, dental treatment was never given as class 2 at all, and that under P.C. 91, passed in 1936, dental treatment is given as class 2. So there is that much improvement in comparison with the old order in council; I think that is pretty clear.

Mr. MacNEIL: Yes; but my plea is for the man for whom dental treatment has been recommended as likely to improve his general condition. He may be in receipt of a pension for tuberculosis, let us say—

Mr. POWER: But he did not get it at all before; so he is that much better off now.

Mr. MacNEIL: I am glad to hear that; but is it not possible to make satisfactory arrangements so that a man may either receive his transportation expenses to a departmental institution where he can receive the necessary treatment, or secure that treatment at the point where he resides?

Mr. POWER: I am studying that matter, and I hope to arrive at a fairly satisfactory solution.

Mr. GREEN: Perhaps the minister would let this item stand. I think there are more matters to be brought up.

Mr. POWER: Is there much more on it?

Mr. GREEN: I do not know.

Mr. POWER: I should like to go into health to-morow. A number of hon. members have been asking me about that. We have spent a considerable time and quite a number of sittings of the house discussing pensions, which we have debated in all its phases. Of course I am in the hands of the committee, but the doctors must have their day some time. The soldiers have had many days.

Mr. GREEN: There is only one point I have in mind, and it might take only a short time, but I suggest that the minister let the item stand.

Mr. POWER: Has my hon. friend anything to say about it, or does he just want to make another speech? I do not want to have the item carry if there is to be any further discussion; I do not want to be discourteous to my hon. friend.

Mr. GREEN: We had two or three points we wished to have discussed; it is not a question of making a speech, or anything like that. I think the minister should let the item stand.

Mr. POWER: It is eleven o'clock anyway.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, May 27, 1938

The house met at three o'clock.

CENTRAL FINANCE CORPORATION

MOTION TO RELIEVE COMPANY OF REPAYMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY FEES

Mr. W. R. MACDONALD (Brantford City): Mr. Speaker, with the leave of the house I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver):

Whereas the Central Finance Corporation applied for change of its name and increase of capitalization at the last session of parliament, and paid a fee of $1,400, which is chargeable on the increase in capital, and also paid in addition thereto all other parliamentary fees;

And whereas on account of the shortness of the session of parliament, 1937, the bill was not presented to the House of Commons for third reading;

And whereas the said corporation is applying at the present session of parliament for the same increase in capital;

And whereas the said corporation is required this year to pay again all parliamentary fees in connection with its present application, and should be relieved only of payment of fees chargeable on increase of capital;

Therefore be it resolved that the Central Finance Corporation be not required to pay the fees chargeable on increase of capital, on its application now before parliament for increase of capital, notwithstanding standing order 93, paragraphs (3) and (4) of the standing orders of the House of Commons.

Mr. BENNETT: Should this not have gone to the committee?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, this resolution came up before the banking and commerce committee and a discussion of the subject took place a day or two ago. My understanding was that the whole matter should stand until the committee had completed its work and was prepared to make a report which would affect the whole subject. I must respectfully protest against the resolution passing to-day. In any case there should be notice and, in the second place, I suggest it should not be considered until the committee has completed its work or completed consideration of the matter affecting this resolution.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): I was not present before the banking and commerce committee when the matter was discussed, but I am advised there was a general consensus of view that while the company should be called upon to pay its full parliamentary fees this session for the bill, it should not again be charged the $1,400 which it paid last year with respect to the application of last year for an increase in capital, which it did not secure.

I have no objection in principle to what is here proposed, but I am advised by the clerk of the house that this motion should be referred for consideration to the committee on standing orders, and that it is not appropriate that it be dealt with in the manner now proposed. I think I would be in order in moving that the matter be referred to the committee on standing orders.

Mr. STEVENS: That does not alter the position which I have taken. A definite understanding was arrived at in the banking and commerce committee that this matter would not be proceeded with until there was further discussion of it; because I desired to discuss it in that committee before it was brought to the house at all. I suggest to the minister that the motion be allowed to stand until the banking and commerce committee have disposed of the matter and we have been given an opportunity to discuss it there. I have no doubt it will carry, but it should be allowed to stand in the meantime.

Mr. DUNNING: On the point of order, standing order 101 reads:

No motion for the suspension of the standing orders—

Just what this resolution is.

—or any rule respecting a petition for a private bill will be entertained, unless the same has been reported upon by the committee on standing orders, and the committee in its report shall state the grounds for recommending such suspension.

The only question in my mind with respect to following the course suggested by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) is this: Can this corporation get its new application before parliament without again paying $1,400? Can it proceed at all? I think that is the question that must be decided, and the standing orders committee would be the appropriate body to go into that phase of the matter.

Mr. STEVENS: I have no objection to that at all, but at the same time there has been no notice of motion, I suggest that it should stand until the proper forty-eight hours have elapsed.

Mr. DUNNING: I have no objection to its standing as a notice of motion, but my amendment for reference to the committee on standing orders should also stand as an amendment.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): I suggest to the hon. member that he add to the motion as read by the Speaker these words, "such payment having been made in 1937." Then you would have it upon the records of the house. The preamble is not part of the motion as read.

Mr. MACDONALD (Brantford): I shall be glad to adopt that suggestion. When this matter came up in the committee it was suggested that the amount paid be repaid to the company. The motion which I have made does not suggest repayment; it merely suggests that the company be not required to pay again what they have paid already.

Motion as amended stands.

GRAIN HANDLING AT QUEBEC

RATES FOR HANDLING FROM LAKE VESSELS THROUGH ELEVATOR AND FREE STORAGE

On the orders of the day.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): Before the orders of the day are called I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe), but as he is not in his seat it might be even more appropriately directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). The question I wish to ask is based upon questions that were asked previously and in a sense answered. On May 6 I placed the following questions on the order paper:

1. Has the Minister of Transport recently concluded a special agreement with the Louis Dreyfus and Company or any of its allied or subdiary companies for the handling of grain through the government elevator at Quebec?

2. If so, what are the rates charged under this special agreement? Are the rates lower than those approved by the board of grain commissioners?

3. What are the storage rates to be charged, if any?

4. Do other elevators at Sorel and Three Rivers, privately or otherwise, participate in the said agreement?

5. Were the terms of the said agreement submitted to and approved by the board of grain commissioners prior to its acceptance and completion?

6. Under the Canada Grain Act, what authority determines or approves of the schedule of rates or tariffs charged in elevators operating in Canada?

On May 11 those questions were passed as an order for return. On May 18 I received what purport to be answers, reading as follows:

1. No.

2, 3, 4 and 5. Answered by No. 1.

6. The Board of Grain Commissioners for Canada, as to the fixing of maximum charges.

The question I wish to ask is this: Will the Minister of Transport lay on the table of the house a letter which was sent by a member of the national harbours board to Mr. Kaiser of the Dreyfus Company of New York in the month of April—I have not the exact date,—together with a memorandum attached thereto, setting forth certain reduced rates for handling grain from lake vessels to the elevator at Quebec and from elevator to ocean vessels and agreeing to free storage and confirming an understanding previously arrived at?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have no knowledge myself as to whether or not any such correspondence exists. I shall in the first instance have to speak to the minister. He would have to say what it would be proper to table. I shall have pleasure in doing that.

UNEMPLOYMENT

CONCENTRATION OF SINGLE UNEMPLOYED MEN IN VANCOUVER—OCCUPATION OF POST OFFICE BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) if he can give the house any further information with regard to the single unemployed situation in the city of Vancouver.

Hon. NORMAN McL. ROGERS (Minister of Labour): I have no further information to add to what has appeared in the press from day to day. My understanding is that the provincial government is dealing with this question as a matter of relief administration within the control of the province. I have nothing to add at this time to the statement I made some days ago.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): While the Minister of Labour (Mr. Rogers) is dealing with this matter, perhaps he would answer a question I should like to ask. Is the floor surface of the post office building in Vancouver still occupied by single unemployed men?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. ROGERS: Our latest information is that the floor of the post office building is still being occupied. However, from the beginning there has been nothing in the nature of disorder and nothing that has interfered with the transaction of public business.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): I wonder if the minister has been advised, as I was yesterday by a gentleman who came through by air, that not only is the floor of the post office being occupied but it is being used as a sort of sports field where games have been set up and so on. It is a sort of public gymnasium for these men. That is the real use to which it is being put. It strikes me that we ought to have something more than the mere answer that these men have occupied the place and that there has been no disruption of business.

Hon. W. D. EULER (Acting Postmaster General): The latest news received, and I have not had any to-day, does not bear out the rumour voiced by my hon. friend. The information we have is that strikers to the number of about five or six hundred are congregated in the lobby of the post office, but they are conducting themselves fairly well. There is no information whatever that they are conducting sports or games. However, I shall make inquiry immediately with regard to this matter.

Mr. STEVENS: There is no doubt about it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I promised to give my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) and the house information concerning the remainder of the legislative program of the present session. I do not wish to be held too strictly to account in respect of the measures I am now indicating, that they include absolutely everything that will be brought down, but so far as I can see at the moment there may be some legislation growing out of the reports of committees of the house and out of the reports of the royal commissions that have been recently tabled, also of course legislation arising out of the budget. Apart from those possible measures, there will be legislation introduced with respect to low-cost and low-rental housing and to authorize loans to municipalities for self-liquidating projects; a Canadian National railways finance and guarantee act; amendments to the National Parks Act, the Judges

Act and the High Commissioner's Act, and possibly amendments to the Department of National Revenue Act and one or two other statutes.

For obvious reasons it is not possible to indicate definitely at present what legislation, if any, may be necessary as the result of the trade negotiations now being conducted in Washington.

The government has decided to acquire complete ownership of the Bank of Canada, and to pay for the outstanding shares held by the public at the average price at which shares have been sold during 1938. Legislation amending the Bank of Canada Act will be introduced accordingly.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister of Finance (Mr. Dunning) surely by this time, nearly the end of May, will give us some idea as to when we may get the budget. Business, I may say, is somewhat paralyzed waiting for announcements that may be of very great importance, and I think in the public interest we should have the budget at the earliest possible moment.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I agree at once that it is in the public interest always to have the budget at the earliest possible day in the year, and I have endeavoured to follow that practice. The reason why the budget has been delayed this year is apparent to all, and I have on several occasions given information with respect to the matter. I am sorry that at this moment I cannot add to what was said the other day with reference to it. Certainly from my own point of view and the point of view of the government it is desirable that the budget should be brought down at as early a day as possible, but we do not want to prejudice the possibility of including within it what obviously would be a very important part of it, if it can be so arranged. I can only say to my right hon. friend that the government does appreciate the desirability of bringing the budget down at the earliest possible moment and is doing all that it can to expedite matters. I shall endeavour to give the house at least one week's notice.

I do not agree that the absence of the budget so far this year is causing great paralysis of business. I think that business is showing a degree of confidence in the economic policies of the country which is very gratifying indeed, and that it is standing up remarkably well in comparison with the economy of some of our neighbours.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Miscellaneous grants—Grant to the Health League of Canada, $5,000.

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Mr. Chairman, I should explain that I am taking this item at this stage in order to give an opportunity to a number of members of the house who have intimated to me that they wish to discuss matters connected with this grant to the Health League of Canada.

Mr. HOWDEN: Mr. Chairman, the health department of the federal government came into being in the year 1919. The hub and core of the movement was the creation of a branch for the prevention of venereal disease. The startling disclosures that had been brought to light in the early part of the decade, about 1914 and 1915, caused a furore and an uneasiness of mind in medical circles generally, with the result that medical boards all over Canada, hospital authorities and a number of prominent public-minded men appealed to the federal authority for the establishment of a department of national health centering around a branch for the prevention of venereal disease.

Prior to the twentieth century the medical profession was largely helpless with regard to the diagnosis and treatment of certain forms of venereal disease, but in the early part of the century, a number of important discoveries having been made in the science of medicine, attention was drawn to this very serious feature of our social life. There is a dread malady called syphilis. In the last forty years probably no disease has received so much attention from scientists, medical men and governments. Second only perhaps to another world war in which Canada would be involved, there is no more potent menace to our country and civilization. It is a chronic progressive disease, invariably fatal if not treated, but only so after a lingering loathesome course in which the victim is a source of danger to all with whom he or she may come in contact. Being a venereal disease and propagated by natural biological process, it is passed from sex to sex, the children of such unions being usually sooner or later the unfortunate victims of blindness, loss of hearing, crippled limbs or crazed intelligence. Because it is contagious it may be and often is innocently passed from person to person through the media of drinking cups, eating utensils, towels, etc. It has been called the great killer, and aside from heart disease, for much of which it is responsible, it is the cause of more deaths than any other single disease, not excepting cancer, tuberculosis or pneumonia. Owing to its chronic nature, a great many who suffer from it are constantly disabled from any form of work.

We have at present no intimate figures for this disease as applying to Canada. But a recent survey in the United States discloses the following facts: $34,000,000 is spent yearly in the United States for the care of the syphilitic insane, who comprise ten per cent of the total insane in the country; $10,000,000 is spent yearly for the syphilitic blind. This does not include the care of 40,000 who die yearly of heart conditions from this disease, or 160,000 who are treated yearly for syphilitic heart disease, or 500,000 new cases who apply for treatment each year. It is considered public enemy number one of American childhood, and affects 60,000 newborn infants yearly. It is the biggest single cause of stillborn children, and also the cause of many infant deaths in the first few weeks of life. One third of the children born yearly with congenital syphilis will develop partial or complete blindness if not treated. One million potential mothers have or have had syphilis, and none can be sure of having a non-syphilitic child. Most of these women are unaware of their condition until the first symptoms appear, namely blindness, a faltering heart, a stumbling gait, the birth of a still child, or the delusions of insanity. It affects twice as many women and children as tuberculosis, thirteen times as many as diphtheria, twenty-eight times as many as typhoid. Doctor Parran, surgeon general of the United States, says:

> The most urgent public health problem in this country to-day is syphilis, because: Firstly, so many people have it, and when untreated or improperly treated its results are so tragic to them and costly to the community. Secondly it is contagious, and each person who has it is a menace to his or her associates. In the majority of cases it so cripples the mind and body that death, though hastened, never comes soon enough.

Now, Mr. Speaker, syphilis can be wiped out. For consider these figures. For every hundred thousand of population there are yearly in Sweden 7 new cases, in Denmark, 20; in Great Britain, 47; in Canada, 155, and in the United States of America, 796. New or old cases now under treatment in the United States number 683,000, and for every one such there is at least one other remaining untreated. The United States, if it had adopted preventive conditions comparable to those that pertain in Sweden—fortunately it is now doing so—would have had 2,600 children born with congenital syphilis instead of 60,000. There is at present, or there was until a time ago, a bill before the United States congress which contemplated the expenditure of $3,000,000 in 1939, $6,000,000 in 1940, $12,000,000 in 1941, and $25,000,000 each year for ten years thereafter for the cure and prevention of syphilis. I understand that this bill has passed congress, but I believe that it has passed in a modified form.

This disease has probably come down to us from prehistoric times, but little was known of it until the latter part of the fifteenth century, when it appeared in epidemic form and was called the "great pox" to distinguish it from that disease to which the name smallpox was and is still applied. It was not until the middle of the nineteenth century that it was clearly distinguished from other forms of venereal disease, the common belief being that they were all manifestations of the same disease and involved a similar process; but in 1838 Ricord established definitely the cause and nature of one other form known as gonorrhoea. In 1903 Metchnikoff succeeded in transferring the disease from human beings to apes, and in 1905 Schaudinn discovered the Treponema pallidum, which is now identified as the causal agent of the disease. In 1906 Wasserman devised the method of diagnosis which bears his name, and in 1909 Ehrlich after 605 attempts, finally discovered his specific arsenical preparation which at the time was popularly known as 606.

Having now finally, after a century of fruitless search, found the cause, the means of early and sure diagnosis, and the cure for this very serious ailment, Osler entered upon an active follow-up study, and soon found that vast numbers of people, many ailing and others seemingly free from symptoms, were subjects of this disease. About 1913 it was estimated that twenty per cent of all hospitals in the United Kingdom, and ten patients per cent of all the population were infected with syphilis and that the disease killed 60,000 persons yearly in that land. A check up of the men under arms showed a large percentage of cases, and as these had to be segregated and treated it meant serious inroads into the fighting force and a great deal of trouble besides. In 1916 the Asquith government was called upon to take steps to deal with a serious national menace and the government reacted by offering to pay seventy-five per cent of the cost of all efforts on the part of the health authorities towards the eradication of this disease.

Now we come a little closer home. As I stated a moment ago, in 1919 there was instituted in Canada the department of national health. The core of the movement centred around the branch for the prevention of venereal disease, and it was because of the startling disclosures, certainly for no other reason, that the department of national health was set up in Canada. It is not at all necessary to go through the various steps leading up to the establishment of the institution. Suffice it to say that under the Hon. Mr. Rowell this department was set on foot in the dominion, and as a corollary to the movement there was established the dominion health council, composed of the chairmen of the provincial boards of health and, I believe, the deputy minister of national health for Canada. There was other representation as well, representation of farmers and labour and of certain women's organizations. But the substance of the dominion health council consisted of the chairmen of the provincial boards of health under the chairmanship of the deputy minister of national health.

The function of the dominion health council was to advise the dominion department of national health regarding such steps as it was thought best to take for the promotion of the health of the people of Canada. A grant of $200,000 was placed at the disposal of the department, and, with the advice of the dominion health council, it was to be expended in different ways. The sum of $10,000 was to go for ordinary propaganda, advertising if you like; $10,000 was to be granted to the national council for the prevention of venereal disease, which is now the Health League of Canada. The function of the national council for the prevention of venereal disease, which organization, by the way, was composed of a number of wealthy, philanthropic and outstanding Canadians who gave freely of their time and money—much more freely than the federal government did—was to do everything possible to stamp out and prevent the spread of this ravaging disease.

This money was to be placed at the disposal of the health departments of the provinces to be spent by them dollar for dollar in the prevention of venereal disease. The provinces readily took hold—Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia and Saskatchewan; I fancy they all did. In a very short time there was a noticeable improvement. The percentage of syphilitic cases in the hospitals all over Canada, about ten per cent—because it became the routine practice to examine cases entering hospitals—rapidly fell, and this program was followed for several years. Unfortunately, after two or three years the grant was reduced and—I need not go into details—in 1932 it was wiped out altogether. Not only that, but the branch for the prevention of venereal disease was eliminated, discarded from the department of national health, along with some very desirable branches of the department; and although the provinces made representations from time to time and pleaded with the dominion government for the reinstitution of the whole program which had been established in 1919, the plea received very little consideration. The grant has never been restored and the provinces have never since got any assistance. One can easily realize that the activities of the provincial health departments have been materially curtailed in this respect, particularly in the poorer provinces such as those in the west and perhaps to some extent the maritimes.

I am making these remarks in connection with a proposed grant to the Health League of Canada. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that this organization is the agent that has kept interest alive in this matter. At one time it received a grant of as much as $20,000 from the dominion department of health. In 1933 it got nothing; in 1934 it got $5,000, and it has received $5,000 ever since. I will not say that I hold no brief for the league, because I do. Indeed, my remarks now are intended in the first place to stimulate the government to a realization of its responsibility so that it may make a reasonably fair grant to this organization, because no one can challenge the fact that the organization has been most useful not only in this particular branch of national health but in every other branch in connection with all forms of sickness. I should like to read a list of its activities. It publishes a quarterly magazine called Health—many of you no doubt have seen it—with a minimum distribution of 10,000 copies. It distributes monthly a bulletin called Canada's Health News, with an initial circulation of 10,000 copies. It broadcasts weekly over thirty-eight stations stretching from coast to coast. It sends out four news releases a week to every paper in Canada, some in French. It distributes cancer articles in French and English to 350 papers weekly. Recently 110 municipalities have appointed two representatives each to the council of the league. Affiliations have been promoted with a number of national associations. A national committee on venereal disease is active. A committee on periodic health examination is promoting a specific scheme for an annual membership, including periodic health examination. A national committee on milk pasteurization has been appointed. After all the only safe milk is pasteurized milk. The only way to get ahead of undulant fever and tuberculosis and be sure they are stamped out is by positively pasteurizing the milk. It does not hurt the milk; pasteurized milk is just as sweet and just as wholesome as unpasteurized. I am not holding any brief for the creameries which distribute milk but as a medical man I believe very definitely that if we seek the best interests and the preservation of the health of our growing children we should insist on pasteurized milk and see that no other kind comes into our homes.

A parliamentary committee on health, consisting of thirty members of the Senate and House of Commons, has been organized by the league. And there are many other activities.

There is probably nothing more important to the people of Canada than their health. I am not going back over the old ground; I have discussed it here a number of times. The most important and vital thing to Canadians is good health. I have some figures here. I find in the vital statistics report for 1935, table No. 29, that there were 392 new admissions for general paralysis of the insane, which is one form of syphilitic insanity. A letter from the British Columbia health department estimates that the average cost to that province of one of these cases is $3,000 a year. This means that if 392 new cases are admitted to mental institutions in Canada yearly, and if these cases cost $3,000 each, the syphilitic insane cost this country $1,176,000 a year. In a letter from the province of Ontario I find that in the year ended March 31, 1936, of a total of 14,142 patients in residence, 542 were cases of general paralysis of the insane, and 17 of cerebro-spinal syphilis, 449 cases in all. If these represent an average daily cost of only $1, which is absurdly low, the cost of both of these diseases in Ontario comes to $450 a day or $164,250 a year. For the whole dominion it would be roughly three times that, or $492,750.

I think I need not say much more. Consideration of these facts leads to but one conclusion. It is not a thing this country can afford to play with. What we want in Canada is a reestablishment of this whole health program which has been slighted and pushed to one side. If we do not get leadership from the federal department of health, what are we to expect from the provinces? This is the central authority, the authority which has the power to institute any regulations.

Mr. McIVOR: And the money.

Mr. HOWDEN: And they have the money; I said the power. I appeal to the minister and to the government and to the Canadian people to see to it that these matters are not neglected, but that we have a live and active health department in Canada which will oversee and assist the excellent work of the provinces. I recently received a letter from the Superior of the St. Boniface hospital, which is in the city of St. Boniface, in greater Winnipeg, and is of equal extent and excellence to the Winnipeg General hospital. It long since received a first class certificate from the American College of Surgeons. When the grant was cut so that the provincial board of health had to contract its activities in regard to this venereal disease question an arrangement was made with St. Boniface hospital to carry on the work. The communication I received from the Superior stated that it is becoming necessary to erect another edifice, partly to accommodate this branch of medicine so as to have it isolated from the hospital at large; and this wing will cost $140,000. Without taking further time I commend this matter to the careful consideration of the Minister of Pensions and National Health, to take such action as seems good to him.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My speech on this subject I think might be reduced to one word. As the committee has listened to the speech of the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) I think a number of hon. members have wanted simply to say "ditto." I do not believe any good purpose would be served in attempting to cover the ground once more. I note that under item 246 there is a grant of $5,000 to the Health League of Canada, while under item 560 there is a grant to the French Language Medical Association of North America of $5,000. I presume a large portion of the latter vote would be spent in a jamboree, and following the night there might be "the morning after." That would be the end of the $5,000. In contrast with that for the $5,000 given to the Health League of Canada a service is rendered extending through 365 days of the year.

It is almost an insult for the dominion parliament to give a pitiably small amount like this for such a purpose. It may be said that the Health League of Canada is a private institution, and I can understand it might be the policy of the government not to make grants to private institutions. Personally I should like to see the time come when the dominion government would assume full responsibility. But as matters now stand, the burden of educational work for public health must be carried on by a private agency such as this.

I do think it is very strange that if the government wishes to avoid its own responsibility it should be permitted to do so by simply turning over the pitiably small sum of $5,000, when a similar amount is voted by the same department for one night's entertainment here in Canada of what is essentially a foreign association. Or, using another comparison, the amount is equivalent to the yearly annuity as voted last night to the minister plenipotentiary in France.

The amount is too small. I believe this is one instance where the great masses of the Canadian people would support the government in a liberal grant. Then, we may consider item 559, where $50,000 is given to combat venereal disease. That may seem a substantial grant, but I notice according to yesterday's newspaper that the United States federal government voted $15,000,000 for federal aid in eradicating venereal disease. While our population is only one-tenth as great, why could we not give one-tenth the sum given in the United States, instead of a miserable $50,000?

It seems to me that we fail to keep our sense of proportion in these matters. To most of us $50,000 would seem a fairly large sum; but we can vote millions on occasions. We have no hesitation in voting large sums of money for the purpose of making preparations for war, but in connection with a dread disease which was greatly increased as an aftermath of the war we find it very difficult to get the government to do very much.

The other evening the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Massey) gave an interesting description of conditions existing in Denmark, showing how in that country great care is taken of the health of cows and hogs. In fact even in Canada we do something for our animals.

Mr. SPENCE: In a large way, too.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; the amounts we have been passing in the last few weeks would make large totals. I say if we can vote moneys for the health of cows, hogs and horses, why can we not do the same for human beings? I cannot understand the continuation of such an anomalous situation.

I shall not supplement to any extent the figures given by the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Mr. WOOD: Does not the health of cows have some relation to the health of human beings in Canada?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sympathetic towards giving moneys for the health of cows, and I have no doubt that if the cows are kept in good health it may help to keep human beings that way. But we are giving a large amount of money to promote the health of animals and fail to give anything like a corresponding amount to combat directly human diseases. That is my point. These ought we to have done and not to have left the others undone—if you like to put it that way.

I believe it was the Health League of Canada which published figures showing that two per cent of our population, or 200,000 persons, are constantly ill, and at an annual cost of about $300,000,000. I submit that small amounts such as $50,000 for serums to combat venereal disease, or $5,000 for educational work such as is carried out by the Health League of Canada, are altogether too small, and should be materially increased.

Very frequently when matters of this kind are raised we are faced with the constitution, but I do not think in the present instance anybody has suggested that to deal with these matters is beyond the power of the dominion government. So far as I know the constitutional question has not yet been raised. I see the Minister of Finance looking at me; I do hope he will not attempt to raise any question of that kind.

Mr. DUNNING: Why pick on me?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, the Minister of Finance might be thought to be holding down costs. I find when there is any disinclination to go farther in accepting greater responsibilities, almost invariably the British North America Act is trotted out. In the present instance however I believe that has not been done.

I believe the evidence already given before the Rowell commission, as published in the press—if I may be permitted to refer to it—amply demonstrates that to-day it is the dominion government which has the financial resources, and that many of the provinces are in a rather bad way. If we are to do this work on an extensive scale I believe we should look to the dominion government to assume a very considerable proportion of the cost, and to give a lead to the provinces.

Mr. McIVOR: I should like to say only a few brief words in support of the vote. My only criticism is that not enough money is being voted; the cause is worthy of a far greater expenditure. I believe more survey work should be done, because from the Atlantic to the Pacific hundreds of our men, women and children need medical attention. Prevention is better than cure, and I hope that next year when the vote is placed before the committee—if not this year—a great deal more money will be provided. The Health League of Canada deserves support. Certainly it is receiving very fine leadership from Doctor Bates who is giving his time to the work.

Mr. SPENCE: I endorse all that has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), and the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden), who for many years has taken a deep interest in the matter. He has made a splendid presentation of this particular case. I do not imagine that anything we can do in this committee will increase the vote and I do not believe any one here will vote against this item. The amount to be granted is $5,000, but I regret that it is not $50,000. This Health League of Canada are doing a splendid work. I know what they are doing, because I have been associated with them for some time. I know the sacrifice that Doctor Bates has made in continuing to act as the head of the league. If you want to empty the asylums of this country you must do more preventive work in connection with disease. Our asylums are filled with people who are there because of a disease which is mentioned quite often in this house. I was a member of the city council of Toronto between 1910 and 1916 and for a time served as chairman of the property committee. I can remember going with the medical health officer to visit the isolation hospital. At that time there were between three and four hundred patients in that hospital with scarlet fever, diphtheria and other diseases. As a result of the work carried on by the Health League of Canada and of other measures adopted, there is not one patient in the isolation hospital of Toronto. This has saved the city of Toronto considerable money.

I think the country at large should make greater contributions for this purpose and I hope that next year this vote will be ten times what it is this year. We should vote more money for the saving of the lives of people as well as the saving of the lives of animals. I do not oppose any grant made in connection with the health of animals work, because it is just as necessary as this. The other night I happened to listen to a conversation between a number of doctors and veterinary surgeons and Doctor Bates, the head of this health league, and I got an ear-full of what is happening in connection with the health of animals. I do not care how much is spent for that work or for this purpose, because it will save the country money in the end.

Mr. McCANN: Mr. Chairman, I should like to concur in the observations which have been made by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) and my professional colleague. It is my belief that those who are interested in public health will have to impress upon the governments that old adage as to being penny wise and pound foolish. I do not think I could find a better illustration in support of that contention than this present vote. Looking down this page I see a grant of $5,000 to the Health League of Canada, a grant of $18,000 to the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, a grant of $4,050 to the Montreal Association for the Blind, and so on. Several appropriations are being made for institutions and organizations interested in the curative side of medicine. When one considers that a great deal of the disease that human flesh is heir to is preventable, it should be our object to try to impress upon those who have to do with government that if more money is spent in preventive medicine, less will be required in after years for curative medicine.

I hold no brief for the Health League of Canada any more than I do for any other voluntary agency that is attempting to carry on the work of preventive medicine by education. Disease in itself is a national question. The methods of control vary very little from coast to coast. Over the years it is seldom that a vote is altered because of any argument for or against, so perhaps we cannot hope to accomplish very much for the Health League of Canada in the way of increasing the grant being made this year. However, we may be able to lay the foundation for increased grants in the future.

The Health League of Canada, like other organizations, is a national voluntary association, the function of which is the education of the public on the need for promoting health conservation measures to the end that sickness and death rates may be reduced and the health standard raised as high as possible. In the brief submitted by the Health League of Canada to the Rowell commission they state that their formal aims and objects, among others, are to undertake such measures as may be considered desirable to promote personal and community health and the control and elimination of communicable diseases. Let me just digress here to say that the record of the Health League of Canada with reference to the control and elimination of communicable diseases has been an excellent one. The work they have done in this country in connection with diphtheria is one of the outstanding accomplishments in public health work in this or any other country. As a result of toxoid treatment and education along preventive lines, there has not been a single case of diphtheria in the past five years in five cities with an aggregate population of 800,000.

Another one of their formal objects is to cooperate with governments and with the medical, nursing and dental professions and with other associations for furthering the objects of the league. Another object is to promote, organize and assist provincial, local or other branch leagues, associations or organizations having objects altogether or in part similar to those of the league, and whether auxiliary to or independent of the league, and whether incorporated or unincorporated, and to prevent such branch leagues, associations or organizations from designating themselves by names indicating connection with the league without thereby becoming liable for the obligations of such branch leagues, associations or organizations. Another object is to raise funds as provided in the by-laws of the league for the proper carrying out of the objects of the league, and to expend the money so raised in the furtherance of its objects and out of said funds to establish or contribute to any trusts for the carrying out of said objects.

Another aim is to adopt such means of making known the work and operations of the league as may seem expedient, and in particular by advertising in the papers, by circulars, by purchase and exhibition of works of art or interest, by publication of books and periodicals and by granting prizes, rewards and donations. In that particular connection, they have put out a cinema entitled Damaged Lives. This has been shown throughout the world to over 5,000,000 people. As a result of the showing of that picture more people have been put upon their guard against a particular type of specific disease and have used preventive measures than could have been convinced by any other method of propaganda.

The affairs of the Health League of Canada are conducted by a board of directors which includes in its membership lay and medical members from all the provinces. The council of the league includes representatives of other associations, appointed members, and representatives of one hundred and ten municipalities. It has branches in Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Vancouver and in various small cities. Public health education is carried on by means of press releases to most Canadian newspapers and weekly radio broadcasts over thirty-eight Canadian stations, the widespread dissemination of educational literature and the use of motion pictures. As one of the former speakers has said, it publishes a magazine called Health, with a circulation of ten thousand. I shall not repeat what has been already said with reference to its organization in 1920, or what has been said with respect to the work which it has carried on, particularly with reference to venereal diseases.

The whole thing boils down to this: whether or not the government of this country recognize the fact that it is good economic policy to spend money on preventable diseases; or do they wish to wait until such time as people are afflicted and then have to spend much more money on their housing and treatment? It has been already pointed out how great is the economic loss, what it costs for hospitalization, and what it costs in terms of the number of days and working hours lost by those who are sick.

With reference to the venereal disease part of the problem I think I can do no better than to read part of an editorial which appeared in Saturday Night of a few weeks ago, as follows:

> The last twenty-five years of the history of Canada have been years of substantial progress. Not the least notable in the items of this progress have been the advances made in the control of certain diseases to which humanity is subject. Typhoid fever, diphtheria and infantile complaints have to a great extent disappeared. Milk-borne epidemics have become, with the spread of the practice of pasteurization, much less common. Perhaps the most remarkable of the advances in disease control are the reductions of tuberculosis mortality and of the incidence of the venereal diseases. A recent report of one of our large life insurance companies, discussing these advances, remarks that they are all the more remarkable in that they occurred during the period of the greatest war in history, in the face of the most frightful epidemic of modern times, and in spite of the severest period of depression known to the world.
> The venereal diseases are a blot on civilization. One distinguished writer, referring to the prevalence of syphilis in the United States, calls this affection "A Shadow on the Land." It is indeed a shadow, particularly in a country of 120 millions which is said to have half a million new cases each year.
> Fortunately prompt action on the part of the provinces and the dominion, some years ago, sufficed to exempt Canada, to a considerable degree, from the shadow referred to. During the early days of the great war, when the people of Canada were worried among other things by the rumours that our young men in the army were threatened by the venereal diseases, investigation here and abroad showed that there were, proportionately more cases of syphilis and gonorrhoea in the home population than in the overseas Canadian army. This startling revelation was augmented by evidence produced by the Canadian Social Hygiene Council, the leader in the movement (supported by medical health officers and various public bodies) to have the venereal disease problem attacked vigorously. The result was that the dominion government assisted the Canadian Social Hygiene Council (now the Health League of Canada) financially in order to continue its educational work. It also supplemented the provincial appropriations for venereal disease treatment and supervision by substantial grants in aid, with the result that some hundred clinics for treatment were established throughout the country. The necessary drugs were provided, social services created and specialist clinicians appointed. Up to 1937 more than 500,000 persons had received treatment. The effect of all this served to reduce the admission rates of many hospitals for these diseases very materially, in some instances in the case of syphilis by as much as 80 to 90 per cent.

In the year 1931 the Dominion Health Council, representing the departments of health of all the provinces, recommended to the dominion government that the existing plan be extended and grants increased. In spite of this recommendation the then government abolished the division of venereal diseases in the dominion department of health and withdrew the grants to the provinces and to the Canadian Social Hygiene Council. Since then only a fraction of the grant to the voluntary association has been restored.

In view of the fine work accomplished previously and of the urgent need for continuous action if these most sinister of menaces to human life and happiness are to be kept under control, a large deputation visited the dominion minister of health in January and asked that the scheme be restored. Already the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Public Health Association, the Ontario Health Officers Association, the National Council of Women, and the Dominion Health Council, have approved the scheme.

It goes on to say that federal aid in this field should be reinaugurated without delay.

This grant of $5,000 is but a fleabite compared with what it should be to handle such a serious problem. The government of this country could well take into consideration the reestablishment in the department of national health of a division of venereal diseases, because money that is expended now in preventive medicine will in the years to come save a great deal of money. Let me give an illustration. A year or so ago, there were 394 cases of what is known as general paresis of the insane. That is due one hundred per cent to the specific disease of syphilis; there is no question about it among the medical men in this country. It costs approximately $3,000 per person to keep those afflicted with this disease, which is usually fatal, and there we have a cost of $1,200,000 for a preventable disease among 394 persons who probably could have been cured at an expenditure of ten to twenty dollars apiece. The thing is that clinics should be available to these people, who are ignorant of the modes of infection and who have not the facilities for private treatment, where the disease could be diagnosed and advice and proper therapeutic treatment given. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this division should be reestablished.

I am not unaware of the fact that there is in the supplementary estimates another appropriation of $50,000 for the purpose of paying for arsenical treatment in the different provinces. It is not my purpose to discuss that at this particular time, because it may be discussed when the item is before us, but lest I may not be here at that time I should like to suggest to the minister that that appropriation be not confined entirely to that one particular type of treatment, because many are treated by means of mercury and bismuth and other therapeutic agents. If the appropriation definitely specifies that it is to be for one particular line of treatment, the department of health is becoming the doctor instead of the donor.

