Miss Margret Merkley, of 275 Third Street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Street, Milwaukee, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"Loss of strength, extreme nervousness, shooting pains through the pelvic organs, bearing-down pains and cramps compelled me to seek medical advice. The doctor, after making an examination said I had a female trouble and ulceration and advised an operation. To this I strongly objected and decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. The ulceration quickly healed, all the bad symptoms disappeared and I am once more strong, vigorous and well."

The serm of consumtion becomes enveloped in a case so it can live for months even in

The question of the relation between consumption in man and in beast is an interesting one. In 1901 the scientist who discovered the germ declared they were quite distinct and would not inter-act. English scientists took up the investigation. Self-sacrificing persons allowed themselves to be treated with serum from deceased cattle and consumption developed while cattle in turn were infected by germs from human lungs. The disease in both is the same; you depnot distinguish between them. This makes the demand for competent of cattle, especially beef and dairy cattle, imperative, and infected animals should be slaughtered. Treatment of consumptive patients is expensive. There is only one in Canada run on purely philanthropic lines. But a proposal was made in Montreal recently to organize camps for a few months in the summer where patients could bé instructed in proper care and where medical men would give instruction on the nature and treatment of the disease. But Jocelyn would not have it thus. She shrewdly suspected the nature of the bargain proposed by Durneyo, and a sudden idealre possessed her to have it all out.

Maurice laughed awkwardly and muttered something about matters of business. He was not good at this sort of thing. Besides, there was the initial handicapping knowledge that Jocelyn was so much eleverer than himself.

Whether if it matter of business or not," she cried, with gilitering each. "I want you to self Mr. Meredith him. He has a right to know. Tell him upon what doublion Mr. Dursers preposed to admit you into the simiacine."

Maurice still hesitated, bewildered, at a loss, such as men are when a seemingly secure secret is suddenly discovered to the world. He would still have tried to fend it off, but Jack Meredith with his keener perception saw that with his keener perception saw that

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" differ from any other remedy in the world.

They cure, absolutely, Stomach, Liver, Kidney, Bowel and Skin Troubles.

Because none of the usual remedies have given you relief, is no reason why you should not give "Fruit-a-tives" a good, honest trial. Fresh fruit acts directly on the three great eliminating organs—Bowels, Kidneys and Skin, But fruit contains only a minute quantity of the medicinal principles and in order to receive any marked benefit from fruit, one would be compelled to eat more than could be assimilated by the system. "Fruit-a-tives" contain all the curative virtues of fruit in a wonderfully concentrated form. In making "Pruit-a-tives," the juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes are combined—and, by a wonderful discovery of a famous physician, a chemical change takes place in the juices, by which the medicinal action is many times increased. Then tonics are added, and the whole compressed into tablets.

"Fruit-a-tives" contain no Calomel—no Cascara—no Senna—no Morphine—no violent purgatives—only fruit juices and tonics. "Fruit-a-tives" act directly on the Bowels, Kidneys and Skin-strengthening them-and arousing them to vigorous action.

With the Kidneys healthy—the Bowels moving regularly every day—the Liver active—and the pores of the skin doing their full share towards ridding the system of waste—there can be no disease. "Fruit-a-tives" mean health for every member of the family.

The doctor, who was wise in the strange maladies of the west coast, stayed for two days and promised to return once a week. He left full instructions, and particularly impressed upon the two nurses the fact that the recovery would necessarily be so slow that their unpracticed eyes could hardly expect to trace its

It is just possible that Meredith could at this time have had no better nurse than Joseph. There was a military discipline about the man's method which was worth more than much feminine persuasion.

"Do y' know what I would like, missis?" he asked briskly of Marie one

"Well, I'd like to clap my eyes on Miss Gordon just a-stepping in at that open door; that's what we want. That sawbones feller is right when he says the progress will be slow. Slow! Slow! ain't quite the word. No more ain't progress the word; that's my opinion. He don't take no interest in nothin', least of all in his victuals, and a man's in a bad way when he takes no interest in his victuals."

CHAPTER XVIII. Y the way, dear," said Lady fine day, "I have asked a Miss Gordon to come to tea this afternoon. I met her last night at the Fitzmannering's. She lives in Loango and knows Jack. I thought you might like to know her. She is exceptionally ladylike and rather pretty."

And straightway Miss Millicent Chype went unstains to rout on her least to the shook hands with Lady Can-Chyne went upstairs to put on her best

And, while Millicent Chyne was actually attiring herself, Jocelyn Gordon, in patting here, drawing out there, pinning, poking, pressing with all the cunning that her fingers possessed. When they met a little later in Lady

Cantourne's uncompromisingly solid and old fashioned drawing room, one may be certain that nothing was lost. "My aunt tells me," began Millicent at once, with that degage treatment of certain topics hitherto held sarred which obtains among young folks today, "that you know Loango."

"On yes. I live there."

"And you know Mr. Meredith?"

"Yes, and Mr. Oscard also." "At yes," said Millicent unblushing-ly. That was her streng point, blush-ing in the right place, but not in the Meredith's progress was lamentably risks prove too great and they "What risks?" asked Millicent, quite forgetting to modulate her voice. "Well, of course, the Ogowe river is most horribly unhealthy, and there are other risks. The natives in the plains surrounding the simiacine plateau are antagonistic. Indeed, the plateau was surrounded and quite besieged when we left Africa."

