The Catholic Record

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1916

TO BE AVOIDED

We were amazed some time ago to read in a contemporary a reference to an entertainment "which was attended by our better class Catholics." Who are these better class Catholics? We are of the opinion that the only aristocracy in the Church is that of virtue. The man who, whether attired in broadcloth or in poverty's livery, shows in his daily life the beauty and truth of Catholic principles is the one to be commended.

Money is accessary for many things; but the life-blood of our progress that endures comes from the souls strengthened and fed with sacramental food. The Church which, however destitute of architectural glory, can boast of frequent marbled, which houses indifferent hearts. This better class Catholics is a hateful phrase and strange on the lips of Catholics.

WAYSTO LEADERSHIP

"Of those whose principles are sound there are many who through a misplaced timidity are frightened. and have not the courage to speak out their opinions boldly, far less to translate them into deeds." These words of Leo XIII. have numerous applications. There are men, who, while they champion Catholic prin ciples within club-rooms, are strange ly silent when they have an opportunity to defend and to push them to conclusions in everyday life. They seem to be afraid of losing prestige in the eyes of the Protestant, or of engendering enmities that may block them socially and politically. Verbose they are usually, but chary of effort when a brother Catholic needs assistance which they can render, or when a cause, unpopular because of prejudices, falls by the wayside for want of a champion. It is this timidity, let us say, that takes the grit out of words, however elequent. and bars the way of some Catholics of means to positions of standard bearers of their co-religionists. They are too prudent, too safe, too much of an echo of the man higher up. They walk with bated breath, and with whispered humbleness so that their brethren must fain put up with the scraps that are flung to them from the temple of prosperity. A to support you. Above all, you will man who is willing to make a fight remember then that God has given when necessary for things reasonable and just, for positions to which we are entitled, and to do it despite personal disinclination can always be he will be respected by even those against whom he is arrayed, for all men are attracted by an individual who has virility enough to uphold any cause that harmonizes with justice.

HOW HE DOES IT

When a reporter finds himself in an arid waste of conjecture and is working for a newspaper which has no reputation as a source of information he manufactures "news."

As a special correspondent sup posed to be somewhere in Italy he sits down in his own bailiwick and gives us inside information, born of his superheated imagination, of persons and things in the public eye. Cardinal Mercier goes to Rome, and forthwith he pens just what was said by him to the Holy Father. The Holy Father holds a consistory, and every detail is blazoned forth with scrupulous minuteness. On intimate terms with dignitaries, he threads the mazy ways of diplomacy, and all the while he is in his own home town turning out fiction for the gullible at so much per week.

WHY THEY DO IT

Speaking of the origin of all the tumultuous occupations of men, without faith, Pascal says, "that the great object is not to feel one's self and to avoid the bitterness and interior disgust which the thought of one's self would necessarily occasion. The soul finds nothing in itself that contents it, nothing but affliction, therefore it is obliged to fly abroad and to lose the remembrance of its real which may wear the semblance of honesty or duty. Hence men are loaded with infinite cares and labors of day. You might think that the ccurse of their lives was purposely contrived to render them unhappy but it is necessary for their peace; so that what little time remains to them after their affairs, must be spent in some diversions in order that they may never be for a moment with

CHICAGO'S NEW ARCHBISHOP

MOST REVEREND GEORGE W. MUNDELEIN ENTHRONED

Mundelein, of Chicago, occurred on Wednesday, Feb. 9, in the Cathedral of the Holy Name. The ceremony was preceded by a procession, in which about nearly a thousand of communicants is a far greater asset the clergy participated. When the to us than a church, storied and Archbishop was seated the Very Rev. E. F. Hoban, D. D., chancellor, read the Papal Bulls. Archbishop Bonzano, the Apostolic Delegate, who celebrated the Solemn Pontifical Mass, enthroned Archbishop Mundelsin, after which His Excellency made an address, in the course of which he said that if the new Archbishop of Chicago is "to succeed, besides divine grace, he needs the co-operation of all, but especially of the clergy. That this co-operation of his priests will not be wanting him I am absolutely sure. Their splendid record in the past is sufficient warrant of this. Under the guidance of their late illustrious Archbishop they have wrought wonders in this metropolis. they are anxious to give the best that is in them to his successor They remember that it is only through close union with their Bishop that they can be true priests of God, that they can, in the words of St. Ignatius, martyr, be united with the Saviour Himself. And priests and people alike know that by revering and respecting their Bishop they will bring down upon themselves the blessings promised to those who uphold and reverence the vicegerents of Christ." Addressing Archbishop Mundelein, he said : Your Grace, behold this clergy and this people; they are here to represent the Catholics of this glorious diocese and to render to you the homage and respect of all. In the name of the Holy Father, the Vicar of Christ, I entrust them to your care. Be their pastor, their father, their guide. From this chair of authority rule them wisely and sweetly. And if, after the hosannahs of to day, difficulties and tribulation should come to make heavier the already heavy burden of the episcopate imposed upon you, you will have a loval people, a zealous and generous clergy you this flock in order that by caring for and protecting it you may show your love of Him. And, remembering this, no danger, no hardship can therefore be so great as to prevent assured of a leadership. And he will you from giving Him this proof of your love.

