In that spirit I am willing to withdraw my amendment, without withdrawing the sentiments I have expressed on behalf of the public interest and without withdrawing my assertion and enunciation of concern for the public interest, and about the fact that the public interest is not protected here. I do not withdraw my concern that the wording of the letter of the law seems to be weighted in favour of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and against the private operators. However, as I say, in the interests of trying to expedite the passage of this subclause, in cooperation with the minister—and she has certainly co-operated with me—I am willing to withdraw my amendment. That does not necessarily mean I will be in favour of the new amendment to be proposed. I will withhold judgment in that regard until I am acquainted with the precise wording of the amendment. If it does not satisfy me so far as the public interest is concerned, I beg the indulgence of the committee and the minister to raise the subject again.

At this point, to clear the way for a possilbe compromise and the expedition of this clause of the legislation, I will ask, with your permission and the permission of the committee, to withdraw the amendment I moved yesterday.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: The unanimous consent of the committee will be required for the hon. member to withdraw his amendment. Does the committee give that unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Sherman) asks us to accept the withdrawal of his amendment in order for another one to be introduced.

If the hon. member wants to withdraw an amendment, in order to move another one, or to have another one introduced, it means that he is aware that another amendment will be moved.

But he does not tell us what the new amendment will consist of; he does not read it to us, so that we are unable to tell which of the two would be the better one, or which of the two we must favour.

That is why we may perhaps accept the withdrawal. If the amendment is withdrawn, it cannot be introduced again, for an amendment may be moved only once. If we are not satisfied with the second one, the first one, having been withdrawn, cannot be introduced again, and we are left with nothing.

I wonder, if before asking leave to withdraw his amendment, the hon. member for Winnipeg South could not read the other amendment which will be presented, in order that we may make a decision in that connection. If not, Mr. Chairman, I think that I will have to object to the withdrawal of that amendment, unless the other amendment to be proposed instead is read to us.

[English]

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe certainly has a valid point. I will, with the committee's permission and indulgence, either read or make arrangements to have read the proposed amendment that would take the place of mine. I was not in a position to do that at the moment I was speaking. If I may have a minute or two, Mr. Chairman, I will arrange that.

The amendment which is proposed and which would take the place of my original amendment—and it will not be moved by me but by another member of this party—would be the following:

That clause 2 (h) of Bill C-163 be amended by deleting same and substituting therefor:

(h) "where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, it shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service;"

In other words, the amendment is an extension, as far as the wording is concerned, of my amendment. My amendment ended at the word "interest"; it said that when such a conflict arises, it shall be resolved in the public interest. This amendment goes on to say:

—it shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service;

[Mr. Grégoire.]

The Chairman: Does the committee now give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Winnipeg South to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Sherman) withdrawn.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, what is there possibly left to say or do, except present the amendment to the committee, which I accordingly do. I have made my points in previous speeches and we had a lengthy discussion yesterday on the question, so I do not feel it needs extra words from me at this particular time.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the debate on this point has been interesting but I would like a little further explanation with regard to the phrase which has been added, which reads that "paramount consideration" shall be given to the public service. Everything hinges on the word "paramount". Does that mean "overriding"? I am not certain you can say that it shall be resolved in the public interest, and then immediately go on to say the public service shall take precedence over that. Does this not bring us back to the original provision in the bill? I have not had enough time to consider it, but perhaps if we could have a short debate on this issue my thinking would be clarified. I am just urging some keener minds to give us the benefit of their advice.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it is true that the word "paramount" is the one that gives most trouble to members of the committee. I have checked with the dictionary which I obtained from the table, which says that "paramount" can mean either "supreme" or "superior". I suggest that read in the light of the whole sentence, the amendment does not put the public system invariably in the position of winning that particular battle, but rather it is the public interest that must be considered; and those who will have to judge that question are to be the council. They will have to give paramount consideration, or superior consideration, to the objectives of the national broadcasting system. I think that the word "paramount" has, in the eyes of the law, acquired precision by interpretation and I do not think it bears the interpretation that my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre suggests.

To me it is not a matter of supremacy but one of superiority. I have looked at the definitions in the "supremacy" and "superiority" fields. "Supreme", for example, means "the greatest possible", "uttermost", "extreme", "last and greatest" or "most important". I think all those definitions show some limitation, and suggest that "paramount" would not invariably, or 100 per cent, throw the decision in any conflict in favour of, say, the C.B.C. as opposed to private interests.

After all, the first thing the council must consider in its decision in any conflict is the public interest. They must say: We have one guide line, namely that the people of Canada, through the C.B.C., are spending a great deal of money on the public service. So that some consideration, in this case paramount consideration, must be given to that element.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, in view of the definition which the hon. member for Halifax read to us, it appears that his intent is that a preference should be given to the objectives of the publicly owned system, but not necessarily that it should be overriding in all instances. I suggest to him that perhaps his intention could be made completely clear by changing the wording of the amendment slightly to read "but a preference shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service", if that is his intention. Perhaps in view of the ambiguity of the word "objectives" it would be desirable to add that the objectives are those set out in this particular clause, to make it clear that what we are talking about when we use the word "objectives" are the objectives set out in subclause (g).

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I am appalled at the sudden switch we have observed this afternoon in the stance of the Conservative party.

I believe that last night they fought one of the best battles in a long time on what could be called a conservative position. At that time we in this party remained silent because the members of the Conservative party were doing so well there was nothing to contribute to the brave and stirring speeches of the various members who held forth on behalf of that party, and its approach to private and public broadcasting. It was like the springtime of that party, as if they had been reborn and refurbished for the battle. However this afternoon we find that the blasts of winter have moved in again. The thaw was very short lived indeed. I have no proof but I suspect they have received telegrams from the hon. member for Royal and the hon. member for Prince some time between last night's debate and the time this afternoon when the amendment was moved, because we heard several times last evening that those two hon. members were absent. Their absence was quite noticeable in the calibre of the debate and the approach that was taken. Yet this afternoon the suggestion was made that an amendment is about to be presented which will undo all of the good work done last night, which will vitiate and eliminate all the brave words uttered last evening, and which will not alter one iota the government's intent when subclause (h) was written into the bill presented by the government. The subclause reads that the objectives of the national broadcasting service must prevail, and the amendment states that these same objectives must be paramount. The meaning of the word "paramount" is perfectly clear. It does not mean that the objectives are to be considered, discussed and taken under advisement, but rather that they shall and must prevail. If the subamendment is in fact presented, then we are no further ahead than we were before. If it is presented, I would be prepared to move an amendment to the subamendment to delete these words so as to enable us to vote on the wording that the public consideration be paramount in any dispute between the public and the private sectors of the broadcasting service.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, it must be obvious by now that the compromise proposal submitted by the hon. member for Halifax will not be acceptable to most of those who find the wording in the bill before us acceptable. I agree with the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke that the substantial effect of the proposal now before us is the same as that of the original clause in the bill. There is no point in trying to evade this simple, stark fact, and one must make one's decision on the basis of his judgment as to what would be in the public interest, whether it would be in the public interest for the objectives of the national broadcasting service to be considered paramount as opposed to the interests of the private sector of broadcasting.

If the proposal of the hon. member for Halifax is put before us formally, I certainly intend to support it because the wording is in effect the same as that of subclause (h). But I must say also that I cannot understand the concern expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South. It is not that I disagree with the sentiments he expressed last night in the concluding sentence of his speech. I refer to the following sentence as recorded at page 6159 of yesterday's Hansard:

> It is the public interest that is important, not the interests of the national broadcasting service or its objectives, nor the interests of private broadcasters or their objectives.

I agree with the expression of this opinion, but it seems to me that when one looks at subclause (g) and subclause (h) taken together it appears that in subclause (g) it is the intention of parliament to impose certain objectives on the national broadcasting service. Obviously we have done so because we feel it is in the public interest for the national broadcasting service to have certain stated objectives to follow and to implement. If it is in the public interest to direct these objectives to the national broadcasting service, it follows that in the implementation of this imposed obligation or responsibility we must also give the national broadcasting service paramount authority in any conflict that may arise between the public and the private sectors of our broadcasting system.

I really think this is so clear and obvious that it hardly requires saying that the Canadian Radio Commission, which we will establish through the medium of this bill will receive a delegation of power from parliament. It will hold a position of public trust for the purpose of protecting the public interest. There is nothing wrong with repeating the words "protecting the public interest" in this clause, but it is redundant because it is already contained in and woven through the previous clauses of the bill.

I accept the wording in subclause (h) as it is in the bill. I could also accept any of the amendments to this subclause that have been proposed. I see nothing wrong with the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg South. As to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halifax, it is my view that it does not alter the intent of the original wording.

I apologize if I have offended the sensibilities of any hon. members, but I do not understand the point of the discussion which we have had in the past hour.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Are we to understand that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) has or has not presented an amendment? In fact, he suggested that he would present one, he handed over some copies, but the Chair did not read the amendment. Are we discussing the amendment to clause 2 (h) which has not been presented by the hon. member for Halifax but which was supposed to be?

I would like to obtain some explanations in that connection.

[English]

The Chairman: The amendment submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg South has been withdrawn. The hon. member for Halifax moved the following amendment:

> —that clause 2 (h) of Bill No. C-163 be amended by deleting same and substituting therefor: "(h) where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, it shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service."

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I understood that the hon. member for Lapointe did not agree to the withdrawal of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg South, but that the hon. member for Winnipeg South put before the house an amendment he was considering proposing if the house consented to the withdrawal of the original amendment. We are still on the original amendment moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South.

The Chairman: My understanding of the proceedings was that the hon. member for Winnipeg South asked for permission to withdraw his amendment. He then suggested the new amendment that would be moved, which appeared to be agreeable to the hon. member for Lapointe. The amendment which I just read was then moved by the hon. member for Halifax.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Again, I know my remarks may complicate matters, but they are necessary. Before defining the word "paramount", the hon. member for Halifax consulted the dictionary in order to give an exact definition. In my opinion, we should also know the official definition and translation of this word.

Therefore, I would ask again that the amendment be read both in English and in French.

[English]

The Chairman: I will ask the Clerk to read the amendment in French.

[And a Clerk at the table having read the amendment as follows:]

[Translation]

Mr. McCleave moves that subclause (h) of clause 2 be deleted and that the following be substituted therefor:

(h) "where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, it shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service;"

[English]

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I am not happy with this paragraph as it is and I am afraid I am not very happy with the proposed amendment. It seems to me that the proposed amendment is contradictory in itself. The amendment provides that a matter shall be resolved in the public interest, but that paramount consideration should be given to the C.B.C. Obviously we are always legislating, we believe, in the public interest. Having said that, how can we qualify it by saying that paramount consideration should be given because obviously if paramount consideration should be given to the C.B.C. it is in the public interest that it should be given. These words therefore are redundant. I do not believe we can pass an amendment containing those words. If members agree that paramount consideration should be given to the C.B.C., and that it is in the public interest, then that is what the clause should say.

I am not so sure that I want to make the subclause that strong. I detect a feeling in the house that hon. members do not want the subclause as strong as it is now without amendment. The indication is now that the objectives of the national broadcasting system must prevail. Perhaps the committee should have spent more time on this clause and had some expert draftsmen present. I do not believe hon. members are very far apart on this matter. The essence of the paragraph appears to be that where all other considerations are equal and it is a choice between giving a station, for instance, to a private network or to the C.B.C., there shall be a slight bias and the matter shall be resolved in favour of the C.B.C. I do not believe any of us contemplate a situation in which we want to give the private network more than the benefit of the balance of probability. There may be some who want to make it much stronger than that. This is what I infer from the speeches that have been made and from the manner in which these amendments have been presented. I suggest, therefore, that we cannot go along with this amendment.

Miss LaMarsh: Who are "we"?

Mr. Nugent: I suggest we should introduce a new amendment which will more clearly express our ideas and the subclause might be allowed to stand. Perhaps after line 35 we should insert the words, "where all other considerations are equal there shall be some slight favour given to the C.B.C." Some wording similar to that would indicate that it is a mere touch of the scales that we want when we are considering the public interest. Perhaps the minister would indicate her own feeling or how far the government wants to go in giving pre-eminence to the C.B.C. I thought there were some very good speeches made last night, some very logical ones, pointing out the dangers in the wording at present. Perhaps some of us are looking at that wording and reading into it more than a court might. The prevailing opinion seems to be that the subclause gives overwhelming preference to the C.B.C. I wonder if the minister would indicate whether I am correct in that view, that the government does not want to give overwhelming preference to the C.B.C. but all things being equal there will be a slight bias in favour of the C.B.C.

Mr. Ryan: I rise to support the view that has been expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I have written an amendment which is in practically the same words he has suggested. I am concerned about the dictionary meaning of the word "paramount", meaning superior or supreme. I would support the suggestions made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. member for St. Paul's so that after the words "in the public interest", I would add the words "when all considerations are deemed equal, the preference shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service."

Mr. Churchill: Would you mind repeating that?

Mr. Ryan: After the words, "it shall be resolved in the public interest", read these words, "when all considerations are deemed equal, the preference shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service."

Canadian Policy on Broadcasting

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to repudiate the last speaker on behalf of the government, and to state that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is quite incorrect in his suggestion. We are miles apart in our understanding. It is very clear that the wording of the committee is there, and that is the wording which the government intended; that is the way the bill was printed. We were prepared to accept an amendment which had been discussed by a number of individuals and which I believe even the hon. member for Halifax had good reason to believe would be supported by other members of his party. Obviously that is not the case, and I should like to say that it is the government's intention to support the committee on broadcasting. We are quite prepared to meet a vote on this matter.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the fact that some members of this party may disagree with regard to wording does not indicate to anyone who has perception that there is any wide divergence of opinion here. Of course I will not mention the divergence of opinion on the other side of the house. I will not draw attention to one very able member over there who is not always in accord with the government's propositions.

Although the minister may get some temporary pleasure out of a partisan attitude, which I never adopt, nevertheless I want to assure her we are fully entitled as members of a committee to look at the wording of bills and make suggestions, whether or not someone's idea has to be altered. This does not matter; we are all here for the same purpose. We have had a very able suggestion put forward as a subamendment from the other side of the house, with which I presume the minister agrees. If she does not, then the Liberal party is in a terrible state. It is divided and it will crash and fall to pieces. I am just waiting to hear the thud as it collapses.

With regard to this amendment, Mr. Chairman, I favour the original amendment that was moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South. I had some doubt about the word "paramount", but the most recent suggestions that we have had from the two members who preceded me—with the exception of the minister—I think clear up that doubt pretty well, and modify the statement. If the committee could now tidy it up and come to some agreement then the minister may find that everyone in the committee is in agreement and that there is no split in one party or the other.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman—

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment before the house that was moved by the hon member for Halifax. If hon. members in all parts of the chamber want to introduce new amendments, perhaps we should vote on this one first.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the advice of the minister, but it has always been my view that it is a perfectly good debating procedure, and is sometimes most helpful, to consider one amendment as opposed to another before we make up our minds on one or the other. Before we come to vote several amendments may be suggested, and I think there is nothing wrong with this.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, I was going to offer my hon. friend from Spadina a word of advice. I have only one comment to make on his proposed amendment, and it is the same comment that I would make on the amendment before us, which reads, in part, "it shall be resolved in the public interest but".

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the proposed amendment should read "it shall be resolved in the public interest by"—in other words, by taking this course of action. In that case the legislation would make sense. I suggest it is not making sense when we say that something "shall be resolved in the public interest but", and then go on to suggest something that modifies this statement. This puts us into a ridiculous position.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I cannot support the amendment of my hon. friend. I am sure that I support the idea behind it, but I do not see how anyone in the committee can support reasoning that resolves something in the public interest, but subject to paramount consideration being given to something else.

I should like to see a vote taken in this committee that decides how strongly we want to favour the C.B.C. in such consideration. I feel that the word "paramount" is too strong. I favour an amendment that reads that "it shall be resolved in the public interest by", preference being given to the C.B.C. where all other considerations are equal. Substantially, Mr. Chairman, that is the wording of the amendment of my hon. friend, I think. Although the wording is changed around somewhat I do not think the essence of it is changed one bit.

I think the committee would have to take a vote on the present wording; any other course would be an anachronism. Although I do not think the committee could accept the present wording, I think it should give some expression of opinion as to whether the consideration should be paramount, or that preference should be given to the C.B.C. where all else is equal.

Perhaps my hon. friend who proposed this amendment would reconsider it and withdraw it. I would also suggest that the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Spadina be revised. Or, Mr. Chairman, if the committee would consider standing this paragraph for a moment I will get together with the hon. member and suggest an amendment so the committee can decide whether or not to give preference to the C.B.C. where all else is equal, or whether the interest of the C.B.C. shall be paramount.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, I really do not see any need to embarrass the official opposition any further by asking one of its members to withdraw the second amendment in a matter of 15 or 20 minutes. The question can be resolved quite quickly if hon. members would move back to the high ground that they occupied last evening when they made their brave stand at that time.

What bothers me about the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax, and the suggestions made pursuant thereto, is that all of this watering down of wording amounts to the same thing. In this bill we are providing that the Canadian broadcasting council will adjudicate in any dispute, yet the committee is now saying that it does not trust the council to keep the public interest paramount in its mind. We are already, in a sense, in contempt of the council that is being set up by this legislation. We do not seem to trust it, so we must bind it to tip the scales in one particular direction.

I suggest it is not correct to say that, all other things being equal, the council should tip the scales a certain way; that if all other things are equal the council should come down on the side of the public interest. We do not need to be told that the interests of the public and the interests of the government forever coincide. We do not need to be told that the interests of the public and the interests of any crown corporation forever coincide. The interests of the public and the interests of the C.B.C. do not necessarily coincide for all time.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I would move the following subamendment:

That the words "but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service" be deleted.

The paragraph can then be considered in terms of the public interest and nothing else.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to know whether I can speak to the amendment or must I speak to the narrow bounds of this subamendment at this time?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The committee is now considering the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke.

• (4:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, this question is becoming quite important because two schools of thought exist here: In case of conflict between the public and the private sectors, some want the objectives of the public network to be paramount. On the other hand, others feel that public interest should be considered and that public good should prevail.

Reading paragraph (h) with the amendment and the subamendment that have been moved, that means that public interest should prevail.

Mr. Chairman, I am in full agreement, because if the objectives of public broadcasting should always have precedence, there will surely occur circumstances where a conflict of interests will arise between the two and where the interests will be so important that it will end in a game of collusion to protect such interests and give rise to collusion, fraud, complicity with the C.B.C., so as to try to protect interests.

I will give a definite example. Before long, the question of broadcasting by satellites will arise. Now, we know that there will be only three satellites on the Canadian territory and only one over Quebec.

Broadcasting by satellite is, of course, something quite significant and the small radio and television stations will not seek to obtain a satellite, it will be rather the purpose of big private interests. However, if there is only one, C.B.C. will say: It is among our objectives to have that satellite. And big private interests will want it also. Therefore, collusion will exist or a risk of collusion, and

I explain what I mean: If we look at clause 39 (1)(m), we can see where that collusion could come into play.

Clause 39, in part, reads as follows:

—subject to any applicable regulations of the council, and for the purpose, the corporation has power to—

That is, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

I read now subclause (m):

—subject to the approval of the governor in council, acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that, in the opinion of a corporation, is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the corporation;

That is, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Which means that the C.B.C. will have the power to acquire shares in any private company and, with regard to satellites, collusion could exist in the sense that a private company—I mentioned one earlier—could set up a corporation for the purpose of putting in orbit a transmission satellite, and the C.B.C., under clause 39(1)(m) could agree to collusion in order to acquire shares in that corporation.

I am going to mention a few facts. Of course, I shall not present now all my evidence, because I shall do so when we come to the consideration of clause 39 (m). But in order to abide by the rules, I shall give an example: We know that the Power Corporation intends to launch such a satellite. If there is a conflict of interests, for instance, if only one satellite can be launched, the C.B.C. will want to have it. Therefore, there will be conflict among the two corporations. If the Power Corporation sets up a new corporation for the purpose of launching a satellite, keeps the majority of the shares and sells some to the C.B.C. under clause 39 (1) (m), then the interests of both corporations will be preserved.

How could this happen? I shall quote a few names which lead me to believe that such collusion may actually exist and is probably going on right now. The Power Corporation appoints its legal adviser president of one of the television stations owned by that corporation, namely channel 7 in Sherbrooke. It is Mr. Claude Frenette, new president of the Liberal Federation of Canada, Quebec section. Some connection is already obvious. But I shall go even further. Those who drafted, four years ago, the manifesto advocating a centralization policy, for a better administration, in the field of mass information media, included among others: Mr. Claude Frenette, legal adviser of the Power Corporation, Mr. Marc Lalonde, present adviser to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), and Mr. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, who was not a member of parliament then, but is now Minister of Justice.

Mr. Johnston: How about tomorrow?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Fernand Cadieux was amongst those who worked on that manifesto, although he did not sign it. He is now a producer with the National Film Board.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that steps are being taken to allow Power Corporation to form a company, to extend its tentacles into higher spheres and to use the stipulations of clause 39 (1) (m), seeing there could be conflicts of interest according to clause 2 (h) between the private and public broadcasting sectors. I say tentacles are being prepared there with a view to founding a private company and, under clause 39 (1) (m), to allowing the C.B.C. to buy shares, and thereby solve the conflict of interests. And who would benefit therefrom? Power Corporation. That is the collusion and the kind of fraud that may follow, that will follow the passing of a measure stating that where a conflict arises between the private and the public sectors, the latter must prevail. Then, having powerful interests at play, the private sector will seek, by the well-known means of collusion and fraud, to protect its interests and the public sector, which is quite vulnerable in this kind of collusion, will be victimized. Why all this? Because, in order to watch over its interests, the private sector will have been forced to make deals with the public sector, the C.B.C. in this case.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this must be denounced. I cannot obviously go into all the details now. I shall undertake to do so when we come to clause 39 (1) (m).

I should like simply today to draw the attention of the committee to the possible consequences of such a provision, which always decides in favour of the public sector and can and will lead to some kind of collusion like that one.

The same thing happened in the case of the Canadian Pacific scandal 100 years ago, when the public sector was the victim of a collusion of that kind.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that for that reason I will wait until we come to clause 39 (1) (m) to bring in more precise details, which may have an effect on several members.

Then I shall be in order, for I am afraid I would be digressing somewhat from the subject before the committee if I referred to this now. Nevertheless, I believe those precisions should be sufficient for us to be on guard against a provision which will encourage the private sector to collude with the public sector, since it is stated that where any conflict of interest arises, the objectives of the public sector must prevail.

• (4:20 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Nugent: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot support the subamendment. If I interpret it correctly, it says in so many words that a conflict between the private and public sectors of broadcasting shall be resolved in the public interest. Paragraph (h) begins with the words, "where any conflict arises". The purport of the paragraph is that where any such conflict arises it shall be resolved in the public interest. If that is not its meaning, then in the name of heaven on what basis does the Board of Broadcast Governors decide any question that comes before it? Surely any decision should be in the public interest. Surely that is the basis of all that body's decisions.

The subamendment seeks to say that where there is a conflict between the public and private sectors of broadcasting, the public interest shall prevail, the inference being that where there is no conflict, the public interest shall not prevail. Obviously that is silly. If the public interest is to be a deciding factor in the decisions of the board, why do we turn around and say that it must look after the public interest only where there is a conflict. This raises doubts as to whether those concerned would always use the public interest as a criteria—whether, as public spirited men they would not always put it first in any case.

My view is that we cannot allow this subclause to pass without amendment, and to my way of thinking there is no point in simply including an amendment which says that we in this house are concerned about the public interest and believe the public interest should be paramount. We would accomplish nothing by an approach of this kind. As the subclause stands it is really a declaration by the government that the C.B.C. should always have preference in the case of a dispute, and we on this side feel it is too strongly worded. I hope the hon. member concerned will withdraw his amendment. I intend to vote against it for the reasons I have advanced, and then to support an amendment the effect of which would be to soften the preference afforded to the C.B.C., in the hope that it will be generally supported.

Mr. Johnston: May I ask whether the hon. member's comments about the subamendment I moved would apply also to the amendment which was before the committee last evening, and in connection with which many of his hon. friends spoke so well?

Mr. Nugent: I will check the amendment of last night. I believe that what the hon. member has said is substantially correct. I have spoken to several of my hon. friends and they are not much enamoured of the phrase "it will be resolved in the public interest" because it merely reiterates something which is a basis of every decision taken in these circumstances. No decision has yet been taken and, as I say, I hope we can dispose of this matter.

Mr. Pugh: Having listened to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and discussed this matter with a number of people, I cannot help feeling that, by the inclusion of subclause (h), we are searching for possible conflicts, and then deciding that should conflicts arise a decision must be awarded in favour of the national broadcasting system.

It seems to me that subclause (h) might well be struck out altogether. By its inclusion we are suggesting that there are bound to be conflicts and that a determination must be made in favour of the C.B.C. Of course there will be conflicts; everyone knows that. But I cannot see that matters will be helped by anticipating them in a subclause of the bill. Should the government still feel there is a need for something to be written into the legislation, I suggest words on the following lines: "It shall be deemed that the best interest of the public is served when the objectives of the national broadcasting policy shall prevail." Obviously as the bill now stands the interests of the national broadcasting service must always prevail. If the bill were weighted in favour of the private interests then the private interests would win out. We should remember that a regulatory body is being set up to adjudicate on these questions. Having set forth the objectives of the national service in the bill, as we have done, the regulatory body is bound to take account of those objectives and would be unable to find in favour of the private services. Would it not be possible to get together and decide on a form of words which did not offend anybody?

Miss LaMarsh: We did.

Mr. Pugh: Perhaps the best thing to do would be to throw out the whole subclause. I am not at all sure that the minister herself would not like to see this happen.

Mr. Aiken: I have not taken part in the debate so far today, though I did speak briefly last night. Listening to the discussion of this subclause it seems to me we have got ourselves into a somewhat ridiculous impasse and that our procedure ought to provide us with a way out.

Miss LaMarsh: It does: Vote.

Mr. Aiken: It is obvious that there is a division of opinion, but it seems to me there is a point at which there could be a meeting of minds. There seems to be an effort in this direction and I would not say it is entirely in one part of the house rather than another. Several members on the minister's side feel that this subclause could be improved, and there are others over here who believe it ought to be improved.

Possibly if some sensible procedure were followed we could arrive at a wording which would be acceptable to members on both sides. I rise merely to point out that the main objection to the subclause arises from the last two words "must prevail". I do not intend to propose a further amendment—there have been half a dozen already, most of them along the same lines. Everyone agrees, I think, that there should be some imbalance toward the national broadcasting system, but this phrase to the effect that the cause of the national broadcasting system must prevail is altogether too strong. If we could agree to soften those words we would be ad idem here instead of spending the next half hour voting on the subamendment, voting on the amendment and then considering a further amendment which I understand is to be produced, followed possibly by a further subamendment. Let us suppose they are all thrown out. We would be back considering the original clause, and merely voting on that, for or against, would satisfy no one. I feel the minister should suggest some way out of this impasse. She says she is satisfied with the present wording but it must be obvious that even if she is satisfied a large number of hon. members in this committee are not. It is my belief that this could be worded in such a way that it could be brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

An hon. Member: Let us have a vote.

Mr. Aiken: My hon. friend says, let us have a vote. That is a great expression, but it very seldom settles anything when you do not know exactly what you are voting on.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, in case it may be of some assistance to hon. members voting on this subamendment I would like to point out that I shall be suggesting an amendment later. It will be to the effect that between the words "system" and "the" in line 35 there be inserted the phrase "all other factors being equal." In other words where there is a conflict between the two systems and everything else seems equal, then the legislation would say that the objectives of the national broadcasting system must prevail. As suggested now there could be a conflict where 10 per cent of the argument is in favour of the public part and 90 per cent in favour of the private, and this subclause could be taken as a direction that since there exists conflict at all, the public broadcasting service must prevail. I believe my suggested amendment would bring the legislation to the reasonable level which we are all seeking.

Subamendment (Mr. Johnston) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 64.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment on the amendment that has been moved by the hon. member for Halifax, and in particular on the word "paramount" that appears therein. I wish to point out that I did not speak last night on subclause (h). I thought the amendment brought in by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre should have been passed by the committee, and I would have voted for it had it been put. Now, however, we have this amendment with the word "paramount" in it.

It seems to me that whenever anyone brings up the subject of community antenna television in relation to the radio and television world of Canada somebody immediately screams that most of the cable systems are owned by foreigners, and drags in the name of Famous Players. Famous Players (Canada) Corporation is a Canadian organization and has been recognized by the laws of the land. After they have done a little bit of screaming about C.A.T.V. systems being owned by Famous Players (Canada) Corporation they come through with the statement that Famous Players jumps to the whip of Paramount Pictures of California, and suggest that Paramount is in supreme control of C.A.T.V. operations in Canada. If those people want to criticize C.A.T.V. on the grounds that the Paramount organization is in supreme control of a Canadian corporation with an entirely different name, how can they stand up now and argue that paramount does not mean paramount?

Most of the time reference is made to Paramount Pictures, and it is emphasized that it is in supreme control of its subsidiary organizations, and that Paramount does as it wishes. I have never agreed with that argument in the past, but if there are people going to argue that Paramount Pictures is supreme as shown by its name, how are they going to argue that "paramount" appearing in this amendment does not mean "supreme" and "paramount"?

I am opposed to the meaning of this amendment in that it gives the whip hand to the publicly owned sector of the radio and television world of Canada. It is interesting that the last two words in subclause (h) are "must prevail." On numerous occasions we have been told that clause 2 is only declaratory. The Secretary of State herself told the hon. member for Lapointe that it is only declaratory, that it is not compulsory, when he was protesting on the subclause with regard to ownership of Canadian broadcasting systems. But let me show you the velvet glove on the iron hand.

Clause 2(b) contains the words "should be effectively owned." We are told that this is only declaratory. Then in subclause (c) we have these words, "all persons licensed to carry on broadcasting undertakings have a responsibility." That might just as well read, "should exercise the responsibility inherent in the licence." In subclause (d) we have the phrase, "the programming...should be varied." I repeat "should be." Then in subclause (e) we are told "all Canadians are entitled." This is simply declaratory; the minister says it is only declaratory. Then in subclause (f) we are told "there should be provided." I repeat "should be"—just declaratory, just declaratory.

Then in subclause (g) we have "the national broadcasting service should." This is just declaratory; the minister says so. Then in subclause (i) we have "facilities should be provided"—just declaratory, just declaratory. Then in subclause (j) we come to "the regulation and supervision of the Canadian broadcasting system should be flexible"—just declaratory, just declaratory.

I have shown you the velvet glove. Now look at the iron fist in subclause (h), and in this amendment which would say that the desires of the publicly owned broadcasting system must prevail. There is no auxiliary verb "should" in there. I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka when they state that this has got to be softened. I agree with the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke when he points out that the desires and demands of the publicly owned system in the Canadian radio and television world do not always coincide with the public interest.

There is a great majority in this country that cannot understand much of the programming being put on by the C.B.C., and I for one will not stand here and vote for any declaration that the desires, wishes and demands of the publicly owned sector in radio and television shall prevail, must prevail, any time there is a conflict with the private sector. This should be decided in the public interest and on no other basis. That the C.B.C. must be paramount should not appear in any legislation brought in by this cabinet. I could not support any reference to the C.B.C. being paramount, and I cannot support a subclause which says that its desires must prevail. All those words "should be" make the velvet glove, but I think I have pointed out how the velvet glove is on an iron hand. I cannot support subclause (h) the way it stands. I could have supported the amendment brought in last night by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The question is on the following motion by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave):

That clause 2(h) of Bill C-163 be amended by deleting same and substituting therefor:

"(h) where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, it shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service."

Amendment (Mr. McCleave) agreed to: Yeas, 54; Nays, 22.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment carried. Shall the subclause as amended carry?

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I have not tried to figure out—

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I understood that when this particular amendment was placed before the committee it was moved by the hon. member for Halifax that clause 2(h) of Bill C-163 be amended by deleting the same and substituting therefor the new subclause (h). That now having been passed, subclause (h) has been passed by the committee.

Mr. Churchill: Oh, no.

Mr. Nugent: Not only has the subclause not been passed, but obviously the clause has not been passed as amended.

Miss LaMarsh: There is no subclause as amended, other than what we just voted on.

Mr. Aiken: The chairman just called it.

Miss LaMarsh: And that is why I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Nugent: I do not think it matters what the minister says has happened, because of the words used. What in fact was voted on represents only part of the subclause. The subclause was repeated and only the last line was deleted. So, the subclause was amended and we voted only on the amendment, not on the subclause.

Miss LaMarsh: Read what it says.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, you called the subclause as amended and I wish to speak on it.

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to ask for a ruling on this, Mr. Chairman. I do not believe there can be any further amendment. I believe subclause (h) has carried.

Mr. Prittie: Yes.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It is the opinion of the Chair that after this amendment has been moved and accepted it is not possible to amend it again because it appears to be a complete amendment.

Mr. Nugent: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that most of us in this committee feel that the Chair called the question on the amendment, not as to whether the subclause should pass as amended. It is my belief that whenever there is an amendment a vote is called, but certainly those of us who voted for or against this amendment felt there would be an opportunity to vote for or against the subclause as amended and that there is always room for another amendment.

Miss LaMarsh: That is not true.

Mr. Nugent: Until the subclause has been voted on it has not been disposed of by the committee, and certainly there has been no vote called in this committee on the subclause as amended or on the clause itself. The only vote called was on the amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There may be a technicality involved and I am wondering whether the committee would agree that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona should give his opinion.

Miss LaMarsh: Give his opinion? I am always happy to hear the hon. member's opinion, but the rules of the house and parliamentary procedure do not happen to allow that. I have before me a copy of what was sent around the committee, which was read to the committee by the chairman, and which I am sure the record will show. It is as I read it previously. The subclause was deleted by that amendment and there was a substitution. Our parliamentary rules do not permit this subclause, having been passed, being amended ad nauseam, or subamended again. I would therefore again ask for a ruling from the Chair in respect of whether this subclause has been passed.

Mr. Nugent: Would the hon. minister indicate whether she heard the Chair call for a vote on the amendment?

Miss LaMarsh: I suggest the Chair called a vote on the motion to amend.

Mr. Nugent: Then we still have to vote on the subclause.

Miss LaMarsh: The chairman read the whole thing, beginning with "where any conflict arises—"

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, my substantial interest is that we get along with this bill. However, I think that fairness has to be considered in this matter. When the vote was called on the amendment by the hon. member for Halifax, and when that vote carried, all we did procedurally was to substitute the wording of the amendment for the wording of subclause (h) as it was originally in the bill. I submit you still have to call the question on subclause (h) as amended.

An hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Knowles: Once you call that, it is debatable and amendable. As this happened so quickly I have not had time to find the citation, neither has the Secretary of State had time to find a citation supporting her view. It is the common and ordinary practice that an amendment of this kind merely changes the wording. Now we have to decide whether we accept that wording. For example, we might vote it down altogether or do away with it completely. We might also make further changes. I believe that we should get this matter settled, but I also think that members' rights to amend should not be cut off unfairly.

Miss LaMarsh: I do not propose to cut off anything unfairly, nor do I think there is any clause open to amendment and a vote of the committee forever. Is the hon. member now suggesting something completely different can now be moved to delete subclause (h) which, as a result of the committee's acceptance of the amendment of the hon. member for Halifax, has been passed? Does the hon. member suggest that it can be completely written out so that the committee can start again, and that this is a process which never has finality? Is that what the hon. member is suggesting?

Mr. Knowles: There is finality in the sense that eventually all the permutations will run out. Until they run out the matter is still before us. The committee has not yet decided whether subclause (h) in the form submitted by the hon. member for Halifax is accepted. All we have decided is that the wording suggested shall be voted on instead of the other wording. The proposition now before us is debatable, and if it is debatable it is amendable. Just as the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke could move a subamendment to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halifax that was before us, I submit that someone can do the same now.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): After it has been voted?

Mr. Knowles: The Postmaster General asks whether this can be done after this has been voted. I hate to have to say this over and over again, but all we have done as a result of our vote is record the decision of the committee that the wording of the amendment of the hon. member for Halifax shall take the place of the government's wording. That is now before us to discuss, debate, defeat or amend.

• (4:50 p.m.)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It is true that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona stated to the committee before this amendment was moved that he intended to move a new amendment. There is apparently a technicality involved here. As far as I can see, the rule that applies is to be found in citation 402 (3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which reads as follows:

> It is irregular to propose to leave out all the words from "That" to the end of a clause in order to substitute other words, as such an amendment is in the nature of a new clause.

Under the circumstances, I think that probably the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona should be permitted or should be given an opportunity to move an amendment, because he had stated to the committee that he intended to do this before the vote was called for this amendment.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, you made the point that in the circumstances the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona should be permitted to move an amendment. Is the Chair suggesting that this is the only further amendment and the only further discussion that may be permitted on this subclause? There may be others who wish to prolong the examination of the subclause.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I am asking for the floor on the ground that the subclause is still open for debate, on the ruling Your Honour has just given, to the effect that an amendment which only changes some of the words cannot, as the minister suggests, be deleting the clause and substituting a new one. If the wording were so designed, it would have been ruled out of order. Since the Chair put only the amendment and the subclause is now being put, I am asking for hon. members to speak to the motion whether the subclause should now be passed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There is probably a misunderstanding here, but the amendment, as I read it, actually deletes the subclause. The authority for the decision that was made is citation 402 (3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Because this was not drawn by the Chair to the attention of the committee, I am of the opinion that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona should be permitted to move the amendment that he declared he intended to move before this amendment was read to the committee.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, would the Chair render a decision on the point of order which I raised a moment ago? Is the Chair ruling that only one more address to this subclause will be permitted, or is it ruling that the debate is open and further addresses to this subclause can be made?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Actually, it is not possible for the Chair to anticipate further proceedings at this time.

Mr. Nowlan: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the difficulty in the preliminary ruling of the Chair is easily seen in the fact that the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona may be moving an amendment which Your Honour says, with qualification, he can move because he indicated before we got into this position that he would move it. I may stand up and move that the whole thing be struck out, and very likely will, because I think that subclause (h), as I said last night, should be struck out, and we will then get over this impasse. If the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is going to move another amendment, this is a new ball game, even though it is the same old subclause.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Chair to reconsider this matter. I thought the citation Your Honour read was most helpful, in that you said it had not been brought to your attention. But it is certainly not too late for the Chair to make a ruling on this question, because we are on the point of order. If we are to listen to the minister, after reading citation 402 of Beauchesne the Chair must say that because no one moved such a motion we must overlook that rule, rather than the Chair now giving a ruling that the interpretation of the amendment, in changing the words, is simply an amendment and is not deleting the subclause, as suggested by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who said that when you change the words you do not delete the whole subclause. This is therefore consistent with the vote that Your Honour called, and I submit that your memory is the same as ours on this point, that when you called the vote you called it on the amendment. This is, again, consistent with citation 402. That is the only thing you could have called the vote on, otherwise Your Honour would have had to rule out that amendment because it was deleting the subclause. Since that was not done, I submit that the Chair cannot be placed in the position now of saying that the Chair misled the committee. The Chair is applying the rule in the only way consistent with the rules, consistent with the rights of members and consistent with the ruling you have made, namely that we are now discussing subclause (h) as amended.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order and to make a helpful suggestion. I think it is the general feeling of the committee that we should allow the hon. member to proceed; but I suggest that this matter be brought to the attention of the committee on procedure so that they may take the problem with them to Great Britain and find out what is the practice in that parliament.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I am speaking to the point of order raised by the minister. I think the committee has lost track of the stage we have reached. Actually, there is before the committee a motion by the minister that we adopt clause 2. The wisdom of the committee was that we should break the clause down into its various subclauses and proceed with those. Therefore, in effect what is before the committee is a motion by the minister that we adopt clause 2. That motion has not yet been carried.

This clause has been subjected to amendment and will be subjected to amendment in the future to any length that hon. members wish to go. As far as clauses are concerned, you may strike out, add or insert words; but it is not normal, if you will read citation 404 of Beauchesne—and not only is not normal, but it is not right—to do what was done in the amendment that was before the committee a minute ago. Citation 404 of Beauchesne reads as follows:

> An amendment may not be proposed to insert words at the commencement of a clause with a view to proposing an alternative scheme to that contained in the clause, or to leave out from the first word to the end of the clause, in order to substitute other words, or to effect a redrafting of the clause—such amendments being in the nature of a new clause. In such a case, the regular course is to negative the question, that the clause stand part of the bill, and to bring up a new clause at the proper time.

Had the motion of the minister been voted upon and the subclause struck out, it would have been open to the committee to bring in a new subclause; but as we stand at the present moment, the rule is clear, that this subclause, having been amended, is still subject to amendment in the future.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Actually, this is the point the Chair was trying to draw to the attention of the members of the committee. There was a technical difficulty. This appears to be a departure from the regular practice of the house, but I think the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona should be heard at this time.

Mr. Churchill: That is not the point.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock.

Progress reported.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED INCREASED COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED CATTLE

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of immediately introducing legislation to provide the following increase of the compensation paid for the cattle slaughtered under the authority of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act: (a) purebred cattle, $200 (b) crossbred cattle, $125.

[Translation]

He said: Mr. Speaker, on May 9 last I was privileged to put on the order paper the notice of motion which you have just read and which I should like to quote again:

In the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of immediately introducing legislation to provide the following increase of the compensation paid for the cattle slaughtered under the authority of the Animal Contagious Disease Act: (a) purebred cattle, $200.00 (b) crossbred cattle, $125.00.

Mr. Speaker, I decided to put the motion I have just read on the order paper following conversations which I had with farmers and stock-breeders in my region. They put pressure on me and made representations urging me to take this position.

I have the honour of representing here a riding where stock-breeding is a major industry. The region of Saint-Hyacinthe is renowned for its purebred livestock. The interested farmers in Saint-Hyacinthe itself to to a great deal of trouble in order to improve their livestock. As you know, for instance the former dairy school is now in the Institute of Agricultural Technology. There is also a veterinary school and, near the institute, there is the artificial insemination centre.

During the years when the artificial insemination centre was in operation, the farmers of my region made good use of the facilities provided by the government of the province. As a result, the herds of all the farmers and particularly of livestock breeders have improved considerably.

Anyone who had the opportunity to visit the Saint-Hyacinthe exhibition, for instance, where six or seven surrounding counties as well as the Rougemont county are represented, comes to the conclusion that the farmers in the Richelieu area are quite prosperous and eager to have first grade cattle.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, that such improvement is not possible without significant expenses on the part of the farmers concerned and, from one year to the next, the operating cost of a farm rises.

The Animal Contagious Diseases Act was implemented a few years ago and amendments to increase the compensation paid for the cattle slaughtered in case of contagious disease have been brought in. It was in August 1958 that such compensations were increased for the last time; previously, the compensation paid for a slaughtered purebred animal was $100, and it was raised to $140. On the other hand, the compensation paid for a cross-bred animal, which was $40, was raised to $70.

The aim of that motion is not to grant a subsidy to farmers whose animals are struck by a contagious disease. It is recognized that, in some cases, the present indemnity covers quite well the losses incurred but, in cases where the meat cannot be eaten, it is also recognized that the present indemnity is much lower than the loss incurred.

For those reasons the members of the Catholic Farmers Union I met as well as members of other farm organizations in my riding have asked me to make representations to the government to improve further the situation, so that a breeder whose herd is struck by an infectious disease will not lose too much.

If the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) really wants the farmers not to suffer in cases such as those I have just mentioned, he will surely have that motion passed at once, so that the farmers will not be liable to sometimes irretrievable losses.

We merely have to recall, for instance, the epidemic of foot-and-mouth disease we had in 1948, if I remember well, to realize how fast a farmer, a breeder, can be let to the brink of ruin.

There is always a possibility of such epidemics invading our land, so much so that the department takes proper steps by placing animals imported into our country in quarantine. It is only fair and reasonable for the government to take such measures for the protection of our animals' health. But it is also reasonable, I think, to put forward the views of Canadian farmers and livestock breeders and claim fair protection for them.

To prevent the Minister of Agriculture from saying: We are well disposed, but you did not give us time to take action, I immediately end my remarks and give the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Beer) the opportunity to take part in the debate and make recommendations allowing this motion I just moved to become an accomplished fact. I should like to ask him to act in such a way that we will be called upon to vote before the private members' hour is over.

• (5:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I have listened with considerable interest to the motion presented by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) and the tribute he has paid to the livestock breeders in his constituency. I am well aware of the high quality of the livestock produced in that area. I think it is constituencies such as his which have contributed to the great name Canada enjoys throughout the world for outstanding livestock. He has suggested also he is quite confident it would be the wish of the Canadian Department of Agriculture to provide reasonable protection in the event of loss.

The resolution moved by the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot states that, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of immediately introducing legislation to provide for an increase in the compensation paid for cattle slaughtered under the authority of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

This act is designed to prevent the introduction or spread of serious animal diseases in Canada and to prevent the export of diseased livestock or livestock products, thus maintaining the excellent record this country enjoys throughout the world for healthy, disease free livestock. In its animal disease control and eradication program, the department has for many years provided compensation to owners whose animals have been ordered destroyed. There are two broad headings under which this compensation is paid. One case deals with cattle ordered slaughtered under an area or herd eradication program, such as tuberculosis and brucellosis. The other is where the department is dealing with a more serious contagious disease such as an outbreak of hog cholera in swine or the outbreak of foot and mouth disease such as occurred in 1952.

Under the area of herd eradication program, officers of the department conduct testing programs for cattle diseases such as tuberculosis and brucellosis. Any infected animals are destroyed and compensation paid to the owners to provide assistance in replacing the diseased animals with disease free stock, thus improving their herds. During the last fiscal year compensation paid to owners who had animals destroyed totalled almost $1 million.

Under these programs for the eradication of tuberculosis and brucellosis, it should be pointed out that any animals required to be slaughtered under the provisions of the act which are infected with tuberculosis and brucellosis, are a potential source of loss to the owner even if those programs were not carried out. The owner therefore does benefit materially and directly by the removal of a diseased animal from his herd, since it is not only a danger to the health of the rest of the herd but also reduces his potential returns from his production. On the other hand, it is also in the national interest from the consumer's point of view that our livestock products should come from healthy animals.

Under the area of herd eradication program, the present rates of compensation are $140 purebred and $70 for grade animals. Here, we are dealing with individual animals, not the destruction of an entire herd. In another example where an entire herd is to be destroyed, compensation is paid to the owner at market value. In this case, which is somewhat different from the case involving brucellosis and tuberculosis, not only the infected but all exposed and contact animals are ordered destroyed. This action is taken as a measure to protect the total livestock industry and to prevent the spread of the disease throughout the country. It follows, then, that the owner of such a herd is compensated at full value.

It should not be overlooked in the case of tuberculosis or brucellosis that in addition to the compensation awarded by the department, the owner also receives the meat or carcass salvage value from the packaging establishment where the animals are slaughtered. Therefore an owner's compensation returns, made up of the department's compensation plus the meat salvage value, go a long way toward assisting the owner in obtaining disease free animals.

Should the reactor animal be condemned at the time of slaughter as unfit for food, the department pays the owner the equivalent of the meat salvage carcass value so that in any case the owner's returns are the same. Notwithstanding this, we have been concerned about actual compensation values being paid owners, particularly the existing relationship between the compensation an owner now receives from the department and the actual market value of the animal. Consideration is now being given to a review of the compensation paid for animals slaughtered under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly to support the principle of the motion moved by the hon. member because I know from personal knowledge that the present compensation is not fair, in view of the changed economic circumstances that farmers face today. I was interested to listen to the explanation of the parliamentary secretary and to hear him say that this matter is under consideration by the department at the moment. I do think, in view of the fact that a farmer would only receive $140 for a purebred animal or $70 for a crossbred animal or grade animal—it depends upon which part of the country you come from which term you use—consideration should be given to increasing the compensation. I was glad to hear the parliamentary secretary say that if the entire herd is destroyed the farmer is compensated at market value. I was not sure of that prior to the parliamentary secretary mentioning the fact.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of concern to certain types of farmers, particularly those who are dealing with dairy and beef cattle, and in some cases with swine. I feel that the motion is of such importance to the persons directly concerned that it should be referred to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural rehabilitation for consideration. If this were done, I feel we would have an opportunity to get the facts as they exist today from the farmer's point of view. The committee would then have the opportunity to hear representatives from farmers organizations in Canada, from departmental officials and from other officials directly concerned with, shall I say, establishing fair play in the matter of compensation for animals that have to be destroyed. The committee would also have the opportunity to study the representations made on all aspects of the question and to make recommendations to the house.

I urge the parliamentary secretary to give consideration to my suggestion. I would be delighted if before the hour were over he would rise in his place and say that he quite agrees with my suggesetion that this whole matter be referred to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural rehabilitation.

I know the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) will have something to say on this important question and I know also that my colleague from Timmins (Mr. Martin) wishes to say a few words, so I will resume my seat and leave the field open to other members who wish to speak.

[Translation]

Mr. Florian Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, no doubt my colleagues will allow me to rise and say a few words in order to support the motion presented by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard).

Like his area, my own is very much advanced as far as the dairy industry is concerned, and the quality of the dairy cattle there is perhaps as good as that of his own area. I know the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot knows my constituency very well, since he spent about a month there before September 19, 1966. Therefore, he will admit that its dairy industry is flourishing.

Moreover, I am perhaps in a sufficiently good position to support that motion, since I had made that proposal myself when I was a leader of the Catholic Farmers Union in the diocese of Nicolet. Further, last winter I discussed with the minister steps to be taken in order that the farmers may not suffer too great hardship when they are unfortunately the victims of such a calamity.

I am speaking of this from personal knowledge, because when I was with the C.F.U., I often had to prepare statements and try to balance the budget of farmers whose herd had suffered from this terrible sickness which is brucellosis. Let me say in passing that losses due to tuberculosis are covered by the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and it is almost checked in Canada. Furthermore brucellosis is also being checked. Considerable efforts have been made by the government in this direction since nearly 4.5 per cent of the cattle in Canada was affected by brucellosis in 1957 and this percentage has been brought down to 1.5 per cent in 1967. This makes us realize that the situation has greatly improved.

On the other hand, while this percentage was decreasing, the value of the cattle increased threefold. In 1957 the farmers were receiving a sum of $70 when they had to destroy cattle worth $150 to $175. Today the same cattle has increased in value by $250, $300, even $350 but the compensation has remained at the same point.

So, I think it is normal that this compensation should be increased to $200 and to $125. Even if we were to be more generous, if the minister agreed or if his estimates allowed a compensation of $125 for cross-bred cattle, we would be more generous than the C.F.U. requests.

This year, I attended the congress of the C.F.U. and I examined with the utmost interest the demands that were made to increase compensation to $100 for cross-bred cattle and to $200 for pure-bred cattle. This was being asked by Quebec Farmers Association. But I think that in asking $125 the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot is possibly more generous and I support him, because if the farmers are asking only $100, it is because they are not used to receiving considerable compensation and that they cannot have the act amended.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Greene) is fully aware of the problem and I can tell the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot that I have discussed this with the minister. I have shown him that the problem is important, because I have met the leaders of the C.F.U. of my area and those of the St. Hyacinthe area. These leaders are colleagues of mine and, furthermore, they are people with whom I have worked on the social level. So, they knew that by speaking to the member for Nicolet-Yamaska, they could possibly exert greater pressures.

[Mr. Côté (Nicolet-Yamaska).]

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I fully endorse this request and I hope that we will see some change made in the course of the year.

[English]

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the motion of my colleague. Stockmen have long been aware that the present compensation for slaughtered animals is inadequate. In view of rising costs and values it is no longer realistic at this time.

I do not wish to question the terminology of the motion, but I should like to refer to purebred cattle as registered cattle. When applying for compensation for purebred animals one must produce their registered papers in order to prove they are purebred.

There are many t.b., Bangs, or brucellosis-free areas in Canada today. In fact, in many areas there have been very few reactors in use of late. The calfhood vaccination program against brucellosis protects animals against this disease, and because these diseases have to a great extent been eliminated there is not much danger of the cost of compensation to the government being as great as it once was.

There are dangers in compensation that is too small, and some of these have shown up in the hesitancy of some owners to report suspicious cases of disease in time to check its spread. In other words, there is the tendency on the part of some owners not to co-operate with the authorities because they know that if certain of their animals are condemned they will get little return for them. An example of this, Mr. Speaker, is the purchase of a registered animal at a very high price. The animal would have been tested before sale for both t.b. and brucellosis, but the new owner is rather nervous about having the animal retested in case there is a reaction. And you cannot blame him. Therefore I think there is great need for a more realistic compensation figure when an animal or a group of animals is condemned.

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) for bringing forward this resolution. Although there has not been too much time for research, it is certainly overdue. I went back over the history of compensation from 1952. In that year the compensation paid under the act for purebred cattle was limited to $100 and for grade cattle to $40. The same figures applied, with some change in the method of payment, in 1953-54. In the amendments introduced in 1958, the government of the day saw fit to increase the compensation for thoroughbred cattle to $140 and for grade cattle to $70.

I looked up the report of the livestock market in Toronto for yesterday and found that these prices are quite out of line with present day cattle prices. The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Moore) has mentioned cows and high priced breeding animals in the dairy end of the business. I suggest to the parliamentary secretary who, I notice, is now in his seat, that it is most unfair where a farmer has bought a $10,000 herd sire, only to find later that the herd sire reacts to a tuberculosis or brucellosis test, to pay that farmer only $140 in compensation for the herd sire, plus anything he may get for the carcass for bologna purposes, provided the carcass is not condemned. That is quite wrong and is one feature of the entire compensation program that is completely out of line.

Under similar circumstances, if the farmer were unfortunate enough to have his whole herd condemned for foot and mouth disease or some of the other diseases for which whole herds can be condemned, he would get back his full $10,000 that he paid for the herd sire, plus the full value of every one of his animals in the herd.

Coming down to the grade level of cattle, sometimes known as the cross bred level, where there are no certificates of pure breeding, today a cow in full milk in a good dairy herd is worth approximately $300. If this cow should react to a tuberculosis test the owner would receive in compensation $70, plus the salvage value of the cow's carcass for meat, again provided the carcass is not condemned.

If the carcass is fit for meat it will carry a value today of approximately $175 to $200—say, $180. So the farmer gets the compensation of $70 and the salvage value of this cow, if she is otherwise healthy and in good flesh conditon. He gets $180. The man therefore would receive for his $300 cow approximately $250 and would be put to all the trouble of replacing the cow, getting her to market and having her processed. Also he has to undergo the nuisance of having the cow taken from him compulsorily.

Ordinarily, when land is expropriated an extra amount is paid over and above the value of the land, which is compulsorily taken, and that extra amount is for the nuisance of expropriation. Cattlemen who have their cattle taken from them compulsorily should be given equal consideration.

So much for the milk cow. What about the beef man? What could happen to him under present scales of values? If you went down to Toronto and bought a stocker steer for feeding and finishing, you would find that your ideal stocker steer would weigh around 700 pounds and is worth today around 28 cents per pound. You would pay around $200 for your stocker steer plus the expense of getting him from Toronto to the farmer's location —trucking expenses, and so on. Suppose that in a week or two your stocker steer should react under a tuberculosis test? The owner would get $70 in compensation, and that would be the maximum he could get. The salvage value of that steer is not the original price because, if you remember, originally that steer was worth 28 cents per pound. But as a condemned steer having to go to market and be killed, that stocker steer would go as a common steer at about 17 cents a pound, and so the farmer would get about $119 for his stocker steer, which originally had cost him over $200.

Mr. Beer: Plus $70.

Mr. Thomas (Middlesex West): I am sorry; I should have said that he will get $119 plus $70, or a total of $189. He would incur some loss on his steer in addition to the expense he originally incurred for having to get that steer from Toronto to his farm, and he would also have the expense of getting it from his farm back to market.

I think the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) has been conservative with a small "c", and even with a large "C", in his proposal that compensation for animals slaughtered under the authority of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act should be increased to $200 for pure bred cattle and to $125 for grade cattle. If I were moving the motion I should have suggested much higher figures.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot should be congratulated for bringing this matter forward, and the parliamentary secretary should be congratulated for his remarks, which show that the government knows that the compensation figures should change. The parliamentary secretary and the hon. member would be doing the farmers of this country, the Department of Agriculture and the Canadian public a service if this matter were sent to the standing committee on agriculture, so that an adjudication could be made.

I think the previous speaker chose bad examples, because in one instance there was a difference of only $11 between the cost price of the animal and the compensation to be paid. Those figures do not show the extent of the problem, which becomes more apparent when you deal with pure bred cattle. In my part of the country the average Holstein cow, when sold, would fetch about $650 or $700. They run anywhere from about $400 to $1,000, and the average is about $650.

In England the authorities face difficulties because farmers are reluctant to report. The situation there is out of hand now, and there is the danger always that it may get out of hand here. Farmers should not have reason to be reluctant to report the incidence of brucellosis, or even where that disease is suspected. There are ways of knowing even without tests, whether a cow has brucellosis. Farmers are usually aware that there is difficulty, and sometimes they are reluctant to have tests performed.

In cases of this kind there may be a reluctance among farmers to report the disease because of the financial loss they may incur. Keeping an area free of brucellosis over a period of time is a difficult undertaking, particularly when breeding stock is allowed to move through community auctions. I suggest that when the agriculture committee studies this subject, if it is the wish of the minister, it should work out a formula by which farmers will be paid compensation more in keeping with the price of the animal affected, and the actual loss sustained. The fact that we have changed the compensation rate only twice in the last 20 years indicates that we have not kept up with the times. I am well aware of the danger of allowing civil servants to determine the amount of compensation to be paid and it seems to me there should be guide lines which would enable compensation to be provided in keeping with the loss suffered. This would help to remove the danger of farmers neglecting to make reports and causing a calamity as a result. Inadequate compensation may have been partly responsible for the serious outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Britain at the present time.

I do not see how the parliamentary secretary, speaking for the minister, could go wrong by accepting a notice of motion which asks for consideration of this question and reference of the subject to the committee on agriculture. The present provisions could be changed in a number of ways which would be of benefit to the Canadian livestock program, and to all who suffer loss because of contagious diseases.

[Translation]

Mr. Viateur Ethier (Glengarry-Prescott): Mr. Speaker, it affords me pleasure to speak to the motion introduced by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). In the five years I have been sitting in this house, it is the first time, I believe, that I am in a position to endorse a recommendation made by a member opposite, since it is designed to help farmers.

The compensation paid at present for animals recommended for slaughter may have been justified a few years ago, let us say until 1963, when milk and beef were cheaper. Today, I think a farmer must pay up to $500 for a good crossbred milk cow. Therefore, a compensation of $70 is no longer justified. For purebred cattle, I believe there is even more difference.

Therefore, I am pleased to support the motion of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot and to know that the matter will be referred to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development.

I congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot for putting that motion and I can assure him of our co-operation.

[English]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, it seems that all who have spoken on this motion have expressed the opinion that the subject should be directed to the attention of the standing committee on agriculture. I can add little to what has already been said and I will simply move, seconded by my hon. friend from Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), that the motion be directed to the standing committee on agriculture and that the house adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes to move his motion he will have to submit it in writing to the Chair.

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): I have been invited by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) to comment on his invitation to have this whole matter sent to the committee on agriculture and rural development. The views which have been expressed in this chamber have been very well taken.

I must indicate, as I did earlier, that the question of compensation is periodically reviewed and that it is currently under review with the thought of increasing the compensation which may be awarded. I see no harm in having the subject referred to the committee on agriculture and I would think that if the house were generally of a mind we could simply agree without a formal motion to have this subject sent to the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the motion simply be dropped and that the matter be referred to the committee without a formal motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McNulty: Then perhaps I could move that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. Peters: Before the hon. member moves that we adjourn, might I ask whether the parliamentary secretary is prepared to bring in the motion which would direct this matter to the attention of the committee on agriculture?

Mr. Beer: I believe that has been done already by unanimous agreement. I am quite confident that it will be done.

Mr. Speaker: I have to disagree with the parliamentary secretary. There is really no motion before the house. There is only the undertaking of the parliamentary secretary that he will take the necessary steps to have the matter submitted to the committee. This would have to be done by a formal motion which could be placed on the order paper in the usual way.

It being ten minutes before six o'clock, by unanimous consent Mr. Speaker adjourned the house, without question put.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 1, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING STEEL PLANT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the correspondence exchanged between the premier of Nova Scotia and myself concerning the steel situation in Cape Breton.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Prime Minister leave to table the documents in question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

TABLING OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING ARMED SERVICES UNIFICATION

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house, I wish to table copies, in English and in French, of the regulations regarding the basic questions concerning the unification of the Canadian Forces, established under section 13 of the National Defence Act, section 6 of the Canadian Forces Reorganization Act and section 44(f) of the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, in order to carry out the commitment made by my predecessor to the standing committee on national defence, on March 21, 1967.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

TABLING OF PROPOSED CHARTER OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, preparatory to the federal-provincial conference which will begin next Monday, I ask the permission of the house to table, in English and in French, copies of a document called the Canadian Charter of Human Rights.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table this document?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME FOR COMMITTEE DISCUSSION OF BROADCASTING BILL

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 2 of provisional standing order 15A I propose that the matter of the allocation of time for discussion in the committee of the whole of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions, which is government order No. 36 on today's order paper, be referred to the business committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of provisional standing order 15-A the matter stands referred to the business committee.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

POSSIBLE STEPS TO ELIMINATE EXISTING COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house whether, as has been reported to be the view of the premier of Quebec, the special committee set up to create a bilingual and bicultural National Capital Commission will be the first step toward the elimination of the existing National Capital Commission? Is it the policy of the government to eventually get rid of this commission?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you could draw that conclusion. I would be glad now to table the document. I should have done it this afternoon, since it has been made public. This is the first step in consultation among the three governments, consultation which also will include the municipalities concerned, in the development of a national capital area.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the promise of the Minister of Public Works on December 6 last that a committee on the national capital region would be set up early in the new year, will the Prime Minister consider expediting the striking of this committee and the referral to it of this whole question of a bilingual and bicultural national capital?

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to discuss that with the minister.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSED MEASURE TO REDUCE DOWN PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): My question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the President of the Treasury Board that the government has a measure to reduce the down payment on N.H.A. houses which it is prepared to introduce if it can get agreement of the opposition parties, and since the New Democratic party is prepared to forgo any debate on the resolution stage if other parties are willing to follow suit, may I ask the Prime Minister if the government will undertake to introduce this measure immediately so we can see the bill. Then a discussion could take place with regard to any further curtailment of debating time.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to discuss that with the minister. He mentioned the matter to me this morning, and I hope to see him about it later in the day.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Is it the intention of the government in any event to bring this legislation before the house during this session?

Mr. Pearson: That depends on how we get along with the rest of this session.

BROADCASTING

PROPOSED POSTPONEMENT OF CONSIDERATION OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State I will direct my question to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Following the objections expressed last night by the premier of Quebec, Mr. Daniel Johnson, could the Prime Minister tell us if consideration of Bill No. C-163 on broadcasting can be postponed?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to proceed; but of course in dealing with this bill we are acting within federal jurisdiction, as were previous parliaments when they dealt with broadcasting legislation. I read in the newspaper this morning remarks to the effect that we were rushing this legislation through.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

As mentioned by the Prime Minister, I understand that the matter comes under federal jurisdiction. But does not the Prime Minister believe that it would have been wise and that it would still be wise, under the circumstances, to hold consultations with the provincial premiers?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): May I put a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Can the Prime Minister give assurance to the house that this question will be on the agenda of the forthcoming federal-provincial conference, so that it will be discussed with the Quebec authorities?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Some weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, the premiers of all the provinces were sent a draft agenda. They were asked if they wished to make additions to that agenda. The only addition which was made was suggested by the premier of Nova Scotia. I think we have quite enough on the agenda at the moment to keep us busy for three days. Any other item that any premier wishes to bring up can be brought up at the end of the meeting under "other business".

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has received a letter from the premier of Quebec with reference to consultation on the bill in question, and what was the nature of his reply.

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I read in the morning press a reference to the fact that I had received such a letter, but I have not received any such letter. I have not been able to trace any such letter. I am still looking. At the moment I have no recollection of such a letter, and there is no record of it being received.

TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROPOSED NEW PORT FOR COAL SHIPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the completion of the $650 million coal deal with Japan, can the minister confirm that he will be meeting with the attorney general of British Columbia on Saturday to discuss the early construction of a new port to facilitate shipment of this coal?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is no plan that I know of to meet on Saturday, but I understand the minister will be in Ottawa on Monday and Tuesday. It will be possible for us to meet at that time and make further arrangements with respect to the port facilities that are required.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT STATEMENT ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. As the government has had before it for some time now the report of the special committee examining into the question of what Canada's attitude should be toward foreign investment in this country, would the Prime Minister say when he expects to make a statement to the house on the government's attitude to this very important matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report to which my hon. friend seems to be referring is the report of a task force on the structure of industry in Canada. That report has been completed and is now being translated. I hope the translation will be ready shortly, and I will then be in a position to indicate to the house what should be done on it.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. Has the Prime Minister not had the report of the committee that was set up under the President of the Privy Council to study foreign investment in Canada? Has the Prime Minister not had that report for some time now, and is the right hon. gentleman not going to report to the house on the government's attitude to this question?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend realizes that this is the report of a task force. That task force was to make a report to a committee of the cabinet, and there will be a report from the committee of the cabinet to the full cabinet. That is the normal way of doing business, Mr. Speaker. When that report has been considered by the full cabinet we will then be able to take a decision as to what statement should be made.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary question. Are we to take it that eventually, it is hoped before the session ends, the government is going to make a definite statement to the country on the government's attitude to this question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I hope it will be possible to make the report of the task force public before that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR DISTRIBUTION OF DOCUMENTS TABLED RESPECTING UNIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of defence. Have arrangements been made to distribute to the members of the house the documents that he tabled a few minutes ago? If not, will the minister make such arrangements?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my intention is to move a notice of motion for these papers to be referred to the standing committee on defence, which I hope will be convened pretty soon.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, my question was will the minister arrange for members of the house to be supplied with copies of the documents he tabled. I think the minister has facilities in his department for reproducing these papers which may not be readily available otherwise.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

CRIMINAL CODE

REQUEST FOR FURTHER REPRESENTATIONS ON AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Allard (Sherbrooke): I wish to put a question to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General.

To meet the wishes of several Canadian members, is it the minister's intention to reconsider his decision on the omnibus bill so as to allow a separate vote on abortion and homosexuality and to hold a free vote on these two questions of morals and conscience?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Speaker, I did not announce a decision, I expressed the wish, which is still valid, that when the wording of the bill is studied, there will be much less opposition thereto than there is now. Once again, it is a wish and the policy on this matter should be announced by the government in due course.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Can the minister inform the house whether this bill will be considered before the forthcoming convention of the Liberal party?

[English]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister that is really in the nature of a representation. I should like to ask whether he would now consider referring that clause of the bill to the standing committee on health and welfare so it may be studied together with the subject matter of the private bills now before the committee.

[Translation]

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): The hon. member for Sherbrooke referred to several clauses.

As far as the clause which the hon. member has in mind is concerned, the studies which will be made in the standing committee on health and welfare will surely serve in later discussions.

SYDNEY, N.S.—ADDITIONAL FEDERAL ASSISTANCE RESPECTING STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with respect to the correspondence between himself and Premier Smith which was tabled today. I ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware that his government promised aid over and above the aid which has been set forth in the correspondence and which is to be given under certain conditions to the Sydney steel operation. It is this further assistance that the government of Nova Scotia and the Sydney steel workers are now waiting for.

[Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne).]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but no doubt Premier Smith will wish to discuss this matter over the week end, when he will be here. I understand from radio reports that that is his intention.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I ask the minister to avail himself of the opportunity to speak to his Prime Minister and to the premier of Nova Scotia over the week end to further the argument that he has been advancing for the government to be prepared to assist above and beyond that assistance which is spoken of in the correspondence.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

INVITATION TO MINISTER TO PARTICIPATE IN TELEVISION DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has the minister received an invitation to participate in a public debate which will be telecast on the French network of the C.B.C. about Bill No. C-186, and could he tell us whether he is in favour of such a debate to inform the public on that labour matter?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that question is in order; I do not see its urgency.

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR RETURN OF OVERPAYMENTS FOR LODGING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Have the United Nations, UNESCO section in Geneva, sent an official protest to the Canadian government with a view to recovering an amount of $3,212 from Logexpo and from a temporary Montreal motel?

Mr. Speaker: I respectfully ask the hon. member to put his question on the order paper.

TRADE

BERMUDA—PROPOSED DIVERSION OF CANADIAN FREIGHTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. I have given him notice of it. The planned diversion of all Canadian freighters from Hamilton, Bermuda, to Saint George on March 1 will have the effect of increasing the price of Canadian goods in Bermuda. Since this action is discrimination against Canada, will the Prime Minister request the Canadian Trade Council in New York, which handles all Canadian trade for Bermuda, to get in touch with the Bermuda port authority in the hope that this policy, which is unfair to Canadian shippers and especially to Atlantic port shippers, will be reversed?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government is aware of this diversion which apparently was ordered to relieve congestion at the port of Hamilton, and our interest in this matter has already been communicated to the Bermuda marine and port authority. It is understood also, Mr. Speaker, that a protest has been directed to the authority from a number of sources, including the Chamber of Commerce in Bermuda, which is one reason for changing the effective date of the diversion from January 1 to March 1. The matter, as I understand, is being given further examination in Bermuda and the Department of Trade and Commerce is keeping in close touch with the situation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR SURVIVORS OF GERMAN CONCENTRATION CAMPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I must say that in his brief absence he has been missed by us all. Has the government received representations from any organization representing Canadian citizens who are survivors of nazi concentration camps urging that a bilateral agreement be made with the federal government of Germany for the compensation of all Canadian citizens and residents who have suffered persecution but have not been properly compensated to date?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that though his question is important it is not the type of question which should be asked at this time. Perhaps it might be placed on the order paper.

GREECE—REPORTED TORTURE OF POLITICAL PRISONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports from a responsible organization, Amnesty International, that certain political prisoners in Greece are being subjected to various forms of torture, and since our government has recently recognized the Greek government, will the minister look into this matter and perhaps send a protest to the Greek government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have asked for a copy of this report, and just as soon as it reaches us it will be carefully examined and we shall give consideration to what should be done.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORT OF ARDA TASK FORCE ON EASTERN COUNTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Bearing in mind the importance of agriculture to the province of Nova Scotia, can the minister advise us when action will be taken in connection with the ARDA task force report on the nine eastern counties of that province?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Negotiations are proceeding normally between the two levels of government.

Mr. MacEwan: In view of the length of time this matter is taking would the minister consider making this report available to interested parties, including the federations of agriculture in the province of Nova Scotia?

Mr. Sauvé: If it is possible, with pleasure.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES LOSING JOBS THROUGH UNIFICATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Defence and ask him what plans are being made to find other jobs for prevailing rate employees of his department who are being thrown out of work because of unification.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—POSITION OF PROVINCES NOT PARTICIPATING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. R. Ballard (Calgary South): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that several provincial premiers have indicated that their provinces will not proceed with the federal medicare scheme, can the right hon. gentleman advise us whether arrangements are being made under the authority of the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act to ensure that provinces which do not proceed with the implementation of medicare will not suffer financially as a result of such a decision?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be making a statement on medicare as soon as possible—immediately after the constitutional conference, I hope.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—AGREEMENT RESPECTING CONTROL WORKS ON FRASER RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): This question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Having in mind the serious and costly floods affecting the lower Fraser river valley in British Columbia, can the minister indicate the date by which agreement between Canada and British Columbia in connection with flooding conditions on the Fraser river can be expected?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I just received yesterday a report in that connection indicating that within a few days—if a few days can mean three or four weeks—an agreement between Canada and British Columbia will be concluded in that connection.

[Mr. Sauvé.]

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REPORTED DECREASE IN FREIGHT CAR LOADINGS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I wish to direct the following question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the sharp decrease in freight car loadings during the past two months, has the hon. gentleman drawn this matter to the attention of his colleagues handling economic portfolios in the hope that they might adopt a more aggressive attitude in connection with this country's economic affairs and thus avoid a decline in freight traffic and lay-offs of railway employees?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I do not think there are any who are more concerned about the future economic activity of this country than are my colleagues who are charged with this area of responsibility, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that they will take every step necessary to ensure that the level of car loadings will increase in the months ahead.

RESEARCH

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has authorized a task force to inquire into the possible establishment in Canada of an international development centre or world university, as it is sometimes called; and in view of the Prime Minister's correspondence with interested groups in Winnipeg and elsewhere, can the right hon. gentleman say whether he or some member of the cabinet will be making a public statement on this subject?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There was no task force looking into this matter. I asked Professor Plumptre, who has had a great deal of experience in this field, to make an examination of the feasibility of a proposed international development organization whose headquarters might be in Canada. He has now finished the first stage of his work and has made a report to me. I got it yesterday, and I shall be looking at it over the week end and getting in touch with my colleagues concerning it. I hope to be able to make a report on this very interesting idea before very long.

Mr. Schreyer: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if this is the kind of academic institution he has in mind for his retirement years?

Mr. Pearson: There is nothing academic about this, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

INVITATION TO QUEBEC AUTHORITIES TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put my question to the chairman of the committee on broadcasting films and assistance to the arts.

In view of the statement made yesterday by the Quebec premier on the legislation now under consideration in this house, can the chairman of the committee tell us whether he has invited the authorities of the province of Quebec to submit their point of view to the committee he chairs?

Mr. Speaker: That question concerns the proceedings of a committee which has yet to report to the house; it is out of order.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

My question is urgent because the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not a matter of urgency but simply that, under standing orders, this type of question cannot be put, even if it is urgent.

MANPOWER

REPORTED DECREASE IN RETAINING PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration in connection with pre-employment courses under the adult education program.

In order to enable the thousands of eligible persons to attend those courses, does the minister expect to purchase the necessary accommodation to give those courses?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have reached agreements with each of the provinces on the number of available openings in the retraining program.

Now that I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) asked me if 24 hours had elapsed between the notice of deportation and the actual deportation of Mr. Wilson.

I can inform the house that Mr. Wilson was arrested on Friday morning and deported on Saturday evening. More than 24 hours, therefore, did elapse between the two events.

[Later:]

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I would ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether it is not this government which buys the openings of the province, and whether this government is not responsible for classes being available?

[English]

TRANSPORTATION

REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE VISIT FREDERICTON, N.B.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Because of urgent representations I received today from the city of Fredericton will the minister assure the people of central New Brunswick that during the forthcoming visit of the parliamentary committee on transportation the capital city of New Brunswick will be included and not deleted, because all other capital cities in Atlantic Canada are in its itinerary?

Mr. Speaker: I am just wondering if this is not a matter for consideration by the committee.

Mr. MacRae: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

FRUIT—REQUEST FOR REGULATION OF SUBSIDIZED IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announcement that another Canadian canning factory is closing its doors due to the great importation of subsidized fruit into Canada, has the government any plans to offset this detriment to such companies by means of quotas or adjustments in tariffs?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of all the facts of this case, but if in fact it could be established that subsidized products are being imported into Canada we would be in a position to apply countervailing duties, which would be the appropriate action. I would be glad to have the particulars of this case from the hon. member.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

MANITOBA—ARDA AGREEMENT RESPECTING INTERLAKE REGION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric Stefanson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Has there been any cut-back by the federal government in cost sharing programs under ARDA and FRED for the present fiscal year? Specifically, has there been any cut-back in the programs covered by the comprehensive agreement for the interlake area of Manitoba, signed by the minister and the premier of Manitoba in May, 1967?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): There are no cuts for this year nor for next year, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question related to that asked by the hon. member for Selkirk of the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. I wish to ask the minister whether the task force to develop specific programs in fisheries, forestry, recreation, agriculture, industry, water, mining, economics, manpower, community and social development, and urban and rural development, as it is to apply to Newfoundland, could be expanded to fit the needs of British Columbia as well?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is more a speech than a question, and I do not think it is in order.

EDUCATION

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN TEACHING IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has he received a request from the chairman of the school board of either the city of Toronto or Metro Toronto, I forget which, asking for an interview with him to discuss the question of the education of immigrant children in the area of Toronto? If so, what was the minister's reply to that request?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether a question of this nature can be asked on orders of the day. I would not think it is nationally urgent to ascertain whether the minister has received that request.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that anything that happens in Toronto is necessarily of national importance, but I do suggest that this question relates to a matter which is exemplified in Toronto but which is of consequence to many other parts of Canada. It relates to a desire by a board of education to discuss with the minister a system for the education of immigrant children.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member thinks I have erred and that the matter is urgent, he can give me appropriate notice and the matter can be set down for consideration later today.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Naturally, it concerns manpower mobility.

In view of the fact that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) has been saying for a year that a Liberal member of parliament is about to join his party, could the hon. minister tell us whether that member is the hon. member for Lotbinière?

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I recognize in all sincerity that the separatists have never broken any windows in my house, but that is no reason for me to join a movement which I consider utopian.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, also on a question of privilege.

I want to state that if the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) wished to join our ranks, he would not be accepted.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Justice.

I should like to ask the minister if, in his talks with the Quebec premier, the matter of the imperialistic ambitions of the Quebec government came up?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is out of order.

WINTER WORKS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Quebec newspapers recently reported that the minister had stated that the federal government would no longer contribute to the winter works programs next year.

Is the minister in a position to confirm or deny this report?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member should put his question directly. He cannot ask that newspaper reports should be confirmed or denied.

Mr. Asselin (Charlevoix): In that case, Mr. Speaker, that is what I want to ask the minister.

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is true that we have indicated to the provinces that it was not our intention to renew our program on its present basis.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR REACTIVATION OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I addressed a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, recorded at page 6012 of Hansard as follows:

> In view of increasing prices can the minister say whether he intends to reactivate the committee which last year inquired into the cost of living in Canada? If so, when will it resume its hearings?

In the absence of the minister his parliamentary secretary said he would take the question as notice. Is the minister now prepared to reply?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with the house leader about the feasibility of making a reference to the standing committee on consumer affairs. In the light of the state of the business of the House of Commons and the contemplated length of the session I am not at all sure that this will be probable although, as I said before Christmas, I am anxious that certain references should be submitted to such a committee.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. Has he in progress a study into the rising interest rates that have been brought about, particularly in the housing industry, during the last few weeks?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might have the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I would like to know whether he has received the report of a study concerning the rising interest rates particularly with regard to housing within the last few weeks.

Mr. Turner: I have a difficult enough time keeping track of my own portfolio.

[Later:]

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the answer I received from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs today are we to assume that the cabinet as a whole has agreed that the question of rising interest rates is not a matter of concern to consumers?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may wish to assume that but he may not ask it as a question.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I believe that at the time the legislation was brought forward—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question of the minister and has received an answer. Evidently the answer is not satisfactory so far as the hon. member is concerned. That, however, cannot be made a point of order or a question of privilege.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because I believe the matter of interest rates is one of the things the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was set up—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This cannot be a point of order. The hon. member has asked a question and received an answer. I am sure answers are not always satisfactory to the hon. members who ask questions. This may be the case here, but it is not in order now to argue whether or not a minister has a certain responsibility.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT FOLLOWING PROVINCIAL REPRESENTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made by the Prime Minister on Tuesday to the effect that he hoped the government would complete its consideration of the medicare question on Thursday, can he say whether this consideration has been completed and, if so, why the statement as to the decision the government has made is being put off for another week?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): That is quite simple, Mr. Speaker. The consideration by the cabinet has been completed. I am putting together a report which I wish to take up with the premiers of the provinces who asked for the reconsideration and who will be here during the week end. After that is completed I will make a statement in the house.

INCOME TAX

REPORTED LATE DISPATCH OF T-4 FORMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek asked a question. I now have the reply.

By December 26, 1967, all employers in Canada numbering 433,000, who deduct and remit taxes from employees, had been issued forms T-4 and, in the case of larger employers requiring greater quantities, a reorder form. Early in January the district taxation offices were in a position to fill any orders received. Since these forms are not required to be filed until February 29, 1968 it would seem that the distribution provided ample time to meet this deadline, and it is not considered necessary to waive the penalties provided in law under these circumstances.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apparently yesterday I referred to the wrong form. I referred to the T-4. It should be the T-1.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I will have another answer tomorrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO BE DEALT WITH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister which is supplementary to the one asked of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Today the minister stated that there is certain legislation nearly ready but that he does not intend to introduce it. Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made a similar statement with regard to legislation he has ready. I should like to ask the Prime Minister what justification there is for ministers not bringing forward this important legislation at least for first reading so that we may see it.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, one justification, Mr. Speaker, is the progress we have made in the last two weeks. However, legislation which is not now on the order paper will be placed on the order paper so that first reading may be given to this legislation before this session is concluded. As I said yesterday this will include legislation concerning the Canada Development Corporation.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, if the government is desirous of having legislation passed, whether it would not be advisable to place it on the order paper. I should like also to ask whether he does not think it inadvisable that ministers of the crown should indicate to the press that they would bring down certain legislation were it not for the failure of the opposition to agree on some particular point.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I can deal in substance with my hon. friend's question. Perhaps I should indicate that the items with which we will deal immediately after the broadcasting legislation has been disposed of are on the order paper.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister intends to make a statement concerning the whole question of priority of legislation for the balance of this session, could such a statement be made on motions?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I was asked a question on the orders of the day and I am replying to that question now. However, I am quite willing to wait until tomorrow. It will not take me more than a minute to indicate the business which will be before the house. There are the amendments to the Excise Tax Act and the Income Tax Act, both of which are up for second reading. Then there are the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drug Act. These are the items of legislation which will be considered after the broadcasting legislation. Then of course there are the amendments to the Criminal Code. By that time there will be additional legislation on the order paper to which I think we could give first reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Can the hon. Prime Minister tell us whether Bill No. C-186 concerning the Canada Labour Relations Board is also on the priority list of items to be passed during this session?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I did not mention that piece of legislation because it is now before the committee. As soon as it is reported back from the committee we will be dealing with it in the house.

DRUGS

REPORTED INCREASES IN PRICES OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I should like to ask the minister whether in the past few days his attention has been drawn to the very sharp increases in the prices of prescription drugs, which increases have virtually wiped out the reduction resulting from the wiping out of the sales tax. If so, I should like to ask the minister what his department is doing about this problem.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot quite accept the preamble to the question. However, we are following the movement of prices of prescription drugs, particularly at the manufacturers' level.

INDUSTRY

COPPER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Finance. Some months ago the minister undertook to look into the matter of the very substantial increase in the price of copper. He said he was having his officials look into this and that later he would be prepared to make a report to the house. I should like to ask the minister whether he has received that report and, if so, what is the outcome of that investigation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, although I am a little uncertain I thought the Minister of Trade and Commerce had dealt with this matter in the house. I will have a search made of the records to determine whether or not that is so.

[Translation]

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

In view of the present inflationary surge of the Canadian economy, can the minister tell us whether he intends to adopt new measures to stabilize the housing construction sector in order to promote capital investment?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the question as notice and I will refer it to the President of the Treasury Board.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, January 31, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose last evening clause 2(h) was being considered.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, we are now considering clause 2—

Miss LaMarsh: Still.

Mr. Starr: Still. This clause has many important aspects to it. A great deal of opinion has been expressed and no doubt will continue to be expressed as we consider this clause. In the interests of progress on the bill in the committee stage I wish to propose to you, sir, and through you to the minister and the committee, that we stand this clause and that subsequent clauses be called by Your Honour. I make this suggestion in the hope that we might pass a number of the clauses of the bill to which hon. members are not inclined to direct themselves.

If Your Honour called the clauses following clause 2, any hon. member of the committee who wished to direct himself to that particular clause could so indicate by asking that it stand. If there is no response from any hon. member to that effect we could carry the clause. Then after we have gone through the whole bill we could come back to those clauses which have been stood. We could now pass those clauses to which no hon. member wishes to direct himself, and come back to the discussion on subclause (h) of clause 2. I make this suggestion, and hope hon. members will agree with it, in the interests of making progress on this piece of legislation.

The Chairman: Does the committee agree to stand clause 2, to call the other clauses in order, and if there is no other clause to be stood to continue with the consideration of each clause?

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, in the interests of getting on with the business we are quite agreeable to the suggestion made by the house leader of the official opposition, namely that the clauses be dealt with in the manner suggested by him. But may I also state that we will then be standing clause 2(h). I would add, in connection with that particular clause, that we were in favour of the original drafting which was suggested by a member of the official opposition. We accepted the compromise drafting which came from a member of the official opposition, and we would not agree to any later change in that particular subclause.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we should establish a few more ground rules. Do I understand it is agreed that wherever there is an amendment which is proposed to be put from either side of the house, we indicate that, stand the clause and then come back to it, so that we know to which clauses amendments are proposed?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Starr: Perhaps I did not make myself clear, Mr. Chairman. I suggested that if, for example, clause 9 is called and a member of the committee wishes to speak to it or move an amendment to it, he indicates that by saying "Stand". Consequently we will stand the clause and move on.

Mr. Grégoire: Oh, no.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Grégoire: No.

The Chairman: Is the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Ontario acceptable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, it may be that I did not understand correctly the suggestion made by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr). Does he want us to pass all the clauses we find acceptable and then return later to the controversial clauses?

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, perhaps for the benefit of the hon. member I may repeat my suggestion. I suggested that in order to make progress on this bill we stand clause 2 and call each subsequent clause. If there is an indication by any hon. member that he wishes to speak on a particular clause, all he has to do is ask that it be stood. I make the suggestion in the hope that we can pass those clauses to which no hon. member wishes to address himself or with regard to which no amendment is to be proposed.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Clause 2 stands. Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Starr: Stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on this clause, and I should therefore have it stand.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Stand.

The Chairman: Clause 3 stands. Shall clause 4 carry?

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

On clause 6:

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Stand.

Mr. Chairman, we are not given time to consult our files and notes as we go along. I wonder if that is really good procedure.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I made the proposition in the hope that it would meet with the approval of all hon. members. Evidently the members of the committee are in agreement with the suggestion; they seem to be well versed in the bill and know exactly which clause or clauses they wish to speak to or propose an amendment to. I would ask the hon. member for Lapointe, in the interest of making progress on this bill, whether he would not look at this situation in the same way as other hon. members.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like to support the appeal of the hon. member for Ontario to the hon. member for Lapointe. Perhaps we could achieve amicability about this procedure if we hesitated for just a moment to let the hon. member for Lapointe and others look at the bill and make a note of the clauses that they want to stand; or perhaps Your Honour would read the marginal notes as you call each clause. If we take this slowly I suspect that perhaps in 15 minutes we will carry about 40 of the clauses, or maybe more. Then we could return to the clauses which have been stood. Perhaps if we took a few moments now there would be a better understanding on the part of all hon. members as to the procedure we are pursuing.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the Chair in calling a clause will read the marginal notes, to assist hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: We are on clause 6, "Duties of full time members. Oath of office." Shall clause 6 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 11 and 12 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall schedule A carry?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask whether clauses 3, 19, 28 and 47 have been stood? I was called out of the chamber for reasons which I do not care to disclose at the moment, and I should like to ask if those four clauses have been stood because I will have something to say about them.

Miss LaMarsh: According to my notes those clauses have been allowed to stand.

The Chairman: Clauses 3, 19, 28 and 47 have been stood.

Mr. Cowan: Thank you.

On clause 2—Broadcasting policy for Canada.

The Chairman: The committee is considering clause 2 (h).

Mr. Nugent: May I first put on the record an official apology to my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax. I know that much of the time of the committee could be saved in the discussion of these clauses if there were consultations with other members of other parties and if there were interparty discussions. I think this has been done. The amendment moved yesterday had been agreed to by the minister, and the minister carried out her agreement to get the members of her party to support it in order that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax should carry. When I first looked at this amendment, I thought it was all right. I did put on the record some reservations I had after reflecting upon the amendment.

However, I feel we must amend this clause still further. I have discussed my reasons for saying that with some other members and I feel they are still valid. The amendment, as it reads now, deals with conflicts and provides that they shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the interests of the C.B.C. This clause derogates from the consideration of the public interest. I feel it is the first duty of all members of parliament to direct any regulating body to have paramount consideration for the public interest. If we carry out our duty as legislators, we cannot derogate from that. I cannot see, therefore, how we can allow this clause to pass. I am sure that on reflection hon. members would not want to have expressed a view which was in direct conflict with our duty, remembering that the paramount consideration is the public interest. Any wording that would have accomplished this would have been acceptable. However, as the clause reads it is a derogation from the expressed duty to pay attention to the public interest.

I explained yesterday the amendment that I hope to move and which I hope I am still in a position to move. I believe it would be easier if we were to vote on this clause as amended and defeat it. That would wipe out the clause and then the minister could move a new clause or someone else could. In considering our course of action, I should like to run over the various means by which we may get ourselves out of the dilemma in which we find ourselves. It may be that other members do not interpret the situation in the same manner as I do and I may be taking up the time of the committee needlessly. However, if members agree with me that the only interpretation that can reasonably be given to the amendment moved yesterday results in a derogation of the duty to act in the public interest, then we are in a dilemma. If we vote against the clause as amended the clause is removed and it is open to the minister or anyone else to suggest a new clause.

As I said yesterday, the government inserted this clause for a very special reason. Where there was a conflict between the private and public sectors the government wanted to express the view that the public sector should prevail. I feel that the amendments that have been moved have been motivated by the feeling that the original clause 2(h) was too strongly in favour of the public sector and we wanted to tone it down. I suggested that if there was this feeling in the committee, then perhaps the clause should provide that where there is a conflict of interest and everything else is equal the public interest should prevail. I had hoped we would be in a position to move such an amendment. However, whether or not hon. members agree with me that the wording of this clause shall provide for an all-prevailing public interest, as originally proposed by the government, or whether it shall provide simply a balance and when everything else is equal we tilt the scales slightly then, I believe everybody can agree with me it is a question which should be resolved by a standing vote. In other words, Mr. Chairman, no matter how we handle this clause the will of parliament should be recorded by numbers at least, if not by names.

Therefore I think the simplest solution is to ask the committee to vote against clause 2 (h) as amended. This would have the effect of removing it altogether, in the expectation and belief that the government still wants to give preference to the public as against the private sector of broadcasting and will bring forward a new amendment which will either be in substantially the same form as the wording of the original paragraph or will be in a somewhat modified form giving preference to the public sector only to the extent of tilting the scales in its favour, all other things being equal.

There is one point in subclause (h) as originally framed that I thought worthy of mention. It commences with the words "where any conflict arises". A conflict arises in a case where only 1 per cent of the argument is in favour of the public sector and 99 per cent in favour of the private. Yet under the wording of the original subclause the public interest must prevail in any event. I do not think that the committee wants to go that far, Mr. Chairman, and the subclause obviously needed some amendment.

I hope I am not being unkind when I say, after reflection, that the amendment passed last night should not be allowed to stand since it derogates so clearly from the duty we have to make sure that every regulatory body as well as parliament puts the public interest first. Therefore I for one am prepared to suggest a new subclause (h), though I hope the government is too. However, our first task should be to vote on and get rid of the amended subclause (h).

The Chairman: If the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona wishes to move a motion he will have to present it to the Chair.

Mr. Nugent: I am not moving an amendment now, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, will the Chair advise me for my own edification whether the committee is now voting on a special amendment or on subclause (h)?

Miss LaMarsh: On subclause (h) as amended.

Mr. Sherman: Then I wish to make another suggestion to the committee. I find that I cannot accept subclause (h) as amended, with all due deference to my colleague and in all sympathy for others on this side of the house who feel that the amendment proposed yesterday and accepted by the committee will benefit this subclause.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the amendment in no way alters the essential meaning of subclause (h) as originally worded. The various discriminations against private broadcasters and the other objections that some of us on this side of the house have raised to the wording of subclause (h) are in no way eliminated or resolved by the amended subclause, which simply moves the intent of the subclause to some other subclause in this clause and does not take care of the protection of the public interest.

I intend to move a further amendment to subclause (h) that I hope will be acceptable to the minister and the members on the government side of the house in that I think it goes some distance to accommodate the minister's concern for the wording of the paragraph and yet still protects the public interest and the private broadcasters against what I sincerely feel is a discriminatory piece of legislation. My amendment would substitute several words in place of some of the words in the amended subclause (h). It would delete all the words between "public interest" and "the objectives" and would substitute in their place the words "in a manner mindful of". The amended subclause would then read:

> Where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, it shall be resolved in the public interest in a manner mindful of the objectives of the national broadcasting service.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, there is still service paid, both lip and in letter, to the objectives of the national broadcasting service but no longer would paramount consideration be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service. That is the section of the subclause that is unacceptable to me and I think to many others on this side of the chamber. We do not agree that paramount or primary consideration should be given to the objectives or interests of the national broadcasting service or the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system.

As I said a little earlier in the debate, we believe that the primary consideration in this area of broadcasting, that is, the area where conflict arises between private and national interests, should be the public interest, the interest of the general viewing and listening public, the people reached by broadcasters whether national or private. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I wish to submit this amendment for the consideration of the committee:

> That all words in paragraph (h) of clause 2 between the words "public interest" and "the objectives" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "in a manner mindful of".

• (4:00 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please. The Chair doubts whether this amendment is proper. If there is no objection it can be accepted by the committee but if comments are to be made on whether the amendment is in proper form the Chair will be pleased to hear those.

Mr. Nugent: Perhaps the minister could indicate whether she is prepared to accept the amendment.

Miss LaMarsh: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Sherman) negatived: Yeas, 27; nays, 46.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 2(h) carry?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a brief question to the minister about this clause because there is an application here which has not been discussed in our lengthy debate. The question has to do with the extension of service. The objective of the national service is outlined in subclause (g)(ii). It is to be extended to all parts of Canada, as public funds become available. In view of that, what happens if there is a private application for a region which has only one service? Clearly the objective of the C.B.C. is to go in there with its own service. Does the language of this clause prohibit the new council from providing alternate service for the public in a given area under this circumstance?

Miss LaMarsh: Certainly not.

Mr. Jamieson: Will the minister please elaborate that answer? Surely the objective of the national service is to extend service to all parts of Canada. Under this bill that objective must prevail. I am merely asking this question. If the C.B.C. is not prepared to go ahead and instal a service in a given area, that does not change its objectives. I suggest to the minister that where there is a private application, bearing in mind the objective of the C.B.C. the council would have a hard time trying to resolve the matter.

Miss LaMarsh: I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member. I have made very clear previously that there is nothing in this clause, and I would not have accepted any amendments that ran counter to this, which gives an automatic right to the C.B.C. The bill indicates the pre-eminence of the public service in the system. It should be remembered when we talk of the C.B.C. that we are not talking about a few owner operated stations, the ten English television stations, five French television stations, 24 English radio stations and seven French radio stations, but about 129 C.B.C. affiliates. These are all part of the service.

There is absolutely nothing in the clause which would bind the council, the B.B.G., or whatever the regulatory body may be, not to give licences to private broadcasters and to hold potential licences until such time as public funds may be made available so that the C.B.C. can go in there, either by affiliate or with its own hardware.

Mr. Jamieson: With respect, I do not think the minister has totally answered my question. The minister's answer seems to suggest that the objectives of the C.B.C., as she sees them, are not the objectives as seen by the present directorate and expressed by the present official policy of the C.B.C. At the moment that policy is to apply for what is known as every other station. As the minister no doubt knows, this has created an impossible position for the existing regulatory body. The minister's statement appears to repudiate the stand of the C.B.C. with regard to extension of service through C.B.C. facilities. A brief answer to my question will suffice. Does the minister agree that the C.B.C. should have its own stations and carry its service through its own stations?

Miss LaMarsh: Clause 22 which has been stood and which we shall deal with later gives the governor in council the responsibility of laying down guide lines with respect to the system. We are talking about a system which includes affiliates; we should not talk only about the C.B.C. The B.B.G. is required to operate within those guide lines as laid down by the cabinet.

Mr. Jamieson: I am trying to be helpful and to avoid something which has existed for many years, but what has troubled the system for many years still seems to be implicit in this clause. What will the Board of Broadcast Governors or its successor say when faced with an application from a private element if the C.B.C. is not at that time in a position to instal a station but asks, nevertheless that that channel be reserved for it? Can the B.B.G. or its successor, as a matter of policy, grant that licence to the private applicant in order to make sure that alternate service is provided?

An hon. Member: Yes.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Nugent: Since the minister does not wish to answer that question perhaps I might suggest that the fault with the amendment as carried last night is that it says that the objectives of the national broadcasting system shall take priority even over the public interest. I do not see how anyone can read the provision in any other way. That is why I take such violent exception to it, and at the risk of repeating myself—I am afraid I am doing so—let me say that I cannot understand how any member of this committee can allow a clause to stand which says that any consideration should take precedence over the public interest.

The amendment just moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South exemplifies the way in which the public interest could be served by giving preference to the national broadcasting service. I believe this is a legitimate objective of the government and that the majority of this committee is prepared to go along with legislation which will achieve such an objective. I do not really believe that all those who supported the minister in the last vote are any happier than I am with the amendment which was accepted last night. I believe they are all anxious to see more common sense introduced in this subclause.

The reason we are in trouble over this subclause is that the minister has agreed to an amendment which, on reflection, the opposition felt was a mistake. This has led to a spirit of stubborness, of digging in our heels. The attitude of hon. members opposite is: we have made one mistake; we accepted an amendment but from now on we shall stay put. I do not think we really want to leave things as they are. I have drawn up an amendment which I feel gives the national broadcasting service a preference, but not an overwhelming preference. The original subclause says that where there is a conflict between the two systems the objectives of the national system must prevail. I have put in the phrase "all other factors being equal". As things are now, if the weight of the national interest amounted to only 5 per cent and the weight of the public interest to 95 per cent, the national interest would be bound to prevail. I do not think anyone can be happy about a subclause which would produce that kind of result.

We have confidence in the Board of Broadcast Governors. What we are trying to do is give them a guide line and we certainly should not give them a guide line which ignores consideration of the public interest. We want to give the board a guide line to the effect that when there is any doubt conflicts should be resolved in favour of the national system. This would really be serving the public interest.

Consider the situation in a sector where there is no television coverage and where private enterprise is willing to provide such coverage but has been unable to get a licence. Under the terms of the subclause as it stands the C.B.C. could say that in 20 years time it intended to put in a station and there was not room for two stations. It might be in the public interest that those living in the area should not be deprived of television services for 20 years and that private enterprise should therefore be allowed to provide it. But it would be impossible to reach a decision along these lines in accordance with the guide lines as now drafted by the government. Certainly the amendment accepted last night would make a decision in favour of the public interest no easier to reach. I feel I should fight this provision for the rest of the week or for the rest of the year, if necessary, rather than have it said that any committee of which I was a member passed legislation such as we now have before us.

I therefore move:

That subclause (h) as amended be amended by deleting everything after the word "system" and by substituting therefor the words "all other factors being equal the objectives of the national broadcasting service must prevail."

I wish to apologize for not having written out the amendment itself. I have written out the subclause as amended and the wording is almost identical with that of the original subclause except for the additional words to which I have just drawn attention. All we are doing is seeking to provide guide lines on a reasonable basis having full regard for the public interest in these cases.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo brought up a specific example with regard to second television stations in places where there is only one service at present, and the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona confined his latter remarks particularly to that point. The national broadcasting service does not mean exclusively C.B.C. owned and operated stations. As the minister pointed out, it also means affiliated stations which carry the national broadcasting service but are not owned by the corporation itself. They have a contract or agreement with it.

There may be many places in the country in which the C.B.C. wants to establish its own stations and there is already a private station in operation, but it can only do that when the government makes the necessary money available to it. It seems to me that the members of the regulatory authority are going to use some sense in coming to their decisions.

We have the current examples already mentioned of Saskatoon, Sudbury, Victoria, B.C. and St. John's, Newfoundland, where the C.B.C. would like to establish stations, but it is not going to be able to do so because the government will not make the necessary funds available. I maintain that if it became evident to the regulatory authority that those funds were going to be withheld indefinitely, for a long period of years, it would then consider applications from private people to establish private stations which would become affiliates of the C.B.C. and which would carry the national broadcasting service. I think common sense would prevail. I would like to see C.B.C. owned stations established, but this depends upon the government making the funds available. The problem is not as real or as big as some hon. members think it is.

Mr. Nugent: Does the hon. member not feel that the public interest should be the deciding factor and not the national broadcasting service? Which should be the deciding, overwhelming and paramount factor, the public interest or the objectives of the national broadcasting service?

Mr. Prittie: I am sure the hon. member will not consider this a satisfactory reply but I wish to point out that what we are talking about is an extension of the national broadcasting service. These places will get that national service either through a publicly owned station or through a privately owned station which becomes affiliated with the C.B.C.

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has stated the case quite well but there is one qualification. In my presence not more than 48 hours ago a key figure in the C.B.C., speaking at a public meeting, said it was an objective of the C.B.C., where alternative service was a consideration, to establish its own station. The case in point was Kingston. The policy of the C.B.C. as of this moment, and presumably it has not yet been changed by the new executive, is to apply for a licence for a second station wherever a privately owned station exists and where there is a demand for alternative service. There has been no clarification whether the C.B.C. interpretation of this as an objective is in agreement with the government's position regarding the objectives of the C.B.C.

At present there are requests for a second service in 10 or 12 centres, and until the new regulatory agency knows whether the C.B.C. is going to put its own facilities in those centres these communities will be confined to a single service. Here is a case where I suggest the objectives of the national service, as outlined in this clause, would almost require the regulatory agency to say that these communities must wait on the availability of C.B.C. funds in order to get a second service through a C.B.C. station.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I can agree with much of what the hon. member has said. It is true that the C.B.C. wants to establish its own stations in a number of places. But what is required is long-range capital policy planning. I think it will be the duty of the government to make known to the C.B.C. very soon what capital funds will be made available to it during the next few years. If it is not going to have capital funds made available to it to build stations in ten different places but just enough for three or four places, this should be made known to the C.B.C. and then the regulatory authority could be guided by that information. If the C.B.C. cannot get the funds to establish a station in Kingston for the next ten years, then the regulatory authority will be guided by that fact. If the authority knew there would be only a two year delay they might postpone a private application. What is needed is long-range capital planning, with the details made known to the C.B.C. and to the regulatory authority.

Mr. Orlikow: I think all of us would agree with the policy of the C.B.C. that where there is a private station it should be permitted to establish a C.B.C. station. In fact I think this ought to be government policy.

When criticism has been made of private television stations that they do not do enough original programming, that many of their programs are canned, that they buy many of their programs from the United States or Great Britain, that they do not carry enough public service broadcasting and public affairs programs—this has changed recently—that they do so little in the field of live dramatic programs, in the field of symphony music, ballet and so on, members of parliament and members of the public who are defenders of the private system have told us we cannot expect private stations to do the kind of programming which we expect and have been able to get from the public broadcasting system.

That being the case I think it is our responsibility and the responsibility of the regulatory agency, not to take steps which will freeze out the C.B.C. in these centres which have been mentioned. To take Kingston, the example mentioned by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, if the C.B.C. is frozen out the people there will not have an opportunity in the foreseeable future to get the kind of programming which only the C.B.C. has done and is doing. I have no hesitation in supporting the C.B.C.'s policy that second stations should be reserved for it. If the legislation does not spell this out clearly enough I would be in favour of making it clearer so that the regulatory agency will keep in mind when granting licences that in all the cities of Canada one of the stations ought to be and must be a C.B.C. station.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if I am drawing the right conclusions from what the hon. member has said, but if he was not arguing against the idea of the so-called parallel service I refer him back to 1963 when I was the original author of this concept in Canada. Certainly I advocated it long before anybody else. I totally agree with what he said but I repeat that the problem is merely one of a time lag. Can this policy be justified and maintained while a large number of people are deprived of a second service even though there is somebody else who is prepared to offer it to them?

I agree with the hon. member that there should be long-range planning. But first there must be a commitment. We must decide whether we are going to go this route or not. If we are not, then the problem I have mentioned will not exist. However, the fact is that there has been no clarification of this point.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I am not preaching for a call here but, holding the views I have expressed, if I were a member of the regulatory authority and had an application before me involving Kingston, where there is a demand for a C.B.C. station, I would certainly find out from the government when funds were likely to be made available for that station. If I should be told that funds would not be available until 1975, 1976 or 1977, I would say that the people of Kingston should not have to wait that long. If there were a private applicant that application would be heard now. I believe these people should get broadcasting service either through an affiliate of the corporation or through a corporation owned station. I believe the members of the regulatory body would be governed by their knowledge and by common sense too.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, this is my first attempt to take part in this debate. It is not my intention to delay unduly the passage of this bill. However, I find that this subclause as it stood originally and as it stands now as amended is absolutely incompatible with all the beliefs I, as a citizen of this country, hold.

Without presenting a political philosophy of any kind I should like to point out some of the logic which I believe hon. members should apply to this subclause before we give final consideration to it. The original subclause in the bill would make the national broadcasting service paramount in this country. From reading the bill one can only come to the conclusion that if there should be any difference between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and any of the private stations the solution to the problem would, ipso facto, be in favour of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The exact wording of subclause (h) of clause 2 is as follows:

> —where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, the objectives of the national broadcasting service must prevail;

In other words, it matters not one iota what the reasons might be for the objectives of the private broadcasters if the objectives of the national broadcasting service which are being put forward are in the least contrary to the action being pursued by the private broadcasters. In this case the objectives of the national broadcasting service must prevail.

The next question we must ask ourselves is, who shall decide what are the objectives of the commission. A little farther on in the bill we find, under the heading "Powers of the Council", clause 16. Clause 16 reads as follows:

> (1) In furtherance of its objects, the Council, on the recommendation of the Executive Committee, may
> (a) prescribe classes of broadcasting licences;—

I do not find that reprehensible. However, I do find paragraph (b) reprehensible. It reads as follows:

(b) make regulations applicable to all persons holding broadcasting licences, or to all persons holding broadcasting licences of one or more classes,

(i) respecting standards of programs,

(ii) respecting scheduling policy in relation to any category or categories of programs,

(iii) respecting the character of advertising and the amount of time that may be devoted to advertising,

(iv) respecting the proportion of time that may be devoted to the broadcasting of programs, advertisements or announcements of a partisan political character and the assignment of such time on an equitable basis to political parties and candidates,

(v) respecting the use of dramatization in programs, advertisements or announcements of a partisan political character,

Paragraph (b) lists in all nine fields in which the executive committee of the council can establish its own objectives and make regulations. In other words, the members of the council are empowered to establish and enforce their own objectives. Once again it is a case of setting up a body somewhat like a bureaucratic group of civil servants which can make its own laws, enforce those laws and make a final judgment from which there is no appeal.

I suggest to hon. members that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona should not be dismissed without serious consideration. As a matter of fact, while I was in the house yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg South proposed an amendment which put the case very clearly. The effect of his amendment would have been to make the public interest paramount in respect of any consideration given to quarrels between the private and public sectors of broadcasting. It seemed to me that the amendment proposed by the hon. member suited the purpose admirably because we are here not to protect the C.B.C. but rather to protect the public interest.

My friends to the left, geographically and politically, say it is the same thing. It is far from being the same thing. One does not protect the rights of individuals or private enterprise by assigning the rights to some government bureaucracy. This House of Commons is the root of government. We assign some of our authority to ministers but ministers are answerable to this house. From past experience we know that the authority which has been vested in organizations, committees and commissions such as the Board of Broadcast Governors or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is not defended before the bar of the House of Commons. There have been many occasions since I have been a member of this house when questions, particularly concerning the character of programs, have been raised in respect of the C.B.C., at which time the minister has stated that answers to the questions cannot be given in the House of Commons because the C.B.C. is not responsible to her.

I say that the subclause as placed in the bill originally and as now amended gives very great authority to the commission which will be governing broadcasting in this country henceforth. I would agree to this amendment or to the original subclause if we had any indication of agreement from the broadcasting industry of this country that that industry should be subjected to this type of regulation. Without having inquired of the private broadcasters, I feel quite sure that no private broadcaster in this country would be agreeable to or suggest such a provision as subclause (h). I dare say that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters finds this subclause very reprehensible, because it will hold back the private sector of broadcasting in this country in order to make way for a slowly moving and lethargic publicly owned broadcasting system.

I do not believe it is good enough for some members of this house to rise and say that the private broadcasters of this country have not done a good job. I think the private broadcasters have been pushing the C.B.C. into more and better programming. The private broadcasters have been leading the way in broadcasting in this country and deserve better treatment than we are offering them under subclause (h) of clause 2.

I say to the minister that if she can rise in her place and say that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters is in complete agreement with subclause (h) and thinks it will not inhibit their growth, ingenuity and adventurous spirit, I will take a different attitude to it. But I am quite sure the private sector of broadcasting in this country finds this section of the bill just as reprehensible as I and other members on this side of the house do and, in fact, as some members on the minister's side of the house do. I refer to those hon. members who realize that the passage of this subclause will put television and radio in this country under a cloud and will mean that producers in the private sector will be apprehensive of any type of exploration in programming for fear that it may offend a member of the broadcasting commission.

Therefore I would like the minister to give me the assurance at this time that the Canadian Association of Broadcasters, whose members represent the private broadcasting sector of the country, are not opposed to this subclause. Otherwise I would urge hon. members to amend the subclause so that it will read along the lines put forward yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg South, to the effect that decisions will be made after giving consideration, and only consideration, to the public interest. If this is not done I would ask that the subclause be entirely removed from the bill.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, I did not expect to have to stand again—

Miss LaMarsh: Who told you to?

Mr. Bigg: —to comment upon this subclause.

Miss LaMarsh: Who told you to?

Mr. Bigg: If the hon. lady would stand and say what I think she should say it would be quite unnecessary for me to rise again to speak on the bill. It is the hon. lady who opened the lid of Pandora's box. It is she who knows better than anybody, I hope, where the C.B.C. has got off the track. I have assured the hon. lady on more than one occasion, and I repeat it now, that if she is going to look after the best interests of the people of Canada I will pack up and sit down. But in the last few days I have seen no indication whatsoever that she is going to be anything but a quiet tool of this crown corporation.

Miss LaMarsh: Nobody has ever accused me of being quiet.

Mr. Knowles: Or of being a tool.

Mr. Bigg: Crown corporations are a danger in that, in my opinion, they are an abdication of free enterprise. They are enabled, through the power of government, to do some things which some people in government think are not capable of being performed by private enterprise.

I shall repeat as often as I can, that I believe private enterprise can perform any service for the people of Canada better than ponderous crown corporations. Some crown corporations are slow in their empire building, but the C.B.C. is not. The C.B.C. has an over-burgeoning budget which has reached, I believe, some $170 million a year. I do not think their budget will go down. Yet we appear to be receiving less and less real service in the public interest.

What can be done about this situation? We certainly will not improve it by increasing the powers of this crown corporation to the point where they can blot out all competition from private interests. When I hear members of the house applauding this bill and the particular subclause under discussion, I know we are getting to the heart of the matter and they are pleasing those people who want to blot out all competition from private enterprise.

I admit there may be times when a crown corporation does give us service. We vote them the money to do this. But I venture to say that never, but never, does a crown corporation give us better service, dollar for dollar, than private enterprise. If you put unlimited funds at the disposal of a crown corporation, how can private enterprise hope to compete?

Private enterprise has proved time and time again that in the broadcasting field it can put programs on the air for a fraction of the money that is taken out of the taxpayers' pockets for the C.B.C Surely this alone is a good reason why this subclause should not be passed. If it does pass, there will be no competition whatsoever as long as the C.B.C. wants it that way. Surely all we are doing here, unless we are to have a co-operative system in Canada, is getting out guide lines. The guide lines in respect of the C.B.C have been ignored continually during the last three or four years. The objectives as outlined in subclause (g) have always been those laid down by parliament as guide lines for the C.B.C. But there is no question at all that today the people of Canada are convinced that these guide lines have not been followed.

The reason given for the C.B.C. not following these guide lines is that there must be freedom of the air. How can this subclause give freedom of the air when it cuts out all possible competition to the C.B.C.? I could not agree more with my colleague the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona when he says he cannot vote for anything which purports to put itself above the public interest. I am not satisfied so far that the definition of public interest is what I and, I sincerely believe, the people of Canada think is the public interest.

Let me refer to the objectives as set out in subclause (g). I do not say this in ignorance of the real issues but the question is, who is going to carry out these objectives, if they are going to be carried out at all? My argument is well founded if put forward only on monetary grounds. I think I have covered that question. It is more economical for private enterprise to provide good programming.

However, we know that private enterprise has, naturally, a selfish interest. It is looking for profit. In spite of the fact that private enterprise can provide programs more cheaply and, I think, more effectively in a great many cases, it naturally wants to avoid the non-profitable areas of broadcasting. It is not particularly interested in education for education's sake. Private enterprise cannot afford to provide high-powered stations to cover the hinterland, the deep north, the outlying districts. Naturally, true free enterprise is concerned with making a profit and wants to reach the most people for the least amount of money.

A progressive government wants to cover non-profitable operations, particularly if it will mean national unity, education, Canadian identity and the bringing of culture to our people. As taxpayers we have been willing up to now to pay a very large subsidy to this crown corporation which has by and large covered these areas. I like to think that this is a stopgap measure and eventually the population of Canada will expand to the point where every section of our country can afford free enterprise coverage, which is cheaper and can better depict public opinion.

Even if the C.B.C. were to carry out the objectives outlined in subclause (g), it would still be a government fed organization. Both the hon. lady and the C.B.C. say they do not want to be told what programs to put on. I for one do not want to have to tell them in detail what programs to put on, but I am quite certain that unless the C.B.C. has competition and unless it has guidance from above, it will continue to provide the type of program we have had until now and which is not acceptable to us. Therefore we are forced to try to improve the bill which alone can delegate the powers and lay down the guide lines for this vast corporation.

The C.B.C. is not the only crown corporation which has got out of hand. The first trip I made as a member representing my great constituency was to Montreal for an interview with the head of the Canadian National Railways. Before I could even introduce myself or put forward the proposition which I went down there to present to the C.N.R. I was told, "Go home to Alberta, mind your own business and leave our railroad alone". What did they mean by "our railroad"? One might have thought they meant the railroad of the public of Canada. However, that is not what they meant at all. They meant that the C.N.R. was a power unto itself and that even members of parliament should not be allowed to question its officers on whether or not they could give a better service to the areas represented by members. This is just not good enough. At that time I stated to the C.N.R. that I was not a baby and that I happened to represent 70,000 people who wanted an improvement in the service. But I was told it was none of my business. It is my business to do something about what I think is wrong, and this also applies to the C.B.C.

I can tell from the smiles on the faces of hon. members opposite that they think Mr. Donald Gordon was right and I was wrong and that I am still wrong. I do not think there is any institution in Canada above parliament, and whenever we delegate powers to ministers, to the government generally or to officials of the C.B.C., all we are doing is saying that we are seized with the responsibility of looking after the public interests of Canada. I am heartened that there are a great many members of the house who will at least try to ensure that the public interest is safeguarded. I venture to suggest that the people of Canada look to us to ensure that this is done. I for one am not willing to abdicate the regulatory power which we have and to say that any goup of people, no matter how strong and how well informed they may be, can stand above parliament and say that their ideas of what the public interests are should be paramount.

It is often difficult for us to agree on what exactly the public interest is at any one time. As my friends to the left would say, one must sometimes go on and on trying until the necessary action is taken. The divorce bill is a good example. The members of that party were commended in many quarters in Canada for the way in which they worked almost ad nauseam until some result was achieved and finally action was taken. Our divorce laws are being very carefully considered.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I have listened to the hon. member speaking about railroads and now about divorce and I wonder whether it might not be better if he would confine his remarks to the subclause under discussion, namely subclause (h).

Mr. Bigg: Subclause (h) refers to one thing only, the public interest, how it can best be served and how the parliament of Canada should delegate its authority, to whom and why. I do not think I have wandered away from this broad reference because "public interest" is a very broad subject. Every section of Canada's public life is affected by this subclause and any possible amendments thereto. It affects the very roots of democracy itself. I believe I should not abdicate my responsibilities in this respect because we are dealing here with a matter which has a bearing on democracy or, if you like, bureaucracy, and there are people who believe that only through complete bureaucracy can there be freedom. I say that when bureaucracy predominates and becomes paramount there is no freedom.

Such a state of affairs may arise when there is an abuse of power on the part of crown corporations such as, for instance, the C.N.R. I do not think any member in the house who takes his responsibilities seriously would agree that a member of a crown corporation should say to me when I go to see him about an improvement for the welfare of my people that I should go home and mind my own business, even before I have stated my case. The case I intended to put to the C.N.R. involved the extension of two railroad lines, one of which was built and the other was not. One of them was the Pine Point railroad. If I had an interest in a private broadcasting station and sought to compete with the C.B.C. I would not want to receive the same answer I received from the C.N.R., that the matter is in hand, that they are handling it adequately, that they know all the answers and will give all the service necessary regardless of the cost to the taxpayer and regardless of whether or not the objectives outlined in subclause (g) are in fact being carried out.

Those who believe in free enterprise in Canada have a right to speak out. It is passing strange that if the people of Canada do not think so they should vote the way they do. The people of Canada not only want the free enterprise system to prevail but they are getting tired of our sitting here in the House of Commons and not doing something about improving the opportunity of people under free enterprise to earn a living.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

The complaint we hear more often than any other concerns how much, if anything, is being done in Ottawa to preserve the free enterprise system. Do we still believe in an honest profit for honest work or must we all become children of the state? I am tired of the fatherly approach. I, for one, am tired of being looked after from birth to eternity. Perhaps the only vestige of individual freedom left is the freedom to stand here and waste the time of some people. I assure you I am not wasting the time of the people who sent me here. If I want to keep coming down here, my only fear is that I may lose my nerve and not continue to fight for free enterprise, for the right of a man to earn a living and the right to compete with crown corporations no matter how much sanctity those corporations think they have.

There is no such thing as a crown corporation that is above parliament. We cannot abdicate the public interest and we do not intend to do so. If you have an ear to the ground, as I have, and if you listen to what the little people of Canada are saying you will find they want the government to withdraw from the business fields it occupies in Canada. These people want the right to compete, to put their time and energy behind their own self-interest and be good, free Canadian citizens.

There are a great many people in this country who still believe that the free enterprise system is the most effective, the most fair economically, the most challenging and the most satisfying which has ever been developed on this tired old planet of ours. I look at those areas of the world which do not have our system and I find there is not a citizen in Canada who would be willing to go there. The only reason it is worth while to stay here is that we intend to preserve this system as long as we have the power to do so. I still believe the people of Canada are going to insist that we have the courage to stand here and criticize each and every attempt to put the interests of any group above the interests of the people of Canada. It is not beyond our capability to spell out in each and every statute which we put on the books a provision that this gang over here or that gang over there shall not be preferred. As I take my seat I assure you that when legislation is proposed which will put the public interest above all other interests I will be the first to support it.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to see that the Leader of the Opposition is in the chamber because I think he can be of some assistance to us in this debate. It seems quite evident that some members of his party are determined to filibuster this clause.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Prittie: I do not know what the views of the official opposition are in connection with broadcasting matters.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg South on a point of order.

Mr. Sherman: I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond would like to reconsider his remark about filibustering. There has been no filibuster in this committee by anyone, particularly anyone on this side of the chamber. We have had a deep and urgent interest in this legislation. I feel that the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond would like to reconsider his remark.

Mr. Prittie: No, Mr. Chairman, I would not like to reconsider it. I said what I thought was a correct interpretation of the situation now.

Mr. Cowan: I rise on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I looked at the citation in Beauchesne a couple of days ago and found that a member of this house cannot impute motives to another hon. member. If the hon. member does not have enough courtesy to withdraw his remark, then I ask the chairman to make a ruling on the matter.

Mr. Prittie: I did not impute any motives to the hon. member for York-Humber. If I had to do so—

Mr. Cowan: I said the reference was to any member, not to me.

Mr. Sherman: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond did impute motives to certain members of the party of the Leader of the Opposition. He so identified the people to whom he referred.

Mr. Prittie: If the hon. member for Winnipeg South had listened carefully he would have noticed that I qualified my remarks and did not include the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Prittie: I shall now continue with what I was going to say. I should like to know what the views of the Leader of the Opposition are on broadcasting matters and what is the broadcasting policy of his party. I suspect his views are more in line with the views of the hon. member for Royal and the hon. member for Halifax, to whom we have listened this afternoon, in connection with this clause. If we could hear his views perhaps we could make some progress on this matter.

Some members have spoken this afternoon as if private broadcasting in Canada were in peril because of subclause (h), but it certainly is not. There are more private television and radio stations in Canada at the moment than there are C.B.C. stations, and there will be more in the future. Some of them are doing very well. There is no reason why private stations will not do well in the future. There is nothing in this bill which will prevent private broadcasters from establishing new stations and making money.

What the bill provides is certain objectives of broadcasting policy, and those objectives are given to the national broadcasting service to carry out. The national broadcasting service may consist of publicly owned stations or of privately owned stations affiliated with the C.B.C. They are charged with this specific responsibility. When I tried to move an amendment to impose the objective of national unity upon all broadcasters in Canada I was told that this was a special job for the public element. We are giving them this special job, so it seems to me they should have a paramount position. There is nothing in the bill which will inhibit private broadcasting. We are being subjected to delaying tactics, so I think it would help if we could hear from a spokesman for the official opposition as to what their broadcasting policy is.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, we are witnessing another attempt to get back to where we were something like a day and a half ago in the discussion of clause 2(h). I am not at all happy with the amendment that is before us. It suggests that all other things being equal the scales should be tipped toward the public corporation. Surely the task of any board adjudicating a conflict that might arise between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element would be to determine which side had the better case. If they arrive at a point where, all other factors being in balance, they are unable to make a decision, then their clear duty would be to resign or at least to pass on the dispute to the next level or reconstitute the board so new personnel could examine the question to ascertain which side had the better case. We do not need or want in this legislation a guide line that would inevitably tip the scales in one direction. It would not take many precedents to establish a rule embedded more firmly than the wording of the amendment before us might suggest.

It has already been suggested by one provincial figure that passage of this bill should be postponed till the conclusion of the constitutional conference. In view of the Canadian charter of human rights to be presented to the conference, this might be a good idea. For example, in this booklet that has been distributed to hon. members there is a reference to the United States declaration of independence and we read that all men are created equal and endowed with inalienable rights, such as life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We also read that to secure these rights governments are instituted among men deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, and whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends we are not to tip the scales in its favour but it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it and to institute a new government.

These are very clear and ringing words in support of the argument that has been carried on for the past two days that the public interest, the government interest or the interest of crown corporations need not be identical. This is a point that seems to require a tremendous amount of reiteration.

Again in the booklet provided to hon. members, Mr. Chairman, we read the following:

> In both the United States and France, there was embodied the idea that men shall not be deprived of liberty or property except in accordance with the law. This is a manifestation of the belief that men should be ruled by laws, not men; that a government has no more power than the people have agreed to delegate to it.

I hope this parliament will not be willing to delegate to the government more than its equal share of power in any dispute that may arise between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and private interests. There will be occasions when the private interest is not that of one individual who would come into dispute with the objectives of the national broadcasting service at some point in the future.

The charter of human rights from which I have quoted suggests that Canada needs a constitutional bill of rights. I am not prepared at the moment to argue that we need that constitutional guarantee as long as we have a parliament that is alert and courts that use their wisdom to decide cases between parties, not on the basis of some prearranged criterion that the government of the day might wish them to use.

I should like to read one further paragraph from this charter. At page 11 there is this statement:

> A constitutional bill of rights in Canada would guarantee the fundamental freedoms of the individual from interference, whether federal or provincial.

That is a brave declaration, Mr. Chairman, in light of the fact that we seem to be prepared to write into this broadcasting bill a certain amount of interference with the individual and to say that where all things are considered equal the scale is to be tipped in favour of the crown corporation, whose interest is to be paramount. Perhaps it would be well from the point of view of the government to consider the broadcasting bill in relation to the Canadian charter of human rights, and it might also be a good idea to wait until the conference has concluded before proceeding further with this bill.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, like the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, I have some difficulty in detecting just what is the position of the official opposition on this question, and I think it is important that this be clarified. One of the benefits of our parliamentary system is that a party in this house can take a position that the people of Canada can later judge when they are given the opportunity to choose a government. I suggest that we in this house are not giving the people of Canada that opportunity until we determine what is the official opposition's position on this very basic paragraph in the bill.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke stated quite clearly what I presumed to be the position of his party. The hon. member for Athabasca stated quite clearly what may be the position of his party, though I am not sure. It seemed to differ substantially from the position taken in the past, both in the house and in committee, by the hon. member for Royal, who I understood to be the broadcasting expert and critic for the official opposition. It also seemed to differ substantially from the position taken by the member I understood to be the deputy broadcasting critic for the official opposition, the hon. member for Halifax.

Yesterday we saw the spectacle of the hon. member for Halifax being abandoned, except for the companionship of the house leader of the official opposition, in his introduction of an amendment which those of us on this side of the house—certainly the minister—took in good faith as an amendment put forward on behalf of his party. I believe the minister went to some trouble to check with the broadcasting critic of the N.D.P. in order to see whether the amendment was acceptable to that party, though perhaps not with the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke because the position of his party has been very clearly stated. It is not a position with which I agree but I believe he has stated it clearly. I believe that we and the people of Canada have the right to know clearly what is the position of the official opposition on this point, one that is so central to the future of broadcasting in Canada.

It has been suggested that this subclause, either as originally worded or as amended on the initiative of the hon. member for Halifax, the deputy broadcasting critic of the official opposition, undermines democracy. Is that the position taken by the Progressive Conservative party? It seems to me that the position taken by the government is clear: it is that put forward by the minister responsible. Every member of this party on this side of the house does not completely agree with that position, but we all know what is the position of the government. Do we know what is the position of the official opposition? I am afraid I have not been able to ascertain it.

Does the official opposition agree or not with the original exposition of the place of public broadcasting given by Right Hon. R. B. Bennett some years ago and quoted so often during the debate, and which occupies such an important place in the report of the committee of which I have the honour to be chairman? I suggest there is nothing original in the wording of the subclause put forward by the minister. Subclause (h) is new to the Broadcasting Act, or will be if it is passed, but it is surely not new to our consideration of broadcasting in Canada.

When that great senior statesman of Canadian broadcasting, Mr. E. Austin Weir, made a statement to our committee during our consideration of the white paper on broadcasting, he said that a score of parliamentary committees from 1932 to 1958 and two royal commissions had declared the C.B.C. to be the core and dominant feature of the Canadian broadcasting system. He said the white paper prepared by the government did not state that predominance and he recommended, as did other witnesses, that it be stated and that our new act should make a legislative declaration of the predominance of the public sector of broadcasting.

This desire was recognized by the committee, as demonstrated by the hon. lady, in a number of places in the report which was tabled in the house on March 21, 1967. I shall refer to a few passages to indicate what this all-party committee had to say about this matter. On page 6 of the report, under our comments on section 3 of the white paper, are found these words:

> The committee concurs with the general principles stated in the white paper. We urge, however, a clear legislative declaration of the pre-eminence of the public sector.

On page 7, at the beginning of paragraph 4 of our comments, are found the following words:

> The C.B.C., as the prime instrument of public policy in broadcasting and one of the world's largest broadcasting organizations, needs a strong board of directors.

You will note the words "prime instrument of public policy in broadcasting".

On page 8 of our report, still commenting on paragraph 4 of the white paper, we said:

> In assessing the C.B.C., the B.B.G. should take into account the financial resources available to the corporation, its mandate and its vital importance as the prime instrument of national policy in broadcasting.

Though this matter has been mentioned a number of times in the house it must be mentioned again, and I refer to the last paragraph of the report which is in italics to emphasize the importance each member of the committee attached to the statement I am about to read:

> We express our conviction that the primacy of the public sector should be the paramount and continuing objective of the new legislation; that we must make more effective, and not undermine, the main instrument by which "national consciousness may be fostered and sustained and national unity still further strengthened."

The last words "national consciousness may be fostered and sustained and national unity still further strengthened" are a direct quotation of the words of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, spoken when he introduced the legislation founding the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation 35-odd years ago. That position has been adopted in many reports, but now I wish to refer briefly to the latest basis for public policy in this field. The report of the committee on broadcasting, 1965, better known as the second Fowler report, says on page 12:

> We believe that private broadcasters can, and should, achieve a greater degree of common purpose, and should participate in the national objectives of the Canadian broadcasting system to which they belong, as well as continuing to render local services to their individual communities. But the private sector is unlikely to achieve the cohesion and unity that the public sector should have and, despite their near equality in total income, this necessarily means that the public agency —the C.B.C.—has the primary responsibility and must be paramount in creating and maintaining a broadcasting system that is distinctively Canadian.
> While the private broadcasters are a part of the system, and while their rights and interests should have all legitimate protection, in cases of fundamental conflict between the public and private sectors the interests of the C.B.C. must prevail.

I shall leave that quotation for a moment to say that the drafters of this legislation recognized that perhaps that statement is too strong. They have carefully distinguished between the objectives of the public sector and the interests of the private sector and they have not placed the interests of the C.B.C. above the interests of the private sector. I continue quoting:

> The simple fact—the crucial fact—which must be clearly understood is that the C.B.C. is the essential—

That last word is in italics:

> —element of the Canadian broadcasting system and the most important single instrument available for the development and maintenance of the unity of Canada.

Also, on page 123 of this same report appear these statements:

> The C.B.C. is the chosen instrument for public broadcasting in Canada. It is only a part of the Canadian broadcasting system; the private broadcasters also receive rights to use public assets and, in accepting those rights assume responsibilities to contribute to the national purpose of the system. However, the C.B.C. has the primary responsibility for providing excellent broadcasting services to the Canadian people.

Lower down on that page appears this statement:

> Having been given the primary responsibility, the interests of the C.B.C. are paramount within the Canadian broadcasting system, but if it is to perform its function adequately and acceptably, it must be told what it is expected to do. It must have a clear mandate from parliament.

I interpose to say that that is one of the objects of clause 2 and particularly of subclause (g) which has already been passed, I believe. Returning to the report, I quote from page 125:

> It should be clearly stated:—

[Mr. Stanbury.]

I skip a paragraph and continue quoting:

> —that within the national system, the C.B.C., as the chosen instrument of parliament, has the prime responsibility to provide broadcasting services to the Canadian people as a whole, and that the interests of the C.B.C. are therefore paramount.

In making its recommendations to the house the standing committee reflected the basic statements and principles which appear in the second Fowler report and in other similar reports which have been made through the years. I am delighted, as I am sure the majority of our committee members are, that the minister and the government recognized the necessity to make the clear legislative declaration that the objects of the public sector should be paramount. It is not only the majority of Liberal members of that committee, not only the majority of the official opposition on that committee—its chief critic was a member of the steering committee and helped to draft our report—not only the majority of N.D.P. members of that committee and not only those who drafted this legislation who have supported the concept and sentiment about which I have spoken and read. There was editorial comment following the release of our report, and I want to refer to two editorials which state the case clearly. One of these articles appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of March 22, 1967, and I quote from it in reference to the report of our committee:

• (5:30 p.m.)

> It strongly affirms the pre-eminent role which the publicly-owned Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should play in a national system.

Later the article says:

> It has taken the best of Fowler and of the white paper, but has sharpened the main points of both and has kept in view the national purposes and special value of a public broadcasting organization.

Some members of the opposition might suggest that the Ottawa Citizen is more favourably disposed toward the government than are certain other newspapers. To please them I should like to quote from the Ottawa Journal of the same date in which these words appear in an editorial on the subject of our report:

> The basic importance of the committee's work is to reaffirm the role of the C.B.C. in Canadian broadcasting. Members of parliament from all sides of the Commons urge "a clear, legislative declaration of the pre-eminence of the public sector"—the C.B.C.

It is clear what all the bodies which have investigated broadcasting in this country over the years have recommended. It is clear what the standing committee on broadcasting wanted. The government has made its position clear by adopting the recommendations of the standing committee. The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke has made the position of his party clear and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond has made the position of the New Democratic party clear. I wonder whether we could ask that the position of the official opposition be made clear at this point. Let members opposite tell us whether they are opposed to the principles I have just outlined. If, indeed, they are opposed to those principles, let us hear their position clearly stated. Let them, if necessary, put forward a further amendment to express their attitude. Then let the committee vote on it and make progress with this bill. It is incumbent on the party opposite and in particular, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond stated, it is incumbent on the leader of that party to tell us what he thinks about this broadcasting legislation.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks to make on the bill before us, particularly with regard to the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Calgary. It has been the custom for most speakers to deal briefly with the general subject of radio and television in relation to this subclause of the bill. Many speeches have been made in the course of the last few weeks on the subject matter of this important bill. It is only since I have been paying particular attention to the bill in the last few days that I have become aware of the fact that there is such dissension and disruption in the ranks of the official opposition relating to their whole philosophy of their approach to broadcasting. I respect the hon. member for Calgary, who has spoken on a number of occasions and who spent a long time in the standing committee—

Mr. Sherman: On a point of order, is the hon. member referring to the hon. member for Calgary South or does he have the hon. member for Winnipeg South in mind?

Mr. Mackasey: Both hon. gentlemen. The point I am making is that we have advanced a long way during our consideration of this bill, the foundation for which is the acceptance among all parties, with the exception perhaps of the Social Credit party, of a political philosophy generally favourable toward the C.B.C. and the advance of public funds annually in its support. This does not mean that the C.B.C is above criticism. Indeed, there is no other public body which has been subject to as much criticism and investigation. But at least we believed that the Conservative party, along with the Liberal party and the New Democratic party, approved the concept of the public radio and television organization which we call the C.B.C. It is only as a result of the dissension and disunity which is so evident from the speeches of hon. members of the official opposition that we begin to realize there is an internal struggle going on within the party opposite as to whether it does or does not endorse the principle upon which the C.B.C. was established.

I recognize and understand the views of those who have indicated in the last few days that they are against public broadcasting or television. The former leader of the opposition never missed an opportunity in the House of Commons, even when castigating the C.B.C., to re-endorse the principle that a country as close to the United States as we are needed some organization such as the C.B.C. to represent what little Canadian identity we have left in this nation.

The C.B.C. is among the few media of communication that we control in this country through which we can emphasize the fact that we are a country and a nation. It is for this reason, because the C.B.C. has such a responsible role to play in the growth of this country, that we have adopted subclause (g) and outlined the four broad objectives of the corporation. In these circumstances I think it is about time the Leader of the Opposition let us know where he stands. Does he support the spokesmen for private enterprise over there or does he support those who believe in the C.B.C.?

Mr. Sherman: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he be more explicit and tell the committee on what occasion anybody in this party has spoken against the idea of a publicly-owned broadcasting system?

Mr. Mackasey: Yes. Only the other night the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings openly stated that he was contemplating bringing in an amendment whose effect would be to destroy the whole concept of a publicly-owned system. One would only have to read some of the speeches made today to realize that all too many members of the official opposition are against the C.B.C. and that when the chips are down they stand for private interests, the profit-making organizations.

Here, as I say, is a medium of communication which was designed to protect the Canadian identity. And what do we hear from members of the official opposition? They object to the word "filibuster". If the word "filibuster" is too strong for their sensitive feelings, let us examine the history of the bill before us. Is it something brought up by the minister last week, something which is being rammed through the House of Commons? If it were a filibuster would be legitimate or at least understandable. But what are the facts? The facts show that the C.B.C. has been subject—

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

In wonder if the member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) is dealing with the amendment now under consideration or whether he is doing a history of the opposition party. The Chair has often called us to order when we strayed from the question or from the amendment under consideration.

I realize the hon. member has strayed quite far from the subject and I wonder if he should not stick to the paragraph (h) of clause 2 so that we may make some progress? Why does the member wish to prolong consideration of this bill?

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that the objection to clause 2(h) is an objection to the principle that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation should exist, is existing, and should have priority over private interests in this country. This is all the objection really is. One group is supporting private interests and the other group, including myself at the moment, is supporting and defending the principle that surely this country should have some medium controlled by parliament, belonging to the Canadian people, and dedicated to the concept that we are a nation and that Americans do not and should not control all our fields of communications. This concept is reflected in subclause (h).

We have had intensive investigations of the C.B.C. and its operations. Just a few months ago hon. gentlemen who are now castigating the C.B.C. took advantage of a statement made by the minister, in which she suggested there was rotten management in the C.B.C., to stand up and protect the C.B.C. and castigate the minister. If we had time to compare their statements then with their statements now it would make funny reading. However, as a result of certain studies and investigations we came up with a white paper which formed the basis of this bill.

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the hon. member to confine his remarks as closely as possible to clause 2(h).

Mr. Mackasey: I entirely agree with your suggestion, Mr. Chairman, and as usual bow to your ruling. As amended clause 2(h) now reads:

> (h) where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, it shall be resolved in the public interest but paramount consideration shall be given to the objectives of the national broadcasting service.

I think this was a fine amendment of the subclause. I presume it was drawn up by the hon. member for Halifax. I am not certain of that, but it sounds very much like his work because it does not depart from the principle that the C.B.C. is our organization, for better or worse, as opposed to that of private interests, and it also recognizes the rights of those private interests to a fair hearing in areas of conflict.

But that amendment has not satisfied all the members of the Conservative party, despite the fact that it was brought forward by a member as senior, as respected and as intelligent as the hon. member for Halifax. This can only lead to the conclusion that there is a definite difference of opinion in that party. This is a fair assumption because if it did meet the full approval of the Conservative party and reflected their philosophy and policy vis-à-vis the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, this clause would have been passed long ago and the committee would have moved on to another clause.

In discussing clause 2 (h) I am sure, Mr. Chairman, I may be permitted to bring it to the attention of the public that it is part of a bill based on the white paper, which in turn was based on at least three investigations of the C.B.C. However, in discussing it I want to point out that something other than the bill is at stake here, namely, the concept of the new emphasis that we have placed on standing and special committees of the House of Commons. Two years ago all parties in the house agreed to put more emphasis on committees, including the broadcasting committee—

Mr. Grégoire: Order.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who endorses the separatists seems to want to holler order. Let him holler from his seat. I cannot see him in the chamber from here but I can hear him.

As I was saying, subclause (h) is part of a bill that derived its origin from the standing committee on broadcasting. I would point out that the minister entered the spirit of the new committee system by giving that system complete freedom to analyse this bill, to criticize it, to improve it and to amend it to such an extent that subclause (h) actually came in its unamended form from the steering committee of the broadcasting committee.

On that committee was no less a person than the hon. member for Royal. That hon. member is progressive, and I know he has rather forward-looking ideas which may not necessarily be in complete accord with those of all his colleagues. This is normal, but at least he was one of the official spokesmen for his party in the broadcasting committee. When he, as a member of the steering committee, gave his blanket approval to subclause (h) it was only natural that the minister should expect speedy passage of it in committee of the whole.

After spending weeks and weeks on this bill, in the standing committee where it was subject to the scrutiny of members from all parties in the house, it would be only normal and natural for the minister to think that when the bill reached committee of the whole its passage would be rather speedy, because that was the idea behind the new emphasis on the committee system. I ask, what minister is going to have any incentive in the future to refer his or her legislation to a standing committee of the house for intensive study, only to find that all the arguments are repeated ad nauseam in committee of the whole?

As I say, Mr. Chairman, I respect the hon. member for Winnipeg South because I do know that of all the critics who have participated in the debate on subclause (h) he is one who has earned the right to stand up here and speak on this subject matter. Nobody has denied him the right to bring his amendments forward. But having brought them forward and presented his arguments concisely, lucidly and as eloquently as he could, it seems to me his colleagues would do a service to him, to the minister, to the house and to all of Canada to let matters proceed to a vote. The kind of help he has been getting he does not need because he has advanced his reasons with conviction and integrity, based on his experience in private life and on his experience in the committee.

It is not his participation that I object to, it is the participation by all the other members who have taken advantage of subclause (h) and the amendment to it to outline their basic philosophies on broadcasting and to suggest that we do not need the C.B.C. and that we should let the Americans take complete control of the field of communications. If this is how they feel, and this is how I think they feel, they should have said so on second reading when we were debating the principle of this broadcasting legislation.

If this is how hon. members opposite feel, then it is time for the Leader of the Opposition to call more special caucuses at two o'clock in the afternoon and find out where the Conservatives are going on broadcasting, whether they recognize the need and the necessity for the C.B.C. or whether they do not. If they do, then let us stop using the C.B.C as a whipping boy. I suggest, in deference to the hon. member for Winnipeg South who has done a fine and proper job in presenting his viewpoints, that his amendment should be put and voted on.

Mr. Keays: Now that the hon. member has spoken about an amendment and referred to the hon. member for Winnipeg South, would he mind speaking on the amendment before the committee which is the one moved by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona?

Mr. Mackasey: There have been half a dozen amendments, Mr. Chairman, but I thank the hon. member for Gaspé for his usually eloquent and telling contribution to broadcasting. In turn I would ask him where does he stand? Does he support the public broadcasting system or the private stations?

Mr. Starr: Both.

Mr. Keays: Instead of using all the verbiage which some hon. members seem to like I reserve my remarks until we reach the proper clause.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. gentleman has given his answer and I will not seek to interpret it. I repeat what I have said, that even though somebody has stated they support both there should be a bias on behalf of C.B.C., since we have already accepted subclause (g). Possibly there is something in subclause (g) which some members may think could cause conflicts. Perhaps they would arise as a result of the wording which says that the national broadcasting service should be extended to all parts of Canada as public funds become available, or as a result of the wording which says that people in all geographic regions who speak the French language or the English language must be served. Perhaps this is what is bothering some people. Maybe some people object to the idea that broadcasting should contribute to the development of the national unity. I am not sure what people are objecting to. All I can say is that so long as we recognize the necessity for a Canadian broadcasting service which belongs to the people of Canada, is paid for by the taxpayers and administered through parliament, at least in so far as its finances are concerned, then the least we can do, having recognized this, is to recognize that when there is conflict which must be decided in favour of one group or the other, then priority should be given to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

That really is the substance of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Halifax. I believe it is a reasonable compromise. It was accepted by the minister. If, on the other hand, certain members of the opposition believe there is no room for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, then I can understand their opposition to subclause (h). This is the reason I say with respect and sincerity that the Leader of the Opposition should take advantage of this debate to make clear where his party stands on this matter.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, during recent weeks we have heard a good deal about the campaign being carried on by members in the ranks opposite for the leadership of their party. This, however, is the first occasion we have had to view the hon. member for Verdun in full flight in his campaign for a cabinet post. I suggest that he has done an exceptionally fine job in carrying on that campaign. I am sure he has impressed his leader and his colleagues. We on this side of the house have not been impressed, but we have nothing to say in respect of the appointment he may be seeking.

The scandalous attack of the hon. member for Verdun was so diffuse that it is almost impossible to know where to begin or to determine whether it is worth while to take up some of the outlandish allegations he has made. For example, he made the assertion that members of this party have advocated the abolition of the concept of public broadcasting in this country. This assertion is scandalous, out of order and improper. No one in this party has advocated such a philosophy. In fact a great many members of this party have taken the opposite position not only during this debate but also during the proceedings of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts. We have supported the idea of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as a publicly owned and operated system. We concede that it has done an admirable job through the years in binding this nation together and in helping to conserve the concept of a Canadian identity and national unity. It is utterly scandalous that anyone should suggest that we have taken a philosophical or political stand in this debate in opposition to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or the concept of a Canadian broadcasting service.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough spoke at length in his usual intelligent and compelling way. Although his speech was interesting it probably constituted the most dangerous utterance anyone has made in this chamber during this debate. He stood up and challenged this party on the question of difference of opinion. He took the position that they on that side are members of an almighty united party, that they are all of one mind and belief and have the same concept and philosophy of a greater Canada and a greater broadcasting system. What immortality.

I ask the hon. member for York-Scarborough where the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, for instance, stands. I know where he stands because the hon. member stood with me, or I stood with him, when this bill was before the standing committee in opposition to subclause (h) of clause 2. The hon. member for York-Scarborough is aware of this, as is the minister. No one spoke more vociferously or more intelligently than did the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo in respect of subclause (h) at that time. I notice that he has been conspicuously absent during most of this debate. He may have been behind the curtains but he certainly has been absent during the votes on most of the amendments.

Miss LaMarsh: Where are the hon. member for Royal and the hon. member for Prince?

Mr. Sherman: I was wondering when the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo would enter this debate. As for the members on this side of the house to whom the minister has referred, I should like to remind her that they both spoke earlier in this debate. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo made his first contribution today. He did so after having implied to all members of the standing committee that he would stand or fall on this clause when it reached the committee stage in the house. What about the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for York-Humber? Where does he stand in respect of this all-encompassing philosophy?

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, am I being asked a question?

Mr. Sherman: Yes.

Mr. Stanbury: I should like to refer the hon. member to Hansard of this day. When he reads Hansard he will realize that I said that by no means was there unanimity on this side of the house and that I welcomed the fact that there are varying points of view on this question. I did say that I know the position of the government. Now, can the hon. member please tell me what is the position of the official opposition?

Mr. Sherman: I am delighted to have that statement on the record because the implication in the hon. member's speech was that all was sweetness and unity over there and that there was division over here. Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak when this debate resumes after the dinner hour. May I call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock and in order that the house may proceed to private members' business I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer), Post Office Department—Libau, Manitoba—protest on transfer of postmastership; the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), Public Works—Vancouver—construction of federal building; the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), National Defence—prevailing rates employees losing jobs through unification.

DIVORCE

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a Message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-187, An Act respecting divorce, with an amendment.

[Editor's note: For text of amendment, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

MEASURE RESPECTING GROUNDS, JURISDICTION, JUDGES, ETC.—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent that the house proceed with the consideration of the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-187. The amendment is really to cure an oversight which occurred during the drafting of the bill. It would have the effect of continuing the power of the Ontario supreme court to deal with an action for annulment. That provision was inadvertently omitted in the redrafting of the bill. Under the former act parliament had not only the power to grant divorce but also to grant annulment on the ground of non-consummation of marriage. The right to grant an annulment was inadvertently excluded from the new bill. The necessary amendment was made in the Senate and I am now asking for unanimous consent that the house proceed with the consideration of the bill as amended and presented by the Senate.

• (6:00 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) assure us that there is nothing else in the Senate amendment than the point to which the minister just referred?

Mr. Pennell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to give that undertaking. I have been briefed on that point and am satisfied that it is the only point involved in the amendment.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of our party I can support what the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) has said. Despite attempts to bring in many notable amendments, including some that made considerably more sense dealing with the definition of what constitutes a high court in Ontario, the government supporters in the other place were pretty adamant. I regret that the one amendment that was brought in was not accompanied by several others dealing with points that we had raised earlier in this house.

Private Bills

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, speaking for the New Democratic party, if this is the only point I think we can agree with the amendment. Like the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave), I was hopeful that the other place might bring in an amendment to provide for a five year review, because it seemed to me this might be advantageous. However, I believe the practice with regard to annulments that has been followed over the years in the Ontario courts has been satisfactory and there is really no reason why this provision should not have been written into the bill. I think that in the discussions which took place in committee there was agreement on this proposition and it was probably inadvertently left out, as the minister indicated.

Mr. Pennell thereupon moved the second reading of and concurrence in the amendment made by the Senate to Bill No. C-187, respecting divorce.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, notices of motions (papers), private bills, public bills. As there are no notices of motions (papers) on today's order paper, the house will proceed to the consideration of private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, November 16, 1967, consideration of the motion of Mr. Stanbury for the second reading of Bill No. S-8, respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as I am sure most hon. members have become aware, I and some of my colleagues are quite concerned about the steady flow into this chamber of bills to incorporate more and more life insurance companies. I may say that our concern is shared by the Inspector General of Insurance, who at a committee hearing some months ago said that he and his departmental officials were quite concerned about the continual incorporation of more and more life insurance companies and were asking themselves whether this was really necessary for the good of the Canadian economy. He also pointed out, quite rightly, at that time that neither he nor his officials were in a position to say: This is enough; we cut if off here. As the Inspector General of Insurance quite correctly pointed out to the committee, if we allow one Canadian citizen to hold a policy in a life insurance company every Canadian citizen must have this right.

At that particular committee meeting I suggested it was time the government and parliament began to look into the whole question of the savings of the Canadian people and the manner in which they were to be treated, because the basis of all economic development and progress in an economy is the savings of the economy in the form of personal savings of citizens and surpluses from business operations. It is of vital importance that we should have some control and direction of these savings for the development of the Canadian economy and Canadian society.

The continual proliferation of private life insurance companies is splintering the pool of savings. As far as I can see the only effect is to contribute to the chaos that has obtained for quite a long time now in our financial institutions, a chaos that occasionally results in the collapse of businesses of various sorts, a chaos that eventually causes financial troubles that create problems for the government and limit the development of our society and economy. We have been urging again and again in the house that the parliament and government of Canada should take a very long, hard look at this business of bringing in new bills to incorporate still more life insurance companies.

I should like to see the whole matter referred to a parliamentary committee or perhaps even to a commission of inquiry to investigate the net results of permitting the savings of the Canadian people to fall into the hands of private groups which have complete control over the manner in which those savings shall be invested, whether in the Canadian economy or some other economy. Far too much of the savings of the Canadian people collected by life insurance companies and mutual funds is invested in another economy. At the same time, of course, we hear continual pleas by government spokesmen that Canada requires a continual inflow of capital from abroad if we are to continue to exist, let alone expand.

I have for a long time, sir, been protesting that this is looking at only one part of the picture. I have complained that the government of Canada, this and previous governments, has been in the habit of pleading with our United States friends to lend us their money while at the same time allowing Canadian capital to flow out of the economy. I suggest that if this parliament refused to incorporate any more life insurance companies and decided that the operations of existing ones were to be examined thoroughly as to the effects on the Canadian economy of the disposition of the savings of the Canadian people in the hands of life insurance companies, we might have a basis for deciding just how we are to handle this key factor in economic development and progress.

I have suggested before and I suggest again that we took a slight step in this direction when we developed the Canada Pension Plan. In fact, I recall that at that time there were some wails from life insurance companies that were already beginning to feel the effects on their businesses of the coverage provided by the Canada Pension Plan. This cheered me up immensely. I thought: Obviously this is the way in which to deal with this problem.

I would not for a moment suggest that we should attempt to expropriate private life insurance companies. No one in his right senses would want to expropriate a whole raft of insurance agents. But I suggest that we should offer the Canadian people another and a better way of disposing of their savings than turning them over to private institutions. I can see that if the Canada Pension Plan were expanded to include options comparable with the options provided by private life insurance companies, something over $1 billion a year which now goes into life insurance premiums would come into the hands of the public authority. I would have thought the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) would seize very quickly on this idea, considering that he has had so many difficulties lately. Here would be a source of the funds that the government requires. They could be well protected by government bonds. This money could be made available for the sort of programs upon which this and any future government will have to embark.

But before doing so I would again urge that we examine the alternative, which is to continue this business of incorporating anything up to a dozen new life insurance companies in every session of parliament. To my mind this is utter nonsense. It is not as though we were expanding the pool of Canadian savings but rather that we are licensing small fishermen to fish in it. It is the same pool. We are fragmenting it into sections which are difficult to control. It is very difficult to determine what the final disposition of these funds will be. I would hope that the government and parliament will take this seriously under consideration.

There is a very strong tendency today in other fields of insurance to move out of the private field. Hospital insurance used to be dominated by private insurance companies. We now have our hospital bills covered by various public methods, depending on what province we come from. In my own province hospital costs are paid out of the consolidated revenue. When the government finally, if it ever does, gets around to the implementation of the medicare bill, much of the insurance business which was devoted to providing medical care will also pass into the public sector. There has been a continuing demand, of course, all across the country for the public authority to take over the insurance of automobiles because of the tremendous charges made by insurance companies for that type of insurance. But even more important than these is the question of life insurance savings because by and large these are a proportion of income which people set aside for their old age, to ensure the education of their children, and to ensure some economic and financial stability for the family. This should be the concern of the public authority, and I and my colleagues will continue stressing this every time one of these private life insurance bills comes before the house.

I know it may seem unfair that we should deal with those companies which stick their heads up here in this chamber and not do anything about the ones which never appear before us because they are already well established. But I am sure hon. members will have realized from what I have said that we do not consider blocking these bills as anything more than a preliminary step toward a complete review of what, as I said, is a chaotic situation in the handling of the savings of Canadian people. I hope that parliament will finally impress upon private individuals and members of the house the undesirability of bringing any more of these bills before the house until we have made a complete examination of the operations of life insurance companies and the part they play in the development of our economy in Canada.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, once more we have before us the proposal of the Excelsior Life Insurance Company to become a federal company rather than a provincially incorporated one. That in itself raises some interesting questions about the whole subject of the operation of insurance companies. My colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron), has just made the suggestion that perhaps some form of inquiry into this matter might be instituted. He even went so far as to suggest that perhaps a commission of inquiry might be established. I believe that this bill and the principle contained in the explanatory note bring out very well one of the areas which such a commission of inquiry might explore. I refer to the rather strange practice under our federal system of government of companies being incorporated provincially and then seeking to transmogrify themselves into another form of corporate being. As the superintendent of insurance pointed out when a bill identical to this one was before the standing committee of the house in an earlier session, this is a somewhat different process than that normally followed in such a change.

If the argument advanced by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, which I and other hon. members have advanced from time to time in connection with certain other bills, about the impact of the operation of insurance companies on the direction of investment of the pool of savings of the Canadian people is a valid one, and if one looks at the volume of business transacted by insurance companies, it should become apparent to all hon. members that this process is an important factor in influencing the direction in which our economy moves or does not move at the present time. I think one must agree that companies which establish themselves under the authority of a provincial legislature usually operate in that way for a while and then move into the field of a federally incorporated company. This is an important question which needs examination.

We hear a good deal these days about the problems facing the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada in exercising effective monetary and fiscal controls in the operation of the economy. Much has been said about the dangers which exist when the economy becomes overheated or suddenly becomes underheated. All these questions are definitely tied in with the kind of proposal which in this instance is made by the Excelsior Life Insurance Company.

As is pointed out in the explanatory note, the company has been established in Canada for a long time. It was incorporated by letters patent dated August 7, 1889, in the province of Ontario, and it is one of several provincial life insurance companies registered with the federal department of insurance under part IX of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. The note goes on to point out the differences between the provincial and federal legislation in respect of the operation of insurance companies.

This brief explanation of the reason for the desire of the company to change its incorporation, which is the principle of the bill before us, was expanded on by Mr. Humphrys before the standing committee of the house on Tuesday, February 14, 1967. After having pointed out that the company was incorporated in 1889 by letters patent in Ontario, he went on to say:

Not long after it first began its operations.

> —it has been registered under the federal insurance laws and has been supervised by the federal insurance department, but as a provincial company. Therefore it had its powers under provincial legislation, but it had voluntarily made itself subject to the federal insurance acts and the supervision of the federal insurance department.

He went on to point out that the federal insurance act imposed certain restrictions on it and that in some instances acceptance of the federal rules has in his view created certain difficulties for this company from which companies incorporated directly by federal law did not suffer.

• (6:20 p.m.)

I suppose the proponent of the passage of this bill would argue that this inconvenience to the company should be removed without question at their request. However, so far as I am concerned the testimony opens up some rather important aspects, not only in relation to the general economic life of the country but the constitutional situation in which we find ourselves. We all know that a federal-provincial constitutional conference is to convene here shortly. We are aware that the conference will concern itself more with such matters as individual human rights; perhaps I should say with matters of the spirit rather than the flesh. Nevertheless, the fact that we are on the eve of what has been hailed as a very important federal-provincial conference on the future of our constitution brings to mind many important areas which need to be considered but which are not in the agenda of the conference. These matters might well be considered further as we seek to develop a new constitution, if that is what we are seeking to achieve, for the operation of Canada as a federal state.

The complexities and difficulties in respect of this company raise in my mind certain questions about whether the present arrangement, which allows insurance companies to incorporate either federally or provincially and to operate under a hodge-podge of different laws and regulations, is desirable or is in the economic interests of Canadians generally. This kind of question might very well be examined by a board of inquiry with broad powers. Such a board could also get the views of provincial authorities who have had experience in dealing with insurance companies in their own jurisdictions. If we are going to have a more orderly direction of the flow of investment funds in this country in the future than we have had in the past, it seems to me there are obvious advantages to some kind of uniform legislation covering these companies. This would seem to be the case as long as we have private insurance companies operating in the country, and I expect that will be for a good many years yet. We should not leave it to the whim or fancy of a particular firm such as Excelsior Life to decide whether or not it wishes to operate under an Ontario charter or a federal charter.

This company, according to the evidence given by the superintendent of insurance, is one of the major companies in Canada, even though apparently it is not controlled in Canada. I can see some merit in such a company being governed by federal insurance laws and supervised by the federal insurance department. As Mr. Humphrys points out, the proposal by this company that it be changed to a federal company is purely voluntary on its part. Apparently the company has operated quite successfully since 1897 under the present arrangement.

This opens up the whole question of whether or not this kind of arrangement should be left to the voluntary action of the company or whether it is the type of thing that should be dealt with in a more orderly and rational manner through some such means as a special commission of inquiry. Such a commission would have powers beyond those of a parliamentary committee inasmuch as it would be able to spend more time and engage the necessary help to get evidence and opinions from provincial authorities. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that these ideas will receive consideration.

A large organization such as Excelsior Life obviously has not suffered too seriously from the existing disability. If this situation were left as it is until the matter can be decided in a broader way than by the simple adoption of this bill, that might be a more desirable course of action. If any temporary inconvenience of a minor nature, which apparently the company has experienced from time to time, should continue for a further period this would not seriously affect the operations of the company and might very well be more in keeping with the real interests of the Canadian people than the simple adoption of this bill by parliament.

There are many other issues inherent in this bill, just as there have been in some of the other proposals made by insurance companies in bills which have been coming before the house. One question which has received a lot of attention in parliament and in the country in recent years has been interest rates. Mention is made in the evidence given about this company that at one point there was a difference between the federal insurance laws and the Ontario law with regard to the amount an insurance company could invest in mortgages.

It was pointed out that in 1965 the federal insurance law was amended to permit companies investing in mortgages to lend up to 75 per cent of the value of the property, whereas formerly it was two thirds. At the time the federal law was changed the Ontario legislation still imposed a limit of two-thirds on insurance companies incorporated within that province. It was pointed out that while federally incorporated companies could then use the 75 per cent formula, this company was still restricted because of its provincial charter to two-thirds. I suggest this situation raises the whole issue of the direction of mortgage funds into various areas of mortgage activity. Since Excelsior is a large company it probably has directed a large pool of funds into mortgage activity.

We have heard a lot of discussion about the availability of mortgage funds for certain purposes. We recognize that the pool of these funds is only a certain size. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson), as spokesman for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and more recently the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), have made various proposals to cope with this problem. By and large, the only answer given by the government has been that the ceiling on interest rates must be removed so that mortgage funds can be attracted into housebuilding. Who decides where investment funds are to go? Those funds go to the kind of companies with which we deal in these private bills. According to this bill, Excelsior Life Insurance Company is one company that is interested in using its funds for mortgage purposes.

It seems to me obvious that in dealing with these bills we have, in effect, been helping to aggravate the problems that the minister who reports to parliament on housing has had to face. On the admission of various spokesmen for the government from time to time, the problem has been that bodies such as Excelsior Life have been directing their mortgage funds, at their whim and fancy, into fields other than housing, because at a given point in time they seemed to find them more lucrative for investment purposes. I think Excelsior Life would be different from some of the other insurance companies, if it had not directed some of its mortgage funds into the erection of large office buildings, or possibly shopping centres which it is suggested from time to time are somewhat redundant in relation to the real need of the present day for adequate housing for our people.

If Excelsior Life feels that there is some hesitancy on our part to transform them into a federal company by means of a rather strange legislative enactment in order, so it is suggested, to make it a little simpler for the company to change their corporate status and thus remove this little inconvenience, then let the company take note of the fact that some of us are concerned about the right of bodies such as this to decide, in effect, whether or not the Canadian people are going to have sufficient housing.

I suggest that these are the kinds of issues that are involved in the bills with which we deal during this hour. The other day I was speaking on another bill, and I said there are some of us who are not prepared simply to agree that the convenience of any particular company, whether Excelsior Life or some other, should take precedence over action which, in our view, should be taken to meet the real interests of the Canadian people whom we in this parliament are elected to represent. So I have no hesitation in saying that this particular proposal is not one which we should pass lightly.