I should like to say a word with reference to government aid to these voluntary agencies that are doing splendid work throughout Canada for the public health. Of these, the Health League of Canada stands among the foremost. The grant to that body could well be increased another ten or fifteen thousand dollars. My policy with reference to grants to voluntary agencies would be to give them money to help them along, to stimulate their work until such time as it became too much for them, and then it would be taken over by a government agency. The government must be alive to the responsibility which it has to the people as regards the care of their health. It was Disraeli who said that the public health of the country was the first charge upon any ministry. As we become more cognizant of that fact and more fully seized of our responsibilities, the jurisdiction of the federal department of public health will extend over an ever-widening sphere.

Let me commend the minister for having increased the scope of the activities of the public health department. It is indeed gratifying to medical men and to organized medicine throughout the country to know that there has been reinstituted a division of maternal and child welfare, that industrial hygiene has become a distinct activity, that there is a branch devoted to epidemiology, and a general extension of those public health activities which the people and the medical profession have demanded and to which they are entitled. I support this grant of $5,000 to the Health

League of Canada, and I hope that between this session and the next the minister and his aides may be so impressed with the advantages of the work which has been done by the health league and with their own responsibility to the country that they will either set up within the department a division of venereal disease or increase their grant to the league.

Mrs. BLACK: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the two hon. members who belong to the medical profession. There is no woman in Canada who is not and should not be interested in the prevention of disease of all kinds. We are the ones who see the trouble, the sickness and the misery which ill health brings to the home. We must give a great deal of credit to a private organization, the Health League of Canada, which has worked so hard in bringing this matter before the government. I should like to suggest to the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Power) that he continue to exercise his well-known charm on the keeper of the purse-strings so that another session the grant, instead of being $5,000, will be $50,000.

As I look back over the years of the great war, I am appalled at the realization that preventive treatment was carried on to such a large scale during war time only. No money was spared. There were stations established where men and boys were taught to take care of themselves. Men were vaccinated and were given serums for tetanus and for typhoid fever. When I was in the munition areas of northern England I was vaccinated, given a shot in the chest for tetanus and also a serum for typhoid fever, because there was always danger of contagion. If we spend so much money in order that our men may be healthy to be killed, why should we not bring that lesson home and spend money that our men, our boys and our families may be kept healthy for the citizenship service we need so much at the present time?

It was interesting to me, when I read the pamphlets of the Health League of Canada, to note that the province of Quebec was the first province in Canada to establish a health unit. It is true that they received from the Rockefeller institute half the moneys they had to expend; the other half was divided between the provincial and municipal governments. If one province can do that, surely every province in Canada can do more and more in cooperation with the federal government. Lately in Ontario a law for the pasteurization of milk was passed, to be effective at the end of six months. That will be helpful to the young people of our country. I know full well the effects of bovine tuberculosis. Over fifty years ago my father was on the board of regents of one of the state universities. The government of the United States sent out a young man who was perhaps ahead of his time; he was convinced that bovine tuberculosis was an established fact. Other members of the board of regents laughed at the idea of a cow having "consumption," as they called it then, but my father talked and reasoned with them. The herds were largely Jerseys and Alderneys, with some Holsteins. Finally my father said, "I will promise to pay twice the value of every cow killed which is not tubercular." The regulation went through, cow after cow was killed, and the herd was found to be horribly infected with tubercular trouble. In that state, I am told, bovine tuberculosis now is practically a thing of the past. The beginning of the change occurred over fifty years ago.

As human beings we move very slowly in protective measures until it is too late. Surely we must realize now that we do not want our growing boys and girls to be rickety, blind, deaf or dumb; we want magnificent healthy specimens, not because we are going to send them to war but because they will be the backbone of this country in the future; they will be our support as well as our care, they will be the future members of this house, in time of peace. Again I suggest to the minister that he look to the Minister of Finance, who perhaps is not as hard-hearted as some of us judge him to be, and next year he may loosen the purse-strings just a little.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I assure the minister that in all steps towards increasing the allotment for the prevention of disease and the amelioration of disease conditions in the country he will have the complete and unqualified support of all the people of the social credit movement; for it is characteristic and fundamental with the social credit movement that human values come first.

Item agreed to.

Health Branch—Venereal diseases—For the distribution of arsenicals to the provinces on the basis of population and the number of treatments and subject to an undertaking that the provinces will not curtail their venereal diseases expenditures, $50,000.

Mr. POWER: This is a proposal on the part of the government to renew the assistance, which was interrupted in 1931, to provincial governments in their work to combat venereal disease.

As has already been explained, beginning in 1919 and down through the years until 1931 the federal government contributed to the provinces amounts running from $100,000 annually to $200,000, and besides that it made certain special contributions to the Health League of Canada. In all, the amount contributed in order to inaugurate the campaign for fighting venereal disease was approximately $1,900,000, the theory being that if the federal government would contribute certain large sums both to the provinces and to voluntary organizations, the provinces and the public generally would be stimulated to undertake the work of fighting venereal disease. For reasons which it is not for me to discuss, in 1931 the government of the day decided that one way of economizing in this country was to cut out the grant made to the provinces for fighting venereal disease and also to abolish the grant made to the Canadian social hygiene council, now known as the Health League of Canada. Since that time, in 1934, I believe, the grant has been renewed to the Health League of Canada and it is only this year that we are returning to the system of assisting the provinces in their anti-venereal work, and we are doing so not by contribution. For some reason or other a great many of the provinces are rather averse to receiving contributions from us, and there have been objections in this house time and again to grants in aid on a straight contributory basis. It is very difficult to maintain control, and the leadership that everyone has been talking about does not remain so clearly in the hands of this federal department of health.

Last year we created a new division of epidemiology whose duty it is to work on this very disease as well as on others, and we also created a division of publicity, whose duty it will be to do most of the work carried on by the private agency. The division of publicity together with the division of epidemiology will give the federal department of health an opportunity to develop that leadership which has been talked about so much. We are proposing this year, not to act as doctors or to give prescriptions to the provinces, but to furnish them up to a certain point with the drug which is most expensive and which is most in use, I am informed, in the treatment of syphilis. We know that there are other drugs such as mercury, bismuth and one other the name of which escapes me. These also are of some use, but I am informed that the arsenicals are more important and they cost more.

Before coming to the house with this proposal to distribute arsenicals on the basis of population and the number of treatments we consulted the provinces to ascertain exactly the number of treatments that had been given in each of them and what amount of money was expended in connection therewith. I find that the amount spent in connection with the giving of arsenicals in the various provinces was $63,478.

Mr. HANSON: Has the minister got that by provinces?

Mr. POWER: I have it by provinces, but I have reason to believe that perhaps the figures are not exactly accurate in so far as they relate to British Columbia. Either the telegram sent by the department to the department in British Columbia was misunderstood, or else there is some error in the figures. It would appear that British Columbia spent on arsenicals in the past year $15,050. The expenditures in the other provinces were: Alberta, $1,900; Saskatchewan, $2,600; Manitoba, $3,423; Ontario, $16,000; Quebec, $20,000; New Brunswick, $1,000; Nova Scotia, $2,300; Prince Edward Island, $1,205. There would seem to be an error with respect to British Columbia because I find that in that province there are only two clinics and they spent $15,000 whereas in Ontario there are nineteen clinics and the expenditure is $16,000; and in Quebec twenty-two clinics with an expenditure of $20,000. Moreover, the population of Ontario, wherein $16,000 was spent, is about seven times that of British Columbia where $15,000 was spent; and with all due respect to the opinion that there are a large number of transients going through British Columbia I hardly think that that would account for the discrepancy in the figures. However, $63,000 was the amount spent in the whole of Canada for arsenicals.

Mr. GREEN: Perhaps the work in British Columbia has been developed further than in the other provinces.

Mr. POWER: I am informed that that is not so. It is developed to a greater extent in Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. HANSON: Will the minister give the number of cases in each province?

Mr. POWER: The division for the ensuing year, 1938-39, as between the provinces will be on the basis of population combined with the number of treatments for syphilis during the year 1936, which is the last available year. These are the treatments in the various provinces in 1936:

Prince Edward Island	809
Nova Scotia	7,904
New Brunswick	16,024
Quebec	112,161
Ontario	92,656
Manitoba	12,800
Saskatchewan	10,414
Alberta	26,070
British Columbia	16,907

Of course, division on the basis of population works along the same lines. The total of treatments for 1936 in the whole of Canada was 296,408.

Mr. McNIVEN: Is that for all types of venereal disease?

Mr. POWER: No, only syphilis. It is proposed under this vote to deal only with syphilis. The arsenicals supplied to the provinces under this vote are not those generally speaking, utilized in other types of venereal disease.

I might say a word with respect to observations which have been made on the vote which has just passed. I want to thank the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Howden) for the history he gave of the movement to combat venereal disease in this country, and for the earnestness with which he attacks what is undoubtedly one of the most important health problems we have to face. The hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann) also explained his view, a view which, without having any technical knowledge, I am inclined to share; the common sense view, if I may so call it, that the most important function of this department is prevention—the endeavour to prevent the onset or spread of disease. I think I can make a broad distinction between the functions of the federal and the provincial departments of health. I would say the federal department should be concerned primarily with means of prevention, whereas the provincial departments, while also having to do with prevention, should perhaps have more to do with the curative side of the work.

The hon. member for St. Boniface will perhaps permit me to differ from him with respect to the underlying purpose, or as he put it, the "hub" of the department of health. I am not prepared to agree that the department was formed for the purpose of fighting venereal disease. Away back to the days of confederation there has been some semblance of a department of health, some of the work of such a department carried on. The Department of Agriculture looked after quarantine and food and drugs. The Department of Finance was in charge of conservation, which included the conservation of health and the control of tuberculosis. In 1919 the department of health was formed to take over quarantine, food and drugs, narcotics, proprietary and patent medicines, and three or four other branches. It was not entirely the result of a desire of the people of Canada to do further work in connection with venereal disease. But in 1919 or a few years prior thereto there was a fear throughout Canada, as in some other countries which had taken part in the great war, that as a result of the exposure of the soldiers to venereal infection during the war this class of disease would be broadcast throughout the civilian population, with disastrous consequences. I am happy, both as a soldier and as minister of health, to be able to say, that as far as the Canadian army is concerned the health of the Canadian troops during the war was far better than was the health of the civilian population in Canada. Only 12,000 out of 600,000 soldiers were infected by syphilis. And we have been able since the war to keep statistics in the department of national health which are perhaps as accurate as any to be found elsewhere in the world. We have been able to follow to a considerable extent the men who, even before enlistment, were infected with venereal disease, and particularly syphilis, because a great many of those who were so infected before enlistment are now our pensioners. We have made special studies in the sequelæ of this disease and I am happy to say that the fears of those who thought that the disease would spread to an almost unlimited extent among the general population of Canada following the war have not been realized. Only 6·5 per cent of those infected have shown signs of sequelæ, and only half of the 6·5 are found to have become neurological. Doctor Burke of the Department of Pensions and Doctor Margaret Parkes have made studies, not complete as yet but fairly comprehensive, of these diseases and the consequences which have followed from them. It is a matter of pride for anyone associated with the Canadian army, and those who were associated with the Canadian army medical service particularly, that the treatment given during the war had such good results.

The hon. member for St. Boniface quoted a number of figures. I think he will agree that statistics are not entirely to be depended upon—although I have just been quoting some—and particularly statistics with reference to diseases of this kind. For obvious reasons it is almost impossible to obtain accurate figures respecting venereal disease. The experience of Sweden was quoted. I have here some notes concerning Sweden. The venereal disease campaign has been conducted there since 1918. We started ours in 1919. It has been carried on there in very much the same way as Canada's campaign was carried on prior to 1931. It comprises free medical treatment for all persons suffering from venereal disease, both in clinics and by physicians specially trained in the treatment of venereal diseases; compulsory notification and compulsory treatment; penal legislation to control infection of others, both directly and indirectly; financial contributions by the central government to the local public health authorities. Sweden claims that on the whole the results were favourable of the legislation dealing with compulsory notification and so on. Canada I am afraid will not find it so satisfactory. All the provinces shortly after 1919 placed on their statute books legislation of varying degrees of severity in order to prevent the spread of venereal disease. I am informed that, although there have been prosecutions and even convictions in certain provinces, the law has to a large extent become a dead letter. The law with respect to compulsory notification has not been carried out to anything like the full extent. The law with respect to compulsory treatment is largely confined now to those who come before the criminal courts or who are in penal institutions. Outside of that these Draconian laws passed in 1919 are to a considerable extent a dead letter. However, Sweden I believe found very much the same results from their campaign as have been found in Canada. I do not wish to take time to give all the details with respect to Sweden and comparisons of their experience with that of Canada; suffice it to say that apparently the results were about the same. Perhaps Sweden is more proud of it than is Canada, particularly since, as has often been repeated, the Canadian government gave up the work in 1931.

I have here a statement showing the number of admissions for syphilis reported at clinics in the five year period between 1932 and 1936. The figures are as follows for all Canada:

1932	9,730
1933	9,408
1934	7,178
1935	6,241
1936	5,832

There was a considerable drop in the number of new admissions for syphilis during that period.

The same results were perhaps not attained with respect to gonorrhoea, where there has not been the same decrease in new admissions to hospitals. During the course of the discussion much was made of the influence of syphilis on the state of the mind, and the number of persons suffering from venereal diseases who afterwards became the inmates of mental institutions. Whilst I am not at all prepared to contradict any of the figures which have been given, perhaps it would be interesting to note the figures I have received from the bureau of statistics for the year 1936. These figures are given for all Canada.

[Mr. Power.]

The total number of first admissions to mental hospitals from 1932 to 1935 inclusive was 6,932. Of these there were 392 cases of general paralysis from syphilis, and 17 attributable to cerebral syphilis, making a total of 409. That is a percentage of 5·9 of all admissions. During the same period 7·4 per cent of the patients in mental hospitals died from general paralysis, and 0·7 per cent from cerebral syphilis. These appear to be the figures given by the bureau of statistics. I am told that the discharges from recoveries in mental cases from mental hospitals using modern methods reach as high as fifty per cent.

Mr. McCANN: Is the minister including all cases which have arisen as a result of syphilis?

Mr. POWER: Yes, all cases. The fifty per cent covers all cases, including those resulting from syphilis.

Some time ago when the house was discussing statements the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre read from a book entitled Social Work and Legislation in Sweden, and detailed a lengthy list of services which had been carried on in that country. His suggestion was that we should do something similar in Canada, and he was very critical of the government and of the department because the work had not been done. Again this afternoon he referred to Sweden.

During the course of the earlier debate to which I have referred I did not have the time to discuss conditions in Sweden or what Sweden has been doing along social lines, as compared with Canada. But in order to show that Canada is doing a great deal in the way of health legislation it might be well to put certain figures on Hansard. When we speak about work in Canada towards the advancement of health we do not necessarily refer only to the federal government. It carries on only a very small portion of the work. A great many people believe there is some overlapping, and that we should do none of it.

In the following table I shall set out the figures for Sweden and Canada in connection with certain social work, where the suggestion had been made that Sweden is far ahead of us.

Sweden: Accident insurance, 2,400,000 kronor or $600,000 or 9 cents per capita.

Canada: Accident insurance (workmen's compensation), $13,380,000 or $1.20 per capita.

Sweden: Sickness insurance, 13,000,000 kronor or $3,250,000 or 50 cents per capita.

Canada: Sickness insurance—Nil.

Sweden: Pension insurance, 55,900,000 kronor or $13,975,000 or $2.15 per capita.

Canada: Soldiers pensions, $47,786,123.51—42 cents per capita.
Old age pensions, $21,520,302.66—$1.95 per capita.
Total—$69,306,426.17 or $2.37 per capita.
(Widows' pensions and superannuation of civil servants not included.)

Sweden: Assistance to blind, 1,700,000 kronor or $425,000 or 6 cents per capita.

Canada: Pensions to blind—Nil—Act not passed until 1936.

Sweden: Poor relief and child welfare, 3,700,000 kronor or $925,000 or 14 cents per capita.

Canada: Charitable and benevolent institutions —(These include homes for adults and children, orphanages, children's aid societies, juvenile immigration societies, institutes for the deaf, dumb and blind and day nurseries), $9,120,593 or 82 cents per capita.

Sweden: Workers' protection, labour exchanges, social board, etc., 2,600,000 kronor or $650,000 or 10 cents per capita.

Canada: Workers' protection, labour exchanges, etc.—No figures available.

Sweden: Unemployment (including unemployment insurance), 54,200,000 kronor or $13,550,000 or $2.08 per capita.

Canada: No insurance—unemployment relief cost dominion government alone, $50,201,000 or $4.56 per capita.

Sweden: Public health and care of the sick, 38,300,000 kronor or $9,575,000 or $1.40 per capita.

Canada: Public health, $7,000,000—66 cents per capita.
Hospitalization of sick, $46,500,000—$4.15 per capita.
Hospitalization of mental cases, $10,938,882—$1 per capita.
Total of health and hospitalization, $64,438,882 or $5.81 per capita.

Sweden: Reformatories (care of vagrants and inebriates, 1,900,000 kronor or $475,000 or 7 cents per capita.

Canada: Penal institutions (dominion, provincial and municipal), $4,921,641 or 44 cents per capita.

Sweden: Other social purposes, 4,100,000 kronor or $1,025,000 or 16 cents per capita.

Canada: Expenditures of voluntary organizations, $1,818,279.02.
Dominion grants to voluntary organizations, $102,200.
Total—(calendar year 1937), $1,920,479.02 or 17 cents per capita.

Sweden: Cost of living bonuses, petty expenses, etc., 2,200,000 kronor or $550,000 or 8 cents per capita.

Canada: Cost of living bonuses, etc.—Nil.

Total expenditure Sweden—180,000,000 kronor or $45,000,000.

Total expenditure Canada—$213,289,021.19.

Summary: The above figures do not represent the total expenditures for health and social services in Sweden and Canada. The total figures for Sweden in the year 1932-33 are given as 350,000,000 kronor or $87,500,000 —a per capita expenditure of $11.85. The figures shown above for Canada, namely, $213,289,021.19—a per capita expenditure of $15.37 —do not cover exactly the same services as those indicated for Sweden, but serve only for the purpose of rough comparison.

So that taking Canada by and large, it would seem that we do a great deal for health. I would be the last to say that we should not enlarge our services, and the last to say that I would not like to have a great many millions of dollars to spend on health services in Canada. There are other diseases which must be considered and which must receive the attention of the federal parliament and the legislatures. The total number of deaths in Canada in 1936 amounted to 106,617, and the general death rate was 9·7 per 1,000 of population. The following table will set out the diseases, the number of deaths and the rate per 100,000 of population:

	Deaths	Rate per 100,000 of population
Heart disease	16,361	148·5
Cancer	11,652	105·8
Pneumonia	7,266	65·8
Tuberculosis	6,745	61·2
Kidneys	6,734	61·1
Influenza	3,096	28·0
Syphilis	death rate	5·3

There are other diseases, apart from this particular group, which need the attention of all health authorities of Canada. A beginning has been made in the distribution of these arsenicals to the provinces, and it is my hope that it will be possible to carry on the campaign with greater vigour in another year.

Mr. McCANN: Has this matter been taken up with the several provincial health departments?

Mr. POWER: It will be taken up at the dominion council of health which meets in June.

Item agreed to.

Food and drugs, $155,995.

Mr. MacNEIL: I have in my hand a copy of the regulations that were issued under the Food and Drugs Act, as authorized by order in council of August 16, 1934. Page 29, section 8, subsections 3 and 4, have to do with the purity of flour and bleached flour. These regulations refer to the processing of flour in the milling industry. Just recently I secured a copy of the new regulations in English and French which have been placed in circulation, and I notice that these two paragraphs have been deleted. The order in council which authorized that deletion was circulated in the French language but not in the English.

Mr. POWER: Do I understand my hon. friend to say that the order in council was circulated in French and not in English?

Mr. MacNEIL: It was only with the French copy that I received a copy of the order in council, also in French.

Mr. POWER: I understood my hon. friend to say it was circulated only in the one language.

Mr. MacNEIL: I had to make a special request to the department to secure a copy of the order in council because it was not included with the copy of the regulations circulated in the English language.

Mr. POWER: When was that?

Mr. MacNEIL: Just within the last month.

Mr. POWER: The order in council was passed only on March 24, so I suppose it had not been printed.

Mr. MacNEIL: I should like to direct attention to this order in council which reads:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Minister of Pensions and National Health, is pleased to amend the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act, established by order in council of the 16th August, 1934, P.C. 123/1852, and they are hereby amended as follows:

Subsections 3 and 4 of section VIII—grain products—are hereby deleted and subsections 5 to 15 of the above section are renumbered 3 to 13.

The subsections deleted by this amendment were as follows:

3. Flour shall be the fine, clean sound produce made by bolting wheat meal, and shall contain not more than thirteen and five-tenths (13·5) per cent of moisture, not less than one and twenty-five hundredths (1·25) per cent of organic nitrogen, nor more than two (2) parts per million of nitrite reacting nitrogen, not more than one (1) per cent of ash, and not more than fifty hundredths (0·50) per cent of fibre.

4. Bleached flour shall be flour which has undergone processing for the purposes of making it lighter in colour. The residual nitrite reacting nitrogen shall not exceed five (5) parts per million. The presence of more than two (2) parts per million of nitrite reacting nitrogen in flour shall be held to be proof of its having been bleached by oxides of nitrogen.

Note.—Nitrite reacting nitrogen shall be calculated as sodium nitrite ($NaNO_2$) which for the purposes of this definition shall be identical with nitrogen.

These subsections dealing with the purity of flour or bleached flour have been deleted from the regulations. I am concerned with the reason for the deletion of these subsections. I want to know whether it means that the consumers are to be deprived of the protection formerly extended to them with respect to the purity of flour or bleached flour. What is the explanation for the deletion of these important subsections in the regulations?

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. POWER: This is a somewhat technical question and has involved considerable controversy in the past. Some time in 1935, I think it was, the department instructed certain of the millers that they were no longer to use potassium bromate in flour. Representations were made, and there seems to have been some confusion as to just what was the final decision. There appears to be nothing on the files of the department to the effect that permission was granted to the millers generally to use potassium bromate. I do not just know how it came about, but in any case the first I heard of it was that a decision of the department apparently had been given that potassium bromate was not to be used. This was brought to my attention by the manager of the Maple Leaf Milling Company who called attention to the fact that other companies were using this improver. He wanted to know why his company could not do likewise, which was a reasonable request. Upon inquiry I found that the departmental officials were of the opinion that it should be prohibited. The other millers asked for a hearing before any definite decision was reached.

We invited the millers to come to Ottawa to discuss the matter. At that conference the Maple Leaf Milling Company stated that they had no objection to this improver being added to the flour, provided they were allowed to use it as well as were the other millers. The matter was discussed with the officials of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Trade and Commerce, which latter department has a real interest in the sale of Canadian wheat. After considerable study I came to the conclusion that the use of infinitesimal quantities of potassium bromate was not deleterious to human health. This improver is being used to an unlimited extent by the bakers because we have no control over its use by them. However, we had automatically excluded its use by the millers who had been using other improvers of a non-deleterious nature for a number of years. It was pointed out to us, to the point of conviction in so far as I was concerned, that there was no reason why it should not be used except for the fact that its use was forbidden by the regulation. I thought, I suppose because I am not overly fond of regulations, just because they are regulations, that it would be just as well to do away with it.

Then it was pointed out that in competition with other countries, particularly in our export trade to hot countries, we were at a disadvantage. In the United States there are no restrictions whatever on the use of improvers of that kind. United States flour competes with ours and gets the advantage of us in countries like Cuba, West Africa and other countries. Great Britain, after studying the matter, decided not to prevent the use of improvers. France, having studied it, came to the conclusion that improvers should not be used. Mr. Geddes, expert in grain chemistry, in the research laboratory of the board of grain commissioners, gave his opinion that no harm would be done to Canadian wheat and that the sale of Canadian wheat would not be injured by any decision which we might arrive at with respect to the matter. Mr. Aitken, assistant expert in grain chemistry, in the grain research laboratory of the board, gave his opinion that not only was potassium bromate not deleterious to humans but that it might certainly improve the flour to allow bromate to be added. In the face of these decisions I came to the conclusion that there was no harm in allowing it to be used.

The next question asked was, Would it be necessary to amend our regulations? Had we done so, we should have had to add to the regulation read by my hon. friend a moment ago—the regulation that reads:

> Flour shall contain not more than thirteen and five-tenths (13·5) per cent of moisture, not less than one and twenty-five hundredths (1·25) per cent of organic nitrogen, nor more than two (2) parts per million of nitrite reacting nitrogen, not more than one (1) per cent of ash, and not more than fifty hundredths (0·50) per cent of fibre.

It would have been necessary to add:

> And not more than such a percentage of bromate, and not more than certain other ingredients which from time immemorial have been mixed with flour.

So it would have made a definition which would have included practically everything. We therefore thought it advisable to repeal the regulation altogether, but in order to protect the public we have sections of the act which give ample power to the department to prosecute and punish anyone who sells food which might be deleterious to humans. Section 4 of the act, which deals with adulteration, and certain other sections give us ample power. There is no danger whatsoever that we have forfeited any of our powers under the act.

Mr. MacNEIL: Unless that section of the act is given effect to in regulations, it would appear that the situation now is that the milling industry may introduce an adulterant in a staple that appears on every family table, while some doubt exists as to whether it is deleterious for human consumption. I do not wish to arouse any false alarms, but it is a well established principle that we should not permit adulterants of any sort in flour. I am well aware that potassium bromate as a salt is used in flour in very small quantities to stabilize or accelerate the action of the yeast, and that if used in excessive quantities it would probably result in the fermentation getting beyond control. But I am reliably informed by medical men, and I must take their advice because I am not a medical man myself, that the case with regard to the use of potassium bromate is not proven one way or the other. There is considerable evidence to show that the use of this salt in flour, or introduced as an improver in compounds used by bakers, is injurious to the workers in the industry because it gives rise to certain skin disorders. There is also evidence to show that when the flour is consumed, particularly by people who may be susceptible to certain skin diseases, it does tend to aggravate skin disorders or induce more serious consequences. I contend that the same result in proper action of the yeast would be secured by a more careful blending of the grains. I think it is extremely unwise that a well established monopoly such as we have in the baking and milling industry should influence departmental policy in this regard and should secure the right to introduce a questionable—I think that is the least one can say of it—improver or adulterant when there is the slightest degree of risk to those who consume the bread, and when there is definite risk to the workers in the industry who are exposed to the action of the salt. I would earnestly urge the minister to reconsider his position in the matter and to re-enact regulations which will establish definite standards of purity in connection with the use of a product that is of such importance in all households.

Mr. POWER: So far as the effect on the health of the workers is concerned, I freely admit that this had not been brought to my attention before; but fortunately last year the house was kind enough to give me a little money to set up a division of industrial hygiene, and this question will give the new division something to do. They can look into it, and if I find after their investigations that the use of this improver has some injurious effect on the health of those employed in the industry I shall be only too glad to see what we can do to change the conditions.

Mr. MacNEIL: Has the minister not been advised that among medical men there is a difference of opinion on the subject?

Mr. POWER: Oh, yes, I am aware of that.

Mr. MacNEIL: And that some medical men hold the opinion that potassium bromate is injurious.

Mr. POWER: But it is not definitely established.

Mr. BARBER: I understand that a considerable percentage of soya bean meal is used by bakers to-day. Would that be considered an adulterant?

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. MacNEIL: What is the present policy for protecting the public against the use of adulterants? Is it the blanket authority of the act?

Mr. POWER: It is not a blanket authority. Section 4 of the act states:

Food shall be deemed to be adulterated within the meaning of this act

(a) if any substance has been mixed with it so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength;

(b) if any inferior or cheaper substance has been substituted wholly or in part for the article;

Then section 4 (f) states:

(f) if it contains any added poisonous ingredient, or any ingredient which may render it injurious to the health of the person consuming it, whether added with intent or otherwise; or

(g) if its strength or purity falls below the standard—

That is, below the standard we have laid down. So there is ample authority to prosecute anybody who sells any fraudulent products under the act.

Mr. MacNEIL: May I ask if any action will be taken against the milling industry for the use of potassium bromate?

Mr. POWER: Not at the moment; it is tolerated.

Mr. MacNEIL: Or to regulate the percentage of potassium bromate that may be used in flour for export, particularly to the West Indies, where the percentage used is higher.

Mr. POWER: They are watching it very carefully. Overdosage ruins the bread and does not give the effect they are looking for.

Item agreed to.

Opium and narcotic drugs, $50,780.

Mr. MacNEIL: Have steps been taken to secure uniformity of regulations throughout the various provinces with regard to the sale of well known sedatives such as are marketed under the trade names of luminal, nembutal and pheno-barbital derivatives.

Mr. POWER: That was discussed at the health council, and we are endeavouring to have the same kind of legislation applicable generally.

Mr. STIRLING: What progress is being made with respect to illicit traffic in the ports of British Columbia? Is any improvement indicated?

Mr. POWER: That is a difficult question to answer. I cannot say whether there is any improvement, but we had some very successful prosecutions last year. There were five Japanese, or there was a ring including five Japanese—I believe there were two Canadians in with them—that had been remarkably successful in smuggling narcotics into Canada. They were caught, and a number of them were sentenced to gaol. I am informed that the price of illicit drugs is now higher in British Columbia than it has ever been. This indicates that we are doing something to control the traffic.

Item agreed to.

Quarantine and leprosy, including contribution of $1,000 to the International Bureau of Public Health, $162,065.

Mr. STIRLING: I see there is a slight increase. Would the minister tell us whether the control of leprosy is entirely in the hands of his department or whether he has collaboration from the coast provinces?

Mr. POWER: It is entirely in the hands of the department. It comes under the Leprosy Act. As my hon. friend knows, there are two stations. I understand there are three patients at Bentinck island, British Columbia, and some at Tracadie.

Mr. BARBER: How many lepers are there?

Mr. POWER: There are three at Bentinck, on the Pacific coast, and seven at Tracadie, on the Atlantic coast.

Item agreed to.

Laboratory of hygiene, $70,610.

Mr. BARBER: Where is the laboratory located?

Mr. POWER: Here in Ottawa.

Item agreed to.

Immigration medical inspection, $111,160.

Mr. HEAPS: How many immigration medical inspectors have we now; where are they located and how many immigrants did they examine last year who proceeded to this country?

Mr. POWER: We have one at Antwerp, one at Hamburg, one at Paris, and two in London; then we make use of panel doctors throughout Great Britain; and there are twelve medical inspectors in Canada.

Mr. HEAPS: How many immigrants who came to Canada were examined last year by these medical men?

Mr. POWER: I would point out to my hon. friend that they do more than examine immigrants. As is well known, the doctors at the Canadian ports have to examine the ships generally; all passengers have to go through some form of examination. I do not mean that they undergo a very severe medical examination, but the passengers have to be looked over, at least, from the medical standpoint. The total of immigrants medically examined, including points in the British isles, Paris, Antwerp, Hamburg, including Gydnia, numbered: 1933-34, 5,814; 1934-35, 5,765; 1935-36, 5,775; 1936-37, 6,407. And upon arriving at Canadian ports about the same numbers were examined, namely, 1933-34, 5,278; 1934-35, 5,323; 1935-36, 4,972; 1936-37, 6,072. A certain number were classed as prohibited. In 1936-37 the number was 305, and at Canadian ports, forty-one. One hundred and sixty-two were prohibited entry.

Mr. STIRLING: Were any of the immigrants who were medically examined on the other side of the Atlantic subsequently turned back on arrival at Canadian ports?

Mr. POWER: My information is that there were forty-one.

Mr. STIRLING: How would that arise?

Mr. POWER: Well, it has happened very often in the past. I am well aware of the controversy which has been going on for many years in Canada as to why we should have examinations both in Europe and in Canada, but it has happened very frequently that people who were passed by our doctors on the other side have had to be rejected by our doctors here. Just why, I do not know. I am informed that sometimes there has been substitution. So now we have to examine both the photograph on the passport and the man who is supposed to correspond with it. Our people must see that in any case he looks something like his passport photograph, although that is very difficult, as my hon. friend well knows.

Mr. STIRLING: Are Japanese immigrants examined before they leave Japan?

Mr. POWER: I do not know of any case where we have had anything to do with the examination. I do not think they have ever asked us to do it.

Mr. STIRLING: Well, upon arrival at Vancouver or Victoria?

Mr. POWER: We have no medical man in Japan. I suppose the immigrants are examined, as anybody else is, upon arrival.

Mr. HEAPS: Do they get the same examination as people who come here from the continent of Europe?

Mr. POWER: The Japanese?

Mr. HEAPS: Yes.

Mr. POWER: I assume so. They do not get it before sailing. We have no medical examiner in Japan.

Mr. HEAPS: I know something of the strictness of the examinations which sometimes take place both on the continent of Europe and in London. I have known people who were rejected and who subsequently came here and were pronounced physically sound in every respect. Of course I understand that mistakes can happen. But I want to know if the same thing happens on the Pacific coast as on the Atlantic.

Mr. POWER: I am informed that the examination is the same. I do not know how such an incident as that mentioned by the hon. member could happen.

Mr. STIRLING: Would the minister consider the advisability of having a Canadian doctor to conduct examinations in Japan, or of employing a Canadian doctor who may be resident there?

Mr. POWER: I am sorry, but I did not follow the debates on Japanese immigration closely enough to know just how many came in from Japan. I do not think there were more than seventy-five, were there?

Mr. REID: One hundred and fifty-five.

Mr. POWER: I do not know that we should keep a doctor in that country to examine so small a number. The original idea of placing our medical men in Europe was to facilitate immigration—not that I think they are doing so at the present time. But the purpose was to make it easier for people to be medically examined upon arrival in Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: And because of the hardship involved in their being sent back.

Mr. POWER: I think it was largely due to the representations of the shipping people.

At one time the immigration authorities made the steamship company pay a heavy fine when they brought anyone to Canada who was rejected.

Mr. STIRLING: They had to take them back for nothing.

Mr. POWER: I believe the churches and other bodies also made representations.

Mr. BARBER: Are the same regulations applied at ports of entry from the United States?

Mr. POWER: No; we have no examination at all.

Mr. BARBER: No examination?

Mr. HEAPS: These regulations apply only to persons seeking permanent entry.

Mr. POWER: The ship has to be cleared just the same. It is not a close physical examination, but the ship must be cleared.

Mr. STIRLING: Does that mean that there is no examination on the United States line?

Mr. POWER: The customs officer has a look at the man coming in, and if there is any doubt a doctor who is on schedule of fees is called in.

Mr. BARBER: I have known of persons coming from the United States with the intention of taking up residence and, not being able to produce a medical certificate, they were turned back.

Mr. POWER: The immigration department must be satisfied; if not, they call in a doctor, at our expense presumably, to see whether the person is in sufficiently good health to be admitted. We have no doctors stationed at any port of entry in the United States.

Mr. HEAPS: It would apply only to people from the United States seeking permanent entry?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. HEAPS: Not to tourists?

Mr. POWER: No.

Item agreed to.

Child and maternal hygiene, $17,770.

Mr. McCANN: What progress is being made in the establishment of this division?

Mr. POWER: It took some little time to have the establishment ready. After the vote was passed, the positions of chief of the branch and assistants had to be advertised. They were advertised some time in September or October, and Doctor Couture was appointed as chief of the division and Mrs. Chasse of Ottawa as sociologist. A technical advisory committee was formed, and there was a joint meeting in Ottawa on April 13 and 14 to deliberate on matters affecting child and maternal hygiene. The meeting was under the direction of Doctor Couture, and a very large number of scientific persons, mostly medical men and others interested in that field of social welfare, were invited.

Mr. McCANN: April of this year?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. McCANN: When was the appointment made?

Mr. POWER: In October. This was a meeting of the advisory board, but a certain amount of work had already been done. The division is taking part in a survey of mortality in child and maternal cases in Manitoba. This survey is being made by the provincial health authorities of that province in conjunction with the Rockefeller Foundation and with the assistance of the federal department. Mrs. Chasse of our staff is in Manitoba, and in charge of the work there, at the request of the Manitoba government, is Doctor Margaret Parkes of our staff.

Mr. McCANN: I see there is provision for professional and special services, $5,000. What is that?

Mr. POWER: That is for studies such as the one in progress in Manitoba.

Mr. McCANN: In addition to the regular set-up?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. BARBER: Was the full amount voted last year expended?

Mr. POWER: No; there was unexpended the sum of $10,876.75 out of $14,000.

Mr. HEAPS: I am in accord with this item, but I am wondering to what extent there may be overlapping between the federal department and some of the provincial governments and municipalities. In each of the municipalities there is a great deal of this sort of work, and I should like to know whether the federal department is trying to coordinate the various activities of the provincial governments in this direction, or whether this work is simply supplementary.

