The old slip-shod slippers are replaced by pink hose and opera ties. There is a hasty skirmish with the powder puff, a christening dash of cologne, and with an embroidered moucher in her hand the young lady descends to the parlor and finds her younger brother on intimate terms with the caller, who is no other than her escort of the previous evening when she was arrayed in purple and fine lace. He does not realize that she is en masquerade just now as much as she was then; that he is the hero of a scene in real life, and that if he had met her in the hall as she appears in the bosom of her family he would probably have mistaken her for her own maid, He could scarcely, with this vision before him, be brought to understand that her young ladyhood is so completely a matter of personal adornment.

It would be almost a safe thing to assort that out of fifteen young ladies of leisure only five could be seen at a morn-they acquire the rich yellowish-brown ing call without the required wait of half for which the best pipes are noted, and an hour. SHOT DEAD!

A Bunter Mistaken for a Deer and Killer by His Comrade, PETROLEA, Dec. Y.—A sad accident with terribly fatal results occurred near here today. It seems that three gentlemen were hunting in the township of Enniskillen this afternoon and became separated. White scouring through the woods one of the party, noticing an object moving about 100 yards ahead of him, drew his rifle and fired. It proved to be one of his companions, whom he had mistaken for a deer. Medical aid was at once summoned from Petrolea, but arrived too late to be of any avail, as the wounded man survived but a very short time. The name of the unfortunate man was Joseph Woodhouse, and the almost equally unfortunate individthe almost equally unfortunate individ-ual who fired the fatal shot is John Miller. The party were all from Sarnia.

NEVILLE, THE POLYGAMIST.

He Attempts Suicide and is Pronounced

Toleno, Dec. 1 .- Neville, the bigam ist, being in a despondent state of mind yesterday morning, asked for a Bible. He then retired to his cell and spent an hour in prayer. When the sheriff entered at half-past ten Neville greeted him kindly, but when his back was turned he ran with great speed the entire length of the corridor and dashed his head against an iron door. He dropped to the floor as if dead, and was taken back to his cell. He remained unconscious over an hour, when he revived and stated that he had taken some foxglove and was suffering intense pain. Neville then went into convulsions. When he regained consciousness at times he would weep bitterly, saying that he would rather die than go to the penitentiary. A Sound Opinion.

The Canada Presbyterian has the following on the Scott Act question:

A mode of warefare no less mean or contemptible has been the effort in some quarters to wreak personal revenge on those who took a prominent part in the endeavor to carry the Temperance Act. They have in many instances been made the victims of petty and malignant spite. A futile effort in one or two cases was A futile effort in one or two cases was made to boycott newspapers that had the courage to advocate the adoption of the Scott Act. These journals have their reward. They only did their duty in seeking to promote the public welfare. The impotent effort to injure their advertising patronage and lessen their circulation will only the more enlist popular sympathy in their favour. Such journals deserve well of their country.

journals deserve well of their country.

While the workers in the temperance cause seek to triumph by all fair and honourable means, they must have their wits about them. They must not permit themselves to be circumvented. They must keep a close watch on the movements of their adversaries, and not suffer them to smatch an advantage by tricks to which no honorable man would descend, nor by button-holing Dominion or Provincial parliamentarians. The temperance cause has no occasion to shun the light, neither must it permit its amister light, neither must it permit its sinister opponents to burrow in the dark.