[Mr. Barnett.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member to inform him that his time has expired.

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in commenting on Bill S-8 that is before the house this evening, I would point out that the Senate banking and commerce committee heard evidence from the proponents of the bill which indicated that the purpose of the bill was to convert a provincially incorporated company into a federal corporation. This would not make too much difference to the operations of the company; in fact, it would only enhance its prestige in the community.

The evidence presented to the committee on banking and commerce revealed one fact that I should like to draw to the attention of this house. Under questioning it was revealed that the major share interest in the company is owned by a United States company, the Aetna Life Insurance Company. The major interest, about 70 per cent, was acquired in 1960. I am quite surprised that this acquisition was made at such late date. We all know from the pronouncement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that the government is endeavouring to gain control of the Canadian economy, eventually wresting it from the hands of foreign nations. Certainly this particular move at a date as late as 1960 is not in accordance with stated government policy.

An hon. Member: Different government.

Mr. Germa: No matter whether it was a different government, I have stated on many occasions that I do not see much difference between the actions of those who form the government and those who form the opposition. The same trend appears to be continuing. Companies have changed hands time and time again over the last 100 years but the trend toward foreign ownership has gradually increased. Regardless of who was in power, I know of no time when this trend has reversed itself, enabling Canadians to gain control of their own economy.

In order to get to the root of the trouble, Mr. Speaker, and to understand the insurance business in Canada, I should like to delve into the reason insurance companies exist and to relate to the house what motivates people to buy insurance. It is surprising to me that in this affluent nation of ours there should be so much fear of economic disaster as a result of death that the people of Canada should see fit to put so much money into insurance. It is also a condemnation of past governments that the people of this country live in such fear that they have to protect their dependants from economic disaster as a result of death.

Statistics show that the level of insurance has increased five times over the figure for 1950. It has increased twice as fast as incomes have increased. Why is this, Mr. Speaker? It is because the people of Canada have not been provided with a sense of security by past administrations. Who are the people buying insurance, Mr. Speaker? You would think that the man with spare money in his pocket would invest in insurance. However, statistics show that this is not the case. They reveal that 50 per cent of life insurance policies are bought by people with $5,000 income or less; and 83 per cent of all life insurance in Canada is bought by people who earn less than $7,500. This shows that there is fear, that the small wage earner is in fear of not being able to provide for his family and he must take advantage of this type of protection.

Over 93 per cent of the Canadian people carry life insurance and 83 per cent of those who buy that insurance are in the under $7,500 a year income bracket. You can see that the little man carries the life insurance companies on his back. I think that the government should provide some sort of security for our people so that those who live in desperate fear will not need to go to private insurance companies to relieve their minds in order to sleep more soundly at night.

One of my colleagues has said that the government sponsored insurance plan would have been twice as good had there not been interference by the private insurance companies, which realize what will happen to them if the government proceeds to expand plans like the Canada Pension Plan. The introduction of the Canada Pension Plan and Quebec pension plan reduced the group annuity payments to private insurance companies by 14 per cent. One piece of legislation transferred to the public sector 14 per cent of the premiums that had been paid to the private sector. Since in one year that amounts to about $1,300 million, one can see that a sizeable amount of money is involved, and that money can be directed by the government toward the best needs of the people.

A great public lobby is being conducted by various organizations which want to show that the foreign insurance companies operating in this country are good corporate citizens. "Good corporate citizen" is an expression that has been coined by insurance associations, manufacturers associations and Chambers of Commerce, the inference being that a corporation is almost human, with flesh and bones. It is not. A corporation is made of bricks, bank books and bank accounts. It has no blood and bones. The terms "corporate responsibility", "good corporation citizenship" and others like them are clichés.

During housing debates in this house some hon. members have said that mortgage funds are in short supply in those areas that most need them. Since most of our mortgage funds are tied up in insurance companies, those companies have the power practically to direct this country and to tell it where the money is to be invested. We know that insurance companies do not invest in the maritimes, and that the maritimes need investment money perhaps more than other areas of Canada need it. We cannot control the insurance companies in their investing.

Foreign owned insurance companies have not complied with the wishes of the Prime Minister, and I support him in that regard, even though the government has not done much, actively, to reduce the number of foreign owned insurance companies operating in this country.

In 1966, speaking only of life insurance companies and excluding those companies which sell fire, automobile and health insurance as well as other types, there were in Canada 116 companies which sold life insurance. Forty one of those were Canadian and 75 were foreign. Since the 75 foreign owned companies probably do more business than the 41 Canadian companies, most of our premium dollars were controlled by foreigners.

It is strange to find British and United States companies operating in Canada while no United States company operates in the British Isles and no British company operates in the United States. I do not know what the saw-off was, but that is how things are. In Canada, life insurance is sold by United States, British, Netherlands, Swiss, German and French companies. We seem to have no control over who comes in and takes our premium dollar. In the United States they seem to have some control, and in the British Isles they have some control. We, on the other hand, let five or six different nations come in with their insurance companies, and we let those companies control about 60 per cent of our insurance business.

I was interested in a speech given by Mr. W. W. Foot, president and general manager of Economical Mutual Insurance Company of Kitchener, as reported in the Globe and Mail. Mr. Foot, being critical of newspaper reporters and editors, is reported to have said:

> Reporters and editors are involved in a conspiracy with governments to promote nationalization of the general insurance business.

I do not know whether government members are conspiring with the newspaper people. That is for the government members to answer. Mr. Foot was critical not only of newspapermen but of his own colleagues as well:

> The insurance industry...at one time extols the virtue of free enterprise competition and simultaneously takes measures to promote uniformity of operation.

He goes on to say:

> Competition is cut-throat, unbridled, always vicious. Among ourselves, inwardly, we abhor competition. If a company, through its management, conforms to the uniform standards promulgated by the Establishment, agents are disposed to look upon it as a stick-in-the-mud, but when it adopts any form of deviation from the standards of the Establishment, everyone shouts "Stop rocking the boat".

This is a sort of admission that there is price fixing, that a cartel agreement to fix rates is in effect. He goes on to say:

> Consider our practice of announcing rate increases in the press each year... By so doing we invite criticism; we create the image of a monopoly.

Usually we see a blanket increase in automobile or other insurance rates. Each company will charge an increase across the board, and yet each company will claim to be engaged in free enterprise. To my way of thinking, they are all monopoly oriented.

In order to grant members of this house more time to consider this bill, Mr. Speaker, I move seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett):

> That this bill be not now read the second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I regret that my friends in the N.D.P. have taken this opportunity to mount their campaign against the insurance industry. I think they have picked the wrong victim.

[Mr. Germa.]

As has been admitted by many speakers of that party who always dominate these discussions, this is an old established Canadian company which simply seeks to clear up the confusion about its status in a way which the superintendent of insurance entirely approved in the hearings on a similar bill which were held before the miscellaneous private bills committee during the last session.

• (6:50 p.m.)

I will resist the temptation to answer the many arguments which were put forward by spokesmen for the New Democratic party and which pertained to this company—there were many others which had nothing to do with the company or with the bill now before us. I will simply suggest that there is much merit in the words of the superintendent of insurance when he appeared before the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills on February 14, 1967. I quote his statement as it appears on page 60 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence, No. 4.

> I think by moving over and subjecting itself more firmly to federal jurisdiction and really cutting off all the provincial control and authority, it is clearing up an uncertainty and untidiness of its present position. If at some future date parliament decides that it will impose a more severe policy on foreign ownership, this company will be affected by it, but if we leave this company as it is, it will not be.

Hon. members opposite are defeating the purpose of their present campaign by picking on this particular bill as a convenient vehicle for the expression of their idea that there should be no new life insurance companies in Canada. This is not a new company: It is a well-established company which seems to be highly respected. The bill before the house is one which has been approved by all the government agencies concerned, and was recommended during the committee hearing last session by the superintendent of insurance. I appeal to the house to defeat the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa) seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Fawcett) has moved that Bill S-8, an act respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, be not now read a second time but that it be read this day six months hence.

[And more than five members having risen.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Since a vote has been demanded, pursuant to section 7 of standing order No. 6, this item of business stands over until 8 p.m.

Mr. McNulty: Might we call it seven o'clock by unanimous consent?

An hon. Member: No.

AETNA CASUALTY COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Thursday, November 23, 1967 consideration of the motion of Mr. Cameron (High Park) for the second reading of Bill No. C-112, to incorporate Aetna Casualty Company of Canada, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Gilbert (p. 1746).

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This bill is somewhat different in its nature from the one about which I was speaking a few minutes ago. This is an insurance company to insure virtually everything but life. In clause 6 we find a list of 26 types of coverage running the whole gamut of possible disasters including fire insurance, accident insurance, aircraft insurance, automobile insurance, boiler insurance, credit insurance, earthquake insurance, explosion insurance, falling aircraft insurance, forgery insurance, guarantee insurance, hail insurance, impact by vehicle insurance, plate glass insurance, sickness insurance, sprinkler leakage insurance, weather insurance and windstorm insurance. It is perhaps a good thing we have only 26 letters in the alphabet.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I believe we should be considering whether all these forms of insurance ought to be in private hands. As I was saying some time ago, there is a widespread demand for automobile insurance to be taken out of private hands because of the way in which private companies have handled this necessary feature of modern life. The same could be said of other areas in which insurance companies engage in business.

This bill proposes to incorporate a company which is, I believe, largely owned outside the country. I do not know whether that is very important, one way or another. I object to private individuals engaging in this sort of business, whether Canadian or not. There are some who become very agitated if they see that ventures of this kind are foreign-owned and I suppose that if we are to have people battening on the economy we should confine this privilege to Canadians.

My suggestion is that government and this parliament should subject such undertakings to careful scrutiny. Are we not moving into a new era in which many of the things once carried out by private companies should be carried out by a public authority which would provide coverage at minimum cost?

There is no question but that the proliferation of companies in the insurance field must add to the cost of the services provided. Some people may question this, but I can assure them that it costs twice as much to hire two men as it does to hire one. The more insurance companies there are, the more people will have to make a living out of them. Consequently, the cost to the insured person is bound to continue to rise.

May I call it seven o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members business has expired.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Pursuant to section 7 of standing order 6 the house will now revert to private members business for the purpose of taking the vote which was postponed when private members business was being considered in the hour from six o'clock to seven o'clock in this sitting. Accordingly the question is as follows:

Mr. Stanbury, seconded by Mr. Haidasz, moved that Bill No. S-8, an act respecting the Excelsior Life Insurance Company, be now read a second time. In amendment thereto Mr. Germa, seconded by Mr. Fawcett, moved that this bill be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Call in the members.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The house divided on the amendment, (Mr. Germa) which was negatived on the following division:

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the President of the Privy Council, who was unavoidably detained.

Mr. Chatterton: How would the hon. member have voted?

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Hymmen: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): With whom was the hon. member paired?

PENITENTIARIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of moving item 58 on the order paper, the motion to revive the joint committee on penitentiaries. I understand the committee would be in a position to complete its report on prisons for women after one or two more meetings. I move therefore:

That a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons be appointed to consider the state of penitentiaries under the control of the government of Canada and the plans of the government in relation thereto with powers to report from time to time its observations and opinions thereon; send for persons, papers and records; adjourn from place to place; sit during sittings of the house; and print from day to day such papers and evidence as may be ordered by the committee, and that standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto;

That 15 members of the House of Commons, to be designated at a later date, act on behalf of the House as Members of the said committee; and

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting that house to unite with this house for the above purpose, and to select, if the Senate deem advisable some of their Members to act on the proposed joint committee.

Motion agreed to.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, February 1, 1968

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. J. R. Cartwright, M.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 1st February, at 9.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at six o'clock subclause (h) was being considered, with an amendment by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

Mr. Sherman: Mr. Chairman, when the house proceeded to private members business a little over two and a half hours ago I had been discussing some of the comments that had been made by members of the government on the position that our party has taken in the debate on this subclause, and on the position which members on the government side feel has been manifested by their own colleagues on the government benches. Needless to say there is a wide divergence of opinion between us on this side and the spokesmen to whom I refer on the other side with regard to the sincerity of the position purportedly taken by members on the government side. I was referring to the remarks made by the hon. member for York-Scarborough in which he alleged and purported to suggest that there was division in my party with regard to subclause (h), and that by contrast there was remarkable unanimity and community of thought and purpose among the members on the government benches. I asked the hon. member for York-Scarborough, in a rhetorical way perhaps, just where he would place such members of his party as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, the hon. member for York-Humber, the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, the hon. member for St. Paul's, and the hon. member for Spadina. Indeed I could go on naming hon. members. The five hon. members who I have named have hardly risen in this chamber to profess a deep philosophical and sincere commitment to the position of the government on this subclause. On the contrary, both inside and outside this chamber, some of them at least have given every evidence that they are as much opposed to the principle contained in subclause (h) as we in this party are. I must say that the difference of posture between these members and the members of our party has been very evident when the crunch came and the votes were taken, because many of them have absented themselves from the chamber so as not to have to participate in them. Those of us, however, who have taken the philosophical position which I and many others in my party have enunciated in the past week have been here to participate in these votes, and we have put our political money where our principles and our philosophical beliefs are.

Although the hon. member for York-Scarborough made a very urbane and intelligent speech and, in his usual poised political manner, exposed what he considered to be the essence of the argument, I suggest he was treading on dangerous ground. He cannot, in all conscience, support the argument that his party is united philosophically on this question and is the only party in this house to be so united when his colleagues have stood in this chamber during the last 72 hours and proposed amendments which would, in effect, substantially change the wording of the subclause in question. These amendments would have put the subclause in line with the philosophical expression to which we adhere in this house. I cannot explain the absence of those hon. members when votes on such amendments have taken place. This is something which the hon. member for York-Scarborough will have to settle with his own conscience.

Both the member for York-Scarborough and the hon. member for Verdun have made emotional appeals for some leadership, some direction from the head of this party in so far as this particular dispute is concerned. I suggest that this is a specious appeal to make in this chamber. There is absolutely no reason why members of this party or of any party in this house should not, when we are examining legislation of this kind clause by clause, speak out and state their individual convictions, and suggest their individual, independent points of view. The difference is, of course, that those of us who form this party have for a long time, certainly throughout our political lives, adhered to the tradition of independence and freedom which is part and parcel of the philosophy of Conservativism. Obviously members on the other side of the chamber are muzzled and the verbal expression certain members may wish to make of their convictions is denied them. There are handcuffs on those same members so far as any overt action is concerned.

We are at a stage in studying this legislation where every one of the 265 members should, in accordance with parliamentary tradition and devotion to the democratic political principles of this country, stand and make his or her own, individual, independent views known on the parts of this legislation with which there is not agreement. There is absolutely no reason why there should be a crystallization of the position of this party on this legislation at this stage, either by the leader of this party or anyone acting on his behalf. When it comes to leadership, sir, I suggest that those on the other side of the chamber are treading on very dangerous ground. If they asked members on this side of the chamber if they felt the Liberal party had provided this country with the type of leadership Canadians have been crying for during the last four years, the answer would be a resounding no.

When members opposite talk about leadership, they should first put their own house in order. If there had been leadership provided on this broadcasting question, none of the explosions of the past two years in the field of broadcasting would have occurred. They have asked, Mr. Chairman, where we stand in this party on this particular philosophical question. I think it has been made clear where we stand, where the consensus in the party lies. Where members have different points of view, as I have attempted to suggest, it is incumbent upon them at this stage in the study of the legislation to express those different, independent points of view.

The hon. member for York-Scarborough has attended faithfully throughout the tedious hours of this debate and is familiar with the stand of this party on this philosophical question. He has been here throughout the week when the consensus on that philosophical point has developed and been articulated by this party. His answer lies in the Hansard record for the past four days.

I was mildly distressed, Mr. Chairman, by a reference the minister made, really outside the area of debate, which seemed to suggest to me that she felt such members as the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and I have an axe to grind in this debate, since we have spent some time in the field of private broadcasting. I submit to the hon. lady that she has cast unfair aspersions upon both the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo and me. I believe these allegations are unsupportable. If she checks my remarks during this debate, in fact if she goes back to my speech on first reading in this house and the meetings in the standing committee, she will see that I have tried to emphasize the fact that I am not speaking in defence of, nor am I particularly interested in, the objectives or aims of private broadcasting any more than I am in the objectives and aims of publicly owned broadcasting. What I am talking about, the element in which I am interested—and I thought I had made it perfectly clear in my remarks—is the viewing and listening public. I am interested in the right of that public to have its objectives, its ambitions and interests preserved and paramount when any conflict arises between the two elements of our Canadian broadcasting system. There has been no attempt on my part, and I think the same can be said for the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo, to expostulate the position of private broadcasters. Hers is not a true charge.

The position I have taken, and that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo certainly took in very articulate fashion in the standing committee, so far as this clause was concerned was that it was the public interest that should be paramount. It is the public interest which is the only justifiable criterion in this dispute. It is the public interest that is abrogated and violated in the wording of the subclause as it was originally constituted, and as it is now constituted in amended form.

Members on the government side may wonder why I took the particular voting position I took yesterday when we had an amendment which subsequently passed, but to which the member for Okanagan-Revelstoke moved a subamendment. The subamendment, if it had been carried, would have accomplished the same thing as my original amendment moved on Tuesday of this week. I did not support the subamendment moved by the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, although I agreed with it 100 per cent, because my colleague, the member for Halifax, had an amendment which would have been completely neutralized by the passage of the subamendment. I did not vote on that issue. I neither voted for the subamendment nor against it. I voted against the amendment of the hon. member for Halifax purely on the grounds that I had to be able to justify the remarks which I would make subsequently, and which I am making now. I felt I could not justify a further intervention in the debate if I voted for the amendment. I submit this argument to hon. members as my rationalization of my voting position of yesterday on the subamendment and the amendment before the committee.

I was exercised to a degree also, Mr. Chairman, by the remarks made earlier today in the chamber by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. Before we even reached this aspect of the debate the hon. member said that the N.D.P. would be against any change in the amended paragraph (h). He said: "We"—meaning his party—"supported the original subclause and we supported the amendment moved yesterday by the member of the official opposition"—the hon. member for Halifax. He also said that he and his group would be against any further change in the clause.

That hardly came as surprising news to any of us. Of course he would be against it, because the amended clause says precisely what the original clause said. That is our objection to the amendment. The hon. member was originally opposed to any change to paragraph (h). Therefore when an amendment is moved that is precisely the same, with the exception that it moves the emphasis further down in the sentence by changing the phrasing but does not change the essence of the paragraph, he would naturally be in favour of the amendment and opposed to any amendment that we might suggest to soften or modify the rigid position enunciated in the paragraph.

I also felt that his subsequent references to filibustering on the part of members of this house were unworthy of him. The hon. member has contributed greatly to the formulation of this broadcasting policy and the creation of the bill before us. I do not want to engage in argument with him over allegations that either he or I might make against each other's respective parties and positions, but considering the high level of intelligence and conscientiousness that he has brought to the debate I did feel that that remark was beneath him. There has been no filibustering by anyone in this party. We are concerned about the serious oversight in the wording of this legislation which compromises the most important element in Canadian society—the public interest.

If some of us missed things in the early examination of this legislation, then we are sorry and apologize. It is not always possible to come quickly to a satisfactory understanding of every clause in every piece of legislation with which we in this chamber are confronted. Sometimes re-examination and a period of contemplation is required before one comes to, as it were, the moment of truth in respect to a particular phrase or provision. Only then is the weakness or strength of that particular part of the legislation properly focused before us. That is what may have happened as far as some members on this side of the chamber are concerned.

In my own heart and conscience I can fully justify and defend the position that I have taken in this debate. In no way should the stand I have taken be construed as a filibuster. I have made a sincere attempt to change a piece of legislation in such a way as to protect the most important part of Canadian society—the Canadian interest. I have made a sincere attempt to soften and to modify wording which to me smacks of stateism, authoritarianism, and which to say the least is discriminatory. It is not a question of its being discriminatory in respect of private broadcasters but of its being discriminatory in respect of, if you like, private enterprise, discriminatory in respect of the independent, free-thinking, free-moving Canadian.

I cannot understand why the minister has been so intractable on this point. I was dismayed, to say the least, when the amendment I moved earlier this afternoon failed to find favour with the minister. I felt it satisfied both philosophical positions in this debate without watering down the position of the government. It satisfied the concern on this side of the chamber for free enterprise and the public interest and in no way represented a defeat, moral or otherwise, for anyone participating in this debate.

Disappointed as I was, even more than that I was amazed that the minister found the wording of my amendment so unacceptable. For my own part I find the wording of the paragraph as it now stands completely repugnant from a philosophical point of view. I see no justification whatever for it and I certainly support the amendment that has been moved at this point in the debate by my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona.

I would be interested to hear the minister or some of her colleagues defend the clause as it now stands and explain why the term "public interest" has throughout the debate seemed to be so reprehensible to the government. It was through the efforts of this party that this term was put into that particular paragraph. The original paragraph made no reference to it. However, the clause is not yet satisfactory to us, even though that term is in the paragraph. To put it there we have had an uphill struggle against ministerial intransigence.

Why is the minister so loath to write into the legislation something that is in the best traditions of Canadian democracy and which should be in the best traditions of the Liberal party, the protection and primacy of the public interest? One is quickly persuaded to come to the conclusion, as did the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings two nights ago in this chamber, that this debate has separated the champions of individualism and independence from that sparkless, faceless army of people who would see this country complete its alarming slide into state-ism, socialism and total welfare-ism.

From that, one is logically forced to the conclusion that we are one of the few countries that seems to be stubbornly and unwisely bucking a political and philosophical trend in the world. Countries like Denmark are getting away from the totally socialistic, authoritarian concept of government, while countries that still stick with it, such as Great Britain, are suffering the slings and arrows of the most outrageous social, political and economic fortunes.

This lesson is being written in every corner of the western world, yet this country seems to go on stubbornly resisting and ignoring it, plunging headlong down the path to welfare-ism, socialism and authoritarian control, sapping the society in which we live of all its ambition and robbing it of all its dreams.

I think the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings made the point most eloquently two days ago in his charge to the members on the government benches with respect to the choice facing them and the test ahead of them, as they go into their leadership convention. They must ask themselves, under whom will their party live? The tragedy, of course, is that the Canadian people are involved in this exercise. If it were a party choosing a leader for itself with no one else involved, it would be different. But here they are carrying out their exercise for the whole Canadian public, and what they do will affect the government of this country. In effect, they are choosing the direction that the government and the country will take. That is where the tragedy lies.

Before closing and yielding the floor, I hope, to my colleague from Edmonton-Strathcona, who intends to speak further on his amendment, I ask again, as I have asked on some five prior occasions in this debate, what are the objectives of the national broadcasting service? If I thought that the objectives were clearly enunciated and did not encroach on the individual rights of individual, free Canadians, did not encroach on the civil liberties of Canadian men and women, I might subscribe, I dare say, to the clause as it originally stood or in its amended form.

But I am not satisfied that the objectives of the national broadcasting service have been properly defined in this bill and I appeal once again to the minister, in the interests of liberalism, socialism, conservatism and every other ism in the spectrum of Canadian politics, in the interests of Canada and the Canadian tradition of freedom and enterprise, to yield on this one point, to satisfy a great many people inside and outside the broadcasting industry who, I can assure her, are concerned with the apparent authoritarianism of amended subclause (h) and with the apparent, arbitrary and permanent conclusion that broadcasting authorities are charged to reach where conflicts in broadcasting arise in future between the public and private sectors of the industry—that is, between the national broadcasting service and the private part of the system.

The subclause means that a decision has been reached that will guide the authorities for all time. The scales are to be weighted and the jury shall be directed to find in favour of the national broadcasting service. The case of the private individual and of the public, and after all it is the public that is most concerned in this matter, is compromised, foreshortened and doomed to failure before the litigation has begun.

I conclude by reiterating my support for the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, by hoping that it will be accepted by the minister and by hoping that, once this matter is resolved, the committee of the whole will be able to move expeditiously through the remaining clauses of the bill.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, at the invitation of the hon. members for York-Scarborough and Verdun, I am on my feet again in connection with the amendment I moved and in connection with a problem contained in this bill. The bill seeks to say that where there is any possibility of conflict between private and public sectors of broadcasting, the interests of the public sector shall prevail.

Certainly I owe the senior member for Halifax an explanation about what happened this afternoon. While some may ask the question, facetiously perhaps, as to where this party stands, I think the answer is simple. It may look as if someone in our party moved an amendment and as if a majority of our party do not support it; but the situation is simple. Members of our party, and I think I can speak authoritatively about this, felt that clause (h) was so worded that it could be interpreted as being overwhelmingly in favour of the national broadcasting service, where there is any possibility of conflict. On reading the bill, it became apparent that if the interest of the national broadcasting service in any matter were but one per cent and the interest of private broadcasters were 99 per cent, a decision would have to be rendered in favour of the national broadcasting service. I do not think anybody on the broadcasting committee intended to go that far, and I do not think anyone in the house would wish to see that situation prevail.

I thought originally that the situation contemplated in the clause referred to equal interests. I thought that where there would be difficulty about how to resolve a question, the interest of the national broadcasting system would prevail. Such was our concern with this matter, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Halifax, acting on behalf of our party, attempted to negotiate with the government to try to ameliorate the effects of this clause. I think it is generally agreed that when all other factors are equal, the balance of the scales should be tipped in favour of the national system. But this clause went too far, and the object of the hon. member was to try to obtain agreement to amendments that would ameliorate that provision and let us get on with the business of the house.

The difficulty, Mr. Chairman, was that the wording was arrived at hastily round about noon. The minister took a look at it, said she would accept it, and we went back to the house without anybody having had a chance to study the amendment. When it was read to us it revealed words which said that the matter shall be resolved in the public interest, and so on, and the thought came to me that that was not what was in mind. The language of the subclause would be that in case of conflict the matter would be resolved in the public interest; but I submit that the suggestion is that when there is no conflict, a decision in favour of the national broadcasting service is not in the public interest. In other words, we seem to be directing someone to do something that is not in the public interest.

There was no time for consultation and we never saw the amendment until just before it was proposed in the house. The first objection to it was taken by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, who said he had reservations and wanted to think about it. Obviously, he was somewhat dubious about the wording. He was certainly in full accord with the general object of trying to soften the effect of the original wording. It was I who made an objection and pointed out where the difficulty lay, namely that we were failing in our duty to regulate in the public interest because we were asking an authority to do something without regard for the public interest.

Members of our party looked at the wording of the amendment this afternoon and agreed that it was most unfortunate. It was my hope that by drawing attention to this situation, a poor choice of words in an amendment which had been drafted hastily in an honest endeavour by the minister to meet the feeling by hon. members on this side of the house as well as, I believe, on her own side of the house, the minister would become aware of what had happened and would be agreeable to finding another form of words which would meet the case. There had been no time for a close study of the amendment. There was no time to talk it over. By the time we were able to study its effects the motion had been moved. I had hoped that the minister, looking again at the amendment with cool judgment, would have taken a reasonable attitude and made sure that the amendment would, in fact, soften the effect of the subclause under discussion.

When the vote was called I had expected that the amendment would be turned down and that another amendment would then be introduced which would express more clearly the result which we on this side wish to achieve. In the event, the hon. member for Halifax having moved his motion and having made an agreement with the minister, obviously could not vote against his own motion, while on the other side of the house the minister's supporters merely followed the minister. I thought it strange that there should be such overwhelming support for the minister in the committee on this occasion, and some hon. members may wonder whether it is always to the advantage of this house that ministers are so often able to get such wholehearted support behind them in connection with just one point in the legislation being considered. Obviously hon. members opposite felt that the minister having made a commitment, they should help her keep it. This is commendable; but the essence of the situation is that the wording really did not give effect to what either the minister or the hon. member for Halifax had hoped to achieve. So it became a matter of trying to amend the wording in such a way as to bring it into conformity with the agreement which has been reached—not to abrogate that agreement or reach some other agreement.

If there should be some wonderment on the other side of the house as to where the opposition stands, perhaps I might say this in explanation: Unlike the clause itself, which has been before us for a considerable time, the amendment was only moved this afternoon and hon. members, who did not have the actual wording before them, were unable to consider its implications. They could only listen to what was said and had only a few minutes in which to make up their minds. Some of us obviously felt that if we did not support the hon. member for Halifax we were going back on the agreement to some extent. However, as I have explained, we felt in the end that the amendment did not really give effect to the agreement which had been reached and that the matter should therefore be reconsidered in order that a properly worded amendment could be moved. While I am not reflecting on the action of the committee in accepting the amendment which was put forward, I would point out that we do have an opportunity now to determine whether the wording which the committee found acceptable is, in fact, as satisfactory as the wording which I proposed earlier today. As members of parliament it is our duty to decide whether the national broadcasting system should take precedence over the private broadcasting system. I think it is also our duty to give some indication to the Board of Broadcast Governors as to the extent of such a preference.

In subclause (h) as originally worded, the government took a very clear stand. It said that should a conflict arise between the C.B.C. and private interests, even though the C.B.C. might have only a minor interest at stake as opposed to a major interest on the part of private enterprise, the conflict must be settled in favour of the national broadcasting service. There is considerable doubt in the minds of many hon. members as to whether they really wish to go as far as this. Some, I suppose, would argue against my amendment, which says that all other factors being equal the national broadcasting system shall prevail—in other words that there should be a slight bias in favour of a national system. In cases where there is only a minor interest on the part of the C.B.C. and a major interest on the part of the private network we obviously do not want a subclause here which says that the interest of the C.B.C. must prevail. This is what we object to, and this is why the hon. member for Halifax went to the minister in an effort to have that provision ameliorated.

[Mr. Nugent.]

• (9:20 p.m.)

I think the fact that the minister would agree to an amendment proves that there was agreement that the original wording went just a little too far. If I am right in that, Mr. Chairman, and I believe the logic is sound, then it was a case of finding wording that would ameliorate this a little, and not violate the principle that the minister wanted to have in the bill, the pre-eminence of the C.B.C.

When the minister agreed to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax, it showed that there was agreement to soften the clause a little bit, but the mechanics of carrying out that agreement were just a little faulty. I feel that the result has left this committee in a most embarrassing position. I am hoping that we will be able to take up this clause tomorrow, because perhaps over night hon. members will have time to think about it.

It is not my purpose to make this a partisan debate. Certainly the division on the amendment was not partisan. Some Tories supported it; some voted against it. I voted against it simply because of the wording and not because of the intent. I am sure many of my colleagues did the same. My plea tonight to the committee is that it not abrogate the intent of what was done, but to suggest that by this wording we have not done what we thought we would. We should look at it a little longer and see if my amendment does not more closely carry out the wishes we thought we had expressed.

I have no doubt that if we leave the clause as amended yesterday, when it goes to the Senate that body will say, "We will amend this clause so that it does not offend against the interests of parliament, and so that it will say that the public interest must be the prime consideration for everything we do." In effect, this amendment says that conflict "shall be resolved in the public interest, but..." In this way we take away from what is our absolute duty.

To those hon. members who have asked where our party stands, I reply that the apparent difference of opinion is only in the wording, and that in fact on both sides of the house there was general agreement on what we were trying to do, but that there was not full understanding of what the words in the amendment actually did.

As I say, I was surprised that the minister did not accede to the request to study the matter for a while, to see if we could refine the words in the amendment a little more. I know that a couple of members on the other side of the chamber have suggested amendments similar to the one now before the committee. In fact the amendment that I have moved is almost identical in meaning to the wish expressed in speeches made by a couple of Liberal members yesterday, and I do not think those members were speaking just for themselves.

As I say, the fact that the minister accepted an amendment to the clause indicated a certain amount of agreement to ameliorate to some extent the harshness of the original clause. My amendment suggests that, all other factors being equal, then pre-eminence is given to the C.B.C., and I suggest there is nothing in the attitude shown by members, no matter which way they voted on the last amendment, which would tie their hands so that they could not be free to vote on this one.

The original wording of the clause gave overwhelming pre-eminence to the C.B.C., and everybody was agreed that that went a little too far. It may be that somebody will devise a formula to give a balance of proportion, where the factors have to be two to one or three to one before this clause comes into effect. That will be rather hard to draft and it is difficult to imagine how we can reach agreement.

In reply to members who asked this afternoon where our party stood, I say that the public has a right to know where a party stands. I am suggesting that my amendment simply sets out that we want a balance of proportion, and that every member who votes in favour of it will indicate that generally, with all factors being equal, the pre-eminence will be given in favour of the C.B.C. My amendment could be made stronger, but as it stands it indicates that a conflict of interest shall be resolved in the national interest of the C.B.C. only where things are about 50/50. I hope the committee will support my amendment on those grounds.

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak again on the hon. member's amendment because I think it outlines a basic political philosophy, one with which the committee should be very deeply concerned. I find it hard to imagine the reason why members on the government side are reluctant to resolve any issue in the public interest. Most of the aspects of government and of the judiciary have been designed to be resolved in the public interest. Everything we have in the political sense in this country, the whole democratic process, is designed in such a way that we can confidently expect that the public interest will be served.

It is only occasionally that a clause in a bill such as this, which endangers one of our freedoms, comes before us. I speak of the freedom to dispense information. If a similar proposal were made with regard to other types of organizations that dispense information, such as newspapers, suggesting that if there were a quarrel between newspapers and a government publication then it must be resolved in favour of the government publication, I think there would be a great hue and cry about it.

It is difficult to fathom the reasoning of government supporters against accepting an amendment which gives us a continuation of a certain freedom, but I am quite prepared to accept the fact that there are certain other members of the house willing to have the government take over all aspects of our lives as individuals, and run them according to a computer or to a bureaucratic set-up. I have been asked, "Where are they". Again I say, as I did this afternoon, that these are the people to the left of me geographically and also politically. I do not think that a small vociferous minority should be listened to too intently in this house.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I found it interesting to read some of the evidence given before the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts at the time when the witnesses who appeared before that committee were the director general of the British Broadcasting Corporation and the director general on the Independent Television Authority in the United Kingdom. When Sir Hugh Greene, K.C.M.G., O.B.E., appeared before the committee he was questioned by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo. He was subjected to some sensible and well put questions. I believe the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo was able to draw from these two gentlemen, Sir Hugh Greene and Sir Robert Fraser, a good deal of interesting information about broadcasting in Great Britain.

I found some of the comments which were made by these two gentlemen to be quite enlightening. I am not particularly familiar with the situation in Great Britain. It seemed to me, however, that the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo was asking Sir Hugh Greene about the effect that the introduction of independent television stations in Great Britain had on broadcasting. I found Sir Hugh Greene's reply to be rather interesting. This appears at page 1831 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence No. 38 of the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, where Sir Hugh Greene said this:

> Some people would say that our standard of programs had declined as a result of competition; some people would say that the standard of our programs had improved because of competition. Both of these statements, I think, cannot be true, but they are constantly being made almost in the same breath. Of course, programs will develop over the years whether they are in competition or not, with greater professionalism and expertise.
> We tried to answer this question to the best of our ability at the time of the Pilkington committee, searching our consciences. We came to the conclusion that in certain areas of programming, basically news and light entertainment, probably we had benefited from competition, and that the B.B.C. programs were better for it. We came to the conclusion that in other areas of programming it had probably made no difference.

This bears out a point I was attempting to make this afternoon; that is, that the private sector in Canada need not take a back seat to the C.B.C. or to any other organization in respect of the programming service it is performing in this country. So, the question of competition really does not enter into the matter under discussion at the present time. We are not talking about competition; we are not talking about programming in this context. We are talking about an amendment which, in the opinion of my colleagues, if allowed to go through will open the door to violation of one of our historic rights.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Stanbury: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few minutes left. If the hon. members have points of view which they should like to express, they will have the opportunity to do so after I sit down.

[Mr. Ballard.]

Mr. Stanbury: The hon. member will not permit a question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Calgary South has the floor at the moment.

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, I will permit a question from the hon. member for York-Scarborough.

Mr. Prittie: I had one first.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the hon. member whether the amendment which he has been damning in such severe terms is the one which was introduced by his colleague the hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. Ballard: Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona covered this point very well in the speech he made next preceding mine. I should like the hon. member for York-Scarborough to read that speech. Unfortunately he was not in the house at the time.

Mr. Stanbury: I heard it.

Mr. Ballard: I am sure I could not explain the point better than the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona did.

Mr. Prittie: Will the hon. member permit my question?

Mr. Ballard: I will take a question from the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond.

Mr. Prittie: The hon. member for Calgary South has been referring to the British system and the private companies in Great Britain. I wonder whether he realizes that the program companies in Britain have none of the inalienable rights in respect of private property. They use transmission facilities owned by a public authority and obtain permission for a period of years to produce programs. This authority can be taken away, as indeed was the case in respect of Lord Thomson. They have no built-in rights so far as television is concerned.

Mr. Ballard: I must concede the point to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond when it comes to matters of broadcasting both in Canada and Great Britain, because he has been a conscientious member of the parliamentary committee which has been studying this subject. While I appreciate his knowledge on the subject, I must say that in Great Britain there are separate authorities governing the British Broadcasting Corporation and the independent television agency. This situation did not develop by accident; it was a deliberate policy decision, as I understand it, that these two bodies should be developed and governed by separate agencies. As a matter of fact, when the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond was questioning Sir Robert Fraser, the director of the Independent Television Authority, concerning the overseeing of the television authorities in Great Britain, Sir Robert, as reported at page 1855 of proceedings No. 38 of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, stated as follows:

> Every free country has had to set up an agency of the state to choose who shall be allowed in and who shall not. This is what the F.C.C. is doing most of the time.

The F.C.C., of course, is the Federal Communications Commission in the United States. Sir Robert Fraser continues:

> This cannot be avoided because this is an essential part of the system. The real question it seems to me is whether, given that you have to call into existence an agency of the state to supervise the private sector, you wish it then to have anything to do whatever with the supervision of the public sector. Now the United Kingdom's answer to this is: Let it have nothing whatever to do with the supervision of the public sector. You have already a body called the board of governors of the B.B.C. who were appointed to do that very thing, and either they can do it, in which case they ought to be left to do it, or they cannot do it, in which case they should be changed.

I think Sir Robert was inferring that you should have in any country or state a regulatory body to govern broadcasting. In the statement I have just read it is obvious that Sir Robert recognizes that in respect of broadcasting there should be separate governing bodies. I think that we in Canada can afford one governing body covering the public and private sectors of broadcasting, provided the private sector can expect the same or equal treatment as that afforded to the public sector. To make flesh of one and fowl of the other is absolutely undemocratic and unacceptable. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is really saying that we are prepared to vote for a body that will have the responsibility of governing broadcasting in this country, provided the public and private sectors are governed, supervised, controlled and regulated in identical fashion.

There is no justification for saying that the private sector of this industry should be regulated in one manner and that sector has to follow the pattern set by the public sector. I think that the concept behind this amendment has nothing to do with broadcasting but has something to do with the preservation of the rights under which all members of the house operate. We have grown to expect these rights, we have fought for them and we will continue fighting for them. This is what we are doing now; we are fighting to preserve the rights to which we are accustomed and to which we are entitled.

It would be easy, Mr. Chairman, for the minister to rise and say, without lessening her political stature in this country—in fact, she would probably increase her political stature if she did this—that by all means the regulatory authority over broadcasting in this country must resolve all problems on the basis of public interest, and for no other reason. If the minister would do that, a continuation of this debate would be unnecessary. This is such a small thing to ask of the minister, but it is so important that we are prepared to fight for it right down to the wire. Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It will be several minutes before the proceedings are interrupted, and there is no necessity to call it ten o'clock at this time.

Mr. Ballard: Then, Mr. Chairman, the information I received is incorrect. I understood that we would be invited to the other place at a quarter to ten. It appears that we still have several minutes to go, but I am afraid I have run out of steam. Therefore, I will call it ten o'clock and let Your Honour call the question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Knowles: How is your steam?

Mr. Pascoe: —my colleagues on this side of the house have presented our arguments in respect of improvements to certain clauses of this bill. They have been presented so clearly and forcibly that so far I have not taken part in the debate. However, I feel impelled to speak briefly tonight, for two particular reasons. The first is that I have been asked in letters I have received in the last day or so to put the views of my constituents on the record of the house. I assure the minister that the public—I know this is the case as far as the people in my constituency are concerned —have been reading the reports of this debate very carefully. The feelings of the public are fairly high in this regard.

My second reason for speaking tonight is this. The government is taking action by the guillotine method to impose closure on our speaking. This was announced today. As I say, Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of public interest in the debate on clause 2. As the minister has stated several times, this clause is the heart of Bill C-163. According to the letters I have received, there is a great deal of interest in the private sector of broadcasting. As I have already said, I have received many letters on this question, and I wish to put part of one of them on the record. I shall not put them all on record, but I quote just this one letter to indicate how much interest there is in maintaining the private sector of broadcasting on the same footing as that enjoyed by the C.B.C. This is what my colleagues have been fighting for, and in this connection I would refer particularly to the hon. member for Winnipeg South and the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona.

I shall not read all the letters I have received in this connection because they are not relevant to this stage of the debate; many of them refer to speeches made earlier in committee regarding programs broadcast by the C.B.C. which have offended the sensibilities of a great many viewers. However, I wish to quote from a letter received from a lady in my constituency. This lady says that she is disgusted with some of the programs broadcast over the C.B.C. network. She says:

> These sort of programs are not fit to come into our living rooms. In fact, in ours they are turned off.

The next portion of this letter is the one to which I draw particular attention, and I am sorry the minister is not in the chamber to hear it. This lady says:

> In fact, if we only had the C.B.C. to watch, we would not have a television.

That is what this constituent writes. She thinks there is a great need to give the private sector a square shake, as we say in western Canada, with regard to broadcasting. I do not have to draw to the attention of hon. members on the other side of the chamber how many of them disagree with what the minister herself has said. The minister said—it was said as part of a joke, but she admitted it—that she, and I take it that this also applies to the government, is tilted toward the C.B.C. In order to reinforce my argument with regard to opposition from the minister's own members in this respect, I would put on record one or two statements from members on that side of the house which certainly indicate that they are not in favour of the minister's acknowledgement that she is tilted, and through her the government, toward the C.B.C.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I should like to quote a statement made by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano, which reads as follows:

> My reason for saying that is that the clause as it stands says in effect that the C.B.C. will always have its way and that the will of the C.B.C. will always prevail.

In another part of his speech the hon. member said:

> I suggest that under the present wording—

The wording had been changed slightly since the hon. member spoke but it had the same effect as the amendment which was approved last night.

> —the dice are heavily loaded in favour of the national broadcasting service.

I listened with interest to the speech made by the hon. member for St. Paul's. In my view he also took exception to the minister's very evident bias in favour of the C.B.C. when he said:

> I urge the minister to reconsider the possibility of moving a very simple amendment to clarify, first, the meaning of the word "objectives" and, second, to make it entirely clear that there is to be no automatic resolution of any conflict in favour of the state-owned system but rather that the public interest will be the governing factor.

That is what hon. members on the government side of the house had to say on this bill, and that is exactly what the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg South and the amendment now before us proposed by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona is attempting to do to improve the wording of the bill. The bill as it stands suggests that private broadcasting is not on an equal footing with public broadcasting.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. I am informed that a messenger from the other place is now on his way to the house. Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES ACT

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill No. S-22, an act to prohibit the sale and advertising of hazardous substances, to amend the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act and to make a consequential amendment to the Criminal Code, to which the concurrence of the house is desired.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Colonel A. Fortier, Assistant Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to incorporate Vawn Pipe Lines Ltd.

An Act to incorporate Cabri Pipe Lines Ltd.

An Act respecting Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited.

An Act respecting Divorce.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—LIBAU, MAN.—PROTEST ON TRANSFER OF POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Postmaster General is present and in his place. I welcome this opportunity to deal with what is essentially a grievance that is felt by a majority of the residents of the village of Libau, Manitoba. Unfortunately there is insufficient time to detail with precision the sequence of events and the timing that lay behind the decision of the Postmaster General to transfer the post office and postmastership at Libau last November, but the Postmaster General is well aware that his course of action was found to be very unsatisfactory. The people there took the opportunity to petition him not once but on two occasions, asking him to give consideration to their complaints, their allegations and their request to make an order to retransfer the post office and postmastership back to its location prior to last November. The complaint that the people make is that the minister did not act fairly in that not enough time was given between the issuance of the order of transfer and the date when the actual transfer was to take effect. In fact, I calculate that only four working days were allowed to elapse between notice of transfer and the actual transfer itself.

I must say that the minister was good enough to request or to order a delay in this transfer, during which time—a period of three or four weeks—he considered the request of the residents of this district. However, I and the people of Libau are not satisfied that he was able to justify or sufficiently explain why it was necessary to make this transfer.

The minister has told them in letters, and has told me in the house, that the main reason this transfer was made was that the store in which this post office was located had in recent years changed hands too frequently, and that therefore there was an element of instability. According to the first news reports that carried this announcement, the minister stated that the store in which the post office was located had changed hands three times in four years. This was later amended to three times in five years. I can state with complete accuracy that it changed hands three times in 19 years.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, but the people of Libau cannot understand why it was found necessary to transfer the post office, in view of the fact that the postmaster who held the position prior to last November had held it for a period of four months or so and his work was found to be satisfactory. In fact I have a letter showing that the regional director of postal services in Winnipeg found the performance of the former postmaster to be quite satisfactory.

In light of that it is difficult to understand why the minister did as he did. When the overwhelming majority of the people make a request, and when what they request will not complicate the minister's job, I submit that that request ought to be acceded to. What was requested would not have affected national policy and I fail to understand why it was not granted.

The people have petitioned twice for the return of the post office. Had the minister granted that request, would that have affected the operation of his department and the rest of the country? Would it have increased the expenditure of public funds? The answer is that it would not. There was therefore no substantial reason for the minister's refusal.

The request was made and the petition was signed by 75 per cent of the adult residents of the district. In one of his recent letters the minister challenges the accuracy of that figure and suggests that the percentage is more like 67 per cent. But 67 per cent in favour indicates an overwhelming majority. While perhaps I should not challenge the minister's figure, I do so, because the official list of postal subscribers is wrong. Since that list was compiled a number of residents have died, some have moved away—the sort of thing one can expect normally—so that the proportion of residents who signed the petition is, I insist, 75 per cent. I do not make too much of this, except to say that the majority of the people made a simple request and he has denied that request, saying that he has statutory authority for his course of action.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Schreyer: May I conclude with one sentence? I do not question the minister's statutory authority; I only hope that he might exercise it less drastically and as much as possible keep in mind the wishes of the people.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I know that I do not have much time to answer, but I shall try to be as brief as possible.

First of all, there is some misunderstanding about the word "transfer". A post office in that class is not transferred, any more than a postmaster is transferred. The appointee must provide the premises himself. This does not mean, therefore, that when a postmaster resigns, either because he sells his business or for some other reason, the post office must remain in the same premises. What we do is that we appoint a new local postmaster who must provide his own premises.

The business has been sold three times since 1962. The hon. member knows that did not cost the department anything but each time the postmaster resigns or is transferred, the civil servants of the department must go to the post office and take an inventory of the stamps, money orders, etc. and see that everything is in order. This, of course, entails new expenses.

Because the new owner of the business, Mr. Gilson, was never appointed postmaster, the last postmaster, Mr. Greening, was appointed on a temporary basis, until such time as a permanent one is appointed. So, in this case, two people filled out applications, that is Messrs. Greening and Gilson. Of the two candidates, we have decided, with the assistance of the district manager in Winnipeg, that Mr. Greening was better qualified to fill the post. So I have agreed to make this appointment.

Now, even if a petition has been signed by many users of the mail, I must say that, today, 128 families out of 179 get their mail through the Libau post office. In all justice, Mr. Speaker, I surely cannot fire a postmaster who does his work adequately. I have never done that since I am Postmaster General and I will not do it because, in all justice, I think we should respect the persons on the job.

It may be that there was a misunderstanding when the question of transfer was brought up since, as I said earlier, the postmaster who was there had been hired only on a temporary basis, because the resignation of the one who sold the store had been received too late to appoint his successor.

PUBLIC WORKS—VANCOUVER—CONSTRUCTION OF FEDERAL BUILDING

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I welcome this opportunity to enlarge upon the question I put, or endeavoured to put, to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McIlraith) on January 26 in connection with federal construction in the city of Vancouver. Exceeding urgency attaches to this situation.

The shipbuilding industry is already facing a serious situation. One yard in Victoria is closed. Employment in the shipyard in Vancouver is down from 1,500 workers to fewer than 300. More than 60 per cent of the labour force dependant on this industry is unemployed and, according to the newspapers, in the course of only two days there were 500 inquiries by skilled workmen making application to go to the United States. This is the situation as it concerns shipbuilding.

We do not want to see a repetition of this situation in the general construction industry.

On January 15 I made a survey of the carpenters locals in Vancouver, New Westminster, Victoria and Nanaimo. I discovered that 22 per cent of the construction carpenters belonging to those four locals were unemployed. Unemployment among other construction workers such as electricians, plumbers, fitters and steel workers was similarly high.

Major construction work which has maintained employment during the past two years is coming to an end. No more pulp or paper mills are to be built in British Columbia in the foreseeable future. All the heavy power dam construction work on the Peace river and the Columbia river is approaching completion and no further major work is in sight for the next three years.

It is against this background, and bearing in mind the somewhat dismal outlook for the next two or three years, that I am asking the Minister of Public Works and the government whether they will not give favourable consideration to advancing the plan for the construction of the federal building to be built at the foot of Granville street. I know the government plans call for a start in 1970-71 on the first phase, 1973-74 on the second stage, and two or three years later on the third stage. In view of the factual situation and the unfortunate probable future for construction workers in Vancouver I just make the simple, and I think logical request that this one major federal project in Vancouver be planned and phased for an earlier start than 1970-71.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we must recognize that this important project requires detailed negotiations which, if rushed through, cannot be carried out successfully. In addition, we must recognize that whether the building will be built by the Department of Public Works on the site now owned by the crown, or whether it will be built in some other way, the preparation of the plans and specifications will involve a great deal of work. These are the considerations that lead almost inevitably to the conclusion that the most realistic estimate that can be made at this time is that the construction phase of the work cannot be started within the next year or two.

I cannot comment on the accuracy of the hon. member's figures with regard to the unemployment situation. I will simply assume that his figures are entirely accurate. Nevertheless, given the requirements for development of an arrangement and the development of plans and specifications, there seems to be no way in which this project can be moved ahead more rapidly.

I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, that it would be anything like the kind of solution to the employment problem that the hon. member suggests; but even if it were, I submit it would be almost totally impossible to put the construction into motion with anything like the kind of haste that he seems to have in mind.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES LOSING JOBS THROUGH UNIFICATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): On this occasion, Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief, unimpeded by my colleagues in my party. This is the day on which unification takes effect in the armed forces. Earlier today I presented the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) with a question about the effect unification would have on the employment of prevailing rate people with the armed forces, and about what would happen to those who were laid off. It was a very short question. I hope my speech tonight will be short, and that the minister will be able to make his speech as long as he wishes so that the text of it can be sent forth to those people whose jobs may be in jeopardy.

I had a letter today from a particular branch of the armed forces in my area, concerning a number of men. One of them, an ex-serviceman, has served for 13 years, and another ex-serviceman has served for 16 years. There are three other people mentioned, one an ex-serviceman who has served for one and a half years, and two other prevailing rate employees without service, but who have served in one case for 15 years and in the other for two years.

Perhaps it is unfair to repeat gossip in this or any other place, but I have heard much gossip that there may be a rather drastic reduction in the complement of those who are classed as prevailing rate employees. Admittedly I have not been able to give the minister all the figures that have beset me, but I hope that in a general way he could give an indication to hon. members, which in turn they could send to prevailing rate employees, of what the future holds for them.

Whether a person has served two years or 13 years with a particular department, there still remains the matter of whether he is going to be able to take home his very essential bread and butter. I am not going to fire a political salvo on this matter. I simply ask the minister what plans he and his department have in the light of unification, so that we can send that information out to those who write us.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to my hon. friend, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) for the conversation we had this afternoon on a particular subject. We are very sorry, we must admit, that there will be some reduction in the civilian staff as a result of our continuing efforts to bring about further improvements in the employment of our manpower resources within the department. Like everybody else, we face budget constraints. We are also streamlining our operation. We believe this is commendable.

It is regrettable that here and there some people, especially the casual workers, are affected. I must point out, however, that we are making every effort to find suitable positions for those persons who have been or will be affected by the reorganization. In addition to our own internal efforts the officials of my department have written to the Department of Manpower and Immigration as well as the public service commission to solicit the collective efforts of the entire manpower organization in an effort to place the affected employees in other positions.

I can assure the hon. gentleman that all government departments are sparing no effort in their desire to assist these employees. I might also add that we give as much notice as is possible. In the case of the people the hon. member mentioned I believe three months notice was given. We are assisting in every way we can in order to help find suitable replacement employment for these people who eventually will lose or have lost their employment.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 2, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

LABOUR AND EMPLOYMENT

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Hugh Faulkner (Peterborough) moved that the first report of the standing committee on labour and employment, presented to the house on Tuesday, January 30, 1968, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROVISION FOR PROHIBITION OF SALE AND ADVERTISING

Hon. J. J. Greene (for Mr. MacEachen) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-22 (from the Senate), to prohibit the sale and advertising of hazardous substances, to amend the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act and to make a consequential amendment to the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON STABILITY OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and ask him if he can give us any further information in connection with the dollar, any reassuring statement, in view of the measures taken some time ago.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been reasonably well satisfied with the effect of the measures that have been taken. I have every confidence in the stability of the Canadian dollar.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSED MEASURE TO REDUCE DOWN PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the President of the Treasury Board to the effect that opposition parties are playing politics with housing because they refuse to agree to a total restriction on debate on a measure without having had the opportunity of seeing it, I want to ask the Prime Minister if it is now the policy of the government that before legislation is brought in members of this house are to be asked to agree to a total restriction on debate before they have seen the legislation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that policy has never been suggested by any member of the government.

Mr. Starr: Just recently, by the minister for housing.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Prime Minister, then, in view of the remarks in respect of this housing legislation, will he undertake to see that this legislation is introduced so members can see it? Then perhaps there will be no great difficulty in getting general agreement to restrict debate.

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to look into this to see that it is done.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE TO STEEL INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister arising out of the correspondence between him and the premier of Nova Scotia which he tabled the other day, and which suggested the federal government is ready to give Nova Scotia a loan of only some $2 million. I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether this means the federal government has decided not to make any loan at all or to assist the provincial government of Nova Scotia in any way in its acquisition of the Dosco steel plant.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. If my hon. friend reads the letter a little more carefully I think he will realize that is not a correct interpretation to be given to it. As I said yesterday, I will be discussing that communication and the whole problem with the premier of Nova Scotia either over the week end or early in the week.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the premier indicates in his letter that the cost of acquiring the plant would be between $20 million and $25 million, would the Prime Minister not consider it in the national interest to assist the provincial government in acquiring that plant without laying on it too heavy a burden in the form of a loan?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I consider it in the national interest for us to help Nova Scotia to achieve the objective that the provincial government has in mind, of assisting this industry and the people of Cape Breton in this matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether we can deduce from his remarks that the question of a loan to the province of Nova Scotia to acquire the assets of Dosco is still open and has not been definitely decided in the negative?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we have put alternative proposals to the government of Nova Scotia which we think are of very great assistance to that province in that matter. I have no doubt the premier will be anxious to discuss the letter; he has already indicated that he will take it up with me.

TRADE

POSSIBLE IMPORT OF FROZEN BEEF FROM ARGENTINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is in a position to give the house the further information that he indicated he would obtain on the proposal to import meat products from the Argentine?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the two questions raised by the hon. member for Kamloops on Wednesday last as to whether I would care to modify my answer to the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose on January 29, which dealt with whether my department or the government contemplates the importation of frozen meat into Canada, I would draw attention to the question asked by the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose as reported at page 6072 of Hansard. The question was as follows:

> Is it true that the government is considering importing frozen beef from the Argentine?

My answer was that the Department of Agriculture is not considering importing beef from the Argentine. I said I could not speak for other departments but that to my knowledge they were not. That was a correct answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose.

As the hon. member knows, there are no restrictions on the importation into Canada of cooked canned meat products, and such products have been imported from Argentina for many years. The investigation being carried out by my department concerns a new type of packaging of a fully cooked meat product which is not canned but is packed in large polyethylene containers and then frozen for shipment. The product is intended primarily for use in the commercial manufacture of meat type food products.

No final decision has yet been taken as to whether this new type of container is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY OF CANADIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to direct to the Prime Minister which is a follow up of a question I asked him the other day. Is the Prime Minister now in a position to give the house a report on the safety of Canadians in Viet Nam, both those who are employed by the government and others.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add very much to what I said the other day. I hope we will be getting a more definitive report over the week end that will bring us up to date on the most recent developments. No Canadians seem to have suffered physically as a result of these harrowing events, though they have had some unpleasant experiences. As far as we know everything is as I said it was the other day, but I hope to make another report on Monday.

[Later:]

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I realize a question similar to the one I have in mind has already been asked, but because of the urgency, and because the right hon. Prime Minister may have received some later news, I beg leave to ask it again. In view of reports that have just been received that a number of civilian Canadians have lost their lives in Viet Nam, will the Prime Minister indicate whether he has received any word since the house convened or since he answered the previous question as to the well-being of our aid personnel, mission personnel and other civilians who might be there in some capacity? If not, will steps be taken to obtain this information if at all possible?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I have no information which would confirm that report, which I sincerely hope is inaccurate. I will look into the matter immediately.

HOUSING

VANCOUVER—CONSTRUCTION OF HOME FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board who now reports for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In view of the minister's interest in getting the best use of the money available for housing, can he inform the house why Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has awarded a contract for the construction of a 19 storey senior citizens home in Vancouver which provides for higher costs and fewer units than other proposals submitted for the same project?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question is argumentative.

Mr. Prittie: Ten o'clock.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REPORTED COMPLAINTS FROM EMPLOYEES OF KETTLE VALLEY LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister anything further to report with respect to his promise to look into the complaints of the Canadian Pacific railroaders on the Kettle Valley railway?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I never received such a complaint.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question supplementary to the one I directed to the Minister of Labour, and I should like to direct this question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Transport. Has he any information to give the house about certain complaints by C.P.R. employees on the Kettle Valley division regarding their contracts?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did receive complaints similar to those received by the hon. member for Kootenay west, which I referred to the deputy minister of labour. Perhaps the correspondence has not yet reached the minister's office.

WINTER WORKS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Yesterday the minister said the present winter works program would not be renewed next winter. Can the minister say whether a modified program for winter works will be proposed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we shall have to meet with the provinces before we can say exactly what kind of program will be the replacement.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the government to propose to the provinces a modified plan of winter works?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we are still in discussion with the provinces, and I cannot say more than I have already said.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONTREAL—REPORTED FALSE GRADING OF BEEF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the discovery that falsely graded beef has been on sale in Montreal, what precautions has the minister taken to see that this practice is immediately stopped?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, departmental inspectors of course are constantly on the watch for such breaches of the law, and I think it was as a result of their actions that the present prosecutions are being undertaken. I believe some of the cases are still sub judice; therefore I should perhaps not say more than I have said. I assure the hon. member that all possible precautions are taken by departmental inspectors.

Mr. Hales: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister taken any steps to protect the consumer, and to lay charges for false advertising?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): We are looking into the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): A further supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In view of the report that St. Lawrence Butchers Limited in Montreal were charged last fall with selling meat unfit for human consumption, what immediate steps did the Department of Agriculture take to investigate the matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this is a repetition of a question which has just been asked.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Then may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Is this low grade meat still supplied to the veterans hospitals and other federal institutions?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I read the story only this morning, and I am having it looked into.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO MATERIAL TO BE USED AT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether the new reprint of the British North America Act published under the name of the hon. Minister of Justice and added to the new fictionalized edition of the Canadian Charter of Human Rights constitute all the documents which are to be studied at the upcoming federal-provincial conference?

[English]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; other material is coming forward.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HEATING OIL AND GASOLINE—REPORTED PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received representation from Superior Auto Service Association protesting a recent increase in gasoline and fuel oil prices, and can the minister inform the house of his reply?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order.

Mr. Germa: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member would ask another question to facilitate matters.

Mr. Germa: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister reply to a similar question that was raised by my colleague from York South a few days ago. At that time the minister said his department was investigating these price increases.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can reply in part. I received a report this morning, but I have not yet had an opportunity to read it.

INDUSTRY

COPPER—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): May I at this time reply to a question which was raised yesterday by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I have examined Hansard, and the reply about copper prices was given by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce on December 20.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I examined the answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and it did not really deal with the question I had directed originally to the Minister of Finance on December 18. I asked the minister if his officials were looking into the increased price of copper and whether the price increase was justified. The Minister of Finance said that his officials were looking into it, and I am asking for a reply. The answer of the Minister of Trade and Commerce had nothing to do with whether the increases were justified, but with whether there had been similar increases in other parts of the world.

INCOME TAX

REPORTED LATE DISPATCH OF T-1 FORMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) asked me a question concerning T-1 forms.

Today is February 2, 1968, and the personal income tax returns are now available. Post offices throughout Canada are in a position to supply copies of those forms on request, and they are also available at all district taxation offices.

That form must be completed and filed by April 30, 1968. Therefore, I can see no reason why the penalties should be waived in the circumstances. There has been no delay in the distribution of the forms compared to last year.

[English]

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I am afraid the minister has not given the correct answer yet. The T-1 forms normally go out on December 15. This year in my region particularly, and I do not know whether this was prevalent all over Canada, they did not arrive until January 16, and I am advised that some of the farmers concerned had to have their returns in by December 31.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: On this subject, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say, first of all, that the mistake made yesterday was not mine, but that of the hon. member who worded his question wrongly. There is no delay as compared to last year. Some people perhaps did not receive their forms on time, but they can always get one from the post offices or the district taxation offices.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORAD—REPORTED U.S. PROPOSALS FOR MODERNIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Russell MacEwen (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he say whether he has yet been advised by the United States defence department of its intention to seek many changes in the NORAD agreement? If so, is he in a position at this time to advise the house on this important matter?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the hon. member is confusing the NORAD agreement and the announcement made by Secretary McNamara, which are two different things.

Mr. MacEwan: Yes, I was speaking of the announcement by Defence Secretary McNamara, which the Canadian public were advised today was in that regard.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): As far as can be foreseen, Mr. Speaker, the proposed modernization of the air defence capability in North America contemplates continued requirement for the Pine Tree radar line and manned interceptors, and the eventual phasing out of the Bomarcs and the D.E.W. line facilities.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED AT FORTHCOMING CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the constitutional conference commencing next week may I ask the Minister of Justice whether it is the intention of the government to present for consideration by the conference a specific document by way of a charter of Canadian rights, or merely to discuss the principles outlined in the white paper tabled yesterday?

Hon. P.-E. Trudeau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to have the principles discussed before presenting any legal document, in order to reach agreement on the principles and many basic ideas before embarking on any legal squabble over words.

Mr. Fulton: The government at the moment has no specific proposals to lay before the conference. Is that correct?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: To answer with precision, Mr. Speaker, the government has specific proposals but it does not intend to lay them before the conference during these particular three days. It is hoped that there will be a continuing committee of attorneys general who will want to look at the specific document when we reach, or if we reach, agreement on the principles.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

Can the Minister of Justice tell us whether the last edition of the British North America Act is out of print and whether that is why the complete new edition is being published in this volume under a new title and particularly over the signature of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker; two points: Many people speak of the constitution in complete ignorance of the said constitution. It occurred to us that it might be useful if the member for Lapointe had a copy.

Second, many people think that the constitution is not over my signature but over the signature of the Queen of England. Either way, it is not true.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question.

In publishing a new British North America Act for presentation to the provincial premiers, did the Minister of Justice think that the provincial premiers were not informed of the constitution?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Justice. It concerns the conference which is to begin next Monday. In view of the fact that several provinces have made efforts to limit the academic freedom of the universities, has the minister given any thought to raising this matter with the provinces to determine whether he can entrench the right of the universities to be free to decide their own academic course?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member will notice that in the declaration of rights there is a section which relates to freedom of expression. This governs freedom of expression in all areas of Canada.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister misunderstood my question. I am referring to the financial pressures to which the universities are subjected by the provinces, which are trying to control the individual activities of the universities. I ask this question in view of having read the report the minister has brought forward.

Mr. Trudeau: I fail to see in what way something of this nature could be guaranteed in a bill of rights.

AGRICULTURE

APPLICATION OF EASTERN CANADA FEED GRAIN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rolland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could he tell us if the farmers in our areas will soon know the results of the work done by the members of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, and if they will benefit from a reduction in the price of feed?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I think the eastern farmers will be delighted with the good work of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO REQUESTS FOR INTEREST RATE INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Did the government receive any letters, telegrams or other communications requesting an increase in National Housing Act interest rates prior to the recent increase to 8½ per cent?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper. The hon. member knows that if he wishes the production of papers there is a proper procedure to follow.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, as a follow-up to the previous question, perhaps the Prime Minister would like to table those letters and telegrams in order to save time. Would the Prime Minister be prepared to table those communications?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look into the matter.

TRADE

ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRIES AFFECTED BY TARIFF REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Industry. Would the minister advise the house whether the government adjustment loans to industries which are severely affected by the Kennedy round of tariffs will be applicable to Canadian subsidiaries of United States companies?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): The answer briefly is that if on all other counts a subsidiary of a United States company qualifies, it will not be disqualified by reason of being a subsidiary of a United States company.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, would the minister like to elaborate—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think any elaboration should be pursued on motions.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the precedent in the past, when Mr. St. Laurent was elected leader on August 6, 1948 and did not become prime minister until November 15, will the Prime Minister advise the house whether he intends to retire immediately following the leadership convention?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman will be glad to know that I will be getting out as soon as I can get a mover.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING SUPPORT FOR AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of a report in one of this morning's newspapers to the effect that the minister had stated that the Canadian Union of Public Employees supported the passage of Bill C-186, will he inform the house the source of that information, assuming the report to be correct?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I was surprised when I read that paragraph of the newspaper report this morning. The hon. member for York South and others who were there know that I made no such statement. I did say that certain unions affiliated with the teamsters council supported the principle contained in the bill introduced by the government, but I certainly never suggested that CUPE or any of its member unions had done so.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR JOINT MEETING OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND DEFENCE COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the commitment made several days ago in this House of Commons by the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he agreed to a joint meeting of the standing committees on defence and external affairs relative to NATO and NORAD, will the minister indicate when the house can expect the motion for reference to be placed on the order paper?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I do not know about the motion, Mr. Speaker, but I know the first meeting is planned for February 15.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the minister whether he is referring to a meeting of the defence committee or a joint meeting of the defence and external affairs committees?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): I refer to a joint meeting.

Mr. Winch: I apologize for the delay, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the statement just made to the house by the Minister of National Defence that there is to be a joint meeting of the defence and external affairs committees on February 15 I should like to ask the minister to explain why members of those committees have not been notified of this meeting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR HOUSE, SENATE AND LIBRARY STAFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the President of the Treasury Board in his capacity as one of the members of the internal economy commission. Have any steps been taken to facilitate the implementation of the recommendation of the special joint committee on the public service that there be collective bargaining for employees of the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take up this matter with Your Honour before answering.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provision—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose last evening clause 2(h) with an amendment by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona was under consideration.

On clause 2—Broadcasting policy for Canada.

Mr. Starr: Question.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Starr: Why is this stalling taking place?

Miss LaMarsh: Since there was so much noise in the chamber, Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether you would be good enough to again read the question.

Mr. Churchill: This is just stalling.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment to subclause (h) of clause 2 moved by Mr. Nugent, which would then read as follows:

—where any conflict arises between the objectives of the national broadcasting service and the interests of the private element of the Canadian broadcasting system, all other factors being equal the objectives of the national broadcasting service must prevail.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Nugent) negatived: Yeas, 49; nays, 55.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Shall the subclause as amended carry?

• (11:40 a.m.)

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, before clause 2 is passed, and since the Prime Minister is in the house, I am wondering if it would not be advisable to stand clause 2 until the next federal-provincial conference is over.

We know that two days ago the Quebec premier accused the federal government of aggression because it had invaded the field of education which comes under provincial jurisdiction and because it was trying, without prior consultation with the provinces, to include words such as national unity.

If clause 2 were passed on the eve of the opening of that federal-provincial conference, that would be, Mr. Chairman, sheer provocation as far as the Quebec government is concerned. In the circumstances, and if the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) are really sincere, it seems to me that the clear and definite objection expressed by the Quebec government as to preliminary consultations before a hasty passing of the bill should be taken into consideration, and I wonder whether it would not be better to defer consideration of clause 2.

We can pass on to other clauses. There is clause 3 and about 50 other clauses to pass in Bill No. C-163 and they will certainly not be agreed to before the end of the federal-provincial conference. If, during the conference, there are consultations about this bill, it will then be possible to submit amendments. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the government would be wise to stand clause 2, in order to comply with the representations of the provincial governments demanding that consultations be held before a too hasty passage of this bill.

I would not make such a proposal if there were still a month to elapse before the federal-provincial conference, but since it is our last sitting before the opening of that federal provincial conference, I feel that it is essential.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to dwell on the matter, but I think it would be advisable to stand this clause. I think that the government should accept this suggestion. It would be an indication of its good faith and good intentions, while the contrary could be considered as an act of provocation or paternalistism. It would mean that the clause would be passed without any consideration being given to the representations of the provincial governments, even if a meeting has been arranged in the hope of reaching an agreement. In fact, this would be the same as saying: "A decision has been made and we go ahead". This is more or less what the hasty passing of clause 2 would imply.

That is why I would ask the government to stand clause 2 until after the federal-provincial conference. Could the hon. Secretary of State (Miss Lamarsh) or the right hon. Prime Minister make their views known on this?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: Shall clause 2 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I asked a question, and I wonder if I could get an answer. Would the government be ready to stand clause 2 until after the federal-provincial conference? That is the question I am asking.

Some hon. Members: Order.

[English]

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member cannot speak again.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? Shall clause 2 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, am I to understand that there is no intention to postpone examination of clause 2?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Grégoire: I see that there is no intention to stand clause 2 and that provocative action is preferred, right on the eve of the federal-provincial conference.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the Liberals object, but you will admit that the situation is rather serious. On the one hand, the federal government accuses the Quebec government of having imperialistic ambitions. The Quebec government answers by accusing the federal government of aggression. It reminds me of the international situation. The North Koreans call the Americans imperialists—

[English]

The Chairman: Order. Shall clause 2 as amended carry?

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Chairman. A vote will have to be taken.

Clause 2 as amended agreed to: Yeas 72; nays, 5.

The Chairman: I declare clause 2 as amended agreed to.

On clause 3—Definitions.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I asked that this clause be stood because I wanted to raise a question about the name of the regulatory authority. I do not know whether other hon. members share my feeling, but despite the work which has gone into trying to choose an appropriate name for this body I feel that the name, in English at least, is not very appropriate. This will be a quasi-judicial body, virtually a supreme court of broadcasting, and it seems to me the word "council" in English is not the right word for that kind of body. I understand that in French the word "commission" is not particularly appropriate either and that the word "conseil" was considered to be better.

However, I do not think it is essential to translate these words literally, and I would like to hear the minister's reaction to the use of the word "commission" in the English version of the name. Personally I would not mind reverting to the names "Canadian broadcasting authority" and "régie des ondes" as Fowler suggested, or even "Board of Broadcast Governors" have suggested, but it seems to me the word "council" is quite inappropriate for such an important quasi-judicial body.

As I said, I asked that this clause stand for the purpose of raising this question now. It was pointed out to me that perhaps I should have asked that practically every clause from clause 3 to the end of the bill be stood because the word "council" is mentioned in so many of them. But I have taken some modest legal advice on this matter and it was suggested to me that if my question is raised on the first clause in which this name appears and if the change is agreed to, then the parliamentary counsel, if no one else, would make the necessary changes in the other clauses of the bill.

I should simply like to raise the question. If it is not of concern to other members I am not going to press it or take the time of the committee on this point. However, I did want to get the reaction of the minister and representatives of the other parties to this suggestion.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I agree in general with the point of view just expressed by the hon. member for York-Scarborough. I believe the word "council" is very weak. This would be an authority with some power, and I too prefer the words which Mr. Fowler originally suggested, "Régie des ondes", in French or "Canadian broadcasting authority" in English. I do not believe this issue is one I would want to debate at any great length, but the word "council" in English seems weak.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Miss LaMarsh: I do not particularly like the word "council" either. This change was made by the broadcasting committee. I feel that the word "council" in English does not represent anything as important as a regulatory body. It was always my understanding when I was on the opposite side that one could change a name by simply moving an amendment and then saying wherever the name appears elsewhere in the legislation the name shall be changed.

It may very well be, if the committee is interested in this, that we could give the hon. member until we come back at 2.30 to discuss the point with some other members and arrive at a new name if there is one that is more satisfactory. I am in the hands of the committee. I believe a rose is still a rose even if you call it something else, but it does seem to me there might be a name more in keeping with a regulatory body than the name "council". If the committee would do so I would be prepared to stand this clause until 2.30 to give the hon. member an opportunity to ascertain whether there is some agreement on the matter.

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Mr. Stanbury: I don't know whether that is necessary. I discussed the matter yesterday with the pro tem broadcasting critic of the official opposition, the hon. member for Winnipeg South. I do not know whether he wishes to express an opinion. The hon. member for Halifax was not in the house when I spoke to the hon. member for Winnipeg South, but perhaps they have discussed this point. I took it up with the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, and there may be little point in standing the clause if the minister finds my suggestion acceptable and if the broadcasting critics for the other parties have found it acceptable. Perhaps the point should be disposed of rather than having the clause stand.

The Chairman: Shall clause 3 stand?

Mr. Cowan: I have some comments to make with regard to clause 3 that do not bear on the point raised by the hon. member for York-Scarborough. While I am not objecting to standing his point until 2.30, I do wish to address a question or two to the Secretary of State while we are considering clause 3. I have been stating since last September, which is some five or six months, that I was opposed to the wording of clause 2(c) as it was presented to us. Clause 2(c) has been amended in a manner satisfactory to me. However, following the amendment of clause 2(c) there are still some little points left in the other clauses. When I refer to these other clauses I hope the Chair will not call me to order and say we are discussing clause 3. I have some questions to ask the Secretary of State about clause 3(d), which reads:

(d) "broadcasting undertaking" includes a broadcasting transmitting undertaking, a broadcasting receiving undertaking—

If clause 2(c) had not been amended in the manner it has, I was prepared to move the deletion from clause 3(d) of the words "a broadcasting receiving undertaking", because a receiving undertaking certainly is not a broadcasting undertaking. Now, when the operators of C.A.T.V. systems and those who believe in the freedom of speech principle expressed their satisfaction with the amendment to clause 2(c), this involved a certain principle that has not been mentioned so far in the committee, and it is this. Up to this time a C.A.T.V. application has been discussed in private by the Board of Broadcast Governors. There has been no public hearing.

The board makes an informal recommendation to the Minister of Transport, and the Minister of Transport either refuses the application, amends it or issues a licence.

Under the Broadcasting Act as originally brought down with clause 2(c) unacceptable, certain C.A.T.V. operators made the remark that they would accept it, much as they disliked it, because they presumed that under clause 3, subclause (d) and under clause 19 there would be public hearings of C.A.T.V. applications. Now, not only would this new act, if it had not been amended, have trodden upon the principle of freedom of speech, for the first time it would have opened up public hearings for C.A.T.V. applications, which C.A.T.V. applicants have not enjoyed in the past. The C.A.T.V. people therefore, having been butted around by the cabinet for quite a time, gave a grudging assent to the bill as originally introduced on the basis that what they lost on the roundabouts, namely in the freedom of speech principle, they at least picked up by having open hearings on C.A.T.V. applications.

Under clause 19, which is headed "Hearings and procedure"—this is one clause which I asked yesterday be allowed to stand—we find this:

A public hearing shall be held by the council—
(a) in connection with the issue of a broadcasting licence—

Anyone who knows anything about C.A.T.V. knows it is not a broadcasting set-up. The question is, basically, is a hearing on a C.A.T.V. application to be considered as one for a broadcasting licence? In looking at clause 3 we find in clause 3(c) the following:

(c) "broadcasting licence" or, in parts II and III, "licence" means a licence to carry on a broadcasting undertaking issued under this act;

I am not a lawyer but clause 3(d), the one to which I am directing my remarks at the moment, reads:

(d) "broadcasting undertaking" includes a broadcasting transmitting undertaking, a broadcasting receiving undertaking—

This wording in clause 3(d) "a broadcasting receiving undertaking" would make it appear that would be covered by subclause 3(c), which reads:

(c) "broadcasting licence" or, in parts II and III, "licence" means a licence to carry on a broadcasting undertaking issued under this act;

The question I want to ask the Secretary of State, and I not only want an answer but I expect an answer or I shall discuss the matter at some length, is this. Will a C.A.T.V. application in the future be heard at an open meeting of the council, or whatever you want to call it, as though it were an application for a broadcasting licence, although a C.A.T.V. operation is not broadcasting in any manner but is only reception?

• (12 noon)

Miss LaMarsh: I think I had better say that my hon. friend is very much mistaken if he believes that C.A.T.V. has been taken out of the bill by the amendment to which I agreed. I was careful to agree only to such language as would not remove it from control by the authority, and the government has no intention of agreeing to any changes which would have that effect.

Mr. Cowan: I cannot make head or tail of that answer but perhaps I am a little dense. I only asked whether applications for C.A.T.V. licences would in future be heard in open hearings or whether they would continue to be considered in the course of a hole in the wall deal.

Miss LaMarsh: Clause 19 calls for public hearings in connection with broadcasting licences and an application for a C.A.T.V. operation is, of course, an application for a broadcasting licence. Therefore there would be the same provision for open hearings as is made in the case of other kinds of broadcasting undertakings.

Mr. Cowan: I wish to thank the minister for her statement that there are to be public hearings. This was the deduction we had made but we wanted to have it confirmed. The next question I should like to ask the minister is this. I am a member of the Liberal party. Let no one speak otherwise. If this bill passes with an amended clause 2(c) and with the understanding we have from the hon. lady that C.A.T.V. applications will be heard in public in future, will that damnable statement of July 22, 1964 by the minister of transport be automatically killed or does it remain in force and effect? In the fifth paragraph of that statement we find this comment by the minister of transport:

The government has two main concerns. One is to see that C.A.T.V. installations in Canada do not come under the ownership and control of persons and corporations which are not Canadian. The other is to see that C.A.T.V. installations designed to receive broadcasts emanating from outside the area reached by any local Canadian television station, and particularly from outside Canada, are unlikely to make the operation of any existing television station uneconomic or to inhibit the provision of alternate Canadian television service in the area concerned.

My question is: Does this damnable statement die when the act becomes effective, in view of the control over applications for C.A.T.V. licences which the legislation would give the new council, or does the statement I have read still hold water?

Miss LaMarsh: Is that a statement from the department or by the Board of Broadcast Governors?

Mr. Cowan: By the then minister of transport. He is more important than the department.

Miss LaMarsh: I can only say there is a new Minister of Transport now. But the hon. gentleman is well aware that there will be a new board, whatever may be its name, with its own responsibility to follow the legislation which this house enacts. It will be bound by whatever regulations and structure are given to it by orders in council. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what may happen in the next few months. I do not expect to be here in a position to influence the course of events in any way. I think the hon. member will have to wait and see what happens. I can give him no assurance.

Mr. Cowan: The minister has said that the board will be bound by the legislation passed by this house and added that it will also be bound by orders in council passed in the future. I am glad to have that assurance from her, though I know Hansard cannot be considered as a legal document and is not binding in courts of law. The minister of transport of the day assumed a great deal of authority for himself on July 22, 1964, because he said there was no regulation of C.A.T.V. And that great god of the radio world, R. M. Fowler, made some comments in his 1965 report on broadcasting. He said:

> Our terms of reference specifically excluded community antenna services.

Then he went on to make many references to them, stating that the radio and television world lacked legal authority to control them and that something had to be done. Now that C.A.T.V. applications are to fall within the jurisdiction of the broadcasting council, as I will call it for the moment, and since clause 2(c) has been amended and we believe there will be reasonable men on the board, we expect the legislation of this parliament to kill deader than a dodo the autocratic statement of the minister of transport on July 22, 1964.

[Mr. Cowan.]

If an act of parliament does not kill that statement there is no use in parliament passing acts at all; ministers can simply issue statements which will have the force of law. I will accept what has been said by the Secretary of State that the new board will be bound by the legislation of parliament and by the orders in council which may be issued, and I am certain that this means free and open hearings of all C.A.T.V. applications as suggested, though rather indirectly, in subclauses 3(c) and 3(d). Clause 3(c) reads:

> —"broadcasting licence" or..."licence" means a licence to carry on a broadcasting undertaking issued under this Act;

Then clause 3(d) goes on to say that a broadcasting undertaking includes a broadcasting transmitting undertaking. While reception is entirely different from broadcasting, the two are inextricably involved and since in clause 19 it is stated that a public hearing shall be held by the council in connection with the issue of a broadcasting licence I take it, and I wish it to be on record in Hansard if nowhere else, that there will be public hearings in connection with the issue of a broadcasting licence, and under 3(d) a broadcasting undertaking includes a broadcasting receiving undertaking.

I have no other feeling on this question of clause 3. I believe I have made my stand clear, the stand of the people who believe in the principle of freedom of speech. I am happy to have the Secretary of State's assurance on the record, and I thank her sincerely.

Mr. Ballard: I want to say one word in response to a question which the hon. member for York-Scarborough put in my direction a few moments ago. I am in favour of the amendment he has proposed to clause 3 and I have no objection to raise to his suggestion at this point.

Mr. Stanbury: In view of the consultations which have taken place I move:

> That wherever in clause 3 and throughout the bill the word "council" as defined in clause 3(f) appears there shall be substituted therefor in the English text the word "commission".

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, that amendment is acceptable to the official opposition.

Mr. Hales: What would be the abbreviation in letters if this were accepted?

Miss LaMarsh: It would be C.R.T.C. in both languages, I would assume.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know, under the circumstances, what will be the term used in French.

Mr. Prittie: "Conseil".

Mr. Lewis: It remains "Conseil".

• (12:10 p.m.)

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: If the chairman is concerned about whether or not there can be two different words in the two languages here, I think attention should be drawn to the fact that for many years the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has been the English form of the name of our broadcasting service and Radio-Canada has been the French form. The B.B.G. bears two names in the statute; it appears in both languages. Many of our national institutions have different names in the two languages; they are not necessarily direct translations from one language to the other.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, if I interpret correctly the furrows in your brow I think what is troubling you is an amendment to clause 3 that will require amendments to be made to a dozen or so clauses throughout the bill. I am sure the general agreement there is to make this change will produce unanimous consent on the part of hon. members that every clause with the same reference be properly amended.

The Chairman: The difficulty the amendment proposed by the hon. member creates is that while the only question before the committee at the moment is clause 3, and normally an amendment should apply only to clause 3, there will be a number of places throughout the bill where this word has to be changed.

Mr. Knowles: Even in some clauses that we have already carried.

The Chairman: Yes. It can be done in one of two ways. Either each clause can be amended as we come to it or the committee can agree by unanimous consent to change the word in the different clauses as the clauses are considered. There is another problem that comes to my mind and that is that a number of the clauses have already been carried. Would there be unanimous consent on the part of the committee to change this word even in those clauses that have already been carried?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that by unanimous consent of the committee this same amendment will apply to each of the following clauses, as well as to those which have already been carried?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: The committee will now pass to clause 7.

An hon. Member: What about clause 4?

The Chairman: Clause 4 has been carried, clause 5 has been carried and clause 6 has been carried. The next clause for consideration of the committee is clause 7.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—President and Vice President.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I have a very brief suggestion to make. The terms now used for the two chief officers of the regulatory body should, I think, remain rather than confuse the situation by calling them "president" and "vice president". In the French version this is appropriate, but in the English version of the bill I suggest that the terms "chairman" and "vice chairman" be retained. I have consulted with the broadcasting critics on the other side about this matter, and if the minister has no objection I think there will be general agreement to this suggestion. Therefore I move:

That in subclause (1) of clause 8 the words "chairman" and "vice chairman" be substituted for the words "president" and "vice president" respectively in the English text.

Mr. Lewis: And throughout the bill?

Mr. Stanbury: My hon. friend from York South points out that perhaps again we should add the words "and throughout the bill" if there are other references to these terms. I will therefore add those words to my motion.

The Chairman: Moved by the hon. member for York-Scarborough:

That in subclause (1) of clause 8 the words "chairman" and "vice-chairman" be substituted for the words "president" and "vice president" respectively in the English text.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure whether you read the words "and throughout the bill".

The Chairman: Order. I would ask the unanimous consent of the committee to make the consequential changes that are based on this amendment to those clauses following clause 8, as well as to those clauses that have already been carried. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: And including the other subclauses in clause 8.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I have a further suggestion to make in connection with clause 8 that arises out of the uncertainty over how the vice chairman assumes the responsibilities of the chairman. We have heard much of the problems that arise when a president of the United States is incapacitated. We need not labour the difficulties that can arise in that situation. In clause 36 (2) of the bill provision is made for the corporation, that is, the board of directors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to make the decision when the vice president should assume the duties of the president in the absence or incapacity of the president. There is no such provision in clause 8 with respect to the chairman and the vice chairman of the regulatory authority. It seems to me that by analogy there should be a provision that the members of the council or, as we have now decided to call it, the commission, should make the decision that the absence or incapacity of the chairman is such as to require the vice chairman to assume all his powers and functions. I should therefore like to have the minister's reaction to this suggestion. If she has no serious objection I should like to move:

That subclause (3) of clause 8 be deleted and the following be substituted therefor:

"In the event of the absence or incapacity of the chairman or if the office of chairman is vacant, the commission may authorize the vice chairman to exercise all the powers and functions of the president."

• (12:20 p.m.)

Miss LaMarsh: I am content with that.

Mr. Stanbury: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order, please. A day or two ago when the committee discussed clause 2(h), the hon. member for Halifax presented an amendment which recommended that clause 2(h) be deleted. The Chair did not give as much weight to the word "deleted" in that amendment as might have been given to it since the first two or three lines of the amendment were exactly the same as the first two or three lines of the clause. The Chair considered the amendment moved by the hon. member as calling for the clause to be amended rather than deleted.

I wish to say to the committee that a motion to move the deletion of a clause is not in order. If it is the wish of the committee to change subclause 3 of clause 8 and to substitute a new clause therefor, the proper procedure is to negative subclause 3 and, having done that, to substitute a new clause.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, the amendment extends the meaning of the present subclause. If the Chair will permit a change in the wording to bring the amendment into line with the suggested wording, I shall be prepared to amend my motion accordingly. I am prepared to accept the most expeditious procedure that may recommend itself to the committee.

Mr. Chairman: I prefer the hon. member to redraft his amendment in such a way as not to use the word "delete".

Mr. Stanbury: May I redraft my amendment from where I stand?

Miss LaMarsh: I think the hon. member should think about it because his amendment speaks of the president and the vice-chairman.

Mr. Stanbury: Not as it was read. I move:

That subclause (3) of clause 8 be reworded as follows:

"In the event of the absence or incapacity of the chairman or if the office of chairman is vacant, the commission may authorize the vice-chairman to exercise all the powers and functions of the chairman".

The Chairman: The form in which the hon. member for York-Scarborough has presented his amendment is not usually acceptable but if there is unanimous consent by the committee, and without prejudice to any future ruling of a chairman about use of the word "delete", I shall put the amendment. Is there unanimous agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 8 as amended carry?

Miss LaMarsh: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, Your Honour called the amendment, which carried, and you are now in the process of calling clause 8 as amended? Is that correct?

The Chairman: Only one clause is before the committee, nobody requested that it be broken into subclauses. The Chair therefore has only one question to consider and that is clause 8. Shall clause 8 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should also like to suggest an amendment to clause 8 (1) which stipulates:

The Governor in Council shall designate one of the full-time members to be President of the Council and one of the full-time members to be Vice-President of the Council.

I should like the following to be added at the end of that paragraph:

"One of the two shall be French-speaking and the other English-speaking; both however, shall, speak both languages."

Mr. Chairman, the reason for this amendment is that we are now dealing with radio and television, and the president of the council and the vice-president must be in a position to keep up with what goes on in the field of broadcasting.

Since there is both a French and an English network in the public or the private sector, one of the senior members of the C.R.C. should be in a position, if he wants to judge of the propriety of certain remarks, to understand what is said either on radio or on television.

It is not the same thing as with newspaper items which can always be translated. Radio and television are involved here; it is therefore a question of the spoken word rather than merely the written language. In the circumstances, I feel it is important that one of the two senior officers should be able to speak or, at least, understand either one of the two official languages.

• (12:30 p.m.)

Mr. Chairman, I think it is important that one of the two should have French and the other English as his mother tongue, because one can always judge better then. I would also add that both must, however, speak the two languages, because I think that both must be bilingual in order to perform their duties adequately.

I think there will probably be no objection to this amendment in view of the present concern with bilingualism in government organizations.

I was just reading a passage on page 30 of the Canadian Charter of Human Rights, published under the patronage of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) not too long ago. I quote:

It is submitted that these language guarantees be extended to other institutions of government and to education—

It says "guarantees" and not simply "possibilities". It says very clearly:

—that these language guarantees be extended to other institutions of government—

But this commission is an institution of government, just like the C.B.C., and therefore I do not think too many objections will be raised to the amendment I have just moved.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, could you first read my amendment?

The Chairman: It is moved by Mr. Grégoire that subclause (1) of clause 8 be amended by adding at the end the words:

One of the two shall be French-speaking and the other English-speaking; both, however, shall speak both languages.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Chairman, just a word to explain why the text of the amendment is unacceptable.

It is exactly as if it was stated in a statute that in order to be appointed to a position a person must be competent. More and more and according to the spirit of the Bill of Rights the use of both languages is accepted in federal institutions. Therefore, if it is stated in a statute that a certain senior official must have sufficient knowledge of the other language, that is equal to saying that to accede to this or that post one must be competent. That is a useless repetition. The spirit of the amendment is acceptable but what becomes somewhat unthinkable is to include in a statute, as the hon. member seems to indicate, such or such a degree of competence.

It is obvious that to obtain a senior appointment, one must be competent. It is more and more evident that a position like that one calls for an adequate knowledge of both languages. It is not necessary to stipulate it in the act; it would be redundancy.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on that subject. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) says that it is more and more an acknowledged fact that to be able to express oneself in both languages in a federal government agency is a proof of competence. If such were the case in practice, if the usual practice and tradition had been such in the past, I do not say that the hon. member for Lotbinière would not be right, but precisely tradition did not accustom us to that.

I read recently in Hansard an answer to a question placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). A list of the directors of each crown corporation and government board was given mentioning the number of those who were bilingual, English-speaking or French-speaking. I was surprised to see that still today, a year after our centennial, there were several boards and crown corporations without any French speaking director.

It is precisely due to such facts, that I have deemed it advisable to present that amendment. Perhaps in a general policy statement, the hon. member for Lotbinière would rightly mention that it is a matter of competence, but the fact is not always recognized. We now have evidence thereof based on figures and facts. I do not remember on what date, this answer appeared in Hansard. That is why I cannot give the figures but during the lunch hour, I will probably check on it and bring down something more definite.

But the facts have proven and still prove, through a reply given less than a month ago to a question on the order paper that within crown corporations and government bodies, this knowledge of qualification evaluation was not always observed.

In the circumstances and since the facts are so contrary to the principle mentioned by the member for Lotbinière, I believe that he should make an effort—it should not be too difficult for him—to force the government to practise what it so highly preaches.

It is one of the objectives of my amendment and I am surprised that the member for Lotbinière should object. He claims that writing it out in the bill does not mean anything. I believe it does, precisely because the facts have shown that we are justified in asking that it be written into the bill. If it is written into the bill, then we can say it is compulsory. The Canadian Bill of Rights is not in the act, in the constitution and the Minister of Justice says that if it were included in the constition, it would have force of law and be much more valuable. That is the argument brought forth by the Minister of Justice.

Well, I think the same thing applies to bilingualism; if it were written into the legislation, it would have force of law and it would be much more valuable and could not be evaded.

I wonder why the hon. member for Lotbinière objects to having it written into the act, for the same reason as the Minister of Justice wants the Bill of Rights to be written down in the legislation, in the constitution.

This argument of the Minister of Justice brings down the whole argument of the member for Lotbinière and it is the best reference I can give him. That is why I submit the amendment is necessary to correct the present situation and all should make it a duty to support it.

Amendment (Mr. Grégoire) negatived: Yeas, 4; nays, 31.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 9 has already been carried. The next clause for consideration by the committee is clause 10. Shall clause 10 carry?

Clause 10 agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 11 has been carried and also clause 12. The next clause for consideration is clause 13.

On clause 13—By-laws.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Chairman. I wish to deal with clause 13.

Mr. Chairman, clause 13 refers to the by-laws that the council may make. I wonder whether it is under this clause or under clause 16—the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) may perhaps prefer the latter—that one may move an amendment to the effect that any increase in the rates of radio and television stations must be submitted to the C.R.C. before coming into force.

I wonder whether such an amendment should be moved during consideration of those by-laws.

Does the Secretary of State think that an amendment should be moved to clause 13 or to clause 16?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: I do not agree that it is the business of parliament under either clause to interfere with the private sector in regard to its setting of rates for the hours of broadcasting. As a matter of fact I thought the hon. member raised enough money in France to pay whatever the rates might be.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. Secretary of State is being witty and it suits her. When she smiles this way, she becomes increasingly charming.

However, I should like to point out to her that I did not say that the government had jurisdiction over the fixing of rates of broadcasting and television stations. But it might come under the jurisdiction of a council such as this one, since agencies created by the government are qualified to accept or refuse rate increases.

Mr. Lewis: It affects the powers of the council; that will come under clause 16.

Mr. Grégoire: If I am told that this amendment should be moved under clause 16, then I shall move it when we come to the consideration of clause 16.

[English]

Clause agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

On clause 15—Objects.

Mr. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Chairman, this clause makes it clear that the proposed commission is obligated to implement the broadcasting policy set out in clause 2 of the bill. I would like to direct the attention of the committee specifically to subclause (e) of clause 2, which has already been accepted by the committee. It is stated there:

(e) all Canadians are entitled to broadcasting service in English and in French as public funds become available;

Later in clause 2(g) we find the following:

(g) the national broadcasting service should—

(ii) be extended to all parts of Canada, as public funds become available,

This is not a new obligation. It is a restatement of something that has been implicit in all legislation since governments assumed full responsibility for public broadcasting more than 35 years ago. I only hope that in a much shorter period of time this obligation will be discharged. I trust that the legislation now before us will help to fill a gap that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has allowed to exist over the years.

The particular situation to which I draw attention is the broadcasting void existing in northern Saskatchewan, northeastern Alberta and the adjacent Northwest Territories. This whole vast region, a storehouse of national resources and the home of thousands of good Canadian citizens, has been shunted aside time and again by the C.B.C. in its development of broadcasting facilities. It is the area referred to in the Fowler report of 1965 as "the forgotten north." I draw the attention of the committee to the wording of this bill. In clause 15 and in clause 2 the service owed this area is clearly stated as a right.

In my own constituency a large proportion of the people have no television service whatever. One example is the Île à la Crosse area. Also, over a large area even the radio broadcast service ranges from indifferent to poor. Over the years the people there have been told that they must be patient, that service would be provided but that high costs and other priorities were holding up extension of service to the north. Perhaps there was a day when this sort of excuse was valid, but it cannot be accepted today.

While more than 10,000 people in my small area are without even black and white television service and suffer from inadequate radio service, the rest of Canada has the luxury of colour television. In my area the fishermen, farmers, forest workers, miners and all the companies large and small for which many of them work, pay taxes that go to pay the cost of providing broadcasting services. These services are supposed to be national in scope. They are not supposed to be selective, restricted only to those areas of dense population and easy terrain.

When 60 per cent of Canadians have access to two or more television channels surely it is not too much to ask that the people of my area, and the people of the north generally, be provided with at least one. The Fowler commission of 1965 recognized the justice of this plea. It agreed that it was a matter of urgency and fairness. In its recommendations it gave top priority to the extension of adequate facilities to the north. Only recently the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development emphasized that it is necessary to supply proper broadcasting service to the north if people and industry are to be attracted to the north and expected to stay there.

I had occasion to deal with this matter once before in this chamber, as reported on page 2654 of Hansard for March 14, 1966. At that time I hoped that the C.B.C., if it would not heed my words, would at least heed those of the Fowler commission and of a minister of the crown. But nothing happened. The forgotten north remains forgotten at C.B.C. headquarters. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and myself now have one thing in common. We are equally ignored. I hope that with the new wind blowing through the corridors of C.B.C. headquarters, with a new president and with a new policy directive from parliament the C.B.C. will now undertake the work that should have been done years ago.

At page 194 of the Fowler commission report there is a recommendation that additional operating costs for the northern services be raised by $500,000 a year and that the northern service budget be increased by $1.7 million. This sounds like a great deal of money, and it is. But when one considers the amount of tax money yielded by the area about which I am talking and the ease with which almost twice that amount has been found for enterprises such as the Company of Young Canadians, one feels that such an outlay would be a modest one to ensure fair treatment for a large group of Canadians and the faithful carrying out of broadcasting policy as approved by parliament. It seems to me it would be only simple justice to find a mere one and a half million dollars for a basic northern service when tens of millions of dollars are so readily found to extend colour television service to other segments of the population which already have one, two or more black and white channels from which to choose.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would ask simply for speedy implementation of the policy that is spelled out clearly in this bill and in previous acts, a policy which is clearly justifiable in the national interest. With the passage of this bill let us bring to an end the years of neglect, injustice and unfairness to a large and important area of Canada.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Powers exercisable by council on recommendation of executive committee.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, when this bill was sent to the standing committee it contained a provision empowering the regulatory authority to make regulations respecting scheduling in relation to any category or categories of programs. The committee discussed this at length. It was suggested that this regulatory power probably was impractical and in any case was unnecessary since it was thought that the desired effect could be achieved through the power to determine the conditions of licence. For that reason the committee proposed and passed an amendment to the effect that this provision should be deleted from the bill.

While this was the thought of the committee, what was overlooked in the discussion was that this would cause a rigidity in the system which is undesirable because it would mean that conditions could not be altered except at five year intervals. Further, although clause 63 provides for the continuation of regulations made by the B.B.G. under the 1958 act, there is some question whether such regulations would be valid if they dealt with subjects not specifically covered by regulatory powers in the new legislation.

The key to this situation lies in subclause 2(d) which already has been agreed to by this committee. It is clear that the new regulatory authority must have power to implement the national broadcasting policy in all its aspects. I should like to remind members that subclause 2(d), which is an essential element of the national broadcasting policy, declares that the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable, balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern. It goes on further to provide that the programming shall be of high standard, using predominantly Canadian creative and other resources.

It seems that the committee inadvertently did drop something essential. I am therefore prepared to have an amendment moved which would add to subclause 16(1)(b)(i) the following:

—and the allocation of broadcasting time for the purpose of giving effect to paragraph (d) of section 2.

This would then mean that the subclause would read as follows:

—the council may make regulations "respecting standards of programs and the allocation of broadcasting time for the purpose of giving effect to paragraph (d) of section 2."

The Chairman: May I suggest to the Secretary of State that I read the amendment as being proposed by the Minister of Labour?

Miss LaMarsh: I am sure the Minister of Labour would be happy to move the amendment.

The Chairman: The amendment is as follows:

That Bill C-163 be amended by adding to subclause 16(1)(b)(i) the following:

"and the allocation of broadcasting time for the purpose of giving effect to paragraph (d) of section 2."

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, we are agreeable to the amendment. We had anticipated that such an amendment would have to be brought in because while the declaratory clause 2(d), as the minister has noted, makes certain provision it did not seem to us that the power respecting regulations was broad enough after the amendment by the committee to give effect to what is a very important part of the bill. In supporting the minister in her position in this regard about the only comment I can make is that it seems to me this gives the council the power to come to grips with some of the problems which have bothered members of parliament concerning the standard of certain programs. I believe this amendment fills a vacuum which should not exist.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I have the French text before me. I wonder whether, instead of saying:

—"et l'attribution du temps d'émission afin"—

We should not rather say: "l'attribution de périodes d'émissions?"

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: No.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I had to leave the chamber to answer a telephone call and have just returned. I am afraid I do not quite understand this. I would appreciate having a further explanation concerning the words, "and the allocation of broadcasting time for the purpose of giving effect to paragraph (d) of section 2." Does this mean that the council would be empowered to require stations to provide time for the expression of conflicting views on matters of public controversy? I am afraid I do not quite follow this.

Miss LaMarsh: This enables the council to require the stations to carry out the instructions contained in 2(d). A number of things would be required to be varied and comprehensive. When the committee said that these matters should be handled by means of the conditions of licence it was not realized that the conditions of licence only come up when licences are renewed every five years. This left it completely inflexible.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure about the meaning of the French version. In the English text, it is stated:

—allocation of broadcasting time—

Accordingly should the French version not read: "la distribution de temps d'émission" or "l'attribution de périodes d'émissions", or again "la distribution de temps d'émission"?

I think that would state precisely what the minister has suggested.

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, this is a special translation which was prepared in advance. I admit that my French is very limited, but I do not know what else the words "l'attribution du temps d'émission" could mean except the allocation of broadcast time. To me the words mean exactly the same thing in both languages.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock?

[English]

The Chairman: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose at one o'clock it was considering clause 16 of Bill C-163 and an amendment thereto by the hon. Minister of Labour.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe had asked me about the word "period" instead of the word "temps". I then discussed this with some of my advisers. I am afraid I cannot agree because of the explanation given by the hon. member. What he is after is a phrase which in both English and French would give permission to the regulatory authority to allocate specific periods of time. It was this very suggestion which caused the committee on broadcasting to throw out the original provision. The matter caused some discussion among private broadcasters, the C.B.C. and the B.B.G., and we have given assurance from the beginning that there is no intention to direct that specific program periods be allocated. That would be the effect of the amendment which my hon. friend, the member for Lapointe, has moved, calling for the substitution of the word "period" for the word "temps" en français.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: I should like to move an amendment to clause 16, Mr. Chairman.

Reference is made here to the powers of the C.R.C. which may generally make regulations concerning licence holders and broadcasters. I should like to draw a parallel with another type of undertaking in order to better explain the amendment I wish to move.

Everybody knows that in the field of transportation, for instance, there is a board which issues licences to certain companies operating between two points. For example, there is only one company licensed to provide a bus service between Quebec city and Montreal. This is meant to ensure a certain standard of officiency, to avoid unnecessary competition and to prevent the establishment of numerous small companies, when no large company could actually be found to meet heavy requirements.

When the transport board involved grants a number of licences, this more or less removes free competition in a certain area, but grants a certain degree of exclusive rights to certain companies. The legislation then provides that if some competition is removed—

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The committee at this time is considering an amendment moved by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Nicholson) that Bill No. C-163 be amended by adding the following subparagraph (i) to paragraph (b) of clause 16:

—and the allocation of broadcast time for the purpose are giving effect to paragraph (d) of clause 2.

That is what we have before us and, I believe the member for Lapointe is not speaking to the amendment we are discussing.

Mr. Grégoire: I believe that has been carried, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair is trying determine whether the sub amendment of the member for Lapointe is in order. But if he is speaking to the amendment, he is out or order.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Mr. Grégoire: Let the amendment carry, Mr. Chairman, and I shall come back later with my proposition.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 16 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think that we are still considering the whole clause 16, and therefore I shall carry on with my remarks in order to move an amendment to add a paragraph thereto.

As I was saying, the government establishes, in a certain field, transportation for instance, an agency to restrict the number of licenses and also to eliminate a certain competition, in an effort to achieve a greater efficiency and, at the same time, the government imposes a condition on those who find themselves in that situation, restricted in the number of businesses, and also on those who happen to be alone or to enjoy a lesser competition, by telling them: In view of the fact that you are spared competition, you will also be prevented from exploiting the users. If there is only one company to move goods between two points, competition for that transport company is eliminated. At the same time, the government will say: Since you are not subject to competition, we shall prevent you from exploiting the public by forcing you to have all your tariffs and rates approved by the transport commission.

The same is true of telephone service, for instance. We say that there will be only one telephone company in a town, to avoid the necessity of installing two series of posts and wires, to avoid the necessity of installing two series of posts and wires, to avoid unnecessary expenses. We avoid competition but, at the same time, we compel the telephone company to come before the transport commission in order to be allowed to increase its rates.

In the field of radio and television, Mr. Chairman, it is the same thing. We decrease competition by restricting the number of licences. For instance, in Quebec, there is a private station and if someone wanted to get another licence, they would refuse it on the grounds that there are no more wavelengths available. Competition does not exist any more. If, owing to the force of circumstances, or the scarcity of wave-lengths or on account of a legislation which obliges an individual to obtain a licence before starting in business in the field of radio and television, in short, if competition is restricted, on the other hand, we must see to it that the public interest is still protected against the exploitation of those who are now free from competition. That is why I think that, in the field of radio and television, as well as in the field of transportation by bus, in the field of telephone and electricity, we must compel the station owners to come before a board to justify their rate increases.

I am in favour of a regulatory body or rather of that Canadian broadcasting council serving also as a regulatory body before which all radio and television stations that want to increase their rates will have to appear at public hearings to prove that their request is warranted.

As far as my amendment is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I would like to read it and ask for leave to explain it afterwards. Since clause 16 includes already subclauses (1) and (2), I would like to add to it subclause 3 (b) which reads as follows:

The council shall hold—

That is the Canadian broadcasting council.

The council shall hold public meetings for considering any applications for increases in the rates or tariffs charged by the broadcasters or licensees. No rate or tariff may be increased by the broadcasters or licensees unless authorized by the council following such public hearings.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask you to put this amendment before the house and then I would like to continue my explanations.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It is an organization described under the name of commission, and the hon. member mentions it by using the word "Conseil". Is it allowed to substitute the word "Conseil" for "Commission"?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, in the French version, the word "Conseil" is always used. The word "Council" has been substituted for "Commission" only in the English text and in the French version, the designated organization is called "le Conseil de la Radio-Télévision canadienne".

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The reason why the Chair raised this point is that the French version of the bill given to the Chair mentions the word "commission" instead of "council."

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I believe that is a mistake, but it was clearly specified by the member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury) that the change was valid only for the English text and not for the French text. Nevertheless, I objected at that time and I would like to have a ruling from you that the word has not been changed in the French version.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I believe the member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is right when he says that, in the French version, the word "council" has remained. All that we have changed is that, in the English version, we have substituted the word "commission" for the word "council".

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Very well, the Chair understands the situation. It is moved by the member for Lapointe that the following subclause (b), paragraph (3) be added to clause 16:

The council shall hold public meetings for considering any application for increases in the rates or tariffs charges by the broadcasters or licensees. No rate or tariff may be increased by the broadcasters or licensees unless authorized by the council following such public hearings.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I continue my explanations?

It is known for a fact that today there is practically no competition, especially in the field of television. There is only one private station, that is all, in any one area or municipality. That station can ask any rate it wishes from the advertiser or sponsor of television programs. There is hardly no competition and that of the C.B.C. is gradually decreasing in the commercial field. Because the station is the only one, or almost, it lacks competition—except in large centres such as Toronto and Montreal, the licensee can ask the sponsor whatever rates and tariffs it chooses.

In the last few years, the rates and tariffs of television or radio licensees have increased rather rapidly. All this, naturally, is part of the advertising budget of a company, and that is one of the main reasons for the recent increases in rates. If a broadcaster had to justify an increase in the rates or tariffs he charges his sponsors, these increases would often be rejected, or if they were accepted it would be because the private broadcaster had improved the quality of his programs. It is obvious that the profits made by television stations today are very high in comparison with investments, and the reason for this is that there is little or no competition, it having been eliminated either by the law itself or by the small number of frequencies.

Any person cannot get a licence to operate a radio or television station No. It is limited, very limited indeed. Anyone can launch out into running a newspaper; one does not need a licence for that, and whoever wants to can become owner of a newspaper or start a newspaper. There is no limitation in the field of newspapers, but there is in the field of television and radio. First, a wave-length must be available, and then a licence has to be obtained from the Canadian broadcasting council. If competition is eliminated, unfair advantage is taken of the people by a company which, according to the law, no longer has any competition. It is at that time that the public must be protected, and to do that, since favours are bestowed on the licensee, he has to justify his request to increase his rates.

I believe it is absolutely normal, but, the radio and television stations may not like it. It is as if we were to say to bus companies which have the exclusive transportation rights between two towns: You may ask the prices you see fit. Needless to say, these companies having no competitors would increase their prices immediately.

In the radio and television field, the same problem exists. If the government eliminates all competition by limiting the number of licences, it must also eliminate the exploitation of the public by requiring the station owners to submit any increase in rates to the approval of the Canadian radio commission.

That is the purpose of my amendment and I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that it will inevitably result—and that is a very important point to consider—in a general improvement of the quality of the programs produced by the private stations because, given their very high margin of profit, they will never be able to get increases in their rates or tariffs now, unless the quality of their programming increases considerably.

Mr. Chairman, I feel this is a very normal request, and there is no precedent involved: Such is already the case for electric power companies, telephone companies, trucking companies, passenger service companies, in all fields, in fact, where the government has established a ceiling on the number of licences. The only field where this was not the case was broadcasting, and it is time for this restriction is to be imposed. That is my reason for moving this amendment.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member admit that the level of maximum rates and not the detailed rates must be determined by the council?

Mr. Grégoire: Evidently, Mr. Chairman, I would certainly agree to have the maximum rates determined by the council and if the directors of a television station want to increase their rates further, they would then have to state their reasons for doing so. If a television station, for example, decides to broadcast cultural programs which are extremely costly that could justify increased rates for commercial advertisements. Is that what the hon. member for Kamloops mean? If such is the case, I entirely agree with him.

[English]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, the question introduced by the hon. member for Lapointe raises the subject of whether the regulatory authority is to be a price setting agency. It seems to me that is a very important principle which is worthy of debate, but not at this point when we are dealing with this subclause. There is one aspect of it, however, that does concern me. We have been concerned about the monopoly control of media in this country. There is no problem in this connection in the large centres where there are newspapers and more than one television or radio station.

It seems to me there could be a danger in some of the smaller centres in which there is only one television station. Access to this station could be denied to a political candidate or a person in business either by refusing to sell time or quoting that person discriminatory rates. I think we should be concerned about this. Is there anything in the legislation whereby a person who is treated that way could have recourse to the authority if he met with an outright denial of time or if he could prove the station owner had set a price on the time which was not the same as that charged to others and was such as to discourage him? We do have to face the fact that some people have a monopoly on television broadcasting in certain areas. It seems to me that everyone who applies for the use of time should be treated equally. Is there anything in the bill which would provide some course of action to a person who felt he was not justly dealt with by a station owner?

Miss LaMarsh: I cannot think of any place, Mr. Chairman, that there would be any such provision unless it would be in the renewal of licence provision. I think quicker action would probably be gained by recourse to the public press or other media to indicate this situation. No doubt such action would result in the council or commission getting in touch with the offending station. I do not believe there would be anything in the act which would permit definite sanctions except at the time of the renewal of the licence. I do not believe anyone should for a moment discount that provision because it is a rather important factor. In the first place, the public outcry which my hon. friend or anyone like him who was discriminated against would make, would be very considerable. This kind of discriminatory action would, I think, be something which would cause an individual not to have his licence renewed. He would have to have very strong justification for the action and I doubt that he could find justification for it.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about that amendment which seems very logical to me.

Mr. Chairman, there are obvious, I would even say gross, abuses in that field at the present time. Some television and radio stations which have no competition are asking very high prices from some and lower prices from others.

To put something on tape, for instance, some television stations might charge up to $300 while others will charge $35 for the same work. It is the same thing for television and radio programs. It is a matter of viewing hours and there are certainly gross abuses there. Since there is no competition or hardly any, as stated by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), I think that it would be very important to find a way to prevent the private stations which have no competitors from exploiting the public.

The public is often exploited; quite often, when we want to use this mass media, we are told: Well, my dear Sir, for you it is such and such a price; you can take it or leave it. For another person, it may be cheaper, but for you, you must take it or leave it.

There are certainly manifest abuses and I think the hon. member for Lapointe is right in moving such an amendment. I think this amendment should be considered thoroughly. It would be logical also that the government should control the air waves and the use of certain wave-lengths, because of the scarcity of frequencies. I think the prices also should be controlled as well as increases. When the owners of such mass media increase their prices, the commission should be informed and the price increases should not be allowed if they are not warranted or if they are prohibitive.

The commission should have some control. There are certainly some abuses. Private initiative is good. We agree 100 per cent with private enterprise, but we do not want it to go too far; when it is harmful to the community, or to certain institutions, it is time for the state to step in. Then it is the responsibility of the state to intervene, under these conditions, and I am sure something can be done, because abuses are apparent. Somebody ought to deal with such abuses. The rent control board has been set up and yet, the situation in this field is much less serious than in the broadcasting field.

There are all types of controls, but there is no control possible without competition. As far as rents are concerned, there is much competition. If accommodations prove unsatisfactory, there are others to be found.

But in the present instance, if we are dissatisfied, we must yield or do without, because there is nothing else. I feel therefore that, as far as public services are concerned, the people should be in a position to make reasonable and proper use thereof.

Some individuals wield such power that they can tell someone they do not like too much: the price is so much, take it or leave it. There is no discussion possible, there is nothing to be done. Then, I believe the commission should intervene in those cases and I agree 100 per cent with the hon. member for Lapointe. I also ask the members of this house—it seems very important to me—to make an effort to find a solution to this problem.

• (3:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, very briefly I wonder whether the hon. member for Lapointe would consider amending his motion to provide that the commission be empowered to set a maximum instead of setting a whole tariff? If that were done I think it would find acceptance here. It does seem to me to be rather dangerous to ask the commission to establish all rates at all levels for radio and television stations.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be most difficult to ask the council to set a maximum rate, because conditions vary from one area to the next, from one station to another.

Some stations will produce very good programs which, obviously, will cost more than showing films. That is why no general rule can be set.

In some areas, it would be more expensive, because ratings are higher, the T.V. antenna is more powerful and more expensive and the operating costs are heavier. In other areas, where the studios are small and simple and the population is less, where the antenna is less powerful then, rates can be quite different.

I am quite ready to examine the suggestion of the member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) that a maximum should be set, but I believe that in practice it will be difficult to make rates uniform, because the television stations do not have uniform quality in their programs. Nor do they have studios of uniform quality nor uniform power on their antennas nor uniform operating expenses.

However, I believe that if we can follow the example of the transport commission which does not set a maximum rate but requires the telephone companies such as the Bell Telephone Company of Canada to justify the need to increase the rates.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty, as I see it, is that in the first place the bill does not provide that the board will establish a tariff or schedule of fees that stations may charge. If that were provided, when stations applied for an increase in their fees they would have to justify it. However, the first stage is not there. According to the bill as I understand it, no power is given to set an initial schedule of fees for stations. Therefore, what we are suggesting to the hon. member is this. Would he modify his amendment to give the board power to set schedules of maximum fees, leaving stations free to be competitive at levels below the maximum but requiring them to apply for any increase over the maximum?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I accept readily the suggestion of the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton). It is true that nothing of the kind is provided for in the bill for the future council. Since it has yet to be created, I feel certain provisions should be included in the bill. I am willing to accept all the suggestions of the hon. member for Kamloops for he has far more experience than I in that field. We could, as he suggests, start by setting maximum rates, even if later on the companies are required to justify the increases they request.

I am willing to change the amendment in the way suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: If the committee agrees, we could ask the hon. member for Lapointe to revise his amendment accordingly.

[English]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, while the hon. member for Lapointe is looking over the amendment I should like to ask a question on paragraph (vii), which reads:

> —with the approval of the Treasury Board, fixing the schedules of fees to be paid by licensees and providing for the payment thereof,

I have often wondered just what revenue is received from the licensing of radio and television stations. Is the minister in a position to give the committee any information in this regard? How is that revenue determined? Can she give some examples of the amounts that various licensees have to pay for the use of the airwaves for periods of time?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I do not happen to know but I could find out for the hon. member.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I should like to know whether this clause includes the licensing of community antenna television and the establishment of fees for such service. If so, what arrangements are made to cover closed circuit television broadcasts?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, closed circuit television does not pick programs out of the air and therefore is not covered by the broadcasting legislation. If it did do so then it would be covered. These licensing arrangements apply to all broadcasting undertakings that are covered, including C.A.T.V.

Mr. Peters: Is it not the intention of the minister to cover closed circuit community antenna services as well as those that pick programs out of the air? Also, may I ask how extensive are the regulations that are proposed in connection with this fight that has been going on for a long time about United States programs that can be picked up close to the border but which can only be received in Timiskaming, for example, through a community antenna system? Apparently these antennas can reproduce a fairly weak signal which is then fed into a closed circuit.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, there does not appear to be any constitutional basis upon which the federal government can legislate with respect to closed circuit television.

Mr. Peters: There may not be many closed circuit television receivers in my area, but for the last 12 years there has been one that does rebroadcast programs. Let me give an example. It can take another station's program and rebroadcast it on a closed circuit, using its own camera to dub in an advertisement in the middle of the program. Therefore I presume that some regulations will be in effect and I am wondering how extensive they will be. To date there has not appeared to be any such regulation. The Department of Transport will look into cases of interference or where there is an outright theft of another station's program for advertising purposes, but it seems to me there must be some regulation in this regard.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, two of the questions that have been considered are, first of all, program integrity; you are not to use somebody else's advertising on your own programs. Second, at present one must carry the national program that is available in the area. Aside from those two considerations, I can say nothing more. I have been visited by C.A.T.V. operators and both of these matters were discussed. They were well aware that these would be two of the requirements. In addition, because their operation is quite different from that of an ordinary broadcasting station the regulations will be tailor made to suit their operations instead of having general regulations made applicable to all.

Mr. Peters: Is it the intention of the government to limit the number of programs that can be picked up and rebroadcast in a given area? That has been one difficulty. In addition, many of these stations are not licensed by the Department of Transport. Are they now going to be able to carry whatever programs they can pick up by means of a community antenna system and rebroadcast them, in some cases on closed circuit television, without a licence?

Miss LaMarsh: I am afraid I am somewhat confused by my hon. friend. I said we do not grant licences for closed circuits except with respect to C.A.T.V. operations which take programs from the air. Those operators will have to apply to the commission and receive their licences, and in the conditions of the licences will be the conditions that the commission feels are necessary. I am sure that program integrity will be one of the conditions and I am sure that the requirement to carry the national service will be another, minimum condition.

Mr. Peters: In the close circuit system I am talking about the company already has a studio and instead of using the broadcasting system it uses the community antenna which is already hooked up to certain homes. In other words, the people who own the station will have for themselves another channel. In the case I am thinking of they will have the channel which they have already used for some period of time and they will have another channel which they will use for commercial purposes. Is the minister saying that a community antenna service such as I have just described will not be licensed?

Miss LaMarsh: I am not sure if I understand what the hon. member is saying. If the hon. member is saying that these people are actually broadcasting from their studio, then of course, they will have to get a licence for that kind of broadcasting undertaking.

Mr. Peters: But they are not broadcasting over the air. This is not a television station but a service provided by means of coaxial cable. That cable is already carrying one or two channels to the community antenna. The studio will transmit over the coaxial cable and they will not, in that sense, be transmitting over the air. That is the situation I am referring to.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, just a few words in reply to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

I will tell him that all the closed circuit stations now in operation have to hold a licence. Not a single station is now operating without a licence, even if quite often the owner must wait six months or a year to get his licence. I think that all those who want to go in for closed circuit broadcasting in Canada must get a licence issued by the transport commission.

[English]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, clause 16 is not one of the clauses that I asked yesterday to be stood. I am indebted to the committee for having stood clauses 3, 19, 28 and 47, as I desired yesterday afternoon. Since clause 16 was stood I should like to make a few comments in support of the hon. member for Lapointe, inasmuch as he is endeavouring to control the advertising rates charged on television or radio stations.

From listening to him carefully it is quite clear that his agile and alert mind has picked up a point which has not been considered by those who framed this radio and broadcasting bill in quiet and had it printed and put before members of parliament to push through. But I believe the hon. member for Lapointe is weeping on cold shoulders, or should I say, casting his message on stony ground.

I am sure that when the hon. member for Lapointe was attending the Jesuit college in Quebec he must have heard our Lord's parable about the sower. A sower cast some seed on fertile ground and it sprang up and multiplied a hundredfold. But some seed fell among thorns and the thorns sprang up and choked the seed. Other seed fell on stony ground and was burned by the sun. If the hon. member for Lapointe intimates that the holder of a television licence is in a monopoly position in setting advertising rates, he is 100 per cent correct. But that is the situation you put yourself in when you grant monopoly television licences.

Many markets can only support one television licence. The hon. member for Kamloops stood in his place just now and said that the competition of the market place will control the rates as one television station competes with another. That applies to Toronto, Montreal and some other centres where there is more than one television station. But in the advertising world, if a monopoly situation develops in some centre the situation is different. Take Pembroke, Ontario, which is handy and has only got one television station. If the hon. member for Lapointe thinks that in a monopoly situation the advertising rates are going to go sky high, unless controlled, I feel he is on fair ground in that assumption.

The hon. member for Lapointe seems to have overlooked the important fact that an advertiser does not have to use the local television station in Pembroke. There is a newspaper there and you can use sign boards, or individually painted signs and put them in store windows, or you can have them with posts in the centre. Or you can get advertisements printed by some publisher and mail them through the post office. There are other competitive ways of getting advertising done. If you do not use the television station the owner will lower his rates so that you will leave these other forms of competitive media and give him the advertising revenue that he sees going to other avenues.

But if my hon. friend for Lapointe is intimating that the cabinet might take some action to control the advertising rates on television stations when they are in a monopoly position, he is really sowing his seed on stony ground, especially when you consider what has happened to the general public at airports in the carriage of passengers to the city that the airport is serving. On Monday of this week I was on a train for some hours with a member of the present cabinet. During the long train ride—I was on the train because no airplanes were flying that day—the cabinet minister remarked to me that he had recently flown from Montreal to Toronto and he had not been met as prearranged and so had taken the monopoly cab service, so magnificently provided by the Department of Transport, to downtown Toronto. He informed me that he pretty nearly had to wire his bank to see if he had enough money to cover the cheque he had to issue to pay for the ride. I said to this cabinet minister: "What are you kicking about? The Minister of Transport okayed these rates and nobody can cast any aspersions on the fairness of any rates when this cabinet okays them, I'm sure." All he did was smile.

When the hon. member for Lapointe says there should be some control over the rates charged for advertising by television stations in a monopoly situation, I have to agree with him. But I must point out that in the advertising world there are competitive avenues of advertising open to the businessman. He does not have to use the local television station.

Mr. Grégoire: Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Cowan: I certainly will, to you.

Miss LaMarsh: You are going steady, you two, aren't you?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: You will admit also that the minister who used a means of transportation which has the monopoly between the Toronto airport and his home had other ways of getting home. He did not have to take the official limousine. He could have walked, that is another way. Therefore, it is the same thing in the field of advertising.

[English]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, as I said before, the hon. member for Lapointe has an alert and agile mind and he gave us an example of this just now. I intended to refer to the fact that there was a competitive source of transportation available to the cabinet minister. He could have stood at Malton for about three-quarters of an hour after telephoning for a taxi to come and get him or he could have walked the 14 miles to downtown and save the money.

But I wanted to make some reference to the statement by the hon. member for Kamloops, who referred to the free play of the market place. That phrase was used a good deal on this side of the house when we were setting up the consumer affairs department. The free play of the marketplace would keep prices down; the cost of living would fall and everybody would be happy, happy, happy from now on because we have a new Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

It seems too bad that the hon. member for Lapointe should be the one to put his finger on such a glaring oddity as this, that a monopoly television operator in one of the smaller centres of Canada can charge as much as he likes. Now the suggestion is made that we cannot set rates but can only specify a maximum figure. I have been in business long enough to know that the maximum rate is always the only one at which an operator can make a profit; anything lower and he would be running in the red.

Something should be done to deal with this question and I admire the hon. member for Lapointe for putting his finger on the spot where action is called for. If the cabinet is disposed to accept the suggestion by the hon. member for Lapointe that there should be control over the rates charged by television stations, I hope my hon. friends will accept the argument that there should be control exercised over the exorbitant rates charged by monopoly cab operators at airports. At the present time the Minister of Transport is the only authority that can exercise control over these rates which are so high that, as one cabinet minister said to me recently, one almost has to wire the bank to see whether one has enough money to pay the fare demanded. I do not know how many hon. members are aware that it costs as much to take a monopoly cab from Malton airport to the eastern boundary of Scarborough as it does to fly from Toronto to Ottawa.

Miss LaMarsh: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we have listened to this not very honourable member ad nauseam and I would ask that he be requested to stick to the point he is supposed to be discussing. No one in the committee is interested in what he is saying. We may or may not be in agreement with the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe but it has nothing to do with taxi fares out of Malton. We have spent two and a half weeks on this subject and if the hon. member had his way we would still be on subclause (a) of clause 2. If he does not want the country's business to move ahead, everyone else in this chamber does, so he should at least restrict himself to considering the clause under discussion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Schreyer: The amendment which the hon. member for Lapointe offers is a very basic and fundamental one. It is the kind of amendment which at first glance I would feel inclined to support and I suppose that a good many others here feel inclined to do likewise. However, I suggest that since the amendment involves a consideration of such basic importance we should not be placed in the position of voting hastily on it and I would ask the Secretary of State whether she would agree to hold this matter in abeyance until Monday so that the full implications of what the hon. member has suggested might be considered.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I have considered this, the department has considered it and so have other people. It does not simply spring out of nowhere. There has been no suggestion from anyone responsible at any time that there should be a scale of fees. Some members of this house have been making speeches for the last couple of weeks comparing broadcasting stations with newspapers. There has never been any suggestion that we should impose scales of fees on newspapers or magazines. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for York-Humber would scream even louder than he has been screaming so far if any attempt were made to do so.

As I say, there has been no suggestion that a whole new structure should be set up and that responsibility should be placed on the board to operate a tariff structure. In any case it would be virtually impossible. There are hundreds of television stations and even more radio stations across the country. We would have to impose individual tariffs on each one of them and the schedule would have to change as circumstances change. The present Board of Broadcast Governors has not been so structured and has not been provided with the kind of money necessary to do that. There has been no such proposal from anyone either inside or outside the broadcasting industry and no pressure for such a tariff to be set up.

Perhaps I might answer the question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond. I am informed that last year gross revenue from licence fees amounted to $2,045,245. The licence fee schedule is as follows: For stations with gross revenues below $200,000, 1 per cent of that revenue; for stations with gross revenues exceeding $200,000, a flat $2,000 plus 1½ per cent of the amount by which $200,000 is exceeded.

Mr. Cowan: Since the minister made a direct reference to me—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Cowan: Yes, if it gives me the floor at the moment. The question of privilege is that you did not force the minister to withdraw her remark about the "not so honourable member for York-Humber". I am referring to the not so honourable Secretary of State. She told the committee I would be screaming louder than I have been if we were to set rates for advertising in newspapers by government regulation. She made a comparison between newspapers and television stations. I should like to point out that in the newspaper world no government licence is required to participate in the game. The situation in circumstances where one can operate only under a government licence, which means a monopoly, is entirely different from the circumstances in which anyone can start a newspaper whenever and wherever he wants to do so.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair does not recognize those remarks as raising a question of privilege and they are not relevant to the point under study at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think that the remarks of the hon. member for York-Humber were pertinent, in that the field of radio and television constitutes a monopoly and a state licence is necessary to broadcast programs.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Now, the Secretary of State says that if we had to create a board to control prices or set rates for radio and television stations, that would involve a great deal of work, since the situation changes in each case and there are many radio and television stations.

On that point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out two things to the Secretary of State: first, I would like to give as an example the trucking industry. There are many more trucking enterprises than radio or television companies. Yet there is a transport commission which sets prices for trucking enterprises in each case, according to the distance travelled and the area involved.

This could, in the trucking industry, mean twenty times more work than it would in the field of broadcasting. However, it is done in order to prevent a monopoly from exploiting the public, even if there are perhaps ten times as many trucking companies as there are television or radio stations. That is why I say to the hon. Secretary of State that her argument that this would mean to much work does not hold when it is a question of protecting the public against a monopoly allowed by law.

Second, Mr. Chairman, the hon. Secretary of State said that the problem received consideration but that there are no provisions dealing with this in the bill. I think it would not be difficult to include such a provision. Otherwise, broadcasting will be the only field where licences are issued and where there is no price control board. This would be the only field where competition would be limited by virtue of a licence, without there being at the same time a board which establishes rates.

Now, if the minister feels that this should not be the responsibility of the Canadian radio commission, it could be entrusted to the transport commission. Since it is the Department of Transport which, in the end, has to pass on the plans submitted for a radio or television station, let the transport commission deal with the matter of rates tariffs to be set for private radio and television stations, just as it deals, for instance, with the matter of the rates of the Bell Telephone Company or other independent telephone companies.

Such is the principle according to which, when the state restricts competition, it must also restrict the rates of those monopolies to prevent them from taking advantage of the public.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, I think that the argument of the Secretary of State does not hold for the two above-mentioned reasons. In the first place, it would not involve so much work since the transport commission does it for transportation companies which are more numerous than radio and television stations. Then, it is the only field where rates are unlimited while the government is restricting competition.

I hope that the Secretary of State will accept at least the principle involved, even though afterwards she may hand over the control to the council.

That is why, at the request of the hon. members for Kamloops and Halifax (Messrs. Fulton and McCleave), I changed my amendment by adding a third subclause to clause 16 which reads as follows:

(3) (a) The council will be authorized to establish a maximum scale for the rates and tariffs charged by the broadcasters or licencees. The council shall hold public meetings to consider any application for increases in the rates and tariffs charged by the broadcasters or licensees unless authorized by the council following such public hearings.

[English]

Mr. Peters: If this kind of amendment is not accepted I wonder how the minister intends to handle the sort of situation which developed in northern Ontario where a private community antenna operator got a licence in an area very remote from a broadcasting station. People subscribing to his service were charged a $200 connection fee and had to pay $5 per month rental. If a family moved out of a house the incoming family also had to pay the $200 connection fee, and one instance was reported to me of a house which changed occupancy five times in a year and each time the $200 fee was charged. When we give such a person a licence I think we have an obligation to protect his customers. The situation has improved following the installation of a C.B.C. repeater station, and CFCL has installed a satellite in the Hearst area. Originally Port Arthur and Fort William had to supply the coverage through community antenna. The $200 fee was an unreasonable charge. If a maximum is not imposed then an unscrupulous person will have the right to charge whatever the traffic will bear.

My experience with television has not been that bad. A television station operator charges for national advertising on the basis of audience coverage and there is another rate for local advertising. But in northern Canada such an operator could eliminate competition by the rates he charges, raising them or lowering them to suit his own purposes. It does not seem unreasonable to me to stipulate a maximum connection fee and a maximum monthly rate for C.A.T.V., and I would not object if the maximum set in northern areas were twice as high as the average in other areas. Prior to this the government had no control over such rates, and I know that the Department of Transport would have been glad to have some kind of control to prevent such abuses taking place. In fact there was no control until the C.B.C. or some other entrepreneur provided alternate service.

Miss LaMarsh: The hon. member should not forget that for the first time in this bill there is provision for conditions to be put on licences. Almost any condition which is germane to a particular situation can be inserted. There is also provision to impose certain monetary penalties for the breach of conditions attached to licences. Previously, in the period between an operator obtaining a licence and having to renew it nothing could be done in this respect. In a situation such as described by the hon. member, where there may be numerous complaints, a condition could be attached to a licence covering the connection fee and if this condition were not observed the operator could lose his licence or be penalized in some other way. But to set tariffs for each individual C.A.T.V. operator, particularly considering the way C.A.T.V. systems have proliferated in the last few years, would not be the proper step.

Hon. members may have seized on this proposed idea as something new but I think they should stop and think about it. Many of the experts in this field, particularly those least friendly to the C.A.T.V. operators, namely the C.A.B. people, would like to scrunch them down, and in turn the C.A.T.V. operators would like to scrunch down private broadcasters.

Mr. Cowan: May I point out that once again the Secretary of State shows she does not understand C.A.T.V. operations. She states that the C.A.B. wants to scrunch the C.A.T.V. people, whatever that means. This is true enough, but C.A.T.V. operators do not want to scrunch the television operators because it is from them that they get the programs they sell to the public. I wish she understood C.A.T.V.

Mr. Barnett: The point raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming is worthy of attention by the committee. I am interested in the explanation of the situation given by the Secretary of State. If I understand it correctly, a definition of what constitutes a broadcasting undertaking is before us in a way that we have not had it defined since the establishment of community antenna television systems.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe deals with the charges for advertising by broadcasters in the radio and television field. I certainly agree that there does not seem to have been any serious interest in many quarters in setting up a tariff structure in this area. On the other hand, many of us have been aware of abuses on the part of the community antenna television systems in various parts of the country. Heretofore this has not been a matter under the control of any regulatory broadcasting authority.

I believe the suggestion of the Secretary of State that there is provision for conditions to be attached to licences, if it is germane to the question of hook-up fees, monthly rates and so on, should be gone into pretty carefully by the regulatory body to see how they can deal with this matter in laying down the conditions of the licence. Many persons claim that what has in certain instances been a real abuse of a monopoly situation should not be allowed to continue under the aegis of the public authority which is being set up by parliament. I would be content for the present at least to wait and see whether the procedure suggested by the Secretary of State could be developed to meet the situation brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State tells us that the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Lapointe is not new to her and that this matter has been fully considered by herself and by the officials of her department. There is no reason for us to doubt that. However, even to those members of the house who were members of the broadcasting committee it comes as a bolt out of the blue. It certainly would appear to have great ramifications and implications. Yet it is brought before us as sort of spontaneous ejaculation which we should deal with here and now. I suggest it would not be asking too much to request that this matter be held in abeyance until Monday.

We have had some debate concerning the necessity and/or desirability of this proposal.

[Mr. Barnett.]

At first glance this would seem to be a desirable course of action to take inasmuch as there are quite a number of smaller cities and larger towns in Canada with only one television station which has a monopoly. One can argue, of course, that advertisers are not necessarily at a disadvantage because they can resort to other media such as the press, handbills and so on, as the hon. member for York-Humber has suggested. It is true that if there is not intramedia competition one can point to the intermedia competition and say that someone wishing to rent time for the purpose of political broadcasting can always resort to another means of communication. I am wondering how realistic that kind of argument is.

I do not wish to take up much time because I realize the hon. lady is becoming impatient. I certainly do not blame her. However, in this instance I hope she will be lenient and allow this matter to be held over so that it can be considered properly. If we must vote on the amendment this afternoon I suppose I will have to vote against it. Much as I like the principle of the idea, I would have to vote against it simply on the basis that something as important as this should not be dealt with so casually.

There is another argument in respect of the amendment which I believe should be considered. If we attempt to give the council regulatory powers in this regard I see certain difficulties. If we stipulate that the council shall have the power to set maximum fees, this could be construed as an invitation to do so. If we do not do that and say instead that the council shall have the power to adjudicate in respect of rate increases after the coming into force of this bill, which would be another way to deal with the matter, then what is to stop the television interests in these one-channel or one-station towns increasing their rates in the interval? Finally, it has been suggested by one of my colleagues that if we attempt to regulate it might be that the major advertisers would seek and probably make arrangements with the television station owner for a bonus system and so on. There are different ways by which to get around any regulation. I would hope that the hon. lady would see the sense in holding this over at least until Monday.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I feel the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) made a reasonable and moderate appeal to the Secretary of State, asking her to allow that clause to stand. Obviously, we shall not dispose of this bill today. Therefore, there is no objection to suspending the study of that clause or to deferring it until later. When the Secretary of State asked yesterday to pass quickly all the non-contentious clauses, in an attempt to speed up the discussion of the bill, we readily agreed, even though it was done very hastily and it did not seem to us to be the best procedure. I wonder why the Secretary of State does not agree to the suggestion just made, all the more so because the discussion on this bill will no doubt continue on Monday.

If the hon. Secretary of State would accept to co-operate, I am convinced that she would receive in return the same co-operation from the members.

Mr. Chairman, a great many points have not been well explained. With the proper explanations, perhaps everyone would be in favour of that amendment. The hon. Secretary of State tells us that the proposition was considered by her officials and turned down. It would be interesting to know why, and the hon. minister has not told us. We do not know why the officials have turned down such an idea. What I find most surprising, is the fact that the minister seems to think that it would require a whole new administrative structure. But the same administrative structure is found in all the areas where there is a monopoly, and sometimes a larger staff is needed. Let us take, for instance, the field of truck transportation where the structure is considerably more complex than that which would be necessary in this case.

That is why I think that the amendment should be accepted, and I ask the hon. Secretary of State to tell us whether or not she is prepared to accept this matter to be put off until Monday?

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, this bill has already, I think, taken more time than anything except the flag debate and possibly the debate on the Canada Pension Plan. My hon. friend is quite wrong when he says I suggested that we should pass the non-contentious clauses. That suggestion came from the house leader of the Conservative party, not from me. I acceded to it with the hope that we would get one or two of them passed.

It may be true that we will be talking about this on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of next week, or perhaps for another four or five weeks. The hon. member apparently has nothing else to do than impede the business of the country. He has said clearly that it is his intention to destroy the country and he is now starting, with the assistance of the hon. member for York-Humber, to destroy parliament. This is a pretty good way of doing so, but he is not going to have my co-operation in his efforts. So far as I am concerned, I do not see any reason why a bill which has been studied publicly and privately for almost four years now should be stood further.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I shall not reply to the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State. I am not in the habit of quibbling about anything whatsoever, with so nice a lady. I would rather capitulate when I find myself in that kind of situation. However, with regard to the bill, I should like to add a few remarks.

I noticed that the hon. member for Springfield (Mr. Schreyer) said that, at first glance, he finds the bill quite acceptable, and that the only reason which could induce him to vote against it, is that he does not know all its implications.

First of all, I should like to point out to him that the field of radio and television is the only one where, while there is a state-imposed monopoly, rates do not come under regulations. To my mind, this is already a sufficient reason to at least accept the principle that the state, having set up by law monopolies in certain areas of the country, should now prevent exploitation of the public by regulating the prices.

The member for Springfield also wonders what would happen in the field of business. I would like to tell him that, in the areas with no competition and where owners of television stations enjoy a practical monopoly, where prices are high, only the great nation-wide companies operating throughout the country and able to provide an adequate budget can use television for advertising. The small producers, the small businessmen, the small industrialists do not have the same means, so they cannot meet excessive prices.

One might say that all they have to do is select another medium of advertising. Possibly, but today, in the business world, the winner is the one who uses all advertising media. If an advertising medium as important as television is eliminated, if the small businessmen are deprived thereof, this means that they are being discriminated against and monopolies created by the state through legislation are allowed to crush the small operator who cannot use television programs.

Television stations set their rates rather arbitrarily, according to the ratings. When there are two television stations in an area, rates become competitive and are less likely to increase.

When there is only one station, rates are set arbitrarily and small businessmen are the ones hard hit. I could give examples of abusive rates of television stations. Devious methods are used and a board could prevent such abuse.

In the field of political programs, for instance, the television station in Quebec will no longer sell 15-minute periods for $300. They prefer to divide those 15 minutes in three periods of five minutes, each selling for $200. Thus divided the 15-minute period costs $600, whereas if sold as a whole it would bring in only $300. They refuse to sell 15-minute periods even if all the political parties were willing to pay for uninterrupted periods. All parties without exception have to accept those conditions because during an election campaign the owners of those stations say: Let us get the most out of this while it lasts. And since the going is good and they want to take advantage of it, they find a way to increase the prices.

I know that at the Quebec television station, for example, simply to screen a film or a video-tape of 15 minutes, they charge $80. This is a means of overcharging, and even if that is not acceptable, there is no alternative because there is only one television station in Quebec which sells time to political programs and it is a private station.

The C.B.C. does not sell such time. There is no choice; people are forced to submit to a monopoly created by legislation and by a federal government council. This monopoly is allowed to exist while in every other field, monopolies have been prohibited without there being at the same time limitations on prices to prevent the fleecing of the public.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. Secretary of State told us, a while ago, that for the first time the bill contains a provision allowing the Canadian radio-television commission to set up regulations authorizing it, when licences come up for renewal, to impose fines, penalties and even to suspend licences when the regulations have not be complied with.

I hope that it will be possible to include in the regulations of the Canadian radio-television commission a provision on maximum fees, on rates and the conditions to be complied with before increasing the rates for commercials.

If the Secretary of State were tell us that there is a method to include in the regulations of this Canadian radio-television commission such a principle or such a notion, then we would be happy. Half a loaf is better than no loaf. Is the Secretary of State agreeable to the inclusion, in these regulations of the commission, of a provision dealing with increases in fees by the radio and television stations?

Then, we could simply confirm the principle that the commission is empowered to make regulations. Would the minister accept such an amendment enabling the commission to an enact such regulations?

I see that the minister will not listen to anything further on this bill. Well, at least I was able to make my suggestion, but I am opposed to the fact that a state monopoly is allowed without at the same time setting limits to the exploitation of the public.

[English]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, there is one word of subclause (iii) of clause 16 I should like to draw to the attention of the committee. Clause 16 reads:

> In furtherance of its objects, the council, on the recommendation of the executive committee, may—

It then sets out that the council may make regulations applicable to persons holding broadcasting licences, or to persons holding broadcasting licences of one or more classes respecting, as stated in subclause (iii)—

> —the proportion of time that may be devoted to the broadcasting of programs, advertisements or announcements of a partisan political character and the assignment of such time on an equitable basis to political parties and candidates,

• (4:00 p.m.)

I am a member of the broadcasting committee and I well remember the lengthy discussion which took place on the white paper which was put before us by the Department of the Secretary of State some time ago, and on which we were supposed to express our opinions. As hon. members know, the committee endorsed 19 out of 21 paragraphs of the white paper. An argument arose on subclause (d) of clause 2 of the bill which reads:

It is hereby declared that

(d) the programming provided by the Canadian Broadcasting System should be varied and comprehensive and should provide reasonable opportunity for the expression of conflicting views on matters of public controversy, —

The suggestion was made that the subclause should read:

—should provide equitable opportunity for the expression of conflicting views on matters of public controversy, —

A lengthy discussion ensued in the committee on the use of the words "equitable" and "reasonable". With reference to clause 16 (b)(iii) I should like to refer to the political argument which developed. Half a dozen members of the broadcasting committee referred to the situation in the United States where there is a regulation affecting T.V. stations and radio, according to which all candidates for the presidency must be given equal time on both these media. I should like to refer to a specific instance during an election when there were two or three of what are generally called nuisance candidates running for the presidency of the United States of America. One of them at least was straightforward enough to state that the reason he was running for the presidency of the United States was that only in this way would he be able to appear on the national network. This strikes people as being absolutely ridiculous, namely that a man who might be able to garner only about a thousand votes in all of the United States should be given equal time to present whatever platform he claims to have advocated, as against such historical organizations as the Republican and Democratic parties. The discussion with regard to the word "reasonable" on subclause 2(d) went on for a long time, but at the end the committee agreed that the word "reasonable" was much more appropriate.

Mr. Béchard: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. At the present time the committee has before it the amendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe. I believe the hon. member for York-Humber is totally out of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I will ask the Clerk to read the first amendment moved by the hon. member for Lapointe.

[And a Clerk at the table having read the amendment as follows:]

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) moves that clause 16 be amended by adding the following subclause:

3 (a) The council will be authorized to set a maximum scale for the rates and fees charged by broadcasters or licensees.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, if I am not mistaken, subclause 3 has two paragraphs, (a) and (b).

[And the Clerk at the table completed the reading of the amendment, as follows]

3 (b) The council shall hold public meetings for considering any application for increases in the rates and tariffs charged by broadcasters or licensees. No rate or tariff may be increased by the broadcasters or licensees unless authorized by the council following such public hearings.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Grégoire) negatived: Yeas, 5; nays, 38.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, early in the debate I indicated in private to the Secretary of State that I thought there was one serious lack in the bill in that, under its terms we as members of parliament would no longer have any means of influencing the new broadcasting authority either directly or indirectly, and that we could not convey public opinion to the broadcasting authority. Therefore I felt it was absolutely necessary for us to provide somewhere in the bill for the formation of regional advisory councils. My suggestion was that this provision should be made in clause 2 of the bill where the objectives of the broadcasting system are outlined, but my suggestion was not accepted by the minister and consequently I did not press for an amendment to clause 2.

However, upon reflection I am more convinced than ever that we would be remiss in our duties in the house if we did not establish some sort of regional councils. The white paper on broadcasting made reference at page 9 to the feasibility and desirability of setting up regional broadcasting councils to advise upon representations made by the general public with regard to programming. I suggest that if we are to provide some means to the public whereby the force of public opinion may make itself felt, we must add a provision after subclause 16 (c).

I therefore propose the following amendment:

That clause 16 be amended by adding after subclause (c) an additional subclause (d) as follows: "(d) establish regional advisory councils in order that it shall have the benefit of the advice of as broad as possible a range of Canadian public opinion."

• (4:10 p.m.)

I do not believe any of us here would deny, or very few would deny that over the years there have been abuses committed by our national broadcasting system, especially in recent years in the area of public affairs. I do not intend to discuss that subject at length because it has been discussed at length by members during the last few days. It is my firm conviction that the C.B.C. has immunized itself from the democratic process. I ask members, especially those on the government side, to hear me out on my proposal. The amendment does not change the bill in any way. The type of regional council envisaged would be set up in the five geographical regions in Canada, the maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, the prairies, British Columbia and the Northwest Territories. Members would be appointed for two years. They would not receive remuneration. They would be named by a number of organizations which would range from religious groups, educational groups, the labour movement, management, agriculture, political parties and provincial governments to any other major group of public opinion which the broadcasting commission deemed suitably reflected Canadian public opinion.

The advisory council which I envisage obviously would not have the legal power to force the C.B.C. to do anything. It would be our assurance, as members of parliament, that we have not thrown away all protection for the Canadian public in this bill. In fact this is what we would be doing if we passed this bill without an appropriate amendment to establish these regional advisory councils. If we did so we would be, in effect, saying to this broadcasting authority: You have the power in clause 16 with respect to such other matters as you deem necessary for the furtherance of these objectives, to set up these advisory councils. However, I feel that we must do more than that. We must clearly set forth that it is our desire that these regional councils should be set up.

If the minister would go along with it, I would be prepared to settle for one national advisory council. My argument against a national advisory council would be that it would not be possible to reflect adequately the linguistic make-up of the country on that type of council. It would not be possible, for example, to provide representation for native peoples such as would be the case with a regional council.

There are a number of defects in a national advisory council which I think could be overcome with regional councils. I do not want to take up too much time of the committee, but I am convinced it is essential that somewhere in the bill we have an indication that this house insists that such councils be set up. This amendment would make it clear that we expect the commission to establish such regional councils. If this amendment is accepted it would be necessary to make further amendments later in the bill setting out the details as to how the regional advisory councils are to be made up. Perhaps these amendments could be made following clause 21. This would depend on whether or not my amendment is accepted.

The principle of advisory councils has been accepted and put into effect in the United Kingdom, a country whose national broadcasting system is the world's outstanding example of impartiality. In the federal Republic of Germany, with the experience of the world's most appalling dictatorship, they came to the conclusion early that democracy could best be protected if the national broadcasting system were subject to certain checks and safeguards. A system of regional advisory councils based on each of the German states is in effect in Germany and is working well.

The Canadian Association of Broadcasters in what I believe is part of their submission to the standing committee, said they believed that the regulating body should have regional offices and be responsible for the organization of advisory councils composed of individuals and interested organizations. Then they make reference to the fact that the white paper mentioned the possibility of advisory councils. They go on from there to state that the B.B.G. would recommend favourably on this proposal if in the light of experience it felt its own arrangements were inadequate in this respect.

This is not good enough. As members of this house, I suggest it is incumbent upon all of us to make sure there is some means in the Broadcasting Act whereby public opinion can exert itself on the broadcasting authority. If public opinion cannot do so through parliament, how else is it going to do so? Are we going to leave it up to this organization entirely to decide whether or not it shall hear the public? There are provisions for the commission to hear complaints, but this is not good enough. I strongly urge the minister to reconsider her opposition to the concept of regional advisory councils. It is for this reason, Mr. Chairman, I have taken the time of the committee this afternoon. I hope members on this side of the house as well as the other will support the suggestion I have just made.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak briefly on this amendment presented by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie. I believe the idea presented in his amendment is a practical and worthwhile one. I have spoken a number of times in this debate about the necessity of providing in this legislation a means by which the management of the publicly owned broadcasting system could assess public opinion. It is very difficult for the members of this house to do so. It is very difficult for the C.B.C. to do so directly. In fact I have been increasingly alarmed over the amount of correspondence that comes to my desk expressing frustration on the part of Canadians who write to the C.B.C. and do not even receive an acknowledgement of their letters, let alone a reasonable reply to the questions raised.

As the hon. member has just mentioned, this type of advisory council is working very well in both the United Kingdom and the Republic of Germany. It was my original intention that a formal council be set up on a national basis, though not appointed by the C.B.C. or by parliament, so as to represent the various democratic organizations in society across the country.

In considering the proposal in light of this debate, and in view of our responsibility to dispose of the bill as quickly as possible, it seems to me that this type of amendment is probably more fitting at the present time. It would meet the need for a national advisory council just as well. In fact, it could even be more effective because programming policy is geared not only to the national system, but must likewise be geared to regional taste as well. I think therefore that this amendment is a very practical one, as we adapt the idea of an advisory council to the Canadian scene.

I do not intend to speak at length on the amendment but I do commend it both to the committee and the minister. It has a great deal of worth in it. This amendment provides the management of the C.B.C. with a legitimate sounding board of public opinion. The creation of this body would not require great expense; the most expensive item might be holding the occasional meeting. In fact, even this item might not be expensive because I visualize the representatives on these regional councils as representatives of various organizations, and more than likely those organizations would be only too pleased to send their representatives to the council meetings at their own expense.

Some hon. members might ask where these representatives are to come from. Basically I see them coming from most of the democratic organizations in the country, such as home and school associations, university organizations, teachers federations, labour organizations and the Legion. Even representatives of civic clubs and other important and legitimate national organizations, and other private organizations, might attend. I am pleased to give my support to this amendment and I trust that the minister will see fit to accept it without prolonged debate on the worth that I feel it contains.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few brief observations on the amendment now before the committee. I will vote against if for the following reasons. First of all, I think this national council—we have now changed its name to national commission—has good representation from across Canada, in the same way as the former Board of Broadcast Governors had. That board was composed of members from every part of Canada. If this national commission is set up on the same basis, I see little reason for regional councils to be set up across a country that has a sparse population of 22 million.

Mr. Thompson: Might I ask the hon. member a question. How many members are on the council as constituted?

Mr. Stanbury: Fifteen altogether.

Mr. Thompson: Is it the hon. member's opinion that such a body, the members of which have certain technical and financial qualifications, is able to give the necessary advice on programming that might be required?

Mr. Hales: My understanding, Mr. Chairman, is that there are 15 members on the national commission. In the second part of my hon. friend's question, he referred to organizations such as home and school associations and similar bodies, and I see no reason why they cannot present their views in letters, briefs or through other means to the national commission. I am one of those who feel we are beginning to have government by boards and commissions. It seems to me that every piece of legislation that comes before the house requires the appointment of a board, commission or council. I think if one is set up in this legislation, that one will be sufficient.

The hon. member who introduced the amendment spoke of the system in operation in Great Britian. Perhaps regional councils are needed in an area that is so densely populated as Britain, but I do not think regional commissions are required in this country, certainly not at this particular stage in the history of our broadcasting and television services. Therefore I would oppose the amendment.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, the proposal made by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie relates to the clause that deals with the Canadian radio-television commission, as well as to this clause. The hon. member for Red Deer kept referring to the C.B.C. but the amendment relates to all broadcasting.

I should like to make one or two comments on the amendment. When the director general of the B.B.C. and the director general of the I.T.A. came to Ottawa from the United Kingdom I questioned them on this point, but I have forgotten their answers. This was November 1966 and I am afraid I have not looked at the minutes recently.

However, a perusal of the handbooks of the B.B.C. and the I.T.A. indicates that there are a great many advisory bodies. They have professional advisory bodies for education and religious broadcasting, and there are also a great many regional bodies. These might be useful; I do not know. But I am against setting up bodies which become innocuous, "nothing" bodies that really do not do anything. If I could be persuaded that these advisory commissions in various parts of the country could contribute to better broadcasting in some way, then they might be worth while, but I do not think the case for that has been proven.

There is one way we could get around this difficulty, Mr. Chairman, and this suggestion was made in the committee. Both the regulatory body and the board of directors of the C.B.C. should be encouraged to meet in different parts of Canada at different times. I know that occasionally this has been done in the past. However, I see the regulatory authority meeting sometimes in Vancouver, sometimes in Regina and sometimes in St. John's to hold a public hearing to find out what the public, either individually or through organizations, thinks about the job that is being done by the broadcasters, public and private.

The board of directors of the C.B.C. should also move around the country. They should advertise the fact that they are holding a meeting at a certain place, and they should invite the public to come and be heard. This might serve the purpose that the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie has in mind. I do know that these bodies have been set up in the United Kingdom, but how active or effective they are I do not know. I have my doubts about them.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to continue in the same vein as the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), and say that the intention of the amendment moved by the member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie (Mr. Watson), strikes me as excellent, but likely to add to the clumsiness of structures which are already cumbersome as it is. The matter was discussed briefly in committee and, for that very same reason, the suggestion that regional committees be set up on a permanent basis was turned down.

I feel, as does the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, that the same object can be achieved through sittings of the Board of Broadcast Governors and the board of directors of the C.B.C., not only if those bodies give notice of their alternate sittings in various parts of the country, but if, to the contrary, notice of these sittings will be given ahead of time and the audience throughout our whole broadcasting system will be invited specifically to present grievances, make representations, and—why not?—offer its congratulations.

This too was mentioned in the committee by the representatives of both the bureau of broadcast governors and the board of the C.B.C., and the two bodies replied to the committee that they had the intention to do so, they thought it essential to act in this way. Such an attitude would serve to avoid what the member for Burnaby-Richmond indicated that there is a risk, if we organize too heavy a superstructure, of having also a dead superstructure. If the bureau of broadcast governors and the board of the C.B.C. announce that they will meet to hear representations from the listeners, then, those who come before them will come of their own free will and not because they have been appointed. They will come because they will have something to say.

If is true that there is so much discontent over broadcasting among Canadians, we should not doubt for a second that the intermediary organizations or voluntary bodies, all kinds of associations including viewers associations will make their representations before these two bodies of their own accord, not because they have to, but because they are motivated by their own feelings and rules of conduct.

So I say that we should drop the proposition now before us in favor of a much more flexible formula and probably therefore a much more efficient one.

[English]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise briefly to congratulate the hon. member for introducing this amendment, although I am not quite sure whether it fills the bill entirely. The amendment would seek to provide for the establishment of regional advisory councils in order that the national council shall have the benefit of the advice of as broad as possible a range of public opinion. I think there is merit in this amendment because, at the present time, we have a national council only and it is very difficult to get, shall I say, the response to certain programs or policies of the C.B.C. through the national council alone, or even through this house.

I think this amendment does provide an opportunity to improve the participation of the general public in the administration of this important legislation. As my colleague from Burnaby-Richmond says, this sort of thing has been the practice in Great Britain for a number of years. They have less geographic space to deal with but a larger population. I am in favour of doing everything possible to get the participation of the public in the administration of the laws we pass in this house.

So far as my own constituency is concerned, I have received in the neighbourhood of 300 letters in connection with C.B.C. programs, and that sort of thing. You see, I represent a riding that is very alert to what is happening in Ottawa, and in other places. I am sure those people in the Kootenays would welcome the opportunity from time to time to bring opinions to the attention of the national council. I know this. I am sure there are many, shall I say, people who would like the opportunity to serve in this capacity on a voluntary basis. If I put it to the people I represent and said, "Are you willing to appoint a regional board to represent and reflect opinion in the Kootenays?" which is quite substantial, many of them would willingly serve on such a board on a voluntary basis, without any expense to the state. It is a matter of getting opinions, recording them, gathering them in and sending them to the national council so that they know what the reaction is in various parts of Canada. I think the hon. member has a point here and I hope some consideration will be given to the idea he has in mind.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie obviously feels the concern which I expressed when I spoke on the bill on December 20. I was intrigued by his phrase, if I heard it correctly, that the C.B.C. in the name of democracy has immunized itself from public opinion. I am inclined to the view that we in this house, by the legislative process, have had a good deal to do with that immunization. In other words, in our zeal to ensure that the broadcasting system does not come under some form of partisan political domination, we have more or less set the C.B.C. to one side in a way that has brought some feeling of frustration to many people in Canada, because of their inability to make felt their feelings and views with respect to the C.B.C.

I do not want to repeat what I said before, but I suggested that the best regional and national forum in Canada is this House of Commons. Outside the actual terms of this bill we, as a house of parliament, have it within our power to set up a mechanism different from that which existed heretofore, and through that mechanism we could make the views of regions known and felt from time to time. We could do that with respect to broadcasting and other related matters, instead of, as we have done in the past, using the Secretary of State as a go-between with ourselves on one side and the broadcasting system on the other.

I made references to the technique employed when we established the redistribution commissions. We evolved the machinery for making our views known to them. I draw this proposal to the attention of the hon. member, and my own view is—because it is my own brainchild, I suppose—that that proposal or technique might serve better to meet the purposes he has in mind.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Mr. Chairman, I wish to make two comments, one of them about the remarks of the hon. member for Wellington South. He said that the commission would be adequate to reflect public opinion to the broadcasting authority. I do not think it is adequate, and that is why I brought forward this amendment.

I do not think the commission, with its number of members, will be suitably reflective of Canadian public opinion. The hon. member is right. Under the bill the commission will have the resources, if it decides to, to go across the country. It may consult with various bodies across the country. But we have not said, in this bill, that it should do that. If the minister would consent anywhere else in the bill to some amendment which would indicate parliament's desire for this authority to go out among the public and ask how the public feels about broadcasting, I shall be content. If we do not provide for that in the bill somewhere, we shall be remiss in our duty.

The second aspect of the proposed amendment which was touched on by the hon. member for Hochelaga had to do with the clumsiness of the machinery which would be employed under this amendment. I do not think the machinery would be as cumbersome as he imagines.

I envisage that the members of the advisory councils would be volunteers appointed by labour unions, educational groups and so on. They might be paid officials of those unions or other groups, or they might not. In any event, their services would not add, as the hon. member for Hochelaga suggested, to the cost of operation of the national broadcasting authority. Their presence might mean more work for the commission. In fact it would, because the commission would be obliged to consult with them once or twice a year and it would be obliged also to answer for ignoring recommendations by the councils in previous years.

I believe it is essential to the working of the democratic process in Canada that we end the isolation of our national broadcasting system from the Canadian public. In my view it is important that we should accept this amendment or, alternatively, that the minister should place some other provision in the bill which would satisfy the objections I have raised—objections which I believe to be legitimate.

Mr. Schreyer: I rise to ask whether the hon. member would entertain a question. He began by proposing the establishment of regional advisory groups or councils. From his last few remarks I understood they are to be composed, at least in part of representatives from occupational groups. Is he proposing some new hydrid?

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): I indicated that if this amendment were passed it would be necessary to bring in an additional amendment later, probably to clause 21, setting out details of the regional councils to be established. I would propose that the members should be appointed for a period not exceeding two years, that the appointments should be non-remunerative, that the councils should be based on regional areas and that their members should include representation from labour unions, educational groups, agriculture, religious groups and so on, the commission having discretion to allow persons to be appointed from any other groups which they felt were adequately representative of Canadian opinion.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to support the amendment moved by the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie (Mr. Watson), and I still do.

An advisory council such as that one is obviously justified. The programs of the C.B.C. and of private television stations enter our homes every day, sometimes up to 15 or 16 hours a day. They bring ideas, opinions, information, entertainment and all sorts of things into every home.

