The Old Marquis

The Girl of the Cloisters

CHAPTER XXIII.
THE ONLY WAY.

"What a strange coincidence," he said, unsuspectingly. "He must be well paid, Clifford. I don't wonder at him not finding them before; it is the most out-of-the-way place—awfully pretty, but quite out of the world; and yet so near London! To think that I have been sitting idly, waiting all this time, and he so near to me! Yes, I have found her! and, Clifford—you must let me maunder and rhapsodize a little!—she is more beautiful than ever! Paler and thinner—my poor darling—but beautiful as ever! There! I can't bear to think of it. Got a cigar?" and he arose and began to pace the room.

Clifford Reyl gave him the cigar-box.

"And you discovered why she ran away?" he asked.

"Yes, my father—Clifford, when I think of the misery he has caused us both, my heart hardens against him. Since the world began there never was a man so cold, so heartless—he it was who had caused her to fly from me. You know—or, rather, you don't know—the influence he would exert over a simple, innocent nature like hers. He took advantage of her very love for me, and used it to effect his purpose. Would you believe it that he convinced her that by her marriage with me she would ruin me? He talked to her all the worldly rubbish about difference of station and unequal marriages, and convinced her that I should get tired of her and desert her. Great Heaven! when I think of the cold-blooded selfishness and worldliness which enwraps this fete of ours, I am inclined to renounce it and become a nobody. Clifford, I wish to Heaven you were the next marquis, and I were in your place. How happy I should be!"

Clifford Reyl smiled sarcastically.

"Would you? Well, if it could be managed, I should not mind being my Lord Fane for the present and the Marquis of Farintosh for the future; but I am afraid it can not be. And Miss Lela—you parted friends?"

"Ah, yes!" said Lord Edgar, with a sigh of relief and happiness. "Thank Heaven! nothing can come between us for the future. Poor girl! she fought hard for the right, as she thought it, and for a time I thought I should have to leave her, but love won the day."

"And her grandfather?"

"I did not see him—she was afraid for me to do so. There had been a scene between him and the marquis. Of course, my father insulted him, he who is as true a gentleman as my lord himself."

"And now?" asked Clifford Reyl, putting one foot on a chair and bending forward, his hawk-like eyes on Lord Edgar's face. "What now? What do you mean to do?"

"Lord Edgar looked rather troubled.

"I am going down to-morrow; she would not let me stay at the inn to-night, and I shall meet her where I saw her this evening. That is enough for the present. In a little while I shall see the professor and get his consent to our marriage."

Clifford Reyl's face paled, and his lips closed tightly; the Farintosh coronet, which he had sworn to place on Edith's brow, seemed to be fading from his grasp.

"Yes, I see! Well, I congratulate you, my dear fellow!" and he held out his hand. "I congratulate you with all my heart. She must be a charming young lady to have made such an impression on you! You have proved your constancy most emphatically. Perhaps I can be of some service to you; you haven't got over all your difficulties even yet, you know; there is still Mr. Temple to win over, and your father—"

"Don't speak of him to-night, Clifford," broke in Lord Edgar, with a flush, and a flash of his eyes; "I can't bear to think of him. He has been merciless and cruel."

"And he can be!" said Clifford Reyl. "He will stop your allowance, my dear fellow, the day he hears of your marriage with his librarian's granddaughter."

"All right!" said Lord Edgar. "Our work shall start in the world on our own account. Good heavens, that wouldn't deter me! If I am Lord Fane and the heir to Farintosh, I suppose I am a man also! I'm pretty strong, and can earn my living—if not here, in the colonies!" In his impetuous, impulsive way, he started up and stretched out his strong arms and laughed aloud. "Why, I should be happier with thirty shillings a week and Lela to share them with, than all Farintosh without her! Ah, Clifford, you haven't seen her!"

Clifford Reyl stared at him thoughtfully.

"I hope to have that pleasure soon. Well, I don't want to be inhospitable; but, with all your excitement, you look tired. You have had a long ride, my dear fellow; better go home and go to bed and dream happy dreams."

Lord Edgar laughed softly and his face flushed.

"Yes, the first for many a night! Clifford, I have lain awake, imagining all sorts of horrible things that might possibly have happened to her. Great heavens, what a week it has been! But it is all over now! Good-night! Come around to me in the morning if anything in the shape of an idea strikes you. As for me, I can not think or scheme; I'm a receptacle for happiness to-night, and that's all. Good-night!"

"Good-night!" said Clifford Reyl, wringing his hand, and smiling into his face. "I rejoice in your joy, my dear Edgar! You shall tell me all the particulars in the morning. Good-night!"

Lord Edgar went clattering down the stairs and Clifford Reyl closed the door and stood with folded arms looking into space.

Before him he saw all his hopes crushed and dispersed like autumn leaves before a gale. He saw Edgar married and with a child—still one more between him and the coronet, between him and Edith Drayton. He could, so he thought, have endured to relinquish all hope of becoming the Marquis of Farintosh, but to lose her! His face paled and his eyes glittered. Lord Edgar would marry this girl—there was no doubt of that—and he, Clifford Reyl, would be doomed to lead the old, hateful life, hopeless and dreary. He would lose Edith Drayton—lose her upon whom the intense passion of his nature was fixed. The thought maddened him. He stood with pale face and bent brows, his active brain striving for some loophole of escape—some scheme which should ward off this blow at all his hopes.

With Lord Edgar alone, he could calculate upon some chance of winning the double prize—the coronet and Edith—a hundred things might happen to Edgar; a fall from his horse, a storm at sea while he was yachting, a tumble on the Alps; the chances were all in his, Clifford Reyl's, favor while Lord Edgar remained unmarried. But married, with a child or children!

He uttered an oath and put his hand to his brow; it was wet with cold sweat.

THIS WEEK, NERVOUS MOTHER

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.
Philadelphia, Pa.—"I was very weak, always tired, my back ached, and I felt sickly most of the time. I went to a doctor and he said I had nervous indigestion, which added to my weak condition kept me worrying most of the time—and he said if I could not get well, I heard somewhere of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I bought it for a week and felt a little better. I kept it up for three months, and I feel fine and can eat anything now without distress or nervousness."—Mrs. J. WORTLING, 2842 North Taylor St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CHAPTER XXIV.
THE SELFISH PASSION.

AFTER all, love is a selfish passion! Will it be believed that all that night, that happy night—for it is scarcely necessary to say that Lord Edgar did not sleep—he never gave a thought to Edith Drayton, to the beautiful creature who had been so sympathetic a friend during his week of misery? It is the way of the world, the way of the best and the worst, the greatest and least of us! Given an absorbing passion, and everybody else is forgotten save the divine object! He never gave a thought to Edith, to her who had sacrificed so many hours for him; who had neglected and offended so many of her circle of admirers for his sake; who had sympathized with and endeavored to console him; and it was not until he was slashing through a hearty breakfast that he remembered her.

To his credit be it spoken that his conscience smote him.

"I must tell her!" he murmured. "What selfish creatures men are! My mind is so full of my darling that there seems no room for a thought of any one else! But I must go and tell Miss Drayton. She will be pleased, I know! She is a true friend. How glad she will be to renew her friendship with Lela; it will be a pleasant sight to see them together; their beauty will serve as a foil to each other. Yes, I must go around to Elton Square."

But, even as he made the resolution, he was reluctant to spare the time, and calculated how long it would take him, and what train to Sunbury he could catch.

His man Lovel knew that his master had heard some good news, for once again Lord Edgar sung aloud the first verse of poor Whyte Melville's song.

"The Clipper that Stands in the Stall at the Top," a favorite song of his, which he was wont to sing every morning after his bath; once again he did something more in the way of breakfast than break two pieces of dry toast and stare moodily at the ham and eggs. In a word, Lord Edgar was happy again, and, like most men of his nature, he showed it at once; so plainly, indeed, that Lovel promptly asked for a holiday, and got it.

"And here's a raffle to spend," said Lord Edgar, tossing him a five-pound note. In this delightful mood, he set out for Elton Square.

It was early to make a morning call, but they had made him welcome at such out-of-the-way hours that he did not think of that, and felt quite disappointed when the servant said that Miss Drayton was not at home.

"Do you mean that she is out, or that she can not see any one?" he asked.

"She is out, my lord, out riding," said the man. "Will your lordship come in and wait?" he ventured to add, knowing well the footing which Lord Edgar had made for himself in the house.

But Lord Edgar decided that he would walk to the Ride and meet her. Waiting, anyway, and for any one, would simply be intolerable this morning.

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

It would be impossible to give the exact number of words in the English language. Words are constantly being coined and foreign words are being added to the language. A recent edition of a leading dictionary gives between 400,000 and 500,000 words. Many of them are derivatives, as run, run, running, ran, runner, etc.

New Relief For Constipation, "LES FRUITS"

Physicians agree that with the modern habits of living, constipation is likely to be always with us. They also agree that the constant use of any drug for the relief of constipation is exceedingly unwise—unwise for two reasons. First, a drug constantly used loses its effect and requires a constantly increased dose. Second, because the constant use of any drug is bad anyway.

So the cry is constantly going up from the constipated, "What can we do?" It will be interesting to a great many to know that an answer has been found in the re-discovery of a method which was used with great success by our Forefathers, and in Arabia far back in the twelfth century. The food is called "Les Fruits" because it is composed entirely of figs, dates, prunes, raisins and the leaves of each with the substitution of the Alexandra leaf for the raisin leaf. The taste is pleasant, if not to say delicious, and the effect is exceedingly satisfactory. Try it and be convinced.

WIPING OUT TURKEY.

PARIS, May 17. Allied naval forces were landed at Smyrna on Wednesday. It developed in a message received to-day from the Near East, where military moves are being made in anticipation of the making of peace with Turkey. All the forts and strategic points at Smyrna were taken possession of by nightfall. The movement was directed by the Peace Conference as a precautionary measure for the maintenance of order. According to the terms of the Turkish armistice, the British and French forces will be withdrawn as soon as the authority of Greece as a mandatory is established firmly. The occupation of Smyrna is preliminary to the establishment of mandates throughout European and Asiatic Turkey, virtually terminating the existence of Turkey as an empire. The Sultan of Turkey is expected to establish a small one around Brusa, fifty miles southeast of Constantinople. French newspapers report that the United States will become the mandatory for Constantinople, but the American authorities say that this has not yet been decided finally. The Council of Four, it is said, has agreed that Great Britain shall be the mandatory for Mesopotamia and Palestine; France for Syria and Cilicia; Italy for Adalia, and the United States for Armenia. The acceptance by the American Government of the mandatory for Armenia is being urged by Great Britain and France. If it is finally accepted by the American delegation, it will be offered to Congress for approval.

BULGARIA IN AN UPROAR.

LONDON, May 17. Sanguinary encounters have occurred at Sofia between the garrison and the revolutionaries, who demanded the resignation of the Government and the establishment of a Soviet, according to a despatch from Vienna. All Bulgaria is reported to be in an uproar. Rusechka, Philippopolis and Aras are also said to have become affected by the revolutionary movement.

RANTZAU OFF TO BERLIN.

PARIS, May 17. Count Von Brockdorff Rantzau, head of the German peace delegation, has started for Berlin. Accompanying Count Brockdorff Rantzau were eleven of the eighteen advisers attached to the economic and financial commissions, other responsible members of the German delegation and twenty secretaries. The party on leaving Versailles occupied eight automobiles with another carrying their baggage. The departure of Count Von Brockdorff Rantzau is for the purpose of participation in the Councils of the Government regarding the all-important question of signing or refusing to sign the draft of the treaty of peace, on which there is at present a sharp division of opinion among the members of the Council Government.

MAY NOT RETURN.

VERSAILLES, May 18. It is quite possible that Count Von Brockdorff Rantzau, head of the German peace delegation, who left here last night, will not return to conduct further negotiations at Versailles, according to reports received here to-day from there. The views of the chief of the German delegation and those representatives sent from Berlin to consult with him differed so strongly as to the future conduct of the negotiations, according to the reports, that Count Von Brockdorff Rantzau requested that they be replaced at Versailles.