"These people are yours in sorrow and in trial, in joy and in gladness, to keep from the dangers besetting their path in life, unto the day of the great accounting, when the Saviour, who has given them to you, will re quire a strict account of each one of them at your hands. "Your Grace, my task is done: it only years of happiness in the administra tion of this great American see ; to wish especially that you may lose none of those confided to your care, and that they may always be, here and hereafter, your joy and your crown.' Addresses were delivered on behalf of the clergy of the diocese by the Right Rev. Monsignor M. J. Fitzsimmons and on behalf of the laity by John A. Lynch.

Archbishop Mundelein responded to the addresses, saying in part : "But yesterday I left home and kindred and the dearest friends man ever had, and abandoned the fruits of many years of labor, but I did so without regrets, for today the Lord has united me to the house He had selected for me for eternity, to the wonderful Church of Chicago, and to her and to her children I will, with God's help, remain faithful until death do us part. And now let me say one thing to comfort you, priests of the archdiocese, and I say it here in the presence of His Excellency the Apostolic Delegate. For a great, proud diocese like ours, practically the first in the country, it is a test of loyalty and obedience to receive as its head an obscure Bishop from a long distance away. I know of no diocese in the East that could have stood the test so nobly as did Chicago. Gantlemen, I am proud of you. Although a stranger to almost every one of you, the diocese, almost to a man, prepared to welcome the new Archbishop warmly, saying, 'Whom the Lord sends us will be welcome.'

Let me tell you that example of this state in application to external things | Catholic brethren, as well as our own | two hundred years old, and what is to the Holy See is not lip device, but selves.

comes from the depths of our being, Anyl which occupy them from the break all the warmth of our hearts. And sent of the Irish College. Then the connow from the clergy of this archdiocese I am going to ask a favor today. I am going to take advantage of the warmth of your welcome to ask you to be patient with me and to have consideration for me. Remember this is the first day I spent in respondence of Philade your city. It will take me time to lic Standard and Times. study the diocese and its circumstances. Rome was not built in a day, and I don't expect to accomplis much for a while. I must first study men and study condi-tions. Secondly, I am different from study the late Archbishop-the Lord cast me in a different mould. Perhaps I quicker in grasping a thing, and am likely to act more quickly. So don't judge at once that I have not attached enough weight The installation of Archbishop to your case, and if I seem to hurry you a little when you call, it is not that I am not interested in you, but perhaps because others may be waiting and waiting impatiently. Finally, remember that I have a bad memory for names and faces, so if I a second or a third time ask your name, lay the blame on a leaky memory rather than on a cold heart. Secondly, be considerate with me-you will find me very humanand it is human to err. I am going to make mistakes. But I am your Archbishop, and I look to my priests to cover up my mistakes, not pose, to discuss or to criticize them. For to whom else can I look for such consideration? Your Archbishop is the one man in this town who is con stantly in the spotlight. Shield him as much as you can. Have consideration for him, and he is likely to be considerate with you. I come here to you because I have been sent to you by the same power that sent Patrick to Ireland, Boniface to Germany, Augustine to England. And like them, I came here to labor for you and with you. I have been told by many of the bishops that I come to the most difficult and most thorny position of the Lord's vineyard. But let me assure you that my sincere, my honest conviction is that I am coming to the most fertile portion, to the part promising the greatest, the richest, the golden harvest of souls. And so I come not here to obtain a reputation, for a reputation is only a gossamer web, which a sudden gust blows away. I some not here for popular favor, for the popular favor to day is and to morrow has vanished. I come not here to lock for honors, for the highest honor in the gift of the Holy See is to be Archbishop of Chicago. I repeat, I come to labor with you;

> ground, and having taken root, rought forth fruit in abundance There were six Archbishops, thirty Bishops and two abbots at the cers--Philadelphia Catholic Stan-tence.

dard and Times.

we are both sowers of the seed, you and I, and all that we hope for, our whole ambition is wrapped up and contained in that one Biblical sen-

'And some fell on good

BEATIFICATION OF OLIVER PLUNKETT

The various steps made in the Sacred Congregation of Rites lately in favor of the cause of the Vener able Oliver Plunkett, Primate of Ireland, whe was beheaded on Tyburn Hill in the seventsenth century, warn us to prepare for the day when the Vicar of Christ will call men of Irish blood to Rome to witness the cere mony of the beatification of the Archbishop in St. Peter's. Young Oliver Plunkett was a student in the Irish College, Rome, for eight years. At his ordination, finding it impossible to go home to Ireland, Father Plunkett wrote to the general of the Jesuits (the Irish College was at that time under the direction of the Society of Jesus) asking for permis sion to remain on in Rome for three years. Permission obtained, young priest went to reside in St. Giroiamo della Carita, the very house in which St. Philip Neri bad constituted the first oratory. The oldest painting of the martyred prelate has been kept there for a long period. Unlike later portraits, it represents him without a beard, though undoubtedly those that represent him as bearded are more true to life.
While hiding in the bogs and caves in Ireland from the priest hunters he had little thought for the luxury of a morning shave! Though belonging on his father's side to the Rarls of Fingall and on his mother's to the Earls of Roscommon, the most he could hope for was a sparse meal conveyed to him by stealth