Mr. POWER: As a matter of fact we do try to coordinate all the activities, but in this particular instance it was decided at the request of the provinces that we should form a central organization in Ottawa to deal with child and maternal welfare, to obtain information to assist the provinces in their researches, and generally to be a sort of clearing-house. Recently, when Manitoba decided to undertake certain work it could not do it alone, and we took the view that Manitoba would be an ideal cross-section of Canada, so that in order to get this information on mortality we thought it would be an excellent opportunity for us to join with the province. They are doing some of the work through their own staff, and we have also some members of our staff there. It is a joint undertaking in consequence of which we expect to have valuable information which we can distribute among other provinces.

Epidemiology, $14,770.

Mr. STIRLING: Here is one of those instances which I am not able to understand under the new system of preparing the estimates. In this one there is an amount, "voted but not utilized," of $4,000. In the last one I understood the minister to say that there was unexpended something like $10,000, which does not so appear. In fact, it very seldom does appear, and yet apparently on frequent occasions it has not all been expended.

Mr. POWER: I was not sure myself what that term, "voted but not utilized" meant. I have an explanation, but I would rather have the Minister of Finance explain it.

Mr. DUNNING: This is the first occasion on which the estimates have been presented in the new form, and in adjusting the details of what was last year a bulk vote for a series of services among the various accounts which this year become separate votes, the situation to which my hon. friend refers arises. It will not occur in the future, because in the future we shall be making comparisons between comparable things. I may tell my hon. friend that it took nearly six months' work to get the estimates into this form, which I think hon. members will agree is a tremendous improvement from the standpoint of conveying information as to details. That is the reason for discrepancies of this sort.

Mr. STIRLING: Yes; I modified my language in regard to it, because I think, when we get accustomed to it, this will be a much more intelligible way of presenting the estimates. I notice all the way through that there are far fewer references now than under the old method with regard to money not expended in the previous year.

Mr. POWER: Nearly all these items we have been quoting this afternoon were bulked in one vote in another year, so it is very difficult to make the proper division.

Mr. BARBER: What part of the $15,400 voted was spent last year?

Mr. POWER: The amount spent was $3,500; there is $11,860 unexpended.

Mr. McCANN: What work, if any, has this department done with reference to the outbreak of poliomyelitis in Canada last year? Or is it proposed to make an exhaustive study of that branch of epidemiology?

Mr. POWER: The epidemiologist of the department has approached the Canadian Medical Council asking them to make a study and put the result of their study in book form. When that has been done, with full details, enabling medical men throughout the country more easily to diagnose the disease and setting out the most efficacious form of treatment which can be given in an emergency, it will be printed in pamphlet form; and the department has undertaken to distribute it among all doctors in Canada. So far I think that is about all we have done with that disease.

Mr. McCANN: Is the department doing any research work in this particular line?

Mr. POWER: We are doing field studies in other lines, but not in this.

Item agreed to.

Publicity and health education, $17,024.

Mr. McCANN: What advance has been made in the setting up of this branch?

Mr. POWER: The civil service commission appointed a man yesterday.

Mr. McCANN: This should be a very important branch of the department of national health, because the publicity given throughout the country to the methods of treatment and the facilities which are available in regard to diagnosis and treatment of disease is an important factor. Last year in the neighbourhood of Quebec city quite a number of children were afflicted with diphtheria. That should not happen; it is absolutely a preventable disease, and it is only a matter of education and of using the facilities we have to make it so that no child should die of diphtheria. I have come to the conclusion that the reason why so many children died of diphtheria in Quebec province and the region of the city of Quebec last year was lack of public education regarding what can be done for that disease.

I see a great field for this publicity branch, and although the man was appointed only yesterday I would say, let him start to work on Monday spreading education throughout these areas.

Mr. STIRLING: Whom will this man educate?

Mr. POWER: You and me and all of us; the public. We need it.

Mr. STIRLING: How?

Mr. POWER: By radio talks, through the newspapers, and so on.

Mr. HEAPS: Would not the case just referred to be one in which the provincial government should step in first, before the federal government attempts to do anything? The federal government might be accused of violating provincial rights. While I should be sorry to see any part of the country, especially that so close to the constituency represented by the minister himself, suffering from preventable disease, I think we can leave the matter to the minister.

Mr. POWER: We shall issue uniform pamphlets so that the people of Quebec will be no more ignorant than those of Winnipeg or other parts of Canada.

Mr. BARBER: What was expended out of this vote last year?

Mr. POWER: Nothing. We obtained our man only yesterday. It took the civil service commission a year to get him.

Mr. BARBER: Who is the man?

Mr. POWER: His name was announced in the paper before I heard it—F. Rowse.

Mr. McCANN: What was the cause of the delay in making the appointment? It took the commission six months to select a man for a very important branch of public service, for which there must have been plenty of men available. I understand there were some 200 applications. It is a crying shame that it should have taken six months to make this appointment.

Mr. POWER: I think we got authority from the treasury board some time about July, and asked the civil service commission to advertise. They advertised throughout Canada. There were over 200 applicants, of whom thirty-five were returned soldiers. All others than these were eliminated; then the examining board or rating board composed of seven or eight gentlemen from Ottawa with a man from the civil service commission started to eliminate, and I think, after discussion, they concluded that the best thing was to give a written examination. It took some little time to decide on the subject matter of the examination; then the papers were sent out; I think they were asked to write a paper on poliomyelitis and various other things. When the papers came in they had to be examined; I understand the number was reduced to two or three candidates, and finally the appointment was announced in the paper before I knew of it.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 100, for the relief of Gerda Ellen Morrison.—Mr. MacLean (Prince).

Bill No. 101, for the relief of Hilda Elsa Naeke Schneider.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 102, for the relief of Margaret Robinson Mathieson Megee.—Mr. Heaps.

Bill No. 103, for the relief of Rachel Tencer Silberger.—Mr. Lawson.

Bill No. 104, for the relief of George Brunet.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 113, for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Fletcher Meigs Ballantyne.—Mr. Emmerson.

Bill No. 114, for the relief of Ada Alice Burns.—Mr. Thompson.

Bill No. 115, for the relief of Marjorie Isabel Meldrum Andersen.—Mr. Emmerson.

Bill No. 116, for the relief of Alice Pearl Shaver Booth.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 117, for the relief of Mary Grace French Clarke.—Mr. Jacobs.

Bill No. 118, for the relief of John Gerard Ahern.—Mr. Hill.

Mr. BENNETT: Before you report the bills, Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct attention to this fact. My memory is that the court of last resort in our country has decided that domicile is a matter of domicile in the provinces, and not in the dominion. These bills all indicate that persons had domicile in Canada. The judgment of the court at least in one case was that there could not be any such thing as domicile in Canada; that domicile is domicile in a province, in any province. I mention this only to prevent hereafter any idea that we have entirely overlooked that question of domicile.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): But the fact that they are domiciled in any one of the provinces gives jurisdiction to this parliament.

Mr. BENNETT: It is only a question of the allegation that they are domiciled in Canada; that is the only question I raise.

Bills reported, read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

PRIVY COUNCIL APPEALS

PROPOSED ABOLITION OF APPEALS TO HIS MAJESTY IN COUNCIL

The house resumed from Friday, April 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Cahan for the second reading of Bill No. 19, respecting appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this bill is of the utmost importance because of its subject matter. It was discussed in the house at a special sitting and has received considerable interest throughout the country. I have been advised that various law associations have appointed committees to consider this matter and to study all the arguments that have been brought forth by my hon. friend and others.

Mr. CAHAN: Including my right hon. friend.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I wonder if I could not suggest to my hon. friend that he first let public opinion digest this matter; let these various bodies which are particularly interested have time to consider the various aspects of this question and then reintroduce this bill at the next session? I can promise him that he will have my full support at that time as he has to-day.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I agree entirely with the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that this is an important bill. Judging from the correspondence that I have received from one end of the country to the other it has given rise to serious reflection and considerable discussion. Communications which come to me are more likely to be favourable to the bill than otherwise, but I must say that I have found a strong opinion in various parts of the country in favour of the measure. However, I agree entirely with the suggestion that more time should be given for study and reflection and that it would be most inopportune to press this measure through at this session of parliament. If Providence spares my life until the next session, I shall probably consult with my right hon. friend—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is no doubt about that.

Mr. CAHAN: —and possibly I may be able to persuade him to reintroduce a similar bill on behalf of the government. If not, I shall reserve the right to introduce a similar bill myself at the next session. With the consent of the house, I would move that this bill be withdrawn from the order paper.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Before this matter is finally disposed of, I should like to indicate that I had proposed to make a few observations which I shall not now make.

Mr. CAHAN: I am sorry; I did not know that.

Mr. BENNETT: I am very glad not to make them. However, there is one suggestion I should like to make to the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), which he probably will not favourably entertain. It has been the view of distinguished statesmen in the British Empire for many years that having regard to the possibilities of differences between the various dominions and the United Kingdom, which occupies a place similar to that of a dominion in the British Commonwealth of Nations, there should be some tribunal created by common consent to deal with these matters. This tribunal could be considered the court of last resort under the same conditions for all the dominions, including the United Kingdom itself, in which the court of last resort is the House of Lords. This court, constituted by common consent, would have as members representatives from every part of the commonwealth.

This view was put forward quite strongly by distinguished statesmen some twenty-five years ago. Certain steps were taken looking to that end, but because of the pressure of business in other directions, nothing was done. It will be perhaps within the memory of the right hon. gentleman that discussion did take place at more than one imperial conference, but the pressure of other matters regarded as being of more importance at that particular time prevented any concrete action from being taken. I think this thought should be in the mind of everyone who has to do with this matter. When differences arose between the Irish Free State and Northern Ireland with respect to boundaries, it will be remembered that a justice of the supreme court of South Africa was called in. The problem of dealing with differences between the various parts of the commonwealth has become very apparent on one or two occasions. For instance, when we dealt with the Newfoundland matter, it was an arbitration, not a case in court. The privy council acted as arbitrators in dealing with that matter, and the arguments presented were presented to that tribunal as an arbitral tribunal, not as a court of last resort.

I think it is desirable that we should study the question as to whether or not it would be possible, by common consent, to create a great court that would indeed be a court of last resort, alike for the people of England, the people of Australia, the people of New Zealand and the people of Canada, for a certain class of question, not all obviously, but certain types of questions that might be dealt with. It will be remembered that Australia has imposed a limitation on the cases that can go to the privy council from that country, and the same applies with respect to other parts of the commonwealth. I am not urging it at all, but I think it is a matter that is worthy of careful consideration before we dispose of the question which is at issue in the measure that is before the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Mr. Speaker, any suggestion of my right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) on a matter of this kind deserves, of course, the most careful and serious consideration, and I can assure him and the house that such will be given. But if I understand him aright, the suggestion would involve the creation of a court of appeal for the whole commonwealth. As he has stated, this was argued many years ago and was supported by a body of opinion in some parts of the commonwealth; but at every conference at which the matter has been discussed in my presence and in which I have participated, I must say that the trend of opinion was rather opposed to such an imperial court of appeal. But in 1926, and if my memory serves me well, even in 1929, when the conference on dominion legislation met, the almost unanimous view was in favour of some sort of arbitral tribunal, as my right hon. friend has indicated, for the purpose of sitting when there are difficulties between members of the commonwealth, as in the instance he mentioned. Such a tribunal could have been sitting, for example, in the difference between Canada and Newfoundland. There is much in favour of such a proposal. The idea was that the judges who would be called upon to sit on such a tribunal would be taken out of a panel representative of every dominion of the commonwealth, which would supply a certain number of names—

Mr. BENNETT: Not unlike the world's court.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Exactly, and I myself spoke in favour of the proposal at that time. I can assure my right hon. friend that the suggestion will be given the most serious consideration.

Motion agreed to and bill withdrawn.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT SWEEPSTAKES ORGANIZED BY PROVINCES FOR BENEFIT OF UNIVERSITIES OR HOSPITALS

The house resumed from Friday, May 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bertrand (Laurier) for the second reading of Bill No. 28, to amend the criminal code.

Mr. P. J. ROWE (Athabaska): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because I am convinced, after careful consideration of the proposal to legalize sweepstakes for the alleged purpose of assisting hospitals and universities, that the appeal has nothing to commend it from any point of view, on either economic, political or moral grounds. On the contrary I regard it as utterly and completely fallacious by every test of logic and by the proof of historical fact. Of course, I do not for one moment question the good intentions of the hon. member who has moved the bill (Mr. Bertrand, Laurier), but I would remind him of the well known adage that the road to perdition is paved with good intentions.

The hon. member refers to the fact that some years ago in Vancouver a majority of persons voted in favour of a plebiscite which involved the idea of sweepstakes. Surely the hon. member does not suggest for a moment that the fact that a majority of the electors in Vancouver voted in favour of this idea was an endorsation of the principle, because I am unable to see any principle in it.

May I suggest to the hon. member another reason which these people had for voting for the idea of sweepstakes. The hon. member knows as do all hon. members of the house, that the majority of the people of this country are very poor. They live constantly in the shadow of a terror that clutches at their hearts, the fear of how to pay for rent and food and clothes and education for their children, and they often go to bed haunted by terrible nightmares of penniless old age, and those nightmares which concern young men and young women wandering hopelessly through the streets and roads of the country in a fruitless search for work,—those nightmares concerned with sickness and death without anyone to provide for their children.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): We have very often been told that we are living in a happy country, and I always thought so myself.

Mr. ROWE (Athabaska): I should like to agree with the hon. member that we are living in a very happy country, but the evidence before me as I go through this country tells me another story altogether, and I am just telling that story as I see it.

I suggest that this proposal, like most of the shallow and superficial thinking which characterizes our present day leadership, is an attempt to rearrange the consequences of the deep-seated ills which afflict society rather than to discover and remove the causes. Men and women of all races and colours and creeds, as I have found them in my experience in the commercial life of Canada for twenty-five years, are naturally kind and good and decent, and it is contrary to the deepest instincts of humanity to want something for nothing or to live parasitically off the labours of others. It is by their institutions alone that people become corrupt, and the responsibility for shaping and ordering these institutions nearer to the heart desires of humanity rests heavily upon the leaders of men. But if the blind lead the blind, both shall fall into the ditch.

I suggest that the people of Vancouver voted for lotteries, not because they favoured the principle, because there is no principle, but because they live constantly in the shadow of the terror of poverty. What normal human being, living under conditions of heart-sick, bitter poverty and frustration, does not long for that happy dream-world of freedom, security and contentment which the sudden possession of great wealth seems to offer. It matters not that, according to the most authentic figures which I have been able to gather, only one in three thousand ever receives a prize. Always in his dreams and prayers is the fond hope and longing that he may be that one.

But if the prize does come to such a lucky one, what of the other three thousand whose hopes can never be realized and whose dreams can never come true. If the prize winner has a reflective mind, he will soon realize that his suddenly acquired fortune has not been gained by either honesty, industry, thrift, or any virtue whatsoever; nor has he contributed a single thing to the community by way of the creation of useful or consumable new wealth or services. The whole thing has been accomplished by an intensification and a deepening of the poverty, deprivation and suffering of others. Often the last pathetic pennies of the desperately poor, pennies sorely needed for milk, bread and other bare necessities of helpless little children, are taken and used in a desperate gamble to get something for nothing. Then the prize winner becomes the most complete embodiment of the cruelty, injustice and utter lack of morality of a system under which decent human beings are compelled to fight each other like wild beasts in the jungle because of the false and pernicious teaching, or other teachings like it, that "competition is the life of trade" and that they must compete and strive with each other for things which may be had in abundance without competition. This individual is automatically vested with privilege and power, backed by the respectability and sanctity of law and order, so-called, and at once, despite the untenable nature of his position on any grounds of ethics, morality or common decency, is able to lord it over the lives and destinies of his unfortunate neighbours, whom he can now command to feed, clothe, entertain and protect him and his descendants forever, or as long as the interest system lasts, without their having to render a single useful service in return. I say, Mr. Speaker, it is every one of these manifold contradictions, cruelties, infamies and horrors that this bill seeks to uphold, to condone and to perpetuate.

The hon. member has made reference to another unfortunate method of raising funds for public purposes which is even more degrading and demoralizing than sweepstakes. I refer to the liquor traffic. It has been stated that Ontario's liquor bill last year was $72,000,000. Ontario has about one-third of the population of Canada. It is therefore safe to assume that the people of Canada spent about $200,000,000 on booze last year and that the various provincial governments would get about $40,000,000 out of that. But what an awful price to pay, when it is realized that all that people get in return is something which injures both body and mind, as Shakespeare says, "putting a thief into the mouth to steal away the brain!" They get more than that. They get ghastly slaughter on the highways, the undermining of health and morals, financial ruin, and a heavily increased demand on the hospitals and morgues of the country. Think, Mr. Speaker, of the irony of the suggestion that organized gambling and booze could by any stretch of the imagination assist in the operation of hospitals! Is it not organized gambling, not only in sweepstakes, but through stock exchanges, in the necessities of life, which drives thousands of people in this country into hospitals, mental institutions, gaols, and premature graves, and is this not equally true of booze? How many of the poor people who would gamble their last dollar on a sweepstake to help a university, ever would or could have the privilege of a university education? And besides, what is the use of turning out graduates from high schools and universities when there are such limited opportunities for employment?

Then, Mr. Speaker, think of the shocking waste involved in this method of raising money. We have heard that even the Irish people are protesting against the Irish sweepstakes because of the injury inflicted upon their hospitals; but even apart from that, according to Mr. C. E. Silcox, writing in the New Outlook of April 8, this year, out of a total of three hundred and twenty-five million dollars paid into the twenty Irish sweepstakes up to March, 1937, only about fifty million has found its way into the coffers of the hospitals, or just 16 per cent, which means that the expense of raising this money was 84 per cent, while some community chests have been able to reduce their costs of collection to less than 10 per cent of the amount collected.

Any state that legalizes lotteries will have a new source of income—I do not question that—but must also be prepared for the consequences, and these are some of them. It will gain a few thousands of dollars at a cost of millions to its people. It will increase its own relief problem. It will encourage new rackets and racketeers. It will not be able to frown upon other forms of gambling. It will do incalculable harm to the morals of its children and its adult irresponsibles. It will increase public disrespect for governments. The contention that our hospitals would benefit, the plea that much money is now going out of the country on foreign sweepstakes that might as well be kept at home, to me are utterly fallacious—devil's arguments in defence of a racket that, from beginning to end, seethes with duplicity and dishonesty.

[Mr. P. J. Rowe.]

During the past three years—and I do not want to be left constantly in a negative position; I want to be able to offer something as an alternative to this—I have stated in this chamber many times that there is a living in sound goods and services of more than $4,400 a year for every family in this country, enough to place every person beyond the borders of poverty and want forever, enough to provide comfortable homes, freedom, security and the happiness that everyone is seeking, if only sound and scientific principles of producing and distributing the wealth that we have and our resources were adopted. There is no possible excuse or reason for their not being adopted. With that income, we would have not the slightest difficulty in keeping up our hospitals and universities. The average man with a salary of $4,400 has no difficulty whatever in making a reasonable contribution and paying adequate taxes to maintain these institutions.

The cure for the present loss or shortage of money in the pockets of the people can be found only by removing the cause. This is not a cure; this is an attempt to rearrange the consequences rather than to examine and remove the cause. I say we would be able, if we would undertake scientific and rational methods of producing our wealth and distributing it equitably, to do so without having to resort to such shameful, degrading and criminal methods as dishonest gambling and poison booze. I have repeatedly asked this government, and I again do so now, to make a survey similar to the Loeb survey in the United States, of the natural resources, inventions and machinery on the farms and in the factories of this country, with a view to determining the potential product capacity of the country, not in meaningless gold, silver or paper dollars, but in consumable sound goods and services, and then, having determined what wealth could be produced, and thus the standard of living available to all the people, go on the radio and carry to every home and hamlet in the land the glad tidings of abundance. I know of sixteen ways by which money is now being made in this country, all of which are unmoral, unethical, injurious and inimical to the general welfare of the people, but all of which are nevertheless clothed with the sanctity of law. Let the government, after telling the people what these abuses are, announce its intention of removing them by passing laws to make them illegal, in order that the people may inherit the earth and its riches, to the mutual benefit of all, and the injury of none.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): I do not intend to delay the house with any laboured argument of this question; but I do desire to make my position clear in a few words, and I shall refer to one or two arguments that have been advanced in support of the bill. I am opposed to this measure, which seeks to legalize sweepstakes in Canada, because I consider it uneconomic, anti-social and the most extravagant method yet devised for raising money for legitimate and, as indicated by some of the sponsors, desirable ends and purposes. It has been argued that it is justifiable to amend the criminal code to legalize sweepstakes for the purpose of raising funds for the assistance of hospitals and universities.

The law dealing with gambling as it stands in the criminal code is either a good law or a bad law. Either it is a law which it has been found desirable, from the experience of years, and, indeed, of centuries, to have on the statute books, or else a ghastly mistake has been made in maintaining it on the statute books and it ought to be removed. There is no more justification for having sweepstakes to assist a university or a hospital than there is for having sweepstakes for any other purpose that might be desired. The point is not what money or portion of the money obtained will be used for the purpose in question; the point is that gambling has been recognized as a dangerous social practice which ought to be curbed and kept in restraint. That is the experience.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Why are there so many exceptions in the code?

Mr. STEVENS: I have no objection to a person holding the view that gambling is a desirable thing and that the law against it is bad. Such a person is at perfect liberty to advocate that view. But I take my position very strongly on this ground, that this part of the criminal code has been maintained where it is because the majority of the people of this country, and indeed of many other countries, regard such a provision as in the interests of the social integrity of the nation.

The next point is this: It has been suggested that people are just dying to buy a sweepstake ticket so that they can help a hospital or a university. My hon. friend almost wept a week or two ago when he introduced the bill, when he gave us a picture of people in Montreal, Toronto and other cities looking eagerly for an opportunity to give their $2.50, or whatever the ticket may cost, for the purpose of helping some hospital, suggesting that we who opposed it were preventing these charitably inclined people from contributing their $2.50. If they want to contribute $2.50, why can they not simply stick it in an envelope with a three cent stamp and send it to the hospital? My hon. friend knows, and his smiling face shows that he knows very well, that these tickets are bought because people have an expectancy of a large winning with very little risk and at very little cost. It is the expectancy of a large winning. We know that; why camouflage the thing?

Again, it is a self-destructive method, because the more sweepstakes you have, the less any one of them can benefit. One of the reasons why the Dublin sweepstake attracts such a huge amount of money is that it is one of the few large sweepstakes in the world and therefore it draws from the world. There are many people in Canada and in the United States who buy tickets, and a part of their money goes over there—we do not know how much reaches Dublin but some of it does—why? Because the sweepstake draws from the whole world. But if you had a sweepstake in every province in Canada, you would simply restrict the field from which winnings could be drawn.

The people who buy tickets in the Dublin sweepstakes, with the huge prizes that are offered, will still buy them although they might support one in Montreal or Toronto or Vancouver or some other place. I contend, however, that it is a self-destructive method. The more it is permitted and the more it extends, the less profitable or useful it will be. It is an extravagant method, moreover; that has been demonstrated. I shall not trouble the house with figures; they are available to anyone who wishes to study them. As the hon. member for Athabaska (Mr. Rowe) has pointed out, about 16 per cent of the huge sums that have rolled into Dublin, with all the glamour and fascination of that sweepstake, has gone into the hospitals. I say, it is an extremely costly method.

The bill naively makes this proviso:

> Provided there shall not be held more than one sweepstake. . . .

That is a limitation which has no justification. If this system of raising money is good; if it is sound; if it is justifiable, it ought not to be limited to any one hospital or to two or three favoured hospitals once a year. It should be something open to any institution. But the sponsors know perfectly well that if you multiply sweepstakes, you destroy the whole structure, and therefore it is very cleverly suggested that there should be one a year.

Another suggestion was made that a million dollars went from Toronto to Ireland and that this money ought to have been kept in Canada and directed into the coffers of Canadian sweepstakes. It was advanced as an argument that the people of Toronto—I do not know whether the figures are correct; I am simply taking the argument as advanced—who sent a million dollars to Dublin were so anxious to give it to a hospital that when they could not give it to a Toronto hospital they had to send it to a similar institution in Dublin. Therefore it was contended that we in Canada ought at once to give them an opportunity to contribute to a Toronto or an Ontario hospital. The argument has only to be stated to see how ridiculous it is. In the first place, if we had an Ontario sweepstake, people would still, if they could, buy tickets for the Dublin sweepstake. Why? Because of the hope of those $100,000 winnings. When the newspapers at each drawing for the Irish sweepstake spread the news of a family in New York, or Toronto or some other part of Canada, drawing $100,000, $125,000, $70,000, $10,000, and so on, the avaricious instincts of thousands of people are stirred up and they go out and buy a ticket—what for? To contribute to the Irish hospitals? No. They have no more interest in the Irish hospitals than that inkwell on my desk. All they are thinking of is that they have a wild chance of getting a winning ticket, which chance I understand, taking all the prizes together, amounts to about one in three thousand; something extremely small in any case

For these reasons and many others I am opposed to this bill. I repeat what I said just now, that the law against gambling as it appears on the statute books of this country is either a good law or a bad law. If the law is faulty we should correct it, not for sweepstakes for one purpose; for if sweepstakes are good for that purpose they are good for other purposes. That is not the test of the value of the law. The test of its value is that if it is desirable that some people should have an advantage, the same advantage ought to be open to any citizen of Canada for any purpose. So I say the law is either good or bad, and the test should be whether we wish to remove from the statute books the law against gambling or whether we prefer to stand by the experience of a great many years and retain this law which most of us believe is necessary in the interest of good social conditions in this country.

Mr. O. B. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, seeing that it is just about nine o'clock, I should like to adjourn the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. ELLIOTT (Kindersley): After serious consideration I have decided to support this bill, not because I believe that the particular bill is necessary to prevent gambling or anything of that kind, but because I believe there should be a certain measure of control in this matter, as there is in other ventures in this dominion. Let me state briefly some of the reasons why I believe we should have this control. Consider first the Winnipeg grain exchange, where speculation is permitted in the buying and selling of grain futures, not for the benefit of the people as a whole but for the express purpose of making money. I refer to the grain commission inquiry report, page 47. In regard to speculation in grain futures, we find it said that:

. . . business on the Chicago board of trade would be seriously handicapped, if not wholly dislocated, by the elimination of speculative buying and selling (or even by the elimination of only speculative selling) in the market.

I am convinced by the evidence that the presence of speculators in the Winnipeg futures market is just as essential to the proper functioning of that market as is the case in Chicago. The volume of their transactions may not be as great and on this point there is no definite evidence, but experience has shown that in Winnipeg if the speculator is away the market is in difficulties.

And on page 48:

As long as you have the present method of marketing, speculation is a very necessary element in the existing system and its absence is certainly to be regretted.

I have no brief for gambling in any manner, shape or form; but in the case of the Winnipeg grain exchange, where we are permitted to endanger even the lives of primary producers through the manipulation of the market because of rising and falling prices, we also know that the percentage of winners is small. But as the profits made from this source assist the large grain brokers in handling the crop, assuring them of safe margins, the casino is permitted to exist.

We have the same conditions in the stock market. Stocks are bought mostly for the purpose of making money, not for the purpose of developing property or for any material interest in the welfare of the country. I have here a magazine, the Newsweek, dated May 30, 1938, in which I find the following item in reference to the stock market. It is rather amusing to me, after reading articles during recent months trying to explain why investors have not been taking advantage of the present low prices of stocks. I maintain that the reason is very simple; they have been evading the discussion of the true reason. This article seems to cover the situation. It says:

Investment trust scandal.

Watch for a Wall street explosion with repercussions that may rival those of the Whitney scandal. It will come when the SEC and New York district attorney's office reveal results of an inquiry into three important investment trusts. Investigators have found that the three companies, whose securities are widely held by the general public, have been looted of their choicest assets. Revelations will show that manipulators managed to obtain control of the trusts by purchasing their depressed shares. They then replaced the former management, sold most of the valuable assets of the companies, and used the proceeds to buy shares of little known companies owned by the insiders.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

Health branch—Treatment of sick mariners, $187,390.

Mr. MacNEIL: Did item No. 240 carry?

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I thought it did; but it does not matter, if the hon. member wishes to say something more on it.

Mr. McCANN: I wish to ask a question with reference to item No. 240. We were told by the minister that the appointment of the publicity agent was made only yesterday. What interval elapsed between the time the requisition was made by the department and the filling of the position.

Mr. POWER: I have not the exact date; I would say roughly from about August or September until yesterday.

Mr. McCANN: There is only one observation I should like to make in that connection. There are many terms one might use in expressing his disapproval of such action, but perhaps they might not be considered parliamentary. I would say that such action as that is not calculated to increase the confidence of the public in that branch of government which has to do with the making of these appointments. When urgency was required, it appears to me that the appointment might have been made at least five or six months ago, and the work which the publicity agent in the department of national health was supposed to have carried on would have been well under way by this time.

Mr. POWER: I have no special friendship for the civil service commission, but I do not wish to lead the committee into error by saying that the department asked specifically that the appointment be pressed. It went to the civil service commission as a matter of ordinary routine, and the appointment came through in routine fashion. I cannot say, however, on behalf of the department that we asked for any special expedition in the matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Was the position advertised?

Mr. POWER: Yes; it was advertised. The advertisement started about August, and the appointment was made yesterday.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In connection with health education I cannot but think back to what happened this afternoon when another item concerning food standards was under discussion. What is the use of giving health education when at the same time the department itself would seem to be neglectful of public health, so far as the matter discussed this afternoon was concerned.

As I understand it, the minister himself admits that the order in council did away with certain sections which would seem to protect the standard of purity of flour.

Mr. POWER: He does not admit that at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Here is what we had before:

Flour shall be the fine, clean, sound product—

Mr. POWER: And it still has to be fine and clean.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, no; there is no clause providing for that at all. And then there is a substance used known as potassium bromate concerning the effect of which the minister himself declares there is a difference of opinion among medical men. I do not think that is a sound position to take. We are informed further that this particular substance produces a skin disease suffered by the employees. I cannot understand the value of going to the public with a publicity campaign telling what the department is doing, with the idea of educating the public, and at the same time yielding to pressure on the part of the millers.

I do not think the minister has cleared up the matter by any means. Hence I have again raised the point in this connection. I for one would be glad to have a great deal of publicity given to public health. I should be glad to have the public educated along these lines. But if the department itself is not living up to its own standards, as it seems to me was admitted to-day, and if under pressure from the milling interests it permits practices which are not sound or about which there is divided medical opinion, there is not much use in passing an item of this kind.

I believe the minister could give us a little more assurance than he has done that there will be a thorough investigation of this matter. Surely the medical people ought to be able to say very definitely—and ought to be unanimous on the point—as to whether or not potassium bromate is injurious to the health of people who eat bread made from this flour. Further than that, I suggest the minister ought to be able to tell us whether or not reports are correct that this substance produces a diseased condition on the part of people who handle it. These are questions which can be definitely determined, and until such determination takes place I think we ought to retain the old sections. As the minister is aware, I am not an expert in these matters; I can take merely what has been stated. Certainly nothing the minister has said has cleared up the charge. Until that is done we might as well give up public health education. We lead the public to a point where they are educated to eat pure food, and then they are told that under pressure from the millers safeguarding clauses are deleted.

Mr. POWER: I cannot but admire the ingenuity with which the hon. member brings us back to an item which was passed in his absence.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I admit that, but I related the subject to the item under discussion.

Mr. POWER: I shall not take advantage of the fact that the other item passed; I am not in the habit of doing that. The point is that under regulations made under authority of the minister, as conferred upon me by the Food and Drugs Act, there were certain regulations giving a description of flour. Flour was described as has been stated by the hon. member.

For many years a number of improvers, including potassium bromate, have been tolerated. Some one in the department issued instructions to some of the flour millers to the effect that potassium bromate would no longer be tolerated. One flour miller who apparently had not been in touch with the department wrote to me to find out the state of the case. I had an inquiry made, as I have a right to do under the authority conferred upon me as a minister. As a result of the inquiry and of investigations by the Department of Trade and Commerce, investigations by the Department of Agriculture and the opinion I was able to get from medical men, I came to the conclusion that the small quantity of potassium bromate which would be mixed in the flour in process of milling was not deleterious to humans. In order to get even the ordinary dose of potassium bromate which is usual in sickness, a man would have to eat a hundred loaves of bread.

Mr. BENNETT: In how long?

Mr. POWER: My right hon. friend raises the point as to whether or not this is what I might call a continuous process of poisoning; that may not be the technical term.

Mr. McCANN: Cumulative.

Mr. POWER: I have left my papers upstairs, but I believe I can state the situation in non-technical terms. According to the opinion of Mr. Aitken of the grain board there is no such cumulative effect. I have that opinion in writing. After lengthy inquiry the British government came to the conclusion there were no deleterious effects; but, as I said this afternoon, the French government held a contrary view. The United States millers use potassium bromate, and they are in competition with us at every quarter of the globe. In certain sections of the world, and, I am told, particularly in hot climates, this substance has a beneficial effect upon the bread. What the process is, I am unable to say.

Moreover, so far as I am aware, there is nothing in any regulations which prevents a baker from using this substance indiscriminately, except that the bread may be seized when it is adulterated, or made dangerous for human consumption. So that it appeared to me, after listening to the representations made and from all the information I could get, that there was no reason why this should not be permitted. In consequence of that, the regulations which strictly defined what should be flour have been deleted. But that does not lessen in any way the protection given to the public under the Food and Drugs Act. Prosecutions may be instituted just as before if there is any adulterant used in the flour. In so far as the public are concerned, they have just as much protection as they had before. In regard to the technical question as to whether or not potassium bromate is deleterious, in the exercise of the authority conferred upon me as minister, after listening to all the evidence that was tendered, I came to the conclusion that it was not. However, I do not say that I am infallible.

Mr. BENNETT: Were the minister's technical advisers unanimous about taking that action?

Mr. POWER: It is only fair to say that they were not.

Mr. STEVENS: Why delete the two regulations entirely and not replace them with some more moderate ones? As the matter stands now, there is no reference to flour.

Mr. POWER: There are a great number of improvers, and if we permitted one specifically it would be necessary to permit practically all the others. It would have left the door just as wide open as it is now, if it can be said to be wide open. We do not define flour any longer; that is all.

Mr. STEVENS: That is the trouble.

Mr. POWER: If the food is found unfit for human consumption; if it is found to be adulterated, we have the same power to prosecute.

With respect to the other point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), that the use of potassium bromate in the mills might be injurious to the workmen, I must confess that this is the first time I have heard of that. I am informed that in so far as our department is concerned, we do not know of any cases. As I said this afternoon to the hon. member for Vancouver North (Mr. MacNeil), we created last year and have begun to operate this year a division of industrial hygiene in the department. I shall certainly make it my duty to have the circumstances he outlines inquired into at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): What percentage of this salt of potassium would be in the bread after it has finished yeasting?

Mr. POWER: There is a small amount of bromide.

Mr. MacNEIL: The minister has given permission to the milling interests to continue the use of potassium bromate as an improver. I gather from the minister's remarks that at one stage his technical advisers stated that it should not be used as it might be injurious for human consumption. I should like to know the results of recent tests and analyses that may have been conducted in the departmental laboratory with regard to the use of this salt in flour.

Mr. POWER: I think I should say in fairness to the departmental officials that it was not proven that it was or was not deleterious. If I had the file here I could quote distinguished chemists who said that it was and chemists equally distingushed who said it was not. I think the opinion of the departmental experts would be something like this in a non-technical way: You cannot prove that it is not deteterious; the regulation is there, so let it stay. The only argument I could urge against those who wanted this change was that the regulation was there, so let it stay. I do not have such respect for regulations simply because they are regulations that I want to have to fall back on that argument. There is no danger to anyone. If any difficulty does arise, we shall be glad to tighten up the regulations again.

Another point raised, which required consideration, was as to whether we should insist on the package being labelled, "improved with bromate," or whatever else it was. It was pointed out to us that to do that would almost entirely destroy our export trade in flour, because other countries exporting this product do not make a similar declaration even though the substance is added. The next problem was whether we should insist on this being stated on the package intended for home consumption only. However, it boiled down to this: We thought perhaps we would tolerate it for the time being, at least.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has been quite frank and I appreciate it.

Mr. POWER: Why not? I have nothing to hide.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: At the same time, I do not think his explanation is altogether satisfactory. Apparently the millers are determined to have this substance in the flour in order that they can export. Officially we do not seem to care whether a customer overseas is poisoned, but in any case we should have regard for our own people. However, since a large part of this production is exported, we must apparently take risks with our own people. That is how it seems to me. When these regulations were in force the millers were held responsible for the purity of their product. That was a definite, positive thing. Now some one will have to be poisoned or will have to go before the courts and prove that bread thus made is not fit for human consumption.