GREEKS AND TURKS FIGHT.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 17. In the fighting which took place after the landing of Greek troops at Smyrna, Thursday, 300 Turks and 100 Greeks were killed. The fighting took place for the most part in the Turkish area, where the Greeks were met by heavy rifle fire.

ITALIAN CONTROVERSY ENDED.

PARIS, May 17. Italy has relinquished her claims to Dodocanez Island off the Asia Minor Coast, in favor of Greece. This ends one of the most acute controversies of the peace conference.

NOT SETTLED YET.

PARIS, May 17. Conferences during the past two days on the Italian issue have not succeeded in reaching an accord, as was expected. The Italians made a number of concessions, including recognition of Fiume as a free city, and the giving up of considerable portions of Istria, including the important quick silver districts. The Italians, however, are unwilling to yield Senza or Senlaco on the Dalmatian coast. The Jugo Slavs are not disposed to accept the Italian concessions as sufficient, and there are prospects of further extended period of negotiations.

STRIKES ON SUEZ CANAL.

SUEZ, May 16. The general strike on the Suez Canal continues, but the service through the waterway has not been interrupted.

N. C. 4 ARRIVES.

WASHINGTON, May 17. An official despatch to the Navy Department said "N. C. 4 arrived at Horta, Azores, at 12.29." Halifax, May 18. At the time of the arrival of N. C. 4 at the Azores yesterday, N. C. 1 was reported following close behind with N. C. 3 trailing some distance behind. To-day the U.S.S. cruiser Ionia, arriving immediately off the Azores, reports the crew of N. C. 1 safe aboard. Naval officials here are advised as to N. C. three.

GUARDING THE ROUTE.

WASHINGTON, May 16. Co-incident with the start from Trepassey Bay, Nfld., of the American Navy seaplanes in an effort to make the first trans-Atlantic air passage, the Navy Department made public yesterday an order issued April 15th, which governed the actions of every aircraft and naval vessel connected with the long flight and provided against almost every possible emergency which may have arisen during the aerial voyage. Complete in every detail, the order provided for the stationing and subsequent movements of sixty destroyers, four battleships and a number of auxiliary naval vessels in connection with the flight. In accordance with the provisions of the Department's order, the route of the seaplanes to the Azores was marked by a ribbon of destroyers stationed about fifty miles apart. These vessels were their stations for several days and kept the naval officers at Department and constantly informed as to the meteorological conditions along the course. In addition to the destroyers, four battleships, the Florida, Utah, Texas and Wyoming, were stationed on the outskirts of the course to furnish further meteorological data throughout the flight. All of the intricate details of radio communication between the various units were worked out carefully, as provided in the order. The seaplanes were in constant communication with the naval vessels at all times. Every precaution was taken to safeguard the fliers. In addition to the radio communication, the destroyers along the route were provided with special illuminating torches, star shells and flashes for use at night to mark the course and were in constant readiness to answer S. O. S. calls or other distress signal, should accident befall one of the big planes. The battleship Arkansas, which has been at Plymouth, England, immediately upon receiving word that the flight from Trepassey had started, proceeded to take station between the Azores and Lisbon to report meteorological conditions for the fourth "leg" of the long flight. The planes followed a mercator's course from Mistaken Point on Trepassey Bay, to Corvo Landfall at the Azores, and thence by the shortest route to Heria Ponia, Delgada. There they will refuel and make necessary repairs and start as soon as possible for Lisbon. From there the fliers are ordered to head for Plymouth, the objective point of the long voyage.

SANK 12 MILES FROM AZORES.

LONDON, May 18. Lloyds reports that the steamer Ionia with the crew of the American seaplane N. C. 1 aboard, arrived at Horta, Sunday, and that the N. C. 1 sank twelve miles off the Island of Flores.

BRITISH FLEET OFF MEMEL.

LONDON, May 17. A British fleet is anchored outside of Memel, East Prussia, close to the Russian frontier and the British are expected to occupy the place in a few days, according to a Copenhagen despatch quoting Berlin advices.

A PART OF THE BLUFF.

BERLIN, May 16. The German government has arranged for a plebiscite if the Allies refuse to make concessions in the Peace Treaty.

THE POPE TO INTERVENE.

ROME, May 18. In response to a petition from the entire German Episcopate begging his good offices, Pope Benedict has taken steps to communicate with the head of one of the most important delegations at the Peace Conference, with a view to getting the conditions modified.

ALLIES ARE READY.

LONDON, May 16. Speaking at the Primrose League to-day, Lord Curzon said Germany refused the Peace Terms, "the Allies were not unprepared for every emergency."

NO MAIL FOR WINNIPEG.

OTTAWA, ONT., May 17. The post office dept. has issued the following notice: Owing to the sympathetic strike of postal employees with the metal workers in Winnipeg, there is no mail service of any kind in that city, and the public are advised that it is useless to attempt to send anything by mail to Winnipeg until further notice.

A COMMON ROBBER.

COBLENZ, Thursday, May 15. A former captain in the German army was arrested in Coblenz to-day on the charge of having in his possession property taken from France during the war. The German was turned over to the French military authorities, who propose to try him in a French civil court on a charge of common robbery. It was the first of this character in the area of occupation.

FOLLOWING FRENCH EXAMPLE.

PARIS, May 17. Italy has requested that the Austrian Peace Treaty provide for return to Rome of many priceless art treasures, taken by Austria as booty in previous wars.

NOW IN FRANCE.

PARIS, May 17. The delegation representing the Irish Societies in the United States, reached Paris from England yesterday evening. The members of the party made no statement concerning their plans.

PROTESTANT CLERGYMEN RECEIVED BY POPE.

ROME, May 16. Right Reverends Anderson, of Chicago, Boyd Vincent of Southern Ohio, William Fox of Lac du Wisconsin, prominent figures in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States, were received by Pope Benedict to-day. Before seeing the Pope the Americans had a long talk with Cardinal Gasparri, who said: "Rather than a reunion of the Christian Churches, the Holy See aims at a unity of Churches, which in the opinion of Rome can only occur by all returning to the Catholic church."

Band Concert.

The crowded house which greeted the band of the U.S.S. Chicago on Saturday evening at the Casino Theatre, was greatly delighted with the programme rendered. The band is an excellent one, and the charm of the music was enhanced by the variety of the selections which ranged from Grand Opera to Ragtime. The audience showed its appreciation of the delightful playing by its hearty applause. St. John's is greatly indebted to the band of the Chicago, not only for a splendid entertainment, but for its great kindness in helping out a patriotic fund. Beside the contributions of the band there were three other items on the programme—solos by Mrs. Warren and Miss Mary Ryan, and a recitation by Mr. P. Halley, which were perfectly rendered and most thoroughly enjoyed. The entertainment closed with the singing of "The Star Spangled Banner" and the National Anthem by Miss Ryan.

To-Night's Lecture.

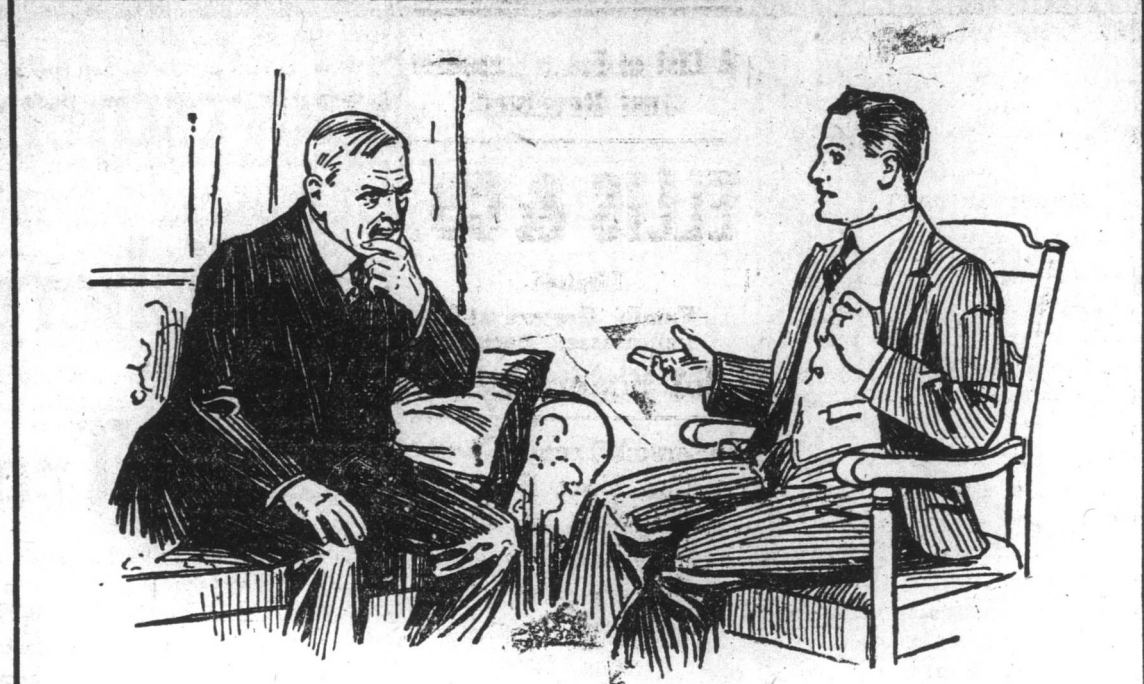

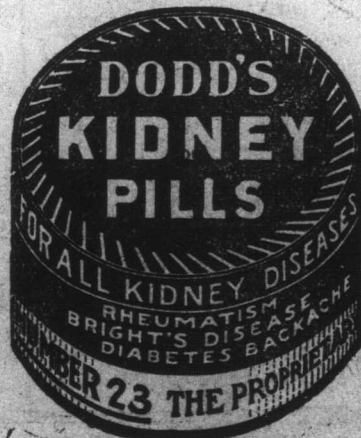

An illustrated lecture will be given to-night in the Methodist College Hall when the beautiful scenery of British Columbia will be shown; much of its valuable timber, mineral and agricultural resources and also, the indefatigable work of the missionaries among the Orientals and Indians, covering hospital and general social endeavour. Tickets are selling fast, and a full house is assured.

Schooner Sold.

The schr. Protector, owned by Martin Brothers, of Channel, and which recently arrived from the Gulf with a trip of seals, has been sold to Mr. P. J. Shea, who will employ her in the coasting trade. The price paid for the transfer was a good one. Capt. John Gillam, we understand, with the present crew will navigate the vessel during the season.

Shipping News.

The Spanish schooner Seville reached port Saturday, and will load codfish for across. The run was a lengthy one owing to adverse weather, and on arrival the vessel was short of food. The S. S. Gracefield has left England for Placentia to load pit props from M. E. Martin. The schr. Roberts Ray has sailed from Lunenburg for Liverpool with a cargo of codfish from S. Harris, Ltd.

"I Do Not Know Just What Is The Matter
But I Seem To Be Losing My Grip"

"WELL, I know. You have been worrying too much until you have got your nervous system all run down."

"I could not help that. I guess you would worry, too, if you had all the troubles I have had."

"Perhaps. But I think I have learned a lesson. Worrying does not get you anywhere."

"Well, what am I to do?"

"If you will take my advice you will use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. That is what got my nervous system right when I had that breakdown a couple of years ago, and I have been talking it up ever since."

"How will it benefit me?"
"It will restore vigor to your nervous system. The trouble is now that your nerve force is at such a low ebb that your vital organs are slow and weak in action. You do not get the good of the food you eat, and for this reason you have no chance of gaining strength and vitality."

"But how long will I have to take this treatment?"

"If you could take a rest it would help some, but mark my words you will not be using the Nerve Food more than a week or two before you begin to see the benefits, and then you will not need me to encourage you in its use."

"I think I will follow your advice, for judging from what you say the Nerve Food is exactly what I need."

"You will not be sorry, for I have recommended it to scores of men in just such condition as you are to-day, and I know just what it will do."

"Thank you, old man, I only hope it will give me such energy and vitality as you have."

"It certainly will if you give it a fair chance."

If a girl uses enough paint, she may be taken for the picture of health. The first thing that a woman buys towards furnishing a house is a looking glass. Castor-oil is becoming scarce. This news will be borne by children with perfect resignation.