To obtain this picture of the protomartyr of its students has been long the aim of Archbishop Plunkett's alma mater. Half embedded in the neck, the executioner's axe is represented by the unknown artist. What college should not like to have such a memento of her greatest student? But the difficulties were not few. First of all, the consent of the Oratorians had to be obtained. Small blame to the good fathers if they felt in no great hurry to part with the kind does more to convince our non- treasure. It is now a good deal over people, that our profession of loyalty | more, the Primate was one of them

Anyhow, they consented to give it to be obtained. Negotiations went on for months and have ended suc-cessfully. The Irish College has now the satisfaction of receiving within its portals the oldest painting of its greatest student.—Rome Cor-respondence of Philadelphia Catho

THE POPE AND THE PAPACY

Cardinal Cabrieres on returning to his diocese of Montpellier, after the Consistory, recalled some interesting experiences. Fifty-three years ago the Cardinal, now eighty seven, and, by age, Dean of the Sacred College, first entered the Vatican. Since then he paid many visits in various capa

"One after another," he says, "I have seen the smiling majesty of Pius 1X.; the delicate, intelligent visage of Leo XIII; the calm, serene countenance of Pius X. What was to be my impression of Pope Benedict XV. ? Shall I own that I felt a little pang to enter to nav my first homage to Benedict XV., in the same apartment, close to the same desk, where I had so often admired the paternal kindness of Pius X. and tasted the sweetness of his friendship? Yes -- it was a different Pope but always the same Papacy. I was soon assured of that; I had hardly time to kneel when Benedict XV. made me a sign to rise and sit down and with his kindly hand assisted me to do both. It was he himself poured out to me, in perfect French, what he described as the 'coherence' of the Pontificate. The man changes, the Institution remains."-

NEW LIGHT

ON ENGLISH CATHOLICITY Those who are familiar with the lives of Cardinals Wiseman, Newman

Manning and Vaughan are aware of the rich field that has been opened up to the student of the history of the Catholic Church in England in who has been most prolific in the matter of historical enquiry, is the recent years; and yet the field is not vet exhausted. After Cardinal Gasquet the writer

Right Rev. Monsignor Bernard Ward the President of St. Edmund's Col-Thoroughly as lege in England. modern times have been covered by the biographies above mentioned and by the various studies of the Oxford Movement, it has been found that obscurities have disclosed themselves and misunderstandings have arisen becauss the period immedi ately preceding the great revival that followed the restoration of the hier. archy in 1850, had not been very well-known, and the man who was destined to remove those obscurities and to clear up those misunder-standings is Monsignor Ward whose fruitful pen has now produced five bulky volumes on his favorite theme. He began his studies with two volumes on "The Dawn of the Catholic Revival," followed up with three volumes on "The Eve of Catholic the Board does not explain. Catho-Emancipation," and now he gives us out of the fulness of his labors two volumes on "The Sequel to Catholic Emancipation," which brings us down to the memorable date when the Church in England once more took her place as a formally estab lished institution. Great work was done by the Vicars Apostolic who managed the affairs of the Church during the days that immediately followed the emancipation of Catho lics in Great Britain, but naturally the Church could not be expected to do her best work as long as she was hampered by the lack of a duly established hierarchy. In the development of the Church it is of course, impossible to fix the exact time when a period of growth began, and when it reached its highest point of prosperity. Monsignor Ward evidently had some thought like that in mind when he was writ ing. At all events, he dedicates his new volumes to "The Converts to the Catholic Church in England whose zeal for the ancient faith no less than that of the hereditary Catholics, who never lost it, or that of the sons of St. Patrick who came in the day of their mistortune to strengthen and expand it, binds them to our mother in acknowledge ment of what he owes himselfe to the devotion and self sacrifice of our converts, these closing volumes as a grateful tribute are respectfully in-scribed by the author." This dedication to the three classes who shared in the glory of the Church in Eng land during the days that preceded and followed the effort to restore the wreck caused by the reformation—the converts, the Catholics who remained loyal to the faith, and the Irish who were forced to leave their own country—gives the key to the spirit in which the author has written this new light on English Catholicity, for the progress of the Church is never the work of any faction or clique, and Monsignor Ward has very properly attempted to apportion praise to those to whom it is due.— The Little Rock Guardian.

SHELL KILLS SISTER WHO WAS A MEMBER OF THE FAMOUS

RUB BIZET COMMUNITY

News has just been received of the death of Sister Ignace, religieuse of the Holy Saviour. She was a membe of the community who direct the celebrated surgical clinic of the Rue Bizet, Paris. In June last year she went to organize the ambulance of evacuation of Mosche, Alsace. She was herself an Alsacien, and her knowledge of the two languages enabled her to do a great deal of good. In addition to her unfailing devotion she had a wonderful spirit of initiative and confidence which nothing could take by surprise. She fell a victim to her charity and patriotism. Struck by a piece of bursting shell which broke the carotid artery, she died immediately, having completed her forty-fourth year and spent twenty-three years in the community. She was greatly mourned both by doctors and wounded.