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I thought that was the way in which action would have to be taken. What is the procedure?

Mr. POWER: Is it an adulterant?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What else is it?

Mr. POWER: It does not lower the quality.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What else is it?

Mr. POWER: It is supposed to raise the quality.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The former provision was quite clear. The regulation read:

3. Flour shall be the fine, clean, sound product made by bolting wheat meal, and shall contain not more than thirteen and five-tenths (13·5) per cent of moisture, not less than one and twenty-five hundredths (1·25) per cent of organic nitrogen, nor more than two (2) parts per million of nitrite reacting nitrogen, not more than one (1) per cent of ash, and not more than fifty hundredths (0·50) per cent of fibre.

There is a similar regulation with regard to bleached flour. Those regulations were specific and definite and the millers were held responsible for upholding that standard. But there is no standard to-day. They have asked that these regulations be deleted in order that they may use this one particular substance, potassium bromate, as an improver.

Mr. POWER: And others.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They can introduce a dozen things that they call improvers, and there is nothing to safeguard the public.

Mr. POWER: If the improvers are deleterious to human health, we will check them up.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How is that to be done?

Mr. POWER: Under the act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: This is a complete reversal of the previous procedure. Under the former regulations the millers were held responsible, and now some one must prove the product deleterious.

Mr. POWER: We have full authority under section 4 of the Food and Drugs Act.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What evidence is required? I suppose some one will have to be poisoned and then there will be an investigation.

Mr. POWER: The public would be protected in this case as it is in connection with sausages or hamburgers or all those things.

Mr. McCANN: The explanation given by the minister is perfectly clear and straightforward, and should be grasped easily even by the lay mind. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) appears to be making a mountain out of a mole-hill. Potassium bromate is not a deleterious or injurious drug at any time. It has no cumulative effects, and if it is used in the process of baking as an improver for yeast this is done only with the idea of promoting the chemical action which goes on in the process of bread-making. It has been put forward here as an argument against its use that those who are engaged in the trade and handle flour are subject to skin eruptions and other diseases because of the use of potassium bromate. That I may say, broadly speaking, is not the case. There are individuals who are susceptible even to the action of flour on their hands and arms. They have what we call an idiosyncrasy for that type of thing, and it has never been proven that the addition of potassium bromate as an improver of yeast in the making of bread has one iota of effect in producing skin eruptions. If our export flour to hotter climates particularly, Jamaica and the West Indies, demands the addition of an improver of the type of potassium bromate, that is doing nobody any harm, and we are simply adding to the flour something which will help to sell it in those particular countries. Its use even in our own country for domestic purposes does not do one iota of harm.

Mr. MacNEIL: The statement of the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. McCann) is most reassuring, but it does not meet the point we have been endeavouring to make this afternoon and this evening. Standards were formerly prescribed, but the door is now more or less wide open to doubtful practices. The minister intimated that the Maple Leaf Milling Company were content to proceed with the processing of their flour without the use of potassium bromate.

Mr. POWER: Either the Maple Leaf Milling Company or the Lake of the Woods Milling Company. I have not my papers before me at the moment.

Mr. MacNEIL: Does that not lead to the conclusion that the same results might be achieved in the quality of bread by the more careful processing of grains, without the use of questionable substances? Certainly, I think we should make a stand against the use of any form of adulterant or improver, if it is possible to process satisfactory and wholesome flour without it. Bread is an article that goes on every table, and it is vitally important that the strictest regulations should exist to protect the public.

Mr. POWER: Every baker has been able to use potassium bromate for years almost ad lib, and he can do so yet. It struck me at the time that it would be preferable, if it were desirable to permit the infusion of this substance, to have it done scientifically by the miller, to simply throwing the substance in, in handfuls, in a bake shop. I thought it better to control it scientifically, rather than have it done in a haphazard fashion.

Mr. McCANN: With reference to the item of $160,000 for professional and special services in the treatment of sick mariners, might I ask the minister how many hospitals are operated for sick mariners; what is the professional personnel, and how many full time men there are?

Mr. POWER: We have only one hospital, at Lunenburg, and no full-time doctor. We have one hospital guard. We have contracts with about a hundred hospitals all over the country. I have the list here covering several pages, if my hon. friend wants it. Almost all the medical men connected with this service are on a fee basis, and the hospitals receive payment according to the treatments which they give. We have a few part-time doctors on a fixed fee basis, running from $100 a year up to about $2,000.

Mr. McCANN: Does the department carry any compensation for these mariners in the event of accident?

Mr. POWER: No.

Item agreed to.

Industrial hygiene, $11,450.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would the minister give a detailed description of just how industry benefits from this vote?

Mr. POWER: I have a memorandum here on the subject:

The purpose of industrial hygiene is to develop methods for the protection and improvement of the health of industrial workers. It has now become an integral part of any public health program dealing with the prevention of disease.

Comprehensive surveys in many countries and states have shown that illness and injury in industry have increased in direct proportion to the widespread use of hazardous processes and injurious materials in an ever increasing variety of industrial uses. Moreover, unhealthful industrial environment not only causes specific occupational diseases but increases the incidence of tuberculosis, pneumonia and degenerative diseases (heart, kidneys, nervousness) among workers. As the result of increased health hazards and lowered health standards of workers, there have developed serious economic problems.

The first step undertaken by the division of industrial hygiene has been the creation of a technical advisory committee on industrial hygiene.

In that connection we called into consultation representatives of the Department of Labour, representatives of all the provinces, representatives of the universities and of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, also university professors, as well as representatives of organized labour. We called them in to help us to elaborate a program.

The duties of the committee will be to institute studies in respect of industrial diseases and hazards associated with special industries with a view to determining the problems presented in this field and the methods that may be adopted for their control. Where indicated, special methods that have as their object the reduction of industrial disease hazards will be investigated.

The division of industrial hygiene will conduct special studies regarding illness in industries in cooperation with provincial departments of health. The division will disseminate to the provincial departments of health and to industrial concerns scientific knowledge in respect of industrial diseases gleaned from world-wide research and experience gained in the matter of reducing health hazards in industry.

An endeavour will be made by the division to encourage industrial establishments to adopt a uniform morbidity code, which has been developed by this department in order that sound comparisons may be made with regard to illnesses in various industries. The provinces will be encouraged to take a greater interest in industrial diseases and, where possible, to establish divisions of industrial hygiene. Efforts will be directed towards the development of uniform legislation in regard to sanitation of industrial establishments with the object of obtaining equitable and uniform standards for the provinces and control of industrial diseases throughout the country.

It is believed that as a result of the activities of this division measures may be adopted to reduce working hazards in industry generally.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is not all that now taken care of by the provincial departments of health, and if so, is not this department merely supplementing or assisting in some way in the work the provincial departments are doing?

Mr. POWER: The work is really collecting information and making studies which will be of some use to the provinces. At the present time three provincial governments have branches of industrial hygiene—Ontario, Quebec, and, I think, Manitoba; but it is possible, by research work and studies of what is going on in other countries, that we may be able to obtain for the provinces information which will be very helpful to them. It is not intended that we should go into industrial establishments and undertake their supervision, by putting into effect factory laws or regulations for the prevention of accidents. It is rather the study of occupational diseases, which workmen's compensation boards have had neither the time nor the opportunity to study. I must say that Ontario has made more progress perhaps than any country in the world with respect to silicosis, and it will not need our assistance in that regard.

Mr. MacNICOL: The discoveries made by the department are simply passed over to provincial departments?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous grants—Grant to the Canadian Welfare Council, $8,100.

Mr. McCANN: I notice that the grant to the Canadian Welfare Council this year is $8,100, but the grant last year and for a number of years was in the neighbourhood of $13,100. I should like to pay tribute to the council as one of the voluntary agencies in this country which has been carrying on public health work. The fact that the grant is not as large as it has been in previous years is not because the organization is doing any less work or less important work, but there has been established in the department a public health branch which will take up maternal and child welfare and thus relieve the council of some of the work it has been doing for the public health of the dominion. I believe that in paying tribute to the Canadian Welfare Council I voice the sentiments of those who are engaged in health work in Canada and of those hon. members who are interested in public health activities. I agree that the right policy is being followed by the reestablishment within the department of a division of maternal and child welfare which will gradually take on the work that was formerly done by the department and which for the last number of years has been done by the Canadian Welfare Council.

Item agreed to.

L'Association Canadienne Francaise des Aveugles, $4,050.

Mr. McCANN: What particular work is being done by this institution?

Mr. POWER: This is the French-Canadian association for the blind.

Mr. McCANN: Is the institution indicated in item No. 249 an association for the blind?

Mr. POWER: It also is an institution for the blind.

Item agreed to.

Montreal Association for the Blind, $4,050.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Why the grant for the Canadian National Institute for the blind and the special grant to the Montreal association? Is not the Montreal association connected with the other?

Mr. POWER: They do not seem to work together. They have never done so. I do not know which has seniority, but they both do very good work in their separate fields. I believe the Montreal institution for the blind was founded by a Mr. Layton—probably the hon. member remembers him—who has been prominent in working for the blind and particularly in pressing for pensions for them. For some reason or another this association has never coordinated its efforts with those of the Canadian National Institute.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Is there any overlapping?

Mr. POWER: I do not think so. I think the Montreal institution looks after the English speaking blind in the province of Quebec, and there is some kind of agreement that, so to speak, one will keep out of the other's territory. I do not believe there is anybody outside the province of Quebec who belongs to the Montreal institution.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask how many people are treated or helped?

Mr. POWER: I do not know that I can give the hon. member the number. I can tell him what work is being done. This association operates a school for the blind and an industrial home in Montreal. Its activities include a boarding school for the blind and partly blind boys and girls, a workshop for blind men, a workshop for blind women, a boarding home for blind men, a residence for blind women. It has a lending library of over 2,000 volumes in braille, a home teaching and social service department; glasses are distributed free to needy patients; there are pensions and money allowances, food, coal and clothing; and social activities which are attended by blind people from all over the city. We have given the same amount each year since 1927.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has no information with regard to the numbers?

Mr. POWER: No; I have not it here.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian Red Cross Society, $10,000.

Mr. PELLETIER: This grant to the Canadian Red Cross society is $10,000. I notice that the grant to the Victorian Order of Nurses is $13,100. Why should the grant to the Red Cross be less than the other?

Mr. POWER: I really do not know, but the answer I am given is that the Red Cross society has been in existence the shorter time, and probably it has not got accustomed to getting any more. I will say this, that the Canadian Red Cross society would like to get a larger grant, and I should like to give it to them if I could.

Mr. PELLETIER: I believe that is just as frank a statement as I have ever heard a minister make in this chamber. I notice that the Canadian Red Cross society is putting on an intensive campaign for funds, and its work is well known to everybody. I think the minister should very favourably consider any application on its part for an increased grant. It is doing wonderful work, and its organization is probably as large as that of the Victorian Order of Nurses. If the Red Cross society applies to the minister for an increased grant, I would appeal to him to give it favourable consideration.

Mr. POWER: I make speeches in favour of their having more funds, but I am very sorry to say that I have not been able to get them any more. They are entitled to it; I have no objection to saying that.

Mr. McCANN: How many outpost hospitals have the Canadian Red Cross?

Mr. POWER: Roughly, forty. I have not here all the details of the work of the Canadian Red Cross, but they do excellent work in their outpost hospitals and in many other places.

Item agreed to.

Grant to the Canadian Dental Hygiene Council, $2,500.

Mr. BENNETT: Why this increase?

Mr. POWER: It is increased as a result of representations made in this committee last year that the $750 then granted was a ridiculous amount to vote. I agree.

Mr. HEAPS: What work does this organization perform?

Mr. POWER: It organizes surveys and puts on campaigns in the different provinces to look into the care of the teeth mostly of school children, but of adults also. It goes from province to province and carries on the work generally throughout the year, but every year or so it takes on a campaign in one particular province, in the way of dental health education, at the request of the provincial department. It does exceedingly good work.

Item agreed to.

Pensions branch—Pensions and other benefits —Pensions payable to men on active service, Northwest rebellion, 1885, and general pensions, $20,000.

Mr. BENNETT: Some representations were made that some of those who participated in the rebellion of 1885 had been overlooked, and there was communication with the department. Have their difficulties been adjusted?

Mr. POWER: My only recollection is that certain veterans of 1885 made representations that they also should come under the War Veterans' Allowance Act. They probably thought this was a new form of pension, because it is evident that anyone who served in the rebellion of 1885 and is now indigent would come under old age pensions.

Mr. MacNEIL: Are the men who receive small pensions under this item entitled to unemployment assistance if they require it?

Mr. POWER: I do not think we have ever had an application. I think we could arrange it, because the regulations with respect to unemployment assistance are pretty wide and it might be possible to look after them.

Item agreed to.

Services to veterans and dependents—Care of patients, $3,045,287.

Mr. MacNEIL: When we were discussing hospitalization last night I was going to ask the minister some questions regarding orthopaedic appliances. Are all those who suffer from pre-enlistment disabilities aggravated by war service entitled to such appliances?

Mr. POWER: Any appliance that has to be used or worn on account of a disability incurred or aggravated on service is given to the applicant.

Mr. MacNEIL: Quite a number of men have complained, and on investigation of some of these cases there was a doubt as to their eligibility for assistance in this form. I have on my file a copy of a letter from the director of medical services indicating that appliances could not be given to men whose disability was aggravated during service.

Mr. POWER: If the hon. member will inform me of one case, I shall have it adjusted. Certain abuses of that kind have crept in, and if he will show me a service aggravated case where a man needs an appliance he will get it. He will get it whether the case is aggravated or incurred on service.

Mr. MacNEIL: A number of men who formerly, for quite a number of years, received special boots from the department have had the issue of boots discontinued, and I am at a loss to understand why they should be denied that assistance. If a man has any actual disability which through the years has necessitated his wearing a special boot, and if he is not now provided with such boots and is unable out of his own resources to secure them—because they are fairly expensive, being specially made—the very loss of that form of assistance constituted a disability. I have in mind special cases of men who are making an effort to remain at work, and they are carrying on with difficulty because they no longer receive these special boots.

Mr. POWER: I understand that in some cases orthopaedic boots would not always be needed. A man's condition may have so improved by the use of a boot that he would not need a second or third or fourth supply as the case may be. I understand that in 1932 or 1933 there was a review of all these cases, and there was perhaps a certain shrinkage in the number of those receiving boots. I would point out in the first place that there is no departmental policy that an aggravated case is not entitled to boots. In the second place, any of the cases brought to my attention where the free issue has been curtailed owing to the tightening up of rules and regulations in 1932 and 1933 have been attended to, and some way has been found of having the issue made; that is, when the consultant says that boots are necessary. I would not give a man a pair simply because he said he wanted them, because they cost $13 or $14.

Mr. MacNEIL: With reference to men awarded pensions under section 21 of the Pension Act, for compassionate or meritorious reasons, are they entitled to medical treatment as class one patients, on the same basis as other pensioners?

Mr. POWER: No. Under the regulations it would appear that treatment is given only for disability incurred or aggravated on service. Section 21 provides for the man who cannot get a pension under the pension law. Up to the present I do not know of any case where treatment has been refused, but the regulations have never covered it. Again, however, I say to my hon. friend that if he knows of a real case where a man who had service in France needs treatment and has not the means of obtaining it, I shall see that he gets it.

Mr. MacNEIL: On a former occasion the minister gave the names of the staff employed in the pension department at Shaughnessy military hospital, Vancouver. Can he give the staff so far as medical treatment is concerned? I am referring to the medical staff, and also the number of consultations.

Mr. POWER: The names are: G. C. Derby, the district administrator; Dr. J. H. Jones, Dr. F. H. Mahood, Dr. J. S. McCallum; Dr. J. Brown; Dr. A. B. Schinbein; Dr. W. A. Wilson; Dr. C. S. McKee; Dr. G. Draeseke; Dr. W. W. Kennedy; Dr. H. H. McIntosh; Dr. A. A. McRae.

Mr. MacNEIL: Are any of those on the permanent staff permitted to engage in private medical practice?

Mr. POWER: All the part-time officers are on the permanent staff, in that they are permanent civil employees; but if my hon. friend means full-time employees, to my knowledge they do not carry on private practice.

Mr. McCANN: I assume that this amount of $3,045,287 is for the medical care of the returned men. I really am at a loss to understand why, twenty years after the close of the war, it should cost so much for the hospitalization of those who were engaged in the war and who need the care of medical men. Everybody understands that it is costly to maintain hospitals, and I give way to no man in my desire to see the returned men well looked after. We are maintaining eight hospitals in Canada for returned soldiers. An investigation ought to be made with a view to establishing homes for these men. They could be as well looked after in returned soldiers' homes as in up to date hospitals with permanent, full-time officials and a full staff. If we are at the present time spending over $3,000,000 a year, twenty years after the close of the war, we have made no progress in that time in the method of caring for these men. We could well afford to have homes for them where they would be assured of all the comforts they would have if they were in good circumstances in their own homes. These institutions could be supervised by competent officials, and these returned men could have visiting, part-time medical services, and be just as well off at perhaps half the cost. I would recommend that the government give serious consideration to revamping the whole system of taking care of returned men.

Mr. POWER: I have heard this same proposal made by others, including one association of returned men, who said they thought that by this time we should give up our departmental hospitals and place all soldier patients in civilian hospitals. But I do not believe the cost would be much if any less than under the present system. I put the suggestion to other returned soldier associations; I discussed it informally with the members of an association at a convention, and I was told it would not be popular with the soldiers to place ex-soldier patients in civilian hospitals. In the hospitals under the department they have the comradeship of their own friends; they have returned soldier doctors, nurses and orderlies; they are treated as a class by themselves. I do not believe it would please the ex-soldiers if I were to adopt the suggestion of my hon. friend, although I admit it was strongly pressed upon me by a returned soldiers' organization, so he is by no means alone in his view.

Mr. MacNEIL: Is it not true that practically all those now in the hospitals are there solely for the purpose of actual remedial treatment, as determined by departmental medical authorities, pursuant to P.C. 91?

Mr. POWER: Not quite all. Not half.

Mr. MacNEIL: Is there any substantial number in the hospitals merely because they require domiciliary care?

Mr. POWER: The number is 378, to be exact, and my hon. friend must remember that we have a number of mental cases.

Mr. GREEN: How many veterans, both in-patients and out-patients, received treatment in these departmental hospitals during the last fiscal year?

Mr. POWER: The number runs from 2,300 to 2,500 every day in the year. I do not think it went over 2,500. It goes up in the winter and down in the summer.

Mr. GREEN: The figures given in the report of the department, page 27, show 2,212 in-patients and eight out-patients, or a total of 2,220, as at March 31, 1937. Was there a smaller or a larger number on March 31, 1938?

Mr. POWER: I think there is a difference of about 100. In 1937 there were 2,220; in 1938, 2,105. These consist of the three major classifications: general treatment, tubercular, and mental. I have not the total here; we have to add those in other hospitals, provincial mental hospitals. In British Columbia I believe there are about ninety-eight; they would not be included in this figure. And there are some in Saskatchewan.

Mr. GREEN: In view of the fact that the numbers are decreasing, yet we still have the hospitals and the staffs, would it not be possible to extend hospital treatment to men who are not pensioners, although they have gunshot wounds, and also to recipients of the war veterans' allowance?

Mr. POWER: A large number of these are being taken care of now.

Mr. GREEN: But some provision could be made for them.

Mr. POWER: I do not want to make any regulations which would restrict any chance I may have of doing this. I prefer to carry on as we have been doing and allow as many as possible in under the present regulations. I think we are doing that fairly successfully.

Mr. GREEN: Has the minister the figures for the last few years showing the number of admissions and cost of care of patients and of hospital allowances?

Mr. POWER: It is in the annual report every year, but not yet available for this year.

Mr. McCANN: How do your costs compare with civil institutions?

Mr. POWER: They are lower than the average for civilian institutions. It does not cost us any more to look after our own patients than it would to put them in civilian hospitals.

Mr. McCANN: Is it not a fact that there are many in these hospitals who are not under treatment but who are there more for the purpose of having a home?

Mr. POWER: Yes; 378 of them.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous grants—Grant to the Association des Medecins de Langue Francaise de L'Amerique du Nord, $5,000.

Mr. PELLETIER: For how many years has this grant been made to this association?

Mr. POWER: They do not meet every year; it is about every second year.

Mr. PELLETIER: How many times has a grant been given to this association?

Mr. POWER: I know they had it about 1934 and 1936. I cannot say whether they had it in 1932.

Mr. PELLETIER: What is the purpose of this grant, and what services are these people performing?

Mr. POWER: This is a conference of the French speaking doctors of North America. As a matter of fact, this year they are using the money, as I think they did on a former occasion, to bring distinguished medical men from the old country.

Mr. BENNETT: From Paris.

Mr. POWER: They brought someone from Paris on the last occasion, and I know it is their intention to do so this year. Whether it is one doctor or more, I cannot say. My hon. friend probably knows that a large proportion of the French-Canadian doctors and French speaking doctors throughout America received their education in Paris, and in order to keep in touch with medical knowledge over there and apply it in their work they found it essential to form an association of their own and to bring people over who would keep them in touch with the latest developments.

Mr. PELLETIER: At what place is the convention to be held this year?

Mr. POWER: It was in Ottawa the last time; this year I think it is to be in Montreal, but I cannot say for certain.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENTS WITH RESPECT TO RECKLESS DRIVING, SALTING MINES AND MINE SAMPLES, ETC.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 137, to amend the criminal code.

He said: This bill purposes to make fifty-five or fifty-six amendments to the criminal code, twenty of which relate to procedure. I shall not try to give the particulars of all the amendments but the most important relate to reckless driving, salting mines and mine samples, common gaming houses, et cetera.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—OFFICIAL PRIVATE CARS

Mr. LAPOINTE (Matapedia-Matane):

1. What number of Canadian National railways system officials have a private car at their disposal?

2. How many officials on the Atlantic and central regions had repairs made to their cars during the last twelve months?

3. How many of such officials keep a chef by the year for their private car?

4. What number of Atlantic and central regions employees receiving a salary of $100 or less per month were laid off on account of curtailment during the last twelve months?

Mr. HOWE:

1. Executive, operating, traffic, and other officers of the Canadian National Railways are provided with a business car when their duties in travelling over the territory under their jurisdiction require such use.

2. Two business cars were given general shopping on the Atlantic region and six on the central region. In addition, three cars on the Atlantic region and eight on the central region were sent to the shops for light attention.

3. A chef is placed in charge of a business car when under movement.

4. No special record is kept of laid-off employees. To give an accurate answer to this question would involve an analysis of twenty-four semi-monthly payrolls over a period of twelve months covering between forty and forty-five thousand employees, which could only be done at the cost of considerable time and labour.

NEW YORK STATE LEGISLATION RESPECTING NURSES

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Has the attention of the government been called to the Todd Bill which requires all nurses in New York state to be United States citizens?

2. Will an inquiry be made by the government into the case of several Canadian nurses living in Fort Erie but working in the Buffalo hospitals for many years who are to come under the Todd Bill and who have been summarily dismissed from Buffalo hospitals, and also in other points in New York state?

3. Will any action be taken by the government through the Department of External Affairs to endeavour to adjust the matter for these Canadians?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East):

1. No.

2. Yes.

3. The question of action to be taken will receive consideration.

MOTION FOR PAPERS

KOOTENAY FLATS RECLAMATION

Mr. STEVENS:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, reports, orders in council and other documents, dated from April 1, 1930, to date, in connection with the reclamation of the Kootenay flats at or near Kootenay Landing, British Columbia.

MUNICIPAL IMPROVEMENTS

AUTHORIZATION OF LOANS TO ASSIST MUNICIPALITIES IN MAKING SELF-LIQUIDATING IMPROVEMENTS

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to bring in a measure to authorize the Minister of Finance with the approval of the governor in council to enter into agreements with urban or rural municipalities to make loans not exceeding in the aggregate $30,000,000 to enable such municipalities to pay the whole or part of the cost of constructing or making extensions or improvements to or renewals of a municipal waterworks system, municipal gas plant, municipal electric light system or any other self-liquidating municipal project, provided that the province in which the municipality is situated approves the application for the loan and the project to be financed with the proceeds of the loan, and agrees to guarantee the repayment by the municipality of the principal of and interest on any such loan; and to provide that the interest on any such loans shall be two per centum per annum payable half yearly, and that any loan shall be amortized by semi-annual payments sufficient to pay off the full amount of the loan during a period not longer than the estimated useful life of the project; also to provide for the employment and payment of a temporary staff necessary for the administration of this measure.

He said: His Excellency, the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—Mr. CAHAN

IMPERIAL CONFERENCE OF 1926—DESCRIPTION AS SEPARATIST MOVEMENT FROM BRITISH COMMONWEALTH

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) took exception to a statement I had made on the evening of May 24, and said that statement was entirely a misapprehension of the attitude that he had taken when discussing the imperial conference resolutions of 1926. I accept entirely what the opinion of my hon. friend is with regard to those resolutions. I may say that the extracts from Hansard which he made were certainly not those upon which I had based the comment I offered. However, as I do not think it is pleasant to be considered as misrepresenting any hon. colleague, I may say there are other extracts which are not quite as complimentary. I shall quote only one of them.

When the imperial conference of 1926 was discussed in the house in 1927 my hon. friend said, at page 1736 of Hansard:

He now seeks—

He being the Prime Minister:

He now seeks by the tacit approval of this house, not having the courage to present a report of his own work for its approval and confirmation, to proceed to disrupt every one of these constitutional ties which bind and connect us with Great Britain and Ireland and with the dominions beyond the seas. And while he has endorsed and proposes to carry out a policy of disruption and destruction, he has not one single positive idea to present to this house as to the formation of any new convention or as to the new alignments and political connections which are absolutely necessary if the position of Canada is to be maintained in this world.

I only say that at least I must be excused for having made the comment I did, and I am quite pleased that it does not represent what is the attitude of my hon. friend.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to enter into a prolonged discussion with the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Lapointe), but if I follow him, he is reading from the 1927 debates, is he not?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: He is reading from the 1927 debates, when another phase entirely of the question was under discussion. Oh, I know of the 1927 debates and recollect them very clearly. In 1927 the discussion arose upon addresses which had been delivered by right hon. gentlemen opposite. One was by the right hon. the Prime Minister of that day in Toronto; that was under discussion. I was then discussing another phase of the question entirely, particularly that the right hon. the Prime Minister had pledged himself publicly to submit the imperial conference resolutions for the approval of the house, and had afterwards refused to do so. He himself and the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Lapointe) had given interpretations which I did not think were clearly expressed in the resolutions, as I have stated. My own opinion with regard to those resolutions is expressed and their real implications are contained in addresses which I gave in December, 1926, and also in May, 1928, from which I read to this house, and I am quite prepared to submit what I said on all three occasions to the judgment of the right hon. gentleman and to the house.

I did not state that the right hon. gentleman had deceived the house. I said that his comments were due to a misapprehension on his part of the real tenor of those discussions. Certainly I adhere to everything I then said, so far as my memory is clear as to what I did say.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—and it is a question of facts now,—I have the right to say what the facts were.

My hon. friend said that I did not refer to the debates of 1927, but if he will look at Hansard of May 24, containing the remarks to which he took exception, he will see that it was exactly the debates of 1927 that I was referring to. I said:

> Those who were in this parliament in 1927 will remember that my right hon. leader and I were strongly criticized, not perhaps by my right hon. friend—

Meaning the leader of the opposition.

> —for I do not believe he took part in that debate; he was absent from the house—but by the then leader, the Hon. Mr. Guthrie, and the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

And it was in that debate that my hon. friend uttered the words which I have just mentioned—"disruption and destruction." That had nothing to do with the fact that the report had not been submitted to parliament for approval. My hon. friend was emphatic; he has a good memory and must remember having used the words "silly," "foolish," "half-baked," and such. I learned some words during that debate.

Mr. CAHAN: I am grateful to the right hon. gentleman for referring to the debates, and I commend those debates to hon. gentlemen sitting opposite as well as to those sitting on my side of the house. I think a reading of them will not bear out the interpretation which the right hon. gentleman, through a misapprehension, gave the other evening, or the misapprehension he has expressed to-day.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): All's well that ends well.

GRAIN HANDLING AT QUEBEC

RATES FOR HANDLING FROM LAKE VESSELS THROUGH ELEVATOR AND FREE STORAGE—QUESTION OF TABLING DOCUMENTS REFERRED TO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the last sitting of the house the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) asked a question having to do with the handling of grain at the government elevator at Quebec, and referred to the questions placed on the order paper by himself and the answers that had been furnished to those questions. Those questions were fully and accurately answered. The matter was again discussed on the estimates when the vote for the national harbours board was up, and I think a full explanation and a complete statement of the facts was given at that time.

The first question, and apparently the one that is disturbing my hon. friend, was this:

> 1. Has the Minister of Transport recently concluded a special agreement with the Louis Dreyfus and Company or any of its allied or subsidiary companies for the handling of grain through the government elevator at Quebec?

The answer to that is not only "no," as given, but I can go further and say that the government never at any time considered concluding a special agreement with Louis Dreyfus and Company.

The situation that did arise, as I explained on the estimates, was that at the opening or before the opening of navigation, the government discovered that a differential rate had been applied to Quebec as against Montreal by lake carriers. The reason Louis Dreyfus and Company came into the scene at all was that earlier in the season they had notified the harbours board that they intended to make considerable use of the Quebec elevator this year. In 1933 or 1934, I am not sure which, a similar situation arose, in that the lake carriers applied a higher rate from the head of the lakes to Quebec than from the head of the lakes to Montreal. At that time shipments involved Canadian grain, and the board intervened by ruling that the lake carriers must remove the discrimination between the two ports.

In this season the situation differed somewhat in that the grain to be carried was United States grain, over the transportation of which the board of grain commissioners does not exercise jurisdiction. Therefore the question arose as to how this discrimination could be removed. Some discussion took place between a representative of Louis Dreyfus and Company and a member of the harbours board suggesting compensating for the carrier differential by a reduction in elevator rates. It was of course thoroughly understood by both parties that if any reduction of rates was made it would apply to any user of the Quebec elevator. In the course of that discussion I understand that a letter was written by a member of the harbours board to a representative of Louis Dreyfus and Company, asking whether the statement contained in the letter was a correct understanding of a previous conversation. After this letter was written the differential in lake rates was removed, by negotiation with the shipping lines, so that any necessity for a special tariff or a special commutation of elevator tariffs was removed. As I told the house in committee, a special commutation was made, and is to be found at page 2979 of the Canada Gazette. That commutation represents the only difference in the charges on grain through government elevators as between Montreal and Quebec.

The effect of that commutation is that in the period from May 18, 1938, to August 30, 1938, there will be no storage accrued against grain moving in full cargoes from the Quebec elevator. The tariff was published in the Canada Gazette, based on the commutation which, as I say, was passed by order in council. I will now file that tariff and will make the further remark that all grain handled at Quebec or to be handled at Quebec up to August 30 of this year will move on the rates set out in this tariff.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I must respectfully request however that the letter to which the minister has now referred as having passed between a member of the harbours board and the Dreyfus Company be tabled. It was that request I made the other day; the minister now having himself referred to it makes it doubly important that this be done. I now request again that the letter be tabled for the information of hon. members.

Mr. HOWE: I may say the letter referred to was marked private and confidential, and was sent by a member of the harbours board—it was not sent officially by the harbours board—to a representative of the Dreyfus Company, and was addressed to him personally. The letter had no effect, as the negotiations to which it referred were not consummated. When we consider that the national harbours board is engaged in a competitive business I think we can all agree it is not in the public interest to table letters passing between a member of the harbours board and any firm or individual referring to negotiations which are not consummated. Therefore I must decline to table the letter referred to by the hon. member for Kootenay East.

Mr. STEVENS: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, and again on the orders of the day: in the first place, marking as private and confidential a document dealing with the conduct of public business is not sufficient excuse for not producing it in the house. In the second place, the document having been referred to in the observations of the minister himself, the rules of the house provide that it is competent for a member to request that it be tabled. In the third place, the question of the confidential character of a communication certainly cannot be extended to a document passing between the national harbours board and a firm doing business and, according to the minister's own statement, having under way negotiations for a variation in the fees or tolls fixed by a statutory body, namely the board of grain commissioners. I must again submit that the letter ought to be—indeed under the circumstances should be—tabled.

Mr. HOWE: I would simply say that a question was asked by the hon. member about this particular letter, and was answered by myself. The only reference I made to the letter was in reply to a question which bore directly on the letter.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the issue is far larger than a controversy between the Minister of Transport (Mr. Howe) and an hon. member of the house. It is a matter of extraordinary importance. I do not think any words I could use would be language too strong to employ in dealing with the matter.

A member of a public tribunal created by this parliament has seen fit to write a letter to a member of a firm which does business with this country. There cannot be anything personal about that, if it touches public business. He can write about visiting the city, or he can write about social engagements, but the minute he touches upon public business he has no privacy. He cannot protect himself by putting "personal" on the letter, and the rights of the House of Commons so much transcend that that I trust the minister will not arrive at a hasty conclusion with respect to it.

I wonder if he realizes just what is involved. I had occasion to traverse this matter with a great deal of care some years ago when I was leader of the opposition, as I still am. I had difficulty in dealing with a matter in which certain correspondence was marked "private." The minister properly took the view that it had to be introduced and was on the file. Then the further question arose as to whether or not we had a right to have laid on the table of the house a letter to which he referred. The Speaker had to rule in accordance with the rules of the house, that when a minister refers to a public document in the course of his observations he must table that document, because he cannot deal with it when other members of the house are not permitted to see it. He cannot place his construction upon a document which I might not know about, and which I cannot see.

Mr. POWER: That was the Simcoe post office?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. The Minister of Pensions and National Health is quite right. It was in connection with the Post Office Department. I do not recall the exact letter, but it was under that department—whether it was the Simcoe office or not, I cannot say. However I believe the hon. member was interested in the matter at that time, and probably will have a very good memory with respect to it.

The reason for the rule is obvious. Let us look at it for a moment. A member of the government, having access to public papers, sees fit to refer to those papers, and to place upon the contents of the document the construction which suits him, when presenting his case to the house.

Mr. DUNNING: That is not the case in this instance.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is the case in this instance. The hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) asked for some information which he did not get. He thereupon asked for definite information with respect to a letter. The minister admits that he has the letter but he says, "This is a personal letter written by a member of the board to somebody who is a member of Dreyfus and Company".

Mr. HOWE: May I correct my right hon. friend?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. HOWE: I may say that I have never seen the letter. I have never seen it and I do not know whether it is in existence; it is certainly not in any file of the department.

Mr. BENNETT: That makes the minister's case so extraordinary as to cause me to wonder how he can possibly stand in his place and make the statements he has.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): It is quite true.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, it is quite true—what I say. Anyone would wonder how a minister of the crown could stand in his place and make that observation, how any minister could stand up and say, "I don't know what is in the letter; I do not know whether it exists; I have never seen it". That is monstrous. Surely the minister does not mean that. Think what that means. He is a responsible minister of the crown and this is a responsible government, not a dictatorship. The minister says, "I don't know what is in the letter but I have been talking about it. I don't know whether it exists or not, but I have been talking about it. I have never seen it, but I have been talking about it." Can anyone imagine a responsible minister doing that? I say, the minister must have an entirely erroneous impression of what the duties of a minister of the crown are. Does he realize what his responsibilities are? There are those sitting beside him who can tell him.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): To what item is my right hon. friend speaking?

Mr. BENNETT: I am speaking to a question of high privilege—a privilege of the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Privilege?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, privilege of the House of Commons. If I am to find myself unable to deal with public matters because I cannot get access to papers to which a minister may refer, then the House of Commons becomes nothing more or less than a rubber stamp.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The rules provide the way to order the production of papers.

Mr. BENNETT: The rules do more than that. The rules provide that when a minister of the crown refers to a public document he must table it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It was the hon. member for East Kootenay who did.

Mr. BENNETT: Just imagine anyone seeking to cover himself up with a statement such as that. Can anyone imagine it? The hon member for East Kootenay asked a question about a document, as he had a right to do, having ascertained that there was such a document, and a minister of the crown now says, quite calmly, "I don't know whether there is such a document."

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): The rule is as follows:

It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the table of the house, if it can be done without injury to the public interest. The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

Mr. BENNETT: Why, of course not. Now we have the more beautiful sight of a minister of the crown asserting that there can be anything like a private communication between a member of the harbours board and Dreyfus and Company with respect to public business. Imagine that!