It is said that many women drink vinegar for their complexions. These must be the sour-faced women we occasionally see. Perhaps the reason why there are so few women inventors is accounted for by the fact that anything most women wish to do can be done with a hairpin.

The longing look girls put in their eyes when they sing that song, "Home Sweet Home," indicates a longing to get away from home, and shouldn't fool anyone. Marriage would be less of a failure in some cases if the bride's parents could provide her with a servant girl warranted to stay and to cook, instead of a trousseau.

When Medals Were Scarce.
In the early eighties very few officers had medals or decoration, for most of the veterans of the Crimea and Mutiny had died. But the Egyptian campaigns were fruitful in ribbons, and by desire of the then Prince of Wales distinct rules were laid down as to miniature medals.
It was laid down that these could be worn at any evening party, and were "regulation" whenever any royal personage was to be present. Before the campaign of 1882 Lord Wolseley and Sir Evelyn Wood were the only two officers who could boast of more than one line of ribbon, a striking contrast to the dazzling rows of to-day.

Misunderstood.
He studied the bill of fare in the Paris restaurant which he dropped into on his short leave. He could have studied it all night if he had wanted, and no one would have paid the slightest attention to him. But when he had learned it by heart, he tapped his glass with a knife, and, in response, a tall, angular waitress of undoubted English descent waddled towards him. Her gait was between that of a crab and an inquisitive goose, and it took her two full minutes before she reached his table. Then she opened her mouth expectantly, and waited for his order.

"Have you frogs' legs?" he asked, sharply.
"Eh?" she replied, bending forward doubtfully.
"I said," repeated the would-be diner, "have you frogs' legs?"
"Dear me, no, sir!" she exclaimed, smiling. "I'm obliged to walk this way on account of rheumatism."

Chinese Philosophy.
You can't surprise a Chinaman. An aeroplane was flying over Peking for the first time—it was Major-General Sykes who told me the story—and a proud European pointed it out to a native. "Don't you think it is wonderful?"
"Well," said the Chinaman, calmly, after a passing glance at the machine, "the thing is meant to do that, isn't it?"
NO EXEMPTION.
An employee at a city firm was discovered by a friend in his "diggings" looking very rueful indeed.
"I'm in a frightful hole," he said. "I went to see two doctors yesterday, and got a medical certificate from each. One was a certificate of health for a life insurance company, and the other was a certificate of illness to send to the National Service Tribunal."
"I've done that myself," said his friend; "what's the matter?"
"Matter! Why, I mixed the certificates in posting them! The insurance company has my certificate of ill-health, and the Tribunal has my certificate of good health."

NOT IN A TEMPER FOR PROVERBS.
The milkman gathered himself up from the ruin of his cart, scraped the whitish-grey mud from his clothing, wiped his whiskers, gave one glance at the runaway horse, surveyed the dirty-white puddles that represented his stock-in-trade, and turned to the crowd.
"All I've got to say," he observed, rolling up his coat-sleeve, and speaking in a business-like way, "is that the first son of a gun that says a word about it being no use crying over spilt milk is going to get his head punched!"
And nobody spoke the dread words.
OVERDOING IT.
Mother always kept little Tommy up to the scratch in the matter of grace before meals, and she made no difference when she took him to tea with her one afternoon at a restaurant.
"She said to Tommy, after the waitress had served the tea: 'Now, say grace, please, Tommy.'
"But, mamma," objected the seventeen-year-old, "we're paying for this, aren't we?"

NO POSSIBLE MISTAKE.
"These profiteers," said Representative Esch, of Wisconsin, "accuse themselves with their excuses. They remind me of little Willie."
"Little Willie came home the other day with a nice new golf ball."
"Look at the lost ball I found this afternoon, father," he said.
"Are you sure, my boy," the father asked, "that it was a lost ball?"
"Oh, yes, sir," said little Willie, "I saw the owner and his caddie looking for it."—Los Angeles Times.

"James," said a lady to her inexperienced boy in buttons, "when a caller hands in a card at the door, you must be sure to receive it on a silver tray."
"Very good, ma'am," replied James, obediently.
Not long afterwards there was a ring at the bell. The lady summoned James.
"James," she said, "was that a caller?"
"Yes, ma'am."
"And did you present the silver?"
"Yes, ma'am, and he said he was much obliged, and took it away with him."
The caller, it transpired, was a tramp.

Some Immo
By RUTH C

A little boy came to our house last fall who was nine years old and yet had never L. his life played or owned one of the games with which the ordinary child from five to fifteen (and sometimes to fifty or ninety) while away so much time.
I shall never forget how delighted he was when we introduced him to that king of childhood games, parches. I suppose there is hardly a reader to whom that magic word has not some memory attached. It is particularly potent to me, and the sight of the frayed old board itself is almost painfully poignant with its power to bring back all sorts of happy memories of rainy afternoons, on which dear Uncle joined us in a well fought game, on evenings, when, in the happy circle of the light from the big old-fashioned lamp with the yellow shade, father or mother or big brother condescended to join us children in a game.
Some of the Next Best Games.
That was our small guests' favorite, as it is with all children at first, but back gammon and checkers, Halma and Go-Bang, Authors and Letters soon were close rivals and may have passed the ancient favorite by now.
When his mother came to take him home he cried at the thought of parting from the parches board. Since the remnants of our old board are dedicated to happy memories and to the usage of our younger guests, we could not give that to him but soothed his tears by the promise of one on his birthday. His mother was delighted with his interest. Some Immortal Games.

By RUTH CAMERON.

A little boy came to our house last fall who was nine years old and yet had never played his life's part in the games with which the ordinary child from five to fifteen (and sometimes to fifty or ninety) while away so much time.

I shall never forget how delighted he was when we introduced him to that king of childhood games, checkers. I suppose there is hardly a reader to whom that quaint word has not some memory magic. It is particularly potent to me, and the sight of the frayed old board itself is almost painfully poignant with its power to bring back all sorts of happy memories of rainy afternoons, on which dear Uncle joined us in a well fought game, on evenings, when, in the happy circle of the light from the big old fashioned lamp with the yellow shade, father or mother or big brother condescended to join us children in a game.

Some of the Next Best Games.

That was our small guests' favorite, as it is with all children at first, but back gammon and checkers, Hamm and Go-Home, Authors and Letters were close rivals and may have passed the ancient favorite by now.

When his mother came to take him home he cried at the thought of parting from the parched board. Since the remnants of our old board are dedicated to happy memories and to the usage of our younger guests, we could not give that to him but soiled his tears by the promise of one on his birthday. His mother was delighted with his interest. "I don't know why I never happened to buy him any of the old games," she said "he's got a new kind of a baseball game that his uncle gave him and one or two others like that, but I never happened to think of those old fashioned ones and they'd be such a help."

He Got Them All In A Lump.

We have since heard that on his birthday and on Christmas she re-

Gypsies in the Army.

Whoever else may be demobilized quickly, it is unlikely that the many gypsies who are serving in the army will be parted with easily—that is, if commanding officers have any say in the matter.

The genuine Romany is too valued an acquisition to a cavalry regiment, or to any mounted unit like the Army Service Corps or the Royal Horse Artillery, to be parted with lightly.

He knows probably quite as much about the ailments of horses as does the average army "vet," more about the best methods of shoeing the tender footed ones than the farrier-sergeant, and more about breaking in and riding the obstreperous ones than the riding master.—Tit-Bits.

THE NEXT CRUSADE.

"We'll swat the vile tobacco next," the virtuous campaigners say; and as I am perplexed concerning what I ought to say, I always wish to boost the right, and make the world a better place; but my old pipe, that's now alight—is it an asset or dis-advantage? I quit the pipe some years ago, the pipe I'd smoked for many years; out in the yard I laid it low, I buried it with briny tears. The women folk around the shack rejoiced with great, exceeding mirth, and slapped me roundly on the back, and called me sweetest thing on earth. But in a fortnight they arose and called upon me in my den, and brought me pipes and things like those, and begged that I would smoke again. For abstinance had made me sore and put an edge upon my tongue; and I was won't to snarl and roar where once my buoyant laughter rung. I bulled all my maiden aunts and made my neices weep and plead, the while I skirminched through my pants in search of that vile noxious weed. I ragged the neighbours all the day, and wrangled with the passing cops, and filled, until I hit the hay, the town with my barbaric yaws. Then I went back to nicotine, and nothing in this world could vex; with mind all placid and serene, I was a credit to my sex.

For the glorious part o' nature is she never has a grouch.

For the flowers are always smilin' an' the song birds sweetly call.

WOODS YIELD RUBBER.

Of German plants known to contain rubber, several have attracted attention, says the India Rubber World. Indeed, fully twenty years ago, the idea of growing rubber in Europe was seriously discussed. Several indigenous plants were found which yielded rubber, or a rubberlike gum. The "Sicilian artichoke" is a composite similar to the artichoke in appearance, and yields considerable rubber. It is not found wild in Germany proper, but is cultivated there. May there not be rubber-yielding plants in this country? the bystander is inclined to ask.

Loose Estimates.

The Minister of Finance informed the House of Assembly, when presenting his budget last week that he did not propose to estimate too closely for the coming fiscal year (ending June 30, 1920) in view of the fact that this country, like the rest of the Empire and in fact the whole world is in a state of transition, following the close of the war and taking up the processes of returning to a peace basis. It will have been thought that mainly because of this condition that the financial estimates, of both Revenue and Expenditure would have been made as closely as possible, instead of being left wide open, as they are. Beyond the reasons given, the Minister did not make any detailed explanation, consequently it can be left to the imagination upon which side of the account the latitude will be allowed. Being in a state of transition in common with the rest of the world, it would have been thought that the problems arising out of reconstruction changes would have been discussed and a closer estimate laid down than was followed. Instead the Minister quite offhandedly announces that he estimates the revenue for the coming fiscal year, 1919-20, to equal that of the current year 1918-19 viz., Eight million, five hundred thousand dollars, with an expenditure of seven and a half million, thus producing an estimated surplus of one million dollars. The revenue estimate is as flattering to the recuperative powers of the dominion, as is the expenditure to the generosity of the Government, who have, through their Finance Minister made the liberal provision of five hundred thousand dollars in excess of the actual expenditure of the current year to meet, to use his own words, "the inevitable Supplemental Supply." Why inevitable? Why cannot provision be made in the proper way and under the proper heads to cover the expenditure on current account. It is no excuse to put forward that it was always done and therefore becomes part of the unwritten law. Half a million dollars is "generous" supply indeed, and the total sum of seven and a half millions is openhanded. That sum just means that thirty dollars per head of population comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers to pay the expenses of running a Colony, of roughly, a quarter of a million people for one year, and is perhaps as high a rate for cost of Government as is paid anywhere. We have expensive tastes in this dominion.

The Minister of Finance has patently not taken any thought of or made any provision for a trade depression. He glowingly paints the future in bright colors and does not anticipate any change in prices, either of food or fishery products, when it was only a few weeks prior to the presentation of his budget that the catch of seals roughed in by the steamers sold at $8.00 per quintal, a drop of 50 per cent from last year when the rate was $12. Does that look like products maintaining their war values?

Again he might have noted that the price of fish had declined considerably, likewise that of fish oils, whereas there is little, if any, decrease in the cost of provisions and other necessities. Last year the quintal of fish had a purchasing power equal to the price of a barrel of flour. If fish this year is but $8 per quintal, and flour still remains at $15 with the prices of other necessities in proportion, where does the abundant prosperity come in? Figuring and thinking in millions which must come mainly from the earnings of the producer, the Minister should take thought of the black side for a little while. It is by forgetting the reverse of the picture that calamities, which could be foreseen and avoided, are not averted, and though at this particular period no person desires to be a prophet of evil, it is as well not to be too sanguine, especially when the times are so critical and unrest so much in evidence abroad. Want of caution is as much to be deplored as excess of it. The Finance Minister has not erred on the former side.

On the Great Adventure.

Hawker and Grieve Take Flight --- Martinsyde Plane Meets Disaster---Morgan & Raynham Injured.