"But," cried Millicent, "of course something was done. They could never leave Mr. Meredith unprotected." "Yes." answered Jocelyn quietly. "Mr. Oscard went up and rescued him. My brother heard yesterday that the relief had been effected." Millicent smiled again in her light

"That is all right," she said. "What a good thing we did not know! Just think, auntie dear, what a lot of anxlety we have been spared!"

"In the height of the season, too!" said Jocelyn. "Yes-es." replied Millicent, rather doubtfully.

Lady Cantourne was puzzled. There was something going on which she did not understand. Within the sound of the pleasant conversation there was the cliquetis of the foil; behind the polite smile there was the gleam of steel. She was rather relieved to turn . at this moment and see Sir John Meredith entering the room with his usual courtly bow. He always entered her ing to what it may broaden out.

"I had the pleasure of seeing you last night," said Sir John at once, "at Lady Fitzmannering's evening party, or 'at home,' I believe we call them nowadays. Some of the guests read the invitation too much au pied de la lettre for my taste. They were so much at bome that I, fearing to intrude, left rather early."

He was beginning to wonder why he had been invited—nay, almost commanded—to come, by an imperious lit-

Atthat moment the door opened and there entered a complex odor of hair wash and perfumery—a collar which together. There is nothing like a wo-"Lady Cantourne," she said, "kindly asked me to meet you today on purpose. I live at Loango; I know your son, Mr. Meredith, and we thought you might like to hear about him and about Loango."

"Yes." he said, with a strange hesitation, "yes, you are kind. Of course I am interested. I wonder," he went on, with a sudden change of manner-"I wonder how much you know." "I know," she answered, "that you have had a difference of opinion but no one else knows! You must not think that Mr. Meredith has spoken of his private affairs to any one else. The circumstances were exceptional, and Mr. Meredith thought that it was due to me to give me an explanation." Sir John looked a little puzzled, and Jocelyn went on rather hastily to ex-

"I see," said Sir John; "and you and your brother have been kind to my boy. And I dare say," he added, with a somewhat tame attempt at cynicism, "that you have heard no good of me?" But Jocelyn would have none of that. She was no child to be abashed by sarcasm, but a woman, completed and perfected by her love.

"Excuse me," she said sharply, "but that is not the truth, and you know it You know as well as I do that your son would never say a word against

"Oh," she explained lightly, "I did.
My brother was away, so there was no one else to do it, you see."

"Yes, I see." And perhaps he did. Sir John took his leave. He bowed over Jocelyn's hand, and Millicent watching them keenly, could see nothing-no gleam of a mutual understanding in the politely smiling eyes. "Perhaps," he said, "I may have the pleasure of meeting you again?"

"I am afraid it is doubtful," she and swered, with something that sounded singularly like exultation in her voice. "We are going back to Africa almos at once. And she, also, took her leave of Lady

One afternoon Joseph had his wish. Moreover, he had it given to him even as he desired, which does not usually happen. We are given a part, or the whole, so distorted that we fail to recognize it.

Joseph looked up from his work and saw Jocelyn coming into the bungalow He went out to meet her, putting on his coat as he went "How is Mr. Meredith?" she asked at once. Her eyes were very bright and there was a sort of breathleseness in her manner which Joseph did not

"He is a bit better, miss, thank you kindly. But he don't make the progress I should like. It's the weakness that follows the malarial attack that the doctor has to fight against."

"Where is he?" asked Jocelyn.
"Well, miss, at the moment he is in the drawing room. We bring him down there for the change of air in the afternoon. Likely as not, he's And presently Jack Meredith, lying comfortably somnolent on the outskirts of life, heard light footsteps, but hardly heeded them. He knew that some one came into the room and stood silently by his couch for some seconds. He lazily unclosed his eyelids for a moment, not in order to see who was there, but with a view of intimating that he was not asleep. But he was not wholly conscious. To men accustomed to an active, energetic life a long illness is nothing but a period of complete rest. In his more active moments Jack Meredith sometimes thought that this rest of his was extending into a dangerously long period. but he was too weak to feel anxiety about anything. Jocelyn moved away and busied herself noiselessly with one or two of those small duties of the sickroom which women see and men ignore. But she could not keep away. She came back and stood over him with a silent sense of possession which made that moment one of the happiest of her life. She re-membered it in after years, and the complex feelings of utter happiness and complete misery that filled it. At last a fluttering moth gave the ex-

"I do not know," he said with a return of his old half humorous manner. "whether to thank you first for your hospitality or to beg your pardon for making such unscrupulous use of it." "Sit down," she said quietly. "You are not strong enough to stand about." He obeyed her with a little laugh, "You do not know," he said, "how pleasant it, is to see you, fresh and English looking. It is like a tonic. Where is Maurice?" "He will be here soon," she replied. "He is attending to the landing of the stores. We will soon make you strong and well, for we have come laden with cases of delicacies for your special delectation.' Your father chose them him-

"We did not expect you for another ten days," said Meredith after a little pause, as if anxious to change the subject. "Marie said that your brother's leave was not up until the week after next.' "We do not always take our ful term," said she vaguely. And he never saw it.

"As a matter of fact," she said lightly, "I suppose that you loathe all food?" "Loathe it," he replied. He was still looking at her, as if in enjoyment of the Englishness and freshness of which he had spoken. "Simply loathe it. All Joseph's tact and patience are required to make me eat even eleven meals in the day. He would like thirteen." At this moment Maurice came in-
