ISABELLE AND HER SISTER KATE AND THEIR COUSIN.

Mistake and oisunderstandings are not such ad things after all, at least not always so; circumstances alter cases.

circumstances after cases.

I remember a case in point. Every body in the country admired Isab-lle Edmonds, and in truth, she was an admirable creature, just made made for admiration and someteering, and faling in love with, and accordingly all in made made for adairation and sonnetering, and faing in love with, and accordingly all in the county of with, and accordingly all in the county, of with, and spectator, and all menner of newspapers abounded with the effisions, supplicatory and declartory of her worshippers; in suort, Miss Isabelie was the objection all the spare "ideality" in all the region tound about. Now, I shall not inform my respected reader how site looked, you may just think of a Venus, a Psyche, a Madonina, a fairly, an angel, and so forth, and you will have a very definite idea on that point. I must run on with my story. I am not about to choose this angel for my heroine, because she is too handsone, and too much like other heroines for my purpose. But Miss Isabelie had a sister, and I think I shall take her.—"Little Kate," for she was always spoken of m the diminutive, and was some years younger than her sister and somewhat shorter in stature. She had no pretensions to beauty—none at all: yet there was a certain something, a certain—in short, Sir, she looked very much like—rs. A. or Miss G. whom you admite so much, though you always declare he is not handsome.

It requires a very peculiar talent to be overlooked withs good grace and in this talent looked.

admite so much, though you always deciare she is not handsome.

It requires a very peculiar talent to be over-looked with a good grace and in this talent Miss Kate excelled. She was as placid and as happy by the side of her brilliant sister, as any ittle contented star, that for agos has twinkled on, unnotized and almost eclipsed by the side of the peerless moon. Indeed, the only artor science in which Kate made any great proficiency, was the art and science of being happy, and in this she so remarkably excelled, that one could scarcely be in her presecce half an hour without feeling unaccountably confertable themselves.

She had a world of sprigitiness, a deal of simplicity and affection, with a dash of good natured shrewness, that after all, kept you more in owe than you would ever suppose you could be kept, by such a merry, good natured little body. Not one of Isabelle's adorers ever looked at her with such devout adoration as did the laughter-loving Kate—No one was so ready to run, wait and ten—to be up stairs and down stairs, and every where in ten minutes, when Isabelle was dressing for conquest; in short, she was, as the dedication of books sometimes set forth, her ladyship's most onedient, and most de rout serve int.

But if I am going to tell you my story, I must not keep you all night looking at pictures: so now to my tale, which I shall commence in manner and form the following:—

It came to pass that a certain college valedictorian and a far off cousin of the two sisters, come down to pass a few months of his free agency at their father?s: and, as aforesaid, he had carried off the first collegiate honour, besides the hearts of all the ladies in the front gellery at the last commencement.

me.i. So interesting! so poetic! such fine eyes, and all that, was the reputation he left with the gentle sex. But alas, poor Edward, what this all this adventage him? so long as he was afflicted with that unutterable indescribable afficted with that unutterable indescribable metally, commonly rendered bashfulness worse nullifier than any ever heard of in Carolina. Should you see him in company, you would really suppose him ashamed of his remarkably handsome person and cultivated anind.—When he began to speak, you felt tempted to throw open the window and offer him a smelling bottle, he made such a distressing affair of it, and as to speaking to a lady! it was not to be thought of.
When Kate heard that this "rara avis" was coming to her lather's, she was unaccountably interested to see him, of course—because he was her cousin, and because—a dozen other things too numerous to mention.
He came, and, was for one or two days an other things too numerous to mention. He came, and, was for one or two days an object of comm isseration as well as administration to the whole family circle. After a while, however, he grew quite a domestic; entered the room strait forward, instead of stealing in sideways—talked off whole sedences without stoppin;—looked Miss Isabelle rull in the face without blushing—even tried his skill at sketching patterns, and windling silk—read poetry and played the flute with the ladies—romped and froticked with the children, and, in short as John observed, was as a psalm book from morning till night.

in short as John observed, was as a psalm book from morning till night.

Divers reports began to spread abroad in the neighbourhood, and great confusien was heard in the camp of Miss Isabelle's admirers. It was stated with great precision, how many times they had ridden—walked—talked together, and even all they had said. In short, the whole neighbourhood was foll of "What strange knowledge that doth come We know not how—we know not where.

As for Kaps, the always gave all admirent to her sister, ex officio; so she thought "that of all the men she had ever seen, she should like cousin Edward best for a brother, and she did hope Isabella would like as much as she did and for some reason or other, her spec ultions were remarkably drawn to this point; and yet, for some reason or other, she felt as if she could unt ask any questions about it.

At last, events appeared to draw towards a could not ask any questions about it.

At last, events appeared to draw towards a crisiss. Edward became more and more "brown studious" every day, and he and Isabella had divers solitary walks and confabilations, from which they return d with a peculiar solemnity of countenance. Morrower, the quick sighted little Kate noticed that when Edward was with herself, he seemed to talk as though he talked not, when with Isabella he was all animation and interest; that he was constantly falling into trances and reveires, and broke off the thread of conversation abruptly; and, in short, had every appearance of a person who would be glad to say something if he only knew how.

(S.S.)" Said Kate to herself, "they neither of them speak to me about it—I should think they might. Belle I should think would, and Edward knows that I am a good friend of his; I know he is thinking of it all the times, he might as well tell me, and he shall."

The next mort 29 Miss Kate e as sitting in the little back pottor; Isabelle was gone out shopping, and Edward was—she did not know where. Oh, no, here he is, coming beak in hand, into the self-same little room; "mow fine it," said the merry little grid men-ally; "I have in hand, into the self-same little room; "mow fine it," said the merry little grid men-ally; "I have a charge at him." She looked up; "Master Edward was stitt, diagocally on the sofa, twirling the leaves of his book in a very unscholarship manner; he took u out of the window and—then he w. As it was arranged that every body was to stin something, Lewis took care that the priz a should be of a nature that would create the most tudicious perplexity to the owners. Accordingly (for the raffe took place at a soirée) the assembled guests were parading the brilliantly-lighted drawing-rooms nurdeaed with the most out-of-the-way articles the accentic hostess could procure; while the inventor of this noval kind of platianterie was sitestity enjoying the joke of their distress. The Ledger, a paper published in Philadelphia, states it at a woman residing in Little Water Street, died last week of starvation. This horrible fact is rendered not a little extraordinary, from its baving occurred in the mists of the populous and wealty city of Philadelphia. It appears that her husband was a habitual drunkard, and the supplies obtained from him were inadequate to the sustenance of herself and five children. This unhappy woman very naturally denied herself that food which might sustain her children, but, she very unaccountably screened her decadful situation from her neighbours, fearfluid exposing the extent of her husband's depravity.

CALEDONIA SPRINGS.

THE favorable opinion I formerly enter-tained of the waters of the Caledonia Springs is MORE THAN COMPENSED, as well from the benefits I personally derived from the use, as from what I observed of their effects as others. The water should be drank in mode-ta constitutes before breakfast, and operation rate quantities before breakfast, and in for some weeks at least