At the hour of 3.21 yesterday afternoon the Sopwith aeroplane, with Harry G. Hawker as pilot, and Lieutenant Commander MacKenzie Grieve, navigator, flew from Mount Pearl on its long distance single flight air journey from coast to coast in the London Daily Mail Competition Contest, for the winning of which a $50,000 prize has been offered.

After having waited a considerable time, and one which must have greatly depressed the intrepid aviators, five weeks having elapsed since the final preparations were made, the weather and other omens at length pointed to fair, and with light hearts, and optimistic anticipations, the daring fliers started on the great adventure. There was no flourish of trumpets made and no demonstrations of a popular send off, as the first intimation of the flight by the public was the drone of the motor as the plane flew over the city on its way to sea.

The sound was the signal for the appearance of thousands of people in the streets all now bent on making Pleasantville their objective in hope of witnessing the start of Raynham and Morgan. Hawker kept his machine going at full speed, and passing over Pleasantville, topped the White Hills and quickly disappeared over the sea, to the Eastward. The dropping of the landing wheels, as previously announced in the Telegram, was made when the machine cleared the land beyond Sugar Loaf and immediately the plane was seen to be shot forward at an accelerated rate of speed, due to the release of this considerable underweight. The Sopwith is driven by 375 h.p. engines and has a speed of something over 100 miles per hour. If all goes well, the landing will be made at Brooklands, and it is expected the trip will be accomplished in about 20 hours. The aviators' food on the way across will consist of sandwiches, coffee, tablets and hot coffee, carried in thermos receptacles. In the event of the machine falling into the sea it will float for awhile, and Atlantic shipping has been asked to keep a look out. The fairing of the fuselage behind the pilot's seat consists of a boat fastened to the fuselage, and can be quickly released. It can seat two, and is fitted with paddles and contains rations. Mr. Hawker and Lieut. Commander Grieve wear life-saving suits so that they can float a considerable time if thrown into the water. These suits are very warm, and their other clothing is specially devised and electrically heated, so that they have little to fear from cold. At the time of flying the meteorological reports gave Hawker and Grieve favourable weather for about 1,000 miles, then ticklish and then not dangerous. Easterly winds were forecast for the first 150 or 200 miles, then westerly, and the latest reports up to midnight were that the conditions were becoming more favourable. A rumour was circulated last night that the Sopwith had been reported 450 miles off by an Allan liner, but this was not credited by Capt. Fean, who had charge here of all details in connection with the flight. With favorable conditions and no accidents overtakes either man or machine the journey should now have been safely accomplished, and the city is most anxiously awaiting the word that success has been achieved. That it may be soon announced is the fervent prayer of all.

Disaster to Raymor.

The exchange of congratulations over the success of the flight of the U. S. seaplanes from Trepassay had barely ceased, and the sounds of applause as the Sopwith machine flew gallantly over Pleasantville on the greatest and most wonderful journey ever undertaken, were still audible, when a gloom descended on the vast gathering of spectators assembled at the Lakeside yesterday afternoon to witness the start of the Martinsyde machine Raymor, and looks of consternation and regret were visible on all faces. Everything was in readiness for the flight, and the plane, with her engines humming grandly and musically was set for the take-off. At about 4.20 the stand-clear signal was made, and amid a hurricane of cheers the bird rapidly skimmed the ground for a distance of some two hundred yards, and all were expecting the rise, when suddenly the machine bounced into the air and almost instantaneously nose-dived to the ground and struck with a crash of splitting wood and rending metal, turning partly over. A great fear came upon the multitude, who knew instinctively that something had gone wrong, and a rush was made to the damaged plane, sadly expecting that the worst had happened, and that Raynham and Morgan were seriously injured, if not killed. A feeling of relief was manifest when it was discovered that both were not hurt to any great extent, and beyond a few bruises and cuts and the severe shaking up were quite O.K.

The damage done the machine is irreparable and unfortunately puts it out of business. The force of the impact smashed the tractor to pieces, battered in the nose, broke open the petrol tank, tore the lower wing, damaged the landing carriage and shifted the shock absorbers. It is obvious that the accident was due to the uneven nature of the ground, a hummock from which the plane bounced, and the Raymor aviators had not given dip being taken so quickly that the lifting controls could not be brought into play. The speed at the time was about 45 miles per hour, consequently the shock of striking must have been exceedingly great, and the wonder is that the crew escaped so well. The Raymor aviators were keenly disappointed over the disaster, and the greatest sympathy is expressed on all sides because of the untoward and unfortunate happening. Expressions of condolence and regret were heard yesterday as the spectators slowly departed from the scene of the second air disaster of the week.

The hard luck at the moment, when every omen was favorable, is especially galling, and to be baulked at the instant of probable success more than hurts, particularly when a rival has gotten full away. However its all in the game, and though precluded from making their present attempt, the Martinsyde fliers have not given up all hope of being in the field at a later date, when we trust that the goddess of fortune will smile upon them more benignly.

Congratulations.

The latest information by cable is contained in the bulletin, which we publish across the top of this page, that Hawker's aeroplane has been sighted off the Irish Coast, proof positive that this pioneer "courier of the air" has made the Atlantic flight successfully, and demonstrated the possibility of covering the long distance without stop or stay.
To Pilot Hawker and Navigator Grieve we offer our heartiest congratulations. They have shown that Englishmen can do and dare and the success of their unprecedented voyage is all the more striking when it is considered that no ocean precautions were taken and no elaborate preparations made by fleets of patrol ships in order to ensure their safety in the event of having to descend. The conquest of the air is another proof of English ability and superiority above the earth, and Britannia will now be enabled to place wings on her trident showing that in the air as on the sea, she reigns supreme.

The TRANS- Fly O

Special to Evening Telegram.

HR. GRACE, To-day.
Directly, and without display or ostentation, preparations for the Trans-Atlantic flight by the Handley-Page monoplane have been going on in Hr. Grace for the last week or so, and to-day things are in a fair way toward completion.

The time was when Hr. Grace was even more important than St. John's, and with the successful accomplishment of the "big adventure" by the machine now being assembled here, Hr. Grace should again shine, if not all of its lost importance. The citizens of our second town are jubilant over the prospect, and the men connected with the proposed flight, together with the machine itself, are already held in high esteem and every possible thing is being done to assist them.

For a month, before the capable director of Lieut. Robin Reid and Mr. P. O'Driscoll, local Transatlantic flight organizing managers for the Handley-Page firm, a large staff of men was engaged in preparing the field from which the start will be made. After searching around Hr. Grace and vicinity, L. Reid and Mr. O'Driscoll made a choice of the spot from which the flight will be made as the most suitable for the purpose. This ground, which runs parallel with the railway line and Water Street, which, in turn runs parallel with the harbor, extends from one side of the station 900 yards, ending at Bear's Cove. It was not originally one big field, but rather a series of small gardens and farms, with rock pile fences separating them. There were three houses and one building that had to be removed. Trees, some of them pretty big, grew along the selected ground, and in all they had a hard job to get it cleared. Some hundreds of tons of rocks and stones had to be collected and carted away. The Old Barracks in which soldiers were quartered as late as 95 years ago, was completely demolished, while the three houses were simply shifted three holes to sites out of the way of the machine. Some of those houses were old and had been in the family possession for long periods. Consequently it was like tearing up the roots of old days and old associations. Despite this, however, their owners were willing to have them removed for the sake of the giant aeroplane that was to re-establish, probably the town's former prestige. When everything had been cleared and removed, a heavy roller, drawn by three horses and weighted with some hundreds of extra pounds of iron bars, was gotten into action and speedily rolled the hummocks and even eliminated the hollows. Thus, after just a month's work, a splendid aerodrome of nine hundred yards' length and two hundred width, with hardly an elevation, was made ready. The general public is permitted to enter this field, and may stand nearby the machine and witness its assembling, many taking advantage of an opportunity that many in Great Britain, the home, almost, of aircraft, would envy. Mr. Walter Pritchard, representing Gaumont Co., moving picture producer, is on hand, cinematographing the phases in assembling the machine. His firm holds the sole cinematograph and still picture rights, and Mr. Pritchard will be in the airplane when she makes her test flight, to take moving pictures of the country below.

The Handley-Page aeroplane, it will be remembered, arrived in St. John's by the S. Dyer, on Saturday afternoon. The TRANS-ATLANTIC FLIGHT. The Handley-Page Attempt--Machine to Fly Over St. John's.

SPECIAL TO EVENING TELEGRAM. HR. GRACE, To-day, ... and without display or ostentation, preparations for the Transatlantic flight by the Handley-Page biplane have been going on for the last week or so, and to-day things are in a fair way toward completion.

The time was when Mr. Grace was more important than St. John's, with the successful accomplishment of the "big adventure" by the machine now being assembled here, Mr. Grace should regain some, if not all, of his lost importance. The citizens of the second town are jubilant over the prospect, and the men connected with the proposed flight, together with the machine itself, are already held in high esteem and every possible thing is being done to assist them.

For a month, under the capable direction of Lieut. Robin Reid and Mr. P. O'Riordan, local Transatlantic flight organizing managers for the Handley-Page firm, a large staff of men was engaged in preparing the field from which the start will be made. After a week's work, Mr. O'Riordan has made a choice of the spot from which the flight will be made, as the most suitable for the purpose. This ground, which runs parallel with the railway line and Water Street, which in turn runs parallel with the harbor, extends from one side of the station 900 yards, ending at Bear's Cove. It was not originally one big field, but rather a series of small gardens and farms, with rock pile fences separating them. There were three houses and one building that had been torn down, leaving the bare brick, grey walls, and the old barracks in which soldiers were quartered as late as 85 years ago, was completely demolished, while the three houses were simply shifted holus bolus to sites out of the way of the machine. Some of these houses were old and had been in the family possession for long periods. Consequently it was like tearing up the roots of old days and old associations. Despite this, however, their owners were willing to have them removed for the sake of the giant aeroplane that was to re-establish, probably, the town's former prestige. When everything had been cleared and removed, a heavy roller, drawn by three horses and weighted with some hundreds of extra pounds of iron bars, was gotten into action and speedily rolled the hummocks and even eliminated the hollows. Thus, after just a month's work, a splendid aerodrome of nine hundred yards' length and two hundred width, with hardly an elevation, was made ready. The general public is permitted to enter this field, and may stand nearby the machine and witness its assembling, may take advantage of an opportunity that many in Great Britain, the home, most of aircraft, would envy. Mr. Walter Pritchard, representing the Handley-Page firm, arrived in St. John's by the s.s. Digby, on Saturday afternoon. The fuselage, wings, motor, propellers and other big parts, were contained in six huge, wooden, two-bound cases, while there were no less than 105 smaller boxes and packages connected with the ship. Several of the bigger cases are small houses in themselves, containing doors and windows. They are now grouped on the field in the form of a square, the machine being in the centre on the ground and uncovered. The aerodrome, as the field is called, is situated about a quarter of a mile from the railway station, and at first sight it would appear that the task of transferring the boxes and cases from the cars to this would be an almost herculean one. This was overcome, however, by attaching the huge wheels that will be part of the aeroplane, underneath the cases, and simply wheeling them along the road and onto the field. Progress in the construction is going on apace, and in about a month she will be ready to lift her test flights. The fuselage, or body, of the machine, is already in position, while one section of the great wings was attached yesterday. A big scaffold, some fifty feet in height, has been erected over the machine, and this, with pulleys and blocks, and tackle, will be used for lifting the machine into position when the wings are being put on and the wheels affixed. The fuselage, comprised of very tightly drawn canvas, regular aeroplane fabric, and the best Irish linen—is stretched over a wooden frame, and is painted brown. This fuselage, from the bow, or nose, to the stern, or rudder, measures just over 60 feet. At its biggest part, in front, it is 8 feet deep by 6 feet wide. This, in itself, will give a good idea of the intricacy of the plane. The wings, of which there are two—one running out at right angles from the fuselage, on top, the other running parallel to it, underneath the fuselage, with the body contained between the two, are made of canvas also. They each have a spread, from tip to tip, of 126 feet, and are 12 feet wide. Both wings and fuselage are painted with a mixture, technically known as "dope," which serves to tightly stretch the canvas and to make it waterproof. To get a good idea of the general shape of the aeroplane it would be good to picture a big cross. The wings, of course, constitute the cross-ticks. There are four engines, all 400 h.p. Rolls-Royce, "Eagle 8's." They are situated on either side of the fuselage between the two wings. Each has a propeller, making four in all. Two are pushers, the propellers being turned behind, and two tractors. The two pushers are four-bladed each, and the tractors two-bladed. These propellers, it might be stated, are not made of metal, but of a very tough but light wood. They are sometimes called the terrific air current caused by the four propellers, it could be said to stand by the rudder of a small, one-motored machine when the engine was being warmed up and the propeller revolving at a very moderate speed (as propeller speed goes) one could lean one's full weight against the wind that blows back. Imagine, then, the wind caused by four propellers, two of them four-bladed, and run by such powerful motors. And yet, of course, it takes such a force to move such a monster machine.

lifts the buoyant machine, and the take-off is accomplished. She has tankage capacity for 2,000 gallons of gasoline, although that quantity may not be taken across. A large tank of water, for cooling the engines, will also be carried. When thoroughly completed, the aeroplane will weigh 16 tons—a great weight to go thundering through the etheral space between Newfoundland and the British Isles. When it is remembered that the little Sopwith biplane weighs 6,000 and some odd pounds, it will readily be seen what a giant the Handley-Page boat is.