MOTHERS AND "MOVIES"

The modern child, it would seem chooses his own amusements. Time was when these were as carefully supervised by his mother, as his clothes, his food, his health, and his moral training. But that was back in the gloom of the nineteenth cen-tury, and this is the twentieth. The modern mother of the modern child has many absorbing interests : teas. clubs, societies to supply the Ethiopians with pen-wipers, the working girl with an altered social outlook and the wintry wind-swept cab-horse with a new blanket. She cannot be expected to neglect these important occupations for such trifling incidentals as children, a husband. and a home. Her sacred duty lies in broader fields.

The Catholic mother is not a modern mother; she crunot be and remain a Catholic, save in name. But even within the circle of Catholic mothers, some negligence is observable. There are amusements on all sides for children; parks, playgrounds, municipal dancing floors, and the ubiquitous moving picture. All may be a source of danger if not properly conducted; particularly the cheap and popular "movie." Despite the cant of the trade, "movies" are made, not to educate, not to "uplift," but to pay a return on capital invested. Their obvious possibili-ties for evil have not been left unexploited by many producers, and such consorship as has been forced upon this commercial enterprise is worth very little. The meaning of and active professional career. "Passed by the National Board of Halifax Morning Chronicle. Censors," for instance, may be ascertained on reading the Board's report for 1914. The Board announces with something of an air of virtue, that it "prohibits vulgarity when it offends, or when it verges on indecency," but allows it to remain if "an adequate moral purpose is served."

Just when vulgarity is not offensive, or how in an exhibition open to the public, children included, it can serve "an adequate moral purpose," lic parents, however, particularly mothers, should note the danger to which, by the very admission of the Board, their children are subjected. and take measures accordingly. most efficient measure would be the establishment of a vigorous local censorship. Chicago, for example, loes not hesitate to impose ruthless 'cut outs" in films accepted by censors of flexible moral standards. If universally followed, Chicago's ox ample would convince the producers that vulgarity, although it may impress a deep moral lesson, as a commercial proposition, is a "dead loss."

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE LAITY?

The Rev. Walter J. Carey, one the Anglican clergy, writes as fol lows in the English Church Times. Without realizing it he is making a powerful confession of the failure of the Reformed Church of England to save the souls of the English people. How different was it before the Ref. ormation, when the whole mass of the people said their prayers, attended Mass every Lord's Day, received the sacraments and died in a state of

We hear so much, and we know so much, about what is wrong with the clergy. We never suffer much from want of being told. But what about the laity? I do not mean at the moment our more or less ecclesiastical laymen, but the large mass of baptized and confirmed people who say they are 'Church of England,' but do little to justify their asser tions by their works. Is there any thing more disheartening than the spectacle of this unleavened mass of so-called Church of England people? Don't I know them well. "What are you in religion? Roman Catholic, Church of England, or what?" "Church of England." "Have you been baptized and confirmed?"
"Yes." "Do you ever go to Communion?" "No." "Do you ever say your prayers?" "No."

And sometimes there's an accident, and you are called in. The man is badly hurt, silent attendants hover in the background with bandages and basins. You kneel down and ask gently, "Well, sonny, how are you? can I do anything for you spiritually?" "Do you ever pray?" "No." Isn't it appalling?

Death stands two hours away, per-haps, and in that time you are supposed to do the converting, edifying, sacramental work which would normally take months or years. Whose fault is it? I resent it when I hear it's altogether the fault of the clergy. Two or three clergymen live amid ten thousand people their utmost, possibly, yet there are hundreds of homes who do not admit them, hundreds of children whose parents will children whose parents will not send them to Sunday school, thousands of grown ups who will not come to church, and don't mean to come to church, and Christ Himself couldn't bring them to church, because of their unbelief, their denial of the promptings of natural religion within them. No: let us not blame the clergy too much : some of us are to blame, no dcubt, but there are causes which lie quite outside the average parish priest.

What is wrong with the whole Anglican system is the direct result of Henry VIII's repudiation of the Vicar of Christ and his substitute of his own royal supremacy for Papal supremacy, and that fundamental wrong can never be righted until the English people return again to the yoke of Peter, which is the yoke of Christ.-The Lamp.