It is noted, at the same time, that C.B.C. programs, as one might expect, cause reactions, as evidenced by the number of letters to newspapers about such or such a program. One can see that television in general causes reactions, judging by the comments being made. One can also see it in this house by the many members who are interested in this problem.

Therefore I think there should be a body which could feel the pulse of the people, so to speak, or to which people could go to express their views. If in the province of Quebec, as the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie has said, a regional council is set up which will hold public meetings where anyone could go and say what he thinks, this will allow people to let off steam and the taxpayers whose money finances the C.B.C. to voice their opinions. The advisory council would not have to accept all suggestions as if they were binding; these would be merely voiced as advice or suggestions. These advisory regional councils would take the pulse of the public and receive its opinions.

I recall, for instance, that a few years ago and perhaps less, the C.B.C. was in the habit of showing us almost every day programs with ballet in it, so much so that we were sick of it. I even saw classical ballet danced on ladders and the next day people would say: We turned the television off last night, it was ballet again. If there had been an agency to which the people as a whole could have expressed publicly what they thought of the C.B.C. the situation could have been changed. That is democratic, and I feel that is would also give the taxpayers a chance to speak their minds.

It does not mean that the C.B.C. or the Canadian radio-television council should accept everything, but at least they would know what the public thinks.

Earlier, I heard the hon. members for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) and Hochelaga (Mr. Pelletier) say that that would make for a very dense and unwieldly superstructure, I do not recall the exact term—

Mr. Pelletier: Heavy.

Mr. Grégoire: —heavy, very heavy. That would not fit in the structure or superstructure of the Canadian radio-television council. Those local advisory councils would merely take decisions and submit them to the C.R.T.C. That would in no way make the structure of the council heavier. On the contrary, it would relieve the council of additional work and of the necessity of consulting the public. It would be the function of a more impartial and independent agency to attend to this public consultation.

This is why I more or less see it as a kind of valve enabling Canadians who sometimes have much to say on various matters to express themselves. Nowadays, we are unable to do so. The only way available to people is to send letters to newspapers. As the hon. member for Red Deer mentioned earlier, they can write to the C.B.C., but they receive vague answers which often do not provide any answer. No obligation would be laid upon the C.B.C. or the council, but it would at least enable the public to say what they have on their mind. This is why I am supporting the amendment.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Amendment (Mr. Watson, Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): negatived: Yeas, 11; nays, 32.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: I think the Secretary of State should take a look at how dull this debate has been in the last few days and then examine subclause (1)(iv) allowing the council to make restrictions on dramatization of political programs, and announcements of a partisan political character. This is as stupid a regulation as the C.B.C. ever dreamed up. When a politician is competing with "Bonanza" he has sufficient handicap without being restricted in his efforts to liven his broadcasts.

In the past the C.B.C., and later the B.B.G., turned down applications to dramatize political broadcasts. I remember a number of years ago in Timmins, before the local station found out it was breaking the regulations, there was a monthly political broadcast which started out with the playing of the Swedish Rhapsody. Possibly due to the popularity of the program in Timmins, that tune later rated on the hit parade. I do not think there is anything wrong with politics, but by allowing this clause to remain in the bill the minister is saying politics is a dirty business which must be dealt with by a Sunday school type of program. Anything that will enliven a political broadcast will improve it.

I know that each time the format of the program in Timmins was changed the local Liberal party was willing to try the change suggested. I will be darned if I will leave it up to a board such as this to decide what kind of political broadcast should be carried. Expenditures will take care of too much overdramatization of political broadcasting.

To date, political broadcasts have not been very acceptable to the public, judging by their reception of "The Nation's Business" and "Provincial Affairs." The change made by the Ontario Liberal party in the "Provincial Affairs" series was a step in the right direction, yet it was not allowed. We are not living in the dark days of 20 years ago. Nowadays there is enlightened thought about broadcasting. If politicians can dramatize their political programs to a small degree I do not think the council should be able to forbid them. If a politician is wrong in his dramatization the public will know and we will not have to worry about him any more. The public will have some say in that respect, something which is not true with regard to other programs. The minister, who is very progressive, and who has had a lot to do with dramatizing politics in her own party, should consider removing this silly restriction which is being carried over from the early days of the C.B.C. and the latter days of the B.B.G.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I strongly support the views of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) regarding the dramatization of political programs.

I think we are unacceptably restricting our freedom of expression. In his newly published book, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), defines freedom of expression as complete freedom except that it prohibits obscenity and sedition.

However, I do not see how the dramatization of a political program can be obscene, or seditious. We are far from doing that. But I feel it is unacceptably restricting our freedom of speech.

How come we suddenly have become so touchy about political programs and forbid any dramatization? Why forbid a staging which would show the ill-effects of unemployment by filming all those who come to the Unemployment Insurance Office to get their benefits? Nothing should prevent it; that is what is called freedom of expression.

If, for instance, a film had been shot about the hon. Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh), when she was heading the "Truth Squad", it could not have been shown on television. Why not? Because it would have involved dramatization or staging on a political subject.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it five o'clock?

[English]

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if we could carry this clause first before we rise, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree we should carry clause 16 before seeing the clock?

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Peters.]

MESSAGES FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill S-32, an act to amend the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate do unite with the House of Commons in the appointment of a joint committee to consider the state of penitentiaries under the control of the government of Canada and the plans of the government in relation thereto, and that certain honourable Senators have been appointed to act on the said committee.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

• (5:00 p.m.)

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this would be a convenient time to announce the business of the house proposed for Monday. We will begin with item No. 36, the measure which has been occupying the time of the house today. After that we will consider items 53, 54 and 55 standing in the name of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING THE OFFENCE OF IMPAIRED DRIVING

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-21, an act to amend the Criminal Code (impaired driving)—Mr. Mather.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, with consent I wish to withdraw Bill C-21. Last year the subject matter of this bill was referred to the standing committee on justice and legal affairs where it formed the basis for the discussion in respect of the breathalizer legislation which is now being brought forward in the amendments to the Criminal Code. I think my bill in its way has served some purpose, and does not now need to remain on the order paper. So with the consent of the house I would ask that the bill be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the house to have the bill withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and bill withdrawn.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

FEES FOR PROFESSIONAL SERVICES OF BARRISTER AND SOLICITOR MEMBERS IN PARLIAMENTARY MATTERS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-22, an act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (St. Luke 11;46) —Mr. Herridge.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Herridge, seconded by Mr. Howard, moves the second reading of Bill C-22, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (St. Luke 11;46).

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe you selected the wrong person. I had no intention of seconding the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Herridge, seconded by Mr. Peters, moves the second reading of Bill C-22, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (St. Luke 11;46).

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has seconded this motion, because I know that at the same time it is seconded by the majority of the members of this house. This is a bill to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act, with the subtitle "St. Luke 11;46". I should like to explain this reference to St. Luke 11;46 which reads as follows:

And he said, Woe unto you also, ye lawyers! for ye lade men with burdens grievous to be borne, and ye yourselves touch not the burdens with one of your fingers.

It is not usual for a subtitle to be taken from the scriptures, but this statement of our Lord is the first recorded opinion with respect to the gentlemen of the legal profession in the Christian era. I mention this only because of its historical significance to indicate that this problem has been with us for nearly 2,000 years. However, members of the legal profession, like untold millions, have responded to the teachings of the gospel since that time.

My attention was first directed to this question when I first discovered that a few members of parliament, who are also lawyers, were accepting fees from constituents and clients for representations made on their behalf to the ministry on immigration matters or for other services rendered in representations made to other ministries or agencies of the federal government.

In fairness to members of the legal profession, I must say that over a long period of years I have had a very happy relationship with the majority of lawyers I have known in British Columbia, and with a number of the justices of the supreme or county courts of British Columbia, who have all been men of honour and integrity, regardless of the party which appointed them to their high offices.

A code of ethics for the legal profession has concerned the law societies of Canada, various other organizations and the press. For instance, in the Globe and Mail of February 7, 1966, it is reported that the Law Society of Upper Canada has paid over a million and a half dollars as compensation to clients of disbarred lawyers in the past 12 years, according to treasurer John D. Arnup. Included in this report is a list of lawyers who have been disbarred for unethical practices.

I have also been informed of persons who have paid members of parliament, who are also lawyers, for representations made to the ministry of immigration on their behalf. However, these persons naturally do not wish to be identified. In this regard I should like to relate briefly the experience of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott). Three days after I introduced this bill last year one of his constituents phoned him requesting information as to whether a certain relative of his in Europe could be sponsored. The hon. member for Danforth said that he would get in touch with the immigration office. He did so and was told that the case would be examined on the basis of the information given. Later the hon. member received a phone call from the immigration office advising him that the person in question was entitled to come to Canada. They suggested that he advise his constituent to apply at a certain immigration office. When he so advised his constituent the constituent said to him, "I am quite willing to pay you the $500 which is usually charged by members of parliament for this service." The hon. member for Danforth, being the upright member he is, turned this down, with a snort.

Mr. Stewart: Did he do that because he was a member of the New Democratic party?

Mr. Herridge: Also because of his high principles.

This problem has also been of some concern to the Congress of the United States and various state legislatures. I am sure many members of parliament have read of the scandal surrounding senator Tom Dodd, a lawyer who used his influence for corrupt purposes. This senator's activities caused the Senate of the United States to pass a censure resolution which is of such interest that I should like to quote it:

> Resolved, that it is the judgment of the Senate that the senator from Connecticut, Thomas J. Dodd...deserves the censure of the Senate; and he is so censured for his conduct, which is contrary to accepted morals, derogates from the public trust expected of a senator, and tends to bring the Senate into dishonour and disrepute.

I think the Senate acted wisely on that occasion. This problem is of increasing concern to Congress and to state legislatures, as evidenced by the introduction of bills that would deal with conflict of interest and provide for a state ethics commission.

This bill proposes to remedy the grievance that arises when the public relationship between a member of parliament and a citizen is subverted to the private relationship between lawyer and client, to the financial hurt of the citizen. For example, the citizen asks his member to make inquiries of the ministry in an immigration matter and is often dismayed to find that, his member being a lawyer, he is billed for fees on a solicitor-client basis. This grievance is an ancient one, and the remedy proposed is to revive and modernize an order of the United Kingdom that is 300 years old.

Parliament has delegated to the executive the power to grant or refuse in its discretion many matters that once were entrusted to the House of Lords to investigate, hear, and grant or refuse. They were classed as "personal" petitions. The commons delegated the airing and adjudication of these private grievances to the upper chamber by making no rules whereby the petitions could be initiated in the commons.

The commons, on account of the conflict of interest activities of its lawyer-members in intermeddling as lawyers in these private petitions, successively passed orders which placed the activities of these lawyer-members within the control of the commons. I do not have time to deal with the various orders that were passed in the commons of Great Britain to meet this question.

In considering such a bill it is interesting to look into foreign legislation to discover the kind of provisions which have been adopted in other countries. I have read as widely as I could under the circumstances, but this did not permit of much serious reading. I may confess that it is difficult to find legislation of this kind which is more or less analogous with the purposes of this bill, and for two reasons. On the one hand it has been impossible for me to review all foreign acts and regulations, due to the fact that they are not available. On the other hand, according to the documents I have examined, it seems that the subject matters are yet to be considered.

Undoubtedly the concern to ensure the independence of members of parliament in the face of financial, economic and social pressure has become more marked over the years. This is a matter of status seeking, as you will understand. Nevertheless one can find in other countries some provisions regarding the incompatibility of occupation, by which a member of parliament is debarred from following certain occupations during his term of office.

The purpose of this bill is more limited. It does not provide for disqualification from membership of parliament by virtue of occupation. It only contains a suggestion to limit a lawyer's privilege to accept any fee or benefit for acting in certain government affairs. Problems of conflicts of interest, undue influence, and other violations of duty by legislators or other members of the government are being raised in Canada as well as in other countries. We have heard of several cases raised recently in the United States.

In continental Europe the problem of conflicts of interests of the lawyer do not appear clearly solved. This can be understood in Scandinavian countries where parliament does not include a great number of lawyers. As is written by Professor Elis Hastad in "The Parliament of Sweden":

> The practice of drawing the representatives of the people from the ranks of their social equals, because they are "the representatives of the brethren at home", is not peculiar to the parliament of Sweden. Much the same occurs in all the other Scandinavian countries. The Swedish Riksdag is no "parliament of lawyers" of the type found in several other European lands, and above all, in the Congress of the United States where at times almost two thirds of the members have been jurists..."

Also in the Australian parliament, lawyers are not in great number. As written by J. D. B. Miller in "Australian Government and Politics":

> The candidates elected from the various parties are less easy to distinguish from one another than might be expected: in speech, dress and standard of education, they mirror the general conditions of Australians. Only a minority has had a tertiary education...

That means an education of sort of third degree level.

The situation is different in some European parliaments which are made up in good part of lawyers. Nevertheless in continental Europe the question of the lawyer-legislator conflict of interest does not seem systematically under control.

There is no doubt that the problems of the professional role of lawyer-members of the Senate and House of Commons in certain government affairs is one of ethics. When the lawyer has a seat in the Commons or in the Senate he does not cease to be a lawyer. In that field his conduct should be governed by the positive rules of legal ethics.

Of course every bar association is governed by its own rules, and it is quite impossible to frame a satisfactory definition of ethics as applied to the legal profession. The sense of honour and fairness should be the same from coast to coast. Although it is hard to limit the exact duties of the lawyer, the Canadian Bar Association approved a statement of some of the ethical principles which should be observed by members of the legal profession.

In February of 1956 the council of the city of Toronto resolved:

> That the government of Ontario be requested to enact the necessary legislation to make it clear that a lawyer who is a member of metropolitan council or of any municipal council, shall not be entitled to accept a fee for acting for any person in a matter in which the council of which he is a member may act by resolution or by law—

This resolution was considered as one of legal ethics. The discipline committee brought this matter to the attention of the profession, reminding them that no lawyer can serve two conflicting interests, and if a member of the profession holds any elected or appointed office he should not accept any retainer through which his duty to his client and his duty to such office may conflict.

The British House of Commons has not confined itself to the repression of direct pecuniary corruption. To guard against indirect influence it has forbidden the acceptance of fees by its members for professional services connected with proceedings in parliament. Thus a member is not permitted to practise as counsel before the house or any committee thereof, and it is not consistent with parliamentary usage for members to advise, as counsel, upon any private bill or other proceeding in parliament, or matters related to the jurisdiction of parliament.

It has also been declared contrary to the law and usage of parliament for any member to be engaged, either by himself or any partner, in the management of private bills before either house of parliament for pecuniary reward and, upon the same grounds, it was ordered on November 6, 1666:

> That such members of this house as are of the Long-Robe shall not be counsel on either side, in any bill depending in the Lords' House, before such bill shall come down from the Lords' House to this house.

The acceptance, in my opinion, by a member of either house of a fee, compensation, gift or reward for drafting, advising upon or revising any bill, petition or other document submitted or intended to be submitted to either house or any committee thereof would appear to be a breach of privilege.

I have referred to the things I have gathered together in respect of this bill because I am serious in this regard, and I have strong support. Several members of the cabinet endorse the principle outlined in this bill, including the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand), who has stated strongly that he considers it immoral for any member of parliament to receive any payment for acting as a lawyer in any matter he should undertake as his responsibility as a member of parliament. I also have the strong support of the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) in this regard, and I know of several other members of the cabinet who agree with the principles of this bill. Surely it is necessary at this time to indicate to the Canadian people that we are men of integrity in this house and intend to stand in favour of a code of ethics, so far as our practice is concerned.

In addition I have a letter from Right Hon. John Diefenbaker which I wish to place on record. I give him credit for the fact that when he was first elected he told me he informed his firm that while he was a member of parliament no member of his firm was to deal with a matter that was within the jurisdiction of parliament or its elected representatives, because he was elected by the people to serve that purpose. That has been his practice and the practice of his firm since.

This is what Mr. Diefenbaker said in his letter of April 16, 1966:

Dear Bert:

Your report from parliament hill for April 20th is a very interesting one. I commend you for the stand taken that any law firms with members of parliament therein, ought not to receive fees for work which ordinarily should be done by the member in the discharge of his duties.

I know there are members of all parties in parliament who support the principle of this bill. I have received a good number of letters from members of the legal profession in the country informing me of their support. I have also had conversations with many of these people and know they are behind this principle. It is my belief from the letters I have received from members of my constituency, numbering possibly close to 100, that there has been excellent response from the public. Among these letters I received one from His worship Mayor William Dennison of Toronto.

I look forward to hearing the opinions of other members on this matter.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about this bill. At the outset let me say I entirely support the principle expressed by the hon. member. I agree that a lawyer should not become involved in any matter which may bring about a conflict of interest betwen his duties as a member of parliament and his position as a lawyer. But having said that, I must go on to the next matter, and that is that with the increasing involvement of the federal government in the everyday business of people, an involvement which did not exist in previous years, it is becoming more and more difficult for a lawyer who works in a firm, or who practises at all, to disengage himself completely from some involvement with the federal government.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I myself practise law on week ends, on holidays, when the house recesses, on an occasional day off, or when my hard working partner wishes to go on a holiday, and I find this involvement is becoming more and more difficult for me. Of course, as parliament sits for longer and longer periods, the opportunity for me to practise law is decreasing. Nevertheless the same difficulty applies as regards my firm, and I feel that it is just as much bound by this bill as I am, myself. We have come to a definite agreement in our firm that we will handle nothing having to do with the federal government in any way.

[Mr. Herridge.]

However, what do we do when we handle the estate of a deceased person? This is the backbone of the practice of rural lawyers and a good many urban ones also. There are three things to be done when a person dies: We have to probate his will, which involves a circuit court; we have to file provincial succession duty returns in most provinces, which involves filing a provincial return; and we have to file an estate tax return. This is where the problem lies. Are we barred completely as a law firm from acting on the estate of any deceased person? To what extent are we permitted, according to legal ethics, to file estate tax returns, and to what point are we entitled to press a disputed claim?

We have applied a rule of thumb to it and—and I say this badly—I think most other firms do as well. We feel we are not in any way disqualified from acting on any estate which involves a routine filing of an estate tax return to the federal government, or a routine assessment or even reassessment of property, because no conflict arises in such cases. Nevertheless this lurking problem is at the back of our minds all the time.

There is another problem also. In many small law practices assistance is given in preparing income tax returns. In most cases it is a routine matter, but sometimes a dispute arises and one's client may come back and say "You helped me fill the forms out, and you filled them out wrong". If returns are filled out in our office and a dispute arises, we may have to appear before a federal board of some kind. In such a situation we hand the matter over to someone else.

These are two examples of the difficulties which are brought about by the gradual intrusion of the federal government into the life of the average citizen, and in spite of my absolute agreement with the principle of the bill, I say it is not easy to define the dual role which may be played by a member of parliament; and I am not sure the bill deals adequately with it.

I note that at the end of the bill the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) assigns to Mr. Speaker a discretionary power to set down rules within which the legal profession may act. Perhaps this may be a way out. Speaking for myself, I go home on many week ends and I find my appointment book filled with the names of people who have made inquiries during the week. I have no idea whether they wish to see me on legal or on political business. When they start telling me their story and they reach a point at which there seems to be something involving the federal government, I ask them whether they wish to consult me as a lawyer or as a member of parliament. They ask me what the difference is, and I tell them that if they are consulting me as a member of parliament I cannot charge them anything. They say then "That's for me; I will consult you in that capacity". This may often lead such people into traps, because if they have become involved in some family matter in which they may require assistance, which I cannot give because of my position as member of parliament, I merely send them to someone else.

I point these matters out to indicate the difficulties faced by members of parliament who are practicing lawyers. I think that the purpose of the bill is good, and I would have no hesitation in supporting it, but I am sure that all hon. members who are practising lawyers would very much like to have some of these problems cleared up.

In conclusion I should like to say one thing. I think there should be no difficulty in the open and shut cases, when a lawyer is consulted and attempts to advise a client on a matter dealing directly with the federal government, such as immigration matters in which there is a direct appeal to a government body. In such cases the government body dealing with it is placed in a difficult position because the member of parliament-lawyer may harass the department as a solicitor, and also worry it as a member of parliament. In this event the poor official gets knocked on both sides. In such cases I believe the proposal in the bill can easily be applied. I think that the other matters can work themselves out, and certainly if the bill comes to a vote I will support it.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I enter this debate as a lawyer and as a member of parliament, and I support the bill. When I first came here two years ago I gave up my practice in law because I felt I could not carry on my duties as a member of parliament and as a lawyer at the same time. I was surprised to hear after I became a member of parliament that there were some lawyers in the house who acted on behalf of their constituents, before either labour or immigration boards, or made representations to ministers, and billed their clients for the work they had done as members of parliament. I must say I found this rather shocking and I wondered how this had remained so quiet for so long. I would have thought that the people who received bills for this work would have complained to parliament or to bar associations, or else that these complaints would have been brought up by opposition parties in the house.

Before I speak in support of the bill before us I should like to say a word or two on behalf of lawyers, because when the sponsor of the bill quoted the scriptures from St. Luke and made other remarks, he contributed to the myth—and I call it a myth advisedly—that lawyers in general are scoundrels, and if they are in politics they are even worse scoundrels. I say this is a myth because some of our most outstanding political figures over the centuries have been lawyers. I could refer to Abraham Lincoln, Mahatma Gandhi, Thomas More, and in Canada both Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir John A. Macdonald were lawyers. There are many others. As I say, some of those men who were lawyers also made great contributions to politics and justice.

I know that most bar associations, especially the bar association of the province of Quebec, are quite conscious of the fact some lawyers have done things which are not in accordance with good ethics. The lawyers themselves have set up discipline councils and codes of ethics. The lawyers have even set up officials whom they pay to investigate complaints made by clients and to hear complaints in public. In Quebec we call this official the "Syndic" of the bar. If a lawyer is found to have violated the ethics of his profession he can be suspended temporarily or permanently. Each year there are a number of lawyers who are suspended on this basis.

In addition we, as members of the bar in the province of Quebec and I suspect in other jurisdictions, contribute so much money each year to a fund to reimburse clients who have been robbed, gypped or defrauded in one way or another. There have been many clients who have received bad treatment from lawyers and who have been reimbursed. The vast percentage of lawyers willingly contribute to this fund to keep the good name of their profession before the public and to guarantee the public that they will be properly treated.

With respect to this bill to improve the role of lawyers in politics, I would say it is important that we enact legislation such as this, because we must do everything possible to convince the public we are here to serve them and the public interest alone. We must convince the public we are not using politics as a means of earning money in the private sense, or outside of our position as politicians. In this day and age being a member of parliament has become a full time job. I understand that some years ago before I was here parliament used to sit for a small part of the year. As we all know, parliament now sits at least nine months of the year. Even in the three months of recess we have to work with our constituents doing the many things to which the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) referred. Even when this house is not sitting we must act generally as ombudsmen for our constituents.

When I go home on the week ends I spend the time answering the phone calls of constituents and consulting with them. This is quite easy for a member who lives in Montreal, as I do, and may return to Montreal each week end to deal with this business. Members who come from the far reaches of the country and who get home only every third or fourth week end, have a lot more work of this type to do. Those outside parliament often do not realize how much work we have to do. Members have to attend to immigration matters, matters with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Chrétien), matters dealing with customs, with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. MacEachen), with the dairy commission and so on. All members have a great deal of work of this type and they have to spend a lot of time dealing with it.

Now, one might ask why, since parliament is sitting so often now and since members received a pay increase several years ago, members would want to charge their constituents for the work they are doing with government boards, and so on. I have referred to the fact that a few years ago the salaries of members of parliament were increased. Although I was not here at that time and had no intention of coming here, I supported the policy of increasing the salaries of members of parliament. I thought such a move would prevent these abuses. I thought if members were paid a decent salary, and expenses, they would not be tempted to work outside the house on other matters. I thought, too, that if you paid members low salaries you favoured the wealthier class in society who would be able to run for parliament, whereas those on lower incomes with large families could not afford to maintain a residence in Ottawa and a residence in their constituency. My main reason for supporting a salary increase for members was that if you wanted these men to do the job full time you had to pay them a decent salary, so they would do the job on a full time basis.

According to the hon. member for Kootenay West, however, there are some members who are charging their constituents for doing work for them. As a matter of fact, I think even without considering this provision of the law, we should try to find out who they are, and they should be brought before the appropriate committee. I am not suggesting we should again review the salaries of members of parliament. At the time, I thought it was too bad that the salaries of members were not tied to something which would take them out of the arena of politics. These salaries should be tied to a certain level of civil servant or a judge.

Every time it was thought appropriate to increase the salary of this level of civil servant or judge, you would automatically increase the salaries of members of parliament. This would take members' salaries out of the controversial area in which they have been. I am not suggesting that this be done now. The things you have to do for a constituent often involve legal or quasi legal procedures. Perhaps a lawyer has some advantage over any other type of person in doing these things because he has been dealing with boards and courts before he came to parliament. However, I believe a member should make it clear to his constituent that he does not receive payment for his work.

However, sometimes constituents come to you and want something done quickly. They want you to spend money. If you have to spend money to get something done, perhaps draft procedures for them or make long distance phone calls, then I believe you should make it clear to them that if there are expenses involved which cannot be covered by your parliamentary expenses the client would have to pay the expenses. Members should discourage clients from giving any fee.

All this involves the member of parliament functioning as some sort of ombudsman for his constituents. He should be able to do this in a much more efficient way than he does now. Really, the member of parliament has two functions. His first function is as a legislator, that is the preparation of government programs for the people. His other function is to act as a representative of the people in his constituency vis-à-vis the government and government agencies.

I submit that right now there are some inconsistencies in connection with the help given to members in doing this work. The member who represents the constituency of York-Scarborough, which is the largest constituency in Canada from the point of view of population, has only one secretary, as has the hon. member who, without casting any reflections upon him, represents Îles-de-la Madeleine which has about 14,000 constituents. Both members have the same office help and one secretary apiece, as have other members with the exception of ministers. It is a well known fact that members with large constituencies sometimes handle three or four times the correspondence of other members, in their second function as a member of parliament, and to do this work well they should have more help.

In the province of Quebec the provincial members are now given an additional expense account to maintain a secretary in their constituency. This is also the practice in the United States. Some members of the house have suggested from time to time that members of parliament should have offices in their constituency situate in a federal building, such as a post office or other building. A secretary based at this office could assist the constituents of the member and help do a better job to represent them in parliament. Right now this job is not always done as well as it should be.

Only last year, Mr. Speaker, members were given the right to charge for telephone calls made to their constituency. Previously members who lived in the far reaches of Canada had been receiving bills for $60 or $70 a month for telephone calls to their constituency. This has now been changed and members may phone their constituency at government expense.

Mr. Walker: Would the hon. member accept a question?

Mr. Allmand: Yes.

Mr. Walker: I am wondering whether the hon. member, who is obviously in agreement with the general principles of the bill, would agree that it is discriminatory to members of the House of Commons. Would he also agree with the elimination of the words in the second line, following the word "Commons", "who is admitted as a barrister or enrolled as a solicitor under the laws of a province"? In other words, the bill should refer to every member of parliament, not just to this particular group.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, this is not my bill, but the bill of the hon. member for Kootenay West. However, I certainly support that suggestion and it was my intention to raise that point. Not only lawyers could charge for their time in dealing with other matters; the same applies to accountants and other professions. Accountants have a lot of experience with income tax and revenue matters and in this respect are in the same position as lawyers. I do not know whether the hon. member for Kootenay West has found that other professions have abused their role as members of parliament by charging their constituents for services rendered, but I think everyone should be included in this measure of reform.

There are members of other professions who take advantage of their position as members of the House of Commons to make money in one way or another. The clause should also be amended to put these persons in the same position as notaries, barristers and solicitors. I do not think it is fair just to limit it to lawyers, though perhaps they have been the chief violators or abusers of their role. I think this is unfortunate because lawyers have been the leaders of reform in this area as well. They have been very conscious that their position as lawyers often leaves them open to situations where they could enter into dishonest or questionable activity. Because many lawyers are aware of this they have gone a long way to discipline the members of their profession and to take care of situations like this.

In conclusion, I support this bill, though I do not think it is a complete remedy of the evil that the hon. member attempts to eliminate.

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I should say at the outset that frankly I do not think very much of this bill. Perhaps no member of the house handles more immigration matters than I, as the representative of the metropolitan riding of Toronto Spadina.

Personally I have never made a charge for any assistance that I have rendered in immigration cases, and I hope that this will continue to be the case. I agree with the apparent attitude toward the bill taken by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker). In my opinion the bill is certainly discriminatory and I think this should be the opinion of all hon members. Why, for example, should it specify a barrister or an enrolled solicitor under the laws of a province, rather than simply a senator or a member of the House of Commons?

Mr. Walker: Because they were mentioned in St. Luke.

Mr. Ryan: Let me take the case of an engineer who is a sitting member. Let us say he is asked to deal with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is not his position on all fours with the position of the barrister or solicitor?

However, I do agree that the bill sponsored by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) is useful in that it brings this matter forward for discussion. I agree with the statement in the explanatory notes that a grievance does arise if a member of parliament makes a charge in an immigration case when he is doing nothing more than giving assistance as a politician. Many immigration cases require a great deal of legal assistance. I encounter this all the time in connection with the admission of people from the Orient. Many problems arise that often require long and detailed research. Birth certificates, marriage certificates and death certificates are required.

In China there is a custom that if a mother loses her child she replaces it with the child of another woman, even concealing the fact from her husband. There are all kinds of permutations and combinations that arise in immigration matters. Blood tests are taken by the department that often indicate that the child in question could not be the child of the parents. Radiological tests sometimes show that the bones of a child indicate that the child is too old to be the one referred to in the application. A member has to advise and assist a constituent who seeks to bring in such a person. Such constituent may have been making monthly payments for the support of the child for years, and he then discovers that the blood test shows that the child is not his.

A member of parliament does not have time, particularly if he is a full time member, to be of assistance in hard immigration cases; so it is only right and proper to call in the assistance of a solicitor, preferably from the constituent's own community. You have to call in a lawyer in many cases, if you are wise, to communicate with the constituents clearly.

[Mr. Ryan.]

I am out of sympathy with this bill and I agree with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Aiken) when he says that this bill is far too all embracing. It covers the waterfront. A lawyer, if this bill becomes law, will no longer be able to wind up his legal practice properly. I have been elected for six years and I am still executor for some estates. There are still accounts to pass, payments to look after and investments to take care of. I still have some commitments to companies and only gradually am I able to divest myself of them. This bill would bar a solicitor in my position from accepting any fee, directly or indirectly, or any benefit, as the result of acting in his professional capacity in respect of any matter, wheresoever originating, that is or is intended to be a private or public proceeding in the Senate or House of Commons or in committee of either house or that is, under an act of parliament, within the discretion of a minister of the crown or the governor in council to determine.

How far does that go? In many cases this bill would create grave anxiety and worry to a practising solicitor. I have continued to be a member of the Law Society of Upper Canada; I still have to pay $130 a year, so long as I am doing anything by way of legal practice. It is necessary to keep up a library and to pay the various law association dues. Generally, in the case of a partnership, it is necessary to play ball with your partners.

I have never heard it suggested that we should stop farmers from farming, car dealers from selling cars, consulting engineers from charging, doctors, who are hon. members, from practising medicine—

Mr. Aiken: Or from collecting subsidies.

Mr. Ryan: That is right. We do not try to stop professors from teaching or economists from practising economy. I suspect that the mover of the bill, who is often referred to as the Baron of the Kootenays, garners in the harvest from his vast holdings in the Columbia river basin, despite his being a highly honourable and respected member of parliament. I was shocked to learn that in the past there were a few cases where members of parliament, who were only part time members at that time, were charging exorbitant and unconscionable fees for the exercise of their political influence. That did not happen often and I do not think it is happening today at all.

As I say, in most cases I have made it a practice not to charge anything. I simply write to the minister or his parliamentary secretary or to an admissions officer, ask them to note my interest in the case and to keep me advised, and if something develops I advise the constituent. Perhaps I might give him a little advice or turn him over to a lawyer if I think it necessary. I do not think that this measure is needed at this time, in this country.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Having read this interesting bill put forward by the hon. member for Kootenay West, who is not a lawyer, and having listened to two or three other hon. members in this house who are lawyers, I am more than ever impressed by the incisive interjection which was made in this debate by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Walker), who suggested something which I think ought to be incorporated in the bill, if it comes before the house again.

Mr. Herridge: It is in the bill already, surely.

Mr. Groos: I strongly support the suggestion that we delete from the bill that it is only solicitors or barristers who are liable. I support the suggestion that we remove from the bill the words which read, "who is admitted as a barrister or enrolled as a solicitor under the laws of a province", as suggested by the hon. member for York Centre and, two lines lower down, after the word "acting", the four words "in his professional capacity".

I suggest that to remove all chance—

An hon. Member: To misunderstand?

Mr. Groos: —of indiscretions in this regard, we should also remove the last three lines of the bill.

Mr. Knowles: What is left?

Mr. Groos: What is left is very good.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour for consideration of private members business has expired.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 5, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SIMPLIFIED PROCEDURE FOR GRANTING TERRITORIAL LANDS

Hon. C. M. Drury (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-32 (from the Senate), to amend the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REGULATIONS AND ORDERS IN COUNCIL

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

February 2, 1968—The Minister of National Defence—That certain Regulations and Orders in Council relating to the unification of the Canadian Armed Forces laid before the House on Thursday, February 1, 1968, be referred to the Standing Committee on National Defence.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

VANCOUVER—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 536—Mr. McCleave:

1. Is the federal government or any department or agency thereof proposing to help in the building of a bridge in the Vancouver area?

2. If so, under what authority, on what formula will the contribution be based, and how much will it be?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1 and 2. On March 15th, 1967, in a press release, the federal government announced that a third crossing of Burrard Inlet was under consideration and that the government of Canada was prepared to make a contribution to the project which would reflect obligations which are essentially national rather than local in character. On October 4, 1967, Hon. Paul Hellyer, Minister of Transport, announced the formation of a federal technical committee to work with technical representatives of Vancouver and the North Shore municipalities toward the determination of the location and type of a new crossing of Burrard Inlet. Information as to the cost, amount of federal contribution, location, and other particulars, will not be known until the technical committee complete their work.

C.N. TELECOMMUNICATIONS OPERATIONS IN YUKON

Question No. 822—Mr. Nielsen:

1. For each of the years 1957 to 1967 inclusive, what was the total cost of the operations of Canadian National Telecommunications in the Yukon?

2. For each of the years 1965 and 1966, how many employees were employed by Canadian National Telecommunications in the Yukon and what was the total amount of salaries and/or wages paid to such employees, including any allowances similar to isolated post allowances?

3. For each of the years 1960 to 1967 inclusive, what was the cost of (a) the operation of the telephone system in the Yukon (b) the telegraph and telex systems in the Yukon?

4. For each of the years 1960 to 1967 inclusive, what was the total revenue to Canadian National Telecommunications from its operation within the Yukon?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1, 3 and 4. Because of the nature and extent of the telecommunications business, financial results of operations, including revenues and expenses by services, are not maintained on a provincial or territorial basis. To attempt to break out the information requested would involve arbitrary allocations of revenues and expenses in many cases and would entail a considerable amount of work and expense.

2. Average number of employees	1965	1966
	133	138
Total salaries, etc.	$834,202	$898,547

Difference in total salaries reflects wage awards granted employees as well as additional staff.

ACQUISITION OF HEAVY TRANSPORT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 841—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has the government on the recommendation of the Minister of National Defence decided to acquire a number of heavy transport aircraft known as the C-141 Lockheed Starlifter?

2. If so, how many such aircraft are to be bought, what is the schedule of delivery, and what was the date of the decision and that of the agreement to purchase?

3. What is the cost of each including spares normally associated with such a purchase?

4. Are any of these aircraft to be assigned the role of air refuelling for the CF-5 and what is the difference in cost of such an aircraft?

5. In order to complete this order, is the manufacturer faced with reopening its production line for this type and, if so, has the government been advised of any increase in the per copy price as the result of such production problems?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production as follows: 1. Yes, subject to negotiation of a satisfactory contract.

2. (a) Four aircraft are to be bought. (b) Delivery schedule: 2 aircraft, November 1970; 1 aircraft, December 1970; 1 aircraft, January 1971. (c) Treasury Board approval of the DND project was granted July 6, 1967 and Treasury Board authority to place a contract was granted July 11, 1967. (d) The United States air force offer to provide these aircraft was accepted July 14, 1967. This offer was conditional upon USAF being able to place a contract for manufacture of the aircraft with the United States contractor.

3. The estimated cost of each aircraft, including spares as provided by the USAF offer, was $10.3 million Canadian.

4. Yes, the specifications include a removable inflight refuelling installation.

5. The manufacturer would have to reopen many portions of the production line to fill this order. The United States government has advised the Canadian government that it is unable to make arrangements to provide the four aircraft and has offered an alternative proposal, which is now under consideration.

[Mr. Byrne.]

BLUE WATER BRIDGE COMMISSION

Question No. 858—Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert):

With reference to the Blue Water Bridge Commission (a) what were the total reimbursements paid to each of the four directors of the said Blue Water Bridge Commission (b) what benefits do the regular employees enjoy and with what companies (c) does the said commission have legal counsel and, if so, who and what have been the fees?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): (a) The reimbursements to each of the four Canadian commissioners for the calendar year ending December 31, 1967 for their expenses while travelling for the Blue Water Bridge Authority are as follows: Mr. John S. Blunt, $200.00; Mr. Thomas Milway, $1,339.70; Mr. Jack D. George, $1,194.40; Mr. Gregory A. Hogan, $287.71. (b) The benefits enjoyed by the regular employees and their dependants are as follows: i. hospitalization benefits with the Ontario Hospital Services Commission; ii. surgical-medical-obstetrical benefits with the Ontario Medical Services Insurance Plan; iii. group life and group health insurance with the London Life Insurance Company; iv. group retirement annuity plan with the London Life Insurance Company; (c) Yes. The legal counsel of the Blue Water Bridge Authority is the Sarnia firm of McCart, McEachran, George and Curran. The total fees for the calendar year ending December 31, 1967 were $308.50.

CANADIAN LOANS TO ENGLAND

Question No. 863—Mr. Grégoire:

1. Has Canada granted any loans to England since 1938?

2. What was the amount of each of these loans?

3. What was the interest rate on each of these loans?

4. What was the date of maturity of each of these loans?

5. What amounts were not paid back at the date of maturity?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes.

2, 3, 4 and 5. The Public Accounts of Canada reflect the information shown on the attached schedules, which also show details as to interest rates and repayments.

Questions

RESTORATION OF SALMON SPAWNING BEDS

Question No. 898—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has the Department of Fisheries or the Fisheries Research Board studied the possibilities for Canadian use of a specially designed machine called a "rifflesifter", which is being used in Alaska to clean silt out of natural salmon spawning beds, thereby making them again productive?

2. Are there any plans to test such a machine for restoring natural salmon spawning beds in British Columbia?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. The Department of Fisheries' technical section in the Pacific region has followed the development in Alaska of the "rifflesifter".

2. The device in its present form is not suitable for use in British Columbia streams. Proposed modifications to the "rifflesifter" are being followed with interest.

FISHERIES STATISTICS

Question No. 904—Mr. Crouse:

1. What was the total cost to the people of Canada of administering, in its entirety, the federal Department of Fisheries for 1965-66?

2. What was the total landed value to the fishermen for all species of fish landed in Canada during the same period?

3. What are the corresponding figures for the current year?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): 1. $34,525,757.

2. This information is not available on a fiscal year basis as part of it is collected on a calendar year basis only. For the calendar year 1965 the total landed value was $160.6 million.

3. Total expenditures April 1 to December 31, 1967, $33,770,827. Total landed value for 1967 is estimated at approximately $165 million.

FEDERAL BUILDING, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 910—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date will tenders be called for the construction of a new federal building at Amherst, Nova Scotia, and on what date is completion anticipated?

2. What is the estimated cost of this new building?

3. What is the estimated size of the lot, the building, and how many floors will be constructed?

4. What departments will make use of the building and how much space will be allocated to each of the departments?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. A precise date cannot be stated at this time; however, if construction can be started during the summer of 1968 it is possible that the building may be completed during the autumn of 1969.

2. It is not usual to publish the estimated cost of proposed construction before tenders have been received.

3. The lot is 31,405 square feet in size. The building as now conceived will be 152 feet long and 38 feet wide, with a basement, seven floors above grade, and a penthouse.

4. Indian Affairs and Northern Development, 3,730 square feet; the Unemployment Insurance Commission, 200 square feet; Manpower and Immigration, 1,875 square feet; Forestry and Rural Development, 12,470 square feet; and National Revenue, 690 square feet.

FAMILY ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS

Question No. 914—Mr. Mather:

What in dollars was the amount of Family Allowances paid to recipients in each province during 1966 and 1967?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In the fiscal years 1965-66 and 1966-67 the following amounts of family allowances were paid to recipients in each of the provinces and territories.

OUTSTANDING PERPETUAL BONDS

Question No. 924—Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway):

1. (a) What is the total number of outstanding Perpetual Bonds registered in the names of corporations, societies or other organizations (b) what is their total value (c) what percentage is this of (i) the total number of such bonds (ii) the total value?

2. (a) What is the total number of outstanding Perpetual Bonds registered in the names of individuals (b) what is their total value (c) what percentage is this of (i) the total number of such bonds (ii) the total value?

3. (a) What is the total number of outstanding Perpetual Bonds unregistered or in the hands of bearers (b) what is their total value (c) what percentage is this of (i) the total number of such bonds (ii) the total value?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): As of December 31st, 1967, the answers are: 1. (a) 4,779; (b) $20,127,800; (c) (i) 9.8 per cent; (c) (ii) 36.6 per cent.

2. (a) 11,059; (b) $12,859,100; (c) (i) 23.0 per cent; (c) (ii) 23.4 per cent.

3. (a) 32,362; (b) $22,013,100; (c) (i) 67.2 per cent; (c) (ii) 40.0 per cent.

CONTRACTS FOR POST OFFICE WINDOW WASHING, QUEBEC

Question No. 940—Mr. Laprise:

1. When and for what period were tenders last called for the washing of windows at the following post offices (a) La Sarre (b) Amos (c) Normetal (d) Senneterre (e) Macamic?

2. In what newspapers and on what dates did the said calls for tenders appear?

3. Under the contract, how often must the windows in these buildings be washed?

4. To whom were the contracts let and in what amount?

[Translation]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1, 2, 3, and 4: (a) La Sarre: Tender call for the washing of windows in the post office was advertised in Journal L'Echo d'Abitibi Ouest on May 26, 1967. A contract was awarded to Henri Tousignant at $2,600. for a two-year period for four washings per year. (b) Amos: Window washing done by D.P.W. employees. (c) Normetal: Window washing included in the general cleaning contract. (d) Senneterre: Window washing included in the general cleaning contract. (e) Macamic: Window washing included in the general cleaning contract.

GOVERNMENT SPACE IN PROPOSED NEW BUILDING, OTTAWA

Question No. 953—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Does the government propose to lease space in the new twin towers to be constructed by Campeau Construction and bounded by Queen, Lyon, Sparks and Kent Streets in the City of Ottawa?

2. If so, what agreements have been signed or undertakings given?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. There is no such proposal at this time.

2. No agreement has been made; and there have been no negotiations. No request for discussions has been received.

*MALVERN LAND DEVELOPMENT, TORONTO

Question No. 964—Mr. Stanbury:

1. How long have the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario owned the Malvern lands which they hold in partnership, and what has delayed development of these lands?

2. What progress has been made toward their development?

3. How many housing units in this project will be available for occupancy in 1968?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): 1. The Malvern lands were acquired in 1953. The development of the lands is dependent upon the provision of primary services—water, trunk sewers, roads—by metropolitan Toronto. Arrangements were made recently with metro for the provision of primary services to the western half of the area.

2. An engineering feasibility study was completed in 1967. Federal government approval was given in December 1967 to the appointment of consultants to plan the development. It is anticipated that the planning and engineering design can be completed and site work commenced before the end of 1968.

3. It is not expected that serviced land will be available for construction of housing prior to 1969.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the minister of external affairs I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. My question is in relation to the momentous and critical developments now under way in Viet Nam.

Has the government of Canada received any fresh information from the government of the United States as to the progress of the conflict? Has Canada been consulted by the United States in the last 24 hours as to Canada's continuing role in Viet Nam, either on the control commission or otherwise; and has Canada been asked to make any contribution, either diplomatically or otherwise, in the light of the tremendous conflict now taking place in Viet Nam?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think diplomatically I will refer this question to the acting minister, who is the Minister of Industry.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this is a long and rather complicated question, which I should like to take as notice and provide an answer tomorrow.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, if the acting minister of external affairs is going to take that question as notice, would he also ascertain whether the government continues to feel there is any basis in reality for any useful role for Canada at the present time on the international control commission. Has that body not been overtaken by events, thus necessitating a reassessment of Canada's position and policy in Viet Nam by this government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that the minister will want to consider the second question, but I should add that in my view this is more a statement of policy than a question.

COAL

REPRESENTATIONS AS TO DELIVERIES UNDER JAPANESE CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport regarding his recent announcement of a $650 million contract for the sale of British Columbia coal to certain interests in Japan. Has the minister had any telegrams or communications from trade unions claiming that the information they have is that half this coal will be shipped over the Great Northern through the United States? Has the minister received such complaints, and has he been able to assure the unions, and can he assure the house, that this information is inaccurate and that the coal will be shipped over an all-Canadian route?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not received any formal communication that I know of, except that this morning I think there was a telephone inquiry to my office to determine whether there was to be a meeting between myself and officials of the railroad, and I was able to reply to that in the negative. However, I have assured everyone I have talked to that the position of the federal government is that this coal should be carried over an all-Canadian route. If one examines the statistics and economics of the position it is impossible to come to any conclusion other than the one I reached and the one the government subscribes to, that it is in the best interest of Canadians for the coal to move over an all-Canadian route. The economic benefits to Canada are not sufficiently great unless that is the case.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This matter is most important to British Columbia. In view of the statement the minister just made may I ask him whether a press report is correct, that on a recent visit to Vancouver the minister said the federal government would not agree to exporting coal from the Crowsnest area unless that coal was carried over an all-Canadian route.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt if that question can be asked in this form. I realize the importance of the matter, but the hon. member knows he cannot ask questions about statements made outside the house, and he cannot ask the minister to verify the accuracy of press reports. Perhaps the hon. member might ask the question directly.

Mr. Winch: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate your advice. May I ask the Minister of Transport if it is the position of his department and the government that coal exported from the Crowsnest area to Japan must be carried over an all-Canadian route.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the press clipping the hon. member referred to but, as I indicated, the government thinks the coal should be carried over an all-Canadian route, and it is the government's intention for the coal to be carried on an all-Canadian route; because only in that way is there sufficient economic benefit to the citizens of this country who must undertake certain expenditures to facilitate the export.

Mr. Winch: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister to explain what he means by the term "should" or "must" be carried on an all-Canadian route?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is entering into debate. I think the supplementary question is not acceptable.

Mr. Douglas: I thank the minister for his reply, and I think the house will agree that the coal should be carried on an all-Canadian route. Is the minister taking any steps to see that Kaiser Mines Limited, the corporation which negotiated the contract, will ship this coal over an all-Canadian route?

Mr. Hellyer: Officials of the company are coming to see me at the end of the week, I think, or at the beginning of next week to give me an opportunity to underline for them the government's position, which is that the company ought to make sure that the coal is shipped over an all-Canadian route.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the house whether it is correct to say that the government undertook various expenditures at Roberts Bank, British Columbia, in order to facilitate the export of this coal over an all-Canadian route?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question suggests its own answer.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): My question is supplementary to one previously asked of the Minister of Transport. There seems to be some doubt about when the minister will be conferring with representatives of the British Columbia government on the development of new port facilities in British Columbia to facilitate the shipment of coal to Japan. Can the minister inform the house whether such a meeting has been scheduled for the near future?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I expect to be meeting with the premier of British Columbia tomorrow or Wednesday to discuss this situation.

[Later:]

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I believe that role is being taken today by the Minister of Transport. My question arises from an earlier answer by the minister to the effect that the government is embarking on the laudable policy of transporting Canadian coal via a Canadian route. Will the minister use his influence with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to see whether the same laudable policy can be followed to transport Canadian gas to Canadian customers?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED NEW SYSTEM OF CONTINENTAL AIR DEFENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I should like to address a question to the minister of defence. What proposals have been made by the United States government for Canadian participation in the new system of air defence which is contemplated for the North American continent?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): No proposals as yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question. Who are the Canadian representatives on the joint continental defence system integration planning staff which Mr. McNamara, United States secretary for defence, announced had been established?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): We have appointed a group of people from the Department of National Defence consisting of specialists in research and development and including of course, representatives from the Defence Research Board. The Department of External Affairs is also represented, I believe. An announcement was made on this subject last week.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the minister how many Canadian officials both civil and military are included on this joint planning group?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Offhand I would say about ten; some figure like that.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Can the minister give some indication as to the date by which the government must make a policy announcement with respect to the new proposals for Canadian-United States air defence?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): There is no firm date set, Mr. Speaker. We are talking here about technological developments which afford many options to the governments of Canada and the United States. This is a development which is envisaged for the early seventies and I do not know that we have to make any immediate decision. It is necessary to study the problem, consider the options, determine what kind of part Canada can take and, after that, negotiate. It would then be up to the Canadian government to make a decision on the proposals we submit.

Inquiries of the Ministry

DOWNSVIEW, ONT.—INVESTIGATION INTO PLANE CRASH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Walker (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister assure the house that every avenue of investigation is being undertaken in connection with the unfortunate plane crash at Downsview airport in my constituency last Friday night?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the most regrettable accident at Downsview is being investigated by an accident investigation team. The pilot was a qualified Tracker aircraft captain and was engaged in keeping his flying qualifications up to date. Accidents of this nature emphasize the problem of air fields near built up areas. In the case of Downsview there were over 50,000 landings and take-offs at the airfield last year, and I am informed that 55 per cent of these were by civilian aircraft. We are examining these problems very closely, and this was a subject for discussion at defence council this morning. In addition we have undertaken a review of all flying activities at Downsview.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to pay tribute to those servicemen who lost their lives in this unfortunate accident. It is a tragic loss, but we can be very thankful that others did not lose their lives.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Why was the naval Tracker aircraft, which crashed at Downsview, on that particular flight on which no training for its particular function could be secured?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): As I said, Mr. Speaker, it was practising flying. There is no particular requirement for a naval plane to practise only over the sea. This was just a routine flying and operational trip.

Mr. Harkness: As a supplementary question, does the minister not think trips of this sort are really unnecessary, in that the flying training required can be secured from the base at which these aircraft are normally found?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for an expression of views from the minister, and I do not think this is in order.

[Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne).]

SHIPPING

MAINTENANCE OF OPERATION OF PORT OF MONTREAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

What steps does the government intend to take so as to prevent Montreal harbour from closing down?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Instructions are standing that every effort should be made to keep the channel open so the ice can flow to the sea, and to provide whatever facilities are available for entrance to the port of Montreal. Our icebreakers are busily engaged in this undertaking.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Has the minister any information with regard to the charges by mayors of municipalities in this area that before the icebreaking there was no flooding?

Mr. Hellyer: If the hon. member means that before we began icebreaking there was no flooding, that is not correct. If he would get a copy of the information I made available to the house last week he would find that flooding was much more serious in the area before icebreaking was undertaken on the river than it is at the present time, and I think he would be convinced that keeping the ice broken and a channel through to the sea is essential to the interests of the people who live alongside the river.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Is the minister not aware that we are talking about indiscriminate icebreaking?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Can he tell us whether the government has reached a decision concerning indemnities to the victims of the floods which, this year, have hit worse than in past years? Does the government intend to do something in that direction?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: I would not care to be too dogmatic in this area without consulting my officials, but since the flooding was really due to the severity of the winter it would, I believe, in the normal way be called an act of God, and I doubt whether any liability would be attached to the federal government with respect to it. But I say this without prejudice to any rights which may exist.

MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. While the Minister of Transport is looking after icebreaking and flooding in the St. Lawrence, could he tell us what is the present situation regarding the Montreal dock problem, and whether the government has any plans to bring about a settlement?

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Ontario, who is a former minister of labour, knows that at the present moment the I.L.A. and the shipping federation are in the midst of negotiating a new collective agreement, and a conciliator has been placed at the disposal of both parties to facilitate communication. We can only assume that the talks are going along in a very orderly fashion.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—INQUIRY AS TO CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister is aware that it is only a few days until the normal time arrives for negotiating sugar beet contracts in Ontario. Can he state whether the government is initiating any plans in an attempt to reopen the Chatham sugar refinery?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have not yet had any negotiations with the growers. I would think from press reports that some consideration is being given at the provincial level in this regard, and we will be pleased to discuss any suggestions with the province or with the growers.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS TO JUVENILE DELINQUENTS ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In the light of the importance of the federal-provincial conference taking place at the moment does the minister have anything to report to the house about the progress of the conversations he is having with the provinces relating to the Juvenile Delinquents Act?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the officials in my department met with the officials of the provinces, and we are now in the process of contacting voluntary associations throughout the country asking them for their views on this important matter. We will then proceed to draft a new bill.

Mr. Howard: Can the minister give any timetable indication of when this might be ready?

Mr. Pennell: I hope that very early in the spring the drafting will have been completed.

FINANCE

INVESTMENT IN U.S. SECURITIES BY CANADIAN MUTUAL FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance so perhaps I may direct it to whoever is acting minister. It arises from recently published figures indicating that Canadian mutual funds are holding 45 per cent of their investments in United States securities as compared to 16 per cent in 1965.

I should like to ask whether the government is satisfied that everything possible is being done to encourage the investment of Canadian mutual funds in Canadian securities and to restore confidence in Canadian securities.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member is asking the question in such a way that it is argumentative. He is asking whether the government is satisfied that certain action is satisfactory. That is not in order.

Mr. Aiken: I wish to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I did not intend to do this, but I should like to point out that the form of my question is a form commonly used in Westminster; that is, whether the government is satisfied that everything possible is being done. I would not like to have the question ruled out of order on the basis that it is improper.

Mr. Speaker: That is the only basis on which I can rule it out of order.

Mr. Aiken: Then, Mr. Speaker, with all deference may I ask that you consider whether the form of the question in the way I directed it is in fact proper.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may wish to place that problem in the hands of the committee which is to visit Westminster very soon.

[Later:]

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will allow me to rephrase my earlier question to the Acting Minister of Finance. What action is the government taking to remedy the situation concerning investment by Canadian mutual funds in United States securities?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we will have to look at the figures presented by my hon. friend. I should like therefore to take his question as notice.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

CANCELLATION STAMP PROMOTING ANTI-SMOKING CAMPAIGN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Postmaster General. I wish to apologize for not having given him notice ahead of time, but I just received the information as I came into the house. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether the same courtesy and consideration in respect of advertising by means of a cancellation stamp which has been extended to the Department of National Health and Welfare in its campaign against smoking will be extended to industry by his department.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think the question might very well be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Speaker, I should like to pursue the question at ten o'clock.

[Mr. Aiken.]

CANADA PENSION PLAN

REQUESTS FOR EXCLUSION ON RELIGIOUS GROUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the charming parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, about which I gave her notice three days ago. Has the minister or any person in his department received any representations from certain groups in Canada which wish to be excluded from the provisions of the Canada Pension Plan on religious grounds? If so, what action has been taken to date?

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring this important question to the attention of the minister.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY INTO RAILWAY COSTING METHODS IN PROPOSED LINE ABANDONMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will information and studies be presented to the hearing on railway costing which is getting under way today, other than the costing analysis put forward by the railways under the old order 123994 of the now defunct board of transport commissioners?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that there certainly will be additional information placed before the board and that this is the purpose of the hearing.

Mr. Dinsdale: Will this include the special studies which have been undertaken by several government departments?

Mr. Hellyer: I could not answer that question specifically, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FERRY SERVICE, SAINT JOHN, N.B.-DIGBY, N.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask the minister whether he can relieve the anxiety and disappointment of the people of western Nova Scotia over the announcement made on Friday to the effect that the transport committee will not be journeying to Digby. Could he offset that announcement by a positive announcement that negotiations have been concluded between the C.P.R. and the government? Will an announcement be made in respect of this perennial problem concerning a gap in our transportation system?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure everyone is sorry that the committee will not be able to visit that part of western Nova Scotia. For many good reasons it would be a delightful journey, but I understand this is not possible due to the time available.

However, I can tell him that negotiations are continuing at a pace which is, if anything, accelerating. There is a level of rising expectation in so far as these negotiations are concerned, and I sincerely hope to be able to make an announcement much sooner than my hon. friend might think.

Mr. Nowlan: Will the minister use his energy and enthusiasm to prevail upon the chairman of the transport committee to reconsider the retrograde step that committee has taken in respect of the transportation problems of half the province?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made a suggestion to the minister which I assume has been noted.

UNITED NATIONS

REQUEST FOR CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON COMMISSION ON STATUS OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to either the Acting Prime Minister or the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the question of studies regarding the status of women in member countries is on the agenda of the United Nations commission on the status of women, will the Canadian government appoint a Canadian to represent this country at the meetings of that which are now in progress?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I will make inquiries in that regard, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LACK OF BILINGUAL CONDUCTORS ON MONTREAL-OTTAWA TRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Can the hon. minister tell us why none of the three conductors on board the trains of the C.N.R. between Montreal and Ottawa can speak a single word of French, on the eve of the federal-provincial conference on bilingualism?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that this question is not necessarily urgent. If, in the opinion of the hon. member it is an urgent matter, because of certain circumstances, he can always give notice according to the provisions of standing orders.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, it is a question which has been asked for five years and to which we have always received answers reflecting the same good faith without correcting the situation in any way. I wanted to take this opportunity to ask the question.

Mr. Speaker: That is what I understood.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, I wonder if the minister could not be asked to answer in such a way that the situation may be corrected as soon as possible.

[English]

TRADE

PROPOSED U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON WOOD PRODUCTS IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, as a member from British Columbia which has a great forestry industry I assure you that my question is important and urgent. I had hoped to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but in view of his absence and the urgency of this matter I should like to direct the question to the parliamentary secretary or to the Acting Prime Minister. There have been recent reports to the effect that a United States government committee is recommending a reduction in imports of wood products from Canada. Has this been noted by the Canadian government, and is any action being taken to make Canada's position known to the United States regarding this reduction of log, lumber and pulp exports to that country?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had replies to six questions concerning the Department of Trade and Commerce but not to that one. I will answer it tomorrow.

[English]

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES FROM BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether his discussions with officials of Air Canada have yet resulted in an agreement by Air Canada to discontinue transfers of employees from the Winnipeg base to Montreal for the coming year?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am afraid the answer is no, Mr. Speaker. I have had some discussions with those officials during which they pointed out that there is an agreement with the unions under which they are operating. I think there will be negotiations between the unions and the company, and I hope this situation can be resolved to the satisfaction of everyone involved.

Mr. Orlikow: I should like to ask the minister what happened to the government policy which he enunciated in Winnipeg some time ago to the effect that if transfers are made—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a statement of policy, and I suggest that cannot be asked at this time.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SHORTAGE OF BILINGUAL OFFICERS ON PARLIAMENT HILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would have an important and quite urgent question to ask, in the circumstances, to the Solicitor General, since he is responsible to the house for the R.C.M.P.

Can he tell us how it is that while the federal-provincial conference on bilingualism is in progress, the delegates are greeted on parliament hill by R.C.M.P. constables who do not know a single word of French?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is left unanswered; he knows that he cannot press for an answer.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I think the Solicitor General was ready to answer, but he had not yet heard the complete interpretation. I am convinced that if the interpreter were allowed enough time to translate my question, the Solicitor General would answer.

[English]

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is a well known fact that the force is not up to strength in bilingual officers. We have been conducting an extensive recruiting campaign, and as soon as members are available they will be assigned to the hill.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

OBSERVERS FROM TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENTS AT CURRENT CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the Canadian territory north of the sixtieth parallel will the minister inform the house whether representatives of the Yukon and Northwest territorial governments were invited to sit in as observers at the constitutional conference?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I understand there are representatives in attendance.

INDUSTRY

REPORTED PRESSURE TO LOCATE IN ONTARIO RATHER THAN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, on January 31 in my absence the hon. member for Villeneuve asked the Prime Minister whether officials of the Department of Industry had applied pressure on a firm to locate in Ontario rather than in the province of Quebec. I have had extensive inquiries made and am satisfied that no pressure has been exerted on any company, and in particular on the company referred to by the mayor of Hull, namely the Société Française d'Optique et de Mécanique to locate in Ontario rather than Quebec.

I may note in passing that the company did indicate through the news media that its reasons for locating in Ontario rather than Quebec were reasons other than those alleged by Mayor D'Amour.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR JOINT MEETING OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND DEFENCE COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence why, when there has been an agreement in respect of a joint meeting of the external affairs and defence committees in reference to NATO and NORAD, as well as an agreement in respect of Q.R. and O's, no resolution has yet appeared on the order paper.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The agreement was not unanimous, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Winch: I understood a decision was made that there should be such a reference to both committees. Are we now being told that these committees will not meet?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member does not expect me to refer to military matters or things committed to the defence committee at this time to the committee on external affairs. My predecessor undertook to refer to the defence committee the Q.R. and O's which would be changed as a result of unification. I was only complying with this commitment when I referred those to the committee.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

QUEEN MARY HOSPITAL, MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON BEEF SUPPLIED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway asked a question with reference to low grade meat supplied to the Queen Mary veterans hospital in Montreal. I now have that information. On or about December 1, I am informed, the Queen Mary veterans hospital received a consignment of approximately 1,500 lbs. of beef bought through the Department of Defence Production from recognized meat retailers. This meat was stamped as high grade and subsequently turned out to be very tough although quite fit for human consumption.

On December 16 the next consignment of beef was received. Miss Kitty Freeman, chief dietitian, considered it was low grade in spite of the fact that it was marked "blue brand" and called in the agriculture inspector and the Department of Defence Production representative, who agreed. The meat was impounded and a new consignment of good, high grade beef was supplied. I believe the action of Miss Freeman should be commended.

TRADE

NICKEL—REQUEST FOR BAN ON EXPORT FOR USE IN VIET NAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, another question came to mind during my period of meditation. I would like to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Has he received any representations from the Voice of Women or similar organizations urging the government to prohibit the export of Canadian nickel to be used in the war in Viet Nam?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, and certainly personally, I have not received any such representations. I do know that the Voice of Women organization has been very active in trying to bring a halt to hostilities in Viet Nam, but I have not heard of this particular démarche in respect of nickel.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed, from Friday, February 2, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-153, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on Friday last clause 16 as amended was under discussion. Shall clause 16 as amended carry?

Clause agreed to.

Canadian Policy on Broadcasting

On clause 17—Powers exercisable by executive committee after consultation.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak to clause 17. I was not one of the members of the committee who asked that this clause be stood—clause 19 is the first one I asked to have stood after clause 3—and I am indebted to the committee for having stood it. The marginal note of clause 17 reads "Powers exercisable by executive committee after consultation" and subclause (1) provides as follows:

In furtherance of the objects of the council, the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may

(a) issue broadcasting licences for such terms not exceeding five years and subject to such conditions related to the circumstances of the licensee

(i) as the executive committee deems appropriate for the implementation of the broadcasting policy enunciated in section 2 of this act—

However, paragraph (b) also says:

—the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may

(b) upon application by a licensee, amend any conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to him;

I am the member for a Toronto riding, and it is only a few short months ago that quite an uproar developed in the Toronto-Barrie area over this very question of amending a licence for a broadcasting station. This involved the efforts being made by the owners of a television station in Barrie to move the station from Barrie to roughly the area of Palgrave, about 20 miles to the southwest of Barrie, which would have given them access to the Toronto market. When I say "Toronto market" I am speaking as a businessman and not as a viewer in the Toronto area of programs that are now available in that centre.

Such an uproar developed that the then minister of transport did not sign the paper which would have given them the right to move their station from Barrie to Palgrave and thus interfere with the reception of two very popular television broadcasting stations in the Niagara peninsula, in Niagara Falls and the city of Toronto.

The question I have to ask, and I am looking for a direct answer, concerns clause 17 in this new bill, which says that in furtherance of the objects of the council the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may upon application by a licensee amend any conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to him. One of the conditions, surely, of a licence is that the licensee shall erect his broadcasting station in a certain area in order to service a certain district, because if he is not limited in his licence to the district he is going to serve he will be interfering with the electromagnetic waves that have been assigned to other broadcasters somewhat distant from him.

[The Chairman.]

It is quite evident to people in the Toronto-Barrie area—and I emphasize both Barrie and Toronto—that under this clause the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may upon application by a licensee amend any conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to him, without any public hearing of any kind. You may just wake up in the morning and find that the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, have amended a broadcasting licence upon the application of a licensee.

In Barrie there is a licensee. He has a licence to operate a broadcasting station in Barrie, with a satellite in Parry Sound and I believe a second satellite in either the village of Haliburton or the village of Minden, but in any event in the district of Haliburton.

Is there to be no public hearing on such a thing as this? It has been said that the Bourbons never remember, and they never forget. Surely to heaven this cabinet must have a little recollection of the situation that developed some months ago. It was rough enough that a sure shoo-in for a ministerial post did not get it because of the uproar that developed. Surely the Bourbons on the front benches have not forgotten that episode, or should I remind them of it?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Clause 17 reads:

In furtherance of the objects of the council, the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may,

(b) upon application by a licensee, amend any conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to him;

There is more I wish to say in connection with clause 17, but I should like to ask the Secretary of State if our interpretation of these words is not correct, that the operator of a station can move it anywhere upon making application, provided he is able to convince the executive committee which will consult with the part-time members—and they can do that on the quiet, in star chamber proceedings—or would such an amendment not be possible except after a public hearing?

Miss LaMarsh: I refer the hon. gentleman to clause 19, subclause (2).

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. lady for that fast answer. I am very much aware of clause 19. This is one clause that I asked be stood. Since we are now discussing clause 17 and the hon. lady has referred me to clause 19, I presume I can also discuss clause 19. I was going to discuss it anyway, and I feel the two should be discussed coincidentally rather than seriatim because there is a direct connection between them. Clause 19 is one to which I would be speaking at length, and it reads in part as follows:

A public hearing shall be held by the council—

Now, there is a forthright statement if you ever heard one.

The Chairman: Order, please. I point out to the hon. member for York-Humber that the clause before the committee now is clause 17. I hope he will confine his remarks to that clause.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I tried to draw your attention to the fact that the Secretary of State referred me to clause 19 when I asked her a question about clause 17. Did you not hear her? I was discussing the application of clause 19 to clause 17 after the Secretary of State referred me to clause 19 when I aked her a question about clause 17. I was discussing clause 17 under the umbrella provided by clause 19, and in response the Secretary of State gave this fast reply, for which I want to thank her, referring me to clause 19 which has a direct bearing on clause 17. Clause 19 says that a public hearing shall be held by the council. Did you ever hear a more forthright, flat-footed statement than that? But then in subclause (2) to which the Secretary of State referred me, there is that little two letter word "if". The subclause reads:

(2) A public hearing shall be held by the council—

There you have that forthright statement.

—if the executive committee is satisfied that it would be in the public interest to hold such a hearing—

If they are not satisfied it would be in the public interest to hold such a hearing, then a public hearing is not held. There are the critical words. In the first part of clause 19 we find that a public hearing shall be held by the council. If you read that part quickly you do not find the little two letter word "if". There are a lot of people in the Toronto-Barrie area who are interested in the Toronto-Barrie situation. We have seen this word "if" for a considerable period of time. I must presume the Secretary of State has read clause 19, subclause (2), because the answer she gave me was "Please read clause 19(2)". This is the same authority that referred me to the decision of the supreme court of British Columbia. After that I did refer to the decision of the supreme court of British Columbia, to which my attention had been called by the Secretary of State, who is a lawyer. I am quite prepared now to talk on clause 19(2), having been referred to it again by the Secretary of State, who is a lawyer. You will notice that clause 19(1) provides that a public hearing shall be held.

The Chairman: Order, please. Again I must remind the hon. member for York-Humber that clause 17 is the one before the committee at the moment.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Cowan: Then I ask—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might interject at this point. I am interested in this particular matter, and I am also interested in clause 17 which gives the council the absolute right to hold a hearing or not to hold a hearing, in its discretion. I do believe that clauses 17 and 19 should be considered together; otherwise we will pass clause 17 and be met with this situation in clause 19. I would ask for a little leniency in this situation and I too ask to have the matter clarified.

The Chairman: The problem, of course, is that the standing order says we must consider the clauses in order. If it is the wish of the committee to consider clauses 17 and 19 together, then of course the Chair has no objection.

Miss LaMarsh: No; follow the rules.

The Chairman: There would have to be unanimous consent to that procedure. We are considering clause 17.

Mr. Cowan: In connection with clause 17 I ask the Secretary of State if it is not correct that under this wording a public meeting does not have to be held to make an amendment to the conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to the holder of a licence; and I refer to 17(1) (a) and (b). Is there not going to be any answer from the treasury benches? I make the flat-footed statement that the Bourbons never remember and the Bourbons never forget. The cabinet is going to have the situation develop again in the Toronto-Barrie area that developed in that area a short time ago. No wonder the people ask who paid the Liberal party's debts after the last election when they see this consideration for business interests. Then we read—

Miss LaMarsh: I rise on a matter of privilege, which does not apply to me so much as to members in good standing in the Liberal party of Canada. I find, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member who makes great efforts to be offensive has really overreached himself today. He has impugned individuals who have been appointed by the government of Canada; he has impugned the whole process by which many individuals—most of them happen to have Conservative leanings, but that is not really very important—obtain licences in this country.

He has suggested that there was some sort of a pay-off in respect of what happened in connection with channel 3. I am sure the hon. member's memory goes back to the fact that nothing happened and, in fact, channel 3 is where it was originally licensed, in Barrie. On behalf of every Liberal in Canada and the Liberal party of Canada, who have nothing but contempt for this man, I believe he must now be required to withdraw the slur he has cast upon the honour of every one of them.

Mr. Cowan: I have impugned nothing. I reported what is publicly said in the Toronto-Barrie area. If you look at Hansard when it comes down tomorrow, Mr. Chairman, you will find that is the way I phrased it.

In this clause 17 we read:

(1) In furtherance of the objects of the council, the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may,

(a) issue broadcasting licences for such terms not exceeding five years and subject to such conditions related to the circumstances of the licensee.

(i) as the executive committee deems appropriate for the implementation of the broadcasting policy enunciated in section 2 of this act—

Then subclause (b) reads:

(b) upon application by a licensee, amend any conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to him—

This clause simply continues the situation which now exists whereby a licensee can have his licence amended without any public hearing, without any evidence being heard from those who may be opposed to such a move, without any evidence being heard from those who may be in favour of such a move. Why does the cabinet, in bringing in a brand new radio or television bill setting up a brand new broadcasting policy for Canada, continue in a rut? Why do they continue a provision whereby upon his mere signature, until this bill is passed, the Minister of Transport can amend the terms of a licence that has been granted to a person who applied for a television station or a radio station in one centre and may want to move it to another?

Under the provisions set out elsewhere in this bill—if I refer to them I will be told we are not on that clause, but I shall refer to them later—we are told that a public hearing shall be held. But I want to refer to that little word "if". I understand I cannot quote from other parts of the bill when talking on clause 17, but if my recollection is correct there is a clause that provides that a public hearing shall be held by the council if it is satisfied that it would be in the public interest. I ask, what is a public hearing that is not held? I was complaining a little while ago about the fact that although broadcasters are given the right to express themselves the people of Canada will be forbidden to hear them. It appears that the council is going to hold a public hearing, but only if it decides that it is in the public interest so to do.

Clause 17 simply continues the provision that it may be possible—and I would not doubt for one moment that this right will be exercised by present licensees—to have the executive committee, after consultation with the part time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, amend licences without any public hearing being held, without even consultation with all the part time members. The council has only to be in consultation with members who are in attendance at a meeting of the council.

How in the name of heaven can this committee pass clause 17, which allows these changes to be made in secret, when it will be asked to move on to and pass another clause which ostensibly calls for public hearings but which has that little word "if" in the clause that could kill the public hearing? I believe that clause 17 should definitely state that a public hearing must be held upon the amendment of a licence.

I have been talking about the Barrie situation because this is a lively subject in the Toronto-Barrie area, but let us consider further clause 17 (1) (a). It reads:

17. (1) In furtherance of the objects of the council, the executive committee, after consultation with the part time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may

(a) issue broadcasting licences—

What is the use? No public hearing will be held, or it is not necessary to have a public hearing. The council might well say that in furtherance of the objects of the council, which is not the public's concern, the executive committee, after consultation with the part time members in attendance at a meeting of the council held a couple of weeks ago, issued a broadcasting licence for such term, not exceeding five years, as the executive committee deemed appropriate for the implementation of the broadcasting policy that is enunciated in clause 2 of the bill. I suggest that clause 17 makes a complete shambles of any effort to convince the public that public hearings are going to be held with regard to the issuance of broadcasting licences or for the amendment of broadcasting licences already in the hands of licensees. I do not agree with the terms of this clause at all. Public hearings should be held. This clause is a nefarious one.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

On clause 19—Hearings.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the four clauses that I asked to be stood when you were proceeding through the bill to see what unanimity there was on the clauses as a whole, many of which were passed. My original purpose in asking that clause 19 be stood had to do with C.A.T.V. matters.

I referred to C.A.T.V. in connection with clause 3. I also referred to clause 19, pointing out that it was possible that the council would not hold public hearings in regard to applications for C.A.T.V. licences. In discussing the previous clause I stated, and I now repeat, that it is going to be possible for the board of broadcast governors to issue licences to C.A.T.V. stations, a fact that the C.A.T.V. operators would welcome were they going to be issued after a public hearing.

Up to now, Mr. Chairman, a C.A.T.V. application has been nice and private. Even the applicants do not know the discussion that is held following which they are pitched on to the ash heap with their application. These applicants felt that if they were given a public hearing under this new bill, then compared to the Star Chamber methods of handling their applications up to now and as at this date it would be an improvement.

Clause 19 provides that a public hearing shall be held by the council. Boys, this is really something. The wording is "shall be held". In other words, it must be held, it has to be held. That is the meaning of the word "shall". That is why the word is to be found in a lot of our laws. However, Mr. Chairman, we find that the whole heart of the meaning of that wording is cut out when we come down to subclause 2 of clause 19, which provides:

A public hearing shall be held by the council, if the executive committee is satisfied that it would be in the public interest to hold such a hearing, in connection with

(a) the amendment of a broadcasting licence;

If I cannot refer forward from clause 17 to clause 19 when I am talking on clause 17, then I wonder whether I can refer back to clause 17 when I am talking on clause 19. I was told I could not refer forward and perhaps I will be told that because clause 17 has been passed I cannot refer to a matter that has already been decided by a committee of the whole house. However, I am going to refer back unless somebody wants to cut me off. As I say, Mr. Chairman, clause 19 provides that a public hearing shall be held by the council. Then according to subelause 2:

A public hearing shall be held by the council, if the executive committee is satisfied that it would be in the public interest to hold such a hearing, in connection with

(a) the amendment of a broadcasting licence;

That, Mr. Chairman, is just what the owners of the Barrie licence want, an amendment to their broadcasting licence, which now permits them to broadcast in Barrie with satellites in the Haliburton district and Parry Sound.

Reference back to clause 17, which was carried a moment ago, discloses the use of the same phrase:

In furtherance of the objects of the council, the executive committee, after consultation with the part-time members in attendance at a meeting of the council, may—

Again, in quiet.

(b) upon application by a licensee, amend any conditions of a broadcasting licence issued to him;

That is confirmed in clause 19. To prove they mean it, they are willing to put in black and white twice the statement that a licence can be amended in private by the council, this new organization that is going to be set up, if the executive committee is satisfied that it would be in the public interest not to hold a public hearing.

I suggest that this is a denial of the democratic process. These T.V. licences are worth a great deal of money. Lord Thomson, who is one of the business brains produced by this country, has stated that a television licence is the same as a licence to print money. So the cabinet is going to make it possible to issue in secret licences to print money. If an operator thinks he is not making enough money in the little area for which he has been granted a licence, then he can apply for an amendment and his application can be dealt with privately by this new broadcasting council.

Although my references have been to the Barrie-Toronto situation they apply also to C.A.T.V. applications in that the C.A.T.V. operators will be quite happy if they can be assured that there will be public hearings on their applications. They are not too certain there will be in view of the fact that a C.A.T.V. installation has now been defined as a broadcasting undertaking. While we have been told that a public hearing shall be held by the council in connection with the issuance of a broadcasting licence, under subclause 2 a public hearing shall be held only if the executive committee of the council is satisfied that it will be in the public interest. If they are not satisfied that it will be in the public interest, the C.A.T.V. application will be knifed, just as it is being knifed now in meetings that are being held informally between the Department of Transport and the Board of Broadcast Governors.

Since we are discussing clause 19 and not discussing the subclauses seriatim, I wish to refer specifically to clause 19 (7). Subclause 7 reads:

The council has, in respect of any public hearing under this section, as regards the attendance, swearing and examination of witnesses thereat, the production and inspection of documents, the enforcement of its orders, the entry of and inspection of property and other matters necessary or proper in relation to such hearing, all such powers, rights and privileges as are vested in a superior court of record.

It was brought out at the hearings of the broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts committee of the House of Commons that if these powers are granted to the new radio and television council they will have the right to enter property or to send people in to look for documents. They will have the right to enforce the calling of witnesses and the production of evidence as they may demand.

I ask you, is it necessary to enshrine this new radio and television council on such a basis that we may never be able to question anything they may do? Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, in looking at subclause 7 please notice the final words, "in a superior court of record". I asked some lawyer members of this House of Commons, inasmuch as I am not a lawyer, what a superior court of record is and they informed me that a superior court of record is the same as a supreme court. Well, this absolutely flabbergasted me, if I may use such a term. Why should the new body which is to control radio and television be given powers equal to those of the supreme courts of the ten provinces? Somebody is going to tell me: This is only in respect of a public hearing. Bear in mind that everything a superior court does is done at a public hearing. This would mean that the radio and television council would have the same authority as the superior court, and I for one cannot see why they should be put in that position.

To carry it further, Mr. Chairman and members of the House of Commons, it is absolutely unbelievable that sane people should put such a clause into the radio and television legislation in light of the meaning of citation 251 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition, 1943. Citation 251 reads:

The Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment.

The authority for that is given in House of Commons debates for 1928, page 3106.

I have gone to the trouble of looking up page 3106 of the Canadian House of Commons debates for 1928. You will find, if you look it up for yourself, that on that day there was a discussion on third reading of a private bill respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada which was seeking at that time to raise its capital from $75 million to $150 million. One of the speakers on that private bill on May 16, 1928 was Mr. T. L. Church, an ex-mayor of Toronto and at that time the member for Toronto Northwest.

Notice the mild comments that Mr. Church made on the Bell Telephone Company bill. We people from Toronto are more accustomed to calling him Tommy than Mr. Church. I will read to the committee some remarks found on pages 3105 and 3106 of the debates for May 16, 1928. Tommy said:

> It would be interesting to know what regulations the Board of Railway Commissioners have over the issue of stock by this company. I fail to see any regulations regarding the sale of this $75,000,000, or any regulations providing for subscription to this stock.

You will notice that he is referring to the Board of Railway Commissioners there. A little farther on Tommy said:

> This company—

He is talking about the Bell Telephone Company.

> —is under the control of the railway commission, who have failed in their duty by not making some regulations to cover the disposal of this stock.

And immediately there arose a Liberal cabinet minister from the front benches of 1928, Mr. Cannon, who said:

> I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman may say whatever he wishes so long as he observes the rules of the house, but under the rules he cannot criticize the Board of Railway Commissioners as he has been doing.

And then up rose that Gaspé salmon, Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, Speaker of the House of Commons, who said:

> The Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record, and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment. This has been decided twice by this house within my knowledge.

As I said previously, citation 251 of Beauchesne, third edition, says that we cannot attack the Board of Railway Commissioners because the Speaker of the House of Commons as far back as 1928 ruled that the Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record, "and therefore may not be attacked except by way of impeachment". Well, if the Board of Railway Commissioners cannot be attacked because it is a court of record, do you realize that this subclause of clause 19 of this new bill will put the Canadian radio and television council or commission, or whatever you are going to call it, beyond the criticism of the House of Commons, beyond the criticism of the parliament of Canada? The Speaker or somebody in his place will stand up and say: "Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux in 1928 said that a court of record cannot be attacked in the House of Commons".

Look at the attack that Tommy Church made on the railway commission. He said:

> It would be interesting to know what regulations the Board of Railway Commissioners have over the issue of stock by this company.

Later on he said:

> This company is under the control of the railway commission, who have failed in their duty by not making some regulations to cover the disposal of this stock.

And then Mr. Cannon said that Tommy was attacking the board. If Tommy Church was forbidden by Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux, the Speaker at that time, from making such remarks about the Board of Railway Commissioners, which the Speaker said was a court of record, we will not be able to stand up and ask about a single, solitary program of the C.B.C., because we will be told that it is a court of record under subclause 7 of clause 19 and that the council has all the powers, rights and privileges that are normally vested in a superior court of record.

The lawyers are asking why the word "superior" is in there. "Court of record", they tell me, is equal to a superior court. But for some reason or other we are going to make doubly certain that this council is enshrined in the law of the land and we are going to make them a superior court of record. I wonder whether that will make them superior to the Board of Railway Commissioners which we are told is a court of record. But bear in mind that this is going to be a superior court of record. Rodolphe Lemieux simply said that the Board of Railway Commissioners is a court of record, but this council is to be exalted as a superior court of record. If we are going to enshrine the television authority in such a way that they can never be attacked I see no reason for having parliament. We can simply enshrine all our subsidiaries such as the C.B.C. and other crown corporations, and activities of government by making them a court of record and, as the hon. Rodolphe Lemieux said, we cannot attack them.

It is getting to the point, Mr. Chairman and members of the House of Commons, that the C.B.C. is getting to be the same as the Ark of the Covenant. You cannot even touch it. And as for criticizing it, well, the Speaker will make his ruling on the basis of Mr. Lemieux's statement.

I wish to tell the chairman and other members of the House of Commons that I initiated an inquiry this morning about the two previous occasions on which, as the Speaker, Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux had said, this matter was decided by the house. When one bears in mind that Beauchesne makes his flatfooted statement based simply on this ruling in May of 1928 it is evident that he did not think it necessary to refer to what Mr. Lemieux spoke of as having been decided twice in the house within his knowledge.

The C.B.C. appears to be beyond our reach now. Is it really the wish of hon. members that we should enshrine this council so that it becomes a court of record whose officials may enter private property, take whatever documents or papers they wish to take as evidence and subpoena witnesses to appear before it? These people are being given the same status as a superior court and I for one can see no reason for putting them so far beyond the reach of the parliament of Canada that the only thing we shall be able to do in future is send money over to them whenever they ask for it. Remember, Mr. Chairman, it will not be possible to attack them in the House of Commons by making such a wild statement as Mr. Church made, the statement Mr. Cannon jumped on:

> It would be interesting to know what regulations the Board of Railway Commissioners have over the issue of stock by this company. I fail to see any regulations regarding the sale of this $75 million, or any regulations providing for subscription to this stock.

Mr. Cannon then rose to say that the hon. member "cannot criticize the Board of Railway Commissioners as he has been doing."

Clause 19 is absolutely rotten. First of all, the commission can amend a licence without holding a public hearing despite all the high-sounding verbiage about "a public hearing shall be held". The situation, in fact, is that a public hearing shall be held provided the executive committee is satisfied that it would in the public interest to hold such a hearing. But, of course, if the executive committee were to decide, as it might, 95 times out of 100 that it was not in the public interest to do so, the hearing would be held in camera. This clause makes it possible to move licences like the Barrie one into the Toronto area simply on the O.K. of a group of men meeting in private. I almost hesitate to refer to clause 22, because it has not yet reached, but it has a bearing on clause 19 and clause 17 and I would certainly like to hear some comments by members of parliament who are interested in this Barrie-Toronto situation which is not changed one iota as a result of this supposedly brand new radio and television policy for Canada.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the hon. member for York-Humber has been somewhat irritating to the minister at various times and that she has not answered this particular inquiry, but I think some of us would like an assurance that under the guise of amending a licence the commission could not in fact so substantially alter it that it would really amount to the issuance of a new one without holding a public hearing. The executive committee is a small body and a quorum of that committee is expressed as being three full-time members of the commission.

Since this point has been raised, I am concerned about whether or not by amending a licence, by altering the place at which it may be used, the frequency, the output power and the channel, the action of the board might not in fact amount to the issuance of a new licence. Would it be possible for the executive committee to do this without holding a public hearing and, if so, can the minister give us any assurance that in fact this would not be done?

Miss LaMarsh: Well, I expect that the people we appoint to the new commission as full-time members will be first-rate people with some knowledge of the field. What the hon. member is suggesting is something rather underhanded; I do not think I should even dignify it by protesting that people who are appointed in good faith would not act in an underhand way.

It is entirely possible that for some reason which does not now come to my mind a public hearing would be dispensed with. I cannot fetter the commission by anything I say. I would imagine that in the ordinary course there would be a hearing. It would only be in rare instances that members of the board, none of them subject to partisan pressures, might decide that because of an error which had been made, or because of the very modest change which was asked for, a public hearing should not be held. I would remind hon. members that the whole purpose of appointing the commission is to increase public knowledge of these affairs, to enable the public to have more information than was available from the Board of Broadcast Governors, not less.

Mr. Cowan: I thank the Secretary of State for having answered the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I asked the question, too. I do not know whether the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka is a Liberal in good standing and thus entitled to an answer. But I should like to know whether applications for C.A.T.V. licences will be heard in public in future or whether the new board will simply decide that it would not be in the public interest to hear these applications in public and deal with them as they wish in the privacy of their offices.

This is an important matter to the business community who up to now have had to be satisfied with hole in the corner treatment. They were sincerely pleased with the proposal to hold public hearings under the new council whenever new broadcasting licences were applied for, and I say "broadcasting licences" because, although C.A.T.V. does not really involve broadcasting, this is the definition adopted in the legislation before us. The C.A.T.V people, as they see things today, would like all these applications to be processed in public. Can the Secretary of State advise us whether this is going to happen or whether, in fact, applicants will have to be content with the same hole in the corner treatment as in the past?

Miss LaMarsh: It is very clear under 19(1)(a) that public hearings shall be heard in connection with these licences. The hon. member can read; he has been reading to us with great expression.

Mr. Cowan: I thank the minister for that answer in which she says that public hearings will be held in connection with C.A.T.V. applications.

I would now ask whether in view of citation 251 of Beauchesne parliament proposes that the commission should be a court of record, with the consequence that it may not be attacked except by way of impeachment. If it is to be given the same rights as those vested in a superior court of record, will we be hamstrung in this chamber with regard to comments which may be made concerning this crown organization also and the manner in which it is spending public funds?

Miss LaMarsh: I have never seen a hamstrung in this chamber.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: I do not like merely to echo the hon. member for York-Humber, but having accepted the assurance of the minister that in effect no commission would dare do anything underhanded or against the public interest, first, because the standing of the members would be such that they would not try it and, second, on account of the fact that they would not get away with it, I assume that if the commission makes an unpopular decision the matter will be raised in the House of Commons. I would like the minister to assure me that this clause, giving the commission the rights and privileges vested in a superior court of record, does not exempt the commission from having a question about it raised in the house.

I saw the particular reference mentioned by the hon. member for York-Humber with respect to the Board of Railway Commissioners. It stated that that board was a court of record and therefore could not be attacked. From examining this clause it seems to me it does not make the new commission a court of record but merely gives it the same rights and privileges as a court of record.

Miss LaMarsh: I am not a law officer of the crown but I agree with the hon. member's interpretation.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is another important difference. The ordinary courts do not report to parliament, or at least their reports are not debated, but the new commission will report to parliament annually. Its report can be debated, and of course its budget will have to be voted by parliament. It does not seem to be totally exempt from parliamentary scrutiny.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 22—Directions of the Governor in Council.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the hon. minister concerning clause 22(1)(a) which states:

(1) No broadcasting licence shall be issued, amended or renewed pursuant to this Part (a) in contravention of any direction to the Commission by the Governor in Council under the authority of this Act—

I should like to ask the hon. minister whether the provisions stated in clause 2 are included in "the directions given to the commission by the governor in council under the authority of this act".

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: I am afraid I cannot answer because the interpretation was so confused that I do not know what the hon. member was asking.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, clause 22(1)(a) states the following:

(1) No broadcasting licence shall be issued, amended or renewed pursuant to this Part (a) in contravention of any direction to the Commission under the authority of this Act—

I wonder whether the provisions of clause 22 are part of the instructions given to the commission by the governor in council.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, clause 2, that is, paragraph 2—

Mr. Grégoire: Clause 2 of the bill.

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: If I understand correctly, clause 2 is not intended to be the kind of direction issued by the governor in council referred to in clause 22. Clause 2 is a part of this bill to which parliament has agreed. Clause 22 deals with directions that may be made from time to time by order in council, which of course will have to be published in due course and which will deal with matters referred to in paragraphs (a) (i), (ii) and (iii).

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Then, Mr. Chairman, I should like to put a direct question to the hon. Secretary of State.

When issuing a licence can the Canadian radio-television commission ignore clause 2(b) where it is stipulated:

> the Canadian broadcasting system should be effectively owned and controlled by Canadians—

Notwithstanding that statement which parliament has accepted, can the commission ignore it and issue licences to corporations which are not in fact controlled by Canadian citizens?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Under this clause the governor in council will have to give directions and set out its policy with respect to such ownership. Clause 2 uses the word "should," not "shall" or "must" or "only Canadians may own." We went into this matter at some length when we were discussing that particular part of the bill. The policy to be established by the government shall be set out in a direction by order in council to the new commission, and it will have to say whether or not it is to be 70 per cent Canadian ownership, 66 per cent, 60 per cent, 55 per cent or 50 per cent, according to whatever the government of the day may make its policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, may I ask one last question?

Does the hon. Secretary of State or the governor in council intend to instruct the Canadian radio-television commission to see to it that television stations are really controlled by Canadians and Canadian corporations? Will retroactive measures be taken concerning stations which are not effectively controlled by Canadians?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: Certainly the Secretary of State will be advising the governor in council as to the details of the policy, and since it is parliament's will that there should be effective Canadian ownership and control that is what will govern the instructions which are given. There is no question of retroactivity because each broadcasting enterprise, it is understood, will have to get a new licence. It is on application for renewal of a licence that the direction by cabinet to the new commission will take effect.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: One last question, Mr. Chairman.

Does the hon. Secretary of State mean to say that every station should have a new power as soon as the new act comes into force? Is that it? Did I understand correctly?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: No, not all at once. All of the licences were extended. I do not know the last date exactly, but they were extended once or twice during the last few years until the new act came into effect. But when each licence has expired the operators will have to make a new application to the commission. I do not mean that the day after this bill receives royal assent all the licences will lapse.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Will licences be renewed according to the rules and regulations set out under the new act? Will the new act provide for public hearings for the renewal of licences?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: I would expect so, and it will be covered by clause 19(2).

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, there is a question I would like to ask the Secretary of State in connection with clause 22. Her references to me make me wonder whether I will be able to use my credentials at the forthcoming leadership convention, which give me a vote for a new leader. I would not want the boys to be influenced by one whom the Secretary of State does not like.

• (4:10 p.m.)

With regard to clause 22, most members of the committee have before them Bill C-163 with the black-face type reading, "Reprinted as amended and reported by the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts". I have in my right hand a copy of Bill C-163 as originally introduced in the house and which received first reading on October 17, 1967. One of the changes that has been made by the broadcasting committee and incorporated in the bill that we now have is that a new section has been added to subclause (1)(a)(iii) of clause 22. This subclause as it appeared in the original bill which was given first reading read as follows:

No broadcasting licence shall be issued, amended or renewed pursuant to this Part (a) in contravention of any direction to the Commission issued by the Governor in Council under the authority of this Act respecting...

(iii) the classes of applicants to whom broadcasting licences may not be issued or to whom amendments or renewals thereof may not be granted;

That subclause as brought forward on first reading seemed to cover the ground. But we have this part added to subclause (1)(a)(iii) of clause 22:

—and any such class may, notwithstanding section 2, be limited so as not to preclude the amendment or renewal of a broadcasting licence that is outstanding at the time this Act comes into force;

In the copy of the bill which should be before you those words are underlined in black. I should like to ask the Secretary of State what outstanding broadcasting licences there are at the moment which are being protected by this addition to the bill as brought in for first reading? It is evident that somebody was to be excluded from coming under the board's authority in the original bill which received first reading, but now an exemption is being granted which reads:

—and any such class may, notwithstanding section 2, be limited so as not to preclude the amendment or renewal of a broadcasting licence that is outstanding at the time this Act comes into force;

What class of people is this provision being made for?

Miss LaMarsh: I have just been checking. It is not our recollection that this has reference to any specific licence holder but rather that the committee felt that without the addition of these words there would be an immediate chop-off in respect of those who held licences but perhaps did not qualify under the new legislation. It was felt that this would be an unfair thing to have happen, that is, where large investments had been made that they be put out of business without any warning. It was without any specific case in mind, to my recollection, that the committee decided that the cabinet should have an opportunity to review these under the new legislation.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the Secretary of State for her very civil answer.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 23—Setting aside or reference back to Council.

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, I asked that this clause be stood because I wished to raise a question concerning the adequacy of subclause 2 of clause 23. It appears to me that this subclause would restrict the opportunity for a reference back to the council to a situation where the council had failed to consider a particular matter at all. There would be no opportunity for reference back in a situation where a matter had been touched upon by the council but had been given no weight or insufficient weight in the estimation of the governor in council. It seems to me that if the provision for a reference back has any merit at all it would be quite inadequate to limit that opportunity to a situation where a matter was completely neglected by the council. In a case where the council had considered the matter only in passing and had not given it the weight of consideration which it deserved it would seem that such a reference would be necessary. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I move:

That subclause (2) of clause 23 be amended by adding thereto the words:

"or to consider adequately"

[Translation]

That subclause (2) of clause 23 be amended by adding thereto the words:

"or to consider adequately"

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee in favour of the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, subclause 4 of clause 23 reads as follows:

The issue, amendment or renewal by the Council of any broadcasting licence that has been referred back to the Council pursuant to subsection (1) and confirmed pursuant to paragraph (d) of subsection (3) may be set aside by order of the Governor in Council made within sixty days after such confirmation.

I should like to refer to this provision because in my previous references to the Barrie-Toronto situation, which could be duplicated elsewhere in Canada, I emphasized as we have moved from clause to clause that it will be possible to change—the word "amend" is used—a licence already in the hands of a licensee in private without any public hearing under clauses 17 and 19. At the time of the uproar over the Barrie T.V. application to have its broadcasting station moved there was a big fuss and feathers about this matter being referred back to the Board of Broadcast Governors. Then the Board of Broadcast Governors reconsidered the matter. You will remember that a new appointment was made to the board. This appointment was made on the day of the vote. Of course, it was just on the basis of straight Canadian common sense that they made their recommendation in respect of the Barrie situation. This went back to the Minister of Transport and because of the uproar which arose no action was taken.

I should like to bring to the attention of the chairman and members of the committee that under this new clause, if the report from the new council should not meet the desires of the cabinet we have this provision:

> The issue, amendment or renewal by the Council of any broadcasting licence that has been referred back to the Council pursuant to subsection (1) and confirmed pursuant to paragraph (d) of subsection (3) may be set aside by order of the Governor in Council made within sixty days after such confirmation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

We presume that after it has been set aside the governor in council—we do not want to say the cabinet, of course, because the governor in council sounds much more important—can ask this new radio and television council to reconsider this application for a television licence. Then we find these words:

> The issue, amendment or renewal by the Council of any broadcasting licence that has been referred back to the Council pursuant to subsection (1) and confirmed pursuant to paragraph (d) of subsection (3) may be set aside by order of the Governor in Council made within sixty days after such confirmation.

If the new council does not give the answer the governor in council wants the application can again be set aside as long as it is done within 60 days, to be sent back again for reconsideration. Perhaps there might even be more appointments made to the board, but finally when the desired decision has been made the application will not be set aside. What kind of control is this over broadcasting and television? We are trying to make out that this board is to be supreme. It will be supreme to the point that it can make a decision in private or a hole in the corner decision without a public hearing if it decides it is not in the public interest to hold such a hearing. In any event, if the governor in council does not like such a decision made in private he may set it aside within 60 days. This can be done if the council does not want to conform, so you may still have political control so far as the issuance of broadcasting and T.V. licences is concerned. I just want to make this situation clear because there is no use asking the cabinet to change it.

[Mr. Cowan.]

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I think I should say something in this regard. If hon. members look at the white paper they will see that this was not the original intention of the government. This particular clause was added because of this problem. My hon. friend has been confusing two clauses, one dealing with the executive committee which may make a decision in camera or otherwise. This involves full time people who should not be subject at any time to political pressure. Obviously when you have a part time board there is always the possibility of some pressure. What is even more important, it may look as though there has been pressure even though there has not.

It seems to me that since the cabinet is always responsible in the eyes of the public, or always held responsible one way or the other, even though the law does not give the right to move in respect of these matters it should be given the responsibility. For example, if the move of channel 3 from Barrie to Toronto had come as a recommendation from the commission or council, that recommendation could have been sent back for further consideration, perhaps because of something they had failed to consider or failed to consider adequately. After such reconsideration the matter would come back to the cabinet. The cabinet knows what the public reaction is and how the people feel about these things. It has to accept the ultimate responsibility and therefore it might set such a recommendation aside. This is for the protection of the people and for no other reason.

If hon. members look back at the legislation they will realize that specific public issues, such as the one to which I have referred, sometimes disappear during the course of the preparation of legislation such as that now before us. They will then realize how this clause came about and what it is designed to cure.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 24, 26 and 28 agreed to.

On clause 29—Punishment.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I should like to propose an amendment which I understand is acceptable to the minister.

Miss LaMarsh: I should like to see it first.

Mr. McCleave: I discussed it with the hon. lady the other day. I should like to move:

That subclause (1) of clause 29 be amended by deleting all the words after "exceeding" in line eight on page 16 and substituting the words "twenty-five thousand dollars for the first offence and not exceeding fifty thousand dollars for each subsequent offence."

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, we do not intend to oppose this amendment but I think it would be useful if the minister put on record why the amount of $100,000 was included in the bill in the first place. I know a great many people objected to this and the minister did give a reason for this sum being chosen when she was before the committee. Would she do so again now?

Miss LaMarsh: Yes. I quoted some figures we had which indicated that by moving the clock a station that wanted to make more income, or wanted to be a little sharp so far as the regulations were concerned, could make something in the order of $10,000 a week by using just one extra minute of prime time to shave the regulations.

Large amounts can be made in this way and in order to prohibit this practice we felt that very large penalties should be authorized. Indeed, I was handed a page from Time Canada, for January 26, 1968, having regard to sportscasting. On page 51 of that issue appears a discussion about C.B.S. coverage of the superbowl game and N.B.C. coverage of another bowl game. They refer to the C.B.S. coverage compared with the N.B.C. coverage and point out that one commercial during the C.B.S. superbowl coverage ran right through a kickoff. That is not the kind of thing people like to see. This article suggests that commercials on the superbowl telecast sold for an unprecedented $150,000 per minute. It is quite clear that if this kind of money can be made as a result of these small aberrations from time they can only be impeded by very substantial fines.

This clause makes it known that parliament intends there should not be any breach of the regulations in this regard. It is my information that as yet our Canadian networks do not have hourly rates for advertising comparable with those of the United States networks. It seems that by comparison with fines existing in other public statutes $25,000 for the first offence and $50,000 for subsequent offences would be ample, even in respect of those stations which have a licence to print money, to dissuade them from breaking or bending the regulations.

Mr. Orlikow: I have news for the Secretary of State. I have seen commercials during football coverage in Canada which ran while the game was in progress, so the United States networks are not the only offenders. I am not going to vote against the amendment as I cannot envisage any Canadian court assessing a fine of $100,000. I am not very hopeful that any Canadian court will assess a fine of $25,000 or $50,000. In any event the amendment would indicate that fines would not exceed these amounts. I am wondering whether there is any way to prevent fines of $50 or $100 being assessed. This is the kind of fine which magistrates in various parts of the country have assessed in respect of pretty serious cases. For instance, they sometimes impose a $500 fine on a driver who has had too much to drink and has caused an accident killing someone. Would it be possible to put a minimum fine in this clause so that the courts would know we take this matter seriously and do not want imposed, when there is a violation of the regulations, the kind of fine which might lead stations to say: It is good business to break the law, take in the kind of money the Secretary of State has talked about and pay only a very minimal fine?

Miss LaMarsh: I would say two things in this connection, Mr. Chairman. First, the law officers indicate to us that this is the language currently in use in most statutes, because minimums become maximums. If you put in "not less than $100", that is what attracts the magistrate's eye all too often and that is the fine he imposes.

However, something came to my notice about which I told the committee. A very reputable broadcaster in Canada came to see me and confessed that he was a criminal to the extent of about 25 breaches of the act. He had suffered penalties about 25 different times. I was shocked to discover this. These breaches were committed because of what is called the clock hour and the Board of Broadcast Governors checking on how many minutes of commercial time there were within a clock hour. Sometimes he had less in one hour and more in another. He had paid these penalties. They were small penalties, I think in the nature of $10 or $25. It is quite surprising to me that this would happen 25 times, but what is really astonishing to me is that anyone would take him to court for having committed breaches of the law which they were satisfied were committed inadvertently. It seems to me that laws are not in existence to be prosecuted in a ruthless, merciless manner when, as sometimes happens, there has in error been a breach of the law.

Without anything else, to make the provision "not exceeding $25,000" does give the magistrate trying the case some idea of the gravity of the offence, but if there is someone before him who has had one of these clock hour difficulties and should pay a fine of only $10 the magistrate can impose a fine of only $10. I should think there would not be too many broadcasters who would be able to come into the office of the Secretary of State in future and say: I have had 25 $25,000 fines, or one $25,000 and 24 $50,000 fines, at least not until broadcasting is in a somewhat healthier state in Canada.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The question is on the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 29 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, we have just carried clause 29. I voted for the amendment to the clause, but the record will show that I asked that clause 28 be stood and was on my feet when you called clause 29. However, you recognized the hon. member for Halifax who wanted to speak to clause 29.

With regard to clause 28, which you have stated has carried, frankly clause 28 should be stood for a while, maybe a couple of hours, while it is rewritten because there are provisions in it that cannot be enforced. This matter was mentioned in the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts. Clause 28 reads:

No broadcaster shall broadcast—

Those broadcasters are in Canada and subject to Canadian law. The clause goes on to say:

—and no licensee—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. When the Chair called for the vote on clause 28 it did not do so with any haste. Certainly nobody objected when the Chair said "Carried" and the clause was carried at that time. Therefore clause 28 has been carried by the committee.

Mr. Cowan: I do not wish to get into an argument with the Chair but I ask the Secretary of State, how are you going to enforce these words:

No broadcaster shall broadcast, and no licensee of a broadcasting receiving undertaking shall receive a broadcast of a program, advertisement or announcement of a partisan character ... on the day of any such referendum or election or on the one day immediately preceding—

How will that provision be enforced if the program is being picked up from American stations which are not under Canadian control? They are not broadcasting; they are only receiving. They have no control over what they are going to receive. I mean it, sir, that to have this—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but clause 28 has been carried. We are now dealing with clause 29 as amended. Shall clause 29 as amended carry?

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 31 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 33 carry?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Prittie: On clause—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Verdun.

Mr. Prittie: I wanted to speak to clause 31, Mr. Chairman. I wonder to which clause the hon. member wishes to speak.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond on clause 31.

On clause 31—Report to parliament.

Mr. Prittie: I have no amendment, Mr. Chairman, but this is the clause which requires the council to submit each year a report which is to be tabled in parliament. I would hope the practice would be that this report of the broadcasting commission, as well as the report of the C.B.C., would be referred each year to the standing committee on broadcasting. We have heard a great deal about parliamentary control over these matters. I think it would be very useful if that practice were regularly followed.

There is nothing in the clause requiring that to be done. I appreciate that it might be difficult to write such a provision into the legislation but I would certainly hope the report of this authority would go to the committee each year and that the members of the authority could be called before the committee each year to answer questions.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 31 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 33—Definitions.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I have a few brief remarks to make in connection with this clause. Perhaps I am not entirely in order in referring to clause 33 but I am at a loss to know precisely where to raise the point I have in mind. Hon. members will note that this clause is the beginning of part III of the bill under the general heading "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation."

This raises a problem that was discussed at some length in the committee and outside. I refer to the possibility of changing the name of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to words common to both the two official languages of this country. I do not pretend to be an expert in this field. However, I remember the debate that was carried on at the time of changing the name of Trans-Canada Air Lines to Air Canada. I think that change has worked out very well for this country. It has created a tremendous image for our air transportation system across the world. Air Canada is now very much in the minds of people.

I was hoping that something of a similar nature could be introduced at this time so far as "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" is concerned. I am sure that hon. members are aware of the fact that the French equivalent of "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" is "Société Radio-Canada" and it is known generally throughout Canada, particularly to those who watch or listen to the French section of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, simply "Radio-Canada".

I should like to propose an amendment in this connection. Before doing so I might say that if someone wants to move a subamendment and change it further I would have no particular objection. I will read the proposed amendment so that hon. members may more easily follow what I am about to say. I move:

That Bill C-163 be amended as follows:

That in part III the name "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" be changed to "Radio-Television Canada".

That wherever the name "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" appears in the said bill, it be changed to "Radio-Television Canada".

I draw to the attention of hon. members that "Radio-Television Canada" would be acceptable and identical in both languages. There are some purists who would point out, I think with a degree of logic, that in a sense radio does include television. I would have no particular objection if, in order to have this amendment accepted, the word "television" were eliminated and we simply referred to the corporation as Radio Canada in English and in French. However, if we include the word "television" we draw to the attention of the public that this public service includes television as well as radio.

I bring this amendment before the committee for discussion. I point out once again that Radio-Television Canada in English and Radio-Télévision Canada in French are precisely the same thing. This would simplify tremendously the identity of the corporation. It would facilitate advertising, printing and activities in other fields connected with broadcasting just as the title "Air Canada" has simplified the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines. So, Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will carry with the word "television" included. At the same time, I have no particular objection to the elimination of the word "television", leaving the designation Radio-Canada.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I would not be in favour of this amendment and I think I should tell you why. I am certainly no francophobe, as most members know. I feel there are several reasons why we should not make this change. First of all, the matter should have been considered in committee and reported upon before we make a change of this type. I do not quite know how to put this. Whatever senses I have as a politician tell me that this would not be a wise move to make at the time. We should leave English speaking Canada some of its traditions and the name, "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation", should remain.

Mr. Aiken: In so far as the proposal is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I feel there has been insufficient public as well as private discussion to warrant a major change from the name "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" in English and "Radio-Canada" in French. These names are fairly easy to handle and there is no misunderstanding of what is meant. "Radio-Canada" is brief and appears to be acceptable. "Canadian Broadcasting Corporation" is certainly well known. Fundamentally, I believe that the suggested change has been thrown at the committee perhaps too quickly. I understand there was some discussion in a general way in the standing committee but no decision was made. I feel the introduction of the amendment at this time would not be expedient.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could add an additional word. First of all, I should like to say that I feel these changes we make from time to time are admirable. I refer to those attempts we make to see that the public designations used for our various corporations are compatible in both languages so they are easily understood either through the use of initials or the actual words. However, I believe we should not forget that we are all extremely sensitive today about creating as much understanding, as much communication, between our two major language groups as we can. I believe we may be bending too far backwards in these attempts. It strikes me that, while we are very anxious that we shall sufficiently accommodate each other, we should not forget the advantages we have in having two different language groups. It is because of that I feel we want to retain some of the unique flavour that situation creates.

There is a certain sense of diversification now for French speaking Canadians when they talk about Radio-Canada and for English speaking Canadians when they talk about the C.B.C. I think that as more and more Canadians, hopefully, will have the facility to communicate in both of our major languages it will become more important that we be able to refer easily to what is happening on Radio-Canada or what is happening on the C.B.C. There may be some advantage, therefore, in retaining some distinction for Canadians between these two parts of our national communications system. We might be creating more confusion in future years as people wish to have made available to them, in the terms of the bill, full communications services in both networks. I can see that we may be creating some confusion in the future if we simply designate the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by the new term Radio-Television Canada. On the other hand, if we retain these traditional terms I think we will make it easier for Canadians to recognize the unique flavour embodied in what is a totally Canadian experience.

Mr. Mackasey: I have listened to the short but very impressive contributions made by the hon. member from the New Democratic party and the expert on broadcasting fom Prince. I feel that the points which have been raised are very important, though perhaps they are less impressive for me since I have lived so long in the French milieu. Perhaps we are not ready for this type of amendment, so in order to expedite the passage of the bill and not introduce a new element of controversy at this late stage, at the same time recognizing that there was no preparation for this type of amendment, I request permission to withdraw it.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give the hon. member permission to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. Aiken: Before the amendment is withdrawn, I hoped to get some indication from the minister as to her feelings about this amendment.

Miss LaMarsh: I do not want to slow down the passage of the bill either. I have a number of names for the C.B.C., but it is the people's network and I would be happy with whatever the committee wants to call it.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The amendment is dropped.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 34 and 35 agreed to.

On clause 36—Management vested in president.

Miss LaMarsh: Clause 36 was stood at my request in order that I might bring forward a short amendment. It will be followed by an amendment to clause 38. Clause 36 deals very briefly with the responsibilities of the president of the corporation and clause 38 deals with the responsibilities of the executive vice president. It has always been the intent of the government that the new legislation should make the clearest possible distinction between the responsibilities of the two offices. We have been having a number of discussions since the meetings of the standing committee and it appears that some of the words in clause 36 are redundant. They may lead to ambiguity. I do not want any uncertainty about the fact that the president is the chief executive officer. Therefore I have asked my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, to move an amendment.

Mr. Robichaud: I move:

That paragraph (1) of clause 36 be amended by deleting the words "has supervision over and direction of the work and staff of the corporation and the president."

• (4:50 p.m.)

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, the effect of that amendment will be that the clause will simply state that the president is the chief executive officer of the corporation and shall preside at meetings of the corporation.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. May I put the amendment first.

[Translation]

It is moved by Mr. Robichaud:

That paragraph (1) of clause 36 be amended by deleting the words "has supervision over and direction of the work and staff of the corporation and the president."

[English]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I assume that under the second amendment this particular portion of the duties will devolve upon the vice president. Am I correct in that assumption?

Miss LaMarsh: Yes, Mr. Chairman. The amendment in regard to the vice president makes him responsible for his present duties plus such other duties as the president may lay upon his shoulders. That further phrase is added to the bill. I should like to have that amendment moved, though I do not think I can properly ask for that now.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask whether we could have both amendments before us; that would make it much easier.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give leave to have the amendment moved?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, might the amendment be read rather than put? That will not put us in a bind on the motion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: That was the suggestion of the Chair.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I will just read the proposed amendment; I am not yet moving it. My colleague the Minister of Fisheries will move an amendment to clause 38 (1) in order to add the words "and for such other duties as the president may assign to him from time to time". This will make it clear that the president is not limited in his responsibilities and that any one of those duties may be passed on to the executive vice president in regard to anything he might undertake both to his advantage and to the advantage of the corporation.

Mr. McCleave: Is the hon. lady equating the words "supervision over and direction of", the words she intends to delete in clause 36 (1), with the words "the management of broadcasting operations" to be found in clause 38 (1)? Do the law officers of the crown feel that the words that are going to be deleted in clause 36 (1) are taken care of in clause 38 (1)?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, the law officers have indicated that this point is covered by the words "chief executive officer". They were, of course, consulted when this amendment was being drawn.

Mr. Prittie: I have one comment on this amendment, Mr. Chairman. The idea of the statutory appointment of an executive vice president seems a little odd. The clause provides that he shall be appointed on the recommendation of the president and with the approval of the governor in council. So presumably he is a person in whom the president will have confidence and they will work together, as they should.

I might have had an answer to this question previsouly but I am not sure. What is the purpose of mentioning the executive vice president in the statute? If that phrase were not in the bill presumably the directors of the corporation would determine what subordinate officers the president needed and would make provision for their appointment. Why is an executive vice president provided for by statute?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, generally speaking, when you divide responsibilities legislation does provide for a chief officer and also for one who is given special direction. I think the situation was much clearer when in draft form they were called the chairman and the general manager. The change of the title to executive vice-president makes the situation look somewhat odd under the circumstances, but his role is still the same. It will be recalled that provision for a vice president was retained because in the structure of the C.B.C. there are a number of vice presidents. It was felt that that title was needed because of the close interchange there is with United States corporations where vice presidents are so much a part of the corporate terminology.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of points to raise on this question. It seems to me that in trying to clear up some of the difficulties which previously existed in the operation of the corporation we may have created others, partly, I think, because we have had to use the term "executive vice president". I for one was never very enthusiastic about the way in which the upper hierarchy of the C.B.C. was structured. It seems to me that apart from other things this has created part of the problem.

Some of the difficulties have been relieved by separating some functions into these two distinct offices of president and executive vice president, but I think we are still leaving ourselves open to considerable problems. In spite of the fact that it may make some difference in status so far as United States broadcasting corporations are concerned, I really wonder at the validity of perpetuating this kind of terminology as against the very clearcut roles of president and general manager. I do not remember receiving a really satisfactory answer to this problem in committee and neither have I this afternoon from the minister.

Second, I should like some assurance from the minister about the danger that might arise if, for instance, the president found that he would have to resign before the end of his term. The executive vice president would take over his duties, but there might be an undue delay in the appointment of a new president.

Miss LaMarsh: Never.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): I hope the Hansard reporter picked that up because I think this is critical. We did seem to take a long time to respond when Mr. Ouimet submitted his resignation; I believe well over one year elapsed. I think the fact that there was such a long period did a great deal to weaken the whole upper management structure of the C.B.C. The minister has said that this will never happen again, that there will be no undue delay, and I do thank her for that assurance.

Miss LaMarsh: I may not be here to make sure of that though.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): That is true; the minister may not be able to assure us of that.

The other difficulty I see with the fuzziness that exists in trying clearly to delineate the functions of these two officers disturbs me, and I should like to see a clearcut use of terms such as "president" and "general manager". With regard to the recent appointments I think that even in the minds of the public there is still not a very clearcut idea of what are the functions of Dr. Davidson and Mr. Picard. That is unfortunate for them, I think, and it may be unfortunate in working out the top management structure of the C.B.C.

Amendment (Mr. Robichaud) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 36 as amended carry?

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Stanbury: Mr. Chairman, no provision is made in clause 36 for the president of the corporation to be full time. I believe that somewhere in the bill there is provision for the chairman of the Canadian radio-television commission to be full time. There is no such provision for the executive vice president of the corporation, but the corporation is to set the terms of his employment, and I think we can entrust that decision to the corporation. It is incumbent on parliament to decide whether the president of the corporation shall be a full time president. We have not done so in this bill and I think that that oversight should be remedied. I move:

That clause 36 be amended by inserting therein the following as subclause (2) and renumbering the present subclause (2) as subclause (3):

"The president shall devote the whole of his time to the performance of his duties under this part."

Amendment (Mr. Stanbury) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 37 has already been carried.

On clause 38—"Executive vice president".

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I wish to move the following amendment to clause 38:

That paragraph (1) of clause 38 be amended by adding the words "and for such other duties as the President may assign to him from time to time".

Amendment (Mr. Robichaud) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 39—Objects and powers.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, this clause was designed to permit the C.B.C., among other things, to act as agent for any minister of the crown with respect to such broadcasting service as the governor in council may direct. The specific instance which was kept in mind was the international service of the C.B.C. Since the bill defines the objects of the C.B.C. in clauses 2(g) and 2(h), it was considered that for greater certainty it would be advisable to add at the end of the subclause under discussion the words "including the provision of an international service". Clause 39(2) would then read as follows:

The Corporation may, within the conditions of any licence or licences issued to it by the Council and subject to any applicable regulations of the Council, act as agent for or on behalf of any Minister of the Crown or as an agent of Her Majesty in right of Canada or of any province in respect of any broadcasting operations that it may be directed by the Governor in Council to carry out, including the provision of an international service.

I ask my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, to move that amendment with respect to this clause.

Mr. Robichaud: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the said amendment?

Mr. Prittie: This is agreeable, Mr. Chairman. I had prepared an additional subclause which would have served the same purpose as the amendment. What the minister suggests will serve the purpose pretty well. This matter becomes more important now in view of the change which was made recently in the financing of the international service.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment (Mr. Robichaud) agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 39 as amended carry?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I would have something to say about clause 39(1)(m) which is one of those I have particularly at heart. This clause stipulates that the corporation has power to:

—subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation.

Mr. Chairman, I believe, and the Secretary of State will agree, that the C.B.C. is given unlimited powers. The C.B.C. is authorized to become co-owner, shareholder or director of private companies which will become its subsidiaries and from which it will derive the same profits as private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, clause 39(1)(g) states that the corporation has power to:

—publish and distribute, whether for a consideration or otherwise, such audio-visual material, papers, periodicals and other publications which may seem conducive to the purposes of the Corporation.

One of the purposes of the corporation is to make its programs known, thus the C.B.C. can advertise in the newspapers, and we see some of its advertisements regularly in La Presse, Le Devoir, Le Journal de Montréal, to speak only of French newspapers which I know and in which I see C.B.C. advertisements every day.

Now, what would prevent the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, under clause 39(1)(m)—in order to achieve the purpose referred to in paragraph (1)(g) of the same clause—from buying those newspapers?

• (5:10 p.m.)

What would keep the C.B.C. from buying newspapers such as La Presse, Le Soleil, Le Droit, Le journal de Montréal, in short, any paper in which it now puts out advertisements, since clause 39 (1) (m) stipulates that it can:

—subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that, is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

Moreover, subclause (1) (g) of the same clause allows the C.B.C. to:

—publish and distribute, whether for a consideration or otherwise, such audio-visual material, papers, periodicals and other literary matter as may seem conducive to the purposes of the Corporation;

So, Mr. Chairman, the C.B.C., with the $150 million it gets this year from the government, for very little—it must be recognized that this is just "peanuts"—can buy the newspaper La Presse. It would be easy for the C.B.C. to buy Le Soleil in Quebec or Le journal de Montréal, one after the other, since clause 39 (1) (m) says specifically that the corporation may:

—subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

And not only newspapers, Mr. Chairman. What is there to keep the C.B.C., under this provision, from buying out competitive stations, under the pretext that this would be incidental or conducive to the attainment of its objectives. For instance, at the present time, and this has happened many times before, the C.B.C., with its cameras, is retransmitting to the CTV network or private radio stations, programs on the federal-provincial conference.

Then, what could stop the C.B.C. from saying: We shall buy that because it is "incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the corporation", as provided in that clause?

What could prevent the C.B.C. from buying channel 10 in Montreal? What could prevent the C.B.C. from buying all the radio stations here and there, either in Roberval, Dolbeau or in Alma? The C.B.C. only has to say that under clause 39 (1) (m), it can:

—acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

Under that clause, the corporation can decide to buy all the small private radio stations anywhere, as well as private television stations. It can take over television stations and newspapers.

In the United States—and it is the hon. member for York-Humber who told me about it the other day—the large television systems are owners of baseball, football and basketball clubs. Now, what could prevent the C.B.C. from saying: "We broadcast two hockey games every week, the Forum has become for us a huge television studio where we have set up our cameras and where we produce a three-hour program each week. As we have to pay dues to the Montreal Forum and to the hockey club "Les Canadiens" of Montreal, we could as well take advantage of clause 39(1)(m) under which we are allowed:

—to acquire hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company and corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

Then, 45, 48, 50 or 60 per cent of the shares in the Forum as well as in the hockey club "Les Canadiens" of Montreal would be purchased. Then, Mr. Chairman, the C.B.C. would be acting like the CBS and the NBC in the United States when they became owners of football, baseball or basketball clubs.

Mr. Chairman, the situation is almost identical. At that point, it could as well buy all the hockey clubs in Canada. The C.B.C. is the only large system in Canada which would have the means to do so. In the United States, at least, there are several large networks, such as NBC, CBS or ABC, which share all this. In Canada, however, there is only one large network which has the means to buy all or the majority of the shares in that sort of organization.

Clause 9(1)(m) did not exist in the old act, but it is to be added today. Once the C.B.C. acquires the right to own shares in private companies such as other radio or television stations, or in large newspapers such as La Presse or Le Soleil in Quebec, or buy shares in hockey clubs under the pretext that this is incidental to the purpose of the C.B.C., which wants to show the Canadian public the best in sports, or in forums, arenas or coliseums which are now simply huge television studios, what will prevent the corporation from going further and saying: We are buying shares in such a company that produces films.

What will prevent the C.B.C. from reasoning in this way: We show on the air 15 or 20 full-length features; therefore, why not buy Warner Brothers, MGM or Paramount Pictures or else why not buy stocks in those companies? It is the government that is paying behind the C.B.C. and under clause 39 (1) (m) the corporation is granted that privilege and that power.

What would prevent the C.B.C.—it might seem funny in the case of MGM, Warner Brothers or Paramount Pictures—to take over small companies that produce television films in Montreal or Toronto?

It is a known fact, Mr. Chairman, that there are a number of small companies which are producing films and commercials for television only. What would prevent the

C.B.C. from taking over those small companies, those small owners who, not being able to count on the patronage of the C.B.C., would fall through or would be forced to sell their business at a ridiculously low price?

There are companies in Montreal which are producing just enough to subsist. The film industry is slowly starting to develop in Canada, and those small companies greatly rely on the C.B.C. But the C.B.C. would come along and take over a few of these, giving them all its patronage, driving the others to bankruptcy.

Moreover, if the C.B.C. decided to buy one of these film producing companies and become its main customer, that would mean entering into competition with another crown corporation, that is the National Film Board.

Under the bill, the C.B.C. is to be allowed —to acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

Then, how many individuals could set up and promote such a company, rather than any other, because they hold shares in the said company. Furthermore, some farsighted employees—and that could easily occur —would acquire shares in these private companies, at the same time as the C.B.C., thus creating a danger of fraud.

Mr. Chairman, I think that clause 39 (1) (m) opens many avenues to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation which will enable it to compete unfairly with many private businesses existing at the present time, which contribute their share of profit and which pay taxes out of that share of profit. The corporation will thus infiltrate into private companies, with the people's money, and it will compete unfairly in such a way that it is the government which will compete with private enterprise.

In fact, it is the taxpayers who will make up the deficits of the government agencies.

Mr. Chairman, before carrying on discussion of paragraph (n) it would be useful, I think, to hear from the hon. Secretary of State about the intentions of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation with regard to that paragraph. It would be well for the hon. Secretary of State to tell us what field the C.B.C. wants to embark on, under this provision. Have projects been made?

I think that the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State (Mr. Béchard) will answer the question for the hon. Secretary of State. Could we, at least, have an idea of the purpose to be achieved by that paragraph?

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has no purpose other than that referred to in this legislation and I think that we have discussed long enough the objectives and so on of the C.B.C.

If the hon. member will refer to paragraph (m) and (n) of subclause (1) of clause 39 of the present legislation, this is what he will find:

(m) acquire broadcasting undertakings either by leave or by purchase subject to the approval of the governor in council; and

(n) do such other things as the Corporation deems incidental or conducive to the attainment of any of the objects or the exercise of any of the powers of the Corporation.

Therefore, the paragraph (m) and (n) which are the subjects of the remarks of the hon. member for Lapointe are simply intended not to control or to crush private television stations which, as was said by the hon. member, are simply starting in business and do not make as much money as they might wish, contrary to the explanations and statements made by some hon. members of the opposition to the effect that television stations make a lot of money, but to better attain the objects of the corporation.

Nevertheless, as regards acquiring private stations, nothing will be done without the approval of the governor in council. Moreover, amounts of money paid by the corporation are voted by the parliament, as the hon. member knows. In fact, the corporation shall submit its yearly budget to the approval of parliament and if the hon. member has special cases to point out, we could obviously see the evil intentions he seemingly allows to linger as regards the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. But, in any event, the corporation's powers are established under paragraphs (m) and (n).

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the parliamentary secretary for his explanations. However, it is the old act he was reading.

In the old act, which remains in force till the new act is passed, the section he has been reading to us differs from clause 39(1)(n) of the new bill in that it is not mentioned that the C.B.C. can:

—acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the object of the Corporation."

Under the terms of the new bill, not only can the C.B.C. "acquire" shares, but it also "hold and dispose" of shares—and this was not in the old act. Thus the C.B.C. can become the co-owner of a private enterprise jointly with other individuals. Sometimes this can be twice as interesting. And it was not in the old act.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, I believe section 29 (m) of the former legislation provides the following:

—acquire broadcasting stations either by lease or, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, by purchase; and

I believe it can buy shares, movables and immovables. I believe this is sufficiently understood by the word "purchase". Paragraph (m) of the new legislation derives from the interpretation of that section.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, under the new clause, the corporation may acquire undertakings "either by lease or by purchase," but it also mentions that the C.B.C. may "acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock." This does not mean the purchase of a company, but it may very well mean holding 40, 50, 60 per cent of the shares of a company, whereas under the former act, the C.B.C. could buy a existing station. Now we are told that the corporation can become a co-owner. In addition, the former act mentioned "broadcasting stations," whereas the new legislation does not mention anything at all. Provision is merely made for the corporation to:

(m) ... acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

The new legislation goes much further than the former act, because it is not restricted to "broadcasting stations", but includes even newspapers and film companies. And, as I mentioned earlier, the corporation could become the owner of a hockey or baseball team as happened in the United States.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, there will be only purchases capable of assisting the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, as stated in the legislation, in the attainment of its purpose.

[English]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Lapointe is raising a storm about very little. I do not think there is any danger to the Montreal Canadiens, La Presse, Warner Brothers or any private enterprise in this country as a result of clause 39 (1) (m). As the parliamentary secretary has pointed out, this provision has been in the existing act for many years. I have looked at the act which governs the B.B.C. in the United Kingdom and it has a similar section. I would imagine that whatever act governs the O.R.T.F. in France also has a similar provision.

There are many safeguards. One is that the corporation has to satisfy the cabinet that it must spend money for certain purposes. Somehow I do not see the cabinet approving the purchase of Montreal Canadiens, even if they were for sale, or the Toronto Maple Leafs, and the cabinet is not likely to approve the purchase of any newspaper in this country and get away with it. I think this provision is in its right place. The corporation does need approval to do certain ancillary things. This provision has been in the law for many years and no one has managed to build a empire because of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, the hon. parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State has just indicated to me that the contents of the new legislation is different from the old one.

The old legislation, as mentioned by the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State when he read it, allowed the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to purchase "broadcasting stations". However, under the new legislation, the C.B.C. has the power to:

—acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorize to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the Corporation;

I have mentioned a hockey team because the large networks have found it an incidental business conducive to the attainment of their objects. Furthermore, they became the owners of the New York Yankees and other large baseball teams of the American League. Why did they deem it advisable to become owners of professional football clubs? That was incidental and conducive to the purposes of the corporation.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) is right, for it is probably unlikely that the government would buy the Montreal Canadiens. I was just giving an example.

• (5:30 p.m.)

But under that paragraph, what would prevent, for instance, the directors of Warner Brothers from persuading the C.B.C. directors to buy 10 or 12 per cent of their shares? Not because they would need capital, but because through the establishment of tight bonds with the C.B.C., they would be in a more favoured position than other companies. That is where the evil lies.

I was referring to the newspaper La Presse, that the C.B.C. could also buy under this legislation, and I referred to paragraph (g), whereby the C.B.C. has power to:

—publish and distribute, whether for a consideration or otherwise, such papers, periodicals and other litterary matters as may be seem conducive to the purposes of the Corporation;

By publishing pages of advertising in Le Journal de Montréal or La Presse, or in the Quebec Le Soeil, could not the C.B.C.—which perhaps would not happen immediately with a newspaper such as La Presse, but could be the case with a small weekly or monthly review—suddenly encroach too much upon a field where, in my opinion, there is no reason for it to interfere at all?

The C.B.C. could acquire shares in companies which produce short films and commercials. It is a possibility and, in my opinion, that is the field into which the C.B.C. would find it an advantage to venture. But the C.B.C. will then find itself competing with another crown corporation which is already equipped to produce films, the National Film Board. Many small companies which would not have the competence necessary to give the results expected would disappear, and yet today, since the C.B.C. has not yet entered into this field, there are many small companies producing films for television.

Quietly, those small companies acquire experience, sign agreements with other international companies to acquire the necessary experience, and the Canadian film industry takes shape thanks to those companies which acquire more and more experience and merge for greater efficiency.

In my opinion, clause 39 (1) (m) is trying to interfere because from the day the C.B.C. decides to buy one of those small companies or 50 per cent of the shares, the said company will develop much more than the others, because the patronage of the C.B.C. will make up 80 per cent of its business and the film industry as a whole will suffer. That is why I feel that even if the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) says that the C.B.C. does not intend to buy La Presse tomorrow or in five years, still that opens the door to the C.B.C. and enables it to buy small monthly or weekly magazines. It also opens the door to the C.B.C. to buy companies that produce films for stations which compete with it in the field of television and perhaps to get into the field of sports as some big American television networks have done.

It may not be a hockey team to start with, but perhaps a gymnasium. Then, gradually, the C.B.C. will deviate from its purposes and instead of realizing its objective, which is the broadcasting of programs, it will have as main function the maintaining of sport teams, newspapers, other television stations or film companies. Thus the C.B.C. would be diverted from its objectives.

That is why I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary, who agreed to answer my questions, whether something is contemplated at the present time, whether the C.B.C. or the Secretary of State want this paragraph to be included for a very definite purpose in the near future. Is something specified?

The parliamentary secretary shakes his head. Then, what is the purpose of that paragraph? Those are questions that should be answered. This is what I object to.

I do not object to clause 39 as a whole, but to paragraph (m).

Since I have not been given any explanation, not knowing where the Secretary of State wants to lead us to, where the C.B.C. wants to go, I think it should be deleted and, all the more so, since the parliamentary secretary tells us that nothing is being contemplated for the time being under that paragraph. Then, if nothing is anticipated, let us drop it.

Miss LaMarsh: Guess.

Mr. Grégoire: The Secretary of State tells me to guess. She knows very well that I do not know any of her secrets. All the same, it might be a good thing if she would give us a few explanations with respect to clause 39 (1) (m) and tell us if anything is contemplated for the near future in this connection.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Chairman, I should like to propose a very slight amendment to subclause (1) (g) of clause 39. During the many meetings of the broadcasting committee over the past two years one matter was raised which I felt was never sufficiently satisfied. It is something which I think should be important to us in this place inasmuch as we all, I presume, have some sense of history. I have in mind the proper maintenance of documents, not necessarily written documents in most cases but rather recordings, films and videotapes which effectively portray the great events that take place during this period in our history.

I have been shocked to discover that the present facilities the C.B.C. has for the preservation of its various productions, both audio and visual, are very lacking. I have been told by some who are employed by the corporation that no consistent effort has been made to preserve in a systematic way the best materials that are produced from time to time so that they will be available for future generations or even available on a business-like basis for the production of programs relating to earlier films or recordings. Therefore I should like to move the following amendment to subclause (1) (g) of clause 39:

That 39 (1) (g) be amended by striking out the first three words and substituting therefor: "publish, distribute and preserve"

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. MacDonald (Prince)) agreed to.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I have some remarks I should like to make concerning subclause 1 (h) of clause 39. I propose to move an amendment to it. Under clause 39 the C.B.C. is given authority to collect news relating to current events in any part of the world and establish and subscribe to news agencies. When this new bill was being considered by the broadcasting committee I asked why the C.B.C., which is an arm of the Canadian government, had to be engaged in the business of collecting news in any part of the world and establishing a news agency. I was given the usual snappy answer without any background that parliament had so ordered. It simply happened that this bill was before the committee, that parliament had not passed the bill and that parliament had not so ordered.

I made reference to a speech made in Toronto by the newscaster Burke to the Toronto branch of the professional section of the journalistic fraternity, Sigma Delta Chi, in which he said in his new job, following Earl Cameron's move into limbo, that the C.B.C. was going to build up the greatest newsgathering organization in Canada. He said that the C.B.C. would not be satisfied to operate a second rate newsgathering organization but would build up the best newsgathering organization in Canada. That means at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada. Of course, that means nothing to Burke and I am certain it means nothing to the C.B.C.

Why should the taxpayers of Canada be asked to pay taxes in order to collect news relating to current events in any part of the world when such news events are and have been properly, adequately and correctly reported for many generations by members of the fourth estate? The newspapermen of this world have been gathering news since newspapers were first established, and when radio burst on the world in the early 1920's many newspapermen were quick to perceive the way in which it could be used to broadcast the news.

I have mentioned before that I was associated with the Toronto Star and radio station CFCA, which was the second radio station on the North American continent. We published news over CFCA which the Toronto Star gathered. The question was asked whether the Toronto Star could broadcast news over CFCA in the 1920's and 1930's which we were obtaining from co-operative newspapers in Vancouver, Victoria, Halifax and Winnipeg, when the contracts originally were that we could publish news so gathered co-operatively. The term "published" in those days was thought to refer to newspapers only.

The broadcasting of news over radio stations proved to be so popular that the Canadian Press, the granddaddy of all newsgathering organizations in Canada, decided at a publishers' meeting during a regular business session that they would sell the news they gathered primarily for their newspapers to radio stations and later to television stations, and a separate subsidiary company was set up called P.C.—Press Canadian, to distinguish it from Canadian Press—to sell news to the independent radio and television stations.

What in the name of heaven could a Canadian taxpayer, through the medium of the C.B.C., gather or learn about the news in any part of the world that is not now adequately covered by the newsgathering organizations which have been built up during the past 200 years? Why should the Canadian taxpayer be asked to engage in this private enterprise business, bearing in mind that Canadian Press and Associated Press of the United States are both co-operatively owned? If you want to call these co-operatives private systems I presume there is nothing to stop you, but Associated Press and Canadian Press are co-operatively owned. They are not 100 per cent private enterprises as we now understand a private enterprise.

Why in the name of heaven, when Canadian Press is sending photographers and newspaper reporters to cover such things as the seizure of the Dutch trawler which we dragged into a Canadian port while the North Koreans were dragging a United States ship into one of their ports, should the C.B.C. be going to the expense of sending men down there to make photographs and write stories? I ask this particularly because this incident would be adequately covered by the newspapers in St. John's, Newfoundland, with the assistance sent to them by the district office of Canadian Press in the maritimes. Surely the approach of that Dutch trawler into St. John's, Newfoundland, harbour is going to look just the same to the newspaper reporters of the St. John's newspapers as it would to any C.B.C. type flown down from Halifax, Montreal or Toronto. The same people will be looking at the same scene, and that newspaperman who is going to send his dispatch to the newspaper in St. John's, where in turn it will be dispatched to all newspapers through the Canadian Press, will see exactly the same thing as the C.B.C. man. The C.B.C. picture of the boat coming into St. John's harbour, compared with the picture the local newspaper would take and make available to all newspapers in Canada through the medium of the Canadian Press, and to those television and radio stations that want to subscribe to their services, would be the same.

If the Canadian government, through the medium of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, is going to compete with the co-operatively owned Canadian Press news service why don't we compete with Eaton's in the department store field? If Mr. Burke is going to teach the Canadian Press, which means the newspaper publishers of this country, how to suck eggs, why does he not go to Eaton's to teach them how to suck eggs? Why pick on one long established commercial enterprise which has reflected credit on itself and brought the news of the world, the news of far-flung parts of Canada and the news around every corner to all Canada for these many years, to the complete satisfaction of the readers and the viewers?

When this matter was discussed by the broadcasting committee I was given a snappy answer, and I use the word "snappy" on purpose. I was told it was much better to have motion picture films grinding out on C.B.C. television stations than stills. If there was a flood in Dresden, Ontario, I was told it would be much better to have a film showing the water rising and receding in Dresden than simply having a picture flashed on the screen showing the main street of Dresden or showing the flood conditions as they had been in London, Ontario some years ago when there was flooding on the Thames. It is funny, when we are told that the C.B.C. must have an absolutely accurate presentation by films of the present day and present moment situation, that we are still being given coverage by privately owned television stations through the use of still pictures. Of course, those stations are saving money and the saving of money is far, far, from the minds of those in the C.B.C. Apparently the saving of money never enters their minds. The C.T.V. news service is quite satisfactory, and there are many people who watch C.T.V. in preference to C.B.C. because they prefer that news service.

I have mentioned before in this house and at meetings of the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts that the C.B.C., with the taxpayers' money, is trying to build up an operation in competition with the Canadian Press which is owned by Canadians. That ought to please the hon. member for Lapointe because there is no United States money involved in the Canadian Press. This service is all Canadian and it has a Canadian charter. Here we have the taxpayers of Canada being asked to compete in gathering news; yet the C.B.C. subscribes to the Canadian Press service although Canadian Press does not subscribe to the C.B.C. news service.

Paragraph (h) of subclause (1) of clause 39 gives the authority to this new body to establish news agencies. What right, in the name of heaven, has the Canadian government got to establish news agencies even in Canada when every corner of the country is now covered and the service is satisfactory? I suggest it is satisfactory as shown by the circulation figures of Canadian newspapers. Before somebody starts to scream that circulation is dropping let me point out that Canadian newspapers increase their prices from time to time and as they do so their circulation drops. People who have been buying two or three newspapers stop getting the extra one. The fact that circulation drops does not indicate that the public has stopped relying on Canadian newspaper news services. This only indicates the play of the market-place, such as we heard about during the dispute about the new department of consumer affairs.

When Canadian newspapers are able to show an increase in circulation and revenue from their readers because the news service they are giving is adequate I see no reason for this government, considering the financial problems we have in the country, to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars in a competitive business such as newsgathering which is more than adequately covered in this country by the Canadian Press.

I have been told that we have to go to all parts of the world to gather news. We do not have to send people to Viet Nam at the taxpayers' expense and enable them to come back here and make off the cuff remarks which antagonize the United States government. I am sure you have never heard any Canadian newspaperman making statements like that. What does the C.B.C. do? All it asks for is money from the taxpayers to pay the expenses of employees travelling to all parts of the world so they can come back here and upset international relations which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has built up over many years. When these individuals shoot off their mouths we are told they are newspapermen and we cannot muzzle them. I am not suggesting that we should muzzle these chaps, but I do suggest the C.B.C. has no right to send these people to every part of the earth in order to obtain news which is made available to newspapers, radio stations and television stations by news services. Are we again going to throw our heads back and say we have to maintain a newsgathering system all over the world with the Canadian taxpayer paying for it, particularly when we compare it with the news service available to the public through the privately owned radio and T.V. networks?

I am not for one moment going to admit that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation news service is as good, let alone better than, the news services available to those who are willing to look at American stations and listen to the newscasts that they give. Most of the people who listen to the Canadian news services rather than the United States ones do so simply because of the local Canadian news.

[Mr. Cowan.]

In the international field you have to go the American stations to find out what is going on in all corners of the earth because those big networks, having a very wealthy market behind them, are able to keep correspondents throughout the world through the media of the Associated Press, Reuters, Havas and the other news services that have been building up everywhere. Havas and Wolffe—I am mentioning names in the newsgathering world of 30 years ago for you to conjure with—have merged into world organizations like Reuters which today covers the world. The C.B.C. can subscribe to the Reuters service and they will get adequate reporting from any corner of the world, if they will not take the Canadian Press service which is in co-operation with Associated Press.

Reuters, as most of you must know, is in competition with Associated Press throughout the world outside the United States. In the United States they recently opened up a large number of offices, but not to compete with Associated Press. They made the frank statement when they opened these offices that they were doing so to supplement the news service of Associated Press if the radio service, television service and newspapers wished to subscribe. Reuters is privately owned and in the United States competes with the privately owned United Press International and the co-operatively owned private organization, Associated Press. There is no government money being poured down a rat hole just in order to gather news here and there.

The Canadian taxpayer is entitled to a little more say, surely, about the way in which his money is being thrown around by the C.B.C. Why any money should be spent on collecting news relating to current events in any part of the world, and establishing news agencies, is beyond the comprehension of anyone who reads the daily newspapers of Canada and realizes what a marvellous service they give in the collecting, gathering and disseminating of news.

I have an amendment in respect of paragraph (h) but before moving it I would like to refer to paragraph (m) about which the hon. member for Lapointe was talking. Paragraph (m) says:

> Subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, acquire, hold and dispose of shares of the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the corporation;

I have said before, and I say again, that this bill we are being asked to pass is the finest piece of legislation ever introduced for the television and radio world of the past. Things are changing so fast in the radio and television world that if this bill goes through in its present form the operators in the television and radio world will not recognize it because they will be so far past it. The bill now before the transport committee, under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for Hamilton West—I refer to the Bell Telephone bill—will have a greater impact on the world of radio and T.V. in Canada than this bill when both of them are part of the legislation of this parliament. Some members snickered when the hon. member for Lapointe was referring to the fact that television station owners or television station companies themselves were purporting to own football teams, baseball teams and hockey teams. The classic case in point is the Columbia Broadcasting System which owns the Yankees. When these television systems buy up sporting teams they do it in order to have a built-in program of their own with which they can do as they like. It is some years ago that the Yankees were sold to the C.B.S. The interesting thing is there are teams all over the United States that are owned by local radio or T.V. stations. In fact, there are teams in the United States that are owned by television operators who are not necessarily broadcasting from the town in which the ball team is franchised to play.

Some years ago people were quite interested to learn that the Brooklyn Dodgers and the New York Giants were moving to the west coast. There was quite a bit of excitement also when the Boston Braves were sold to Milwaukee. Of course, the Milwaukee franchise has been moved from Milwaukee to Atlanta. These changes are being made all the time in the sporting world.

There is an influence bearing on these changes in the big pro teams that is not readily recognized by the general public or the sporting public. When the Giants and the Dodgers moved to the west coast there were no big, first rate ball games on the west coast that would hold audiences for the local T.V. stations. By bringing these teams to the west coast two changes were realized. The first was that the teams were on the west coast and could play home games for the benefit of home television stations and viewers. In addition, they added to the intensity of the competition in the United States in that people in San Francisco and Los Angeles, who never had any interest in big league ball on television when it involved nothing but the team from Baltimore playing Boston or Chicago playing Washington, became interested in the sport. People on the west coast yawned at many of the games formerly televised because there was no local interest in them. When teams were moved into these areas the local loyalty that followed added to the interest of the viewers and the audiences of the T.V. stations increased.

On the west coast Jack Kent Cooke not only owns the Los Angeles Kings, which is being operated by a former member of this house, that magnificent hockey player, Red Kelly, but he also owns the Lakers basketball team which has built up a tremendous reputation in the United States and has a tremendous following on television when its games are broadcast. This raises the question of professional baseball—

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Cowan: Shall I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at the time of adjournment tonight are as follows: The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), Education—request for federal assistance in teaching immigrant children, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), External Affairs—request for compensation for survivors of German concentration camps.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions.

WEST INDIES

SUGGESTED CLOSER ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL LINKS WITH ISLANDS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of taking an initiative in seeking to promote closer relations with the former British possessions in the West Indies which have not yet attained independence and further that, if the residents of these islands so desire it, economic and political union of these islands with the Dominion of Canada be negotiated at an early date at the proper constitutional levels.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is not a new subject for me. I note that on June 3, 1964, June 21, 1965 and June 22, 1966, I discussed this subject matter although in somewhat different phraseology. I am now discussing it in February, 1968, and I only wish I were discussing the subject on the spot rather than here in the capital of cold Canada. The difficulties of the day have been furthered by the fact I was trying to collect my thoughts against the background of the radio coverage of the conference over in the west block.

It is, I think, appropriate that I, not as a person but as a representative of an island, continue to be interested in the subject of this resolution. We islanders have many peculiarities, some people might say, but I think we have a feeling of special kinship for these residents of the former British West Indies. I have always had a special concern with the area because in my academic years I had many students from that part of the world, and of no group of students did I have a higher opinion than of those young people. I am happy that Canadian universities have established contacts that are worth while and lasting.

The area to which I am making reference in my resolution does not, of course, cover the whole of what we used to describe as the British West Indies but rather a smaller group of islands that are not fully independent and have not followed the path of Trinidad and Tobago, Jamaica and now the Barbados. I refer to the small islands with a total population of about three quarters of a million people and a total area even smaller than the province of Prince Edward Island. I am referring to those very small islands of St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Grenada, Antigua, St. Kitts, Montserrat and Dominica. People who drink either lime juice or rum will know about some of them at least. The area is tiny but the problems are great. There is a shortage of land, a shortage of skilled labour and at the same time a tremendous overpopulation, not to mention one of the great problems, the shortage of fresh water.

In many cases these islands have a sensitive dependence upon a one-product economy, a product which often occupies a precarious position in world markets. Generally, they have a very narrow resource base. The gross national product is low and wages are low but unemployment is high. Perhaps it is some of these latter statistics that make it possible for a maritimer in the Dominion of Canada to understand their problems. In other words, the situation of some of the people of these islands is serious as they press forward in a situation now more precarious because of political developments.

There are many problems facing our world today but one of the great problems is the disparity in the living standards of people. A hundred years ago Abraham Lincoln referred to his own country by saying, "No nation can exist half slave and half free." Can a world exist half affluent and half painfully depressed? The fractions, we know, are not precise because we know the world is not half affluent; the affluent part is a minority. I do not think the world can go on this fashion without repercussions. An enlightened people, an alert and sensitive member of the world community such as Canada is and proclaims itself to be, cannot be unaware of this sort of situation so near to us geographically.

These interesting little islands are, in a political sense, emerging nations. As political entities, of course, they are not new. In a real sense they are old communities. They have interesting traditions of British law and British institutions developed in a unique way in this unique and very beautiful part of the world. I need not, Mr. Speaker, detail the economic needs of these tiny islands. However, it is not exaggeration or condescension to say simply that both the economic and political viability of these small islands is most precarious. Sustained, massive action is required for their future stability, progress and prosperity.

The question which concerns us is, who should help and what help can be given? The United Kingdom has done much. The United States has helped. Canada has done a great deal and I am happy that the level of our assistance is rising. However, I believe that Canada is uniquely qualified to do much more in this area. Perhaps we in this area of the world could become a decisive factor in the efforts of these people for viability, both economic and political. We have close contacts with these people. Recently I read that 40 per cent of the tourist trade of the whole of what we used to call the British West Indies is made up of Canadian people. We have traded with these people over the years. Especially in the maritimes we have had close commercial contacts. We sold them our fish and bought from them molasses and rum. I think we got the better end of the deal in terms of gustatorial satisfaction, if nothing else.

We are near to these islands. There are many parts of Canada that are closer to these islands than they are to many other parts of this dominion. Improved air service, and this I salute, is bringing us closer. In the field of transportation we are being helpful in providing improvements in air support of this area. There is much more we can do. Transportation facilities both by sea and by air can be vastly improved.

Another reason why I think we are uniquely qualified lies in our commonwealth membership. I am not yet prepared to accept the idea that the commonwealth is nothing more than a subject for effusive after-dinner speakers. I cannot but believe there is some vitality in this interesting commonwealth idea and ideal, to which Canada has given such great leadership since the days of Robert Borden.

In this context I think there is a chance to make a vital and real contribution within the commonwealth structure. It is interesting that in the constitution of the islands to which I have referred there is a reference to them being self-governing states in free association with Great Britain, with the United Kingdom looking after their external affairs and defence. Also in their present document is the indication that the islands may change from a free state in association with Great Britain to free association with any other commonwealth countries. The process by which this change in relationship may be undertaken is a relatively simple one and can be coped with by the local government. I hope that if asked Canada would gladly and generously accept responsibility for this external aspect of sovereignty, namely, conduct of external affairs and defence. Personally, I go as far as the motion goes and say we should be willing to offer, if the peoples of these islands desire it, not only economic union but political union.

I am not unaware of the problems that might be involved here, and I will not be deluded into believing that in some of these difficult problems of race relations our country has been as Simon pure as we would sometimes seem to be when we criticize and castigate others. I am aware of all the potential problems. But surely, if three-quarters of a million people living in so small an area were to reach out for us to help them in a massive way, even to this extent, I think it would be a shame and a disgrace as well as an indignity were we unprepared and unwilling to lend such strength as we have to assist them in their efforts toward a richer and fuller life. In any case, Mr. Speaker, if we do not reach the stage of seeing at an early day political union between Canada and the West Indies, then I hope we will do all we can this side of that development, and do all we can to aid them in the future.

I should like to close with a few words on the question of external aid to these islands. I am one of those who believe tremendously in the importance of our external aid program. When so many other aspects of diplomatic endeavours are running into great difficulty, frustration, anxiety, distress and disappointment, I still hold great hope for an enlightened external aid program.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether a country such as Canada can carry on a meaningful program of aid to 65 countries scattered all over the world. In my opinion the Canadian external aid program could be described at the present time as offering too little aid to too many. I suggest it would be the better part of wisdom to concentrate on areas where our special kind of aid could be most effective. In this area where we do a job well let us do it thoroughly as well. Let us apply ourselves to aiding those areas of the world where, with well trained personnel, full discussion with the people involved and with the full understanding that is obtained by knowledge and contact with these people, thoughtful and intelligent long-range planning and follow-through can be brought about. Let us devote our finances and energy to this end. I have no patience with those people who say: "Oh, you have troubles enough in your own country, why try to save the world?" If we wait until we solve all our own problems we will sit passive, silent and useless forever in this world of ours.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I think we should establish a set of priorities, and for the reasons I have advanced this would be my first priority. I say this because of our history, our propinquity, our Commonwealth association, the indigenous need, and the opportunity for us to meet that need and perform a useful service to people facing great trials and difficulties that are inherent in their economic situation. As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, I was very happy with the meeting that took place in July, 1966, but much more needs to be done. We would delude ourselves were we to think for one moment that even with the improvements that have been made in recent years we were measuring up not only to the demands but to our capacity to meet those demands.

There are in the maritimes some experts on the West Indies situation. One of these is Professor Fraser of Acadia University who has studied this question for many years. In an interesting report of a meeting which took place at Dalhousie University in 1966 there was a very pungent paragraph, reading as follows:

> A report carried in the Financial Post of June 6, 1964, said that "Ottawa has been slightly discouraged by the snappish tone some West Indian politicians have displayed." The wonder is, of course, that there has not been more of it. West Indian leaders increasingly look to Canada for leadership and material help. It is remarkable to me that they continue to do so. It is astonishing that West Indian leaders still accept Canadian promises of concern for, and interest in, the region. Canada has over the years given the West Indians little reason to take our West Indian policy seriously. Over these years we have promised the West Indies the moon. But so far we have given them only a very little green cheese. It is not nearly enough.

Professor Fraser's remarks are a bit cryptic. Since he has uttered them we have done more. But I say again, Mr. Speaker, there is yet much more to do. I hope we will accept the challenge and move forward with all the energy we can so as to meet generously and fully the calls for aid which come from these people. If that is done I think I can say that we will have rendered on the international scene the kind of service for which we are suited, the kind of service that a country which enunciates the principles that we enunciate should render.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Macquarrie: If I have time I will be delighted.

Mr. Winch: In view of the remarks of the hon. member about the West Indies I should like to ask him whether he does not agree that the parliamentarians of this House of Commons have already evidenced a keen interest in the West Indies in that the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association of which you, Mr. Speaker, are president, and the hon. member who has just taken his seat is a member, last year made a commitment which will be carried through—and I speak as the House of Commons vice-chairman of the C.P.A.—to invite 12 parliamentarians from the West Indies to visit Canada as our guests this year?

Does that not truly express the interest of the parliamentarians of this house and the other place in the West Indies problem and indicate that we seek some understanding of their situation?

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, if I have time to respond I would say most heartily that I think this is just the kind of thing that parliamentarians should be doing. I hope this example will be followed by others and that a greater exchange between our two peoples will ensue. I am happy that the hon. member reminded me of this; I did know about it and I salute it.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I personally join in this recommendation of my hon. friend from the maritimes. I think it is appropriate that he renew his plea for the West Indies because, among other reasons, of his long and proud association with Mount Allison University. Over the years Mount Allison, along with Dalhousie, Acadia, the University of New Brunswick—indeed, all the areas of higher learning where this problem is really understood—have shared basically in the thesis that has been so ably and eloquently propounded by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie). I feel that time may be running out, that while our leaders, federal and provincial, are in the confederation block discussing the unity of our own country a responsibility lies on Canada with respect to this sensitive and exotic part of the world.

My hon. friend from Queens spoke specifically of the eastern Caribbean region, and for good reason. I believe he mentioned Montserrat, Antigua, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and St. Kitts. I also wish to refer to the West Indies area generally because I think that as Canadians we have a large and unavoidable responsibility in the entire area.

If we were more conscious of our obligations and responsibilities elsewhere perhaps our problems at home would loom less large and might be more easily and generously resolved. I know it has been contended that we must avoid establishing any constitutional arrangement with any islands which might perhaps smack of colonialism or of a colonial arrangement. The point has sometimes been made that in our relations with the West Indies we should avoid playing favourites. In my remarks I speak for myself and not necessarily for my party. A responsible representation, I understand, will follow mine. Speaking for myself, I believe that what has been suggested in this motion is wise and sensible and in the long run will benefit Canada at home and abroad.

Does this proposal present such a great challenge, really? The hon. member has put before us two proposals, one being, in effect, union or confederation. With that I concur. If such were accomplished the benefits of our advanced economy and our expertise in many directions would be made available to our close island friends. Is there room in our Canadian thinking and constitution for a province in the Caribbean? We should think about this seriously. The West Indian view has been ably put by H.O.B. Wooding, Q.C., who was called to the Middle Temple in 1927. He reminds us that overtures for closer Canada-West Indies trade relations were first made more than 100 years ago. At that time the West Indies were a chain of wealthy and strategic islands for the possession of which many a battle was waged. Indeed, in the history of the eighteenth century we find that the islands were regarded as more valuable than Canada. There were objections to economic and political movements tending to unite Canada and the islands, including the movement of free trade.

Less than 30 years later Sir John A. Macdonald appointed an adviser to himself on West Indian affairs and chose for the office Sir Francis Hincks, who had been formerly governor of Barbados. From Barbados a letter was sent by Sir Francis urging that Barbados be admitted as a member of our confederation.

The Leeward Islands also were active. Their solicitor-general, Mr. Henry Berkeley, in 1884 felt that the islands were strongly in favour of closer union with Canada. Seventy five years ago economic factors were sufficiently compelling to induce Canada and the West Indies to seek a closer relationship with each other.

I jump over to the Borden era. Professor Kenneth McNaught, in an article entitled "Should Canada 'Adopt' the West Indies", says that Francis Keefer, who was the Canadian parliamentary under secretary of state for external affairs, wrote to Borden as follows:

> Now is the time, it seems to me—

Wrote Keefer to Borden.

> —for the Canadian government to quietly bring up with the Home Government the advisability of suggesting to the West Indian officials the desirability of joining the Canadian Confederation.

He went on to say:

> I would dearly love to see you finish your term of office, in addition to what you have done, by adding to Confederation these British possessions in the West Atlantic.

Sir Robert Borden replied:

> The question of handing over the administration of the British West Indies Island to Canada or of having them formally annexed to Canada has been under discussion with the British government more or less during the past two years.

Of course, we are not now talking about any colonial arrangement. Heaven knows, we have learned too much about the agonies that result from such arrangements. But let us go back to the nuts and bolts of such arrangements. Let us look at the hard facts, and I am referring to what Canada is selling to the West Indies. We sell flour, fish, pickled and salted, motor vehicles and parts, meats, canned fish and fabrics as well as many other commodities, but these are the half dozen most important ones. What is Canada buying from the West Indies? We buy bauxite and aluminum, sugar, crude petroleum, juices, fruit, molasses and rum. It is clear that there is a great natural advantage in a relationship between two such complementary economic areas.

Most of us are familiar with the recent representation of Hon. John Compton, chief minister of St. Lucia. May I refer to an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 4, 1967. The article reads in part:

> —the possibility of free trade between Canada and the Windwards was canvassed by John Compton, St. Lucia's chief minister, in Ottawa in 1965, and the idea found a warm response.

Elsewhere Sir John Compton says, "The islands are moving toward a political vacuum in the eastern Caribbean". Surely the people of North America have a great stake in freedom. This is a matter in which Canadians have an important share and a continuing concern. What is to be our contribution to an unstable world? Do we want our friends, who for many reasons cannot now look to Britain with the same confidence as before with respect to economic assistance, to feel that they are unable to rely on any real co-operation from Canada? The United States is too preoccupied to be responsive to the area's needs. Do we want these good people who have been brought up with a language that is common to ours, whose parliamentary traditions, culture, system of jurisprudence and system of values are common to ours—and many of those in the area who have received higher education have received it in our Canadian universities or in the United Kingdom—to feel that they must now look elsewhere for assistance, as Cuba has done?

Sir, within the last few months we have gone through a very difficult study of our defence responsibilities and trends and we made a deliberate decision, with unification, to develop a highly mobile, elite force. Yet all the experts who talk to us about peace keeping say that such a force in 90 per cent of the occasions which can be foreseen will be used in tropical or semi-tropical conditions between 20 degrees north and 20 degrees south of the equator. How does Canada propose to train in the years ahead a highly mobile defence force? To me it is perfectly logical that we should seek, if not confederation, at least some close association with these neighbours, helping them to develop an infrastructure, helping them to improve communications, building them up, island by island, strengthening their economies and directing, as the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) suggested, far more co-operative attention to this area of the world in order that our aid might show some concrete result.

Could we not regard the British West Indies, as a great sociological workshop, where our country of 20 million people, the second richest in the world, seek to assist its friends, approximately four million people, living in a thoroughly delightful climate—the best, I am told, from the standpoint of human pleasure, in the world. Could we not so combine our affairs, so co-ordinate our enterprise and our efforts that we become, if not one country, of great comfort and assistance to each other?

If more Canadian dollars were diverted to this area—and we have been told that 40 per cent of the tourism in the West Indies is even now Canadian in origin—if we provided for our forces island training for a more effective defence posture, and if our economic assistance became adequate to this truly deserving people, then our aid could result, not in a lost cause but in a great success, simply because we had decided to use whole measures rather than half measures. I have personally every sympathy for what we are doing under the Colombo plan—I have a sister who was there for some time with her husband and children. We know, too, that the Governor General and others in Canada who have had anything to do with India or Pakistan appreciate how vital this program is. And yet, as Dame Barbara Ward has said, there is a great danger of dividing and dispersing our efforts under these aid programs to such an extent that they are less than meaningful. Here is a case where by reason of history, geography and common tradition we have an unmistakable responsibility throughout the Caribbean area.

May I mention another point which is always worthy of consideration? I am turning aside from the obvious advantage of being able to find within our alliance friends whose territories complement our rigorous winter northern climate. We know that the United States has benefited very greatly from its association with St. Thomas and the Virgin Islands. Who could question the great strength which has come to the United States by the accession to the union of the wonderful state of Hawaii. We know that the French islands of Martinique and Guadeloupe have gained greater strength by their common association. I wonder whether Canada is now big enough, as Duncan Fraser and so many other scholars have suggested, to assume her proper role in this area, and to cease taking a superior attitude toward others in the world who find themselves encountering racial problems and responsibilities. Last week I spent two days in Washington wondering how it comes about that we can be so critical of our neighbours who are now trying to do big things in the realm of sociology. Are we in Canada really serious when we talk about living in a country which is strengthened by diversity? I will not easily forget the occasion on which the great Marion Anderson came down to Queen's University to get an honorary degree. Leonard Brockington helped her prepare the message she delivered, but she did it in her own inimitable way. Among other things which were memorable and moving in her words to those young people was a quotation from a poem written by an unknown Jamaican:

> Dark people singing in my veins,
> Fair people singing sweet strains,
> And when I bow my head in prayer,
> I bow with dark hands, blue eyes, red hair.