She is fitted with three sets of wireless. One, a receiving and transmitting set, has a radius of receiving, from ships, of 250 miles, and from land stations according to the power of the senders. Then there is a directional wireless, for finding the course. Lastly, she is fitted with an emergency set, which can be used from the water, should the machine be compelled to alight on the surface. This last, however, the pilots confidently think, will not be needed.

In the event of the aeroplane falling to the sea, the possibility of the crew's escaping is good. She is fitted, before starting, with rubber air bags, placed around the machine. The bags, already inflated, together with the wooden frame, of which there is more than is usually found, will keep the machine afloat for some time. The four wheels, with their inflated tyres, will in themselves float a weight of two tons, so that, should she be compelled to "land," she will stay afloat long enough to receive assistance. The fliers will wear, in addition to their ordinary flying suits, India rubber tube belts, which may be inflated automatically by simply "pressing a button."

The food to be taken in the aeroplane will be ordinary sandwiches and coffee, to be kept heated in Thermos flasks. There will be enough food for twenty-four hours. Provided that the machine needs same, she will land at Ireland, where fuel will be taken on board. From that the flight will be continued until London is reached. Of course, if the fuel is not required, no stop will be made in Ireland, and she will go on to London. It would not matter were one of the engines to break down in mid-Atlantic, the remaining three could take her across. If the greater part of the flight had been accomplished, and two engines broke down, the voyage could still be finished. According as the fuel lessens less motors are required, for with the reduction in weight, thereby ensuing, the strain on the engines. When the ship is completely assembled and ready to make her test flight, a small steam tractor—"Clayton"—will be used to haul her into position. The Handley-Page machine is not like the Sopwith and Martinsysde ones, in that it cannot be lifted by half a dozen men and wheeled out to the flying course. Sixteen tons—the weight of three hundred ordinary men—is no feather weight, and nothing less than a tractor would work the trick. This tractor, which was built for agricultural purposes—such as dragging ploughs, etc.—in appearance a miniature whippet tank, such as was used on the Western Front in France. The Handley-Page aeroplane is a type of machine which was specially built to bomb Berlin. These had been constructed and were all complete and ready to set out on their expedition the very day the armistice was signed. The great flight from England to India was also made with the identical type machine, the measurements and style being the same as the one here. A better augury for her success could not be thought of. She had made several test flights in England before being disassembled and shipped here. In one of these she carried 51 men at one time. Her crew across the Atlantic will number four. Admiral Mark Kerr, R.N.; Major H. G. Brackley, R.A.F.; and Major T. Gran, R.A.F., are the pilots. A wireless operator, Mr. Wyatt, a Marconi expert, is a passenger by the s.s. Digby, and will make the fourth of the crew. The speed of the plane is 105 miles an hour, still air. This speed, of course, will be plus the wind with it and minus that against it. Thus, if the wind was blowing 40 miles an hour behind the machine she would do a speed of 145 miles. And if the wind was blowing against them, the speed would be cut down accordingly. The aviators anticipate an average speed of 90 miles. The wireless is being installed by Mr. J. A. Pritchard, the Marconi expert, who installed the Martinsysde wireless. He has been here a week now, and will remain until the machine makes its flight. Mr. Pritchard will install the wireless of any machine that comes to Newfoundland to make the flight, so that it may get some time before he gets away. He says he likes Newfoundland and intends to spend his summer holidays here in future. There are twelve expert mechanics at work on the machine, while a number of local men are also employed at various jobs. Lieut.-Col. E. W. Stedman is engineer in charge of the construction, and under his able management things are progressing very favourably. Major G. I. Taylor, the meteorological officer, who is at present in St. John's, will keep the aviators informed on weather and atmospheric conditions. The mechanics are boarding in the town, while Col. Stedman, Lieut. Reid, and any of the aviators that happen to be here stay in a railway car No. "68" placed on a siding near the station. A cook has been engaged, and the quarters are comfortable enough. At present the machine is being constructed in open air, but a great Alban-Richards tent-hanger is coming from England, and in this the plane will be kept. The tent is 130 feet long, 60 feet deep and 25 feet high. Major Gran, one of the aviators, was a member of the Scott South Pole Expedition, and has had a very interesting career. Major Brackley, also a pilot, had considerable aviation experience in the late war, doing much night bombing at Zebruge and at Ostend. He is now Vice-Admiral (Major General R.A.F.) Mark Edward Frederic Kerr, R.N., C.B., M.V.O., has had a most distinguished career as a soldier, sailor, diplomat and aviator. He holds honours from Russia, Italy, Greece, Spain, and wears quite a strip of medals. Admiral Kerr is the author of several books, and altogether is one of the most famous men to have visited Newfoundland for some time. St. John's people will be interested to hear his views on the flight. Mr. H. J. John's on her test flight, when every one will have a splendid opportunity of seeing this monarch of the air. The people of St. John's are deeply interested in the flight, and intend to give some kind of a demonstration in honor of the fliers. "Handley-Page-on-the-Sea" is a busy scene, and as we write, the surrounding blows and metallic clink of hammers and spanners penetrate the stillness of the air and bring back to the old Harbor Grace memories of days that are gone—but days soon to be resurrected. So let us hope. REPORTER.

Fire Claims Two Victims.

Chinese Laundry Proprietor and Wife Roasted Alive.

Kong Wah, a Chinese, and his wife, formerly a Miss Volsey, of this city, were burned to death last night in a fire which started in the kitchen of the laundry run by the former on New Gower Street. The fire was discovered by Mr. W. Trelligan who resides next door and who sent in the alarm. The fire brigades were soon on the scene, but the fire which broke out at 10.30 quickly spread and before it was extinguished the building had been practically wiped out. Another Chinese who worked in the laundry managed to escape by jumping from a window, but the proprietor and his wife were burned to death in their bed on the second story. It was thought at first that their child had also been burned, but enquiry elicited the information that it was at the residence of a Mrs. King, Duckworth Street. The bodies of the two victims were recovered from the ruins and removed to Undertaker Martin's Mortuary Rooms, from which the funeral will likely take place. It is not known just how the blaze originated. The houses on either side of the laundry were considerably damaged by the fire. Thousands of people congregated at the scene and the streets leading to New Gower were black with people, who were greatly alarmed lest the blaze spread, but fortunately a light breeze only was blowing and the fire fighters were able to cope with the flames which at times shot high into the heavens, accompanied with showers of sparks and dense clouds of smoke and steam. When it became known that some of the occupants of the house had perished, a feeling of awe and sympathy pervaded the vast concourse and a deep silence fell upon the multitude. The all out signal was made at 11.30.

Missionary Anniversary.

Cochrane St. Church.

Newfoundland Methodism has set itself the task of raising thirty thousand dollars this year for Missions, and Cochrane Street Church proposes to raise one tenth of it. That is a great and generous proposal for a church that last year advanced its giving by ten per cent, for it means an addition of another twenty five per cent this year. But Cochrane Street Church is used to large efforts. Yesterday was a great day in the goal set, in the congregation that gathered, in the addresses given and in the enthusiasm evoked. The nephew of Thomas Crosbie, one of the most apostolic of Canada's missionary pioneers, the Rev. W. H. Barraclough is to the manner born as a missionary advocate, and his own ardent and successful ministry enables him to speak with an experience and emphasis that enhance the compelling power of his intense enthusiasm. In the Yukon, in British Columbia, in his native Ontario, and of late years in leading churches of New Brunswick, his ministry has taken a wide range. He served his apprenticeship as a missionary to the Indians of the Pacific Coast; he spent three years in Dawson in the day of the rough "prospectors" and the terrible "trails" of the early gold-fever in the Klondike; he served churches in the lovely valleys that slope to the sunset where the rushing Fraser broadens towards the Gulf of Georgia, he came back to the placid shores of Huron, and now in the Central Church of Moncton, following a pastorate in the famed old Centenary Church of St. John, he is exercising a ministry as full of work for objects that are simply parochial, as it is charged with interests and influences that are continental and even cosmopolitan. Mr. Barraclough's morning subject showed the breadth of his thought and the sameness of his patriotism. Applying Isaiah 60.2, "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light and kings to the brightness of thy rising" to the history and development of the British Empire, he rapidly and eloquently revealed the great incidents which from the beginning had settled the principles of democracy and liberty civil and religious, and progressively maintained and expanded them through the centuries. From Magna Charta to the abolition of slavery, from Wycliffe and Tyndal and Knox and Wesley the great missionaries Carey and Duff and Livingstone and Marden and Coley Paterson; from Crecy and Waterloo to the tremendous struggle just closed; the torch of freedom had been held aloft and carried forward. The great imperial task of Britain to-day was to turn energy and valor and sacrifice displayed in the war to the comprehensive and world-wide opportunities of peace. In the evening Mr. Barraclough's subject was "The Oriental of the West; a peril or an opportunity." He had a great audience, and he dealt with his theme in masterly fashion, handling facts and incidents as only one personally conversant with them could do, and marshalling them to a climax of reasoned and passionate oratory. He showed the greatness and crucial nature of the church's task in Christianizing the thought and practice of the eastern peoples coming in increasing numbers to the shores of the North American continent, and distributing themselves over its cities and countryside. He bore witness to the readiness with which the gospel, sympathetically preached and evidenced, was received among them and to the splendid type of Christianity he had known it develop. He emphasized the important bearing that tactful and earnest Christian work among these strangers within our gates necessarily had upon the broader question of foreign missions in the countries from whence they came and made a powerful appeal on the whole missionary question. The Hon. R. K. Bishop made an admirable chairman, and the choral and congregational singing was most inspiring. By no means the least interesting item on the programme was a brief but exceedingly bright and informative address on the work of the Woman's Missionary Society in Japan from Mrs. Pinsent of Cochrane Street Church, for fifteen years a missionary in that country, now home on furlough, and soon about to return to her loved work in the Land of the Rising Sun.

The Congrega- tional Pulpit.