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We have the more beautiful sight of the leader of the opposition agreeing with the member for East Kootenay.

Mr. BENNETT: That, Mr. Speaker, only illustrates the calibre of the ministry. Are there on the treasury benches men who are unable to understand that public business may transcend personal differences? Are there upon the treasury benches men who cannot understand that the public interest is paramount? I occupy a position in which I am placed by statute, and one of my duties is to do exactly what I am doing, to try to safeguard the liberties of parliament from encroachment by the government of the day. That is my duty. That is one of the difficulties of the position which I occupy, and I will discharge that duty whether it be on behalf of a member of the opposition or of any other party when there is tyrannical exercise of power on the part of the government by reason of a great majority, enabling the administration to destroy the liberties of this parliament, which have been secured in the manner we all know. When that happens it is my unfortunate duty to protest against such an encroachment upon the liberties of members of the house, and I propose to do it so long as I am here.

What is more, there is not a thoughtful member of this house, who, if he will take the time to consider it, will not realize what is meant by carrying into effect the suggestion of the Minister of Transport. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, where it ends, what the result of it is. Let the Minister of Justice read the rule which I intended to refer to and which was read by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Mackenzie).

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have others.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, there are others. I am familiar with them, because I have traversed them all. They are all on the record of Hansard in connection with the post office case. In the previous case in connection with the post office the Speaker had ruled that the documents should be brought down, and they were brought down, and they resulted in bringing a very unpleasant and unhappy picture before the House of Commons in connection with patronage.

I submit that before any hasty action is taken with respect to this matter the government should look very carefully into the authorities. They should look up those authorities before, with their majority, arriving at any such conclusion as has been suggested. You, Mr. Speaker, should not be too ready to agree to the suggestion made by the government that the documents in question should not be laid upon the table; for I am satisfied that they would be laid upon the table in any representative institution under the British flag, when it is remembered that, in the first place, we are dealing with a communication written by a member of a public body with respect to public business, addressed to a great firm of wheat dealers, and dealing with a matter of public concern. That is the first point. The second is that it has been referred to by a minister of the crown although he now says he has never seen it. I suggest that the sooner he sees it and tables it the better for the country, because any reference made to a document of that kind entitles every member to have an opportunity to see it. The minister cannot be at once the judge and the advocate. He cannot advocate a certain attitude of mind and then assert himself to be the judge whether it is in the public interest or not. The Prime Minister might, peradventure do that, but the minister cannot.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): The rule to compel the production of papers is very clear indeed, as are all the comments under it. Standing order 51 provides:

Notices of motion for the production of papers which the member asking for the same intends to move without discussion, shall be marked by him with an asterisk and shall be placed by the clerk on the order paper above "Notices of Motions" under the heading "Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers." All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it shall be transferred by the clerk to the order of Notices of Motions.

First, if my hon. friend from East Kootenay wishes the production of any letter or papers it must not be done by discussing a question of privilege and giving to my right hon. friend himself (Mr. Bennett) an opportunity to make remarks which he would not have the right to do on Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, because if a debate ensued that motion would have to be transferred to the Notices of Motions and to await its opportunity to be discussed.

Mr. BENNETT: The question of privilege I was discussing was not that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will come to the other question of privilege, but first I will quote the rules. Paragraph 433 of Beauchesne says:

Papers are laid before the house in pursuance of

(1) Provisions of an act of parliament;

That is not this case.

(2) An order of the house;

That would be the only way, I suggest, to have the production of that paper, but it has not been done.

(3) An address to the crown.

That was not done in this case.

(4) The command of the crown;
(5) Standing orders of the house.

These are the five cases in which papers have to be laid on the table when requested.

Mr. BENNETT: This involves a question of rates, and therefore would have to be laid before the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Well, this is not the time to discuss that. If my hon. friend wants the papers produced he has to ask for them in the regular way, not simply by asking a question about a certain letter which he alleges to have been sent and which the Minister of Transport says he has never seen. My hon. friend resorts to the other rule, that if a minister of the crown makes use of a document he has to table that document. But when did the Minister of Transport make use of that document? The hon. member for Kootenay East alleges a document, speaks about it; the Minister of Transport says he has not seen it. I cannot see how my right hon. friend can work himself into a state of fury because this paper has not been tabled, especially when it is not even in the possession of the Minister of Transport. Time and again, not only when a question is asked but on motions for production of papers, when they relate to papers in the hands of a commission, such as the harbours board, the answer is that the house might carry the motion, but that of course it would be forwarded to the proper authorities in order to ascertain whether the document in question can be produced and filed. We may be guilty of many reprehensible things, but if I never have anything more on my conscience as a public man than this alleged letter, addressed by someone to a member of the harbours board, which the Minister of Transport has never seen—

Mr. BENNETT: He talks about it, though.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am afraid the next Conservative convention will not find material there to build a platform on.

Mr. STEVENS: The matter cannot be disposed of in that way—

Mr. SPEAKER: What is the hon. member speaking on now?

Mr. STEVENS: I am speaking to a question of privilege and rights, in view of the attitude of the government.

On May 6 I submitted in the proper way certain questions. On May 18 these questions were passed as an order for return. I do not know why that should have been done, but it was asked by the government and the house concurred. The return simply answered the word "no" to five of the questions. One of those questions had to do with a special agreement with Louis Dreyfus and Company regarding the handling of grain. I ask the house and the government to bear in mind that that question was asked on May 6. Today the minister gave a lengthy verbal answer to that question. He referred to the letter as having been written by a member of the national harbours board to the Dreyfus company; but, he said, as nothing happened as a result of that letter, there is no object in tabling it. Then he added, "I will now table an order in council amending the grain charges." I notice that this order is effective May 21, and was amended by P.C. 1115 dated May 18, a considerable time after the question I asked the minister, and fully a month after the letter was written by the member of the harbours board to Mr. Kaiser of the Dreyfus company.

My submission is this: Knowing that these documents do exist, knowing that these negotiations were carried on, I have a right, and this house has a right, to know what the negotiations were. The mere fact that subsequent to their being brought to the attention of the house the matter was changed by this order in council is not a suitable response to my request and the right of parliament to see those documents. The minister himself admitted to-day that the document existed, although later he said he had not personally seen it. But he knows the letter exists and that it was written. I add now that it was written by Mr. Roberts of the harbours board to Mr. Kaiser. All I am asking is that that letter with the confirmation attached thereto of the outline of an agreement should be tabled in order that we, the members of this house, may properly discuss the subject matter of it, which is a matter of very great importance and involves not only a discussion of lake rates, as the minister said, but also questions affecting the rates in that elevator, first as they apply to the Dreyfus company, second as they apply to the public generally; and furthermore whether or not there was an invasion of the jurisdiction of the board of grain commissioners. These are all important questions of grave public interest, and I submit that there is no reason whatever which can properly be offered why this document should not be laid on the table of the house. I again assert my right to the document, the right of parliament to see it, in order that when the estimates come up again we may properly and intelligently discuss the very grave questions involved in this whole matter.

The minister does not reply. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have made a request, and I do not think that mere silence is an answer. This affects the right of a member and of all hon. members.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Why does not my hon. friend make a motion in the ordinary form, as all hon. members do?

Mr. STEVENS: I started by following that course. I say to the government that this is not the end of this question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Let the hon. member make a new motion if it is necessary, as provided by the standing order, and then it will be considered.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The hon. member has to accept the answer given to the question.

PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

STATEMENT OF MINISTER IN EXPLANATION OF DELAY IN FILLING POSITION IN PUBLICITY DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. G. POWER (Minister of Pensions and National Health): On Friday, May 27, during the course of the discussion relating to the publicity division of the Department of Pensions and National Health, I stated that there had been a long delay in making the appointment of chief of this division, and left the impression that the dilatory procedure of the civil service commission was wholly responsible.

Examination of the file and closer study of all the pertinent facts in connection with this appointment clearly indicate that I did an injustice to the commission, which I hasten to correct.

On May 28, 1937, the civil service commission was requisitioned by the department to set up a position of Chief, Division of Publicity and Health Education, but shortly afterwards the department decided to change the title of the position to that of Director of Publicity. The educational qualifications were changed and the salary range modified. On October 28, 1937, the department asked the commission to advertise the position. Applications were called for from the whole of Canada, the competition to close on December 11, 1937. The appointment was actually made on May 23, 1938. It is evident that the department, and therefore the minister, must shoulder at least an equal portion of the blame with the civil service commission.

NATURAL RESOURCES

CONFIRMATION OF CERTAIN AGREEMENTS BETWEEN DOMINION GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCES OF MANITOBA, SASKATCHEWAN AND ALBERTA

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. 106, to amend the Manitoba Natural Resources Act, the Alberta Natural Resources Acts and the Saskatchewan Natural Resources Acts.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that I proposed to make a few observations with respect to this bill on the third reading. The bill involves two questions. One deals with a purely local matter affecting the oil lands in the province of Alberta, but the other is far more important. The other amendment contemplates this parliament handing over to the provincial authorities the waters within the various provinces.

This is not a new question. In 1930, when additional agreements were made between the provinces and the dominion to turn over the natural resources to the provinces, I directed attention to the fact that the language was not broad enough to turn over the waters under or on the lands, and it will be remembered that when the provinces were created in 1905 parliament was very careful to retain the rights of this dominion under The Northwest Irrigation Act. I need hardly point out that the Alberta and Saskatchewan Acts were alike in that regard, and it was provided by those statutes that the waters dealt with by the irrigation act passed by this parliament should continue to be dealt with by the parliament of Canada, notwithstanding the fact that we had created the new provinces. Section 21 of the Alberta Act, which is similar in terms to the Saskatchewan Act, reads as follows:

> All crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto, and the interest of the crown in the waters within the province under The Northwest Irrigation Act, 1898, shall continue to be vested in the crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada, subject to the provisions of any act of the parliament of Canada with respect to road allowances and roads or trails in force immediately before the coming into force of this act, which shall apply to the said province with the substitution therein of the said province for the Northwest Territories.

Similar language is employed in the Saskatchewan Act. It will be observed, therefore, that a clear distinction is made between crown lands, mines, minerals and royalties, and waters. The reason that water in the west stands in a peculiar position is that in 1898, as will be remembered, the parliament of Canada saw fit to enact the Northwest Irrigation Act, under which we declared that the waters in the west were the property of the crown and that when patents were issued for homesteads they should not convey to the patentee the water, which should remain the property of the crown. That is so even to this day, and the classification of the licences for the use of water provided for by that act still stands. You have a domestic user, a user for irrigation purposes and a user for commercial purposes. All that was the law when in 1905 the province of Alberta was created by this parliament, and section 21 of that act retained those rights.

In 1930 the government of the country decided to turn over to the provinces their mines, minerals and royalties, as indicated by the agreement between the Dominion of Canada and the province of Alberta on the one hand, and later the province of Saskatchewan and the province of Manitoba. Section 1 provides for the transfer of the public lands generally, but it makes no provision for the transfer of the water. That provision is made in these words:

> —the interest of the crown in all crown lands, mines, minerals (precious and base) and royalties derived therefrom within the province, and all sums due or payable for such lands, mines, minerals or royalties, shall, from and after the coming into force of this agreement and subject as therein otherwise provided, belong to the province, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any interest other than that of the crown in the same, and the said lands, mines, minerals and royalties shall be administered by the province for the purposes thereof, subject, until the legislature of the province otherwise provides, to the provisions of any act of the parliament of Canada relating to such administration—

That is what was turned over to the provinces under the agreements. When the matter came before the House of Commons the Solicitor General and I engaged in a short debate, and on April 29, 1930, we had some extended discussion. The Solicitor General finally said:

> It is possible that further legislation is necessary.

Whereupon I replied:

> That is the case I am endeavouring to make to the house at the moment, and if the Solicitor General says that, he has quite answered my objection.

Then I dealt with the matter at some considerable length, pointing out what were the provisions having regard to the transfer of crown lands and mines and royalties under the terms of the agreement, and to the limitations that had been imposed upon the transfer of water by the irrigation act. That agreement, of course, was an amendment to the constitution of the provinces; because originally, under section 21 to which I have referred, these crown lands remained the property of the crown in the right of the dominion. It will be recalled that it was asserted by some of our friends that there was a right on the part of this parliament to continue to deal with the matter, but I pointed out then, as I do now, that while under section 3 of the British North America Act of 1871 parliament was given power to create new provinces, it was specifically provided that once the power was exercised we were functus officio. Section 6 of that act reads as follows:

> Except as provided by the third section of this act—

And that is the section which gave us the power to create the provinces.

—it shall not be competent for the parliament of Canada to alter the provisions of the last-mentioned act of the said parliament in so far as it relates to the province of Manitoba, or of any other act hereafter establishing new provinces in the said dominion, subject always to the right of the legislature of the province of Manitoba to alter from time to time the provisions of any law respecting the qualification of electors and members of the legislative assembly, and to make laws respecting elections in the said province.

Therefore when we created the province of Alberta and gave it a constitution we were not competent to amend that constitution; and when in 1930 we amended that constitution by providing that the mines, minerals and royalties that theretofore had been the property of the crown in the right of the dominion should be vested in the crown in the right of the province, that amendment had to be ratified by the imperial parliament. It will be found in chapter 26 of the statutes of Westminster for 1929-30 that this agreement was ratified.

My contention was that if we proposed to deal with the question of water, about which there have been grave differences of opinion—because it was felt that we had the machinery to maintain a uniform policy—the transfer of the waters was a matter that required much more than ordinary or casual consideration. So to-day the waters are being administered by the dominion, not by the provinces; the rehabilitation act in the province of Saskatchewan was predicated upon that assumption. During the period that we were responsible for administration, representations were made with respect to an amendment that might be made, but we never agreed upon the amendment. Now the minister proposes in this bill, for which third reading is asked, to vest these waters in the provinces and divest the dominion of its power. If I am right in my suggestion to the right hon. Minister of Justice it follows that this can be done only by having an act passed by the parliament at Westminster confirming that statute.

It was contended by some of our friends that this was unnecessary, and this was the reason they gave: In the agreement of 1930 they found these words:

24. The foregoing provisions of this agreement may be varied by agreement confirmed by concurrent statutes of the parliament of Canada and the legislature of the province.

It has been pointed out in some quarters that that is broad enough to enable this action to be taken, but I think the Solicitor General thought differently in 1930. Obviously it is an amendment to the constitution and, as I pointed out in 1930, you cannot have the constitutions of the provinces or the dominion amended by concurrent legislation on the part of the dominion and the provinces. Therefore, on the third reading of the measure, I point out that in my opinion this is in effect legislation to accomplish that very purpose. If it is intended to transfer the administration of the waters of the western provinces from the dominion to the provinces and thereby amend their constitutional position, it would be essential to do so by the method followed in amending the constitution in 1930. I realize that effect can be given to section 24 of the agreement, but that section cannot possibly have the effect of constituting an amendment to the British North America Act, for the reason that in the list of cases to which reference has been made, the privy council pointed out that you cannot by treaty or agreement divest the provinces of their legislative power in order to confer authority upon the parliament of Canada.

Mr. DUNNING: This operates to confer more power on the provinces.

Mr. BENNETT: This operates to confer upon the provinces jurisdiction over waters which is now vested in the crown in the right of the dominion.

Mr. DUNNING: I raise that point merely because the privy council decision had to do with the reverse of that.

Mr. BENNETT: But the argument and the statute applied equally to both, that is, that the competent authority to amend the constitution of this country was the parliament at Westminster and not any arrangement or agreement that might be made by the legislatures of the provinces and the dominion. The constitution of the Dominion of Canada cannot be amended by agreement. Concurrent legislation enacted by the provinces and the dominion cannot possibly have the effect of creating an amendment to the British North America Act. The agreement provides that there may be amendments to the agreement, but that would be an amendment within the ambit of the agreement itself and not an amendment to confer new jurisdiction upon the provinces in the exercise of their powers over the waters to which I have referred.

Difference of opinion exists in many quarters as to whether it is advisable, having regard to the possibility of large irrigation works, to vest in the provincial authorities jurisdiction with respect to these matters, or to have them remain as part of a national policy. It is realized that only a national policy can deal with so large an issue as that of irrigation in these great western provinces which would involve expenditures on a vast scale.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, of course I am not in order, but with the consent of the house I shall proceed. These agreements have been negotiated by the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar) and the governments of the three western provinces which are interested. Until my right hon. friend raised the point, I did not know that there were any difficulties of the kind he has indicated. I have been told by the officers of the Department of Mines and Resources and the Department of Justice that it was the intention at all times to include waters in the phrase "crown lands, mines and minerals." In the minds of the officers of the departments there were no practical difficulties, but it was thought better to include waters. I have the greatest respect for the opinion of my right hon. friend, but I submit that the legislation of 1930 transferred all the natural resources to the provinces.

Mr. DUNNING: It was called the natural resources act.

Mr. BENNETT: It was an act to confirm and give effect to certain agreements entered into between the Dominion of Canada and the governments of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. I am reading from the British statute.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): This act is the Natural Resources Transfer (Amendment) Act, 1938.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the Canadian act?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes. The purpose was to make the provinces the owners of their natural resources. I think it may be fairly claimed, and it is the opinion of the officers of the Department of Justice, that the section my right hon. friend has mentioned, which was enacted by the Westminster parliament, to the effect that this agreement might be varied by an agreement confirmed by concurrent statutes of the parliament of Canada and the legislatures of the provinces, is sufficient to confer upon this parliament and upon the legislatures of the three western provinces the right to vary by concurrent legislation the agreement that affected the transfer in 1930. This is merely to remove a doubt. My right hon. friend knows more about western matters than I do, but I have been given to understand that it has always been considered that the waters were transferred along with the lands, mines and minerals.

Mr. DUNNING: They have been so administered in practice.

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Apart from this, I may say that the opinion of the officers of the Department of Justice is to the effect that we have authority to confirm this agreement and to make it clear that the waters are transferred to Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta as well as the lands and mines.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, if I have your indulgence I shall answer the question asked by the right hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), otherwise I cannot proceed. When the Alberta and Saskatchewan acts were being enacted I was solicitor for the irrigation branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. At the instance of the Canadian Pacific Company I came to this city and conferred with the then Minister of Justice for some time, submitting the reasons why, in the opinion of my client, the administration should continue in the crown in the right of the dominion, because the river did not flow wholly through the one province. There were many questions that had to do with the supply of water that originated in the national park which was under the jurisdiction of the dominion. The whole matter bristled with difficulties if it was to be in the hands of the provinces. That is the reason why these words appear in the constitutional acts known as the Saskatchewan Act and the Alberta Act:

> All crown lands, mines and minerals and royalties incident thereto, and the interest of the crown in the waters within the province under the Northwest Irrigation Act, 1898, shall continue to be vested in the crown and administered by the government of Canada for the purposes of Canada.

Bear in mind that we had followed a course that was wholly unusual, namely, we retained in the crown the title to the waters even although patents were granted otherwise. That is not a general thing. The patent did not carry title to the waters, any more than it carried title to the gold. It reserved the title to the water as though it were gold and a patent were being issued to a homesteader or a person who otherwise becomes entitled to a patent on his land. When the agreement was made it referred to mines, lands, minerals and royalties and did not mention the waters, which were vested in the crown by a special paragraph, and the administration continued by the federal authority just as it had prior to the agreement being made.

Mr. DUNNING: Since 1914?

Mr. BENNETT: That is, the large irrigation projects, licences and matters of that sort. When the Canadian Pacific turned its irrigation project over to the settlers, they came to an arrangement with the provincial authorities for that purpose.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): May I ask a question for information? Apart from the constitutional question whether we have a right to proceed in this way, does my right hon. friend see any practical objection to it?

Mr. BENNETT: Only this, that it was represented to me on many occasions that if we were to engage in a national irrigation policy in the west it would be undesirable that we should make an arrangement with the provinces for administering the waters as distinguished from the crown in the right of the dominion; that is, if we were hoping to have a national policy and for assistance to be given by the dominion government. It will be recalled that we have on more than one occasion given assistance to the Medicine Hat project, which was authorized under the Northwest Irrigation Act of 1898, and when the Canadian Pacific turned over its entire project to the settlers and took its loss, the question of expanding that system into a national system, and what was called the William Pearce scheme in connection with the Saskatchewan river, all involves the utilization of waters on a scale so vast that no province would be in a position fittingly to undertake the work. That is the only objection that has ever been made to me, I may say to the minister. Frankly I was of the opinion that if irrigation became essential in the western provinces it should be dealt with as a national undertaking rather than as a provincial one, so that the system that would be created in one province could be made to inure to the benefit of another.

Mr. DUNNING: Or to its detriment?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, quite so, to its detriment, by reason of one province selfishly exercising its powers and not permitting the advantages to go to another; and so a federal and national outlook on the matter was to be preferred. I am not expressing any opinion at all, but that was the view that was expressed by quite a number of people, as perhaps the Minister of Finance has heard, particularly from those who have been urging the Pearce scheme, as it has been presented during the last two years.

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance): There is no doubt in the mind of anyone who sat here in 1930 that what we thought we were doing then is what is being attempted now.

Mr. BENNETT: The Solicitor General was a little uncertain.

Mr. DUNNING: Certainly with regard to the negotiations between the three western provinces and the officers of the federal government, the intention was to transfer all the natural resources and thereby place all provinces in the same position with respect to the ownership of water and all the other resources. To take any other view now would be to start a controversy with the three provinces concerned which I doubt could possibly do any good, and certainly could be settled ultimately only in one way.

While, of course, I appreciate very fully the remarks of the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) with respect to irrigation difficulties, if a scheme so vast as some of those proposed were to be put into effect, on the other hand I was advised some time ago in connection with such schemes that the general powers of the dominion applying to navigable waters could be effectively used to prevent the stealing of a whole river by one province to the detriment of another.

Mr. BENNETT: The Bow river is not a navigable stream.

Mr. DUNNING: No. But the Saskatchewan river is technically a navigable stream.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. DUNNING: I am not competent to go into the legal aspects of it. I am not sure indeed that the Bow river might not legally be considered navigable.

Mr. BENNETT: Inquiries I have made would lead me to think otherwise.

Mr. DUNNING: My right hon. friend knows more about that than I do. But to reopen the question as to whether the waters of these provinces were in fact transferred by this parliament in 1930 would, I think, be very unfortunate and lead to no useful purpose. The people receiving them, and the dominion parliament in extending those rights in 1930, believed that the water was included, and since that time the province of Saskatchewan with respect to certain northern water powers has acted under the authority given by the agreements we are now discussing. I believe I am right in saying that it is since 1930 that certain action has been taken granting water rights on the Churchill, or at least an extension of rights existing there, to enable the development of that great electric power which is used at Flin-Flon, on the Manitoba-Saskatchewan border. Saskatchewan has acted in that respect under the agreement, and I have no doubt that instances could be found where others of the three western provinces have acted on the assumption that they could deal with the matter by virtue of the rights which for my part, as one of those vitally interested at the time, I certainly thought we were conferring in 1930.

Mr. BENNETT: The Solicitor General then thought not.

Mr. DUNNING: The recent representations made had to do entirely, from the standpoint of the three western provinces, with the removal of possible doubts. No one seemed to doubt what the intention was at the time it was done.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT, 1934

CONTROL OF SHIPMENT OF MUNITIONS BY SHIPS REGISTERED IN CANADA

The house resumed from Friday, February 11, consideration in committee of Bill No. 9, to amend the Canada Shipping Act, 1934—Mr. Howe—Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Prohibition of shipment of articles of war to countries in a state of war.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, I understand this section was discussed fully in committee, but was not passed on the former occasion in order to permit any further observations hon. members might wish to make.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NEW WESTMINSTER HARBOUR

EXTENSION OF BOUNDARIES AND REMUNERATION OF COMMISSIONERS OUT OF HARBOUR REVENUES

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of Bill No. 111, to amend the New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Act.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago when the resolution preceding the bill was before the house some statements were made by hon. members opposite respecting the administration of the port of New Westminster, and at this time I take the opportunity of answering. Before dealing with those statements however it might be well to place before hon. members some interesting data and information regarding the activities of the port, demonstrating how important the port of New Westminster has become in the past few years and the position it now occupies among the various ports of Canada.

Figures show that in exports abroad the port of New Westminster occupies fourth place in Canada, the first position going to the port of Montreal, the second to Vancouver and the third to Saint John. With regard to total exports, including inward and outward trade, the port of New Westminster occupies sixth position in Canada. In addition, New Westminster is the greatest of all lumber ports; figures show that the exports of lumber from this port are greater than those from any other port in Canada, even excelling the lumber exports from the port of Alberni. Last year 283,151,033 board feet of lumber were exported from New Westminster, as against an export of lumber and logs from the port of Alberni of about 260,000,000 board feet. The port of New Westminster is the port not only for New Westminster and the Fraser valley, but for all the interior of British Columbia as well. When one learns the extent of the exports from Trail and the apple exports from the Okanagan valley, one begins to realize just what the port means to the interior of British Columbia as well as to the coast districts. It might be interesting for hon. members to know that through the port of New Westminster there was exported from Trail last year 163,318 tons of lead, 80,007 tons of zinc, 47,008 tons of zinc concentrates, 34,557 tons of sulphate of ammonia, 10,512 tons of ammonium phosphates. Then from the various mines approximately 2,000,000 ounces of silver were shipped.

Export figures with respect to fruit which left the port show that there were 1,313,901 boxes of apples, 83,905 boxes of pears and 1,709 tons of canned salmon. One could mention other items, but I have attempted only to deal briefly with the export figures because there are other matters I wish particularly to mention at this time. I have in mind particularly questions asked by the hon. member for Mount Royal (Mr. Walsh).

However, looking over the export figures it is interesting to note that last year 7,774 tons of plywood, or 19,436,173 square feet, were exported through the port of New Westminster, as well as 42,831 bundles of broomhandles. It is almost astounding to note the number of doors exported from that port. We find there were 1,182,195 fir doors, manufactured at one of the lumber mills of the Fraser river, close to the city of New Westminster, shipped from the port. Included in the exports there were 1,295,243 cubic feet of box shooks, which were exported to many countries abroad.

It might be well at this time to point out that the port of New Westminster is unique in that it is the only port in Canada which has paid interest charges on loans from the dominion. It may be that those loans have not been extensive, although they amount to about a million dollars. The fact remains however that it is the only port which has paid its interest charges in full, and practically the only port which has expended public funds to the extent of about $500,000 for port development.

When the resolution was before the committee the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Stewart) asked how much the government had spent in dredging at New Westminster. While it is true the government has spent some money in dredging operations, the amount involved is almost nothing when compared with the expenditures in connection with the development of other ports. For instance, in the past seven years, $30,000,000 has been spent on St. Lawrence river ports, I do not believe a third of that amount has been spent in dredging of the Fraser river since confederation.

The hon. member for Mount Royal not only made statements but asked some questions which I believe should be answered now. At page 2747 of Hansard he is reported to have said:

> I do not know whether I quite agree with the principle involved, because to pay even a small salary for an appointment of this kind means that the position is liable to become somewhat political in its aspect, and the prey of office seekers. With each change of government some persons in New Westminster or the immediate vicinity will desire to replace these three commissioners, whereas if the commissioners were undertaking the task on a voluntary basis of service to their city you might get a higher type of person interested, and you would not be so likely to have a change, if the service had been satisfactory, with every change of government.

Mr. CAHAN: May I suggest to the hon. member that reference to a previous discussion of that kind, which has no relation to the bill before the house, is inopportune?

Mr. REID: Perhaps the hon. member has misunderstood the situation; the hon. member for Mount Royal was speaking to this very bill. The resolution preceding the bill was before the house, and he took that opportunity to make some observations. I believe I am quite in order when I simply reply to his remarks. I have quoted from the page in Hansard where the hon. member for Mount Royal is reported.

Mr. CAHAN: I suggest that that was the proper time to call attention to any irrelevant incidental remarks. It would be better if the hon. member's observations could be left to another time when the hon. member for Mount Royal could be in his seat. If that were done he would have the opportunity to deal with these matters of fact, which have no relation to the discussion of the bill now before us.

Mr. REID: I am sorry to have to differ from the hon. member, but I believe he is in error. The remarks I am making are most pertinent, because they bear directly on what was said by the hon. member for Mount Royal in a discussion of the resolution preceding this bill. Not only was he dealing with it but he asked me at the time for my views. There is no other occasion on which one could so well discuss the merits of this matter because the bill is now up for second reading. After that the only opportunity for discussing principles will be on the third reading of the bill. I am sorry that my hon. friend has taken exception, because up to now I have been very fair in my remarks. I regret the absence of the hon. member for Mount Royal and the hon. member for Leeds, but I can assure the house that I am not taking undue advantage of that fact because what I have to say is in no sense carping criticism.

The hon. member for Mount Royal said:

> I urge upon the minister and the committee the desirability of amending this measure in such a way that we might at least try out for a period of time a service of commissioners who would not undertake the work for the sake of the remuneration which might be in it. I should like to hear an expression of opinion from the hon. member for New Westminster, who knows the situation better than I do.

That statement, I suggest, fully answers the interruptions made just now by the hon. member. The port of New Westminster has been very fortunate in the past in its choice of commissioners, and those who have gone before deserve more than a mede of commendation for the work they did. In 1921 only some thirteen ships entered the port, whereas last year there were 450 deep sea ships, from every part of the world, coming into the port of New Westminster. The work has become so onerous in consequence that it now occupies almost the full time of the chairman and a great deal of the time of the harbour commissioners; and very often the commissioners are called in once or twice a day in connection with matters arising out of the affairs of the port. I have always objected to the way in which the former commissioners were paid; I am inclined to think that in the past they were paid rather surreptitiously. There was nothing in the act formerly to provide for reimbursing the commissioners for any expenses they incurred in connection with the business of the port. The past chairman of the board, putting in his whole time, was of the opinion that he at least should have some remuneration and therefore he was appointed port manager. I suggest that the former method of payment was an unsound one and it is now being remedied.

The manner of paying the chairman was, in my opinion, a mistake, and I might have taken greater exception to it when I first came to the house, but shortly after that time he fell sick and was unable to carry on, and I felt that it was unbecoming, especially in view of his past services, to raise any criticism as to the manner of payment. The consensus of opinion, I believe, is that they should be paid, and I am pleased that the minister is now amending the act to provide for their payment. To the hon. member for Mount Royal I would say that the administration of the port of New Westminster should be regarded as a model in judging all other ports in Canada; and my own opinion is that if the administration of the other ports had been as efficient as that of New Westminster it is doubtful whether those other ports would have come under a national harbours board. What was said by the hon. member for Mount Royal could be said with greater effect in Montreal, where I know the administration last year cost $268,648 as compared with total administration costs in New Westminster of only $14,000.

Mr. CAHAN: There is some difference in the extent and importance of the two ports the hon. member is comparing.

Mr. REID: Montreal, it is true, is the first on the trade list, but let us go down the list and take the port of Quebec. Let us compare that port with New Westminster from the standpoint of exports and imports. We find that the administration costs in the port of Quebec last year were $90,680 compared with the figure I have given for New Westminster. I will take any port the hon. member will suggest, because I have the data before me, and I am sure that New Westminster will be found to be the most favourable. It has one of the finest records in the dominion, if not the finest, so far as administration is concerned and, of course, from the standpoint of development as well. Someone asks about the tonnage of that port compared to Quebec. That is interesting. Through the port of Quebec last year there were exported 257,077 tons as compared with 868,026 tons through New Westminster; and yet the administrative costs in the port of Quebec were $90,000 odd whereas in New Westminster they were only a little over $14,000.

Mr. CAHAN: Compare the passenger services now.

Mr. HOWE: It is hardly fair to compare services of that kind, because in some ports a great many services which are rendered privately and paid for from revenue do not appear in the books of some other port. Even to compare two ports under the national harbours board as to cost of administration is apt to be misleading unless a careful analysis is made of the services performed.

Mr. REID: I was surprised that any hon. member, especially any member from Montreal, would object to paying the out-of-pocket expenses of the commissioners in New Westminster, having regard to the services they have done in the past and the services they are now rendering. In all kindness I now say to the hon. gentleman that he should preach in the city of Montreal the same gospel that he is trying to preach here in connection with this bill.

Mr. CAHAN: My hon. friend is perhaps misconstruing not only the purpose of the hon. member for Mount Royal but the actual effect of the words which he uttered. I reside in the city of Montreal and am pretty thoroughly acquainted with all its business and mercantile affairs, and I have never heard the slightest criticism of the port of New Westminster. I do not believe that it was intended in the previous debate to express any criticism of that port.

Mr. REID: I listened carefully to the debate and my opinion was asked regarding the payment of the commissioners, and I suggested that men administering the affairs of the port of New Westminster in such an efficient manner were worthy of some remuneration. It is far better, as under this bill, to pay them openly and aboveboard than, as in past years, to pay them surreptitiously, without many citizens knowing that they were being paid. I commend the change and I say that the administration of the port of New Westminster is an example that might well be followed by many of the larger and some of the minor ports of Canada.

The hon. member for Mount Royal mentioned something about the politics of the commissioners. Well, we have a splendid record there because at the present time two of the commissioners are Conservatives and the chairman is a Liberal. The men have been chosen generally without regard to politics and they should receive a great deal of commendation for the work that they have done; for they have laid a splendid foundation. I thought it was my duty, as representing that port, to rise in my place in order to remove any wrong impression that might have been left by the previous discussion.

Mr. H. J. BARBER (Fraser Valley): I wish to go on record as supporting this measure. I have been in close touch for a number of years with the port of New Westminster, and I realize its importance. I am sure that the record of management of that port should warrant recognition by legislation such as this. These men are certainly entitled to some remuneration. As to the other part of the bill, the extension of the area, I am not so well informed. I have received no objections, however, and I have no doubt that that is warranted. As I understand it, the other section that is being taken in does not come under the port of Vancouver. I suppose no mention is made of the question of port manager. Is it the intention of the government to provide for a port manager in addition to the officers of the commission?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Remuneration of commissioners.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): Do the New Westminster harbour commissioners and the North Arm harbour commissioners between them now cover the whole effluent of the Fraser river?

Mr. REID: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

PROVISION RESPECTING LEASES OF MINERALIZED AREAS AND ADVANCES TO ASSIST AGRICULTURE AND OTHER PURSUITS

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient, by amendment to the Indian Act, to authorize the governor in council to make regulations enabling the superintendent general to issue leases of land deemed to contain minerals and to grant in respect thereof the right to prospect for, mine and take away the same; and also to authorize advances of moneys from the consolidated revenue fund to assist Indians in carrying on agriculture and other pursuits, and to make provision for the repayment of such advances; the outstanding advances at any time not to exceed $350,000.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Mr. CRERAR: It might be of assistance to the committee if I give a word or two of explanation of the purpose of the bill which will follow this resolution. It will be noted that it deals with two matters. The first is the making of regulations relating to the disposal of minerals which may be found on Indian reserves. At present the act gives power to the governor in council to make regulations governing the disposal of what might be termed surface rights on the reserves; that is to say, regulations relating to the disposal of timber, hay and grazing leases. It should be said here that before any such disposal can be made the consent of the Indians or the Indian band interested has to be secured, but once the consent of the Indian band is secured then the administration falls within the framework of the regulations provided in the Indian Act. At the time the regulations were passed, or indeed at the time the provision was inserted in the Indian Act, it was not expected that developments of minerals or coal or of oil so far as Alberta is concerned would take place on Indian reserves, located as they were mostly in the northern part of the province. The opinion of the Justice department is that the power of the governor in council to make these regulations does not extend to the sub-surface rights. The proposal now is simply to give the governor in council power to do with the sub-surface rights what they already have the power to do with the surface rights. The consent of the Indians concerned will still have to be first had and secured.

The second point involved is really a new departure in Indian administration. It is the creation of what is popularly called a revolving fund. Under the proposed provisions the Minister of Finance will have authority to advance as specified in the bill sums of money up to a total of $350,000 for the purpose of making loans either to individual Indians or to Indian reserves, or in relation to other matters connected with Indian welfare work. As it stands at present the Indians are, and of course will remain even under this legislation, the wards of the government. At present parliament appropriates certain moneys year by year for Indian welfare work. But these votes of money are expended the same as any other vote, and consequently are looked upon more in the way of grants or gifts to the Indians who are the beneficiaries of aid given in welfare matters. One of the things that has impressed itself on my mind in the brief period I have had to do with Indian administration is the need to develop a spirit of self-reliance and independence in our Indian wards. My reading of the story of the relation between governments and Indians in Canada leads me to the conclusion that the expectation originally was, and indeed is still largely entertained, that the Indians will in course of time become absorbed into the ordinary citizenship of the country, and cease to be wards in the sense that they have been so considered in the past. I must confess that I think in the past our attitude has often not been conducive to the achievement of that very desirable end. Consequently this fund is created for the purpose of lending money either to individual Indians or to bands of Indians for productive purposes, or perhaps in certain cases to residential schools for the purpose of developing handicraft arts, with the understanding that these loans must be paid back into the fund to the credit of the Minister of Finance, or rather to the credit of the receiver general to be administered by the Minister of Finance.