MR. JUSTICE MEAGHER

With the retirement of the Honorable Mr. Justice Meagher, the Supreme Court loses one of its ablest and most active members. Before his appointment to the Bench some twenty five years sgo, Mr. Meagher enjoyed probably the widest commercial practice of any lawyer in the Maritime Provinces and acted as counsel in a great many impor-tant cases. His integrity, industry and ability were not only conspicu-ous at the Bar, but on the Bench, from which he has just retired. His decisions have well stood the test of time, and the reasons given by him for his numerous judgments disclosed a wide legal knowledge. In dealing with evidence, Mr. Justice Meagher had few equals in power of analysis and felicity of expression. On the Bench, as at the Bar, he was always prompt and business-like. His friends will wish him all happiness in his retirement from a long

THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION

Catholic educators are repeatedly calling to the attention of their Protestant accusers the glorious history of education in past centuries. Were it not for the Church the world would be to day bereft of many of its most treasured works. Civilization would have been set back many ages. The Pittsburg Observer, anent this, has the following paragraphs:

To the totally unfounded charge gnorantly made so frequently that the Catholic Church is opposed to education,' the reply ought to be sufficient, for the English speaking persons who have heard or read the accusation, that all the great universities of the 'United Kingdom' whose history goss back for several centuries—whose foundations were solidly laid before the birth of Protestantism were established by prominent officials of the Catholic Church,

"The early history of the University of Oxford and of the University of Cambridge is shrouded in obscurity; but it is certain that they were important seats of learning early in the twelsth century. The University of Dublin, Ireland, was established in 1320 by Archbishop Bicknor with the approval and encouragement of Pope John XXII. The University of St. Andrews, Scotland, was founded by Bishop Wardlaw of that city in 1411 : that of Glasgow by Pope Nicho. las V. by a bull dated January 7, 1450, granted at the request of King James II., who acted on the advice of Bishop Turnbull of that city: and that of Aberdeen by Bishop Elphinstone in 1494.

"There were, in fact, in Europe before the so-called 'Reformation' no fewer than eighty-one large universities which owed their establishment to prelates of the Catholic Church."—Boston Pilot.

RELIGION

Religion is anterior to society. is the focus of social virtues, the basis of all morals, the most powerful of all instruments, more enduring than any government.

It is stronger than self-interest. more universal than honor, more active than love of country. It is the curb of the mighty, the defense of the weak, the consolation of the afflicted. Religion is the covenant of God with man .- James Cardinal Gibbons.

CATHOLIC NOTES

"Dramatics at Boston College," says the Stylus, "will be engaged in a novel field this year with the stag-ing of the Passion Play during the week of March 20."

One the most distinguished of the Belgian refugees, the Rev. Theophile L. B. Moulard, Dean of Dixmude, died recently at Woodford Bridge, Essex,

The January issue of the Bulletin of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul says that 678 members of the Society in France have, up to the present been mentioned as having fallen for their country.

A despatch from Rome brings the announcement of the appointment of the Right Rev. John J. Lawler, Auxiliary Bishop of St. Paul, to the see of Lead, S. D., made vacant last March by the transfer of Bishop Busch to St. Cloud.

This year the Holy Father is deprived of the annual Peter's Pence offering of Austria, Italy, Poland, Ger many, France, Belgium, and perhaps Ireland and England, Spain has started a campaign to make this deficit good. May not America help?

The roll of honor of Ushaw College, England, shows that 250 old students are in active service. Of these 31 are naval or military chaplains. Eleven -including Father Finn who fell at Gallipoli landing-were killed, and 11 have been wounded. Mass is said every Monday in the college chapel for the soldiers and sailors. The late Governor Hammond of Minnesota, who died in the south, manifested, though a non-Catholic, so much friendliness for our people and so much hostility to proscriptive movements that the Catholics of that state and their press paid tribute to his memory and the Knights of Columbus furnished an escort to his remains from the twin cities to his home town, St. James, In Roman circles it is stated that the Very Rev. Father Cormier, general of the Dominicans, is about to retire from the chief post of his illustrious order, and that he will spend the evening of his days in the Monastery of St. Clemente, which belongs to the Irish Dominicans, and from which (or rather the adjoining church) Cardinal O'Connell. bishop of Boston, takes his title.

Describing a Corpus Christi procession in Austria, the writer of a recent book says: "It took from 8 clock to 11 for the procession to walk over the prescribed routs, and all that while the aged Emperor walked alone and bareheaded immediately after the Blessed Sacrament. The religious life of the country made the most lasting impression on this writer and traveler, who is an English woman with the very un-English name of Nellis Ryan.

The good Nans of Rome under the presidency of Cardinal Lualdi have gathered in the Villa Flaminia no fewer than 3,000 children of Italian soldiers at the front. It was the aim of proselyfizers to get hold of this class of children if possible. However, the Nuns, whom the invaders fear so much, are first in action. The prime minister of Italy and Cardinal Lualdi recently me villa and the former expressed his delight in the Nuns' work.

News has come to hand, through His Grace the Archbishop of Perth, announcing the appointment of the Right Rev. Monsignor Brodie, V. G. Parnell, Auckland, to the vacant see of Christchurch, says the West Australian Record. The Bishop-elect of Christohurch is the first native of New Zealand to wear the mitre. many years he had charge of the great mining parish of Waihi, where there stand as monuments to his zeal beautiful schools, church and presby-

The warmth of the welcome given y the Catholics of Chicago to Archbishop Mundelein, says the Catholic News, indicates that the people out there have already taken the distinguished prelate to their heart. they know him better and have a chance to note what a remarkable administrator he is they will bless the day he was named their superior. In Chicago Archbishop Mundelein will have a notable opportunity to display his constructive genius. He and his faithful and zealous priests and people are bound to write s memorable page in the history of Catholic progress in the United States.