Speaking on the subject of "A Great Partnership" on Monday morning, the Rev. D. B. Ashford took as his text the words of Paul in his letter to the Colossians, Chap. 4, verse 11. "Fellow-workers towards the Kingdom of God." Paul here shows a gracious humility. Although he was the greatest of all the apostles, he treats his subordinates as fellow-workers. They were working together with God, and in face of that fact, all differences of ability or rank vanished. We ought never to lose sight of the fact that it is God who is the great worker. The farmer may till the soil and put in the seed but he cannot make it grow. The engineer may harness up the waterfall but he does not create the electricity. And in the realm of religion it is equally true, it is God who is the great worker. Paul may plan and Apolos water, but it is God who gives the increase. Then too we are fellow-workers. We may have diversified gifts and talents but we are all dependant upon one another. In the building of Solomon's temple, some hundreds were engaged as skilled workmen, to work in stone and gold, and silver and wood. Others were unskilled labourers, 70,000 in number, engaged in carrying the materials necessary. There were also 30,000 told off to hew wood and stone in the forests and quarries. They did not even have the pleasure of watching the beautiful temple being built. Yet all alike were necessary to the carrying out of the task. And in the work of the Church it is equally true that it can only be successfully accomplished by each one doing their appointed task faithfully and well. We are fellow-workers "towards the Kingdom of God." The Church is not an end in itself, it is a means to an end. It is not a religious club but a salvaging corps. As Hugh Price Hughes used to say, our task is not to coddle the saints but to collar the sinners. When the power of reclaiming the lost dies out of the church it ceases to be a church. It is true that we are dependant upon God, but it is also true that God is dependant upon us. He condescends to work through human agency. We are God's fellow-workers. Think of it; fruitfully and almightily power working together. As in the incandescent mantle is the medium through which the gas is able to give out light, so God condescends to reveal His light through us. Let us always recognize God as the supreme worker, let us work together in harmony, let us each be faithful in our allotted task, and let us keep steadily before us the vision of a world subject to our God and His Christ.—Com.

At St. Mary's Church.

The subject of the sermon preached by the Rev. A. B. S. Stirling last night in St. Mary's Church was: "Religion and Humanity." The preacher pointed out that these two virtues were absolutely inseparable, and that it was impossible to be true Christians unless we manifested these two essentials. He said that religion was something more than merely a creed or doctrine, it was to love Christ and to love those whom He died to save. Quite a large congregation were present, and both service and sermon were greatly enjoyed.

Missionary Services.

Cochrane Street Methodist Centennial Church Missionary Committee and its Pastor are to be congratulated on their push and perseverance in bringing to a very successful issue the Missionary Anniversary Services held in the Church yesterday. The Rev. W. H. Barraclough, B.A., of Moncton, who was invited to place the great question of Missionary endeavor before the members of the congregation, was at his best, and the sermon at the morning service, on the British Empire—The Light Bearer of the Nations, the text being taken from Isaiah, 60th chap. 3rd verse. As the Rev. gentleman outlined the pioneer work of Missions, and the spirit which always characterized the British people in championing the cause of the war, the free conscience, the free press, which all helped Christianity and the growth of Christian Missions. The story of the work of the early Missionaries, as outlined by the preacher, was really thrilling and inspiring.

A very large gathering attended the Anniversary service in the evening. The Rev. Dr. Bond conducted the opening exercises, after which he introduced the Chairman, the Hon. R. K. Bishop, who congratulated the Cochrane Street congregation on its interest and zeal for Missions and other church work. The first speaker was Mrs. Pinsent, who having lately returned as a Missionary from Japan, spoke of Women's Work in Tokio, as it came under her own supervision, and she related in a pleasing manner her visits to the homes of the people, explaining the customs which created quite an interest.

The Rev. W. H. Barraclough, B.A., delivered an inspiring address on "The Oriental in America—A Peril or an Opportunity." The Rev. gentleman is a forceful speaker, and he spoke of the work amongst the Orientals, was listened to with riveted attention, and it is hoped his address removes from those who doubt that after all there is a grand opportunity for work and workers for spreading the gospel in the mission fields and amongst those who come to our own territory from those far off lands. The choral rendered valuable service in the singing of the anthems, the congregation also joining heartily in the singing of the hymns. It is expected the offering will reach the amount aimed at, viz. three thousand dollars. The pulpit was neatly decorated with flowers and choice ferns. The service was brought to a close by the singing of a well known hymn and the pronouncement of the Benediction by Rev. W. T. D. Dunn.

The Home of the "Grand Fleet."

During the four and a half years of the Great War, everyone was wondering where the Grand Fleet was kept in its headquarters, as it kept continual watch for the approach of the German Navy. To-night, at the Synod Hall, the Rev. N. G. Vivian will describe the home of the Grand Fleet, illustrating the same with lantern slides. Mr. Vivian left here some three years ago, and, on offering his services to the Admiralty, was commissioned to one of His Majesty's ships in the North Sea, where for the first sixteen months he was continually scouring the ocean in search of enemy shipping. During the latter stages of the struggle, considerable time was spent in port, and Mr. Vivian had an opportunity of seeing first hand something of the home of the Fleet that has stood between us and our foes. As this is the first opportunity the city has had of hearing of the Grand Fleet from one who was so long a time with it, we have no doubt that the lecturer will have a crowded audience.

THOSE ANGELIC BULGARIANS.
No doubt Bulgarian propagandists will tell us that the American Red Cross is entirely mistaken in its reports of the miseries inflicted on a hundred thousand Greeks by the Bulgarians. We have heard for so long that all reports representing the garians as anything but a blood race whose life is one long massacre are base and malicious. It seems rather surprising disinterested evidence as to Bulgarian atrocities keeps pouring in from the New York Times.

Dames of Honor.

This was founded on the 19th of May 1816, by Napoleon, and at least seven men were decorated by him, including Anne Bisset, a Sister of Mercy, who was thus honoured for devotion to the sick and wounded sailors in the Napoleonic campaigns. The other women decorated were vivandieres, who shared the perils and discomforts of the wars; three of them actually killed and fought gallantly. Not many women were decorated between 1810 and 1852; indeed, of those thus honoured before 1870 few records exist, as the Palace of the Legion d'Honneur was burned down during the Commune and all the records were destroyed. After re-establishment of order, considerable difficulty was encountered in compiling the names, so that in the list the names of those decorated before 1852 do not appear. An "admitted principle" that should be for works of charity and goodness—a principle which seems to have been fairly adhered to in the earlier years, with the great exception of Rosa Bonheur—in later years the scope has been greatly extended, and besides good works and patriotic deeds, we find in the list, beside three poets, authors, and educationists, thus distinguished include Mrs. Dodu, a postmistress at Liviers during the Franco-Prussian War, who, instead of transmitting a message, destroyed it. For this she was condemned to be shot by the Germans, but on the arrival of Prince Frederick Charles, she was not only released, but the Prince complimented her on her courage. The German princess of the present day are not in a different mould. Others included include Madame de Rostern, an Austrian lady, who, during the China war of 1900, helped in the defence of the French Legation and was badly wounded; Seur Candide, who founded homes for consumptive children; Madame Carlier, who during the massacre of the Armenians in 1897, protected many of the refugees in the French Consulate at Sivas, and who, with revolver in hand, helped her husband in the defence. Others who have gained the coveted cross include Madame Marie Laurent, the actress; Madame Dieulafoy, an explorer and discoverer of Persian antiquities; Mile. Houissant, as directress of a technical school; Mile. Saffroy Inspectress of Primary Education; Madame Masseau, who undertook journeys to Java, the Caucasus, Tibet, Cambodia, Siam, the Gobi Desert, and Siberia, visiting places where no white woman had been previously. Another recipient was Miss Edith Williams, for services as Professor of English at the State Normal College, near Paris; and last, but not least, come the names of Madame Sarah Bernhardt, and Madame Paquin, head of the famous dressmaking firm. This brief list serves to show that the French woman has little to complain of as regards public recognition of her services.

The French Character.

The Clarity of their Minds Astonished the World.

It is a commonplace to say that this war has revolutionized all our notions of the French people. Most of us had thought them frivolous, light-minded, unstable. Under the supreme test of war we found them precisely the reverse. The tactics of Joffre and Foch, in contrast to those of the German General Staff, threw an illumination on the French character. Lucidity, a just appreciation of a complicated situation, characterized the French strategy. Throughout the war the French had a more nearly accurate view of what they could do and what their opponents could do than the Germans had. The Germans rushed for Paris, then for the Channel ports, then for Verdun, finally again for Paris. Each time the French threw them back, and on two occasions, at the beginning and end of the war, waiting for the right moment with supreme self-control, turned the repulse into disaster. Mrs. Edith Wharton discusses French characteristics in the Cosmopolitian. She finds in the nation as a whole the same temper which we have spoken of as revealed in the war. The Frenchman prefers to face all the facts of life in the open. Eccentricities do not appeal to him. He sets up standards and conforms to them. If the French Academy makes its decision in matters literary, he accepts it. He has a just appreciation of scientific and cultural leadership. Mrs. Wharton remarks that the same audience that goes to the movie in Paris will stand in line to get tickets for a classic play. Philip G. Hamerton has made a somewhat similar observation. The French peasant, he insists, is more alert, more intelligent than the man of similar station in England. The nation has an instinct for taste, for culture, for social intercourse. Matthew Arnold has contracted it with other nations, remarking that the English-speaking people are rather absorbed in conduct, the German in things of the intelligence (a generation later he would have said in world conquest of trade) and the Italians in the beautiful.

The clarity of the French mind is famous. Indeed, it has proved troublesome to the French nation, for it has led to a disregard of the anchorage of habit which other peoples have found so useful. The French Revolution attempted to root out all illogical habits, and reduce everything, including God, to the decimal system. Such a process is rather severe on the dissenters. The general French standard of judgment, which has little tolerance for curious medical cuts and other departures from normal, is attributable by W. C. Brownell—whose book, "French Traits," is probably the keenest piece of national criticism extant—to a thorough-going respect for public opinion. When the signers of the Declaration of Independence set forth "a decent respect for the opinions of mankind" as a motivating force in their own minds, they were taking a typically French attitude. When Richard Lovelace wrote the famous lines: "I could not love thee, dear, so much Loved I not honor more,"

he was speaking the natural sentiment of a Frenchman. Carlyle somewhere tells of the Scottish Covenanters appealing to what shall he say? And the Frenchman interrupts with "To posterity." In other words, the Frenchman cannot think of any better appeal than to the future enlightened judgment of mankind. That standard is not the Anglo-Saxon standard. But it has its advantages. Certainly the events of the war have shown that a nation with a passion for common sense has a wonderful endowment with which to meet the stresses of life.

Overheard.

She—It was offered them for a hospital—just a great, big empty house, absolutely no conveniences.
He—Well?
She—We got the Gas Company men to work at once. Had gas radiators fixed in the corridors, incandescent gas everywhere, gas fires in the ward rooms, gas water heaters for bathrooms, and all in a few days. We did work, I can tell you.
He—Regular old gas works I call it.
She—A lot you know about it; why, you couldn't have done it with anything else in the time, and it saves our work to next to nothing. No coals to carry, no grates to clean, plenty of hot water all the time.
He—What did the Colonel say?
She—He said it was "top hole", offered us staff appointments so's we could teach "his young blighters" how to hustle.

Events of the War Foretold by Stars.

Heavenly Phenomena Marked All Stages of the World Struggle. It is not to be seriously suggested that coming events on this earth are foreshadowed by the stars, but it is a fact that before and during the course of the war the heavens yielded many signs. If coincidences they were, there is no denying that they were interesting coincidences; and a most fascinating article is woven around them by John J. Ross in Chambers's Journal. He tells of nearly a dozen remarkable astrological and astronomical facts all readily applicable to the progress of the war—signs which preceded the start of the war and marked practically every important climax thereafter. His references to two of the most important are appended: Shortly after the capture of the Holy Places a celestial occurrence of pleasing appropriateness took place. The planet Venus was then a brilliant object in the early night sky, and on 5th January, 1918, it reached an epoch of maximum brilliance as an evening star, an event which occurs at successive intervals of about five hundred and eighty-four days. At such times Venus shines with a lustre so surpassing that it has often been spoken of by imaginative beholders as a return of the "Star of Bethlehem." As an evening star the planet is always to be seen in the Western heavens, and it is obvious that the "Star of the East," though viewed in the East (terrestrial locality) by the wise Men, must have been shining in the Western sky, since their journey was towards the West. The 5th January is the eve of (or day preceding) the Church festival on which commemorated the Epiphany of Our Saviour and His Adoration by the Magi. If we suppose the 6th January to be indeed the correct anniversary of the day upon which "star-led chiefs" did "Assyrian odors bring," there appears the interesting fact that soon after the "little town of Bethlehem" was restored for the first time for centuries to Christian rule, the brightest and most beautiful of planets—Star of Bethlehem or not—shone down upon the city with its maximum brilliance on the night corresponding to that of the conclusion of the journey of the Magi to the shrine at Bethlehem. Surely a felicitous coincidence! In September 1913 a comet was discovered in Aquarius, and this, according to tradition, foreboded misfortune to kings under Aquarius, and this, according to astrologers to be the falling sign of Russia and Prussia. It must be granted that this tradition also has been abundantly justified by the event. These facts are almost as striking as the coincidence which marked the return of Halley's Comet in 1910. Halley's is the most famous of all comets. Its visits to our neighborhood occur only at intervals of seventy-six years. Yet on that occasion its nearest approach to the earth (one day out of seventy-six years) occurred on the very day of the late King Edward's funeral. Little wonder that some of his South African native subjects believed the huge and imposing ethereal visitant to be a chariot sent to bear the monarch's soul to celestial regions.