As we go through these difficult days asking ourselves how we are to make confederation in Canada more viable during the next hundred years, how we are to reconcile conflicting views on these petty differences of language, it seems to me the suggestion put forward so eloquently by the hon. member for Queens is one which, if followed, would make us a bigger, prouder, more generous and more united people.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): It is one of the idiosyncracies of the Canadian parliament that on one part of our premises we should be considering—probably not too hopefully—the difficulties which are dividing us internally, while at the same time we should be considering in this chamber a suggestion that Canada has now reached a stage at which we should take over some of the duties previously performed by Britain to the extent of assisting other parts of the commonwealth through programs and policies with which we have not been associated in the past.

I have always believed we should have a close relationship with the West Indies. As a Canadian coming from a climate which even here is regarded as northerly, I can see many advantages about having available to us a winter wonderland where our people can enjoy the sunshine and the sea. Tourist revenue is nowadays a significant part of national income. I can recall figures of several years ago showing that Canada was running a trade deficit approaching $400 million on its account with the United States alone. This seems an extremely high figure having in mind the large numbers of tourists from the United States whom we see coming here each year.

The adverse balance of $400 million arises mainly because of the climatic difference between the two countries. Those who go south to the sun are accustomed to taking holidays of longer duration than do their counterparts who visit northern areas at times when our season is favourable. Then again, Americans travelling in the north are accustomed to using our national parks at low rates; they bring their own pop and other supplies to last them during a two-week stay. Canadians travelling south are not so fortunate. For obvious reasons I see a great advantage in establishing a relationship with the islands of the Caribbean which would work out to our mutual advantage.

I am often surprised at the number of things we buy from the United States—items we could just as easily buy from other countries to which we could in turn export Canadian goods. Many of the purchases we make from the United States, if we made them from commonwealth countries with which we have close connections, could make a great difference to their balance of payments and economies. Canadian importation of bananas and citrus fruits from commonwealth countries could be significant to their economies, and yet not make so much difference to California and some of the other traditional supplying markets we have had over the years.

Such a step cannot be brought about merely by the wishes of the Canadian public. It must be by government direction and by close co-operation with these countries, after discovering what materials we have that we can exchange for goods that they can supply; and here I speak specifically of the Caribbean islands. I do not entirely agree with those who say we are now in a position to take in the Caribbean nations as part of the Canadian confederation. We do not know what the future of our confederation will be five years hence. It is quite probable that we will have something in the nature of a Suez canal running through part of Canada, and will have some difficulty servicing the maritime provinces without going through someone else's territory. Knowing this, and knowing that unless we are given more leadership than we have had in the past few years, it is foolish to talk about an economic or political union with islands far removed from the central areas of Canada. For this reason the government may not be willing to give consideration to this motion. However, trade and the exchange of tourists are matters which could be developed to the advantage of both areas.

The sponsor of the motion has discussed our role in the commonwealth, and I am in complete agreement with what he said on that topic. When I attended the recent Commonwealth Parliamentary Association meeting in Uganda I was surprised to learn how many commonwealth countries looked to Great Britain for aid when difficulties arose. It is true that Canada gives a small amount of money for such aid. I do not suggest that we can increase this amount at the moment. The reason that we cannot is that the average Canadian suffers from a lack of knowledge about external aid and its purposes.

I was also surprised to find out that aid given by the commonwealth, particularly by Great Britain, to newly developing countries was given with no strings attached. This contrasts with the American concept where you "don't give nothin' for nothin' ", where you want $2 returned for every dollar you spend, and you want to see that $2 now. The Americans have never given aid to any country without telling that country how much it was indebted to the United States. Yet with all the aid they have given to Korea and Viet Nam they have been unable to win many friends or accomplish much in those countries. We, living in the North American environment, will have to steer a course between the British concept of aid and the American concept.

Each time the Canadian government makes a donation to a newly developing country I get four or five letters from constituents asking, "Why in hell should we be giving money to a country we never heard of, when our old age pensions are not high enough and our other benefits are not sufficient? Why not do something for us at home before starting to give money away?" These people do not realize that the money given to other countries will bring them a return, if the proper arrangements are made. These arrangements have not been made. We have never made trade arrangements with many of the countries that we assist.

When I was in Uganda I had the opportunity, if one wishes to call it so to spend some time in a hospital. The sheets on my bed were made in England. The medicines that were supplied were made in England. The bed cover was made in Scotland. The glucose, which came in a can, was made in Ireland. In other words Britain received some benefit from the aid it provided by developing trade with Uganda.

I am sure the sponsor of this motion is not unmindful of the fact that when we may give assistance we will also expect something in return. It is not enough to supply one doctor to a newly developing country. We should be able to supply a number of doctors, establish a hospital, and thus be able to say that the Canadian people are doing something in a particular locality. No missionary sent out to the mission field can expect support without being able to show to the church sponsoring him pictures of the church he has built, the people he is helping, and the concrete results of the contributions sent to him. The average individual Canadian on the street is unable to see any results from our foreign aid.

I do not see us giving the people of the Caribbean anything more than we are likely to receive from them. But I do see more trade being developed with the entire area, including Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados and other places which were part of the West Indies. If they joined with us they could supply us with products that, because of climatic conditions, we cannot produce ourselves. In turn we could supply them with many goods they are unable to produce.

Obviously there will be problems ahead. At the moment we cannot even get along with the province of Quebec on two simple problems, one being the language problem, and the other the much more important one, that the province of Quebec has never really grown up and played its role in confederation. It is like an adolescent child which has reached the stage that it is able to go out and make a few bucks, and so says, "To heck with the family that raised me. I won't contribute to the pot. I want all this for myself." Obviously Quebec is not interested in becoming a "have" province within confederation, yet for a long time as a "have not" province it has been assisted greatly in a number of fields. This is a problem that we have not been able to solve.

In the circumstances we will not be able to take on the problem of the Caribbean for quite some time. Until we are able to solve the first problem we will not be able to solve the second. In Canada we have been Simon pure so far as racial problems are concerned, simply because they have not arisen. When there are only a very few people involved it is easy to say, "There will be no discrimination." All of us have known a few people of other races in various communities, and when they are few in number it is very easy to say of one of them, "Yes, I know Joe, and he is a pretty good guy". We can look at him as an individual and not as a representative of a class of people.

We have not had a problem similar to the Puerto Rican problem of New York, the Harlem problem or the ghetto problem of Detroit, but I believe Great Britain now is experiencing some of these problems and has not been able to solve them. This is something which must be considered if we are to extend full partnership to these islands, because this would mean that there would be an exchange of persons from the West Indies on a permanent basis who may be of a race and colour different from that of the majority of the general Canadian public. This is not an insurmountable problem; but we must reach a fairly high degree of sophistication before this partnership can take place, particularly with the political ramifications which to-date we do not seem to have been able to handle.

I believe the stature of Canada among the nations of the commonwealth would increase vastly if the government should accept this motion or give some study immediately to the feasibility of a very limited union of an economic nature. The government should consider the future implications of an economic and political union leading eventually to provincial status for the West Indies. I of course have not been to these areas. I have not spoken to many people from the smaller islands who might be interested in the type of proposal we are suggesting. However, since the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association has moved to bring a number of these delegates to Canada this year, I think the government would be well advised to consider discussing with them the possibility of at least this limited co-operation in an economic sense, and the feasibility of discussing political and provincial status arrangements.

In closing I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) for having raised this matter. I find it disconcerting that this type of motion should come from those of a conservative bent, when obviously it is something which is very progressive in outlook. I therefore doubly congratulate him. I am aware of the fact that the people in the maritime provinces have been much more interested in the expansion of Canada and have in many ways made a greater contribution to the stature of the discussions which take place in respect of the development of our nation, than those in other parts of Canada, including my province, who have always been more interested in what they can get out of the association than what they put in.

I hope arrangements will be made immediately for the expansion of export aid, and that this will be done in a meaningful way so that the people who receive it will be aware of the friendliness of the Canadian public behind the gesture. Those people in turn will be able to bring to the attention of the Canadian public, through their acceptance of the aid, the fact that this type of aid is mutual. While we may be in the position of supplying the dollars now, the benefits of the dollars in helping other countries to develop will bring greater rewards to the Canadian public as the years go by, through trade and co-operation in the commonwealth arrangement.

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the motion of the hon. member for Queens. Last year and in previous years the hon. member has had a motion of a similar nature promoting closer relations with the West Indies. Last year I seized the occasion to discuss the Patrick proposal for a better Canada-West Indies relationship. Since that time some of the islands have reached independence and the Canada-West Indies conference has taken place in Ottawa.

Barbados, Trinidad and Jamaica now are full fledged independent commonwealth nations. Antigua, Dominica, St. Lucia, Grenada and others are independent states in association with Great Britain. However, as the hon. member for Queens pointed out, the constitution of these associated states permits the islands to change from a free state in association with Great Britain to a free state in association with another commonwealth country. This could be done by a very simple procedure. Some of the other islands such as Montserrat and St. Vincent are still possessions of Great Britain, having an administrator who is appointed, not elected.

As a result of last year's conference Canadian external aid to this area of the world has been greatly increased. The Canadian government will spend a minimum of $65 million in the next five years. There will be special assistance to the local university, aid in radio communications and aid in airport extension. The premiers and leaders of the islands consult and co-operate in the promotion of these projects.

The proposal for a new Canada-West Indies relationship deals mainly with the so-called little eight islands of Barbados, Antigua, St. Kitts, Montserrat, Dominica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent and Grenada with a total population of about 700,000. Under the proposal Canada would assume the role of senior partner and would invite the islands to join us in a monetary and customs union. Canada would provide for their defence and external affairs representation.

Mr. Speaker: The hour for the consideration of private members business has now expired. I do now leave the chair. It being seven o'clock the house will resume the business which was interrupted at six o'clock.

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: It being seven o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At seven o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-163, an act to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, when the committee moved into private members business at six o'clock I was discussing clause 39 of the bill with particular reference to paragraphs (h) and (m). I have an amendment to paragraph (h) which I shall move in a moment, because if I should move it now I would be unable to comment on paragraph (m).

Earlier I pointed out that financial interests acquire sporting organizations such as hockey, football, baseball and basketball teams, because of the cost of obtaining rights to cover programs on television and radio stations, if they have such stations under their control. Many people may think that this is unbelievable, but it is the fact. Many of these teams we follow through our newspapers, radio and television stations, are owned outright by radio and television personalities, for the reason I have mentioned.

As I have said before, this act is the greatest radio and television act one could imagine for the benefit of investors in radio and television, and if it is accepted it will have the greatest effect on sporting activities the world has ever seen. Teams are being bought up by these organizations. I should not like the public to think that for the rest of time we are going to be able to sit in our living rooms anywhere in North America and watch first class hockey games and first class world series ball games without having to pay. Many people can get hot and bothered about a C.B.C. installation forming a network to put these games into the homes of people throughout the country, but it is ridiculous to think we can force the people who have money to make all these big professional sports events available through an open broadcasting system without the viewers having to pay for the privilege of watching. Whenever money can be made in this way, the viewers must pay for the service.

We cannot continue for ever and a day to broadcast over the open airwaves the work of professional athletes such as the hockey players, football players and baseball players without compensating them for the entertainment they bring into the homes of the nation. It is all right for people to scream that these athletes are making more money now than they ever made before, because of television, but we must remember that the participants in those leagues below the top are still being paid peanuts. We all know of the Dallas player who was suspended for seven weeks because he looked cross-eyed at a coach. These professional players today use their sinew and muscle, and unless they share in the profits being made through television they will not go along with the distribution of these programs across the nation, as is the case in respect of the C.B.C. system.

Certainly the C.B.C. does not receive full compensation for the amount of money it spends to put these sports activities over the air. I could go on with this subject at some length, but I know my time is limited. Perhaps I will have something else to say following the remarks of another hon. member who may speak. In any event I should like at this time to move an amendment to paragraph (h) of subclause (1) of clause 39. I move:

That the words "collect news relating to current events in any part of the world and establish and" be deleted from paragraph (h) of subclause (1) of clause 39.

This would mean that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation would have to get its news from newsgathering services available to them, including Reuters, Associated Press and Canadian Press. This will provide a little surcease for the Canadian taxpayer. Why should he be forced into this competitive newsgathering game when other newsgathering organizations are now providing this service? In any event I should like to move this amendment.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, before the dinner recess, and since, I have listened very carefully to the hon. member for York-Humber.

An hon. Member: Have you understood him any better than the rest of us?

Mr. Winch: I understand that he has a long and distinguished record in the journalistic world, but for the life of me I cannot understand his half hour discourse on paragraphs (h) and (m) of subclause (1) of clause 39. His amendment is completely out of this world.

Mr. Walker: I rise on a point of order. Would it be possible to have the Chair read the original amendment moved by the hon. member for York-Humber so we will all know the relation of the hon. member's remarks?

The Chairman: It has been moved by Mr. Cowan:

That the words "collect news relating to current events in any part of the world and establish and" be deleted from sub-clause (h) of section 1 of clause 39.

Perhaps I should read again the words to be deleted. They are, "collect news relating to current events in any part of the world and establish and".

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, if the amendment moved by the hon. member were to carry, it would strike out, as you have already read:

—collect news relating to current events in any part of the world and establish and—

If this were done, paragraph (h) would then read:

—subscribe to news agencies;

Just what kind of a C.B.C. would we have if that were the case? If this amendment were in effect now, it would mean that my hon. friend could not be interviewed out in the corridor on the stupidity or otherwise of his remarks in this house. It would mean that no member of the House of Commons or the Senate, or anybody who knows anything about what is happening in Canada that is of importance to the public, could be televised or recorded as to his views on the situation, because in the terms of the amendment the corporation could use only the news it obtains by subscribing to news agencies.

Mr. Cowan: You should see them on the private stations.

Mr. Winch: The hon. member says, "You should see them on the private stations", so he wants to completely discriminate between the public corporation and private stations. He would allow private stations to interview members of parliament, himself included, and gather news across Canada or anywhere else in the world, but not the corporation.

Mr. Cowan: Not at the taxpayers' expense.

Mr. Winch: For just how long would the public corporation maintain any audience, on that basis, Mr. Chairman? I am afraid that my hon. friend, with all his journalistic experience, has got himself into the narrow position of a straight, linotype, punch-board operation, not realizing—and I listened very carefully when he spoke prior to the dinner recess—that if his amendment were passed the corporation could obtain only still pictures from the news agencies. Or perhaps the hon. member does realize this.

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and members of this House of Commons who watch the news on private stations or the C.B.C., is there not a fantastic difference between seeing a still picture on television and seeing a moving picture of what is taking place? Yet the hon. member for York-Humber wants this house to pass an amendment that will say that as far as the public corporation is concerned, in the reporting of news they shall only use a still picture supplied to them by reason of a subscription to a news agency. His amendment, if passed, would mean that we would not be allowed to see the motion, the activity, the emotion of what is going on.

The hon. member just now interpolated that the restriction he wishes to place on the corporation shall not be applied to private radio or television stations. He wants free enterprise in this area to use motion, emotion and the travelling scene. Private radio and television stations will be able to interview the hon. member and members of parliament, if this amendment is passed, but the public corporation shall not have that right. I see, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend is nodding his head, indicating that I am saying exactly what he has in mind.

Mr. Cowan: That is right.

Mr. Winch: This is the most retrograde, despicable proposition ever made in this House of Commons. There is no question whatsoever that this man is so far back in respect of current publicity and public relations giving the complete picture of what is going on, that I say that journalisticwise his views even pre-date those to which I referred a moment ago in respect of the installation of the linotype.

This amendment is so retrograde, so reprehensible, that any member of a progressive nature would be repudiated by the Conservative party, let alone the Liberals. This amendment should be rejected immediately.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Cowan: Just one moment, Mr. Chairman. I will not take more than a moment or two of the time of the committee, but I maintain that Canadian taxpayers should not be assessed these millions of dollars to operate a news service in competition with the news service that is paid for by private enterprise, which does not cost Canadian taxpayers one cent. That is the whole basis of my argument.

Amendment (Mr. Cowan) negatived: Yeas, 3; nays, 47.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I think I owe it to the hon. member for Lapointe to very briefly speak to his comments with respect to paragraph (m). This provision is in the bill for a number of reasons, and I think it is very necessary having regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for York-Humber about purchasing football teams and sports groups of one kind and another. Two things must be realized in reference to this paragraph; first, that any purchase of shares has to be in connection with the capital stock of any company or corporation authorized to carry on any business that is incidental or conducive to the attainment of the objects of the corporation and, second, and perhaps of paramount importance, it is subject to the approval of the governor in council.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, this is no thin edge of the wedge of an incursion into private business or attempt to take over from the film board or private enterprise, as has been suggested. Nor is it even suggested that any minor teams, let alone major teams, will be taken over by the corporation. It is a matter of efficiency. If there is a co-production agreement between the corporation and any film group, more likely those who invest in the soon-to-be established film corporation, this is an attempt to limit the liability of the corporation in that the responsibility involved would be only the loss or gain of shares and would not affect the partnership that obtains. Further, it is hoped there will be a more efficient use of moneys invested by groups such as a company that is set up to manufacture and use costumes for films, and things of this kind. It may be that a corporation would be set up specifically to film the classics of French and English literature such as those of Racine, Molière and Shakespeare, things that have not been done, and would sell abroad. One of the difficulties has been, not that the corporation has spent too much money but that it has not spent enough time and ingenuity to try to recover the money spent on the films it has made, by seeing that they would not be shown just in Canada but would be shown on English and French television around the world.

• (8:20 p.m.)

As educational television becomes more important, it is highly likely that corporations will be formed to film the classics which those corporations would be able to sell to networks around the world. The C.B.C. might have a desire to share in this because it could represent revenue to the C.B.C. I think my hon. friend, rather than being afraid of the things that might come to pass under this provision, might find it a stimulation to the provision of some moneys which will help the corporation get ahead, as it has not been able to do heretofore. I hope my hon. friend will be prepared to allow the corporation to try this new venture, since it must in every case get the money from parliament through the aegis of the governor in council, who must approve any specific engagement into which the corporation wishes to enter.

Mr. Grégoire: I have just one small question.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether the C.B.C. intends, under this clause, to share with Power Corporation the ownership of the satellites above the province of Quebec?

[English]

Miss LaMarsh: No, there is no such suggestion. It is quite obvious that in the international sphere, things like satellites, if there are to be satellites, will be specifically Canadian. They must be owned, not by the corporation or an agency of the government, but by the government and the people of Canada.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 40—Corporation an agent of Her Majesty.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, as regards clause 40, I have no objection to the principle here, but I have as regards the wording.

It states that the corporation "is an agent of Her Majesty". Subclauses (1) and (2) provide the following:

The Corporation may, on behalf of Her Majesty, enter into contracts in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the Corporation.

Subclause (3) states the following:

Property acquired by the Corporation is the property of Her Majesty—

How is it that the Canadian people pay taxes and that all that will be the property of Her Majesty? That is what is written here:

Property acquired by the Corporation is the property of Her Majesty and title thereto may be vested in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the Corporation.

Subclause (4) reads as follows:

Actions, suits or other legal proceedings in respect of any right or obligation acquired or incurred by the Corporation on behalf of Her Majesty, whether in its name or in the name of Her Majesty—

Could we not change that? I do not accept this term and, on the other hand, the term "Her Majesty" is not defined. Clause (3) that deals with interpretation does not refer to "Her Majesty". Therefore, I am categorically and vigorously opposed. Let us apply all this as mentioned in subclause (3):

Property acquired by the Corporation—

All that is acquired by the corporation is so acquired through our taxes and, in no case, in the name of Her Majesty. I cannot accept that.

I heard this afternoon extracts of the federal-provincial conference where objection was taken to similar expressions. I wonder if it would not be possible instead to say that the whole thing belongs to the Canadian people and not to Her Majesty. I am completely against that.

Mr. Béchard: There is no doubt that the hon. independentist member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) is against that. What belongs to Her Majesty as far as the C.B.C. is concerned belongs to Her Majesty in right of Canada at the present time according to our constitution and it cannot be otherwise.

I think that the discussion could go on all night without getting anywhere with the speech by the hon. independentist member for Lapointe.

Mr. Grégoire: The hon. member for Bonaventure might think so. He has just told us that Canada and Her Majesty were the same thing; therefore, he is a royalist of the old days. He claims that Canada and Her Majesty are the same thing. I disagree.

This term gives rise to so many misunderstandings that I cannot accept it. Not too long ago, in the court of Quebec city, an individual was accused of having committed rape on a young girl. It was Her Majesty vs. Mr. So and So. The accused said: I do not know her. I never raped her. Yet, on the bill of his indictment, it was clearly written that Her Majesty was prosecuting him for a crime.

Here, it is said that everything will be the property of Her Majesty, and I protest. I am not here as a representative of Her Majesty, but as representative of the constituents of the riding of Lapointe, and when my constituents pay taxes, I do not want them to pay for things belonging to Her Majesty.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the independentist member what was the nature of the oath he took when he was elected to the House of Commons?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for his question. I took it to Elizabeth II, Queen of England and also Queen of the Commonwealth. I am still prepared to be part of the Commonwealth, because until further order, it has not been proved harmful. I have no objection to Elizabeth II as Head of the Commonwealth. On the other hand, it is not what is said here. This clause provides that the immovables of the corporation, its electronic and other equipment, belong to Her Majesty, and I quote:

Property acquired by the Corporation is the property of Her Majesty and title thereto may be vested in the name of Her Majesty or in the name of the Corporation.

I disagree on this point, Mr. Chairman, I cannot accept such a thing. I am quite willing to pay taxes to enable the C.B.C. to acquire property, because it is doing a good job, I agree. I see that my friend, the hon. member for York-Humber, is turning red and is about to rise. But, after all, I live in Quebec and not in Great Britain. If I pay taxes, it is not to turn everything over to Her Majesty. I prefer our taxes to remain in Quebec and in Canada, because, after all, it is our money.

If the hon. member for Bonaventure tells me: Ah, it is the same thing, Her Majesty in the right of Canada. If it is the same thing let us say so. The Canadians who pay for the C.B.C. do not belong to the Queen. Her Majesty did not pay a penny for that, so we have no business giving it to her. I protest and ask for a vote on that, because I do not want the product of my taxes to go to the Queen.

This very afternoon, Mr. Chairman, I received the reply of the hon. member for Bonaventure to Question No. 863 on loans to England, on behalf of the Queen. In 1947, we loaned her an amount of $640 million which she has never reimbursed. She does not even pay interest and now the loan is worth $976 million. That country does not pay, it is in arrears. Well, if England does not pay, it does not follow that we should also give it the C.B.C. As for me, I protest; I am going to vote against that and I ask for a vote on this point.

Let us bring that back to Canada; let it belong to the Canadians or the Quebecers but let us stop giving everything we have to Her Majesty. No wonder we are poor and have nothing, we give everything away and we put it in the legislation. Long live the Queen. That will belong to Her Majesty.

I protest, Mr. Chairman, and I shall vote against it with both hands.

[English]

The Chairman: Shall clause 40 carry?

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that since the hon. member for Lapointe voted against my amendment to clause 39, I cannot support him on clause 40. I can assure the committee that I realize it is self-evident that I cannot support him, and I do not need to explain my stand. When he states that he does not like paying his taxes to the Queen, I might say that being from Ontario I do not like paying my taxes to the Queen and then having her send my money down to Quebec in the form of equalization payments.

• (8:30 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that we are not getting the money from the province of Ontario; it is rather the province of Quebec, according to the official statistics provided by the hon. Minister of Finance in 1963, that is paying for the rest of Canada. Some of it is sent first to the rest of Canada and, then, to the Queen.

I protest—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. Shall clause 40 carry?

[Mr. Grégoire.]

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: No, Mr. Chairman, no. I am asking for the question to be put. I want to know who is a royalist and who is a Canadian.

An hon. Member: You are going to know.

[English]

Clause agreed to: Yeas, 55; nays, 1.

On clause 41—Acquisition and disposition of property.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister one question on this clause.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, my records indicate that clause 41 was carried previously. Is this not correct?

The Chairman: That is not in conformity with the records at the table. Clause 41 was stood.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask the minister a simple question in view of an interesting experience I had. First of all, I must say that when this debate is over I think she should receive the Order of Canada for patience far beyond the call of duty in the national interest.

Miss LaMarsh: Instead of that I am getting less popular.

Mr. Herridge: Clause 41 reads, in part, as follows:

> The corporation may purchase, lease or otherwise acquire any real or personal property that the corporation deems necessary or convenient for carrying out its objects and may sell, lease or otherwise dispose of all or any part of any property acquired by it—

And so on.

It was recently brought to my attention what the C.B.C. in the field donated a quite valuable piece of property to some organization or persons. I understood that crown corporations had to declare any surplus they had and turn the surplus over to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation before it was sold. Would the minister explain to me at what level in the management of the C.B.C. authorization is required for persons in the field to give away property of the C.B.C.?

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I cannot answer that. This provision is substantially the same as the one in the 1958 act. However, since it is the corporation which may purchase, lease or otherwise acquire, or sell, lease or otherwise dispose of property, then it would have to be, if not initiated by someone at the lower level, at least approved by the corporation. The corporation in that case acts through the board and its senior officer.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 42 agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 43 has already been carried.

Clause 44 agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 45 has already been carried.

On clause 46—C.B.C. to be proprietary corporation.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, this clause and the one following it have created apparently a good deal of misunderstanding in connection with the financial provisions of the C.B.C. Since the two clauses are interrelated perhaps I might deal with them together; if not, I will deal with each individually.

The provision in the second of the two clauses is one for a five year operating budget for the C.B.C., but contrary to what seems to be the popular belief that would not in any way commit parliament to providing the C.B.C. with a five year grant.

It should not be forgotten that every single investigating body has recommended the essential importance of providing the C.B.C. with long term operational financing. That was the view that was also supported by the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts after it considered the white paper in which the government had said it proposed five year financing. It was and it still remains the intention of the government to submit a special financing bill to parliament, and that would be based on a formula. The formula has yet to be worked out.

Perhaps I should say something about the kind of formula that is contemplated. The Fowler committee recommended that the number of television households in Canada should be used as an index—so many dollars per household with television. It has also been suggested that it might be in the nature of a per capita grant based on total Canadian population.

The financing legislation, according to whichever formula it adopts, would stipulate that the operating requirements of the C.B.C. would have to be met by payments from the Consolidated Revenue Fund of so much per capita or per television household, or whatever the formula was. That amount would have to be paid out year by year in each of the fiscal years covered by the special financing act.

Unless and until that kind of special act is passed by this house and the other place, the C.B.C. will continue to have its operating requirements met on an annual basis through the normal estimates and appropriations procedures, even notwithstanding that clauses 46 and 47, as printed in this bill, were to pass.

With respect to capital budgets, clause 46 (1) provides that the corporation is a proprietary corporation within the meaning and for the purposes of the Financial Administration Act. Under that act all proprietary corporations are required to submit an annual capital budget, and the C.B.C., no less than others, would have to meet this requirement.

Clause 47 (1) would not nullify this requirement, since it refers only to a capital program and not to a capital budget. It is virtually identical, in effect, with section 35 (2) of the 1958 act. Its purpose, now as before, is to provide a framework for assessing the probable effects of capital expansion on the operating requirements of the corporation, and it is in no sense to be regarded as providing for a five year capital budget.

Nevertheless, Mr. Chairman, both in the committee and outside the chamber several hon. members have expressed very strong opposition to the idea of long term financing for the C.B.C., and it seems to me that there is very little advantage, after the length of time we have now spent discussing the various provisions of this bill, to waste further time arguing about a clause which does not make any real provision for payment of money to the C.B.C. It is already clear that the C.B.C will have to be financed in the customary way for the fiscal year 1968-69, because they are so far along in their financing, and there will be an opportunity for discussion after the estimates have been presented.

Next session the government will bring forward a C.B.C. financing bill. This will be after the new management has had an opportunity to review the plans of the corporation. Parliament will then have an opportunity to give full consideration to whether or not long term financing would indeed be in the public interest. I want to make it quite clear that it is still the government's intention to propose long term financing, not for this year but for the period thereafter.

We should facilitate the progress of this debate if clauses 46 and 47 were to be dealt with separately. If that were done it would be necessary to delete clause 46(1), and I can explain why that is. Clause 46(1) says that the corporation is a proprietary corporation within the meaning and for the purpose of the Financial Administration Act. A proprietary corporation generally has an assured source of income. It has to submit an annual capital budget but does not have to submit an annual operating budget, since its expenditures are met from its assured revenues.

If long term financing were approved for the C.B.C., the corporation would have an assured statutory income; but until parliament has approved a long term formula for operational requirements, it is clearly necessary for the corporation to continue to submit an annual operating budget. Deleting clause 46(1) would enable us to treat the C.B.C. as an agency of the corporation until parliament has approved long term financing; and agency corporations are required, under the Financial Administration Act, to submit an annual capital budget and an annual operating budget.

Consequent on that clause 47 would have to be deleted; and I understand that my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, is now prepared to move certain amendments with respect to clauses 46(1) and 47.

Mr. Robichaud: If the committee is prepared to accept changes to both clauses in the same amendment I move:

That Bill C-163 be amended by deleting clause 46(1) and clause 47 and renumbering subsequent paragraphs and clauses accordingly.

The Chairman: Order, please. It will be better to deal with clause 46(1), and then with clause 47 when we come to it.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, in view of the minister's remarks I should indicate that the official opposition agrees to withdrawing or deleting clause 46(1) and clause 47. Clause 47 provided for a five-year program and it was felt that it would be unfair to have that. Had a five-year program been approved the budget would have had to make provision for it. Members of the opposition felt that this was too long a period for the spending estimates of the C.B.C. not to be examined in parliament. Members of the committee requested that this be withdrawn, and we thank the minister for co-operating.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

The Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 46 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause 46 as amended agreed to.

On clause 47—Five-year capital program.

The Chairman: It has been moved by Mr. Robichaud that clause 47 of Bill C-163 be deleted and the subsequent paragraphs be renumbered. That amendment has been agreed to, and clause 47 is thereby deleted.

Clauses 48 (renumbered 47) and 49 (renumbered 48) agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 50 has been carried.

Clause 51 (renumbered 50) agreed to.

The Chairman: Clauses 52 and 53 have been carried.

Clause 54 (renumbered 53) agreed to.

The Chairman: Clauses 55 to 60 inclusive have been carried.

Clauses 61 (renumbered 60) and 62 (renumbered 61) agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 63 has been carried.

Clause 64 (renumbered 63) agreed to.

The Chairman: Clauses 65, 66 and 67 have been carried and Schedules A and B have been carried.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Bill reported.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance is on his way down to the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house wish the question to be put now?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Robichaud, for the Minister of Finance, moves the second reading of Bill C-191, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Fulton: We should like a statement from the minister in connection with this bill. It is some time since the budget resolution was before us. The relation between this bill, the budget resolution and the Kennedy round should be explained before we carry this item. The opposition is disposed to be co-operative and we are prepared to wait for the minister, realizing that this has come up at short notice, but we are not prepared to carry the motion in the absence of any statement.

Mr. Robichaud: A few moments ago the Minister of Finance was informed that this bill was coming before the house, and he is on his way here.

Miss LaMarsh: At this point I take it the clock has stopped and that Hansard is not reporting. I wish to thank all hon. members, in proportion as they think they are entitled, for the co-operation shown during what I hope will prove to be the last legislation that I see through the parliament of Canada. While we were discussing that long and interesting bill many hon. members put forward their legitimate views, sometimes very vigorously, and while I did not always keep my temperature below whatever is boiling point at this altitude above sea level, I have tried to improve over the years, and once again I should like to thank hon. members on both sides.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, is there any significance in the fact that the Secretary of State has made this speech from the Prime Minister's seat in the house?

Miss LaMarsh: Not yet.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I might offer a suggestion, Mr. Speaker. I think we are all agreed that we are about a day or two ahead of where we thought we would be. There are some very important things on various television programs tonight and perhaps it would not be amiss if we were to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree to call it ten o'clock?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, an hon. member has gone to get some papers from his office with respect to the Fish Inspection Act and I think we should wait until he returns. We would prefer to wait a few moments. It is a very short, simple bill, and after dealing with it we could then consider whether to call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: In anticipation of that will someone check to see if ministers who will be answering questions on the ten o'clock show will be here?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, if the house is willing to take Bill S-27 I shall have very little to say on it. It is a minor bill, and I suggest that we revert to item No. 52 on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: At the moment the house has before it for consideration second reading of the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp). There would have to be unanimous consent to stand that bill until later this day, following consideration of the bill to which the Minister of Fisheries has just referred.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Finance is entering the chamber it might be advisable to carry on with the bill in his name.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Monteith: Before commencing with the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Finance perhaps the house leader could give us the business for tomorrow.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The business for tomorrow will be the bills standing in the name of the Minister of Finance, as announced on Friday night.

Mr. Monteith: Those three bills?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, the three bills.

Mr. Monteith: Does the minister expect these three bills to take the full day?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I hope they will not take all day. Perhaps before the house rises tonight I could give further information.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should put the motion again.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): moved the second reading of Bill No. C-191, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the house for reverting to this business. I came over as quickly as I could from a reception at His Excellency's in honour of the prime ministers of the provinces.

An hon. Member: Premiers.

Mr. Sharp: Premiers ministres. This bill is founded on the resolutions that have already been approved by the house. It is essentially a very simple bill. I really have nothing to say by way of introduction on second reading but I would be very happy to answer questions when we get into committee and deal with the various clauses.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the minister that it is a very simple bill carrying out the terms of the resolutions. We have nothing to say on it at this moment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned with the pronouncement that has been made, as I understand it, that the words "or pharmaceutical" are being deleted from the Excise Tax Act. I understand this is being done to exclude excise tax being charged on drugs. Yet a charge was made in the house the other day, and substantiated in the press, that the price of drugs are paying the same amount of there has been an increase in the price equal to the reduction in the excise tax. I think the minister should have something to say about this situation. This is no advantage to the Canadian taxpayer who was given this exemption, when at the same time the users of drugs are paying the same amount of money. There seems to be something wrong with the method of removing excise tax from pharmaceutical products, if this does not result in a reduction in the price of drugs.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I am sure that all Canadians were sympathetic with the minister's intention in removing the sales tax from these drugs and pharmaceuticals. However, if the result to the consumer is not a reduced price for drugs I can see very little advantage in the passage of legislation of this type. We have in effect eliminated any tax that was obtainable from this source and at the same time have not provided the protection which would ensure that the reduction in the tax would be passed on in the form of a benefit to the consumer. I would think the minister would agree, if this is the result of what has happened, that this has not been advantageous from his point of view and certainly must not be of any advantage to the consumer who buys these drugs and finds that the price is identical. In fact there is a suggestion that within a day or two one of the companies will raise its prices in an amount greater than the reduction in respect of the sales tax. I would therefore think the minister owes the house an explanation concerning whether or not some further steps will be taken to ensure that this saving is passed on to those who unfortunately must consume drugs in this country.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who spoke on second reading of this bill referred to the effect of the removal of the sales tax on the price of drug products. In fact it has had a significant effect upon the price of drugs. Although I know of cases where the full advantage may not have been passed on, because we have no way to ensure that reductions in taxes are in fact passed on, from the information provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics I believe that the removal of sales tax on drugs did result in a significant reduction in the index of the prices of drugs. It is the intention of the government, of course, through amendments to other legislation under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Registrar General to take action which will promote competition in respect of the price of drugs, and therefore effect as large a reduction as can be achieved.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Special excise tax on wines.

Mr. Peters: This is the clause, Mr. Chairman, which would have the effect of increasing the tax on wines by 2½ cents per gallon when they contain not more than 7 per cent absolute of alcohol by volume, and by 5 cents per gallon on wines containing more than 7 per cent of alcohol by volume. I should like to ask why this increase is not considerably greater than it is. It seems to me that the amount of money it will bring in is very small. If increased revenue is the reason for bringing in these increases, then they are insignificant. If the reason is to restrict purchases, then the amounts are insignificant. I believe that everyone will agree that an increase of 2½ cents per gallon on wine is a very insignificant amount.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, in respect of the question asked by the hon. member, may I say that the purpose of clause 3 is to implement the November 30 budget resolution, the general purpose of which was to increase the price of wines in about the same proportion as the increase in respect of spirits and beer. We did not look upon this as a major revenue source. We simply wished to keep the general increase in taxes proportionate over all in respect of beer, wine and spirits.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a simple question to the hon. Minister of Finance.

How is it that following an increase of barely a few cents per gallon in the price of imported wines, certain liquor commissions increased their prices by about 7 per cent? What is the reason for such a price increase in the retail sale of wines?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I may say that while I was in a liquor store in Toronto about Christmas time I met a person who was very much involved in the provincial side of this undertaking. He was very glad that the federal government had given the lead, because it enabled the provincial government to raise a good deal more revenue from the sale of liquor and wines; I am not quite sure about beer. The provincial governments in some provinces at least took advantage of the occasion to make an adjustment in prices which they would have had to accept the full responsibility for had we not brought forward an increase in the taxes in advance.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Grégoire: On division.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 4 and 5 agreed to.

On clause 6.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, this clause provides for the elimination, through refund, of the tax on building materials in instances where university student housing is constructed by an agency or organization that is wholly owned by the crown in the right of any province. I should like to ask the minister whether he has received any significant number of representations from university student organizations asking that a similar provision be made with regard to student housing constructed by student organizations on their own behalf. Is there some good practical reason it was deemed fit to make this apply exclusively to corporations owned by the crown in the right of the province?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can say to the hon. member who asked the question that I have received many representations from organizations other than those mentioned in the clause, and they are under consideration. They have raised difficult problems in respect of distinguishing between student residences which may be organized on a co-operative basis and those which may not be wholly ancillary to the provisions of educational facilities. They also raised questions as to the difference of treatment between such organizations and those which provide housing for elderly people, or perhaps for other very good purposes. That is why the government did not feel at this time it should go any further than this present bill. I can assure the hon. member that these representations are under very careful consideration.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Payments to certain establishments.

Mr. Ballard: Mr. Chairman, clause 7 refers to refunding of taxes in connection with the provision of laundry and cleaning services, or linen supply services in hospital construction. This will be very welcome to those people involved in hospital administration. I have two questions to pose to the minister. The bill suggests that if the tax has been paid within two years and an application has been made for refund, it will be made. Does this mean that those institutions which have completed construction within two years prior to the passage of this bill will be entitled to the refund, and will a project that is now under way in respect of which a tax has been paid on some of the materials be eligible for a tax refund?

What is the minister's definition of the term "bona fide public hospitals"? Does this term preclude hospitals owned by nursing sister orders from being eligible for the refund, or does it include all hospitals eligible for grants directly or indirectly from the federal government?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to the first question is to be found in subclause (2) of clause 13 of the bill which reads:

> Sections 6 and 7 of this act shall be deemed to have come into force on June 2, 1967, and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein, whether purchased before or after that date.

I think that clarifies that point. I should like to consult with my officials with regard to the second question. This is rather difficult to answer on the spur of the moment. I should point out that the wording of the bill, "bona fide public hospitals", refers to those certified as such by the Department of National Health and Welfare. These words have been in the act for some time. This is not something new. I cannot say whether an individual case such as my hon. friend has in mind would qualify. I should think that in a general way all hospitals that are operated by orders would be included. I am afraid I cannot say anything more than that in answer to the question; but these hospitals are certified by the Department of National Health and Welfare and I am sure lists of them can be obtained.

Mr. Ballard: I am not suggesting that the minister is trying to pass the question off, but I think there is a basic philosophy involved here. It is well known to many hospital administrations that there are a great number of hospitals in this country owned by nursing sister orders. They should not be referred to as particular instances because they are hospitals which are open to the public, although operated in such a way it is almost impossible to show them in a category separate from publicly-owned hospitals. Perhaps I can narrow the question. Can the minister say whether the words "public hospitals" mean those hospitals which are open to patients of the general public, or do they mean publicly-owned hospitals as opposed to privately-owned hospitals? This is such an important matter I think it should stand until the minister finds out from the Department of National Health and Welfare just what the situation is in connection with this particular type of hospital.

Mr. Sharp: I do not think it is necessary to stand the clause for the purpose of answering this question, because these words have been in the act for a long time. If any problems exist they have existed for a long time. We are not creating any new problems by this wording; we are simply using the definition already contained in the act in respect of the kind of laundry establishments that would be exempt from the payment of tax. Any questions the hon. member has about this are questions that could have been asked in connection with the existing legislation. This does not alter the impact of the tax.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clauses 8 and 9 agreed to.

[Mr. Sharp.]

On clause 10.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct the minister's attention to the implied contradiction between the policy of the Department of Finance and that of the Department of National Health and Welfare. This clause reads in part:

> Cigarettes and manufactured tobacco:
> (a) For each five cigarettes or fraction of five cigarettes contained in any package . . . three cents;
> (b) Manufactured tobacco, including snuff, but not including cigars and cigarettes . . . ninety cents per pound.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is carrying on a campaign to acquaint Canadian people with the danger of smoking cigarettes and the possibility of incurring cancer. At the same time the department has admitted that it has not been proved that cancer results from the smoking of pipe tobacco. Is there not some contradiction in these policies of the two departments, and cannot the minister do something to influence the Department of National Health and Welfare to campaign for a reduction of cigarette smoking by seeing that people smoking pipes pay a lesser tax?

Mr. Sharp: I should like to say to the hon. gentleman that I am a virtuous smoker of cigars. I do not think, for that reason, that I should be encouraged to smoke any more than I do. The concern of this particular clause is only one in respect of revenue. We are not trying to make a judgment regarding the morals or health of those who smoke.

Mr. Herridge: Not as the Department of Finance.

Mr. Sharp: Not as the Department of Finance. I think it is sufficient for the Minister of Finance to be concerned about revenues, not about the morals or the health of the population. I should think this is something which ought to be more the concern of the Department of National Health and Welfare. If they of course come to the view that I should use taxation for the purpose of promoting either morals or health, I should be very willing to listen; but I have not had any representations of that kind so I have been concerned only with the raising of revenues.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kootenay West has very clearly pointed out the problem in this respect. This is an area in which the minister could have helped out the Department of National Health and Welfare in its campaign against smoking cigarettes. When Walter Harris was minister of finance he imposed a tax and found that he cut down the revenue because it stopped people smoking. I agree entirely with the hon. member for Kootenay West and would like to see the minister get in touch with the Department of National Health and Welfare with a view to increasing the tax until it is an effective bar to people smoking.

There should be some meeting of minds in this respect. The Department of National Health and Welfare, one department of government, is carrying on a campaign to cut down smoking, and using advertising and all other means at its disposal, but the Minister of Finance is not aiding, abetting or helping them in any way by increasing the tax to a level that will discourage people from smoking. The hon. member for Kootenay West is on the right track. There should have been consultation on a matter as important as cigarette smoking by the general public.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up the debate but I would point out that there are two contradictory objectives here. If I impose a tax that is too high, I will not collect any revenue. I was just imposing enough to be able to increase the revenue. That is the sole purpose of the tax imposed here.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 11—

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister for the definition of a farm wagon, particularly a four-wheeled farm wagon? What is the difference between a one-wheeled, two-wheeled or four-wheeled farm wagon? I ask this question because several years ago we tried to obtain an exemption for steel truck boxes. As far as we in the west are concerned, the term "wagon" is obsolete. Most of the farmers now use trucks. If there is an exemption for this type of container for eastern Canada, surely the same type of exemption should apply to the equipment used by farmers in western Canada. I refer to steel truck boxes, which are just as essential in western Canada for hauling gasoline and grain, because they can be washed out, and so on, as are the containers used in eastern Canada. Why is the exemption not given under the Excise Tax Act for this type of equipment?

The question of interpretation comes into this matter. I ask the minister this question because I understand that the Department of Finance is responsible for the provisions of the Excise Tax Act, that is, the wording of it, and the Department of National Revenue—or the roles might be reversed in this respect—is responsible for the interpretation of the wording. You can never get the two departments to agree on the definition to be applied.

I want to know what is the situation with regard to steel truck boxes for farming if an end use certificate has been given in respect of them, or if the term n.o.p., "not otherwise provided" as farm equipment is applied to them. I worked for years on this question and was promised that a change would be made. I wonder whether it is too much to ask that the term "wagons" be amended to include the words "and trucks", because there are many pieces of special equipment that can be put on trucks and which are used solely for farm purposes.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to support the submission made by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, while the minister is perhaps still pondering the implications of the problem. It seems to me that in considering excise tax bills such as this our attention is often directed to matters of precise and small detail.

With regard to clause 11 I say to the minister that it seems a little inconsistent or incongruous that we should be making provisions for the exemption from sales tax of one class and kind of farm wagon which, as the hon. member has pointed out, really does not have very much significance in other parts of the country. Reference is made in this clause to the exemption of farm sleds from sales tax. I doubt whether this is a significant matter in many parts of the country. It may be in the Kootenays or Timiskaming, in northern Ontario, but certainly in large parts of the country it is not really significant.

I plead with the minister to give serious consideration to the request, which I am sure he has received on numerous occasions in the past two years, for clarification on the exemptability of farm steel truck boxes, and also that piece of equipment known as a hydraulic hoist, which is part of a farm truck box that is used in hauling grain. I am sure the minister is well aware of this question.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am familiar to some extent with this subject because representations have from time to time been made both to me and the Minister of National Revenue. I would point out to both hon. gentlemen who have spoken, however, that this amendment does nothing except add two words, namely, "parts therefor". It does not change anything else in the act. The section would read:

> Farm wagons, including four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn and farm sleds; parts therefor and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof.

Those words were there before, and all that has been added is "parts therefor" in connection with farm wagons. I am not in a position to deal with the technical point raised with regard to the definition of "farm wagons". All I can say to my hon. friends is that I will take their remarks as a representation for the next budget, when I will see that this matter is looked at again.

I was going to ask my hon. friend who is now responsible for housing whether he has anything to say about this question, but he says he is now free of responsibility for technical amendments and discussions in such matters as the Excise Tax Act. However, I can assure the hon. members that we will take this question into account when we are looking at the technical amendments for the next budget.

Mr. Rapp: Mention it when you go out west.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I fail to see, then, why this clause is in the bill at the present time, unless it is to protect some special interest. When I discussed this question previously with one of the departments I was told that the word "wagon" when interpreted in the French language meant "lorry" and also "truck". But to get the two departments to agree on this matter is very difficult. In fact I have been unable to do so.

If the minister has gone to the trouble of changing the act to add just two words, surely he can go a little further and add the words "and trucks". There is nothing wrong with that unless, as I say, this is a special consideration for one specific type of product.

I was given by the department a copy of a picture which they said was a farm wagon manufactured by a particular company. If this amendment is to protect that type of transaction, I am opposed to it. In other words, in my opinion this clause is discriminatory. I suggest that the minister would be quite in order in allowing us to add the two words "and trucks" to the clause. This would completely solve our problem. It would require just a small amendment on the minister's part. If the amendment is not accepted, I cannot support the bill with this clause in it.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, it is exactly because of the difficulty with regard to trucks that there has been some controversy in this matter. It was not the intention of the government to make such a broad change in the list of exemptions. This amendment is an addition of the words, "and parts thereof". It is only a change to provide an exception for parts for farm wagons and farm sleds which was inadvertently omitted when the method of exempting farm wagons and sleds was changed from a tariff item to a specific reference in this item in schedule III in 1963. It was in response to representations that the words "and parts thereof" have been added. It is a relieving section which does not add any tax. It relieves parts of farm wagons and sleds from the tax, and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to oppose that.

Mr. McIntosh: All I am asking is that the same provision be applied to farm truck boxes. Representations were made at that time or perhaps prior to the time representations were made with regard to these wagon boxes. We are not saying that truck boxes are a part of a truck. They are not made by the people who manufacture trucks. They are essential, particularly in the west, when there is so much rail line abandonment. Farmers have to haul gas and oil in the same box in which they haul grain. If it is a wooden box, then the oil seeps into the wood and it is difficult to get it out. If you have a steel truck box, it can be washed out easily. This is all we are asking for. Perhaps if the minister could insert the words "truck boxes", that would satisfy me for the time being.

Mr. Sharp: I can only repeat what I said before, Mr. Chairman. We will look at the representations made by the hon. gentleman. It is not my intention to amend the law in this way without further examination of the consequences. While I am not familiar with the details, I know that this question has been argued on a number of occasions. I hesitate very much to propose this change in the House of Commons without examining all the consequences. It is a very complicated question, and I will take the hon. gentleman's views into account when we are preparing the next amendment to this act.

Mr. Monteith: I do not want to interfere with the hon. gentleman's argument, but the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek said earlier he had been making these representations for some time. His representations tonight may well be taken as just one more representation to be added to previous representations, and they all may receive the same treatment. I suggest there should be something a little more firm from the minister before we accept his assurance.

Mr. McIntosh: I was just going to add that the answer I received from the minister tonight was similar to the answer I received in 1963, or whatever year it was.

Mr. Benson: 1962.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister of finance of that day, who is not in the house this evening, gave me the same answer. He said he was going to look into it. Now, the addition of farm truck boxes does not seem far reaching. If the minister can explain why the problem is so involved, perhaps I can go along with him. Farm truck boxes have nothing to do with trucks. This is all I am asking. It is a steel truck box or steel wagon box. If the interpretation of the word "wagon" includes "lorry" as it does in French, then let us take that. As I said before, let the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue get together on what they mean in the wording of these tariff items.

The reference is to farm equipment, n.o.p., and the item could be taken in there. It could be taken in under an end user's certificate, or in any way the department wished, as long as the same privilege is given to western farmers as is given to the farmers who use these wagon boxes. As the hon. member for Springfield said, we do not know who uses these wagon boxes. I was under the impression a specific company was making these specific boxes for a specific purpose. I see one minister shaking his head, but I say that because I was provided with a picture of it. It was a patented box, and I do not see why that company should receive this type of protection.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister if the farm wagons referred to here cover hydraulic farm wagons with grain boxes, all in one unit? Would the exception apply to things like that?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, as a former minister of national revenue, I should like to say that any minister who would try to answer a definition of this kind in the house without the advice of his officials as to what is specifically meant by "farm wagons", would be very foolish indeed. This has been a perplexing problem, and a problem that has been considered over a long period of time. It is a problem the department has tried to resolve, and we do the best we can for the western farmers, as we want to do. You have to come within the legislation as it is written, and changes have been made from time to time. They have all been relieving amendments in order to assist the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister has said how difficult it is for a minister to explain this provision. If he would reflect for a moment, he would realize how difficult it is for a backbencher to try to convince the officials or ministers on this point, and try to get for the farmers of his area the same exemption as that enjoyed by the farmers of some other area. It is not difficult to understand what a steel truck box is or the purpose of it. It was the intent of parliament when this tariff item was inserted, since the words "not otherwise provided" appear in it, to cover farm wagon boxes. The item was put in years ago, and it has not been changed. We have made these representations, as has been said, since 1962 or 1963, and yet we received the same answer. Nothing has been done as yet. How are we going to get the change made?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that during the period I was Minister of National Revenue, which was several years, I do not recall having one letter from my hon. friend in this regard. I do not ever recall the hon. member coming in to see me and trying to define this thing or trying to help people in particular areas in order that all are treated the same. I can assure hon. members opposite that all the time I was Minister of National Revenue my door was always open. However, during the past three or four years I cannot recall my hon. friend coming in to set out the problem.

I cannot remember the hon. member asking the Department of National Revenue to make an interpretation so all people would be treated equally. I am sure the new Minister of National Revenue would be just as pleased as I would have been to have the hon. member, not merely get up and say something in the house about it, but come in and see the minister and his officials in an attempt to have a definition of what a farm box is, so we may treat all people across the country exactly the same.

Mr. McIntosh: If the minister would go back to his files and get caught up on what happened in his department before he took over, he would find a file in his department at least three inches thick containing notations that I had been in to see the minister. If he would look through Hansard he would find that the last time this subject was discussed, when the hon. member for Davenport was Minister of Finance, two or three hours of the time of the house were taken up. If the deputy minister is asked, the minister would find I did spend two or three days with a constituent of mine, running between the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Finance trying to get agreement on what had been set out in the tariff item. Each department would say, "That is not the way we interpret it."

• (9:50 p.m.)

I do not know what more I can do as a backbencher to impress upon the ministers of these departments that there is a need here. This request has been repeated on several occasions. It has been a matter of correspondence between myself and other members and their constituent farmers, and I think it was the intent of parliament to exempt these things from tax. I think it is the minister's intent at the moment to exempt them from tax. Why the officials of the department have not brought this to the attention of the new minister is beyond me because there are many letters on file in connection with the requests that have been made.

I do not know how long we will have to sit here and wait after the minister says tonight, as ministers have said for years, that he will have to give this matter consideration. I do not know through what other process we in the House of Commons can go in order to bring about this change. I do not think there is any argument about it at all.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I had no file on this question. I have spoken to my hon. friend about it once or twice. If there were files in the departments of ministers of the former government, as he said—

Mr. Monteith: There were ministers before you in your government. You have not been minister ever since 1963.

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Benson: The minister prior to me turned over his files, and there was no such correspondence. The hon. member—

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege; the minister is trying to misrepresent the situation. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek mentioned that it was the hon. member for Davenport who was minister of finance at the time. The minister is trying to misrepresent things.

Mr. Benson: I am, honestly, not trying to misrepresent anything, Mr. Chairman. I was minister of national revenue, not minister of finance. I simply said that there was no large file on this matter, as far as I was concerned.

I think the way to resolve this is for my hon. friend to meet with the present Minister of National Revenue, to sit down with him and thrash it out. Then if the hon. member does not like the solution he can raise a fuss in the house about it. I am sure that the present Minister of National Revenue, as all ministers of national revenue in this government, will have his office open at all times to hon. members who wish to make representations. They will be considered, and if the hon. member is not happy with the solution he can bring the question up again and raise a fuss. But I can honestly say that I had no large file on this, and the only time it was raised when I was minister was when my hon. friend raised it with me casually.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to correct an impression that the hon. member for Springfield may have given the minister when he suggested that farm sleighs drawn by tractors were unusual in his experience. These are used a great deal in the country from which I come. We do not farm horizontally; we farm some of our land at an angle of 45 degrees, but we use two types of farm sled drawn by tractors. One is used in the winter, with the ordinary type of shoeing for use on snow. Then there is another more expensive kind that can be used in the summer, and it has cast iron runners to enable it to run over earth satisfactorily. It is a great advantage to the farmers in my district to have the act provide that farm sleighs drawn by tractors are exempt from this tax.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I want simply to say that I am not surprised at what the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek said. He insisted that he did make representations to the minister. The former minister of national revenue was equally insistent that he received no large number of representations on this subject. I would be very surprised if there were not at least a significant number because quite a number of farmers in western Canada, even in my own area, have expressed some dissatisfaction with the current status of farm truck boxes so far as sales tax is concerned. So obviously representations have been made.

I for one have made representations to the minister's department. I do not recall offhand whether I made representations directly to the minister or to someone in his department, but it was certainly to the department. As I recall, the reply I received was not very helpful. I judged from the contents that it was the intention of certain officials in the department to give consideration to my request that farm truck boxes of steel type be declared exempt from the application of this sales tax.

Since it is almost ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, perhaps it would be helpful to the minister to hold this clause over until the next day's business, by which time, and without any great inconvenience to him, he might be able to report back to the committee and indicate in more specific terms whether or not it would be feasible and practical to include farm truck boxes within the provisions of the clause now before the committee.

The minister has said that this request may have certain far reaching implications. I, like the hon. member who has already spoken, find this difficult to conceive of, inasmuch as reference is already made here to farm wagons or parts thereof, which I take to mean farm wagon boxes. So just by a small extension of wording and redrafting, farm truck boxes could be included. The distinction between large farm wagon boxes and farm truck boxes is not really that great.

The minister has undertaken to look at this, and I assume that at the same time he will also check into the reasonableness or feasibility of the request that farm truck boxes hydraulic hoists be considered in the same light, as being exempt from the sales tax that normally applies.

I notice it is ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and I am wondering whether the minister is agreeable to take a look at this question between now and the next session of the committee.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned I would be very happy to ask them for a ruling. If that is what the committee wants I undertake to get a ruling. I rather suspect though that if it is not in accordance with what the hon. member wants, he will want the act amended. If that is his purpose, it would take some time. However, if he just wants a ruling I will certainly give an undertaking that the Department of National Revenue will give one.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, would it not be possible to ascertain the implications, here? I am sympathetic to the minister and appreciate the advice to him of the former minister of national revenue, not to make a snap decision on this matter. I do not know how many of these boxes are imported into the country or how many wagons are being used, and I imagine the minister does not either.

I suggest that he take a look not only at the terminology, at what is meant by a farm wagon and whether boxes used on the back of a wagon for hauling grain are included, but also at the implications of this, if he is inclined to include boxes. If not too much change to the tax structure is involved, then it might be advisable to make the decision that will inevitably be necessary at some time.

Mr. Sharp: Since there will be another opportunity fairly soon to look at this matter and since there will probably be a budget this spring, I hope hon. members will give the minister an opportunity of considering this carefully and bringing forward, if he finds he can, suitable amendments. I really think, considering that I am not amending the act except to add the words "and parts thereof", that it is unreasonable that I should be expected to bring in an amendment on a matter which, had it been simple, would have been done some time ago.

I cannot give the undertaking that, come the next budget, the exemption will be extended, but I will give very careful consideration to the amendments, to clarify the meaning. I cannot say that the exemption will be extended in the way suggested here because I do not know what the implications are.

Mr. Monteith: I suggest that tomorrow would be the ideal time to give an explanation as to why that has not been done.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, before we conclude our proceedings I wish to ask the minister to bring in a definition of "farm wagons" tomorrow, so that we shall know where we stand with respect to amendments to the legislation or other amendments that may be proposed. No doubt other amendments will be needed to fulfil our expectations.

An hon. Member: Ten o'clock.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As it is ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the house will be asked to consider item No. 53 on today's order paper, the bill to amend the Excise Tax Act; item No. 54, the bill to amend the Excise Act; item No. 55, the bill to amend the Income Tax Act; item No. 48, the bill to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act; item No. 47, the bill to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act; item No. 52, the bill to amend the Fish Inspection Act; item No. 49, the bill to provide for the dissolution of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation; item No. 50, the bill to amend the Defence Production Act and item No. 51, the bill to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act. The items will not necessarily be considered in that order.

Mr. Knowles: What about tomorrow night?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

EDUCATION—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN TEACHING IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to reconsider the government's refusal to share in meeting the extra expenses involved in giving special English classes to immigrant children. I took advantage of the rules to raise this matter again, as it is of great importance. The problem to which I drew attention has become acute in Toronto where, according to the chairman of the board of education, out of 29,000 immigrant children who need help only 11,000 are getting it. But it is a serious one in all major Canadian cities; I mention specifically the city of Montreal. It is my opinion that the government has been shirking its responsibilities in this field and sheltering beneath the umbrella of a false constitutional issue.

What are the facts? The Canadian government is responsible for immigration. It brings to this country thousands of skilled and other immigrants and in order to persuade these immigrants to come here, as well as on grounds of humanity and family considerations, it necessarily brings the children of those immigrants, most of whom go to our major cities. In the white paper on immigration in 1966 the government admitted responsibility for immigrants after they come to Canada, in the following words:

> People who come to Canada should receive the kind of services they need to start productive employment as soon as possible. They may need language training.

A little later we find this:

> Sufficient financial and personal resources will be made available to ensure that no immigrant may lack any help he may want in getting established.

As a matter of fact, the department of immigration does assist in providing English classes for adult immigrants. But when it comes to classes for children, the answer of the government is, no. In other words, children with special problems in acquiring sufficient English to fit successfully into our normal school system are perhaps being kept out of future productive employment or even handicapped for life.

What is the excuse? The excuse is that education is a provincial subject and that therefore the federal government cannot touch it. I agree that education is a provincial subject, but in the light of its responsibility toward immigrants it is perfectly proper and possible for the government to meet the special needs of immigrants before they move into the main stream of education.

I challenge the minister, or whoever is to reply, to tell us that Indian children and the children of servicemen serving overseas are not supported by the federal government, notwithstanding the so-called constitutional barrier. I assert that the only bar to helping these children is an imaginary and false constitutional difficulty. These children are in effect wards of the federal government. They have been invited to Canada and permitted to enter in conformity with federal policy. I call on the minister in the name of common sense, in the name of the basic immigration policies of this government and in the name of basic fairness to those concerned, to reconsider his policy in respect to these immigrant children.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): I do not feel I am sufficiently well-informed on the subject to reply adequately to the representations made by the hon. member but I will bring his remarks to the attention of my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. As the hon. gentleman will agree, this particular minister is certainly not lacking in concern when it comes to matters of this kind.

I understand, however, that he has some doubt about the question of responsibility and jurisdiction, and that he has been in touch with the minister of education for Ontario. I am not sure what form these representations have taken, but it would not be because the minister himself does not recognize the human problem involved, or anything of that kind. He might feel the matter could be handled more effectively by provincial governments rather than by the federal government.

In these matters it is the results that count. It is better to work through the responsible government than to deal in a way that would only raise questions in the future. The main problem involved here is to see that these children are educated. I am sure that with this my hon. friend would agree.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR COMPENSATION FOR SURVIVORS OF GERMAN CONCENTRATION CAMPS

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, throughout the years, to my knowledge during the last 15 years at least, members on all sides of the house have received representations and letters from the representatives of various national groups in Canada who prior to coming to this country suffered in nazi concentration camps. I have a great deal of sympathy for these people because of what they have suffered. I think they are in a similar category to all other persons who suffered in these camps.

I have heard from them in Winnipeg, Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal. Quite recently I received another letter signed by the chairman and the secretary general of the Polish Political Ex-Prisoners Association in Canada, Inc., of 1087 Queen street west, Toronto 3, and it puts the question forward with more logic and sequence than I could manage in seven minutes. It reads:

Dear Member:

Twenty-two years have passed since the survivors of Nazi concentration camps were set free by the Allied armies. Many of them, due to the fact that their homelands were ruled by communist dictatorship, remained in western Europe, and eventually found their way to Canada, where they have established new homes, acquired Canadian citizenship and contribute to the development of this country.

The injury inflicted on many of them, however, has never been made good. The work of the Canadian War Commission, which concluded its activities before the bulk of the new Canadians arrived, has not benefited them at all. The German authorities, while in principle professing that every injury would be compensated, have only provided compensation for persons persecuted because of race or religion, while those persecuted for reason of nationality were promised only greatly reduced benefits, provided they were refugees on October 1st 1953 and provided that they suffered at least a 25 per cent disability. In practice one per cent of the claimants in this category has been in receipt of their meagre pensions so far.

For over 15 years the Canadian-Polish organizations and individuals have made representations to the successive Canadian administrations, bringing to the government's attention the plight of persons in positions who, due to hardship suffered and disabilities acquired during their incarceration are already, or likely to become, charges of the Canadian welfare organizations and a substantial burden to the taxpayer. It is only reasonable to expect that the country which perpetrated the atrocities and crimes ought to compensate the victims. As we have indicated, the results have been far from satisfactory.

In March 1965, a brief was submitted to the Prime Minister through the Hon. Paul Martin, Minister for External Affairs, by the delegation of the Polish Political Ex-Prisoners Inc., which represents over 1,300 persons (of 15 different nationalities, but the majority of which are of Polish origin) asking the government to take steps toward the conclusion of a bilateral agreement with Germany, and to obtain a lump sum payment in settlement of the claims by Canadian citizens or residents, who have not at all, or inadequately, been compensated by the German authorities.

The letter concludes:

As Canadian citizens we former prisoners of Nazi death camps are, in theory, entitled to all the privileges of a born Canadian, but in practice we are deprived of the protection of the Canadian government. As people who have fought and suffered for the Allied cause longer and more extensively than any others, we take the liberty of soliciting your support for our just claims.

The association demands that the administration:—

(1) Either concludes a bilateral agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany for the compensation for all Canadian citizens and residents who have suffered persecution but have not been properly compensated or—

(2) Enacts legislation establishing a special Canadian agency to deal with such persons and award them pensions, retroactive to 1945, or enable Veterans Affairs ministry to award such pensions.

It is hoped that with your kind understanding and co-operation, our just cause may find a solution in the near future.

It was on that account that on February 1 I asked the following question:

Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I must say that in his brief absence he has been missed by us all. Has the government received representations from any organization representing Canadian citizens who are survivors of nazi concentration camps urging that a bilateral agreement be made with the federal government of Germany for the compensation of all Canadian citizens and residents who have suffered persecution but have not been properly compensated to date?

At that point, Mr. Speaker, you cut me down again as on previous occasions. However, I should like the parliamentary secretary when he replies to inform us what the government has done to date, and what it intends to do.

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to congratulate the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) upon his concern, and also the hon. members for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) and Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) who have made representations and have shown their concern for the pleas of the people in this condition.

Mr. Speaker, the Polish Political Ex-Prisoners Association and the Canadian Polish Congress have made representations at several times urging that Canada enter into an agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany for the benefit of persons who were persecuted by the nazis during world war II. As these persons came to Canada only after world war II, they were not Canadians at the time of persecution and so were not eligible for awards from the Canadian war claims fund. In so far as a bilateral agreement with West Germany is concerned, there is a real legal difficulty involved since Canada has no standing in international law to represent these persons with respect to claims which arose before they became Canadians. Furthermore, the Bonn Agreements of 1952, and the fact that no peace treaty has ever been signed with Germany, also present difficulties.

I am convinced that in these circumstances the government can be of most assistance to these persons by making informal approaches to the German authorities and using our good office where appropriate in individual cases. This is the policy which has long been followed by this department. Our embassy in Bonn has had discussions on this matter with the German authorities on a number of occasions. The German authorities are fully aware of the desire of the Canadian government that they take as forthright an attitude as possible on the question of indemnification.

Moreover, our representative on the executive committee of the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has spoken on this question a number of times. It should be noted, however, that West Germany has endeavoured to meet its responsibilities. The relevant West German legislation was liberalized in 1965 and a second fund was established with the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in 1967 for the benefit of persons who had not been indemnified along the lines advocated by Canada and other interested nations. We shall of course continue to pursue with the West German authorities the possibility of any further measures which may be feasible.

I should like to assure the house that the Canadian government takes this question very seriously and makes every effort to assist these unfortunate persons who have suffered through no fault of their own from the acts of the nazi régime. We shall continue to use every opportunity to assist these people within the limits imposed by international law.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EMERGENCY MEASURES ORGANIZATION

STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION AS TO CONTINUED SUPPORT

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement regarding the current position of the government in relation to the national civil emergency measures program. My reason for doing so is to clarify a number of misconceptions which have been reported to me to be arising across Canada in the minds of the public, and in the government sector as well, following the general statement made in the house by my colleague the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), on December 7, 1967, with regard to government proposals to reduce spending in this particular area.

Since that statement the government has approved a series of recommendations arising out of a detailed study by the Canada Emergency Measures Organization. The study took into consideration intelligence regarding the threat, recent developments in scientific and technical knowledge of nuclear hazards, and the desirability of reducing federal government expenditures.

The government will continue to support this important work but with a reduced budget, a streamlined organization and improved national management and co-ordination. Greater emphasis will be placed upon the acceptance by governments at all levels of civil emergency planning as a part of day to day government activity, and even greater reliance will be placed upon the capacity of existing government services to expand and to deal with a war emergency. This is a change from former concepts which envisaged the training of large groups of volunteers as civil defence workers.

While it is the government's purpose to reduce recurring administrative and maintenance costs, it is not proposed to proceed with the wholesale dismantling of existing facilities. Major systems such as the emergency broadcasting capacity and emergency government operating centres which have been developed over the past several years will be maintained, in a reduced state but in a condition that will allow their activation in short order in the event of a crisis.

Training will be limited to the necessary instruction required by officials, professionals and specialists who have been assigned to wartime responsibilities in shadow organizations.

The value of many civil emergency measures for war in peacetime disaster situation has been effectively demonstrated in Canada time and time again. While the federal government does not support emergency measures which are designed solely to meet a peacetime disaster, nevertheless it is accepted that the wartime measures we develop or assist to develop will be used to their full potential in peacetime disaster situations. Many provinces and municipalities have chosen in the past, and propose to continue in the future, to augment wartime emergency capacities with peacetime emergency programming funded entirely by themselves. The Canada Emergency Measures Organization itself has been charged by government to co-ordinate the initial federal response to any peacetime disaster situation which affects the federal government directly or in which the federal government is involved by provincial invitation, and will continue to meet that responsibility.

I have communicated the substance of our new approach to the provincial ministers responsible for civil emergency planning, together with estimates of the reduced federal financial support which will be available to assist provinces and municipalities in their emergency measures programs. Officials of the Canada Emergency Measures Organization met last week with the senior provincial officials involved from all provinces and have agreed upon the methods to be used to reduce spending in this field which at the same time will enable Canada to retain a viable national program of plans and emergency measures systems capable of rapid expansion to meet the possibility of a war which we hope will never occur.

Emergency Measures Organization

• (2:40 p.m.)

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I think we would all agree with the last sentence in the minister's statement, that the emergency measures organization was designed to meet conditions which might arise in the event of a war which we all hope will never occur.

I believe it has been apparent for the past two or three years that the government has been anything but enthusiastic as far as the emergency measures organization is concerned, and that it has been loath to co-operate with those provinces which have felt a real need for emergency measures operations within their jurisdictions. Now apparently it intends to withdraw a considerable proportion of the funds which in the past it has put up on a cost sharing basis with the provinces and the municipalities within them.

In my personal view this is a matter for considerable regret, bearing in mind particularly that some of the provinces have felt there was a real need for the emergency measures organization. I hope the announcement does not mean that the basic federal emergency measures organization is in effect to disappear. The hon. gentleman indicated that a good deal of the support previously afforded the emergency measures organization was being withdrawn but that viable emergency measures systems would continue. In other words, on one hand we are told that the organization is to disappear and on the other we are assured it will continue. I hope the minister actually means that the basic organization will continue to exist in an effective form.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The effect of the minister's statement is that substantial reductions are to take place in the emergency measures program. I presume that if cuts in expenditures have to be made, this is one of the areas in which they could be undertaken.

However, I should like to say that I hope these cuts will not be made in such a way as to adversely affect the training of civil defence workers in specialized categories. I believe there is a great deal of support for the minister's contention that much of this civil defence work can be done by existing government services. But within these services, in the provinces and in the municipalities, there is much to be said for programs of special training.

I hope also that the government will not lose sight of the value of training federal, provincial and municipal defence workers to meet civil disasters, bearing in mind that the organization is being used increasingly for this purpose. We have suffered many times from disasters of various sorts, including flooding of the kind now being experienced in Ontario; and usually when they occur we throw some makeshift organizations into being to deal with them. An organization which could be made operative within a matter of hours through federal, provincial and municipal co-operation to meet civil disasters is something at which we in Canada should aim.

The minister told us he was making this statement because some misconceptions had arisen with respect to the emergency measures program. I hope the minister will make a statement to the house fairly soon with reference to the Canada-United States agreement on emergency measures. There has been a good deal of misunderstanding and I think some misgivings about an agreement that refers to control of manpower and personnel, and about economic controls and economic priorities. If other members have been receiving letters as I have about the interpretation which people have put on this United States-Canada agreement on emergency measures, then I think some statement from the minister would be most appropriate fairly soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, we listened very carefully to the statement made by the hon. minister with reference to his intention to reduce the funds allocated to emergency measures.

I hope, like the hon. members who spoke before me, that those cut-backs will not affect the studies or the training of civil protection staff. I know that, in a town near Ottawa, courses are given at the present time to the benefit of the mayors of municipalities, and some mayors in the province of Quebec attend those courses. I should like to see the number of civil defence schools, whose purpose is to help fight against disasters always possible in peacetime, not only maintained but increased, so that the province of Quebec too, would have a civil defence school.

I know that lately the secretary of the province met with the hon. minister. The minister said that no agreement had been reached with regard to the institution of a school in the province of Quebec, but he did not say whether or not negotiations were in progress. However, I hope that they will continue between the federal and Quebec governments so that such schools may be established in Quebec with a view to training some people to fight against disasters which may occur anywhere in our communities.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to this page and a half of euphemisms which suggest that something that is being scrapped is not being scrapped at all. We might have wondered why cuts were being made with respect to the national civil emergency program. It was because the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue felt that any cuts made in that program would be almost invisible. If a poll had been taken on the streets it is likely that the result would have shown that people did not know what the national civil emergency organization had been doing recently, and thus the ministers assumed they could eliminate this program.

The timing is rather startling. This announcement comes when the federal government is reasserting its concern about many areas in the Canadian governmental structure, defence being one, and so it is surprising to find that civil defence can be let go so lightly. Recent developments in technical knowledge of nuclear hazards are such as to make anyone throw up his hands in horror; none the less there is much that can be done in the area of civil defence to combat those hazards.

So far as the suggestion is concerned that municipalities across the country will take up some of the slack, I would ask where we can find any municipality that would have any source of funds whatsoever for this sort of purpose, considering the financial strain the municipal level of government is under right across our country.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Minister of Finance. Can he tell us when he contemplates presenting the final supplementary estimates to the house?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is the present intention to present both the final supplementary estimates and the main estimates for 1968-69 on Monday next.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORT BY CANADIAN TEAM ON CRASH OF U.S. PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or, if he is not the proper person, to the Minister of National Defence. It has to do with the crash of the United States plane near Thule, Greenland a short time ago. I should like to ask whether reports are correct that a team from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was sent to the site to make a report. If this is correct, has a report been made.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Unless the Minister of National Defence can answer, I am afraid I will have to take the question as notice.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether any committee, delegation or team was sent from his department to the site of the crash near Greenland?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the same position as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I shall take the question as notice.

[Translation]

OLD AGE SECURITY

REPORTED DELAY IN RECEIPT OF SUPPLEMENTAL PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I intended to put a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare but, in his absence, I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary.

Numerous complaints have reached us to the effect that some old people did not receive, in January, the guaranteed income supplement to which they are entitled. Can the parliamentary secretary tell us if steps have been taken to pay this supplement in the near future?

[English]

Mrs. Margaret Rideout (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will check into this and report to the hon. member.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In view of reports that the Commonwealth Secretary General in his talks with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom strongly advocated a 1968 commonwealth prime ministers' conference, I wonder whether the government has made any statement or expressed an opinion in that regard.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I will have to take this question as notice. I have not seen the telegrams on this subject and therefore am unable to report to the house.

POLLUTION

TAX INCENTIVES TO PLANTS INSTALLING CORRECTIVE DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the galloping increase in air pollution and the recognition by the minister of the situation in respect of water pollution by extending the accelerated 50 per cent cost allowance to January 1, 1970, will the minister now give serious consideration to the equally serious effects of air pollution by applying the same income tax cost allowance to expenditures made by industry in overcoming air pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, similar questions were asked some time ago on this subject and I gave an answer at that time. The most general answer I can give at this time is that the matter is under consideration.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—INVESTIGATION INTO WATERFRONT PILFERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address this question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask whether the government is about to launch a probe into the Montreal waterfront pilferage, as reported in the press, and when a judge will be named to head the investigation.

[Mrs. Rideout.]

Mr. B. S. Mackasey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, when the terms of reference are completed in respect of such a commission and when a suitable judge is appointed I am sure the minister will make a statement in the house.

I may point out to the hon. member that the intention to establish the commission was announced last July when we were discussing labour unrest on the waterfront. The minister announced at that time that he would set up a commission with two mandates, or in effect two commissions. One became the Picard commission, which tied in job security with increased productivity. The second phase of the commission's role would be to investigate the causes of unusual labour unrest on the waterfront.

I should like to rephrase what I said about a suitable judge. I meant a judge who would be free at this time in view of the very heavy load with which judges in the province of Quebec are faced.

Mr. Ricard: This is the answer to my supplementary question.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, can the parliamentary secretary inform the house whether the inquiry is based on the promise of the Minister of Labour to the shipping federation that if settlement was made in respect of wage increases and job security, such a probe would be launched?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think this question is in order.

TRADE

PROPOSED U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON WOOD PRODUCTS IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver East referred to recent reports that a United States government committee is recommending a reduction in imports of wood products from Canada. The Department of Trade and Commerce has looked into this. It would appear that the hon. member for Vancouver East may be referring to a recent staff report by the United States treasury department. This report suggests a number of measures to improve the availability of logs for local processing in the United States Pacific northwest. These suggested measures do not include restrictions on imports of forest products. The report recommends revision of United States forest management policies, amendments to United States coastal shipping laws, etc.

The Department of Trade and Commerce is actively studying the possible implications for Canadian exports.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

SUGGESTION THAT PRIVATE AIRCRAFT CARRY BEACON TRANSMITTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, the Minister of Transport, following the question I asked on January 25. Has the minister any further information to give the house regarding regulations that would require private aircraft to carry rescue beacon transmitters?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The department has advised that devices of this type are mandatory installations on aircraft operating in northern Canada and in isolated areas. The Department of Transport tries to encourage the installation of SARA beacons in all aircraft, but has not made their installation mandatory. The industry also favours their installation but has been looking to the government for some subsidization on the cost of installation. To date the department has not been in a position to recommend this.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is now in a position to answer the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Ontario concerning Canada's role on the international control commission on Viet Nam. Yesterday the minister took notice of this question.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Ontario asked a series of questions regarding the current situation in Viet Nam and the Canadian government's position in that regard.

Let me first say and emphasize that his concerns are fully shared by the government. We have been following recent developments in Viet Nam with close attention on the basis of reports from our representatives in Viet Nam, in Washington and elsewhere. In the past few days our main and immediate concern has been the safety of Canadians in Viet Nam. We have neither planned nor been asked to undertake any new or different role as a result of recent events, the military and diplomatic significance of which it may take some time to assess.

As far as Canada's membership in the international control commission is concerned, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has on many occasions, both in the house and elsewhere, mentioned the concerns and frustrations we Canadians, no less than the military and civilian individuals who have served with the commission, have experienced in a very difficult assignment. At the same time the house will wish to bear in mind the fact that the international control commission is the one surviving institution formally provided for in the 1954 agreement to which both sides to the conflict maintain they would be prepared to return. This may provide in due course a basis for a new settlement.

In formulating the government's policies over the past two or three years, all these considerations have been taken into account and we cannot yet see any reason for changing them, dramatic and tragic though the events of the past few days may have been.

Mr. Nesbitt: In view of the answer of the minister and his observation that the government is particularly concerned with the safety of Canadians in Viet Nam, can the minister tell us whether any Canadians have actually lost their lives in Viet Nam during the events of the last week?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I think the house will recognize, communications particularly with outlying districts beyond Saigon and the principal centres have been very difficult indeed. We have been able to confirm the continuing safety of a great many Canadians, particularly those connected with the international control commission, but the safety of the remainder is still unknown. We have yet no information which would indicate that any Canadians have been killed.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENT FOR 1966-67 CROP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, on January 31 I directed a question to the Prime Minister requesting information as to the final wheat payments for the 1966-67 crop year. At that time the Prime Minister said he would make inquiries. In the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and in view of the necessity of the farmers receiving their final settlement, could the Acting Prime Minister or a member on the treasury benches give me a reply today?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had a long prepared answer to this question yesterday, but it was not asked. I have left it in my office. The short answer is that the Minister of Trade and Commerce would like to repeat what he has already said to the house, that he will get this information from the wheat board in the first quarter of 1968. He has not got it yet.

COAL

REPRESENTATIONS AS TO DELIVERIES UNDER JAPANESE CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Transport advise the house whether a decision has yet been made as to the port through which the coal shipments to Japan will move? Is it to be Roberts Bank or Vancouver?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the general plan is that they will be moved over the new port facility at Roberts Bank. With regard to shipments before the contract which has already been announced is in effect, they will probably be moved through the port of Vancouver on an interim basis.

Mr. Fulton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the questions asked and replies given yesterday, can the minister tell us whether in connection with this contract the authority to decide the route of shipments, as far as the railway that will be used is concerned, rests with the government of Canada or the government of British Columbia?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is a member learned in the law. There are, I think, restrictions which could be applied by either side. I hope we will reach an agreement with all the parties concerned which will ensure that the all-Canadian route will be chosen, because we believe this is in the best interests of the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I ask the minister, is it the intention of the federal government to contribute toward the construction of the facilities at Roberts Bank?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, very definitely, Mr. Speaker. It would be our intention to build the port facilities and then to co-operate with the provincial government in respect of the other developments necessary to begin a deep sea port facility there.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, this question is related. Roberts Bank is in my constituency. Has general agreement been reached between the Department of Transport and the provincial government as to the phasing and financing of this new port at Roberts Bank?

Mr. Hellyer: Not yet, Mr. Speaker. I will be meeting with the premier of British Columbia later today, and I hope that following this meeting the officials of the two governments can meet and work out the details involved in the development of the port and related facilities.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CANCELLATION OF SCHOOL PROJECT, CAPE CROKER RESERVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Will the minister investigate the announcement that the proposed separate school accommodation project at Cape Croker Indian reserve has been cancelled, and will the minister take the necessary action to have his officials reconsider this decision?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member's question should be placed on the order paper.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

REQUEST FOR STEPS TO AVERT POSSIBLE LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the concern of many shop workers of the Canadian Pacific Railway over the danger of a lay-off at Easter similar to the one that took place last Christmas, will the minister take up this matter with the management of Canadian Pacific Railway in an effort to head it off before it takes place?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will certainly be glad to pass on the hon. gentleman's representations to the railway.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REVIEW OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry. Can the minister advise us when he expects the review of the auto pact by the governments of Canada and the United States to be completed; and when it is, will he be making a report to parliament and will parliament be given an opportunity to discuss that report?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the review is under way at the official level. I would hesitate to forecast a date for its completion. When it is completed I can assure the house that a report will be made on the outcome of the review.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will parliament have a chance to discuss this report? Will time be set aside in one way or another so we may discuss the report?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, that is for the house to decide rather than for me personally. I will make available the information, and the house can then decide what it wishes to do with it.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION ON COMMISSION ON STATUS OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre inquired about Canadian representation on the United Nations commission on the status of women. I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman is aware that Canada is not a member of this particular commission and consequently, not having membership, has no right to representation. We do, however, take a continuing interest in its work through Miss Fletcher, who is a member of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations.

TRANSPORTATION

CONSIDERATION BY HOUSE COMMITTEE OF PROBLEMS OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It relates to the proposed visit to the Atlantic provinces of the standing committee on transport and communications. There is some concern over the possibility of this session proroguing during the period of the committee's work. Can the minister give an assurance that this important work will be allowed to continue until recommendations can be placed before the government regarding the problems the committee will study?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I should study that question before replying to it. If the committee were to return with the kind of precise information and recommendations which were so clear and unequivocal that it would be possible to introduce legislation immediately, this of course could be considered at once by the government. In any event, I hope their recommendations will be beneficial to the Atlantic provinces and will contain some advice to the government upon which legislation can be introduced, perhaps if not during this session then early in the next session.

AIRPORTS

EDMONTON—REQUEST FOR USE OF FACILITIES AT NAMAO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received a communication from any of the officials of the city of Edmonton, or from interested parties in that area, regarding the phasing out of the municipal airport in the city of Edmonton, and has he been asked to make available to that city the facilities at Namao for industrial use?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his question should be placed on the order paper.

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES FROM BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the minister was asked whether any agreement had yet been reached with Air Canada whereby that corporation would discontinue its present practice of transferring employees out of Winnipeg. The minister gave us to understand that no such agreement had been reached but that it was a matter of negotiation between the unions and the corporation. My question is, does the minister want us to understand that he feels this is exclusively a matter of negotiation between the two parties, or does he intend to remain involved in the matter in question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the question as asked is an argument. In this form it is not acceptable.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question. With regard to the present practice of Air Canada whereby it is transferring employees out of Winnipeg, can the minister say whether he intends to remain involved in that particular problem?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very much involved, but my involvement is circumscribed by the fact that there is a contract between the two parties. This was the reason for the answer I gave in reply to the question asked yesterday.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister advise the house the nature of the discussions held this morning with officials of the city of Halifax, if indeed it is proper to do so at this stage?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I think my hon. friend is referring to a proposed meeting with the premier of the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Forrestall: No; with the mayor of the city of Halifax and representatives of the port's industrial commission.

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think I can answer the hon. member's question. There has been no such meeting with me in any event.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED INCREASED COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED CATTLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Last Wednesday the parliamentary secretary undertook to refer to the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development the notice of motion I introduced to provide for increased compensation for the cattle slaughtered under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

Could he tell me when he will take the required steps in order to carry out his commitment?

[English]

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this matter is in hand and will be brought to the attention of the house.

COMMUNICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ALLOCATION OF SATELLITE SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that last year the Prime Minister said the question of reaching international agreement regarding a space for a communications satellite for Canada had been referred to the Minister of Transport—and I understood the present minister's predecessor was looking into the matter—can the minister tell us what progress is being made, whether an allocation has been made for Canada, and if not how soon can we expect some allocation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if this type of question should be asked at this time. The hon. member has referred to a question which was asked practically a year ago. I would not think there is sufficient urgency to justify asking such a question at this time.

Mr. Douglas: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There is a great deal of urgency. It is true this question has been asked of the government for some time now, but the fact is that at present only some eight or ten slots are left and unless Canada gets one we may be completely shut out of the satellite telecommunications field. If the minister cannot give us an answer we shall have to invoke standing order 26, or deal with it in some other way so as to find out what the government intends to do about this matter.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Can the minister tell us whether he has been able to get his campaign into orbit?

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the Minister of Transport whether he will give consideration to making a statement on motions at an early date regarding the allocation of space for Canada for the purpose of putting a communications satellite into orbit.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): There have been negotiations in respect of this question. I can assure my hon. friend that the government has already indicated very clearly that it intends to reserve a position in space for the Canadian satellite system. However, the responsibility for this project has now been transferred to the Prime Minister and the science secretariat. In the interim the science secretariat reports to the Minister of Industry, who perhaps may wish to add something to what I have said or to give a further report to the house in the very near future.

Mr. Douglas: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Industry whether we can expect an early announcement regarding the allocation of space for a Canadian satellite system.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I am not sure hon. members can expect an early announcement of an allocation of space. The necessary steps to secure such an allocation have already been taken and are being pressed. I hope that in the not too distant future the government will be in a position to make a rather more formal and general statement regarding a Canadian satellite system.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister when the application was formally made?

Mr. Drury: Certain preparatory steps have to be taken before a formal application is made, and a formal application has not yet been made.

AIR TRANSPORT

EXTENSION OF RIGHTS OF CANADIAN PACIFIC AIRLINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the new cross-Canada rights granted to Canadian Pacific Airlines and now being exercised extend to include the right to fly into and out of the nation's capital?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly Canadian Pacific Airlines have made an application to the Canadian Transport Commission and hearings have been scheduled in order to determine whether at a subsequent time permission will be granted to service Ottawa and certain other cities.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to report to the house now whether Canadian Pacific Airlines are permitted to land in the Netherlands, in view of the fact that K.L.M. is not permitted now to land in Toronto?

Mr. Hellyer: Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

EMERGENCY MEASURES ORGANIZATION

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF SCHOOL IN QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production.

Could the minister inform the house whether there will be other discussions with the secretary of the province of Quebec concerning the establishment of a civil defence school in that province, and also whether the funds generally allocated to these civil defence schools will be maintained at the same level in the next fiscal year?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that this question be put on the order paper.

PUBLIC SERVICE

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING FOR HOUSE, SENATE AND LIBRARY STAFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Is the minister now in a position to answer my question of last Friday concerning collective bargaining for the employees of the Senate, the House of Commons and the Library of Parliament?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not, and will not be able to answer this question until I have had an opportunity to speak to Your Honour and to the commissioners of the internal economy commission.

Mr. Knowles: Will that meeting be held fairly soon, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Benson: The commissioners meet very frequently to look after the interests of all members of the house.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Monday, February 5, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-191, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Sharp—Mr. Batten in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose last evening clause 11 was under discussion.

On clause 11:

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, as you said, when the house rose last night we were on clause 11 of this bill. I have now had an opportunity of looking into the matter raised by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and others. Perhaps I may give an explanation of the position. There is some history of representations on this matter, but I can confirm that most of them are rather out-dated. Apart from occasional references in the House of Commons I cannot find in my files any great number of representations since 1963 or 1964. However, I know the problem has been there, and I will give a short explanation of the root of the difficulty.

The Excise Tax Act provides exemption from sales tax for a comprehensive list of machinery and equipment used in farm operations. This is provided by listing certain items in part IV of schedule III of the act and also by reference to a long list of tariff items in part VII of schedule III. These tariff items, starting with item 40900-1, describe a wide range of farm machinery and equipment. The Excise Tax Act does not provide blanket exemptions for everything used on a farm or everything used in a factory. Exemptions from sales tax must be described as precisely as possible if they are to be administered fairly and efficiently. A piece of equipment used on a farm or by farmers is not exempt from sales tax unless it is covered by the wording of the many exemptions in schedule III of the act.

[Mr. Knowles.]

• (3:20 p.m.)

The fact that exemptions are provided from a general sales tax makes it inevitable that some thin lines must be drawn in some areas between articles which are exempt and articles which are taxable. This happens in the case of machinery used for manufacturing, and it happens in the case of equipment used on farms.

To the best of my knowledge it has been the policy of successive governments since the sales tax was introduced that trucks used for transportation would be subject to sales tax. There has been an exemption for farm wagons since the early thirties, and this exemption also covered boxes for such wagons until 1956, when a tariff board decision made it necessary to add a specific exemption for boxes for farm wagons which is now in the act. The existence of this exemption for farm wagons and boxes used on farm wagons creates a borderline problem with respect to self propelled trucks which may also be used on a farm.

As the hon. member mentions, Mr. Chairman, changes in technology may have made horse drawn wagons and even four-wheeled tractor drawn wagons obsolete in some farming operations. New models and types of machines and equipment are introduced every year, and it is inevitable that the descriptions of exempt items may become out of date. The development of specialized trucks and specialized loading and unloading devices for such trucks has brought into use new items of equipment which do not qualify under the existing exemptions.

It has been suggested that the fact that tariff item 40924-1, which is listed with the exemptions, refers to "all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery n.o.p.," is a statement of intention on the part of the Department of Finance that all forms of machinery used in agriculture are meant to be exempt from sales tax. This is certainly not my view and I believe it has not been the view of any previous minister of finance. It is possible that the technology of farming operations has moved beyond the wording and even the intention of the existing exemptions and, as I promised last night, I will certainly undertake to give careful consideration to representations that particular classes of farm machinery be added to the list of exemptions.

However, I think hope should not be entertained that there is any chance of motor trucks used on farms being made exempt, and much more information would be required before I could express any view about the possibility of exempting special boxes or mechanical devices for use with such trucks.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for the trouble he has gone to in order to give us this explanation. I do not think there is any disagreement between what he has said and what we have tried to put forward. We agree that there has been a long history to this argument, if you wish to call it that.

We believe, Mr. Chairman, that the difficulty arises over the confusion in terms. This was the reason that last night we asked the minister to give a definition of what he meant by "wagon". We still cannot understand why he is putting through a piece of legislation for which he expects our support when he is unable to explain to the committee the meaning of the term "wagon" used in the legislation.

I have searched for and found a legal definition of the term "wagon" that would be quite acceptable to me. It is in an act that was passed by parliament in 1930, I believe, and can be found at page 694 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, volume I. I refer to what is commonly known as the Canada Grain Act. Wagon is defined under paragraph (27) of section 2 as follows:

"wagon" means any vehicle to deliver grain to a country elevator.

I said last night, Mr. Chairman, that our difficulty arose when we went to one of the departments to find out what was meant by these items that are listed under tariff item 409f to which the minister has referred. For example, there is the item "gravity discharge farm wagon boxes". I am not talking about trucks.

In this regard I should like to quote some of the correspondence I had with the deputy minister of national revenue in 1961. As I said before, I think this is where the confusion in terms arises. In the letter he wrote to me the deputy minister said in part:

Being precluded from entry under item 409f, two provisions remain for consideration in classifying the truck bodies in question—

The minister refers to "truck bodies", and we are talking about truck boxes. There is a big difference. The letter continues:

—tariff item 446a, the "basket" provision covering manufactures of iron or steel and tariff item 438f relating to parts for motor vehicles. The latter item, in my opinion, more specifically describes these truck bodies.

We are not talking about truck bodies but about truck boxes. In view of the legal definition given by the Department of Justice of the government of Canada, we cannot understand why wagon boxes are exempt but not truck boxes. Under the definition of "wagon" in the Canada Grain Act trucks would also be exempt, but we are not going that far in asking the minister to explain what he means by "wagon".

I dealt further with this question with the deputy minister of the day, and in one of my letters I had this to say:

Item 438f deals with parts of motor vehicles. I contend that a steel truck, grain or livestock box is not part of what is considered a motor vehicle or the chassis thereof, but rather an article to be mounted or attached thereto. Item 438a states such articles shall be valued separately, and duty assessed under tariff items regularly applicable thereto.

In western Canada, and the same may be said of eastern Canada, automotive dealers very seldom sell a farm truck or vehicle with steel grain box attached. If the farmer requires a grain box the normal procedure is for the farmer, or dealer, to obtain one from an implement dealer. Grain and livestock truck boxes are usually manufactured by those specialized in manufacturing agricultural implements and not from automotive manufacturers.

That is the point I am trying to get across, Mr. Chairman.

Most automotive dealers price sheets list chassis only and do not include a price for a grain or livestock box. Therefore, I contend a grain box should not be considered as a part of the truck or vehicle but considered under some other heading.

I say it should be considered under the heading in tariff item 409f of a gravity discharge farm wagon box or, as I said before, as all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery n.o.p.—not otherwise provided for.

To continue with my letter:

I further contend a steel grain or stock truck box could be included under the heading of agriculture implements for the following reasons. In legal dictionaries, the term implement is defined as a thing of necessary use in any trade. The word necessary is defined as those things to the doing of a thing which are reasonably required.

I have gone through some dictionaries to find a definition of "truck box" or "wagon box" that the department would accept. I would again refer the minister to what has been accepted as a legal definition in some of our statutes. In fact there was only one act where I could find a definition of "wagon" that was acceptable to us. However, in view of the fact that the minister does not find it acceptable as a legal definition, I am trying to determine what his department will accept. We are also having difficulty at the present time with the method by which the Department of Finance classifies the tariff items; then the Department of National Revenue interprets the items and the one will not support the other when the chips are down.

My letter continues:

In Funk and Wagnall's ready reference dictionary, implement is defined as a means or agent for the accomplishment of a purpose. Mr. P. M. Ollivier, the Chief Law Clerk of the House of Commons, has given the definition of an agricultural implement as follows—anything that is used for agricultural purposes mainly becomes an agricultural implement.

• (3:30 p.m.)

McGoldricks Handbook of the Canadian Customs Tariff and Excise Duties, recognized as an authority or guide by Canadian industry, starting on page 267 has a general heading "Agricultural Implements" viz: This same heading of implements is carried on for seven pages, listing hundreds of items considered as agricultural implements by legal authorities and industry.

In my opinion a steel grain or livestock box used for agricultural purposes is an agricultural implement.

That is the point I am trying to get the minister to accept I agree with the minister when he says that he cannot accept a truck, the vehicle itself, as coming within that definition. Nevertheless I think we ought to accept as implements those devices which are related to it. For instance, last night the hon. member for Springfield asked about hydraulic hoists. If we look at the tariff list we see that hydraulic hoists which are used for unloading are exempt. I do not know why the minister will exempt the hoist and will not exempt the chassis of the vehicle to which that hoist is attached. That is the point I am trying to get across. I continue quoting:

I further suggest, the term agricultural machinery, as it appears in item 409F is superfluous as agricultural machinery is adequately covered by the term agricultural implement.

Nowhere in my search of a definition of the term agricultural implement did I find anything that did not support the authorities I have quoted, nor did your officials offer any authority to dispute the commonly accepted definition. Surely someone in your department (either yourself as deputy, or the minister) is responsible to give an authoritive definition of the term implement.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Surely the minister can make more clear what he means by "tractor". For instance, in clause 11 we find the language:

Farm wagons, including four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn and farm sleds; parts therefor—

And so on. Sometimes a truck is called a tractor. The long distance trucks used on highways haul a rear portion which is on wheels. The front part of the vehicle is referred to as a tractor. Perhaps we could get around the minister's objection by defining trucks in a way that the farmers in the west will understand more clearly. Sometimes a truck is known there as a tractor with two big wheels behind it, and so on.

Yesterday an amendment was moved with respect to exemption from sales tax on parts for farm wagons and sleds. When I had my original dispute with the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue we were trying to make farm truck boxes from steel. We needed a special type of high tensile steel. Had certain suggestions been followed we could have had an additional industry in my area.

One of my constituents spent about $500 in coming down here and trying to get a ruling from the department. Unfortunately the constituent had to go home empty-handed, and that annoyed me greatly. It seems to me that because the ministers in charge of the department change so often they have little opportunity to learn the background of the disputes to which I am referring. I have continued my argument since about 1961. I have brought up the matter almost every year since then. Yet the former minister of national revenue got up and said he had never heard of what I was talking about.

I am very disappointed at what has happened, but it seems to me that the minister is not as much to blame as his officials are because his officials have remained with the department. Last night I was suspicious. I suspected that vested interests were involved in the matter. I do not know whether that is correct. Surely the minister can explain why he will not accept the proposed change at the present time. I do not know whether there is concern for the product of one particular firm. I have photographs here of certain equipment. It is not necessary to read the name of the United States firm that wanted to manufacture the particular type of box to which I have referred. All I am trying to say is, why should special consideration be given to one firm? What is the reason for that? That is the issue. My argument is that a box that comes with a wagon or truck should be defined as being a farm implement. The question may be asked, what do we mean by a wagon? If we do not accept the truck chassis in this definition will we accept the definition in the Canada Grain Act?

As I said, I have had a lot of correspondence on this subject and I have some here with the first minister of finance with whom I dealt. He happened to be a member of my own party, and I admit that I got about as far with him as I have got with the present minister. I do not blame the ministers so much as the officials of the department who occupy their positions for periods of years. They know that these questions have been raised not only by myself but by other hon. members such as the hon. member for Springfield. They must have heard these questions raised by dozens of members. Many western members have made substantial representations on the points I am trying to raise.

I regret that the machinery does not seem to exist whereby we can bring to the minister's attention the points we are driving at. He asked why did I not go to see him when his door was open to hon. members? We have done this but it has been to no avail. We now intend to get from the minister, if possible, a definition of "farm wagon."

I referred to the first representation I made to the minister of finance I originally dealt with. I was dealing with the item I am dealing with here, truck boxes which are brought to Canada from the United States, and I said in that letter:

I understand a similar request was made some time ago, but was refused on the grounds that although similar boxes were not made in Canada, they could be if the market warranted production. I do not disagree with the decision that was made at that time. Although I am a westerner, I am one who believes we must protect Canadian industry where possible, provided it does not create too heavy a burden on some other section of our country. Your previous decision gave Canadian industry an opportunity to take advantage of any potential Canadian market. Through lack of aggression, or some other reason, our industry has apparently not seen fit to take advantage of the opportunity afforded to them by your action.

At the present time, in certain areas of the prairie provinces, there is a demand for a light steel grain and livestock truck box. The farmers have been unable to obtain them in Canada, at least from recognized manufacturers of this type of farm equipment. Some may be manufactured locally in some areas of the west.

On investigation by some western manufacturers to provide this market with the product in demand, it was found that their source of supply could not produce the strong high tensile steel required, all other types of steel were too heavy for practical use.

Anticipating a question which you might logically ask as to whether some substitute Canadian material could not be used, I will list some of the reasons the farmer is now demanding this type of steel box:—

I ask the minister whether a high tensile steel box may be included as a part. I continue:

—(a) Previous steel boxes on the market have been too heavy to be handled manually on the farm.

(b) With the advent of a greater demand for stock most western farmers now raise cattle as well as grain on their farms. Both must be hauled to market. A steel box can be washed out quickly and thoroughly after hauling cattle and be ready for grain immediately.

(c) Most western farms are now fully mechanized and many farmers haul their own fuel. Any spillage can be easily washed from steel and will not soak into the platform as it does on a wooden base.

Western farmers want the steel box. I mentioned some of these matters last night. I continue reading:

(d) Treated wheat—

I am referring to poisoned wheat.

—used for seeding purposes can be handled in a steel box with fewer precautions than in a wooden one.

That is reasonable.

All my efforts to date to convince the excise branch there are at present ample listings under their tariff regulations to allow entry of such a box have not been fruitful. They insist direction must come from your department, spelling out in detail the nature of the box required before they will rule duty free for the farmers.

I have been unable to convince them that the steel grain box could be included under the heading of agricultural implement.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I have mentioned a number of these definitions. What this situation simply means to the western farmer is that at present there is a 25 per cent duty on these boxes plus an 11 per cent sales tax. The result is that for every $1,000 farmers spend on them at least $400 goes to the government. The minister has been out west. He says he understands the plight of the western farmer who finds himself caught in the cost-price squeeze. It seems odd to me that since these boxes are now essential to farm operations they should not be exempt from tax.

I point out once again that we are not asking for an exemption for trucks. If we were I would expect the minister to tell us that an end-use certificate should be given. Farmers would have no objection to giving end-use certificates with regard to trucks because it is admitted they can be used for other purposes. Nevertheless, 99 times out of 100 the farmers who buy them use them exclusively for farm purposes. All we are asking the hon. gentleman to do is to define what he means by "wagon". Will he not accept that it is the same thing as a truck?

Mr. Sharp: May I begin by saying that in so far as hon. members are making representation for a change in the law their comments will be taken into consideration when amendments are next made to the legislation.

The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has asked me on what basis the Department of National Revenue now defines a farm wagon. I will give him a direct answer. It may not satisfy him but I will try to be as clear as I can. The consistent policy in administering this statutory provision has been to accept the ordinary dictionary definition of the term "wagon" and regard as entitled to the benefits of the exemption those farm wagons equipped with four wheels. Accordingly, as a farm wagon is a general purpose implement useful in performing a large number of functions the following definition, taken from Funk and Wagnalls New Standard Dictionary of the English Language, the same dictionary as the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek used, is followed by the department in administering this exempting provision:

A four-wheeled vehicle having a rectangular box-like body, complete with tongue, designed to be horse drawn.

It has been the policy of the department to regard all four-wheeled wagons, whether horse or tractor drawn, designed for farm application, with or without box, to be unconditionally exempt from sales tax under the abovementioned statutory provision. This means that two-wheeled vehicles, for example, trailers, cannot qualify for exemption.

Similarly, exemption from sales tax is provided in item 4 of part IV of the Excise Tax Act, under the heading "Farm and Forest", for the following goods:

Boxes for farm wagons, and article and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof.

There have been numerous requests over the years for exemption from sales tax for boxes for farm trucks, but these have been ruled to be subject to sales tax at the current rate since the Excise Tax Act as at present enacted makes no provision for their exemption.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. Nasserden: I should like to thank the minister for giving us those definitions in relation to farm wagons and wagon boxes. The subject under consideration here really is the attitude of the government or the attitude of the Department of National Revenue toward the whole question of the tax placed on some of these items. Taking a political view of these things, we all know that the boast has been made across Canada that excise taxes and tariffs have been removed from farm machinery. We also know that certain items are exempt from taxation when a certificate is signed to the effect that their use will be restricted to the farm. Air-cooled engines and generating plants come into this category. The guide line in the mind of the average farmer is, therefore, that provided an article is to be used solely for agricultural purposes parliament has intended that it be exempt from tax.

This is the feeling today in connection with truck boxes. The attitude of the department has in my opinion been archaic. The rulings have departed from the intention of parliament that boxes for wagons should be exempt. Today the truck has taken the place of the wagon, and in these circumstances a great deal of dissatisfaction exists in connection with the stand now taken by the department.

With regard to clause 11, I congratulate the minister and the government for having made an exemption to cover parts. I know this will be welcomed by farmers not only in connection with farm wagons but in connection with a number of other items.

We should like to see the minister bring this act up to date. Let him not delay doing so until some time in the distant future, as seems to be the tendency of all ministers of finance. In practice, ministers of that department never stay in office long enough to do anything about these things. We do not know how much longer the present minister will be holding the portfolio of finance. Maybe he will have other duties within a short period of time. We should like him to achieve this major step on behalf of our farmers with the least possible delay, in keeping with the boast made by his party that it has removed tariffs from farm equipment.

Mr. Southam: I rise to support the representations made by my hon. friend from Swift Current-Maple Creek with respect to this matter. I must compliment him on his presentation. He has certainly done his homework, and there is little I can add to what he has said. He spoke for most farmers across Canada and particularly for those in the west.

My hon. friend from Rosthern who has just resumed his seat put his finger on an anomalous situation when he pointed out that the definition used in connection with farm wagons applied some 25 or 30 years ago. How many people are using the old-fashioned wagon box today? A truck box on an automated vehicle has taken its place. Consequently the definition to which the minister referred is outmoded and ought no longer to be used. I support entirely what my hon. friends have said on this point. It is high time the minister and his officials updated the legislation with respect to farm boxes.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): I, too, would like to say a few words in support of the representations which my hon. friend from Swift Current-Maple Creek has just finished making in the course of his well prepared statement on this issue. The very fact that farm wagons are now being defined as four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn is an indication that the act is more than 30 years out of date. I doubt that half of one per cent of the farms in western Canada use a wagon of any type today. Most farms have one or two large farm trucks. I do not think the minister should have any hesitation in recognizing that we are living in 1968 and that everything rolls on rubber and is motorized.

In those earlier days combines were few in number. Today everyone has a combine and a good many of them are self-propelled. Farm trucks are also self-propelled. The province of Saskatchewan recognized the importance of farm trucks when it passed legislation a year ago exempting fuel used by those trucks, when used on farms, from tax. I think the minister should take a personal interest in this matter and see to it that farm truck boxes are exempted from this tax.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with my prairie colleagues in thanking the minister for his undertaking to consider in the next short while the possibility of further revising the Excise Tax Act and the regulations, so as to exempt farm truck boxes from this tax. As I indicated last night, and as other hon. members have indicated, it is difficult to understand how a quarter of a century can pass before the law is updated to present-day reality. We have all heard the old saying, which I think comes from "Oliver Twist," that in some respects the law is an ass. Here we have a perfect example of that. It is inconceivable that there can be much hesitation in changing the Excise Tax Act in this respect. Last night the Minister of National Revenue said that on many occasions genuine efforts have been made to attempt to meet the legitimate requests of western farmers. This is a good opportunity to put such a sentiment into effect by changing this act to reflect modern conditions on Canadian farms.

I do not suppose much would be gained by prolonging this debate inasmuch as the minister has given a clearcut undertaking that he will examine this matter in detail. I take him to mean that before the passage of more than four or five months we will be hearing from him specifically in this connection.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, now that the problem regarding the definition of farm wagons seems to be settled, I should like to direct a question to the hon. minister.

I shall not take much of the time of the house, but farm wagons and particularly their parts are still of interest to me, since I come from eastern Canada. We are all aware of the tax added to the price of the wagons made in Canada. If farm wagons or their parts were made in the United States, would the customs duty still be charged or would it disappear along with the taxes, as provided by the clause now under consideration?

[English]

Mr. McIntosh: I would like to draw the minister's attention to a few remarks he made last night, as recorded on page 6398 of Hansard. He said:

> It was in response to representations that the words "and parts thereof" have been added. It is a relieving section which does not add any tax. It relieves parts of farm wagons and sleds from the tax, and I am sure the hon. gentleman would not want to oppose that.

We are not opposing that, but we want the minister to include farm truck boxes and we maintain that all he has to do is add a few words to clause 11.

Hon. members will recall that when the minister read the definition taken by the department from Funk and Wagnall, the dictionary the legal branch uses, he mentioned "horse drawn vehicle," but apparently the department has changed the dictionary definition because the bill reads, "to be tractor drawn." This confirms our argument that a farm truck box is a wagon drawn by a truck.

I am sure the minister, to use his own words, would not want to oppose such a change, knowing the position of the farmers in western Canada.

I could make a long speech about the government's railway line abandonment policy, as a result of which trucks with large, light steel boxes are more essential to farmers now than ever before. They have to haul their grain longer distances and these boxes must be light in order to carry large quantities of grain. Otherwise the cost factor would become prohibitive, and if the cost of production is too high farmers in many areas will not be able to grow grain. I do not want to suggest exact words to the minister but he could include the phrase, "or truck drawn." I am sure he realizes what we want. We want steel truck boxes exempted. They are not made by automotive manufacturers but by farm machinery manufacturers.

With respect to the minister's statement that representations had been made to him, I would like to know how they were made. As I told him, I have been making representations on this subject ever since 1961 and I do not think I have missed a single year. Last night the Minister of National Revenue made light of the fact that we had not brought up this matter previously. I would refer him to volume 3 of 1963 Hansard, July 25, when the matter was raised with the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Davenport.

On July 30 of that year the matter was raised again, as recorded on pages 2649 and 2650 of Hansard. I also refer the minister to pages 2796, 2806, to 2808, and 2811 to 2815. On one occasion I had a private bill before the house titled "Bureaucratic Oppression," which drew attention to the fact that we could not get a definition from either department because they would not agree. They would not even accept the definition in the Canada Grain Act, a legal statute passed by parliament. What will they accept? The minister should make it perfectly clear what he means by a wagon and whether it includes truck boxes. When he includes the words "to be tractor drawn" he admits in effect that this is different from the definition in Funk and Wagnall which refers to a horse-drawn vehicle.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to disagree with my hon. friend on matters of logic but I am forced to do so. The very fact that we put in the words "to be tractor drawn" indicates that the administration of the law has been very consistent. If we did not add those words we could not even include a farm wagon, as defined in Funk and Wagnalls dictionary, drawn by anything except a horse. So we had to enlarge the definition. This seems to strengthen the position taken by the Department of National Revenue that a farm wagon is a four-wheeled vehicle with a triangular box-like body designed to be horse drawn. I do not think the hon. gentleman was listening carefully when I gave the view of the department in administering this law. There is a definition for a box on farm wagons in the law now. This is why it will be necessary to make a change in the law in order to extend the exemption beyond its present ambit. Under the heading "Farm and Forest" in item 4 of Part IV of Schedule III of the Excise Tax Act appears the following exemption:

> Boxes for farm wagons, and articles and materials for use exclusively in the manufacture thereof.

So there is very close relationship between the words "boxes" and "farm wagons". Therefore the Department of National Revenue will have to administer the law in a consistent way within the ordinary dictionary meaning of these words. There have been numerous requests such as the hon. member is putting forward stating that these boxes should be related to farm trucks, but the law states that exempt boxes are for farm wagons.

Mr. McIntosh: If it is for horse-drawn wagons, then why is there an exemption for hydraulic lifts? I do not think one could have a hydraulic hoist on a horse-drawn wagon.

Mr. Sharp: This again supports the position of the Department of National Revenue. There is a specific exemption for that item.

[Translation]

Mr. Godin: Mr. Chairman, earlier when I directed a question to the hon. minister, he was busy talking with a charming lady, that is why I do not hold it against him for not hearing me.

This is my question: Shall we continue to pay customs duty on farm wagons which come to us from the United States or anywhere else?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is that it would depend upon the item itself and would not be altered by this bill. This bill has no effect upon the treatment of such items. It would depend upon the existing interpretation of the existing sections of the law.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in the minister's explanation when he spoke of the exemption of a particular item. Perhaps it should be suggested to the minister that the time has come when the whole matter of the exemption of agricultural implements should be reviewed in the light of the drastic changes in the use of various implements which previously could not be conceived of as being used for agriculture.

Mr. Sharp: That is what I said before.

Mr. Danforth: Tanks of certain sizes are exempt when they are used for the farm storage of liquid fertilizer but beyond a certain specific size they are no longer classified as for farm use. However, such tanks are being used for that very purpose and the farmers fail to understand why, when they are used, they cannot come under the exemption. Perhaps these things should be looked into very carefully.

Although this may seem to be an extreme case there are certain instances today when radios play a part in the production of farm commodities. They are used for weather broadcasts, market reports and so on. Perhaps they should be classified as necessary agricultural implements. I realize that this is an extreme case but it is an indication of how agriculture is moving in this regard. This type of problem will continually rise in respect of budget resolutions and tariff items.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, last evening I asked the minister a question after he said:

> It was in response to representations that the words "and parts thereof" have been added.

Would he please tell me what type of representation was made to him that caused him to take this action? I have tried to make all types of representations to the department so that action would be taken on this matter. If I have been unable to make the same type of representation that was made to the minister perhaps he will take the representation which I make to him now in the house on behalf of all western members. Would he look into this matter or leave some instructions for his officials or his successor before he leaves his present office?

These definitions change and, as indicated by the hon. member for Kent (Ont.), should be brought up to date. I have definitions here from the Century Dictionary, 1895, the Encyclopaedic Dictionary, 1903, the Oxford English Dictionary, 1933, the Winston Dictionary, 1946, and Webster's New International Dictionary, 1958. I could argue for hours and not get any place in respect of the interpretation of this term or the term "agricultural wagon", and so on. I should like the minister to tell us what possessed him to move in respect of this one particular item.

Mr. Sharp: The representation I received was to the effect that we had inadvertently dropped the words when we transferred the clause from the Customs Act to the Excise Tax Act. It was always the intention that they be there. The representation I had was to that effect.

Mr. McIntosh: From the department?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Kent (Ont.) has made the suggestion that from time to time it would be desirable to have a complete review and revision of the items or lists of equipment or implements which are exempt under the act so they could be brought up to date in accordance with the developments in modern agriculture. I think the idea is a good one. However, I believe there should be a keener appreciation, on the part of the minister and the officials of his department who administer the act, of the changes which are going on and have been going on over the years in agriculture. Such an appreciation would enable them to act quickly when representations are made which have logic and reason when viewed in the context of the new developments in respect of the manufacture of farm machinery and implements.

With regard to steel truck boxes I feel there really has not been an awareness of just how important and necessary a part they play today in farming. I am not referring only to western Canada. It is not quite good enough that we should have to wait eight, nine or ten years in order to have changes of this kind made. I do not suppose there really is much purpose now in prolonging the discussion inasmuch as the minister has given a commitment to look into the matter and, hopefully, take some action. I assume he will be doing this in the next three or four months.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. McIntosh: I do not wish to prolong the debate on this clause but I should like the minister to give a commitment now that the representations of hon. members will be studied and considered. I would also hope that consideration will be given to the definition as found in the Canada Grain Act. That may be going a step too far but it would be welcomed by the western farmers. Once a definition has been established in a statute of Canada it should be accepted when interpreting all our statutes. I do not know where things would end if we had a different definition for certain words in every statute. Will the minister give a commitment that he will consider our representations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I have been very much impressed by the representations, and I assure the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and the hon. member for Springfield that, as I said in my opening remarks, many of these terms are becoming archaic and obsolete which makes it necessary that the law be refurbished. I cannot undertake to say that a farm wagon means a truck, which apparently is the definition in the Canada Grain Act. This would mean extending the meaning of agricultural implements and machinery in a way that would require most careful consideration by the government because trucks are used in many forms of activity other than agriculture.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether he does not in his own mind agree that a farm truck box performs the identical service performed by a farm wagon box and that it fits the interpretation and the intention of the act when it was first adopted? Does the minister not feel there should be no problem at all in bringing this act up to date to include farm truck boxes? As the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek said a few moments ago, when we first started to use farm truck boxes they were mostly homemade of wood. There has been a change and a definite swing toward the use of steel truck boxes. This has resulted because we are carrying heavier loads in boxes with steel underbeds, steel floors and steel sides. These larger steel boxes are easier to use in hauling grain. They are much easier to dump because the grain slides completely out of them.

I am not sure how long it would take to change this law or how to go about changing it but I should like some commitment from the minister in this regard. The minister has been in the west often enough in the past few years, and I expect he will spend quite a bit of time there in the next month or two, to know the situation there. I hope he will make a commitment that some action will be taken in respect of truck boxes within a reasonable time. In this way the farmers of western Canada could obtain an exemption.

Clauses 12 and 13 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

An hon. Member: By leave, now.

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed so quickly I had no time to ask for an explanation. Is it too late to refer back to a clause for clarification?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the house would allow the hon. member to ask his question even though we have completed the formality of third reading.

Mr. Pascoe: I should like to clarify one point regarding Bill No. C-191, part XIII, which indicates that effective June 2, 1967, all goods listed in schedule V will be exempt from sales tax. If one looks down the list one will find that in paragraph (e) there is reference to gasoline and diesel powered self-propelled trucks at mines and quarries. Paragraph (i) refers to pipes and tubes and other things in connection with natural gas or oil wells. Paragraph (j) refers to petroleum, natural gas or minerals. I should like to ask the minister whether these exemptions apply to the mining of potash. The minister knows that potash is very important to the economy of Saskatchewan at this time.

Mr. Sharp: As far as I am aware, if there is a reference to minerals it would include potash. Where there is a reference only to natural gas or oil wells potash would not be included. Wherever minerals are concerned I assume that potash would be included, because this means mining from the ground. I see no reason for potash being excluded.

Mr. Pascoe: Where (e) refers to mines and quarries it would apply also to potash?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre will realize that the privilege we extended to him is not one we would wish to adopt in our rules of procedure.

EXCISE ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-192, to amend the Excise Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill, like the bill we have just considered, is based on the resolutions which were discussed extensively when they were introduced and approved in the house. I have nothing to add to my explanation at the present time. I will be glad to answer any questions when we reach the committee stage.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, this bill carries out one of the budgetary resolutions. Consequently we have nothing further to say at this time.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister why in the implementation of the budget resolutions he has adopted the system of bringing forward two separate bills in respect of the same commodity. The bill we have just passed increased the tax on wine and this bill will implement a tax increase on spirits and beer. Why were the tax increases on these commodities not included in the same bill? What is the reason for having separate bills? To my mind there is not much difference between one alcoholic beverage and another; yet we have one in one bill and two in another. I am curious about the reason for having separate bills to implement a tax increase in respect of the same commodity.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the reason is that in the Excise Tax Act we apply excise taxes and in the Excise Act we apply excise duties. A duty is applied when the goods are kept in a special warehouse and taxed in that way. An excise tax is like a sales tax which is applied upon sales at the time they are made. Throughout history there has always been this distinction between an excise duty and an excise tax. It has to do with the administration of the taxes and the necessity in the case of duties, just like customs duties, of having warehouses in which the goods to be taxed are held until the tax is paid.

Mr. Peters: I presume that the reason spirits are mentioned separately from beer in this bill is that they are not in bond except in the manufacturing process. Imported spirits are placed in bond. Is the situation further confused when we have imported beer and imported spirits? Imported wine, beer and spirits would be in bond. How does this affect the excise tax position?

Mr. Sharp: The Excise Act requires that they be kept in bond even if they are manufactured in Canada. An excise duty is comparable with a customs duty. There are very special procedures for keeping goods in bond until the tax is paid. Other goods taxed under the Excise Tax Act do not have this requirement, and wine is one of them.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. I do not expect he has had much experience in brewing. Clause 1 reads in part:

(a) five per cent when yeast sediment is included, or

(b) three per cent when yeast sediment is not included.

Could the minister explain to the committee the reason for this provision?

Mr. Danforth: Yes; I am interested.

Mr. Starr: One ferments more than the other.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the hon. member that I am not an expert in these matters. However, I am advised that beer is measured when it is in the fermentation process. When the yeast sediment is at the bottom of the vat the stick by which you measure the contents is, of course, at a different level than it is when the sediment is removed. This clause provides an approximation of the same volume of consumable beer.

Mr. Starr: That is not the way we used to make it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Income Tax Act

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-193, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) is prepared to make a statement on this important bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, all the amendments in this bill, with one minor exception, are for the purpose of implementing the November 30 budget resolutions. The exception is the addition of a few words to section 42 for clarification.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, in rising at this time to make a few remarks on the budgetary legislation before us I want to assure the minister that I have no intention or desire to add to the already heavy burden resting upon his shoulders as Minister of Finance. The fact that the greater part of his burden has to do with the minister's interest in the future of his party, rather than in the economy of Canada, does not alter the situation that today we believe he is a sorely tried man.

The minister probably feels that he should be somewhere else today listening to more important things, but we in the house have to deal with this legislation which all of us consider to be vitally important to Canadians as a whole. So it is purely in a spirit of helpfulness that I wish to advance some ideas on the general subject of the national economy and in particular what I believe to be serious shortcomings in the approach of the Minister of Finance and the government as a whole to our economic problems.

This legislation is designed to implement what has been called a mini-budget, an emergency measure which I feel was forced upon the minister and the government by their own bungling. In view of the minister's statements of the past few years as to the state of the economy and the adequacy of his own policies, I would refer to this interim budget as an alibi budget for those statements and legislation, designed to excuse and correct the minister's grievous errors in policies and his gross miscalculations.

[Mr. Starr.]

According to the minister's explanation earlier, his aim in this legislation is to fight inflation. He seeks by these and other proposals to put the brakes on the Canadian economy. I submit that the prime target of his anti-inflationary tactics is the little man, the average taxpayer, the ordinary Canadian, the most put upon, overburdened and exploited unit in our tax system. The minister also had a few pious words of advice for labour and private enterprise. He cautioned them to go slow, cut back and show restraint, and there have been some violent reactions to his suggestions from both labour and industry.

So far the minister has done nothing but speak about one of the principal areas where effective anti-inflationary action might be taken, namely, excessive government spending, and right now government spending is up by 15 per cent. The minister's forecast is for an increase of 4.5 per cent in government expenditure this year, in spite of the so-called cutbacks which in fact were only propaganda. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this figure is also misleading. It does not take into account the money required for the government medicare scheme due to be launched on July 1, although that date has not yet been announced in parliament as the definite date for the implementation of this scheme. This appears to be a classic case of the old saying: Do as I say, not as I do.

As I have said, I can appreciate the minister's difficult position. Surely it must be exceedingly difficult for him to bring himself to consider today such routine matters as the nation's economy. In fact, this must have been the case starting two weeks ago and will in all likelihood continue to be so until next April 5.

The minister has never been one to show reluctance in giving his own ideas and solutions first place as the only answers to the economic problems of Canada. I have observed that he has shown a degree of self-confidence which in another minister might be mistaken for arrogance but which he knows so well how to project. It is not too much to say that the Minister of Finance has demonstrated a faith in his own infallibility which few of us possess. I wonder whether the minister has ever considered the possibility that his ideas and projections might be wrong. Has he ever taken the time to consider other views, new theories, fresh policies and, most important, the experience of other countries in similar situations and what they have been able to accomplish or to attempt in establishing new policies? Surely even the minister must realize how damaging it would be, not only to the national economy but to his political ambitions, if it turned out that he had pursued the wrong policies and had applied incorrect measures.

I wonder whether the minister has ever heard of Edward Holloway. Edward Holloway is the honorary secretary of the economic research council of Great Britain. He is also the director of Commonwealth Industries Association Limited. One of Mr. Holloway's organizations has recently completed the first part of a research program specifically devoted to finding the prime source of Great Britain's continuing inflation. This program is called the national recovery program. It was undertaken following the publication last year of a manifesto drawn up by 19 leading economists, industrialists and writers in Great Britain. They include such celebrated persons as Professor C. Northcote Parkinson, the father of Parkinson's law with the application of which, particularly in such government ministries as the Department of Finance, I am sure the minister is familiar. This manifesto aroused such interest that funds were soon forthcoming for the exhaustive and detailed study of inflation and its prime cause.

So far the findings have been revolutionary, to say the least. They are of a standard and importance which I would have thought sufficient to command the attention of the minister and the government and, indeed, of all responsible members of parliament. When one considers our close and vital economic links with Great Britain, the amount of attention given to recent economic events there, and the tremendous effect such events have on our economy, it seems reasonable to assume that Canada's Minister of Finance and Canada's government would be almost as well briefed on developments in Great Britain as the British authorities themselves. Perhaps this is the case. I hope it is because if these preliminary findings in Great Britain are correct it means that the Minister of Finance and the government of Canada are carrying out the wrong policies, victimizing the wrong people, and casting the blame for inflation upon groups which may be entirely blameless, namely, organized labour, ordinary consumers, and private business.

The British research report states that inflation is not caused by a too rapid increase in wages, is not worsened by full employment, is not reinforced by the activity of private enterprise, and is not even directly caused by government spending or budgetary deficits. The prime source of inflation, according to the researchers, is the financing of an over-all deficit in the central government's accounts by an uncontrolled creation of new money. The dominating word in this explanation is "uncontrolled". If this statement and the findings of the research group are true, it means that some of the present measures advocated both by the British government and by our own government in Canada are not only ineffective but totally wrong.

One of the most significant findings of the group in Britain is that when public spending rises faster than private spending there is a progressive slowing down in industrial growth. The sparkplug of a nation's economy is the private sector. What they have found is that various governments faced with economic difficulties such as inflation have taken money out of the private sector so as to reduce demand but at the same time have increased the money supply by the same amount or more to sustain a high rate of public spending. This means that for all practical purposes total demand has not been reduced at all.

The vital factor in this approach is that while the government has increased the money supply and failed to reduce its own spending, it has forced cut-backs in spending in the private sector and thus put the brake on industrial production. Inevitably this increases the inflationary pressure and leads to an aggravation of the very condition they have sought to cure. They have added to the money supply but reduced industrial output. In so doing they have attracted unnecessary imports and hobbled exports. Increased public spending and an increase in money are no substitute for production from an active private sector. Governments cannot spend their way out of recession, Mr. Speaker.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The basis for the findings in the report is that the nation's total demand for goods and services is always satisfied by the nation's own production plus imports. When production slows down within the country the pressure for imports grows; when internal production picks up this import pressure declines.

The report further states that its preliminary findings strongly indicate that the proper way to gain a favourable balance of trade and all the economic benefits that go with this is to allow total demand, and particularly consumer demand, to grow. The private sector, rather than being restricted and hampered, should be allowed and encouraged to go ahead full blast. This obviously is just the opposite course to that upon which the government and the Minister of Finance are now embarked.

I am not an economist, nor have I ever pretended to be. As a result I cannot say whether or not all these things are true. But I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that because of their apparent good sense and the sound credentials of their authors these findings are at least worthy of the government's serious attention. These findings and recommendations are very similar to those urged upon the government by organized labour in this country.

The key to the findings in the British report is that inflation can be shut off at the source if the central government will only act to control its own spending in relation to the money supply. The over-all difference between government income and expenditure must be financed by genuine borrowing, sale of government securities, and by genuine saving, always undertaken in relation to the creation of new money. Such responsible government action would mean that consumer demand could be encouraged instead of dampened down. Wage increases could be tolerated at a reasonable level of annual growth and private enterprise could free itself from government restrictions and expand its own rate of economic growth. The mistake has been to try to manage demand instead of managing the money supply.

Lord Cromer, when still governor of the Bank of England, said that Britain had a system whereby exchequer financing led to "the creation of money quasi-automatically". This may be, for different reasons perhaps, the situation here in Canada. It is well within the power of the government to control the money supply. If the findings of the British researchers are correct, then it is not only an obligation but a vital necessity for the minister and his officials to re-examine their policies and proposals in this light.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I am not an economist, but I admit that as a layman I have been impressed by all the implications of these latest findings by these British researchers. I do not believe that they can be dismissed lightly as being from another country or as dealing with different conditions. Generally speaking, all the western nations face roughly the same economic problems within the context of roughly similar systems. I sincerely believe that much good for Canada would come out of a close study of this matter by the minister and his departmental officials. It seems to me that in a country as prosperous, as dynamic and as promising as Canada there is something fundamentally wrong with a system that inhibits business initiative and victimizes our working people as the only way to cure our economic problems.

In a few months the name of the minister may become a household word in Canada for reasons other than economic. I would pose this question to him: How much prouder would he be, how much more lasting his fame, if the history books could record that he was the first to break through the restrictive barriers of old economic practice into the green fields of stable and equitable prosperity for Canada?

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the previous speaker on his address and to commend it to the officials of the Department of Finance as worthy of consideration. I too am surprised that the department has brought forward in this bill the same type of legislation that has been introduced on numerous occasions and as a result of which the little man has to pay the penalty for economic conditions over which he has absolutely no control. Workers ask for more money so they can continue to pay the rent. They do not ask for money in anticipation of the rent going up because rents are continually going up. It is often argued in negotiations with organized labour that as soon as wage increases are granted rents seem to rise. Workers who are not members of organized labour discover that even in the absence of a wage increase their rents go up just the same. They really have no control over this problem.

In introducing the budget resolution to bring about the income tax amendments now before the house the minister indicated that one of his prime aims was to assist in halting inflation. I agree with this. I do not subscribe to the argument that the way to end inflation is to curtail government spending. I do not agree that it is necessary to curtail certain spending. Cut-backs in housebuilding are not the way to curtail inflation in this nation. According to this morning's Montreal Gazette there are something like 75,000 unemployed in that city, many of them carpenters, electricians and members of the building trades. It seems to me that this is not the way to curb inflation. In this specific instance the minister has decided to impose a 5 per cent income tax surcharge with a ceiling of $600. Again this is making the little people pay the same as those at the top of the scale.

I know that the minister has been a civil servant and that he is probably closer to the establishment than most ministers of finance have been. He was part of it and knew its inner workings. I think the establishment in Ottawa lives in an ivory tower. They are willing to tax the little people of Canada, those in the lower income bracket, but they always put a ceiling on the effective income to be taxed because they do not want those who have high incomes to pay heavy taxes.

I remember the arguments about old age security and about cutting off assistance at $60 a month, and so on. The government then paid $90 and it has bumped that figure up to $120. I ask, why should those who have been able to make their mark in society not help those who have not done so well? Why should the little man not receive some benefit? Perhaps the executive types who live in the lofty, refined atmosphere of the Rideau Club do not know what is happening today. I suspect they do.

The Carter commission says that one way to raise tax money is to tax the mining industry. I come from an area where there is much mining. Many of the early mines of Canada are in the area I represent. As a result I have always been interested in the propaganda that the mines have put out. Though some mines make colossal profits the mining industry as a whole has always been loudest in shouting to the establishment when new taxes are proposed, "Don't rock the boat." Carter said that there was no justification for the mining exemption and I do not think that a three-year tax exemption should be allowed for the mines.

Many members of this house may have made or lost money on Texas Gulf. Some of them may have made or lost money on adjacent mines such as Windfall and others.

An hon. Member: How did you do?

Mr. Peters: Recently an article appeared in the Timmins Press which indicated that Texas Gulf will make a tax free profit for the next three years of $400,000 per day. I know that Texas Gulf has friends among the establishment in Ottawa and I expect many members of the Rideau Club hold stock in the company.

Mr. Habel: Will the hon. member permit a question? Was the article to which he has made reference not referring to a statement made by the hon. member's colleague, the hon. member for Timmins? I submit that the statement was groundless.

Mr. Peters: The article was not researched by my colleague; it was researched by others and it has not been repudiated by the Timmins Press, as the hon. member for Cochrane will agree. The article did not come out recently but is several weeks old. The figures have not been disputed.

Mr. Habel: Because reference was made only to production.

Mr. Peters: With respect, no. The article referred to profits per day.

Mr. Habel: I thought it referred to production figures.

Mr. Peters: No. I do not think so. It referred to $400,000 per day profit. That means that the $80 million which the company has already spent will be paid off in about 200 days. Perhaps that is an exaggeration; perhaps we should give them 500 days. I do not know how many actual working days are involved but I do know that the figures mean that the company will recoup, tax free, its capitalization plus about $100 million. And who is giving the company that money? Who is giving it the tax money it otherwise would have paid? I am giving it, you are giving it, every person who pays taxes is giving it to this company.

International Nickel enjoys the same type of exemption completely without justification. The commodity it produces is in such demand that if there were a shortage the United States would put up money for the development of its production. I see no logic in extending a tax exemption in those circumstances.

When we talk about exemptions for individuals the story is different. Exemptions for individuals these days ought to be on the basis of $1,500 for single persons and $3,000 for married couples. The government will not increase the exemptions but is increasing taxes. For the value of the exemption to keep pace with the inflated value of our dollar I submit that single persons ought to be granted a $1,500 exemption. The $1,000 that parliament granted 20 years ago is probably worth less than $500 in real terms today. Perhaps $2,000 as the exemption for single persons would be more realistic. It would be just enough to enable an individual to maintain the standard of living he enjoyed 20 years ago.

Of course, we are always willing to put a ceiling on taxes. Those in the high income bracket will not need to pay more than $600 in additional taxes, the reason being that the establishment does not want the big people in this country to get hurt. When it comes to the little man the story is different. Most of our people are little people. I represent a constituency whose people will be paying extra taxes, which will hurt their purchasing power. The little man is at the bottom of the totem pole and the little man will have his standard of living lowered by increased taxes. The establishment's idea is that by lowering the purchasing power of the little man at the bottom of the totem pole a large number of people will have less money to spend and inflation will be curbed. Of course, in simple terms we are lowering the standard of living of the little man, and we should not do that.

I do not expect the establishment to agree to changes that will hurt their friends, but sooner or later members of parliament will have to make a decision. They will have to go out on the hustings, face those who will be paying less than $600 a year extra and explain to them why the per cent surcharge has been imposed. The government will not be influenced by my remarks but I know that the establishment will have much explaining to do in the next election because candidates from every political party will be asked by the electors why the extra tax was added. Anyone who wants to fight the next election had better get his position clear now.

As I said, instead of granting increased exemptions the government is adding extra taxes. What the government should be doing is bringing the exemption into line with the reduced purchasing power of the dollar. If we look at the dollar of 20 years ago and remember that the exemption then was $1,000 for a single man, is it not common sense to just about double the exemption to take care of today's inflated dollar? I think the individual should have enough income left to him to maintain at least a reasonable standard of living. He should not be burdened with additional taxes. The people at the bottom of the totem pole who outnumber those higher up are the ones who are asked to make sacrifices, who are asked to lower their standard of living in the name of curbing inflation. Those at the top level will not be affected nearly as much.

The figures I used may be very unfair to Texas Gulf, but the principle of allowing a three-year tax free period to all mines in the Elliott Lake area is surely an unsound one. Conditions have changed since I worked in the mines. In those days it was normal to employ about 300 men and management was lucky if 500 tons a day were produced. The mines of which we are now speaking produce up to 5,000 tons a day. Within a month of starting operations they can pay off their total capitalization and go on to amass a huge profit. Why should they be granted tax exemptions? When uranium operations were discontinued during a bad period some time ago many of the mines were still working on the basis of tax-free concessions and could have gone on producing had a market been available.

Does anyone think that a company such as INCO, with its huge portfolio, a company which now belongs to Standard Oil in the United States, is really in need of these special concessions? The profit which this corporation distributes to its shareholders is larger than the whole tax revenue of the Canadian government. It amounts to more than all the taxes needed to run Canada. Do we really need to allow such firms a tax concession enabling them to pick up 1,000 claims, say, and hold them for so many years? They will not develop them; they have no desire to do so. If they did the price of nickel might drop and this would not be in their interest.

We have just watched the progress of two finance bills through this house and a Philadelphia lawyer would be unable to sort out the gobbledygook which has been approved by the Department of Finance. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) is here now. I congratulate him on the job he did while he was Minister of National Revenue. In fact, he is one of the few ministers who seemed to know what he was talking about in this field. Most of those who take over that department do not even get their feet wet, presumably because matters are so complicated there.

Hon. members will not have forgotten that it took us hours of discussion to arrive at any understanding about the definition of the word "wagon" and reach agreement on a common name for such a simple thing as a box intended to carry grain. In the light of what was said during that discussion there is certainly a need for an overhaul of this department, a department which seems to belong to the establishment, about which Peter Newman writes about so well and about which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) has spoken with such eloquence. It is a department in which members of parliament get lost. The language used by senior civil servants there appears to be a special language used to confuse us poor mortals who sometimes have the task of bringing some semblance of reason to it.

My last point concerns the taxation forms. I notice that some only apply to incomes below $8,000. I have watched good lawyers coming to parliament and introducing bills. Their attitude is: I intend to miss nothing so I will put everything in. The same kind of lawyers must have drawn up these forms. You can take them to an accountant but unless he is familiar with this type of accounting he will make no more sense out of them than you or I.

My education in mathematics may not be advanced. I have a certificate saying I have some proficiency in algebra, geometry and trigonometry, but I am unable to comprehend these forms. I do not see why one should add on the provincial tax and then deduct it again. If it makes no difference in the end, why not leave this out altogether? Not long ago I sent my form to the district office. They wrote back advising me they owed me a sum much larger than I had anticipated. Later they wrote saying they had reviewed the form and had come to the conclusion that I owed them a certain amount of money. I sent it to them. Later they sent a third letter informing me they had recalculated the amount due and were sending me a refund. I was glad when the end of that year came. I could not be sure whether my original calculation had been correct or whether the department was playing games.

In any event, these forms are far too complicated. If we are to have them, let us put the calculation table up to $20,000 or have an additional sheet provided so that the calculation is done as far as possible by the department, not by the individual taxpayer. It is bad enough having to pay without having to do the calculations as well.

I remember the Minister of Finance suggesting that the form would be simplified last year. If he finds last year's form simpler than the form sent out a year earlier, I am at a loss to understand what he means by simplification. According to the legal dictionary he uses, it must mean complication. The department could at least simplify the form to the extent of making it directly applicable to each of the provinces. If a taxpayer pays his taxes in Ontario, send him a form applicable to Ontario. Do the same in Quebec and in the other provinces. Let us not make the form applicable to all the provinces and tell the taxpayer: If you are in Ontario you do this, but if you are in Quebec you must do something else. These forms must be confusing to the public because they are certainly confusing to me.

I hope the government will consider the whole question of income ceilings and deductions allowed to the individual. While it is no doubt important to control inflation there are those who believe that imposing additional taxation on the little man may not be the whole solution. If we are asking the ordinary taxpayers to make a contribution toward controlling inflation, let it apply to everyone. Let us place some control on the activities of certain of these large companies which exploit consumers, and reduce the advantages which people at the top range of the scale seem to enjoy. This may affect members of parliament. It may affect many of those who are involved in the drafting of this legislation and the recommendations which go before the Minister of Finance. But if we are seeking to halt the inflationary trend in Canada by imposing additional burdens only on the little man we may find we have killed the goose which lays the golden eggs rather than protected the goose so that it can provide wealth for many years to come.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to open my remarks on this budgetary legislation by stating flatly that it would never have been necessary to consider legislation of this nature at this time were it not for the pig-headed conviction of this government that it is always right and the arrogance of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) in clinging to his own theories of how much public expenditure the Canadian economy can stand. Under the rules of this house I am prevented from attributing motives to any other member, but it appears to me at least to be possible that the economic conditions which made this interim budget necessary were aggravated by a reluctance on the part of the government and the minister to admit until too late that something needed correction. I believe that both the government and the minister deliberately ignored the storm signals in the hope that the tempest would pass before they had to undertake any measures that might be politically unpopular. After all, tax increases and other repressive measures are not the best platform upon which to go to the country or upon which to seek higher office.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, made it very clear in a speech in Winnipeg last November that Canada is fortunate in having within its own capacity a greater degree of power to deal with its economic problems than do many other countries among the 106 represented in the membership of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. He drew to the attention of his audience the fact that more than half these countries have an average income per head of less than $250 a year. Canada's is better than $2,500. He mentioned that our standard of living and the level of government service in Canada were among the highest in the world. It was shocking, he said, for Canadians to find themselves suddenly in economic difficulties, and I quote:

—because of efforts to increase our incomes and our use of government services at an even faster rate than can be justified by the great expansion of our real output.

This indicates to me that the root of our economic troubles lies squarely with excessive government spending that has outstripped the ability of Canadian production to sustain. When we add this irresponsible and apparently uncontrolled rate of government expenditure to government interference with industry's ability and will to produce, we can see that all the minister's belated, corrective measures do not strike at the root of the trouble. A speed-up in payment of corporation taxes and an increase of 5 per cent in the income tax of the small taxpayer are hardly likely to go far in offsetting wasteful government expenditure and the government's resort to instant money to bail it out of trouble.

According to the publication Canadian Business for June of last year, government spending in 1966 went up a whopping 16.5 per cent. It went up approximately another 15 per cent last year. According to the minister's own modest estimate, and in spite of the so-called economies in the forthcoming estimates, it will go up another 4.5 per cent next year. When we total these increases we have something like a 36 per cent increase in three years.

These figures do not include the cost connected with the implementation of the medicare scheme due to come into effect on July 1. Neither do they take into consideration other odd items such as the $80 million loan to Expo, which the minister now explains away as a mere bookkeeping entry that does not affect the economic picture. But the fact remains that someone has lent $80 million to someone. That is the way I keep my books, Mr. Speaker; that is the way I keep my records. Unless and until that loan is repaid someone is out of pocket to the tune of $80 million. I have been told that this $80 million loan now stands as an asset on the books of Canada. This can only be justified if there is some prospect of the loan being repaid. What will really happen of course, and the only thing that can happen, is that this loan will be written off. How $80 million in tax money can be made to disappear into thin air, even by such a slick sleight-of-hand operator as the Minister of Finance, I cannot see.

In his speech at Winnipeg Mr. Rasminsky drew attention to the tremendous economic growth of Canada that started in 1961. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that this was well before the period for which the Minister of Finance can claim any credit. In fact, it was the rosy prospect of the industrial picture of those days that lured the minister from a top position in the public service to the boardroom of one of Canada's industrial giants. Those were Conservative days, Mr. Speaker, the days of Conservative policies, the days of a Conservative government. According to the governor of the Bank of Canada those policies and those ministers produced a 40 per cent increase in our national output and "greatly strengthened the economic foundations of the country."

In the five year period from the spring of 1961 our real output increased at a rate of 6½ per cent. It was under the sway of the present Minister of Finance that this sweet taste of success started to turn sour. Our ship of state started to list a little bit, I do not know whether to starboard or port, from too much bilgewater. It is true that since the spring of 1966 this growth continued, but at a greatly reduced rate, 2 per cent to 2½ per cent "—well below our potential for growth," again to quote Mr. Rasminsky.

What was the worm in the core of our economic apple, eating away and draining off three-quarters of the benefit of growth? We now know it was inflation. Whence came this inflation and what gave it its greatest impetus? You have the word of practically every leading economist for that, Mr. Speaker. It was reckless, wasteful spending by the government. Not content with squandering public money at a spendthrift's pace the government imposed, by polite blackmail, upon the provinces schemes that forced them to spend at an equally high rate.

In reviewing the economy in his Winnipeg speech Mr. Rasminsky admitted that the most worrisome aspect of our present problems was the accelerating cost-price spiral—inflation, the bogeyman which this legislation hopes to kill. Mr. Rasminsky said that during the early, or Conservative, years of the expansion period costs and prices remained in satisfactory equilibrium. Since there has been a "marked deterioration." The rate of increase in the consumer price index has doubled in recent years from about 2 per cent to 4 per cent.

Why has the government, why has the Minister of Finance allowed things to get out of hand? It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that this is not a new condition. The warning light has been glowing for many months. Not only did the government and the minister ignore the warning light but they closed their eyes and pushed their feet down hard on the expenditure pedal.

Motorcycle racers talk about a speed wobble, an uncontrollable swaying of the machine when it reaches very high speeds. Many drivers claim the only way to correct it is not by braking but by opening the throttle to the full and accelerating out of the wobble. Others claim that this does not work and a pile-up is inevitable. The government's approach to expenditure of tax dollars falls into this latter class. It has tried to spend its way out of the economic wobble but instead of pulling out of the wobble it is teetering on the edge of the fence, and unless the minister and his colleagues can come up quickly with something better than a remedy culled from the old alamanac they are liable to pile us all up in economic ruin.

I believe that the minister and the government stand indicted before the Canadian public for mismanagement of the economy and for dereliction of duty. They have stubbornly refused to heed warnings of trouble. They have arrogantly persisted in their spendthrift ways. They have failed to honour their election pledges of economy of government, moderation in spending, and tax relief for the hardpressed Canadian taxpayer. In my belief the measures brought forward by the minister were neither fair nor adequate, timely enough or far-reaching enough. It is my firm conviction that instead of imposing fresh burdens on the already overburdened small taxpayers the minister should have concentrated his efforts on fighting inflation by persuading his colleagues to moderate their expenditure of public moneys.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), particularly his reference to the use of the income tax as a means to subsidize certain areas. He drew attention in particular to the effect of the three-year tax exemption which is provided for new mines through the Financial Administration Act. This came into effect as a concession to northern areas, as a means of spurring them to show some growth in the late 1930's when the mining industry was in a very bad situation. Since that time the three-year tax exemption has become one of the concessions prized by the mining industry. In their comments with regard to the Carter commission report the representatives of the mining industry have very vigorously defended these concessions. They pointed out that mining is a high risk activity and indicated the danger to the industry in Canada if these concessions were removed.

I hold no brief for the mining industry, but as a representative from northern Ontario it seems to me that it was very unpolitic for the hon. member for Timiskaming to make such a suggestion. The surprising thing is that a few months ago when the Area Development Incentives Act was up for review before the standing committee on industry, research and energy development, the hon. member for Timiskaming was very eloquent indeed in urging the extension of the benefits of that act to his area. I was also very interested in that matter. In the revaluations of the various regions, his area was included and mine was not because, unfortunately, my area seemed to be doing much better economically than his.

The point I should like to make is simply that the benefits received under the Area Development Incentives Act are almost identical in respect of new industry with the three-year tax exemption allowed to new mining developments under the Financial Administration Act. I thought it was an unusual position that the hon. member took in this regard.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) has pointed out, our objection to this legislation is that its impact falls much too heavily on the people who are least able to bear it. I believe there is need for a modification in respect of the deductions for certain groups of people. I shall not attempt to deal with all the groups of people who need deductions but I should like to mention two which I have mentioned before.

The minister always has been very courteous and has promised that consideration will be given to the matter. I should now like to see some evidence that consideration has been given. The people who repeatedly appeal to us are exceedingly tired of listening to the minister and then having full hearts and empty hands. In view of the fact that at least two members of the cabinet have been going around making statements which indicate that they do not believe that the present taxation system is suitable and have been advocating the need for a guaranteed income in order to protect people on low incomes, I think there should be some reason for reconsideration by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) of this taxation legislation.

I suggest there is one great and growing group of people across this country who are being penalized. I refer to those who have been left as a single parent in a family and are the sole means of support for their families. I know personally of at least three groups across Canada but there are many others. On the west coast we have the All Alone Parents organization. This group is composed of men or women who have been left on their own with the full responsibility for the support of their families. In another part of Canada we have Single Parents Associated and here in Ontario Parents Without Partners. The people in these groups are all men or women who have been left in the position of having to undertake the maintenance of a home on their own. I think we must come to grips with the question of whether the home is an important institution or whether we want to throw it in the ash can. Today we give lip service to the home on Mother's day. At other times we do not seem to care what happens to it. We seem to take it for granted that the home is some kind of air terminal from which planes take off one after the other and leave the place for anyone who comes along. This is the position we appear to take in respect of home life. The father goes out to work and in increasing numbers today the mother also goes out to work and the children are left far too much to their own devices. Then we wonder about the increase in delinquency and the people who fall into the ways of the hippies, drug addicts and so on. We wonder why these things happen and yet do very little to see that these homes are protected.

These single parents have a very difficult time getting along. At Christmas time I met with a group of these people on the west coast. They told me of their difficulties. One is that there is no provision by way of income tax exemption for payments to babysitters or housekeepers. This is the situation whether it happens to be a man or a woman who is involved. The national legal adviser of Parents Without Partners in Toronto said some time ago that an estimated 30,000 single parents in Toronto would be affected by income tax deductions for babysitters or housekeepers. This was a year or two ago, so now the number would be greater. He said that statistics indicated that in 1961 there were 2,800 deserted wives in Ontario receiving public assistance through welfare, with an average of four children per wife. He went on to say that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics shows there are five times that number in Ontario who are not receiving public support. Then he pointed out that single parents have to hire housekeepers and the income tax department does not allow this cost as an expense.

I should like to quote the following paragraph in order to give hon. members an idea of how the people across this country think. I believe it is our business in this House of Commons to state what our constituents and the people across this country believe is needed. This is what he said:

> If the minister will allow me $50 to take John Doe, a client, to dinner to get his business surely he should allow a wife who hires a babysitter because she has to work the same consideration.

He stated that he had spoken to one of the chief assessors in the income tax department who told him that he hoped such an allowance would never be permitted "because it would create too many problems". If we are to refuse this type of help to these parents because income tax officials cannot bear the burden of coping with the problem, then I think it might be time to change our civil servants or possibly bring in computers in their place, despite the story in the papers today about the computer which gave one housewife a terrific family allowance payment.

Nothing should stand in the way of these parents being given the relief they require. One woman with three children told me that she could get along with paying $25 a week for a babysitter but that it is more difficult for a father. Some men are now paying $60 to $100 a week just for a housekeeper. In many instances this is being done on wages which are much less than they should be. The only minister present at this moment who seems to hold a portfolio in any way connected with income tax is the minister responsible for housing. I urge the minister to see that another look is taken at this problem.

This brings me to another large group which is growing very rapidly. I refer to mothers who are working outside the home, particularly those with preschool children who are left at home under arrangements less than satisfactory because of the high cost of babysitters and housekeepers. For many years the annual reports of groups such as the Business and Professional Women's Club, and the National Council of Women have been urging that income taxes should be geared so as to permit married women who are gainfully employed in occupations outside the home to claim an exemption in respect of the cost of babysitters and housekeepers. This is becoming tremendously important.

The other day I heard a figure mentioned in respect of the number of married women with preschool children who are gainfully employed outside the home. I was so surprised I had to check it before believing it. At the present time 70 per cent of married women who are gainfully employed outside the home and who have children of preschool age have husbands who are earning less than $3,000 per year. Is it any wonder women go out to work?

It is a fact that professional women, often married to men with salaries in the high brackets, go out to work to fulfil their careers in the fields of their choice. Women in the low income group to which I have referred go out to work for only one reason. They go out to earn enough money to pay the grocery bill or to purchase some of the amenities necessary to today's standard of living. These women need relief far more than many businessmen who are allowed to make business deductions for income tax purposes. It is high time we faced up to the implications of women who have to go out to work and have to pay babysitters or housekeepers to look after their small children. The only way this relief can be provided is through an exemption under the Income Tax Act.

On more than one occasion I have suggested that married women with children should be allowed to make a choice whether they go out to work or stay at home to look after their families. Many of these women do not have that choice because there is not enough money coming into the house to support the family in even a modest way. My suggestion of providing allowances for full-time mothers has been looked upon as ridiculous, out on cloud cuckoo, and impossible from a financial point of view. I have suggested to the minister one other way it would be possible for these women to care for their children. That is by being allowed to deduct the expense of babysitters and housekeepers, incurred while they are out working to supplement the incomes of their husbands.

Apparently we in Canada cannot attempt to implement many programs until they have been proved workable in some other country. It may be interesting to hon. members to learn that for several years in the United States the internal revenue service has allowed working mothers a tax exemption of $600 a year to offset child care expenses. I hope very much that this exemption has been increased. The minister shakes his head. I hope that does not mean the exemption has been decreased. In any event $600 is a small amount to cover the cost of looking after children while the mother works.

We learned this afternoon of a reduction of some kind in the civil defence establishment. If we reduced civil defence costs a great deal more and used that money to cover child care expenses I think we would gain something worth while in respect of civil defence. I do not suggest we should not spend money on civil defence in regard to fires, disasters, floods and so on, but proper child care would pay greater dividends.

I wish I could get members of this house to realize, as they must in some part of their minds, how very bad our national housekeeping is when little children are left at home without supervision or with just the supervision of a neighbour who keeps an eye on them. One must remember all the things that can happen to those children while their parents are away.

It is my hope the minister will at least tell me why an exemption has not been allowed in respect of these expenses. I hope he will indicate that the department will look into this matter rather than give me a sweet word of encouragement by saying it will receive serious consideration. I have learned that serious consideration often means the minister thinks there is no immediate need to look into the problem. This is a serious matter because a great many of these people are becoming desperate. We have now reached a new stage of development with an increasing number of homemakers employed outside the home. Something will have to be done for the benefit of these young children who are being left at home without adequate supervision.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two simple arguments in favour of an increase in exemptions and I ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson), in the absence of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp), to pass these arguments along. I suppose the President of the Treasury Board is in attendance because the Minister of Finance is grooming that hon. gentleman for bigger things should a certain event happen in early April. I would be interested to hear the forecast of the President of the Treasury Board in that regard, and I will cheerfully yield the floor to him for that purpose.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, let me say that most members realize the Minister of Finance had to attend the federal-provincial conference this afternoon because matters pertaining to finance were raised. I am simply here as Acting Minister of Finance to take his place.

Mr. McCleave: I meant no reflection on the Minister of Finance. We all know he is a very busy gentleman. I had hoped the President of the Treasury Board would rise to the bait and give a forecast of what might happen. Again the minister shakes his head.

Let me return to my arguments in favour of increased exemptions. I refer first of all to those on fixed incomes who in their old age are not able to earn extra money. Most of them are spending their limited incomes on rent, clothing, food and medical expenses. Any increase in the cost of any of these commodities or services as a result of inflation means a cut-back for them. These people must find cheaper accommodation, wear their clothing longer or eat less. Usually such cutbacks occur in respect of food. I think an increase in exemptions for these people is justified and could be a useful tool in the fight against the evils of inflation. I am personally aware of a number of people in my own area who have been forced to sell their homes in order to carry on through the home-stretch of their lives. This is a pernicious situation.

The other argument I wish the President of the Treasury Board to pass on to the Minister of Finance is based on the fact that the exemptions now in existence do not bear a reasonable relationship to the war on poverty now supposedly being carried out by various departments of government, particularly those associated with welfare. It seems to me that the exemptions which are granted do not bear a fair relationship to these poverty levels. Surely this is a good reason for increasing exemptions.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, this is really too good an opportunity to pass up to return some of the compliments we have had from time to time from members on the other side of the house and to discuss the factors which made necessary the action taken by the government last fall in bringing forward these income tax amendments. The action of the government in this respect speaks more eloquently than we or anybody else in this country can of the failure of those charged with responsibility to discharge it in a responsible manner.

To realize this one has only to read the editorials that have appeared for several months now in the leading newspapers across Canada. When one reads these editorials one realizes that confidence in the government has been severely shaken. When we consider the extent to which the government chose to act in the tax proposals it brought forward last fall, we cannot help but realize that all the government has tried to do is create the image that it is coming to grips with the important problems which face Canadians at the present time. But the fact is, sir, that Canadians from one end of Canada to the other realize that all this government has tried to do is create a façade that it is doing something to solve these problems, at the same time hoping that something will happen to correct them.

I am particularly interested in this matter because my mind goes back to 1963 when the present government came into office. I have here a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen of April 18, 1963. The headline reads "Pearson Set For Fastest Take-off in History" and the article reads in part:

> Lester Pearson and his ministers will come to power equipped with sheaves of policy papers, priority lists and agendas which they expect will enable the quickest take-off of any new government in Canadian history.
> One Liberal backroom boy, flipping through a neatly bound and confidential Pearson program guide, commented, "no party ever came into office as well prepared to draft legislation and take executive action."

We are a long, long way from those days of 1963. This government should be condemned, not because of the things they have left undone but because of those things which they did deliberately and which they said would have a beneficial effect on our economy. They said that the policies they were implementing would correct some of the inequities that existed in years gone by.

I have here a clipping from the Ottawa Citizen of June 26, 1963. Hon. members will recall that that was the time the government was bringing forward tax proposals in respect of building projects, and so on. The headline of this article reads "New Tax Cancels Building Projects." The article, written by W. M. Arnott and Norman Campbell, reads in part as follows:

> Canada faces at least $100 million loss in construction and thousands of unemployed workers as a result of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, says the Canadian Construction Association.

The point I want to get across to you, sir, and to the government is that they were warned about what would happen as a result of the deliberate policies upon which they embarked. They failed to heed those warnings. They laughed in the face of warnings given by members of the opposition and industry across this country. As a result we have reached the point where the people of Canada have little confidence in parliament and even less in the government. This situation has arisen because of rising taxes, the rising cost of living, dwindling housing and all the other things that have created problems and great difficulties for our people.

Another factor that enters into this situation, quite apart from the tax on building supplies and construction materials, is described in the Financial Post of July 16, 1966. The headline reads: "Sharp's Grand Design For Banking System." The government deliberately took the ceiling off the bank interest rate, which has resulted in the highest interest rates in this country for many years. The interest rate under the National Housing Act has risen to 8½ per cent or 8¾ per cent, I believe, at the present time. The government was warned about this action. When speaking in the House of Commons in February, 1967, I had this to say, as reported in the Star-Phoenix of February 9:

> In a brief reference to housing in Canada, the Rosthern member suggested the removal of the sales tax on building materials "to restore to those who wish to purchase houses, some equity in their purchases."
> Imposition of the sales tax on building materials "has almost destroyed the hope of the young people in this country to own homes and build futures for themselves in the years when they will be raising their families," he said.

I went on to say at that time that the only thing that had given the government some semblance of stability was the tremendous grain sales that had been made. We have seen tremendous increases in interest rates. The Minister of Finance is in the house at the present time and he cannot help knowing that housing is beyond the means of the smaller wage earner of this country. Housing has been priced beyond the incomes of our smaller wage earners; they just cannot buy a house even if they wish to do so. This is one of the reasons we are faced with this problem.

Then we come to April 1, 1967. The government started a new fiscal year with a deficit. That has been the story all the way through. On April 7, 1967, the government considered setting up a housing ministry. It is only in recent days that they have given a minister sole responsibility for housing, despite the fact that they were warned by members of the House of Commons and leaders of the construction industry that we should have more than a part-time minister of housing. This goes back to April, May and June of last year. I have the clippings here to substantiate what I am saying, if it needs to be substantiated.

The most serious mistake the minister and the government made was in thinking that by eliminating the ceiling on interest rates the banks of this country would come into the housing field and provide the money which Canadians need in order to build homes. The fact is that this has not happened. It cannot happen and will not happen because there is built into our economy another cost factor which we cannot escape. No one in this country, be it an individual citizen, business or large corporation, can escape the additional cost factor present today. These two things working in concert are bringing about tremendous increases in the cost of everything produced in this country. It is making us less productive than we have been in years gone by. It is robbing the individual wage earner of the value of his purchasing dollar.

We are now told that this problem will be solved by increasing income tax and other taxes. We can come to only one of two conclusions, that the minister and the government do not know what the effect of their actions will be or they do not care. This is a very sad situation indeed for the average Canadian citizen.

The other factor that has entered into this situation is the lagging grain sales during the past year. We recall that when the government first came to office and the Minister of Finance was charged with responsibility for the Canadian Wheat Board he washed his hands of all responsibility with respect to the final sales of grain. He went across this country and then told the world that the Canadian Wheat Board would be the sole marketing agency for grain. The fact is that as a result of all that has happened we have lost markets and the loss of sales has had a detrimental effect on our economy. This is one of the reasons the government has had to come to parliament cap in hand or try to get more tax money. They have done so time after time, budget after budget. There have been more budgets in the course of a year than any government has ever presented before, all of them designed for one purpose, to reach for another dollar which was then misspent.

These are some of the things we have to take into consideration when we study the income tax amendments now before the house. These are the things we must remember when we see such newspaper headlines as one which appeared in bold letters on January 18, 1968, reading, "Living Costs Still Rising". Another such headline appeared in the Toronto Star of December 19, 1967, which read "Civil Service Payrolls Could Bankrupt Canada, Economic Expert Warns". Then we see in the headlines in today's newspaper that there is to be another increase for the public service. I do not object to the increase but I object to the type of mentality evidenced by a government which is building empire after empire in its various departments and hires 20,000 or more public servants in a short period of time at a time when this nation is under stress and trained labour is short. All of these factors have combined to bring about a colossal failure on the part of parliament and the Canadian government to meet the problems of the future. There is no one in the house who does not realize the tremendous problems which will face governments in the years ahead in trying to turn back the pages of history written by this government and to bring about sane and stable government.

In looking at the measure now before us I am convinced it will not solve the problems I have mentioned, and I believe the minister himself knows this. All that the government has tried to do is to create a façade to try to convince Canadians, and Canadian business in particular, that there is reason for placing confidence in the government even though it has disregarded the criticism and advice offered to it by business and by members of the opposition. The fact is that sitting opposite us is a government which, in the opinion of some of its own members, has not consulted them in caucus before taking decisions. Surely some of the government members have realized the tremendous problems which have faced us and the effects which the sales tax and the removal of the ceiling on interest rates have had on the economy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that we are now dealing with a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. Perhaps he might give this some thought in the course of his speech.

Mr. Nasserden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, but I assure you that this piece of legislation would not have been necessary had it not been for the mistakes which the government has made in the last three years and about which they were warned. This is why we in the opposition wish to call their attention once again to the need to take more resolute action than they have in the measure now before us.