As I said a moment ago, this is a new departure. Personally I think it is a wise move, and I have no hesitation in recommending it to the committee. Several years ago—indeed, not so many years ago, if my information is correct—the government of the United States adopted this policy. In the United States roughly speaking there is about twice the Indian population that we have in Canada. They provided, since they had the means to do so, a very much larger fund than we suggest here, but if this works out as I anticipate, and certainly as I hope it will, and it should become necessary later on to increase the amount in the fund, at that time parliament could give consideration to the question, and I think such consideration would be favourable.

May I give a few illustrations of how the fund may be used to assist in various ways. On a certain reserve an Indian may have been allotted a certain portion of land. He has not the means to buy stock or to obtain farm implements. Advances can be made under this fund, with the understanding that they must be repaid in whatever period of time is fixed. Again, we have reserves that are communal in their character. Another purpose for which this fund could be drawn upon would be to place cattle on a reserve, with the understanding that the amount of the loan creating the capital in the live stock would be repaid to the fund. Of course all these reserves are under supervision. Another illustration might be given in connection with work in residential schools. As I stated, I believe a year ago, in the discussion of the estimates, I think our system of Indian education left something to be desired. I am glad to note that within more recent years, particularly within the last few years, more emphasis has been placed upon the need of vocational training in these Indian schools. I have seen samples of Indian handicraft work produced at points remote from civilization, such as beaded work of various kinds and other similar articles, which would find a ready market in the development of the tourist trade of this country. My hope in this regard is that we may be able to go to the authorities of an Indian school and say, "If you wish to teach the girls in this school handicraft arts; if you wish to teach them weaving or leather working or any other art, we will be in a position to supply the necessary amount of money, by way of a loan, to purchase the materials with which this work may be carried on."

Generally speaking, that is the purpose of the resolution, and I certainly feel that it deserves the sympathetic interest and support of the committee.

Mr. CAHAN: I should like to ask the minister a few questions, for information. In regard to the gold, silver, iron, coal and other minerals which may be found in these lands mentioned in the resolution, is the title in the crown as represented by the province or in the crown as represented by the dominion? Speaking simply from memory, and from having read judicial decisions in which I had no personal interest, it seems to me that one decision particularly, relating to the province of Quebec, was to the effect that the revenue thus derived from the alienation, disposal or sale of Indian lands is a revenue in which the provincial government participates. This is what I am asking definitely, because my own memory is not quite clear: Will the revenue received through these leases of lands which are deemed to contain minerals, and from the granting in respect thereof of the right to prospect for, mine and take away the same, which is a conveyance of the property right in the minerals located in the lands subject to the lease, be a property right of the crown as represented by the province or of the crown as represented by the dominion?

Mr. CRERAR: In the province of Quebec there is a rather anomalous situation. Areas were set aside many years ago as Indian reserves, upon which the Indians were supposed to live. The title to those reserves was never clear, in the sense that it inured solely to the federal government in the event of the Indian band disappearing, for instance. A case was carried to the privy council, I think in connection with the disposal of some part of the Caughnawaga reserve near Montreal, if my memory serves me aright, and the decision was that when a portion of the reserve was sold the province was the beneficiary in the matter. That is as I recall the decision, though I speak subject to correction, because I have not my notes and it is some considerable time since this matter was before me. I think I can say that in all the other provinces, with the possible exception of some instances in British Columbia, the reserves were set aside wholly for the benefit of the Indians. The department has administered the resources of such reserves wholly for the benefit of the Indians, of course with their consent. That has been carried to the extent that certain of these reserves in western Canada have quite large sums of money to the credit of the band funds, which are wholly the property of the Indians. Again, for instance, in Ontario there may be a reserve upon which there is valuable pulpwood timber. If the Indians give their consent the department can dispose of that pulpwood, and the proceeds of the sale will be credited to the funds of the Indians on that particular reserve. Generally speaking, the situation is this: The Indians have the ownership of the surface rights, that is the timber, hay or grazing. The revenues received from these sources are placed to the credit of the Indians. As I have stated, in the province of Quebec we have never yet been able to get the question of ownership of the reserve satisfactorily answered.

Mr. CAHAN: I have a hazy recollection of reading a decision relating to Indian ownership of surface rights, which seems to bear out the distinction made by my hon. friend. I must confess my personal ignorance, but I do not recall that a decision has been given by a court of appeal in this country or by the privy council to the effect that the title to the gold, silver or coal in so-called Indian lands is vested in the crown in the right of the dominion or in the right of the province in which these lands may be located.

Mr. CRERAR: There may be a question so far as the province of Quebec is concerned; but I am quite sure that there is no question so far as the other provinces are concerned, with the possible exception of a few cases in British Columbia where the titles to the reserves have not yet been satisfactorily cleared up with the provincial government.

Mr. CAHAN: When we come to discuss the sections of the proposed bill in committee, will my hon. friend be prepared to give a clear statement by the legal officers of his department or of the Department of Justice with regard to this matter?

Mr. CRERAR: I shall do that.

Mr. CAHAN: I have some recollection of more or less serious disputes between one or more of the provinces and the dominion in relation to such matters. The bill to be founded upon this resolution will go further than the provisions of the Indian Act, in that it will enable the governor in council to grant an estate or title in or to mines of gold, silver, coal or iron separate and distinct from the surface rights to the land. That distinction is clearly made in some of the older provinces, and I think we should have a clear understanding of the legal position when the terms of the bill come before the committee.

The other point I wish to raise is in connection with the revenues that may be received. We would like to know whether these revenues are to be received by the dominion treasury. If so, will they then constitute a part of a general fund of which the $350,000 mentioned here will be a part? Will the advances mentioned here to the amount of $350,000 form a revolving fund together with or distinct from the proceeds from the grants of the gold, silver or other minerals? That is a matter which I think might well be considered. I am sure that so far as the members on this side of the house are concerned, any efforts that may be made to improve the condition of the Indian population in connection with their ordinary avocations or by educational or cultural methods must receive approval. It is within my memory that some of the most distinguished citizens of this country, men who have done much to advance the commercial, financial and other interests of this dominion, have been proud to admit their Indian origin and blood.

Mr. CRERAR: I shall make a note of the first point raised by my hon. friend and secure an opinion from the law officers of the Department of Justice.

Mr. CAHAN: I did not desire to raise any merely facetious question.

Mr. CRERAR: It is very important. As far as the disposal of the $350,000 fund is concerned, this will be by way of loans. We may charge the individual Indian or the school or the band interest on the advance made, but when the loan is repaid it will be paid to the receiver general for the account of the Minister of Finance for the fund. If through the operations of the individual Indian or the band of the school a profit is made from the grain grown or the live stock raised or handicrafts produced, that profit will go to the individual Indian or to the school or the band directly concerned. This is not intended to be a profit-making venture for the department or the government.

Mr. CAHAN: And it is not intended that this revolving fund, which is not to exceed $350,000, will be connected, directly or indirectly, with the proceeds from the alienation of lands or mineral rights provided for in the first part of the resolution?

Mr. CRERAR: Correct; there is no connection at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Chairman, there are several points that are not at all clear to me. It is curious that the question of authorizing the superintendent general to issue leases to lands in which minerals may be found should be linked up with the question of setting up a revolving fund to help Indians. The only possible reason I can see for this connection is that the department recognizes that because of mining operations certain Indians may be driven off their reservations and will have to be provided for otherwise. I should like to have some information on this point because I cannot understand why these two should be connected. It seems to me that each of these matters should be handled in a separate bill. It is a serious matter if this resolution implies that Indians may be deprived of the land which has been assigned to them in the past and from which they have obtained a livelihood.

Further, I should like the minister to tell us how the consent of the Indians is to be secured. Some of these Indians have tribal or communal organizations, and if I understand aright, under certain circumstances, a good deal of pressure has been placed upon these organizations. We ought to know just what safeguards are to be provided so that the Indians may not be led into buying a pig in a poke, as the old saying is.

Mr. CRERAR: Has my hon. friend, may I ask, knowledge of any instances where pressure was put upon the Indians to consent to the disposal of some of their property?

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am asking for information. I have heard rumours to that effect. I am not speaking of the minister's own administration, but am going back a good many years. I have lived in the west for over fifty years and know something of the earlier life of the Indians there, and charges of this kind have been made in the earlier days. I know nothing of more recent years. I should like then to know from the minister just what safeguards are going to be taken to prevent pressure from being put on the Indian bands and so that they will know what they are doing.

The third point that occurred to me is that a great many of our Canadian born farmers are finding it extremely difficult to make a living on their farms, and it is going to be very difficult indeed for Indians brought from the more remote districts to make a living on the farm in the regular way. I think it must be forty years since I saw Indians being taught agriculture in Brandon, where my home was at the time; I have seen them at other schools from time to time, and I know it is extremely difficult in one generation to train Indian boys and fit them for farm life. If this is to be done on any considerable scale, I think we must face the fact that it is going to be a very difficult thing to do. I know the minister is familiar with farming, but it seems to me there might be specialized types of farming to which the Indian might be much more adapted than the ordinary grain or cattle farming.

Again, this loan is to be taken out of a grant from the consolidated revenue fund, and it is to have no connection whatever, the minister tells us, with any revenue that might be derived from this mining property. I do not think that is as it should be. These Indians were granted the lands with the idea that they were going to make a living on them. The encroachments of civilization have made it almost impossible for the Indians to continue to make their livelihood in their old ways. Now there has come to our knowledge that under some of these lands there lie minerals of value, and I cannot but think the Indians ought to have some claim to these minerals. I do not mean to say that the Indians are fit, without a great deal of training, to carry on mining operations themselves, but I do think they have some claim on the minerals and certainly a much stronger claim than outside people who go in to prospect and make money out of the new finds. It seems to me that the minerals under these Indian lands should be regarded essentially as a trust. The minister tells us that when pulpwood is sold the proceeds are credited to the Indians, and, I assume, administered by the department. Why should not the same or a similar arrangement apply in the case of mineral resources?

Mr. CRERAR: It will. That is precisely what we are proposing to do.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Be credited to the Indians?

Mr. CRERAR: Let me give an illustration. Take an Indian reserve west of Calgary, on which the right is given to drill for oil to some person who is willing to take the chance of developing it. That right is given with the consent of the Indians; but any royalties or returns which accrue from that development which are considered fair and equitable by the department from the standpoint of its trusteeship to the Indians accrue and go to the credit of the Indians on that reserve, and they do not go anywhere else. There is not behind this legislation, if my hon. friend has that idea, as I am afraid he has, any dark scheme to take over the valuable resources of these reserves and give them to someone else. That is not the case at all, and in any event it would always be subject to review by parliament. But that is not the intention. The intention is to provide means by which the development can take place, and everything that comes out of that development by way of royalties or fees or financial returns in any way goes to the credit of the Indian band fund.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to know that such returns will go to their credit. Then why should not that fund so built up be used for whatever purposes are deemed desirable for rehabilitating the Indians?

Mr. CRERAR: That is quite true.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But as I understood the minister's answer to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, there is no connection between the two.

Mr. CRERAR: There is no connection whatever between these two points in the legislation. One is not dependent on the other in any sense; they are wholly independent. But take the illustration I gave a moment ago: Any monetary return from the development belongs wholly to the Indians on that particular reserve. We cannot take the revenues derived from that development of oil on a reserve west of Calgary and utilize them for the benefit of Indians on a reserve in Saskatchewan. As a matter of fact, when these moneys go into the band funds, they cannot be taken out of the band funds by the administration without the consent of the Indians. There are a great many reserves where there are no band funds at all, and consequently the revolving fund is intended to deal more particularly with the Indians on those reserves and their needs. As hon. members know, we have a substantial number of Indians engaged in agriculture to-day. On the Six Nations reserve, for instance, near Brantford, we find conditions almost entirely analogous to conditions you find off the reserve, but the Indians of that reserve are still wards of the government. As a matter of fact, there is reluctance on the part of some of them to accept the ordinary responsibilities of citizenship. Now there may be an Indian on this reserve whom we wish to help. We may have been giving him relief for four or five years, and with this revolving fund we are in a position to say to him, "If you will make an effort to establish yourself we will provide you by way of loan with live stock or machinery," or whatever it might be, with the understanding that the loan is to be repaid. It is not a gift. That is the whole purpose behind the conception of a revolving fund. It is simply to be able to use the money over and over again as it is repaid, without paying it into the consolidated revenue fund and having to come to parliament to get the right to use it again.

But I am interfering with my hon. friends speech.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I can go on again in a moment.

Mr. CRERAR: It is not proposed, of course, to take the Indians from the more northerly areas and endeavour to make farmers out of them. My hon. friend has some familiarity with the province of Alberta. He knows, for instance, that in southern Alberta there are several large Indian reservations. Those Indians have much live stock, such as cattle and horses, and in the main carry on grazing operations and the production of grain. They are not only grain growers but stock raisers as well. The same is true in Saskatchewan.

I can recall the facts with respect to one reserve in Manitoba, I believe it was in the northern part of the Selkirk constituency, to which point the Indians were moved a great many years ago. They surrendered their reserve north of Selkirk and moved to a new location. The new location offers admirable opportunities for mixed farming. Thousands of tons of hay can be taken off the reserve every year. But there is practically no live stock on it, with the result that a considerable bill of expense has been incurred in connection with relief payments in the last seven or eight years.

It is our intention, using that band as an illustration, to loan them money or provide them with live stock, under supervision. Out of the proceeds of the increase of that stock the loan would be repaid in perhaps four or five years. It is our aim to have them understand that it is part of their responsibility to look after themselves. There is one reserve in Ontario, a part of Ontario in which one finds excellent farming land, in connection with which three years ago the relief bill was around $15,000. Here the idea had grown among the Indians that since they were wards of the government, it was the duty of the government to look after them.

We are endeavouring to change all that. Last year on the reserve about which I have just spoken, enough vegetables were grown to carry them through the winter. We had to take out of ordinary appropriations moneys to build root houses, and the like, with the result that relief on that particular reserve has been cut to almost a third of what it was previously. We are endeavouring to get into the minds, not only of the Indians but of the people looking after the reserves, that within a year or two we want relief to become a thing of the past. The purpose behind the measure is to help achieve that end. That is why I said that I had no hesitation whatever in recommending the measure to the favourable consideration of the house.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I can only repeat that it is most unfortunate that these two distinct measures should be incorporated in one resolution.

Mr. CRERAR: No. If the hon. member will reserve his criticism in that respect until the bill which will follow the resolution is before the committee, I believe he will find that the matters are separate, and must be considered separately.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I should be permitted to express my opinion on the resolution, because the bill is not yet before us. My suggestion was that it was unfortunate they should be put together because I at least, as one member of the house, have not understood the proposals. I thought there must be some connection between the two.

I can understand the minister's statement that there are wide differences between Indians at Brantford, where for several generations they have enjoyed tutelage, and Indians in those far northern parts of Saskatchewan or British Columbia where they do not enjoy the same advantages. I wish to point out, however, that if revenues are to be derived from these lands, or the minerals contained in them, those revenues ought to be used for the benefit of the Indians. I would insist further that the charges made for the leases issued should be sufficiently great to protect the interests of the Indians. I believe it is true that the Indians have a claim on these lands. It will be difficult for us in the next generation or two to put the Indians on a par with the white people who have had the advantage of several generations of development along modern lines. For these reasons I urge we should not have to make contributions from the general fund to help the Indians when on a great many of these Indian lands there are resources sufficient to take care of the re-education of the Indians.

Mr. BRADETTE: By what standard will the department be guided in deciding that which is or is not a mineral area. I have in mind some difficulties which are being and have for some years been experienced by the province of Ontario. I have also in mind the fact that under the pretence of staking some mining claims, some people took over some of those closed lands. I have in mind the further fact that those lands were covered with valuable timber.

The minister and his department will readily realize the danger they may be in if they are not very careful in setting out a line of demarcation. I know his department has studied the matter from many angles; but I would point out that they would gain much by studying the experience of the authorities in Ontario responsible for the mines who, even at the present time, are having great difficulty. On these lands in certain reserves are found large quantities of pine and spruce, lands which appear very valuable to some big interests—and I use the term "big interests" open-mindedly. Those interests have taken over lands supposedly for purposes of mining, and have robbed them of their timber.

I do not know much about the situation in Quebec, although I do know something of the same kind has happened in the northern part of that province. I am familiar with the fact that it has happened several times in northern Ontario, when land which actually belonged to the crown was stripped of valuable timber belonging to the people. I believe the department is doing its utmost to advance the standing of the Indians. The fact remains, however, that in the last thirty years the opening up of northern Ontario has resulted in pushing back the Indians towards James bay and Hudson bay. They have practically all that field to themselves. In the James bay section there is the possibility of doing some farming. I know, however that the minister is fully aware of the possibilities in connection with fur farming. He knows what has happened in the last twenty-five years in connection with the development of silver foxes and, to a smaller degree, the production of fur bearing animals of lesser importance. Possibly in this category I might mention the weasel and the otter.

May I point to the minister that in the southern tip of James bay there are several islands which could be well adapted to fur farming. I know it is well known to hon. members in the committee that the majority of Indians living in that section of the country are not prosperous, for the reason I pointed out a few moments ago, namely that the white population has settled the lands and pushed back the Indians. They have been thrown back to the water fringe, and are being held there.

Perhaps the department has already done something; but if it has not, I would urge that the islands I have mentioned are well adapted to fur farming, and offer a wonderful opportunity for the Indians. Possibly some experiments could be conducted in order to ascertain whether or not fur farming could be carried on profitably at that point. In my opening observations I asked what yardstick would be used in deciding that which is or is not a mineral area.

Mr. CRERAR: Before a mine is discovered, prospecting has to be done. If someone obtains the right to prospect for minerals on an Indian reserve, he may find evidence of mineral deposits there. He then asks for the right to diamond drill it, or to sink a shaft, and, if he finds a mineral, to develop it. That is all provided for in the arrangements that are made with him before he starts operations at all. My hon. friend mentioned the matter of timber on the reserve which might be used for mining purposes. I cannot imagine anyone asking for the right to cut a few hundred thousand feet of timber on a reserve for mining purposes unless he had a use for the timber.

Mr. BRADETTE: I meant in the mining claims.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, the timber would be disposed of separately from the right to prospect. In any event this is all subject to the consent of the Indians.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: How is that consent obtained? What is the procedure?

Mr. CRERAR: The procedure is provided for in the Indian Act. It is by a meeting of the band called for the purpose. The matter is placed before them and they vote upon it in the regular way. The procedure by which the consent of the Indian is secured for the disposal of grazing leases or hay claims or pulpwood or timber is set out very clearly in the Indian Act and the regulations that deal with the matter under the provisions of the act. There have been no cases within my knowledge where there has been complaint regarding the disposition of these resources, though there may be instances of which I am not aware.

Mr. STEVENS: I fully appreciate the difficulty of passing regulations that will adequately control the situation as it has been up to the present, and that difficulty will be greatly extended in connection with the proposals of this resolution regarding mining and so on. One of the weaknesses—and I think it is a very grave one—of the present regulations is exactly that to which the minister has now referred. A band of Indians is called together by the leader and then, under the supervision or advice and general direction of the Indian agent, a vote is taken. I am not reflecting unduly on the Indian when I say that very few Indians in these bands, particularly in the more remote districts, are competent to determine what possible future merit there may be in the alleged mineral resources on their property. I think it is something that is entirely beyond their power of comprehension except in rare cases, and even in the more simple processes such as a lease for grazing purposes, and so on, the Indian is very often singularly improvident in his decisions. He is by nature a person who likes to see something by way of money coming in to the band and is prone to surrender almost any right for some immediate and visible gain; and therefore, frankly, this proposal rather disturbs me. There is no doubt that there must be definite and serious government supervision, and by that I do not mean the ordinary supervision under the Indian Act as it exists at present. I mean that the government must act in the capacity of guardian, exercising that power and right in an extremely careful way.

Mr. CRERAR: That will be done.

Mr. STEVENS: I understand that the question has already been asked of the minister, whether he as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs claims on behalf of the Indians the proprietary right to minerals on Indian reserves?

Mr. CRERAR: I asked for a legal opinion from the officers of the crown.

Mr. STEVENS: That is a vital point. Before any decision is made to deal with or lease or handle these mineral rights in any way, the government ought to settle that point definitely. I have been under the impression that the mineral rights on Indian reserves were inherent in the land itself. That is not so in crown lands; in most provinces the mineral rights are separate and distinct from the surface rights. In the case of most Indian reserves, however, I understand that the mineral rights—and oil is included—are inherent in the land.

Mr. CRERAR: That is right.

Mr. STEVENS: That point ought to be made very clear, because if after the passage of this measure the courts decided that the mineral rights, once they were disposed of, were in the province, then the Indian would be without any recompense for the surrender of these rights. That is a most important point and one that should be determined. As regards the other point which the minister has already dealt with in part, namely, the method of dealing with these leases, I am not satisfied that these valuable mineral rights, which are daily becoming more and more important, should be surrendered or the lease authorized under the present procedure. I am not in any sense reflecting upon the minister as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs or upon his deputy or upon his staff, because generally speaking the Indian department has been carefully and conscientiously administered. But we are considering an estate in relation to which the government is executor or trustee, and it must be administered with all the care which is recognized as belonging to an executor or a trustee position. It strikes me that before this bill is passed the government ought to survey the present method of surrender, and possibly they may find it desirable to clarify or stiffen up the process which hitherto has been followed in connection with these surrenders. I confess that from my own knowledge I am of the opinion that the procedure is altogether too loose. Generally speaking the matter is more or less trivial, only a few hundred dollars being involved. But when you come to this sort of thing, the present method is not, in my judgment, adequate for the protection of Indian rights. So I would urge that the minister be prepared, when the bill comes down, to give definite assurances to the house of sufficient and adequate safeguarding of the rights of the Indians in these matters.

I also feel that we should not issue leases under the proposed act in the same way as we might issue leases or rights on ordinary crown lands, say in the Northwest Territories. In other words, we should not treat mineral activities on an Indian reserve in the same way that we treat such activities on crown lands. There should be a definite royalty system adopted which would be of permanent benefit to the Indians. That is not something which can be arrived at hurriedly without very careful thought. I am not prepared at the moment to offer any suggestions as to the level at which such royalties should be fixed. But they should be adequate and perpetual royalties where valuable mineral deposits are developed, bringing permanent revenue to the Indian band affected. In the southwestern United States there have been some remarkable fortunes realized by Indians through the development of oil reserves on their lands. Something similar might very well develop in some of the northern sections of our country, or indeed in the older provinces where minerals are now being discovered in connection with Indian lands. The point is that the return to the Indians ought to be safeguarded with just as great care as if we were administering an estate in the ordinary sense as trustees or executors.

Mr. TAYLOR (Nanaimo): In view of what has just been said, and bearing in mind that all sub-surface resources are wasting, what has the minister or the government in mind about the justice that should be meted out to the Indians as these resources are taken from the property?

Mr. CRERAR: If I may deal first with the observations of the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Stevens) I do not think there is any question that the Indians have a right not only to what is on the surface of Indian reserves but to what is under the surface as well, in all the provinces of Canada with the possible exception of Quebec. I think the same thing holds true in Quebec; but there is this feature there, that if a reserve is surrendered it goes back to the province; it does not remain in the control of the federal authority.

Mr. STEVENS: Of course the same thing is claimed for British Columbia, in the famous reversionary rights claim.

Mr. NEILL: Does that apply to the reserves in the former railway belt in British Columbia?

Mr. CRERAR: I cannot say as to that at the moment. The hon. member for Kootenay East also referred to the matter of surrender. The government as well as the Indians have to be a party to the disposal of any property on the reserves. If the Indians vote to dispose of certain hay or pulpwood, or, in this case of certain minerals, their consent alone is not sufficient; the consent of the Indian department is also required. That is where the principle of trusteeship comes in. There may have been in the past errors of judgment in the administration of some of these matters relating to Indian reserves; but on the whole, as far as my knowledge goes, there has been a desire throughout successive administrations to recognize the principle of trusteeship. While at times perhaps what might be called poor bargains were made, this was an error in judgment, not a calculated thing. The only way in which any return can be secured for the sub-surface rights to minerals that exist in these reserves is by providing some machinery to deal with it, and I cannot suggest anything better than what is contained in the provisions of the Indian Act relating to the surface assets, which has stood the test of time. We may say, "We will have nothing to do with it; we will not permit prospecting for oil or minerals; we will leave them dormant in the bowels of the earth." But that does not do any good to the Indians who own the reserve. The problem is to find an intelligent method of providing for development, which will adequately protect the interests of the Indians. I would say that is certainly the aim of the present proposals. This simplifies the procedure to some extent. To the disposal of minerals it applies the same provisions which now apply to the disposal of the surface assets I mentioned, such as timber or hay.

Mr. STEVENS: The purpose of this legislation is to enable the governor in council to make regulations empowering the superintendent general to issue leases of land deemed to contain minerals. The point I am trying to emphasize is that it seems to be implied in the resolution that all that will be done is that an application will be made to lease a large area for the purpose of prospecting for minerals, and, to use the language of the resolution, "to mine and take away the same." If a lease is given, it might be at a certain annual rental. But before any minerals are actually proven to exist certain work must be done, and a lease that would be given before such work was undertaken would probably be of a kind that would not protect the interests of the Indians in case a very valuable property should be developed. So I emphasize the desirability of adding to the terms of the lease the principle of royalty. I can easily visualize some large corporation or group securing a lease and getting a surrender from the Indians, who might think, "Well, there is nothing much there anyway," and the lease might be given on easy terms. Subsequently a Sullivan mine or some other very valuable property is found. The Indians have tied themselves up by a lease, without the royalty feature apparently being contemplated. My suggestion is that, coupled with the power to lease should be a concurrent obligation to safeguard the rights of the Indians by provision for payment of a royalty in case minerals are found to exist.

Mr. STIRLING: The point has now been raised which all the way through has struck me as a curious one. It appears to me that the cart is before the horse in the first part of this resolution. I should have thought that some sort of prospecting would have been done before a lease would be considered, because until prospecting has been done I do not see how either the Indians themselves or possible lessees can be expected to know what areas they want to lease. Would the minister tell the committee what is the origin of this resolution? Are there in some parts of Canada reserves on which minerals are thought to exist and concerning which applications have been made to the government to ascertain how they can be developed? It appears to me it is a matter that should be given the gravest consideration by the government, because such implications are involved. I see in this a small edition of what happened in South Africa in the nineties. Great Britain was the suzerain of the Transvaal at that time, and suddenly the government of the Transvaal found on its hands a particularly nasty mess, because gold in rich deposits had been discovered in a certain part of that country. For aught we know, somewhere in Canada to-day, in proximity to existing mining belts, in certain of the reserves now held by the Indians and in trust by the dominion government, there may exist reefs of that richness. Because of that possibility it appears to me the government should give this matter very close consideration indeed before setting its hand to a method of dealing with it.

Mr. NEILL: I notice the resolution says this is to be done by amendment to the Indian Act. I am not dealing with this particular resolution for the moment, but am hanging what I have to say on those words. I should like to suggest to the minister that possibly next year—there would not be time this year—he might consider re-enacting the whole Indian Act. It badly needs it. There is more and more contact between the white man and the Indian now in connection with such matters as have been mentioned this afternoon, and more and more need for a modern act. My connection with the administration of the act ceased in 1911, twenty-seven years ago, and at that time it was an obsolete act. To the best of my knowledge it has not been altered to any extent since. Whenever any minister, deputy minister or official took the notion he slammed an amendment into the act regardless of its context or its relation to the other parts of the act. When I was administering the act and somebody was charged before me, if he had a lawyer who proved that the section under which he was charged was wrong or inappropriate I could simply flip over the page and find another section entirely contradictory under which proceedings could be taken.

When the act was drawn up originally I imagine there was no British Columbia, or in any case that the question of British Columbia Indians was not under consideration. Apparently the act was framed having in mind only the conditions on the prairies, and some of the clauses in the act to-day are in direct conflict with some of the provincial laws of British Columbia. Offhand it is rather difficult to say which takes precedence, and this makes trouble for all hands.

So I would suggest to the minister that before another session he might consider carefully whether it would not be advisable to appoint some authority, some lawyer, a small commission or something like that, thoroughly to re-enact the Indian Act from beginning to end.

Mr. CRERAR: As a matter of fact, some consideration has been given the very point raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. In its present form I think the act is open to at least some of the criticism he has just directed against it, and we have been giving some consideration to the question of revamping or redrafting the whole act to make it one coherent piece of legislation so that it will be free from inconsistencies, which it holds to-day. I am glad to have the observations of my hon. friend in connection with that matter.

Mr. STIRLING: Will the minister say whether some insistent incident has arisen which has brought forth this legislation?

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. CRERAR: No, not in relation to the amendments proposed here, or the one to which my hon. friend particularly referred in regard to mineral rights.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Crerar thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 138, to amend the Indian Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

CLAIMS AGAINST THE CROWN ARISING OUT OF NEGLIGENCE OF OFFICERS OR SERVANTS OF THE CROWN

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 109, to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it remains to me to congratulate the right hon. gentleman upon his action in proposing a change, after due reflection, in the terms of the Exchequer Court Act. This amendment was advocated strongly by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett) and myself during a long debate in May, 1936, which, at least, eliminated any confusion that was in the minds of hon. members on either side of the house, and in which we finally arrived at a concrete suggestion, that an amendment to the effect of that now brought in should be favourably considered. Section 19 of the act existing reads:

> The exchequer court shall also have exclusive original jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:
> (c) Every claim against the crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment upon any public work.

It is now proposed to eliminate the restriction contained in the words "upon any public work." This bill does not quite cover all the cases of tort. If I remember rightly, it was suggested in the debate to which I referred that the amendment should also cover cases of nuisance; but, with respect to negligence, I think this amendment is all that could be desired at the present time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Exclusive original jurisdiction.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): As the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Cahan) has said, this amendment was advocated more particularly by himself and the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett). I must say that on various occasions the courts have made a similar suggestion. Chief Justice Duff was pretty emphatic in the Dubois case about the need of eliminating these words and giving more protection to those who suffered injury while working for the government. The words "upon any public work" have been the cause of many denials of claims which otherwise seemed to be fair.

Mr. CAHAN: And have been the subject of several apparently conflicting decisions.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Interpretations.

Mr. BENNETT: And have brought about the dismissal of many actions.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is no doubt that this amendment will increase the number of claims by working men who are injured while employed by the government.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD

AMENDMENT WITH RESPECT TO RIGHT OF ACTION AGAINST THE BOARD

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of Bill No. 108, to amend the National Harbours Board Act.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (St. Lawrence-St. George): Mr. Speaker, to a certain extent this bill must be considered as ancillary to Bill No. 109, which has just received its third reading. When the National Harbours Board Act was up for discussion about two years ago I moved the following amendment:

That section 37 of the bill be amended by adding the following subsections:

(3) That the board shall become and be liable to be sued in tort, and that in the case of any such suit in tort, the same procedure shall apply as that which regulates the conduct of similar cases between subjects, including such matters as discovery, the receiving and paying of costs by the board, and the like.

In discussing that amendment and suggesting the postponement of its further consideration, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) said as reported at page 3111 of Hansard of May 26, 1936:

Of course, I am going to vote against my hon. friend's amendment, though with some diffidence, because as I have said I believe that the method is an antiquated one and should be changed, but it should be changed all along the line and not only with respect to a particular part of the public property of Canada. I may say on behalf of my department and, I believe, of the government that before next session we shall prepare a bill which will cover not only the harbours but all public property. We shall try to meet the wishes of my hon. friend, and we believe it would be better to enact general legislation doing away with the petition of right, and doing so with respect to all claims for torts and injuries against the crown in future.

The proposed amendment was lost because of the protest of the right hon. Minister of Justice. At various meetings of the bar association of Canada committees have been appointed to consider the suggestion then made by the Minister of Justice, and from time to time in the most courteous manner possible for me I have asked in the house when the proposed measure would be introduced. This year I was promised that it would be introduced before the close of the present session. I must confess that this amendment carries out, practically to the full extent, the proposition which I first made, but it does not cover all cases of tort.

The amendment provides that any claim against the board may be proceeded with in respect of cases "arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the board while acting within the scope of his employment." That is going a long way, and upon that the minister is to be congratulated. It does not go so far as to meet the views which have been presented to the public at several annual meetings of the bar association by its committee, but large bodies move slowly and great minds always take considerable time for reflection before action.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is the way to achieve real progress.

Mr. CAHAN: I am grateful that we have achieved very considerable progress in the two bills which the right hon. gentleman has introduced. In the discussion on the clauses there are one or two matters to which I should like to draw attention, but I am certainly in favour of the bill so far as it goes, and I only regret that it does not meet fully the promises, or, shall I say, the suggestions made by the right hon. minister two years ago.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

On section 1—Right of action against board.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Chairman, I must tell my hon. friend that my intention had been to have a similar bill apply to the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Corporation because it is another agency of the government that is carrying on what is really a public service; but there is a case actually before the courts which has reached the privy council, and a decision will be given, I suppose, in a short time.

Mr. BENNETT: Has it been argued yet?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Not yet, but leave to appeal has been granted.

Mr BENNETT: It probably will not be heard until December.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Maybe, but meanwhile the court of final resort in the province of Quebec has decided that the corporation can be sued.

Mr. BENNETT: They must have read Hansard.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Possibly they have read the remarks of my right hon. friend last year and have been enlightened, as I have been myself.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I had in mind.

Mr. CAHAN: They refused to follow the advice of the Department of Justice on which the minister acted two years ago.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I would not go as far as that. The Department of Justice, of course, had to represent the corporation there and argue on its behalf. However, when the final decision is given, if there is necessity to have a bill like this—and this is more than a suggestion—I shall see to it that one is introduced.

So far as doing away altogether with petitions of right is concerned, I do not promise that. I did express what my personal view was at the time, but it was in an unexpected debate. My hon. friend had moved his amendment, and I spoke without having communicated with the various departments of the government. I promised that I would do this, and that is what I have done. I think the same difficulty presents itself as presented itself in Great Britain, and which has prevented the enactment of the recommendations of the special committee which sat from 1921 to 1927 and recommended that very thing which my hon. friend would like to have in this country.

Mr. CAHAN: I do not know that I personally go that far.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am glad to hear it. Practically they found it very difficult. It would be too long to put on Hansard the very strong objections coming from every department of the government to permitting actions to be taken indiscriminately against officers of the various departments, and it is pointed out that it would hamper their work to a considerable extent. But we are going the distance this bill goes in regard to the national harbours board, and if eventually the same thing is necessary with regard to the broadcasting corporation or with regard to any agency of the government that is really doing the same work that private corporations are doing—

Mr. CAHAN: We shall regard it as a precedent upon which we may build in the future.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I am willing that this should be considered as a precedent.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I think we have already established a precedent in a small way in connection with small claims against the old Intercolonial railway.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Up to $500.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes. It will be recalled in connection with the larger question of petitions of right that the commission which dealt with it did not propose to permit actions to be brought in all cases, and the reason the commission was appointed was to determine where the line of demarcation should be set—between cases where no petition of right should be allowed, and cases where the right of action should accrue as against a subject. It was to determine where the line should be drawn that caused the long drawn out taking of evidence and the consideration of it by the distinguished law lord who died about two years ago.

I was going to suggest that possibly the minister might consider the advisability of amending the tenth line and using exactly the same words as are used in the Exchequer Court Act. My own observation has been that it is desirable, when you are dealing with the same matter, to use exactly the same words; for then you have the decisions of the court always applicable to cases that may arise under either act. In the Exchequer Court Act we use the words, "while acting within the scope of his duties or employment," and it might be well if we used exactly the same words here, so that if there is a decision under the exchequer court section it would be equally applicable and binding under this statute. As I say, my own experience has taught me that it is desirable to use exactly the same language, if you can, when dealing with the same subject matter, so that the decisions are equally binding. It would only be necessary to insert in the twelfth line, after the word "his," the words "duties or"; for by turning to Bill No. 109 the minister will observe that those are the exact words used there.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have no objection to the addition of the words "duties or" before the word "employment" in the twelfth line.

Mr. DUNNING: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: If that amendment is accepted, then may I suggest a further change in the same section. In the ninth line I find the words "arising out of any death." I would suggest with all due deference that the words "any claim" should be inserted before the word "arising," so that the section would read:

Subject as hereinafter provided any claim against the board arising out of any contract entered into in respect of its undertaking or any claim arising out of any death.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have no objection to the change.