Welsh is still spoken by nearly a million people. Extreme heat is more fatal to human life than extreme cold. Pink pearls are scarce, and are found only off the Bahama Islands. It is calculated that 350 acres of British land is annually devoted to interments. A single leaf of the parasol magnolia of Ceylon affords shade for fifty-two persons. Snoring is far more common among men than among women, the proportion being almost four to one. A small packet of pepper was considered a handsome present in the Middle Ages, pepper in those days being a very costly commodity. It is a curious fact that the countries of the tallest and the shortest people of Europe—the Norwegians and the Lapps—adjoin each other. The rose is the emblem of secrecy in Greece, and formerly was hung over the table where guests were entertained in token that nothing heard there was to be repeated. Siamese football is played with a wicker ball, and the players are not allowed to touch it with their hands, being allowed, however, to use their heads, shoulders, and knees. The object is to prevent the ball from touching the ground, and some of the players are very skillful at the game. The reason why moths fly against a candle is because their eyes can bear only a very small amount of light. When, therefore, they come within the light of a candle, their sight is overpowered and their vision confused, and as they cannot distinguish objects they pursue the light itself, and fly against the flame.

Took Physical Action.

A young boy named Tommy McNeil was severely bruised when he was run down by an automobile at the corner of George and Falmouth streets at noon on Tuesday. It was at first feared he was seriously injured and he was rushed to the city hospital for treatment. Enquiry at the hospital elicited the information that his injuries so far as can be ascertained at present are not serious, although the lad is painfully bruised. It is reported that a relative who was nearby when the accident happened thought direct methods of reprisal more appropriate to the occasion than involved legal processes and proceeded to decorate the driver of the automobile with a black eye. He will be lucky if it costs him no more, according to report.—Sydney Record.

Also, as stated above, the comet was at the time of discovery in Aquarius, and this, according to tradition, foreboded misfortune to kings under Aquarius, and this, according to astrologers to be the falling sign of Russia and Prussia. It must be granted that this tradition also has been abundantly justified by the event. These facts are almost as striking as the coincidence which marked the return of Halley's Comet in 1910. Halley's is the most famous of all comets. Its visits to our neighborhood occur only at intervals of seventy-six years. Yet on that occasion its nearest approach to the earth (one day out of seventy-six years) occurred on the very day of the late King Edward's funeral. Little wonder that some of his South African native subjects believed the huge and imposing ethereal visitant to be a chariot sent to bear the monarch's soul to celestial regions.

Traditional view would rather have been justified.

Claimed by Belgium.

Malmédy Is Wanted for Sentimental Reasons.

In patching together the picture puzzle of European nations to fit racial and historical units the Peace Conference Commission on Belgian Claims is reported to have concurred
in Belgium's demand for Malmédy.
Malmédy forms one of those alien racial clusters that seem to cling like barnacles to many a European boundary line.
In the case of Malmédy and the region about that town a group of Wallons who led in Rhenish Prussia
when the historic Benedictine Abbey of Stavelot-Malmédy was cut in two in 1815. Malmédy fell to Prussia while six miles to the west,
across the Belgian border, is Stavelot.

The latter town was the seat of the abbey, which was independent until the Lunéville peace of 1801. The abbey fell to France until its partition, 14 years later. The abbey was founded in the seventh century, and later its abbots ranked as princes.
They ruled many small villages along the Ambleve, on which Stavelot is situated, and along the Warche, which flows through Malmédy.
Charles Martel, grandfather of Charlemagne, who ruled the Franks while he let their kings reign on, won a decisive victory over Neustria at Stavelot, just 12,000 years ago.

Malmédy lies in a pretty valley of the afore-mentioned river, 20 miles south of Aix-la-Chapelle. The town had less than 5,000 population before the war. Dyeing, papermaking and tanning were its industries.

The term Walloon is used to designate those Belgians who speak either French or a French dialect. The Wal-loons of Belgium desire Malmédy's restoration for linguistic as well as for sentimental reasons. In Liege and Namur a movement for the revival of Walloon as a literary language—for it had been so used until about the fifteenth century—was well under way when the war began. In the midst of German-speaking neighbors Malmédy and its environs preserved the old Walloon dialect, whereas among many Belgian Walloons it has been supplanted by pure French.

Hereditary Trouble.

(Saturday Night.)

Edward Farrar, editor of the "Mail," afterwards editor of the "Globe," and during his active service the premier journalist of Canada, spent his old age in retirement at Ottawa. "Ned," as he was affectionately known to his intimates, was a heavy smoker, and has seen no reason to believe that it is injuring his health. Mrs. Farrar, who was of a different opinion, asked the family doctor to suggest that her husband cut down his cigars to three a day.
She told the doctor to approach the subject delicately.

"Do you find smoking a strain on the heart, Mr. Farrar?" inquired the medical man.

"Not that I can notice," replied the great editor, biting the end off another Perfecto.

"How about the longevity of your ancestors?" continued the medical man.

"Well," said Mr. Farrar, with a twinkle in his eye, "most of my ancestors came from the south of Ireland, and to tell you the truth, doctor, their longevity depended on the lencency of the court."

New Use for "Unwritten Law."

(From the Memphis Commercial Appeal.)

The unwritten law has come to strange uses. Once it was invoked when a man killed another because his home was violated, or because he was slandering to a point where, if he did not resent, he could not hold up his head in a community. The unwritten law has always been invoked to acquit. Now we are to try the Kaiser according to the unwritten law. There is no precedent, but the Kaiser will be tried and convicted under the unwritten law, and then, under the same unwritten law, he will probably be pardoned or sent away to an island or confined within certain limits. The trial will serve one purpose. It will create a precedent, and all lawyers, national and international, must have precedents. The Kaiser will be convicted under an ex post facto law, but so long as the sentence will not be carried out he will not be deprived of any natural right he has. The next time some war lord starts out to whip the rest of the world he will give pause, because he knows that if he falls he will be tried, convicted and hanged. The Crown Prince and future would-be world conquerors will then all be on notice.

LANGUAGES AT CONFERENCE.

French has the preference at the Peace Conference, but each delegate is free to speak in his own language.
There are expert interpreters who quickly turn the other languages into French, or translate anything for the benefit of delegates who do not understand.

C. OF E. ORPHANAGE GARDEN

England Orphanage Garden Party,

tee will be held at the C. L. B. Arm-

Who Made the Bombs?

(Washington Post.)

The suggestion has been made that the bombs found in the mails and received by a few of those to whom they were addressed bear evidence of being of German origin, possibly imported from that country. It is stated that anarchists in this country could not obtain the fulminate of mercury used in their manufacture. The bombs are strikingly similar to German marine mines that were laid along the American coast during the war.

It is not at all unlikely that either the bombs or the material for making them came from Germany. It is by no means improbable that this diabolic plot was of German inspiration. It is quite in keeping with the German method of propaganda, which was so strikingly in evidence here before the United States entered the war. Nor is it inconceivable that the present German government should be willing to see the United States thrown into turmoil through a series of crimes, employing for this purpose, by devious ways, such willing tools as the anarchistic radical organizations that have gained a foothold in America.

Yet it is not necessary to seek a German origin for the crime. The Industrial Workers of the World have preached violence. Unattached individual radicals have urged terrorism.
The bomb has been openly proclaimed
as the proper weapon of the proletariat. Whether the materials for making the bombs could be obtained in this country or not, the fact remains that somebody in this country prepared the list of intended victims and managed the programme of distribution.

An officer of the newly formed labor party of Chicago has declared that the discovery of the bombs was "a das-ardly plot to discredit the labor and radical movement, a plant by the hirings of Wall Street." That has a familiar sound. It is an old cry. It may fool a few misguided followers, but it will not impress the public. It is so utterly absurd that it reacts upon those who utter it.

Drowned in Treacle.

Floods are reported all over the country, and many extraordinary experiences are being related by persons seriously inconvenienced by these overflows. But strange as many of them are, none could parallel what has now come to be known as "the great treacle flood."

This occurred in New Orleans a few years ago. By some mischance a number of huge treacle tanks suddenly burst their contents, and the treacle flooded all over the low-lying portions of the city. The substance, by its sticky nature, resembled an octopus in its grip, and those who were caught in it shared a horrible fate of drowning.

A few years ago a similar catastrophe happened in London. A flood of beer broke loose from a brewery, and 9,000 gallons rushed in a cataract down the streets, overtaking and drowning many people.

In Pennsylvania, U. S. A., they have a day known as "black day." In the anniversary of the great oil flood in that town. The disaster occurred in the year 1892, and when the tanks burst there were terrible scenes in the streets. Many parts of the city were seriously damaged and between three and four hundred people were drowned in the oil.

Will on Wallpaper.

Appropos the recent case of a will being written on a piece of wallpaper, it may be noted that, so long as the proper formalities required by the law are complied with, it is immaterial what the will is written on.

Taking advantage of this fact, one eccentric testator elected to write his will on a door, and the executors had no choice but to have the door unscrewed from its hinges and carried into court to be proved.
"Mary, all that is mine is thine,"
was scribbled on a torn luggage label and held to be valid as a will, while a wealthy American grocer wrote his bequests of thousands of dollars on a piece of brown wrapping paper.

Another eccentric testator wrote his will on the lid of a collar-box, inside which he placed his cash and securities.

Aftermath of the War.

The dodging of loose mines left floating in the sea after the war must continue for some years to be a recognized incident of ocean travel.
The ocean was sown thick with these agents of destruction while the war was on, and by no means all have ever been accounted for. Such things remain actively dangerous for a long time even after submergence in the sea, and while the chances are heavily against a vessel's hitting one in the vast expanse of water traversed between the continents, the remote danger is there and some such thing might happen.—Lowell Courtier-Citizen.

The inhabitants of Mesopotamia are not Arabs, but descendants of the old Babylonians and Assyrians.
Before they were conquered by the Arabs the natives of the Tigris and Euphrates valleys spoke Syriac, a dialect of the Assyrian language.

The Bonfire Chain.

Some time ago The Morning Chronicle, in calling attention to the proposal, originating in London, for an Empire chain of bonfires, to celebrate the signing of the Peace Treaty, suggested that Nova Scotia should take part in this unique and impressive demonstration. We mentioned certain points on which bonfires might be lighted, and we are glad to know that our suggestion is meeting with a favorable reception. Arrangements have already been made for bonfires at Blomidon, on the "Look-Off," on the Big Gore Hill, in East Hants County, on the "Ridge" back of Wolfville, and on the face of the North Mountain to the westward. Present indications are that the Annapolis Valley will make a brilliant display to signalize the historic occasion of the conclusion of peace.

We hope that similar arrangements will be made along the South Shore, in Eastern Nova Scotia, in Cape Breton, and in every section of the Province. As we pointed out already, this may be done through local initiative, with regard always to the protection and safety of adjoining forest land. We suggested that the Forest Rangers should be consulted,
and we hope that their active cooperation will be enlisted.

The suggestion has been made that it might be more convenient to defer
the lighting of bonfires until the night following the day on which peace is signed. That will depend largely upon the hour when the final act is completed at Versailles, of which due notice will be given. In the meantime we would strongly urge the local authorities in every district where there is an outstanding hill or mountain, to make their preparations so that on the night of this glorious day in our history the glad news may be flashed from hill to hill like the beacon signals of old.

Newfoundland, we may add, has taken up the suggestion, and we have no doubt that the Ancient Colony will join Nova Scotia in a spectacular display, worthy of the great event.—
Morning Chronicle.