I should like to be able to pay some compliments to the government on the action it has taken but, frankly, when I look at what is happening in this country and when I realize that it all seems to be part of a pattern deliberately set by the government, it does not seem possible.

We can see that this situation has been going on for years by going back to 1963 when broad party policies were being spelled out in programs. Let us also take a look at the rapid changes which have taken place in this country. It is no wonder the government cannot solve the problems of today; they are still trying to solve these problems with solutions which they thought they had 5, 10 or 15 years ago. This is not good enough in a country developing as rapidly as ours is today, both in industry and private life, and when there is a great change from a rural to an urban economy.

The government is now coming forward and asking for an increase in the income tax. There is nothing in their program to help the municipalities which are faced with the greatest tax increase in the entire history of this country. Let us also consider another factor, the rising cost of living which continues to increase despite the appointment of a minister of the crown in charge of consumer and corporate affairs. When I asked the minister whether his department was going to study the effects of the rising interest rates he denied that his department was charged with that responsibility. If that is so, then why was the department set up if not to take into consideration one of the most important factors in the economic life of our country?

Let us face the fact that the effect of the government's actions has been to reduce the productivity of our nation and of our workers at a time when our products face great competition in world markets. What hope is there for the Canadian people when we have a government such as the present one? This is one of the reasons why we on this side of the house cannot help but condemn the government for the actions they have taken and, what is more important, for what they have not done in the face of these problems. It cannot be said that the government lacked advice. They have hired everyone in Canada they could to help them set up these little empires.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), Administration of Justice—Steven Truscott—consideration of granting of parole; the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Keays), Manpower—inquiry as to training program; the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), Housing—Vancouver—construction of home for senior citizens.

It being six o'clock the sitting is suspended until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for the second reading of Bill No. C-193, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, before the dinner hour I was dealing with some of the phenomena that have taken place during the last three years that finally brought about the chaotic financial position in which the government finds itself today. During the past two years in particular there has been an increasingly severe trend toward increased taxation.

We have before us at the present time a bill introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to increase income taxes. This has become necessary because of the problems now facing the nation, such as inflation, the rising cost of living, receding productivity and the increasing burden of government itself.

This takes me back to the days before this government came into office, when parliament and the Canadian people were being told how to restore Canada's position in the world and our economy at home. According to a report before me from the Ottawa Citizen of April 20, 1963 the Liberals set out seven ways to restore Canada's position in the world. The first of these was to demonstrate that Canada has a strong government at home. In view of what has happened during the last two or three years in particular, and the groping that we have seen from the finance portfolio of this government, it is interesting to reflect on this headline and to wonder as to the substance for this sort of report. I suggest that one of the reasons this measure is before us tonight is that once again the government is seeking additional money to replace money it has misspent, frittered away. It is in this position not only because of the things it did but because of the things it did not do.

The headline in the Ottawa Journal for February 12, 1963 reads "Grits want more government projects", which according to the Journal are to be at no cost to taxpayers. The article goes on to say that—> —the national council of the Liberal federation came out straight for more government sponsored projects to ease unemployment, more aid to municipalities, loans, an enlarged Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—

Today we have the highest interest rate in the entire history of this country.

—continuing family allowances to children through high school, and a comprehensive health insurance plan where the federal government would take on half the cost of Canada's medical care.

This is the point I want to impress upon hon. members tonight:

They said none of it would cost the taxpayers more. But it will mean increased government borrowing, a Liberal spokesman admitted later.

In view of this, Mr. Speaker, why is this measure before us this evening? It is my belief that this taxation measure is before parliament at the present time because the government cannot borrow money today in Canada, even in the world, in order to meet the problems they face. In 1963 the Liberals were talking about getting the economy rolling, yet today they admit it began rolling in 1961.

Quoting again from the article, one Liberal delegate from Toronto——criticized his own party's policy by saying that nearly all the measures proposed suggested easy money and a "steady outward flow from the federal treasury" over an indefinite period, with no indication of where the money would come from.

Truer words, Mr. Speaker, were never spoken. We know tonight where the money is coming from; it is coming from the taxpayers of Canada. In the early days of the administration opposite hon. members will recall that the opposition was charged with obstruction. Reports in the newspapers indicate a different story. I have before me the Winnipeg Tribune for June 19, 1963, which carried an article which said, in part:

But the Liberals were in a poor position to raise the familiar Tory cry of obstruction. The pace of the house was no slower—and in some cases faster —than when they sat in opposition to a Conservative minority government.

The Winnipeg Tribune carried another article in its issue for October 31, 1963, a time prior to the Minister of Finance having any ambitions about becoming prime minister of this country. In those days he was minister of trade and commerce. Speaking at Winnipeg, I think it was, he is reported by the Winnipeg Tribune as admitting that at times his government's performance "had not been too impressive". The article says:

There had been false starts. But the Liberals had the right approach to major national issues.

The minister admitted there had been false starts, but I suggest those false starts laid the foundation for the current problems that face the nation.

I should like to recall to the house what the Glassco commission—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I took the liberty earlier today of bringing to the attention of the hon. member the fact that there is a bill before the house to amend the Income Tax Act. It seems to me that the hon. member has been departing rather far from the principle of the bill before us, but I hope that at some time before he concludes his speech he will make a contribution that is relevant to the bill.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what could be more apropos of what is under consideration at the present time than to try to bring to light the reasons we are faced with this particular measure at this time. In doing so I should like to go back to the recommendations made by the Glassco commission to the parliament of Canada. I have before me a headline in the Toronto Globe and Mail for October 29, 1963 which says "$300 million saving feasible in civil service, Glassco says".

Now, Mr. Speaker, what has been happening in the civil service under the administration of this government? Costs have gone up. Not only that, but the government itself admitted during the debate on the mini-budget and the budget that preceded it that it had a real problem on its hands. It has also been suggested that the action taken to date has in no way measured up to the seriousness of this particular problem.

Let us consider housing. After all, by raising income taxes we raise the cost of living for our people, and that will have an effect on our housing. I well recall what was said by the leader of the Liberal party in the Senate before this government came to office in 1961.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Apparently my suggestions do not seem to influence the hon. member very much. Nevertheless I suggest to him that housing, so far as I can see, has little relation to the bill before the house.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree with Your Honour. Yet when income taxes for those who are seeking houses are raised deliberately, their ability to pay for those houses is affected. Increased taxes mean an increased cost of living for our people, and I think that the provisions of this bill ought to be drawn to the attention of the house.

We are sent to parliament to try to obtain a better life for our people. We are sent here to enable our people to utilize all the resources of this country. I realize, as does every other member of the House of Commons, that government must tax in order to provide services that are necessary for our people. Nevertheless it is generally understood throughout the length and breadth of this country that certain matters can be dispensed with, that certain items add to the cost of government and raise the cost of living of our citizens.

Before the dinner adjournment I spoke of two factors that had contributed most to our present labour unrest. And, Mr. Speaker, we have labour unrest in this country because of what this government has done. The increases in income tax the government is proposing to levy will have the effect of making labour seek higher wages. This will mean an increasingly rapid upward spiral in our cost of living, and that is why I question the government's wisdom in bringing forward this measure—because it steals something from the man who carries a dinner pail. This measure will force prices up to the extent that many commodities will be out of reach of the ordinary citizens of this country.

Realizing all this, members of the opposition of the House of Commons have lost confidence in the government, as have the businessmen of this country.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nasserden: The few measures the government has put forward do not come to grips with the problems that face this nation. I think that raising income taxes for our citizens is wrong; that will not achieve the purpose the government intended to achieve. This measure will have serious consequences for the future of our nation and instead of helping to solve our problems will accentuate them and make their solution more difficult. That is the bleak prospect that faces us today. No matter which government is in office, whether it be this government or some other, the problems of our nation must be faced and solved, and they will not be solved by measures such as this.

Just take a look at the decisions made by this government and at the results of those decisions. Today we have the highest cost of living in Canada's history; today the government is proposing income tax increases; today the government, through its actions, is whittling away the supply of money that is necessary to provide the houses and other essential commodities of this country. When the Minister of Finance says that by removing the interest rate ceiling there will be a bountiful supply of money for housing I just ask him, whether any banker in his right mind would tie up his bank's money in housing for 30 years when the bank can go after more lucrative business? I submit that this government measure is wrong because it is based on a false economic premise.

Look at the mounting costs of government in this country, Mr. Speaker, and at the little empires within the government that are being built up. Nevertheless we were told in this house not long ago that the government would effect savings in government spending. The government said it would not spend as much money as it had intended spending. All I can say is that the government has proposed too little too late. It has not even begun to touch the problems that face our nation. I regret to say this, but what the government is doing will be bad for Canada; and I do not think many of our people would quarrel with what I say. I hope the government once in a while will listen to members of the opposition and to its own backbenchers. Had they listened to the opposition more during the past two years this country might not face the difficulties it faces at present and Canadians might not have to pay the additional taxes the federal government is seeking to levy.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up too much of the time of the house. However, like my friend from Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), I cannot miss this opportunity to remind the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) how unpopular is his present proposal in the eyes of the average retired citizens who live on a fixed income.

Factory workers were certainly expecting something other than the present tax increase proposed by the Minister of Finance. On the contrary, being practical, they were expecting the government to announce, through the Minister of Finance, a decrease in its extravagant expenditures and restraint also in the employment of civil servants whose numbers seem to be increasing at an alarming rate every month.

But, instead of that, the hon. minister announces a tax increase. Moreover, he tells us that he will have to impose another tax in a few months.

It is very difficult for the father of a family to make ends meet at the end of the year because, on one hand, the average worker must face an ever-increasing cost of living, the highest cost of living in all the history of our country and, on the other hand, he also must cope with an income tax increase, with the comforting thought that perhaps, in a few months, he will have to pay out more as a result of greater deductions which will be made on his pay check every week.

As my hon. friend from Rosthern mentioned, the hon. minister should pay attention instead to the warnings given by this side of the house and by his Liberal colleagues who surely, in private of course, warned him that he could not continue, as he has done to date, to add to the difficulties of the middle-class worker. The young man who plans to build his own home is faced with innumerable difficulties. Yesterday, I saw in a newspaper that, in the province of Quebec alone, building costs have gone up by 28 per cent. That is due to the continuous increase of income taxes and also of taxes on building materials.

• (8:20 p.m.)

On various occasions, we have attempted to convince the hon. minister that, instead of raising taxes, he should rather endeavour to reduce them, but he has remained deaf to our appeals. It is somewhat as if we were pouring water on the back of a duck.

I referred earlier to what is in store for our retired people who have to provide for themselves with an income which has not changed for several years. Those citizens have now reached the age where they cannot find work to increase their income. From one week to the next, from one month to the next, they find it increasingly difficult to satisfy their needs.

In that respect, I have here a letter signed by Mr. Hubert Lecours, president of the national association of retired federal civil servants, Quebec section, which reads as follows:

Sir,

At a recent meeting, I was asked to tell you how we feel about the freezing of pensions to retired civil servants.

We protest vigorously against that decision taken by the government which is not only unfair but revolting and unacceptable in the present economic and economic conditions.

We would appreciate it very much if you would second the efforts of the Prime Minister who has promised a review of that shameful and undignified decision in the very near future.

Counting on your support, I remain, yours sincerely.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Before concluding, I would like to intercede on behalf of pensioners and superannuated civil servants whose revenue has not changed for many years. I would ask the Minister of Finance to see to it that these retired people, these deserving employees, who devoted the best part of their life to the welfare of their fellow-citizens, enjoy a pension enabling them to meet their present obligations. The minister should show more concern for superannuated civil servants who can hardly make both ends meet to-day. In doing this he would please not only those citizens, but also some members on both sides of the house.

Therefore, I ask the hon. minister to take steps to put an end to these continual tax increases and, on the other hand, to give a little more attention to retired civil servants.

[English]

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): I listened with interest to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) and I am surprised he would criticize this bill to such an extent without criticizing it for the reasons for which it deserves criticism.

I notice he made profuse reference to editorials from various newspapers, the Toronto Star in particular, and I suppose it is because he used these newspapers as his advisors that he criticized this bill for the wrong reasons. I too take advantage of these editorials but I use them in the opposite way; whenever I am in doubt about a certain issue I read the editorials, and I find that if I do exactly the opposite to what they advise I come out right pretty well 100 per cent of the time.

I agree there is lack of confidence in the government. There is a conference in progress now, designed to renew the confidence of the Canadian people in the Liberal party and in this parliament. I am surprised the government cannot instil this confidence. After all, they have been in the confidence racket all their lives and have been quite successful at it.

There is a saying in my riding of Sudbury that only poor people can enjoy poverty. This is true; and this bill is designed to ensure that these people shall have more enjoyment than they have ever had in their lives. I think it is the most dastardly piece of legislation I have seen in my short stay of six months in this house. The minister proposes to tax those who have least ability to pay. In one clause the tax is cut off at the $600 limit. I am not a mathematician but I think a man would arrive at this position when he is earning $28,000 a year. After that, there is no tax on the amount of money above the $28,000. These are precisely the people who need exemptions! People earning more than $28,000 certainly need more privileges than they already possess!

This bill might have been written by the Canadian Manufacturers Association or by the chamber of commerce or even right here in the Rideau club. These are the people who would propose such legislation as this, in order to keep the workers in economic slavery. This is what the bill before us is designed to do—to deprive those already on a low rate of income of more and more of that income so that they will become economic slaves.

Dedication to hard work is perpetuated by various organizations. I think the minister must be reading the wrong books when he seeks to co-operate with these people and falls for the propaganda and drivel they have spouted over the last hundred years. In 1951 the chamber of commerce was urging us to work harder to produce more because our survival might depend upon how fast we could keep the wheels of industry turning in Canada. But for whose benefit did these people want the wheels of industry to turn faster? The minister goes along, making sure that the worker gets the work and that the money men get the money. This is what they call a 50-50 split.

We hear a good deal, also, about the nobility of work. Well, most of it, as I happen to know from 31 years in mining and smelting, is not noble. The only reason people work in mills and smelters is because they are forced to do so in order to feed their families. I heard a little story about this ennoblement of work. A very popular man in the United States, Bobby Kennedy, was campaigning in front of one of the filthy steel mills, shaking hands with the men coming out of the mill. One grizzled old veteran on his way out said, "I hear, sonny, you never worked a day in your life." "Yes, sir," said Bobby, "I never spent a day in my life in a place like this," and the veteran said, "Well, you haven't missed a God damned thing." That is what is going on in the mills and smelters on this continent, Mr. Speaker: You haven't missed a thing.

Recently a study was made of the taxation system in Canada. Mr. Carter, I believe a very wise and noble person, presented a report wherein he said that the tax system in Canada is one of the most unfair systems ever devised, and that 5 per cent of the people receive privileges at the expense of the other 95 per cent. I have a good idea who these 5 per cent of the privileged people are.

We talk about people's capitalism, and we are supposed to be receiving some of the benefits of that capitalism. But you and I, Mr. Speaker, know that only 10 per cent of the people own shares in corporations. If you deduct the people like myself who own one share, and people who own two shares like my friends, you will find that 2 per cent of the people control 98 per cent of the corporations, yet all our legislation seems designed to protect these 2 per cent who have us by the throat.

That is probably the reason why we do not have a capital gains tax in Canada. The only nation in the western world without a capital gains tax is this great country of ours. This generates people like Viola MacMillan and Mr. Justice Landreville who make great gobs of money, and it is all tax free. There is no justification for that type of exemption. It is not necessary.

There is another type of person who reaps benefit from our income tax legislation, and the minister could have done a favour to Canada if he had plugged this particular loophole. In this regard I speak of stock options given to members of boards of directors. It is a well known fact that people on the boards of various companies do not get an annual raise in pay because, as salary, it would be taxable. Instead, a means has been devised whereby they get a raise every year without having to pay their proper tax on it. It is known as a stock option.

These people are given an option to purchase stock at a fixed and given price any time they wish during the year. When they see the stock rise they can exercise their option. If they have an option on 10,000 shares and the market is up $5 a share they can go through a paper transaction, buy the stock at their option price, sell it at the board price and make $50,000 with ten minutes work. This is tax free because it is known as a capital gain. Such a device places a greater burden on people who make their living through wages alone, and these people comprise the vast majority of the population.

This bill rubs a little salt into the wound by charging the working man a 5 per cent increase on his payable taxes. Does anybody doubt where this increase, collected from the lower income worker, is going? It is going back to the corporations to repay them that refundable portion of tax taken off them two years ago. Further, it is going to pay them that back at 5 per cent interest. The money to be taken out of the workingman's pocket is to be given to the corporations in repayment for that refundable tax.

Never in my experience has a government come to me and said, "Will you lend me some money for two years and I will pay it back to you at 5 per cent interest." But this is precisely what the government is doing in this bill. The government has to refund the corporation tax, and to do so it is getting the money from the workingman.

For many years the resource industry has had a privileged position in our tax structure. Depletion allowances are provided for the oil and mining industry. If these allowances had been eliminated the federal treasury could have picked up an extra $150 million in the past year, money which could have paid the corporation refundable tax without necessitating this 5 per cent income surtax on wage earners.

There is another vicious exemption in our tax structure, namely the three year tax exemption given to new mines. I know of this exemption quite well, coming from the mining community of Sudbury where we have debated it long and hard over the past 15 or 20 years. We have come to the conclusion that this is a direct steal on the part of the mining companies. Those companies must have exercised a direct influence on this and previous governments. The law providing that exemption was passed 40 years ago, when mining was a dangerous, speculative game. Since there was such a high risk involved it was necessary to encourage mining companies; but things have changed in the last 40 years. People do not sink mining shafts in the ground any more unless they know in advance what tonnage of ore lies underneath, what its percentage of metal is, and what return they will get on their investment. But even though advances in technical knowledge have eliminated the high risk involved, the legislation has not been changed for 40 years. There is no justification for mining companies to enjoy this three year tax exemption at present. Today when companies undertake to develop an ore body they plan its development very carefully so that by the end of the three year period the ore is raped just about clean. When the time comes for them to pay taxes there is no ore left in the ground. Then they move on to another ore body and repeat the process.

Insurance and finance companies are also enjoying a privileged status under our tax system. Despite revenues of $90 million, after paying dividends, policy fees and everything else, these companies pay tax on only $5 million of that, and last year our federal treasury collected only $2 million. If these companies lost their privileged position our treasury could have picked up $77 million, which would have gone a long way to offset the deficit financing that seems to be the rule at present.

There is another problem staring us in the face; that is the problem of supplying housing for our people. Part of the blame for the high cost of housing has been placed on the high cost of land. The reason for the high cost of land is that there are people who, with design, grab large tracts of land in areas where they know development will take place. After someone has paid the cost of installing sewers, services and roads all around this land in an area of 10, 20 or 100 acres the land value rises and the speculators come in and sell this land sometimes at a hundred fold profit over what they had paid for it. The people who need a bit of land in that particular community have no choice but to pay the price the speculator demands. The speculators of course do not have to pay income tax because this is called a capital gain.

If these transactions were not considered capital gains, more revenue would be collected for the treasury and land would be cheaper for the people who need to buy it in order to build a house. Without the capital gains provision, there would not be very much incentive for people like E. P. Taylor, who grabbed all of the township land near Malton airport, to go out and make this kind of a deal. In this case a person would not have to pay $10,000 or $12,000 for a 50 foot by 100 foot piece of land on which to build a home. It is a crying shame that land speculators are able to do this, without making a one penny contribution to the federal treasury. It is a complete and utter steal; it is banditry.

The corporations have done well for themselves through their control and direction of the old line parties. They have always held a privileged position in respect of travel and entertainment. Many people in the upper echelons in this country are living on their expense accounts. This expense account living includes T-bone steaks, trips to Miami and California, or trips to Hawaii. So long as they make a phone call when they get there they can call it a business trip and it is tax free; it is charged out to the corporation. I am sure we all know of instances where people have taken their families along on such trips, where golf club dues are charged as a business expense, or where Christmas parties complete with T-bone steaks and booze are held in the board rooms. This is a direct charge on the people, who have to pay their full share of income tax because no provision is made for them.

There is no place on the income tax form for the average ordinary man where he can make any claim for entertainment expenses. When he entertains, he does so with the dollar on which he has already paid tax; But the privileged few do not have to do this. People who make money on the stock market are also exempt from taxation. There is no reason to my mind why a buck is not called a buck every time you see it. But we have the speculative dollar, the capital gains dollar and the earned dollar. The earned dollar takes the beating. There is the long dollar and the short dollar. They both look the same to me, except that I know one of them has a tax levied on it and the other has not.

Mr. Carter recommended redistribution of the entire tax burden. If this had been done the federal treasury could have counted on $523 million more in taxation in the past year. If there is a shortage of funds, I see no reason why those people who have the ability to pay are not charged this extra amount. Out of the $523 million, $270 million would have come from foreign corporations. This would have gone a long way toward buying back Canada.

The Prime Minister in his great pronouncement said that his goal in life is to try to buy Canada back, or gain control of our economy. What better way could this be done than by taxing these corporations $270 million more than they are paying now. The poor fellow who must pay a tax on all his earned income has very few exemptions. He can deduct his union dues of $60 a year, and $100 for general expenses if he happens to have a hospital bill, and so on. Other than that, however, he has no way in which he may deduct from his wages those items which he must purchase in order to earn his living. We know that every man in business or the professions who buys rubber bands, pen nibs, pencils and other articles deducts all these items because they have been purchased in order to help him carry on his business. No matter how small the item, it finds its way on to the income tax form as a tax deduction.

Let us compare this situation with the situation of the man who must labour for wages, particularly in the industry in which I was employed. He cannot deduct any item, even though it is necessary in his employment. He must provide himself with a hard hat which costs $11. He must provide himself with safety boots which cost $14. He must have gloves with an iron protector on the back. He must have spats on. He must have overalls and rainwear. This man must provide himself with all sorts of safety equipment, plus his tool bag. When he is dressed up he has probably spent $500 in order to be prepared to do his first day's work. He cannot deduct any of that $500 from his income tax. I say it is a disgrace that this situation should exist. These people who must buy these things as a condition of employment should be allowed to deduct such items as an expense in respect of their income tax.

This reminds me of an occasion when a group of people with whom I was employed were working in 40 below zero weather. They were up on a hill installing a transformer. The superintendent asked them how they could stay out in this weather, and one of them replied "There is nothing to it, if you spend $400 on clothes and bullet-proof underwear". There is no deduction for that. I hope that the next time the minister brings in an amendment to the Income Tax Act he will show some compassion for the people who have created the wealth which permits these other people to float around in the enjoyment of an expense account living.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I take the liberty, in thirty seconds, of drawing the attention of the house to the presence of the mayor of Arvida, one of the most beautiful cities in Canada, located in the constituency of Lapointe, also one of the finest in the country. All those who had the opportunity to visit Arvida know that it is one of the most beautiful in the country. It is a fine example of modern town-planning at its best, where everything is exceedingly clean. The city of Arvida also boasts a fine industry, the Aluminum Company of Canada. May I therefore be allowed to welcome the mayors of Arvida, of Chicoutimi, and of other municipalities of the Saguenay-Lake St. John area, in short, of several points in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grégoire: Now, Mr. Speaker, after greeting these gentlemen I must deal with the bill before the house wherein are announced increases in taxes and income tax, by the following introductory words:

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

Income tax and taxes are therefore increased. The Queen, on the advice of her ministers, decides to increase taxes.

Mr. Speaker, that is probably why the Liberals have said: Let us get rid of the monarchy, since the Queen is the one who enacts increases in income tax and other taxes. That is the case, and I should like to protest against those increases.

In his speech on November 30 last, the hon. Minister of Finance said, while announcing the tax increase: We need additional revenue and to this end we must find other sources of revenue. The country is developing. Productivity must increase. Public works must expand in order to alleviate unemployment. Additional sources of revenue are then needed.

As reported at page 4908 of Hansard for November 30, 1967, the Minister of Finance decreed an income tax increase which is already in force although it has yet to be passed. That might be the reason why Her Majesty decrees and when she does we start paying on the very same day, even if that decree is passed two or three months later by parliament. It is as if parliament had nothing to say in the matter. Her Majesty has decreed; that is the end of it and we start paying right away. Parliament will vote when it wants to, it does not matter; taxes are collected as soon as Her Majesty has so decreed.

In any event the Minister of Finance said on November 30 and I quote:

My officials estimate that this surtax will increase our revenues in the fiscal year 1968-69 by $185 million; the effect on the current year will be to increase our revenues by approximately $25 million.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance says that he needs $25 million, and he levies a surtax. If he needs that sum, very well, but I submit that he should take it elsewhere than in the pockets of Canadian citizens who are already overtaxed and whose income tax is already very high. Let us find another source of income. I found one, and I make a suggestion to that effect to the minister, because—

Mr. Langlois (Chicoutimi): Selling pencils?

Mr. Grégoire: No. Mr. Speaker, I will leave this kind of joking to the hon. member for Chicoutimi, and I will continue to be serious.

Mr. Speaker, can we imagine that the Minister of Finance who needs $25 million should overtax the Canadian public to get it. I found in the estimates of the minister another source of revenue which would enable him to save $26 million, which is a little more than the amount he needs.

In fact, on page 318 of the estimates of National Defence for the current year, I note that the Minister of Finance has decided to purchase bombs for an amount of $26 million, that is $1 million more than the $25 million which he wants to collect from the Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that Canada does not need bombs at the present time, especially since last year the government had bought some for $21 million. Now the bombs bought last year have never been used. I do not remember that they were dropped on somebody, that we have declared the war on the United States or on Europe to drop $21 million worth of bombs or that, without being aware of it, we are involved in the Viet Nam war.

So, last year, we bought $21 million worth of bombs. We still have them. Very well, let us keep them. There is no need to buy another $26 million worth this year. Let us stop buying bombs and we shall have the $25 million the minister needs to balance his budget, since he says himself, in Hansard of November 30, 1967, that this surtax will bring in $25 million for the current year.

Mr. Speaker, I say again to the Minister of Finance, if he needs $25 million, the solution does not lie in taking that amount from the pockets of Canadian taxpayers, who are already overtaxed, but in practising economy where this can be done, and I suggest that the place where savings can be made is when buying bombs, since a sum of $26 million is allocated to that. There may be other areas where savings can also be realized. I know that, during the present fiscal year, the Department of National Defence will spend $21 million for telephone calls. Let them stop making long-distance calls. After all, we are not at war and we can save money in this way.

Moreover, we could try to make our money work for peace. Unemployment is rising, Mr. Speaker. In the city of Montreal itself, a week ago, there were approximately 65,000 unemployed, a continual increase over the number of unemployed last year. Meanwhile, millions of dollars earned through hard work and effort by the Canadian taxpayers and taken away from them are being spent on telephone calls or on bombs. Since this goes on from year to year, we must have accumulated quite a few bombs since the last world war, for you can buy quite a lot for $26 million.

We are also buying tanks and armoured cars; we spent $15 million on them. This year, the amount of $61 million has been appropriated for the purchase of warships and $95 million for the purchase of aircraft. Mr. Speaker, I submit such purchases are not urgent. What is urgent is to leave to Canadians the little money they have managed to earn with their salaries. I wonder what we could do to have the Minister of Finance understand that his responsibilities not only involve taxation but the setting up of an economic system which will help the Canadian people as a whole instead of being a nuisance.

Since the new Minister of Finance has been in office, many new taxes have been levied. These are putting a heavy burden on the Canadian taxpayers, but the minister does not call a halt, he is still increasing taxes. He has become "the hon. federal Minister of Taxes".

Every year, even twice a year, for two or three years now, he has been introducing two budgets a year and raising taxes. Mr. Speaker, I should like to protest against that increase. Personally, I shall vote against it. I object to it because the collection of those taxes started even before the legislation was passed by parliament and I say to myself: If hon. members are conscientious and honest, they will vote against it and the bill will not be passed. Each member represents some electors, citizens who are tired of paying taxes. He must therefore vote against that unjustified tax increase whatever his political allegiance.

The minister tells us that this surcharge will bring in $25 million which is $1 million less than the cost of the bombs which we are going to buy in the same year. Why not stop buying bombs? That is what each and every member should understand. The interest of the voters demands that we stop buying bombs instead of increasing taxes by 5 per cent. It is always 1 per cent, 3 per cent, 5 per cent; taxes always go up and we do not know where this will stop.

Therefore, I strongly urge the members of all parties to vote against this bill so that this income tax increase will not come into force and Canadian citizens can breathe a bit more freely.

[English]

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has had a very busy day and I expect he will have another busy day tomorrow, so we should not be too hard on him tonight. We must remind him, however, that Liberal fiscal policies are not working too well. This was emphasized by his cabinet colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters), but I will not repeat his remarks. We are all familiar with what he said.

The gross national product is not increasing satisfactorily in real dollars and there are indications that the productivity is slowing down. Consumer prices are continuing to rise, and interest rates are at the highest level at which they have been for a great many years. I make these remarks by way of preface to the main portion of what I intend to say at this time.

There is a particular problem in respect of income tax which should be raised here because Bill No. C-193 covers amendments to the Income Tax Act. I am pleased to see that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Chrétien) is in his seat tonight, as I think this problem concerns both ministers. An increase in tax payments has a direct connection with certain problems faced by some of my constituents. They have written asking me to bring their problems to the attention of parliament and particularly to the attention of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue. This problem bears a direct relation to problems referred to by other speakers concerning extra expenses involved in earning income on which taxes are paid.

• (9:00 p.m.)

These extra expenses result from changes in employment. The most recent letter on the problem comes from the general chairman of the Moose Jaw local of the Brotherhood of Railway, Airline and Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express and Station Employees. I will not put the whole of the letter on the record but I think the first paragraph bears out what I am trying to emphasize. It says:

> Kindly refer to your letter of December 19th, 1967, regarding our problem of our workers being forced into now working in Regina to hold full time employment due to complete cancellation of their work in Moose Jaw and lack of enough seniority to hold work in Moose Jaw.

In earlier correspondence with these workers I asked this official to supply me with names. I will not put the names on the record but I will just outline their problem. The first man is aged 52 and has seniority from July 16, 1941. The next man is aged 47 and his seniority is from 1942. It goes on from there. The seniority of these workers goes back to 1942 and the first paragraph of this letter points out that this seniority is not sufficient to enable them to hold full time jobs in Moose Jaw.

Therefore of necessity, in order to hold a job they are working in Regina but still maintaining their homes in Moose Jaw and keeping their children there, in the hope that railway conditions will improve and perhaps they will be able to go back to their homes, with the assistance of the recent colleague of the minister who is now the head of the Canadian Transport Commission and who apparently knows quite a few of the answers to the problems of transportation. It is hoped that he will be able to bring about a change in this respect. In the meantime, these people are maintaining their homes in Moose Jaw and, as I say, their children are going to school there. These workers are working five days a week, or whatever it is, and going to their homes in Moose Jaw during the time they are not working in Regina.

They consider that the money they spend—and this point has been raised in other cases—to earn an income on which they must pay taxes, should be deductible as expenses paid out directly to earn this income. The former minister of national revenue knows all about this situation because I have had correspondence with him and direct contact with his office. As I say, the new Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Chrétien), who is in the house now, has heard of this problem. I join with hon. members in congratulating him on his appointment to his important portfolio. I am sure he will be working closely with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on this problem.

The Minister of National Revenue has been described as a very reasonable man and I hope he will see the merit of the argument I am presenting on behalf of these railway workers, and will convince the Minister of Finance that these away-from-home expenses which are incurred in order to earn their take-home pay should be deductible for income tax purposes.

The Minister of Finance may not give an answer tonight because, as I say, he has been a very busy man, and I am quite sure he will have to consult with the Minister of National Revenue on this problem. I leave it to his good judgment and sense of fairness to see the validity of this argument. This money is actually paid out in order that these men can hold their seniority, in the hope of getting back to a position in Moose Jaw.

After the minister has considered the situation carefully, if he wishes more detailed information on the subject—as I say, there is a great deal of information in this letter but I shall not put it on the record at this time—I shall be very pleased to furnish him with it. That is the only question I wanted to raise tonight, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have every sympathy with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) this evening as we deal with the increases in income tax which will be brought about by these amendments to the Income Tax Act. His position is one that would bring tears to the eyes of anyone contemplating the leadership of the Liberal party, especially when one considers what his colleagues have to offer at the present time. One of his colleagues has spoken of a guaranteed annual income of $2,000 a year, another has spoken very glowingly of constructing vast new cities across Canada to house up to four million inhabitants, and a non-candidate for leadership is sponsoring a bill that will permit state operated lotteries so that Canadians will have their chance to become wealthy overnight.

Confronted with all this tough competition, the Minister of Finance is faced with the unenviable task of bringing in Bill No. C-193, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, in the hope that it will be passed by the house and will stand in his name as his contribution to the cause at this time.

I do not wonder that the government benches breathed a sigh of relief when the broadcasting bill was passed yesterday, or that the Minister of Finance did, because it enabled him to present this bill a little more in advance of the first week in April than he might have thought possible up to yesterday afternoon.

Of course, one cannot help but have sympathy for the minister when one considers the statements that have been made by him on previous occasions in budget speeches, and debates on related bills. We know for example that the boom that was to be paced at one time has somehow missed a step here and there and we have a crisis of confidence in Canada at the present time. We know, also, of the drastic shortage of money and the increase on interest rates that will bind our citizens to the payment of enormous sums of money in respect of any necessary development that is to be proceeded with at the present time.

We pay a high price for the inflationary development that seems to be accelerating rather than decelerating. I suspect that Bill No. C-193 will only add fuel to the fire because it strikes mainly at the little fellow who is making an income that is obviously known, and whose income tax is therefore deducted at source. This person has neither the capital nor the time to involve himself in other enterprises that might produce for him some other form of wealth.

He will be particularly burdened with this tax at a time when he will be facing constantly increasing prices, a sharp increase in the mill rate, and when, in most provinces, he will not have the home owner grants to relieve that burden. When we read, for example, the press release which was sent out from the Department of Finance several months ago when the bill on the Bank Act was about to be presented, we see stated in it the objective of government policy, which reads as follows:

> A more competitive and flexible financial system which will best serve the changing requirements of the Canadian economy and the interests of all of the people of Canada. We are particularly concerned that the position of the smaller borrower be improved.

Anyone who has borrowed money since the revision of the Bank Act must wonder how his situation has improved, where the cheaper money may be, and where is the increased supply of money which we were promised at that time. The only thing that increases is government expenditure. The budget which was last presented was full of the most illusory slashes, and reductions which did nothing except frighten the people of Canada into speculating on the inflation which seemed to be looming. A good example of that is the $2,400,000 which was earmarked for the Company of Young Canadians, and which by the stroke of a pencil was reduced by $400,000 down to $2 million. Since, however, this was a substantial increase over the existing budget for that organization, it was a purely illusory cut in the budget of an organization the general usefulness of which has been repeatedly called into question across the country. This is a program which might have been eliminated altogether but which ended up with a larger over-all budget than it had the previous year.

The expenditure I mentioned pales into insignificance compared with the many other contemplated government expenditures, such as medicare. Perhaps the provinces will draw the line on what would be a really vast expenditure of government funds. A program launched by the government is always more costly than one undertaken by private enterprise.

I should like to express the annoyance of the individual who will suffer the consequences of the measure we are now considering. He will not be fooled by the promise that the corporation tax will be collected a little earlier than it otherwise would have been, so that the money will get into the hands of the government a little sooner, because he knows that in the end there will not be more money than there would have been had it been collected at the usual time. This will not soften the blow for anyone having to pay up to $600 in increased tax, depending on the amount of his income. It will do nothing for the small businessman who is growing increasingly weary of taking on the task of developing this nation and demonstrating the necessary drive and persistence to build up a business, only to be hindered at every turn by government programs to which he must contribute out of a decreasing margin of profit. This leads him to ask why he should bother. Why not give up and go to work for a large corporation, or else live at the mercy of the welfare system.

I regret that we are faced with an increase in income tax without having a comparable reduction or a complete elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, which cannot help but contribute to the inflationary spiral.

At the present time we are faced with the problem of housing. The extra income tax will make it all the more difficult for anyone building or attempting to build a house at a time of rising costs. Let us not be fooled by the suggestion that this surtax is temporary. I suspect it will be with us for some time, if this government remains in office. We in the Social Credit party wish that the government would seriously consider financing through the Bank of Canada several areas of Canadian development, particularly in municipalities, in such projects as non-profit institutions, schools and hospitals—organizations which must compete for funds on the money market at the amazing rates of interest which exist now. We know that the postponement of these projects will not be a solution because it would be the highest possible price we could pay for a development which should and must take place.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I will oppose this bill, as I have voted against every budget this government has presented in the last two years. I was dubious about the promises made in the earlier budget of pacing the boom and of making sure that nothing got out of hand. We have a situation now where almost everything about the economic, financial and fiscal state of our country is out of hand. I do not believe that Bill No. C-193 will contribute to the solution of the problem.

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me say that I have every sympathy for the minister, an honourable gentleman who has to introduce a bill in which he admits himself the question of morality has not entered. I am sure we all feel for him on this occasion. I support the criticism of the measures proposed in this bill that has been expressed by other members of this party, and also by other members on the opposition side of the house. We all recognize the fact that no government can distribute taxation funds without first taking those funds away from somebody. I am one of those persons who believes in sound finances, and I should like to make a few proposals to the minister by way of alternatives to the measures in this bill. I want the minister to realize that I sympathize with him in the present circumstances. I might also say that we believe in the principle of taxation according to ability to pay, and we think that this bill does not live up to that principle.

I think that this bill would have been entirely unnecessary had the minister been willing to use the national credit of this country to provide the federal government, the provinces and the municipalities with social capital. In this connection I should like to refer to an address given by Mr. Anderson, who at the time was secretary of the treasury, at a luncheon of the members of Associated Press, New York City, on April 20, 1959. This address was titled: "What about Printing Press money for U.S.?" And I say, Mr. Speaker, what about "printing press" money for Canada? I mention this because this very interesting article was sent to me from Washington. In his remarks Mr. Anderson said:

> I should like to suggest certain guiding principles which I believe should be a part of our basic thinking:
> 1. We must realize that long-term economic growth in real terms can be achieved not with but only without inflation.
>
> 2. We must strive for an achievable rate of relatively constant growth—not a succession of sharp ups and downs.
> 3. We must not, as we come out of a recession, seek to force the economy into a quick boom which can later injure our long run capacity to produce.
> 4. We must put major reliance upon the private sector of the economy to increase production.
>
> 5. We must give maximum free rein to incentive to save, to work, to produce, to invest.
>
> 6. We must maintain the priceless incentive of confidence in the value of money.
>
> 7. We must achieve a budget that is in balance, or better, during periods of high level activity.
>
> 8. We must be willing to seek out the impediments to growth in our economy whether these are found in traditional business practices, in organized labour, in government subsidy programs, or in any other area.
>
> 9. We must encourage the inventiveness and research necessary for new products, new jobs and improved living standards in a growing economy.
>
> 10. We must accept the imposition of discipline and prudent responsibility.
> 11. We must not passively allow either inflation or deflation to run its course.
>
> 12. We must—and by "we" I mean businessmen, workers, investors, and not only officials of government—make our day to day decisions with the welfare of the whole in mind, and not merely the advantage of the moment for some narrow segment.
> 13. Finally, we must have confidence—and this confidence, I have deep faith, is well justified—that the American people are wise enough and perceptive enough to support the principles which can leave for your children and mine an America not ravaged by economic turmoil, but full of strength and growth and hope.

Then he goes on to deal with the issue of currency.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit a question at this point. Is my hon. friend, who belongs to what might be termed a quasi-socialist party, indicating that his party is adopting Robert Anderson as its official mentor in matters economic and financial?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, we in this party are always willing to learn, and when we find someone who puts forward sound principles in financial matters we are willing to listen to what he has to say. I am just quoting Mr. Anderson for the information of the minister. Mr. Anderson then went on to deal with the possibility of using the state for the issuing of the money required by the state particularly for investment of social capital.

I recently read with interest representations made to the federal government by chambers of commerce, labour organizations, agricultural organizations and municipalities, all of which indicate a measure of self-interest, instead of considering the problem as a whole. The brief of the chambers of commerce dealt with depreciation allowances and exemptions for certain industries, such as the resource industries and so on.

The brief submitted by organized labour dealt with the question of expense accounts, something that has been very much abused in the past. I have before me an article that appeared in an issue of the Star Weekly headed "The expense account gap", one paragraph of which reads:

> It involves plugging the gaping loopholes in tax deductions allowed for entertainment and travelling expenses supposedly incurred for business reasons. The language of the present laws is so loose and imprecise that it has encouraged the creation of a privileged class which uses the loopholes to live high off the hog, writing off anything from country club membership fees to chartered limousines as "business expenses".

For the information of the minister I should like to relate an interesting personal experience I had last year in this respect. I was travelling by train from Vancouver to the Kootenays and there was a group of travellers on the train. One of them was supposed to visit a number of towns in the Kootenays—Nelson, Cranbrook, Fernie—and in my presence he quite openly admitted that he was going to go to Nelson but was not going to visit these other towns at all. Instead he was going to phone the storekeepers concerned from Nelson and take their orders; but he said: "Of course, I shall charge the usual expenses to my account just as if I had gone to those towns, stayed in hotels and incurred the usual expenses".

I am not sure that this sort of thing has been corrected to date by any means. It is something that needs watching very closely. I can well understand organized labour criticizing the expense account racket, as they see it, when they are denied certain exemptions for expenses travelling to work, for the type of clothing referred to by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Germa), and other things of that nature.

The representations made by agricultural groups have dealt largely with estate taxes, succession duties, and so on, looking at these matters naturally from the point of view of those organizations. The representations to the federal government made by the municipalities have dealt generally with urging more grants to municipalities in lieu of taxation on federal buildings in the municipalities, and also the need for social capital in connection with various undertakings. I have before me a copy of "The Listening Post" which is published by the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities. According to this, their brief called attention to these basic needs:

> (1) long-term federal loans at favourable rates of interest in order to finance projects which are primarily self-liquidating and essential to community development, such as urban roads, bridges and transit facilities, sewers, water supply, recreation space, and the acquisition of land for redevelopment;
> (2) grants on a more adequate scale toward the costs of hospitals, schools and other community services which are essential but non-self-liquidating;
> (3) continued and expanded grant assistance for employment-creating municipal works, to accelerate re-employment and to provide constructive work in the winter seasons.

The brief then dealt with a municipal development bank and the need for a new housing policy at that date, a matter we are still dealing with, in view of the housing crisis in Canada at the present time. The problem of finance and taxation has, shall I say, been dealt with on a piecemeal basis by all of the interests concerned, each one naturally looking after its own personal interest. It indicates a piecemeal approach to a very serious problem facing the country at this time. It also indicates that there is no over-all set of principles with which to approach the policy of taxation, Mr. Speaker. It indicates a natural self interest of individuals, and that we have treated this subject in a segmented way instead of adhering to the over-all philosophy that taxation should be on the basis of one's ability to pay.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I suggest that for so many in this country at this time to be ignorant of the principles of taxation, is deplorable. Our people are ignorant of the financial principles on which the present government bases its taxation. I suggest to the minister that here is an opportunity for the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue to carry out an educational campaign; here is an opportunity for brochures, pamphlets, literature—or whatever you want to call it—to be issued to our farmers, industrialists or workingmen to explain the policy behind the government's program, the reasons for certain types of taxation, why the government has come to certain conclusions, and so on.

I think it is imperative to educate the Canadian people and to let them learn the basis of taxation as applied by this government. In that way our people will have a better understanding of the principles of taxation and in the future will be able more and more to appreciate our problems, shall I say, in total rather than on the basis of self interest, as happens at the present time. I think there is an opportunity here for the Departments of Finance and National Revenue to inform and to educate the Canadian people with respect to the principles of taxation and the policies pursued by this government. Such knowledge would be useful because it would help our people to appreciate policy and it would help our taxpayers to have a proper understanding of the law as it is applied at the present time. On that basis the government might be able to consider a more rational and, shall I say, principled approach to taxation in the future.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government house leader what business we will be engaged in tomorow.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, the government proposes to call first the third reading of the broadcasting bill, to be followed by item No. 48 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. S-24; item No. 47, second reading of Bill No. S-23; item No. 49, second reading of Bill No. S-29; item No. 52, second reading of Bill No. S-27; item No. 51, second reading of Bill No. C-190 and item No. 62, the resolution relating to the unification of the Canadian Armed Forces.

Mr. Starr: What will we do tomorrow after we complete all of those.

Mr. Fulton: Could we have an indication in general terms as to when the government intends to call Bill No. C-195?

Mr. Pennell: I am not in a position to give an answer to that question this evening.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—STEVEN TRUSCOTT—CONSIDERATION OF GRANTING OF PAROLE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago, on November 17 last to be exact, I addressed a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Pennell) in these words, as they appear at page 4393 of Hansard for that day:

> In view of the fact that many persons who have been sentenced to life imprisonment have been paroled after serving fewer than ten years, and in view of the fact that the length of time in prison before parole is determined by the governor in council, will the government reconsider the case of a parole for Steven Truscott?

The Solicitor General in his reply indicated that the statistics to which I was referring applied to a time before changes had been made in the regulations under the Parole Act. He therefore felt nothing could be done to meet my request. At that time I posted this question for one of these adjournment debates.

I have no hesitation in appealing once again to the Solicitor General, on behalf of this young man Steven Truscott, who is serving a life sentence at Collin's Bay penitentiary. Indeed I have no hesitation in asking for special consideration for this young man. I do not intend to go into all of the facts relating to this case, but may I point out, as we all know, that the last time a decision was taken in respect of him it was a decision taken by the Supreme Court of Canada, which was not unanimous. Granted that only one of their lordships differed from the others, but it is still a recognized principle in this country that a person is not guilty of murder unless there is a unanimous decision.

I recognize that this was not a trial in the normal sense, but I suggest to the government that the fact that at least one Supreme Court justice had some doubt about this case, and thought that at least there should be a new trial, does warrant asking for special consideration for this young man. My own position is quite clear. Thanks to the Solicitor General and the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, I have had the opportunity on two occasions of visiting Steven Truscott at Collin's Bay penitentiary. On the basis of those visits and the studies I have made of the entire history of this case, I feel there has been a miscarriage of justice. Therefore, it does seem to me that one is justified in asking for special consideration.

But even apart from all that, I think it is a matter of record that this young man's years in prison—they are now nearly nine—have been as near perfect as a prisoner's record could be. I believe that on that basis special consideration should be given to the request that he be paroled before any more of his life is spent behind bars.

When I have urged that this be done, the Solicitor General has replied that the parole board is governed by the regulations under the Parole Act. He has pointed out to me that those regulations have been changed in recent years and that it is not now possible to release after seven or eight years a person sentenced to imprisonment for life, as used to be the case. But I point out to the Solicitor General that the regulations which govern the operations of the parole board are regulations brought into effect by the governor in council.

The minimum period of time, the ten year minimum that seems to stand in our way in this respect, is not in the act. That ten year minimum is in the regulations, put there by the governor in council. I submit that precisely because this case has had special consideration, has been reviewed by the justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, it would be appropriate for the government to take another look at those regulations with respect to this case.

I would not object if the government asked the parole board whether its members thought the case should be given special attention. But it seems to me that since the whole question of the length of time that must be served as a minimum is one that is determined by the governor in council, in other words by the cabinet, it is appropriate to ask the cabinet to review this case.

I recognize that this young man's ten year period in prison will be reached about the middle of 1969. That does not sound very far off, but in the case of a young man who has spent this length of time in jail for a crime that some of us think he did not commit, and when it is clear that there has been exemplary conduct in prison, it seems to me to warrant special consideration being given to the case.

I know of the sympathy of the Solicitor General in this respect. I think it was largely due to his interest in the case that the Supreme Court review was made a year or so ago. I hope that he will follow it through by taking another look at the possibility of this young man being given a parole without having to serve the full ten years set out in the regulations passed by the governor in council. I thank the Solicitor General for being here tonight to deal with this question. I look forward, hopefully, to a sympathetic reply.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to thank the hon. member for his patience in waiting for an evening that was convenient to me to be present in the house to deal with his question. I wish also to say that the hon. member's interest in this case is most commendable. Without reflecting in the slightest upon the conduct of this young inmate, I feel I ought not to make any comment on that aspect of the case.

[Mr. Knowles.]

I agree that the response to a like term of imprisonment varies as between one individual and another. Unfortunately, according to the present state of knowledge, decisions regarding the appropriate moment to release a prisoner cannot be made with computer-like accuracy. In 1964 those charged with the responsibility of protecting society decided that the National Parole Board shall not recommend a parole in the case of a person who is serving a commuted death sentence until that person shall have served at least ten years of imprisonment. This order in council was undoubtedly in the minds of many hon. members at the time the house approved the recent bill on capital punishment.

I regret to advise the hon. member that I expect that the ten year period would be continued at least during the five year life of this experimental bill. The only assurance I can give the hon. member is that the National Parole Board will consider the application in sufficient time before the expiration of the ten year period, so that if it receives favourable consideration it will be in the hands of the solicitor general of the day on June 11, 1969, which is the first day on which the governor in council could receive a favourable recommendation.

MANPOWER—REPORTED DECREASE IN RETRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss tonight the program of occupational training of adults, such as the one proposed in the house on January 19, 1967 by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, a policy which was intended for those in the uneconomic regions of our country who wish to upgrade their education. At that time the minister proposed, with the agreement of the provinces, some pilot projects which would be undertaken in those regions of weak economic development, where people did not have the full opportunities of obtaining a job unless they had the required training. In his statement on that date, which is contained in information bulletin No. 1, the minister admitted that his department had very little documentation on the problem of how to encourage these unemployed persons to take advantage of courses preparing them for a new job. This admission has caused much unrest in these regions, because of the discrimination which was caused through lack of sufficient knowledge.

The minister in his statement of January, 1967 referred to those uneconomic regions where the schools for adult education were deprived of trained personnel. He also attributed the problem encountered to the fact that many of the students were deprived of the right attitude, the state of mind and the orientation required to participate fully in the economy of our country. It was therefore resolved to put into effect certain measures which would allow these adults to benefit from their education. Moreover many of these people suffered because of their personal and social inability to adapt to the values and requirements of labour. No doubt the intentions of the minister were of the highest calibre, but unfortunately and by his own admission the officials in his department did not have sufficient experience in such projects undertaken in the past, and this is why the proposed program was called a pilot project.

• (10:20 p.m.)

It seems to me that this problem has not been sufficiently studied. As a result thousands of people in this country are now discriminated against. These are people who are now unemployed and could improve their education by taking one of these occupational training courses for adults.

I should like to point out that in many regions of Canada, and specifically in my riding, there are many people who attended courses during the 1966-67 period and were still at school on March 31, 1967. Because of this fact they qualify to attend new courses commencing this year. I believe that during this period it was sufficiently proven that many of the people who attended these courses should never have qualified for them, but it seems that they were never classified as a result of any investigation. This year those who qualified were primarily those who were at school on March 31, 1967. Even though they were not qualified to take a course the previous year, because they were at school on March 31, 1967 they qualified for a course this year.

This has meant that thousands of people will this year be deprived of a course. I say thousands because at one centre in my riding alone over 800 people who qualified for a course were turned down owing to lack of space. I blame this situation on the government because they did not sufficiently study this pilot project without even trying to assess the number of people who would qualify for a course.

This has meant that the people who would have qualified now have to draw unemployment insurance and sit at home, instead of preparing themselves for some other job. I suggest this is the height of discrimination. I did ask the minister to explain why the necessary space had not been obtained from the provinces under the agreement, and his answer was very short, namely that there was an agreement with the provinces. I realize the minister is not here tonight. However, his parliamentary secretary is, and I only hope that the hon. gentleman does not have a prepared answer. The hon. gentleman did not know what I was going to say, and my experience in the past has usually been that prepared answers do not give a straight answer to the question.

May I again put the matter plainly to the parliamentary secretary. What is the government going to do about all those people who are qualified to take a course, yet have to sit at home and live on unemployment insurance instead of going to school and preparing themselves for the jobs that are waiting for them? On the other hand, what is going to be done about those who are taking courses but have never been members of the labour force? This is something I fail to understand. It is why I feel there is discrimination and that an investigation should be made.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Gaspé should have no fear that I have a prepared answer, because I have not. From perusing the hon. member's question to the minister the other day I was not aware that he would put so much emphasis on the situation in his own region. I know that he was talking, generally, about other regions, but this evening he put much emphasis on the retraining situation in his own region. I am prepared to go back to the department, examine the facts with respect to the hon. member's region, and report back. He talked about an additional 800 places that are required, and that seems a high figure which warrants examination. I assure the hon. member that the matter will be brought to the department's attention and it will be investigated.

Generally speaking, we buy the places or the accommodation for the retraining, and the province is supposed to supply the course. That has been the arrangement, and thousands of places now are being occupied for pre-employment courses across the country. During the winter months demand for such courses is highest and a very high number of places is now being taken up. I think that retraining courses now are working well, and many of the kinks are being worked out. Whether that is so in the hon. member's region I do not know, but I intend to have the matter looked into and I hope to have an adequate reply for him when we have looked into his own situation.

HOUSING—VANCOUVER—CONSTRUCTION OF HOME FOR SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on February 2 I asked the President of the Treasury Board, the minister who reports for central mortgage and housing, the following question as reported on page 6291 of Hansard:

In view of the minister's interest in getting the best use of the money available for housing, can he inform the house why Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has awarded a contract for the construction of a 19 storey senior citizens home in Vancouver which provides for higher costs and fewer units than other proposals submitted for the same project?

The approximate cost of this project, which is to be located in the west end of Vancouver, is about $1,600,000. Seventy five per cent of this amount will be paid by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provincial government. The city of Vancouver will pay 12½ per cent of the operating losses. The federal involvement here is about $1,200,000. Actually it is a bit more than that.

Instead of preparing plans and calling for tenders, the government invited architects and developers to submit design proposals. A committee which included representatives of the city of Vancouver, the province of British Columbia and C.M.H.C. studied these proposals and made a recommendation.

What I have to say should not be taken as a reflection on the abilities or competence of any architects or builders. I assume they are all capable of designing sound buildings of good appearance. Nor does it matter to me, personally, which firm gets a contract. What does matter at this time of severe housing shortage and high money cost is that good accommodation be provided at the lowest possible price.

I want to draw some comparisons between the proposal which was accepted and one proposal which was not accepted. The proposal which was accepted has 210 units; the other one I referred to has 233 units. The difference there is 23 units, and this is particularly important in this section of Vancouver, since so many elderly people live in sub-standard accommodation.

The size of each apartment in the project which was picked by the committee is about 311 square feet; the units in the other proposal come to approximately 325 square feet, and this is not very much space to live in. The average monthly rental for accommodation in the building selected would be $92 and, in the other, $85. A difference of $7 a month may not appear to be very high, but to some people, those who are living on pensions, it is an important consideration. The total cost of the two projects did not differ greatly—$1,669,131 for the winning proposal as against $1,647,724 for the other to which I have referred. However, since there are fewer units in the proposal selected, the actual cost per unit is considerably higher, and extended over the life of the building, say 50 years, the difference would be great. This means that heavier subsidies will be required because of the higher rentals under the first proposal.

• (10:30 p.m.)

I wish now to read a letter from the president of the Vancouver Housing Association addressed to the council of the city of Vancouver and dated January 12, 1968. It states:

Dear Sirs:

I have been puzzled by the decision of city council to accept a tender for a public housing project for senior citizens in the west end which was very appreciably higher in cost (well over 10 per cent per suite of comparable size) and which contained fewer units than the lowest bid.

One of our members, who has had considerable experience in the construction of senior citizens housing, has studied the plans submitted by the low bidder and, while he did not feel competent to express an opinion on the architectural and constructional features of the project, he considered that so far as the liveability of the units was concerned the plans provided good accommodation at a reasonable cost.

In the circumstances, may I suggest that for the benefit of the taxpayer who will have to foot the extra bill a detailed explanation be given as to the reasons for the selection of the higher tender.

May I, at the same time, suggest that future selection committees appointed to consider plans submitted should include persons with extensive personal knowledge of the needs of elderly people and with firsthand experience in public housing management.

Yours very truly,

Vancouver Housing Association

The letter is signed by Mrs. C. McAllister, president of the association.

There is one further point I should like to mention. The proposal which was not selected did provide on the ground floor suites for physically handicapped persons, obviously a desirable feature. The proposal selected by the committee did not include this feature in its original presentation, though I believe there have been some changes in the plans since that time. The question I should like to have answered is this: Why, at a time of acute housing shortage and shortage of money, was a selection made which provided fewer and smaller units at a higher cost? It seems to me there is considerable waste here.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): I think that in matters of this kind we could all find ourselves in disagreement. I will say that this has been a co-operative effort. I should like to read an answer which has been prepared very thoughtfully, and I am able to do so because the hon. member was good enough to word his question in such a way that it was quite evident which aspects of the subject he had in mind.

The senior citizens housing project to be located in the west end of Vancouver is being developed at the request of the city of Vancouver under the federal-provincial partnership provisions of the National Housing Act. To meet the city's request, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, on behalf of the partnership, called for proposals to be made by builders for the construction of approximately 200 units.

Under the terms of the partnership arrangement, proposals submitted by builders were to be judged by a review committee composed of provincial and corporation representatives as well as the city's director of planning and a local architect representing the provincial architectural institute. Prospective proponents were advised that the review committee was required to judge proposals on the quality of planning and design, economy of maintenance and the amount of the bids.

Seven developers submitted bona fide proposals ranging in quality and price from $7,072 to $14,207 a unit. The review committee unanimously recommended acceptance of a proposal submitted by Frank Stanzl Construction Limited at a price of $7,910 a unit, as it considered that the over-all quality of design of this proposal, comprising 211 units, was of a high standard and, on balance, best met the objectives and conditions provided for in the call. The city, the province and the corporation endorsed the committee's recommendations. As a result, a contract was awarded to the proponent selected by the committee. An announcement to this effect was made last week.

I would just like to add, Mr. Speaker, that I think there is always room for disagreement in this sort of operation, but I would also like to stress the fact that it was a co-operative effort, an effort to do something by way of senior citizens housing in Vancouver, and I suggest the people represented by the city, the province and the architectural institute, as well as C.M.H.C., might be just as well qualified to judge the design as those who have disagreed with the awarding of the contract.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.39 p.m.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Eleventh report of standing committee on transport and communications—Mr. Macaluso.

[Editor's note: The text of the foregoing report apepars in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ACCESS TO FEDERAL DOCK, VICTORIA BEACH, MAN.

Question No. 852—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Is the Government of Canada dock at Victoria Beach, Manitoba, restricted as to public access?

2. If so, (a) is the restriction seasonal, (b) by whom was this restriction enacted and has the federal government made any representations relative to this restriction?

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): 1. No restriction of public access for legitimate wharf business.

2. (a) and (b). Not applicable.

TRAINING COURSES TAKEN BY INDIANS

Question No. 862—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many Indians in each province took courses under the provisions of the Manpower Training Act in each month in the years 1965, 1966 and 1967?

2. How many Indians in each province took courses under the provisions of the Technical-Vocational Training Act in each month in the years 1965, 1966 and 1967?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. A breakdown of monthly figures showing the number of Indians who took courses covered by the Occupational Training for Adults Program, which became effective on April 1, 1967, is not available. However, the following table shows the number of those enrolled in training from April 1, 1967 to November 15, 1967. These figures represent only those Indians who could be identified as such:

Province	Number Enrolled
Maritimes	22
Quebec	317
Ontario	373
Manitoba	353
Saskatchewan	145
Alberta	20
British Columbia and Yukon Territory	98
Total	1,328

2. The figures in the following table cover Indians in training under programs 5 and 6 of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. Figures are not available for the other programs under the legislation.

APPLICATIONS TO MEDICAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

Question No. 888—Mr. Brand:

1. Have applications and renewal applications to the Medical Research Council for support of work to be conducted in the fiscal year (a) 1967-68 (b) 1968-69, been approved?

2. If so, what was the total number and total dollar value of applications and renewal applications submitted to the Medical Research Council for support of work to be conducted in the fiscal years of 1967-68 and 1968-69?

Questions

3. How many applications for support for 1967-68 and for 1968-69 were approved in full, approved in part, deferred for later consideration, and rejected?

4. What was the total dollar value approved for 1967-68 and for 1968-69?

5. What was the dollar value of applications approved by the Medical Research Council after the autumn 1966 and autumn 1967 meetings on its Grants Review Committee expressed as a percentage of the total of the dollar value of applications for each year?

6. Is the percentage change in Part 5 indicative of the change in the judgment standards applied or a change in the calibre of the applications submitted, and to what extent is the change attributable to one or to the other?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned, the answer is as follows: 1. Yes. The Medical Research Council took action on applications for grants in aid of research for 1967-68 at four meetings. Applications for 1968-69 have been considered at one meeting to date; applications have also been, or will be accepted for consideration at three further meetings.

2. The total number of applications and renewal applications submitted to the Medical Research Council for grants in aid of research to be conducted in 1967-68 was 1,511; the dollar value of those applications totalled $22,036,314.78. The applications for grants in aid of research submitted to the Medical Research Council to date for 1968-69 number 1,468, with a total dollar value of $25,497,408.76.

3. No. of applications for grants in aid	1967-68	1968-69 (First meeting only)
Approved in full	803	457
Approved in part	363	113
Defererd for later consideration	46	207
Rejected	299	76

A further 615 applications have now been submitted for 1968-69 for consideration at the second meeting in March 1968.

4. The total dollar value of applications for grants in aid approved for 1967-68 was $14,906,310.23. The total dollar value approved, to date, for 1968-69 is $10,112,895.00.

5. The percentage of the total value of grant applications approved in November 1966 was 60 per cent; in November 1967, 42 per cent.

6. The percentage change in Part 5 was due to the large number of applications deferred at the November 1967 meeting for further consideration. Deferment of this number of applications is required because of uncertainty at the time concerning the total number of applications to be received for 1968-69 and because of uncertainty concerning the funds which would be available for the grants in aid program.

[Mr. Brand.]

CENTENNIAL MEDALS, FORT WILLIAM CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 899—Mr. Badanai:

1. How many Centennial Medals were awarded to citizens in the Constituency of Fort William?

2. What are the names of the recipients?

3. Who made the recommendations for the awards?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): 1 and 2. The distribution records of the Centennial Medal are not set up in such a way that the names of recipients in any particular location can be extracted.

3. Nominations were solicited from federal and provincial levels of government and from national associations in the fields of the arts and sciences, education, welfare and charitable organizations, veterans groups and many others.

*SEIZURE OF TAX RECORDS, WINNIPEG

Question No. 935—Mr. Sherman:

Have certain companies in Winnipeg had their records seized during January, 1968, by investigators of the Taxation Division of the Department of National Revenue and if so (a) have they been accused of any breaches or irregularities under the Income Tax Act (b) under what authority were these seizures made (c) have any similar seizures been made in Canada in the past twelve months and, if so, where and when?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable.

SNOW REMOVAL CONTRACTS, NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC

Question No. 942—Mr. Laprise:

1. Has the Department of Public Works called for tenders for the removal of snow for the 1967-68 season from office buildings at (a) La Sarre (b) Amos (c) Normetal (d) Senneterre (e) Macamic?

2. If so, in what newspapers and on what date?

3. At what price and to whom have these contracts been awarded?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1, 2, and 3: (a) La Sarre: Tender call for snow removal was advertised in newspaper L'Echo d'Abitibi-Ouest on October 30, 1967. A contract was warded to Carmel Aubé, La Sarre, at $1,400 for two years. (b) Amos: No tender call, existing contract was renewed. (c) Normetal: No tender call, existing contract was renewed. (d) Senneterre: Snow removal is included in the general cleaning contract. (e) Macamic: No tender call, existing contract was renewed.

NEWSTART PROGRAM, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Question No. 947—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What projects are (a) in being and (b) in prospect in the Newstart program for Prince Edward Island?

2. What is the total amount of expenditure by the Government of Canada involved in these projects?

3. What members of the Public Service of Canada are assuming responsibility for this program in Prince Edward Island?

4. Where will such personnel be located?

5. What is the amount already expended in inaugurating Newstart in Prince Edward Island?

6. What benefits are expected to accrue to the residents of Prince Edward Island as a result of the Newstart program?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) None. (b) Prince Edward Island NewStart Incorporated is at present developing its projects, and a statement of the number of projects in prospect would be premature.

2. A precise estimate is not yet possible, but it is anticipated that the total will be between $2.5 million and $3.5 million.

3. No members of the public service of Canada are assuming responsibility. Prince Edward Island NewStart Incorporated is a non-profit corporation established by the federal and provincial governments under the Societies Act of Prince Edward Island. In addition to financing, it will be able to get technical assistance from the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

4. Not applicable.

5. As of December 31, 1967—$40,000.

6. The Prince Edward Island NewStart Incorporated will address the training needs of some of the economically disadvantaged adults on the island. The methods developed will help these people to secure better jobs. The primary aim is to experiment with methods of improving adult training programs generally.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

YUKON PAYROLL, FEDERAL AND TERRITORIAL

Question No. 814—Mr. Nielsen:

For each of the first three quarters of the year 1967, what was the payroll in the Yukon for (a) employees of the federal government (b) employees of the territorial administration?

Return tabled.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION GREEN BELT EXPROPRIATIONS

Question No. 835—Mr. Thompson:

1. How many property owners were involved in the expropriation by the National Capital Commission for the Green Belt?

2. How many of these owners have not yet received final settlement from the NCC?

3. Will these properties be returned to the former owners if the Green Belt is abandoned?

4. Which owners of property expropriated for the Green Belt received settlement from the NCC from May 1, 1963 to date?

5. In each case, what was (a) the date of expropriation (b) the legal description of the property (c) the acreage (d) the date of settlement (e) total price paid by the NCC (f) the purpose to which each of these properties has been or is to be put?

6. When were the properties on lots 13, 14, 15 and 16, concession 2, Ottawa front, expropriated by the NCC?

7. If settlement has not been made, what offer was submitted by the NCC to each owner concerned?

8. What amount was received by the owners who were paid for these properties?

Return tabled.

OPERATING SURPLUSES OF PROPRIETARY CORPORATIONS

Question No. 883—Mr. Caouette:

1. What operating surpluses have been returned by the "proprietary corporations" since their inception?

2. In connection with the corporations which have not had operating surpluses, is it intended to reorganize their structure and management?

Return tabled.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have had two questions on the order paper for almost two months now, Nos. 867 and 868. I do not see why there should be any difficulty about answering either of them, but I should particularly like an answer to No. 868 because it concerns the winter works program and this program will be over soon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): In this connection it might interest the hon. member to know that this session there have been 996 questions placed on the order paper, 876 of which have been answered. There are only 122 outstanding. I am sure he will agree that this is a good performance.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): I rise on a point of order which is also a question of privilege. Starred question No. 387 has been on the order paper for 4½ months. The very purpose of starred questions is to enable members to get expeditious answers while avoiding the loading of the question period. This particular question relates to one which was asked on Friday and again yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Much too long a time has gone by since this question was first put down by me. It could have been answered by the end of September.

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): I would simply like to say that this is a question which involves Your Honour and the commissioners of internal economy of the house. It is a matter for the commissioners and Your Honour to decide, and when this has been done an answer will be forthcoming.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the question was deliberately phrased so that it does not involve Your Honour. It asks what is the intention of the government. Your Honour has no right to introduce legislation. If there is to be legislation it must be introduced by the government since it involves, in this case, the expenditure of money.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I can assure the minister and the hon. member that I have no intention of introducing legislation. I think the point of order made is well taken. There is no question of privilege. I assume the hon. member has made his representations for consideration by the government.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, would you be kind enough to call notice of motion No. 30?

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

AUTHORIZATION FOR NON-PAYLIST ALLOTMENTS

Motion No. 30—Mr. Bell (Carleton):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all Treasury Board orders listed in sessional paper No. 41A tabled by the President of the Treasury Board on the 1st day of November 1967, authorizing non-paylist allotments from finance vote 15 during the fiscal year 1966-67.

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept this motion. Treasury Board minutes authorizing the allotments in question are minutes of the Queen's Privy Council, and governments have always taken the stand that minutes of a committee of the Queen's Privy Council are not subject to being produced in parliament. The minutes are made available for the examination of the Auditor General and this constitutes, I believe, an adequate safeguard that the authorizations respecting the allotments are in order. I believe the precedent should be maintained that minutes of committees of cabinet should not have to be tabled.

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, perish the thought that I should be a party to an undesirable precedent, particularly since I expect to be on that side of the house within a matter of months.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I shall withdraw the motion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Carleton is on a question of privilege.

Mr. Benson: He is not. On a question of privilege I would like to say we would not welcome the hon. member to the Liberal party on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Can we have order, please?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is very difficult for the Chair to follow the exchange between the minister and the hon. member. I gathered that the minister was rising on a question of privilege, and I am not sure whether he proposes to pursue the matter. If not I will recognize the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the minister will not be here in this house at that time. I wish to withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker, and I will take other steps to show the appalling abuse of the contingency fund.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion be dropped?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DETERMINATION OF JURISDICTION RESPECTING OFF-SHORE DRILLING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the announcement of the decision of the government of the province of Quebec to grant prospecting rights in the gulf of St. Lawrence to certain French oil companies, does the government agree with this course of action proposed by the province of Quebec and, if not, what action does the federal government intend to take?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the question is well put, for I do not know exactly what happened in that area between Quebec and France. The reports I have seen in the papers, I think, would not allow the question to be asked in the manner that the hon. member did.

As regards the continental shelf of the gulf of St. Lawrence, the situation at present is as follows: the two levels of government, the central government and the provincial governments, claim to have jurisdiction.

Both governments, Ottawa and the provinces, have issued exploration permits on the continental shelf of the gulf and some of these are competitive.

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the minister has to do with the question of the boundaries of the St. Lawrence river and the gulf of St. Lawrence. Has the government considered conferring with the provinces of Quebec, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick to define the boundaries of the St. Lawrence river between the river and the gulf of St. Lawrence?

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is a legal matter which is now under study. The Prime Minister announced a few weeks ago that he was preparing a report on this. I feel we should wait till he has brought it before the house.

[English]

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, now that the Supreme Court of Canada has ruled on the reference made to it with regard to off-shore mineral rights in respect of the British Columbia coast, is the federal government negotiating with the provinces concerning the sharing of the proceeds from these resources, as I think the Prime Minister indicated the government would do?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what the Prime Minister said; that is, that he would have an announcement to make on that subject.

Mr. Starr: In due course.

Mr. Pepin: In due course.

FISHERIES

POSSIBLE RADIOACTIVE CONTAMINATION FOLLOWING PLANE CRASH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the statement by a British authority, Dr. Anthony Michaelis, to the effect that the radioactive plutonium at the site of the crashed United States plane near Thule, Greenland may create a very serious danger to the fishing grounds off Newfoundland, may I ask the minister whether his department or any other department of the government is examining this potential danger and, if so, whether any action has been taken to prevent this if it is scientifically possible to do so?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, first may I advise the hon. member that the statement made by Dr. Michaelis as reported by the Canadian Press is rather hypothetical. He said "if". It is not really based on actual fact.

After consultation with the experts of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada and the radiation protection division of the Department of National Health and Welfare, the oceanographers of the Fisheries Research Board have assured me that there is no possibility of any significant radioactive contamination, as a result of this incident, of any waters used by Canada or Canadian fisheries.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister whether any scientific team from his or any other department of government has visited the site of the unfortunate accident in order to assure themselves that every possible measure is being taken to prevent any danger to the fishing grounds off Newfoundland.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I cannot assure the hon. member that such a team has visited the site, but as the hon. member is well aware my officials as well as the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada and the radiation protection division of the Department of National Health and Welfare have been in contact with the proper authorities in this regard. Also, as I have stated, we have the assurance that there is no possibility of any radioactive reaction in waters this side of the Atlantic.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What does the minister mean by his statement to the effect that the Atomic Energy Control Board has been in touch with the proper authorities? Does he mean the government of the United States and, if so, what branch of that government?

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to tell the hon. member what branch, if any, of departments of the United States government has been contacted, but I am aware that the Atomic Energy Control Board has been following this incident since the bombs were dropped, and we have the assurance from them to the effect that there is no danger to our Canadian waters.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR BILINGUAL COMMISSIONAIRE AT BUILDING ENTRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the fact that the offices of his department are now perfectly reorganized in a new building, could the hon. minister tell us whether he intends to replace sergeant No. 337, who greets us at the entrance to this building, by a bilingual commissioner?

Mr. Speaker: This question could be put on the order paper.

[English]

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I regret his continued absence from the house; I trust it is not due to internal affairs. As this question is related to the question I asked the Acting Prime Minister yesterday there may, however, be an answer to it today. When Prime Minister Harold Wilson of the United Kingdom visits Ottawa following his talks in Washington will the subject of a 1968 commonwealth prime ministers' conference be on the agenda for discussion?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Wilson is coming to visit the Prime Minister, and I think it is reasonable to assume that this particular question will be among the very many items to be discussed.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO STAMP COMMEMORATING COL. JOHN McCRAE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether his department has decided to issue a stamp to commemorate the late Colonel John McCrae, a doctor, lawyer and poet, who gave the world the poem "In Flanders Fields".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, I think the Postmaster General is ready to give an answer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps he could give the answer in writing.

TRADE

TOBACCO—IMPORTS FROM SOUTH AFRICA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether he is now in a position to tell the house what government policy is to be in respect of tobacco presently being imported duty free from South Africa; and has the government as yet completed its investigation to ascertain whether all this tobacco came from the Union of South Africa? I ask this question because government policy in this regard will affect plans of Canadian tobacco growers having regard to the size of this year's crop. This must be decided now. A major tobacco company may well be suffering injury because of some uncertainty as to the source of this tobacco.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Oxford, I wish to state that there has only been a single importation of tobacco from South Africa, that there has not been any lately and that the department is carrying on its investigation, in order to give a more elaborate answer to the hon. member's long speech.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REPRESENTATIVES OF TERRITORIAL COUNCILS AT DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister has personally intervened to have an elected member of the Yukon legislative council, the member for Whitehorse East, seated as an accredited observer at the constitutional conference, will the Acting Prime Minister assure the house that representatives of the Yukon legislative council will be invited to participate in future conferences of this nature?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest the hon. member is asking for a statement of policy, and I doubt whether the question can be asked in this form.

Mr. Nielsen: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the assurances the Prime Minister has given this house that direct representation will be had in respect of elected representatives of the two northern councils, and now that one such representative has been seated, will the Acting Prime Minister assure us that this policy of the government will be followed in the future?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to refer this question to the Prime Minister, as I know how important it is to members of the territorial councils and to my hon. friend.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEASURES TO COMBAT PROBLEMS CAUSED BY ALCOHOLISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who has just stepped out of the chamber, but perhaps some other member of the government will take it as notice. What consideration is the government giving to combating the increasing health and welfare problems caused by alcoholism in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a very general question which I believe should be placed on the order paper. If there is special urgency in respect of this matter the hon. member might give notice and it can be discussed later.

Mr. Mather: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSED MEASURE TO REDUCE DOWN PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister responsible for housing. Can he give the house an explanation as to why he is holding up the appearance on the order paper of the resolution preceding the bill to amend the National Housing Act to reduce down payments, which he promised would be put on the order paper on Monday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suppose the question is in order, although it does contain an allegation and to that extent it would not be acceptable. However, I think the minister should be allowed to reply.

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, because of the very important conference which has been going on we have not as yet had a cabinet meeting this week. We will probably have one tomorrow, at which time I will bring this matter to the attention of the cabinet. As the hon. member knows, resolutions have to be approved by cabinet and the Prime Minister. Let me assure him that it will be on the order paper very soon.

Mr. Starr: You could do it at eight o'clock in the morning, before the conference starts, if it is that important.

INDUSTRY

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—DESIGNATION UNDER AREA INCENTIVE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry. In view of the very nice personal letter the minister sent me about designated areas, may I ask him whether this means he is going to reconsider the designation of Saint John under the area incentive program.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXPO '67

INQUIRY AS TO DISPOSITION OF ASSETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. The government has announced that Robert Shaw will preside over the winding up of Expo '67. In this regard will the government inform the house what priority is to be given to the settling of the multi-million dollar deficit associated with Expo '67, what claims the government will make on the assets of Expo '67—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Coates: —and whether the government will derive any benefits from the continuing version of Expo '67 that will be operated by the city of Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

POLLUTION

TAX INCENTIVES TO PLANTS INSTALLING CORRECTIVE DEVICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the very serious situation, regarded by many as worse than water pollution, will the Minister of Finance say whether tax incentives will be extended to control air pollution?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered two or three questions of this kind recently, and I would refer the hon. gentleman to Hansard. I do not have the exact references.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR MEETING OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the acting government house leader. I am receiving copies of letters addressed to the chairman of the parliamentary committee on northern affairs. I wonder whether the government house leader could discuss this matter with the chairman of the committee on northern affairs so these representations might be heard.

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): I have taken notice of the hon. member's suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE WITHDRAWAL OF CANADIAN FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is the government giving consideration to withdrawing Canada's air and land forces from Europe?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question should really be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence. As has been explained on numerous occasions, the policy which was set out in the white paper of 1964 indicated a certain reduction in the forces that we would have in Europe. This has been the policy in the years since and is still the policy of the government. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence are now in the process of working out with our NATO allies what the contribution will be for the next year, and a projection for the next five-year period.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CANCELLATION OF SCHOOL PROJECT, CAPE CROKER RESERVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. What action has the minister taken with regard to the separate school situation on the Cape Croker Indian reserve, to which I drew attention yesterday?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that this is a repetition of a question that was asked yesterday, and the suggestion was made that it might be placed on the order paper or that the hon. member might give notice for consideration of the question at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Loney: With due respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that since the health and welfare of approximately 90 Indian children depends on immediate action by the Department of Indian Affairs, the matter is indeed urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Certainly, and I will take that into account in making sure that the matter is given preference and priority at the time of adjournment.

FISHERIES

MARITIME PROVINCES—REGISTRATION OF LOBSTER FISHING VESSELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. On February 6 the minister released a notice that all lobster fishing boats in the maritime provinces must be registered by the Federal Department of Fisheries as the various lobster fishing districts opened for fishing in 1968.

Can the minister assure the house that the required serial numbered licence plates are now available, and that the implementation of this legislation will not curtail lobster fishing in district No. 3 which opens on March 1?

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the registration plates are available, and no lobster fisherman will be deprived of his right to fish lobsters if he qualifies for a licence due to the fact that there might be delays in supplying the plates. Our officers in the field have been instructed accordingly, and I am positive there will be no delays in the distribution of the plates.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the opposition in some areas to lobster fishing on Sundays, could he advise us whether anything has been done by his department to discover the feelings of fishermen in various areas with regard to this matter?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have issued instructions to officers in the field that when fishermen apply for their 1968 lobster fishing licences they should be asked whether they are in favour of or against lobster fishing on Sundays. I can assure the hon. member that if it is the wish of the majority of lobster fishermen that no lobster fishing should be carried out on Sundays, the regulations will be amended to that effect.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Fisheries. Considering the fact that industries throughout this country may operate on Sundays, how can government legislation prevent any man, whether in the fishing industry or otherwise, from working on Sundays?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest this is now a legal matter, and I am not sure whether the minister should give a legal opinion at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIRPORTS

INQUIRY AS TO MUNICIPAL USE OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence, notice of which I gave him yesterday. Is the government giving consideration to a change in policy with regard to the use by municipalities of airports of the Department of National Defence where civilian services are being phased out?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that he is now asking for a statement of policy which normally should be made by a minister on motions.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED RECRUITING OF SENIOR OFFICERS IN UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State whether a recruiting team of the Public Service Commission is now in Washington seeking senior officers for the public service of Canada, and if so, what is the reason for it.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Public Service Commission that indeed there is such a recruiting team in the United States specifically seeking classification specialists who are required by the bureau of classification revision, and that this was undertaken only when it became very clear that it was impossible to fill these needs from labour resources within Canada.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Is it a fact that the Department of National Defence has a team of its own seeking to recruit employees?

AIR CANADA

WINNIPEG—TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES FROM BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the continued practice of Air Canada of transferring certain of its employees out of Winnipeg, can the minister say why he takes the position that this is a matter exclusively for negotiation between the union and the company?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would think the question as asked is not in order. The hon. member is asking why the minister has taken a certain position, and this cannot be considered an acceptable question.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest the hon. member may ask a related question, in view of the fact that I have not accepted the first one.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the Minister of Transport whether the often stated government policy regarding transfers from the Winnipeg air base still stands?

Mr. Hellyer: I did not say yesterday that this was a matter to be negotiated exclusively between the company and the union. I said I was continually involved, and I am involved, because the government is interested in this matter and its relationship to the policy which was laid down by the government and the undertaking given by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the minister that he is attempting to reply to a question which has been ruled out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but the minister did not answer my question, which was in order. Would the minister try again?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the two questions were related in a sense, and I attempted to answer my hon. friend's question by saying that the government is interested in and concerned about the question of transfers because it is related to the undertaking of the Prime Minister which, as I said, would be fulfilled. For that reason I have been involved in negotiations with both parties. But, as I said yesterday, I am circumscribed by the fact that there is a contract between them, and this is a limitation on the flexibility which is available to me, representing as I do the government interest in the question.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF PREMIUM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

Can the hon. minister tell the house whether the cheese subsidy will apply in 1968?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, should the dairy policy be modified, any change will be announced in the house in the normal fashion.

[English]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. Has he any plans under consideration to increase the efficiency of the dairy policy as it now affects farmers with small herds?

Mr. Greene: As the hon. member may be aware, early in January the dairy commission announced its policy with respect to quota entitlement, which gave consideration to the owners of smaller herds and reduced the minimum quota considerably to enable the owners of smaller herds to continue to qualify for subsidy.

SHIPPING

HALIFAX—SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF PALLETIZING FACILITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask him whether he can advise the house and the people who use the port of Halifax whether the National Harbours Board and the officials of the various government agencies involved in the port have co-operated in any way with the Danish Maersk lines in the very successful palletizing trials which were carried out last week, and if it is the intention of the government, because of the apparent success and tremendous savings brought about by this facility, to extend it to the rest of the piers in the port of Halifax.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether this is a matter of urgency. Perhaps the question might be placed on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR TRANSPORT

VANCOUVER—INQUIRY INTO C.P.A. PLANE ACCIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether an investigation will be carried out into the accident of the C.P.A. jet liner in Vancouver early this morning.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am sure we all regret this tragedy but at the same time give thanks that it was not more serious and that there was not a greater loss of life than was the case. A headquarters team of investigators has been dispatched from the department to investigate the accident, and will be on the scene later today. A local Department of Transport investigation team was on the scene shortly after the accident, and is still there. A full report will be made public in due course. The 707 and its crew was leased by Canadian Pacific Airlines from Standard Airways of Seattle, as my hon. friend probably knows.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

YUKON—INQUIRY AS TO WHITE PAPER ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and ask him when he expects to table the white paper on constitutional reform with respect to the Yukon.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I expect to table it when it is completed.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister put aside his flippancy for a moment and give the house an indication of when that might be?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I am not attempting to be flippant, but the hon. member has pressed this matter while knowing all along that we have embarked in its preparation. I should like to have the economic report which is presently being prepared in the Yukon before we proceed with or finalize the constitutional report, and this may take a month or two.

Canadian Policy on Broadcasting

BROADCASTING

IMPLEMENTATION OF CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Secretary of State) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-163, to implement a broadcasting policy for Canada, to amend the Radio Act in consequence thereof and to enact other consequential and related provisions.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, on the motion for third reading of this bill I wish to move in amendment that the house go back into committee of the whole to correct a slight mistake in clause 28. This clause was not discussed in detail in committee of the whole. The trouble is that under this bill, when a licence is granted to the operator of a community antenna television operation he is required by the terms of the licence to maintain the integrity of all the programs received. He cannot alter a program. In fact he will not know what is coming over the air, since he is only a receiving station.

Many of the C.A.T.V. operators are licensed to receive programs from the United States. They must maintain the integrity of the program being broadcast. If some candidate or a supporter or opponent of a referendum in Canada chooses to advertise over a station in the United States, the program will come over community television in Canada and the operator can be brought into court under this clause 28 as it now stands.

I should like to move, in committee of the whole, that certain words be deleted from clause 28. The words which cover C.A.T.V. operators are "a receiving undertaking". I have been told that the situation is covered by the Canada Elections Act, section 99, subsection (2) which reads:

> Every person who, with intent to influence persons to give or refrain from giving their votes at an election, uses, aids, abets, counsels or procures the use of any broadcasting station outside of Canada, during an election, for the broadcasting of any matter having reference to an election, is guilty of an illegal practice and of an offence against this act punishable on summary conviction as provided in this act.

This section does not cover the case of a citizen of the United States or a citizen of some other country than Canada, going on the air in the United States in an effort to influence the voting within 48 hours somewhere in Canada. In order to delete this phrase from clause 28, which refers directly to C.A.T.V. operators, I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona:

[Mr. Laing.]

> That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole for the purpose of reconsidering clause 28 thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. Will anyone wanting to stand in support of calling in the members, please stand.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Cowan) which was negatived on the following division:

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the house but a few minutes to point out some of the views of the official opposition on this measure. I promise I will not go through any convolutions in which the members of a party support a motion and then do not vote for it, as the N.D.P. did when they forced a vote upon us within the last few minutes.

This measure, in the form of the white paper on broadcasting, came before the standing committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts in December, 1966. That committee made its report to the house in mid-March, 1967. Its proceedings will be found running from page 1342 to 2117 of the committee reports. Subsequently the measure was debated on second reading in the house and was further considered in committee of the whole. At least 90 per cent of the debate that took place on this very vital topic cannot be quarreled with, and speaking on behalf of my colleagues I can say we took as responsible a position as we possibly could toward a subject that is extraordinarily vexatious to a great number of Canadians. I will deal with the points of vexation a little later.

If we have a quarrel it is with the government. First and foremost there was its delay in appointing top officers to the C.B.C., and more particularly in filling the office of president, sometimes described as the second most important position in the country, second only to that of the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Many months ago Mr. Ouimet indicated that he wished to retire as president, and we were confronted with the suggestion that his replacement should be appointed only after this bill had received parliamentary approval. Mr. Ouimet finally solved that dilemma by saying he was moving out willy-nilly, and subsequently new officers were appointed.

I suggest that during that time, when C.B.C. employees were under a great deal of stress, the government allowed to remain at the top level of the C.B.C. a vacuum which could only disturb the morale of the employees and prevent the C.B.C. from carrying out its responsibilities to the country. We had the example—and the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) tabled the correspondence the other day—of defiance continuing from within the middle ranks of the C.B.C.

To reinforce that point I refer to page 6127 of Hansard for January 29 and the text of a letter sent by a Mr. Claude Sylvestre, Secretary of the Association of Producers, to the Secretary of State on November 6. I quote from that letter because I think it is symptomatic of the viewpoint of some within the public service of Canada, within the C.B.C., who are defiant not only of their own top people but of the will of parliament. In his letter Mr. Sylvestre wrote:

> We believe that our prime role, as producers, is to reflect and to interpret the living reality in a country. We do not believe that official government thinking is necessarily the kind of objective thinking which should be the basis of political and cultural information.

Note the clever use of the word "government", when he should really be saying that parliamentary thinking does not reflect the views of our country.

> The C.B.C. is obliged to bring to light all forms of power in the sense that it must allow a confrontation of forces and debates on the relative values of any given society. If we are to be the vehicle for or to promote one political line then we are willingly conniving with an organ of propaganda.

What political line are they being asked to promote, Mr. Speaker? I think the political line, if that is the expression that must be used, is nothing less than the unity and self-preservation of the country that all of us are sworn to serve in this chamber.

I continue to quote from the letter:

> We have at all times refused to do so; we refuse to do so today, when what you are saying is in short that the Left will be tolerated on the condition that it be reactionary. And in this way our function as producers will remain while governments come and go.

That, sir, is a clear statement of defiance by an element that, for its numbers, has great importance in promoting ideas on a country-wide basis or on a very large regional basis.

The Secretary of State in what I thought was a good reply, dated November 10, quoted from Mr. R. B. Bennett who brought the original legislation dealing with the C.B.C. before this house many years ago. She quoted Mr. Bennett as follows:

> Properly employed radio can be a most effective instrument in nation-building with an educational value difficult to estimate.

Farther on she quoted Mr. Bennett as follows:

> Without such control radio broadcasting can never become a great agency for the communication of matters of national concern and for the diffusion of national thoughts and ideas and without such control it can never be the agency by which national consciousness may be fostered and sustained and national unity still further strengthened.

Sir, the word down through the years, from the wisdom of that particular statesman through royal commissions, committees of inquiry, parliamentary committees and the like, has been that the C.B.C. can be and should be a great weapon in fostering national identity and national purpose. I only wish that the Secretary of State had been a little less ladylike in replying to Mr. Sylvstre's group and had told them where to go in very short order. I think this was defiance. Further, I think it was defiance that perhaps the Secretary of State and the government brought on themselves simply by failing, when Mr. Ouimet became a lame-duck president, to appoint somebody who would step in and clear up that very gray and uncertain area that exists between top management of the C.B.C. and the group at the producers' level.

While the government has procured two people who in the long run will undoubtedly prove their value and service as the chief broadcasting executives of the C.B.C., still there must be something seriously amiss with the corporation if those appointments could not have come from within its own ranks. I think the C.B.C. should be a place where people can embark on long-term careers, starting at no matter what level but always having the chance to reach the top. It is a matter of personal regret to me, considering the series of crises which have beset the C.B.C. over the last few years, that apparently nobody at the top level was considered of sufficient merit to be appointed to either one of the two topmost posts.

Changes were made in this bill during its consideration in committee of the whole, and I would be remiss if I did not thank the Secretary of State for being amenable to three changes that seemed of particular interest and value to my colleagues and myself. Changes were made in clause 2 covering the important declaration of principles dealing with the national system and the private system. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) proposed one of the changes and I a second, both of which were accepted, and for that we are grateful to the minister.

A change was also made in the penalty clause. To us it seemed important that we should not stigmatize this industry, and I think the minister made an obeisance to common sense when she agreed to that change.

The major change was the deletion of clause 47, which had been the subject of considerable palaver behind the scenes, thus saving days and days of debate. Again the official opposition is grateful to the minister for deleting that clause dealing with five-year budgets. We must be jealous of the right of parliament to exercise control, and therefore I think that by and large we have mollified the worst features in this legislation.

• (3:50 p.m.)

However, I believe there are still areas of weakness which remain in what we as a parliament have done. I do not think we have met head on the expansion problem, the extension of radio and television service to Canadians who either do not receive it now in any shape or form or who receive only one type of service and would like the advantage of having freedom of choice. I do not believe we have resolved the concern of many Canadians who believe there should be more effective control within the public system on the part of top management with regard to those who are on the production line. Indeed, the minister herself has referred to rotten management within the C.B.C. In that area we can only hope that Dr. Davidson, a good sensible Nova Scotian, and Mr. Picard from Montreal will be able to come to grips rapidly with problems which of this type have been raised by several hon. members.

Third, I do not think we have really solved the problem of parliamentary control of the budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Millions of Canadians have never had the idea sold to them properly—indeed, many parliamentarians have not either—why the corporation should use such a large amount of public funds. These three areas of challenge face the new officers. As I say, the Conservative opposition wish them well in the discharge of their duties. However, until we can see the results in these three areas we still have to be convinced that this legislation is in the best interests of the public.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the opening observation of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) about the division. It seems to me that a comment of this nature is the last thing which should come from the ranks of the official opposition. The government has put off, temporarily I hope, the question of five-year financing for the C.B.C. The minister said there will be a separate bill on that subject later. In the interval I hope that members who have some doubts about five-year financing will use the time to frame other proposals. Five years may be too long a period but I think one year is too short. Some period such as two years or three years will, I trust, be agreed upon eventually. I think the important point in respect of any large organization, whether it be the C.B.C. or indeed another government department or crown corporation, is that for both capital and operating purposes the financing should be for a period of longer than one year.

There is a tendency here to do things simply because they have been done in the past. It has been our custom to examine and pass the estimates of every department and agency each year. I hope that in time this practice may change. It would be no great blow to democracy. I point out to hon. members that in the United States the state legislatures meet only once every two years and pass the budget then for that period. In the United Kingdom the British Broadcasting Corporation never comes to parliament for money because it has other means of financing. I believe that any organization as big as the C.B.C. or, indeed, as big as many government departments, could operate more efficiently if the officials knew what the financing of the organization would be for a period of two or three years. We may reach the point where the estimates of departments, agencies and crown corporations will go on a three-year cycle. This would mean that we would examine one-third of them each year. Perhaps this would mean that there would be a more searching examination than there is at the present time.

When we deal with estimates here we do not actually go into the separate items in great detail. We use the time devoted to the consideraion of the estimates as an opportunity to make speeches on various subjects. We all do this and it seems to be a defensible practice. But the actual detailed spending receives very little close scrutiny. I suggest that in future we might adopt this other method of operation. I look forward to the proposed government bill in respect of long-term financing for operating costs and any counter measure which other members may have.

There are two other points with regard to the bill to which I should like to refer briefly. There is the clause which urges Canadian broadcasters to use Canadian talent and creative resources. I hope that this will be considered seriously by the broadcasters and by the new council. I have discussed this matter in detail before so I will not do so again today. However, the production centres of Hollywood, New York and London are full of Canadians who have gone there because there were not sufficient employment opportunities in Canada. They are always very grateful for the training they received in this country on the broadcasting networks and in our theatres. However, employment opportunities have not been present here because we have not been willing to spend sufficient money to keep them employed full time in their occupations. There is a very long list of Canadian actors, producers and writers who are employed in the United States and the United Kingdom. I hope this point will be considered seriously by the members of the council.

My final point has to do with the composition of the Canadian Radio-Television Council. Obviously the type of person appointed to this council is of the utmost importance. On both the board of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Board of Broadcast Governors we have had in the past very talented people. We have also had some people of very ordinary ability whose appointments were purely political. The new regulatory authority will have very great powers and it would seem to me that the persons appointed to this council should be of the very top calibre. I hope that in their selection political considerations will not be a major factor. I imagine that at the present time the government is trying to find the people who will take over the duties of the council. I hope the government will be successful in its efforts in this regard and will be able to fill these positions in less time than it took to find competent people for the C.B.C. The future of broadcasting in this country will be dependent upon these people.

The Acting Deputy Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Is the house ready for the question? Shall the motion carry?

Mr. Monteith: On division.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CALENDAR, FINANCIAL AND PREMIUM YEARS

Hon. J. J. Greene (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-24, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

[Mr. Prittie.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Monteith: No, Mr. Speaker, certainly not. We are waiting for an explanation from the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for having kept my hon. friends waiting for a few moments but I was detained in my office by a true blue supporter of the Conservative party who wanted to meet me.

Mr. Speaker, we are now on second reading of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. The main object of the bill is to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act with a view to allowing it to co-ordinate the deposit insurance granted under its terms with deposit insurance granted under any provincial deposit insurance plan.

Under the terms of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, which was passed earlier this year, the deposits entrusted to banks, trusts and loan companies incorporated under federal acts are insured within the statutory limits. The corporation is also authorized to issue insurance policies to institutions incorporated under provincial acts, with the agreement of the province of incorporation, the deposits entrusted to those institutions being insured to the same extent as those entrusted to federal institutions.

At the present time, the act requires that every deposit of a member institution shall be insured within the limits provided in the act. The corporation is not authorized to insure only certain deposits of the member institution to the exclusion of others. It cannot insure deposits in some provinces to the exclusion of deposits in other provinces.

Since the passage of this legislation earlier this year, the province of Quebec has established a deposit insurance plan which applies to all deposits accepted in Quebec by the institutions which accept deposits and transact business in that province. The administrative authority, the Quebec deposit insurance board, is also authorized to insure deposits accepted outside Quebec by institutions incorporated in Quebec.

In order to reduce to a minimum the duplication of coverage, costs and inspection between the federal and the provincial plans, in the case of an institution covered by both, discussions were held between officials of the federal government and of the government of the province of Quebec. This matter has also been discussed in June by officials during a federal-provincial meeting dealing with financial institutions. The agreement arrived at following these discussions was summed up in an exchange of letters between the Minister of Finance and the premier of Quebec, letters which have been tabled in the house on July 9. This bill is mainly intended to allow for the implementation of this agreement.

The following are the main provisions of the agreement: with regard to institutions incorporated in the province of Quebec, the Quebec deposit insurance board will insure deposits in the province, and the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will insure deposits outside of the province. With regard to institutions incorporated in the other provinces and exercizing their activities in Quebec, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, with the consent of the province of origin, will insure all deposits other than those made in Quebec, and the Quebec deposit insurance board will insure deposits made in Quebec. This provision requires that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation be authorized to insure not all but some of the deposits of a member institution, and it will be granted this power by the present amendment. The amendment will also allow the corporation to enter into agreements with the province of Quebec or, as the case may be, with the Quebec deposit insurance board, in order to co-ordinate the two plans. Those agreements will have to deal with several questions, such as the definition of the location of a deposit. The amendment will also enable the governor in council to pass regulations, as needed, in order to authorize the corporation to comply with the provisions of those co-ordinating agreements when they are not provided for in the legislation. There is also the authority to exchange information concerning provincial institutions insured both by the corporation and by the Quebec deposit insurance board.

Although the main object of the bill is to enable the Corporation to co-ordinate its insurance with the insurance of the Quebec deposit insurance board, the amendment has been drafted in general terms, so that similar arrangements may be concluded with any province which may have established a deposit insurance system.

As far as the federally chartered institutions are concerned, the federal government has already assumed the responsibility of setting up financial and control requirements. A very exhaustive system of regulation and control has been in force for a long time. Deposits entrusted to those institutions are insured under a statutory provision of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act. We therefore believe that each province should accept the control and insurance which apply to those institutions under federal legislation. The provinces should not add the insurance or the inspection provided for in their own legislation. The amendment applies therefore only to the insurance of provincial institutions and not to that of federal institutions.

During the discussions between officials, it was recognized that when a province adopts a deposit insurance scheme, the insurance of the institutions incorporated under provincial legislation can create problems only if, following a lack of premium revenue, the adequate reserves cannot be constituted, except over a long period of time. To remove that difficulty, it was agreed during the discussions that, provided the authorization is granted by parliament, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will be willing to grant short-term loans, against sufficient security, to a provincial agency entrusted with the administration of a deposit insurance scheme in order to allow that agency to meet short-term liquidity requirements. It was felt that this auxiliary supply of liquidity would enable the province to adopt and administer a scheme with lower reserves and revenue than would otherwise be necessary. It would be understood that these short-term loans would be consistent with agreements concluded between the corporation and the provincial agency and would be granted provided the province refrained from levying a tax or establishing a system of premiums which would cause expenses to federal chartered institutions as far as deposit insurance in the province is concerned, where deposits are already insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The amendment under consideration will permit the corporation to extend such short-term loans, subject to terms and conditions provided by the governor in council and to an agreement which will also have to be approved by the governor in council.

Another subject dealt with in the amending bill is technical; it would provide a better method than the one now provided in the act to assess the premium of any member institution for the year during which it becomes a member institution.

The amending bill describes the premium year as running from the first of May to the 30th of April of the next year and provides that, for the premium year during which an institution became a member institution, a premium on a prorata basis will be payable for the period of the premium year to run at the time the institution becomes member institution. This amendment provides a more equitable method than the one now in the act and will clear up any doubt as far as the premium payable for the first year of deposit insurance is concerned.

An amendment allows the corporation to approve methods for calculating the total amount of deposits serving as a basis for premiums. This provision has given rise to a few technical difficulties, since only deposits to a maximum of $20,000 per person with each institution are covered by deposit insurance. An institution must therefore co-ordinate its obligations toward every person individually, in order to know the exact amount of insured deposits for the calculation of premiums. In view of the practical problems raised by such calculations, it has been deemed advisable to allow the use of approximate methods. Under its regulations, the corporation recognizes an approximate method in calculating the appropriate total. Under a proposed amendment, the corporation is authorized to use or accept approximate methods which may prove suitable.

The bill contains a further amendment providing for the permanent insurance of deposits entrusted by a person to two or more member institutions which have merged. At the present time, the act provides for a maximum insurance of $20,000 per depositor in any institution. Where a depositor has deposits in more than one member institution, he can be covered in each of them up to a maximum of $20,000. Were the act not amended, the merging of two member institutions could result in reducing the maximum deposit insurance of $20,000 granted a depositor in each of the two merging institutions, to a $20,000 maximum insurance with the new institution after the merger. The amendment will provide that the deposits taken over at the time of the merger will remain insured in the new institution. Therefore, the depositor will not see his deposits go without insurance because of the merger. The money entrusted after the merger by a person to the remaining institution will not be insured as long as the total amount of the deposits of that person taken over at the time of the merger does not fall below $20,000.

At present, the corporation defines the term "deposit" by regulation, subject to the approval of the governor in council. A provision in the present bill will abolish the right to modify the definition of the term "deposit" by a regulation of the corporation after one year from the day when the present bill comes into force. Any change in the definition of the term "deposit" made after that date will require a special act of parliament. This provision was added to the bill by an amendment presented by the Senate committee on banking and commerce. The government believes that the present procedure in order to define the term "deposit" and change the definition will do for a while yet; therefore, it did not suggest that the definition of the term "deposit" be established by the act. However, the government is not opposed to this change in the bill as it allows the present method to remain in force for another year.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, the minister has given a lengthy outline of the technical changes proposed in this bill. I do not propose to deal with them at any length. I do, however, say to the house that I feel the government is very lax in not paying proper attention to the business of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Monteith: We had the same experience last Monday evening when we had to wait for some time for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to appear. Even though the minister said that this afternoon a prominent member of the Conservative party was visiting him, I suggest that he should have told that gentleman to get out of his office so he could attend the House of Commons. In fact, the minister should have been waiting here when we finished dealing with the previous piece of legislation. This situation prevailed the other evening. There are so many amendments in this bill to an act that has been in force a very short time that it indicates to me a lack of proper preparation before the original legislation was presented to the house. I am not going to say anything critical about the actual items in the legislation, but I think this could well be a lesson to the government to have its legislation better prepared so that it does not in future have to bring in amendments such a short time after the passage of the original legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time, at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could obtain the feeling of the house regarding item 49 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. S-29, an act to provide for the dissolution of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. I understand there was an agreement to adopt this measure without debate, but before having it formally called is it possible to obtain the feeling of the house on this matter?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of debating this matter but I would like to say a brief word on it. If at some future time Trans-Canada Pipe Lines wanted to construct another loop or undertake a similar endeavour to raise money, we might find it advantageous to have kept this link in operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps it would be better, before I allow the hon. member to continue, to put the motion before the house.

NORTHERN ONTARIO PIPE LINE CROWN CORPORATION

PROVISION FOR DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION

Hon. L. T. Pennell (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-29, to provide for the dissolution of Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, if the circumstances had been such that Trans-Canada Pipe Lines was going to loop its line, the financial arrangements would obviously have had to be different from those made in the case of the new company, the Great Lakes Pipe Line Company. I think it is for this reason it was agreed that this bill should not be brought forward until that decision was made. However, I am quite sure that the arrangements which will be made now for the financing of the construction of sections of the pipe line to be looped under the agreement which Trans-Canada has with the government will not be the same as those which were made previously to build the original Trans-Canada pipe line.

For this reason I agree to the passage of this bill. May I say, however, that in the years when the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation was in existence it was possible for the general public to ascertain the rate of the flow of gas, its quantity, and the tariff being charged because this information was contained in the report of the corporation which was presented to parliament through the minister. From this point of view the report served some purpose. I have always suggested that we should double the salary of the president of the crown corporation and I believe my suggestion has been supported on a number of occasions. The deputy minister has been acting as the president of the crown corporation and has received no remuneration for that job. I think the work performed by the deputy minister in supervising the operation of this pipe line company has served a purpose, and we hope that the time will come again when the government will find it necessary to re-establish this type of corporation to assist in the development of areas where the business community may not be able to raise the money required.

For this reason I am of the opinion that we will be doing a service by winding up the business of the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation. However, I should like to say that I believe it has served a valuable function and that its report to parliament has been particularly useful in that it made available some statistical information which might have been more difficult to obtain otherwise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Transfer of property and obligations.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, might the committee be informed what are the rights, property, liabilities and obligations which shall become rights, property, obligations and liabilities of Her Majesty? Are we becoming richer or poorer as a result of the dissolution of the corporation?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, this is a good occasion on which to thank the house for its co-operation in this matter. I might also take this opportunity to thank the people who have been serving in this corporation in the past. As the committee knows, they served without receiving any financial compensation, so I think the committee should offer a vote of thanks to them for having done so.

With respect to the financial situation in which my hon. friend is interested I may say that all administration costs of the corporation have been paid from the revenue received and there remained, as of December 31, 1966, a surplus of $693,484.80. Since that date the sum of $690,000 has been transferred to the crown. This morning I asked for a report on what was left in the piggybank. I do not have it with me but I believe it amounts to roughly $3,400. A cheque has already been prepared for the transfer of that money to the Receiver General of Canada. Since 1963 this corporation has only had annual meetings of the board of directors, made submissions to parliament in annual reports and carried out necessary correspondence.

• (4:30 p.m.)

As the hon. member for Timiskaming said, there is no reason therefore, for keeping this corporation in existence. If, however, the federal government decides to go into that kind of operation again it will be a simple matter to create a new corporation at that time. I feel that the present bill is a straight housecleaning operation and I am delighted to observe that my friends in the house agree.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Repeal of 1956, c. 10.

Mr. Barnett: In connection with clause 4 I should like to say I have a feeling that the repeal of chapter 10 of the 1956 statutes is to settle a few ghosts that occasionally haunt this chamber still and which some of us remember.

Mr. Pepin: I was deliberately taking a calm, mundane approach to the whole thing in order that I would not awaken those ghosts to which my hon. friend has referred so kindly.

FISH INSPECTION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CONTAINERS, PROCESSING, ETC.

Hon. H.-J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-27, to amend the Fish Inspection Act.

Mr. Crouse: Is the minister going to make a statement?

Mr. Robichaud: If the house agrees, it might be more appropriate for me to explain this bill in the committee of the whole. The bill consists of three minor amendments to the Fish Inspection Act. It might be more appropriate for me to give my explanation when the bill is before the committee of the whole.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks made by the Minister of Fisheries in connection with the proposed amendments to the Fish Inspection Act. Generally speaking, the people in the fishing industry, as represented by the Fisheries Council of Canada and in my home province of Nova Scotia by the Fish Packers Association, are in agreement with the amendments proposed in this bill. Quite rightly, the people engaged in the fishing industry are proud of the fact that they have in the past been shipping fancy quality fish and fish products not only to all parts of Canada and to the east and west coasts of the United States but also to the United Kingdom, Europe and Australia. It is in their best interests that the Fish Inspection Act be clear and concise so that it will assure quality fish being shipped by Canadian processors not only to their markets in Canada but to their export markets as well, and also that fish and fish products shipped into this country are up to our standards of quality.

The first amendment is of a minor nature. It simply expands the meaning of the word "container" as defined in the original Fish Inspection Act to include the wrapper or confining band used in the packing or marketing of fish. I can understand the necessity for this change in wording because marketing procedures for some types of fish have changed considerably since the 1949 Fish Inspection Act was introduced. I refer here to the packaging of dry salted cod which used to be marketed in large wooden boxes and sold in bulk quantity at the retail level. At the moment, confining bands are also used in the marketing of whole lobsters and crabs which have been cooked and frozen. I therefore agree with the proposal to amend this section. In clause 1, paragraph (h)—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member that on second reading he can only discuss the principle of the bill. He cannot refer to the details of the proposed amendments. I realize the hon. member wants to consider the matter in a general way. Perhaps we might allow him to continue his contribution, but at the same time he might keep in mind the confining of his remarks to the principle of the bill, so far as that is possible, rather than the details of the clauses.

Mr. Robichaud: It may be that the hon. member would prefer to go into these details when we are considering the bill clause by clause. As you have just said, Mr. Speaker, normally on second reading we do not refer to the individual clauses of a bill. The remarks which the hon. member is making now are really proper on either clause 2 or clause 1 of the bill.

Mr. Crouse: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your suggestion and I shall endeavour to confine my remarks to the principle of the bill. I had hoped to deal briefly, since I believe I will be the only speaker for our party on this measure, with some of the clauses. If you will bear with me, Mr. Speaker, since the clauses are not too contentious, I should like to refer to clause 1, paragraph (h), the amendment which proposes expanding the meaning of the word "processing" to include the canning of fish. This also seems to me to be a valid change since the canning of fish all over Canada plays a very important role in the marketing of our fisheries products. We have only to think of our vast salmon canning industry, as well as our tuna, lobster, herring, mackerel, clams, fish cakes, sardines and cat food, to realize the vast importance of the canning of fish to the industry as a whole. As we search for ever greater markets for our fish products, this aspect of the industry will play an ever increasing role. In my opinion, fish canning should be included under processing.

I now come to the final amendment in this short bill. This amendment changes the words in section 10 from the original wording, which was:

> No person shall import, export, sell for export or have in his possession for export any fish intended for human consumption unless the fish is wholesome and fit for human food.

The new wording of the section reads:

> No person shall import, export, sell for export or have in his possession for export any fish intended for human consumption that is tainted, decomposed or unwholesome.

I should like to state at once, Mr. Speaker, that I agree with the intent of this amendment. Certainly no one with any interest in the fishing industry could approve of shipping fish for human consumption that was tainted, decomposed or unwholesome.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The fishing industry at the present time is going through a very trying and difficult period. The high labour and operating costs which are affecting other industries are also having their effect on the fishing industry, and the situation is so desperate that only the strongest financially backed fishing companies can hope to survive. This condition has been brought about by an increase in fishing activity without a resultant expansion in our markets. Fish processors have also found it practically impossible to pass on their increasing costs of procuring, processing and packaging, and high interest, marketing and transport charges, when selling their product in competition with the product of other countries in which costs are obviously lower.

The fact that those who follow the Roman Catholic faith are no longer required to eat fish on Friday has had a damaging effect on the marketing of our fish and fish products, both in Canada and in the United States. When one considers these facts and realizes that Canadians per capita, only consume about 13 pounds of fish annually, one realizes the extent of the marketing problem that faces our industry.

Somehow Canadians must be made to realize that seafood offers them top value in today's high-priced economy. When you buy at the retail level one pound of fish fillets for 69 cents you are getting 16 ounces of protein without any fat or bone. There is absolutely no waste, and at the same time you are giving your family valuable minerals and protection against goiter through the iodine content of salt water fish. It is also well known that doctors recommend that those who are overweight or suffer from heart disease eat more fish and cut down on starchy, fatty foods.

With all these factors to encourage the increased consumption of fish there should be little difficulty in marketing our fish production. But apparently we have fallen down in our efforts to teach Canadians the proper methods of preparing fish. I know that the fisheries department, through its cooking school, has been active in this regard; fish recipes have been brought forward. Nevertheless, more must be done. Perhaps we should borrow a page from the French in this regard. They place more emphasis on the cooking and preparation of fish than on the cooking and preparation of meat in their diet. One of the first steps we must take is, of course, to ensure that our fish arrives at market in A-1 condition, and to ensure that is the purpose of this amendment.

While I do not disagree with the intent of the amendment there are one or two matters relevant to the act which I wish to point out to the minister.

The Fish Inspection Act of 1949 and the regulations under it cover a large area. The act has wide powers. From reading sections 4 and 5 we gain some idea of the heavy responsibilities that are placed on the shoulders of our fish inspectors. Section 4 of the act reads as follows:

4. (1) An inspector may at any time

(a) enter any place or premises, or any steamship, vessel or boat, or any railway car, truck, carriage, car, aircraft or other vehicle used for the carriage or storage of fish and may open any container that he has reason to believe contains fish,

(b) require to be produced for inspection or for the purpose of obtaining copies thereof or extracts therefrom any books, shipping bills, bills of lading, or other documents or papers, and

(c) take any samples for inspection.

Section 5 reads:

5. A person interested in a decision of an inspector in respect of any inspection, grading, marking or other matter under this Part or the regulations thereunder may appeal to the Minister in accordance with the procedure prescribed by the Governor in Council.

There is no provision in the act for an appeal, except to the minister. Of course, when you are dealing with a perishable product like fish this procedure takes much valuable time which one can ill afford.

Sections 6 and 7 of the act read as follows:

6. For the purposes of this Part, inspectors may administer oaths and take and receive affidavits, declarations and affirmations.

7. (1) Whenever an inspector believes on reasonable grounds that an offence against this Part or any regulation thereunder has been committed, he may seize all fish and containers by means of or in relation to which he reasonably believes the offence was committed.

(2) All fish and containers seized pursuant to subsection (1) may be detained for a period of two months following the day of seizure, unless during that period proceedings under this Part in respect of those fish and containers are undertaken, in which case the fish and containers may be further detained until such proceedings are finally concluded.

(3) Where a person is convicted of an offence against this Part or any regulation thereunder, the fish and containers by means of or in relation to which the offence was committed, upon such conviction, in addition to any penalty imposed, are forfeited to Her Majesty and may be disposed of as the Minister may direct.

These sections are pertinent to our discussion since they contain the only authority under which an inspector can enforce the changes which are contained in the new subsection 1 of section 10 as set out in clause 3 of the bill. For example, let us assume that an inspector takes a sample of fish for inspection and as a result of his analysis he condemns the shipment. We must ascertain the conditions under which the tests were made. Was the fish sample, for instance, taken on Friday afternoon? Was it placed in the trunk of a car and then conveyed to a fish inspection site on Saturday? The place may have been closed and it may be that the fish was not examined until the following Monday. Section 4(c) of the act says that the inspector may at any time "take any samples for inspection". But the act does not say whether he must put this sample on ice or take it immediately for inspection. These matters are not spelled out, and they should be spelled out more clearly. Also, if the inspector were vindictive he could put a fish processor out of business by being seemingly overzealous in carrying out his duties. This, of course, would be tantamount to an outright fraud perpetrated by the federal government on the fishing industry. I agree with the intent of this bill but I am concerned about abuses that might arise under the powers that are granted to fish inspectors.

In view of my concern and the concern of some men in the industry with whom I have discussed this matter, I think the minister should give thought to bringing in further amendments to this act. For example, if any action is taken by an inspector to condemn a shipment of fish, would it not be desirable to have the inspector's opinion substantiated by another inspector or by scientists of the Fisheries Research Board? I ask the minister, if a fisheries inspector says that a bacteria count is too high, what avenues are open for the fish packer or processor to make an immediate appeal, keeping in mind always the perishable nature of his product? Part of subsection (2) of section 7 says:

> All fish containers seized pursuant to subsection (1) may be detained for a period of two months—

Let me give an example of what I mean. A fisherman may land 30,000 pounds of swordfish worth something like 40 cents a pound to the fisherman—that represents a $12,000 catch—and during unloading one or two of the swordfish might be laid against an oil cask, thereby becoming contaminated. If those two fish were seized by an inspector and the entire catch were also detained, substantial loss to the fisherman and processor could be the result. I also wish to ask the minister what efforts his department is making at the retail level to ensure that fresh fish which has been so carefully packaged, inspected and shipped is kept on ice or under refrigeration prior to sale.

According to a return recently tabled the Department of Fisheries expended $34,525,757 on the administration of Canada's fisheries for a 12-month period. I believe this is money well spent upon one of our great primary industries. But if the minister would in future direct some of these funds toward solving the marketing problems which now confront the industry, and the training of competent fishermen, of whom there is a great shortage at the present time, I believe the money spent would bring even greater benefits to the industry.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, this is one of those bills which have a centennial flavour about them inasmuch as they were introduced in the Senate last year. It seems regrettable, bearing in mind the multitude of problems within the fishing industry, that the government should have been content to bring down a measure of such small significance as the one new before us. Naturally I am more familiar with the situation on the west coast, though having listened to the representations made by representatives of the Atlantic provinces in the house from time to time I have come to appreciate that the problems on the Atlantic coast, while different, are of no less importance.

I had hoped that the minister would have produced a bill covering more than one page and concerned with whether, for example, a container means something which has a wrapper or a confining band about it or whether we need to include the word "canning" in the act, although, as we all know, canning was being carried on in this country many years before most of us came to this chamber.

The minister himself appeared to recognize the insignificance of this bill in relation to the total consequences of his department's activities when he declined to make an introductory speech on second reading saying he would prefer to wait until we got into committee and were dealing with details. That is all the bill involves—details. We are asked to consider whether or not canning should be regarded as a part of processing, though it has been commonly understood for many years that this is so. Then we are asked to approve the addition of a few words relating to the import or export of fish, intended for human consumption, that is tainted, decomposed or unwholesome.

I am not saying that these items are unimportant in themselves. Certainly they are important; otherwise they would not be the subject of legislation. But in relation to the total responsibilities and activities of the department and the almost insurmountable problems which confront the fishermen of this nation I am surprised that the minister and the government should have been content to introduce in our centennial year a bill consisting of a single page of legislative provisions. Perhaps this accurately reflects the interest of the government in fisheries matters. Otherwise it would hardly have contented itself with making a few inconsequential amendments of the kind before us.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, while I am not directly involved in fish inspection or with the Department of Fisheries, I was very interested to note several years ago that the fishing regulations had not been changed for a long period of time. I think 1952 was the year in which they were last altered.

It was interesting to recall that when we were discussing the adoption of a bill of rights for Canada certain points which the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) made today were raised by him in that debate. I understood at that time that the method of fish inspection is, as the hon. member told us, about as undemocratic a process as can be found. An inspector may board a boat, seize it and hold the fish until they rot. He can do this without a warrant and the owner has no right of redress. He cannot claim compensation and is not entitled to take advantage of due process of law as granted by the Bill or Rights. It was certainly my hope that we could apply the safeguards contained in the Bill of Rights to the provisions of the Fish Inspection Act. This would prevent repetition of many of the abuses which have taken place in the past.

I agree with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) that the amendments proposed here are of a minor character. In one instance we are concerned only with a change in technology. In another there is a change in wording, presumably to take account of a decision in a court case which concerned this subject. A far more important amendment to the act which I had hoped the minister would introduce would concern itself with changes in the method of inspection. I am sure that the Bill of Rights could legitimately have been applied in this field so as to limit the authority of the inspection branch of the Department of Fisheries and see to it that the work is done with a greater sense of responsibility toward the various interests concerned. The bill before us provides as follows:

> No person shall import, export, sell for export or have in his possession for export any fish intended for human consumption that is tainted, decomposed or unwholesome.

Who is to decide whether fish is intended for human consumption or whether it is unwholesome? I presume it will be the inspectors, perhaps the same inspector we heard about previously who went aboard a ship and said: "This ship is in quarantine and I shall hold it until we decide what we shall do about it." I suppose it is the inspector who will decide what is to be done and the owner of the ship can either like it or lump it because there is no appeal from the inspector's decision. Changing the wording of the legislation will not make much difference if the process of inspection under the statute is abused. Charges were made a number of years ago, probably before the minister assumed his present office. He shakes his head. I can remember when the Bill of Rights was before parliament. The officials of the feed grain inspection service and of the fisheries inspection service were singled out as offenders every day of the year against the rights of individuals to a proper hearing. Before we make any changes I think we should have a report from the minister on the reason for these changes and on what the inspection branch is going to do. It seems to me that we are modifying the provisions on behalf of one side rather than providing protection.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I have heard of the serious situation in the fishing industry. I have talked to one hon. member who had an unsatisfactory personal experience in that industry within the last year, and I know that the industry is not in a healthy state. I agree that we must enforce regulations in order to ensure high standards, but in order to correct the abuses that existed previously I wonder whether we are giving the inspectors too big a weapon to use without the restrictions that would normally apply under other legislation. Here the right is being given to enter private premises, to seize books, to tie up a ship loaded with fish, and to grade fish to a certain standard. When a ship is tied up for a certain length of time its fish cargo becomes unmarketable. I think the act should be modified more extensively than is proposed by this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order. It is understood that if the Minister of Fisheries speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply briefly to some of the remarks that have been made. I agree that this bill is making only a minor change in the Fish Inspection Act, but I would like to remind the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that the fish inspection regulations were amended in 1967 after full consultation with the industry from coast to coast. For two years, 1965 and 1966, we held a series of meetings with representatives of the industry at different points from coast to coast. We also consulted fishermen's organizations and unions and discussed the proposed changes in the regulations with them. On May 11, 1967, an order in council was issued establishing the new regulations.

Hon. members have referred to incidents in the past, but I am not aware of cases where fishermen or dealers were deprived of their rights. Fish is a perishable product. It must be inspected at the time of landing. Section 13 of the new regulation provides:

> Where an owner of fish or fish containers or any person acting on his behalf is not satisfied with a decision of an inspector regarding the acceptability under these regulations of the fish or such containers, he may appeal the decision to the minister who shall order a reinspection.

In other words, it is stipulated that the minister shall at once order a reinspection, and the owner or his agent is entitled to be present at that reinspection which is usually carried out not by the officer who made the original inspection and seizure but by scientists or two or three other representatives of the inspection branch. We depend largely on our fish export markets and we must have fish inspection regulations which are effective and which will protect the Canadian fishing industry.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) referred to the difficulties which the industry is at present experiencing, particularly because of the devaluation of the pound sterling. This is a problem which affects mainly the salt fish industry. I would point out that we are now taking action at the retail level in areas where we have jurisdiction, and here I refer to the domestic market. In the larger cities we have officers who are in continuous touch with the retail market and who supervise the handling of fish. Only a month ago my department issued a booklet showing how to handle fish at the retail level, and it has become so popular that we have been forced to ask for additional reprints. This booklet clearly defines how fish should be handled at the retail level.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I ask that I be permitted to give any further explanations with respect to the bill when we study it clause by clause in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 1—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister for bringing my attention to the amended regulations. I would like to ask him how successful they have been. The complaint made some years ago concerned the lack of an appeal process, and I would like to know to what extent this process is now being used. I do not seek exact figures but I would like to know in what percentage of case it has been used.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, since the new regulations have been in force there have been three or four cases where there has been an appeal. In all these cases no further representations were made to me by the owner. This led me to believe that they were satisfied concerning the appeal. There has been one case, however, in respect of which the matter is before the court. I believe this is the only one. I would not be in a position to discuss it now because I do not believe the case has been settled. It is a fact that the industry is taking advantage of these new regulations, particularly in respect of the right of appeal. I must accept the appeal because the regulations state that the minister shall order a reinspection. This is done at once. There has never been any case where there has been undue delay in respect of the reinspection.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have a question I should like to direct to the minister while we are considering clause 1 and have the proposed amendments to the Fish Inspection Act before us. Could the minister tell the committee why it has not been considered desirable that the Fish Inspection Act should in any way apply to fish entering into interprovincial trade within the country? I understand that the act and the regulations apply only to fish products being imported into or exported from Canada. I have the impression that in the field of agricultural products, meat, for example, the federal inspection services operates in respect of meat moving across provincial boundaries. I wonder why the same regulation has not been considered necessary with regard to the movement of fish products.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I believe the fish inspection regulation applies in some cases to the movement of fish from province to province. However, the Fish Inspection Act is only effective in a province if approval by order in council of the province concerned has been received. I know that it applies in several provinces. In the Atlantic provinces, for example, where the fishing industry is of major importance, the fish inspection regulations have been accepted in most cases in respect of the movement of fish from province to province. The Fish Inspection Act is applicable in respect of fish moving from province to province if such fish is to be exported. This applies particularly with regard to freshwater fish which moves, for instance, from Manitoba to Ontario before it is exported.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Dealing in tainted, decomposed or unwholesome fish.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, in my earlier remarks I mentioned the necessity for the rapid examination of any fish that may be seized by an inspector. I know the minister is aware that this may not always be possible. I notice from the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for February 6 that work is being carried out to provide wharfage and a working area at St. Margaret's Bay for the Fisheries Research Board. I should like to ask the minister whether this new branch of the Fisheries Research Board on the Atlantic coast between Halifax and my home town of Lunenburg is to be equipped to handle samples of fish seized by an inspector so that the examination could be speeded up. Will this branch be able to certify as to the freshness and wholesomeness of the sample or in effect approve the inspector's original contention that it should be rejected? Is it the intention of the department to utilize this new branch of the Fisheries Research Board in this manner?

Mr. Robichaud: The inspection is not normally done by the Fisheries Research Board. It is done by the fish inspection branch of the Department of Fisheries. However, there have been cases involving dispute concerning the decision taken by the fish inspection branch when samples have been sent direct to the board, for example, to confirm bacteria counts or for other major reasons. I can well understand the concern of the hon. member that there should be very little time elapse between when the samples are taken and when the inspection takes place.

At different points along the coast close to major fish landing points we have fish inspection laboratories where inspections are carried out. We have received very few complaints. In fact I do not know of any since we established the new inspection laboratory on the northeast coast of New Brunswick, from where I had received some complaints in the past. There are four major fish centres in that particular area. Since that new laboratory has been established we have received no complaints from the industry concerning delays in respect of inspection of samples taken by our officers.

Mr. Crouse: I realize that the minister may not have all the information at hand in order to answer this question. However, I should like to know the number of inspection centres available at the present time in the four Atlantic provinces, for example.

Mr. Robichaud: I do not have the details but I will obtain them for the hon. member. I know there are a number of centres. We have a central laboratory in Halifax. This is the central laboratory for the eastern division. We have one at Shediac, New Brunswick, and three or four in Nova Scotia. There is one at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. Should the owner not be satisfied with inspections at local laboratories he may take advantage of the central laboratory in Halifax. He may be represented there or appear himself to witness the inspection.

Mr. Crouse: As I mentioned earlier, some people in the industry are concerned about the clause which states that any fisheries inspector may take any samples for inspection. Apparently there have been instances where samples have been picked up and have been placed in the trunk of the inspector's car on one afternoon and not delivered to the Halifax inspection centre until the following day. The minister is well aware that if there had been any doubt about the quality of the sample when it was taken, for example, on Wednesday afternoon, it certainly would have deteriorated by Thursday morning when it was delivered to the inspection laboratory in Halifax. I wonder whether any method could be instituted which would speed up this inspection service or whether any teeth could be put into this clause which would ensure that samples picked up for inspection are properly iced and immediately taken to the inspection centre. This seems to be a very valid concern on the part of some of the fresh fish producers of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, there may have been such incidents before the new regulations were introduced. The new regulations which were passed by order in council dated May 11, 1967, I believe were implemented around July 1 of that year. Since then I have not received any complaints. Our officers are instructed that if they are handling fresh fish the fish must be kept well iced and delivered to the inspection centre with the least possible delay. If they are handling frozen fish the fish must be kept frozen. So I do not see any problem. If they are handling samples of canned fish there is no problem, because there can be a delay between the time the samples are taken and the time when they are inspected in the laboratory.

• (5:20 p.m.)

This is a matter which was fully discussed with the fisheries associations of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and other provinces. As these matters were discussed I now feel free to say that such problems no longer exist as a result of the co-operation we have received. Our inspection officers have had very strict orders to abide by the instructions they have received to this effect.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REGULATIONS AND ORDERS IN COUNCIL

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence) moved:

That certain regulations and orders in council relating to the unification of the Canadian Armed Forces laid before the house on Thursday, February 1, 1968, be referred to the standing committee on national defence.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention to delay the passage of this motion or to comment in detail, but I should like to point out that this practice of the government in taking action to refer a subject to a committee for examination is a practice that should be extended. Let me point out that in 1964 the standing committee on privileges and elections was unable to complete its study, apart from a consideration of the Canada Elections Act, because the session came to an end. It did make a report and certain recommendations to the effect that the committee be set up again at the earliest possible time during the following session. We have heard nothing about this since. Likewise, the committee on Indian affairs held several meetings and attempted to obtain authorization to visit a number of Indian communities. It did not get that authorization before that session ended. That committee hopefully thought the government would take the initiative to refer the same subject matter to the committee again. This has yet to happen.

I hope the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) can persuade his colleagues, at least those who are interested in the business of the country rather than a certain election, to see that some action is taken in respect of these two vitally important matters. I refer particularly to the subject matter considered by the committee on privileges and elections and the subject matter referred to the committee on Indian affairs. One of these matters is very important to me. It is more important to me than regulations and orders resulting from the unification of our armed forces.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two brief comments. During a meeting of the defence committee some seven or eight months ago we were told about the urgency of adopting the unification bill. A Liberal majority on that committee prevented us from hearing all the witnesses we wished to call on the basis that the unification bill was an urgent matter the government wished to conclude. The government wanted to get the bill passed in order to end uncertainties in the armed forces. At this time, some seven or eight months later, we are presented with regulations necessary to make some of the provisions of that bill effective. The bill itself was only proclaimed on February 1 of this year, just a week ago.

It is very clear that the urgency suggested by the government at that time was merely a smokescreen to hide the facts in order that the measure could be passed as quickly as possible without hearing all the evidence of the witnesses. This is a perfect example of steamroller tactics, as demonstrated clearly by subsequent events.

I should now like to ask the minister how soon he proposes that the committee will meet to consider this matter and whether he has in mind that if the committee objects to some of these provisions the government will change the regulations. Is this motion designed purely for show and intended only to fulfil an undertaking given at the time the committee considered the unification bill?

Reference to Committee on National Defence

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must remind the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to know what provisions there are for those who leave the service because they do not wish to serve in a unified force. I have in mind those who may be serving the last half of a final five year re-engagement period who no longer wish to remain in the forces. Will they lose those benefits which would otherwise accrue to them if they had served the full term, leave benefits and the like?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must again advise hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the time the committee will meet I must say this is out of my hands and in the hands of the steering committee. We have accepted the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) that there should be a joint meeting of the committees on external affairs and defence to discuss NATO and NORAD commitments. As a result of the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) my predecessor referred the subject matters of certain orders in council to the committee. When the request was made it was suggested by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I believe, that the regulations would not be changed in principle as a result of integration.

A question was raised by the hon. member for Calgary North regarding the time required to rewrite regulations and orders, the implication being that since we had only produced them there was no urgency. I would like to point out that Queen's Orders and Regulations represent something like 1,000 pages. Most of them had to be rewritten in terms of the new structure of the forces; they had to be translated into French and they had to be printed. This, of course, takes time. In this particular instance only eight orders in council will be referred to the committee, as was requested. Therefore I think we are simply honouring a commitment. When the committee will meet is not at my command but I am trying to expedite matters in this respect. The procedure we are adopting today was suggested by an hon. member on the other side of the house and I accepted it.

[Mr. Harkness.]

• (5:30 p.m.)

The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) asked me a question about an officer or man who was not willing to serve in the new environment. The hon. member asked what would be the position of such a man. I believe his position would be just like that of any other serving officer or man who leaves the services in normal circumstances. This is his option. We would not force anybody to serve against his will. There are no special provisions except that he has to declare himself, I believe, according to the law, within two months after proclamation of the act. After that the provisions already in the act are applied.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, the question I asked the minister was whether that person would lose benefits. Perhaps it would be better to have somebody raise this question in the committee. I do not want to take up the time of the house now. It may be too technical a question to answer here.

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to some kind of penalty I am sure there is no penalty involved. The man would be entitled to the normal benefits. That is the interpretation I place on the act. This question can be aired in the committee and I have no objection to that, but it seems to me that the obvious answer is that there is, of course, no penalty involved.

Motion (Mr. Cadieux) agreed to.

FINANCE

LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPOSITION OF COINS

Hon. Jean Chrétien (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-23, to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act and the Criminal Code.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the amendments contained in this bill cover two separate matters. The first group of amendments provides for the introduction of a pure nickel coinage in place of our present silver alloy coinage. The second provides authority for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) to invest some of the resources of the exchange fund account in certain short term securities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development.

Hon. members may recall that on December 23, 1966, the Minister of Finance announced that the government intended to change from a silver coinage to a pure nickel coinage some time during 1968, and that proposals to amend the Mint, Currency and Exchange Fund Act would be presented to parliament to authorize this change. The reason for making an advance announcement of our intentions, of course, was to give the automatic vending industry and other interested parties time to make the necessary arrangements required to cope with a new coinage.

Before dealing with these matters it might be helpful if I were to explain why it became necessary to plan to abandon the use of silver in the coinage and to use pure nickel in its place. As the Minister of Finance said last year, this decision was forced upon us by events over which the government of Canada had no control. We have had a silver coinage since the early years of confederation, and during the last century there has been virtually no change in the coins. The problem today is that silver has become a scarce commodity. There is very little increase in annual production year by year, but a large increase in demand.

Apart from the traditional uses of silver, the increase in demand has resulted in part from the many new industrial uses found for this metal. As a result of the growing scarcity of silver, most countries have found it necessary in the last several decades to abandon the use of silver in favour of less scarce and less expensive coinage materials, so that Canada is now one of the few countries in the world still maintaining a silver coinage. However, the increasing scarcity of silver was not a problem until about three years ago, when it became apparent that the reserves of silver maintained by the United States were being depleted more rapidly than heretofore. This meant that the ceiling price of $1.29 per ounce was bound to be exposed to strong upward pressures, thereby making silver uneconomic as a coinage material.

In the face of this situation the government of the United States in 1965 announced its intention to discontinue the minting of silver coins and began to issue coins made of cupronickel and copper toward the end of the same year. Since the new laminated United States coins performed in exactly the same way as silver alloy coins when used in coin machines —and, of course, their unusual construction was decided upon with this end in mind—the change-over raised no difficulties with respect to coin machines. For our part, we felt that coins made of a homogeneous metal or alloy would be more attractive than a laminated coin, and our researches into the suitability of various alternative metals led to the choice of nickel.

We have been pleased to observe that there have been no doubts expressed by the Canadian people as to the suitability of pure nickel as a replacement for the silver alloy used in the coinage. The new coins will be reasonably similar in appearance and ring to our present coins. The nickel counterparts of the two silver coins most widely used, that is, the 10-cent and 25-cent pieces, of course will have exactly the same dimensions as the present coins and will be roughly similar in weight. Since pure nickel is a harder material than silver alloy, the new coins will wear better and will resist corrosion more effectively. Indeed, experience with the use of 5-cent nickel coins since 1922 has already demonstrated that nickel is eminently suitable for use as coinage. At the same time, having regard to the pre-eminence of Canada as a nickel producer, its wider use in our coinage is most appropriate.

The only problem created by the changeover to nickel coins arises from the widespread use of coins in the vending machine business, and from the fact that the coin selectors used in them are designed to reject magnetic metals, including nickel. In the last few decades, and particularly in the last few years, the sale of goods and services by means of vending machines has become quite large. It is estimated that there are between 400,000 and 500,000 of these machines in Canada carrying a relatively sophisticated coin selector for the purpose of testing the genuineness of the coins.

• (5:40 p.m.)

In addition to these there are many other coin operated machines, and I am thinking of those used in parking meters, for example, which usually employ more simple methods of testing the coins and are therefore not likely to be affected by the changeover to nickel. Since our existing silver coins and the new coins will continue to circulate side by side for years to come, it will be necessary for the sophisticated type of coin selectors to be replaced by others capable of accepting the new nickel coins as well as the existing silver coins. It is also desirable, of course, in the interest of the tourist trade at points on our border with the United States, that such replacement selectors should be able to accept both varieties of United States coins, as is the case with the present coin mechanisms.

During the last two years, therefore, the officials have been exploring these technical questions with the representatives of the automatic vending industry and with the manufacturers of coin mechanisms. As a result, various manufacturers have now designed new types of coin selectors which it is expected will meet the requirements that I have just mentioned. I am also glad to report that these mechanisms are to be produced in Canada rather than in the United States, as has largely been the case up to now.

I would like to be able to announce the date on which the distribution of the new 10-cent and 25-cent coins made of nickel would commence. However, this is not yet possible. After consulting with the various interests concerned I feel we must provide more time for the new coin selectors to be tested, purchased and installed. Almost a year ago the Minister of Finance said that the change-over would take place some time during 1968. This decision has not been changed.

A firm of management consultants has been engaged by the department to investigate and report upon the availability of new coin selectors and the time required to instal a sufficient number of them in vending machines. I would expect that after this report has been received and studied, perhaps within the next month or so, I will be able to give a more firm advance notice of the date on which the mint will begin issuing the new nickel coins. I would also expect to announce the decision of the government concerning proposals for compensation. The department is now exploring the practical feasibility, as well as the desirability, of compensating these vending machine operators for a part of the expense that they will incur in replacing their present coin selectors with new ones.

An explanation concerning some of the coins described in part II of the schedule may be helpful. Hon. members will recall that on August 18 last the Minister of Finance announced that for a short period a special issue of 10-cent and 25-cent coins containing 50 per cent silver and 50 per cent copper would be issued. Up until then our coins contained 80 per cent silver. This change was made necessary by the increase in the price of silver which took place at that time after the United States lifted the ceiling on the price of silver. These new silver coins will continue to be issued by the mint until such time as we are ready to begin issuing nickel coins later this year. They are therefore included in the schedule along with the proposed nickel coins.

We are also providing authority in the bill for the issuance of 50-cent and one dollar coins containing 50 per cent silver to cover the possibility that we might wish to mint such coins in the future for numismatic purposes only.

Our discussions with the representatives of the automatic merchandising industry have led to the suggestion that it would be sensible to take advantage of the opportunity presented by the change-over to a nickel coinage to reduce the size of our 50-cent and one dollar coins. The present coins are regarded by the public as being too bulky to be carried around. It was therefore felt that a reduction in the size of these two coins, and particularly that of the 50 cent piece, might turn out to be a convenience to the public and probably to the vending industry. With this in mind, and after consulting with various interested groups, the bill proposes that the weight and size of the 50-cent and one dollar coins made of nickel will be somewhat smaller than the present coins of the same values.

One other amendment should be mentioned. The existing statute establishes the Royal Canadian Mint in Ottawa. The present bill proposes that the mint may be established anywhere within the national capital region. This change is intended to give the government a greater freedom with respect to the possible relocation of the mint. We intend to build a new mint in the next few years to replace the present structure which was built in 1908 and is now overcrowded and inefficient. A modern factory-type building will enable the mint to produce a larger output of coins without resorting to shift work, and also enable it to seek some export business, as it should. No decision has yet been taken on a new location.

I would like now to turn to the two amendments which deal with the exchange fund. This is a special account in the name of the Minister of Finance in which the government holds most of its foreign exchange assets, that is, its gold and U.S. dollars.

Under the act at present the minister may purchase with money in the account (a) gold; (b) U.S. currency, U.S. dollar bank deposits or treasury bills or other obligations of the United States; (c) other currencies freely convertible into gold or U.S. dollars and deposits in these currencies; (d) securities of or guaranteed by the government of Canada; and (e) securities of the International Monetary Fund maturing not later than five years from their date of issue. These latter securities are issued by the I.M.F. in connection with our obligation under the "general arrangements to borrow" to provide, along with the nine other most industrialized member countries of the I.M.F., up to $6 billion of additional resources to the I.M.F.

The bill before the house will broaden somewhat the investment powers of the exchange fund. Clause 5 of the bill will amend the act to enable the fund to purchase securities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development maturing not later than two years from their date of issue.

The securities which the exchange fund would expect to purchase with this authority are the special issues of two-year central bank bonds which the I.B.R.D. first brought out in 1964 and which are offered only to central banks and other government institutions. These bonds are denominated in U.S. currency and are offered every six months. The last issue was on September 15, 1967 and was sold to central banks and other governmental institutions in 43 countries and to one international organization. The issue was for $100 million U.S. and paid an interest of 5¾ per cent. The characteristics of these bonds and their attractive yields make them an appropriate investment for some of the money in the exchange fund.

In addition, they offer a vehicle for us to provide some further financial support to the International Bank, support well warranted by the bank's success and effectiveness in the field of economic development. With the tightness in capital markets of the world and the bank's desire for additional loanable funds, the bank has been encouraging more governments and governmental institutions to invest in these securities. In this amendment we have an excellent opportunity to serve directly Canada's interest by providing an attractive alternative investment for the exchange fund and at the same time assisting the I.B.R.D. in its important work in the field of economic development.

The second amendment to this part of the act is technical in nature. The present act provides for the transfer to the consolidated revenue fund at the end of each year of that portion of the exchange fund's net income derived from interest and discounts on the securities held in its portfolio. It does not provide, however, for the transfer of other income realized by the exchange fund, most of which is derived from trading operations.

The Auditor General and the public accounts committee of this house recommended the transfer of these other profits to the consolidated revenue fund, and the Department of Finance undertook to obtain the necessary authority. While we were awaiting an opportunity to open up this act for amendment we did, in fact, obtain the authority by an item in supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968, vote 23a. This vote authorized the transfer of these other profits for the calendar year 1964 and subsequent years. The amendment in clause 6 of the bill before us will supersede this item.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring forward once again a matter that I brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) on the orders of the day a few weeks ago. I refer to the frustration experienced by the Canadian people as a result of their inability to procure by purchase 50-cent pieces and dollars as mementoes of the celebration of the Canadian centennial. I have been told on good authority that these are available but not to the general Canadian public. There are people who have large amounts of these 50-cent pieces and dollars. For example, a large well known retail firm in this country is offering 50-cent pieces for sale but you have to pay $3 for them. As a result of the way the distribution of these 50-cent pieces and dollars has been managed the Canadian public is being rooked.

Consequent upon the change-over from silver to the new metal, about which the minister has advised us, people are not able to purchase these coins. Not only from the firm I have mentioned in Canada but if you write to Iola, Wisconsin, you can get silver dollars or 50-cent pieces. If you write to Turner, Montana, you can also get 50-cent pieces. As a matter of fact, in the Numismatic News for January 29, 1968, the heading on page 31 reads: "Less than 1 per cent of the people in the United States and Canada will ever own a Canadian commemorative centennial set of coins". The article reads in part:

> This is one of the most highly recommended sets with a solid future. Do you realize that many Canadians have never seen a set, let alone own one? They have been waiting for their banks to get these coins but the mint was forced to stop regular minting of dollars and halves early in the year because silver was worth more than their face value. With 1967 now gone, no bank will have them but the public still wants them. Yes, the prices have been going up because of greater demand than supply and prices will continue to rise as supplies are getting smaller every day. You can test this yourself by just advertising to buy, and if you have any luck in buying please sell us your surplus. We need rolls and sets.

I quote from an advertisement in this newspaper:

We made a fortunate purchase! Would you like some truly Gem BU Dollars and halves of 1967? These have never seen the inside of a bag. These are just as they came off the coining presses. Limited supply—only two rolls of each per order. True Gem 1967 dollars, $77.50 per roll; true Gem 1967 half dollars, $77.50 per roll.

You can obtain these coins by writing to Turner, Montana. People have to pay these exorbitant prices simply because of the mismanagement and lack of foresight of the government in assuring that the coins were not sold in huge lots to foreign purchasers so that Canadians could be rooked if they desired a centennial dollar or 50-cent piece. You can write to Bloomington, Illinois, and obtain these coins. This firm is selling Canadian dollars at $55 per roll and half dollars at $75 per roll. There are Canadian proof-like rolls of half dollars available at $72 per roll. I must say that I feel this is another example of mismanagement of the country's affairs by this government.

Mr. Howard: It might be hazardous to ask to call it six o'clock now but I shall try anyway.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the house agree to calling it six o'clock now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General what he intends to bring before the house tomorrow.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, we propose to continue debate on item No. 47 which is now before the house. This will be followed by item No. 60, second reading of Bill No. S-22. Then we would go on with item No. 46, second reading of Bill No. S-21; item 43, second reading of Bill No. S-18, an act to amend the Publication of Statutes Act. If the Minister of Labour is available we will be able to call item No. 57, but I enter a caveat regarding that item. I suppose there is some doubt in the minds of hon. members if we will get that far.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 8, 1968

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REPORT BY PRIME MINISTER ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the house may desire that I should make a short report on the constitutional conference which ended yesterday afternoon, and which I think successfully began the process of reshaping our constitution by federal-provincial co-operation, which is of course the only way it can be done.

At the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may be permitted to pay a tribute to the officials of the federal government who did so much of the preparatory work, and did it so well. As the house may know, some weeks ago a special secretariat was set up to work on this problem. That secretariat consisted of officials of the government, whom I will not mention by name, who did their work with that distinction, efficiency and devotion which we expect to receive and do receive from the Canadian civil service.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: They were greatly assisted by three distinguished experts in the field of constitutional law who gave their time to the work of the secretariat. Perhaps I could mention them by name, Dr. Carl Goldenberg and Professors Head and Strayer. We are very grateful to them for the work they did, which was of great value to the federal participation in the conference and which will be of great value in the work ahead.

The conference decided, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps this is the most important agreement that was reached, to undertake a comprehensive review of the constitution of Canada with the objective of introducing whatever changes may be agreed to be necessary to make it adequate to meet the problems of Canada today and in the future. The conference also agreed that the heads of the governments of Canada, who are responsible to the people of Canada, should and would assume responsibility for this review. To this end there will be further sessions of the constitutional conference as required.

To ensure that the work is carried forward without delay and is effectively co-ordinated in accordance with the directions of the conference, the conference agreed on the establishment of a continuing constitutional committee consisting of senior advisers qualified in this field and designated by each government, the federal government and the provincial governments.

The constitutional conference and the committee will be assisted by a secretariat to be provided by the federal government, but to which members will be nominated by the provincial governments if they so desire. We will be getting in touch with the provincial governments at once with a view to receiving nominations from those governments to this central secretariat. The continuing committee of officials is authorized to set up sub-committees on specific questions, with the approval of the constitutional conference.

• (2:40 p.m.)

It was also agreed that the following questions should be examined by committees set up for that purpose under the authorization of the constitutional conference and the continuing committee of officials. First, the question of official languages; I will return to that in a moment. Second, the question of fundamental human rights. The federal government submitted a charter of human rights on this subject which received support from four provincial governments for enshrinement in a constitution of Canada, and it was agreed that a special committee should go into this whole subject. Third, a committee on the distribution of powers. This is a fundamental aspect of the whole question. Fourth, reform of institutions linked with federalism, including the Senate and the Supreme Court of Canada. Fifth, the problem of regional disparities which received consideration at the conference. Sixth, the question of amending procedure and provisional arrangements. Finally—and this is broader than the question of constitutional change—the whole question of federal-provincial machinery for consultation.

As I am sure hon. members know, the conference discussed at some length the recommendations of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism with regard to linguistic and cultural equality. I think those of us who took part in the meeting of this conference can be grateful that this report was before us. It seems to me that it alone is abundant justification for the work done by this royal commission. On this subject the conference agreed on the following paragraphs as recommendations of the conference which will be before the special committee dealing with the subject.

First, recognition by this conference that, as proposed by the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism and as a matter of equity, French speaking Canadians outside of Quebec should have the same rights as English speaking Canadians in Quebec.

Second, recognition, as the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism has recommended, of the desirability of proceeding by government action as speedily as possible in ways most appropriate in each province and without diminishing existing rights recognized by law or usage.

Third, establishment of a special committee to examine the report of the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism and the views expressed at this conference on this report and on other matters relating to language rights and their effective provision in practice, and to consult on methods of implementation, including the nature of possible federal assistance, and on the form and the method of constitutional amendment.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are the main subjects that were discussed at the conference. I do not intend to give any exhaustive review of this conference this afternoon or to outline what it accomplished in the constitutional and political development of this country. I think it was a very good first step in federal-provincial consideration of this vital subject. The position of the federal government in relation to the matter generally was set out in a booklet "Federalism for the Future" which was circulated to members of the conference and which, if the house agrees, I would be glad to table in English and French at this time.

If it is agreeable to the house I am sure it would be useful to arrange for a day's debate, perhaps next week, on this whole question of constitutional change and the federalism of the future. If this could be done by general agreement the whole matter could then be discussed at greater length.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: Has the right hon. Prime Minister leave to table the documents to which he has referred.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party and Her Majesty's loyal opposition share the feeling of satisfaction which we believe is felt all across the country that this conference, concluded yesterday, has had a significant measure of success and that its results represent an encouraging step forward on the way to perfecting a grand design for the second century of Canadian confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: For his part in convening the conference and for his conduct of it as chairman, credit is due to the Prime Minister of Canada. We wished him well on its eve; its success was important for the welfare of Canada, and we are happy to record our appreciation of his part now that it is over. There is no doubt that his conciliatory attitude and experience were of real value in helping the conference to surmount one or two difficult and awkward moments.

Remarkable and encouraging, especially coming as it did practically in the opening moments, was the degree of unanimity expressed on the matter of language rights. While there were some important differences, credit is surely due to those who, being most fundamentally concerned, such as the prime minister of Ontario, accepted so clearly and so calmly the responsibility for the pattern of the future in this area.

[Translation]

It should be emphasized, I think, that in the field of linguistic rights, the provinces are primarily responsible, as pointed out by the Quebec premier, Mr. Johnson, among others. There are, therefore, numerous points to be discussed and settled before an agreement can be reached, and any progress will depend, to a great extent, on the points on which the provinces will agree. We trust that the federal government will be willing to carry out its commitments, that is, to help the provinces in that field, if required.

[English]

It is noted, Mr. Speaker, that the conference made no mention of the position of those Canadians whose mother tongue is neither French nor English. This is a matter which the provinces, therefore, may well have to consider in the committee, perhaps on the basis set out in the government white paper which we believe probably expresses the views they actually hold.

While we can take satisfaction, in this area and others, for what progress there was, it would not be realistic if we overlooked the fact that in order to find solutions we have still very much further to go than the distance we have come. In two of the most important areas especially, the examination of the division of constitutional powers and a program to deal with regional economic differences, little more was accomplished than a preliminary statement of position. Important though that be, it certainly means that most of the practical work lies ahead. Clearly, too, with respect to the division of powers, the width of the gap between two of the positions was also demonstrated.

I express the hope that there will be no intransigence in the working out of details, so the committee set up to work in this area may be allowed to approach its task in the spirit of good will and dedication that is so vital to success. It is obvious that a great deal remains to be done in the way of mutual exchanges of opinions, education as to each other's points of view, and efforts to bring them into reconciliation. It is important that we assist the country to understand its various parts.

In this matter of understanding, just as in the field of practical and acceptable redivisions or transfers of power, may I emphasize that there can be, in our view, no one way streets. This must be a two way traffic.

Here I must make a serious suggestion to the Prime Minister and to the house. Before I come to that, however, we desire to record our regret that it was not seen fit or possible to include representatives of the Yukon as delegates at this conference. We also record our very real desire to see progress made in the immediate future in constitutional advancement in that territory.

The whole of Canada's constitutional arrangements are, of course, of concern to the parliament of Canada, but no two areas are of more concern than the two I have mentioned, the division of powers and the closing of the gaps of economic differences between our regions. That is what confederation is all about. These are fields of interest essentially involving federal interest and concern. There can be no question, therefore, that they are matters of primary concern for the parliament of Canada.

I must therefore express our concern that there should be set up without further delay adequate arrangements for meaningful discussion of these matters by parliament, and for effective consultation between the government and parliament before final positions in these various fields are taken by the government.

I note that the Prime Minister has indicated the possibility of setting aside a day next week to discuss these matters. I feel this will be welcome, but express a reservation in this respect. It will be appreciated that this is the first time the Prime Minister has mentioned the matter. My reservation is that in the light of the seriousness of this whole matter and its enormous scope, one day's debate may not be adequate. I say this because we take the firm position that after all this is the parliament of all Canada; this is the forum in which the views of those who speak for all Canada can be collectively expressed; and this is the body, therefore, which should and indeed must be fully consulted before commitments are made in this field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fulton: It will not be enough to say after agreement is made in committee or at the conference, "Oh, we will refer it to you for approval at that time", because such agreement can only be arrived at on the basis of a commitment by the government of Canada. Such a commitment should, in our view, only be made after consultation here.

Accordingly, while I note that the Prime Minister has referred to a day's debate and has also implied that a parliamentary committee may be appointed, we ask for a definite commitment and urge that such a committee be appointed just as early as possible. The government will find this party, which has repeatedly urged this course, ready to serve and work with our colleagues in other parts of parliament on such a committee just as soon as it can appropriately be constituted.

In connection with the process of education, consultation and reconciliation which is so essential to success in the constitution-making process, I should like to repeat the view we have expressed before, that the greater the extent to which such meetings are held in public, the greater the advantage to Canada. I am certain there will be agreement that this was amply demonstrated as a result of the extent of public awareness and interest in the proceedings of the conference just concluded. I should like to congratulate all the governments on their initiative in this respect. I hope the same policy will be followed with respect to meetings of our parliamentary committee and with respect to further meetings of the governments in constitutional conferences.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I should like on behalf of this party to express our appreciation to the members of the other governments concerned who took part in this conference and submitted their views and positions to the scrutiny of public examination. I would like to pay special tribute to the prime minister of Ontario, not only for his participation in and manner at the conference just concluded, but also for his farsighted Canadianism in the preliminary conference or confederation of tomorrow which he called and which was held in Toronto last November. It is not my purpose to be critical—the conference here has been a success—but many millions of Canadians share the view that the gap-filling initiative of Prime Minister Robarts was a prerequisite to that success.

[Translation]

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative party shares in the general satisfaction about the marked success of this conference, especially the contribution made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) and by all those who took part in it. We trust that the measures taken immediately to ensure consultations with parliament will not only acknowledge the concern and responsibility of that institution, but will also contribute, to a large extent, to the successful strengthening of confederation, so dear to us all.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, those of us who were invited and were privileged to attend the constitutional conference which ended yesterday had a feeling that we were taking part in an event which was of tremendous historical consequence for our country and its future.

I want to join the hon. member for Kamloops in expressing my personal appreciation, not only as a member of parliament but simply as a Canadian, for the way in which the Prime Minister presided over that conference with wit and wisdom and the flexibility which were necessary if the conference was to succeed at all. I am sure I can say without any exaggeration that the success it did achieve was due to the manner and way in which he chaired the discussions, particularly when they became a little thorny at certain times.

In view of the fact that we are to have a debate on the subject I need not speak for too long, but permit me to make the following points. Some of them will imply some criticism, but I intend to make them merely to underline my belief that if we are to hold our country together and develop a viable constitution relevant to our day, then rigidity must go and flexibility must take its place. When the confederation of tomorrow conference was first called, the reaction of some leaders of the party on the other side of the house was very lukewarm and almost unfriendly. It became absolutely clear during the last three days that the initiative taken by the premiers of the provinces of Canada was not only necessary but an indispensable prelude to the discussions which took place this week.

The second point I want to make, from which it seems to me we ought to learn, is that for a very long time the attitude of certain important spokesmen in this parliament was against the concept that it was necessary to have a comprehensive review of the constitution. What in effect they said to the people of Canada and to the members of parliament was that all we need to do is concern ourselves with the language rights and perhaps with other human rights, but that when these matters have been dealt with the problem facing Canada at present will solve itself and there will be no need for a total or comprehensive review of the constitution.

• (3:00 p.m.)

It became perfectly clear from the first hour of the conference that there was a need to be concerned with a comprehensive review of the constitution. In his statement yesterday the Prime Minister said, on behalf of his government, that the federal government was in favour—I think this was the word, and I am taking it from memory so I will be corrected if I am wrong—of entering into a total review of the constitution. In the statement the right hon. gentleman made today he called it a comprehensive review.

It has been obvious to some of us for some time that this kind of review and study of what needs rearranging, what needs bringing up to date, was essential for the future of this country. It was a great step forward when that was recognized and acknowledged, not by all the heads of government who were there because there were still one or two who questioned it, but by the vast majority of heads of government who were there. I think, Mr. Speaker, now that the federal government has taken the initiative one can rest assured that it will continue that initiative. I hope, as the hon. member for Kamloops said, we will be prepared to discuss all aspects of the constitution and all phases of our federal-provincial arrangements as well as the rights of Canadians everywhere.

I was particularly glad, Mr. Speaker, as were my colleagues the leader of my party and the hon. member for Greenwood, who attended the conference as observers for this party, to note that the majority of the heads of provincial governments were prepared to accept the principles set out in the first volume of the B and B report. Furthermore, and to me this was even more important as I am sure it was to others, not only did they accept the principles but in the case of Ontario, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan if I remember correctly, and Nova Scotia, steps had already been taken to put into practical effect the application of those principles. I feel that without regard to the party or the politics involved, the people of Canada ought to be grateful to the governments of those provinces, whatever their political stripe, for having been imaginative enough to take these steps even before the conference was held, and to give the undertakings that are essential for a united Canada in the future.

Our leader said, of course, when the B and B volume was tabled that we gave full support in principle to the recommendations in that volume, and we still do. We are in full support also of the idea of entrenching a charter of human rights in the constitution, even though that came up against some difficulties. We hope they are only temporary difficulties, and that eventually the constitutional conference will agree to making that a fact.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman reported, and of course correctly, that on his suggestion the conference which met on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week has been, as it were, declared a continuing constitutional conference consisting of the heads of governments. It is obvious you cannot make essential, fundamental constitutional revisions without the consent or acceptance of the people of Canada. It is obvious, too, that the heads of governments are the only ones who can take part in such discussions and make commitments. I am sure it is agreed that unless the people of Canada everywhere are prepared to accept these revisions at some point or other, we will have great difficulty.

I congratulate the Prime Minister, therefore, and the premiers of the provinces for two things, in my opinion both equally important. The first is that the conference was open so the people of Canada could participate in the discussions; and second, that observers from the opposition parties were invited to attend so that members of this parliament might have first hand experience of the proceedings. I hope this arrangement will continue at future meetings of this conference.

The final point I should like to make, Mr. Speaker, is one we have made many times. My leader and the hon. member for Greenwood have asked many times that a parliamentary committee be appointed without delay, and that it be given the opportunity to study fully all the implications and all the suggestions made from all quarters. I want to join the hon. member for Kamloops in pressing the Prime Minister not to delay the appointment of such a committee. Such a committee will have sense enough, I am sure, not to attempt to reach rapid conclusions or to lay down firm guide lines. We are all aware of the fact that constitutional revision is a matter for lengthy discussion and temperate debate, but the sooner members of this parliament begin to consider this problem in depth collectively, the better will be the chance that what the government is able to accomplish will have the support of this parliament as a whole.

I congratulate the Prime Minister on the success that has been achieved so far. As he indicated by a story he told, it is only a first step. We are all aware of the great difficulties still ahead. We all have confidence in the desire of all Canadians and all governments to see this country united and stronger, and any revisions of the constitution necessary to achieve that end will undoubtedly be agreed to in time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, we were informed today that a government in another country has resigned because of its inability to solve a language problem. I think we should thank the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) for having proposed this federal-provincial conference on the language problem which concerns us so much in Canada today. This conference was intended to prevent in Canada what happened in other countries.

We see that Canada is not the only country with a language problem. We are indebted to the Canadian government and to the right hon. Prime Minister for having taken steps to ensure that this federal-provincial conference contribute to a better understanding between the premiers of the ten provinces, so that what has just happened in Belgium may be prevented from happening in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to thank the Prime Minister for taking the necessary steps so that the proceedings of that conference could unfold before all the Canadian people. Thus all Canadians were able to hear what went on between the provincial premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada as well as between them and some of their advisers. We noticed that those discussions were very frank and, as a matter of fact, the Canadian people were able to see what was happening and know what their repreesntatives thought.

Things are a little different from what they were 40 or 50 years ago when politicians could say something in one city and then make an entirely different speech in another city without the electors or the public being any the wiser. Through television, we have been able to show the general public all that happened during this conference.

As an observer for my party at the conference, I noted how easy it was for the Prime Minister, with his old diplomatic skill, to chair the proceedings of this conference. I believe that everyone present noted his skill. As a matter of fact, some even praised his ability in timing coffee breaks.

I agree with the Prime Minister that we should be grateful to the secretariat for being so helpful to all who attended, and we should not forget the maintenance men who had to mop up the floor and do some repairs at the very beginning of the conference. In spite of this mishap, the proceedings were a great step toward national unity.

I also noticed the unanimous agreement of all participants to what the right hon. Prime Minister suggested, that French-speaking Canadians receive the same treatment outside Quebec as that granted to English-speaking Canadians in Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the house that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), leader of the Ralliement Créditiste, has been calling for just that for at least ten years. On many occasions, here in the house, he has called for French-speaking Canadians to receive the same treatment in the other provinces as that given to English-speaking Canadians in the province of Quebec. This is now recognized by all the premiers of the country. It shows that everyone, in his own area, is ready for a linguistic breakthrough and this portends better days for the two founding peoples of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's suggestion that a more exhaustive debate should be held on that matter next week. One day might be enough to enable each party's spokesman to express his views, provided however, as suggested by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) that a special committee be appointed to study the matter thoroughly.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial premiers should be thanked for taking part in that conference and for agreeing to the establishment of a committee made up of high officials, in addition to a conference of premiers, responsible mainly for revising the Canadian constitution. That was the main objective of the federal-provincial conference, because obviously it was not the premiers' role to come to a conclusion during those three days; there was not enough time.