Mr. DUNNING: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. CAHAN: In line twenty-five provision is made for the service of process. As it now stands it reads:

In any such action, suit or other proceeding process may be served upon a member of the board or upon any port manager or officer or—

And so on. I suggest that this last word "or" be stricken out and that the words "of the board or upon any" be inserted, so that it would read:

—process may be served upon a member of the board or upon any port manager or officer of the board or upon any other person duly authorized by the board to accept such service—

And so on.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have no objection.

Mr. DUNNING: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of the fact the minister has made the declaration he has, indicating the intention to introduce legislation to enable the broadcasting corporation to be sued by private individuals, I wish to ask the minister why an appeal was taken at all from a judgment of the court of last resort in Quebec which decided they could be sued, and then further legislation would not be necessary.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is the matter of costs, and other things, to be considered.

Section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EXCISE ACT AMENDMENT

MISCELLANEOUS ADMINISTRATIVE CHANGES INVOLVING NO ALTERATION IN RATES

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of National Revenue) moved the second reading of Bill No. 123, to amend the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sanderson in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Packages warehoused to be marked; tobacco and cigars excepted.

Mr. BENNETT: I suppose manufactured tobacco includes cigars; is that the idea?

Mr. ILSLEY: Manufactured tobacco includes all manufactured tobacco, except cigars. Apparently cigars do not come within that category, and manufactured tobacco takes in everything else, and chiefly cigarettes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

On section 5—Licence to rectifiers.

Mr. STEWART: The minister might explain this.

Mr. ILSLEY: The rectifying of spirits is done solely by licensed distillers, and as there is no probability of the trade or the business of rectifying being carried on by, or licences being issued to, rectifiers alone, this section might just as well be repealed. There are no rectifiers.

Mr. BENNETT: Was there not one rectifier in Nova Scotia?

Mr. ILSLEY: The last rectifier's licence was issued in Toronto and was abandoned on March 31, 1920, and since that time no licences have been issued.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Section 132 of the said act is repealed.

Mr. ILSLEY: There is no purpose in providing for a licence for importing and manufacturing stills alone; that is to say, the licence might as well cover not only importing and manufacturing but possessing and using, and so instead of having two sets of sections in the act as before, one set relating to importing and manufacturing and the other relating to possessing and using, under one section the licence will be issued to authorize the licensee to import, manufacture, possess and use.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the language of the other section broad enough to ensure the licence covering all these various activities?

Mr. ILSLEY: As amended, yes. This bill provides for the amendment.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—Application for licence for chemical still.

Mr. STEWART: Is this the section that contains the amendment?

Mr. ILSLEY: This is part of it. This, taken with the next section, covers the situation. Section 133 deals with the application for a licence, and section 134 deals with the conditions of the licence.

Section agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9—Distilling and rectifying licence fee, $250.

Mr. ILSLEY: This takes out of the section the words relating to rectifying.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Licence fee for chemical still.

Mr. ILSLEY: This section carries out still further the scheme of combining importing and manufacturing with possessing and using.

Section agreed to.

Sections 11 and 12 agreed to.

On section 13—Abatement of spirits re-warehoused.

Mr. ILSLEY: This section is perhaps a little more important; it effects some change in the law. The effect of subparagraph (iii) of section 13 is simply to permit warehousing to go on for more than fifteen years. Subparagraph (iii) is the same as subparagraph (iii) on the opposite page of the bill with the exception of the words underlined. That authorizes the distillers to warehouse for more than fifteen years, without adjusting the legal abatement. There has been no provision for that up to the present, but I do not think there could be any possible objection to it. The next subparagraphs, (iv) and (v) call for a little attention. Subparagraph (iv) relates to distillery stock which is not warehoused stock, and it permits an abatement allowance of two per cent. That is not a new abatement, but it is computed on a different principle from the abatement now allowed.

Mr. BENNETT: It was not statutory before.

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. BENNETT: It was done by regulation.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. There was nothing statutory before, nor was there anything scientific about it; there was nothing definite about it. The rather curious practice in vogue was this, that no matter at what temperature the spirits were tested they were read as of 40 degrees Fahrenheit, and the distiller was required to account only for the gallonage which there would be if the spirits were at 40 degrees Fahrenheit. That would be a quantity somewhat less than the actual quantity. The difference was the abatement allowance which the distiller had. The standard temperature at which spirits are warehoused is 62 degrees Fahrenheit; it is not the temperature at which they are distilled, which is considerably higher than that, and it is certainly not a low temperature such as 40 degrees Fahrenheit. It is proposed now to bring spirits to 62 degrees Fahrenheit, which is the standard temperature, and then make a flat abatement allowance not exceeding two per cent. When this section refers to two per cent it means not exceeding two per cent.

Mr. BENNETT: It says, "not exceeding two per cent." Why should we not say exactly that instead of leaving it open to argument?

Mr. ILSLEY: The distiller is obliged to account for all the spirits he has and that may be only one per cent less than he started with. But if he comes along and has a deficiency of over two per cent, he is allowed only two per cent. The reason for the allowance is to put a check upon any dishonesty or inefficiency.

Mr. BENNETT: Or dilution.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. That would be either inefficiency or dishonesty or both.

Mr. STEWART: What is the effect of this? Is it to permit an increase in the allowance as it has existed in the past?

Mr. ILSLEY: We had a hard time determining that question. It is disputed. In some cases the distillers have asked for a three per cent maximum instead of two per cent, and I really cannot answer the question. For gin there is no doubt that the present deficiency is greater than this, while for whisky it would appear to be somewhat less so far as I can ascertain.

Mr. BENNETT: Computed on the 40 degrees Fahrenheit basis.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. STEWART: I remember a debate that took place some years ago in this house on the subject matter of this amendment. It was pointed out by a gentleman who was quite familiar with what he was speaking about that the custom had grown up of storing distilled spirits in enamel tanks and other containers in which there was practically no evaporation or absorption, and he contended that, under these circumstances, they were getting allowances which, under the former practice of storing in wood, would have been fair and reasonable but, which under the new practice, were quite the opposite. The minister, I am sure, has considered that. What is the answer?

Mr. ILSLEY: The problem mentioned by my hon. friend would, I think, come under subparagraph V rather than subparagraph IV. It would be a loss in warehousing rather than in what is called distillery stock. What we are talking about now is an evaporation or loss in what is called distillery stock, that is before the spirits are warehoused.

Mr. BENNETT: Spirits in the vats, not warehoused.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think the hon. member is talking about warehoused stock.

Mr. BENNETT: The warehoused stock is dealt with in the next subparagraph. Subparagraph IV deals with the distillery stock in vats.

Mr. ILSLEY: Section 142 of the Excise Act provides for a difference in the abatement allowances as between wooden and metal containers. In the case put by my hon. friend a large abatement allowance does not mean that the distillers necessarily make any more money; they have just a little more leeway for inefficiency or something else. The distiller is obliged to account, not for the original amount of stock less the allowance, but for all he has when the time comes to account; but if that is more than a certain percentage less than he started with he is allowed only that particular percentage.

The next subparagraph deals with warehoused stock, that is stock which is warehoused in wooden barrels. This subparagraph provides for an abatement allowance not exceeding three per cent of the quantity originally warehoused in wooden barrels. It provides that this abatement may be allowed for wood absorption. The department has been doing that for a year or two now. There was nothing corresponding with this particular allowance. This takes the place of the rinsing or "grogging" which they were carrying on. They had a practice of taking the barrels which had been drained of the spirits and running live steam in, which had the effect of extracting from the wood some spirits that they otherwise would not have got. We were obliged to credit that to them. In Great Britain no such practice is permitted, and in 1936 the department passed a regulation forbidding that practice. This three per cent allowance is to compensate the distillers for doing away with that practice.

Mr. BENNETT: The truth is that the liquor is measured out of the vats into barrels, and they become responsible for x gallons. Then, when it is withdrawn, they have a margin of three per cent to play with.

Mr. ILSLEY: Right; to make up for wood absorption. There are other abatements in addition to that.

Section agreed to.

On section 14—Least quantity to be warehoused or ex-warehoused.

Mr. BENNETT: Why decrease it from 100 to 30 gallons?

Mr. ILSLEY: They are allowed now to put in as little as they take out; to warehouse as small a quantity as they are allowed to ex-warehouse. There is no particular reason why they should be obliged to put in 100 gallons if they are allowed to take out 30.

Section agreed to.

On section 15—When spirits may be entered for consumption.

Mr. ILSLEY: Spirits, except gin, cannot be taken out unless they have been in for two years. In practice there has always been an exception made in favour of spirits manufactured from native wine, when these spirits are used for fortification purposes by registered wine manufacturers. This simply makes statutory the practice which has heretofore existed.

Mr. BENNETT: I am familiar with the discussion that took place at the time it was done, and the differences of opinion expressed. There was one group who felt that it should not be done; that the spirits used for fortification purposes should be at least two years old. But the exception was in fact made by regulation, and is now being made statutory. I suppose it is a sound exercise of the power of parliament to do it, but I know there was a sharp conflict of opinion at the time.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am informed that it is satisfactory to the trade and has been carried on for seven or eight years now.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, ever since they started to use the fortification after the inability to use certain types of sugar.

Item agreed to.

On section 16—Second convictions under other provisions of same sections deemed subsequent offence.

Mr. ILSLEY: There are two sections of the act which enumerate certain offences against the act, sections 164 and 169. Last year another section, 169B was passed, which does not add more offences, but has to do, if I remember correctly, with charges of having in possession. As the law stands, apparently, if an offender is convicted of one of the offences enumerated in these two sections, and then later is convicted of another offence, he can be punished on that second occasion only as for a first offence, although he is to all intents and purposes a second offender. The effect of this section is to make him punishable as a second offender even though it is a different offence; but it must be one of the offences enumerated in these two sections, 164 and 169. These sections are aimed at bootlegging.

Section agreed to.

On section 17—Amount of bond.

Mr. BENNETT: Why raise it from $2,000 to $5,000?

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: The increase in the duty on malt to six cents doubles the amount there involved, and the bond was not increased at the time the rate was raised.

Mr. BENNETT: But having regard to the minister's well known economic views, surely he does not want to raise the bond from $2,000 to $5,000 in contemplation of the possibility of continuing the duty of six cents a pound on malt. It would be a monstrous sort of thing, to suggest that he would even think of it! Why should he raise the amount of the bond now merely because in a fit of economic unreasonableness parliament imposed a duty on malt of six cents a pound instead of, say, two cents, which would be in accordance with the tenets of Adam Smith and the free traders, or possibly only one cent?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is one kind of freedom of trade, but not the kind we usually talk about.

Section agreed to.

On section 18—Beer casks, barrels and bottles to be stamped with name and address of brewer or bottler, and other prescribed information.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps we have gone a long distance the other way now, Mr. Chairman. As the statute was worded originally, the label had to show in conspicuous type the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the said beer and also the percentage of proof spirits contained therein. Now we are going to leave the department to determine what information shall be given on the label. Is it not rather asking for departmental regulation of something which, in view of the policy indicated by previous sections—that is, making provision by statute for what heretofore has been a matter of regulation—should be dealt with in the same way? I suggest this is a movement in the wrong direction. So far the whole theory of the minister has been that it is desirable to have in the statute what we used to have in the regulations. Now we are going to reverse that and put in the regulations provision for a label that hitherto was provided for by statute. The minister will remember that there has been a good deal of discussion about this very matter. This is rather substituting for the will of parliament the will of the departmental official or officials. The section now reads:

—there shall at all times be securely fixed by the brewer or bottler of the said beer a label showing in conspicuous type the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the said beer and showing also the percentage of proof spirits contained therein.

Now we are going to have a label bearing such information as may be prescribed by departmental regulation. That is an entire departure from the general policy of the administration and is substituting for the will of parliament regulations made by individuals. It does not follow that you are going to have the name of the brewer on the bottle, whereas by statute we now have that. I suggest that if you are going to do this, you should leave in the words "showing in conspicuous type the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the said beer." Then you can add "such other information as may be prescribed by departmental regulations." I make that suggestion to the minister only because I think it will be admitted that there has been a great deal of difficulty about the names of the products of the breweries. Some of them have held that their labels have been copied, and matters of that sort. If we leave it as I have suggested, the label will show the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the beer and such other information as may be prescribed by departmental regulation.

Mr. ILSLEY: I shall be very glad to accept that suggestion, and personally I am inclined to agree with it. There is no doubt that any regulation made would provide for the name and address—

Mr. BENNETT: But it might not.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is possible. I shall ask the Minister of Finance to move the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: After the word "label" in line 28 there should be inserted the words "showing in conspicuous type the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the said beer and such other," which will come in before the words "information as may be prescribed by departmental regulations."

The CHAIRMAN: The section as amended will read:

—and on every bottle containing beer, there shall at all times be securely affixed by the brewer or bottler of the said beer a label showing in conspicuous type the name and address of the brewer or bottler of the said beer and such other information as may be prescribed by departmental regulations.

Mr. DUNNING: I move the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 19—Subsection 2 of section 242 of the said act is repealed.

Mr. ILSLEY: The only reason for this subsection is that now the duties on raw leaf tobacco are customs duties, not excise duties. Formerly the duties on imported raw leaf tobacco were called excise duties, but that is no longer the case. Therefore the sections relating to the duties on raw leaf tobacco should come out of the Excise Act, and a number of the sections following will take them out. The change was made in 1936.

Section agreed to.

On section 20—Packages of tobacco and cigars to be marked.

Mr. ILSLEY: This section is to provide for a changed condition in the tobacco factories. Cigars are put up in cartons now, in many cases, rather than in wooden boxes. Under the old section information had to be stamped, burned or impressed into the box or indented in a legible and durable manner, and so on. This section provides that the information may be printed or stamped or burned or impressed on the package in such way as may be provided by departmental regulations.

Mr. STEWART: The main difference, as I see it, is that the number of cigars in a box must now be stamped on the box, whereas under the old section such was not the case. I assume this is to meet the case where a dummy cigar is put in to make up a required number because of an increase in price, or for duty purposes or something of that kind.

Mr. BENNETT: I must say that I do not think the minister should ask us to adopt this section. Having asked us to provide by statute what has heretofore been dealt with by regulation, and in my judgment properly so, he now asks us to abandon that principle and provide that the department shall have complete control of what is to be placed upon cigar boxes. This is an exact negation of the law that has been in force all these years. I believe that law has worked very satisfactorily. It has been provided that each package shall bear the registered number of the manufactory where made, the number of the excise division in which the manufactory is situated and the number of cigars contained in each box. I think that statutory provision has been of the greatest possible value. There is another reason. When you do it by regulation you are relying upon a knowledge of the law being possessed by everybody in the sense that they should possess it. By so doing, we have departed from the usual salutary rule that in connection with any statutory law there is an opportunity afforded to every man to know what the law is. If it is a departmental regulation, he may never see it and he may unconsciously find himself violating a law which he has no desire or intention to violate. This is a negation of the theory upon which the minister has proceeded until the last two sections. I suggest that he say that all packages containing manufactured tobacco shall have stamped, burned or impressed into them or indented, the very words that appear here, namely, "the registered number of the manufactory where made." He should make no change in the law. The law now says that a positive and essential thing is to be done under departmental supervision or regulation. I think that should continue. To say that the department shall become the law making body is, I suggest, at variance with the minister's well known principles, however highly it may be considered for bureaucratic purposes by those who administer the act. The effect of that upon some officials is at once apparent.

Mr. ILSLEY: I just want to point out that there is a great difference between the subject matter of the previous section and the subject matter of this one. The matter of abatement allowances is an exceedingly important one and should be statutory in character. Prima facie a distillery should account for the amount of spirits which come into its hands. If abatements are to be allowed, that matter should not be left to departmental regulations. But here we are dealing with minor matters, giving the public some information about—

Mr. BENNETT: The number of cigars in a box, for instance. That is most important.

Mr. ILSLEY: What motive could any officer have for suppressing information like that? The officers will do the sensible thing in these matters.

Mr. BENNETT: It puts the officers just where they should not be placed. That is the reason why parliament did it. It did it for one definite and positive reason. You do not want to place the officials in the position where they have to determine these things. They may be subject to surroundings and conditions to which they should not be made subject. I have seen enough in the practice of my profession to know "how oft the sight of means to do ill deeds, makes ill deeds done." When an officer is in a position where he must say, "Mr. Jones, I cannot do this; parliament has done so and so," you realize how desirable it is that this should thus be done. But this is to be governed by regulation. I think that is wrong. I know what my distinguished and learned friend the minister would say if conditions were reversed to-night and he were here and I were there.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think I would raise the question on something more important than the number of cigars in a box.

Mr. BENNETT: My own experience, when I was on the other side, was that the measure of fuss made was in direct ratio to the insignificance of the point raised.

Mr. STEWART: What is the object in making this change? What is the difficulty? What is wrong with the present working of the law?

Mr. ILSLEY: The section had to be changed to provide for printing instead of stamping and burning and so on, and the section has been widened so that if it is necessary to provide for any particular information on a container, that can be done by order in council. It is made more elastic. This is a small administrative matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, no, it is not. Let me say something more to the minister since he has mentioned it. The history of this is rather interesting. I wonder if the minister realizes why it was stipulated that these words should be burned in? The story is very interesting. It was to prevent the putting on of faked labels. There is nothing more interesting than the history of the development of our institutions. There are many things on our statute books that may appear to be silly, but there are excellent reasons why they were put there. The burning of information upon the ends of beer barrels and upon cigar boxes was to prevent the very thing that during prohibition days in the United States became so prevalent. Labels were manufactured by beautiful steel engraving processes, sometimes abroad, and were placed upon bottles of liquor that had no real connection with the name upon the label. I happen to know that because I had to deal professionally with the matter. I fancy the minister remembers something of what happened.

We are now to do something we have never done before. We are substituting printing. I wonder if the minister has taken the trouble to look at the excise stamps that are put upon these packages? I took the trouble not long since to look at a wooden cigar box. I wondered at the time why so much particularity and pains had been taken to stamp the name of the manufactory upon the box. This box also contained an excellently prepared stamp, and then I found certain words had been burned in. I saw at once the reason. You will find that all this legislation which has to do with matters of this kind is to make it more difficult to produce a bad article and palm it off as a good one. I really do not understand why this change is being made. A year ago, in connection with the Customs Act, I pointed out certain words in the statute and the minister told me that those words had been there a long time and had proved satisfactory. If he will turn up Hansard, he will find that was what he said. Here we have the same thing. This statute has been found eminently satisfactory. There has been no complaint. However, somebody has to show some justification for living and so he goes to work and says to the minister, "We are going to change this." It is said that you cannot burn this information into the cardboard cartons now being used. Of course you can; it is just a matter of placing the hot iron against the carton and searing it in.

It seems to me that in this great struggle for modernity we perhaps lose sight of the value of what to some of our bureaucratic friends may seem to be antique customs. It is well to remember that there is a good reason for all of these things. Long before my young friend was born, this was being done and it was found to be entirely satisfactory. After all, he should realize that the old rule is a sound rule. Unless the continuance of a rule will work a hardship, it is not a bad thing to cling to it. If he wants authority upon that, I have no doubt he will find it in the Book of Ecclesiastes. I do not remember the exact chapter, but the authority is very clear and it is powerfully put.

Section agreed to on division.

On section 21—Completion of manufacture of tobacco and cigars.

Mr. BENNETT: Reverting to section 20 for a moment, Mr. Chairman, did anyone ask for an amendment such as that?

Mr. ILSLEY: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought it was born of the imagination.

Mr. ILSLEY: I thought my hon. friend was referring to section 21. Section 20 has been carried.

Section agreed to.

Section 22 agreed to.

On section 23—Deficiency between raw material and products of manufactory.

Mr. ILSLEY: The present deficiency allowance is six per cent in these tobacco factories, and the experience of the department indicates that this allowance is too great. The amendment enables the allowance to be reduced by order in council, but the statutory limit of six per cent still remains. In addition, cigars are now for the first time brought within the provisions of the section.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that true Liberalism must find great difficulties in giving a reason for this amendment, having regard to what used to be said in days gone by. We are merely substituting the governor in council for parliament; that is all.

Mr. ILSLEY: No; the statutory limit remains.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be so carefully and wonderfully made that I cannot read it properly, but the section as I read it says "may be established by the governor in council." Those are new words.

Mr. ILSLEY: But it says, "but shall not at any time exceed six per centum."

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly. In other words, you are doing something by order in council, which must be a very great strain—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is.

Mr. BENNETT: I thought so, and so very great a strain that I shall content myself with drawing attention to it.

Section agreed to.

Section 24 agreed to.

On section 25—Tobacco stems and sweepings, etc.

Mr. BENNETT: They used to destroy them, but now I see we are going to dispose of them.

Mr. ILSLEY: Any reason why we should not?

Mr. BENNETT: I was going to ask, Is there any good reason why we should not destroy them?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is a waste. They can be used for the making of insecticides.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is Liberal doctrine.

Mr. BENNETT: Quite.

Section agreed to.

On section 26—Determining payment of duties.

Mr. BENNETT: That is in accordance with the provisions of the previous section in connection with sweating tobacco?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. BENNETT: It is left now to the imagination and good will of the officials.

Section agreed to.

Sections 27 and 28 agreed to.

On section 29—Warehousing and ex-warehousing of tobacco and cigars.

Mr. ILSLEY: This amendment just takes out the reference to raw leaf tobacco.

Section agreed to.

Section 30 agreed to.

On section 31—Sections 275 to 283, both inclusive, and 292 to 294, both inclusive, repealed.

Mr. STEWART: Would the minister be good enough to explain just why this section is here? I have not read the act.

Mr. ILSLEY: All these sections which are being repealed relate to foreign raw leaf tobacco, which is not now to be dealt with by the Excise Act at all because it is dutiable under the customs tariff and is subject to the provisions of the Customs Act. Formerly the Excise Act governed it, but now the Customs Act governs it.

Mr. STEWART: So these sections are really a duplication now?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 32.

Mr. STEWART: The note on section 32 says:

The paragraph designation "(a)" as it presently appears in subsection 1 of section 296 is improperly placed, and the amendment simply moves it to its proper place in the subsection.

The amendment simply moves it to its proper place?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes; there is no change in the wording.

Section agreed to.

On section 33—Unlawful removal of tobacco or cigars.

Mr. ILSLEY: This makes it an offence to permit or allow the removal of tobacco or cigars.

Mr. STEWART: What is the difference in the penalty?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is not to be mandatory in the future, but there is to be an option of fine or imprisonment. In the past both fine and imprisonment were mandatory.

Mr. STEWART: But "and" is read "or" sometimes.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. ILSLEY: It could not be in this case. It is either a fine or imprisonment. In the past it has been both fine and imprisonment. This is more lenient.

Section agreed to.

On section 34—Coming into force of sections 20 to 31.

Mr. STEWART: Is this just to get it into the fiscal year? I see the note says:

It is not proposed to bring the sections referred to into operation until the commencement of the fiscal year 1939-1940.

Mr. ILSLEY: The reason for delaying the coming into force of the section is because the regulations are being worked out. A great deal of work on the regulations is necessary, and has not been completed. Probably it will not be fully completed until next spring. It is for that reason it is asked that the sections shall not become effective until April 1, 1939.

Mr. STEWART: I suppose any of the old labels or materials complying with the existing act could be used up in that period of time.

Mr. ILSLEY: That would be possible, yes; but it is not the purpose of the delay. I suppose it would be necessary to make some such provision in the regulations, and the delay enables that to be done.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY

VALIDITY OF QUEBEC STATUTE—STATEMENT OF MR. WOODSWORTH ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. CHARLES A. DUNNING (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I should like to call the attention of the house to a serious situation arising out of the enactment of the so-called padlock law, properly entitled, "An act to protect the province against communistic propaganda."

Shortly after the bill was passed last year by the Quebec legislature—

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would permit me, I should like to call his attention to one or two points. I do not know whether a point of order should be raised, but I think a discussion of this matter is at least of doubtful order at this time.

The disallowance of provincial legislation is not a matter subject to the parliament of Canada. I mean it is not the parliament of Canada which has to do with the disallowance of provincial acts. That does not come under section 91 of the British North America Act, which covers all that is within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. It comes under a special section, namely section 90, which coupled with section 56 of the British North America Act provides that provincial statutes have to be sent by the lieutenant governor of the province to the Secretary of State, and that the governor in council, if it thinks fit, may within one year disallow this legislation, or allow it to take its proper course. It is an action for the governor in council, and not for the parliament of Canada.

Of course the parliament of Canada may criticize the action of the governor in council. The governor in council is responsible to parliament and when the governor in council has taken action under the constitution its action or lack of action is a proper subject for discussion by parliament. But so long as the delayed time within which legislation has to be considered and passed upon has not expired, and so long as no action has been taken, there is no possible grievance on the part of any member of parliament with regard to the action or inaction of the governor in council, and the discussion would be merely a discussion of a provincial act, which should not take place.

Moreover the Minister of Justice who has to consider such legislation first has to make his recommendation to the governor in council, not to parliament. And may I call the hon. member's attention to this fact: I shall not be able to answer anything he says to-night about it. I cannot give my report to him or to the house; my duty is to give the report and make the recommendation to the governor in council. So all the hon. member may say will be in the nature of representations which have been made by various parties with regard to this legislation. Does he not think that interference by the House of Commons in a matter of this kind, one which under the constitution has to be dealt with by the governor in council, is rather exercising a pressure amounting to almost intimidation upon the Minister of Justice; because I shall have to do my duty and deal with the matter as I think it should be dealt with, irrespective of what the hon. member may say to-night.

What I have said is in conformity with the practice. The practice is that when a decision has been reached in connection with a matter of this kind an hon. member may move for the production of papers, and then it is discussed in parliament by way of motion or otherwise. That is the proper time to do so. I would call the hon. member's attention to what Lefroy says at page 32 of his book, Canada's Federal System.

> Moreover the dominion House of Commons cannot constitutionally interfere with the operation of provincial acts by passing resolutions urging their disallowance by the Governor General.

Lord Kimberley in a dispatch of June 30, 1873, said:

> If such resolution were allowed to have effect, it would amount to a virtual repeal of the section of the British North America Act, 1867, which gives the exclusive right of legislating on these matters to the provincial legislatures.

As I have said, I hesitate to raise a definite point of order, but I do not think this is a proper way of proceeding with a matter of this kind. I would not like to establish a precedent whereby the legislation of provinces may be discussed in the House of Commons before action has been taken on them in the way provided for by the constitution. If it is done with regard to the so-called padlock law, nothing would prevent anyone from on another day raising the question as to why we should not disallow the recent legislation of the Alberta legislature, or that of any other province. This is not the way which the law provides for, and I believe it is establishing a bad principle. As I have said to my hon. friend, if he proceeds with his remarks, I am sorry, but I shall not be able to say a word about it in reply to him. And it is not very pleasant for any man not to have a reply made on a question of this kind.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Leader of the Opposition): My right hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) must have overlooked the leading authority on the case. Listening to him, I at once realized that the greatest debate which has ever taken place in this house on the question of disallowance was with respect to the Jesuits' bill. On a motion to go into supply an amendment was moved. I have it beside me; I sent for it while the right hon. gentleman was speaking. It was moved by Mr. O'Brien:

> That an address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying him to disallow an act of the province of Quebec intituled: "An act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits' estates;" Debate thereon adjourned.

That will be found at page 56 of the index. My right hon. friend is not concerned about the several adjournments that took place, and therefore I quote the following:

The order of the day being read, for resuming the adjourned debate on the question which was, on Tuesday last proposed, That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair (for the house again in committee of supply);

And proposed amendment thereto, That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be left out, and the words "it be resolved, That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General setting forth:

"1. That this house regards the power of disallowing the acts of the legislative assemblies of the provinces, vested in His Excellency in council, as a prerogative essential to the national existence of the dominion.

"2. That this great power, while it should never be wantonly exercised, should be fearlessly used for the protection of the rights of a minority, for the preservation of the fundamental principles of the constitution, and for safeguarding the general interests of the people.

"3. That, in the opinion of this house, the passage by the legislature of the province of Quebec of the act intituled: "An act respecting the settlement of the 'Jesuits' Estates'," is beyond the power of that legislature. Firstly, because it endows from public funds a religious organization, thereby violating the undoubted constitutional principle of the complete separation of church and state, and of the absolute equality of all denominations before the law. Secondly, because it recognizes the usurpation of a right by a foreign authority, namely, His Holiness the Pope of Rome, to claim that his consent was necessary to empower the provincial legislature to dispose of a portion of the public domain, and also, because the act is made to depend upon the will, and the appropriation of the grant thereby made is subject to the control of the same authority. And thirdly, because the endowment of the Society of Jesus, an alien, secret and politico-religious body, the expulsion of which from every Christian community wherein it has had a footing has been rendered necessary by its intolerant and mischievous intermeddling with the functions of civil government, is fraught with danger to the civil and religious liberties of the people of Canada.

"And this house therefore prays, that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to disallow the said act," inserted instead thereof;

And the question on the amendment being again proposed: The house resumed the said adjourned debate.

And the house having continued to sit till after twelve of the clock on Friday morning;

Friday, 29th March, 1889.

And the question being put on the amendment; the house divided: and the names being called for, they were taken down, as follow:

Yeas, 13; nays, 188.

So it passed in the negative;

Then, the main question being put; It was resolved in the affirmative.

Ordered, that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair.

The house accordingly again resolved itself into the committee of supply.

The amendment was moved on March 26, 1889, and taken up on the next day on the motion to go into supply. It was again adjourned. It was maintained day after day until finally disposed of on March 29. I am speaking only from memory, but I have sent for Hansard of that date. My recollection is that Sir John Thompson on that occasion made that great speech which established his reputation, in answer to Mr. McCarthy; and if I remember rightly, he did not make any point as to the amendment not being in order. He made the great speech of his life on that occasion.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): He had made up his mind against disallowance at the time he spoke.

Mr. BENNETT: The question whether he had made up his mind or not had not been indicated because the motion was that it should be disallowed.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes; but it was because they were still within the delay of one year. But everyone knew that the government refused to disallow.

Mr. BENNETT: No. The minister's memory, again, is not playing him fair. The governor general himself referred the matter to the law officers of the crown in England—the Attorney General and the Solicitor General of England—and among the letters of Sir John A. Macdonald, which I happened to be reading a few nights ago, I came across that one in which he dealt with a particular phase of the matter, namely, the date when the opinion of the law officers might be expected. It is also within my memory that Sir John Thompson sent him a memorandum with respect to his views upon a certain phase of the question, namely, the reference to the supreme court. The minister will recall that it was later proposed it should be referred to the court for an opinion and that was negatived. At page 842 of the Commons' Debates of March 27, 1889, we find Mr. McCarthy's speech; Sir John Thompson's speech begins at page 862 and continues for several pages, and in the course of it he reviews all the authorities.

Then the matter was debated by other members. My memory is that Mr. Mills of Bothwell made a substantial contribution to the debate. Sir John A. Macdonald was still living, and Mr. Mills commenced his speech by complimenting him upon the skill with which he had avoided the difficulty which had confronted him. He said, as reported at page 872 of Hansard of that year:

> The hon. gentleman finds himself face to face with what may become a dangerous agitation, involving the administration of which he is the head. That agitation was begun by a journal conducted with more than ordinary ability, and characterized by what may be called a spirit of aggressive protestantism; and it has gradually drawn to its side a large portion of the press of the country, and a very great deal of discussion adversely criticizing the conduct of the government has taken place in public meetings at several places in the province of Ontario.

Sir John A. Macdonald was then in the house because he intervened to ask a question with respect to what had occurred. He said, among other things, that the preamble is not part of the bill. So as far as this matter is concerned, it is merely a discussion by this chamber of something within its right, namely, to express an opinion whether or not the right hon. gentleman should exercise his power if an hon. gentleman does move a motion, as to which he has not yet indicated his intention.

There are two phases of the matter to which Sir John Thompson directed attention. The first was what might be described as the customary view, namely, the question of leaving the matter to the courts, which was subsequently debated at length; and the second, the question of policy, whether or not it was desirable as a matter of policy to deal with it in a certain way. And as a matter of policy the language of the debate makes it abundantly clear that this chamber should at all times have the right by a majority of its members to instruct the government how it should discharge a duty. That has been from time immemorial the right of this chamber, and I fancy will continue to be long after we have gone; the right to say by a majority that this government, or some other government which may be put in its place if the majority so wills, shall discharge its duty in a given way. That is the high function of parliament. When it comes to a question of this kind, which is not a question of law but of policy, the right is clear beyond peradventure and has been established by a series of amendments to the motion to go into supply by which instructions have been given from time to time to the government. I will give an illustration at once—the New Zealand treaty. An amendment was moved to the motion to go into supply suggesting that the New Zealand treaty should be terminated, and the Minister of Finance accepted that amendment and gave notice terminating that treaty. That is within the memory of many hon. members who were in the house in those days. He reconstituted his committee of supply on the strength of it. Under those circumstances it is clear that on that occasion what we did was to intimate by our votes, which ultimately became unanimous, that in the opinion of the house a certain policy should be pursued, which policy was in fact pursued by the government accepting the amendment on going into supply.

Mr. DUNNING: But that was a different situation entirely.

Mr. BENNETT: No; exactly the same, not the slightest difference in the world. The fact that a lawyer is concerned about making up his mind has nothing to do with the question of policy. And the address that was presented by Mr. O'Brien was that his excellency in council do so and so; that the government of the day do so and so. It would seem fatuous to suggest that any question could arise with respect to that. It was that his excellency in council should take certain action. It has been the right of parliament since the days of Queen Anne to determine by its vote in the Commons house the action that should be taken by the executive. In other words, to use the language of a lord chancellor in England in connection with a Canadian reference, "Parliament can always control the executive." Those are words that must always be kept in mind. And in a matter of this kind that means the House of Commons, because under our constitution there must be a majority in support of the government in the Commons house of parliament in order that the government may exist.

So we have a very simple situation, about which there can be neither doubt nor dispute; the right of this chamber on going into supply to indicate by its vote if it so wishes the policy that should be pursued by the administration with respect to any matter with which it is within the power of this parliament to deal. And this parliament may condemn action that is taken or it may by a majority determine what action should be taken. I take the New Zealand treaty as a striking illustration in connection with that great speech of Sir John Thompson which I have not read for some years but some portions of which come back to my mind as I stand here; the reasons are apparent why he did not raise the question as to whether or not this house had the right to take suggested action. It was not the accomplished fact he was dealing with but something which it was suggested he should do and that the government of which he was a member should do as a matter of high policy. And the House of Commons negatived it by a vote of only thirteen opposing the government view on the merits of the case as presented to the house by Sir John Thompson on behalf of the government and by Mr. McCarthy really from a legal standpoint on behalf of Mr. O'Brien who made the amending motion on going into supply.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Shall I get a chance to say a few words on a point of order?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have now to raise the point of order. I did not do so when I spoke first but the remarks of my right hon. friend compel me to raise the point of order. I absolutely disagree with and contest the contention that the House of Commons may instruct the governor in council as to whether provincial legislation should or should not be disallowed. It may condemn the government afterwards—

Mr. BENNETT: They did it on the New Zealand treaty.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The governor in council is answerable to parliament and if parliament condemns the action that has been taken the government goes; it has lost the confidence of parliament because of the action it has taken. But under the British North America Act this House of Commons cannot instruct me as Minister of Justice as to what recommendation I must make to the governor in council as to the validity or fairness or constitutionality of legislation. The governor in council must act after that recommendation has been given, but the House of Commons cannot instruct me as Minister of Justice as to what recommendation I should make. I am surprised that my right hon. friend should contend—

Mr. BENNETT: There is no doubt about it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): —that I should receive instructions from him or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or anybody as to my recommendation to the governor in council.

Mr. BENNETT: No; the direction is that the governor in council disallow.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): But I must act first; the governor in council acts upon my recommendation.

Mr. BENNETT: That has nothing to do with it.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Even there I will follow my right hon. friend. This House of Commons cannot instruct the governor in council as to a duty—

Mr. BENNETT: Oh, yes, it can.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): —which is given to the governor in council by the constitution. This House of Commons can dismiss the government after it has acted because the action of the government does not meet the approval of the House of Commons, but it cannot instruct the governor in council as to what should be done.

Mr. BENNETT: It did about the New Zealand treaty.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That was a matter of trade and commerce. This is within the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada, under section 91, while this other matter is given not to the parliament of Canada, but by section 90, to the governor in council, to the queen in council, when this power of disallowance existed as far as dominion legislation is concerned. I say that I cannot be instructed as to what action should be taken, but I am responsible to parliament afterwards if the action of the governor in council does not meet with the approval of parliament.