Why Women Fear Mice.

"No house without a mouse," says
the old proverb. No woman has done not worry, is a modernized version.
Why should a woman be afraid of a mouse, a creature so small, so harmless, so unthreatening?

Expert opinion says it is due to hereditary fears. It is contended that woman's fear of mice arises from their being classed as vermin. The fact that rats carry disease and plague is not disputed. Mice may not be so dangerous. Their bites and scratches are trifling. But they carry disease and dirt, and a baby sleeping in a cradle, for instance, may suffer in consequence. Mothers have for ages been affected by this dread, and it seeking to protect their offspring from contact with mice have unconsciously, we are told, bred that feeling of nervousness which has provided the comic artist with his periodical picture.

Her Hard Choice.

(Edinburgh Scotsman.)

Mr. Plowden, the well known London magistrate, now retired from the bench, has a great repertoire of good stories. His favorite one relates to a case in which he appeared as counsel.
In the course of this case he had to cross-examine the wife of a notorious burglar. "You are the wife of this man?" he asked.

"I am," she replied.
"You knew he was a burglar when you married him?" he proceeded.
"I did," she admitted.

"How could you possibly marry
such a man?" Mr. Plowden demanded.
"Well, it was like this," the witness explains confidentially: "I was getting old and two chaps wanted to marry me. It wasn't easy to choose between 'em, but in the end I married Bill there. The other chap was a lawyer, same as you, sir!"

Wants Different Styles.

The Consul General of Japan at Honolulu has forbidden his countrymen to wear kimono on the street.
He explains his order as being part of a campaign he is waging to induce his people to adopt European styles.

Which Is Which?

(From the Toronto Star.)
A contemporary refers to the left bank of the Rhine as the east bank.
This is natural in a new country,
where we think of explorers and settlers going up a river. In Europe, however, you are supposed to be going down the river, and the left bank of the Rhine is the west.

An Acceptable Document.

(From the New York Herald.)
Whatever difference of opinion there may be concerning the practicability of a League of Nations, there can be none over the inspiration of the terms upon which Germany is permitted to have peace. These are dictated by Retributive Justice. There should be no misunderstanding of this fact; certainly there can be none in the part of the fugitive Kaiser in his exile or of his once valiant war lords, now indulging in crinidation and recrimination among themselves, or of officials of the old regime, or of the camouflaged new regime, or of the masses of the German people. They, one and all, now understand that the peace they are to have—the only peace they can have—is one of acknowledged and accepted defeat. To Americans it is a peculiarly happy coincidence that the terms of this peace should have been formally presented to the emissaries of the German Government and the German people on Lusitania Day. No other document of history has had the wide reading that will be given to this treaty of peace. The statement of its main provisions and summarization of its other contents, printed to-day, will be eagerly devoured in every corner of the world to which a written language reaches, and no person whose sympathies were not with Germany in the great conflict but who see justice in the demands to which the German people must accede. Certainly the American people will approve those terms, as they will the spirit of the treaty as a whole. The peace it provides in respect to Germany is a "victor's peace" principally in the sense that the treaty seals a victory for right and justice.

The Signing.

(From the New York Tribune.)
Will the Germans sign? They will. They will grumble; they will whine; they will flit the air with mangled gutturals; they will invoke the names of the Fourteen Points and call on Thor and all the deities of Valhalla to shake their spears. But they will sign. Manoeuvring for delay will occur. It is necessary for the Ebert government, none too stable to appear highly indignant. The delegates will sign and they will sob; they will bewail the sad fate of poor innocent Germans, surrounded by ravenous wolves; there will be an ecstasy of self-pity. But they will sign. They will sign largely because of Papa Foch. There's a man whose glance is not liked. Germany had a taste of him not only at the Marne, but in the wood of Compiègne, when the armistice was prepared. It is realized that he is not an easy man to argue with. He is fond of such words as "unconditional surrender," and it feared he is capable of again giving the order "Forward!" They will sign. There is talk of trade isolation if signatures are withheld. The threatened boycotts do not alarm. What gives concern is Foch.

Preacher's Pay.

(Winnipeg Tribune.)

Not one, of several denominations, are agitating over this continent for better pay for the average preacher. A valued contributor vouches for the fact that the average salary for preachers in twelve leading denominations is less than a thousand a year.

The average preacher is married. Most of them are raising children, feeding them, clothing them, buying medicine for them and sending them to school. The average preacher works seven days a week. He must wear good clothes; his wife must dress well, and his children cannot appear in tattered and torn rags.

His congregation insists that the preacher and his family must not display any sign of poverty, and the preacher must wear a smile—always. His must have a cheery word for every man, woman and child he meets. He must not complain.

Once in a while a preacher quits the pulpit and takes another job—one which will leave something in his pay envelope after taking out the tolls of the butcher, candlestick maker and the baker. Then his congregation speaks of "his fall from grace."

A preacher ought to preach. What right has he to stew and fret about shoes for his children, food for his table and the declining years of his life?

And above all, a preacher should never mention his pay envelope, for his congregation has arrived at the conclusion that their pastor will reap his reward in the hereafter, than which no human being could desire a greater reward.

So the congregation distributes haloes, pascetti paradisi and reserves seats in heaven for the pastor. Having been thus generous in the matter of spiritual rewards, the members of the average congregation hand over about two or three cents a day which totals the munificent sum of less than $3 every twenty-four hours for the preacher.

You know, the average congregation imagines its pastor never would get to heaven unless it permitted him to preach to it each Sunday. That's the impression the preacher must receive every time he gets his lean pay envelope.

So he goes on preaching and praying for his employers, and for everybody else under the sun. There are times, of course, when a preacher gets to pray for himself and preach to himself. Usually, though, the average preacher has his hands full preaching and praying for his congregation.

When he's not preaching and praying he is visiting the sick and helpless, the aged and the backslider. Aside from these duties he has nothing else beyond attending to the socials; the half dozen or so church societies; the boys and money for a new church; collecting for home and foreign missions; burying us and marrying us, baptizing us and converting us. Once in a while the average $3 or less congregation will permit its pastor to take exercise mowing the church lawn or sweeping snow off the sidewalk.

Truly is the "laborer worthy of his hire." The only trouble is the matter of the preacher's hire is that his congregation expects the Lord to pay about 80 per cent. of the hire.

It is better to increase the content of the preacher's pay envelope than to contribute for homes for aged pastors, and it is more pleasing to preachers to get regular sized pay envelopes while they live than bronze tablets after they're dead.

Sea Power in the War.

Some extreme Mahanites continue to say that Allied sea power won the war. This distorts the true perspective. It is nearer the facts to say that the sea power made it possible for the Allies to win the war on land. Admiral Simms put it that way on Saturday, when he told the English-Speaking Union that "the foundation stone on which the success of the war was built was the British Grand Fleet."

Admiral Simms remarked that had an earthquake engulfed the British fleet in the North Sea, so that the German High Sea fleet could have ventured forth, nothing could have stayed the hand of the Germans. That is beyond dispute. But if the British fleet had been engulfed before August, 1914, Germany would have been the master of Europe immediately. One of the biggest handicaps to the German conquest of Europe was Entente sea-power. The Germans went to war with the hope of destroying it.

This they were never able to do. Looking at the facts fairly, it is easier to prove that sea power lost the war for Germany than that it won the war for the Allies. Without sending a battleship or a submarine beyond her coastline waters, Germany conquered Russia, Rumania, Serbia and Belgium, and almost overwhelmed Italy. She had only to fight France and Great Britain to a draw on the West front in order to consolidate the Middle European and Asian Empire which she had set up. But a persistent misuse of the U-boat forced the United States to join her enemies. And the United States furnished the strategic reserve which enabled Foch to carry through his victory offensive.

Entente sea power made possible the transportation of the American reinforcements to Europe. Yet, Ludendorff and Von Tirpitz themselves summoned that reinforcement.

Before the United States went in Entente sea power had imposed a blockade on Germany. But the blockade didn't starve Germany out. The Entente navies had not been able to force the Dardanelles and link up the Eastern and Western fronts, which alone could have saved Russia. So the war was left to be decided on land. It would have been decided on land if America had not come in. It was decided on land after America came in. Foch's victories forced Ludendorff to quit. The Allied operations at sea were decisive.

The German High Sea and submarine fleet surrendered only because the armies in France had been driven into a corner and were ready to capitulate. Sea power helped to win the war. But land power was the ultimate determining factor.—New York Tribune.

C. C. C.

The C. C. C. Boat Club met yesterday morning, when several applicants were admitted to membership. It was decided to hold two dances next month—on June 9th and 10th—in the C. C. C. Hall, and all the proceeds go towards expenses in connection with the Regatta, we predict the usual large attendance.

"C" Co., under Capt. J. M. Greene, paraded to Divine Service at Bell Island yesterday, and were favoured with splendid weather. The Company is preparing for its annual inspection, which takes place at the Island on Sunday next.

The Cadet athletes were in session yesterday after Last Mass, and at an enthusiastic meeting made final arrangements for participation in football and other sports this year.

Brigade supporters are looking forward to the C. C. C. church parade, the first for 1919, which will probably be held on Sunday week. Arrangements are being made for the turnout, which will comprise nearly 400 lads.

C. E. I. Athletic Association.

The above Association met on Saturday night for the purpose of electing officers for 1919. The election resulted as follows: President, Mr. T. Hallett; Vice-Pres., Mr. J. S. Lonn; Secy., Mr. B. B. Harris; Treas., Mr. J. M. Farndale; Football Captain, Mr. Eric Jerrett; Football Vice-Capt., Mr. W. M. Churchill; League Delegate, Mr. C. E. Hunt. It is understood they will put a strong aggregation in the field, the majority of whom will be returned veterans. Their supporters are confident they will again lift the silverware this season. They will start practicing at an early date.

Already Big Demand for Seats

For Big Prize Fight.
Toledo, Ohio, May 13.—Reservations for seats for the proposed heavyweight title fight between Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey here on the afternoon of July 4th, have aggregated $75,000, according to A. Q. Thatcher, match maker for the Toledo Boxing Commission, who is assisting Tex Rickard, the promoter, in arranging for the battle.

Rickard arrived here to-day and announced that prices for the bout would range as follows: $10, $15, $25, $30, $40, $50 and $60, with 2,500 on sale at the highest named figure.

Rickard estimated from the demand for reservations that there would be 47,500 others ranging down to $10, which will be 260 feet from the ring.

The Toledo Athletic Club, the commission's official headquarters, has been turned over to Rickard and his assistants as headquarters for newspapermen.

Bids were submitted to-day for nearly two million feet of lumber for the building of the arena. All material will be purchased in Toledo, Rickard said.

Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, wired Rickard to-day offering his services as referee for the contest. The telegram said "Open for position as referee of Willard-Dempsey bout. Price optional. Would do it for you for nothing. Put it up to Willard and Dempsey."

Rickard has not yet replied to the message.

Flying the Atlantic.

The Aero Club of America, which would like nothing better than to see America aviators first across the Atlantic—how the Eagle would flap his wings and scream!—showed a commendable spirit yesterday when it telegraphed "bon voyage, best wishes, and confidence in the success of your flight" to the Englishman and Australian who were jockeying with mutual good-will for a start at St. John's. "Please convey America's greetings to Europe," was a happy after-thought in the Aero Club's message.

No matter who is the pioneer from this side—he will go down in history with the laurel wreath, an immortal—America will be able to claim the credit of making aviation practicable and can appropriately hail Europe in a note of triumph.

Considering that west (in Summer southwest) winds prevail on the Atlantic, the chances are heavily against a flier from Europe making the first flight across. There would be a certain fitness of things in emulating Columbus and discovering America from an airship flying from Europe. Generous acclaim would greet Caproni if he were the first European to make the Atlantic passage in one of his big machines. But the race is to the ready in this case, and while the Italian meditated on the project and actually designed a plane for it, he has been backward in his preparations.

While Americans would be "delighted" to see one or more of their countrymen fly eastward to the European continent in a seaplane, they are prepared to cheer Rayham or Hawker, or both of them, lustily if their adventure is covered with success. After all, aeronautics is a good deal of an international sport.—N. Y. Times.