The committee of officials, who will have to make suggestions and advise the conference of premiers will have a beneficial effect. But I noticed, during these three days of discussions, that the provinces seemed to attach much more importance to equalization payments. That proves that the provinces are especially concerned with economic and financial problems. I understood that what the provinces need, most of them at least, is money. Therefore, I think that the committee of officials and the conference of premiers will be able to deal with all these subjects and that in the near future, suggestions will be made with a view to amending the constitution and do justice to all classes and all governments in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement just made by the Prime Minister on the discussions at the conference that has just concluded. In view of the recommendation that a debate be held on this subject next week my remarks are going to be very brief.

I should just like to say that any and all attempts to resolve our problems and eliminate the frictions that affect our country are commendable. In this most recent conference matters of real concern were discussed both frankly and forcefully. It is far too early to assess the results of this conference. To some, viewing the prospects through spectacles rose tinted by hope and optimism, it might appear that there is clear sailing ahead. To others, who prefer to face the issues realistically, the problems and objectives outlined require careful analysis and sound thinking before conclusions are reached and decisions made.

I believe the obstacles on the path the government of Canada has chosen to follow are very real, and this is particularly true with respect to proposed amendments to the constitution. As pointed out in various briefs, in particular those submitted by the premiers of British Columbia and Alberta, attempts over the past years to find an acceptable formula for domiciling the constitution of Canada in Canada have thus far proved unsuccessful, and if this essential first step is impossible of achievement the consideration of further steps is somewhat premature.

This institution of parliament should clearly understand that the suggestions made by the federal government propose a definite shift from our traditional concept of legislative supremacy to one of constitutional supremacy with the ultimate power in the Supreme Court. It remains to be seen, Mr. Speaker, whether the Canadian people want such a change to be made.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO MEET UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that unemployment has now reached the point where more than 6 per cent of the work force, amounting to nearly half a million people, are unemployed, would the Prime Minister take the first opportunity early next week to outline to the house and the country the initiatives the government intend to take to stimulate the economy and halt this steady growth of unemployment which we have had in this country during the past 12 months?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, this is a very worrying matter. I hope there will shortly be an opportunity to discuss this subject in the light of general economic conditions.

FINANCE

REPORT OF TASK FORCE RESPECTING FOREIGN OWNERSHIP IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to address to the President of the Privy Council arising out of the answers he has given on previous occasions in connection with this matter. When may we expect him to table the report of the special task force working under his command on the question of foreign ownership in Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the French translation will be available tomorrow, and barring accidents in connection with its reproduction I would expect to be able to table the report a week from today.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Following the presentation of that report to the house, would the Prime Minister indicate when the government expects to announce its position on this important matter to the house and the country?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend knows that the presentation of the report of a task force, which in itself is not a normal procedure but is one that I think should be followed on this occasion, is followed by government consideration of the subject matter of the report. As soon as that has been completed the government will then be able to make known its position.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO FRENCH EDITION OF TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, further to the favourable steps taken in the last three days, I should like to put a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Can he tell us whether steps have been or will soon be taken for the Canadian government telephone directory to be published in French for the use of members?

Mr. Speaker: I believe that question should be put on the order paper.

[English]

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO STUDY BY PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am basing my question on a statement attributed to the Prime Minister during a press conference yesterday. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he could advise the house if he has now reached a final decision on the desirability of setting up a parliamentary committee to study and make recommendations concerning constitutional reform.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I listened with great interest to the observations made here this afternoon, and I agree that this parliamentary committee should be set up with the minimum of delay. I think perhaps we ought to have a day's discussion of the subject generally, and we should try to arrange this on a day which would be convenient to all hon. members—shortly, I would hope—and after that set up the committee to go into this question during the present session and, I would hope, in coming sessions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether a full verbatim transcript of the proceedings of the conference will be available for the information of members of the committee and others who are interested or involved.

Mr. Pearson: I think that is a very good idea. The sessions were all held in public with the exception of half an hour devoted to the agenda. The proceedings are therefore public and I think a document of this kind would be very useful.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question. May I first of all thank the Prime Minister on behalf of the Yukon Territorial council for seeing to it that one of the elected representatives on the council was accredited to the conference as an observer. In view of the wide and important spectrum of subject matters to be discussed by the special committee to be set up, would the Prime Minister give serious and favourable consideration to the inclusion as members of that special committee of representatives from the elected bodies of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Pearson: I should be glad to give serious consideration to that matter.

An hon. Member: How about giving it favourable consideration?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a question for the Prime Minister along similar lines. Will there be provision for the first Canadians, the Indian community of Canada, to be heard in the course of this committee discussion?

Mr. Pearson: I would think so. I was conscious, as I am sure many others were conscious, of the fact that in our discussions this week when we talked about founding races and all that sort of thing we were overlooking the two real founding races of this country; while we might not have said very much about them in our discussions they were, I thought, in everybody's minds. I hope they can be associated in an appropriate way with the further consideration to be given to this subject.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Is the Prime Minister now ready to say, as a result of the very successful reporting of this conference, whether we may expect similar opportunities for radio and television broadcasting of proceedings in the house and in parliamentary committees?

Mr. Pearson: As the hon. member knows, this is not really a matter which concerns the government so much as it concerns the house. I appreciate the fact that, in general, progress has been made in the consideration of this matter with a view to reaching a conclusion. I would hope we could come to a decision without more delay and make arrangements which would be acceptable to hon. members. I would hope—and I speak as one member of the house—that we could begin by opening certain of the committees to television and radio, and then move to the house on appropriate occasions.

An hon. Member: What about cabinet meetings?

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I wonder whether the Prime Minister in raising this question would call the attention of the responsible authority to the fact that another venerable legislative chamber, the House of Lords, is permitting its proceedings to be televised.

Mr. Pearson: I cannot conceal my surprise at the fact that the hon. member for Greenwood has put forward the venerable House of Lords as a pattern we should follow in this modern House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

[Later:]

Mr. Gérard Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

At the close of the constitutional conference, after the premiers have decided to provide themselves with some instruments to pursue the work related to the constitution, and since, moreover, that federal members, as well as members of the various provincial legislatures, are unable to keep in touch with each other, would the Prime Minister agree that the government should promote the formation or creation of an association of Canadian parliamentarians which would constitute the very instrument required to enable both federal and provincial private members to meet every year, in order to discuss constitutional matters, not necessarily before television cameras or journalists?

[English]

Mr. Pearson: That is a very interesting idea, Mr. Speaker. I would be glad to look into it.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. During the forthcoming visit to Ottawa of Right Hon. Harold Wilson, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, is it the intention of the Prime Minister of Canada to propose and discuss the holding of a commonwealth prime ministers' conference here in Ottawa either late this year or in 1969? Further, could we be told what subjects are likely to be on the agenda for discussion?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There will be no agenda. As the hon. member knows, on these occasions we do not have any formal agenda. However, I would be very surprised indeed if we did not discuss the possibility of a prime ministers' conference. I would think the views of Mr. Wilson would be of great importance in this regard, and I should like to hear what he has to say on this subject before coming to any conclusion myself. I think other subjects likely to come up are all those which concern international affairs throughout the world at this time.

Mr. Nesbitt: Will the fact that two prime ministers of commonwealth countries have indicated they would like to see the next meeting held in Ottawa influence the government's position when discussing this matter with Mr. Wilson?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, as would certain views I have had conveyed to me from other members of the commonwealth indicating that from their point of view it would probably not be desirable to hold a commonwealth prime ministers' conference until later this year.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister without Portfolio, the minister from Newfoundland (Mr. Granger). I do so in order to promote a spirit of Canadian unity. My question is prompted by correspondence I have received from people in British Columbia who in increasing numbers are desirous of visiting Newfoundland and places such as Heart's Content and Heart's Desire.

An hon. Member: And Come-By-Chance.

Mr. Herridge: They indicate that they do not know how to get there, whether by air, water, rail, road, or saddleback by trail. Would the minister bring this situation to the attention of the government travel bureau to see whether the necessary guidance could be provided?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not my understanding that this question relates to the minister's administrative responsibility.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the remark the Prime Minister made on television last night to the effect that he would like to see only 40 nations represented at the United Nations, would he indicate to the house which nations he believes those should be?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF MEASURES RESPECTING NATIONAL PARKS AND HISTORIC SITES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and ask him whether he intends to proceed during this session of parliament with order No. 5 which has been on the order paper since May 10, 1967 and with order No. 30 which has been on the order paper since June 26, 1967?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I think it would depend entirely on the speed with which we can deal with the business which is before the house. I think we are ready in respect of item No. 5.

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—ADDITIONAL FEDERAL ASSISTANCE RESPECTING STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): My question is for the Prime Minister. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether during his extremely busy and, I am sure, trying week he had an opportunity to meet with the premier of Nova Scotia to discuss with him federal financial assistance to the steel industry at Sydney? If so, can we be given a progress report at this time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, I had the privilege of a talk with the premier of Nova Scotia outside the conference. He referred to his letter to me, and I told him that this letter would be considered immediately by the cabinet. We gave it preliminary consideration this morning, and we shall continue this consideration next Tuesday. I believe the premier would like to make this letter public, and if he does so this afternoon I shall see that it is tabled tomorrow.

[Mr. Simpson.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MEETING OF MARITIME PREMIERS TO DISCUSS UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): This question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman any information with regard to a meeting of the premiers to discuss the possible union of the Atlantic provinces? Did I understand the Prime Minister to say there are to be representatives from the federal level at such a meeting? Is the federal government interested in this proposal and will it be represented should a meeting of the premiers take place?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member a progress report on this very important matter, Mr. Speaker. I learn from the press that they had a discussion in connection with maritime union, a consummation no doubt devoutly to be wished if it meets with the wishes of the people of the Atlantic provinces.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR INCREASED TRAINING FOR UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Due to the alarming increase of unemployed, does the minister intend to amend the unemployed retraining legislation in order to increase the number of months during which the unemployed can study a trade, and does he intend to increase the number of trades which the unemployed can take up under that legislation?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Adult Occupational Training Act has not been designed to cope with unemployment. It is meant to retrain workers in accordance with the needs of the market and to improve their technical qualifications.

Now, if my hon. friend wants to deal with unemployment, he would have to do so from a point of view other than that of the Occupational Training Act.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question.

Is it the intention of the minister to move an amendment to that legislation so that it may become more effective and the unemployed may become more qualified in order to find jobs, thus reducing unemployment?

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to consider any improvement to the legislation. If the hon. member wants to suggest a few, we are prepared to consider them.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the hon. minister of external affairs.

In view of the fact that the number of unemployed is close to the half million mark, and in view of the concern shown in the past by the hon. minister in this field, is he in a position to offer some suggestions to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration in order to alleviate unemployment which is a calamity?

FINANCE

INVESTMENT IN U.S. SECURITIES BY CANADIAN MUTUAL FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On Monday I directed a question to him concerning the great transfer of investment by Canadian mutual funds from Canadian to United States securities. In his absence the President of the Treasury Board undertook to look at the figures and took the question as notice. Can the minister reply now to this question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it has been the policy of the government to encourage Canadians to invest their savings in Canadian development, and in the case of mutual funds there is a tax incentive to this end. On the other hand, it has not been government policy to direct or to impose restrictions on how and where Canadians invest their savings. I remain convinced that our objectives of economic growth and stability can best be achieved by providing a climate which encourages investment in Canada.

Mr. Aiken: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he has inquired if investors find it more advantageous to invest in United States securities than in Canadian securities?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps I can give some figures that will interest the hon. gentleman. In the last two years there has been a fairly large increase in the investment by Canadian mutual funds in foreign securities. On the other hand, in 1967 there was a large increase in the sales of foreign securities and a decline in the net purchase by Canadians of outstanding Canadian securities held in foreign countries. The net effect has been that in the first 11 months of 1967 trading in all outstanding securities produced a net outflow of capital some 40 per cent below that in the corresponding period in 1966.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): As a further supplementary question, is it not a fact that the purchase last year of approximately $485 million worth of United States securities by mutual funds depressed the stock market in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as phrased is argumentative.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN FINANCES AND ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the government give consideration to immediately increasing the financial resources and scope of the Atlantic Development Board in view of the very serious economic disparity, acknowledged at the constitutional conference, so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will look into that question. It was brought to our attention yesterday by spokesmen from the Atlantic provinces and, speaking on the matter, I had the privilege of pointing out to them the greatly increased assistance that had been given, and rightly so, to that area in recent years.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): As a related question to that asked by the hon. member for Cumberland, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government plans to call a special conference to consider the conflicting purposes of the federal government programs regarding the Atlantic region?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, these matters of overlapping and conflict are continually under consideration, and they were also brought to our attention yesterday.

IMMIGRATION

STEPS TO INCREASE NUMBER OF IMMIGRANTS FROM FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Compton-Frontenac.

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Is it the intention of the hon. minister to increase immigration to Canada in 1968, and especially from France?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will admit that this question is of a general character and not very urgent, and that it could easily be placed on the order paper.

[English]

NATIONAL CAPITAL

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is he in a position today to indicate the approximate date when it is proposed to establish the parliamentary committee on the national capital?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works has this matter under active consideration and I am informed will be bringing forward a motion to set up the committee fairly soon.

[Mr. MacDonald (Prince).]

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—IMPORTS FROM U.S. INTO WESTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. It is based on a very serious situation that exists in western Canada caused by unprecedented imports of United States potatoes into that area. Is the minister in a position to state whether or not an application of value for duty will be made, as requested by the potato producers of western Canada?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the situation is under very close study by the officials of the Department of Agriculture. To date there has been a limited flow of United States potatoes but the situation is a dangerous one and has to be watched very carefully. At the present time there is no intention of applying value for duty as a case cannot be made that there has been injury caused by an appreciable flow of potatoes.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—MEDICAL DECISIONS RESPECTING STERILIZATION AND CONTRACEPTIVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he tell the house whether he has received letters of protest from certain medical authorities in Saskatchewan regarding actions by officials of the Department of Indian Affairs in making arbitrary and long distance medical decisions contrary to those made by the local doctors with respect to treaty Indians, concerning medical sterilization and the use of contraceptive pills?

Mr. Speaker: Order, I am not sure whether this matter is urgent in any way. If it is, the hon. member might consider the possibility of asking the question again at the time of adjournment this evening.

Mr. Brand: Mr. Speaker, if I could speak very boldly to the matter of urgency, medical decisions on sterilization in some instances can be extremely urgent, particularly if there is disease present and the danger of one of nature's propensities becoming evident. If we have to wait for the time it will take the minister to answer a question on the order paper I am afraid I do not know what will happen.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid I cannot enter into an argument with the hon. member on medical grounds. I think it might be the part of wisdom to allow a reply from the minister.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I believe I might have been able to save a great deal of time. The question should be addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Brand: On the contrary. I should like to point out that this decision was made in a directive from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR IMPROVED SERVICE BY FIELD OFFICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour who is responsible for the operation of the unemployment offices. Would the minister give consideration to improving the services rendered by these offices, particularly in areas where offices have been closed and amalgamated into one central office?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to give consideration to this suggestion and discuss it with the officials of the commission. If the hon. member has any suggestion of a helpful or constructive nature and will send it to me I will see that it is referred to the commission for consideration.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON PENSION COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would he inform the house whether the Woods committee report has been translated?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I have no information other than what I gave the house last week. I will make inquiries, but I understand that it should be in my hands by the middle of this month.

Mr. Chatterton: In view of the fact that it has already taken four months to complete the translation, will the minister now in any event study the report in English so that a decision may be expedited?

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—DISCUSSIONS WITH PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. Has he recently had conversations with the premier of Prince Edward Island concerning the Northumberland strait crossing project and, if so, was the outcome encouraging or otherwise?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, indeed. I had the pleasure of having lunch with him today and found as always that he was very energetic and sincere in putting forth the point of view of Prince Edward Island in respect of the causeway and other projects of interest to him and to my hon. friend.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can give the house some information in respect of the recent lay-off of a considerable number of engineers and other employees by the government consultant charged with the design and supervision of the construction project. Would he also indicate whether this will mean another slowdown in respect of this important project?

Mr. Pearson: I am unaware of that particular situation. I will look into it.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It is based on a telegram I received just before coming into the house to the effect that the provincial government has made a request to the federal government for assistance in respect of the flood in the Bella Coola valley. Has the minister received such a request and what action is being taken as a result thereof?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have checked as of 2.30 this afternoon with the area commander and have been informed that no request has been received from the provincial authorities.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF FARM PRODUCTS PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. McLelland (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the Canadian Federation of Agriculture asked the federal government to convene a meeting to review the declining prices that producers are now receiving for some of their farm products such as eggs, potatoes and hogs? If so, will the minister inform the house whether such a meeting will take place?

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, such a request has not been drawn to my attention. It may have come in in the last day or so. If such a request is received I will certainly be very happy to meet with them in this regard.

SASKATCHEWAN

EXTENSION OF TERM OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I am prompted to ask it because of my interest in the charming gentleman who previously held my seat of Kindersley and who subsequently has been so popular as Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan. Is the Prime Minister extending Lieutenant Governor Hanbidge's term as lieutenant governor of Saskatchewan, and for what period?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether I have the right to answer that question but I shall be glad to do so in any event. I have written the Lieutenant Governor of Saskatchewan to ask him if he would stay on for another year. I felt so sorry for him after the football game last December.

Mr. Cantelon: May I direct the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the year before the shoe was on the other foot.

[Mr. Howard.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED IMPROPER CONDUCT IN ARREST OF U.K. FUGITIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Has the Solicitor General any statement to make concerning whether R.C.M.P. officers forcibly prevented a bailiff in Montreal from serving a superior court injunction on the Scotland Yard detective who had trailed the British train robber, Charles Wilson, to Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this question should be placed on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF BUSINESS FOR TODAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General in his capacity as acting house leader. In view of the fact that there is a change in the order of business for today, would the minister now indicate to the house what the order of business will be?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to continue with item No. 47, the debate on the amendments to the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act and the Criminal Code. Then we would proceed with item No. 43, second reading on Bill No. S-18, to amend the Publication of Statutes Act; item No. 50, second reading of Bill No. S-28, to amend the Defence Production Act; item No. 61, second reading of Bill S-32, to amend the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. This would be followed by item No. 60 and item No. 46.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact, according to my information, that the Prime Minister has indicated his decision on medicare to the press, will he change his mind and not wait until next week to tell the house? Is he prepared to give his views and decision in respect of medicare now?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not said anything to the press except that I would be making a statement in the house on Monday. I wish I were in a position to make it now, but I have not had an opportunity to prepare the statement. I have been rather busy in the last few days. I hope my hon. friend would agree that I should have the week end to think about the form in which I might make the statement.

CRIMINAL CODE

METHOD OF PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the acting house leader. Because of the widespread interest throughout the country in the amendments to the Criminal Code, would he announce as soon as possible how the house will proceed to deal with this matter so that people will know whether or not they should be making representations in the form of briefs?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have taken notice of the hon. member's question.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

HEATING OIL AND GASOLINE—REPORTED PRICE INCREASES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I address this question to the Minister of Finance. On two previous occasions I drew his attention to the increase in the prices of gasoline and domestic heating oil. He informed the house that he had asked officials of his department to inquire into the matter. Can he now inform the house what the result of that inquiry was?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not yet in a position to report. I have received some information. However, I have asked for some supplementary information and will make a statement as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TABLING OF DOCUMENT "FEDERALISM AND INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS"

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs wishes to ask for permission of the house to revert to motions. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the consent of the house in order to table the French and English versions of a paper distributed yesterday to the members of the federal-provincial conference, emanating from the Secretary of State for External Affairs and entitled "Federalism and International Relations".

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs will table this paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, before this paper is tabled, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether all the candidates for the leadership of the Liberal party intend to publish a similar paper and table it in the house?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this document be tabled?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

LEGISLATIVE AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPOSITION OF COINS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp for second reading of Bill No. S-23, to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act and the Criminal Code.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we listened last evening to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Chrétien) give us an outline of the purpose behind the bill. I should like to suggest to the government, as I did by way of a question before the Christmas recess, a certain course of action which should be followed in the minting of coins, with particular reference to metallic or silver dollars as we have referred to them in the past. Even though they may be made of nickel this year I still have a tendency to call them silver dollars because that is the designation they have been given since 1935 when they were first minted in this country.

There is a way to mint dollars with a silver content and still make a rather handsome profit so far as the operations of the mint are concerned. Up until last year silver coinage contained 800 parts of silver. In a silver dollar this amounted to 0.6 ounces of silver which, at the almost standard price until about a year ago of $1.29 per ounce, meant that each coin contained about 77.4 cents of silver.

I should like to refer to silver dollars for numismatic or collection purposes. Silver dollars minted in the past for general circulation and for use as currency have actually been used by people such as numismatists, collectors and others who put them away for their children or for other purposes. Very few of them have actually been used by people in the conduct of their business. Very few silver dollars minted in Canada since 1935 have ever got into general circulation. While I am talking particularly about silver coinage for numismatic purposes, what I have to say applies equally to the silver dollars that went into general circulation because, as I say, almost all of them end up being taken out of circulation rather than being used as currency.

The number of silver dollars minted in the past few years for numismatic pusposes, sold in sets or singly in a plastic cover, in 1964 amounted to approximately 2.85 million, in 1965 approximately 2.7 million, and in 1966 approximately 700,000 or slightly less. If we took a high average of about 2,500,000 silver dollars during a year and minted that many this year with a content of silver of 50 per cent, or 500 parts instead of 800 parts, we would have a substantial saving. This would be the same silver content as used in dimes and quarters during the latter part of last year. In terms of the maximum price for silver of about $2.30, which was about the peak last year, using 50 per cent silver in silver dollars we could mint them with a content value of 88.125 cents of silver.

I do not intend to go into these statistics in any greater detail except to point out to the government that in years past silver dollars of the numismatic type were sold for $1.25. They contained 77.4 cents of silver. In other words, the income in relation to the value of the silver showed a profit picture of 47.6 cents. If we made a silver dollar this year with a 50 per cent silver content and distributed it to numismatists, collectors, dealers and others for $2 instead of $1.25 we would bring in at least $1 to the coffers of the government for each silver dollar sold.

The minister says it is not possible to do this because it is difficult to obtain silver as it is being used for other purposes including the space program in the United States, the film industry and the like. Late last year I checked to see if it was possible to obtain silver in quantity. I found it would have been possible on a long term purchase contract to obtain sufficient amounts of silver for use in silver dollars. It may not be too late even now to purchase the silver. As I listened to the Minister of National Revenue I understood him to say there was a provision in a schedule to this bill whereby dollars may be minted with a silver content as well as of pure nickel. The minister would be well advised to make inquiries into this suggestion of minting silver dollars this year with a 50 per cent silver content to be sold for $2 each. Not one single silver dollar, I submit, would end up in general circulation. They would end up in the possession of collectors or people who put them away to commemorate a certain anniversary. The mint and the federal treasury would end up with a substantial profit by minting silver dollars this year in this way.

It may be that at some time in the future it will be impossible to mint silver coins but it certainly would be possible to do so this year. This year is the sixtieth anniversary of the mint. I understand the mint is preparing a presentation case which will contain the nickel dollar and that it is a beautifully designed article. Even though nickel is a shiny substance and withstands wear for a long period of time, as suggested by the Minister of National Revenue last night, it cannot possibly equal the brilliance and lustre of silver. It would seem to me that the two together, a silver dollar and the presentation case that is being prepared by the mint in any event, would make an ideal collectors' item this year to commemorate the diamond jubilee, the sixtieth anniversary of the mint. There are a few other items to which I wish to refer but I think it might be more appropiate to deal with them when we get to the committee stage.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill comes at the right time since, in my opinion, it is indirectly connected with national unity and it can therefore be considered as complementary to the federal-provincial conference which has just ended.

Currency, which appears often in this bill, is a subject of interest to all Canadians from sea to sea. All classes of society are interested in currency. All governments, federal, provincial or municipal, are interested in currency. Political parties also are interested in currency, whether they be a left-wing, right-wing or centre party. In fact, we are all interested in it.

The passing of this bill will make it possible not only to change the size of some coins but to use nickel instead of silver. Currency, up to now, consisted of a silver alloy. If silver is a precious metal, nickel is not less shiny.

In view of the fact that our country ranks first in the world among nickel producers, obviously the government can consider making a few changes without fearing that it will lack metal.

However, what is of special interest to me is the price at which the coins will be sold: at what price will the twenty-five cent, fifty-cent or one dollar coins be offered?

If I ask this question, it is because nothing in this bill indicates at what price those dollar coins will be sold.

For instance, clause 9 of the bill reads:

"396". Every one who, with intent to defraud, knowingly utters

(a) a coin that is not current, or

(b) a piece of metal or mixed metals that resembles in size, figure or colour a current coin for which it is uttered, is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

Therefore, the only thing this bill contains is a warning against substitutes.

At the present time, in Viet Nam, Canadian soldiers can exchange the American dollar for 70 units of that country's currency on the regular market, and it may go up to 130 and even 140 units.

As for the mtehods used in the Polish Socialist Republic, in the daytime tourists may obtain at the banks or at foreign exchange offices 25 zlotys for one United States dollar, but after 9 p.m., through private dealers, tourists may get as much as 90 zlotys for one United States dollar.

This is known the world over as the black market. This is a criminal offence under the law; anyone found guilty is liable to 2 years in jail.

The situation here is rather strange, as last summer some had the nerve to offer one dollar silver coins, minted to commemorate our centennial, at $3 each. Many people in my area, students, teachers, three credit union managers, two managers of bank branches, in short people from all classes of society had asked me to get them a few of these silver dollars. I went to the mint, here in Ottawa. I was told I was two days late. So I went to the bank, and they told me that the very small quantity they had received was long since gone. But they were able to refer me to two Ottawa dealers who nonetheless had silver dollars to sell and still do.

Even today these Ottawa dealers, and other American dealers as well, are still offering us silver dollars at unheard of prices. I know that it is too late to remedy the situation, but I would like the minister to take this opportunity to tell us how many fifty cent and one dollar coins were minted to commemorate centennial year.

In addition, for the good of the people, I would like the minister to tell us also how the distribution of those coins was made and by what organizations. How many coins are held by the public and how many are still unsold in stores? I would also like the minister to tell us if that business should really be made legal in our country? In addition, I would like to know how many middlemen took part in that little scheme which finally pushed the price of a centennial dollar up to $3, as I said a while ago? I would like to know what the minister thinks about that.

[English]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in discussing Bill S-23, as a Social Crediter I think all members of my party and fellow Social Crediters will welcome the announcement regarding the coining of money of less intrinsic value using a metal that is equally durable, if not more so, but worth considerably less on the market for its own sake than silver. We welcome this step because obviously the only quality that money should have is durability, and the only real use to which it should be put is in the exchange of goods. If we find it being purchased for its own sake or being saved and kept as a hedge against inflation, then there is something wrong with the state of the economy and with our regard for and attitude toward money itself.

I have to disagree with the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) because after the experience of our centennial year I think it would be wise if the government never again got into the business of producing memorial coins and simply refused to make them for numismatic or any other purposes. I say this because it has already been pointed out to the house by various members that there has been a vast disappearance of thousands, if not millions, of coins that were purportedly designed to come into the hands of the Canadian public as souvenirs or mementoes of centennial year but ended up making an extremely handsome profit for some individuals and dealers, people who remain unidentified but who certainly were not the mass of the Canadian people.

I received early last year, as I am sure most hon. members did, requests from individuals who wanted to know where centennial silver dollars could be obtained. On making inquiries I was told that the coins could be obtained at the chartered banks and all people had to do was make application for them. I was told that, admittedly, the number would be limited for each individual but they could probably obtain at least two apiece if they made application for the coins. Certainly very few of these coins ever got to western Canada through the chartered banks. When people inquired over and over again they found they were absolutely unobtainable. Yet we saw them blossoming out in blocks of plastic in various shops dealing with this type of souvenir, so they were obtainable by certain people.

One of the Ottawa newspapers pointed out a few months ago that anyone who had enough foresight to obtain a sack of one thousand 50-cent pieces back in the spring could have made a profit of around $5,000 on them by now. Again I do not know how one went about obtaining them. I do not think it was our duty as members of parliament to try to go through the labyrinth to obtain a thousand or so of these coins to carry back to our constituencies and distribute them there, but unless we did I can think of no other way by which they could have been put into the hands of individuals who wanted to collect them.

The items which were quoted from coin magazines yesterday indicating the availability of these coins outside the country are, a sad and sorry commentary on the government entering into the coin business. It is a strange thing that when, for example, certain individuals wish to collect service medals the government refuses to part with them even when they have surplus stocks, and have not even considered registering bona fide collectors of such items. Yet we know that the government has been in the business of minting centennial dollars for souvenir purposes, which had the effect of making some individuals much more wealthy than they should be.

The situation is much more critical with regard to the coining of the gold dollar—and the regulations in the act cover this—because in view of the great urgency in the minds of the public to reduce the use of gold in modern currency, this is the last thing that any civilized, modern, developed government should be doing with currency. There is heavy pressure on the monetary authorities of the world to permit an increase in the price of gold, to double or treble its value. Canada has joined its friend and ally, the United States, in opposition to that move because the effect on world trade would be disastrous and would give aid and comfort to certain countries which have endeavoured to frustrate the development of the free western world.

The country which would gain the most from an increase in the price of gold would probably be the Soviet union. Such a move would also be a tremendous boost to France which in the past few years has done all it could to turn its United States dollars into gold rather than to hold its reserves in that currency. So we have opposed the move to increase the price of gold but at the same time the government, in our centennial year was engaged in the minting of a $20 gold coin along with other coins amounting to $1.91 which were put into a set and sold for double the value the $20 gold coin gave to the set. While opposing an increase in the price of gold on the one hand we have tacitly suggested that the price of gold should be far higher than it really is on the other. It has been a confusing effort at a time when, through the International Monetary Fund, spokesmen have told us that they have endeavoured to eliminate the use of gold in the monetary system.

This policy was supposed to be ratified by member countries of the International Monetary Fund over the next two years, and it will be the job of their parliaments to endeavour to convince their people and the people of the world that there is no relation between the value of gold and the worth of money. It will be much harder to put that idea across so long as the Canadian government continues to point out that the value of gold is far above $35 an ounce when it is being used for coinage.

I should like to mention one other point. In the minister's statement yesterday reference was made to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the acquisition or purchase of securities of that organization by the Minister of Finance for the Canadian government at a good rate of interest. If the rate of interest is good, then the interest which the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is charging throughout the world is probably far too high.

We know that some countries which have borrowed from organizations such as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have reached the point where they have had to continue borrowing in order to meet the interest charges on the loans they already have, and that no reconstruction and development can take place because these countries have all they can do to keep their heads above water as they pay the interest charges to the organization. Here again the developed nations should change their approach toward the supplying of credit to and the financing of undeveloped nations because so far all their efforts through such organizations as the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development have succeeded only in widening the gap at an accelerating rate between the rich and the poor nations. Although we may congratulate ourselves on the fact that the purchase of these securities is providing a good rate of interest to this country, we should at the same time question very seriously the whole approach because it can only exacerbate an already extremely difficult situation.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to discover that the program to support the U.S. dollar on which the minister has embarked also meets the Social Credit philosophy and that the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) believes that this program has encroached into the numismatic field. Frankly, I thought it was a rather strange type of operation that Canada, which has a large quantity of gold and silver for sale, should tie itself to United States financial policies. Yet this has been done and will probably be extended.

Although I do not see anything wrong in doing so, it is probably true that coinage should never be minted to be melted for industrial use. The production of coins has some value. For that reason it would be foolish for the mint to be minting coins while industrial users were melting them down for industrial purposes. However, this has been done in the United States. It was done not because of the value of the coinage but because the United States government pegged the price of silver at a level at which the industrial community could not advantageously buy it from industrial sources so they purchased it from the treasury. The United States government has pegged silver at $1.29. Silver purchased on the London market by industrial users in my area is running as high as $2.04. For this reason, I believe the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke is probably right. I believe this only points up the fact that the price at which the United States government has been forced to peg the silver dollar is an artificial one with which they cannot hope to live but which we probably have to take into consideration.

We can do one of two things with our silver coins. We can either decrease the silver content or increase the size of the coin. The minister is suggesting in this bill that we do both. There are many people in the world today who will buy any kind of junk and call it antiques. They pay a high price for these antiques. Peculiar things happen even in the normal course of business. My brother has a tractor which he has had for a great number of years but on a number of occasions he has been offered more for this Farmall-H than he paid for it, not as an antique but as a trade-in. This seems to me a rather odd situation, particularly when that Farmall-H still does the job it was intended to do and yet commands a higher price in the market today than he paid for it. The same situation applies to used furniture.

I could refer to another field of government endeavour, the production of stamps. We find certain countries in the world that can exist on the revenue from manufacturing stamps. They do not have to go into any other field of endeavour. These countries turn out nice looking stamps which collectors pick up, thus providing sufficient revenue for some of these small countries to take care of their needs without taxation. We in Canada are issuing many new stamps and are finding this a lucrative field. Even in the currency field the minister is now proposing that we set up a factory-type operation and that we mint coinage for other countries. I presume we will also manufacture bank notes on a custom basis.

Since I do not believe in Social Credit philosophy I do not see anything wrong with the minting of gold coins if we are going to get in return twice the amount of money we paid for the gold that is in the coin. This does not seem to me to be a foolish operation. If the government would get out of some other operations and go into the manufacture of gold coins, possibly they could reduce the deficit twice as fast. If we can get $2 for each silver dollar, this would seem to me to be a good arrangement.

I am well aware of what happened in connection with United States currency. We talk about supporting the International Monetary Fund, and probably there is a necessity for that because we live in a community of nations. The United States has been turning out scrip in various countries which they never intend to redeem. Much of the currency the United States has put into Viet Nam they never expect to see again, and for that reason this money is really scrip such as armies operated on during the last war. This money is of value only for trade and the United States hopes that operation will be a one-way street.

Canada is being asked to back the United States government. The International Monetary Fund is now being asked to substitute for gold silver certificates and other forms of hard currency, a unit that will probably not be based on the United States dollar. Most countries of the world have lost faith in the United States dollar. There will be a new unit which the government of Canada and the 63 other nations involved in this operation will develop. I represent a gold mining community which has existed for many years on gold selling at $35 per ounce when everyone knows that the price of gold in the free market is much higher. The United States government set the price of gold at $35 and, incidentally, limited the right of United States citizens to hold gold. Many of these people are buying gold and holding it in Swiss banks as a hedge against the devaluation of their own United States dollar. Whenever there is a run on the United States dollar these people are probably undermining their own currency to a great extent.

Personally, I cannot see anything wrong with what the Canadian government decided to do in coining centennial presentation sets. I congratulate the government upon taking this step. Now that they have taken this step and realize the advantages of the operation, I strongly urge the government to extend it. I am glad the government has adopted what might be called a socialistic way of thinking by deciding they are not going to allow other people to decide what is good for them. I think it is true that most Canadians who wanted to buy a silver dollar had no intention of carrying that silver dollar around in their pockets. In my opinion, Canadians who bought silver dollars did so with the idea of presenting them to children as souvenirs. I suppose they hoped that if the child kept the silver dollar long enough it would be worth $8 or $10 by the time the child wanted to spend it. I am of the opinion the Canadian government should consider the segment of the population that wants to save money by stuffing it under the mattress, so to speak. This $2.5 million worth of coins does not seem to me to be too large a number of silver dollars. I do not know where they will end up, perhaps in the Bank of Canada, but I doubt it. I do not believe they would ever get back to the tellers in local banks.

I doubt that these silver dollars find their way back to the bank in the same way that old bills do. Many of us who get these 50-cent pieces in change drop them in a dresser drawer and save them. If you take them to the bank you find that the teller has a list of people who want to get 50-cent pieces. Since I have been interested in collecting coins I have noticed that you seldom find a worn silver dollar or a worn 50-cent piece. This indicates to me they are not used in normal trading. I feel the government should be fair to the public and indicate why they are restricting the use of these coins and why they are so opposed to the collection of coins. Perhaps one answer lies midway between two very good reasons, reasons which might be underlined by outlining certain steps the government has power to take. Probably one of the reasons is that coin collectors in Canada have an edge on buying methods and have been able to affect large transactions in silver for coinage purposes in the United States. There was an example in a newspaper of a three-ton truck load of silver that was transported to the United States to meet a shortage of coins for vending machines.

The second reason is probably the market that has developed for coinage received from the mint distributed in bags of silver in mint-like condition. The bags were distributed not to the general public but to vending machine operators and for numismatic purposes. These coins then find their way into various outlets that sell them back to Canadians at a high profit.

I do not think that the government should become involved in this type of trafficking. On the other hand, I think the minister must explain why he has discontinued the sale of $1.90 worth of coins, not $1.90 worth of silver but face value, in cellophane bags priced at $4. I realize there have been some abuses of these sales, but surely these can be overcome and this type of transaction continued.

I should also like to say that I am of the opinion that the public should be told once and for all that the Canadian government really has no coinage policy in any way, shape or form. In fact the government is following the United States system and is anxious not to do anything that would rock the U.S. dollar. If this is true then perhaps we should link our currency with United States currency.

Some people have suggested that the currency of the International Monetary Fund should be based on the U.S. dollar. Representatives of the Canadian government who attended the recent meeting of the International Monetary Fund in Rio were surprised to find that many countries did not support that suggestion. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the Canadian government is prepared to support such a proposition it should give leadership in developing a new International Monetary Fund unit that is more compatible with the wishes of its members.

I still feel that there is a place for silver coinage. There is a role for industrial silver in the production of coinage and this role should be perpetuated. We do not want to be put in the position where every industrialist in Canada has to go through a sort of reverse operation, with the mint melting down his coinage and turning it into silver and then melting down the silver and turning it back into coinage. Also, collectors of coinage should still have access to the coin market so they can buy silver dollars or 50-cent pieces, and that access should be guaranteed. The cut-off date should be in September instead of without warning early in the year.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the part of the bill that provides for the transfer of the mint or part of its operations from the city of Ottawa. I think the minister will agree there is an historical connection between the capital of the nation and the minting of money. The capital is the place where the mint should be situated, although I realize that in the United States there is a mint at Pittsburgh and also at Denver. However, there is some historical background to that situation.

I think the argument about relocating the mint has been carried to the extreme during the last few months, so much so that we could find ourselves locating the mint in an area over which Canada had no control. This could mean that instead of minting our own money we would have to get somebody else to do it. This would be a ridiculous situation. I suggest that historically the mint should be in the national capital, and that historical right should be protected.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two questions to put to the minister about which there has been quite a bit of discussion. Previous speakers have referred to the unfulfilled demand for centennial silver dollars and half dollars. I also commented on this situation last November when I brought the matter to the attention of the minister. These coins were on sale at various dealers outlets at very high prices in relation to their face value, and when I last motored through the United States they were available in large numbers.

When I raised this matter in the house last November, in referring to the centennial silver dollars and half dollars the minister had this to say, as reported on page 3793 of Hansard:

> These are no longer being produced for ordinary use. They are being produced in sets which are sold mainly for numismatic purposes.

People have written to me asking where these sets can be obtained, how to apply for them and whether the price is still $40 per set. I have not been able to ascertain whether these sets are still available. Perhaps the minister could enlighten me so that I can reply to these inquiries.

Another question I should like to raise, which may have been dealt with when I was absent from the chamber, concerns the proposed new section 8 (1) (d), which says:

> The governor in council may by proclamation—
> (d) call in coins of any date and denomination.

This provision is of great interest to those who hold numbers of coins; they wonder whether those coins could be called in. Does this provision apply to these coins or does it merely refer to those now in the banks?

Mr. Bud Germa (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the introduction of this bill by the minister. Its main feature is the change in the type of metal used to strike coins for the government of Canada. I think no metal is more representative of Canada than nickel. As you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, Canada supplies the world with better than 65 per cent of its demand for nickel. Over 50 per cent of that production originates in the riding I represent, the city of Sudbury. The whole economy of the city is based on the mining and refining of this metal and for these reasons I am pleased to see the minister introduce into the coinage of our country a metal more in keeping with the job coinage has to do. In many of its qualities nickel is superior to silver or gold. It can stand a great deal of wear, unlike more precious metals which are subject to loss of weight and disfigurement when used in coinage. Nickel is not only valuable but tough and difficult to work. I am sure the coins produced from it will stay in circulation much longer than the conventional coinage of the past.

• (4:40 p.m.)

There is, of course, a certain magnetism in the precious metals which tempts people to withdraw them from circulation and hoard them. This is a romantic inclination felt by many people. If we turn to a more ordinary metal such as nickel the tendency to hoard might be reduced with beneficial effect on the amount of coinage in circulation. I recall that not too long ago there was a severe shortage of metal coins and the mint was unable to turn new ones out in the quantities required.

I am not against the purchasing of these coins for commemorative purposes. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) has pointed out that a one dollar coin made 50 per cent of silver would have a silver content worth 88 cents. I see no reason for not making those dollar coins out of nickel. They would probably have a real value of 15 or 20 cents, but dealers could still sell them for the figure my hon. friend mentioned and the profit to the treasury would be even greater.

We must remember, too, that these coins have to be carried around in our pockets. From time immemorial man has tried to simplify the business of carrying money around. At one time coins consisted of large stones with holes in them and it took an ox-cart to move them from one place to another. Today, in Canada, we have reached a point at which relatively large sums can be carried around as coinage without too much inconvenience.

[Mr. Germa.]

The new coins envisaged by the minister will be 13 per cent lighter than the present coins and easier to carry to this extent. The substitution of nickel in the one dollar coin will lead to a 30 per cent reduction in weight. This will in turn lead to other economies. The minister has estimated that to express these coins across Canada costs $285,000. Thus, if we bring about a reduction in weight amounting to 13 to 30 per cent there is bound to be a considerable saving in shipping costs right off the top.

Many people collect coins which have been disfigured in the course of the original stamping. They will pay thousands of dollars for a 50-cent coin which has a dot in a certain spot. Not unnaturally, there are some individuals who disfigure coins in an attempt to make an ordinary 50-cent piece into a rare one. Unlike nickel, silver is an easy metal to work. Its melting point is around 1,200 degrees. The melting point of nickel is between 2,600 and 2,800 degrees. Thus, anyone who wishes to disfigure a coin made of pure nickel has an extremely hard job on his hands.

I should like to comment on one further proposal in the legislation before us. In referring to the proposed location of the mint the bill says it must remain in the national capital region. I consider that the striking of coins is a manufacturing process. I see no relation between the location of the mint and the location of the parliament of Canada. We are trying by various means to create employment in certain depressed or designated areas of the country and I see no reason why these coins could not be manufactured in the maritimes or possibly in northern Ontario close to the source of supply of nickel. These areas have already been designated. I am certain such a move would relieve at least some of the unemployment which exists in those areas.

I do not know what quantity of nickel the mint might use in a year. I have not tried to estimate it because I do not know how many coins it is intended to strike. Regardless of the amount, however, I think the nickel industry in Canada will welcome the decision which the minister has made known. Right now the industry is tied closely to the United States war effort. Sales were high at the time of the Korean war, but shortly after that war ended the nickel company with which I was employed laid off 2,800 men in one week. At the present time the industry is benefiting from the war in Viet Nam but when the Viet Nam war ends the supply of nickel will, I suppose, exceed demand and another two or three thousand workers will be laid off. For this reason a steady market, small as it might be, would certainly be welcomed by the nickel producers of this country.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, before we advance further in our consideration of this bill I should like to ask the minister whether attention has been paid to the effect this legislation may have on 450,000 businesses in Canada which operate by means of coin machines. I am thinking of laundromats, automatic dry cleaners, vendors of soft drinks and so on.

I can appreciate why the government feels we ought to make these changes, but it has been estimated that the cost of converting the sensitive mechanisms which operate these machines and make change may be in the neighbourhood of $50 per machine. The government might be able to save a great deal of money through an amendment of this kind but I am wondering what consideration has been given to the circumstances in which these businessmen will find themselves.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: If the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will not prolong the debate on second reading. Perhaps I might begin by answering a question asked by the last speaker and refer him to the statement which my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Chrétien), made on my behalf yesterday, in which he described the measures being taken to facilitate the change-over of coin vending machines. The principal reason we have not yet been able to proceed with the striking of nickel coins is the difficulties with vending machines, coin changers and so on. We have appointed a management consulting firm to investigate the possibilities of compensating the operators of these machines. I agree with the hon. member that this is an extensive matter.

Most of the comments made by hon. members were directed to the numismatic value of Canadian coins. I can understand the reason why these questions were raised because I have received more correspondence about Canadian centennial dollars and 1967 50-cent pieces than about any other subject during the last few months. As was said yesterday, it is the intention of the government to make provision in this bill for the striking of further 50-cent and dollar coins with 50 per cent silver content rather than the present 80 per cent, principally for those people who may wish to collect these coins and hold them rather than use them for currency purposes.

There is no question but that the new nickel coins will be much more durable, beautiful, and cheaper to issue than silver coins. In order to meet the immediate problem it was decided to reduce the silver content of the 25-cent and 10-cent coins, but when making that announcement I said that these coins would not have the same beauty as those with 80 per cent silver content because in due course they would begin to acquire a yellowish tinge. However, we expect we will be able to issue the new nickel coins before they begin to wear out their welcome. With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude the debate on second reading and be ready to answer any questions in committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Peters: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 1—Authorizing composition of coins where alternatives stated.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make one brief comment. Speaking on second reading yesterday the Minister of National Revenue mentioned that the 50-cent and dollar coins were going to be somewhat smaller in size. I think this is most appropriate as under this government the dollar has lost so much value in the last four years.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Royal Canadian Mint.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I think it is wise that provision has been made in this clause whereby the mint may make coins of the currency of countries other than Canada. I hope the mint will engage in this work because I believe it would be a profitable and useful operation.

There is one other aspect to which I would like particularly to refer and that is the location of the Royal Canadian Mint. This clause contains an amendment which permits it to be in the national capital region, whereas under the previous legislation it was required to be in the city of Ottawa. The suggestion was made by the Minister of National Revenue that perhaps the present mint building should be abandoned completely and a factory type of premises built elsewhere. I want to express the hope that there will not be a complete abandonment of the present mint building, which I recognize as having become too small for the facilities now required but which, on the other hand, is a building of considerable architectural distinction. I believe it ought to be retained as the principal headquarters of the Royal Canadian Mint. If another building is required I believe there is within the immediate area sufficient space which would be fully suitable for such a building. In this respect I hope I might have the support of the hon. member for Ottawa East.

I wish to express the hope, and I would like to have some assurance from the minister, that the location of the mint will not be used as a matter of log rolling, shall I say, in relation to the location of government buildings on the two sides of the Ottawa river. The mint has been in its present location ever since it was organized in 1908. Its principal branch should be retained in that position, and I do not think the mint should be used as a means of satisfying those who seek to increase the number of buildings on the other shore of the Ottawa river.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, out of courtesy to the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre I would like to revert to clause 2 for purposes of an explanation. He asked what was the purpose of the proposed new section 8(1)(d), authorizing the governor in council to call in coins of any date and denomination. I am informed by the Master of the Mint that no proclamation has ever been issued to that effect. It could be used for the purpose of calling in all silver coins, or something of that kind, but such a case has never arisen. In fact coins have been accepted by the mint and replaced by new coins because the old coins had become defaced or worn.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel it is in our interests to have the words "within the national capital region" substituted for the words "in Ottawa" in the present act. I too feel that the capital should be the location of the mint. Therefore I move:

That clause 4 be amended by deleting in lines 10, 11 and 12, the words "within the National Capital Region described in the Schedule to the National Capital Act," and substitute therefor the words "in Ottawa."

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, my colleague dealt with this subject yesterday. He said that the purpose of the amendment in clause 4 was to locate the mint within the national capital region rather than specifically in Ottawa. I believe this is a wise amendment. There are many departments in the government of Canada that have offices in other parts of the national capital region and I can see no reason why the mint should be an exception. I recognize, of course, that it is almost universal practice to have the mint located in the capital region, but there is no specific reason that it should be located in the city of Ottawa itself any more than should the printing bureau or any other department of government. There is nothing sacrosanct about the mint which would require that it be located within the municipal boundary of the city of Ottawa. Indeed, in the interests of the country as a whole I would have thought it would be well not to have the national capital region identified specifically with the province of Ontario but rather as part of a complex of Ontario and Quebec.

Therefore I can say that the government does not agree with the proposed amendment. We believe there should be sufficient flexibility, if it is found desirable for economic reasons or for reasons of efficiency, so that buildings can be distributed over the whole area to the best advantage. That decision in the case of the mint could mean that it would be located outside the municipal boundary of Ottawa. On the other hand, I wish to assure hon. members that no decision has as yet been made.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Is there a tentative proposal in relation to the site?

Mr. Sharp: There are several. Some of them relate to sites inside Ottawa and some of them relate to sites outside Ottawa.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a very brief statement. I can understand that there may be some members who feel they ought to support this amendment because of the nature of their constituencies. However, I think I would have to oppose it on the ground that at the moment there is under way some type of arrangement to have a national capital region. I do not believe there has been diversity in respect of the buildings in the national capital area and although I really do not know what the officials of the department have in mind I believe I would be opposed to the amendment.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Peters) negatived: Yeas 17; nays 30.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question in connection with the minting of coins and the switch to nickel. I am aware that the blanks for nickels have been made at Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta. Is it the intention that the blanks for the new coins which are to be switched to nickel will be made at the same plant and will the Sherritt Gordon Company of Fort Saskatchewan be the exclusive provider of these blanks for the mint?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the plant to which the hon. gentleman has referred may not be the exclusive manufacturer of these blanks. We may make some of them ourselves, but we have no intention to switch from this company.

Mr. Nugent: In connection with new coins I am wondering whether the blanks for the quarters and dimes, for instance, will be supplied by this plant at least in part.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, in part at least.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister what action is proposed by the Royal Canadian Mint in respect of seeking the business of making coins in the currency of other countries? Is it intended that there will be a general promotional job in this regard and, if so, by what means?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I can say to the hon. gentleman that it is the intention of the mint to seek business, I believe the best advertisement will be the quality of our coins and the speed with which we can produce them. The Master of the Mint advises me that his main method will be salesmanship.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether certain countries in the world today have their coins minted in other countries?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. This is widespread practice, particularly by the less developed countries.

Mr. Monteith: Therefore this salesmanship would not necessarily be in the western hemisphere?

Mr. Sharp: No.

Mr. Pascoe: In respect of the subsection of new section 14 which refers to "making coins of the currency of Canada" can the minister say whether the $40 coin sets will continue to be available.

Mr. Sharp: This question was asked a number of times during the debate on second reading. The $40 coin sets had to be discontinued. Last September we gave notice of about a month. Perhaps everyone did not see the notice but it was given. The mint is now very busy trying to fill the orders which have already been received. Almost 400,000 sets were ordered. It is a very considerable task not only to produce the coins but also to produce the boxes in which they are mounted. The $4 sets without the gold coins have been discontinued. The number ordered was about one and a quarter million sets. In both cases the mint had to stop taking orders in order to start work on the 1968 coins and in order to check the unlimited demand for coin sets and meet the need for the year 1968, particularly in light of the fact that we must switch from silver to nickel.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Were efforts made to see that the centennial dollars and 50-cent pieces were sent in any quantity to individual banks in western Canada so that individuals who wished to obtain one or two would be able to do so?

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the orders for the sets of coins, either the $40 sets or the $4 sets, are made directly to the mint itself. The other coins, whether dollars, 50-cent, 25-cent or 5-cent pieces are just distributed generally for public use. The government has no way of controlling the ultimate destination of those coins. An attempt is made by the mint and the Bank of Canada to see that there is an adequate geographical distribution of the coins across the country. Other than that, the government has no control over their ultimate destination, that is, whether they go into the hands of collectors or to the public for circulation.

Mr. Rynard: When the Minister of Finance says "geographical distribution", who is distributing them? Are these coins distributed to the banks? How do you obtain a geographical distribution?

Mr. Sharp: The distribution is made through the Bank of Canada to the chartered banks which make application to the Bank of Canada for the number of coins they think they need for general use.

Mr. Peters: Is it not a fact that general distribution is not on a geographical basis but is actually made to the headquarters of the banks? Is it not so that distribution on a geographical basis falls within the responsibility of those head offices?

Mr. Sharp: No, the distribution is made through the agencies of the Bank of Canada in various parts of the country. It is not made through the head offices of chartered banks.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—1963, c. 34, s.1(1).

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, clause 5 deals with the exchange fund and this might be an appropriate time to ask the Minister of Finance to express his view regarding the rather vigorous advocacy of a floating exchange rate for the Canadian dollar by the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada. In view of the advocacy of a floating exchange rate by such a highplaced adviser of the government we should have at this stage the most positive assurance from the Minister of Finance that the government has no intention of departing from the present pegged rate of 92½ cents in United States funds and that it intends to use the exchange fund to the limit to protect that rate.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I am quite happy to confirm what the hon. member for Carleton has said. When Mr. Smith made his statement he made it without the knowledge and without the authorization of the government. He did not consult in any way with the government in advance. He made it as a purely personal expression of his views, just as many academics have done. Indeed, I think it was a president of one of the chartered banks who said he thought there was a theoretical case for a floating exchange rate. So far as the government is concerned, our policy is quite clear. It is to maintain the present value of the Canadian dollar and to use our resources to the utmost to defend that rate.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Did this expression of opinion by such a high-placed adviser of the government have any unsettling effect upon our exchange position?

Mr. Sharp: Perhaps I could say that I regretted very much that Mr. Smith had been led into making a statement of his personal views. I think he regrets that he succumbed to the temptation.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, now that the Minister of Finance has told us what the government policy is, will he tell us the reason we should not revert to a floating exchange rate?

Mr. Sharp: The short answer is because I do not think that a floating exchange rate would be in Canada's interest today.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Chairman, clause 5 makes mention of the purchase of securities from the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. When looking at the note in respect of the purpose we find that there are various items the minister is authorized to purchase, including securities of the International Monetary Fund. Is the addition of authority in respect of securities of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development desired on behalf of the Canadian government in order to improve the resources of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development or is this simply because it is a good investment? Has the minister any idea how much money would be involved in the purchase of such securities in a year's time?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, when my colleague was presenting this bill on second reading yesterday he said that the securities which the exchange fund would expect to purchase with this authority would be special issues of two year central bank bonds which the I.B.R.D. first brought out in 1964 and which are offered only to central banks and other government institutions. These bonds are denominated in United States currency and are offered every six months. The last issue was on September 15, 1967 and was sold to central banks and other governmental institutions of 43 countries, and one international organization. The issue at that time was $1 million United States and carried an interest rate of 5¾ per cent. These bonds are not only a good investment from the point of view of the exchange fund but they represent an indirect way of assisting the operations of the International Bank itself. They serve the double purpose of providing an attractive means of short-term investment for the exchange fund and a way of providing more resources for the International Bank itself.

Mr. Johnston: Is the minister in a position to tell us at what rate of interest the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development lends the resources it obtains to developing countries in the world?

Mr. Sharp: I am informed that at the present time the International Bank is lending to its customers at about 6¼ per cent, somewhat higher than the cost of the money it has borrowed.

Mr. Johnston: I have one further question. I would be interested in knowing, with all of the interlocking arrangements between the International Bank and the Bank of Canada, whether it would be possible for the Canadian government to refrain from entering into any proposal to purchase securities from this bank?

Mr. Sharp: Yes. There is no compulsion whatever upon the exchange fund to purchase any security if it is believed unwise. However, it is believed that it would be wise to have this authority because these are excellent securities guaranteed by most governments of the world. I cannot think of any better vehicle in which to put our exchange funds today. We are under no compulsion, and if we do not like a particular issue or if it is not priced well there is no reason to make an investment.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister has under hand the statistics in respect of the exchange fund account as of January 1 of this year and as of the latest date for which they are available? Could he indicate what loss there may have been during that period and what loss there may have been immediately subsequent to the statement of the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada? Perhaps I might ask also whether the minister has or could obtain for the committee what the amount was as of the first of the year invested in each of the various types of investments which are listed in subsection 2 of section 22 of the act?

Mr. Sharp: I do not happen to have the information with me but I could remind the hon. member that at the end of January a statement was issued that showed there had been a loss of reserves of approximately $340 million, which was replaced in part by taking advantage of a swap facility with the Federal Reserve Bank to the extent of $250 million, leaving a loss of something of the order of $90 million. I do not have with me the distribution of the securities. My recollection, is, however, that gold forms about $1 billion out of something of the order of $2 billion in reserves, other than the $250 million we used through the swap facility. So it is about $1 billion out of reserves of $2¼ billion, something of that order. I do not have the figures with me but that it is my recollection.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could secure the figures and give them to me.

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Mr. Peters: How much of the fund is held in gold at the present time?

Mr. Sharp: About $1 billion, upon which we earn nothing.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 6—Earnings.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I ask this question for clarification. As I understand it, in the estimate for the year ending March 31, 1968, there is a vote asking for the transfer of moneys from the exchange fund account for the calendar year 1964. Old section 24 states that profits from the exchange fund should be transferred into the consolidated revenue fund within three months after the end of each year. I am at a loss to know why this was not done and why, therefore, four years later we are changing this act.

Mr. Sharp: This is a technical amendment, Mr. Chairman. The present act provides for the transfer to the consolidated revenue fund at the end of each year of that portion of the exchange fund's net income derived from interest and discounts on the securities held in its portfolio. It does not provide, however, for the transfer of other income realized by the exchange fund, most of which is derived from trading operations.

The Auditor General and the public accounts committee of this house recommended the transfer of these other profits to the consolidated revenue fund and my department undertook to obtain the necessary authority. While we were awaiting an opportunity to open up this act for amendment, we did in fact obtain the authority by an item in supplementary estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968. This was in vote

23a. This vote authorized the transfer of these other profits for the calendar year 1964 and subsequent years. The amendment in clause 6 of the bill before us will supersede this item. So it is purely a technical change.

Mr. Hales: I thank the minister for his answer, Mr. Chairman. I am glad to know that one more recommendation of the public accounts committee has been crossed off the list.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I asked the minister how much gold was being held and he said $1 billion, which was not earning any money. The obvious question to ask is, why are we holding it? Does the minister not see some profit in minting this gold for Canadian currency? We have $16 million of it in gold currency and it cost us only $4 million for the gold. We made a profit of $12 million. I think the minister is overlooking a good bet as Minister of Finance if he does not try minting some of this gold so we can make the same kind of profit that we made last time. Obviously this situation has great profit potential.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the hon. gentleman that the minting of gold never produces any profit. Every gold coin has to be worth its intrinsic value in gold. It is not like nickel, in respect of which we will have a lot of seigniorage. The value of a gold coin must be what it says. If you have a $20 gold piece it is worth $20 in gold. I made an offhand comment that the $1 billion we held in our reserves does not earn us anything. This is the reason we do not hold all our reserves in gold. The reason we hold some 40 per cent or so in gold is as a hedge against the possibility that some time the value of gold might be increased.

PUBLICATION OF STATUTES ACT

AUTHORIZATION TO PRESCRIBE FORM AND MANNER OF PRINTING

The house resumed, from Tuesday, November 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau for the second reading of Bill No. S-18, to amend the Publication of Statutes Act.

Mr. Terence Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, there was some debate on this bill last November. I have noted the remarks of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) at that time and I also took the trouble to read his testimony before the Senate committee which considered this bill. While I do not want to take up too much time of the house, I believe, considering the expressed purpose of the minister in bringing forward this bill, that he is doing more harm to his cause than good.

The simple situation will be that if this intent is carried into effect every lawyer in Canada will be faced with a doubling of the size of the books with which he is dealing, a doubling of the size of the statutes and the field through which he must search in any book to which he refers. I want to make it plain that I have no particular objection to attempting to further the use of the French language in parts of Canada or the use of the English language in parts of Quebec. However, I do not think it can be argued that the method now suggested by the minister is the only way to do it.

I do not think there is any validity in the argument that the minister seems to suggest, namely, that by doing it in this manner there will be more justice for French speaking Canadians because copies of the statutes will be available in the French language. There is absolutely nothing wrong with statutes being printed in English, and in French, with both volumes being available so that one or the other may be used. I cannot imagine a case coming before any court in the land where the trial will not be held in one language or the other.

As a matter of fact, I am sure that in the courts in most parts of this country you will find that English is used almost exclusively, and in some other courts French is used almost exclusively. For the odd, exceptional case the statutes will be available in the other language. Therefore the necessity of having the other language in the road at all times is going to be irksome. Instead of making our second language a cultural heritage which we will like, treasure and enjoy, it will become an irksome nuisance to those trying to follow their professions in the best way they can. Certainly it would not promote either unity in the country or the further spread of bilingualism if one language were to become irksome and a nuisance in any part of the country.

• (5:30 p.m.)

There is also a practical consideration to be taken into account, namely, the cost involved. The minister said that bilingualism costs little and is worth it. I have no quarrel with that, but if it costs more money because of a wrong approach then bilingualism will not be advanced and money will be wasted. I think it is perfectly proper to point out that it will be more expensive to print bilingual statutes, not just for the government but for everyone across Canada who refers to them, because if the statutes are printed in the manner suggested by the minister we will have to pay the cost of both sets. Certainly my own law office has little use for a French set and I am sure there are many law offices in Quebec city which have no use for an English set. The government will have to pay the cost of printing both sets, and each individual in Canada will have to assume the cost of both whether or not he uses them. I think this is an imposition and I see no justification for it.

There is another matter which concerns me greatly. A suggestion has already been made that one way of dealing with this matter would be to resort to finer print in order to have both versions on the same page and so that the size of the volume would not be too great. I suppose that for thinner paper to be strong enough it would have to be of higher quality and therefore more expensive, so that this suggestion might result in greater expense. The idea of finer print bothers me. Certainly legal work is hard on the eyes because it requires constant reading and reference to statutes and case books.

I am amazed that the Minister of Justice is setting out to reduce the size of print in order that both languages may be contained in the same book because in this way he may create difficulties for lawyers across Canada. I believe that many lawyers, especially those getting on in years and having trouble with their eyes, might take this as a personal affront. I do not want to sound as if I were getting too close to that age but as I wear glasses I think I can speak with some authority on this subject. When I was in my early thirties I could read all day and never get tired but now that I am getting on in years I become tired after reading for a couple of hours. If the minister has his way I might have to have someone read to me after I have passed the age of 50.

I should now like to review some of the minister's arguments before the committee. He said that his purpose is to ensure that justice is available. This sounds very good and I am certain the measure he has proposed is one way of ensuring that people can be heard in either language before the courts. But surely the mere fact that we have to refer to one book or another instead of having both languages in the same book would not affect the availability of justice. The minister argued that lawyers in court will frequently find it useful to have the French version of a section readily available in order to clarify a legal point so that the court may understand more clearly what parliament meant in the legislation. To that I say that it seems to me that ten times more often the French version would be used in order to confuse the issue if a lawyer felt he was losing his argument. I do not think much would be gained by it.

While in the city of Edmonton there are not many bilingual lawyers, I have often appeared before a bilingual judge and have been opposed by a bilingual counsel. Yet I have never heard them refer to a French version for assistance. In fact, I suggest that in many cases the judge would be displeased with what I consider would be an additional complication, particularly in view of the fact that there can be no literal translation of either language. Therefore resorting to another language would in most cases be an added complication rather than assisting in understanding the legislation.

I think the strongest argument used by the minister in favour of this measure is based on his feeling that it would assist in the spread of bilingualism in Canada and that it would give the French speaking people in western areas, for example, a greater feeling of security in the knowledge that the statutes are available in their own language. It has been my feeling for some time, which has been confirmed by some friends of mine who are concerned about the lack of understanding in western Canada of the views of French Canadians on the subject of bilingualism, that this subject has not been taken seriously enough here in Ottawa. We in western Canada are accused of not taking our French friends seriously enough. In a previous speech in the house I said that this lack of understanding is one of the greatest dangers we face in this country today because it leads to suspicion and distrust, which in turn leads to resentment and then to enmity. There can also be resentment when things are not done the right way. If I am correct in my argument that the citizen's right to obtain justice in either language is protected by the availability of two volumes, one in English and one in French, then the minister's suggestion that both versions be available in one volume would only serve to promote bilingualism, and the right to justice would not be protected by this proposal.

The minister may have a point, if I have understood his argument correctly, but I do feel that the point made by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) last November should be considered a little more seriously. There are many courts in large sections of our country where the use of French is completely non-existent. In a few areas French is used in the courts on rare occasions. I suppose also that there are areas in Quebec where the use of English is very infrequent. Therefore, a vast majority of lawyers in Canada deal in one language most of the time, and whether or not a lawyer is fluently bilingual he knows before going to the court in what language a case will be conducted. In such cases the second language is really redundant. Yet on every occasion when a lawyer goes to court he will have to carry with him statutes in both languages, which may perhaps be a nuisance and irksome to him. He would have the constant reminder that his books were costing him more, that they were taking up more room on his shelves and that the paper was thinner. He would have the constant reminder that he must try to read finer print. All of these constant and irksome reminders would serve to recall to the people of this country that we are a bilingual nation. If these books are to serve only as reminders of our bilingualism and must take this irksome form, then I say to the Minister of Justice he is not helping the cause of bilingualism, he is not helping the cause of unity and understanding.

I suggest to the minister that he should look more closely at this proposal. It may well be that in another 20 years when the provinces have moved in the field of education to the extent that we have a whole new generation that is truly bilingual, when all aspects and advantages of bilingualism have spread across the country, there may be a more general acceptance and understanding of this proposal. I am suggesting to the minister that at this juncture in our development the printing of the statutes in the manner in which he would like to see them would not be an asset but rather an irksome nuisance. He would, therefore, do his cause much harm by this proposal.

Since the minister has suggested that the revised statutes are going to be in this form he may be well advised to wait until the revised statutes are published and distributed across the country. He can then ascertain how they are received. If the minister finds that in the west, for instance, there is no particular feeling about it, that it does not give rise to these feelings I fear, then he could proceed with this suggestion. I hope that for the sake of greater understanding and a broader acceptance of bilingualism in this country the minister will take a good look at this suggestion.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased, on examination of this bill, to pay tribute to the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau), sponsor of the bill, and to emphasize the admiration we all felt during the constitutional conference.

We were given a chance to appreciate the exceptional work he has done and to admire the truly unique competence with which he set forth his views during the conference. I do not think I am exaggerating when I say that, if the conference was the success it was generally recognized to be, the contribution of the hon. Minister of Justice was truly outstanding.

I feel that he expressed, during this conference, a philosophy we can trace back to the testimony he gave before the Senate committee on banking and commerce. We really find in it the essential basis on which will inevitably rest the Canadian unity that we are on the point of achieving. If it does not yet exist to the extent that the existence of a Canadian ideal could be generally recognized, it is precisely because the French fact has never been accepted, in some parts of the country, as a typically Canadian asset.

When listening to the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) we know that he no doubt speaks with deep conviction and sincerity, but he represents that very minority group in Canada which has always refused to consider the French fact as one of the greatest assets which enables the Canadian people to be distinguishable from our neighbours to the south, the Americans. And this is fundamental, if Canadian unity is to be strenghtened for future generations.

In his evidence before the Senate committee, the minister expressed most clearly the views of all those who advocate Canadian solidarity. There was never any question of forcing a language upon anyone; any attempt to do so would be anti-democratic, and we would then have to condemn such a philosophy, such an attitude.

This fact remains, Mr. Speaker: The younger generation of Canadians, either French-speaking or English-speaking, really believe that the French fact is an asset for Canada. If the older generation is somewhat surly and rather unwilling to make such a concession, it is normal. The hon. member for York-Humber said the other day: Since Wolfe, French-Canadians are a conquered people. He is not to blame for expressing such a thought; he has lived, he was educated and he has grown old in that atmosphere.

The younger generation, however, disputes such remarks. I had the opportunity to talk—

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister is looking at me because I have been speaking too long.

Mr. Trudeau: I am admiring you.

Mr. Choquette: Thank you. I had the opportunity to speak before several university audiences outside Quebec. There is always a great deal of applause when one says to Canada's younger generation: "The French fact is still the strongest feature that distinguishes you from the Americans". Our young Canadians do not want to become Americans. We have heard Americans visiting Quebec city ask us: "Why don't you join the American flag?"

Why were they asking such a question, Mr. Speaker? Because they could not see any difference between Canada and the United States.

They thought that Canada was a wholly English country, and English the only language in use. But when you say to young English Canadians that the French language and culture are live and active factors in the country, they feel proud. I would like here the hon. member for York-Humber to imitate these feelings of the younger generation and revise the erroneous philosophy to which he holds so obstinately.

But why all these words, when we are dealing with a seemingly rather insignificant bill? It is precisely because it has symbolic value. And I am only repeating what the minister said before the Senate committee. There is symbolic value in this. Why print the French text besides the English text?

If you want to consider the political aspect of the question, because the legal interpretation aspect—I will come back to that later—has been strongly pointed out, and besides cannot be ignored under the circumstances, it acquires thereby a symbolic value, for by placing the French version besides the English version there is affirmed to the whole country that we have really bilingual institutions.

In the province of Quebec, there are lawyers practising law in Chicoutimi, Rimouski, Quebec city and distant municipalities where the English language is never used. Yet the statutes of the province of Quebec are printed in both languages. There may be extremists who will question that, but people of good will, serious people willingly accept it. We have the French and English versions side by side in the statutes of the province of Quebec, but we would never think of denouncing that fact as a situation through which we might be unduly coerced. Nobody would think of doing that. The phenomenon is accepted, and we are happy to tell the people of the province of Quebec: "English is a language, and the more familiar you become with the English language and culture, the richer your personality will be".

What we would really like in order that the cultural equality spoken of during the constitutional conference these last few days might become an actual fact, would be for people such as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and the hon. member for York-Humber to say one day: "If we want to enrich the personality of all Canadians, we should all have a better knowledge of the two languages and the two cultures, for that is an important factor in our development and in the enrichment of our personality. There is nothing revolutionary in this theory, Mr. Speaker. That should be accepted.

The legislation before us is intended to allow printing the English text beside the French text. But some members, including the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent), argue that it would result in additional expenses. That is obvious, Mr. Speaker.

Simultaneous interpretation in the house is an added expense. Bilingual inscriptions and all the translation system cost more money than if we did not need them, as in unilingual countries.

But, as the provincial premiers gathered around the constitutional conference table have proclaimed, what we want to establish is language equality. It is a very symbolic way of acknowledging in practice this principle of cultural and bilingual equality. It is a matter of friendly coexistence between the two great Canadian communities. This is the only way, Mr. Speaker, to make Canada a strong and progressive country. In fact, it is the only way to break through the psychological barriers which have been existing for one hundred years, namely that French Canadians do not feel at home when they are outside Quebec.

This is a psychological separatism, a linguistic separatism which inevitably leads to the demand for political separatism. I think that if the hon. members opposite wanted to get inspiration from the spirit which prevailed during the constitutional conference, they would quickly share the spirit which prevails in the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, on page 51 of the report of the committee on finance, trade and economic matters, a remark can be found which, in my opinion, sums up pretty well what was said by the hon. minister himself when Senator Everett said to the hon. Minister of Justice:

• (5:50 p.m.)

[English]

So you would say then, Mr. Minister, that by printing the versions side by side you improve the degree of interpretation that is available to the lawyers and to the courts?

[Translation]

The hon. Minister of Justice then answered:

[English]

That is exactly my point, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we cannot find a more concise and striking formula to outline the basic question of judicial interpretation.

If both texts are official, if both texts can be used to enlighten the court, they must be readily available to those responsible for the interpretation of the laws. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona said, and this is an argument which should be considered seriously: Lawyers never use the French text; to my knowledge, I have never seen anyone consult the French text.

Does the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona realize, however, that if the French text were more easily available to lawyers, perhaps they would then remember to refer to it. In my opinion, there are many English-speaking lawyers, who are members of the Canadian bar and who are well versed in French, enough at least to read it, if they cannot speak it fluently.

I think that the Prime Minister is a perfect example of that type of bilingual Canadian whom we would like to see more numerous in Canada. He understands French quite well. We can speak to him in French and even if he answers in English, because he is unable to express himself correctly in French, he can at least grasp its subtleties.

Besides, no one would like a Canadian to feel that he has to learn another language and here I have to disagree with the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire)—and I am sorry he is not here—when he says in this house: Are you going to give us bilingual constables? I think that is heresy. How can we ask constables to be bilingual when the members of parliament are not? There is no better way to create prejudice, ill-feeling and resentment. We are not asking that the constables be bilingual; we are asking that the French Canadians who come to parliament be able to make themselves understood in their own language. But a constable must never be forced to be bilingual to keep his job.

So, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put the record straight about this matter of bilingualism and show that claims as ridiculous as those of the hon. member for Lapointe may create prejudice, resentment, incomprehension and a hardening attitude. The result is that it is difficult afterwards to obtain what we want.

After all, our claims are legitimate: That the French fact be an enrichment for Canada, that the English-speaking Canadians be proud of the existence of the French fact, since it is the best way to distinguish ourselves from Americans. If that attitude, that doctrine were accepted, Canada would be strengthened and more unified.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the following questions will be raised at the time of adjournment: the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), Public Service; the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), Education; the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Loney), Indian Affairs.

It being six o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. C-104, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada—Mr. Honey—Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 1—Abbreviated name.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-104, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Cantelon: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to hold up passage of this bill as amended to any extent. It has had exhaustive treatment in the transport and communications committee over a period of more than a year. During that time many firms presented evidence criticizing two aspects of the original bill, first, the clause that would have given Bell the power to issue stock without any measure of control either by the transport committee or the securities board and, second, the extension of powers to engage in any business or purchase or development whether related to the communications field or not. There was also the thought that the powers Bell asked for would enable them to enter the broadcasting field.

I think I am correct in saying that the members of the transport and communications committee realized that to a large extent these objections were valid. It pleases all of us to know that when the company understood our objections and those raised by so many other people they showed their good faith as corporate citizens of Canada by suggesting amendments to correct both these complaints to which I have referred. On this basis, Mr. Chairman, we are pleased to support the bill as now amended and feel the company should be commended for its co-operative attitude.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have a few opening remarks to make on this bill. I realize that it is an important private bill as it affects the people of Ontario who are telephone subscribers and the employees of the company. For this reason hon. members have a distinct responsibility to all concerned to make certain that the bill is as satisfactory as possible in the circumstances which exist today. I think this was the general attitude of the standing committee in dealing with the bill. I know that a considerable time was spent hearing representations and considering the views of hon. members.

It is a somewhat unusual situation for me to be speaking on a bill concerning the affairs of a giant monopoly, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. I happen to be speaking as president of what is possibly the smallest telephone company in Canada, the Nakusp-Galena Bay Telephone Company which has operated a 40-mile double-wire telephone line for many years. It has been operated for service only and exists because these big monopolies decline to operate in areas where there are so few subscribers and where the physical conditions are so severe. I might say we have never declared a profit and that our assets are now in the lap of the gods, which in practice means they are subject to the decision of the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority. All we can do is hope and pray so far as the future is concerned. However, I do know something about the difficulties of maintaining and operating telephone lines in circumstances which these large companies would prefer to avoid, and for this reason I have been interested in following the bill in committee and considering the evidence placed before it.

I have one or two question I should like to ask the sponsor. Can the sponsor assure us that the company told the truth to the committee or that the company has presented all the facts to the Board of Transport Commissioners? Is it a fact that the company has a loan capital of $400 million which is included as investment capital so far as the company is concerned? I have been told this is so but I do not know whether it is correct. Again, will the sponsor, when we reach the appropriate clause, inform this committee about the objections which were raised to certain amendments as a result of representations made by members of the committee and others? The previous speaker referred to this subject, and I understand the company was willing to make certain amendments. I should also like to ask the hon. member whether this bill gives the company a monopoly over research related to this type of enterprise. When this bill is passed in its amended form, what particular advantages will it give to the company concerned? We shall have some further questions to ask when we reach the clauses dealing with these matters.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we in this group have been very interested in the operation of the Bell Telephone Company and its financial structure. While it is true that the committee devoted more careful consideration to the bill before us than was forthcoming in the case of the measure presented some years ago, there are still several matters to be resolved.

The problem facing us in connection with the setting of rates for Bell Telephone services arises from the fact that Bell has a wholly-owned subsidiary engaged in both manufacturing and research. I do not criticize Bell for making these arrangements. In fact, I believe the company is wise to use this method of ensuring the services of a research organization and of a factory which can manufacture material for its use as well as produce equipment on a competitive basis for the use of others engaged in telecommunications. As I say, the problem arises from the fact that in these circumstances there is really no way in which one can correctly assess the amount of money which is put into Bell by Northern Electric or which flows in the reverse direction. The task of the Board of Transport Commissioners in setting rates is made virtually impossible.

The company has appeared before the board in recent years seeking a profit level higher than that which the board had set. Recently it persuaded the board that it should be allowed to raise its level of earnings to 7.2 per cent from approximately 6 or 6½ per cent. I understand from one of my hon. friends that the company has not agreed to the separation of Northern Electric from its operations. In wishing them to divorce their operations we do not object to Bell having a controlling interest or ownership but we do believe stock should be made available so that others can buy into Northern. As long as we allow Bell to give stock options to its employees, and it is debatable whether we should, Northern Electric employees should be allowed to buy stock in that company or in Bell if there is no Northern stock available.

A number of worth-while amendments have been made to the bill but I think the Bell Company should be forewarned that the next time it comes before parliament it should be prepared to give up sole control and ownership of Northern and of any research facilities which it provides. One of my colleagues asks why I should pick on Bell. Simply because that is the company involved in this bill. My remarks could apply equally to C.P.R. or any other major company operating in the public utility field. Rates are set for the C.P.R. by a public agency, but the subsidiaries of the C.P.R. do not make reports to the controlling agency. As a result a confused picture can be presented to the board which we have appointed to fix rates. As a matter of fact, the members of the board are to be criticized for not requiring such subsidiaries to report to it.

The members of the standing committee have done a thorough job in examining this bill and I am willing to accept the decisions they have made. However, as I say, the Bell Company should be warned that there are members of this house who will not treat it leniently in the future unless it is prepared to let the regulatory board have full information about its subsidiaries.

Mr. Honey: Before we pass clause 1, Mr. Chairman, I wish to express thanks to the chairman and members of the standing committee who worked diligently and carefully on this rather complex, involved legislation. As hon. members have indicated, they made very substantive changes to the bill, which were agreed to by the Bell Telephone Company. These changes were worked out in conjunction with the officers of the company.

I should also like to deal now with the matters raised by the hon. member for Kootenay West now because some of them cover more than one clause. But before doing so I wish to say that when we reach clause 7, which is new clause 6, I understand the hon. member for York South will move an amendment to subclause 3 which will be of a minor nature. I shall also move an amendment to subclause 4 of that clause which will involve a rewording suggested by the Department of Transport counsel and concurred in by the Department of Justice and Mr. Henry.

I know that the hon. member for Kootenay West has some considerable experience in the telephone business. I do not claim any particular competence but I will do the best I can to give him the information he has sought. On the question of whether or not the officers of the Bell Telephone Company gave truthful and accurate information and testimony to the standing committee, I can only say to my hon. friend that I am satisfied they did, and were I not so satisfied I certainly would not act as sponsor of this legislation.

The hon. member also raised something which he said he had heard. He was not specific with respect to details, but I made a note of his remark concerning loan capital of $400 million included as investment capital. I have here the balance sheet included in the 1966 annual report of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and I refer my hon. friend to that report. Under "Investments" it indicates subsidiary companies. There are some eight or nine subsidiary companies. I checked with the head office of the company today and am informed that its total investment—this is at cost—in those subsidiaries is $178 million in round figures. I quote the following from the balance sheet to which I have referred, under the heading "Other Companies":

> 5.9 per cent of the preferred shares and 53.7 per cent of the common shares in the Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Company, Limited. Direct ownership, without voting control, acquired in September, 1966; market value at December 31, 1966: $38,194,000.

My up to date information today is that the market value of those shares is now approximately $52 million. The only other item under "Investments" in the balance sheet refers to the special refundable tax, which is $6,464,000.

The hon. member for Kootenay West also asked me for information about objections raised and about amendments. I think he was probably referring to amendments made in the committee. These are set out in Votes and Proceedings of Wednesday, February 7. They are substantial, and I have already given credit to members of the committee and the officers of the company for working in cooperation with each other.

• (6:20 p.m.)

There are still many matters of importance to the company in this legislation. One is the updating or refurbishing of much of the terminology used. The word "telecommunications", for example, which is used throughout as an amending word in this legislation brings the legislation into line and consistent with other legislation of parliament such as the Radio Act, the Criminal Code and the Broadcasting Act. The general counsel of the Bell Telephone Company, when he appeared as a witness before the committee, said that the refurbishing of the language brought their legislation into the jet age, I believe he said.

A second matter of importance to which the hon. member for Kootenay West referred has to do with the power given in the legislation to invest in research and development companies. This particular power may have been available to the Bell Telephone Company but it is now clarified and I believe made explicit in this legislation. As other hon. members mentioned this afternoon, the amendment to which I refer now limits the Bell Telephone Company to confine its investment in research and development to companies engaged in telecommunications research and development. I believe I can answer my hon. friend's next question by saying, in my opinion in any event, that this does not give the Bell Telephone Company a monopoly in this field. Perhaps I might read the amendment. It reads as follows:

> Delete and substitute therefor new clause 7 as follows:
> "7. For the purpose of carrying out its corporate powers the Company is empowered to purchase or otherwise acquire, and to hold shares, bonds, debentures or other securities in any other Company engaged in research and development work in areas of inquiry that relate to the objects of this Company—

I think those words are important because they confine the Bell Telephone Company's investment in research and development to companies which are doing research and development in the area which Bell may pursue under the objects of the Bell Telephone Company.

> —and to sell or otherwise deal with the same, provided—

These words are important.

> —that such other company, not being a subsidiary of the company on the date on which this Act comes into force,—

Of course, that provision is there to save whatever rights the Bell Telephone Company has in respect of investments and so on with regard to the Northern Electric Company.

> —does not manufacture products for sale to the Company or to other customers."

In the last provision the Bell Telephone Company is excluded from investing in general terms in a manufacturing company save in respect of the provision for the Northern Electric Company.

Mr. Sherman: I wonder whether the hon. member might be in a position to alleviate the anxiety of some parties concerning this clause. With regard to subsidiaries, or possible or potential subsidiaries, of manufacturing companies and outlets referred to in the proposed legislation, can the hon. member assure the house that he believes the companies operating under the aegis of the Bell Telephone Company at the present time, such as the Northern Electric Company and other companies which might be added to that kind of corporate structure or operation, would be prohibited from themselves investing in subsidiaries which will be involved in manufacturing processes?

Mr. Honey: Well, even if I were qualified to do so I would not wish to give a legal interpretation. My observation, however, is that the answer is explicit in the wording of the amendment which restricts the Bell Telephone Company to investing in research and development work in the areas I have mentioned with the following exception. I will read the exact words:

> —provided that such other company, not being a subsidiary of the company on the date on which this Act comes into force—

Therefore I think the interpretation of the amendment is that it saves to the Bell Telephone Company the authority to invest in what the wording says, that is, a subsidiary of the company on the date on which the act comes into force. To conclude my answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West I should like to offer this for what it is worth. I think it is quite clear that the amendment in no way gives the Bell Telephone Company a monopoly in respect of investment in research and development companies. It merely says that the Bell Telephone Company may make an investment in those companies. This in no way, of course, inhibits other investors in the same company.

Then the hon. member for Kootenay West asked what particular advantage this legislation gives to the Bell Telephone Company. I have mentioned the refurbishing of the wording in the old Bell Telephone Company act. I also mentioned the powers to invest in research and development within the limitations set out in the amendment. An important amendment, of course, is the increased capitalization which is authorized in the bill and which, as the officials of the company indicated in detail before the committee and as I indicated on second reading of this legislation, is important to the company's immediate expansion programs.

Then there are some things contained in the legislation that are important to the company which we might generally put under the heading of housekeeping legislation. These have been discussed in the committee. These include housing plans for employees, the right for the company to issue preferred shares if it deems it necessary to do so, the establishment of an executive committee within the framework of the company's bylaws, the right to make loans to employees and retired employees who may be temporarily in some sort of financial distress. These are all things which are important to the company and very helpful.

I hope that answers the questions. With the amendments which are before us it is important that this legislation may go ahead as soon as possible.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the sponsor of the bill for answering as fully as possible the questions I asked. If this bill has been amended as a result of representations made by members of the committee to the company, then I should like to congratulate the company for listening to the opinions of the members of the committee and for accepting the amendments which have been proposed.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Clause 4 has been deleted by the committee on transport and communications.

Clauses 5 and 6 (renumbered clauses 4 and 5) agreed to.

• (6:30 p.m.)

On clause 7 (renumbered clause 6)—Power to operate communication system.

Mr. Lewis: I am just writing my amendment to this clause, Mr. Chairman. I move:

> That clause 7 of Bill C-104 be amended by inserting in subclause (3) thereof the word "common" between the words "as a" and the word "carrier" in the second line.

Subclause (3) would then read:

The company shall, in the exercise of its power under subsection (1), act solely as a common carrier—

We were told at the committee hearing that there is not really any definition of a "common carrier". In the same sense I do not imagine there is a definition of the word "carrier". My purpose in moving the amendment is to make it clear that as far as the words "common carrier" are concerned, they place an obligation on the carrier to make its facilities available to whoever wants to be a customer of that company. I do not know anything about the law in this regard, but I do have the impression that the term "common carrier" is likely to carry the implication that the company is obliged to rent its services, subject to tariffs, regulations and requirements, to any one who legitimately asks for them.

Without the word "common" that implication may not be quite so clear and it is for that reason I move this amendment. I may say I have spoken to the sponsor of the bill in respect of this matter and I understand he has no objection to the amendment.

Mr. Honey: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Amendment agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 7 as amended carry?

Mr. Honey: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned that there was another amendment which is not of a substantive nature in respect of subclause (4) and subclause (5). I should like to say a few words about this amendment, but before doing so, and if the committee agrees, I will put the amendment and then explain the purpose. I move, seconded by the hon. member for York Centre:

That all of old clause 7, new clause 6, from and including subclause (4) be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(4) For the protection of the subscribers of the Company and of the public, any equipment, apparatus, line, circuit or device not provided by the company shall only be attached to, connected or interconnected with, or used in connection with the facilities of the Company in conformity with such reasonable requirements as may be prescribed by the Company.

(5) The Canadian Transport Commission may determine, as questions of fact, whether or not any requirements prescribed by the Company under subsection (4) are reasonable and may disallow any such requirements as it considers unreasonable or contrary to the public interest and may require the company to substitute requirements satisfactory to the Canadian Transport Commission in lieu thereof or prescribed other requirements in lieu of any requirements so disallowed."

Mr. Walker: Mr. Chairman, with the consent of the mover I should like him to select a seconder other than myself.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member does not need a seconder in committee.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There is no need for a seconder when the committee is sitting.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have no question to raise with regard to the rewording of subclause (4) of the old clause 7, new clause 6, because it really is precisely the same thing passed by the committee. However, there are two important omissions from new subclause (5). I should like to have an explanation from the sponsor. Perhaps he can persuade us that these omissions are not of any consequence.

The original subclause (5) gave a person affected by a decision by the company with regard to a foreign attachment the right to go to the board in an attempt to have that board declare that the foreign attachment is all right because the requirements of the company in a particular case were not reasonable. Perhaps I can make that clear.

As I understood the evidence given to the committee it was that any time there is a foreign attachment and the Bell company wants to make sure that the attachment is of such a kind it fits into the circuit, the line or the equipment of the company—

Mr. Cantelon: That it is compatible.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, compatible was the word used. I know nothing about the industry, but it is obvious to anyone that if the attachment is not compatible it might cause trouble to other customers of Bell, or to the equipment Bell has to which the foreign attachment is attached. For that purpose the company was going to have reasonable requirements. We were informed that at the present time the company would make some investigation of the inside and outside of the foreign attachment to make sure it was compatible. According to the wording now in Votes and Proceedings, if I attached something, and I am not likely to, and Bell told me I could not do it, I could go to the Canadian Transport Commission and present my case. If the C.T.C. declared that Bell's requirements were unreasonable, then my attachment would be all right.

The difference in the present wording as I read it, is that there is a sort of general declaration as to whether or not the requirements are reasonable, without the person affected being involved in an appeal to the commission. If I am wrong in that perhaps the sponsor can set me right. It seems to me important that the person affected by the decision of the company should be able to go directly to the commission and have his grievance settled by it, instead of having to read some new requirements which have been promulgated by the commission in lieu of the requirements the company had.

The second change seems to be of perhaps more consequence. The original subclause (5), which is now in Votes and Proceedings, provides for a public hearing in the case of a person affected making an appeal, because the word used was not "may" but "shall". It said that the Canadian Transport Commission shall hold public hearings to determine the effect of the attachment. There is no requirement for any hearing at all as a result of the amendment moved by the sponsor, and there is certainly no requirement for a public hearing.

It seems to me, because this has been done before in other cases, that what this would mean is that Bell would promulgate requirements and send them to the Canadian Transport Commission. The railway committee, or whatever it is called, of that commission would look over the requirements and send Bell a letter saying its requirements were not unreasonable; and that would be that.

• (6:40 p.m.)

Any person who was later affected by a decision of Bell Telephone that a foreign attachment was undesirable would be stuck by a decision of the C.T.C. made in its own executive sessions, or by some officer of the commission on the basis merely of a submission of the regulations of Bell Telephone to the commission.

It may be that I have missed some points, and if so, I would be very glad to be enlightened. But because of these two rather fundamental changes, I personally feel uneasy about the wording of new subclause 5 and I am not ready at the moment to support it unless I am persuaded otherwise.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Chairman, this amendment is somewhat complicated and we have just seen it for the first time. It seems to me that it is a new proposition. I for one did not get as excited as some others in the committee about this matter of foreign attachment generally. I think the hon. member for Waterloo South first proposed this amendment and other members presented their views in brief. The hon. member for Waterloo South felt there should be an appeal for individuals. I pointed out to him the impractical nature of the suggestion, but nevertheless I think the right of appeal should be included in the act.

[Mr. Lewis.]

The amendment says that the Canadian Transport Commission should be involved in this question, whether there is an appeal or not. These are two different propositions. I do not say they are in conflict, but I would not at the moment want to vote for one as against the other. I think the right of appeal that now exists for an individual should be there. I do not think it is practical, I think it will be quite costly, and I doubt whether too many persons will act under this provision. However, I think it is right that it should be there.

The amendment that has been introduced places some onus and responsibility on the Canadian Transport Commission, but we do not know how far they will go in these matters. I suggest that in order to be practical, we retain the old section 5 and make this new provision section 6. Then if there is any conflict in it—and looking at it quickly, I do not think there is—it can be caught in the Senate. The Senate will have noted the debate here tonight.

Then we will have satisfied those on both sides of the question. We will have satisfied those who feel there should be a right of appeal for the individual who believes he is aggrieved. I point out that there is not any third party right per se, anyway, in these foreign attachments. But if an individual feels he has a case, he should have a right of appeal.

I believe that now this matter has been raised, even though it is not too practical and will be a costly procedure, it would not hurt to have the Canadian Transport Commission involved in the question. They could look into the matter that has been mentioned by the hon. member for York South—and I recall asking questions about the interpretation of the word "reasonable"—with regard to what are the "reasonable requirements" that may be prescribed by the company.

Therefore in order to avoid an impasse tonight and in an effort to be co-operative, I think it would be possible to leave in the statute the old section 5 and include this amendment as section 6. If there is any conflict, it will be caught in the Senate. Then we will make everybody happy.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Chairman, I have noted the remarks of the hon. member for York South and the hon. member for Saint John-Albert and I appreciate their concern with respect to the amendment. If I had taken a little more time when dealing with the amendment I would probably have been able to alleviate their concern. However, I think I can do that now.

As I said earlier, there is no change in the substantive provisions as a result of the amendment. The reason is that the right of appeal, the right of third parties, and so on, is provided in the provisions of the Railway Act, and are now the law of the land. These provisions give the Canadian Transport Commission the right to hear appeals. This amendment was made and offered to the committee at the instance of the Department of Transport. I have here a letter from the chief counsel of the department, Mr. Fortier, which I will table if hon. members wish. As I indicated earlier, the amendment was concurred in by the Department of Justice and by Mr. Henry who was a witness before the committee. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could read Mr. Fortier's letter. It is addressed to the general counsel of Bell Telephone Company and reads as follows:

Dear Sir:

I enclose herewith as agreed in our telephone discussion of today the draft paragraphs (4) and (5) of clause 7—

That is now clause 6.

—of Bill C-104, as prepared in the Department of Justice.

This matter was raised by the Department of Justice and they felt it would be better legislation and more in conformity with existing legislation if these amendments were made. Mr. Fortier's letter continues:

In connection with the said redraft made by Justice the officers of the said department point out as follows:

"It seems to me—"

I am here quoting what the Department of Justice said.

"—that if subsections (4) and (5) are set out more or less in line with those set out in my redraft, we will have effectively invoked—"

I think this is the important thing.

"—sections 33 et seq of the Railway Act, including sections 51, 52 and 53. Not only would aggrieved persons be able to complain to the Board and obtain a hearing but so also would the Minister of Transport."

I think this is important, because under the Railway Act the Minister of Transport would have the right to intervene in this sort of hearing, and he would presumably intervene in the interests of the public, whom he represents as a minister of the crown. That provision was not made in the original amendment of the committee. Perhaps we did not think of it at the time. The original amendment gave a right to the subscriber to complain but did not give the right of intervention to the Minister of Transport. This letter continues:

"In addition, the Canadian Transport Commission could of its own motion interject itself into the matter where it deemed it in the public interest to do so."

So the Canadian Transport Commission could also intervene. Then the letter says:

"Subsection (5) is taken from a provision of the Railway Act applicable to telephone companies in respect of discriminatory tolls and should work for your purposes."

It is suggested that it may be considered advisable in the circumstances to suggest an amendment to clause 7 when Bill C-104 is being reviewed on second reading—

I imagine that Mr. Fortier meant when the bill was being reviewed in committee of the whole.

—in order that paragraphs (4) and (5) of clause 7 meet the legal requirements involved.

I tried to obtain a copy of the Railway Act just now and I apologize to the committee for not having it here, but I have not been able to obtain a copy yet. However, I am advised that section 13 of the Railway Act will provide for public hearings in these circumstances, and with regard to the other sections of the Railway Act, as the officer of the Department of Justice indicated:

• (6:50 p.m.)

Subsection 5 is taken from a provision of the Railway Act applicable to telephone companies in respect of discriminatory tolls and should work for your purposes.

If hon. members are concerned about this, I would be the last one to try to impose my opinion on them without being able to produce the provisions of the Railway Act, which I am sorry I cannot do at the moment. But it seems to me that what we are doing by the proposed amendments is to co-ordinate provisions which are already in the Railway Act and which we have in effect duplicated, perhaps without knowing we were doing so, because when the committee discussed this matter I did not know that the provisions were already in the act. So what we are doing by the suggested amendments is to bring the Bell Telephone Company bill as amended in line with the existing legislation.

The hon. member for York South was concerned about subscribers having a right to go to the board. May I say with respect that this is covered by subclause (4) as amended which reads as follows:

(4) For the protection of the subscribers of the company and of the public, any equipment, apparatus, line, circuit or device not provided by the company shall only be attached to, connected or interconnected with, or used in connection with the facilities of the company in conformity with such reasonable requirements as may be prescribed by the company.

Subclause 5 reads:

(5) The Canadian Transport Commission may determine, as questions of fact, whether or not any requirements prescribed by the company under subsection (4) are reasonable and may disallow any such requirments as it considers unreasonable or contrary to the public interest and may require the company to substitute requirements satisfactory to the Canadian Transport Commission in lieu thereof or prescribe other requirements in lieu of any requirements so disallowed.

The right for the subscriber to apply to the board, as I understand it, is given in section 13 of the Railway Act, so we do not have to repeat it in this legislation. Having established that fact, we then have subclause (5) which I read to the committee. So I think that I can alleviate the concern of the hon. member. I have to make it clear, however, that I do this on the basis of the information that this right is provided for in the Railway Act and that the Railway Act provides for a public hearing. So, as I understand the situation, we are not in any way providing something less than was provided in the amendment of the transport and communications committee, but merely co-ordinating it and bringing it in line with the existing legislation.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the hon. member a question? I am doing so with an eye on the clock, in which he is no doubt more interested than I am. He said he has not been able to obtain a copy of the Railway Act and has not seen the actual provisions to which the letter from the Department of Justice refers.

Does he think we should simply accept the statement in the letter from the Department of Justice and take for granted that they are right and that both the appeal and the hearing is contained in the legislation, or is he prepared, for the sake of having this bill passed today, to accept the very excellent suggestion of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert that both the old and the amended clause go into the bill, so that those of us who vote on this bill are certain that we are not doing something which might prove to be a disservice to some sections of the public? I want to say to the hon. member that regardless of how much longer he may take to try to persuade us—and I accept the statement that he is giving us advice which he obtained from the Department of Justice—I for one would not be prepared to vote in favour of the bill without satisfying myself that the right of appeal and the right to a public hearing are in fact contained in it.

Mr. Honey: I think the hon. member is completely correct and I would not want to impose the opinion of the departmental officials on the committee. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Saint John-Albert is a good one and I hope the committee will see fit to proceed in this manner.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Peters: What is the question? I am in favour of the new subclause (4) but not in favour of subclause (5). I prefer the original subclause (5). Are we going to adopt both the original subclause (5) and the amended version?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The question before the committee now is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Durham that the old clause 7, new clause 6, from and including subclause (4), be deleted and the following substituted therefor—

Mr. Lewis: We do not agree to that.

Mr. Honey: Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment. The matter will be left as it is and the other place will have the record of our discussions.

Amendment (Mr. Honey) withdrawn.

Mr. Lewis: May I move a subamendment, Mr. Chairman? Will you please guide me?

Mr. Honey: I withdrew my amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair would have to know what the subamendment will be.

Mr. Lewis: I move:

That clause 6 (4) of Bill No. C-104, as amended by the standing committee on transport and communications be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(4) For the protection of the subscribers of the company and of the public, any equipment, apparatus, line, circuit or device not provided by the company shall only be attached to, connected or interconnected with, or used in connection with the facilities of the company in conformity with such reasonable requirements as may be prescribed by the company."

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It is the opinion of the Chair, after consultation with the officials at the table, that the amendment moved by the hon. member for York South is in effect that the clause be amended by deleting the proposed new subclause (4) and restoring the original subclause (4). Is this correct?

Mr. Peters: It is vice-versa, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Lewis: I am not certain, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could propose—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: In view of the fact that both the mover of the amendment and the Chair are not certain of the amendment, we will call it seven o'clock.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before you call it seven o'clock may I ask for the unanimous consent of the house to retain this bill in its position on the order paper, in view of the fact that it is a very complicated bill and that a great deal of public interest is involved.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Yes, this can be done when Mr. Speaker is in the chair.

It being seven o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I ask for unanimous consent of the house to have this bill retain its place on the order paper, because of the size of the bill and the degree of public interest in it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Does the house agree with the hon. member's request that this bill hold its place on the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At seven o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PUBLICATION OF STATUTES ACT

AUTHORIZATION TO PRESCRIBE FORM AND MANNER OF PRINTING

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Trudeau for the second reading of Bill No. S-18, to amend the Publication of Statutes Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am proud of Canada, a united and bilingual country, but I do not understand the provisions of this bill—

Mr. Knowles: Continue in French.

[English]

Mr. Johnston: This evening, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with several matters relating to the bill. I think we should be very much concerned about the motivation behind this bill. I used to teach school before I entered politics, and during one period in my teaching career I taught French for two and a half months. I taught nothing but French every day for those two and a half months. This fact had nothing to do with my ability to teach French, but it had a great deal to do with the shortage of qualified teachers of French in the province from which I come.

[Translation]

My poor students, I cry when I remember them.

[English]

The two and a half months I spent teaching French taught me something about motivation. As is always the experience of anyone who teaches French in British Columbia, I was asked the inevitable question: Why do we have to learn French? Like all teachers, I am sure, of French in that province I gave a variety of reasons to my students: it was a beautiful language; it was useful in promoting national unity; it was a language of great literature; there were millions of people in the world who spoke the language, and so on. I tried to put the best case possible for the task confronting the students.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, I have come to realize that I should have restricted my reasons to only one. I should have answered always in the same way, namely that it promoted national unity—that there was no other reason. I should have reiterated that reason over and over again. Perhaps I should even have had the class learn it in two languages, repeating it after me, chanting it regularly and perhaps singing it. I should have made a slogan out of it. I should then have persuaded all the other teachers of French in the schools in my province to give only that one reason —that it was something that would increase their patriotism.

If you were to give any other reasons for teaching French in British Columbia you would also have to teach other languages as well. Because there are other languages that are beautiful, that have great literature, that are spoken by millions of people around the world. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the motivation for a bill such as Bill S-18 that has been presented to us must be very precise and equally limited, as in the example I have just given. If we are to deal with this bill and to make any sense of it at all, then it must be in terms of promoting national unity and for no other reason.

This will not be the last bill, Mr. Speaker, of somewhat similar nature to be presented to this house. We know that the minister who deals with corporate affairs, for example, is considering measures which will require all food sold in stores across the country to be labelled in both official languages. If and when the minister introduces a bill to make that the law of the land, he must equally be very careful to state that he is motivated to promote national unity, and for no other reason.

It does not do to say, Mr. Speaker, that the bill before us has anything to do with justice or with seeing that justice is done across the land. If this is the motivation for the bill, then it opens the door to any other language that is spoken by a Canadian. Surely we are not going to suggest for one moment that justice is not done in our courts. If printing the statutes in another language has anything to do with justice, then we would have to print them in a whole variety of languages. I do not think this would be a good idea and I do not think it would lead to national unity, either.

The same applies to the bill having to do with labelling of food products. The Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Turner) has suggested that this be done in two languages for the protection of the public. This contention will not hold water, either, because if the public is to be protected against errors in the purchasing of so basic an item as food, then we should label these products in every language which could possibly be used in this country, since we would wish every citizen to have all the protection we could afford.

Obviously a bill of this kind must be presented on the basis that it contributes to national unity. If it is presented on this basis it becomes easier for several of us to tell the government and the minister responsible why it will not work and why it will not contribute to that goal.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) has spoken to us as a practising lawyer and indicated the problems which would arise within his profession if the course suggested is followed. He deserves to be listened to by the government and by all hon. members because he is making a valid point. Some of his remarks may apply when, later on, a bill having to do with the labelling of food is presented to us.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) has been praised, and rightly so, for his activities in the last few days during which he has presented his position and the position of the government in connection with constitutional requirements. His presentation has been a gentle one. He moved through most of the conference using what might be described as a velvet glove. Certainly there is no other approach which would lead to national unity and contribute to the acceptance of the two languages throughout Canada. But we must not mistake the velvet glove for the hair shirt, and this is the error with which the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona was dealing—the daily irritation which can arise if people are confronted with a second language in a most unlikely and unnecessary place.

If one is to continue to work toward learning a second language the process must ordinarily be a pleasurable one, or at least it must lead to pleasure. The result of printing all the statutes in the same volume in both languages would quickly lead to frustration whether they were printed on the same page or on facing pages, as I understand is intended—this must be the intention because the statutes are already printed in separate volumes in the two languages and are available for use if necessary in our courts.

We in western Canada, and in British Columbia in particular, do not have traditions of hair shirts or self-mortification. If we are to be presented with actions and ideas which contribute to national unity they must be great ideas or pleasant actions, not something which would be a daily irritation. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) suggested to us that this constant reminder would be good for us. This I doubt. I would think the irritation of having to flip through twice the number of pages to find a statute, of being able to read on an open page only half the amount which would normally be there, would have the result opposite to that intended. Such minor considerations as the quality of the paper, the extra cost might, together with the other inconveniences I have mentioned, lead to a sort of explosion of temper which could become a real factor in the situation in western Canada.

All this is not realized in eastern Canada, either by the press or by the public. The statements of Premier Manning and Premier Bennett represent the thinking of a large proportion of the western population. It might be said that this thinking is not of the quality it should be or that it may be the thinking of people who are not well educated. You can run down the sentiment, but you cannot bring in a bill which would irritate the very people who are probably most receptive to the idea of bilingualism. I cannot think of any group of people I would wish less to irritate in this connection than the lawyers of western Canada, unless it were the school teachers. If in the name of justice, we take this step in connection with the statutes, we could be led to it in a variety of other areas—text books in education dealing with mathematics, for example; food labelling. The possibilities are endless.

• (8:20 p.m.)

This bill was presented to us a few months ago very late at night in the hope, I think, that at fifteen minutes to ten nobody would realize what it was all about and that it would become law almost by default. However, one or two people did realize some of the dangers inherent in the measure. They protested, and it did not appear on the order paper the following day. I hoped that the initial reaction at that time would have been sufficient to have the bill withdrawn completely. But now it has come back to us, and the timing is unfortunate because it comes at the end of a conference on the constitution and the language problem, a conference hailed in most parts of the country as a great success. At such a time I do not think we need this reminder of how small, how tiny, how irritating a measure can be contemplated in the name of national unity. It is certainly not in the name of justice. Let us not suggest for a moment that that is why it is being presented. If we are going to move toward national unity we will not do so through a host of little irritations, to be repeated over and over again within the next few years. We will have to move on a higher and sounder level than that.

Publication of Statutes Act

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do so at some risk of being called a radical, of being called bigoted, but I believe the time has come—and this is a good opportunity on a small, insignificant request made to us by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau)—to take a cold, hard look at Canada and at what Canadianism really means to various Canadians all across Canada.

Speaking about western Canada, Daniel Johnson, as reported in the Gazette of February 6 said he attributed the attitude of the younger provinces, meaning western Canada, to "a lack of Canadianism". Whose image of Canadianism is right, and what contribution will this legislation make toward the correct image, whoever has that correct image?

I had some hope for the Minister of Justice at the constitutional conference. He began with a very frank approach to the Canadian picture as he saw it. As I watched him on the television screen I wondered whether he was saying what he said for the good of his campaign to seek the leadership of the Liberal party, or whether he was saying it for the good of Canada. But now, shortly after the ending of the constitutional conference, we have evidence before the House of Commons that he is promoting a piece of legislation which, as the previous speaker said, will contribute nothing to better justice in this country of ours. Perhaps in the minister's mind this legislation is contributing something to unity, but to my mind it may be something that will do more harm to the chance of reaching a situation in Canada where we can all say we are in unison.

The time has come for some plain speaking about the question before us today, about the question that is before the country as a whole this year, that was before it last year, and will be before it in the years to come. During the past several years, at an ever increasing tempo, we have witnessed demands being made upon the Canadian nation by one province, Quebec. This is another one of those demands. We have seen attempts made to meet those demands, first by this government in Ottawa, and more recently by the premier of Ontario, Mr. Robarts.

At the recent constitutional conference the premier of Alberta posed a question that is very much present in the minds of all people in western Canada. That question is, when do the demands stop? This is a very small request that is being made here today through the Minister of Justice, but where is it going to end? For example, will all the law reports need to be printed in French and English too? If I were a French speaking lawyer in western Canada defending a client, and using the French version of the statutes, how could I look for precedents in law reports written in English? It would be an impossibility. This is something the minister should consider.

A continuation of the demands at the present rate of escalation, and a continued acquiescence in those demands will bring about a definite movement in western Canada for it to separate from the rest of Canada. We have been hearing separatist threats from Quebec and the government of Quebec for quite a while, particularly over the last five years. We require some assurance of an honest and sincere desire to maintain the Canadian confederation, based on a strong national government with the capacity to act for Canada. For a while earlier this week I thought the Minister of Justice had the capacity to act in that regard, but now I have come to the conclusion that he was acting on behalf of his own campaign for the leadership of the Liberal party.

Mr. Choquette: Shame.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member made his speech and I listened to him very carefully. Not necessarily in my mind was the Minister of Justice making a sincere effort to unite the country when he took that approach at the constitutional conference and now, one day after that conference ended, he brings in here what I am certain the premier of Alberta would call another demand.

Let us look at the whole question just briefly. During the last five years we heard a great deal of talk about the province of Quebec wanting to separate. There is only one part of Canada that economically can separate. That is western Canada, and by western Canada I mean Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. We could separate and do without the rest of Canada. According to the federal government, even Saskatchewan is no longer a have-not province. If we separated we would immediately shed ourselves of financial contributions to the have-not provinces. We would be rid of that economic drag. This is a cruel way of putting it, but it is honest. This side of the coin must be looked at before we can come to a true meeting of the ways. We would also shed our responsibility for the continuing economic costs of meeting this supposed idea of justice and fair treatment with respect to the bilingual problem.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

It is interesting to note that at a time when we are debating the bilingual problem the government of Belgium has resigned over the very same problem, and Belgium is a much older country than ours. Premier Johnson said that the western provinces are not old enough and that they need a tutor. Again I refer to the Gazette of February 6, where he was reported as saying that "Quebec being the oldest province in confederation, has never needed a tutor". What tutor would he recommend for Belgium to assist it to meet the very same problem we are debating?

There is no question in my mind that if western Canada separated, our economy would continue to be as good as it is today and our standard of living could not help but go up. We all know what Mr. Kierans told René Levesque would happen to the economy of Quebec if it separated. As a matter of fact some time ago I read an article about that, and I thought the author phrased it very well. He said Quebec would become a banana republic without the bananas, and there is some truth in that. The same cannot be said of western Canada. We could, and perhaps will—

An hon. Member: Grow bananas.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —reach the saturation point of continual concession, and maybe we will decide to separate.

• (8:30 p.m.)

As one looks through the debates of the confederation period it is interesting to note that there was no talk about the French language having to be projected all across Canada. I do not wish to delve too deeply into the confederation debates, however I should like to refer to an article written by Donald Creighton which appeared in the September 1966 issue of Saturday Night; he said:

> The special aim of these British Americans at Quebec was to create a strong, centralized federation which would avoid the decentralizing weaknesses of the American federal system, and would never break apart, as the American union then seemed to be doing—

What are we doing in Canada at this time? We are creating a situation which is evolving as close to republicanism as—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have been listening to the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) and while I recognize there is some relationship between the remarks he is now making and the bill before the house, I feel that he is now progressing too far afield. I do not believe his remarks could be considered to be wholly within the ambit of Bill No. S-18.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize that if a narrow interpretation is to be placed on this, one must deal, as the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) did, with the specific application of the legal statutes. However, the hon. member for Lotbinière and the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke made lengthy speeches and thereby broadened the debate to quite a large extent. I do not intend to broaden it as much as they did.

Even in its narrowest interpretation I believe this bill must be considered to be another concession toward the grand cause of unity. This is what I was attempting to deal with. I was quoting from an article which appeared in the Saturday Night written by the historian Donald Creighton with regard to the protection of the English and French courts. We said this:

> There is no evidence that the French-speaking delegates at the conference, or the French-speaking members of the Canadian legislature, were dissatisfied with these provisions. There is no evidence that they tried to extend these language rights to the legislatures, courts or schools of any or all of the other provinces.

This is the very point with which I was dealing. Here we have the government suggesting that in the interest of unity this provision must be projected into every court and all the facilities of that court. This is the point I am making and I believe it is right on the target. In the same article he went on to say that we find there is in Canada today not the slightest interest in what the intent was in 1867. We are told that today there is a new French fact that must be reckoned with in Canada today. At the very onset of our second 100 years we are told that we must reckon with this fact. I suppose this very piece of legislation is in essence an attempt to reckon with that French fact.

There may well be a French fact in Canada, but there is also a very definite division in other regions of Canada. I shall attempt to put the case for some of the other regions to show why this particular piece of legislation will continue to bring about greater disunity rather than unity in Canada. I should like to say at the outset that western Canadians wish to remain in Canada, provided there is some assurance of a continuing Canada of which they can be a part. Up until the present time, and very recently, in the last five years particularly, there have been instances when the western Canadian picture has not been considered at all. When the premiers of Alberta, British Columbia and Saskatchewan were in Toronto their opinions were practically disregarded. How can you convince me that we are considered to be a part of Canada when no attention is paid to what is said in that vast region west of the great lakes?

When we have continuing threats of separation and continuing attempts to make a Canadian nation, these seem to be two parts of a double headed coin, just as this bill and what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) has in mind for Canada and what the present Prime Minister has in mind for Canada are parts of a double headed coin. We hear continuing demands from Quebec for more power at the expense of Canada as a whole. What are we to think? We are not prepared to remain part of a concept in which there are two national governments in Canada, one for those who speak French and the other for those who speak English. Constitutional nationhood cannot be built on the foundation of such a double dealing situation. This bill is a perfect example of what I am referring to.

In the west we have a vision of Canada. In the east there is a double vision. This bill and the new statutes will be a perfect example of that double vision. You can no more operate a country on the basis of a two-nation government system than you can have two chickens in one egg. In western Canada we have put up with this kind of thing for a number of years. It is no longer a joke in western Canada. We believe that Canada is drifting into a "never never land" of illusion, hypocrisy and unfilled expectations. In other words, I am saying that this particular piece of legislation will not meet the demands of Quebec. Let us be frank and admit this. As reported in the Globe and Mail for Thursday, February 8, 1968 Premier Johnson said that the French language and linguistic rights in all of Canada are nothing more than an aspirin, when we consider the problem. He believes there must be drastic changes in the constitution. The present Prime Minister said this:

> —"my own view is that tinkering with the existing Constitution will not be enough."

Then the article continues:

> —a clear hint that he shares Mr. Johnson's view that a wholly new, made-in-Canada constitution is required.

This, of course, means more power to the provinces, and in particular Quebec. Therefore, I ask what the real reason is for passing this particular piece of legislation, if it will solve no problems and not answer the question one bit. It must be clear to the government that in order to be the government of Canada it must take on a clear, national responsibility and must carry it out with nationalistic scope. It must take and accept responsibilities fully. It must not bring in piecemeal legislation in an effort to solve this problem which, as Mr. Johnson said, has the effect of a mere aspirin in the solution of the problem. There is an example in history of an attempt of this sort in respect of the Austrian empire, which existed in Europe many years ago and which, as we all know, collapsed.

The same thing will happen to Canada unless we are prepared to face the issue squarely and attempt to reach a true image of Canadianism. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) suggested a while ago that his image of Canadianism is not a French Quebec, but a French Canada, including the province of Quebec. This is his view of Canadianism, but I do not believe it is shared entirely by everyone in western Canada.

If this is what he is attempting to do by this piece of legislation he should say so. The only way a solution to this problem can be found is by a factual examination of the case, not by adopting piecemeal and chipping away legislation which will only bring about greater disunity in many regions. There has been an attempt to create the impression that different languages result in different methods, different responsibilities and different approaches as well as different types of citizenship. This is not so. There is only one way to shoe a horse, and there is only one way to brand a cow. It does not matter whether it is done in French or English, it is still going to hurt the cow but it will still lay a claim to ownership. There is only one way a farmer can drive his tractor.

If we accept the idea that there are two ways of doing things and that everything must be done on this basis, as this piece of legislation suggests—half a page in English and half a page in French—then we must accept the idea, as the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) suggested, that there is a Ukrainian way, an Italian way, a German way and a Dutch way. We must make allowance for all these different ways, if that is the only way to have true justice and a true administration of justice throughout this country. There must be more than two ways, if we accept the suggestion that there should be a different application of the administration of justice in this country.

The Minister of Justice has taken the stand that it is the job of the federal government and parliament to legislate and to administer the rights and needs of all Canadians, regardless of language, on a national level. This is the impression he gave at the confederation conference which has just concluded. This piece of legislation does not convince me that he is of the same mind today. Perhaps, as somebody suggested earlier, we should have the television cameras on him because he would not then be adopting this approach. He would destroy the image he tried to create earlier in the week. The people of Canada are not so gullible that they must keep him under surveillance in order to understand him. They can read between the lines.

In contrast to that idea we have the theory advanced by the premier of Quebec, that Quebec in some mysterious way has a mandate to legislate and administer on behalf of French Canadians on a national level. It is on this basis we have the preposterous demand for greater control by that province. Apparently Quebec wants the right to appoint members to the federal Senate, the right to appoint individuals to the supreme court and the right to move into the field of broadcasting on the French network throughout French Quebec, and I suppose in those other parts of Canada that are predominantly French. I do not think for one moment that even New Brunswick will stand for a French broadcasting system controlled by the province of Quebec.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will agree that the comments he is now making are a little removed from the part of this bill which refers to both languages.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): As it happens I have completed my remarks in respect of broadcasting. I was enticed into this discussion by the remarks of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) who suggested that this whole question should be looked at in a new light, because we are not back in the old days when the battle of the Plains of Abraham was fought. He suggested we have a new administration in Canada today.

It was my suggestion that no province would stand for the development of a French nation with headquarters in Quebec city. This is what Mr. Johnson says is the absolute solution. The Minister of Justice is attempting to solve these problems, or cure these ills with an aspirin. This bill is nothing more than a part of such an aspirin.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Perhaps it is a baby aspirin.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Perhaps it is only half of a baby aspirin. The principle of this theory would be clearly demonstrated if this bill becomes law and our statutes are to be printed in this double sort of—I was going to say abortion, but perhaps I should not use that world as that subject is being discussed a great deal these days.

It is high time we realized and stated categorically that one province shall not interfere in the affairs of others. We must face the fact that this bill is an attempt at separation on the instalment plan. We would just as soon know what the over-all intent of plans of this kind is, because we might find in the west that it would be cheaper in the long run to separate now. This is what Premier Manning tried to do last week. We want a glimpse at the whole plan. Perhaps it would be better at this time for the west to make a clean, clear cleavage somewhere west of the great lakes. Perhaps the resulting expenses would be less and the west would be better off in the long run.

Demands for linguistic rights will perhaps be accepted. This was a recognized fact of the confederation of 1867. There is no real quarrel with this idea, that on one page of our statutes we should find English and on the other we should find French. I can read the English on one page and turn to the next page and read the English there. This will not bring about greater justice, or a solution to the serious problems facing the French people in the province of Quebec, or the province of Alberta. This is nothing more than an attempt to impose the French language on those who really do not want it.

There was a statement by the Minister of Justice at the confederation conference that there would be no attempt to impose the French language on any other part of Canada. Certainly this bill represents an attempt to do just that. We must recognize the fact that this approach will not bring about unity. As the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Nugent) suggested, this will irk, gall and annoy Canadians outside of what might be termed the French sphere and will bring about greater disunity. Such an attempt as this can be joined with the evident attempt to fill all key positions in the civil service with bilingual persons. Apparently all civil servants at the top level must be bilingual. It must be obvious that no one will want to join the federal civil service, even if our statutes are printed in French and English, if in order to qualify for a high paid job one must be bilingual.

If the purpose of this legislation was to promote the idea that you would not have to be bilingual and the other language would be good enough, there would be no need for the type of statute book envisaged by the legislation; a French set of statutes and an English set of statutes would suffice. But this is not good enough. They want the whole picture; they want to be in control. We federal members of parliament know that the actual administration of this country is carried out by those at the top levels of the civil service.

Will the passage of this piece of legislation allow western Canadians to contribute to the administration of our country? I say no, it will not. Actually the passage of this legislation will not bring western Canadians any nearer to that objective but it will take them further and further away from the administration of Canada, from actual policy setting for Canada.

In view of these facts perhaps we would be better to make that clean-cut cleavage now. One cannot understand why responsible employment in the administration of this country must be reserved for those who speak both languages, with all others excluded. Does the government realize that if this criterion were employed today, more than two-thirds of our deputy ministers would lose their jobs? We believe that a whole new policy is being implemented and all top civil servants are being paid to learn French. There is really no need for this legislation if one can pick up a French statute and an English statute. But we are told that this legislation must be passed. We are told that under the new image of Canada everything must be written in both languages. I do not know that the French government in Quebec writes its cheques in both languages. I do not know of the French government in Quebec having its statutes printed one page in English and one in French.

Mr. Ricard: You had better find out.

Mr. Choquette: That is it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They might have. This might be a recent innovation.

Mr. Choquette: We like it that way. We respect the English language.

An hon. Member: That cannot be.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Somebody said, "That cannot be", and he is correct. If the hon. member for Lotbinière likes it that way, that is his privilege, as it is my privilege and the privilege of those in western Canada not to look at it in that way.

Mr. Choquette: How many farmers are going to be affected by this law?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is their answer to every question raised on this subject: it will affect nobody.

Mr. MacEwan: Farmers are Canadians, aren't they?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We are asking, what is the end product of this type of legislation? What is the complete deal? We know that the Liberal government has for years and years made fun of the farmers. But it caught up with them in western Canada. It will catch up with them in Quebec, too, and perhaps in the hon. member's riding of Lotbinière.

This new philosophy goes beyond anything that has existed in the past and stipulates that everyone shall eventually be required to speak the two languages. It stipulates that if they want to move forward and go anywhere in the manipulation of federal affairs, they must speak the French language. They must do this if they want to participate fully in the affairs of this country. This statute will do nothing to counteract the trend that is well on the way to becoming accepted philosophy throughout the province of Ontario, in the province of New Brunswick and perhaps in many other provinces. It has not yet become the accepted philosophy in western Canada.

I have mentioned the position taken by the Minister of Justice in the confederation conference. But people all across the country have lost confidence in the capacity of this government to stand by those words. The people will lose confidence in the Minister of Justice, also, to stand by those words, if he continues to marshal his forces to push this simple little aspiration through the house tonight.

[Mr. Ricard.]

People have lost faith in the government's determination to exercise in Ottawa those powers and prerogatives without which a national government is a government in name only, and becomes merely an empty husk. I believe, as I have stated, in those linguistic rights that were perhaps—and I say "perhaps"—a part of confederation. But I do not believe in the rights of any group being forced upon another group, whether it be language or any other subject one could mention.

French Canada, in my definition, has the right to remain French. It has no right to demand that everyone else become French, absorb French, or even participate in the French dialogue that is going on today. We are told that this whole question has hindered French participation in Canada. We are told that this bill will do something to alleviate the feeling of unfairness that we are told exists for French Canadians when they travel outside of Quebec. Why, then, have more than two million French Canadians from the province of Quebec migrated over the past few years to the New England states, where they immediately give up any hope of having legal recognition of the French language in the courts, let alone the whole question of statutes being printed in both French and English in the same bound volume?

For these people who have migrated to the New England states, their French rights have disappeared, as they disappeared in the state of Louisiana. When they migrated to the United States they were apparently prepared to give up this valued treasure which we are told they must have. And Premier Johnson wants more than that: he wants to be prime minister of the French nation, and the new French fact throughout all of Canada.

We in western Canada are sick of being singled out, criticized and hauled over the coals when our only crime has been to believe in the philosophy of live and let live. We do not ask others to give way to our views; yet we are continually being asked to bow down to the views of others. That is what this bill is asking us to do. It goes so far as to attack the very basis upon which this nation exists.

I think this kind of thing has reached saturation point. I have been a member of parliament for ten years, and because the saturation point has been reached this is the first time—I point this out—I have opposed anything like the idea behind the bill that is now before us. I am very pleased to take this opportunity, particularly on a bill such as this, which on the surface is of so little consequence, to state my views. I believe this bill is a perfect example of where a stand should be taken. We should recognize the fact that it is an indication of what the Minister of Justice will do to Canada, particularly if he becomes prime minister of this country. In that event, there will be no stopping this type of thing.

• (9:00 p.m.)

When one considers Premier Johnson's concept that confederation was formed by two equal partners, a concept which is shared by the present Prime Minister, who stated over and over again that Canada is formed on the basis of a partnership of two equal nations, one should look at the present composition of this house. The government side of the house has 75 elected members from areas outside the province of Quebec; the official opposition has around 87 or 89 members representing areas outside Quebec. If this is an equal partnership, then it is high time we heard from the other partner. Perhaps I could be considered as being only part of the other partner. This subject should be examined very closely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

[Translation]

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate—

[English]

However, after having heard the speech made by the hon. member for Acadia I decided to say a few words myself. In order that there may be no misunderstanding of the few remarks I wish to make, I will try to make them in the best English I know so that I can be heard and understood by my hon. friend from Acadia. I will take the risk of being accused of having different thoughts than some of my colleagues.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am from the province of Quebec, and tonight I was deeply concerned and hurt by what was said by the hon. member for Acadia. If we were to believe what he said, we would have to come to the conclusion that members from the province of Quebec are an embarrassment to the house as well as to the rest of Canada. I do not believe this to be so, Mr. Speaker. I think that we from the province of Quebec have come here to discharge our responsibilities. We ask for no favours, but we want our rights. If for many years we have sat back and said nothing and endured conditions against which we could have complained, this is not to mean that now when we lift our heads we can be slapped down and reduced to nothing.

Let it be well understood that what we want here for the province of Quebec is our rights, and nothing more. I think that the prime minister of Quebec is a tolerant and decent man, one who explains very well the position of Quebec and of its inhabitants. I do not think his statements were in any way extravagant when he explained the position of Quebec at the constitutional conference which was held this week, and I felt deeply hurt when I listened to the speech of my friend from Acadia. I am sorry I have to say this, but I feel I must. In his speech the hon. member more or less denied that the province of Quebec and the rest of Canada were equal partners. It is about time that we knew whether or not we were equal partners in this confederation of ours. I want to say to my colleague, the hon. member for Acadia, that we are part of the confederation and that the prime minister of Quebec said quite plainly and clearly that we want to remain in the confederation. This does not mean that we are to be denied our rights. We want our rights to be recognized—I cannot make it any plainer than that.

All that the Minister of Justice asks for in the bill before us is to print the statutes of Canada in both French and English. Will it hurt anyone to take a book of statutes into his hands, to open it and to see on one side of the page the French version of the text and on the other side the English version? I do not think so. This is what we have done in Quebec for years. I think that Quebec set an example which should be followed by the rest of Canada. From what I have heard, some of my fellow Conservatives, who are lawyers, have no objection to this measure. All the pretexts which have been brought forward in opposition to this measure, such as the fact that it would cause irritation and be expensive, have no basis at all. How can it be an irritation? I would have liked those hon. members who have said this to come to my province and see all the English signs on the walls of our factories and our stores in which only French Canadians were employed. The employees could not even read those signs, which were the rules and regulations. Were these signs not an irritation for us? We have had to stand it for many years. We are sick and tired of having to do it, and we are not prepared to go along with it any longer. Let it be well understood.

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Speak French.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I realize I am allowing myself to get carried away.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): That's just fine!

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I had to contradict one of my colleagues here, but I had no alternative. To my mind, the legislation now before the house is fair; it is a step towards recognition of the rights of French Canadians.

Someone asked: when will there be a stop to it? Well, there will not, until such time as all our rights are recognized. That is when there will be a stop to it, and not before.

Mr. Speaker, as others have said, not only will this bill not entail additional expenses but, in the long run, it will cost less to have statutes printed in both English and French in the same volume.

I ask my colleagues to support the legislation now under consideration.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I echo the feelings of admiration expressed in the house this afternoon by my colleague for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) for the efforts of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) during the recent federal-provincial conference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as a citizen from the west and as a representative of a western riding, I oppose the ideas expressed by the hon. member from Acadia (Mr. Horner) and some other members on the other side of the house.

Please forgive me, Mr. Speaker, if I continue my remarks in English, for I am rather familiar with that language.

Mr. Speaker, I am now holding a copy of Quebec statutes published in the two languages, with the words "Most Gracious Sovereign" on one side and, on the other, "Très gracieuse Souveraine".

• (9:10 p.m.)

[English]

If I could just send this book over to the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), I think it would be useful for him to see what the statutes of a province look like when they are printed in both the French and English languages side by side. I do not see anything wrong with it. I would ask that a member of the house staff take the book over to him. I believe there is extreme value in seeing the two languages side by side, especially when the law is being read. Surely, there can be nothing wrong with this in a country which talks about equality in two languages. Is it wrong to have the two languages printed side by side? Is that bad? Is that against the principle of being a good Canadian? I do not believe so. I see nothing wrong with the mechanics of it. Anyone in this chamber whose eyes are growing dim with age and who needs to look through his bifocals or trifocals, might care to look at this book. He could ascertain whether he finds it impossible to find out what the law is, when he sees a statute written in two languages. I do not think it is difficult. The mechanics of it are not impossible.

The volume lies on the table, and the hon. member for Acadia has not even looked at it. He has left the house in order that his eyes will not see it. Pick up the book, it will not offend you. Be Canadian, it will not offend you. All I can say is, at a time like this if we are really serious about what has been taking place at the conference during the last three days, the printing of the statutes in two languages is not a bad place for us to start. We can see that the people who print our law books print the laws in the two languages side by side, and this should be the next undertaking for the lawmakers and those who print law books.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in the debate on the motion for second reading of this bill, because I was quite sure that after the fine federal-provincial conference just concluded, all members had fully understood and the bill would be passed without discussion.

But to my great surprise this evening, I found out that some western members have never understood anything about confederation and are still completely ignorant of the purpose of the new confederation that the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson), with the help of the Quebec premier, Mr. Johnson, are trying to create.

I am becoming aware this evening of the fact that if there are extremists in Quebec, western Canada is on the point of beating every Quebec record.

We heard tonight the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) who is clearly against this bill. He was followed by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner), and I think that we have there a sample of the opposition that the next standing committee will be up against when it goes out west.

All this is said, Mr. Speaker, under the guise of national unity. Well, national unity will certainly not come about through the extremist groups or separatist movements, because from tonight's discussions and speeches, I gather that the west is separatist, since efforts are being made to restore justice, whereas the east is separatist because an injustice was committed.

There lies the difference between the two theories of separatism which will certainly not bring the unity that the great majority of Canadians want.

I am happy also to notice that those are exceptions because fortunately, there is goodwill in the west. Otherwise, we might conclude that life in Canada is on the verge of coming to an end tonight. But, fortunately, as there are always exceptions to the rule, that gives me more hope that Canada, thanks to a renewed constitution, will become one of the most united and strongest countries ever known.

As far as the bill concerning the printing of statutes in both languages is concerned, it seems to me that that procedure will simply do justice to French-speaking Canadians in the west and throughout Canada, as well as to English-speaking Canadians. The province of Quebec has been respecting that rule for a very long time, and ever since I came to this house, the western provinces have been asked, not something impossible but simply to give French Canadians in the west what the province of Quebec guarantees English-speaking Canadians who are in a minority, that is give a national justice to both ethnic groups.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Acadia was trying to prove that the present bill was unfair, but now he dares not come into the house because he is ashamed, since he was given a bilingual copy of the Quebec statutes. In my opinion, such an attitude does more harm than good to Canadian unity. In the future, I would advise him to stay quietly in his dear "West" and to send as a replacement somebody less troublesome and with more understanding than himself.

The member for Acadia has stated that the Quebec premier considered this legislation on bilingualism as an aspirin. When the premier of Quebec spoke of an aspirin, I think, if I understood him well, that he felt the government was not offering enough, since it was giving only an aspirin. The hon. member for Acadia even spoke of a baby-strength aspirin. Afterwards, it was seen that he could not keep even a baby aspirin down. How would you have him swallow the whole pill? He is incurable. In the new constitution, there will have to be established institutions to cure these incurables—they should not be imprisoned, for they do not deserve that—to treat and care for them, in order that they may walk in step with the other well-intentioned Canadians, who are willing to work towards a better Canada for all.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The hon. member also spoke of new Canadians and of their rights. He said that if we should be translating from English to French, we should also be translating into Ukrainian, Italian and Polish. This proves that he has never understood confederation. When the new Canadians came to Canada—we were very happy to welcome them —they promised to choose one of our two recognized languages. They took this oath on entering Canada. They renounced their ethnic origins and adopted a new mother country agreeing to speak one or the other of its two languages. I wish the hon. member for Acadia would get that into his head, if there is still room there.

French Canadians who migrated to the United States did the same thing as the new Canadians who came to Canada. They agreed to the conditions of their new country, the United States, and chose to speak the language of their adopted country.

I will not speak any longer, Mr. Speaker, but I wished to refute those two arguments put forward by the hon. member for Acadia who tried to prove to us that the use of both languages was impossible throughout the country.

He suggested that French was being imposed on the people in the west. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that all well-intentioned members have never thought so, and I would never venture to compel the hon. member for Acadia to learn French. Moreover, I think that he would be unable to, considering his attitude. It has never been suggested that French should be imposed. The only object of this bill is to do justice, to enable French Canadians as well as English Canadians to feel at ease before the various courts of the country. This does not compel an English-speaking Canadian to argue his case in French in a Vancouver court. The member for Acadia knows it very well. In the province of Quebec, we have bilingual judges and I am sure that a French Canadian does not have to argue his case in English. What we only wanted was to give justice to the English-speaking minority in the province of Quebec. When an English-speaking Canadian wants to defend himself in court, he may do so in his own language.

What we want is social justice. I wonder whether the member for Acadia knows the meaning of social justice. To be able to defend oneself in one's own language in court, either in British Columbia or in Alberta, that is social justice. This does not mean that the people in the west will have to speak French, but it gives those whose language is French the same rights as those whose language is English.

When it is suggested that French is being forced upon people, I feel that this is a hypocritical argument. Mr. Speaker, I feel it is our duty to denounce those people so that the whole country may know who they are. It is time to single them out, so that Canadians may be able to distinguish between honest and dishonest people.

I do not wish to dwell any longer on this subject; as a matter of fact, I could deal with it for two hours. However, I shall be content with those few remarks, because I realize you are about to rise and call me to order, since my comments are somewhat beside the point. But I just had to denounce such views.

I also take this opportunity to say that we shall support this bill unreservedly, since it seeks mainly to do justice to the two ethnic groups which founded this country.

[English]

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Kings): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the beginning with as much sincerity as I can possibly muster that I hope this proposed legislation will not in any way drive a wedge in the relationships between French and English speaking Canadians. I do not think this was ever the intention of the legislation.

I do not agree that the status of the French and English languages is being called into question by the introduction of this legislation. Neither do I agree with the suggestion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Trudeau) in his opening remarks last November, that the present method of printing our statutes contravenes the British North America Act. That of course is not correct; the British North America Act merely provides that the Revised Statutes of Canada shall be printed in both the French and English languages. We have for many years had that law on the books, and in all sincerity may I say I do not think it has brought about any strained relationship between the English speaking and French speaking people of Canada.

Although I think we have got along very well in the situation that has existed during the past number of years, I am prepared to agree that there may be some merit in the suggestion of the Minister of Justice and in his proposed legislation. There is already a law on the statute books that provides that the Revised Statutes of Canada are to be printed in French and English.

Last November, Mr. Speaker, the minister stated that the government would likely approve the recommendation being made by the commission. I am wondering whether this recommendation has yet been made and, if so, whether it would be too much to ask at this stage that we be permitted to see the new edition of the Revised Statutes of Canada printed in revised form. If the minister would present to the committee on justice and legal affairs the newly printed revised statutes, the members of the committee would be able to see how they look in this new form. I do not think we should chance compounding possible errors, but perhaps there are some improvements that can be made to our revised statutes.

I should like to see them to find out whether they are printed in type which can be easily read, whether they are printed on paper which is durable, whether the volume is not too cumbersome for lawyers to carry around and take into court. These are things which concern us, and in all fairness the minister should allow us to satisfy ourselves with regard to them.

I am not opposed at all to the principle of the bill. I do not think many of us on this side are opposed to the principle at all. We do express concern, however, about the form the new statutes might take, and this is a legitimate concern of anyone who has to work with the statutes. It is surely not too much to ask that this bill be referred to the committee before third reading so that an opportunity might be given us to see what has already been done in the printing of the revised statutes.

I have another suggestion which might pour oil on what appears to be troubled waters. I can picture that it might be to the advantage of a French speaking lawyer practising in Quebec to have available to him statutes in both French and English. Personally, as a practising lawyer, I do not believe I would have occasion to use a volume printed in this way, but I recognize there might be others who could make good use of such statutes. I am not sure that the expense to this country would be so great that we could not print our statutes in English for the use of those who do not require the French version and, at the same time, print a volume in both French and English for those lawyers who feel they require it in order to practise successfully in the courts.

An hon. Member: And print one in French for Mr. Cowan.

Mr. McQuaid: Above all I would suggest to the minister that before we go into committee he should allow us to take a look at the revised statutes, as printed in accordance with the new set-up. I do not think this is an unreasonable resquest and I hope he will accede to it.

Mr. Aiken: I am not rising to make a speech at this point. I rise on a point of order to assist the minister, if he wishes to do so, to reply without closing the debate. My hon. friend from Kings (Mr. McQuaid) has suggested that the minister undertake not to proceed to final reading of this bill until members have had a chance to examine the revised statutes in the new form, and see what they look like. At present we are talking in the dark, we do not know what this new volume will look like. We have been assuming that it will be printed in English on one side and in French on the other. But that is not what the proposed new section 11 says. It reads:

> The statutes of each session shall be bound, if practicable and convenient, in one volume.

We do not know what the intention is. If the new statutes are to be identical with the Revised Statutes of Canada, let us have a look at them. I believe that if they are readable are understandable, a majority of members of this house would be agreeable—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member said at the outset that he wished to raise a point of order. He has not done so. I assume his intention was to ask a question of the minister. We are not in committee and normally, if the minister were to reply, he would close the debate. However if there is unanimous agreement to allow the minister to reply—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the house for its permission to deal with this very slight point by way of answering a question. I certainly do not want to close the debate, because there are other things I should like to say. The suggestion is a reasonable one, but there is a difficulty about it; it is that this bill does not deal with the revised statutes but with the annual statutes, and in a sense much of this debate is out of order. However, if people wish to have an idea how the annual statutes might look by seeing how the revised statutes will probably look, I would have no objection to showing an extract from the revised statutes more or less in the form in which we have them, provided this can be done fairly quickly. This is a matter of information, not of debate, and if the house leader could arrange for the standing committee to see this material I would have no objection.

In the course of asking his question, the hon. member read the following from the proposed new section 11:

> The statutes of each session shall be bound, if practicable and convenient, in one volume.

This merely means that if all the statutes of one year can be bound in one volume they shall be so bound. It is not relevant to the language question.

Mr. Fulton: May I suggest to the minister that we might give this bill second reading, and then, if the house is willing and he is prepared to do so, one of his colleagues could by leave move that the bill be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs, so that we could have a look at the matter we have been discussing here.

Mr. Trudeau: I thank the hon. member for his suggestion but I do not wish to get sidetracked. If we were to refer this to the standing committee it would not be for the purpose of discussing the bill but merely for taking a look at the physical appearance of the statutes.

Mr. Fulton: We would have given the bill second reading and then a motion would be moved to refer the matter to the standing committee on legal affairs for further study.

Mr. Trudeau: If the only purpose were to consider the physical appearance of the statutes I would have no objection. But there are only two clauses in this bill and, if I read the temper of the house accurately, there is a general desire to make progress. I could have copies circulated to hon. members, of course, and if they wished to look at these examples before third reading it seems to me this would be much simpler.

Mr. Fulton: There are other questions involved here—not the question of printing the statutes in the two languages alone, but the whole change—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if we might return to the debate. There are still 20 minutes left before ten o'clock and there are a number of speeches to be made. Perhaps the subject just referred to could be discussed overnight between interested hon. members.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): I believe we are speaking here on a very profound issue, although at first glance it may appear to be a superficial one. Some of us are a little worried about the reaction in the country.

• (9:40 p.m.)

The British North America Act spells out certain fundamental rights, and I for one do not want to reduce them by the slightest degree. In fact, following upon the constitutional conference and its controversial arguments, I appeal to my colleagues on both sides of the house to concede a great deal more than has been written into the B.N.A. Act so as to give people their place in the sun.

This legislation is a very small concession to our French speaking brethren throughout Canada. All it does is permit printing of the statutes in English and French, either in one volume or with both languages on the same page, so that they can be easily understood. I myself do not want to be controversial in this matter. I would like to be fully understood by my French speaking colleagues. I beg all Canadians to learn English as well as French. At the present time I am studying very hard to learn French. I take French lessons twice a week and from them I hope that my life will be culturally enriched.

I would dearly like to be able, in my own inimitable way, to express my feelings in the language of my French colleagues, a beautiful language, and certainly equal to English in every way in the cultural field. However, the very fact that feelings run high when we mention the subject, even in connection with a minor measure like this, indicates how deeply the feelings of some people are held.

It seems to me that to emphasize our differences is bad. I would like to emphasize those things which we have in common. I hope the minister is bringing forward this proposal as something to which English speaking Canadians can opt in. We will do that if this is a real opportunity to join him in his desire to make Canada one united country from coast to coast. If this small request of his is a positive approach toward giving our French colleagues their historic cultural rights, then in the spirit of unity I can do no less than take my seat and wish him well. I am going to vote for this bill. I do not care whether the French version is printed in one volume or in two. I am going to take the positive approach, believing that the spirit I have outlined is in conformity with the faith our ancestors had 100 years ago, and which is far from dead today.

I listened to the proceedings at the constitutional conference and heard very deep feelings expressed. But I was a little disappointed that there was not more emphasis on what we can do together, instead of on individual rights. I beg those members who feel deeply about their right to speak French, something which is enriching our Canadian life, that when they go home to their constituencies they advise their own people that English, whether they like it or not, is the language of commerce. It is the language of access into the warp and woof of economic society.

When they ask their young children to speak English, or to learn English, they will only be doing as I did when I insisted that my children learn to speak French. I believe in practising what I preach. I have seen to it that my three daughters have a working knowledge of French, something which I wish I had achieved earlier. I think the French language and French culture can be spread across the whole of Canada at very little extra expense. I for one think nothing can be lost by having our statutes, federal and provincial, presented in a manner that can be understood by French and English speaking Canadians.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, there have been a few moments during this debate when I felt we were in the middle of the debate to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) referred at the beginning of today's sitting, namely the debate on the future of the constitution and our confederation. Having looked at the terms of this bill it seems to me that all we are really dealing with is a practical matter of housekeeping.

The bill does not say anything about how exactly the statutes are to be printed. It merely says that the house would give authority to the governor in council to decide as to the particular and precise form in which they would appear, while making it clear that the statutes must continue to be printed in both the English and French languages.

Of course the minister's statement when introducing the bill made it clear that the idea of having the two language versions appear parallel on a single page was in his mind, and in the mind of the government. It seems to me this is the kind of subject we could better deal with in committee, when we could question the minister closely on the government's intentions and get on to the real practicalities of what would be a useful way of having the statutes printed for reference by parliamentarians, by lawyers in the courts, and by Canadian citizens generally.

This is the way some of us think we should proceed. We should not try to settle the whole future of confederation when dealing with a bill which has to do with the practical matter of internal housekeeping in our printing establishment.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few comments to make. The first thing that strikes me is that it is not the language in which we print a bill, but what is in it, that is most important. After sitting here for almost five years examining some of the monstrosities that hon. gentlemen opposite have perpetrated, I can say they look equally as bad in French as in English. I do not think having them printed in English and French at the same time could possibly make them any better.

During my practice of law over the last 38 or 39 years I can think of only three or four occasions when it would have been useful to have had the statutes printed as the minister now proposes. As a matter of fact in my province of Alberta, ever since it was carved out of the Northwest Territories, it has been the custom to have a bilingual judge in the supreme court and a bilingual judge in the district court. These have been excellent judges, fully capable of hearing cases involving French speaking people, and able to translate from one language to the other without the assistance of an interpreter.

I recall one of the very earliest judges, when I was a student—and I am referring to His Honour Judge Noel. His knowledge of the law was not what it might have been, but he was a splendid man. I see my friend the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) listening. I have heard him speak on this subject before, and I think he is inclined to agree with me. I remember when I was a young student listening to His Honour Judge Noel speak in English with that delightful accent which made his sentences of imprisonment so much easier for my clients to take. While acquitting a man who was charged with having stolen a pig Judge Noel gave an explanation which is just as good in English as it was in French. He said, "Well, it was such a little pig".

In my area there are a number of French speaking people and I can recall three occasions when we found it necessary to try to find a federal statute which was printed in the French language in order that the persons involved might have the opportunity to read it. It may be that in the future more and more people will be fluently bilingual, and it will be found helpful if the statute books are printed in both languages with the same spacing on the pages. This might also be desired in respect of the provincial statutes. However, at the present time we are not sure of the necessity for this. I do not think it is an issue which is grave enough to justify talk of separation.

I have just come from the north, in my part of the country, where I had an opportunity to meet with a great many people and discuss this situation. I found that there is a great deal of sympathy and understanding as well as a desire on the part of the people of western Canada to try to be reasonable, cooperative, compassionate, and work out the sort of arrangement which will require cooperation on both sides. The processes of history are such that nations are not built in a day. We must make sure that we do not lose the battle today.

On the question of separatism, I might say that in my part of the country we do not like what we see when we look to the south. I remember our sending a delegation to British Columbia when Mr. Bennett was asked if he would like to take the Peace River country into the province of British Columbia. At that time one of my friends said that he preferred the devil he knew to the devil he did not know.

However, I believe this measure might be adopted. Having been a practitioner for a good many years I can see an occasion in the future when it might be helpful to have it. This, however, has not been the experience in the past. But I am prepared to go along with it. I think it would be desirable if we had a model of the revised statutes, such as the minister suggested. It might be that if this were referred to the standing committee the matter could then be referred back and dealt with without difficulty. I urge the minister to give serious consideration to this proposal, after second reading.

Mr. Churchill: Would not the hon. member wish to see the revised statutes in their complete bound form, so that the type of paper and the general format could be examined, rather than a proof sheet from the printer?

Mr. Baldwin: I have seen the statutes. I have made a point of examining the statutes of the province of Quebec. I have seen them on many occasions. I assume that after having examined a specimen I would not need to see the whole statute.

Mr. Trudeau: If I were to tell the hon. member that the form we are contemplating for the statutes is the same form as that in which they appear in the province of Quebec, by and large, would he not think it would be sufficient to go to the library and look at the statutes? In that way we could save the time that would be involved in going to the committee.

Mr. Baldwin: I think in the process of democracy one of the virtues of having a standing committee is that, while one member may have his own views, it is the committee, which includes representatives from all sides of the house, which makes the report to the house.

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Trudeau: Does the hon. member not realize, as the hon. member from the New Democratic party said, that the amendment which is before us does not give the government authority to use any particular form, and therefore any example we would present would merely be an example and would not be binding.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

Mr. Baldwin: If the minister appeared before the committee and gave his undertaking I for one, if I were a member of the committee, would accept such an undertaking.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is it the wish of the house that I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Solicitor General what the order of business is for tomorrow, please.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, it is proposed to call item No. 61, second reading of Bill No. S-32; then item 50, the second reading of Bill No. S-28; then item 51, second reading of Bill No. C-190 and then item 57, second reading of Bill No. C-197.

Mr. Knowles: Could the house leader tell us what might be in store for Monday.

Mr. Pennell: I am afraid I cannot be very helpful to the hon. member, except to add that possibly we will resume consideration of item No. 43 and then continue with the list I have already enumerated.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—MODIFICATIONS IN CLASSIFICATION REVIEW PROGRAM

Hon. R. A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on January 23 I was astonished to receive from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) an uncommunicative, curt, abrupt reply to my simple and direct question relating to red circled public servants. My question which appears at page 5841 of Hansard was as to—> —whether the government has under immediate consideration a lump sum payment for those public service employees who are red-circled or other modifications to relieve the hardships of the classification review program?

The reply, couched in haughty and cavalier terms, which have become characteristic of the President of the Treasury Board, was:

> Without in any way admitting to the facts contained in the statement that my hon. friend has made I should simply like to answer his question by saying, no.

No, no—that is the only answer one gets from the government to any representations on behalf of public servants, present or retired. Unfortunately it is typical of the indifference, the insensibility which the government has displayed toward that unhappy and luckless group of public servants caught in the red-circling program.

That program has caused more resentment, discontent, indeed bitterness and deep-seated anger among a very large number of public servants than any program of which I have ever known. The resultant loss of morale will have lasting effects upon the future of the whole public service. Deliver a blow to a public servant's morale, to his pride in his work and service, and the mere removal at a later date of the grievance does not heal the bruise or restore his morale to the status quo ante.

My question was prompted by the knowledge that early in January, 1968, the Public Service Alliance of Canada had made vigorous representations to the Treasury Board that a lump sum payment of 4 per cent be granted to every employee in the administrative and administrative support categories who, on October 1, 1967, were still red-circled. The curt and blunt refusal of the President of the Treasury Board illustrates with what disdain and superciliousness he has treated serious representations by the largest public service organization, how impervious he is to sensible and logical arguments, how unconcerned, unfeeling and callous is the government to the plight of the red-circled employees.

The recent across-the-board increase is no answer to this problem. Indeed it is the strongest argument in favour of the action sought by the Public Service Alliance. When he replies, I should like the parliamentary secretary to be most explicit in making clear that the recent general increase is no solution or assistance for the red-circled employee.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that action taken by the government in November, 1966 is an exact precedent for the proposal I now make. Then a pay supplement for red-circled employees was authorized, such supplement amounting to a 4 per cent lump sum payment of the salary rate as of September 30, 1965. This was intended to provide financial relief to offset the increases in the cost of living for the period October 1, 1965 to October 1, 1966. Since October 1, 1966 the increase in the cost of living has been about six points. Consequently, if the government was right in providing a 4 per cent lump sum payment in 1966, the case is now irresistible and unanswerable for a new lump sum payment designed at least to maintain the real salaries of red-circled employees.

It is no answer to say that the number of red-circled employees has been reduced to about one half the number that existed in November, 1966. If the Treasury Board had done its job, there would be none by this time. This festering sore in our public service would have been totally eliminated.

Some departments are much worse than others. I consider, for example, the discrimination against employees in the checking and refunds branch of the Department of National Revenue, or among the classification of buyers to the Department of Defence Production, constitutes a reproach, a burning shame to the public service. I could mention other branches; branches in national defence, the post office and many other departments where large numbers have been and are still prejudiced.

I point out, as I have done on many occasions in the past, that the fault is not that of the red-circled employee. The classification of his position was established, not by himself but by the old civil service commission. How it can be alleged that the old commission was so dead wrong in so many thousands of cases in past years, but the enlightened gentry of the Treasury Board are infallible today, passes my understanding.

It is the individual public servant who must pay the penalty for the mistakes of others, with resultant breakdown of morale, grave loss to the public at large and deplorable impairment of the public interest. The real answer is to divorce the red circle from the present incumbent; to allow the present incumbent to enjoy all the normal increases and other benefits but to reduce the status and classification of the position effective only when it is next filled. I recognize that a lump sum payment would be only a palliative, but at least it is a measure of justice for the red-circled. On that basis I urge it upon the government.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it is always a great pleasure to reply to the humble, modest, moderate and reasonable hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell).

Mr. Knowles: Pourquoi?

Mr. Walker: I understand that since the answer of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Benson) to the hon. member's question on January 23 last, perhaps unbeknown to the hon. member there has been a request relating to this matter from the Public Service Alliance of Canada, which represents the great majority of public civil servants. This request is now being considered by the staff of the Treasury Board and will in the near future be the subject of discussion with officials of the alliance, who are the proper people with whom the matter should be discussed.

I cannot say more on the subject at this time except that perhaps in arriving at a decision the Treasury Board will have to bear in mind the imminence of collective bargaining for the groups of employees concerned. I also point out—and I might say that the hon. member anticipated this—that the recent 3 per cent increase for approximately 100,000 civil servants, voluntarily initiated by the government, will have the effect of further lowering the increasingly reduced number of employees who may still be in red-circled positions.

I should also like to add that it is positions that are red-circled, and I think the hon. member for Carleton does something less than justice to this subject when he speaks about red-circled employees rather than red-circled positions.

EDUCATION—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE IN TEACHING IMMIGRANT CHILDREN

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on February 1 last I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Marchand) a question relating to a letter sent to him by the chairman of the school board of the city of Toronto. Mr. Speaker ruled that the question was not acceptable on the orders of the day. The letter to which I referred was concerned with a request for assistance from the federal government toward enabling the school board of Toronto and metro Toronto to provide the children of immigrants with the necessary training, initially, in the English language so that they then would be able to enter the ordinary school stream.

A couple of days ago—I think it was Monday night—my colleague the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) also dealt with this subject. Let me say two things immediately. I notice the parliamentary secretary is here to deal with this matter. I appreciate, of course, that education is a provincial matter and that jurisdiction in this field generally lies with the provincial government. Let me also hasten to say that I have not the slightest doubt that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is as concerned with the welfare of immigrants and their children when they arrive in Canada as I am, or any other hon. member. I am therefore not questioning his intentions in this matter.

• (10:10 p.m.)

This is a matter of real urgency. It has not arisen only in Toronto. Exactly the same problem has arisen in Montreal and, to a somewhat lesser extent, in Winnipeg. In my own riding there is a large number of new Canadians, mainly from Italy. I have had the pleasure of being in some of their homes, and the reason why I pursue the matter this evening is that I have heard from the lips of the parents, usually through an interpreter, expressions of their concern that their child, who is 10, 11 or 12 years old, is getting so discouraged that he does not wish to go to school at all.

If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak in a more personal vein and to say that I myself had that experience when I came to Canada at the age of 12. I remember very distinctly that after several days in school, where I could not understand a word my fellow pupils or the teacher were saying, I came home and told my father I would not go back to school, and it needed some very strong persuasion to make me go back. I was 12½ years old, sitting in a class with six year olds, not understanding a word they or the teacher said, but it did not take me very long to learn the language. At that time I was so discouraged that I was tempted to leave school and go to work, which is what I asked my late father to permit me to do. This has happened in a good many cases.

Although it is true that the matter is under provincial jurisdiction so far as normal schooling is concerned, there is nothing in the B.N.A. Act or anywhere else to prevent the federal authorities from agreeing to assist the provincial authorities concerned, if the latter are prepared to share in the cost of teaching English to children of immigrants; and this does not require a long time. This has also been my experience. When I applied myself, I learned to speak English at the end of the first year. It does not take long at that age.

On making inquiries into this matter I was informed that for a certain period after their arrival here—I am not sure how long—immigrant families are entitled to medical or related assistance. If this is being done, it is the right thing to do. If I am wrong, I stand to be corrected.

Is there any reason why the minister has to wait until the minister of education of a given province approaches him on this matter? This is what I understood the minister to say in reply to my question, a reply which was published and a copy of which the parliamentary secretary to the minister gave to a colleague of mine and which is now in my hands. There is no reason why the minister should wait for Mr. Davis, the minister of education of Ontario, to come to him. The problem has been brought to his attention and, let me point out, we are responsible for the immigrants who come to Canada. I am glad they are coming, as is every member in the house. We have some responsibilities in respect of these children and we should help them to integrate better into the school life in our country.

I am not so much interested in criticizing the minister who, as I have said, is as interested in this matter as I or anyone else is. However, I suggest to him and to his colleagues in the government that this is a real problem in the larger population centres of this country. As a result of lack of funds, the Toronto board of education say they cannot cope with it, and cannot provide not only the teachers but even the physical facilities which are required. I plead with the minister and with his colleagues in the government not to stand on protocol and not to wait for someone to come to him, but to take some initiative in this matter and assist in the solution of a very real problem.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Well, Mr. Speaker, the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) urging the government to be of some assistance in providing education for the children of immigrants is obviously a good one. What strikes me, personally, about the matter is the fact that in the few years I have been around parliament, representing a riding as I do which is one of the more cosmopolitan ridings in Canada, and having a good deal of exposure to the aspirations and requests of those newly arrived in Canada, I must say this question has never really arisen. I am not aware of its having been raised by anybody in our immigration committees, when we were discussing immigration problems. Perhaps this is because the people who arrive in this country with young families have never really made the education of their children an issue. I do not believe many representations have been made in the constituencies, or surely one member would have raised this point before. Perhaps these newly arrived people feel that their children are young enough to be integrated into the school system and, by working harder than native born children, can soon catch up. This problem has never been in the forefront before.

Mr. Lewis: It is now.

Mr. Munro: Yes, it is now. This does not necessarily mean it is not a problem to which we should give attention and to which we should give assistance. I think it is worthy of consideration. I know the minister's attitude is to get the proper facts and figures in relation to the number of children, teachers and facilities available in order to determine what our program should be in this particular area. This will take some time. I believe the minister has had talks with Mr. Davis, the minister of education for the province of Ontario, in connection with assistance for this type of thing. I feel that the province is involved to a degree in this whole venture. Certainly the research facilities they have, in terms of educational facilities and so on, would be required, so I think the whole area requires co-operation with the provinces. To my knowledge, there has been at least one meeting between Mr. Davis and the minister concerning this problem. They are working on it now to see whether or not something can be done.

As to numbers, and how misleading they can be, my attention is called to a headline in the Toronto Telegram for February 8, 1968 which reads, "18,000 Immigrant Children just a Guess." Apparently the school board started to look into this figure and became rather incensed at the looseness with which figures had been quoted. I should like to quote a couple of paragraphs from this article:

> Toronto school trustees are looking for 18,000 new Canadian children who were suddenly at a committee meeting yesterday.
>
> The children, according to statements made last week by board of education chairman Ying Hope, need special English classes but aren't getting them because Toronto can't afford it.

The poor English is not mine in this case, it is the Toronto Telegram's.

> Yesterday's new Canadian committee meeting learned, however, that the figure was a guess and that school officials don't really know the annual cost of special English classes.

The article goes on to say that the board does not really know the number involved. The chairman was asked where he got the figure from, and he said he heard it from somebody. I continue quoting:

> Mr. Lowes said the board at no time has said it did not have enough money to cope with the new Canadian program.
> There appears to be a new category of students, he said, who have been through the special language program but could benefit by further language classes.

The board felt it was supplying special language programs now and thought they were sufficient. If there are some who want additional educational training, they probably should have it. The board has never heard this figure—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Munro: I will conclude by saying that something should be done and we are prepared to look at the problem to see if further assistance can be given.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—CANCELLATION OF SCHOOL PROJECT, CAPE CROKER RESERVE

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, on February 7, as reported at page 6465 of Hansard, I submitted to Your Honour that the question I had put to the minister of Indian affairs was indeed urgent. It is now my intention to substantiate my contention that immediate action must be taken to reverse the decision of the department of Indian affairs to cancel the construction of the proposed separate school at the Cape Croker Indian reserve.

The situation that the Indian people are protesting, Mr. Speaker, is best described in this article that appeared in the Montreal Gazette for February 6. It was published on that date under the heading "Indian parents protest school" and reads as follows:

> Parents of 90 Roman Catholic children at the Indian reserve here, 40 miles north of Owen Sound, are threatening to take their children out of three buildings which have been used as a school for the last 10 years although they have no water or toilets.

May I correct one point here, Mr. Speaker. There are water and toilets, but there is an inadequate water supply.

> The parents plan a protest meeting February 12. They claim federal funds slated for construction of a new school this year have been withdrawn.
>
> Fred Purser, Bruce county Indian agent, said government funds have been cut back despite definite "promises" to build the school this year.
>
> Joseph Akiwenzie, chief of the Cape Croker band, said the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is "beating around the bush" and "has been promising the school for 10 years."
>
> Rev. O. H. LaBelle, parish priest of the reserve, said records kept by a teacher at the parish hall three years ago showed that the oil heater in one building rarely provided a temperature as high as 60 degrees.
> "Most of the time the temperature was 50 degrees and small children were forced to draw their feet up on the seats to keep warm," he said.
> "They also had to go outside in the cold to unheated toilets."

This house will agree, Mr. Speaker, that this is indeed a deplorable and unnecessary situation. I must say, with respect, that the departmental officials are aware of the existing accommodation and of the need to provide proper and comfortable facilities conducive to an atmosphere of learning. Until the last few weeks the parents of the children concerned were willing to accept temporary accommodation. Weather conditions, coupled with a deterioration of the three buildings now proven to be inadequate, has moved the parents to protest the circumstances.

My contention that there must be immediate action is supported by a statement of the director of education for the Indian affairs branch. The statement was printed in the Telegram for February 7, appeared under the heading "Ottawa to insulate school", and says:

> The federal government has ordered an emergency supply of insulation to keep children from shivering in 50-degree temperatures at the Roman Catholic school on the Cape Croker Indian reserve near Owen Sound.