My right hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) quotes the instance of the Jesuits' estates motion in 1889. When he quoted that I told him the government of the day had then made up its mind not to disallow the legislation. The whole debate was on the question as to whether the government had done well to refuse to disallow the legislation. Sir John Thompson made that great speach to which my right hon. friend alluded, showing that the legislation should not have been disallowed and that the government did well not to disallow it.

Mr. BENNETT: No, no.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I will show it; I have a reference here too. I am going to show the house and my right hon. friend that the government had reached that decision before the debate took place in the House of Commons. I quote the words of no less a personality than Sir John A. Macdonald, the then Prime Minister. At page 908 of Hansard for March 28, 1889, showing clearly that he had decided that the bill was not to be disallowed, he said:

I agree strongly with the language used by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock). Supposing this bill had been disallowed, Mr. Mercier would have gained a great object. He would have been the champion of his church. The moment it was announced that this bill was disallowed there would have been a summons for a meeting of the legislature of Quebec. They would have passed that bill unanimously, and would have sent it back here, and what would have been the consequence? No government can be formed in Canada, either by myself, or by the hon. member who moves this resolution (Mr. O'Brien), or by my hon. friend who sits opposite (Mr. Laurier), having in view the disallowance of such a measure. What would be the consequence of disallowance? Agitation, a quarrel—a racial and a religious war would be aroused. The best interests of the country would be prejudiced, our credit would be ruined abroad, and our social relations destroyed at home. I cannot sufficiently picture, in my faint language, the misery and the wretchedness which would have been heaped upon Canada if this question, having been agitated as it has been, and would be, had culminated in a series of disallowances of this act.

Clearly, plainly, the government had then decided that there would be no disallowance, and Sir John A. Macdonald was pointing out to parliament at the time what dire consequences would have resulted if the legislation had been disallowed by the governor in council. So I think it is clear that the two cases are not identical. At the time the twelve month period had not expired—

Mr. BENNETT: It has not expired in this instance, either.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): In this case nothing has been done; we are still within the period. We shall have to do something. There will be a recommendation; the governor in council will act; then, I repeat, the action of the governor in council will be subject to the approval or disapproval of the House of Commons, and the life of the government will be at stake. That is all. Until that happens, I do not think it is proper for either the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre or any other member of parliament to try to instruct me as to the recommendation I should make, or to try to give the governor in council instructions, as my right hon. friend has used the word, as to the action that should be taken.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: As yet I do not think the Minister of Justice has definitely raised a point of order.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I have.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I would ask the Minister of Justice to state the point of order.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): I cannot state it more plainly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then will the minister let me go on until he finds that I am not in order?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We cannot both speak at once.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was speaking when the minister interrupted me, and prior to that time there had been nothing whatever that was out of order. The minister interrupted and brought on a discussion without being able to point out any particular in which I was out of order. Taking the words out of his mouth, I should like to say that I am not seeking to instruct the government. I have no such idea in mind, and in the few introductory remarks I made there was no suggestion of anything of the kind. Further than that, I have no motion before the house, nor do I intend to make one. How, then, can the Minister of Justice talk about instructing the government, before there is any motion before the house?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Let my hon. friend be fair. He knows that those words were used by the right hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am speaking to the point of order, or the suggested point of order. I say the Minister of Justice had no right to interrupt me when there was no motion before the house. I am under a debt of gratitude to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Bennett)—

Mr. BRADETTE: Oh, yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: For what? For attacking this question of disallowance, but as a matter of fact I had no intention of bringing up the matter of disallowance.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Then, what is the hon. member talking about?

Mr. WOODSWORTH. Give me a chance to tell the right hon. gentleman. The minister has been talking quite beside the point. I wish he would not be quite so jittery about this matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): So what?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: So jittery; so frightened.

Mr LAPOINTE (Quebec East): That is another word I do not know.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: So nervous. Jittery is a word used a great deal on the street these days, and I commend the minister to look it up in some of the slang dictionaries. I wish the minister would not go off on a tack and make remarks that are quite beside the point. Let me repeat: Far from trying to intimidate the government, I have not even a motion to propose, and I had no idea of asking for disallowance. I stand here to bring before the house some grievances of the people of Canada, and I think the minister—who has some streaks of Liberalism in him, anyway—will not deny me the right to do that.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): We all have some streaks of something.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The question has been raised as a point of order. I looked up another case away in the past having to do with this same question of the Jesuits' Estates Act, to which the leader of the opposition referred. My reference, however, has nothing to do with the famous speech of Sir John Thompson. My reference is to a subsequent debate the following year, on April 30, 1890. On the motion to go into supply Mr. Charlton said:

> Before you leave the chair, sir, I wish to place in your hands a motion of which I gave notice a few days ago, with a few slight changes in the verbiage, with reference to submitting the Jesuits' Estates Act to the Supreme Court of Canada.

After a number of whereases the motion concluded:

> This house is of the opinion that the question of the constitutionality of the said act should have been submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada, in pursuance of the powers conferred by the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act, when the question could have definitely been determined by such court.

Here you have the curious case of a member of the house, after disallowance had been refused, rising in his place the following year to bring in a motion of want of confidence in the government. This was done on going into supply in connection with a matter that had been settled already.

Mr. DUNNING: Quite right.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: To-night I am rising to urge upon the government that in view of a situation which exists, in view of the suffering being caused to citizens of this country, consideration should be given to these grievances. The minister says that he is not able to answer me. I am sorry if he will not answer what I have to present. All I can do is to petition the government, and it is for the government to say whether they will listen to me, whether they will say nothing in connection with the grievances which I am bringing forward. That is for the government to say. I cannot instruct the minister even in that small matter. That must be determined by his own conscience and by expediency.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): It is determined by the constitution.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I cannot force the minister to speak, but I rather resent what he said when he referred to the house interfering in this matter. What is this house except a forum in which we can discuss the affairs of this country? Why am I sent here if not to bring grievances, if such exist, to the attention of the house?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): There is no grievance here.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The duty of this house is to guard the people's liberties. When anything affects those liberties, such as the existing arrangements in Quebec, then I have the right to defend those liberties. I would be recreant in my duty as a member of this house if I failed to do that.

I brought up this matter some fourteen months ago, and the minister promised that he would take it under consideration. Outside of asking one or two questions, we have refrained this session from bringing before the house these grievances which affect a very considerable section of the people. I do not think we should be asked to refrain any longer. All I am doing is to present the case, and the minister can choose whether he will say anything in answer. He can continue his stony silence if he likes; that is for him to decide. However, I want to make it clear from the very commencement of my remarks that I am not asking him to state whether he is going to ask for disallowance. My plea last year was not for disallowance; it was for the reference to the supreme court of a very troublesome matter.

On March 30 of last year I brought this matter to the attention of the house. I do not want to repeat the speech I made at that time, but let me quote shortly from Hansard of that date, as follows:

> Premier Duplessis in introducing the bill stated, according to the Gazette of March 18, that since the parliament of Canada repealed section 98 of the criminal code, there was no means of preventing communist meetings. I submit that that statement in itself is an admission that that legislation is an indirect attempt to legislate in the field of criminal law, and as such it is in reality ultra vires. The important sections are 3 and 12. Section 3 reads:
> It shall be illegal for any person, who possesses or occupies a house within the province, to use it or allow any person to make use of it to propagate communism or bolshevism by any means whatsoever.
>
> And then section 12:
> It shall be unlawful to print, to publish in any manner whatsoever or to distribute in the province any newspaper, periodical, pamphlet, circular, document or writing whatsoever propagating or tending to propagate communism or bolshevism.

I pointed out to the minister then, and I do so again to-night, that communism was not defined in the act. In the upper house in the course of a debate one member sought to identify communism and socialism. The premier said there would be little difficulty in making decisions, for communism could be "felt." That really means that any one whom the premier does not like may be termed a communist. For example, the premier stated that Mr. Joseph Schubert was a communist. Mr. Schubert is an alderman of the city of Montreal. I pointed out at that time that there were two courses which the government could take. Either they could disallow, or they could refer the legislation to the supreme court. I drew attention to some of the evils that were likely to follow if this legislation remained on the statute books, a number of which evils have already come about. I pointed out that if this legislation remained in force, all bibles might be seized and destroyed and all churches padlocked.

Mr. DUPUIS: Have they been?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Their distribution has been prevented. I suggested that some of the passages from the writings of the early Christian fathers might not be permitted under the terms of that act. I referred to many of the reformers in Great Britain who could be termed communists under this legislation. I suggested that it might be possible to padlock McGill university. That has not been done as yet, but certain individuals have not been permitted to speak at that university. I suggested that it was indeed fortunate that this House of Commons was situated where it is because even our library might be padlocked.

The Minister of Justice did not give a very satisfactory answer at that time. Speaking as a responsible member of the government he said:

> For many years the power of disallowance has not been resorted to by the government of Canada.

The minister referred to the fact that the power of disallowance of dominion legislation by the imperial parliament no longer existed. He continued:

> I would not say the same condition would apply to provincial legislation, but it has often been stated by the courts that within the sphere of their own jurisdiction the provincial legislatures are sovereign. I do not think that in a federation such as this the power of disallowance could easily be exercised by the central government. I believe the provincial legislatures feel that they are still supreme and sovereign within the sphere of their jurisdiction.

He rather laughed at my suggesting that this legislation should be referred to the supreme court.

I believe that fundamentally the case which I presented some fourteen months ago still stands. At that time the Minister of Justice promised the most serious consideration of this matter. If he has been giving effect to that promise, his mental processes must be working very slowly. I suggest that they must work more rapidly if a great injustice is not to be done to still greater numbers of our Canadian citizens.

Since March of last year events have moved on, and there have been many applications of the act. The organization to which I belong has been called into question. In Le Canada of October 26 there is a report of an interview which Mr. Duplessis gave in connection with the padlock law. During that interview he said:

> If the law was worthless why has the C.C.F. and other movements of communist inspiration opposed it so strenuously for the past year?

And so on. If I, a member of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, am told by Premier Duplessis that this organization is of communist inspiration and I am thereby brought under this law, it is a pretty serious thing for both myself and the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I consider that I have a perfect right to bring my grievance and the grievance of this organization before this house.

Since that time there has been so much opposition to the act that a society has been formed, originating in the city of Montreal but spreading to various parts of Canada, called the Canadian Civil Liberties Union. I notice on their letterhead the names of W. D. Lighthall; Hubert Desaulniers; R. L. Calder; Raoul Trepanier; D. T. Goodwin; J. K. Mergler—not a group of foreign communists but a group of quite well known and highly respected citizens. I think that in itself gives us pause and makes us understand that the situation is a serious one. May I give a few facts gleaned from the bulletins which they send out.

The first action under the "padlock" act (passed March 24, 1937) took place November 9, 1937. Between November 9, 1937, and January 27, 1938, the act was applied fifty times. Four places were padlocked: Clarté (French weekly paper), November 9; the Artistic Print Shop, November 9; the Old Rose Print Shop, November 10; the Ukrainian Farmer and Labour Temple Association (alleged communist school), January 25.

The other proceedings under the act have taken the form of raids, seizures and confiscations.

Among the property not returned on the date when this bulletin was issued are The Vancouver Province (magazine section); the New Commonwealth (official organ of the Ontario C.C.F.); the Canadian Forum; Photo-History; Sales Tax By-Law Information (city of Montreal); copies of Le Jour and Le Canada; speeches of Mr. Lloyd George; copies of the Labour World (published by Gustave Francq until recently chairman of the Quebec Women's Minimum Wage Commission); posters of the Spanish war; books by Dickens and Sydney and Beatrice Webb.

This is a partial list of the books that have been seized, confiscated and not yet returned.

One of the minor comedies relating to the "padlock" act is that one victim had the greatest difficulty in preventing the police from seizing a copy of the Land of the Free on the ground that a book with such a title could refer only to Russia—certainly not to Canada.

According to an official statement by the attorney general's department, raids under the "padlock" act between November 9, 1937, and May 10, 1938, numbered 124; communist—or so-called communist—books seized, 532; copies of Clarté seized, 5,000; copies of the Clarion seized, 1,500.

When it is remembered that not one of the persons or organizations affected has yet been even charged with any offence, let alone convicted, these are formidable totals. Twice every three days, for six months, the provincial police have carried out execution without judgment, dispossession without due process of law; twenty times a month they have trampled on liberties as old as Magna Charta.

On March 30, the Minister of Justice heard counsel for the Canadian Civil Liberties Union (Charlemagne Rodier, K.C., Warwick Chipman, K.C., and J. K. Mergler) in support of the Canadian Civil Liberties Union petition for disallowance of the "padlock" act or its reference to the supreme court.

I should like to read two or three passages from the petition which they submitted because, thinking over the matter, I decided that I could not use language anything like so concise or forceful as they have used. This petition comes from the Canadian Civil Liberties Union, Montreal branch, and says in part:

> This act violates fundamental principles of the Canadian constitution. The preamble to the British North America Act states that Canada is to have a "constitution similar in principle to that of Great Britain." This phrase is based on Quebec resolution No. 3, which speaks of following "the model of the British constitution." Elementary principles of British constitutional government are freedom of speech, of the press and of public meeting subject to the limitations of the criminal law; the right of a man to a fair trial in open court if charged with an offence; a presumption of innocence in the accused until he is proven guilty; and freedom of the home from arbitrary search and interference by executive officers acting without judicial warrant. Every one of these principles, which were part of the compact of confederation, is overthrown by the act in question. Freedom of speech is taken away by the prohibition against the undefined crime of "propagating communism or bolshevism" (section 3). Freedom of the press is destroyed by the prohibition against printing, publishing or distributing any newspaper which commits this undefined offence (section 12). Freedom of association is attacked by the power given to the attorney general to padlock, without judicial warrant or investigation, any building or house he chooses upon his being satisfied that the undefined "communism or bolshevism" has been propagated in it (sections 3-4). The right to trial in open court is taken away because the executive and police officers can padlock a house or confiscate and destroy newspapers, books, periodicals, circulars and other writings without laying charge against anyone in open court. The presumption of innocence of Canadian criminal law is turned into a presumption of guilt because the owner of a padlocked house has the burden of proving his good faith or the non-user of the house for the aforesaid purposes if the padlock is to be removed (section 6); and there is no appeal from the decision of a single judge in this matter (section 9). As for the tenant of the house, who is alleged to have himself committed the offence, he is shorn of all recourse to prevent the execution without judgment decreed against him; and by consequence he may be rendered homeless, and deprived of his ability to earn a living, in his community. Freedom of the home is violated by the extension in practice of the statutory power given to any constable, upon the mere instruction of the attorney general, "of his substitute or of a person authorized by him for the purpose," to seize and destroy any books and papers (section 14); so that all persons in the province are liable to have, and many in fact had, their houses entered and ransacked by police constables, and books and periodicals of every description seized and confiscated, without search warrant and without effective redress being left to the individual whose home is thus invaded. Such a power in the police is contrary to principles of British law as ancient as Magna Carta. It is no exaggeration to say that the padlock act reintroduces execution without judgment, punishment without trial, and dispossession of property without due process of law.

I pause to ask if, when I bring such an indictment against the law that works such a hardship upon the people of Canada, there is anyone who can say that I am out of order in so doing. Further, I think I may challenge the Minister of Justice to remain silent in the face of an indictment of that kind.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The representatives of the Liberty League had a better argument than my hon. friend. He should be satisfied with them.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I want to read a few more sentences from this document:

The inhabitants of Quebec, no less than the inhabitants of other provinces of Canada, have certain constitutional rights as Canadians.

And again:

The law of sedition can stop all preaching of violence, the law of seditious libel can stop all revolutionary propaganda in newspapers, the law of unlawful assembly can prevent riotous and disorderly meetings. The padlock act in so far as it goes beyond them is itself destructive of the institutions it seeks to uphold.

And again:

The factum submitted by Your Excellency's government to the Supreme Court of Canada in the reference on the Alberta press bill says: "The authority that can impose some restriction on the freedom of the press, a freedom which is in a legal sense now complete, can impose any restriction."

There is the situation. I told the house, at the beginning of my speech, I was not asking for disallowance. But I would point out that disallowance, which was practically ruled out by the Minister of Justice a year ago, has since been made use of by this very government with regard to the Alberta legislation, and there are still some cases pending.

Surely we have not arrived at that stage in Canada when one law applies to one province and another law to another province or, more closely, when the same law can be used in one province and not used in another. I continue my quotations:

Counsel for Your Excellency's government, Mr. Geoffrion, in this case is reported by the Canadian press as adding: "The rights of the public as well as those of the newspaper publishers had to be considered. There was a right on the part of the public to have the channels of information kept open. This right was of the essence of democracy. If the people were to pass judgment on governments, governments could not interfere with the information the people were to receive. Democratic government and a free press were inseparable. Democracy could not function without a free press, and other forms of government could not function with one. Wherever democracy fell, the freedom of the press disappeared. It was the right of the public to obtain information for which people fought in past years in both France and England. Interference with the newspapers of Alberta affected Canadians from coast to coast. People in all parts of Canada were entitled to know what was happening in every other part and what the people of other parts were saying. They were also interested in having people in other parts know what they were saying. If a province could control the newspapers at all it could establish complete control. The bill before the court, if held good, might be a forerunner to the complete domination of the newspapers in any province by the provincial government, to the licensing and control of reporters for papers outside the province, and to the placing of policemen at provincial borders to stop information from going in or out."

The petition comments:

All this is as applicable to the padlock act as if the learned counsel had been discussing that act in set terms.

Emphasis is given to some points that I have already raised.

. . . the padlock act appears to be a clear invasion of a field of jurisdiction exclusively assigned to the dominion parliament. . . . Sections 3 and 4 of the padlock act clearly create a new crime and provide a penalty for it, though the padlock act seeks to evade the provisions of the British North America Act by leaving that crime undefined. . . . Sections 12, 13 and 14 of the padlock act, in addition to creating a new crime, restrict and regulate the freedom of the press. Such legislation it is submitted, is ultra vires the province on three grounds, set forth in the factum submitted by Your Excellency's government to the Supreme Court of Canada in the reference on the Alberta press bill.

The grounds are then set out. I believe I shall not go farther with this document. It is in the hands of the minister. I wish it had been possible to put it earlier in the hands of every hon. member. All of us should know the seriousness of the situation.

May I point out that many protests against the legislation have been coming in. One came from a committee of the Canadian Bar Association. There was one from the Social Service Council of Canada. I have had scores from all kinds of labour organizations. I submit the government cannot possibly escape its responsibility in the matter.

Only a year ago the Ottawa Journal spoke in these terms:

Actually, this bill is not aimed against lawlessness. It is aimed against liberty, against liberty to write and speak, to discuss and debate. It is a vicious law because:

1. It enables an executive officer to punish a man (by padlocking his house) before any court has found him guilty.

2. It puts the burden of proof of innocence on the person thus attacked.

3. It bars any appeal from the decision of a single judge of the superior court.

4. It enables any peace officer to seize literature, not only of a communistic sort (with interpretation of what constitutes communism left to the government) but also of a sort "tending to produce communism."

The Financial Post, which is not a particularly radical paper, has this to say in an article headed, "Personal Liberty Worth Preserving":

> Communism is an economic and social theory which is offensive to a great many people. But those who believe in communism have as much right to present their point of view to the public as those who believe in capitalism, a competitive economy, or state socialism . . . There are some things worse than the propagation of new and even unpleasant and unsound doctrines. Among them are the tyranny of the state and the loss of personal liberties.

I was interested in reading an article in the Montreal Star, from which I took two or three extracts. My colleague suggests that this is another communist paper! Reference is made first of all to the situation in the United States:

> Written right into the constitution of the United States is the following clause:
> "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."
> Great Britain has no written constitution. But she has a very definite and well understood unwritten constitution, established by usage and "broadened down from precedent to precedent." In this constitution there is no more firmly fixed principle than the freedom of the press.

Now we come to Canada:

> We are the legitimate heirs of England's slowly shaped postulates of justice, of her imposing framework of court practice and legal axioms, of her many blood-bought bulwarks of liberty from Magna Charta down.
> Is it not a fair inference to say that we are also the heirs of her three most signal achievements in establishing freedom within her borders, free speech, freedom of conscience and a free press? Are they not as much a part of our constitution as if they had been written into its folios?

And one sentence from the Free Press of my own city:

> There is no guarantee of freedom so long as that threat exists; and in the absence of a Bill of Rights embodied in our constitution, the solution for lack of a better one rests in active and stringent use of the powers of disallowance of provincial legislation vested in the federal government.

Yes, this further one:

> The responsibility that lies upon the dominion government is therefore very great. Its power of disallowance is relatively unimportant in so far as provincial laws are concerned which are merely ultra vires. In such cases there rests an adequate appeal to the courts. But it is in other fields, where the fundamental liberties of the citizens are threatened by laws legally passed by provincial legislatures, that the danger lies.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

I cannot but think how different is the general indifference in this country to the passing of this kind of legislation to the keen interest shown in the motherland in preserving fundamental liberties.

Let me read a few words of the Secretary of State for the Home Department, Sir John Simon, upon introducing legislation which would help control the difficulties met by all governments these days. Sir John said:

> If honourable members will take a broad view of the events of the last few years it will be agreed that since the war developments in Europe have tended to let loose extremist doctrines—whether doctrines of the Right or the Left does not matter—which in their application have this special quality, that are essentially intolerant and determined to browbeat and overthrow contrary doctrines. The adherents of these doctrines deny the right of others to hold different opinions. If they succeeded they would do their utmost to stop the expression of different opinions. In the meantime they are ready, if not to use, at least to display force to spread their own views. In contrast with this the great characteristic of British political life is its tolerance. All the things which we prize—freedom of opinion, freedom of speech, and freedom of meeting—are all based on our conception of political and civic toleration. . . .
> I am not discussing whether it is communists who make fascists or fascists who make communists. That is not the point. The point is that we should do our best to act evenhandedly in the matter and base ourselves on general principles.

That is all that I ask from this government. I am quite confident that the Minister of Justice must be stirred by an appeal to the traditions of Liberalism, but I would say to him that he cannot avoid the heavy responsibilities which are placed upon him in his position to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: He can take the responsibility.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well. I assume he must! I have said that again and again. But we have had fourteen months of waiting; fourteen months during which there have been these arrests, which I think most of us would call illegal arrests; fourteen months in which there has been suppression of freedom; fourteen months in which homes have been closed; fourteen months in which people in one province in this dominion have not been allowed to exercise their inherent rights as British subjects. How much longer are we going to wait? It is said, "Let the minister decide." Of course, he will have to decide; the government will have to decide. But as I said in my opening remarks, I am here to present these facts in the parliament of Canada where I think they should be presented. I am here to plead with the Minister of Justice and the government, that they refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada and thus give relief to a numerous class of the citizens of Canada.

Mr. L. D. TREMBLAY (Dorchester): I must express surprise at the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who certainly has no mandate whatever to express the feeling of the province of Quebec, but who seems so much interested in something that has happened in that province. We in this house—quite a few of us—who have been elected by the citizens of the only French province in this confederation think we are authorized to speak in the name of our constituents. I realize perfectly well that I am just a young member of this house, elected for the first time in 1935. Before coming to this house I was aware that Winnipeg North Centre had a brilliant representative in parliament, but we never thought he was authorized to speak in the name of our province.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a question of privilege. I was not speaking in the name of the province of Quebec; I was speaking as a citizen of Canada.

Mr. TREMBLAY: I like to hear my hon. colleague say what he has just said, but I contend that we in the province of Quebec are certainly as much authorized to express our own feeling as is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Quite so.

Mr. TREMBLAY: I am glad the hon. gentleman admits that, and he is only logical in doing so. I have my own personal opinion with regard to the "padlock" law, and the hon. member has a right to his own opinion. I say, however, that after his appeals to bonne entente, to good will among Canadians, he should not bring before the house a question that concerns exclusively the province of Quebec. If a majority of the citizens of my own province think they should oppose those who preach opinions which we do not approve in that province; if they think that we should have such a law, it is up to them because we are still living in a democracy, and while I do not think the majority should dictate, at the same time the will of the majority should prevail.

The hon. gentleman said that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) who is from the province of Quebec, should assume the responsibility. I know the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre well enough to believe he will recognize that we in the province of Quebec have reasons to be proud of the Minister of Justice. Personally I am proud of the fact that in the House of Commons the majority, to whatever party individual members may belong, have recognized the merits, the knowledge and the distinction of our leader in the province of Quebec, the Minister of Justice. Only on Saturday it was my privilege to witness the way in which the Minister of Justice is appreciated on all sides. That is a satisfaction to us. Every one will admit that he has done in the past, is doing now and in the future will continue to do his duty in attempting to unify the nine provinces of the Dominion of Canada. But, in my opinion, it is wrong for an hon. member of this house to rise in his place and discuss a question that concerns more particularly a minority, but an important minority in our great dominion.

In the province of Quebec we are different from our fellow citizens of the other provinces of this dominion. But surely no one in this house will forget that we love British institutions; we are attached to them; we owe our liberty to British institutions. But we do not like that someone outside the province should try to control the opinions of our province. I do not want to express my own opinion of the "padlock" law, but I say to this house, Please do not interfere with whatever the province of Quebec thinks. We still have more confidence in the Minister of Justice than in the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, although we appreciate him.

Mr. C. G. MacNEIL (Vancouver North): May I point out to the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Tremblay) that the question of preserving our fundamental civil liberties is a question to be determined by this parliament. If we were asked what constitutes the civil liberties we are pledged to uphold in this parliament, we would probably say that in this country we have freedom of speech and expression, freedom of lawful assembly, a free press and generally complete freedom to do anything which is not a quite unreasonable interference with our fellows. An authority on constitutional law states, "The liberty of the subject results from the principle that he may do as he pleases, provided he does not commit breaches of the substantive law or infringe the legal rights of others." May I point out to my hon. friend the words of Mr. Justice Cannon, appearing in Votes and Proceedings of March 4 last, page 48:

> Under the British system, which is ours, no political party can erect a prohibitory barrier to prevent the electors from getting information concerning the policy of the government.

He was referring to Bill No. 9 of the Alberta legislature, entitled "An act to ensure the publication of accurate news and information." He continues:

Freedom of discussion is essential to enlighten public opinion in a democratic state; it cannot be curtailed without affecting the right of the people to be informed through sources independent of the government concerning matters of public interest. There must be an untrammelled publication of the news and political opinions of the political parties contending for ascendancy. As stated in the preamble of the British North America Act, our constitution is and will remain, unless radically changed, "similar in principle to that of the United Kingdom." At the time of confederation the United Kingdom was a democracy.

I ask my hon. friend to note this:

Democracy cannot be maintained without its foundation: free public opinion and free discussion throughout the nation of all matters affecting the state within the limits set by the criminal code and the common law.

He goes on to say further, and this sentence may be of special interest to my hon. friend:

The federal parliament is the sole authority to curtail, if deemed expedient and in the public interest, the freedom of the press and the equal rights in that respect of all citizens throughout the dominion. These subjects were matters of criminal law before confederation, have been recognized by parliament as criminal matters and have been expressly dealt with by the criminal code. No province has the power to reduce in that province the political rights of its citizens as compared with those enjoyed by the citizens of other provinces of Canada.

I submit that this act, the "act to protect the province against communistic propaganda," assented to on March 24, 1937, infringes all these rights which I have mentioned, the right of freedom of speech, freedom of expression and of assembly, the right of presumption of innocence before the law; and on every count does so by flagrant invasion of dominion jurisdiction. Over a year has passed since that law was put into force. Ample evidence has been secured to show the manner of its application and the degree in which it has been employed to violate fundamental democratic rights. According to statistics I have secured from the Civil Liberties Union of Montreal there have been five padlockings and 124 raids and seizures, including two or three in the city of Quebec. And these figures do not include raids and seizures outside the cities of Montreal and Quebec which have been reported in the Montreal Star. In not a single instance have any of the persons or organizations affected been charged with any offence under due process of law, or convicted. These incidents can be described only as acts of terrorism.

[Mr. MacNeil.]

It has been contended by those who defend this legislation that it is necessary to suppress dangerous but undefined communistic or bolshevistic propaganda. I propose to show that in its application it has been seized as a convenient instrument to persecute those whose views do not meet with the approval of the premier of Quebec.

On February 23, Hon. Mr. Bouchard, leader of the Liberal party in the province of Quebec, publicly complained that copies of his newspaper, En Avant, had been seized under the padlock law in a raid in Montreal, and that the provincial police refused to return them. On March 23 some person or persons unknown entered the Montreal apartment of John MacCormac, Montreal correspondent of the New York Times, whose comments on the Quebec situation had been the cause of bitter resentment on the part of the premier of Quebec. Nothing was taken, but Mr. MacCormac's papers were thoroughly searched. The explanations offered by the provincial police were highly unsatisfactory.

Early in April the provincial police invaded the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation provincial headquarters, carefully inspected a display of posters, and issued a warning that the office was under close surveillance. On February 5, a parade of cars with banners in support of the boycott upon Japanese goods, organized by the Quebec Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the League for Peace and Democracy, was stopped by the "red squad" and the banners confiscated. Several previous parades had been held without interference. Some months ago the chief of police at Quebec city refused in writing to allow the Grande Ligne Baptist mission to distribute the New Testament by colportage. This mission was warned not to hold prayer meetings in private houses, under threats that these private houses would be padlocked. Several raids were made upon the Montreal headquarters of the Canadian friends of the Soviet Union, and the premises were padlocked as a result. The material seized included:

Ten issues of Saturday Night.

Several publications of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Pamphlets and posters distributed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who are agents of Intourist.

Four copies of Current History, one copy of which was returned, apparently, because it contained no article on Russia.

Eighty issues of The New Commonwealth.

Twelve issues of The New Republic.

Pamphlets containing the speeches of Major A. S. Hooper of London, England delivered before the Military Institute of Canada at Victoria.

A projector for slides and film strips.

Four thousand letterheads of the World Committee of Friends of the Soviet Union, and some of its envelopes.

Reports of the 1936 and 1937 congresses of peace and friendship in London, England.

A framed coloured view of the city of Tiflis, and another of a cathedral at Leningrad.

In addition, they took the trousers and small change of the unfortunate secretary.

In Montreal in February the community hall of the Church of all Nations, United Church of Canada, was visited by four detectives who seized publicity material relating to a concert. It was stated then that they intended to close up what they called "Katsunoff's International Brigade," by which they evidently meant the International Brotherhood, one of the religious activities of the church under the superintendence of the Rev. R. G. Katsunoff, D.D. Now that is the direct application of the law.

It has not been directed only at those suspected of communistic activities. May I indicate a few of the trade union officials whose homes have been raided under this act: Among others, the Jewish cultural centre and the Young Communist League; A. Perrault, E. Coté and Victor Larouche, president, secretary and officer of the Quebec Federation of the Unemployed; Alex. Gault, delegate of the Plumbers' Union to the Montreal Trades and Labour Council; Sidney Sarkin, business agent of local 116 of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Abraham Rosenberg, official of the same union and delegate to the Jewish Congress of Culture in Paris, 1937; and E. Mitchell, financial secretary of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. All these were between January 11 and 14. Others were: C. Perry member of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, provincial council and organizer for the Montreal district; Adelard Duval; Paul Gauthier; Napoleon Nadeau; L. Vallières; L. Shaip; Berthe Caron; Georges Caron; Willibrod Couturier, president of the Butchers' Union; the Jewish Workers' Library; E. Robert, and Lucien Dufour, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers and business agent for the Committee of Industrial Organization. So I might submit a long list indicating how trade union officials have had their homes invaded without due process of law.

There has been a further form of intimidation which has made it difficult for proprietors of public halls to permit ordinary meetings to be held. On February 10, Reverend R. B. Y. Scott, professor of the United Church theological college, was informed that a meeting which he was to have addressed, on The Perils of Fascism in Quebec, had been cancelled because the proprietors of the Jewish Educational Institution, where it was to have been held, had been visited by an investigator, apparently from the provincial police, and they feared that their building might be padlocked. A week earlier a similar meeting which was to have been addressed by Mr. J. K. Meigler, counsel for the Civic Liberties Union, also had been cancelled on similar grounds. Doctor Scott, on behalf of the Civil Liberties Union, also applied for permission to use the hall of the Montreal high school for a meeting of members of the union. The principal gave her consent, but the assistant superintendent referred the matter to the officials of the Protestant board of school commissioners. Permission ultimately was rejected on the ground that the high school might be padlocked.

As hon. members are aware, two months ago the McGill university social problems club arranged a series of meetings at which representatives of all parties were to present their views. Mr. Arcand, leader of the fascist party, had spoken. Mr. Tim Buck of the communist party was to be next. The students' council, however, refused the use of McGill Union for fear it would be padlocked. The student body has since voted unanimously for the repeal or disallowance of the "padlock" act and has requested the university authorities to restore freedom of discussion on the campus. It has been contended by Mr. Duplessis and others that this law is similar to the padlocking of disorderly houses. They have omitted to add, however, that disorderly houses can be padlocked only if their owners are convicted, in open court, of a defined offence.

I wish to direct attention to the character of the men who have courageously led the opposition to this infamous law. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) has mentioned, Doctor Lighthall is president of the union. I wish to refer also to Mr. R. L. Calder, K.C., who has publicly declared his intention to devote the balance of his career to the fight in defence of civil liberties. I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Mr. Calder years ago and heard him make an eloquent and impressive plea before one of the largest gatherings of ex-service men ever held in the dominion. At that time he pleaded for a better understanding of the problems of the French-Canadian people, and made a noteworthy contribution toward allaying the bitterness which was in evidence at that time, arising from the conscription issue. I consider it to be quite consistent with the ideals which he championed at that time that he should now appeal to the Canadian people in terms of Canadian unity and in defence of the liberty of the subject.

May I quote from an editorial appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press, which says:

> No recent visitor to Winnipeg has made so deep an impression upon the public mind as Mr. R. L. Calder, K.C., of Montreal; nor is it easy to remember a case pleaded with more cogent force than his plea for the federal disallowance of the infamous Quebec padlock law which—make no mistake about it—is a matter of deep concern to the whole dominion. . . . The padlock law strikes at the heart of those civil liberties without which Canada cannot exist; and without which, it is pertinent to point out, the guaranteed position of Quebec itself in confederation would become untenable. The principle of the padlock law is two-edged. Its present form may, or may not, command the admiration of the majority of the people of Quebec. But in another form it may take a shape which would be distasteful and repugnant to them who, having swallowed the first, would perforce accept the other also. . . .
> Mr. Calder is not a communist or an atheist. He is a native of Quebec province, a Roman Catholic, a student of both Laval and McGill universities, a believer in capitalism, a distinguished member of the Quebec bar, a former crown prosecutor of the city of Montreal. He joined the C.E.F. in 1915, and won the military cross at Amiens when serving with the 13th Highlanders. . . . This is not the record of a fly-by-night agitator out to destroy the structure of Canadian society. It is the record of a Canadian citizen of whom this country has every reason to be proud. He has lived in Quebec province all his life, and it is because of this history that his argument commands very special attention.

Similar editorials appeared in practically all the principal dailies across western Canada. I submit, Mr. Speaker, on these grounds, that this action on the part of the Duplessis government is a direct challenge to the principles of Liberalism professed by the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches. It is more than that; it is a direct challenge to our democracy and national unity. I submit further that there is only one appropriate answer which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) can give to our plea; that is, the assurance of definite protection for those who have been deprived of those fundamental civil liberties guaranteed them under our constitution.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, coming from northern Ontario where we have had to deal sometimes with strikes and labour troubles, I must state at the outset that I am absolutely intolerant of intolerance. I have listened attentively to the previous speakers, and I must say that in some particulars I believe the padlock law now under discussion goes too far, while in other particulars it does not go far enough.

As far as I am concerned I shall never have any patience with communism, for a very simple reason. It is a poison which is absolutely foreign to the mentality of the great majority of the Canadian and British peoples. It is of no use for us to try to delude ourselves with the belief that communism is simply a political philosophy. It goes much deeper than that. I have not the intention of analysing the studies of Karl Marx as they were applied in the Russian revolution, nor have I any intention of discussing the causes of that revolution. If the leaders at that time had been satisfied to try their experiment in their own country, that would have been satisfactory to me. But the leaders of the Russian revolution made it a religion; they decided that they were going to spread that gospel into every section of the civilized world, and they have their apostles here.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago a reference was directed to me. I should like to know whether or not this reference is also directed to me.

Mr. BRADETTE: During the twelve years I have been in this house, Mr. Speaker, I have never made a personal allusion.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am glad to hear that.

Mr. BRADETTE: I repeat that communism was a virus that might have been satisfactory to a small minority of the Russian people—

Mr. SPEAKER: Eleven o'clock.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