The Catholics of Sydney, says the N. Y. News, recently celebrated the golden jubilee of the arrival of the first Sisters of Mercy in New South Wales, an event of in estimable importance to the progress of the faith in that part of Australia. The pioneer Sisters were three in number, and were sent out from the Convent of St. Ethelburga, Mount ernon, Liverpool, at their head being Mother Mary Ignatius McQuein. London born member ef an Irish family which has given many of its sons and daughters to the service of God in the religious life. Another instance of the effective way the children of the Gael spread the faith throughout the world

A FAIR EMIGRANT

BY ROSA MULHOLLAND AUTHOR OF MARCELLA GRACE : " A NOVEL." CHAPTER XVI A SISTER-IN-LAW

Lady Flora Fingall sat in an easy chair before the fire with a book or her lap, a work-basket at her feet, and tea set forth, with its equipage ancient silver and delicate china on a spindle-legged table beside her was a pleasant reflection to Lady Flora's rather frugal mind that she had been able to furnish her drawing room according to the approved mode of the day without having recourse to the fashionable laterer. To bring such persons and their productions across the Antrim mountains would have been a difficult and expensive undertaking, and she had simply had resourse to the garret at The Rath, out of which she had brought forth as pretty specimens of the spindle. hank tribe as any to be met with in Oxford Strest. The old brown carved chimney piece running up to the be-wreathed ceiling, which had been an eyesore to her when she came as a bride to The Rath, had of late become a treasure ; the old dado, which she had papered over long ago, was now restored and repainted; elbow-chairs and stacks of brass bandled drawers, which had mouldered under the eaves, disgraced and forgotten for so many years, were, with the help of a little eeswax and the village carpenter, at this moment looking handsome and dignified among sunflowers and peacocks' feathers in this ancient, home-like, and very comfortable apartment.

She did nothing but look into the fire, however; for, though the setting sun made red bars along the sashes of the small, high windows, yet the drawing room was already almost dark but for bright patches sunlight of fantastic shape that flecked the many cornered walls.

Lady Flora was a plump little woman, with a good quantity of fair hair, a white hand, a pretty foot, and a sharp and ready tongue. Her iress was elegant but not expensive. getting good things cheap. Even the richly wrought shoes which decked her little feet had been made at small cost by a poor old bankrupt shoemaker, who endured his reverses in a back street in Paris, and were fashioned out of a morsel of Indian embroidery which had been sent her by a wandering friend.

"I am glad to see tea." said Shans taking off her hat and shaking back her curly, brown locks. "We had nothing for lunch but one of Nannis Macaulay's stale buns. And I am so

You ought to be tired," said her sister in law, poking the fire till the flame lit up the darkening room but you look bright and bonny : and I heard you laughing immoderately as you came past the windows."

"Oh! yes; we met Major Batt," said Rosheen, "and he always makes 'Major Batt is an extremely agree able and sensible person," said Lady Flora; "but I confess I never looked on him as a humorist."

"No," said Shana, with a sly smile as she put down her emptied cup 'he only inclines to make humour ists of other people. How he did button up his coat today when I about money, goor dear! And Shana walked across the room with her chin pushed out and set up in the air, and fingered energetically at the buttons of her jacket.

"How very unlady-like!" said dy Flora coldly. "And pray, Shana, why did you talk to Major Batt about money? I hope-

"You need not hope, Flora," said Shana abruptly; "you know I am hopelessly outspoken, and I did ask Major Batt for money."

Flora sat up in her chair, her plump lips parted, her keen, pale eyes fixed upon Shana with horror.
"Yes," said the girl, carrying her replenished cup to the fireside and seating herself on a stool by her sister in-law's side, 'I asked him to do something for the poor old bodies in the Hollow."

Lady Flora sank back in her seat

"I am relieved," she said. thought-'I don't want to know what you thought. Flora. Your thoughts and mine are seldom the same.'

"I am happy to say you are right ere," said Lady Flora sharply. "But there-tell me about Major

'He buttoned up his coat," said Shana, sipping her tea.

"By which remark you mean to imply, of course, that he is careful of money; and I admit that he is. It is one of the virtues I admirs in him. In this wretched spendthrift country, where people hardly ever think of to morrow, a prudent man is a jewel to be prized."

"Major Batt needn't think so very much about to morrow. His to-morrow will not be so long as some other people's, and he has no one in particular to succeed to his money

"Major Batt will marry," said Lady Flora, complacently turning a pretty ring on her short, white finger, and looking as if she was almost betraying a secret.

Has he been making a confidence to you, Flora? He told us he had been here," said Rosheen, sidling up to her sister in law with a roguish

"What funny entertainment Major Batt's little confidences would be!" you to go away and dress. Alister is mused Shana, gazing into the glow. "Wejor Batt," said Roshee in his study, buried, as usual, in a stolen glance at Lady Flora.

her

Flora ignored this observation and turned to Rosheer.
"I can't exactly say that," she said with an air of reserve, "but he gave me to understand a great deal."