According to Hansard for February 7 I have already stated that the matter is indeed urgent. This article supports that claim in its reference to the fact that the federal government has ordered an emergency supply of insulation. The article continues:

> Students have been wearing snow boots and leggings in the school, a converted church hall, to keep warm.
>
> The building's only source of heat is a single oil stove.
> Robert C. Davey, director of education, Indian affairs branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, said yesterday the insulation should reach the school "within the next two or three days."
>
> "We've bypassed the procedure of calling for tenders because of the need for immediate action"—

I reiterate, Mr. Speaker—the need for immediate action.

At the outset of my remarks I stated it was my intention to substantiate the need for immediate action. Mr. Davey said he learned of the problem at the school when he received a letter last week from a parent at the reserve. He is reported to have said: "Last fall, when the hall was converted into a classroom we added insulation, a heating unit and storm windows. We did not know these changes were insufficient."

In making representation on behalf of those concerned at Cape Croker, my argument is that these stop-gap measures can no longer be continued. This case goes back to 1958 when a decision was made to construct a new school for both Protestant and Roman Catholic children. Later the plans were altered and a smaller school for Protestant children was completed in 1964, the understanding at that time being that when a building site had been chosen a separate school would be built. In November of last year, according to the information provided me, departmental officials consulted the sisters who staff the schools and put forward plans for the proposed new school upon the understanding that construction would soon commence.

Now the department has reconsidered its intention, claiming that other projects take precedence. I ask the minister to explain to the parents concerned and to the people of Cape Croker what priorities take precedence over the proven need for adequate educational facilities and accommodation by the children of this Indian reserve.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): It has not been my privilege to visit Cape Croker but this is probably understandable because I believe we have 2,200 Indian reserves in Canada. I have been on a number of them.

This arises from resentment on the part of the people on that reserve because other areas are being given priority over them when it comes to improving the capital plant needed for education, housing and so on. I believe every member of this house is aware that at the present time we are by comparison spending a fantastic amount of money on Indian affairs. The budget given me in the current year for Indian affairs was $122 million. In 1945 it was $5 million. This year we are spending $58 million on education alone. I would defend this because I think it is the first place to spend money in Indian affairs. We have in the current year expended $9,600,000 on the improvement of buildings and in the coming year we intend to build about 84 schoolrooms on the basis of need, taking priority over Cape Croker.

Cape Croker is an area where there are about 80 people presently housed in three buildings. Unfortunately one of the buildings, I am told, is an old church hall the age of which is almost equal to the age of our nation itself. We are doing the best we can to keep it warm during this cold weather and it is our intention in the following fiscal year to build a school there. We have not cancelled anything. We have postponed construction because we are extending our program with respect to Indian affairs. An example is Indian housing, which we have spread, now, over seven years instead of five years, in the amount of $112 million.

• (10:30 p.m.)

I want to assure the hon. member that we are making tremendous improvements on Indian lands and I believe most hon. members are fully aware of this. We have built this year 2,000 houses on Indian reserves. We have put electric light into more than 4,000 Indian houses in the last two years and we have installed sewage and water facilities in some 58 reserves. The difficulty is that when one group of people sees this going on they want to benefit by the same sort of expenditure. I have here, for instance, a wire from the British Columbia region telling me that in other places we are providing Indian houses with gold plated bath tubs. This, of course, is a sort of envy. All I can tell the hon. member is that we are doing the best we can and Cape Croker has a priority, but we have 84 schoolrooms with a higher priority.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.32 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 9, 1968

The house met at 11 a.m.

AGRICULTURE

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF COMPENSATION FOR SLAUGHTERED ANIMALS

Mr. Bruce S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That the order for resuming debate on item No. 32 under the heading "Private Members' Notices of Motions" on last Monday's order paper, reading as follows:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of immediately introducing legislation to provide the following increase of the compensation paid for the cattle slaughtered under the authority of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act; (a) purebred cattle, $200.00 (b) cross-bred cattle, $125.00.

standing in the name of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot be discharged and that the standing committee on agriculture, forestry and rural development be empowered to consider and report upon the provisions thereof.

Motion agreed to.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE AND FAR EAST—PROPOSED WITHDRAWAL OF BRITISH FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. the Prime Minister in connection with the visit to Canada of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom. In view of the announced intention to withdraw British forces from east of Suez and in view of the concern this announcement has occasioned in a number of countries, does the Prime Minister anticipate that this will be one of the matters to be discussed by him and the British prime minister? If so, what attitude will the Prime Minister take on behalf to the government of Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain this will be one of the subjects we will be discussing, because I feel the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom will want to explain the circumstances which made it necessary for the United Kingdom government to take this decision which, of course, is a regrettable one in some ways. I feel quite certain that we will be talking about it.

Mr. Fulton: Is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate what attitude he will take on behalf to the government of Canada?

Mr. Pearson: This, of course, is a matter for the United Kingdom government to decide. What I would feel like doing in the circumstances is to express my regret that circumstances were such that a decision of this kind, which on the face of it might seem to minimize British influence in that part of the world, was necessary.

VIET NAM—REPORT BY CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE AT HANOI

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the disastrous escalation on both sides of the war in Viet Nam and in view of some very frank suggestions made by Senator Robert Kennedy only yesterday, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether there has been any encouraging or other word from Canada's envoy at Hanoi who I understand has been there for three weeks.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes. He has been there longer than he expected. As my hon. friend may have learned, at least from the newspapers, it has been difficult to get a plane from Saigon to Hanoi to bring him back, in the present deplorable situation in that capital. We have not heard from him in recent days, and I should prefer not to make any comment on his mission or what might come from that mission until we receive a report from him.

My hon. friend has mentioned the developing feeling that events of recent days have underlined that this war should be brought to an end and negotiations should begin. I should like to see an escalation of that feeling in the world.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, is the right hon. gentleman planning on his behalf and on behalf of the government some special discussions, not through the regular ambassadorial channels, with the government of the United States in order to take such steps as will escalate the desire for peace negotiations or some action toward them?

Mr. Pearson: I have no plan on behalf of the government to initiate any special discussions at this moment, Mr. Speaker. If there is anything we can do to increase this feeling, having regard for the difficulties, which we appreciate, the United States government is having, we will be glad to do so. That is all I can say at the moment.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister can tell the members of this house, in view of the considerable number of requests, what plans there are to expand either the size or the responsibilities of the international control commission.

Mr. Pearson: I do not think an expansion in the size or in the formal authority of the control commission in Viet Nam would be of much value at this particular moment, especially in view of what is happening in the demilitarized zone. So far as the control commission in Cambodia is concerned, and that is a very important area, we have done our very best to see that this commission is given greater authority and more facilities to deal with problems on the border. If there has been a delay in that regard it is not the fault of the Canadian member of the commission.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister whether he will impress the views of this government upon the right hon. Prime Minister of Great Britain when he meets him tomorrow.

Mr. Pearson: Yes indeed, Mr. Speaker.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the right hon. Prime Minister. Considering the renewed interest in the topic following the recent Canadian Welfare Council report; and in order to avoid too much confusion as a result of conflicting statements that are and will be emanating from hon. members on that side of the house; and following the example set by the President of the United States, will the Prime Minister appoint a commission to examine into the practicability and possibility of a guaranteed annual income program for Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, not at this time. I know this is a very important matter which will undoubtedly be examined in due course, as it is being examined in other countries, but I do not think it would be useful at this particular moment to appoint that kind of a commission for that kind of investigation.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION TO MEET UNEMPLOYMENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister whether he would outline the government's plans for combating growing unemployment. He replied as follows as recorded at page 6495 of Hansard:

> —Mr. Speaker, this is a very worrying matter. I hope there will shortly be an opportunity to discuss this subject in the light of general economic conditions.

I examined the order paper carefully and found no item which would allow such a debate. There will be no estimates presented until after the next budget and, as the Prime Minister knows, there are no motions to go into supply which would make it possible to have such a debate. Will the Prime Minister set aside a day either next week—or, at the latest, the week following so this very important matter—and I am sure the Prime Minister believes it is very important—can be thoroughly discussed in this house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should examine the record even more carefully than he did. If he does he will find at page 6407, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Perth, a statement by the President of the Treasury Board that he will be tabling the final supplementary estimates and the main estimates for 1968-69 on Monday next. My hon. friend knows that when those estimates are called, that will give him and other members the opportunity for the kind of discussion he has mentioned.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the Prime Minister give the assurance that this will permit a full and unrestricted debate on this most important subject.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that unemployment in Canada has reached an all-time high for recent times, that is for the last four years, and in the United States there is a decline to the lowest level in 15 years, to what does the Prime Minister attribute the difference in conditions in this respect?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the all-time high was reached in the period 1960—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VOCATIONAL AND TECHNICAL TRAINING

DISTRIBUTION OF FEDERAL GRANT FOR VOCATIONAL SCHOOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister say whether he, on behalf of the federal government, advised the province of Ontario that they would not be receiving their share of the $71 million federal grant now due under the cost sharing arrangement for provincial vocational schools?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not inform the government of Ontario that it would not receive the amounts agreed upon. The only notice I gave the Ontario government and all other provincial governments was that the amounts would be distributed over a longer period of time than had been anticipated.

[English]

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister care to advise the house over what length of time the federal government has asked this grant to be spread?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand: This means that instead of giving the provinces the full amount in the course of the same year, a minimum period of two years has been set.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the provinces have financial commitments based on earlier joint agreements which must be met this year?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDUSTRY

SYDNEY, N.S.—ADDITIONAL FEDERAL ASSISTANCE RESPECTING STEEL PLANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Now that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has signed an agreement whereby Canada will lend India $20 million, will the Prime Minister adopt this same generous attitude toward Canadians in Nova Scotia and provide the government of Nova Scotia with a share of the money that is required by that government to assist in the purchase of the Sydney steel plant?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As far as Nova Scotia is concerned, Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of generosity; it is a question of justice.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What is justice when Nova Scotia—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, what is justice when Nova Scotia is seeking money to maintain its steel plant, compared to the millions and millions of dollars, not just in this particular arrangement but in other arrangements, which this government sees fit to give to foreign countries?

Mr. Greene: That's a silly comparison.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Queens.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture just said "Don't be stupid." Will he stand up and say that? What kind of government do we have over there? I ask the minister to get to his feet and say that.

Mr. Starr: Show some leadership.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has the floor.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I rise on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton South rises on a question of privilege and should be given an opportunity to state his question.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the interjection by the Minister of Agriculture. When I put my question to the Prime Minister I was putting a fair question and asking why it is that this government cannot see fit to lend the Nova Scotia government far less than $20 million to purchase—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: What is wrong with that question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member kindly proceed. I am listening to him.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have referred to a snake pit over there before, and I refer to it again.

I am putting my question of privilege as the result of an interjection, and I do not see why further interjections should be made from the government benches while I state my question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: There are no interjections now. I am listening, and the house is very quiet.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The Prime Minister spoke of justice, and I ask what is wrong with an appeal from the Nova Scotia government for financial assistance to enable an industry in that province to continue operating, an industry which is paying taxes to this government? The amount of money the province is requesting is no larger than the sum the Minister of Trade and Commerce has signed over to India. If the Prime Minister or anyone else on the treasury benches wants to refer to other programs of assistance in Nova Scotia, such as ARDA or any of the others, I can refer to many foreign assistance programs on which money is being thrown down the drain.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it supplementary to the question of privilege?

[Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South).]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): No, Mr. Speaker. Actually I have a question of privilege. Why is it that every time we, the representatives of Cape Breton Island, and indeed members from Nova Scotia and the maritimes, try to speak in this house on behalf of the people whom we represent we are howled down by the idiots in the cabinet?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I ask the Prime Minister to straighten out some of these popinjays, idiots and pseudo cabinet members, because members of the cabinet such as the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources find this a big joke.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member please resume his seat.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): This is no joke. We want assistance. We have the sincere sympathy of the Prime Minister, and I think we should get it from the rest of the cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member please take his seat. The hon. member for Queens has the floor.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Hon. members opposite laugh at this situation. This will be remembered.

An hon. Member: I have not said a word.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Of course the Minister of National Health and Welfare laughs also.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): It is a big joke as far as he is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Only one mmber at a time can have the floor and at the moment it is the hon. member for Queens.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—COMMONWEALTH EFFORTS TO END CIVIL WAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister, and it is in reference to the continuing war in our sister commonwealth state of Nigeria. Can the Prime Minister advise us whether consideration has been given to seeking through commonwealth machinery some avenue leading to a peaceful settlement of this continuing and very serious conflict which should surely trouble all commonwealth states?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, consideration is being given to that matter and to the possibility of using commonwealth machinery to bring this unhappy conflict to an end. It is also one of the matters which I will be discussing with Mr. Wilson, and if I can say anything on the subject early next week I will be glad to do so.

TRADE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIVY COUNCIL PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Was the President of the Privy Council expressing the view of the government when he said in Toronto recently "the fact remains that we have become an economic colony of the United States"?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to consult the President of the Privy Council as to whether he actually used the words reported by my hon. friend.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to advise the Prime Minister that these words were a direct quotation from a statement which appeared in last Saturday's issue of the Globe and Mail.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in an effort to pour oil on troubled waters I wish to direct a question to the Member of the Administration from Newfoundland. Has the minister ever suggested to the Prime Minister that as a member of the administration he could perform a very important and useful role in the economic development and tourist promotion of all the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Charles R. Granger (Member of the Administration): I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice of his question and for affording me an opportunity to answer it, I am also interested in the Atlantic provinces, but I am sure the Prime Minister can best assess how I can be useful.

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, since he seems quite anxious to say something to the house today. I should like to ask him if he can make any statement with regard to the policy statement approved by the western Liberal conference a few weeks ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suspect the question is not in order.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION AGAINST INFERIOR GENERIC IMITATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. M. Brand (Saskatoon): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the action taken recently by the food and drug administration of the United States in removing the generic imitations of chloromycetin from the market because they apparently did not give satisfactory results on patients tested with these drugs, I wonder if the minister can inform the house what action is being taken by the food and drug administration of this country to prevent the importation or use by consumers of similarly inferior products.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I shall be glad to investigate the matter and report to the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUMMERSIDE—POSSIBLE PHASING OUT OF AIR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence which arises out of the meeting the minister had yesterday with the premier of Prince Edward Island and the premier's statement which appeared in the Charlottetown Guardian. There is a suggestion that the defence department wishes to phase out the Neptunes flying out of the Canadian forces base at Summerside. Can the minister assure members of this house and the people of Prince Edward Island that no major cut-backs will be made in that establishment, because of its vital importance to the already depressed economy of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I can give assurance that no reduction will be entertained so far as the base at Summerside is concerned without prior consultation and preparation with the provincial authorities.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): While the minister was kind enough to assure us that no such cut-back would take place without consultation, can he assure us that no cut-back will take place?

Mr. Cadieux (Terrebonne): Unfortunately I cannot; because as the hon. member knows we are contemplating phasing out the Neptunes and redeploying the Arguses which, of course, will apply to Summerside, Comox and other places in Canada. I cannot say there will not be any reduction.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PAY INCREASES FOR RED CIRCLED POSITIONS —SALARIES OF NURSES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Wadds (Grenville-Dundas): I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Will the minister make every effort to facilitate consideration of the inclusion of red circled positions in the recent civil service salary increase?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Representations have been received from the Public Service Alliance, as was pointed out by my parliamentary secretary last night. These are now under consideration by the Treasury Board staff who will be consulting with officials of the Public Service Alliance.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): My question in a sense is supplementary to the one directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I should like to ask him if he can advise the house about the position of registered nurses in the employ of the federal government, the lowest paid registered nurses in Canada, as to when they can expect their long awaited increases?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this particular question under advisement. I doubt that nurses in the public service are the lowest paid in Canada; I do not think I could accept that. However, from time to time in this particular category adjustments are made based on conditions across the country. Therefore I should like to take the question as notice so I can find out what is the situation at present.

Mr. Forrestall: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can I infer from the answer given that if what I have represented is correct the Treasury Board will take immediate steps to overcome this disparity?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED TELEVISION COVERAGE OF PROCEEDINGS OF COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Stanbury (York-Scarborough): I should like to direct a question to the government house leader in his capacity as chairman of the committee on procedure. In the aftermath of public involvement in the constitutional conference through radio and television as well as in print, and in view of the experiment under way in the British House of Lords, can the house leader advise us when we might expect a recommendation from the committee which would permit broadcast coverage of at least the proceedings of the committees of the house?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I believe the Prime Minister dealt with a similar question yesterday. The special committee on procedure has from time to time considered this matter, but has not yet reached any conclusion. I believe the general sentiment is that we might make a start at least with the committees of the house, and we would be glad to try to bring forward a positive recommendation at a later date.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF HUNTING RIGHTS UNDER MIGRATORY BIRDS CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): My question is for the Prime Minister. I wonder if the Prime Minister is in a position to advise the house as to what progress, if any, has been made in straightening out the conflict between the Migratory Birds Convention Act and the treaties with our Indian people.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe this is the type of information which should be given to the house by way of a statement on motions.

Mr. Simpson: I submit with respect, Mr. Speaker, that similar questions have been answered on other occasions. I believe the Prime Minister advised the house the government had the matter under consideration.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into the matter to see if the question can be appropriately dealt with by an answer on orders of the day.

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED SUGGESTION FOR CHANGE IN CONTROL OF WHEAT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to again ask the Prime Minister whether he has had an opportunity to check into reports emanating from Vancouver in connection with the statement of the Minister of Agriculture in regard to policy respecting the Canadian Wheat Board. I believe I asked this question on January 29.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend for not having sufficiently checked into this matter at the moment to give an answer, but I will try and check it with the Minister of Agriculture over the week end.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. I do so really on behalf of the hon. member for Skeena who is unavoidably absent today.

May I ask the Prime Minister, if the informal representations which I understand were made by a minister without portfolio of the British Columbia government to the Minister of Labour are followed up by an official request from the premier or provincial secretary of British Columbia for assistance in the flood damaged areas of Bella Coola and Hagensborg, will the matter receive immediate and sympathetic consideration?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if that request were made it would certainly receive immediate consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND CAUSEWAY—REPORTED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister whether, in view of the considerable number of lay-offs by the Northumberland consultants, he could give the house an assurance there would be no further slow down or retarding of the causeway construction project. I wonder whether the Prime Minister has gained any information on this question and can say whether this is a significant development.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity to discuss this question with the Minister of Public Works, who was unavoidably out of Ottawa yesterday, but I will do so later today.

PROPOSED UNDERWATER TUNNEL BETWEEN QUEBEC AND LEVIS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Keays (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works dealing with the $125 million underwater tunnel that is proposed for the Quebec-Levis area, for which plans have been approved. Can the minister tell the house whether government approval is pending and is delaying this project?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I find it difficult to determine whether there is urgency about this matter. The hon. member might like to put the question on the order paper.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, the urgency of the question is that they are ready to go ahead with the plans pending a government decision.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice. I had some difficulty hearing it owing to some conversations being held in the house. I will forward an answer to the hon. member immediately.

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, would the minister inquire at the same time whether the government has been asked to share in the project and, if so, what was the nature of the reply?

Mr. McIlraith: I would be glad to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

POSSIBLE CHANGE IN PROFIT ALLOWED ON LIMITED DIVIDEND CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board; I believe he has received notice. Is the minister in a position to confirm or deny reports to the effect that the government intends to bring forward legislation to increase the amount of allowable profit in relation to limited dividend housing construction?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should not ask whether reports can be confirmed or denied, but I assume the question is in order if it is asked directly.

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, we have no intention of increasing the return on capital that is allowed to people engaged in limited dividend housing projects. Because we think this is a very useful form of housing, what we are doing is to set aside money this year in order to encourage this type of housing to be built and rented at low rentals. We are also emphasizing the building of public housing.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the house if any difficulty is being experienced by the authorities in allocating funds to the major labour areas?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the only difficulty we may be having is that the response to the reinstitution of this program has been so great that we may not be able to meet all the requests that are coming in for permission to build limited dividend housing.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that on December 15 the Prime Minister said he hoped the situation would improve while he is still in office to the point where the government would be able to reconsider the question of increasing pensions of retired civil servants, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he still has that hope?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly hope that the situation will improve.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

FINANCE

CABINET CONSIDERATION OF INCREASE IN INTEREST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister had time to consider the serious increase in interest rates that has taken place in this country, and has a committee of cabinet been appointed to study this serious matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had time to consider that.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would care to answer the second part of my question, which was whether a committee of cabinet has been appointed for the purpose.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This matter is of such importance that it should be and is being considered by the whole cabinet, not merely a committee.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

SUGGESTED LEGISLATIVE CHANGES TO INCREASE AUTONOMY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who is responsible for the Atlantic Development Board. I wonder whether the minister is contemplating introducing legislative changes in respect to the Atlantic Development Board so as to give that body the autonomy that was suggested by the premier of New Brunswick?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the premier of New Brunswick made some constructive suggestions at the conference, and these will be considered by the government.

AIR TRANSPORT

LEASING OF AIRCRAFT WITH NON-CANADIAN CREWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport arising out of the Boeing 707 accident at Vancouver. Will the government now be reconsidering this policy in light of the representations made by the Canadian Airline Pilots Association concerning the leasing of aircraft by Canadian carriers with air crews other than Canadian?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into that matter and discuss it with the minister.

RESEARCH

PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT CENTRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ed. Schreyer (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister; I believe it is a matter of close personal interest to him. Is the Prime Minister hoping or intending to make a statement next week in regard to the report he has received on the feasibility of establishing an international development centre in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I will be able to do this next week because I have not had a chance to discuss the interim report made by Mr. Plumptre which has been considered also by the external aid branch of the department; but I would certainly hope to make at least an interim report the week after.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SIMPLIFIED PROCEDURE FOR GRANTING TERRITORIAL LANDS

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-32, to amend the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would make a statement and outline the procedure it is intended to adopt if this bill receives the assent of this house.

• (11:40 a.m.)

Mr. Laing: I should be happy to make a short statement on this bill. For a great number of years there has been a feeling in that particular area north of the sixtieth parallel that certain services for which the government and this parliament are responsible are not available with that degree of efficiency that is expected in other parts of Canada.

When I assumed my responsibilities here the first thing I heard in that vast territory was that they wanted what they called government on the ground. One of the most distressing aspects of administration that I heard about was the difficulty of acquiring the right to crown lands in the two territories. The procedure that had been adopted over the years was resulting in delays of up to, I was told, five, six, and even eight months. At that time, of course, the registration of these lands was by letters patent, and the proposal now is to replace that by a simple fiat from myself, as minister, to the appropriate registrar of land titles.

We expect to have the registrar of land titles located very definitely on the ground, and it is our hope that we can give the people living in those territories the opportunity of acquiring those lands in a matter of as little as a week or ten days, if everything is in order.

This bill, Your Honour, came to us from the other place, where it was passed. It is a housekeeping bill and is designed to give the type of efficient service to those who live north of the sixtieth parallel, in respect of acquiring crown lands, that they might expect to receive in other parts of Canada. This is very important to them because the building season is so short that if interruptions take place, as the hon. member for Yukon knows, there may be, as there have been, instances where the entire building season is lost.

We think the bill, which was referred to the committee on banking and commerce—I understand that it went through in about five minutes—is in order. We are quite confident that the location of the registrar in the capitals of the two territories will result in great benefit and will remove many of the objections—I hope it will remove them all—which have been raised by those who are trying to acquire crown lands for building purposes.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr .Speaker, I had expected the minister to elaborate more fully on the procedure it is intended to implement if this bill receives the assent of the house.

The federal legislation that is affected by this bill runs beyond the Territorial Lands Act, the Public Lands Grants Act and the Land Titles Act. Other acts referred to in this bill include the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, the Yukon Placer Mining Act and of course, by implication in any event, the Yukon Act itself as well as other pieces of legislation.

Since land is the resource that it is, any action with respect to it brings into sharp focus the policy of the government with respect to its disposition and the approach to the whole field of resources that can properly be classified as coming under the umbrella of public lands. As the minister is aware, in the Yukon we are concerned with some 207,000 square miles and the Northwest Territories, which is across the way, with some 1,300,000 square miles. Yet in this vast area that comprises some 40 per cent of Canada's surface, it is so difficult to obtain a 50-foot by 100-foot lot that development and settlement are being unreasonably retarded.

One reason has been, as the minister has stated in the past—and I use this term not in an unkind sense—that so many bureaucratic barriers have been placed in the way of settlers who have attempted to obtain land that they have been discouraged—discouraged from coming in to settle permanently and discouraged, once they get to the territory, by finding that they have to wait these inordinately long periods of time in order to obtain a small plot to build a home, start a business, or whatever else it may be.

This bill brings into focus more than the question of land disposition. As the minister said, one of the desperate urges of the people of the north, and this is true of the people of the Yukon and has been for many years, is to have government by the people in the territories. The minister called it "government on the ground". The bill goes beyond the mere consideration of land; it goes to the very root of the government's approach with respect to governmental structure in the northern territories.

The Yukon has come through a trying time in its confrontation with the minister and his officials with respect to certain taxation bills that were passed last January 23. The minister and the department, I presume, took the position that there would be no constitutional reform which would give the people of the territory, through their elected representative, the power to deal with such matters as lands, the subject being considered in the bill before us, unless our people complied with the minister's wishes with respect to the passage of legislation which was laid before them, to be rubber stamped by them.

We are more than fed up with the situation, and we are more than fed up with the almost pathological reluctance of the minister to relinquish some of the responsibilities that are being discharged by the federal government with respect to our resources in the Yukon. I am sure the people of the Northwest Territories, and particularly in the Mackenzie area, feel the same way.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

The Carrothers commission reported some time ago, yet no implementation of their suggestions has been forthcoming. The minister has not even hinted whether the government intends to implement any of those recommendations. He has had in his possession for about two years now the views of the Yukon legislative council with respect to constitutional reform which would place the entire responsibility for the disposition of lands in the hands of the people of the Yukon.

• (11:50 a.m.)

I ask the minister why should we continue to have Yukon lands administered by the minister's fiat. Why can we not develop a system that would be on all fours with that which exists in the several provinces of Canada, which would permit the disposition of crown lands in the Yukon without having to go for the minister's fiat? Probably the minister's answer will be that these lands belong to all Canadians, and therefore the federal government must retain its control over their disposition. I reject that theory. Canada is a federal state. Eventually the Yukon will achieve provincial status. I assume this is the minister's belief as well. Why not commence this process now?

Arguments have been advanced against commencing the process now. The two most frequently heard are that there are not sufficient people in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to permit this kind of transfer of jurisdiction, and the other is that until such time as the economies of the two territories reach the point where they can pay their own way the federal government is not justified in implementing any constitutional reforms at all.

In reply to repeated questions of mine in this connection, the minister has said that a white paper will be tabled in the next month or two. I presume that one of the subject matters to be dealt with in that white paper will be the disposition of lands in the territories. Yesterday in reply to a further question of mine he said he is awaiting the economic report now being undertaken in the Yukon before the white paper will be tabled.

I detect a rather ominous inference from that answer. I suspect, but I hope I am wrong, that what he will be attempting to do in connection with the economic report is to justify the position being taken, that since the economy of the Yukon will not permit it to pay its own way there will not be any constitutional reform until such time as the economic situation will permit that state of affairs. I reiterate the argument he has heard from me many times in the past, that every province in Canada is subsidized in one way or another by the federal government.

Mr. Laing: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I might draw to the attention of Your Honour that many of the things the hon. member is saying do not relate even remotely to this bill. I have no objection to his wandering over into the Northwest Territories if I have a chance to wander too and tell the house about the economic developments taking place in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories at present, which are the greatest in Canada in relation to the people who live there. But if the hon. member is going to wander abroad—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate the point raised by the minister. It is really a point of order, not a question of privilege. I must say that I am not familiar with all the terms of the bill. I have to judge by the title which refers to the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. The hon. member for Yukon knows the rules, and knows he has to confine his remarks to the four corners of the bill.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I believe I am doing that; and in the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he was sitting on this side of the house addressing the Speaker on one occasion during a debate on wheat, perhaps the reason that Your Honour is not following is that Your Honour fails to appreciate the finer points involved in the effect of the amendments set out in this bill.

We are confronted with seven pieces of legislation in connection with this bill. I outlined them at the outset of my remarks. They are the Territorial Lands Act, the Public Lands Grants Act, the Land Titles Act, the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, the Yukon Placer Mining Act, the Yukon Act itself and the Northwest Territories Act. We are also dealing with a new procedure affecting the disposition of resources, of lands, in the Yukon. That disposition affects all these other statutes, and in my submission since the government has opened up the question of how the lands are to be disposed of, then the procedures for transfer of jurisdiction in all these matters are relevant.

I would welcome the minister's comments with respect to the matters I am raising because they are very current, very pertinent and very urgent. They are urgent not only to the people o fthe Yukon and the Northwest Territories in connection with the other pieces of legislation I have outlined; they are also urgent with respect to the thousands of Canadians living in those territories who, as it were, have been left out of the main stream of constitutional development in Canada.

All I am saying is that this bill and all the other statutes it affects do not go to the root of the problem. As the minister has rightly stated, the bill will assist in solving some of the delays. These delays have extended over six, seven or eight months in cases of people trying to obtain small plots of land upon which to build. But the bill will not solve the root problem, which is the compelling desire of the people of these two northern territories to have complete control not only over the disposition of the lands that come under the Territorial Lands Act but also over the resources contemplated in the Yukon Quartz Mining Act and the Yukon Placer Mining Act, which this bill affects.

Further, since this bill also affects the Yukon Act and the Northwest Territories Act, which set forth the division of powers between the federal government and the territorial governments, I want to say, and I am sure the hon. member for the Northwest Territories will also want to say, that the time has long passed when another hard look should be taken at the division of these legislative responsibilities not only in the field of land but in the area of the other resources affected by this bill.

In order to consider how best to achieve that division of responsibilities we have to discuss the procedures the government is employing in the principle established by the presentation of this bill. That principle is that under the terms of the bill the federal government will still retain control of the disposition of lands. I say that principle is wrong.

Instead of invoking the procedure which this bill attempts to set up, what we should be doing is transferring jurisdiction completely to the legislature of the Yukon Territory. In order to establish this alternative principle it is necessary for me to debate the reasons for advancing suggestions as to how the structure of government can be altered in order to achieve that objective. Until such time as there are governmental reforms in the Yukon which will permit the elected body to assume this kind of jurisdiction over the disposition of lands, it will not be possible to establish time tested methods of procedure such as those which exist in the provinces. In order to have a situation in which the administrative procedures in the Yukon will be such as to permit the administering of this kind of legislation by the territory it will be necessary to reform the structure of the council and the structure of government itself both in the Yukon Territory and in the Northwest Territories.

• (12 noon)

The suggestions of the wholly elected council in the Yukon are now before the minister in the form of a resolution passed by that assembly on June 23 last. In that resolution they have requested unanimously, I might say, that the council of the Yukon Territory be known as the Yukon legislative assembly, that the number of members of the Yukon legislative assembly be increased to 15 and that the term of the assembly be increased to four years. Under subparagraph (c) they have suggested that the advisory committee on finance be replaced by an executive council of not less than five members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is now going rather far afield. He must realize that we are dealing with a particular piece of legislation to amend the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. I appreciate the argument the hon. member made a moment ago in respect of the point of order raised by the minister. This is perhaps a complicated piece of legislation which affects a number of acts but, as the hon. member knows, when we have amending legislation before us the rules do not permit us to go behind the amending legislation to discuss legislation which is not being amended. Therefore the terms of discussion are rather narrow. I say this realizing full well that the hon. member should be granted some leeway. I hope he will try to relate what he is saying now to the terms of the bill which is before us.

Mr. Nielsen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My submission with regard to the point raised by Your Honour is that the bill relates to a change in procedure concerning the disposition of territorial lands. I am raising arguments in objection to the procedures which the bill would establish. In order to discuss those changes it is necessary in my argument that I suggest alternatives. The alternatives I am suggesting relate to a change in the structure of government in the Yukon so as to implement procedures which I feel should be substituted for the procedures suggested in the bill. Therefore it is very necessary to go into the matter of the structure of government since the structure of government in the Yukon now does not permit the adoption of administrative procedures I am suggesting that until that structure is changed it will be impossible to implement the kind of changes I am suggesting in respect of this bill. Therefore, with great deference, I suggest that my arguments are quite relevant to the principle the bill is attempting to establish.

As Your Honour will see as I go along, apart from the other changes which the council wishes there are direct references to the distribution of lands in their suggestions. I referred to sub-paragaprh (c) of the council's resolution. This suggests the replacement of the advisory committee on finance by an executive council. In effect this would be a mini-cabinet that would have executive powers in regard to certain classes of subjects related, as the minister knows, to section 16 of the Yukon Act which is affected by this legislation. They say they wish jurisdiction in the following fields: education, health and welfare, territorial resources including land, public works, justice and corrections, revenue and finance, also affecting the disposition of lands, forestry, also affecting the disposition of lands, fisheries, also affecting the disposition of lands, and all the other necessary residual executive powers which may be necessary to effect transference. They have also suggested other constitutional reforms which I shall not read into the record at this time.

From the points I have made thus far it will be seen quite clearly that until the governmental structure is altered at least to the extent suggested by the Yukon council and by myself and others from time to time, we will not be in a position in the Yukon Territory, nor will they be in the Northwest Territories, to administer the disposition of resources which come under this bill and under the other federal legislation affected by the bill.

In order to have government on the ground, to use the minister's term, there must be a new approach. That new approach must be to transfer the responsibility completely to the people on the ground. There are responsible individuals in the Yukon who are prepared to co-operate in the building of a new, different and reformed governmental structure. These individuals are sufficiently responsible to take on the administration of the disposition of lands and those other resource functions that are now retained by the federal government.

In this jet age why should we have to come hat in hand to the minister for his fiat for a 50-foot by 100-foot lot? Why indeed should a resident of the Yukon who wishes to purchase a parcel of land on which to build a house have to go any farther than the administration which exists in the Yukon? Why should he have to even tolerate the delay in the mail when submitting an application to the department here in Ottawa for the purchase of a piece of land 4,000 miles away? This is an archaic, cumbersome and completely unnecessary procedure.

Mr. Laing: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he aware that in the Yukon at the present time all surveyed lots have already been transferred to the control of the commissioner and that all the lands surrounding Whitehorse and other settlements will be transferred to the control of the area council? I am quite sure the hon. member is not aware of this because otherwise he would not be presenting this argument.

Mr. Nielsen: I am very keenly aware of this development, but these lands do not even make a dint in the 207,000 square miles which the minister knows is the land area of the Yukon.

Mr. Laing: It has some relation to 15,000 people.

Mr. Nielsen: This was not the argument used when the province of Manitoba was carved out. Surely the minister must get rid of the idea that democratic forms of government rest on mere population or that population must be a precedent for the establishment of an institution which will give the people the right to govern themselves. The minister thinks there is a great concession in the transfer to the commissioner, in the right of the people of the territory, of these lands he has mentioned which represent only a tiny fraction of the whole. We resent this and can see no reason for continuing this colonial process of having a commissioner, who takes his instructions from the minister, who has control over these resources. Why can they not be subject to the decision of the elected representatives of the people in those two territories?

• (12:10 p.m.)

As the minister refrained from doing so, I will not go into the great economic progress that is being made, particularly in the Yukon, at this moment, but this progress has its accompanying problems. History has shown that land problems follow in the wake of any such development. We have received inquiries already from people who want to come up from the provinces to establish such enterprises as cattle ranches. As the minister knows, unlike the southern and more fertile areas of Canada much more grazing land is required in order to sustain a head of cattle in the north. Where it takes 160 acres in the south, it takes substantially more in the Yukon or Mackenzie areas.

The commissioner has no power to make a decision for a group of ranchers who wish to establish a ranching operation in the north. He has no power to make any disposition of lands. This is maintained in the ministry and will be even following the passage of this bill. This situation only retards development inasmuch as the minister and the federal government retain control by virtue of the simple fact that the commissioner in the Yukon and the commissioner in the Northwest Territories are employees of the government of Canada.

The same argument applies in respect of the recent constitutional conference. The government thinks it granted a great concession when it said the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories would be "represented"—I use that word with quotation marks —at the conference. They were not, because the commissioners of both territories are federal government employees. What sort of representation is that? It is time for the government to take a more enlightened attitude toward the development of democratic institutions in both territories. Only then will the people be in a position to assume the responsibilities which are retained by the minister in this bill.

There is no need for the continuation of this archaic structure. While this bill will improve the situation in respect of the long delays which have hitherto existed in connection with obtaining titles to lands in both territories, it is not going to cure the situation. Any improvement is welcome and therefore the minister will not find me resisting even the modicum of improvement set forth in this bill. However, as I say, it does not go far enough.

Before moving from the principle of the bill I should like the minister to outline in a little more detail the procedure which he anticipates will be adopted by the administration at the federal level and by the administration at the territorial level in substitution for the procedure that now exists. All the minister has told us so far is that there is going to be this change which will permit a simple fiat to issue from his office over his signature, thereby speeding up the obtaining of titles to lands. This does not tell us very much, and I should like him to go into some detail in respect of these procedures.

I know that the matter of legal interpretation is involved but there is a point that greatly concerns me in the first amendment. I refer to the use of the term "notification". Over the centuries the term "grant" has come to mean something in the law and has been the subject of interpretation in hundreds, if not thousands, of legal precedents. I should like the minister to assure me that my reading of the provision of the bill is accurate and that "notification" is going to mean exactly the same thing as "grant", because it will make a good deal of difference, I submit, if "notification" means something other than "grant". A grant of land has come to mean something in the law, and specifically in those laws relating to title to land. I am somewhat fearful that unless the term "notification" does mean precisely the same thing we are going to run into a good many problems.

I will leave my remarks there for the moment, Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that the minister is going to deal more elaborately with the procedures which are to be invoked once this bill is passed. I should also like him to clarify the use of the term "notification" instead of "grant".

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, the minister by introducing this bill to speed up the transfer of lands, as it affects the people of northern Canada, has once again shown the leadership he is giving in bringing government, as he says, on the ground for the people of the north. I welcome this change particularly as it coincides with the transfer of responsibility from the federal government to the territorial government in the Northwest Territories.

Last September the commissioner of the Northwest Territories together with his staff left Ottawa and moved to Yellowknife. The physical transfer took 14 hours. The government staff closed down operations in Ottawa on Thursday and began operations in Yellowknife the following Tuesday. On the Tuesday following that one of the lawyers in Yellowknife took a request for the transfer of legal title to a lot in Yellowknife to the legal adviser stationed in Yellowknife. Rather than it taking three, four, five or six weeks just for the transfer of the papers between Ottawa and Yellowknife he was able to complete this transaction in half an hour. The proposal the minister has put forward will do much to speed up the processes and do away with the incredible delays which have existed in the past and, I remind the minister, exist to a certain extent at the present time.

I should like to refer to an example which came to my attention only a week ago regarding an individual who applied for a piece of registered crown land in Yellowknife in order to build a house last summer. He applied to the town. The town required that the original application be amended and the surveyor made the necessary amendments. The town forwarded the application to Ottawa for approval but as of last Monday letters patent still had not been issued. I might add that the individual concerned built his house last summer. The only problem is that he has been unable to obtain a mortgage on it.

• (12:20 p.m.)

Even though there are difficulties at the present time, the minister through his policies has implemented the transfer of responsible government to the Northwest Territories in a manner which no other government or minister has in the past. There has been a suggestion today that in respect of our natural resources the ownership of surface and subsurface rights should be vested in the commissioners of the Northwest and the Yukon. My answer to this suggestion is a motion which was passed at the last session of the Northwest Territories council when this subject was dealt with. The council unanimously passed the following motion:

Motion No. 15.

Whereas ownership of the surface and subsurface rights to land within the Northwest Territories are vested in Her Majesty the Queen in the right of the Dominion of Canada.

Now Therefore I move that the Commissioner make representation on behalf of this Council to the appropriate federal authorities requesting that the federal government acknowledge its role as a trustee of natural resources for the future province of the north and establish guide lines for a proper accounting of that trusteeship when same comes to a close (when the province of the north comes into being) coupled at that time with a transfer of ownership of said mineral resources to said province of the north.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? Did the appointed members on the Northwest Territories council also vote for that resolution?

Mr. Orange: I said it was unanimous, and while I was not there at the time I would assume that the appointed and elected members voted on that motion. I might also point out that to the best of my knowledge the motion was prepared by the elected members on their own and presented to the council. What I am attempting to say at the moment is that while we are anxious to have more government on the ground in the north, so far as the Northwest Territories are concerned we recognize that the federal government still has a vast responsibility to the north in terms of building and developing the area, in order that the north can take its place in the Canadian confederation at a time and place when we are in the position to do so.

I do not intend to talk at great length at this stage of the bill. I am pleased that the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has asked for clarification of the word "notification". I hope the minister will give us his definition at the appropriate opportunity. Before concluding I should like to suggest to the minister that with regard to the whole question of lands and the use of lands in the north, particularly in the Northwest Territories, principles be adopted particularly in terms of encouraging settlement.

In the southern area of the Mackenzie the bottom lands of the Slave river comprise approximately two and a half million acres of arable land. It is difficult for people who wish to settle in the north and carry out farming or ranching to obtain the necessary lands. There does not seem to be a policy laid down whereby the administration can work out some means of encouraging people to take up agricultural occupations.

We have an example in the community of Fort Smith which lies on the sixtieth parallel. A pioneer came north last year and was able to obtain a large block of land right on the border of the province of Alberta but only a very small portion of land, approximately 50 to 100 acres, in the Northwest Territories. This person said that he made money in the first year of farming because of the agricultural potential of the area. I am somewhat concerned about this question and I believe we should adopt the principle of encouraging people to settle in the north. We are looking for settlers. But until a land policy is established which will encourage people and not discourage them in terms of not only their leaseholds but the cost of leases, we shall not make progress in this area.

The proposals put forward in this bill are a continuation of the process of developing government in the north. I congratulate the minister for bringing this legislation before the house. I only hope that when his white paper is presented it will go much farther in bringing what we call government on the ground to northern Canada.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that Your Honour has allowed a reasonable latitude of discussion on the terms of the legislation now before us—

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Speaker is always reasonable.

Mr. Barnett: —and in particular to the two members of the house who represent the areas most directly involved in the bill the minister has introduced. I am glad this is so because the bill touches on a very vital subject. The whole subject of land, jurisdiction over it and the manner in which it can be held by individual citizens is a rather important and fundamental one in this country.

There was an understandable difference in the tone of the presentations of the two hon. members who have spoken. I suppose this is based, in part at least, on where they happen to be sitting in this chamber. There are those who normally support the government in power and those who do not, which means that members do not have too many opportunities to voice in this chamber the real feelings and sentiments of the people they represent in the house. That of itself is, I think, a reason sufficient for these two members to use this bill as an opportunity to give expression to those feelings perhaps in the context of the more general debate that has been going on about the confederation of tomorrow.

I gather from the remarks of both hon. members that they consider this bill to be a useful step forward as far as it goes. I am quite prepared to accept some guidance from them in this respect and I think all members of the house should have the same inclination. I understand that the bill will simply change the procedure under which people can acquire access to and use of land in the two territories.

• (12:30 p.m.)

I have a continuing interest in what the hon. members have said and in legislation which the minister brings forward in this general area. My interest arises from a trip I was able to take as a member of the northern affairs committee when I was able to see a little of that part of Canada. Any hon. member who took part in that tour of the north certainly could not have helped becoming aware of the very healthy urge on the part of the people who live there for an increasing voice in matters which affect them most vitally and in the running of their affairs in their communities and territories.

I should like to make one reference to my own experience when I was in the capital city of the Yukon Territory. Some of the people whom I met there discovered that I was a member of parliament representing a British Columbia constituency. I was immediately assailed strongly on what some of them felt was the desire of my province to take over the Yukon territory.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the hon. member aware that the premier of British Columbia has now withdrawn that offer?

Mr. Barnett: I have not received any official notification from the premier of my province that he has changed his mind—

Mr. Nielsen: Unfortunately.

Mr. Barnett: —but I gather he has had some second thoughts. I know that as a British Columbian I hastily assured them that in my view this was just one of Mr. Bennett's wilder dreams and it was not taken too seriously by most citizens in my province. Perhaps Mr. Bennett, who does on occasion have some regard for the views held by the citizens of his province, may have recognized that most of us were not prepared to embark on this particular form of colonialism in this day and age. So I think it is understandable that in their own ways the members representing these two territories have sought, in speaking on this bill, to give a glimpse of the real impatience which the people whom they represent feel about their continued substatus in the Canadian confederation—

Mr. Nielsen: Vassalage.

Mr. Barnett: —in relation to the rights and constitutional arrangements enjoyed by those who live in the provinces. As a matter of fact, I was born very shortly after Alberta achieved provincial status and prior thereto it had been part of the Northwest Territories. Although I cannot say I have reached an advanced age, that period does seem to be rather remote in the history of the country, and certainly no one would suggest now that Alberta should revert to a territorial status.

I feel there is perhaps some danger that the people in these two territories, in their anxiety to enjoy similar rights as the rest of us in such matter as land holding, might feel they are being bypassed when arrangements are made with regard to the allocation of powers and jurisdiction, particularly in the resource field. Certainly it is my hope that once we settle some of the individual rights which were under discussion recently in Ottawa and will probably be discussed further in this chamber, many members of the house and people throughout the country will be prepared to take a realistic and rather unemotional approach to the whole question of resource jurisdiction. The subject is close to home for me because my constituency is involved in the whole matter of resource jurisdiction in areas over the continental shelf. For this reason I have been giving this matter some thought.

I think there may be a growing feeling on the part of some Canadians that if we are going to move away from drastic regional disparities the basic resources of this land must be considered to a greater extent as part of the national heritage. I, like many other people, am just feeling my way on this subject. It may be that some of the questions which were raised by the hon. member for Yukon and by the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, about which the people in those areas feel so strongly today, may be matters on which there will be a shift of view in the rest of the country in the years that lie ahead. Perhaps we may be ready to move toward the position which they are in now rather than them moving to the more extreme positions held by some people I know.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the hon. member permit a question? Would he agree that whatever shifts may come about the people of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories should have at least the same rights with respect to resource jurisdiction as are enjoyed by the provinces of Canada?

Mr. Barnett: I do not think that anyone, not even the minister who the hon. member for Yukon claims is pretty conservative in his approach to change on such matters, would disagree in principle with that idea.

Mr. Nielsen: He does.

Mr. Barnett: The minister can of course speak for himself, but my own feeling is that this is a matter which lies deeply in the minds of most Canadians no matter where they live. I would be surprised indeed to find the minister expressing violent disagreement with that principle. He will have an opportunity in closing the debate to comment on the matter if he so desires. However, I do not think this is a subject which it would be appropriate to continue discussing at any great length in this debate.

As the hon. member for Yukon admits, the bill brings about a minor improvement in the administration of the transfer of land. Perhaps it is a fairly important one. I am not sufficiently familiar with the details of the Territorial Lands Act to be able to offer a final judgment. Certainly I would go along with the hon. member for Yukon in welcoming a more detailed outline of the way in which the new technique will operate. I indicated that as a member of the committee which visited the north I have an interest in this matter. I would be interested to see whether the other members who took part in that trip have any contribution to make in support of the measure proposed in the bill and are sympathetic with the desire expressed by the hon. members representing the territories that we should quickly move beyond the changes set forth in the bill.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of entering this debate. Matters concerning the Yukon and the Northwest Territories can generally be handled very ably by the representatives of these areas, but I can recall a previous occasion a few months ago when I was prompted to speak by the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) in the course of a debate. Again today we have been treated to a series of fatuous, facetious and frivolous remarks by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) who has wandered rather far afield from the terms of the bill. This pattern was set earlier. I cannot quite understand how he can advocate strong centralization in terms of natural resource and at the same time pour scorn on any suggestion that the Yukon and British Columbia might eventually amalgamate into one. The timing of these remarks seems to be very poor on a day when the Atlantic provinces are beginning what I trust will be a series of meetings which may lead to economic and political union of those provinces. Even the smallest of them, in terms of population, is vastly larger than either the Northwest Territories or the Yukon.

• (12:40 p.m.)

Mr. Barnett: Does the hon. member not realize that the Atlantic provinces could probably be put very handily within the boundaries of at least our two constituencies, if not one of them?

Mr. Johnston: I am aware of the vastness of the territories. However, a most important federal-provincial conference which concerned itself very much with human rights has just finished. I am talking about the human rights of Canadians and the hope for the proposed amendment to the constitution which would grant equality of rights to all Canadians right across the country. Of course, if we have a small group of people in terms of population, not in terms of land area, in a privileged position in any one part of the country, then some of the rights of the rest of us are somewhat diminished. While you can argue a certain geographical justification for the suggestion, surely that is not the over-riding consideration. The hon. member is certainly right about the size of the area I represent now and the size of the enlarged constituency as a result of redistribution.

Both the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Northwest Territories occupy a somewhat privileged position in this house at the moment as a result of the votes of a small group of people. Following redistribution they will be in an even more privileged position because while the norm for the country will be 70,000 people in each constituency I believe the Yukon will have about 15,000 and the Northwest Territories something like 30,000. These areas, which are apparently requesting provincial status, really cannot qualify as constituencies in terms of population.

Mr. Orange: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Does the hon. member who is making this somewhat invidious comparison recognize that following redistribution the Northwest Territories will be the sixth smallest constituency and that the four constituencies in Prince Edward Island will be the smallest?

Mr. Johnston: Of course I realize that. I have already talked hopefully about maritime political union which, if it comes about, will rectify many of the problems to which the hon. member for Northwest Territories has drawn the attention of the house this afternoon.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Johnston: Yes.

Mr. Nielsen: Would he suggest, based on his reasoning, that we should do away with the constituency of Îles-de-la-Madeleine?

Mr. Johnston: I would not do away with the Magdalen islands for a moment. As I understand, under redistribution the constituency will include a chunk of the mainland. I realize it has been something of an anachronism for a long time. I believe that the redistribution commission for Quebec agreed to do something about it.

Mr. Barnett: Does the hon. member recall from his reading of history that at the time British Columbia entered confederation that province had a population of between 6,000 and 10,000 and was represented by six members in this house?

Mr. Johnston: I entirely agree, but time marches on.

Mr. Laing: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Do you think there is any chance of me getting my bill passed?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I suggest there might be an opportunity for the bill to be passed. However, in order to accomplish that I would expect hon. members who are commenting on this bill to confine their remarks to the bill.

Mr. Johnston: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the admonition. This bill applies to the Territorial Lands Act, the Land Titles Act and the Public Lands Grants Act. The new act will probably remain on the statute books for some years, I assume. Probably it will be voided by eventual union of the Yukon Territory and the province of British Columbia I feel that the remarks I have been making were therefore, not entirely off the point. In addition the subject was introduced by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni when he spoke.

If the suggestion that the premier of British Columbia has withdrawn the offer of amalgamation is true, then I am sure it is only a temporary withdrawal. The problems of British Columbia will be solved to such an extent that the province will look to new areas to assist. Quite beyond the developing of the Yukon Territory, the government the hon. member represents is at the very moment suggesting that the provinces become more involved with external aid. I am sure we would be only too happy to develop a neighbouring portion of Canada. Certainly any statement made by the premier of British Columbia should have validity because, in spite of what the hon. member for Comox-Alberni says about whom he represents, I feel the premier of British Columbia has been willing to go to the people for a renewed mandate more frequently than even the members of the N.D.P. find satisfactory.

The point I am making, Mr. Speaker, is that I hope that we will seriously consider a reduction in the number of provinces in this country rather than the creation of additional provinces that may have considerable potential for the future but a very limited population.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): In introducing the bill, Mr. Speaker, the minister referred to it as a housekeeping item, and that is the main reason why I should like to make a few comments at the second reading stage. The bill has come to us from the other place where it was given rather cursory consideration. I note in reading the debates there that the gentleman who introduced the bill used precisely the same phrase, that it was merely a housekeeping bill and therefore did not require much attention or too much of the time of that body. Actually the original recommendation came from the Glassco committee which had been looking into administrative affairs in detail both in the north and in the department and had made strong recommendations that this particularly obvious administrative problem should be dealt with as quickly as possible.

• (12:50 p.m.)

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, may I say I am rather disappointed that the other place did not seize the opportunity to use this bill as a vehicle for examining the problems of northern development in a broader perspective. It seems to me that this important arm of parliament could serve a useful function by delving a little deeper when matters of this kind are referred to it. In looking at the treatment that the bill received in the other place I notice that it went to a committee. Opportunity could have been taken then to call witnesses to discuss the broader implications of this so-called housekeeping bill that is before us this afternoon, implications that were raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and to a lesser extent by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange).

The hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) made reference to the tour that the parliamentary committee on northern affairs made of the north some two years ago. I think it might be a good idea on any future tours to include in the party some of the hon. gentlemen from the other place. In this way they too could become more deeply and personally involved in the challenge of the north and could use their more leisurely procedures to assist in creating a climate of opinion in parliament, as well as across the country, that would make it possible for both the government and parliament to proceed much more expeditiously in dealing with the obvious delay in northern development.

Mr. Laing: Did the hon. member say "delay" in northern development?

Mr. Dinsdale: The fact that this measure is referred to as a housekeeping bill indicates that the government itself has a leisurely attitude to the challenges that have been placed before parliament since the department of northern affairs was established in 1953.

I notice the minister is objecting to my use of the word "delay"—

Mr. Laing: You want more vision.

Mr. Dinsdale: —so perhaps I will deal with that question for a moment. I say that what is needed at this time is much more than a housekeeping approach to the problems of northern development. The minister said that if he had had the opportunity he would have placed before the house some of the rather impressive figures relating to the development that has taken place during the past decade. Perhaps I can briefly do this in one or two instances in order to indicate that the time is long past when we need more than housekeeping procedural changes in administration.

For example, Mr. Speaker, in the matter of mineral production the figure for the Yukon in 1965 was $13.3 million. It is projected that this year the figure will be $30 million, a rather impressive and spectacular index of development. The figure is even more spectacular for the Northwest Territories. In 1965 it started with a base of $72 million and it is projected that this year the figure will amount to $115 million.

Even in the area of population or human resources the statistics are impressive. In 1941 there were only 5,000 people living in the Yukon Territory. In the next decade the number increased to 9,000 and in the decade to 1961 to 12,000. Since 1961 the population has moved forward proportionately at a rapid rate and it is estimated that the population today is 17,000. This indicates that economic progress in the north has been quite dramatic since prime minister St. Laurent introduced legislation in this house in 1953 to set up the department of northern affairs. At that time he stated that this great land mass with its proven resources had been administered in a state of absentmindedness by successive governments of Canada.

There was a dynamic upsurge of interest under the leadership of the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the former prime minister, during the period 1957 to 1963. I recall a speech that he made on September 26, 1958 during the course of which the former prime minister used these words:

> It is my hope that by the time of Canada's centennial in 1967 the Yukon and the Northwest Territories will have gone a long way, if not all the way, toward self-government.

That was the ambition the right hon. gentleman had for the development of this 40 per cent of Canada's land area.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we have before us a piece of legislation dealing with one of the more controversial aspects of administrative red tape, the administration of land resources in both of the territories. This bill is referred to as merely housekeeping. I repeat that the time is long past when we have to get beyond the housekeeping stage and move rapidly in the direction of greater self-government and autonomy both in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories. It has been pointed out by the hon. gentlemen who represent those areas that the demand for this from the people there is vociferous. I think it is high time that the government and parliament responded to this demand. May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): The hon. member for Brandon-Souris.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at one o'clock I was speaking briefly to the bill that we have before us, which is aimed at streamlining the procedure that has been required in the past to obtain land in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory. I suggested in my preliminary remarks that at this stage the government might have gone farther than merely producing a housekeeping measure such as this one. I have long had the feeling that both territories are ready for a dramatic leap forward to greater local control and self-government. Unhappily, it is true that on those issues that are of significance in the development of confederation the people of the country seem to be ahead of parliament and of government.

The two hon. members who are most familiar with this matter have both stressed the point I again wish to stress now, that the legislative councils of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory are demanding in increasingly vehement terms that parliament and the government, which have certain responsibilities under the British North America Act, move much more quickly than they have up to now. I am not being critical of the present minister in this regard. Once I had ministerial responsibility for this department but at that time I was fortunate in belonging to a government which was genuinely interested in northern development. My responsibilities as minister—

Mr. Laing: I knew that remark would make the hon. member laugh.

Mr. Dinsdale: —were easier, consequently.

Mr. Laing: I knew the hon. member could not say that without laughing.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister wants to know if I can say this without laughing. If he suggests that I laugh when I refer to the activities of the former administration I must say that I could not mention the activities of the present administration without crying. Up to the present the actions of this government have been to introduce studies on this and studies on that. We have had the Carrothers commission, task forces, royal commissions, and so on, to accumulate the necessary background of information on which government action might be based.

Mr. Orange: Is the hon. member objecting to the Carrothers commission?

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. member for Northwest Territories asks if I object to the report of the Carrothers commission.

Mr. Nielsen: A perpetuation of bureaucracy.

Mr. Laing: Are the two hon. gentlemen getting together, on the opposition side?

Mr. Dinsdale: My answer is that I do not object to the sentiment that is expressed in the Carrothers report with regard to the development of self-government in the Northwest Territories. It would not be politic for me to do so since many of its recommendations were based on the researches of the Winnipeg based firm of Hedlin and Menzies. Knowing both these men personally I may say that they are outstanding enthusiasts in regard to devleopment prospects in northern Canada. As a matter of fact, Doctor Menzies worked closely with the former prime minister as his economic adviser. It is obvious that Doctor Menzies' viewpoint, to the degree that it appears in the Carrothers report, was reflected in the vigorous policies of development that were brought forward by the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker).

Mr. Nielsen: Which the minister has since lauded.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes. I am sure that members of the house on both sides believe we must move forward in political development if we are to realize the potential of the north in terms of economic development. We must move forward toward self-government and away from the colonial status which still persists in both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. This is the point that my colleague from Yukon and the hon. member for Northwest Territories have made. I am sure that in the minister's heart of hearts it is the objective which he has in mind. For years the rationale has been that the population and fiscal resources of these areas do not justify any further move toward self-government. But under the program of development such as has been taking place in Canada since 1957 we have moved forward to broaden the economic base. As the minister has indicated, there has been an encouraging development in this regard.

The programs that were initiated following 1957 have produced results. We have new mines developing in the north. We have roads to resources. We have airfields. We have railroads into the north. We have modern communications such as the C.N.T. running right down the Mackenzie river to Inuvik in the Mackenzie delta. We have a governmental infrastructure. We have all the government, communication and transport services that are needed as a preliminary to dealing with the problem of local government control. The next step forward in northern development must be in the area of progress toward responsible government. At the outset of my remarks I said that this housekeeping measure can hardly be regarded as a tremendous leap forward. In making these few remarks this afternoon I wish to underscore a point and a position I held when I was the responsible minister, that we now must move forward to the objective outlined by former prime minister Diefenbaker in 1958 when he said that by centennial year he expected that the territories would be well on the way to self-government. Perhaps it is natural that someone from Manitoba, and I represent a Manitoba constituency, should be an enthusiastic supporter of this viewpoint. But I hope there will be others from other parts of Canada who will speak on second reading of this bill in the spirit of the new impetus toward a new confederation and that they will encourage the minister and the government to get busy on this long delayed objective. Manitoba was carved out of the Northwest Territories in 1870 when it had a population of only 25,000. That would not have happened if the Fathers of Confederation had lacked vision. Just a moment ago the minister used the word vision. Where there is no vision the people perish, is the inscription on the peace tower over the parliament buildings.

If the Fathers of Confederation had not had the vision to anticipate what would come out of the great movement from the colonial status of the Northwest Territories they would have used exactly the same arguments as are being used today, namely, that the population base and economic resources were not substantial enough. Indeed when it was decided to build a railway into the northwest it was described by a Liberal opposition as a railway that would go from wigwam to wigwam and would not pay for its own axle grease. Much the same arguments are being used by a Liberal government now in opposing progress toward self-government in the territories.

We all realize that progress toward self-government will be gradual. We are not going to have provincial governments overnight. There has to be a series of gradual movements toward this goal. This legislation could have provided a golden opportunity to move forward in the area of resource control. At this stage no one is asking that the legislative council of the Yukon have control over such resources as oil, minerals, water and so forth. But so far as surface land resources are concerned that control could have been given in toto to the Yukon government. It would have given a tremendous boost to the morale of those Yukoners who are away ahead of us in parliament and ahead of the government in demanding that they be masters of their own fate and captains of their own destiny in the field of democratic government.

We all agree that rapid progress has been made. What we now need to be convinced of is that if this forward momentum is to continue the next step is self-government so that the people themselves will be strongly motivated to carry out the responsibilities that should rightfully be theirs in the area of public administration. Procrastination is the thief of time. Studies are good. The Carrothers report has merely verified what northerners have known for years. The white paper which is to be tabled in the Yukon will merely be a rehash of many of the things put forward in the recent resolution of the Yukon council, which was partially placed on the record by the hon. member for Yukon. It is not studies and white papers that are needed now. It is action on the part of the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tardif): Is the house ready for the question? If the minister speaks now it is understood that he will close the debate.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, you have permitted a very wide-ranging debate on this proposal to enable the registration of land titles in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon to be done on a businesslike basis. I do not intend to use the same privilege as you have granted to previous speakers and range quite so widely, but this gives me an opportunity which I am going to embrace, if you permit me, to make some small review of the economic development taking place in these territories.

I do not think that any member who participated in the debate endeavoured to minimize the development taking place but at least two or three of them did not try to magnify it. In the area north of 60 which comprises 40 per cent of the land mass of Canada there is an economic development taking place that, having regard to the population of the two territories, has never been equaled in any country previously. I do not know how many hon. members know that in the Yukon Territory there has been a commitment to spend $127 million in the next 24 months, covering a population of 15,000 persons. I am quite certain the hon. member for the Yukon will agree with me when I say that this government has not been wholly responsible for that situation, but it certainly has been responsible in part. Today, by means of a number of measures we have been able to interest the financial institutions of Canada and the mining interests of Canada in looking northward. I am of the opinion that within the next 25 years we will be able to prove that the part of Canada which embraces 40 per cent of the land mass of Canada also has 40 per cent of the resources of Canada.

I decided that the first thing that would be needed is an economic base under the feet of the people who live there. At the present time, as minister I must come to parliament every year to ask for about $57 million from the taxpayers of southern Canada to put into the Canadian Arctic. This is necessary because in this area we have a school system which is excellent, we have welfare standards which are excellent and are equal to those in southern Canada, and we also have health and welfare services which, under circumstances of difficult geography, are comparable with those in southern Canada. It is necessary, therefore, to ask for a great deal of money from the taxpayers of southern Canada.

This government has not always been the government of this country. It has been in office only five years. I should like to ask the hon. member for Yukon and my predecessor in this post why no great leap forward was made in the days when they were in office. I mean the great leap forward that is suddenly being called for today. I wish to repeat that the first thing we must have in the territories is an economic base. When we have an economic base we will have a stable population. At the present time there are some 15,000 people in the Yukon Territory, some 8,000 of whom live in Whitehorse or vicinity.

[Mr. Laing.]

Mr. Nielsen: There are 18,000 people in the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Laing: Your figure must be contained in something which has come forward since I read the last figure concerning the population. The figure I saw was 15,000.

Mr. Nielsen: Those are D.B.S. figures which are usually wrong.

Mr. Laing: I do know that because of the type of investments being made in this area people are moving north rapidly. I hope the figure is 18,000. Nevertheless, there are difficulties there. I admit that there is a shortage of housing and a great number of things because of the almost unbelievable investment all at once.

The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Johnston) introduced the possibility of extending the provinces northward. This is a proposal which has been advocated many times by certain persons. In my own province of British Columbia I believe the first suggestion was made by the late Thomas Dufferin Pattullo. Some British Columbians may remember him as the most competent administrator British Columbia ever had as its head. Premier Pattullo went to the Yukon with the suggestion that it would be advisable, from the standpoint of those in the Yukon, for the boundary of British Columbia to be extended northward to take in the Yukon. He was very convincingly told by those valiant residents of the Yukon that the Yukon was prepared to take over British Columbia tomorrow but that it would not work the other way around.

I had a talk the other day with premier Bennett. He and I have resumed conversations. I do not think he would mind my repeating his words. He said that at the present time he is less interested in the Yukon than in securing some economic connection with the Mackenzie river area. I made a suggestion to him which I hope is followed by his province. It might give him the economic ability to participate with the adjacent province of Alberta in some of the developments that are going on in the Northwest Territories.

I should like to thank the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) for his contribution to the debate. He lives in a much more difficult area than the hon. member for Yukon. The Yukon has had a longer experience in government because of the great developments which took place there in 1898. It has been populated for a longer period. Some families have remained there all through the years. On the other hand, in the case of the Northwest Territories the hon. member has a vast expanse of country to serve which is populated by people living in a great number of small communities.

If we are to bring the services of Canada to these people it is necessary that there be an administrator on the spot. The administrator carries on his duties with limitations and directions concerning what he may do. A great deal of time will elapse before all the necessary services can be provided for the people. I do not think anyone is as much aware of this as are the councillors of the Northwest Territories. I regret that the hon. member for Yukon has indicated that he believes it is unwise to have appointed members on the Northwest Territories council. I do not think the people of the Northwest Territories share his feeling. I believe they would like to have some of the reports concerning development in this area carried to the people of southern Canada because they want their friends in southern Canada to know something about the north and the tremendous opportunities that are there.

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker—and I can say this now because the annual report in question has been made public—that when you have a mine such as the one in the Northwest Territories which in one year shipped out ore and concentrates to the value of $42 million and in so doing made a profit of more than $32 million, you have a real mine. In the western cordillera in the Northwestern Territories and the Yukon Territory today we probably have the best place on this continent to search for minerals. I am certain the economic development of this area is assured.

The hon. member for Yukon asked me to be specific concerning the methods by which land registrations are now taken and what we propose in comparison. The sequence of steps required to produce the present letters patent involves the following:

1. The preparation of a letter to the Department of Justice by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development requesting a draft of the letters patent.

2. The preparation and transmission of the draft letters patent from the Department of Justice to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

3. The retyping of the draft letters patent in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to insert the legal description of the land.

4. The transmission of the completed draft letters patent to the registration section of the Department of the Secretary of State for initial preparation of the document and signature by the deputy registrar general.

5. The transmission of the completed letters patent to the Department of Justice for the signature of the deputy attorney general.

6. The transmission of the letters patent by the Department of Justice to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for signature by the deputy minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

7. Their transmission by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Department of the Secretary of State for the impression of the Great Seal of Canada.

8. Their transmission by the Department of the Secretary of State to government house for signature by the deputy governor general.

9. Their transmission from the deputy governor general to the Department of the Secretary of State for registration.

10. Their transmission by the Department of the Secretary of State to the Public Archives for microfilming.

11. Their transmission from the Public Archives to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for recording.

12. Transmission of the letters patent from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Registrar of Titles who then issues a certificate of title to the purchaser.

• (3:00 p.m.)

To complete the above requires from six to eight weeks, and as most of the steps are statutory requirements few, if any, can be omitted.

What is now proposed is the replacement of the present letters patent by a simple fiat prepared by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to be sent directly by the minister to the registrar of land titles who will issue a certificate of title in the same manner as he now does. This substitution will in no way affect the present system of issuing a certificate of title but will replace the present preparatory steps one to 12 by the following:

1. A fiat in the form prescribed by the Department of Justice describing the land to be granted, setting out the reservations and containing all the information essential to enable the registrar to issue a certificate of title, will be prepared in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

2. The fiat, when signed, will be sent by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to the Public Archives for microfilming.

3. After microfilming the document will be returned to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for transmission to the registrar who will issue a certificate of title.

This procedure is expected to require a maximum time of seven to ten days.

In conclusion, I want to thank those members who have contributed to this debate. Probably something has been gained by the wide-ranging permission you have granted to us, Mr. Speaker. It may not be necessary for the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) to put once again on Hansard his ideas about freedom for the Yukon. There is a pamphleteer in the Yukon at the present time who has made certain recommendations as to how freedom should be brought to the Yukon. He has eight steps, the first of which is the creation of an impasse.

Mr. Nielsen: May I ask to what document the hon. gentleman is referring?

Mr. Laing: I am referring to a pamphlet entitled "Blueprint for Autonomy" which provides eight steps to provincehood, written by Ken Shortt. Since the hon. member has recently drawn to my attention that an impasse has been created I knew it was not necessary for him to ask me what document I was referring to.

I think we have made some progress today. I ask for the confidence of the house in passing this bill which I know, as the hon. member for Yukon knows, has been badly needed for a great number of years, both while this government was in power and while the government he supported was in power. I know he wants to get along with the business at hand as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tardif in the chair.

On clause 1—Grant.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to hold up passage of this legislation but I think I should clarify one or two things said by the minister. In the first place let me disassociate myself completely from the document to which he referred just before the conclusion of the debate on second reading. I am sure it will be of interest to all hon. members to know that this document was prepared by a vice president of the Yukon Liberal Association. The tactic outlined in the document is one I cannot adhere to, condone or endorse. Some of the things Mr. Shortt has said are valid but most of the pamphlet is a résumé of resolutions which were passed by the Yukon council in 1965. I think that should be made very clear.

The great leap forward about which the minister was speaking is something I wish to discuss. He asked what steps were taken by the previous government. I am sure he would want to be fair enough not to overlook the fact that under the previous government a pattern was designed for the evolution of government in the Yukon. The previous government increased the size of the council and created the advisory committee on finance which is the nucleus of what will eventually develop into a cabinet system of government with executive responsibility. Other similar advances were made at that time.

The minister's attitude in closing the debate indicates to me that he is lumping the two territories together. He made some remarks in respect of the historical development of the Yukon and its greater familiarity than that of the Northwest Territories. He also referred to the governmental structure and so on. I am sure I need not remind the minister, but for the benefit of other members of the house let me say there is a vast difference between the two territories. We cannot apply the same norms to both. I am sure the people in the Northwest Territories are as resentful as we in the Yukon about this constant endeavour to apply the same standards to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

It is my hope that the procedure outlined by the minister will result in the whole process of obtaining title to land taking only seven to ten days. I am rather doubtful of this because that is only little more than a week. It is impractical to think that once the minister receives a request for a fiat the process of providing it, sending it to the archives for microfilming and returning it, remembering that the mail takes two days each way, will result in a seven to ten day process. This will not be the case. The substituting of this new procedure for the cumbersome procedure of obtaining letters patent will help to speed up the time required to obtain a title to crown land. I hope it is the eventual intention of the minister, the government and parliament to go the whole way so that the minister will relinquish the entire responsibility for commencing the chain reaction which is necessary in order to obtain title to land.

Coincidentally, the annual report of the minister's department was delivered through the mail to hon. members today. If hon. members will examine that report they will see that the federal government is involved in the granting of agreements for sale, the granting of agricultural leases, the granting of grazing leases, the granting of title in fee simple, the granting of agreements to individuals who wish to obtain title to land eventually, and the imposition of certain requirements in these agreements. It involves itself in all the myriad administrative processes normally carried out at the provincial level. It would cost less, I submit, to go the whole way and would be in keeping with the kind of advancement in which the minister believes. While the minister has not yet admitted that he is in favour of this kind of advancement I am sure, as my friend the hon. member for Brandon-Souris said, that in his heart of hearts he believes in it. It is our hope that he will go the whole way eventually and transfer this administrative process, in which the federal government should not be involved, to the territorial level.

• (3:10 p.m.)

There is one last point I should like to make on the first clause of the bill. That is the question of the use of the term "notification." On page 2 of the bill the provision in clause 3 (3) reads as follows:

> The issue of a notification pursuant to subsection (1) has like force and effect as a grant of territorial land made by letters patent under the Great Seal of Canada.

On a closer examination of the bill I am now satisfied with respect to the legal implications which will flow from the use of the term "notification". I am satisfied it means the same thing as a grant and will have every effect of the legal use of that term as it has been interpreted over the years.

In strict compliance with the rules of relevancy, Mr. Chairman, these are the only remarks I wish to make on clause 1 of the bill. I should like to reply in detail and at greater length to some of the suggestions which have been made by the minister and by the member from British Columbia who belongs to the Social Credit party and whose riding escapes me for the moment. I shall reply later to his entirely untenable observations with respect to what I am sure are not the greedy land aspirations of the majority of the people of British Columbia. I am sure that the Vancouver based population at least would like to see more projects going forward in the more heavily populated areas of British Columbia before taking on the responsibility of an area that is almost twice as large as that province.

I should like to comment on some of the more constructive remarks made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. I am glad he took the position he did. However, another opportunity will present itself to deal with these matters. I understand we are to have a debate next week on constitutional reform. Perhaps that will provide a forum in which to discuss these questions or it may be that we can discuss them on the supplementary estimates.

However, Mr. Chairman, the minister can rest assured that this will not be the last time he will be hearing from this side of the house concerning these constitutional reforms which we believe to be essential. I am most sincere in this plea to the minister. We are putting them forward now not in the sense that I or those whom I represent in the Yukon wish to be critical at all but in the hope there will be that degree of enlightenment in this day and age that will permit a change of heart, a change of policy and a change of approach to these developing areas of Canada.

I cannot speak for the whole of the Northwest Territories because conditions are different in various areas. The hon. member for Northwest Territories performs very ably indeed the function of making recommendations on behalf of those whom he represents in his vast riding. I know that he and I are of the same belief in this regard. I put these observations forward, Mr. Chairman, with the intent of being entirely constructive and in the hope that the minister will react favourably, particularly when it comes to making recommendations in the white paper, to the growing requests made in all reasonableness by the people of the Yukon and which are just commencing to flow from the people in the Mackenzie district of the Northwest Territories.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, as one who held brief responsibility for the administration of the Territorial Lands Act I should like to make one or two remarks on this bill. I hope they will be helpful not only to the minister and the commissioners of the two territories but to the people in these areas. One of the responsibilities that bears most heavily on the minister, who has had the responsibility of initiating the transfer of crown lands into the hands of private individuals, is the protection of future generations in these territories and acting as trustee for them. In my experience, the amount of time I put in trying to make certain that there was no abuse of the right of future generations to access to the land of the territories was considerable. Yet I do not begrudge that time for the simple reason that until we have evolved a system of responsible government in the territories, under which these duties can be carried out with complete responsibility to the electors, this responsibility remains and does bear heavily on a minister.

The technique of speeding up the transfer of crown lands to the individual has been improved under this bill. I do not think there is any question about that. The problem that concerns me as a matter of conscience is the fact that there are in the territories two groups of people who have not the same protections that people have in the provinces. I am speaking about the Indians particularly and I suppose eventually the Eskimos. If my memory serves me correctly, there are no treaties which cover the Indians in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, or at least they were never promulgated. Therefore even on reservations the Indians do not have protection in these areas.

I have talked with the Indians in these areas. They still follow the traditional, cultural habit of moving into an area because the factor of transportation is their main concern and they squat, if you will, along a river, around a lake or some place where it is convenient to get from one area to another. Over a period of time they sometimes change the places in which they squat and settle in a village.

I recall a personal approach that I made to one group of Indians in regard to giving them title to their land in a particular area in order that they would be protected from any person coming in, asking for and getting a grant of land over which the Indians had prior squatters' rights. This is a matter you cannot deal with specifically in this legislation. The responsibility is a subjective one which falls on the minister or the commissioners, as clause 3 of the bill points out.

I ask the minister not only to consider this problem but to advise the commissioners that the persons who have the responsibility for signing the notifications should consider the problem of the Indians and see that in no case does the requirement for private property take over an area in which the squatters' rights of the Indians are paramount. Squatters' rights are an ancient part of the customs in undeveloped areas. I want to make certain that the minister will ensure that in no case will the officers of the commissioner or the minister's officers allow anybody to move into any area in which an interest is held by the Indians if that move is not legal. I do not know how this can be done legally but it is a matter which falls under the jurisdiction of the commissioner or the minister.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

• (3:20 p.m.)

The second point I wish to make is that I agree with those who have said that there is a strong desire on the part of the people in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to acquire more responsibility. Additional responsibility is not given to them in definite terms in the bill now before us except to the extent that we give to the commissioner the right to initiate these notifications under sections 4A to 11 of the Territorial Lands Act and under other sections we give to the minister and the deputy minister the right to officiate. I would feel much happier, as I am sure the minister and the people in these areas would, if the inhabitants of the territories had more say in that notification.

I have talked this matter over with the hon. member for Yukon and he told me that if we tried to amend the bill so as to give the local bodies some say in these notifications, it would interrupt the smoothness of the legal procedure. I bow to his superior knowledge of the area. However, I should like to put my fears and worries on public record that not only does the minister of the crown acting as trustee for these people now and in the future but also the commissioner have a responsibility to ensure that nothing is done counter to the wishes of the people in these territories. Therefore, even though I recognize that no amendment can be made workable I wish to put these views forward.

I strongly believe that regardless of the financial inability of the territories to govern themselves completely at this time, we must carry on the precedent we set by granting them the financial status which we have given them in the agreements and by encouraging them at every step to take on more responsibility. Eventually we will have to turn over to the local people jurisdiction over their mineral rights. I believe that the sooner we do it the better.

The final comment I wish to make has to do with the matter of riparian rights. The act makes it very clear that jurisdiction over these rights is held by the federal government. I am referring to the strips of crown land along the navigable rivers and lakes. I hope that no government and no administration at any level will allow to be repeated in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories the disgraceful practice with regard to land along the rivers and lakes in the settled parts of Canada.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister arising out of clause 1 which, as I understand from what was said during the second reading stage, has to do with the modification of the method of providing an instrument of title to lands in the territories. I wonder what the situation is. Does the basic position of the lands being held by the crown not alter the right in respect of lands lying within the boundaries of municipalities in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon? I believe that recently some communities have been incorporated. Will the new municipalities as corporate bodies acquire title to the lands lying within their boundaries, as has been the case in other parts of Canada where unsold municipal lands are one of the assets of the municipal level of government? It seemed to me this might be an appropriate point at which to ask for some clarification on this matter.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, may I say in reply to the hon. gentleman's question that I am informed that lands adjacent to or within municipalities such as Whitehorse and Yellowknife have been or will be totally transferred to the commissioner for control by his office.

While I am on my feet I should also like to comment on the representations made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in respect of our first citizens and tell him that there are two treaties, treaties Nos. 8 and 11, which extend into the Northwest Territories, principally around the southern extremity of Great Slave Lake and north from the Wood Buffalo park area in Alberta. Departmental officials are now in consultation with the Indians with regard to the means whereby the people of Canada can keep their undertaking to Indians.

In the case of the Yukon, as a result of our experience we have set aside certain lands to be occupied by the more or less migrant Indians to whom the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has referred. I will not defend the conditions under which some of these poor souls have been living, but I wish to assure my hon. friend that they are not getting worse but better, particularly in view of the investment which is being put into that area. I wish to pay a tribute to the investors, and I am referring now particularly to the Anvil Mining Company Limited which gave us an undertaking that when they commence operations in September or October of 1969, five per cent of the employees on their payroll will be native people. They undertook further that within five years after the commencement of their operation 25 per cent of their employees will be natives of the area. This places a great responsibility upon us, upon the Department of Manpower and Immigration and upon other departments of the government to ensure that by that time we can provide them with competent people to employ.

I can assure the hon. member that a great number of Indian people driving trucks and doing other work in plants are, according to the managers of these plants, as good and in some cases more efficient than other workers. The situation is improving, and I wish to thank the hon. member for having brought it to our attention.

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask the minister a question? Does he find any reluctance on the part of the Indians to take out land grants for homes in the area where they are working? Are they still using the squatting technique?

Mr. Laing: In the Yukon there has been very little tendency on the part of the Indians to live in areas where the white men have been living. I do not think this has been entirely the fault of the Indians. I know the area to which my hon. friend referred. He and I and all those who have had the responsibility of this department have been concerned about Indians on the outskirts of Whitehorse and various other settlements living around the corner and down the hill. I want to assure the hon. member that we have in mind these enclaves and we are making every possible effort to ensure that reasonable living opportunities are being afforded these people and that they are being adequately informed of opportunities for employment.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I believe that this custom on the part of Indians does not exist to such an extent in the Northwest Territories. I am quite certain that when my hon. friend was the minister he got the impression that every citizen in the Northwest Territories was a citizen of the Northwest Territories, regardless of his colour or where he came from. This is, of course, a product of a more recent development, it seems to me. We have none of that condition in the Northwest Territories that I can see.

Mr. Barnett: I was interested in the last points to which the minister referred covering the situation of the Indian people. However, I should like to return for a moment to a question I raised with the minister. I am not sure exactly what the relationship is between the commissioner of the territories and the municipal level of government. If there is an equivalent to the municipal act in the Northwest Territories, I have not perused it. If I understood the minister correctly, he said that jurisdiction over lands in municipalities was being transferred directly to the jurisdiction of the commissioner of the respective territory. The question I originally asked was, is it within the discretion of the commissioner then as to where and to what extent a municipality will acquire jurisdiction over property within its boundaries and possibly offer it for sale or engage in town planning as municipalities are becoming interested in doing?

Mr. Laing: The municipalities are incorporated under the territorial acts. I am informed that the commissioner has power to transfer his control of lands within the area of the municipality itself. I think there has been good satisfaction, generally speaking, in respect of this procedure within the incorporated areas in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. The difficulty is or has been in respect of crown lands.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni has raised a point which is another argument, as I am sure the minister is aware, as to why jurisdiction over disposal of lands should be transferred to the local level. We have a current situation within the municipality of Whitehorse which is a municipal corporation under an ordinance passed by the legislative body of that territory. The same situation prevails in the Northwest Territories. There is a group which wishes to establish a shopping centre in this municipality. The land upon which the intended development is to take place is crown land and therefore the federal government must give consideration, through departmental officials, to whether or not it is in the public interest to release this land for the municipal purpose of a shopping centre. This is a function in which the federal government should not be involved. A decision has been made now that this land is going to be transferred to the territorial government from the crown in the right of Canada to the crown in the right of the territory and then transferred to the municipality of Whitehorse. Then the municipality will make a decision as to its disposal.

Of even more seriousness—and I see the minister's officials before him—is what I sincerely hope is an oversight which has prevailed for many years. I refer to the fact that in the transference of these municipal lands for municipal development the streets and lanes have been overlooked. We have, therefore, a no-man's land here because the municipal councils of the territory exercise jurisdiction over lands that really do not belong to them. This is a current problem in the Yukon. I daresay if it has not already become a problem in the Northwest Territories it will. Perhaps the minister, after consultation with his officials, might inform the house whether there is going to be a serious, immediate review of this question of public streets and lanes within municipalities with a view to the immediate transfer of the land comprised in these streets and lanes to the respective municipalities.

There is one other point I want to leave with the minister and it involves section 73 of the Land Titles Act which stipulates:

> The title to the land mentioned in any certificate of title granted under this act is, by implication, and without any special mention in the certificate, unless the contrary is expressly declared, subject to...
> (c) any public highway or right of way or other public easement, however created, upon, over or in respect of the land;

Section 73(c) of the Land Titles Act relates also, which gives one an indication of the complexity of a so-called housekeeping amendment, to the Yukon Quartz Mining Act, section 126. This section reads:

> Nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the right of the proper authorities to lay out, from time to time, public roads across, through, along or under any ditch, mill-site, water right or mineral claim.

This legislation purports to reserve the right of the crown to unimpeded access to public roads, highways, streets and lanes in the Yukon. The minister must be aware of a very serious problem that is being created by the mushrooming growth of the mining industry in the Yukon. Under earlier provisions of the quartz mining regulations there were certain crown granted mineral claims. These now exist in the form of fee simple titles. These claims are scattered throughout the Yukon and a problem is going to arise in respect of access to current mineral developments unless the government now takes action to establish trails and roads which have existed for 50 to 60 years as public highways or public roads, thus giving unimpeded future right of access to mineral developments that are now taking place. Before these developments can take place there must be an assurance to an investor that the developer is going to have the right of access. If a developer is confronted at some time in the future with people erecting a gate or fence across trails that are crossing crown granted mineral claims or private land granted by way of certificate under the act, then you are going to stifle investment and consequently retard development. These two very serious problems exist in the Yukon. I am sure they will exist in the Northwest Territories if they do not now. There has to be immediate consideration given to the approval of streets and lanes within municipalities.

Even more serious is the problem of considering the right of access to mineral developments, regardless of where service roads must travel. I do not mean to suggest that a mineral developer is to be given a future right of access through the front room of an expensive home that has been erected on a piece of private land. I am thinking more particularly of crown granted mineral claims, lands that have been reserved for railways, lands that have been set aside for the use of the Indian people but not utilized by them or lands still set aside for the use of the old department of mines and resources. Some of these lands to which there is existing title are now being traversed by mineral developers who are gaining access to their site of operation. However, the whole question has to be clarified, and the minister's officials should ascertain the position of these access roads with a view to declaring that a public right of access does indeed exist.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Orange: Mr. Chairman, I have two small matters about which I should like the advice of the minister. As I mentioned earlier today, one of the basic problems in the past has been the incredible delays that occur in issuing title to land, either letters patent or leasehold. I am sure that in the course of my short experience in Ottawa as the member of parliament for Northwest Territories I have received as many complaints on this matter as I have on a number of others combined.

I understand that within the framework of the minister's department and as a result of the recent reorganization the lands administration section has been relocated. I should like to ask a question about this for two reasons. One is that prior to this change the administration itself was located in the section of the northern administration branch that was transferred to the territorial government, and I am wondering whether or not it still remains under the direction of the northern administration branch or has moved to the new resources group.

The second question on which I should like the advice of the minister concerns the definition of territorial lands. Are we still in the position where people who wish to take leaseholds of large areas for such pursuits as ranching or farming must come down through the administration to Ottawa, or are these lands now to come under the control of the commissioners for the Northwest Territories and the Yukon?

Two matters raised by other hon. members I think should be commented upon. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle made a very valid point, one that has concerned people in the north before. I refer to the use of land for government purposes. I think the system has changed substantially in the last several years. I understand that now, so far as lands that lie within the boundaries of municipalities under the control of the crown are concerned, the municipality determines the use the land is put to unless it is for crown purposes.

With regard to lands that lie outside the municipalities—and these comprise the vast majority of the communities in the Northwest Territories—community societies, local advisory councils and development councils are responsible for making recommendations to the senior administration with regard to the use of the land. I am thinking in terms of the sort of town planning that is under way in many northern communities. Between the time the town planning authority first consults with the local officials and the time the plan is approved, agreement is reached among the town planners, the government and the local advisory group on what use the land will be put to.

I think the situation is a little different in so far as the Indian and Eskimo people are concerned. In the case of the Indian people it has been the policy of the Indian affairs branch to acquire lands on behalf of bands of individuals in order that permanent housing may be built in some of these settlements.

However, I understand that the situation is a little different in regard to the Eskimo people. I am thinking of a situation that was brought to my attention within the last month in Tuktoyaktuk where a group made application to purchase lots in the community and made a payment of $5 as a sort of holding payment. About one year later the $5 was returned to the families concerned with the explanation that they could not purchase the land in question because it has not been surveyed and was not up for disposal. The individuals concerned already had their houses on the particular lots. I do not know whether or not leases had been issued, but I think this situation does raise the important philosophical and very practical question: What land rights do the Eskimo people have?

At the present time there is a rental housing program under way in the north intended to provide adequate housing for the Eskimo people. This program is in its second year. Within the next two years it will be completed and the total Eskimo population of the north should have adequate rental housing. These people will be paying rents according to their ability to earn and the size of their families. However, Mr. Chairman, I understand that unless these people wish to purchase these homes—and believe me, Mr. Chairman, it would not necessarily be economic for them to do so in view of the price of oil and utilities in the north—they will never be able to acquire land in their own right.

That is one part of the question. The second part relates to the policy of the department. As I understand it, at the moment lands can be leased for long periods, if necessary, but not purchased unless a survey is undertaken. Many cases have been brought to my attention of people wanting to go ahead and build their own homes and become permanent residents in a community, but they are unable to raise the necessary financing because of the problems of surveying and leaseholding. I hope the minister will be able to comment on the various points I have raised.

This morning I raised the problem of disposal of lands in the north, about which there seems to be some confusion in the minds of many people there. The bill before us today is intended, I firmly believe, to remove a lot of the doubt and confusion. I cannot help but smile to myself when I hear others condemn this government for a lack of activity during the last five years. This period has been the greatest five years in the history of the north. We may have had the opportunity to correct some problems but somehow or other did not get around to it. With those few remarks I hope the minister will be good enough to answer some of the questions I have raised.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, may I thank the hon. member for Northwest Territories for his intervention. In asking his questions he has given me an opportunity to learn something myself. The departmental change to which he referred eventuated as a result of the establishment of our resource group which today I believe comprises as competent a group as we have in government. We are proposing to turn over to the resource group the responsibility for the lands here.

The hon. member asked for the definition of territorial lands, which I believe is contained in the bill. I think the hon. member was thinking of large properties such as the one he mentioned along the Slave river, which might be used for agricultural purposes. Such properties might contain several thousand acres of land. He was wondering, since agriculture is a territorial responsibility, whether an application for such land would have to be made to the territorial government.

Soon after a settler settles on a piece of land, he wants to be accommodated with roads and other forms of transport, and that brings the matter back to us. Then we should have to have discussions with the territorial government. Where it is a matter of opening up brand new territory which is large in extent, and of providing for transportation, my answer to the hon. member is that we should need to have conversations with the territorial government.

In the case of the Eskimo people at Tuktoyaktuk and elsewhere, I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that our main difficulty in the northern territories is to get surveyors in when we want them. This problem applies to a lesser extent to the Yukon territory or to that part of the territory which has a reasonable population. I might say that quite suddenly these days we are attracting a great number of engineering firms to and around the main population centres of the Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: They travel all over the territory now.

Mr. Laing: In the Northwest Territories it is much more difficult to bring a group of engineers in for a specific job which might involve only three or four surveys. That can be pretty costly. As a result we are leasing land for 30 years. The leases are conditional, and depend on surveys, but they do enable people to obtain mortgage money. Lands can be occupied and their exact description confirmed by survey. I think that covers most of the questions which the hon. member asked. I thank him for his intervention.

Mr. Nielsen: Could the minister elaborate on the problem which concerns public streets and highways, both within municipalities and without. Could he also elaborate on the aspect of mineral developers?

Mr. Laing: I have an idea that streets and sidewalks were probably retained under federal crown authority for the influence that that might have on planning within the area. Since the towns have grown to a large extent I would think that this arrangement, as a protection to the government, has outgrown its usefulness and we shall also look at that aspect of the matter.

Mr. Nielsen: What about the mineral developers and their future rights of access?

Mr. Laing: The hon. member for Qu'Appelle warned me that in the case of lands or Indians, Indians must come first. The hon. member for Yukon says that in the case of Indian lands which are not being used by Indians, the mines must come first. I shall try to steer a middle course and help both hon. members. I am fully aware of our responsibilities to the Indian people, as is the hon. member for Yukon. Probably we are talking about two different types of land. In any event we shall try to see that access is provided for mining companies.

The hon. member knows the encouragements we have given the mining industry in recent years. We build them roads and pay them 40 per cent of their hunting costs—and it is good hunting ground, I can tell you. If they want an airstrip, we pay for half of that. These are all things we are doing to encourage the investment, which has been going on in the area, and these policies are being followed not only in the interest of the parties who are directly concerned but in the interest of Canadian development as a whole.

Mr. Nielsen: I could not agree more with what the minister said about policies, but no doubt he will agree with me that these are policies which have been continued by the government. They existed before this government came to power.

I do not want to be misconstrued about this business of putting mines before the Indian people. It is not that, at all. We have here an access problem, a problem involving access over crown grants of land. Not only is the department custodian of Indian lands, but there are also crown grants to private individuals and crown grants of mineral lands. That is the problem.

The problem involves the survey rights and access across the entire spectrum of and private lands. There is an impelling urgency, because of the rapidly accelerating development going on, to give mineral developers the assurance that they will have future rights of access; otherwise the investment potential just will not be there, especially if investors feel that they will be confronted with land problems.

As the minister knows, some of these mineral developments are away in the hinterland. In some cases roads are constructed entirely by the mining companies and must extend 70, 80 or 90 miles. In so doing they encroach on the surface rights of various classifications of land. I point out that section 73 of the Land Titles Act and section 126 of the Yukon Quartz Mining Act gives the minister power to make a declaration that the government assures the mineral developers that they will have future rights of access. That is what I am trying to get the minister to say this afternoon, that he will exercise the discretion that is available to the crown in right of Canada, in respect to this and other relevent sections of federal legislation. I should like to hear the minister give that kind of assurance which is necessary at this time, if developments are not to be retarded.

Mr. Laing: I am told that we can give the kind of assurance that says that we shall look into the matter. There are certain instances where surface rights preclude the interests of a mining company from being developed. Nevertheless if it is advantageous for the economy to let a certain mine go into an area, of course we are interested and will look into the matter.

On clause 3—Issue of Notification

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder if the minister can inform me when the government will appoint a registrar of land titles for the Yukon territory?

Mr. Laing: The answer is, almost at once. We expect to incorporate in his office the administration of other resources also. This is because these relate to one another, and a person is sometimes qualified to undertake both.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister say whether the appointee will be a professional lawyer, a barrister or a solicitor? I am sure the minister is aware of the complexities of the laws surrounding the disposal of lands and mineral rights in the Yukon. I think the appointment of a professional person would be a great advantage.

Mr. Laing: I am sure the hon. member will agree that in the Yukon we have some of the finest public servants anywhere in Canada. I can assure him that when the organization is set up we propose to run as efficient a ship as we have in the past, even more so, with wider powers, covering all of the arts, including the law.

Mr. Nielsen: Again, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend any criticism. Once more the minister has taken me wrongly. He knows that until recently the post of registrar of land titles in the Yukon was held by a lawyer in the employ of the government of Canada. The succession of lawyers who occupied that post did excellent jobs. I hope the minister can tell us he will follow the policy of appointing professional people with specialized knowledge of the administrative problems involved. Can he go so far as to say that the appointment which is to be made almost immediately will be of a person of professional standing?

Mr. Laing: This is certainly our intention. The hon. member has used the words "professional standing." It will be necessary to pay a great deal of attention to this appointment because I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that the future of the Yukon is metal and mining.

Mr. Nielsen: For a moment, Mr. Chairman, I thought the minister said mental.

Mr. Laing: We will certainly give our earnest attention to the calibre of the people with whom the office is to be filled.

Mr. Orange: As I understand this legislation, responsibility for the registration of land titles will be turned over to the commissioners of the two territories. Will the individuals to be appointed be federal civil servants or will they be hired by the territorial governments? If they are to be hired by the federal authority and are federal civil servants, what will be the relationship between the commissioners and these federal employees?

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5.

Mr. Orange: A matter which has been of great concern to people who live in the smaller communities of the north has been the land grants made available in the past to missions, and bodies such as the R.C.M.P. Believe it or not there is a lack of building space in the north, particularly in the centre of towns where land grants were made to such agencies many years ago. Many of the land grants are not being fully utilized by these agencies. Does the minister have any plan to work out arrangements with the Hudson's Bay Company, various missions, the R.C.M.P. and branches of his own department whereby they might release some of their lands for building purposes?

The time has come when we should take a look at large tracts of land held by missions or agencies which are not using them fully. As settlements grow and people move to them they are being forced to build on the fringes of those settlements because of lack of space in the centre. I hope the minister will make some comment on this matter.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I tend to agree with the hon. member. In both territories, but probably more so in the Yukon than in the Northwest Territories, there are grants covering very large properties, dating back to wartime. These are serviced lots and I think a thorough study is necessary of the requirements of the department. I have an idea that this work could probably be done as well by the commissioners as by anybody else.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6, 7 and 8 agreed to.

On clause 9.

Mr. Nielsen: May I point out to the minister that there may have been a mistake in the drafting of this clause. Clause 9(2) sets forth that paragraph (c) of section 2 of the Public Lands Grants Act is repealed "and the following substituted therefor." But that which follows sets forth not only new paragraph (c) but also paragraph (d). I have compared this paragraph (d) with the paragraph (d) already in the Public Lands Grants Act and there is no change in it. Perhaps an amendment would be in order, emanating from the minister, to delete paragraph (d) of subclause (2) in this bill.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Mr. Laing: Mr. Chairman, I hope my legal friend is not being unfair to the farmer's boy. I am informed that the object here is to keep the definitions in alphabetical order. This easy definition may mean something to the hon. member. I hope it does. If not he may have to ask another question.

Mr. Nielsen: I see what the intention is. I think this is a long way of going about it. Parliament is not relettering a subsection which becomes (d) but is re-enacting the whole subsection. This seems to be a rather cumbersome way to do it. I am sure parliament does not intend to do things in this way.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LETTING OF CONTRACTS

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-28, to amend the Defence Production Act.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the minister to make a statement in respect of this bill?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be helpful if I were to make a short statement. I should begin by pointing out that this is a bill which has been considered at some length and approved by the Senate. It is a simple bill of a housekeeping and unexciting nature. The purpose is to achieve a more efficient way of doing government business than is possible under the present act. This bill arises from the recommendations made by the Glassco commission. Members of the house will recall that the royal commission under Mr. Glassco discovered that the paperwork involved in the letting of government contracts was unnecessarily detailed and recommended that there be a substantial further delegation of the authority to enter into contracts.

The result of this was that in respect of government contracts, not otherwise governed by statute, and entered into under authority of the government's contract regulations, the Treasury Board would delegate the authority for entering into contracts to departments on a much larger scale than had been the case hitherto. However, contracts entered into by the Department of Defence Production on behalf of the Department of National Defence are entered into under the authority of the Defence Production Act. The Defence Production Act as presently written in section 17, subsection (1), paragraphs (d) and (e), provides a limitation on the authority of the minister to enter into contracts without government approval of the governor in council in the amount of $25,000 in cases where no tenders are called, or where there is only one tenderer, and in the amount of $50,000 where there is more than one tender and where the contract is awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Under the government contract regulations evolved as a consequence of the recommendation of the Glassco commission, the authority of departments to enter into contracts without the further authority of the Treasury Board, but with a provision for reporting on such contracts entered into, is limited to contracts in the amount of $250,000 where there have been no tenders or where there is only one tenderer, and $500,000 where there is more than one tender and where the lowest tender has been accepted and a contract has resulted therefrom. There is an obligation periodically to report such contracts to the Treasury Board. The result of this has been that the Department of Defence Production, which has been progressively taking over the purchasing responsibilities of civil departments, and will be taking over the procurement work for all government departments, both civil and military, finds that where procurement is undertaken on behalf of civil departments the arrangements for contracting are carried out within the limitation laid down by the Treasury Board now, namely $250,000 and $500,000.

Where contracts are entered into for the Department of National Defence in respect of defence contracts there is a limitation of $25,000 and $50,000 which involves as a consequence not only disparate procedures but a vast amount of what I think the Glassco commission recognizes to be unnecessary paperwork. The purpose of this amendment is to alter the Defence Production Act in such a way that the procurement for defence purposes under this act will be subject to the same rules and regulations as procurement for civil departments, through the delegated authority from the Treasury Board.

I should point out that in addition to making the limits correspond this also removes a provision in the present act which authorizes the minister to enter into a contract without Treasury Board authority in any amount at all, provided that in his opinion the contract must be entered into immediately in the interests of defence. This was perhaps a wise provision at one time, but it does seem that perhaps it gives the minister unlimited authority which is not required. This particular authority is being removed by means of the amendment to the act which is now before the house.

In the interests of rationalizing and simplyifying the procurement I would commend this amendment for the favourable approval of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Hales) intended to say a few words at this time. May I say that those of us who have been here for some years remember the defence production debate of 1955, which went on for so many weeks and days and had so much to do with the downfall of a government at that time. However, this amendment, as the minister has pointed out, is more or less a case of housekeeping. It was suggested by the Glassco commission and is one in respect of which this party gives its complete approval. We have no objection to the passing of this piece of legislation.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister could answer a question which probably arises from a confusion in my own mind, rather than in his explanatory statement on the motion for second reading. Is the housekeeping effect of this bill the removal of the ceilings from $25,000 and $50,000 without tender to $250,000 and $500,000?

Mr. Drury: That is correct in so far as procurements for the Department of National Defence are concerned. As I tried to explain, the Department of Defence Production acts as purchasing agent on behalf of civil departments, such as the Department of Agriculture. We have now been instructed by the Treasury Board to operate within limits of $250,000 and $500,000 as recommended by Mr. Glassco. For the past two years we have been doing this in respect of procurements for civil departments.

In so far as procurements for the Department of National Defence are concerned, these are governed by the Defence Production Act and not by government contract regulations. The purpose of this amendment is to bring the practices and procedures for procurement for the Department of National Defence into line with what has and is continuing to be done in respect of procurement for other civil departments.

[Mr. Drury.]

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you. In other words, where there are no tenders the ceilings will be $250,000 or $500,000?

Mr. Drury: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Barnett: In his remarks at the second reading stage the minister made reference to increasing emphasis and expanded activity of the department in the field of procurement for civil departments. I am wondering why the minister when bringing in this bill to amend the act did not bring in an amendment which would change the name to something more indicative of the role the department is playing. There is a little confusion in my mind, as well as in the minds of people throughout the country, about this business of the Department of Defence Production being involved in the procurement of things for other activities of the federal government. Can the minister tell us why he did not take advantage of this opportunity to bring about a change in name?

Mr. Drury: There may be some confusion in the minds of the public as well as in that of the hon. member. It is our intention to set up efficient purchasing arrangements for all government departments, including the Department of Defence Production. This is being evolved progressively, and I hope on an orderly basis. When we have a little more experience and know precisely what is needed, a rather more comprehensive bill should be brought forward to incorporate in a single statute those authorities which are now obtained largely through the authority of the Transfer of Duties Act. At that time perhaps the bill will also change the name of the department to one more appropriate than the Department of Defence Production. Perhaps a year hence or thereabouts, would be the right time to do this. As we are not yet prepared to advertise that we are fully in this business, it would be a little premature the change the name now.

Mr. Barnett: The minister is running sort of a department store that has not yet reached the position which would justify an official name. Perhaps the minister could give us some explanation as to the manner in which regional agencies act in respect of procurements, for example, in the province of British Columbia there are times when people are confused as to whether they should approach authorities in Ottawa or Vancouver for information about contracts, eligibility to tender and that sort of thing. Could the minister take advantage of this opportunity to enlighten us, and through us some of the people, as to what the present situation is in respect of regional management in this area of the operations of the Department of Defence Production?

Mr. Drury: I hope to be able to reassure the hon. member that in so far as interested people in British Columbia are concerned, they should be able to obtain answers to all these questions from the regional representative in Vancouver. Inquiries seeking information should not be referred by him to Ottawa.

When deciding which procurement should be undertaken locally and which should be undertaken on a national basis we apply the principle that we should follow the procedure which will obtain the best value for the taxpayer's dollar. One has to offset administrative expense in regard to the calling of national tenders for relatively small orders, to satisfy purely local demands, against the slightly higher cost. To take an extreme example, the cost of obtaining a dozen pencils for a local administrative unit in Vancouver would not warrant setting into operation the national tendering apparatus. By the same token one could readily assume that the taxpayer would not get the best possible value for his dollar if tenders for a ship required in Vancouver were called for by the regional office in Vancouver and limited to the province of British Columbia. In the broad general sense the test is related to procurement on the basis of the best value for the taxpayer's dollar. I suppose one could really generalize fairly safely, although all generalizations are supposed to be dangerous, by suggesting that procurement is undertaken by regional offices to satisfy local demands; that is, the demands of administrative units for which they are responsible and for which there exists within their region sufficient competence and interest to ensure that there will be real price competition, and consequently value obtained for their money.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the minister mentioned pencils. This brings to mind another question, as to whether or not the department is engaged in what might be described as the operation of regional warehouses in which there are held such items as pencils, stationery supplies, and so on, from which offices in the regional area requisition their requirements for such items. Is this activity being developed in centres like Vancouver, shall we say, where there are quite a large number of federal departments in operation at the regional level?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, this is an activity which is in the process of being put in place. This is one of the things we have not yet accomplished to the point where we would want to change the name of the department, which implies the ability to operate effectively under such a régime. We are now endeavouring to consolidate and forecast demands for all the departments and buy on a consolidated basis, which tends to reduce quite considerably the unit price. We are now endeavouring to have these items contracted for on a large scale, delivered in large quantities and held for distribution and use in regional warehousing centres, as the hon. member suggests. An administrative unit of the government calling for these items of normal use will merely provide a requisition and will be able to get them off the shelf, rather than our having to enter into a separate, individual purchasing arrangement in respect of each item as it arises.

I have one example here of what this program has been able to achieve in the way of savings on one rather prosaic item, namely typewriters. By adopting the system I have outlined, that of consolidating demands, purchasing under a single contract and holding and issuing as required instead of operating under separate purchase contracts, we have in the last 12 month-period been able to save about $94,500 in respect of the year's acquisition of typewriters. I think hon. members will agree that this is a significant and useful system and that we should continue to proceed along these lines.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether this program has anything to do with the purchase of drugs.

Mr. Drury: The Department of Defence Production does purchase the pharmaceutical needs—I presume that by "drugs" the hon. member has in mind pharmaceuticals—of most government departments, the most important of which, of course, are the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, if it is appropriate, I should like to ask the minister what the experience has been up to this point with regard to the purchase of generic drugs as opposed to brand name drugs? What practice does the department follow in this regard?

Mr. Drury: In respect of pharmaceuticals, where we can we purchase by specification rather than brand name. This has the effect, of course, of producing competition between the purveyors of a given specification under a brand name and the manufacturers of the same specification not carrying a brand name, or so-called generic drugs. It as been our experience that in cases—and this is almost universal—where the prescribing physicians are prepared to accept the specification, the result is a significant saving of money. There are of course cases—and responsibility for this must reside ultimately with the prescribing physician—where for professional, clinical reasons a general specification is not regarded as satisfactory and a brand name, which is another way of calling up a special specification, is called for. In those instances one has no choice but to acquire under the brand name.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Chairman, I apologize for using the word "drugs"; "pharmaceuticals" is certainly a preferable term. I should like to ask the minister two questions. Are these pharmaceuticals sold to the department by tender from various companies under their generic names and, second, has the experience of the department been that doctors will prescribe the generic drug by generic name as readily as they will a brand name? Is this found to be just as effective as far as purchases by the department are concerned?

Mr. Drury: We do call for tenders by specification, which is neither brand name nor generic name. It is a specification without, in a sense, the name at all. Our experience generally has been that the medical practitioners in the government service using these drugs have been satisfied to prescribe the specification. I tried to explain that there have been some instances where special circumstances, in the view of the medical practitioner, demand the special qualities or what in his view are the special qualities, of a brand name pharmaceutical.

Where this arises we, as a service department, buy what is asked for. We do not try to tell him what he should use. It is our job to acquire what the user wants under the best possible circumstances from the taxpayers' point of view. But with regard to pharmaceuticals it is the doctor who says what is needed. It is not our job to tell him what he should use.

In so far as the experience of medical practitioners is concerned and whether the pharmaceutical purchased has been satisfactory or not, I would really hesitate to express an opinion. I do not know. The question should perhaps better be directed to medical practitioners. I do know that in the past two years this has been our experience in buying pharmaceuticals, that is, that we purchase according to specification. These pharmaceuticals have been bought, delivered and used in very large quantities indeed, and I suppose one might assume from the fact of their acceptance and consumption that they have produced reasonably satisfactory results.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I understand that under the Financial Administration Act the minister has absolute power and discretion in respect of contracts up to $250,000, but with regard to contracts of $500,000 he has to receive competitive tenders and the lowest tender is accepted.

• (4:40 p.m.)

My question is whether these tenders are open to the public and whether a report is made of the number of people who tender, the number of tenderers who do not get them, and the reasons why certain people are not allowed to participate in these jobs.

Mr. Drury: The object of the tendering system is to endeavour to obtain for the purchaser the best possible price arrangement, and unless the tendering system succeeds in doing this, much time and effort is wasted and it becomes an inefficient and costly procedure. To achieve the most effective price competition, and consequently the most advantageous prices, it is necessary to have the prospective sellers believe that the system which is being proposed is a satisfactory and fair one. After some years of experience we have evolved the practice of not disclosing the results of these tenders in an organized way, but making available to anyone interested the publishable information, that is the price, and the name and address of the tenderers if this is desired.

The private opening of tenders by officials of the department is subject to a procedure which is understood and agreed to by the manufacturing industry in general. They have sufficient confidence in the department, and no sense of unfairness is experienced by them. I should mention one general exception, and that is in respect of construction contracts. The construction industry has asked that tenders on construction contracts should be subject to public opening, and this is being done. We would be prepared to have a public opening of tenders in respect of any group of commodities or any industrial operation if the consensus within that industry was in favour of it. Public opening imposes a cost on the tenderers in that one of their representatives must attend this opening and this costs money. Our experience has been that most manufacturers would sooner leave it all to us rather than incur the expense of having a witness attend the opening.

There has been one other exception, a fairly recent one, when the Shipbuilding and Ship Repairing Association asked for a public opening of the tenders for the four D.D.H. naval vessels. As I have indicated, in any instance where the tenderers ask for a public opening, we are only too willing to accede to their request. In the case I mentioned, there was a public opening. Whether or not the shipbuilding industry as a whole will want public openings, I do not know.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, there is just one question which I should like to ask the minister. It came to my mind as a result of his reference to the construction industry. I believe it was the policy in the past when calling for tenders in the construction industry to set forth in the specifications what is generally known as the prevailing wage rate in the area. To the best of my knowledge the prevailing rate was the trade union rate in that area. I should like to ask the minister whether or not this is the present generally accepted policy, and if so why it is that in the recent calling for tenders, of which I have personal knowledge, the prevailing rate in the specifications was sometimes as much as $2 an hour lower than the prevailing trade union rate.

I have also noted that in some instances the rate in the specifications, which was supposed to be the prevailing rate, was almost identical to the rate in a tender which was called in almost the same area four years ago. I am certain that the minister knows there has been a considerable change in the rate of wages and fringe benefits in the last four years, and yet I have recently noted the two instances which I have mentioned. I think this is distinctly unfair, and I believe not in accordance with what we were given to understand, at least in the past, was the policy of the government in the mapping out of the specifications and calling of tenders, especially in the construction contracts.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the hon. gentleman, who is clearly speaking from detailed knowledge of a specific contract, whether this was a contract awarded by the Department of Defence Production or by some other department.

Mr. Winch: By some other department, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Drury: He will understand then that I would be hesitant about offering comments on the administrative practices of other departments.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the minister a further brief question? What is the policy on contracts which come under the minister's department?

Mr. Drury: In so far as we are concerned, the prevailing rates are established by a body which reports to the Treasury Board. These rates are established by that body as a result of surveys carried out in various regions in Canada. This body, on behalf of the Treasury Board, establishes for the various trades and classifications what are said to be prevailing rates. Whether these are the present union rates, a particular union rate, an amalgam of union and non-union rates, high, low or average, a portion or a quartle of the prevailing rates, I do not know.

If it interests the hon. gentleman, I would be glad to have inquiries made at the Treasury Board and to advise him accordingly. The determination of prevailing rates, however, is not a function of the Department of Defence Production. We merely use the information we receive. The official prevailing rates for government are determined by the Treasury Board.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Winch: I should not like the minister to have to go to the trouble of getting the rates all across Canada. Perhaps he could assist me by sending me the presently accepted prevailing rates in the construction industry in the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

Mr. Drury: I would be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman. I regret that the hon. member for Wellington South is not here because yesterday I discussed with him an answer to one of his questions directed to the Department of Defence Production. I have ascertained, and have so advised him, that information obtained subsequent to the preparation of the answer in respect of the contract about which he inquired makes the answer as given no longer valid. I should like, therefore, if I may to make a change in Hansard to the reply to question No. 628, asked by the hon. member for Wellington South. The answer given to part 5, now reads "in Canada". The answer to part 5 would now read—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. The minister's request for a change will have to be made when the Speaker is in the chair.

Mr. Drury: I stand corrected.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to ask three more questions which the minister may be able to answer to help clarify this bill. Will he tell me when the civil procurement procedure was changed to bring it to the $250,000 and the $500,000 that was mentioned? Second, what was the recommendation by the Glassco Commission in connection with changing defence procurement? Was the change to bring it directly in line with civil procurement or did the commission suggest certain figures? Third, is it possible to say what percentage of government procurement is now handled by the minister's department in relation to civil procurement? Perhaps the first answer might help me in trying to rationalize the change, but is there a material change in procurement in the sense that civil procurement is half or three quarters of the government procurement, or what is it? This is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. Drury: In respect of civil procurement, the change which authorized the department to undertake this work was made on March 18, 1965, not quite two years ago.

In so far as the relationship between the department and the civil field, it is now running on behalf of civilian departments at the rate of $8 million a year. This represents roughly 40 per cent of the total civil procurement. We are half way to doing the total. The figure for procurement on behalf of national defence per year is considerably higher than that. I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman wants that information publicly now or whether I can give it to him privately later.

Mr. Nowlan: I thank the minister, because this was part of my concern. While this is a housekeeping change, I think the minister would agree with me that the change is going to involve many more millions of dollars than any other change in civil procurement regulations, is that correct?

Mr. Drury: As things stand now, this is correct.

Mr. Nowlan: As I understand it, before the change in civilian procurement, the Treasury Board authorization was $25,000 and $50,000. What was the reason the Glassco commission suggested the increase?

Mr. Drury: It was increased because the commission, I think quite rightly, reached the conclusion that it was unnecessary, undesirable and inefficient to engage competent staff for procurement in a department such as defence production to buy intelligently, subject to all the normal checks and subject to audit by the Auditor General, and have those transactions reviewed by the staff of the Treasury Board. I think the test as to how much delegation one can engage in is a measure of the responsibility which one feels can be entrusted to others. The view of the Glassco commission, which I must say I would heartily endorse, was that competent, trustworthy people were not being trusted to make full use of their talents by placing responsibility in the Treasury Board rather than in the department itself. This was a waste of time and effort on the part of the treasury staff and is also an encouragement to irresponsibility in the department in that they are not answerable for their mistakes.

Mr. Nowlan: Can the minister advise what the limits are, say in the province of Ontario, for tendering for civil procurement?

Mr. Drury: I cannot answer that. I do not know what the practices are in any of the provincial governments.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I wonder if the minister could tell us what departments of government defence production buys for now?

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Chairman. They are public printing and stationery, public works, excluding some specialized services; manpower and immigration; Royal Canadian Mounted Police in respect of vehicles; national health and welfare, prosthetic services—I am sorry, national health and welfare is not limited to prosthetic services—Department of Veterans Affairs; Department of Trade and Commerce; Department of Fisheries; Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development; Department of National Revenue and the Department of Industry.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

Some hon. Members: By leave.

AGRICULTURE

PURCHASE OF BRUCELLOSIS HIP TAGS

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a short time ago when the house was in committee I believe the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Drury) wanted to say something by way of a correction to a question. It seems to me that if the minister would like to do this there might be a disposition to revert to motions so that he could give the answer that he was not able to give in committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If it is the wish of the minister to do this I will ask the house for unanimous consent to revert to motions.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the house for its indulgence.

I should like to make a correction in Hansard in respect to the answer given to question No. 628 asked by the hon. member for Wellington South. In light of the remarks I made earlier I wish to change the answer to part 5 of the question to: "in the United States".

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could indicate the business that we propose to submit to the house for its consideration on Monday. We propose to submit item No. 51 on today's order paper, a bill to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act; then item 55, a bill to amend the Income Tax Act; item 57, a bill to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act; and then item No. 43, resuming debate on the second reading of the bill to amend the Publication of Statutes Act.

I should add that consideration is being given to setting aside Thursday, February 15, for a debate on constitutional matters, but I am not able to make a statement on that in absolute form at the moment. Nevertheless I give that indication, and there will be further conferences on this point with the leaders of the other parties early next week.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether by his remarks the minister is limiting the debate to one day, or is that open to consultation next week with the leaders of the other parties?

Mr. McIlraith: My understanding is that the proposal was to limit it to one full day. Perhaps it could be raised with the house leaders next week.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Could the minister tell the house which item of business will be before us when this matter is being discussed?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the form in which it will be presented at the moment.

Mr. Knowles: It will probably be a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills and private bills.

OATHS OF ALLEGIANCE ACT

PROVISION FOR AFFIRMATION—ENLARGEMENT OF PLEDGE

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-24, to amend the Oaths of Allegiance Act (affirmation).

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to delay the house very long over this bill; I am sure it can be passed very quickly. This bill is only common sense, as I will try to point out, and it will be well understood why there has been great need for it for some time.

In September 1964 a Dutch couple were refused Canadian citizenship because they would not take an oath stating "so help me God". To this wording there is no alternative, even within the Bill of Rights. According to the Bill of Rights freedom of religion does not allow freedom of no religion. Second, the Bill of Rights was not applicable to this couple because they were not Canadian citizens.

The main purpose of this bill is to declare the rights of Canadians and those who want to become Canadians to freedom of conscience in pledging allegiance by providing that any person in Canada may affirm his allegiance as well as swear to it. A second purpose is to enlarge the pledge specifically to include Canada as well as sovereign. A third purpose is to validate oaths that have been taken in the past, as well as those that may be taken in the future, by persons without religious belief. A fourth purpose is to validate affirmations of allegiance that may have been administered in the past where, by law, an oath of allegiance should have been administered. And finally, this bill would bring the Oaths of Allegiance Act into conformity with the Royal Style and Titles Act, 1952-53 acts, Chapter 9.

In support of this bill I should like to say that, aside from atheists and agnostics, any other people who believe in other than Christianity of Judaism could not in all honesty take the oath as it now stands. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask whether we really have freedom of religion in this country. I should like to quote Dr. J. R. Hord of the United Church, who said, at the time this subject received much publicity in the press:

> Canadians boast of their freedom. We are not free to believe in God if we are not free to disbelieve.

Shortly after this, Mr. Speaker, I received a document from the Baptist convention of Ontario and Quebec. This document was a brief, part of which dealt with freedom of and freedom from religion. On this subject it had this to say:

> Because the law of Canada, as interpreted by district and provincial courts in Ontario in the case of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Bergsma, seem to bar from Canadian citizenship persons who do not believe in God and are thereby unable to take the required oath, and
>
> Because Baptists have traditionally opposed any religious test as prerequisite to the enjoyment of civil liberties—either political or economic, and
>
> Because this law deprives a prospective citizen of liberties enjoyed by native Canadians,
>
> WE—although we believe that faith in God is essential to a full and complete life—
>
> Therefore
>
> (a) commend Mr. and Mrs. Bergsma for their honesty in refusing to invoke the name of a deity in which they do not believe,
>
> (b) express our appreciation to the government of Canada for its offer to pay the expenses of testing this law in the case before the Supreme Court of Canada,
>
> [Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]
> (c) request that, in the event that the Supreme Court sustains the ruling of the lower courts, the Canadian parliament should, without delay, remove from our statutes every last vestige of any religious test as prerequisite to the full enjoyment of the civil liberties of native, naturalized and prospective Canadians.

This, Mr. Speaker, is simply one aspect of the bill that I am presenting. Another, possibly more interesting aspect is that at the present time members of parliament are sworn in by an oath of allegiance that is known as the fifth schedule to the British North America Act. It is worded as follows:

> I, A.B. do swear, that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria.

The reference to Queen Victoria gives hon. members an idea how old is this provision and how much it needs to be changed to bring it up to date.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The interesting part is that the British North America Act is a British act, and therefore is in English. At present French speaking members of parliament are sworn in by taking a French oath. Since there is no official translation of the B.N.A. Act their oath or acclamation in French is not valid. This bill to amend the B.N.A. Act provides that members of parliament may swear their oath of allegiance with the words "So help me God". Or, they may affirm. Also, since this bill would become a Canadian act, we could have an official French version of the oath in the French language.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to speak to Bill C-24, which is to amend the Oaths of Allegiance Act. The question before us raises further interesting questions, some of them legal, some religious. While I have little familiarity with the legal aspects of Canadian life I do claim to have some familiarity with the religious aspects.

The very question which is considered in this bill, the question of an oath, is somewhat anachronistic, since the roots of this question are buried in the past of our society and in the past of other societies which are much older than ours.

In the past, swearing an oath was taken very seriously. When you gave a man your blessing, and this was taken very seriously, the recipient of the blessing knew that you intended only good things, only pleasant things to happen to him. On the other hand, when a man was cursed, everyone knew that the curse was intended to inflict an undoubted tragedy on the recipient in the unforeseen future. Men took seriously what they said on their honour and what they said under oath.

These days we do not believe nearly so much that the taking of an oath involves the forging of a bond, in some supernatural manner, with a supernatural being. In earlier days people believed something like that. In days gone by people believed in a very real sense that when they swore an oath the divinity was involved. The idea that the divinity is involved is retained in our modern concepts of oath taking, though to a somewhat lesser extent. For instance, in the past when a man swore to uphold his rights as a citizen he was, in a very real sense, expressing his veneration and affiliation with the divinity.

In earlier societies a man's right to citizenship was related to his religious beliefs and development. If a man had reached that stage in life where he felt that he should be accepted as a citizen of a country, he was quite willing to express his belief in and affirm his respect for God.

As the first speaker and introducer of the bill said, our society has moved away from its earlier concepts. Today we believe that for a man to have freedom of religion he must also be free to have no religion. He must be able to say that he does not believe in God. It has been said by many theologians that if man has free will, he has the concomitant freedom to deny the existence of God. As a result the question before us this afternoon entails an accurate reflection of our present society and also a refinement of theological understanding.

Though in an earlier age a man knew what you were talking about when you talked of God, today, when a group of people get together and discuss God, it is difficult for us to know what they mean. Not only in Christianity but in many other religions there is discussion, controversy and confusion, not so much about whether, as one theologian said, "God is," but as to what form He takes. The question becomes very complex and in our search for God we tend to distinguish between God and the state.

This afternoon I wish to talk about the clearcut distinction between man's religious rights and convictions and his allegiance to the state. We have opted for a society which understands the value of an independent church, a church that can reflect on and be the conscience of man and the state. I think it is a mark of maturity in our society that we can distinguish between a man's religious convictions and his convictions as a citizen. As our Lord himself said in an earlier age, we must render unto God that which is God's and unto Caesar those things which are Caesar's. To the detriment of our society do we lump God and the state together.

Having taken this short diversion into theology I wish to return to the substance of the bill that is before us. It raises some interesting questions about the quality of citizenship in our country today. For instance, we all know that when a person decides to come to this country, decides to become a resident of Canada and a citizen of Canada, he must meet a considerable number of conditions. There is a waiting period of about five years; often this is considered a period of probation during which he must show certain minimum qualities in order to be acceptable as a Canadian. He must study diligently the history of our country and the social and political system under which it operates. He must write examinations and then take part in a formal ceremony of acceptance in a court. He is then officially granted citizenship. In other words, he is acceptable as a Canadian citizen.

I suggest that few in this chamber have undergone that experience, and this is unfortunate. A person said to me the other night that in this country there are two great roles, two great professions, for which one needs absolutely no qualifications. Both professions or functions go to the very heart and soul of our nation. Both need absolutely no qualification. One is to be an elected member of parliament, legislature or city council; the other is to become a parent.

I have had some experience with the political aspect and I am on the threshold of the other.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald (Prince): Whether I shall be better qualified with respect to the other aspect remains to be seen. Yet I think the person who made the observation about our society should have included a third factor, and that is that most Canadians inherit their citizenship. They are Canadians, not because they have chosen to be, not because they have had a chance to exercise a choice, but through accident. They are accidental Canadians. They were born into this country, as I was, and they have inherited their citizenship. They have not had to undergo any trial period. There was no probation, no examination for formal acceptance, and most personally distressing to some of us is the fact that we have no real way of proving we have citizenship. We have no certificates to hand up indicating that we are citizens of this country. I suppose such certificates can be obtained from the Secretary of State (Miss LaMarsh) for $2 each, and I doubt if there are any extensive examinations, apart from the financial penalty, that would prevent any of us from obtaining them.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Earlier this year we had some discussion in this house about reducing the voting age to 18. There is also something very easy about inheriting the right to vote in Canada. I suggest that we should make much more of our inheriting of Canadian citizenship, not perhaps in a legal way because it might smack of so many other things that are against the grain of tradition. Instead of allowing only our new Canadians to have all the benefit of education for citizenship and for the ceremony that I am sure is invested with great meaning for them, we should assist our accidental Canadians, and these comprise the majority of us, to a more useful development in citizenship through a co-ordination of activities in our schools and other community ventures. If the right to vote has any meaning it has to be tied to the meaning of citizenship itself.

I congratulate the hon. member who introduced this bill in an attempt to clean up one of the anachronisms that exist under our current citizenship laws, but I would suggest we go further to make citizenship meaningful for all Canadians, both those who are new and those who are accidental.

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria (B.C.)): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the previous speaker. I think there are very few of us in this house who will forget the Bergsma case when it occurred in 1965, and when the hon. member who introduced this bill gave it so much attention, attention which it rightly deserved.

I am interested in the hon. member's bill because a somewhat similar case occurred in my riding of Victoria, B.C. It concerned a family by the name of van der Pol who, under similar circumstances, were denied the right of citizenship because the judge of the citizenship court when hearing their application, and understanding they refused to give the oath of allegiance, returned the certificates to Ottawa and refused them citizenship.

I hope that this important private members bill before us today will come to a vote. To try and establish just exactly what I will be voting for if it does, I have gone into the bill as carefully as I could. I have sought the advice of experts, because I am not a lawyer, to interpret some of the implications of the bill. I found this difficult to do, and it points up one of the frustrations of being a private member of this house, in that we have so much to do, so little time to do it in, and so few facilities to help us. Because of this I have found great difficulty in marshalling my thoughts on the matter, but I hope this will not be too obvious to hon. members as I try to outline them. How much easier it would be for all of us if, as private members, we had more research assistance; how much more intelligently we could vote on bills presented to us, such as this bill, if we were able to devote more time to research or had more facilities available to us. I know that this is in the works and that sooner or later we will get more assistance. I most certainly look forward to that day, and I know that a lot of other members do so, as well.

Returning now to Bill C-24 which has to do with the oath of allegiance, may I say that laws are made for the public. They apply to laymen and they must be understood by laymen. As I understand it, as a layman, when one becomes a citizen the taking on of citizenship also assumes the taking on of responsibility for obedience to law, and the taking on of responsibility in the defence of one's country. To give solemn significance to the taking on of such responsibility the oath of allegiance is taken on the Bible, and at the end of it we use the solemn words, "so help me God." The reason for this has been outlined by the previous speaker.

To digress in a personal vein for a moment, Mr. Speaker, and speaking of defending one's country, it has always seemed rather curious to me that the first time the oath of allegiance appears in Canadian law is in the British North America Act, an act of the British House of Commons. I cannot speak for either of the other services but I do know that in the British navy they do not swear an oath of allegiance. Members of the Royal Navy, defenders of the crown and defenders of the country, are not required to be sworn men. In the British navy no officers and no men take an oath of allegiance. Neither did we in the Royal Canadian Navy, as I recall it, until some time during the war when certain members were required to take the oath of allegiance. Those responsible, however, seemed to overlook some of the other men, including myself, and in fact they did not catch up with me until some time around 1952. In the Royal Navy the only exception to this rule was the Royal Marines, who were sworn men.

The substitute for the taking of an oath of allegiance in the British navy was that, every quarter, all members of every ship and establishment were mustered and the Articles of War, which state what a man's conduct is to be in the line of duty, in the face of the enemy and so forth, are read by the commanding officer to the men lined up and, to signify the difference between sworn men and those not sworn, the sworn men were allowed to leave their caps on. These, as I say, were the Royal Marines.

When we in the Canadian navy were required to swear the oath of allegiance we continued with the quarterly reading of the Articles of War, but we still carried on with the matter of taking off our caps, regardless of whether we were sworn or not. I bring this up to show that sometimes traditions are carried on after they have ceased to have any meaning.

Returning to the bill under discussion, Mr. Speaker, I notice that in my research I uncovered the same references which the sponsor of the bill uncovered. At the time of the Bergsma case the public press came out very strongly in support of the suggestion that the law should be changed to permit people to take the oath of allegiance without swearing an oath, not that this was supporting the fact that they should not have any religious convictions but supporting the stand that freedom to believe presupposes freedom to disbelieve.

• (5:30 p.m.)

This is the reason I was very anxious when the van der Pol case in my own riding, which is so similar to the Bergsma case, was before the court that these people should be provided with some means of becoming citizens without taking the oath of allegiance as it was then written. I think it is useful to remind the house of what the government did on that occasion, because I believe it was a good step. I believe the minister at the time that case came up for final review was hon. Mr. Nicholson. He undertook to have the Bergsma case appealed to the supreme court and the government bore the costs of the appeal. The appeal was granted and the Bergsmas were allowed to become citizens by taking the affirmation rather than the oath of allegiance. It was because of the precedent set in the Bergsma case that the van der Pols and many others since have come citizens of Canada.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): This was only in Ontario.

Mr. Groos: The hon. member points out that this was only in Ontario. I should like to mention that at the time the van der Pols were granted their citizenship the minister of citizenship and immigration of that time came to Victoria and presented the certificates to the van der Pols at a special ceremony. So I am sure it applies outside the province of Ontario. We all admit that Ontario is a wonderful province, but some of the wonderful things they do there are also done in British Columbia.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): I meant that the precedent was set in Ontario by the Bergsma case, rather than federally.

Mr. Groos: I accept that. Mr. Speaker, the Oaths of Allegiance Act as it stands at present supplies a form of oath of allegiance for use whenever any person is required by law, or desires, to take an oath of allegiance. There are only two stated exceptions—the oath required under the British North America Act, 1867, and the one required by the Canadian Citizenship Act. In both cases the form of oath to be used, which has already been read in the house by previous speakers, is set out.

The act also provides in section 3 that in certain cases no other oath is required, and provides in section 4 for the time within which the oath may be taken. Section 5 of the act allows the prescribed oath to be affirmed by "all persons allowed by law in civil cases in any part of Canada to affirm instead of making oaths". The last section of the act, section 6, designates what persons may administer the oath as set out in the act.

We have perhaps heard enough about the Bergsma case, so I shall not go into that, although I have some fairly extensive notes which I made in respect of that case. In view of the judgment of the court of appeal of Ontario in the Bergsma case I wonder whether any change in the existing law is required in order to achieve the main purpose of the hon. member's bill as set out in the explanatory notes. I have already explained how it seemed to apply to the courts in British Columbia.

The bill would eliminate the two stated exceptions—the British North America Act and the Citizenship Act—retaining only that portion of the British North America Act provision which relates to the provinces, which a federal act could not change in any event. The result would be that the oath of allegiance set out in the amended act would purport to apply to the Canadian Citizenship Act and the British North America Act. Having spoken to members of the legal profession I am of the opinion that it is doubtful whether this would be the actual result, because the bill does not purport to repeal the oath of allegiance set out in the Canadian Citizenship Act, or any of those sections of the Canadian Citizenship Act that specifically state that the oath of allegiance required to gain citizenship is the oath set out in the Citizenship Act. In view of the judgment in the Bergsma case it would appear undesirable to confuse the situation by any amendment at all, but if an amendment still was thought to be desirable the better method of proceeding would be simply to amend the Citizenship Act itself.

I might make an incidental comment concerning the form of the oath. The draft bill is said to enlarge the oath in the existing act by adding the requirement of observing the laws of Canada and fulfilling one's duties as a Canadian citizen. These things may have some relevance to a person newly acquiring citizenship under the Citizenship Act, as being a promise for the future that he must make as a condition under a grant of citizenship, but as noted at the outset the Oaths of Allegiance Act does not purport to provide an oath for that purpose. It provides an oath for other general occasions where it might be required or desirable to have someone swear an oath of allegiance. This was presumably to include persons who already are Canadian citizens and who already have been obeying the laws of Canada and fulfilling their duties as Canadian citizens.

While it probably does no harm to draw these matters to the attention of a person who is already a Canadian citizen, nevertheless it hardly seems appropriate that these matters should be added to a general oath of allegiance. Furthermore, on grounds of policy one may question the two objects of validating past oaths that were wrongly given to persons who, at law, were unable to swear, and of validating past affirmations that should have been oaths. Rewriting the past is, even if justified, somewhat unusual; but unless we are dealing with specific and known instances of injustice, little can be said in favour of a retrospective amendment. At any rate it is not clear that the purpose is accomplished by the wording in the draft bill. The bill in its proposed amendment to section 5 of the act, in the first subsection, reads as follows:

> Where, prior to the 1st day of January 1967 or thereafter, an oath has been duly administered and taken, the fact that the person to whom the oath was administered had, at the time of taking the oath, no religious belief, shall not for any purpose affect the validity of such oath.

Presumably the reference to "an oath" would be broad enough to refer to any oath, not just an oath of allegiance, and the implication that the words "of allegiance" would be read into the section may be open to some doubt because they are included specifically in the second subsection of the proposed section 5 which reads as follows:

> 5.(2) Where, prior to the 1st day of January, 1967, an affirmation of allegiance has been made instead of an oath of allegiance taken, that fact shall not for any purpose affect the validity of such affirmation which shall be of the same force and effect as if the person who made his affirmation had taken the oath.

Moreover, in conclusion it seems to me that if on its face the proposed new subsection applies to all oaths, it might be declared ultra vires. Therefore I feel that while I sympathize with the objective of this bill I cannot vote for it.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of being unkind to a very important group of people I was about to say I have enjoyed very much this discussion on a subject of this kind because I noted that no lawyers participated in it. We are hearing from doctors, clergymen, professors and gentlemen from British Columbia. This may have something to do with the remarkable state of the discussion.

I find this a very interesting piece of proposed legislation. My colleague, the hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald)—in this case there is double jeopardy today in that two members from Prince Edward Island have discussed the measure—referred to the place of an oath in society. Like that hon. gentleman, I have encountered very devout people in my part of the country who were affronted by the idea of ever taking an oath to tell the truth or to swear to the contents of a document. They felt that the word of a good man was always good and one did not have to buttress it in this way.

Many countries, as we know, in our own western tradition do not require swearing of the oath. The constitution of the United States indicates that the president may assume office and take the oath either by swearing or by affirmation. Interestingly enough, I understand that not a single president has even chosen to affirm. They all have been prepared to swear. It is not surprising, of course, that this should be the case in a country like the United States which, in its inception, laid great stress on the separation of the church and state. This was very much a part of the thinking of the philosophers and political figures of the eighteenth century.

The separation of the church and the state is something very appealing. Many of us are attracted and impressed by the thought that secular institutions like schools should not be schools for religious instruction. Many believe that we should separate the church from the state, and that the state should allow the church to function freely within it. This appeals to many.

On the other hand, there are few things which are clear-cut, or black or white. Our own state is not a wholly secular state. Many of our institutional patterns of government and society are based upon Judaic law and Christian precept. We always open our sittings here with the ceremony of prayers, to which the public are not invited, for historic reasons which I shan't go into.

This bill does to my mind have much merit. It provides for those people who are not Christians; it provides for those people who are not believers in any God or gods, and another group of people, I think not mentioned so far—those Christians inclined to believe that man should not swear. They take very literally the injunction against swearing "by anything in heaven because it is the Lords, or by anything on earth because it is his footstool." These people believe that man should not swear.

Another thing that is very disturbing about the compulsion to oath taking is that it instils hypocrisy. You must take an oath. You have no belief in any deity but you comply and you invoke a deity. This leads to and spreads hypocrisy. As that great debunker of an earlier day, George Bernard Shaw, said: "Sir, I am an atheist, and I thank God for it." This is the sort of situation we are developing by the existing legislation.

Unlike the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Groos)—I believe there are two parts of the bill which are very helpful and might bring a measure of ex post facto equity or justice to situations which are unfair. I hear an interruption about the other Victoria.

Mr. Barnett: What other Victoria could there be but Victoria, B.C.?

Mr. Macquarrie: Victoria, Prince Edward Island, is the one I had in mind. It is a most beautiful place. It is a little smaller than Victoria, B.C., but equally sedate, I might say.

Mr. Groos: Distinctive.

Mr. Macquarrie: I was looking at the explanatory notes and I thought perhaps the hon. member, when he referred to enlarging the pledge to include Canada as well as the sovereign, was moving into an area which gave status to the country as a focal point of one's allegiance, just as the Americans have done by using the phrase "My country, 'tis of thee". On reading the proposed bill I see that his mind is not working in that direction. I wonder exactly what is the advantage of a reference to the country, and what is really meant by:

> —I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth the Second, her heirs and successors according to law, and that I will faithfully observe the laws of Canada and fulfil my duties as a Canadian citizen.

It seems to me the last part of that is redundant. Under a monarchial society, if the crown is the emanation of the law and the centre of authority, an affirmation of true allegiance to the sovereign would naturally imply obedience to the laws which emanate therefrom. It is not sufficient merely to say or believe that we are not a secular state and we must also look pretty carefully at the whole monarchial structure of our society. We get into a very intricate and sensitive area.

If we accept, and we must of course, under present circumstances, the crown as the centre of our political and legal structure, then the addition of the portions of the bill I have read add nothing. They are at best unnecessary. If the hon. member enlarged his scope of allegiance and broadened the focus of the citizens' inspiration, if I may use that word, to the country itself, then he would have made an advance in our thinking if not in our legal structure and our society.

I suppose we might typify this by the two national anthems about which we have talked. One is devoted to the historic institution of the monarchy and the other is devoted to the land itself. I see nothing in the proposed legislation which does broaden the concept in that way.

Oaths of Allegiance Act

• (5:50 p.m.)

Since the inexorable hand of time is cutting me short, and one theologian has already spoken, I say simply that with the exception of the redundant part, which could be misleading and at best is unnecessary, I find much value in this piece of legislation. Therefore I will desist from further remarks so we will have time to take an orderly vote on the bill.

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I read with a great deal of interest my hon. friend's bill, and I praise him warmly for his initiative. He had a very commendable thought for those whose religious convictions are different from those of some important sectors of the population. I think that it is quite appropriate to change, if need be, the institutions as well as the wording, in order to enable those who are entitled to their convictions to be normally accepted in our civilized society.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, in view of the decision rendered in the Bergsma case the bill under consideration is now unnecessary, in my opinion, because it does not add anything new or change the situation. In fact, the Ontario court of appeal ruled that section 15 of the act was of general application with regard to making a solemn statement instead of taking an oath.

Such a ruling makes the bill under consideration unnecessary since its passage would not change the situation, as the matter has been settled by the Ontario court of appeal and constitutes precisely a solution to the problem which the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe) generously wished to settle.

I notice that the form submitted to us is respectful of the traditions of our country, in that we live under a constitutional monarchy.

The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) was happy to point out a moment ago the efforts made by the hon. member for Hamilton South with a view to eliminating archaisms and an obsolete terminology. However, if we refer to the proposed terminology, we note that the hon. member does not act in accordance with his convictions, which are well known to me. In suggesting this wording, he is respecting a certain traditionalism which is basically distasteful to him.

I had the opportunity of participating in a debate which took place in Quebec city before an audience of about 1,500 people. Another participant was professor Charles Taylor, one of the great minds behind the doctrine of the New Democratic party and one of the foremost personalities in the political group to which my hon. friend belongs.

The hon. member for Hamilton South represents an N.D.P. riding. By the way, in France, representatives are called by their name and not by the name of their riding, a tradition which we might perhaps adopt in this house. The hon. member for Hamilton South has made a suggestion which is basically incompatible with the political philosophy he professes to believe in and which is advocated by his colleagues. In Quebec, in front of 1,500 people, professor Taylor said that his political party was not opposed to the abolition of the monarchy in Canada.

I am convinced that even the member for Waterloo South is of this opinion, and I suggest he somewhat lacked courage in proposing that terminology.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that when I speak in this fashion I am not acting as a spokesman for the party to which I belong; I am expressing a personal opinion and, in fact, I am expressing it courageously, because I know that I may be stirring antagonism, if not hostility, against me.

I should have liked the hon. member to have shown the same courage and said what he really thinks, because I know that the policy of the New Democratic party has not yet reached the stage where they advocate the establishment or the continuation of a constitutional monarchy in Canada. I know that full well, and I trust the member will some day have the courage to say so officially just as the Quebec Liberal Federation did two weeks ago.

I admit that this may hurt the feelings of the premier of Newfoundland who, on the other hand, has the guts to state positively his traditionalism and who does not do so in an evasive way, in short who says things the way they should be said according to his convictions. We ought to respect the convictions of the premier of Newfoundland. However, when we have our own convictions, we must, at least, have the guts to state them emphatically.

Mr. Speaker, I make an appeal. The hon. member for Prince (Mr. MacDonald) said earlier: Let us avoid archaism. Well, there is, in Canada, a young generation which does not quite admit a certain traditionalism becoming more and more outdated. I wish that some day the feelings and convictions of the young generation will be taken into consideration—and when I refer to the young generation I mean the English-speaking as well as French-speaking young people—and let us get out of the rut of the old traditionalism in which some old conservatives would like us to keep forever.

Let us keep up with the times, let us be proud of our Canada and let us Canadianize our institutions. In that way we shall uproot any separatism in Canada.

MAIN ESTIMATES, 1968-69

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969, was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (C), 1967-68

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates (C) for the financial year ending March 31, 1968, was presented by Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

THE MINISTRY

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBER FOR VERDUN AS MEMBER OF ADMINISTRATION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) has been sworn as a member of the Privy Council and has joined the government as Minister without Portfolio. He will act as Minister of Labour during the absence of that minister in India as head of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations conference on trade and development, replacing the Minister of Trade and Commerce who has returned to Ottawa.

POWER

TABLING OF AGREEMENT ON NELSON RIVER AND ENGINEERING BOARD REPORT ON COLUMBIA

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies of the agreement reached between the Canadian government and the provincial government of Manitoba on the development of the Nelson river hydro-electric resources.

[English]

I should also like to table the third annual report to the governments of the United States and Canada of the permanent engineering board on the Columbia river treaty.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—STATEMENT AS TO IMPLEMENTATION

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on medicare, as I promised to do some days ago.

Early in 1965 the government announced its plan to discuss with the provinces "a way in which federal and provincial action can most effectively contribute to programs that will provide health services to Canadians on a comprehensive basis". At the federal-provincial conference held at Ottawa on July 19, and 20 of that year, 1965, I made it clear that medicare was a matter which required the closest co-operation between federal and provincial authorities. I said then that while the responsibilities of decision and of execution in this matter were essentially provincial, the scope and the nature of the problem was such as to create a national concern, and a measure of federal responsibility.

Today it remains the concern of the federal government to find the best way in which federal and provincial action can most effectively contribute, once the present legislation has come into effect, to achieve a practical medical care program available to as many Canadians as possible and as soon as possible.

• (2:40 p.m.)

To this end we have consulted the provinces fully at every stage of the development of the medical care program. At the federal-provincial conference to which I have referred, at subsequent federal-provincial meetings of ministers of health, and at a large number of meetings of federal and provincial officials, detailed proposals and arrangements were discussed. Therefore, because of the nature of the issue as well as this requirement of consultation, the government took seriously into account representations made to us recently by the provinces concerning the financial consequences for them in current conditions if they participated in the medicare plan provided for in the legislation passed almost unanimously by the house in December, 1966, and which comes into effect on July 1 of this year.

The situation is that while the benefits of this act are available to any province which wishes and is able to meet the requirements set out in it, only one or two provinces have indicated their intention to come into the program on the date the act comes into effect. The remaining provinces, including the two largest provinces, have indicated that either because of current financial pressures, or of objections to the plan itself, or both, they will not be participating in the national plan at least for the time being.

It is, of course, the responsibility of the provincial governments to decide on financial priorities within their own spheres of operation. Their decisions on medicare made by them in the light of their assessment of the financial situation should be respected and understood.

As a result, on July 1, 1968, when the act comes into effect there will not be anything approaching a universal medicare program in Canada provided jointly by federal-provincial action. A consequence of this is that there will be no significant increase in total financial outlays by the provinces and the federal government for medicare in the next financial year, and nothing to support alarmist and unwarranted statements about the massive and harmful impact of new outlays on financial conditions.

The federal government, while remaining committed to the policy of full medical care coverage for all Canadians, certainly has no wish to bring pressure to bear on provincial governments who, for their own reasons, have decided that full implementation of the medical care program as of July 1 of this year is not in accordance with their own financial priorities.

We shall continue to keep in close touch with the provinces on this subject, and it is our hope that as current financial conditions change, the benefits to Canadians of a full, national medicare program will be achieved through close co-operation between the federal and provincial governments. Indeed, once the act is in effect as of July 1, 1968, it will be possible to discuss its operation with the provinces, not only in the light of changing economic conditions but also in the light of the experience of its operation in the one or two provinces which came in on the date provided for in the legislation.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the Prime Minister indicating no change with regard to the medicare program comes to me as a great disappointment because I think it represents a grave disservice to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: The government has been urging restraint, has told everybody that it will set a good example and has been urging the provinces to be restrained. The reasons for this, of course, are unprecedented inflation in the country accompanied by a sharply rising cost of living, sharply rising interest rates and a deteriorating competitive position of Canadian producers and manufacturers in world markets as a result of this situation. In addition there has been concern for the Canadian dollar.

In view of the unsettled times in terms of international finance it is surely important that the government of Canada demonstrate to the country and to the world its readiness and the readiness of the Canadian people to make the decisions that are necessary to ensure a strong and growing Canadian economy. Instead of this we have an indication of the willingness of the government to embark upon a vast new spending program, and inviting the provinces to join it. Indeed, this program places a heavy pressure upon the provinces to join in, because the residents of all the provinces will be paying for the program in the provinces which participate in it.

Whatever may have seemed reasonable a couple of years ago when this program was considered by the house is unreasonable today in this regard. A program of this magnitude is obviously completely incompatible with and contrary to the policy of restraint preached by the Minister of Finance. It is bound to increase the difficulties of the government and of the people of Canada, will most probably bring about inappropriate and inflationary measures, and will be interpreted abroad as an act of weakness on the part of the Canadian government. What are we to think of a government which cannot find any money to deal with its own superannuated pensioners, which finds it necessary to welch on commitments already made in connection with manpower training, and yet wishes to embark on this expensive program?

Furthermore, as the Prime Minister has indicated, the majority of the provinces do not want this program in its present form at this time. They may be pressured to join, with the sole result that it will interfere with programs which they consider more urgent, including the training of additional medical personnel so necessary in this country for an effective medical services program.

Despite what the Prime Minister has said, the government has never effectively consulted the provinces of this country on this program. The four basic conditions of the program were imposed and insisted upon by the federal government although the matter is clearly within the provincial jurisdiction. The provinces wanted a more flexible program. Indeed, most provinces questioned the universality of the program.

In nearly every instance the provinces are hard pressed financially to a degree which perhaps few Canadians realize. The government of this country should realize that programs such as the hospital plan and the provinces' own educational programs have a built in cost escalation which is difficult to control. The result is that the provinces are the financial prisoners of programs already adopted. What this program does is to further box them in.

It is folly to say that the provinces do not have to accept the program. The program has meaning as a national program only to the extent that the provinces accept it and proceed with it. Of course a number have already said they cannot join. I do not think they should be pressured to proceed with the program, but the government certainly does that.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Furthermore, this puts an additional strain on federal-provincial relations. Let us not kid ourselves, Mr. Speaker. We are in for tough days ahead in terms of federal-provincial negotiations. This pretence at consultation and then ignoring what the provinces recommend, going ahead in some provinces when the majority have clearly indicated they do not want the program in this form, is harmful to federal-provincial relations. It is a further strain upon our confederation.

There ought to have been genuine consultation with the provinces, Mr. Speaker. There never has been, but there ought to be now. There ought to be consultation designed to ensure that medical services are available throughout the country to those who need them. There ought to be programs to meet the national need which the provinces would feel they could afford without interfering with other necessary programs with which the provinces must proceed.

This decision announced by the Prime Minister is wrong for the following reasons, amongst others.

1. The program will not bring help where it is most urgently needed, in the provinces where the need is greatest. These provinces cannot afford to proceed with this program. What we need is a medical services program with which the provinces are able to proceed.

2. This decision will badly strain federal-provincial relations because the views of the provinces have been ignored and because of the implied pressure on the provinces to increase their expenditures and participate in this program.

3. This decision makes a farce of the policy of restraint announced by the government, and makes a joke of the policy of the Minister of Finance. Even more serious, it discredits Canada in the eyes of the world.

4. This decision will increase the financial difficulties of Canada, causing a further loss of confidence, lead to a higher cost of living and to further unemployment. Let me quote what the Minister of Finance said, as recorded in Hansard for December 1, 1966, at page 10607, when he justified deferring this program:

> Hon. members will see from what I have read from Hansard that in postponing the implementation of medicare the government had in view four considerations: First, the need for a stronger fiscal policy so that there would be less reliance on monetary policy; second, the need to keep future tax increases to a minimum; third, the containment of inflationary pressures; and fourth, the views and the financial problems of the provinces.

If the Minister of Finance felt these reasons were imperative a year ago, Mr. Speaker, they are even more imperative today. Every reason rings more strongly today than it did then. I say the government of this country should be prepared to put the country ahead of any party commitment. It should be prepared to practise restraint and not simply preach it. It should set an example itself. Conditions are serious. We are experiencing uncontrolled inflation, rapidly mounting unemployment and international instability.

The government should be working toward flexibility.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition because I know how important this matter is. However, I feel it is my duty to remind the hon. gentleman, and all hon. members, of the terms of the standing order which provide for brief comments on ministerial statements.

Mr. Stanfield: I shall be finished in just a minute, if I may have the indulgence of the house. I say the government should be working toward more room for manoeuvre instead of boxing itself in further. It should consult with the provinces to work out a program with which the provinces can proceed. As I say, the government should set an example. The government should try to increase confidence rather than destroy it. We now have a 7 per cent bank rate, prices are increasing, and I ask, what next? The government should not put party politics ahead of the national interest.

I urge the government to reconsider the situation and stop taking the country of Canada nearer and nearer the precipice over which it would tumble to disaster.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, after the words of doom with which the Leader of the Opposition finished his statement I suppose every member of this house and every Canadian ought now to put on sackcloth and ashes and go after the Prime Minister for having been so bold as to do something that a royal commission that was appointed by the hon. gentleman's predecessor stated Canada ought to have. The Leader of the Opposition has at last broken his silence, and the result has been an exposure of Toryism such as I have not heard in a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I am very glad to have the agreement of hon. gentlemen who are behind the Leader of the Opposition; it shows that he is expressing reactionary ideas that his followers support.

May I say to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, that the difficulties in which Canada now finds itself with regard to medicare are the direct result of the hesitation, the shilly-shallying and the lack of courage the government showed when it first introduced this bill. It presented insurance companies and the medical associations with another year of lobbying all across the country, another year during which they could misrepresent the needs of the people and the facts as they are.

I suggest that nothing contributed so much to the reactions of provincial governments and their supporters than the unjustified and unfounded declaration by the Minister of Finance that what is involved in the medicare scheme is an expenditure of $1 billion. No calculation by any responsible person has gone much beyond $800 million, but the minister made it his business to go as high as he possibly could. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance and perhaps other members of the government have done the best they could during the past year to discourage the provinces from adopting the medicare plan which is now on the statute books.

Some members on both sides of the house have for many years believed that one of the major social measures needed in any civilized community is a medicare plan that is made available as of right to every citizen. Some members of this house have believed that one of the marks of a civilized society is to make certain that no citizen in that society need fear financial disaster following ill health.

When the government brought in this measure, I will be corrected if I am wrong, Mr. Speaker, but as I remember it, with the exception of only very few, the members of Her Majesty's loyal opposition supported the legislation which was at last to give such a plan to Canada. But now, Mr. Speaker, we are told this is not to be the case.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The Leader of the Opposition talked about economic ruin flowing from medicare. I say that it is economic balderdash to talk of a medical plan, in the circumstances of today, adding to inflation. Most of the medical costs are already being paid by the people of Canada. The plan is essentially a transfer of payments from private plans to the public treasury, and the added costs probably would not be more than $80 million in a full fiscal year and considerably less than that in the fiscal period that would remain from July 1 of this year.

It is significant, Mr. Speaker, that outside the Atlantic provinces, which find it impossible to enter because the major provinces are not entering—

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): That is not so.

Mr. Lewis: In the opinion of some hon. members that is not so, but it is so in my opinion.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton South): The hon. member should get his mind straight. He should straighten his mind and that might help his tongue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: I shall just wait for a little quiet in the chamber rather than trying to answer the hon. member's inanities.

The Atlantic provinces cannot enter the plan because, unless the two major provinces enter, the amount they would receive would not be 50 per cent of what the plan would in fact cost; and the Atlantic provinces, of course, can afford less than other provinces to pay a percentage of the cost that is larger than that offered to them by this act. The fact is that in the past year medical services have increased in cost by from 30 per cent to 40 per cent. This increase has been deliberately brought about, I suggest, by those responsible in order to make the public medical plan less palatable to some of the authorities across the country.

I am glad the government has not brought the bill back for any change. I am certain the people of Canada in all provinces will demand that the medical plan be implemented, and I am confident that the effect on the economy will be positive instead of negative, since production itself will be increased as the result of proper medical attention being provided for the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), has just announced that medicare will be implemented on July 1, 1968, if the provinces desire so.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is rightly concerned about that government statement on the implementation in 1968 of medicare, a plan laid down by the government.

I feel that is an interference in a provincial field, since several provinces have objected and are still objecting to such a scheme, especially Alberta which has a voluntary medical plan and which frowns on any interference of the federal government in a provincial field.

I was listening to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) who was blaming the leader of the Progressive Conservative party, claiming that they wanted to help and protect large corporations.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that in Saskatchewan, when there was a socialist government in power they endeavoured to implement a medicare program on a compulsory basis, but because of the opposition from the medical profession of that province, they were forced to retreat. Such is the result gained by socialism in Saskatchewan. Moreover, it disappeared from that province since then.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people need medical insurance; I am convinced of that. But they do not want socialist measures which would impose on them a plan they do not want. That is why we have been suggesting for a long time to the government to consider a group insurance plan open to all Canadians, under which the government would merely guarantee the payment of an initial premium and would leave to the individual the initiative of paying his contribution to the company he chose, if it cost more, he would pay the difference between the government premium and that of the medical insurance of his choice.

Mr. Speaker, respect for the individual is essential in a medicare program and I say that at the present time through its attitude the Liberal government is interfering with individual freedom. The government should study programs which would guarantee to the individual the right to choose the program that suits him. If, until July 1, the government studied various programs, we would not have to follow in the footsteps of Sweden or other communist or socialist countries in Europe. We are able to have a program which can be used as a model by other countries later because we are convinced—and I am convinced—that state socialism is not the answer to our social and economic problems.

The solution, Mr. Speaker, lies in the setting up of a program which will enable each individual to develop freely according to his own aspirations. That is a plan which respects the individual and not a yoke such as the one advocated by the hon. member for York South. He blames those who make profits, but he makes profits in the practice of his profession, and he does not complain about it. Profits stimulate initiative, and in my opinion initiative should be encouraged as much as possible by a responsible government, whether the Ottawa government or that of any other province in Canada.

[English]

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, we have awaited with interest the announcement the Prime Minister made this afternoon about the medical care plan. The Prime Minister said he had no desire to bring pressure to bear on the provinces. I suggest that this is an about face; neither the Prime Minister nor the government took that position when the bill was before the house. In fact the bill was presented with an attitude of "Take it or leave it". No changes to the legislation were contemplated and none were allowed. It was said that the provinces would have a perfect right not to come in; they could exercise their own judgment. Yet the big stick was held over them. If they had their own plans in operation they were told those plans would have to conform with the national plan in order to qualify for the 50 per cent contribution from the federal government.

Many of us supported the legislation although we had serious reservations. We took exception to the compulsory aspect of the medical care plan, to the degree of coverage it provided and to the fact that it was to be administered by a public agency. Despite all representations about these matters the government insisted on putting the legislation through as it stood then.

The Prime Minister, I think, should have discussed with the provincial premiers the possibility of phasing in the program gradually. In that way those in the low income brackets or on pensions would receive coverage and, if it were desirable later, other categories could be phased in as the situation warranted. I believe that this afternoon we might have had a wonderful opportunity to reconsider some of the major issues that were discussed when the bill was before the house. Above all, I think consideration should still be given to the possibility of allowing the existing provincial plans to qualify and be recognized under the national medical care plan.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON ELECTION EXPENSES

On the order: Government notices of motions:

February 12—The Secretary of State:

That the report of the committee on election expenses tabled on October 11, 1966, be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

[Mr. Patterson.]

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

TRAVEL BY SOLICITOR GENERAL AND STAFF

Question No. 518—Mr. Nielsen:

1. For each of the years 1964 to 1967 inclusive, what was the cost of travel of the Solicitor General and his staff?

2. What trips were undertaken and for what purposes?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): 1.

Fiscal Year	Amount
1964-65	$ 570.00
1965-66	791.41
1966-67	3,002.34

Note: The increase in travel costs for the fiscal year 1966-67 over those of the preceding two years resulted from the taking on by the Solicitor General of added responsibilities as the head of a department under the Transfer of Duties Act pending the passage of the Government Organization Bill, 1966 creating the Department of the Solicitor General. These added responsibilities necessitated extensive inspection and familiarization tours of various institutions throughout Canada to gain a knowledge at first hand of their functions and methods of operating.

2. Trips undertaken included the opening of Matsqui Institution and inspections of other institutions in British Columbia; visits to Saskatchewan penitentiary, Dorchester penitentiary, to Newfoundland, to institutions in Ontario and attendance at law conferences.

NATIONAL DEFENCE MILITARY PERSONNEL, OTTAWA

Question No. 773—Mr. Ormiston:

What were the total numbers of military personnel employed either temporarily or permanently in the Ottawa Area at National Defence Headquarters, Canadian Forces Headquarters, Materiel Command, Defence Research Board, Canadian Forces Base at Rockcliffe, Canadian Forces Communications System, Canadian Forces Base at Uplands, as of December 1, 1966, and as of December 1, 1967?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence):

	1 Dec. 1966	1 Dec. 1967
National Defence Headquarters	70	72
Canadian Forces Headquarters	2428	2549
Materiel Command	1076	1054
Defence Research Board	6	1
CFB Rockcliffe	1055	1164
Canadian Forces Communications System	38	72
CFB Uplands	1767	1796

POST OFFICE CONSTRUCTION UNDER WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Question No. 868—Mr. Southam:

1. How many Post Offices will be constructed in Canada during the 1967-68 winter season under the federal Winter Works Program?

2. What are the numbers and locations of the Post Offices to be built under the 1967-68 Winter Works Program in each of Canada's 10 Provinces?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): 1. It was found that 855 locations met the basic criteria of the program. From this total 210 locations were selected initially; however, there now are 117 locations in the program and all these may not be built.

2. Figures showing for each province (a) the number of locations that met the basic criteria and (b) the number of locations where construction is now expected in 1967-68 are listed below.

Province	(a)	(b)
Newfoundland	26	7
Prince Edward Island	9	1
Nova Scotia	49	4
New Brunswick	35	5
Quebec	426	72
Ontario	105	17
Manitoba	41	2
Saskatchewan	69	4
Alberta	17	2
British Columbia	78	3
Totals	855	117

SALE OF GOLD TO U.S.

Question No. 895—Mr. Reid:

1. What was the maturity of the "Short Term Bills" or "Treasuries" Canada took in return in the sale to the United States of the one hundred million dollars worth of gold announced December 21, 1967?

2. Was there a "gold clause" attached?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): 1. The term to maturity of the United States treasury bills which the exchange fund purchased with the proceeds of the sale of $100 million of gold to the United States announced by the Minister on December 21, 1967, ranged from 7 to 13 weeks.

2. No.

FEDERAL OBSERVATORIES

Question No. 896—Mr. Caouette:

1. In what provinces are federal observatories located?

2. Is there an observatory in the Province of Quebec, and, if not (a) for what reason (b) does the government intend to build one or more in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Federal observatories for geophysical observations are located in the provinces of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and British Columbia and in the Northwest Territories.

Federal observatories making astronomical observations are located in the provinces of Ontario, Alberta and British Columbia. In addition, small observatories for a meteoritic observation and recovery program are being prepared in Saskatchewan.

2. In the province of Quebec, fully owned federal seismic observatories are located at Poste de la Baleine, St. Fereol and Schefferville. In addition, seismic observatories at Montreal and Sept-Iles are supported by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, and contribute to the federal network.

A federal magnetic observatory is located at Poste de la Baleine, and a federal earth tides observatory at Poltimore.

(b) There are no approved plans to build additional geophysical and/or astronomical observatories in the province of Quebec.

NAPPAN EXPERIMENTAL FARM

Question No. 911—Mr. Coates:

1. What was the size of the staff at the Nappan Experimental Farm on January 1, 1963, and of this number how many were permanent and how many seasonal?

2. What was the payroll at Nappan Experimental Farm for the fiscal year 1962-63?

3. What was the size of the staff at the Nappan Experimental Farm on January 1, 1968, and of this number how many were permanent and how many seasonal?

4. What is the estimated payroll at the Nappan Experimental Farm for the fiscal year 1967-68?

Questions

Hon. J. J. Greene (Minister of Agriculture):

1. Continuous: 58. Seasonal: 1. Total: 59.

2. $265,610.

3. Continuous: 40. Seasonal: 6. Total: 46.

4. $310,000.

OXFORD, N.S., FEDERAL BUILDING

Question No. 920—Mr. Coates:

Is it the intention of the government to construct a new federal building at Oxford, N.S., in the fiscal year 1968-69 that will house the facilities of the Post Office Department and, if so, when does the government intend to call tenders for this new federal building?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): No.

PARRSBORO, N.S., FEDERAL BUILDING

Question No. 921—Mr. Coates:

Is it the intention of the government to construct a new federal building at Parrsboro, N.S., in the fiscal year 1968-69 that will house the facilities of the Post Office Department and, if so, when does the government intend to call tenders for this new federal building?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Public Works): Yes, but the date of the tender call cannot be stated at this time.

ARDA PROJECTS, CUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 928—Mr. Coates:

1. How many projects are under way in Cumberland County under ARDA at the present time and how many projects are under consideration for Cumberland County at the present time?

2. Of the projects at present under way, where is the location of each, what is the estimated cost of each, and what proportion of the total cost in each instance will be borne by the federal government?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Three ARDA projects are under way in Cumberland county at the present time and no project under consideration.

2. (a) Development of crown lands; Springhill junction area; total estimated cost of $153,000 of which 50 per cent or $76,500 is the federal share. (b) Community pasture; Minudie; total estimated cost of $74,000 of which 50 per cent or $37,000 is the federal share. (c) Flood control; West Brook; total estimated cost of $40,000 of which 37.5 per cent or $15,000 is the federal share.

[Mr. Coates.]

REPORT ON BAY OF FUNDY POWER

Question No. 929—Mr. Coates:

On what date will the government receive the report on the power potential of the Bay of Fundy tides from the committee composed of representatives from the federal government and from the Governments of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and is it the intention of the government to make a summary of the findings of this Committee in the House when the report is received?

Mr. Jack Davis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): According to the federal-provincial agreement setting up the Atlantic Tidal Power Programming Board under whose direction the study of the power potential of the Bay of Fundy tides is being carried out, the final report on the study is not due until the end of 1968. With the concurrence of the other parties to this federal-provincial agreement a summary of the findings will be presented to parliament.

COST OF TAX REMINDER CALENDARS

Question No. 972—Mr. Thompson:

5. Does the Department maintain and/or operate any office located elsewhere than in Ottawa for the purpose, in whole or in part, of promoting the public relations of the Department and/or the Minister and, if so, where are such offices located; what is the cost of the maintenance and operation of such offices; how many are employed in each such office and at what salary or remuneration in each case?

Return tabled.

CREDITS GRANTED TO ENGLAND

Question No. 866—Mr. Grégoire:

1. What credits have been granted to England under the Export Credits Insurance Act?

2. What amounts have been loaned directly or indirectly to England by any Crown corporation since 1938?

Return tabled.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): May I ask the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State whether he would have a look at question No. 727 about which I have spoken before. This question relates to the cost of the medicare program and asks for an authoritative statement with respect to one of the provinces. In the light of the statement made today and the discussion which is bound to be precipitated, this information is very important indeed. I submit that it is not beyond the present knowledge of the federal government and that it is capable of an answer at the present time I earnestly solicit a prompt reply.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I will do that, Mr. Speaker.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the record increase in the cost of living recently announced by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, when he proposes to announce new plans to provide effective measures to halt the mounting inflation occurring in Canada.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The supplementary estimates were tabled this afternoon. They will be called very shortly, I expect, and this would provide a very good occasion on which to discuss this subject in a more constructive way than by answering a question on the orders of the day.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the Prime Minister propose at that time to announce to the house new plans to combat inflation in Canada?

Mr. Pearson: We propose to discuss this whole matter if the opposition would be good enough to bring it up on the estimates.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Bearing in mind the Prime Minister's indication last week that he wished to have a debate on economic affairs as soon as possible and that the supplementary estimates would provide an opportunity for such a debate, would the right hon. gentleman advise the house when the supplementary estimates will be presented so we may go ahead with this debate as soon as possible?

Mr. Pearson: Well, the house leaders can get together and arrange for a date as early as possible. I think we could finish the legislation now before the house—that should be possible today, perhaps—and then there is no reason I can see which would prevent our going ahead with the discussion of the estimates.

Mr. Hees: It is the Prime Minister's wish that if possible this debate should go forward this week?

Mr. Pearson: I would hope so, provided we could dispose of the bill which is now before the house.

Mr. Hees: Will the President of the Treasury Board take that answer into consideration and make an announcement which would enable this debate to be held as soon as possible?

[Later:]

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of his most recent championship of the rights of consumers, what does he propose to do to offset the 4½ per cent rise in the cost of living since January, 1967?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a statement of policy, and I suggest the question cannot be asked at this time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIET NAM—POSSIBLE USE OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of grave warnings by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the effect that there is a danger of the war in Viet Nam escalating through the use of tactical nuclear weapons, and similar concern expressed by a distinguished United States senator, will this government contemplate making a statement on the matter?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman's question is based on rumours and I know of no evidence which would support those rumours. If there were to be that kind of escalation it would indeed be madness—I believe the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom called it lunacy—and I do not believe the United States government would go in for that kind of madness.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I take it from the Prime Minister's remarks that this subject was at least discussed between himself and Prime Minister Wilson during their recent meeting. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether he can elaborate on what he has said with respect to the evidence, or lack of evidence. Have inquiries been made of the United States, and is the Prime Minister in a position to assure the house, one way or the other, that no official consideration is being given, as rumour has it, to the use of nuclear weapons in the war in Viet Nam?

Mr. Pearson: I say there is no evidence to support the rumours which have been spread.

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Can the Prime Minister tell us whether any further consideration has been given to reconvening the Geneva conference of which Britain is one of the co-chairmen? Can he say whether this possibility was fully explored during Prime Minister Wilson's recent trip to Moscow?

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Mr. Pearson: Britain is, of course, one of the co-chairmen, but the other co-chairman is the government of the Soviet union, and from the talks I have had and the messages I have received lately, there does not seem any indication on the part of both co-chairmen that the conference will be reconvened.

Mr. L. R. Sherman (Winnipeg South): My supplementary question should probably be directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the minister have any word yet about Ambassador Ormond Dier and his attempts to get out of Hanoi?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Dier has returned to Saigon and I expect to hear from him very shortly. In the meantime I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the statement by the foreign minister of North Viet Nam over the week end reiterating willingness to talk if the bombing stops.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A further supplementary to the Prime Minister. Is the government considering making special assistance available to the reported 300,000 Vietnamese who are presently dispossessed because of the recent violent warfare in that country?

Mr. Pearson: This tragic addition to the misery of this country is now being looked into by the external aid office to determine whether there is any way in which these people can be helped. The best way they could be helped would be to stop the fighting.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us whether the government has received any reports on the recent discussions between the Secretary General of the United Nations and the Soviet leaders with respect to Viet Nam peace talks?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary General has left Moscow and is on his way to London. Before the end of the day I expect to hear from our ambassador as to the nature of the discussions.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Prime Minister for an explanation of his remark to the effect that the best method of aiding South Viet Nam would be to stop the fighting. Is the right hon. gentleman advocating the complete cessation of United States activity in that country, giving in completely to the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

NIGERIA—COMMONWEALTH EFFORTS TO END CIVIL WAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Did his discussions with the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom include the subject of the possible use of Canadian forces in Nigeria to form a kind of peace keeping corps there?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and relates to an answer given to my colleague the hon. member for Oxford. Is the Secretary General of the commonwealth group authorized in any way by the Canadian government to propose or suggest that there should be an international police force in Nigeria, and that there would be a Canadian component?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; there have been no instructions given to the Secretary General of the commonwealth. The Secretary General has been endeavouring, with full support of the commonwealth countries, to bring about an accommodation between the dissident elements in Nigeria. So far as I know there has been no proposal from this government or from any commonwealth government along the lines involved in the question.

TRADE

PROPOSED U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON WOOD PRODUCTS IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a member representing a constituency which produces more than 200 million board feet of forest products every year I wish to address the following question to the minister. In view of announcements in Washington that the United States treasury department intends to take action which could cost Canadians upward of $300 million per year in lumber exports, has the minister discussed this serious threat to Canadian exports with the United States treasury department?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): My colleagues from British Columbia have been discussing this subject with me. As the hon. member knows, I returned to Canada only a short time ago and I have not had an opportunity to look into all these matters. Representatives of the forest industries of British Columbia are here today to discuss this question with the Department of Trade and Commerce. I will look into it and report to the house at a later date.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is bringing this matter to the attention of the United States government will he point out to them very strongly that this country has a $1 billion annual trade deficit with that country, and that any action of this kind would be very unfriendly—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

MINISTERIAL COMMENT ON STATEMENT BY CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. the Prime Minister. It arises out of the statement by the Minister of Finance in this house on Thursday, February 8, as reported at page 6514 of Hansard. When answering a question asked by the hon. member for Carleton he commented on a statement made by the chairman of the Economic Council, and the Minister of Finance is reported as having said:

> When Mr. Smith made his statement he made it without the knowledge and without the authorization of the government.

My question is this. The Economic Council of Canada was set up by this parliament to be an independent research body. Are we to assume from the minister's statement that this situation is now altered, and that the Economic Council of Canada is only a mouthpiece of the current government and the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the minister never intended any such deduction to be drawn from his speech.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can give me any other deduction from this frank statement. If so I would be very pleased to have it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXPO '67

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON FEDERAL INVOLVEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house when we might expect an accounting with regard to the extent of the involvement of the federal government in Expo '67.

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I can do that in the very near future.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO FINAL PAYMENTS FOR 1966-1967 CROPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, this question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. When can we expect the announcement of the final accounting by the Canadian Wheat Board with regard to wheat, oats and barley for the past year?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be conferring with members of the Canadian Wheat Board on Thursday of this week. Then I shall be able to give the hon. member an answer.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister also say when the final payments for the 1966-67 wheat crop will be paid to western farmers?

Mr. Winters: I shall be able to give an answer to that question at the same time, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce a related question regarding wheat as a prelude to his Thursday morning meeting with Canadian Wheat Board officials. Will the minister discuss with board officials the suggestion from the Department of Agriculture that western farmers reduce their wheat acreage this year because of a surplus of wheat resulting from lower exports?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with any such suggestion and am unable therefore to undertake to discuss it with the wheat board.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MANPOWER MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a letter of resignation from the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) asking that he be relieved of his duties as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question involving a communication between the Prime Minister and a member cannot be asked in this way.

Mr. Hales: I was just asking for an acknowledgement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: This is precisely the information which cannot be given at this time.

Mr. Hales: May I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask another question; he may not ask a supplementary.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister advise the house whether the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration has resigned?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): When there are changes in the administration they are announced in the house.

TRADE

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIVY COUNCIL PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Prime Minister. On Friday I addressed the following question to him:

> Was the President of the Privy Council expressing the view of the government when he said in Toronto recently "the fact remains that we have become an economic colony of the United States"?

The Prime Minister said he would have to consult with the President of the Privy Council. Is he in a position to answer the question today?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman must know that he is out of order in asking me to comment on a newspaper report of a statement made by my colleague. If he keeps on asking this kind of question I will have to raise his rent.

An hon. Member: More inflation.

Mr. Hees: Now that we have had considerable verbiage on the part of the Prime Minister might I have an answer to my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Dundas.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is not a fact—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas.

[Later:]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of my inability, because of noise in the house, to hear his answer to my last question which reflected on my personal lodging situation. Let me bring him up to date by stating that his wife has already raised the rent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: As a result I must inform him, regretfully, that he has lost a very good tenant.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I did that knowing it would not be acceptable and therefore there would be no increase of inflationary pressures.

FINANCE

REPORTED DIFFICULTIES IN OBTAINING LOANS BY SMALL BUSINESSES

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Wadds (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister been advised of the present difficulties faced by those who are endeavouring to obtain loans under the Small Businesses Loans Act?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker; I have not been aware of this but will take the question as notice.

REFUSAL BY BANKS TO MAKE FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance in relation to the one just posed by the hon. member for Grenville-Dundas regarding difficulties in obtaining loans for small businesses. This situation is also affecting farm credit and farm improvement loans in western Canada. When the minister replied that he would look into this matter did he mean he would look into it also in respect of farm loans?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was asked a similar question last week, to which I replied that I recognized this difficulty and had urged the banks to continue to make farm improvement loans pending revision of the legislation.

OIL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON AGREEMENT WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might address this question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I should like to ask him whether he would make an early, comprehensive statement to the house with regard to the new Canada-United States oil deal.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question.

INDUSTRY

SUGAR—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the recent proposal for an interdepartmental study on the problems of the sugar beet industry in Canada, could the minister tell the house whether his department will be working in conjunction with the Department of Agriculture to draw up a Canadian sugar policy that will permit the continued existence of the Canadian sugar beet industry and which will be of greater assistance to the commonwealth members in the West Indies than is the present pattern of sugar purchases?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a statement which should be made on motions.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR STEPS TO INCREASE RETURNS TO FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent (Ont.)): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to direct this question to the Minister of Agriculture but perhaps in his absence I should direct it to the parliamentary secretary. This is supplementary to the question I asked in respect of the increase in the cost of living index. Could the parliamentary secretary indicate what steps the department is contemplating taking to rectify the situation in agriculture where we have this continued increase in food costs with no compensating increases in the prices paid to the farmers of the nation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest again that this is a question which should not be asked at this time. The hon. member is asking for a general statement which should be made on motions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORTH VIET NAM—PROTESTS OVER KILLING OF MISSIONARIES AND CIVILIANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What protest has the government of Canada sent to Hanoi in view of reports of the killing of some missionaries, women and children, by the forces supported by the government of North Viet Nam?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated a while ago I expect to have a report from our commissioner who has been in the north on other matters. He was in a position, of course, to pass judgment on this situation. I would prefer to hear from him before giving an answer.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he waits for reports from our representative on this commission with regard to United States bombing of the north before he makes statements concerning that matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there is of course no association between my hon. friend's observation and my answer.

[Mr. Speaker.]

TRADE

STEEL—REPORTED IMPORTATIONS AT LOW PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware that steel is being imported into Canada at prices which are detrimental to our steel industry?

Hon. Robert Winters (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, that whole matter is being looked into.

Mr. Noble: I should like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister consider that anti-dumping legislation will be necessary to protect our steel industry?

Mr. Winters: We are looking into it under the provisions of the anti-dumping regulations.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is a good Nova Scotian, what steps his department is taking, apart from looking into the matter, to protect the steel industry, particularly at this time when Sydney is faced with annihilation?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, we are looking into this matter with officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue. I understand that a report has been prepared. I am not familiar with the exact details of the report, but perhaps I could familiarize myself with it and answer a little later.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

SUMMERSIDE—POSSIBLE PHASING OUT OF AIR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David MacDonald (Prince): Mr. Speaker, I intended to direct this question to the Minister of National Defence had he been here. In his absence perhaps I can put the question to the Prime Minister. On Friday, in reply to questions I put to the Minister of National Defence about the future of the Canadian Forces base at Summerside, he suggested that in respect of the phasing out of the Neptunes redeployment of the Arguses was being contemplated. Will the Prime Minister assure members of this house and the people of Prince Edward Island, in view of the disastrous economic effect of closing the base outside of Summerside, whether a special task force is being set up by the department to consider alternative use for this establishment?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, an investigation is being made into that very point.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether consideration is being given to moving the Downsview establishment to Summerside?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is one possibility I mentioned myself.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any study is being made by the Department of National Defence regarding ways and means whereby a permanent unit, either of national defence or the Defence Research Board, could be stationed at Summerside in order to provide some hope of continuing permanency for this base?

Mr. Pearson: I can assure my hon. friend that every aspect of this question is being considered exhaustively. We realize the importance of this matter to the island and we realize we should do everything possible. This is a very complicated problem and we are trying to find a solution.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STEPS TO DEAL WITH UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Labour and at the same time extend my congratulations and good wishes upon his appointment. Has he already undertaken to make a special effort to assault the high unemployment situation in the Atlantic provinces, which has now reached nearly 11 per cent?

Hon. B. S. Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Queens for his very kind remarks, which are very much appreciated. I can only point out to him the success we have had in reducing the high unemployment rate in the maritimes since we took office. I hope we will be as successful in the coming months.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the new Minister without Portfolio whether he will be piloting the new labour bill, C-186, through the house.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I will be fulfilling the functions normally carried on by the Minister of Labour. If he is back in time I am sure he will have this honour and privilege.

COAL

ROUTE TO BE FOLLOWED BY EXPORTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether his communications with Kaiser Mines Limited have progressed to the point that he can now report to the house on whether coal from British Columbia for Japan will be carried to the coast over an all-Canadian route?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I cannot make a specific report, Mr. Speaker. I did meet with them on Thursday, I believe, and underlined the government's position, which is that the coal should go via an all-Canadian route. They were very sympathetic to our point of view. Negotiations are continuing and I hope it will be possible to make a clear announcement in the not too distant future.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he can give any information to the house to the effect that all or part of this coal will be carried in bottoms owned by a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway, namely Canadian Pacific Steamship Lines?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not believe this question should be asked at this time.

RURAL DEVELOPMENT

NOVA SCOTIA—REPORT OF ARDA TASK FORCE ON EASTERN COUNTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. It relates to an answer he gave in the house on February 1. Can the minister now advise whether he would be willing to release to interested parties, including the department of agriculture of the province of Nova Scotia, the report of ARDA task force on the eastern counties?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to that answer. If at all possible the documents will be released.

Mr. MacEwan: Will the minister advise when?

Mr. Sauvé: I have no objection to releasing them but we are not the only party involved.

AIR TRANSPORT

LEASING OF AIRCRAFT WITH NON-CANADIAN CREWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport in relation to an inquiry I directed to the Prime Minister last Friday concerning the accident at Vancouver involving a Boeing 707. Will he inform the house whether the government intends to adopt a policy insisting upon dry leasing of aircraft by Canadian carriers when the need arises so that the crews flying them will be Canadian?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, under existing conditions arrangements for the wet lease of foreign aircraft by Canadian commercial air carriers have been approved by the air transport committee, and by the Canadian Transport Commission in a very limited number of instances upon demonstration of an urgent short term requirement for aircraft necessitating such arrangements and upon the committee being satisfied in each case that suitable aircraft are unavailable from Canadian sources. The need for such leases will diminish on receipt of new aircraft now on order by Canadian air carriers.

Mr. Nielsen: In view of the number of representations by the Canadian Airline Pilots' Association recommending dry leasing of such aircraft, is the government reconsidering its policy in this regard to give effect to these representations?

Mr. Hellyer: There have been no formal communications in this regard of which I am aware, at least none in writing. I understand there have been some verbal communications. Naturally we would be willing to reconsider the policy but there are certain reciprocal rights with the United States going back many years, of which I am sure my hon. friend is aware. As I stated, however, the question becomes more and more academic as the requirements of Canadian carriers to lease either wet or dry are reduced by the availability of new aircraft.

THE SENATE

INQUIRY AS TO FILLING OF VACANCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he will be filling vacancies in the other place before the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

PUBLICATION OF INSTRUCTIONS FOR U.S. DRAFT DODGERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Justice I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether the government is making any examination of books or pamphlets published at the University of Toronto, as reported in a news broadcast this morning, purporting to outline methods by which United States draft dodgers can and should come to Canada. Will the government make such an examination in order to establish whether there is a publication in Canada which recommends the breaking of the laws of Canada or the United States?

Hon. L. T. Pennell (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that officials of the department keep themselves abreast of such developments, and I am sure they will look into this matter.

IMMIGRATION

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING ADMISSIONS TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Has he received representations from Quebec provincial authorities with regard to the admission of immigrants to the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already informed the house that I shall meet with Quebec's secretary, Mr. Gabias, in order to discuss that problem.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH RESPECT TO AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's extensive fan mail regarding Bill C-186, would he be prepared to table all such correspondence and communications prior to consideration of that bill?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is a way of getting that correspondence, namely by putting a request on the order paper.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. When I inquired this morning for copies of Bill C-186 I was informed that unless the minister gave authorization there would be no more printed. There have been two additional printings but there is not a single copy of the bill available. I would like to inquire whether and when further copies of Bill C-186 will be available?

Mr. Pearson: I will look into this matter, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure whether the printing of the bill is the responsibility of the government, but I would certainly hate to think that my hon. friends cannot get a copy of it. Perhaps it is so popular it is out of print.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Someone has burned them.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, along the same lines as previous questions. I believe there is a shortage of copies of Bill C-195. Would the Prime Minister investigate that matter also?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the suggestions have all been noted by the appropriate authorities.

Patent Act—Trade Marks Act

PUBLIC SERVICE

REPORTED RECRUITING OF SENIOR OFFICERS IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the federal government recruiting for the public service non-Canadians from outside the country and, if so, why?

Hon. E. J. Benson (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question was answered by the Secretary of State last week.

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF PRESCRIPTION DRUGS

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-190, to amend the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): The minister of high prices.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, members of the house may recall that on June 16, 1967, during the debate on the estimates of the Department of the Registrar General, I indicated that it was my intention to introduce legislation in this session to implement some of the major recommendations of the special committee of the House of Commons on drug cost and prices.

Public concern about this subject has been intense and sustained. There are obvious reasons for this. During any given interval of time, the incidence of disease is far from uniform, and those who pay the largest drug bills are, because of their disability, likely to have incomes substantially below the average. Not only, however, is the incidence of illness in the population uneven, but it is quite unpredictable so that consumers cannot budget for a situation in which they may have to assume the burden of heavy drug costs. Beyond all this, health is naturally a value in itself. It is also an important determinant of the productivity of human resources in the economy.

Evidence of the high level of public concern about the supply of drugs in Canada may be found in the number and character of official investigations dealing with the quality, cost and prices of drugs which have taken place.

In 1958, the combines branch began a general inquiry into the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs following informal complaints about the high cost of drugs. In 1963, after public hearings from coast to coast, the restrictive trade practices commission published its report concerning the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs.

In 1964, after extensive hearings, the royal commission on health services, commonly known as the Hall commission, published its report which included many recommendations to the government in connection with the drug industry. And finally, last April, after extensive hearings, the special committee of the House of Commons on drug costs and prices presented its final report.

As members are likely aware, similar concern has been demonstrated by government agencies in other countries like the United States and Great Britain.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I want at this stage to extend my own congratulations to the chairman of the House of Commons committee on drug prices, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley), who is sitting in the chamber this afternoon, and the members of his committee who spent many long days and hours reviewing this subject of prime importance to the Canadian people, who gave the situation a thorough review and contributed to public debate and public education on this subject. This committee has reported to the house with many constructive suggestions, some of which are being implemented in the present legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: There is another vote for you.

Mr. Turner: I want to set forth the principles of this bill with some care because of the fundamental importance, I believe, of what I am laying before the house and because of the complicated nature of the legislation. Evidence was put before the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and the royal commission on health services, as well as the special committee of the House of Commons, which demonstrated that the price of drugs to consumers in Canada was much higher than comparable prices in most western countries other than the United States.

All three inquiries concluded that Canadian drug prices are unduly high. All agreed that no single measure by itself would bring about a significant reduction in the price that the consumer must pay for drugs, and that a number of co-ordinated steps must be taken.

To illustrate these conclusions I want, first of all, to deal with a number of international comparisons of drug prices. In its report published earlier this year, the special committee of the house indicated that it had decided to assure itself that the situation had remained more or less unchanged since the reports of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission and the Hall commission. It therefore checked with reliable sources the cost of certain drugs at the retail level in Canada, in the United States and in six European countries. Twelve of the most commonly used and important drugs were selected.

I have in my hand a composite table showing the results of the comparison. If the house would allow me, I prefer not to take up the time of the house to read it but would ask to be allowed to table these figures as an appendix to Hansard.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the information to which the minister referred be printed as an appendix to Hansard or that it be part of the text?

Mr. Churchill: Part of the text.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

*The special committee noted that the U.S. prices for chloromycetin were reduced almost 50 per cent after this price was quoted due to the expiration of the patent.

Mr. Turner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. With this evidence, the special committee confirmed the previous findings on public record and said that it had come to the inescapable conclusion that drug prices in Canada are in effect high and that every fair and reasonable step should be taken to reduce them.

In the course of the proceedings before the special committee the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada also produced a table setting out an international comparison of drug prices. I will be grateful if the house would allow me to table these figures and make them part of the text in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Turner: A reasonably representative selection of 17 drugs for comparison was made by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association. In its report the special committee said that on the face of the statistics it appeared again that Canadian drug prices were amongst the highest of the countries selected for comparison.

In the same proceedings the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe) presented to the committee a list of 58 drugs the retail price of which was from 3 to 20 times as high in Canada as in the United Kingdom. The accuracy of these prices was accepted by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association.

The special committee thus confirmed the result of what it called a thorough and comprehensive comparison between Canadian drug prices and those in other countries from the survey that had been undertaken earlier by the combines branch of the then department of justice and which led the director of investigation and research to conclude that prices of drugs in Canada are among the highest in the world.

One of the comparisons placed before the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission by the combines branch set out prices to retailers for a number of important drugs in anywhere from 7 to 14 countries. Again, if I may have the indulgence of the house I would like to table these figures and have them included as part of the text in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Turner: I shall not refer to it further except to say that the prices in Canada range from two and a half to eight times the lowest prices available elsewhere.

In order to have the most up to date comparative prices at this time, I have obtained from the same sources as were used by the Harley committee the current prices of the same drugs to the retailer in Canada and the current prices in the United States and in the same five European countries. This will be the last table I intend to produce, and I would ask for the indulgence of the house to have the text printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Turner: This last table shows that while Canadian prices have decreased, reflecting no doubt the abolition of the sales tax following the budget of the Minister of Finance effective September 1 this year, the situation remains basically the same. In general, the Canadian prices are substantially higher than the lowest prices available elsewhere.

I should now like to leave the subject of international comparisons of drug prices and turn to other evidence. There is one sector of the drug market in Canada where a greater degree of competition exists. I am speaking of the market provided by hospitals and other institutional buyers such as government agencies. As the special committee of the house pointed out, many hospitals use a type of drug formulary which allows them to buy on a tendering system. In these circumstances the hospital will call for tenders for a particular drug without specifying its brand name. As a result, where there are several companies producing different brands of the same drug they are compelled to reduce their usual price to hospitals if they want to be sure of getting the business.

In its report the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission included evidence supplied by the province of Manitoba in connection with a tender call for drugs for use in mental hospitals in that province. The quotations for equal quantities of the same type of drug showed a variation between high and low bidders of 194 per cent, 221 per cent, 279 per cent and 491 per cent.

Although there is much more evidence, I shall only refer to one other piece of evidence on this subject. Evidence was given to the royal commission on health services that prodnisone, a cortisone preparation used in arthritic and asthmatic conditions, sold for $17 per 100 units to the retail pharmacists in Saskatchewan at the same time that it was being sold at $1.95 per 100 units to hospitals and government departments.

Now I wish to refer to some specific examples which illustrate that there is often little relation between the cost and the selling price of patented drugs. These examples were part of the evidence before the special committee. The first one relates to the drug stelazine. During the inquiry conducted by the combines branch in 1960 the Canadian company concerned was importing stelazine tablets from its parent company in the United States at a laid down cost of $1.32 per 1,000 tablets. The selling price to druggists, deducting the sales tax, was $67.60 cents per 1,000 tablets. Another example was the drug trancopal. The tablets were imported by the Canadian subsidiary at the laid down cost of $3.88 per 1,000. Packaging and other costs amounted to 24 cents, making the total factory cost $4.12. These tablets were sold to druggists at $70.50 and to hospitals at prices ranging from $47.16 to $63.51 depending on the quantity purchased. By the time they reached the consumer these tablets which cost $4.12 already packaged at the factory in final form were sold for $105.

The fact that prices of certain drugs, particularly patent drugs, are high is further illustrated by the price declines which occur when a patent expires. There are not too many examples of this because the real drug explosion started with the discovery of the broad spectrum antibiotics in the late 1940's, so that not many patents have expired, the length of the patent being 17 years. The patent for the drug terramycin recently expired in England, and in April, 1966 Imperial Chemical Industries started producing and selling this drug under its own brand name at one-third the price charged by the manufacturer which held its patent. United States prices for chloromycetin have recently been reduced almost 50 per cent with the expiry of the patent on that drug. These examples demonstrate dramatically the central importance of patents as a factor in the high cost of drugs.

I am not for one moment alleging that the high price of drugs is a result of sinister behaviour by the industry. The drug industry operates within a given economic framework and members of the drug industry, like rational businessmen anywhere, have responded to the profit opportunities provided by that framework. However, I am suggesting that where parliament is not satisfied with the result of operations within a given framework, it is surely up to parliament to alter the ground rules.

Let me take a moment to describe the framework in which the drug industry operates. First, the demand for ethical drugs is determined largely by the incidence of sickness and the writing of prescriptions by doctors. Because he must follow the doctor's advice, the patient is unable to purchase any but the specified drug. Ordinarily the busy physician is not price conscious. Often he may not even know the prices of different brands of drugs and therefore he gives the factor of price little consideration when he prescribes a medicine. There is little opportunity for the consumer to switch to something else if he does not like the price. It is true that the consumer could make some savings by shopping around with his prescription, because prices do vary at the retail level. Often, however, quite understandably the worried patient does not do so. More important, as I have said, if the prescription calls for a basically expensive drug, there is nothing the consumer can do about that.

On the supply side of the market, the framework in which the industry operates is such that there are high barriers to the entry of newcomers who might inject new and more vigorous competition by importing the basic drugs for processing and packaging in Canada or by importing dosage forms. The most important of these barriers arise as a result of the interaction of the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act, the customs tariff, the very intensive and costly program of marketing and promotion undertaken by the established firms, and the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act.

It is not surprising in these circumstances that the major drug firms have not on the whole found price competition necessary. In many cases they have been able to use patents to prevent the entry by others into the production of individual drugs. They have substituted for price competition the development of minor differences in the product and vigorous sales promotion of these small differences. They have also used vigorous sales promotion to minimize the impact of such price competition as might be offered by smaller firms. The vast bulk of advertising done by the major firms tends by its sheer magnitude to obscure the very existence of small sellers. In the case of patented drugs, no price competition need ever develop during the life of the patent.

We are now in a position to explain why the level of Canadian drug prices is amongst the highest in the world. Because of the heavily protected position enjoyed by the producers, drug pricing is based chiefly on demand. The policy of charging what the traffic will bear can be followed. This means that drug prices will be the highest in those countries where the per capita income is the highest. This relationship was confirmed by an analysis presented by the Canadian Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada to the special committee under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley). The higher the income, the higher the price that can be obtained.

The alternative explanation that drugs are sold at lower prices in foreign countries because production costs are lower there does not stand up to factual examination. It is quite common to see a drug that is manufactured in the United States and exported to a European country selling much more cheaply in that country than in the United States. Since the demand and supply characteristics of the market tend to rule out price competition in the Canadian drug industry, except in sales to institutions, rivalry between drug firms takes the form of concentration on the development of minor differences in products and of sales promotion. Competition is, therefore, cost increasing. The more intense the competition, the higher costs are driven. Since there are no downward pressures on prices, there is no downward pressure on costs. Rivalry between the firms requires more detail men, more advertising and so on. The resulting higher costs are used to justify higher prices. The evidence submitted to the special committee of the house by the Canadian Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association showed that virtually the same amount was spent by the industry on sales promotion as on manufacturing the product. There were 49 members of the association who employed 1,799 detail men, and the association estimated there was one detail man for every ten physicians in Canada.

It is understandable, therefore, that the special committee of the House of Commons, as well as the other inquiries to which I have referred, came to the conclusion that the funds spent on promotional activity by the industry are excessive. The government now has a program which it calculates will bring about a reduction in the price of drugs to the consumer. The objectives of the government's program are to bring about the reduction in the price of drugs to the consumer by a number of steps which are expected to have a cumulative effect. The steps must be consistent both with the supply to the Canadian market of quality, safe, efficacious drugs in which the medical profession has confidence and with the existence of a viable, competitive Canadian drug industry. The program, therefore, has three objectives: lower prices, safe drugs and a viable domestic drug industry.

The program may be summarized in this way: The first step is the one which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) has already taken in removing the sales tax from drugs and reducing the customs duty from 20 per cent to 15 per cent as well as substantially narrowing the application of the dumping duty to imports of drugs.

The second step is the one we are now bringing before the house. It is proposed to stimulate price competition among sellers of patented and trademarked drugs through reducing protection against imports which is provided by the Patent and Trade Marks Acts.

As a third step, it is proposed that a program be undertaken to provide objective information to the medical profession about the properties and prices of available drugs so that prescribing physicians will be aware of the price differences between competing drug products of demonstrated quality, safety and effectiveness.

Fourth, it is proposed that steps be taken to strengthen the small sector of the industry that manufactures and sells lower price prescription drugs.

Fifth, consultation with the provinces is planned to tackle the problem of reducing the cost of retail distribution of drugs. This subject falls primarily within provincial jurisdiction.

While each element in the program will be effective on its own, Mr. Speaker, no single step by itself can be depended upon to have a substantial effect on prices. These measures are cumulative and we shall therefore be proceeding with the program as a package.

I want to make it clear to the house, sir, why the amendments to the Patent and Trade Marks Acts are in our opinion necessary. The tariff changes announced by the Minister of Finance should assist in stimulating price competition. However, as the law now stands patents may be used as an absolute barrier to imports and thus may frustrate the benefits of tariff reduction. The effect of removing the sales tax could also be frustrated. The special committee of the house concluded that without more effective operation of competitive forces than now exist in the drug industry in Canada, the only certain result of the removal of the sales tax would be a reduction in cost to the manufacturer. In actual fact, most drug producers appear to have passed on the bulk of the sales tax removed, and I am glad to acknowledge this. Unless more real competition can be introduced, we can have no guarantee prices will not move upward again and absorb the tax saving.

As hon. members know, the Patent Act creates a temporary monopoly in the patented product or process for the inventor with the object of encouraging invention, change and innovation and of making the fruits of that invention available in due course to the public at large. The granting of a patent to the inventor or his assignee gives him the power to prevent others from making, using or selling the patented product or process for a certain period of years. Under Canadian law, patents relating to food and drugs have been placed in a special category. In the first place, the act provides that in the case of an invention relating to a substance prepared or manufactured by a chemical process and intended for food or medicine, the patent does not include the product itself unless prepared by the patented process. This is the present law and it has been the law since 1923. Any person, therefore, is free to produce, import and sell the same product as long as it is not made by the patented process.

In the second place, under the present law provision is made for the granting of a compulsory licence of a patent for invention intended for or capable of being used for the production of food or medicine. When an application is made, the commissioner of patents must grant a licence, which is limited to the use of the invention for manufacturing a food or medicine, unless he sees good reason to the contrary. The commissioner, in so doing, fixes the amount of royalties payable by the licensee for the use of the patent, having regard to the desirability of making the food or medicine available to the public at the lowest possible price consistent with giving to the inventor due reward for the research leading to the invention. This is the present law.

The full privileges of patent protection, therefore, have not been granted to drugs. The Canadian Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association has referred to this as discrimination. I think it is more accurate to suggest that parliament, for over 40 years, has recognized the important principles of public policy involved, has weighed them and has decided that in this particular case the immediate welfare and interest of the general public is paramount and private interests of the industry, as well as whatever inducement to research the patent would represent, are to be subordinated to the public interest.

I think it is worthy of note that less than 5 per cent of the patents granted by Canada on drug processes are issued to residents of this country. Thus the patent system is an expensive way of stimulating inventive activity in Canada. The government can and does provide more direct and effective inducements to research in the form of statutory grants made available through the Department of Industry. These grants are made available only to the firms which are actually willing to do research in Canada. Patents, on the other hand, are given equally to those who are prepared to do research in Canada and those who are not prepared to do such research.

Compulsory licences to manufacture under section 41, subsection 3, of the Patent Act have not been sought in substantial numbers. In many cases it is apparently uneconomic to manufacture in Canada the basic drug to which the patent relates. This is borne out by the fact that the existing firms, including the major international firms, import most of their active ingredients. In fact, it is my information that 85 per cent of the manufacturing in Canada does not relate to the manufacture of the basic chemical or ingredient that goes into the drug but involves the conversion of the basic chemical that is imported into the final dosage form, whether it be a pill, tube, or whatever form it takes.

The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada has stated that "it has not proved economically feasible to develop a pharmaceutical chemical industry itself, primarily because of the limited size of the Canadian market." Those words are the association's. I think there are other factors that probably bear on the situation. These include the high promotion costs which would subsequently be entailed, opposition to and appeals against licence applications which would have to be anticipated, and the live and let live attitudes on the part of the established international firms.

It is instructive that compulsory licences have been obtained and exploited chiefly by wholly Canadian firms. The Harley committee found that competition over a wide range of products has not developed through compulsory licences to manufacture. The alternative stimulus to competition, namely, the importation of drugs ranging from the basic chemical to the final dosage form, has not been given an opportunity to work in the Canadian market because the commissioner of patents has held that he is not authorized to issue a compulsory licence for import of a drug under section 41 (3) of the Patent Act. The fundamental purpose of this bill is to amend the Patent Act to provide beyond any doubt that the authority of the commissioner of patents to issue compulsory licences for patented drugs shall extend to the import of drugs in all forms.

I want to make it clear that this is not such a novel or unorthodox proposal as some industry spokesmen would have us believe. First, it is at least arguable in law that the commissioner now has authority to issue compulsory licences for the importation of the active ingredients. The amendment will eliminate any uncertainty in the present law. Second, one of the main recommendations of the royal commission on patents—the Ilsley commission—was that the Patent Act should be amended to prevent patents from being used as a non-tariff barrier to trade. In other words, the Ilsley commission recommended the abolition of patents in so far as those patents acted as a substitute for a tariff. Third, as the special committee of the House of Commons pointed out, the section in the United Kingdom legislation of 1949 which corresponds to our section 41 (3) authorizes compulsory licences for imports, and this fact does not seem to have held back the growth of the British drug companies. Fourth, in the United States in circumstances in which a drug patent covers only the process and not the product made by the process, importation of the product does not constitute infringement.

The special committee of the House of Commons recommended that the commissioner of patents should grant a licence for import only when he considers it is in the public interest to do so. At present the commissioner is required to issue a compulsory licence, as the statute says, "unless he sees good reason to the contrary".

I want to deal with some of the recommendations made by the special committee of the house so as to show where, in certain details, we are departing from those recommendations.

This recommendation of the special committee introduces a new principle which would tend to restrict the issue of licences to import. It would place on the commissioner the difficult burden of determining the public interest. Accordingly, the existing principle of licensing, that is, the issue of a licence unless the commissioner sees good reason to the contrary, will be maintained by the amendment and extended to the compulsory licensing of imports.

Another recommendation of the special committee was that "the patent commissioner, in assessing royalities on the granting of a compulsory licence, shall consider that the patentee who discovers and initially develops the drug in Canada should have higher royalties than the drug manufacturer who discovers new drugs outside Canada". While I have a good deal of sympathy with the purpose of this recommendation, we are unable to adopt it, particularly because discriminatory royalties would be in breach of the Canadian government's obligations under the international patent convention.

Under the United Kingdom legislation the comptroller, in assessing the royalties for a compulsory license, takes into account the patentee's expenditures on research and development and on the promotion of the patented drug. It has been urged that this or a similar formula should be imported into the Canadian legislation. There are a number of compelling arguments against this but to save time I shall mention only three of them.

First, in the United Kingdom the patent is on the product as such, whereas in Canada the patent is on the process, or on the product when made by the patented process. Since the patent does not extend to the drug substance as such in Canada, the key factor being the process, the supreme court has held that the promotion and other costs associated with the finished drug are irrelevant in setting the royalty. It seems obvious that in principle the royalties should be related in some way to the invention, that is, to what is patented. Not only is this logical but it is the established practice in Canada with respect to other industries.

Second, the cost of research, or a contribution with respect thereto, may be recovered not only by royalty payments on the patents but also by the repatriation of profits earned by the Canadian subsidiary. While prices in Canada remain so much higher than they are in many other countries, the argument in favour of an increased research contribution by the Canadian consumer is not persuasive.

Third, the adoption of the principle followed in Britain could frustrate or at least impair the downward pressure on prices we seek to achieve.

The special committee of the House of Commons expressed the opinion that there is no doubt that the manufacturer who introduces a new drug should be allowed a certain time to promote the drug and establish his position in the market following appropriate clinical testing, so that for a period of time at least he retains his monopoly position. However, the new drug regulations of the food and drug directorate in effect provide a monopoly for five years. The committee felt this was an adequate period for recouping a reasonable return on research, and I agree with their view.

The special committee of the House of Commons also expressed the opinion in connection with compulsory licensing that difficulties can be anticipated from artificial delay that may be introduced by the patentee during the course of prosecution of the application which could lengthen enormously the period between the date of application and the date the patent issues. The monetary rewards to a patentee as a result of delay in the compulsory licensing application, the committee said, can be substantial. The special committee therefore recommended an amendment to provide that if the grant of a compulsory licence takes longer than 12 months the commissioner may issue the licence subject to revocation if any appeal against the issue of the licence is upheld. Subsections 5 to 11 inclusive are intended to give effect to the principle which the special committee recommended should be adopted.

The special committee also recommended that the grant of a licence should be subject to a report by the food and drug directorate to the effect that the applicant had satisfied the directorate that he met the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act. However, the food and drug directorate will enforce the regulations relating to safety and quality irrespective of the grant of a licence. The question of safety is therefore more properly left to the food and drug directorate than to the patent commissioner. It is, however, important that the directorate should have early notice of any application for a licence. The commissioner will, therefore, be required to give notice of the application to the food and drug directorate in order that it may take any necessary action. Moreover, the commissioner of patents will be concerned as in the past to screen out fly by night operators and to deal only with responsible applicants.

The special committee also recommended that the rules under the Patent Act be amended to permit the commissioner to seek and receive outside independent expert advice on the matter of the public interest. However, authority to obtain expert evidence already exists under section 4 (2) of the Patent Act. Thus no new provision is required.

The special committee recommended that the importer of drugs under compulsory licence should pay the cost of the food and drug directorate's services outside of Canada made necessary by the proposed import. It is our feeling that this would be discriminatory in that such costs are not borne by the resident manufacturers or by other importers of drugs, whether patented or not. Moreover, it is questionable whether this would be consistent with the GATT and other international trade agreements. It is not, therefore, proposed in this legislation.

[Mr. Turner.]

• (4:20 p.m.)

The special committee pointed out that under present law the Canadian subsidiary of a foreign parent company can prevent the importation of drugs into Canada if these bear trade marks identical with those owned and used by it. This, of course, rules out imports of brand name drugs which may be selling at lower prices outside Canada and which, in fact, may in many instances be identical with those drugs manufactured by the subsidiary from bulk active ingredients imported from the parent corporation.

The special committee noted that prior to 1953 a trade mark could not be assigned or transferred to another corporation, even a subsidiary corporation, without at the same time transferring the good will of the business. Under the Trade Marks Act, 1953, this situation was reversed and subsidiaries or licensees became legally entitled to use the trade mark of their parent corporation under a "registered user" system. The subsidiary, for example, provided it operated strictly under a registered agreement with its parent corporation, obtained equal rights to the trade mark of the parent.

In representations made to the joint committee, the Patent and Trade Mark Institute of Canada expressed the opinion that if the Canadian company does not own a Canadian registration but merely uses the mark as a "registered user" thereof, the trade mark being actually owned by the foreign related company, sale of the trade marked wares imported from the foreign related company would not constitute an infringement of the registration. It appears, however, that a court decision of 1960, Remington Rand Limited v. Trans-World Metal Company Limited, clearly gives the owner of a Canadian trade mark the right to exclude trade marked goods manufactured by related companies outside Canada.

It is proposed, therefore, to amend the Trade Marks Act to provide that no infringement of a trade mark can be claimed where drugs, bearing the trade mark of and manufactured by a related company in a foreign country, are imported into Canada. This is a recommendation of the special committee of the House of Commons and of the Royal Commission on Health Services. The amendment will apply in the situation where a foreign parent and a Canadian subsidiary sell a particular drug product under the same trade mark both in Canada and in the foreign country. The amendment will permit a third party to import the drug into Canada when it has been manufactured by the foreign parent. It will not allow the importer to abuse the trade mark or deceive customers. Such imports are likely to occur only when the price in Canada is substantially above the price in the foreign country.

At the present time patents may be invoked to prevent the import of patented drugs either in the form of the fine chemicals or in dosage forms. The proposed amendments to the Patent Act will facilitate the import of drugs in the form of fine chemicals. However, the sale of imported dosage forms could still be prevented under the provisions of the Trade Marks Act. In order to facilitate the import of dosage forms it is therefore necessary to adopt both the patent and trade mark proposals.

I want to talk now about the question of quality and safety. As I said earlier, this is of paramount importance to the Canadian public. Assurance of a high level of quality and safety of drugs is of prime importance to the public interest. A patent, however, has nothing whatever to do with quality. We should not confuse the purposes of the Patent Act with the purposes of the Food and Drugs Act. Some industry submissions would have us believe that only a patented or trade marked drug carries the assurance of high quality and safety. This is simply not the case. Assurance of quality depends, first, on the integrity of the particular manufacturer and, second, upon the controls exercised by the food and drug directorate. The patent itself confers no guarantee of quality, nor is it an essential condition of quality. There is no evidence whatever that drugs which have never been patented or on which patents have expired are any less safe than patented drugs.

Under the proposed amendment, where the preparation of the dosage form continues to be carried out in Canada, the situation presents no new elements and therefore no greater difficulties than exist at present. On the other hand, if the drug is imported in final dosage form as a pill, serum or in a tube, evidence must be available to indicate that all requirements of the Food and Drugs Act and regulations have been met. This may entail inspection of the foreign plants in which they are produced. In any instances where these requirements are not met, the product can of course be excluded from the Canadian market, regardless of whether a patent has been granted or license issued.

The food and drug directorate already has responsibility for all drugs on the Canadian market, including those imported from abroad. To the extent that the program increases the volume of imports, there will be an increase in the work load of the directorate. The problems will, however, differ only in degree, and the directorate believes that, with the additional resources that are being put into place, it can continue to discharge its responsibility in relation to quality and safety.

In its report the special committee said that unfortunately the large international drug manufacturers often give the impression that the products of small drug companies are not safe. This was challenged not only by the small drug manufacturers themselves but also by purchasing agents of some hospitals and government departments who have ordered and continue to order the products of the small companies.

[Translation]

It has to be recognized that no matter how much opportunity for price competition may be opened up, unless the physician has confidence in the manufacturer of the drug and in the measures taken to ensure the purity, safety and effectiveness of the product, he will not prescribe it for his patient. It is, therefore, important that full attention be given to the necessity of building up confidence on the part of physicians in the quality of available competing products. Lacking the time or resources to make a comparison between the properties and prices of competing products, the doctor prescribes those drugs he has heard of, has read of and has some knowledge of. Being a cautious man, he prescribes the drug manufactured by a company known to him. He may or may not know what the drug costs, and he may or may not realize that there are lower cost alternatives on the market.

It is, therefore, essential to the success of the whole program that the physician develop confidence in and prescribe lower-priced drugs when he is satisfied that they will adequately serve the needs of the patient. The special committee of the House of Commons accordingly recommended that the food and drug directorate should publish periodically an informative bulletin to the medical profession with detailed information on drug properties, action and prices. The directorate is making plans to carry out this recommendation.

[English]

Within the Canadian drug industry there exists a group of firms whose business consists chiefly of the manufacture of lower priced drugs. This sector comprises over 100 smaller manufacturers, mostly Canadian owned, which together account for only some 15 per cent by value of the market, about $30 million at factory prices.

The dissemination of information on comparative properties and prices, as I have just mentioned, is designed to stimulate the demand for lower priced drugs, including the products which the smaller firms manufacture or are capable of manufacturing. The changes in the anti-dumping regulations and in the Patent Act will also open up additional opportunities to them. However, before they can take full advantage of the new situation it will be necessary for some of them at least to regroup or reorganize into units of greater strength and capability if they are to compete effectively for a significant share of the retail market for their lower-priced drug products. Plans to strengthen the competitive position of this sector of the industry are now under consideration and will be announced in due course.

While attention in the various studies I have mentioned has been focused on the price of drugs at the manufacturing level, it is widely recognized that a further basic cause of the high price of drugs lies in the high cost of retail distribution. In the submission of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association Incorporated to the special committee it was stated that in 1964 an average pharmacy dispensed some 30 prescriptions each day of the year, the sales from which represented only 27.4 per cent of the gross sales of the pharmacy. According to the special committee, these figures and others presented to it clearly indicated that the average pharmacist in an average community could not hope to survive unless he also operated his pharmacy as a small goods retail outlet. The special committee concluded there were indications that serious inefficiency existed as a result of too many drug stores serving too few people. It added that inefficiency leads to higher prices.

The special committee also noted that the provincial pharmaceutical associations appear to exercise great control over their pharmacist members through regulations and standards of ethics. In considering what might be accomplished in reducing prices at the drug store level the special committee had to keep in mind the division of powers between the federal and provincial governments. As I have previously told the house, I am planning early visits to the provincial capitals to examine jointly with provincial leaders the problems of the consumer and methods of solving them on a broad base. These visits will, I hope, lead up to and prepare the ground for a federal-provincial conference on consumer affairs. In these discussions the retail distribution of drugs will have a high priority. The federal program which I have been outlining is designed to tackle high drug prices at their origin, that is, at the manufacturers' level. But it is essential, and this is our intention, to initiate action at the level of distribution through discussions with the provinces.

I should like to analyse briefly our reasons for feeling this program will be effective. I believe there are a number of reasons which justify confidence that, taken as a whole, the program I have outlined will be successful in reducing the price of drugs. In the first place, there is overwhelming evidence that there is scope for substantial reductions. I have earlier referred to the fact that many of the international companies operating in Canada sell drugs abroad at much lower prices, and since this is a persistent phenomenon it cannot be argued that this is unprofitable for them. I have referred to the tremendous spread between the manufactured cost of some drug products and the manufacturers' selling price. I have referred to the fact that the selling costs of this industry are as great as its manufacturing costs, and I am not aware of any other important industry where selling costs represent such a high proportion of the final price. I shall refer in a moment to the evidence that profits in the Canadian drug industry have continued year after year at a level twice as high as manufacturing generally.

In the second place, in the one sector of the market where competitive forces are sometimes able to operate, namely, in sales to hospitals and other institutions, some drugs are sold at half the price or less than that charged to the retail trade. In the third place, we know that in other jurisdictions, such as Britain and the United States, when important patents have expired there has been a dramatic fall in prices. In the fourth place, even under the present provisions for compulsory licensing, in the limited number of cases where new producers have been able to enter the market, price reductions have occurred. In the fifth place, while the existing provisions for compulsory licensing have been taken advantage of primarily by small Canadian companies who have selected certain products which it was practicable to manufacture completely in Canada, the possibility of importing the active ingredients under compulsory licence should encourage the small companies to expand their activities substantially. In turn this may induce the large international companies to broaden their lines through compulsory licensing in order to preserve their shares of the market. There are indications that some international drug companies are likely to seek compulsory licences to import if these amendments are passed by parliament.

Finally, members must certainly be aware that the industry itself anticipates that these measures will put a substantial downward pressure on prices. For example, in its presentation before the special committee of the House of Commons Hoffmann-La Roche commented: "The mischief for Roche lies not so much in what business would actually be lost to copiers but what happens to the price level as a result of their entry".

Although, as I have indicated, the most important effect of the patent proposals may be to permit importation of the basic chemicals, there will be some products the demand for which will be too small to justify the preparation of dosage forms in Canada. Provision for the importation of drugs in dosage forms is, therefore, important. It is in connection with the possibility of importation of dosage forms that the proposed change in the Trade Marks Act is necessary. Taken together, the patent and trade mark proposals should have the effect of ensuring that prices in Canada are brought more into line with world prices. Importations will occur, however, only to the extent that high prices in Canada make such importations economically feasible. Faced with the likelihood of import competition the established industry can be expected to reduce its prices to avert it.

I should like to consider briefly the impact of these proposals upon the drug industry as we see it. The latest census of manufacturers by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics taken in 1965 lists 162 manufacturers of pharmaceuticals and medicines employing 11,137 persons. Total manufacturing and related operations by themselves accounted for the employment of less than 4,400 persons. Administrative and office employees numbered slightly more than 3,800. There were over 2,800 persons engaged in sales and distribution. The submission by the Alberta government to the special committee pointed out that wages and salaries paid by drug firms represent only about 30 per cent of the value of output, while in most industries it is closer to 70 per cent.

Canadian drug manufacturers both manufacture and import. There is no substantial fine chemicals industry in Canada and the basic drugs are therefore mainly imported. I said the figure was roughly 85 per cent, that is, the percentage of the basic chemicals which is imported. In many cases final dosage forms are also imported by subsidiaries of the manufacturers. The manufacturing activity in Canada is largely a matter of converting bulk drugs into dosage forms and packaging and marketing them.

It is not possible to predict the magnitude of additional imports which may result from the extension of compulsory licensing to cover importation of drugs. Nor can reliable estimates be made of the proportions of these additional imports which will take the form of finished drugs on the one hand and of ingredients on the other.

There is no obvious reason why compulsory licensing of imports should significantly change the present relationship between imports of finished drugs and imports of ingredients. The same amount of manufacturing should continue to be done in Canada though it may be rearranged in terms of the competitive forces involved. At the present time it is more difficult for potential importers to obtain supplies of low-priced dosage forms than it is for them to obtain supplies of low-priced chemicals. The patent and trade mark proposals will not make the availability of low-priced dosage forms any easier. Where the potential importer has access to a supply of low-priced dosage forms, the patent and trade mark proposals will, of course, make it easier for him to sell them on the Canadian market. If importation takes the form of basic chemicals, this will have an effect on those few firms which manufacture such chemicals in Canada but this is a very small segment of the pharmaceutical industry. Such imports cannot substantially affect employment in the drug industry in Canada since at most they will simply result in other firms doing what is being done by the present patent holders. To the extent that this occurs, it will at most shift operations from one plant to another.

There is every reason to expect that Canadian branches or subsidiaries of large international firms will themselves seek compulsory lincences and begin producing dosage forms of drugs in Canada which they are now precluded from producing because of patent restrictions. This would mean an increase in competition among the large and well established firms. To the extent that some patent holders have in the past imported finished dosage forms rather than basic chemicals, the patent proposals may have a tendency to increase the amount of manufacture in Canada.

While the proposed steps are designed to inject real price competition into the drug field with the expectation that prices of drugs will fall, nevertheless the established firms in the Canadian drug industry will still be afforded substantial protection. This arises out of the 15 per cent m.f.n. tariff, the "new drug" regulations which I shall explain in a moment, the sales promotional activities of the established firms and the remaining patent and trade mark protection.

• (4:40 p.m.)

We are not abolishing the Trade Marks Act and we are not abolishing the Patent Act. Neither should it be forgotten that the average rate of return on investment over the past 12 years in the Canadian drug industry was 20 per cent for all drug manufacturers compared with about 10 per cent for all manufacturing. There is thus in our opinion a substantial cushion for the established drug firm in adjusting to the new conditions of the market. An appendix to the report of the special committee of the House of Commons points out that during this 12-year period the return on investment to the pharmaceutical industry tended to increase, while the return on investment for all manufacturing showed a substantial decline. Moreover, the committee concluded that contrary to what some have claimed, the financial experience of the Canadian pharmaceutical manufacturing industry does not indicate that business risks to it are greater than to manufacturing in general in this country. On the contrary, said the committee, the evidence indicates that it has been less risky.

I now wish to say a word about the significance of the new drug regulations under the Food and Drugs Act. Before the sale of a new drug is permitted the manufacturer must carry out extensive and very costly tests and submit the results to the food and drug directorate. If the directorate is satisfied as to the safety and efficacy of the drugs on the basis of the evidence submitted, it issues a notice of compliance on the basis of which the drug may be sold by the person or firm who submitted the evidence. The drug remains a new drug until it has been sold in Canada in sufficient quantity and for a sufficient time to ensure that any serious side effects will have shown up. As long as it remains a new drug no other person or firm may sell it unless he has submitted similar evidence to the directorate and received a notice of compliance. In general it is not economically feasible for a second person or firm to duplicate work of the first person or firm and this is not done in practice. A new drug—I emphasize this—usually remains classified as such for a minimum of five years. Hence, in practice the holder of a patent on a new drug enjoys absolute protection for five years. Only when the drug is removed from the new drug classification is the question of compulsory licensing likely to arise.

The special committee of the House of Commons expressed its opinion that the patentee has ample time to establish and consolidate his position in the market and thereby recoup his research costs by virtue of the fact that it takes some five years for the drug to lose its new drug status. It also concluded that it was most unlikely that a compulsory licence would be sought prior to the date that the drug lost its status as a new drug.

In summary, it is to be expected that the major effects of the proposed amendments will be to reduce the prices, selling outlays and profits of existing large drug firms, rather than to decrease greatly their share of the market. Output can be maintained to the extent that they are willing to cut prices to meet the challenge of imports, and this will maintain output and employment in existing plants.

There is one other important consideration relating to the impact on the industry of the proposed amendments to which I should like to devote some attention. In its report the special committee of the House of Commons noted that when the report of the royal commission on health services was written the 13 largest firms in the drug field in Canada, exclusive of Connaught Research Medical Laboratories in Toronto, were with one exception all branches or subsidiaries of foreign firms. Since then the Frosst company has been taken over by a United States firm. Since the report was written the last large Canadian firm, in other words, was purchased by a United States corporation.

According to the submission of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada to the special committee, 36 of its 57 members are based in the United States and many of the rest are based in Europe. As I have mentioned earlier, 95 per cent of all Canadian patents are owned by residents of foreign countries. If anything, the proportion of drug patents held abroad is probably higher than 95 per cent. Given the fact that most of the Canadian drug industry is foreign owned and the fact that most drug patents are foreign owned, the chance of any Canadian firm being able to break into the market on a substantial scale is very limited under present circumstances. The amendments to the Patent Act which have been proposed are likely to be of crucial importance in making entry easier for Canadian owned drug firms.

Spokesmen for the major drug firms often defend the height of their prices, or the gap between computed costs and market prices, by reference to the vast sum spent on research in the interest of advancing the cause of health and medical science. It is also asserted that in the absence of the patent incentive, research would disappear. I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe fundamentally in the importance of research in this country. I have said on many occasions that our research in Canada is less than 1 per cent of our gross national product, whereas in the United States it is 4 per cent or 5 per cent and in the United Kingdom 3 per cent or 4 per cent. But it applies to the international drug industry and the amount of research done in Canada, the statements I recited from the industry should be questioned.

In terms of the manufacturers' sales dollar, as reported by 41 members of the Canadian Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association for the year 1964, only 7 per cent was spent for research and development of all kinds. This figure included sums charged to the Canadian companies by related companies outside of Canada. At the same time, sales promotion expenses accounted for 30 per cent of the manufacturers' sales dollar. Hence over four times as much was spent on sales promotion as on research. The proportions are not greatly different in the United States.

The 7 per cent research figure takes into account the fact that research spending by the drug companies has been increasing substantially in Canada in recent years. I should like to suggest to the house that this increase cannot, however, be attributed to the operations of the patent system. In its submission to the special committee the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada said that both in Canada and the United States the requirements of government for additional data before a new drug is allowed on the market have sharply increased companies' research and development expenditures. In support of this proposition the association quoted this statement about the United States drug industry:

> Industry research people estimate that the cost of developing a new chemical entity has increased somewhere between 20 and 50 per cent in the past few years, with most of the increase due to meeting the requirements of the food and drug administration.

Elsewhere in its brief the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada referred to the increase in research spending between 1959 and 1964 and acknowledged that this expansion was due in part to the research tax incentive offered by the federal government and to the fact that a few companies had been given direct grants for specific projects. The special committee of the House of Commons reached the conclusion that Canada was a late starter in drug research and because of this the international aspect of the drug industry should be studied before any hasty recommendations were made about the promotion of further research in the Canadian branch of the industry. The special committee suggested that any further tax concessions that might be conferred on the Canadian drug industry should be considered in the light of what benefits are likely to be attained from the total package of research and development undertaken. If this examination is not carried out, the special committee suggested, it is conceivable that the taxpayer will be asked to pay for clinical research and testing which are normal expenditures of any industry, and the manufacturers will reap the benefit at the expense of the taxpayers and, I might say, at the expense of the consumer.

It has to be borne in mind that it may well be cheaper for Canadian firms to continue to acquire the result of research by purchasing it abroad, particularly through their parent organizations. The reason why Canadian subsidiaries of international drug companies do not do more research in Canada was explained to the special committee by Canadian Cyanamid. It said that Cyanamid's drug research is carried out largely by the thousand scientists and technicians in its New York laboratory. Economic considerations have dictated the concentration of the principal pharmaceutical research effort at a single location because of the heavy investment required in specialist facilities and personnel. The Cyanamid submission argued that it must be obvious that fragmenting such an operation was not feasible. In its report the special committee came to the conclusion that the drug industry in Canada would continue in the foreseeable future to remain largely within the international framework, that the larger Canadian companies would remain subsidiaries of foreign corporations, and that any further noticeable increase in research in Canada by these subsidiaries would in all likelihood not take place unless stimulated by government policy, that is to say, by government grants, tax incentives and the like.

It is perhaps worth recalling that the Canadian market is of relatively minor importance to anyone wishing to market a new drug discovery. Drug research is predicated on the idea of supplying a new discovery to the world. In logic, therefore, there is no reason the proposed patent amendments should change the locus of any research undertaken which is contemplated, if there are otherwise good economic reasons for locating it in Canada. Of all Canadian subsidiaries of international drug firms only three have done any appreciable research in Canada and this for historical reasons, prior to their purchase by international concerns. Most of the research has been produced on the international scene. I think one should pay tribute to Frosst and Ayerst, McKenna. I do not want in any way to downgrade what they have done for Canadian technology and research. As a matter of fact, the director of research for Ayerst is now rector of the University of Montreal. He is a very distinguished Canadian, indeed.

I have heard much about the argument in respect of exports. The proposed amendment can have no important effect on exports because exports from the Canadian drug industry are not substantial now. The Department of Industry estimates that exports amount to something over 5 per cent of Canadian production. Owing to the structure of the industry and the fact that all important companies are owned abroad, so that potential export markets are served by affiliates located there or by the parent companies, the likelihood of a substantial export business being developed by the companies most affected by the proposal is remote. This appears to be accepted by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association of Canada, which said that pharmaceutical companies in Canada have developed primarily to serve the domestic market and few of them export. Conceivably some export business might be developed by truly independent Canadian companies.

The special committee of the House of Commons reached similar conclusions. The Harley committee said that in so far as the export market is concerned, unless the patent owner is Canadian the international patent system can prevent and it does discourage development of the drug industry in Canada. With most foreign owned patents, subsidiary companies of the parent patentee control the market within their own jurisdictions. Export activity must therefore be confined to those areas of the world where patents are not taken out, areas which are relatively and commercially insignificant. The special committee of the house reported that on a question addressed to one Canadian subsidiary of a United States parent corporation the answer was succinctly put, "We have so many plants all over the world I just do not know where we would export to."

I have taken a great deal of the time of the house, and I thank hon. members for their indulgence in hearing me out. I feel this is a complicated and important piece of legislation and that I owed it to members of this house to explain it as fully as I could. In all that I have said I have had in the forefront of my thoughts the essential and important part which drugs play in the health care of the Canadian people. I want to be as categorical about this as it is possible for me to be. There is no issue between myself and spokesmen for the drug industry about the very great benefits that drugs have conferred on Canadians and the very great benefits that the Canadian industry has conferred upon Canadians. Indeed, it is the very importance of drug products which makes the performance of the drug industry so critical. What we do not wish to see is the great benefits flowing from the availability of modern drugs being persistently overshadowed by their high cost to the consumer.

Finally, I wish to refer briefly to what I said during the debate when the consumer affairs bill was before the house last November, and specifically about the importance of having a federal presence in the consumer field. The drug program which I have just outlined is an example of how it may be possible in the future to co-ordinate government policy in the interest of the consumer in a more effective way than has been done in the past. The fact that there is now a minister responsible for this function should make it possible to seek out other ways by which the federal government can assist in reducing prices or restraining price increases in areas of vital concern to consumers in spite of the fact that we have no direct constitutional authority to impose control over prices or wages.

I shall conclude my remarks by reminding the house that it is now over four years since the report of the first major inquiry into the drug industry was published—not since it was begun, but since it was published. It may have been worth waiting for the findings of the Royal Commission on Health Services and of the special committee of the house on drug costs and prices in order to ensure that the most careful consideration was given to the issues involved. These amendments are a direct result of the review by the special committee of this house under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Halton. I believe the time has come when the public is looking to parliament for effective action.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the minister on his marathon speech and for recognizing that this is a complex piece of legislation, bad in respect of some points, which he did his best to dress up and gild. It has a great many loopholes and I intend to deal with some of them, particularly those in respect of patents and safety which he passed over so easily.

Bill C-190 is intended to increase price competition among pharmaceutical manufacturers in Canada by depriving them of the limited patent rights they own on certain processes for making drugs they have invented. Canadian patent rights on prescription drugs are already weak in comparison with those of other countries. Under existing Canadian legislation there is a legal procedure known as compulsory licensing. It works in this way. Company A, after long and expensive research, invents a drug and obtains a patent to process and manufacture it. Immediately it is granted a patent, Company B may apply for a compulsory licence enabling it to use the same process patented by company A. This licence forcibly deprives company A of the full benefits of its own invention. Such a licence is granted to company B almost as a matter of right for a royalty which the commissioner of patents himself has described as a mere pittance. Company B must make the drug in Canada.

The patent amendments now proposed will remove this requirement in respect of manufacture in Canada. They would extend the grounds for granting a compulsory licence so that prescription medicines produced outside the controls provided by the Canadian Food and Drugs Act could be imported into Canada. The changes proposed to the Trade Marks Act would permit the importation into Canada of drug products manufactured by a company abroad under the same trade mark used by the related Canadian company. This would permit the false assumption that drug products bearing the same trade mark would be identical in all countries.

This bill virtually abolishes patent protection for drugs and amounts to discriminatory confiscation of property without any compensation whatsoever and without any guarantee of the intended public benefit. The public did not need this bureaucratic bill from the mushrooming department of the new minister.

Bill C-190 deals with patent rights which are perhaps moral and economic issues. Fundamentally, putting the matter in its most simple form, a man or a woman spends days, months or years working hard and long to develop an idea into something tangible. It matters not whether the idea relates to a drug, a food or an implement. Surely that person should not be cheated of the rewards of his labour either in part or in whole. This is the moral issue involved in removing or restricting patent rights. It goes beyond cheating a person out of his ingenuity; it discourages incentive and invention. It discourages research and destroys industry. People struggle and work in their own laboratories or in company or university laboratories, unseen, largely unhonoured and unsung, many of them reaping little in the way of monetary return. Out of 3,000 experiments, approximately only one comes through and produces a useful drug. Therefore a man could work in research all his life and never come up with a worth-while finding.

• (5:00 p.m.)

I think back to the early 1920's when Banting and Best worked in a small laboratory in Toronto—coming from that area and knowing both of them I am very cognizant of this —under the direction of Professor MacLeod, a Scotsman, head of the department of physiology of the University of Toronto. There was at that time no drug treatment for diabetes; it was a hopeless condition. Juveniles, young adolescents and middle-aged people died long before their time. Juvenile diabetics died within a few years. It was a pitiful thing. I remember one young person 18 years old dying in something like a period of two months. The economic loss was measured in millions and millions of dollars. This, then, was the situation when Banting and Best undertook their experiment which had been tried in 1896, about 27 years earlier—I think this illustrates the whole problem that the minister did not grasp—by Claude Bernard and was unsuccessful. Research is a long, continuing process.

Why did Banting and Best go into this endeavour? Banting was a medical doctor, raised in Alliston, Ontario, a short distance from where I practise. I knew him very well. During his high school years he was very distressed by a young girl whom he saw daily becoming thinner and thinner and wasting away until she died. This had a profound impression on this young high school student and was the main reason Banting went into medicine and research.

There was here the dedication and incentive to produce a material that would cure or arrest this disease. Banting and Best were able to produce insulin which controled diabetes. I had just graduated from medical school when that happened. In 1926 we were just starting to use the fruits of their labour. Insulin has been improved over the years and has rescued millions of people from an early death. In dollars and cents, Mr. Speaker, insulin has rewarded the world economically by billions of dollars to say nothing about preventing untold suffering. Brilliant scientists, with their diabetes under control, have carried on their life's work and added to the storehouse of knowledge of the world. I know two from the University of Toronto who have done so. People of all vocations suffering from diabetes were able, generally speaking, to live out their life span and work at their calling.

The world rejoiced when insulin was discovered at the University of Toronto. The minister talked about this young country not being able to keep up in respect of research. May I remind him of the fact that at that time there were only 10 million people in Canada. When the great discovery of insulin was made the world rejoiced. This demonstrates beyond peradventure the point that research can be carried out successfully in a small country.

The patent rights to insulin were turned over by Drs. Banting and Best to the governors of the University of Toronto. Over the years the returns from those patent rights, placed in a trust fund, have largely financed the Connaught Laboratories. Perhaps it would be in order to refer to Dr. J. K. W. Ferguson, one of the outstanding physiologists in the world today and director of Connaught Laboratories. Dr. Ferguson says on this subject:

> ...it has undoubtedly been drawn to the attention of the government that virtual abolition of patent protection for the drug industry in Canada would be disastrous for the prospects of developing a competent, research-oriented drug industry in Canada.

This information paper published by the University of Toronto goes on to state:

> What does not seem to have been pointed out yet is that other countries may be pressed to take retaliatory action against Canadian exports, if the Canadian subsidiaries of their companies have been subject to confiscation of an important commercial asset.
> The brief advances the opinion that all drugs in Canada are not overpriced and the number that are overpriced at the retail level may be very small. It proposes that, in the interest of obtaining well-informed and fair-minded opinions, data on retail drug prices be sent to the Canadian Medical Association with the request that they be studied by its committee on pharmacy and such other expert opinion as they consider desirable.

I noted that the minister referred to doctors being so busy that they did not know just what they were using in the way of drugs. I do not know whether that is what he meant but that is the impression he gave me. The minister can correct me if I am wrong. Doctors may write prescriptions for all the drugs used in Canada today, and I certainly hope they are not only conscious of the drug they are using and the job it will do but are also thinking of the patient and the price of the drug. I believe this is true of at least 90 per cent of the doctors in our hospitals. They certainly know the qualities of different drugs because they are using them by their generic names. Those drugs have been proven clinically, which is a different situation from the one to which the minister was referring. I continue quoting from this paper:

Dr. Ferguson recalls that the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories were set up by the University of Toronto "for the purpose of research in hygiene and preventive medicine and the preparation of serum and vaccines or such other substances as may hereafter be found to be useful in the prevention of disease ..."

From the earliest days, the laboratories have been essentially self-supporting from the sale of products and earnings have been kept by the governors in a trust fund for the support of medical research and for the capital expansion of the laboratories from time to time. Over a period of 50 years, they have grown to the point—

This started with the humble beginnings of the discovery of insulin by Drs. Banting and Best in a very small and inadequate laboratory judged by today's standards.

—where they now employ 730 persons and total sales fluctuate between $6 million and $7.5 million per annum, of which between $1 million and $1.5 million have been in the export market. The laboratories spend $1.4 million to $1.7 million on research each year.

The minister knows as well as I do, and I am not going to embarrass him by saying it, how little money goes into medical research in this country. The minister knows this because he quoted the figures of one to five compared with the United States. The minister has the figures and knows this. I want to compliment him on dressing this bill up in the way he did, knowing the facts, the weak points and the holes in it.

Mr. Lambert: It is known as puffery.

Mr. Rynard: I continue quoting:

One of the financial mainstays of the laboratories in the past, according to the brief, has been the steady revenues from the sale of insulin—

Under patent rights. Now the minister proposes to cancel patent rights in five years, and I have even heard two years mentioned. What goes on in this country? Is that the way to build up a country? It is not. I suggest that the minister go to the University of Toronto, look over the complex there and see what has been done over the years.

• (5:10 p.m.)

"Without the steady revenues from the sale of insulin", states the brief, "it is hard to see how the laboratories could have attracted and maintained a staff of competent scientists who over the years have contributed not only important new forms of insulin but many new vaccines, antitoxins, hormones and other drugs."

Without the legal protection provided by the insulin patents, it continues, "there is no doubt that the whole Canadian market would have been taken over by foreign producers. The qualities and forms of the product would certainly have been chaotically confused and probably debased."

The Connaught Medical Research Laboratories have made many important contributions, in addition to the mass production of insulin. The first introduction of this continent of toxoid for protection against diptheria was achieved by the laboratories during the late 1920's and early 1930's. The introduction of combined immunizing agents against diptheria, tetanus and whooping cough followed during world war II. The first full-scale production of heparin, a widely used anti-clotting agent, was developed during the mid-1930's. About that time, the first large scale production of crystalline insulin was also accomplished. The formula for tissue culture medium 199, which made the development of Salk vaccine possible, was published by the laboratories in 1949 and methods for large scale production of polio virus were pioneered. It is likely, in fact, that this very important development innovation would have been an ignominious failure without C.M.R.L.'s contribution.

The contributions of the Connaught Medical Research Laboratories to preventive medicine are by no means at an end. Several expensive projects currently under development include a new and safer vaccine for the prevention of rabies, a vaccine to prevent german measles, and an enzyme to dissolve blood clots.

Anyone with friends or relatives who have had rabies vaccine administered to them knows that its effects are severe and that it is not without fatal dangers. At the present time the laboratory is working on a vaccine which may restore life to some Canadians.

The brief continues:

Each of these absorbs some hundreds of thousands of dollars over many years before it can earn any return, the brief points out. A long period of substantial profit is therefore essential if expenditures of this magnitude are to be amortized.

"It is a real question whether such profits could be achieved without patent protection in Canada", asserts the brief. "They certainly could not, without patent protection in other countries."

What I shall read now will demonstrate how far the minister has strayed from the Harley report. The brief continues:

Commenting on the possible effects of the 23 recommendations of the special committee on drug prices, the C.M.R.L. brief states that none of them would affect the financial interests of the laboratories to any significant extent. It goes on to say, however, that "in recent weeks, newspapers have quoted cabinet ministers as forecasting drastic action to reduce the duration of patents on drugs to two years. In addition, there have been less definite forecasts of changes in the law of trade marks as they apply to drugs.

This illustrates and demonstrates the necessity for patent rights if research is to be carried on and if the benefits of that research are to be passed on to mankind.

Mr. David Henry, Q.C., an honoured member of the civil service patent branch, has stated that the reasons for the high prices of drugs are not singular but multiple. I do not think the minister grasped the significance of that statement. They are multiple and they relate not just to the pharmaceutical manufacturing industry but to retail pharmacies as well and, indeed, to the taxation policies of the government, to the food and drug directorate through the regulations it imposes on industry, to the drug wholesaler, to the physician who prescribes the drugs, and to the consumer himself who demands the very best care for himself and his family. How many aspects of this matter were touched upon by the minister? Only one, perhaps.

Let us now consider the economics of the situation. If Mr. Henry is able to say that the bill before us could destroy the drug industry, and he indicated it might, is it not peculiar that the Department of Industry has not looked into or given any advice on this matter? Has the minister consulted the Department of Industry on it? Here we have an industry that, according to my figures which vary from those of the minister who said a lot without substance and said it well, employs 10,000 people in Canada, 2,500 of whom are highly trained individuals. The minister and I will have to get together and compare our sources of information. The associated drug services encompass another 25,000 people. This bill means that we would lose 2,500 scientists and then the others would follow them.

Pharmaceutical research costs approximately $12 million annually. The minister said we need more research in this field and he quoted figures to back his statement. I agree with him. The federal government has done nothing to increase this sum except to allocate certain amounts to medical research. I want to compliment the government for allocating some money for this purpose.

The policy of the government seems to offer no protection to an industry which could well become a major industry in this country and which started as did Banting and Best who began research on dogs in a little room and whose association developed into the large industry of which I spoke. The government has adopted the same policy with regard to the drug industry as it does with regard to other industry by allowing imports to come into Canada from countries where labour costs are half what they are in Canada or less and whose productivity is just about as good as ours. I might also mention the textile industry. No provision has been made to protect that industry when the Kennedy round tariffs come into effect on July 1. The United States textile industry could dump a sufficient amount of its products in Canada in one lot to ruin our small textile industries. I do not know whether the government has taken or contemplates any measures to protect this industry. If they have they should let us know because questions have been asked on this matter. The same situation exists with respect to the boot and shoe industry. I am referring to these industries because they are affected by economic factors and they are in the same situation as the drug industry.

• (5:20 p.m.)

What has the government done? Unemployment has risen sharply. The boot and shoe industry is the biggest labour employer in Canada; yet the government has done nothing to protect it from increasing foreign imports. All one has to do is take a good look at the record. I am disturbed about these conditions because I have a shoe industry in my riding as well as a textile industry. They are both seriously disturbed about the attitude of the government. Now the drug industry will be in the same position, but I hope we will be able to convince the government they are on the wrong course. The minister has hopes in so far as April is concerned. Perhaps he can be the young Lochinvar who can change this picture and start the government off on the right path.

The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) indicated he was not going to protect the fruit and vegetable growers of western Ontario. He said they would have to be competitive with producers who are paying less than one-third the wages our people are paying. What does he want to do to our standard of living? What does he want to do to the Canadian people? It is time we took a good look at some of the things this government is doing. There are 77,000 more unemployed, the government is hurting the footwear industry, the textile industry, the drug industry and the farmers. What will be next?

I have mentioned these points in relation to our economy because they are of concern to every man and woman across Canada. If we achieve cheaper drugs of poor quality we could destroy the industry in this country. I want the minister to pay attention to this. Bill No. C-190 fails to reflect the urgent safety requirements recommended by the Harley committee. Safety must be paramount. A compulsory licence to import drugs must not be granted until the food and drug directorate has inspected the manufacturing facilities in the country of origin. How is the minister going to accomplish that, Mr. Speaker? These manufacturers should meet the same standards as are set for Canadian drug manufacturers. How are you going to get permission to do that? One could conclude from the minister's remarks that everything was all right if one did not know that is not the case. He put a very good face on it and said everything would be inspected. How much money has he provided for new inspectors or other officials who are going to be needed in the food and drug directorate? I should like the minister to tell me that. If money has been set aside, it must be hidden. Of course, this government has hidden many things, but so far as the house is aware not a solitary thing has been done about it.

The minister stood up and presented a bad case very well. He told us he was going to send inspectors all over the country. He had lots of them. The Canadian people could be sure of the safety and quality of the drugs used. I am hoping that after some consideration the minister will come back tomorrow and tell us he does not have these men and did not mean his remarks to be interpreted that way. After all, he is a nice fellow. The minister put on the record some of the things that have been accomplished in so far as cutting the cost of drugs is concerned. I believe he would like to give everybody credit for what is being done, so I am bringing this to the minister's attention. I do not want what he said here today to be the cause of any ill will by not recognizing what has been done.

The druggists across Canada have tackled this situation. In my own town druggists have started charging a prescription fee in order to reduce the price of drugs. Prices have been reduced to such an extent that the other day I calculated that a drug which would have cost $15 under the old system now costs $8. The druggists have helped to put their house in order. The pharmaceutical firms have been putting their house in order. They have been cutting down on their commission men and putting them on salary in order to cut costs. This is one good thing the Harley committee has accomplished. It has made people think about what we can do.

Above all, we must be Canadian. We must keep things Canadian. We must support research. We must do things that will develop Canadian industry and enable it to compete anywhere in the world. I could refer to Toronto University, Connaught laboratories, Best, Banting, and so on. I could put other names on the record. What has the government done? I do not want to embarrass the minister, but what has he done to provide these inspectors who are to do all this checking? Dr. Chapman gave evidence to the committee that the department was busy now and he did not think they could do more than they are doing. I am sure he is right. What has the government done? Industry has done something and the druggists have made a contribution.

The minister drew attention to the hospitals, and I am glad he did. Le me tell him something about hospitals. They do use these drugs, but they only use drugs that have been clinically tested and which they know are going to produce results. The hospitals have a pharmaceutical committee to protect them but there is no such protection for the public outside. The sad thing is that the hospitals under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare buy drugs and the people prescribing them do not even know where those drugs come from. Did the minister know that? If he checks the evidence he will find this is so. However, all the witnesses were asked if the drug were to be used on their wives or families which one would they prefer and they all answered, a brand name drug or a proven clinically tested drug. I am putting these facts on the record because the most important factor is quality.

There is one other thing I want to say to the minister because he is not in this business and probably does not know about drugs and how they act. The minister talked about the quality and safety of drugs or I would not have mentioned this. The minister referred to chloromycetin from which patent protection was removed and the price went down. Does the minister know that the United States has had to give Parke Davis exclusive patents rights again? If I remember correctly, a few weeks ago I was told in the United States that five drug firms had obtained the right to manufacture chloromycetin or chlormanphenical. This drug went into hospitals in the United States. Hospital after hospital reported they were not getting results with the chloromycetin made by the other five drug firms.

They discovered that the blood levels were down and that the drug was not having the desired therapeutic effect. It was not doing what the doctors expected it to do. So bad was the situation, Mr. Speaker, that the licences of the other five firms producing the drug were cancelled. So I draw to the attention of the minister that the situation is not quite as simple as he pretends it is.

If I may go back to the recommendations of the Harley committee, Mr. Speaker, they recommended as a statutory requirement that the granting of a forced licence be subject to a report by the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare to the effect that the applicant for the compulsory licence has satisfied the directorate that he has met the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act. I did not hear the minister state that even this nominal safety provision had been included. I should like him to tell the members of the house when he replies whether it has been included.

In similar circumstances, where the product in question is no longer a new drug the directorate has simply certified that the firm has adequate manufacturing facilities and controls and complies with section C.01.052 of the regulations. This relates only to the manufacturing facilities and has nothing to do with purity or equivalency of the product in question. Under present regulations there is no way that the safety recommendations of the Hilliard committee can be implemented with regard to drug licensing. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, this point was paramount in the consideration of the commitee. Perhaps it is why the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs does not want to interfere with the statutory prerogative of the patent commissioner. The special committee considered this matter as well but stated that the safety factor is of such importance that the food and drug directorate should participate in the disposition of applications relating to compulsory licences.

With regard to imports, the parliamentary committee felt that safety must be paramount. A compulsory licence to import must not be granted except where the food and drug directorate has inspected to its satisfaction the manufacturing facilities in the country of origin, and in accordance with the same regulations that pertain to Canadian drug manufacturers. None of this has been provided in the present legislation. The minister will undoubtedly state that safety provisions are not a proper requirement for the Patent Act. I should like the minister to give some explanation of this. Be that as it may, Bill C-190 clearly directs the commissioner as to when and under what circumstances he shall grant a licence, and it should, therefore, provide the commissioner with proper guidance in the determination of the drug safety provisions for such licensing.

Bill C-190 does not discriminate between the two types of compulsory licensing as clearly recommended by the parliamentary committee. In the case of compulsory licences to import the commissioner should only grant the licence if in his discretion it is in the public interest to do so. The public interest would be, the committee feels, the need to bring lower drug prices to the consumer weighed against the effect of such import licence on the Canadian producers of the drug in question. The differentiation between the two types of compulsory licensing should be carefully observed. It must be obvious that one of the effects that such importation would have on the Canadian producer would be to weaken his control of quality of the drug product in distribution—the minister spoke about this this afternoon—and economically limit the extent and type of medical and technical support services provided the medical profession.

Perhaps the more basic intent of the minister's department is illustrated best in the legislative interpretation of Harley committee recommendation No. 20, which is as follows:

> —if the granting of a compulsory licence takes longer than 12 months, the commissioner, if in his opinion the delay is unwarranted, may be empowered to issue the licence subject to revocation if any appeal against such a compulsory licence is upheld, providing however that such licensee provide sufficient evidence to satisfy standards of the food and drug directorate.

Bill C-190 essentially instructs the commissioner to issue interim licences only after six months and ignores reference to the food and drug directorate or any consideration of needless delay. Certainly that is my interpretation.

It should hardly need repeating that safety must be paramount. It is dangerous to implement only the licensing recommendations of the parliamentary committee without also enforcing the urgent safety and equivalency requirements of this same committee and those of the Hilliard and Boyd expert committees.

The second recommendation made by the special committee reads as follows:

That the personnel and facilities of the food and drug directorate be expanded to make possible the implementation of the recommendations of the Boyd committee, the Hilliard committee and this committee.

Needless to say, Mr. Speaker, we are fully sympathetic with the intent of the legislation but, as noted before, we cannot support a bill that does not provide the essential safety and equivalency requirements recommended by the special committee of the House of Commons on drug costs and prices.

If the question is one of quality drugs at a fair and reasonable price versus unknown or inadequate drug products at the cheapest possible price, then our answer must be "no" to Bill C-190. If the consensus is that quality drugs cost more than necessary, then we should be exploring means to negotiate an equitable price without destroying the technical-medical base of the Canadian drug industry.

A Canadian manufacturer cannot meet the prices of Italian or similar competition as long as he continues to conduct essential and expensive research in this country, as long as he manufactures to Canadian standards in Canadian factories, employing Canadian labour at Canadian wage rates, as long as substantial costs are required to service medically Canadian and export markets in a technically competitive industry, and as long as he is paying over 50 per cent of his profits to the government in the form of income taxes alone. Perhaps the minister has forgotten that.

It is in this spirit, Mr. Speaker, that we intend to move a number of amendments to the bill. This bill is both complex and complicated. The minister himself spoke for almost two hours and I have spoken for far too long. I was glad to listen to what the minister had to say and I think he did a terrific job on an impossible bill. He put many things on the record with which I did not agree and which when subjected to the cold glare of examination just do not stand up. Nevertheless this is an important bill, and I would suggest to the minister that it be sent to a committee so it can go over some of the points that are giving us trouble.

I should like to sum up, Mr. Speaker, by saying that quality and safety must be the overriding factors when considering price. Patent protection for inventors is a basic principle of justice that is recognized by civilized nations and is the most important incentive for industrial research today in this country. Compulsory licensing can only be based safely on yet to be established criteria for the therapeutic equivalency of generic counterparts. Forced licensing of imports without such safety and clinical assurances will dangerously debase the quality of presently available drugs, destroy drug research and manufacturing in Canada and undermine Canada's international reputation with respect to the recognition of scientific and industrial property rights. And I do not think the minister wants to do that.

The proposed Patent Act changes must be urgently reviewed with relation to the yet to be implemented safety and equivalency recommendations of the Hilliard and Boyd reports of 1955 and 1956. Also, the Economic Council of Canada's present over-all review of industrial patents must be considered. The minister did not even wait for that review. I do not know why because he has a high regard for the Economic Council of Canada.

I had hoped that this matter might be referred to a committee. I submit that drug prices can be equitably negotiated without destroying the technical and medical base of Canadian industry. Neither society's demand for new drugs nor Canada's need for an international competitive research capability will be satisfied by those who would inadequately copy the discoveries of others and market them solely on the basis of price under the protection of forced licences. I submit that ultimate economies and increased benefits to Canada's society will be obtained through the discovery of new and more effective drug products.

In conclusion, may I again urge the minister to send this matter to a committee so that we may consider it once more. This is a most important bill. If I have been critical it is only because I want to be helpful and to bring out all factors. I hope the bill will be referred to a committee so that essential points may be discussed in order that we may build a bigger and better Canada.

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I shall begin my remarks by reading a few words:

The manufacture and distribution of medicines, because of their intimate relation to the health and welfare of a community or nation, partake of the nature of public utilities. In view of the shifting of control from professional to financial hands, manifested by recent developments in the drug industry, the public interest may require "regulation" of the industry, through the guarantee of a fair return to investors and the limitation of prices to be charged to consumers.

That was a quotation, Mr. Speaker, from a book entitled "The Costs of Medicines" by C. Rufus Rorem and R. P. Fischelis, written in 1932. It goes to show that in those days, 36 years ago, someone foresaw what would happen today. Now we have a monopoly. There is no price competition and there is a Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. Fifty-seven companies were members of it but the number has been reduced to 56. They manufacture 85 per cent of the drugs sold by prescription across Canada today. This bill makes an excellent start, may I say, in the direction of ridding the country of this monopoly. Drugs, to my way of thinking, are to make people well, not to make purses full.

I have in my hand a book written by Mr. Bill Stevenson. He discusses and exposes some of the unusual drug costs and prices in Canada today. He says that drug profits run as high as 26,000 to 28,000 per cent. Personally, in my investigations I have not come across drugs which carry such high profits, though I have come across drugs that have been marked up 9,700 per cent. I wish to indicate how this matter was referred to by Dr. William M. Wigle of Ottawa, President of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. Addressing a meeting he said:

I do not believe that the Canadian people are willing to jeopardize the future of the drug industry in Canada and that of its 10,000 employees for a will-o'-the-wisp profit which would put Canada at the mercy of foreign nations in the event of world-wide epidemics.

Is a 28,000 per cent profit a will-o'-the-wisp? I should hate to see a large profit in the drug industry.

The P.M.A.C. has been constantly present at committee meetings in one way or another since June, 1966. They appeared before the committee four times. They attended all committee meetings because they were afraid of what might be said. They fed questions to members of the committee and since then have been pressuring us with submissions and briefs, being afraid that some of their monstrous profits might be lost.

These members of the P.M.A.C. are the high profit boys. They are the monopolistic members of, if you will forgive the expression, a smug minority which uses the word "freedom" in the sense that they are free to fleece the sick out of every last cent they can wring from them. The fact that a man is sick does not matter except that he is then a more vulnerable target for the industry's high pressure methods. To the members of the P.M.A.C., illness is their most valuable asset and they are capable, 85 per cent of the time, of conning the doctor to act as an agent to sell their products for them. So naturally they do not take kindly to a bill that is going to incapacitate this golden egg layer.

One brief that we received, Mr. Speaker, contained a comparison of generic and patent drugs. Ostensibly the brief did not come from the P.M.A.C., though you could smell where it came from as it came into the office. The independent survey we received claimed that basically there was no difference in cost between drugs prescribed under their generic names and those described by brand names. The people doing the survey selected their own group of drugs; there were 11 comparisons, I believe. Of those, two involved drugs that were brand name drugs which were cheaper than generic drugs. Actually, these so-called brand name drugs originally had been generic drugs but had been labelled with the manufacturer's label. The drugs that were selected for the comparison were, as I said, carefully selected. The intention was to show that certain generic drugs were more expensive than brand name drugs.

Those presenting the brief also misrepresented the situation by forgetting to refer to how drugs are sold. When a prescription is presented to a druggist, since he operates by charging a percentage profit, naturally the more expensive the original drug is the higher his profit will be. The way drugs are sold is interesting. The best prices at which drugs are obtained are when they are bought by stock lots which, for instance, may involve 100 bottles or 50 tablets and so on. If smaller amounts are bought, if 24, 20, or odd numbers of capsules or tablets are prescribed, the price charged is known as the breakdown price which may be higher than the stock lot price. The brief made unfair comparisons by attempting to compare stock lot prices with breakdown prices.

The suggestion was also made in the brief that the difference in cost between drugs prescribed under generic names compared with brand names was of no important consequence. That is very interesting because I want to know to whom it is of no consequence. Did the brief mean it was of no consequence to the people of this country or to the P.M.A.C. boys?

I did some research into the cost of generic and brand name drugs in Ottawa. I investigated the drugs that had been mentioned and I found that in stock lots the generic drugs came to $52.30 and the brand name drugs came to $143.10. These prices were being charged for large quantities of drugs. Making inquiries about smaller quantities from the same druggist, I discovered that the generic drugs would have been sold at $28.50 and the brand names would have come to $51.15. Even allowing for any unfairness, if they say this is an inconsequential difference when in fact, according to their own selection of figures, it is almost double I maintain they were trying to misrepresent things when they brought this brief to the committee.

Possibly they were not satisfied with that brief as a demonstration of what they could do because they submitted a brief in their own name. This brief, like all the others, complained that they were even now being deprived of profits which they might have gained had they been given proper protection. The hon. member who spoke earlier quoted from the same paragraph as one I have marked here, containing a reference to companies A and B and to compulsory licensing. I was interested in the statement it contains to the effect that the royalty the commissioner of patents gives to company A which initiates an invention is only a pittance. The hon. member did not explain why it is a pittance. It is a pittance because the royalty paid is based upon the cost of the manufacture of drugs, and the cost of manufacture bears no relation whatsoever to the selling price. This is why companies do not want compulsory licensing. Most companies, having made a fabulous profit on these drugs, then concede a voluntary licence after which they receive a royalty which they themselves designate. The company which receives it sells the product at a slightly lower cost. It does not have the advantage of the original patent name, but it pays a royalty to the mother company, the discovering company.

These are the people who are twisting these figures and making themselves appear as though they were the friends of the sick and the elderly. Sometimes their protestations would bring tears to our eyes if we did not trouble to look at the facts of the situation. They complain about the importation of drugs under compulsory licence. Yet they themselves do this all the time in the case of patent drugs manufactured by United States parent companies. Most of the patent drugs manufactured in Canada are in actual fact manufactured by parent companies in the United States and shipped to Canada in dosage form. Here in Canada the subsidiaries bottle and label them and then have the dignity of being called drug manufacturers. So this patent arrangement amounts to another magic formula in favour of those who are capitalizing on illness and establishing a market for themselves by convincing others that not only do they need drugs but they need drugs with brand names only. They set out to brainwash doctors not only into prescribing their patented drugs but into prescribing drugs which in many cases patients do not really need—and drugs of a brand in whose selection doctors have no choice.

This establishes a pretty good market. Who has built up this market and built up these excess profits if it is not the P.M.A.C. itself? Even the Canadian Medical Association has been partly convinced, though I think this has been done with a certain amount of reticence. I believe the manufacturers have brought enough pressure to bear on the C.M.A. to convince many of its members that the present system is the only way in which drugs can be prescribed.

One of the well established habits of the P.M.A.C. is to disparage generic drugs both in the press and in doctors' offices, hoping to influence not only the doctors but the patients receiving care. In the brief to which I have just referred they speak of reputation as though it were holy ground and as though they have an exclusive claim on it. But there are many reputable firms which manufacture drugs under generic names.

The sales tax was recently removed and this should, of course, have caused the price of drugs to fall. This actually happened temporarily, at least, as the minister said. However, I am reliably informed that Parke, Davis are raising their prices and I am afraid this will undo all the good that the removal of the sales tax achieved.

I should like now to read into the record part of a column by Mr. D. H. Fullerton which appeared in the Calgary Albertan. This article brings to light some of the lobbying and the pressures to which we have all been subject. The writer says:

> In a society where the high cost of drugs is borne by those least able to afford it—the old, the sick and the poor—one may be pardoned for asking why action on drugs has not had a higher priority. One answer is being observed in Ottawa today where the well-heeled, monopolistic, and internally powerful drug industry has been recently mounting the most intensive lobby ever seen in the capital.
> The effectiveness of the drug lobby was plainly demonstrated at hearings of the commons committee on drug costs and prices. One M.P. was openly fed information and questions by representatives of the companies and of their organization, the P.M.A.C., in order that he could better interrogate witnesses hostile to the drug manufacturers!

Later the article states:

> Yet the shocking fact that even these mild measures to introduce some competition into the industry are assailed by the manufacturers suggests there is not much point in trying to apply a cosmetic approach to an industry with so little awareness of its public responsibility.

As to pressure, one might say that never has so much been applied by so few to so many.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house met at 8 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton South.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue what I was saying before the supper break. Last November I had the privilege of visiting Washington, where I sat in on the hearings of the subcommittee on drug prices, chaired by Senator Gaylord Nelson. In the United States they have the same problem we have here. Appearing before them was a doctor who I believe was a past president of the American Medical Association and president of the P.M.A. in the United States, which corresponds to our P.M.A.C. During this time they were discussing the basis of prednisone, which is one of the steroids or cortisone derivatives.

The Parke, Davis Company in the United States sold its product to the druggists for $17.88. I believe that price must be per hundred. The prices of other brands range from 44 cents to $2.09. It is interesting to note that it is Parke, Davis in Canada which is raising its prices.

It is also interesting to note that in the United States the Parke, Davis Company sells the same product that they sold to the druggists for $17.88 to a United States government agency for $1.36. I presume that this is sold at a profit to the company. I do not know of any private industry which sells at a loss and is still in business. It is interesting to note again that here in Ottawa the Frosst Company sells a generic brand of prednisone for $3.85 while a brand name product called meticorton sells for $20.50 per 100. I do not believe there is any difference in these two products. The P.M.A.C. use the words "clinical equivalency".

During the discussions before the committee Dr. R. A. Chapman, director general of the Food and Drug Directorate appeared as a witness. He said to the special committee on drug costs and prices that the generic drugs were at least as good as the brand name drugs. So, I ask, how long must we protect this profiteering monopoly with which we have to deal here in Canada? I have in front of me a rather interesting submission from the P.M.A.C. I presume this bulletin was sent to all the members of that organization. At the top of the form it says "Bulletin No. 199/67 Top Man Only", and is dated December 7, 1967. It is so interesting that I think I should read it into the record:

> The Board of Directors of P.M.A.C. feel that an effort should be made to alert major industries in Canada to the dangers presented by the Registrar General's avowed intention to abolish, for all practical purposes, patent protection on drugs in Canada.
> To this effect, we have compiled a list of the hundred largest Canadian companies and we have assigned some of them to each official P.M.A.C. delegate. On the attached sheet are the companies assigned to you together with the name and curriculum vitae of their chief executive officers.
>
> We suggest that you make every effort to contact these gentlemen at the earliest opportunity and explain to them that the implementation of Harley recommendations 18 and 21 would mean that the Canadian government has decided to unilaterally abolish protection of industrial property rights owned by foreign companies in Canada. It is conceivable that these countries will reciprocate by refusing to recognize Canadian patents abroad.
>
> You should urge these executives to write to Mr. John N. Turner, Registrar General; Mr. C. M. Drury, Minister of Industry; Mr. Robert H. Winters, Minister of Trade & Commerce, with copies to the Prime Minister, expressing their opposition to any legislation which would endanger or weaken patents or trade marks in Canada for any segment of industry. They may also wish to approach their local MP's.
> You may want to stress the present discriminatory nature of section 41-3 of the Patent Act concerning food and drugs.

Additional arguments and information sheets are enclosed. You may want to leave copies of these on the occasion of your visits.

Please keep us informed of your progress on the attached forms.

This is signed by Mr. G. Beauchemin, executive vice president.

• (8:10 p.m.)

I have become acquainted with another document which I received in the mail toward the end of last week, and which is entitled "The Ethical Drug Industry, 1967". It is a document put out by Hayden, Stone, investment research department. This document tells how drug companies make a good investment because their profits are so high. Let me define the title first which refers to "The Ethical Drug Industry." An ethical drug company is defined by the profession as a company which advertises only to the medical profession. Such a company does not sell its articles across the counter to laymen who come in and want these drugs. It advertises strictly to the medical profession. These are actually brand name companies that sell at higher prices and they do not wish to sell across the counter because they would not derive as much profit. They escape by making these drugs available under different names through subsidiary companies. One example is Smith, Kline and French which put out ornade, which is the name used in a doctors' prescription. The company puts out Contac—C which is advertised to a great extent on television. This can be bought across the counter. Although it is not identical it is so very close there is no doubt that it is the same drug.

Mead Johnson has a subsidiary company under which it puts out a drug product known as metrecal. This document to which I have referred speaks for itself, but I should like to refer to some excerpts which will indicate the type of thing which is going on in the drug industry today, particularly having regard to the protection we have with patents. This indicates what we should not be doing as a result of this protection. One paragraph on page 1 of this publication states:

In analysing 1966, the 467 million new prescriptions filled in 1966 made it the best year in the history of the pharmaceutical industry. The number of new prescriptions increased 10.6 per cent from 1965.

We then have another paragraph which I think merits reading. It appears at page 10 of this publication under the heading "tranquilizers", and reads:

No single term has been more misused in recent times than "tranquilizer" unless it be "addiction". A true tranquilizer is a drug which induces peace of mind by calming or quieting without also depressing the sensory or motor functions of the patient. Fears and anxieties are diminished but certainly not completely depressed. By means of overwhelming promotional techniques the public has been made to believe that drugs such as sedatives, narcotics, antipyretics, skeletal muscle relaxants, anti-spasmodics, etc. possess unique "tranquilizing activities. These drugs do indeed possess unique pharmacologic activities but tranquilization is not one such activity.

Tranquilizers are most frequently classed according to their therapeutic applications and subclassed by chemical structure.

This shows the type of disposition going on by the industry. The previous speaker spoke of the research being done by the drug industry today and suggested that this represented an important part of the prescription dollar. The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada indicated to the committee that it received 37½ cents of the prescription dollar, of which 2½ cents was devoted to research. It was stated earlier, and is suggested in this publication that:

Ethical drug manufacturers allocated about 16 per cent of their research and development funds to basic research in 1966.

If we take 16 per cent of 2½ cents we end up with roughly .4 cents spent on basic research, with the other 84 per cent being spent on compounding, making different dosages, molecular manipulation and various other things.

The previous speaker spoke of the discovery and development of insulin in Canada. Apparently he is hopeful that we will discover something else in Canada within the next 40 years, as a result of this amount being spent on research and development. We are spending the people's money on the basis of the discoveries which have been made, but we must always remember this money is coming out of the public sector and is not being paid by the private industry.

I should like now to refer to another portion of this publication. In passing let me remind hon. members that the small percentage drug companies spend on research here in Canada can be compared to the fact that in the United States 77 companies spent $365 million on research, out of the 2½ cents. This will give you a rough idea of the gross profit made by these companies. The amount of $365 million is roughly 2½ cents of the 37½ cents. Surely that proves a point.

Exports in the United States have been dealt with in this publication, and I should like to read this paragraph:

As previously stated, interest in foreign expansion has been encouraged by the disruptive government investigations and subsequent legislation here at home. Obviously, mergers or agreements with foreign countries possessing ethical drug-making facilities offered a two-way benefit to the U.S. manufacturer. First, the values and the sales potential of these new products could be evaluated in an atmosphere relatively free of what were harsh regulatory restraints. Second, these foreign manufacturing facilities could be used as a base for exports to other countries.

At this point it seems clear that continued government pressure against the drug industry will increase the role of foreign operations.

We now come to medicare which has a definite relationship to the tax sector of our economy. In the United States, as you well know, they have a medicare plan which begins at age 65. I should like to quote from this same publication which states:

It is to be noted that in every country which has adopted some form of "medicare", a sharp increase in the use of drugs has followed almost immediately.

My question is, at whose price? Are we going to allow these increases at the prices of the drug industry or are we going to put this into the private area so the tax sector of our economy will not have to pay for the great use of drugs at an unreasonable rate?

Let me quote another statement from this same publication:

The government is now price conscious and this could lead to more generic selling, especially at the hospital level.

It is suggested that we may expect a continued increase in volume and a reduction at the hospital level in antibiotic, tranquilizer and oral antidiabetic prices. This publication then states:

Although the monopoly sub-committee of the Senate small business committee will carry the ball, three other committees are very much interested—Senate finance committee, house ways and means committee, a senate group studying consumer problems of the elderly.

One can see from this that they are dealing with approximately the same problem here, only on a larger scale. This certainly does not relate to a larger profit mark-up because experience has shown that our drug prices are higher than those in the United States, although possibly the minister will disagree.

There is another paragraph in this publication at page 70 under the heading "Generic

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

V. Brand-name Prescribing" I should like to read and which states:

Probably, the pharmaceutical industry's less than unanimously enthusiastic outlook on medicare stems from the fear that generic prescribing, which has become an important factor in several therapeutic categories since the Kefauver hearings will become even more of an issue under the new federal legislation. Perhaps, even more important to pharmaceutical companies will be further pressures for lower drug prices.

It then states:

While Part A (hospital insurance) benefits of medicare provided for drugs administered in hospitals and nursing homes, purchasing agents for these institutions—already supported by "formulary" systems—will force further competitive bidding on a price basis.

I should like to read one more paragraph from this publication, as I find this very revealing regarding various situations. This paragraph appears at page 75 and states:

In New York, assemblyman Steingut introduced A.B. 2745 which would require the commission of public health to maintain an official list of drugs generically equivalent to trade name drugs where he believes a substantial disparity exists between the sale price of the trade name drug and the generically equivalent drug.

• (8:20 p.m.)

The bill would further compel pharmacists to dispense the lowest priced generic drug on the list regardless of what the prescribing physician indicates in his prescription. This bill was killed, but not without a great deal of effort.

I was in Washington at the time Reader's Digest published a magazine containing an eight-page insert that was misrepresented as not being advertising. This insert was put out through P.M.A. in the United States. I shall read part of the statement of Senator Nelson of the United States select committee inquiring into this matter, because it deals with the subject better than I can explain it. This statement reads in part as follows:

An advertisement by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association in the form of an eight-page pull-out pamphlet has appeared in the November, 1967, issue of the Reader's Digest. The format of the section is designed to look like part of the ordinary editorial content of the magazine. The only indication that this section is paid advertising is the words "Special Advertising Section" which appear in small print on only the first page of the eight-page section.

On the next page, the first of four articles which comprise the section begin without any further indication that these articles are, in fact, the advertising matter to which reference has been made. To further confuse the reader, ads clearly identifiable as product advertisements have been interspersed among regular Reader's Digest articles which immediately follow the P.M.A. section. Thus, the reader may be led to believe that it is these latter ads which actually make up the "Special Advertising Section".

At the same time that this ad is being run in the Reader's Digest, reprints of this pamphlet are being circulated to offices of practising physicians for their waiting rooms and to various government agencies. These reprints, however, differ from the section which appears in the Reader's Digest in one very important respect: the P.M.A. has deleted the words "Special Advertising Section." The result, of course, is that there is absolutely no indication that this pamphlet is an advertisement. Neither the doctor nor the patient who reads this ad while waiting to see his doctor has any way of knowing that he is reading an ad copy which glorifies the members of the very group who paid to have this material written.

Further, a note appears opposite the first page of the section which tells the reader that he may order a reprint by writing to "Health," P. O. Box 28111, Washington, D.C., 20005. The designation "Health," rather than the actual name of the organization involved, seems to me to give the impression that a non-industry philanthropic group is sponsoring the reading matter which follows—not a trade association representing drug manufacturers.

Farther on in this statement Senator Nelson says:

There is no question that the entire ad is designed to avoid disclosing that it is, in fact, advertisement paid for by the drug industry. This calculated deception even goes so far as to include a solicitation to the reader to write to an organization called "Health" for reprints of the section.

Even on the last page, the words, "Published as a Public Service by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association," are misleading since advertising is not generally considered to be a public service.

Clearly, an attempt has been made here to use the wide circulation of the Reader's Digest to convince a large segment of the public that an advertisement written on behalf of the drug industry and paid for by its trade organization is an ordinary unbiased magazine article. The implication, of course, is that the P.M.A. is supporting an objective discussion of health problems as a matter of public service, rather than an advertisement calculated to serve the interests of its member firms.

This is going on in the United States. The same thing is going on here in Canada. There is no difference. I am using the illustration of the United States because they have done the work on this subject. We have done some tremendous work in this country through the committee of the House of Commons; but in spite of the work we have done, these profits continue to be made and drug prices continue to increase. I have here an article written about the situation in New York wherein drug firms were found guilty of conspiracy. This article appeared in the Regina Leader-Post of January 2 this year:

Three drug companies were found guilty Friday of conspiring to control the production and distribution of $1,700,000,000 worth of antibiotics. A federal court jury returned the guilty verdict against American Cyanimid, Bristol Myers and Charles Pfizer and Co.

The U.S. government has accused the three firms of agreeing in the mid-1950's to produce and distribute broad spectrum antibiotics. They were found guilty of restraint of trade, conspiracy to monopolize and actual monopoly.

The three companies were accused of violating the U.S. anti-trust law from 1953 to 1961. During the trial, the government prosecutor said Pfizer and Cyanimid realized "enormous" profits of an antibiotic called tetracycline.

He said the cost of manufacturing 100 capsules of the drug ranged from $1.59 to $3.87 for the two companies, but that each sold to druggists for $30.60 and that the cost to consumers was $51.

Two other companies, Olin Mathieson Chemical Corp. and the Upjohn Co. were named co-conspirators, but not defendants.

The prosecutor said agreements reached limited manufacture of the tetracyline products to the three defendants.

I think that entirely aside from this guilt, the guilt lies also with the P.M.A. in that these companies are still members in good standing of the P.M.A. although they have been found guilty of a conspiracy such as this. Does it not make the P.M.A. guilty of the same conspiracy when their members conspire to gyp the public out of almost $2 billion?

There is one last thing I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker. In the United States there is a man by the name of George S. Squibb, former vice president and consultant to E. R. Squibb and Sons, which was founded by his great grandfather. If I am not mistaken, this is the largest drug manufacturing company in the United States. George S. Squibb wrote a private paper which I have here in full. It is called "Drug Prices—The Achilles Heel of the Pharmaceutical Industry", which he circulated among friends and associates. Recently a member of the United States senate subcommittee released part of the text without Mr. Squibb's permission, and over his mild objections subsequently.

After writing and making a few phone calls there came into my hand the entire article that Mr. Squibb wrote. I should like to quote just two small paragraphs from this article. This is not taken out of context intentionally, because it would take perhaps half an hour to read it all and I am not going to do so. However, the two paragraphs which I shall read are as follows:

Getting at "high" drug prices for products covered by patents or licenses by exposure to public view of the internal procedures of pharmaceutical firms in a variety of ways is perhaps the most significant approach to the situation at present.

This method probably results in more damage to the public image of the pharmaceutical industry than any other, although to date it seems to have had little effect on the actual operations of individual companies.

I should like to bear that out, in conclusion, by saying that it does not seem to matter what we say in the House of Commons, what we do and what work we carry out in our committee; it does not seem to matter how many drug companies we meet up with and how many truths we find out which illustrate that people who are ill are perfect targets for the monopoly that has existed for years. It is only by means of this bill that we will put the foot in the door and possibly reduce some of the excessive profit that the drug companies are deriving from the high prices people are paying, and are seemingly willing to pay, because they are ill.

• (8:30 p.m.)

The drug companies are in a different position than possibly any other advertising source. This is because they send advertisements to doctors who prescribe the drugs for patients, who are the consumers. The consumers do not receive the benefit of the advertising of the drug companies, if it is a benefit, as is evidenced by the letter sent out by the Frank W. Horner Company Limited to a drug company in New Brunswick, a letter which I received in the mail today, and which reads as follows:

Dear Sir,

Here is your automatic shipment of two tranquilizers Horner launches this week at 25 per cent less. And you're going to gain substantially with this launch. I'll explain in a moment.

But first—let me introduce these two top-rated tranquilizers. They are among the most widely-prescribed in Canada, made available under licence—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): I will try not to make this too tranquil, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the house for its indulgence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Does the hon. member wish me to ask for the unanimous consent of the house for him to continue? Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Howe (Hamilton South).]

Mr. Howe (Hamilton South): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will continue reading this letter, which goes on as follows:

—and the originators receive a royalty. They are:
Solium 2—Horner's brand of chlordiazepoxide
Solazine 3—Horner's brand of trifluoperazine.

I think part of the problem consists of the fact that there are not many doctors who know these words, who can spell them or who know how to pronounce them. I think the drug companies capitalize on this.

Chlordiazepoxide is more commonly known as librium, which is certainly easier to remember and identify than the high cost, high profit product. Trifluoperazine is known as stelazine, and this is the one I referred to earlier which had the high profit mark-up of 9700 per cent. The letter continues to read:

Solium and Solazine will be available to your customers at 25 per cent less than the current net prices for competitive chlordiazepoxide and trifluoperazine. At the same time we have reduced our suggested list prices on miltown 4 and solacen 4 by 25 per cent. You may wish to dispense your current shelf stock at current prices and institute these lower prices with future shipments.

Now—what's in this for you!

We will not sample solium, solazine, miltown, and solacen to the Canadian physician! You will participate in the promotion of all four of these tranquilizers. Our entire field force will be leaving courtesy prescriptions with a vast number of Canadian doctors for trial quantities of these four tranquilizers. Not only will you not lose business because of sampling but when these courtesy prescriptions are filled you will make more than your full profit.

When you see a courtesy script (which will be easily identified) for 50 solium, solazine, solacen or miltown, please fill it and charge half the regular price. Initial and remove the tab from the script and save it for your Horner representative. He will not only reimburse you for the 25 tablets or capsules but will give you an additional 25 free!

You gain two ways—by reimbursement of double the quantity of our tranquilizers you provide free to patients, and by participating directly in our courtesy prescription program.

You then become a pusher, I suppose.

A complete description of solium and solazine, a revised price list, and a medical journal advertising reprint is enclosed. This advertisement explains further our position.

The success of this program depends on your co-operation. Your support will show that top quality drugs can be made available at reasonable prices.

Signed, Howden Horner,

President.

With this letter I received a note from Pepper's Drug Store Limited in Bathurst, New Brunswick which reads as follows:

> The enclosed letter was received with an "automatic shipment" of drugs today.
>
> The letter speaks for itself.
>
> 1) Drug prices are too high.
>
> 2) Contrary to the cost plus pricing concept adopted by most retail pharmacies.
>
> 3) Forcing the retail pharmacist to be part of the distribution set up.
>
> We returned the shipment!

Mr. Speaker, I think that all that I have read speaks for itself. It is very easy to see what is going on in Canada today. I think there should be no hesitancy about the bill before us. I know that the P.M.A.C. have been lobbying to get it back to the committee, as the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) has requested. I am sure he repeated some things they told him to say.

I say that if this bill goes back to committee, it will be at the wish of the P.M.A.C., and an attempt will be made to kill the bill in committee. It has been to the committee before it came here. It does not need further examination by the committee. All it needs is to be passed in the house.

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to participate in the debate. Tonight I wish to do so as the ex-chairman of the special committee on drug costs and prices, to which reference has been made during this debate. I would like to put on the record the terms of reference of the committee, which were as follows:

> That the committee be empowered to consider and recommend, as it may deem expedient, respecting a comprehensive and effective program to reduce the price of drugs.

As the house is aware, the committee reported on April 3, 1967 after over one year of intensive and detailed study. I think the basic feeling of the majority of the committee was that if we were to make recommendations which were to be taken seriously by the government, these recommendations had to be based on fact, and I believe we accomplished that. While many people have disagreed with our conclusions and recommendations, to my knowledge no one has challenged the material in the report on which these conclusions were based. I should like to remind the house that this was the unanimous report of a committee of the House of Commons composed of members from every political party in the house.

I would remind the house that there was no mention in the terms of reference to the matter of safety or quality of drugs. I am sure hon. members are aware that two years previous to that time a committee of the house had dealt in considerable detail with drug safety. The present committee realized that the question of costs could not be completely separated from that of safety. The actual cost of safety or quality control cannot be segregated from ordinary manufacturing costs, as they are often an integral part of the manufacturing process in any industry, whether it be a pharmaceutical or any other product. In any event, the committee found the actual cost of safety or quality control to be small but very essential. I would emphasize to the house that no recommendations of this committee would reduce the money spent on safety. As a matter of fact, the matter of safety must come before that of cost. After all, life is more important than money, and no recommendation of our committee should be carried out unless safety can be assured as much as possible.

We all know that the complete safety of any drug cannot be guaranteed, no matter how minor the drug or how major the government's caution and concern. As a matter of fact, if I were to summarize the report of the committee, I would say that the majority of the recommendations, by actual count 20 out of 23, fell into two major categories: first, those that were intended to make lower cost drugs available in Canada and, second, those that would ensure as much as practicable that these lower cost drugs would be safe for the use of the consumer.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I should like to review a few of the conclusions of the report and make a few comments on them. The first one I should like to comment upon is that no significant change has taken place in the drug cost structure since the recommendations of the Hall commission, which were primarily based upon the recommendations of the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. So far as the committee could see, the drug industry had made no attempt to reduce drug costs, despite those reports which were very critical of the drug industry. The drug industry had not taken the report seriously and apparently had never expected the government to take any further action on that report, or on our report.

As has been mentioned before, there exists no single method or simple approach which can be taken to reduce the price of drugs to the consumer. It was therefore necessary to present a series of recommendations to effect this purpose. As hon. members are aware, and as the minister said, the federal sales tax has been removed and some changes have been made in tariffs. This bill No. C-190 deals with another series of recommendations our committee made.

The medical profession, of course, is responsible for prescribing most drugs. If these committee recommendations are to be fully effective, the medical profession must be completely assured by the food and drug directorate of the safety of all drugs. If the medical practitioners in Canada cannot be assured that drugs in Canada are as safe, and I mean "safe" in a reasonable manner as human effort can reasonably make them, and are, therefore, prepared to use the lower priced drugs, then the report we submitted and the minister's proposed legislation is not worth the paper it is printed on. This legislation will be of no benefit to anyone unless the medical practitioners in Canada can be assured that the drugs that would be available under the minister's legislation would be safe for them to use.

The next conclusion concerns the implementation of the recommendation in connection with marketing and promotional expenses, and the reduction of excessive profits. As an example, the committee was greatly concerned with the average expenditure of 30 per cent of the manufacturer's dollar on promotion and marketing as opposed to 7 per cent being spent on research. In other words, more than four times as much money was being spent on marketing and advertising a drug as was being spent on research into medicinal products. As the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe) said, it is important to know also that a good deal of the 7 per cent spent on research was spent on applied research, applying the benefits of other forms of research. Only a very small proportion of that was spent on basic medical research. The committee realized that the implementation of our recommendations could alter, in some respects, the form of the drug industry as it exists in Canada today, removing inefficiency and increasing competition. What the committee felt must be done is to introduce competition into the drug industry, not product competition such as duplication of another successful product which increases cost, but competition on prices, which is the kind that is needed in the drug industry.

[Mr. Harley.]

I should like to say in passing that many countries, including the United States and the United Kingdom, are having a series of studies made of this problem. It is interesting to note in passing that the Sainsbury report in the United Kingdom recently recommended abolishing trade names and using only generic names for drugs.

I should like to talk for a few minutes about one of the major recommendations of the committee, namely that the food and drug directorate publish not less than once a month an informative bulletin to the medical profession giving complete details on drugs and their actions, and reviewing major drug usage in Canada. This would of course go not only to the medical profession but also to the related professions including pharmacy. The committee realizes that to ask a doctor to change his prescribing habits is a very serious responsibility. It should be done only if the doctor can be assured that the drugs he has the option of prescribing are as safe as possible. To do this the doctor should, and indeed must, have free access to a non-biased current report on drugs which would include certain data—and I should like to emphasize the words "non-biased". In other words, the bulletin would not be put out by a drug company and would be available free to the medical profession. The committee felt the following should be included in that bulletin:

1. The generic name of the drug.

2. Names of all manufacturers of the drug, and brand names of the drug.

3. Comparative costs and clinical effectiveness of the drug.

4. How the drug works; side effects, contra-indications and toxicity.

5. The last assay for each company's product, of content and availability of active ingredient, solubility and disintegration.

6. Any problems with any company's product such as toxicity, impurity, seizures, court actions failure to meet food and drug directorate standards.

The committee feels that the food and drug directorate has been keeping some of its activities from the medical profession. The findings on drugs should be openly reported to the medical profession in public documents. If there are poor quality drugs on the market, then the medical and pharmaceutical professions should be told. The medical and related professions have to be convinced that the food and drug directorate has full and accurate knowledge of the drug industry. To do this, they have to report fully and I believe, in a public bulletin. If the medical profession cannot be assured by giving them freely full and unbiased evidence of all the factors concerning drugs, then it is obvious we cannot expect the medical profession to change their prescribing habits in favour of the lower cost drugs.

I have been asked in what way this might tend to lower the price of drugs. Certainly, the staff that would be required by the food and drug directorate to publish such a bulletin would be expensive and would probably take up to two years to set into motion. I believe, however, that the savings that could be made if the medical profession used this bulletin to their own advantage, and more particularly to their patients' advantage, would be very substantial. The consumer would benefit greatly from this saving, enough to more than justify the expense.

Many hon. members here are aware of the large savings that can be made, many of which have been referred to today, when drugs are purchased under a tendering system. Most of these drugs do come from generic manufacturing houses. Many generic drugs are used by the staffs of various hospitals. These same staff doctors may not use generic drugs outside their hospital practice, but many are often doing so inside the hospital without being fully aware of the source of the medication they are prescribing.

I am convinced more doctors would prescribe the lower cost drugs of generic manufacturers if they were convinced that they were safe to use and equally effective. I hope therefore that the government will see fit, in the very near future, following these recommendations, to introduce the type of bulletin to which the committee made reference. Obviously the federal government has no power to implement some of the recommendations of our committee. Some of the recommendations come under the jurisdiction of provincial governments and some come under the heads of pharmaceutical bodies and other public bodies. I hope all those interested bodies will see to it that the recommendations are given serious consideration. Obviously the government cannot implement in a field in which it has no jurisdiction; we can only bring in recommendations. For instance, we have no control over the field of retail pharmacy, and therefore the government can make no recommendations in that area.

• (8:50 p.m.)

The unanimous conclusion—I emphasize the word "unanimous"—not only of the special committee on drug costs and prices but of the various other inquiries in Canada is that drug prices are higher than they need be and certainly higher than the public is prepared to pay without question. One of the major causes of drug costs has been attributed to the degree of protection accorded to the drug manufacturing industry by such laws as the Patent Act and the Trade Marks Act. This has resulted in a lack of competition. What the committee hopes the recommendation will accomplish is the injection of a greater degree of competition in the pharmaceutical industry at all levels. Despite the many studies that have taken place over the past ten years the industry has not, as far as I am aware, made any attempt to produce solutions to the problems. As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the government has removed the federal sales tax and has made changes in some of the various laws. Today's move is to bring in recommendations that change the patent and trade marks laws in such a way as to provide Canadians with less expensive but equally safe drugs.

There has been a great deal of discussion about patents and patent protection. I should like to point out to the house that patent protection at the present time in Canada is for 17 years and that the present legislation will not change it. The system of compulsory licensing that we are talking about has actually been in effect since 1923. The principle that food and drugs are different from other inventions was actually established in 1923, and is not being established now.

As far as compulsory licences are concerned, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote the report of the special committee of the House of Commons on drug costs and prices. At page 38 appears this paragraph:

> The committee found that up to 1949 no applications for compulsory licences had been made in Canada.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, this was included in the legislation in 1923.

> —Since 1949 the commissioner of patents has had to deal with thirty-four applications for licences upon medicinal products. Fourteen were granted, thirteen were abandoned or withdrawn, one was refused and six are pending.

Those figures were as of September, 1966. The system of compulsory licensing has been in existence in Canada since 1923, and up to the present time has not been put to any great use.

As the minister mentioned previously, patents in Canada—at least those relating to drugs—are now over 95 per cent foreign owned. Patent rights, despite this legislation, will be retained; and I do not believe that there will be any international implications of the kind several hon. members of the house alluded to during the debate.

As I have said, compulsory licensing has been the practice in Canada since 1923. It is also a system that is used in the United Kingdom under very similar legislation. To my knowledge, no one in the United Kingdom or in Canada has ever complained on an international level that the compulsory licensing system interfered with their patent rights, to their great detriment.

Some reference has been made to some literature that all of us have received during the last few days, particularly to a letter and a brief forwarded to various members of the house by P.M.A.C., the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. The second paragraph of the letter reads:

> Bill C-190 essentially would abolish normal patent and some trade mark rights as they relate to prescription medicines made in Canada.

Then it goes on:

> We believe it might set an unfortunate precedent.

I have just pointed out to the house, Mr. Speaker, that this is not so. First of all, it would not abolish normal patent protection; nor would it set a precedent. The precedent was actually set in 1923.

In the third paragraph of their letter the association say that they had hoped there might be consultation on this legislation prior to its introduction. This legislation was introduced almost a year after the recommendations of our committee. The Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada had the advantage of making many representations to the committee. Since that time the minister's office has been open to them for representations, and the minister has seen representatives of the association as a body on at least two occasions. He has also seen representatives of any drug company that wished to see him regarding the legislation, and has seen them, as far as I am aware, to the fullest of their wishes. Certainly it is my understanding that no one has been denied an interview with the minister or the department on this matter.

While I am talking about the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada, Mr. Speaker, I should also like to disagree with a statement that was made in Florida by the president of the association. He stated that the Canadian parliamentary committee was willing to put Canada at the mercy of foreign nations in the event of world wide epidemics. I am not sure how I should qualify this statement. Whether the changes in the legislation with regard to compulsory licensing go through or not, this statement could perhaps be said basically to be true. As was pointed out this afternoon, Canada does not have a significant, basic fine chemical industry. I might point out that the basic chemicals used by the drug industry in Canada today do not originate in Canada, but come mainly from the United States. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if the statement to which I have referred is true after the legislation passes, then it is equally true before the legislation passes.

I also think the house should understand that under the laws and regulations of the food and drug directorate at least a five-year monopoly is given to any company that introduces a new drug into Canada under the principle of patent protection. This is because a drug that comes into Canada under a patent protection is classified as a new drug until it satisfies the directorate that the company has met their requirements concerning research on the particular drug in question.

The minimum period of time that elapses before a drug loses its new drug status is five years, and usually is a great deal longer than that. In other words, the company that produces the drug does indeed have a five-year monopoly, during which time it may regain its research costs and can actually go out and try to corner the market for that particular product. The company has five years' access to a completely monopolized market; and as I have said, Mr. Speaker, usually the period is more than five years.

No company, Mr. Speaker, has asked or is likely to ask for a compulsory licence before new drug status is lost. If it does this, it means that it has to reduplicate all the investigational work on the particular drug. No compulsory licence has ever been applied for by a company while that stipulation was there. It is a very expensive procedure to introduce a new drug. Therefore I think it very unlikely that a compulsory licence would be asked for during that time. So there is no question, Mr. Speaker, that the major patent rights are retained, and certainly a complete monopoly without any risk of compulsory licence is available to the company for at least five, and perhaps many more years.

There is no question that patents do influence the price of drugs. I think reference was made to the fact that the United States, does not have a compulsory licensing system, as we have in Canada. Chloromycetin was much cheaper in Canada under our compulsory licensing system than it was in the United States. Recently the patent in the United States ran out, and practically overnight the price of chloromycetin in the United States fell almost 50 per cent. So indeed, Mr. Speaker, patent protection does influence greatly the price of drugs.

The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) made reference this afternoon to Appendix A of the brief submitted by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. This appendix refers to nine drug companies which were told to stop marketing chloramphenicol. It is my understanding the chloramphenicol has been rechecked by the food and drug directorate and is now free to come on the market.

I point out to the house that if drugs are imported into Canada in final dosage forms under compulsory licences, which is what the legislation recommends, those drugs must pass the food and drug regulations as they concern quality and safety, in the same way as the drugs of Canadian manufacturers must pass those regulations. Those drugs will not be exempt from any tests that are applied to other drugs.

Mention has been made of inspection services. How are we to maintain inspection services, particularly in foreign countries, some hon. members have asked. So far as food and drug inspectors are concerned I point out that inspectors at present work in foreign countries, and particularly in European countries. These inspectors are Canadian members of the food and drug staff who act as inspectors in connection with the purchase of drugs. Certain classes of drugs, namely biological products, require inspection at source before they are allowed into Canada. As I say, at present we have inspectors in Europe.

Sending inspectors of the food and drug directorate to other countries, including European countries, cannot be considered a precedent. They inspect manufacturing facilities and make sure that proper quality control and safety standards are being met, and in this regard their service is an extension of the service that is presently performed in Canada.

Another point I wish to mention is that if drugs are brought in under compulsory licence, the originating company will receive royalties which are based on the cost of production and not on the selling price of the product. Because, as has been mentioned and admitted in evidence before the committee, the selling price of a product bears no relation to the cost of producing that product.

This afternoon the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) quite justifiably mentioned that great Canadian discovery, insulin, and he paid compliments to the Canadian discoverers, Drs. Banting and Best. He knows that insulin was discovered, not in the laboratory of any drug company, but at the University of Toronto. He mentioned that the University of Toronto now spends a great deal of money on medical research because Drs. Banting and Best turned over the royalties to the university in order that the royalties might be used in medical research. Exactly the same situation might prevail if a compulsory licence were granted. Royalties are still paid and there is no reason for the type of activity I have just mentioned not to continue under the proposed legislation.

The committee was greatly concerned with the fact that the manufacturing companies spend 30 per cent of their dollar on promotion and marketing and only 7 per cent of their dollar on research. The committee believed that the 30 per cent that was spent on promotion and marketing was unnecessary. Almost every doctor in Canada will tell you that most of the material that crosses his desk is never read but thrown into the waste-paper basket, at great expense to the drug companies.

We believe that if drug companies in Canada are forced to cut back, because of drugs at more competitive prices being brought into the country, they can do so by cutting down on some of the frills, particularly the 30 per cent they spend for promotion and marketing. They can still make a profit within the Canadian economy. As everyone knows, the drug companies must make some profit in order that investors may invest their money in such companies.

I point out that though generic drug companies sell their drugs at prices that are different from the prices charged for brand name drugs, the companies still make a profit. No one suggests that they are doing this at a lower profit than is available to companies selling brand name drugs.

As I have already mentioned, the committee heard a great deal of evidence about the safety aspect of drugs. We have been very fortunate in Canada because we have had few problems with drugs that have been manufactured in Canada. Few serious problems have arisen in connection with trade mark or generic brands, yet the question of safety has been talked about and worried about in Canada and in the United States, much more than the evidence of unsafe drugs would warrant.

I expect that members of the house are aware that the government of Canada purchases great quantities of drugs to be used in the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Veterans Affairs, as well as in the Canadian Armed Forces. The committee called members of the government purchasing service before it, as shown in volume 2, page 1509 of the testimony before the special committee on drug costs and prices, 1966-67. The questioning was about the safety aspect of drugs and on that page Mr. Ellis, a witness before the committee, says this:

> Mr. Chairman, as far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned, we depend on our two suppliers, as I pointed out in my statement. We get all our drugs from either Department of Veterans Affairs or through the surgeon general's branch of the Department of National Defence. We depend on the testing procedures of those two departments.
> I can make an unequivocal statement, though, that we have had not a single complaint of lack of efficacy in our drugs. This was borne out this past week by phone calls to four senior pharmacists across the country.

I expect members of the house know that the government buys under a tendering system and most drug supplies are bought from companies that are classified as manufacturers of generic drugs.

I believe that the questions of safety and quality are not debatable. They are factual. For the reasons I have already given, the first consideration with respect to drugs must be safety and quality. Two things must be done if safe drugs at lower costs are to be made available to all Canadians. As the committee recommended, the first of these would be to grant compulsory licences for the importation of dosage forms of drugs of all types. At present you can import drugs into Canada in their chemical form. The changes in the act would allow the importation of drugs in all forms. The second matter, the doctors' bulletin, I have already referred to.

I wish to refer briefly to one statement that the hon. member for Simcoe East made. Toward the end of his remarks he asked for this matter to be sent to committee for further study. Originally, the special committee on drug costs and prices was set up in 1963 as a result of the thalidomide tragedy, and originally it was to consider only the safety aspect of drugs in Canada. The question of costs was added about one year later, in the new terms of reference which were established by the minister of national health and welfare of that day. As I said, the committee which brought in its report on April 3, 1967, sat extensively. It lasted for well over one year. The entire idea behind the setting up of the committee is several years old. Anyone reading the evidence will find that of the 2,700 pages of evidence which are concerned with the cost of drugs and the price of drugs, at least half have to do with the aspect of safety.

I believe it would be nothing but repetition to send a matter like this back to a committee of this House of Commons. I believe nothing is to be gained by it. The legislation which the minister has introduced is the product of the recommendations of a committee of this house, and to send the same legislation back for further committee study would be repetitious, ridiculous and a great waste of time of the house. I hope the house will see fit to pass this legislation quickly because I believe the need in Canada is to provide safe and effective drugs at reasonable and competitive prices.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, we listened at great length this afternoon to the minister, and this evening to the chairman of the special committee on drug costs in Canada, and other related matters. It has been enlightening and informative I am sure to those members of the house who were not on the committee, but I must say frankly that sitting here this afternoon I was not at all sure I was a member of that committee.

My remarks will centre largely on what I consider to be a serious misreading of the intentions of the bulk of the recommendations of the special committee. The purpose of the study and, I suppose, the intent of the bill—the two may be compatible at this early point—was to allow compulsory licences for the importation of prescription drugs in finished dosage form. The spin-off was intended to encourage competition at the manufacturers level, and thereby reduce the cost of drugs. As a proposition, this seems valid on the surface, but it must be considered in the light of an imporan word which has been loosely used by some hon. members in this debate so far. That word is "safety". We on this side agree with the intent of any measure which will lower the prices of prescription drugs to consumers. This is a philosophy to which I think everyone in this house adheres. In saying this we do not mean to imply either directly or otherwise that the cost of drugs in Canada is necessarily too high. Indeed I directed questions to a large number of witnesses who appeared before the committee on that specific point—as to whether in their opinion the cost of drugs in Canada was too high. The generality of opinion was that they might be high, but that they were not necessarily too high.

We started this inquiry on February 15, 1966 when a special committee was set up. It is not necessary to review the terms of reference in detail, but I will emphasize one point because it is an essential part of the background to the remarks I intend to make. We were not asked to say whether prices were too low or too high. Rather we were directed to find a comprehensive and effective program to reduce the price of drugs in Canada, the inference being that the price of drugs was, in fact, too high. As the chairman of the special committee has correctly pointed out, we were not necessarily to concern ourselves about safety. To tackle these terms of reference realistically we had to make some basic decisions at the outset. Most of these are clearly set out, and they are to be found at page 6 of the committee's final report to the house. They are, in essence, that the committee's conclusions should be such that any of its recommendations, if adopted, should continue to maintain a proper balance between industry and consumer, and take into consideration the importance of continued and increased scientific research in Canada.

This was the fundamental premise from which we started. No recommendation could be considered which, although designed to lower drug prices in Canada, might produce drugs of questionable safety or have a detrimental effect on other aspects of the Canadian economy. We were given our terms of reference and we set our guide lines. The committee met some 63 times. We heard evidence from firms, associations, private individuals, government agencies and governments. In addition we had before us the research studies which have been mentioned —the findings of three previous Canadian commissions, those of the royal commission on health services, the patents, copyright and industrial designs commission, which was the Ilsley commission of 1960, and the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission. We also had access to many other reports and texts in this field such as the Kefauver report, which has been mentioned today, the Hinchcliffe report from the United Kingdom, published in 1959, and the reports of several Canadian provinces—Manitoba, British Columbia and Ontario. Not least, I suggest, we had before us the reports of the Boyd and Hilliard committees, both appointed under the aegis of the present government. These I suggest are the ones most pertinent to what we are about to do here some time during the next day or so.

I mention this background to illustrate the concern which has existed for some time not only in Canada but in other countries in connection with the drug industry, and to show that the Harley committee approached the task assigned to it with a full awareness of its responsibility to fellow members in the house and to all Canadians.

We on this side believe that the report generally represented an adequate and proper discharge of that responsibility. Before we look closely at the bill before us I believe we should refresh our collective memories as to the recommendations of the special committee on drug prices and costs and the implications of the implementation of those recommendations. I should like to read at least three of the committee's conclusions, because I think they are germane to the conclusions at which we on this side believe the house should arrive. The first is:

> That the food and drug directorate publish not less than once a month an informative bulletin to the medical profession giving complete details on drugs and their actions and reviewing major drug uses in Canada.

Notwithstanding the comments of the previous speaker, I would ask the minister whether this has been done. Has it been done yet? Has any action been taken to lead to the implementation of this particular recommendation? The minister admitted earlier today that it had not.

The fourth recommendation of the committee was:

> That present ministerial authority as provided in Section 38 of the Customs Act be amended in so far as the importation of drugs into Canada is concerned, and that future value for duty be set in all cases at the cost of production of the imported drug plus an allowance for gross profit (i.e. an allowance to cover the actual manufacturer's administrative overhead, selling costs and net profit, etc.)

• (9:20 p.m.)

Here again I should like to ask the minister what has been done about this. It has been indicated that there has been a narrowing of the area in respect of the fifth conclusion, which states that the Customs Act should be amended to make clear that dumping duties with respect to drugs be limited only to affect those drugs of a kind made in Canada. I should like to ask the minister to tell us what the narrowing has been, or where the protection is. So far as I have been able to determine, this information is not available to us in print. I do not particularly wish to discuss all the recommendations, but I mention these three because they are indicative of the situation.

Some considerable time has elapsed since the publication of this report. The government has acted on one or two of the ideas set out here and has embodied them in at least one clause of the bill. However, the lack of action on the part of the government is indicative of the fact that there has been a rejection by government officials of the report of the special committee. Indeed, most of the provisos attached to the recommendations of the special committee have been dropped. Of the seven recommendations of the committee which are pertinent to Bill No. C-190—recommendations 2, 11, 17, 18, 19, 20 and 21—we find that only one, recommendation 21, was actually implemented, and that only two additional ideas were picked up and used in another form. This is the situation, in our opinion and I believe in the opinion of most members who were members of the special committee—in spite of the fact that the recommendations in the report are spelled out clearly, and in spite of the fact that drug prices in Canada are indeed higher than they need be.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

According to Mr. David Henry, the reasons for these prices are not single but are multiple and relate not only to the pharmaceutical manufacturing companies but also to the retail pharmacies and indeed, as we all know, the taxation policies of the government. They are due, as well, to the food and drug directorate, because of the regulations it imposes on the industry, the drug wholesalers, the physician who prescribes the drug and indeed the person who must have recourse to the drug and demands the very best. If I were a doctor I suppose it would be simple for me to say, "How often do we in this discipline hear workers say that they cannot afford to stay off work, and ask whether there is some pill or shot that will fix them up so that they may be able to stay on the job."

The recommendations of the committee also pointed out very clearly the importance that should attach to the matter of safety and the vital role of the food and drug directorate in this regard. They also point out the need for more research in Canada, both in the pharmaceutical and medical fields. As a member of the committee I am very gratified at the manner in which the pharmaceutical manufacturing industry and the retail pharmacists have responded to and have implemented certain committee recommendations. We see that the pharmaceutical associations across Canada are considering, and I think perhaps one province, if not more, has already instituted, recommendation No. 15 of the committee which deals with the ethics of the profession or the discipline of pharmacy. This has to do with the method of determining drug prices to the consumer.

The method of pricing drugs and some of the other recommendations have at least been given active consideration by the retail pharmacists and pharmaceutical associations. Members on this side of the house find encouraging the co-operation which has already begun to evolve between the manufacturers and the wholesalers in respect of the abolition of the recommended price lists. I believe stringent steps have been taken to revise their promotional practices. This was another of our recommendations.

This afternoon and evening we have had discussions about this being the reason for one of the highest costs in the manufacturing dollar. Something must be done in this regard. It is not a matter of a recommendation having been made, and ignored by the industry.

● (9:30 p.m.)

I should like to ask again what the government has done in this regard. Let us take a look at what has been done. The government has removed the inequitable sales tax on drugs. Indeed I wonder why it ever should have been increased to the level of 12 per cent. The grants to the Medical Research Council have been increased. This was mentioned earlier, and I believe everyone is gratified that this has been done. But what about the food and drug directorate itself? There was a good deal of evidence which pointed out the need for increased staff and the inability of the food and drug directorate to actively meet its commitments with its present staff. I suppose I should ask whether the personnel and facilities have been expanded, or indeed whether the recommendations of the Hilliard committee have been implemented.

The report of the Hilliard committee and the report of the Boyd committee were considered to be very important reports. They deal with the matter of the safety of drugs. I suggest that the government in this regard has procrastinated and delayed, and I believe this has been done deliberately. I ask again whether the Tariff Board has reviewed the drug tariff structure pursuant to recommendation No. 6 in the committee report. This is the recommendation which asks that the federal government instruct the Tariff Board to review the drug tariff structure. Has this been done and, if not, why not? Has the Customs Act been amended in line with recommendation No. 5 which I read into the record a while ago? Again we have the vague assurance that there has been a narrowing in this particular regard. We have had nothing specific. I suggest that the answer by the government in respect of these questions is Bill No. C-190, despite the warnings and recommendations contained in the committee report and despite conclusion No. 3, which deals with the matter of the issuance of a bulletin by the government.

The government has wilfully ignored the recommendations of the special committee. The result is that we have Bill C-190. We know it proposes simply to grant the commissioner of patents the full power to grant licences under patents relating to medicines, and to grant licences for the importation of medicines in any form. No reference to safety is made in the bill. There is absolutely nothing in respect of guarantees. Apparently the minister and his government are so intent on reducing the prices of drugs they do not care what kind of drugs are imported, so long as they are cheaper. It is not good enough for us on this side of the house or for the Canadian people to save a few pennies, without measuring value and the safety of the users of the drug. Surely that is poor business sense.

Hon. members of this house should be aware of the incalculable harm and danger we would do if we did not bring to the attention of all members and the Canadian people the dangers implicit in this bill. We would be abdicating our responsibility to all Canadians if we did not object to it as vigourously as possible. We would be failing in our duty if we accepted any bill that puts price ahead of the well-being of the people of the country, and we know instinctively that this is a bad bill.

This whole question of safety was raised and dealt with repeatedly throughout the hearings of the committee.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Forrestall: A very short one.

Mr. Orlikow: I should like to ask the hon. member if it is not true that the director of the food and drug administration gave evidence to the committee that there were really no differences in quality and safety factors between generic and brand name drugs used for prescriptions in this country.

Mr. Forrestall: He may very well have said that, but he said a lot of things that were contradictory. I do not recall that specific reference.

I should like to read one or two things that members of that august body had to say on this point, having to do with safety. Let me quote what Mr. David Henry had to say as recorded in the proceedings of the special committee on drug costs and prices at page 2182 of that evidence on Tuesday, February 7, 1967. He was talking here about safety of drugs, and this is what he said:

> I am also making another assumption, and that is, that I regard as completely paramount the necessity of making sure that Canadians receive drugs of high quality, drugs which are safe, and drugs which are effective. Anything I say has borne that in mind, and as I say, to me that is paramount; it is not even an issue in this debate; I do not think anybody would quarrel with this point.

Mr. Henry is an acknowledged expert. Indeed I understand he at least had something to do with drafting this bill; but I see nothing in the bill dealing with the safety of drugs that we are going to allow into the country.

Again, at page 2188 Mr. Henry had this to say:

> It should also be recognized that any proposal to inject price competition calls for action at three major levels—the manufacturer's level, the retail level, and the patient's level (which effectively means the level of the physician). I mention the physician merely so that it will be borne in mind that no matter how much opportunity for price competition may be made available, unless a physician has confidence in the source of the drug and in the measures taken to ensure the purity, safety and effectiveness of the product he would not prescribe it for his patient. It is therefore important that along with any package of measures adopted, full attention be given to the necessity of building up confidence on the part of the physician in competing products available so far as safety, quality and effectiveness are concerned. In the absence of such confidence, a downward pressure on drug prices cannot, in my view, be achieved.

We heard evidence before the committee as well on the question of drugs coming into the country, and we heard evidence of the inability of the food and drug directorate to check effectively on the various factors involved in ensuring absolute safety of drugs. Indeed, if my general understanding is accurate, the concern of the food and drug directorate is that a particular drug should measure up to what it is represented to be. We have all read very recently about the sale of water to Viet Nam under the guise of its being a drug. If it can happen in one country it can happen in another. I suppose as long as it was listed as water the food and drug directorate would not object.

Let me again quote from page 2167 of this evidence taken before the committee. Perhaps I should not quote this, as it is quite lengthy, but it has reference to what Dr. Hilliard had to say.

In spite of all these facts the minister continues to ignore the advice of a series of dedicated Canadians, both from the public service and the industrial level. I wonder sometimes whether the minister's common sense has been affected by more heady prospects which might lie ahead. I am wondering if he is not more concerned about his stance before the conference to be held in this city in a few weeks. He has continued to ignore these remarks and recommendations, contained not only in the conclusions of the special committee but in other evidence available to us and available to the government.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

• (9:40 p.m.)

Tied in with recommendations 16 and 17 is recommendation number 2. We dealt with it briefly, but perhaps I should repeat it because it leads to something else. This recommendation has regard to personnel and facilities of the food and drug directorate, and what we consider on this side of the house to be an imperative need for expansion to allow the full implementation of the Boyd and Hilliard reports. I would remind the minister that this recommendation was also one of those made in the fifth report of the special committee on food and drugs, back in the 26th parliament. That recommendation has been ignored. How many committees must we have and how many witnesses must we hear in the future before this government realizes that you cannot, under any circumstances, separate quality from price when you are dealing with patent medicines and drugs?

The hon. member for Halton (Mr. Harley), who spoke very informatively a little earlier, said as reported at page 1531 of the committee proceedings:

> You are talking about safety, and our terms of reference are actually cost, but there is no question that the two are related.

Then the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) said:

> I think we all agree, Mr. Chairman, that if safety was not a factor you could buy drugs even cheaper.

What was the committee talking about? It was talking about government policy of buying drugs on price consideration alone, and the great concern of members of the Department of Defence Production and all the departments concerned in the quality of drugs tendered and bought by the government. There was a very revealing meeting that particular day. It was one that certainly gave the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. Brand) a considerable insight into the practices of the government with regard to the purchase of drugs. I think that meeting left many of us with the impression that at least members of veterans hospitals, the armed forces and others in the general area of government paternalism are receiving drugs the origins of which are not always known, even to the purchasing agents responsible for their ordering.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any need to read the evidence into the record. It is there to be seen in Dr. Chapman's remarks at pages 1994 and 1995 of the proceedings of the committee, in the remarks of Mr. Allmark, deputy director of the food and drug directorate, at pages 1530 and 1531, and in the remarks of Mr. Showalter at page 1539.

This is a very serious matter. The government suggests that there is adequate protection in respect of drugs coming into the country. Here is an example of where the purchasing agent did not even know the origins of the drugs he was ordering. They could indeed have come from the same source which supplied the salt water to Viet Nam. I suggest that the issue is quite apparent. It does not seem to us that the government is at all concerned with safety.

I do not know whether deliberately or due to a lack of knowledge they have left this matter out of Bill C-190 entirely. There has been ample persuasion to suggest to the minister and his departmental officials that indeed you cannot separate them. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what has been the motivation of the government.

Many areas should have been touched on and I hope will be touched on arising out of the effects of the implementation of the plan as outlined by the minister before the committee. For example, we had a great deal of evidence which indicated that the importation of drugs in the manner suggested would lead to the destruction of the pharmaceutical industry in Canada. That was not simply the pleading of a special interest.

We heard earlier in the day that there was nothing that would encourage expansion by the small manufacturer. I fail to see anything so far in what the minister or anybody else has said that would justify the industry remaining in this country at all. Why should it stay here and operate at the high cost levels of the economic structures in Canada today, when there are many areas where the economic structures are much more compatible with this type of industry? This is the type of industry where transportation is not a major factor.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Henry stated in the committee that there were grave doubts held by his department whether it is a good idea to have a pharmaceutical industry in Canada at all. I think he perhaps phrased it in a way to suggest that, as far as the industry is concerned, we must look at the situation very carefully to see whether it would be advisable to continue the industry in this country. I cannot in any way see anything to reject that statement as a premise. In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I again suggest to you that this philosophy and principle is rather apparent in the bill that is before us.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order? I think the statement, if read carefully, by the Director of Research was to the effect that the industry might not exist in its present form, not that it would not exist at all. I think if the hon. member reads the statement carefully he will come to that conclusion.

Mr. Forrestall: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but that is not the conclusion that I came to at all. I came to another conclusion. If this situation were to come about because of this bill passing, in spite of the very valid objections that we have made in regard to the very obvious absence of anything in it to adequately protect Canadian consumers—and we have suggested what those protections should be—I do not think we could in good conscience do anything but oppose the bill.

I conclude by asking the minister again to reconsider, if for no other reason than to satisfy the Canadian people on the question of safety, the reference of the bill back to a standing committee. I suggest that this need not necessarily be the standing committee which dealt with it at the outset; but because of the implications to the industry, because of the very obvious conflicts that will arise, perhaps the bill could be referred to the finance and industry committee, where it could be dealt with not only in the light of the safety factor involved but in the light of its consequences upon some rather basic industrial philosophies that some have in this country.

The impact of the loss of 2,500 trained university men has been pointed out. If there were not a complete loss, the serious impairment caused by the loss of these trained people would be enough in itself to warrant this one further step on the part of the government. We wonder at times whether we can be a viable nation if we are not producing, and this measure would seem to me to be one step toward the curtailment of a viable and lively industry, one that is developing and growing, one that indeed is not nearly as guilty of most of the sins that have been ascribed to it, as has been pointed out so forcibly by the minister and other speakers today.

We have had a great deal of misrepresentation placed upon certain facts, or at least conclusions drawn and inferences left that are not correct. The question of royalties has been raised, that is, the difference in royalties paid in this country and in the United Kingdom. Entirely different methods are used. It is a small point but it is symptomatic of what we are dealing with. You cannot relate one system to another and come up with an entirely different system: It just does not work.

• (9:50 p.m.)

I hope again that the minister will reconsider this bill, if on no other grounds, then on the grounds of satisfying the users of drugs in Canada that the drugs which come into this country under such a broadened and widened form of legislation would indeed be safe drugs.

Mr. Richard Cashin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the remarks of the previous speaker, and in the time at my disposal I would like to deal with some of the objections to the bill that have been raised by the vested interests and by hon. gentleman opposite, which seemed to have some similarities.

It would seem that the main thesis propounded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Forrestall) in opposition to this bill was not based on the fact that he feels the cost of drugs is unreasonable. I think he raised two points in objection to the bill. It would appear that in his mind the objections were so great as to permit what is an intolerable situation to exist for some time. Therefore if we are to decide on the merits of the hon. member's speech, we must reflect on the objections he has raised. His major objection had to do with safety. The drug industry itself has made reference to safety and quality control, and there is no question that this is a matter which can arouse a considerable amount of emotional support. It is entirely consistent in the art of politics, when advocating a course of action which in all other respects may be undesirable and unpopular, to try to find one aspect of your case which arouses public sympathy, and by doing that perhaps to obscure the major merits of your opponent's argument, thus helping to win the day on fallacious grounds. I believe that if the arguments of the hon. member opposite and the drug industry were to carry the day, the Canadian people would be done a considerable disservice.

I do not want to spend a great deal of time on the matter of the safety of drugs, because it has already been dealt with eloquently by previous speakers and by the interjection of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). The hon. member for Halifax said he saw no mention of this in the bill. May I refer him to subclause 13 which requires that notice be given to the Department of National Health and Welfare; and it is surely the function of the food and drug directorate to determine the safety and quality of drugs. There is nothing in the training of a patent officer and nothing to qualify that branch of government permitting it to set the criteria for safety.

The suggestion has been made by the drug industry and by the hon. member for Halifax that there is a relationship between patents and safety, and patents and quality control, and that any change in the patent law goes to the root of the problem of safety and quality control, when in fact the large body of evidence collected by the Hall commission and by the committee of the house shows the contrary. Notwithstanding that evidence and the provisions in this legislation, both the drug industry and the hon. member for Halifax have placed emphasis on the safety issue. Were I one who wanted to oppose the bill, were I not greatly concerned about the cost of drugs, and were I looking for arguments which might have some popular appeal for the general public which might not have the opportunity to examine the matter closely, quite obviously the issue to choose would be safety and quality control. It is an excellent technique which is as old as the art of politics itself.

In this case, however, the arguments of the hon. member opposite have little or no resemblance to the facts, which is what this chamber is concerned about. Naturally we are all concerned about the matter of safety and quality control. I think it would be ridiculous to assume that the royal commission on health services, the standing committee of the house, and the two doctors, members of the house, who spoke in this debate could, on the one hand be concerned about the price of drugs and on the other not be concerned about safety and quality control. Quite obviously they are concerned about both. I think that if you can get away with it, it is a quite admirable technique to try to confuse the issue. I hope that all hon. members have seen through this technique of the drug industry and of the hon. member for Halifax, who would appear to have presented the same arguments to the house that many of us have heard from the drug industry.

I do not fault the drug industry for raising objections to this bill. After all, I do not think any industry is altruistic. I recognize our system is based on the profit motive, and surely various industries are bound to be concerned about a change from a known to an unknown procedure. It could have some unsettling effects on the balance sheet. This is a natural and understandable preoccupation of drug companies, so I understand their use of the argument of safety. However, I cannot understand the reasons why the hon. member for Halifax has rested so much of his long effort on that particular point. I hope that all hon. members who have had an opportunity to study this matter will see—

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

IMMIGRATION

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. M. L. Klein (Cartier) presented the first report of the special joint committee on immigration, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Editor's note: Text of the foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING QUALIFICATIONS OF BOARD MEMBERS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve) asked for leave to introduce Bill No. C-200 entitled "An act to amend the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act."

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, the present act stipulates that, in order to be appointed a director of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, one must be a British subject. The object of this bill is to provide that, in order to be appointed a director of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, one must be a Canadian citizen.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

LEGISLATION RESPECTING USE OF WORD "CANADA"

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve) asked leave to introduce Bill No. C-201 entitled "An act respecting the use of the word "Canada".

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette: At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the expressions "Dominion" and "Puissance du Canada" are used in the documents published by the Canadian federal authorities. This bill suggests that the word "Canada" should be used instead.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH PROVINCES —MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to ask Your Honour's leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order No. 26 in order to discuss a matter of very urgent national importance, namely the right of this government, through the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, to say in writing to the provinces of Canada that the government will not be able to honour a cost sharing agreement for the building of vocational training schools throughout Canada which it made with the provinces last August. I realize, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member address the Chair on the question of urgency of debate. I take the liberty to remind him that what is under consideration at this point is the matter of urgency of debate only. The hon. member should refrain from discussing the substance of his motion and confine his remarks to the question of urgency.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I realize it is my task to convince you that it is urgent that we postpone the business of the house to debate this matter; that is, it must be of national importance and must be urgent.

First of all I should like to point out how important it is from a national point of view. Every province in Canada is affected; every person of school age is affected. This concerns the financial structure not only of every province in Canada but also of this government. I do not think there is any doubt concerning the national scope of this subject; therefore I shall leave that matter at this point.

With regard to the matter of urgency I should like to draw to Your Honour's attention the fact that nothing can be more urgent than a question concerning Canada's credit rating. Second, what could be more urgent than a discussion of a matter which concerns the integrity of an individual or a nation when that integrity is brought into question because of the very fact that the government has told these provinces it cannot fulfil its commitments and cannot honour the agreements. Third, no indication has been given to this house as to when we might have an opportunity to debate this very point. I realize that the estimates were tabled yesterday, but we have not been told when we might expect to have a debate on those estimates or when a supply motion will be called. Therefore we have not been given assurance that this will be done immediately. This very serious problem should be discussed now.

Another reason for the urgency relates particularly to the province of Ontario. The Ontario legislature opens tomorrow. The provincial government must be prepared to budget its expenditures for the year.

That province was promised some $71 million and now is told it will have to find $34 million, which means that this province will have to make some very fast decisions in order to raise this money. Therefore the matter is very urgent. Indeed it is urgent in respect of all provinces and not just Ontario.

This problem is doubly urgent because it affects all provinces. I realize, as I am sure most members of this house realize, the great domino effect this action will have on all provinces across Canada. Therefore it is most urgent that this action be stopped immediately and that we have an opportunity to debate this financial question which has appeared on the horizon.

The sixth reason I believe it is urgent is that we as members of this house have a right to know now just how serious this whole matter is. We have a right to know whether we are just seeing the top of the iceberg. I believe we are entitled to have a full fledged debate on this matter now.

My final point in stressing that it is urgent is that the unemployment situation in Canada is such that every step must be taken to provide training for the unemployed by means of the vocational training schools. Therefore it is most important that this matter be settled speedily so the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will have an opportunity to reconsider the letter he sent to the provinces stating his inability to pay the amounts agreed upon.

With these remarks I hope I have proven to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter of national importance and one of urgency. If you should grant the motion so there would be a postponement of the business for today I and many other members of this house would welcome the opportunity to speak on this very serious matter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like on behalf of the members of this party, Mr. Speaker, to support the motion and urge Your Honour to allow it on the grounds of urgent public importance. In the first place the provinces, who are now in the process of preparing their estimates and their budgets, ought to know exactly what the position is and why this government finds it necessary to curtail the financial commitments it made to the provinces of this country. At the present time in most of the communities I have visited there is a long list of students waiting to get into vocational training schools. The provinces are anxious to meet this problem. They cannot meet it unless they know what the situation is with regard to the financial commitments the federal government is going to keep.

I want to point out also that the matter is important because in this technological age vocational training is becoming increasingly important. If we are to avoid inflation it can only be done by increased productivity, and productivity depends upon training technical staff and workers so they can perform technical functions in industry. This is a matter of great importance all across the country.

I submit to Your Honour that there will be no other opportunity in the immediate future, within the next day or two, to discuss this matter. If we leave it for several days that will be too late. I think the house and the country, particularly the provincial governments, are entitled to a full statement from the government. They are entitled to have that statement made today. We are entitled to know why the government, under the guise of controlling inflation, is seeking to do the very thing that will make inflation worse than it is now. We therefore support this motion.

Hon. George Hees (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise also to speak to the question of urgency of debate. At this moment, sir, you may be considering that this subject could be discussed under the supplementary estimates which were tabled yesterday. However, on examining these estimates I think you will agree there is no item which would provide the latitude of debate necessary to cover the vitally important subjects which have been mentioned by the hon. member for Wellington South and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Since this is a vitally important matter and must be debated immediately, and since there is no item which the government has indicated under which the debate may be conducted nor has the government given any indication when such an item might be called, I consider the subject must be debated today.

Mr. Speaker: After having heard the submissions by the hon. member for Wellington South, supported by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Northumberland, I suggest to the house that I am in a position to express an opinion. The hon. member has satisfied me that this is a matter of national importance, a matter of extreme urgency and a matter which is national in scope. However, I must tell him I am not satisfied he has convinced me that there is urgency of debate this afternoon, and that the ordinary business of the house should be set aside for the purpose of discussing the problem raised by the hon. member.

He knows that according to citation 100 paragraph 3 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, urgency means urgency of debate, when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit the subject to be brought on early enough. In spite of the suggestion by the hon. member for Northumberland I believe, particularly in view of the fact that the subject is closely linked with the general financial situation in the country, that it could easily be brought within the scope of the financial debate which has been announced for later this week by the Prime Minister. An indication was given by the Prime Minister in the house yesterday that there will be a financial debate when the supplementary estimates are brought down. If it should appear later this week that this is not the program of the government and the supplementary estimates are not brought down, the matter can be reconsidered then.

• (2:50 p.m.)

In view of the statement made yesterday I suggest to hon. members that it is not possible for me to accept the motion today.

FINANCE

INCREASE IN 1968 ESTIMATES OVER 1967

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the minister in charge of Treasury Board but perhaps I can direct it to the Minister of Finance. I now see the minister in charge of Treasury Board in his seat, so I would ask him to explain to the house why he claims that the estimated expenditures for the next fiscal year are up less than 4 per cent when in fact the estimated expenditures, as I read them, are about 8 per cent higher than the estimates tabled one year ago for the current fiscal year.