"He generally does leave a good deal to the imagination of the listener when he talke," said Shana. "Ah !" said Lady Flora, smiling archly, "there will come a day, perhaps, when he may find words enough to satisfy every one. In the mean-time, Shana, I think that, prudent as he is, he will respond to your appeal to his generosity.' "I hope he may, for the sake of the poor old Adares," responded Shana readily; but her colour became heightened and a look of displeasure passed across her expressive brow.

'For somebody else's sake," said her sister in law quietly. "I will not say for which of you'

You have fallen asleep at the fire and dreamed a bad dream," said Shana gravely. "Forget it Flora." "I never dream," said Lady Flora 'And I had Major Batt here all to 'Poor Flora !" said Shana, with heavy groan. 'I must say he thinks much more myself for more than an hour.'

highly of you both than either of you deserve. "Did he come to say he would marry, he didn't care which?" laughed Shana. "Come, Flora, you don't mean to say you would sell us to Major Batt ?" Unfortunately, he cannot marry both of you," said Lady Flora, a spot of anger reddening her cheek; "but and all the grandmother's cupboards if either of you were to refuse such an offer I should-wash my hands of you."

"Let me ring for a basin and some scented scap on the instant," said Shana sericusly.

"Shana you only say these things for the sake of appearing clever. I know you value money, for I have heard you wishing you were a man, that you might make it. And all I can say, now that we are on the subject is, that if so excellent an opportunity should occur of providing for either of you, you will not be so mad as to put it away. With my children in the nursery, and little or for she had a wonderful knack of no rents to be had; with Alister so weak in his dealings with the people and all expenses to be covered by the income of such money of mine happens to be invested in English securities-with this state of things staring me in the face, I will say that it would be extremely incon siderate, not to say ungrateful, if either of you were to refuse to become settled advantageously in life.

Shana's cheeks were now glowing like the coals in the fire. She drew away her hands, with which she had covered her face while her sister-in-law was speaking.

"I own, Flora," she said earnestly, 'that it is very hard on you having me and Rosheen to do with, now that our fortune which our father left us is gone; that Alister's property also should be so embarrassed, and that we should all depend on you-" "You know I would wish to deny you nothing," interrupted Lady Flora : "but with my own young chil

"I have thought about the children -I am always thinking about them, said Shana, with burning eyes; "and believe me, Flora, Roshsen and I intend to provide for ourselves."

"Major Batt is a capital parti," said Lady Flora. "And I am sure I should not have spoken to you so plainly except for your own good; and I expect that when he asks he will not be discouraged."

"As you say, he cannot ask to marry us both," muttered Shana

"One will be enough; but as I am not at all sure which of you he pre fers, I desire that you will both be prepared," said Lady Flora.

Rosheen pouted and hung her head. Shana rose and walked to the window, and stood looking out into the growing darkness for a few moments then came back to the fire and said distinctly :

"If Major Batt makes choice either of us, I hope it will be of me. 'Come now, that is better," said ber sister in law in pleased surprise. "I always knew, Shana, that you had a fund of good sense somewhere if you would only condescend to make Rosheen stared at her sister agtonishment, but said nothing. Shana restedherelbow on the ledge of the mantel piece and went on :

"But I warn you, Flora, that I do not believe he is thinking of doing anything of the kind. In spite of his mature years and, let us say, solid appearance, Major Batt is fond of flirting or doing something that he fancies is flirting. He is one of those persons who always put before them to achieve the most difficult centerprises, and so he is always trying to make himself agreeable-"By the way," interrupted Lady Flora, "I told him he might expect to meet you in Dublin.'

"That you must not think of Flora Ball-dresses and all that expense at such a time !"

"That is my affair," said Lady Flora graciously. "No, Flora," said Shans, drawing her sister's little hand through her arm, "it is my affair and Rosheen's. This, at least, must be left to our selves. We will not go. It is bad enough to eat the children's bread—" "Nonsense!" said Flora shortly. "How exceedingly literal you are! Who talked about bread? I must say it is very unamiable of you to take ing coals, which threw a hundred book all day—would not even come mischievous reflections into her out to talk to the visitors. Oh! that reminds me-what does bring that engineering young man, that young Callender, about the place so often? He was here again to day." Shana and Rosheen had reached round and looked steadily at her

"I suppose he comes because Alister asks him," she said. "I am sorry we did not see him."

approval.

Lady Flora arranged her bracelets dessert. There were six of them the eldest being. Duck, a little maiden of eight, who walked straight up to

Where were you all day, Shana

What will you do when I go away

"I will go with you," said Duck,

'It was Shana's own hand that was

That night the wind roared as usual round The Rath, coming down with many a swoop and rush from that near, overhanging mountain, and hurtling strangely over the girl's low, slant-roofed rooms. A sound as of blowing of organ pipes was going on rude, familiar music, while Duck lay sound asleep in her crib between of the wind, "why does Flora dislike does Flora see in him to dislike?"

ents," said Shana, grimly.

get on without disliking him."

we had better not talk about him.

"He has no money in the three per

'Nothing but an honorable name

"I should think," said Roshsen,

Well, dear, he is nothing to us, so

I am sure he thinks a great deal

But Shana pretended to be asleep.

Rosheen was soon asleep in reality and, after lying long awake thinking,

Shana got up and, lighting her lamp bed, she held the light above the

"Eat your bread, my darling?" she murmured in an aggrieved whisper.

try what the storm will tell you this

She passed into the sitting room and closed the door of the sleeping chamber softly behind her. Shading opened a drawer in the old schoolroom table and took out some paper and pens. A cup of strong tea stood ready on the hearth to scare away the natural sleep from her young eyes. Having drunk this, she settled herself at the table and listened for

"Rosheen was right," she said.

"There ought to be love in it. But how can I write on such a subject?"

As she listened a tale of love and sorrow and struggling grew out of the sobbing voices round the window and came to her. A smiling face with fair curls, a manly young face, a cheerful voice came across her thoughts—not the sort of hero for a

"I must make my hero exactly the reverse of that vision," she said with smile, and then, as the wind bullied on through the trees and piped weird ditties through the ancient sashes, Shana drooped her head on her nands and struggled with a serious keeping a certain living individuality out of the interesting tale she was

TO BE CONTINUED

A CARDINAL'S COUNSEL

Oh, thoughtless and worse, oh, crue to your own salves, all ye who read what ye should not read and hear what ye should not hear? Oh, how you will repent of your folly after wards! Oh, what bitter feelings, oh, what keen pains will shoot through your souls hereafter at the memory iosity? Oh, how will you despise yourselves, how weep at what you have brought on you! At this day surely there is a special need of this before all men,-John Henry New-of what has come of that baneful cur

and unexpected difficulty-harrowing tale.

hoping to write.

inspiration in the hurtling of the er lamp and rousing up the fire, she little face, and then knelt beside the child and kissed her tenderly.

than that! Come, then, Shana, dressed herself. Passing by Duck

Willie Callender ?'

"O Shana!"

bout him ?"

of you, Shana."

lively night !"

"Shana," said Rosheen, in a pause emphatically, and dived with her

The house is not nice when you are her Aunt Shana and fixed a pair inquisitive eyes on her face.

head under Shana's elbow.

out all day."

her father.

altogether, Duck ?"

'I consider him rather an intrus ive person," said Lady Flora coldly, but avoiding Shana's shining eyes.
"I do not like him, and I do not not keep standing in the door way girls. Bernard is coming in with the

ing together, up the dark old winding staircase, dimly lighted here and there by an old fashioned lantern, and descending a few steps on the other side of the first landing, entered their own particular apartments. These were first a long room with a slanting ceiling and low walls, and a small, square window at each side, set up high under the saves. was their old school room, which, as they no longer needed a governess, they had turned into a sitting room making use of their own ingenuity and needlework, to effect some considerable improvement in its arrange ments. It was a very old room; the walls were panelled in dark brown the windows had deep brown seats the sunflowers, of the girls's own making, on the short, brown stuff curtains made a grateful gleaming of gold in the brownness of the place. The furniture was ancient and worm saten, and the long, dark, oaken schoolroom table, with its row of drawers, still held its time-honoured place all down the middle of the

A large bottle of ink and some pens stood upon it, and a row of old book shelves held a store of shabby looking books. Two pretty work boxes stood on the table, and a basket of apples and an old fashioned china jug full of brilliant winter leaves. A peat fire burned low on a hearth, and Shana knelt before it and began to take turf logs from a large wicker basket by the fireside and set them on their ends on the Rosheen came and knelt beside her, and they laid their heads together.

"Shana, why did you say you hoped Mejor Batt would make choice said the younger sister in a whisper of reproach and awe. Because, darling, I should be able to fight my battle better than you,' 'Flora thinks you meant that you would accept him."

"I am sorry, then; but she ought to know me better. I merely said what occurred to me to say." They were silent a few minutes, each feeling the sympathy of the other, and then Rosheen said : "O Shana! if Shanganagh Farm were only let! That would bring us a little income of our own, and we need not feel so dreadfully when she talks about the children. "Even in that case we should still be dependent," said Shana; "though of course it would be better than nothing. But nobody is coming to take Shanganagh while the times are so bad, and I fear, I fear the times are not likely to mend." Shanganagh was a farm on an upper level of the mountain, about half a mile from The Rath. It was a part of a property left to the girls by their father, and had been lying unlet for the last two years. All the land belonging to them except this lay in disturbed districts, and it was last blow to the sisters when Shanganagh was left on their hands. "Nobody is going to take Shangan agh," repeated Shana. "The people are all flitting to America, and this place is so far out of the world." "What are we to do then. Shana? " Something," said Shana with a frown, and kissed her sister hastily and stood up. And Rosheen said no more just then. She did not always know what to make of Shana. Then they rose and went up a fev steps to their bedroom, a very large room, plainly furnished, but adorne with all the little odds and ends of prettiness that girls love, with two white beds in opposite corners, and a tiny crib in between for the use of their eldest niece, who was the darling of the young aunts. Here they assumed their well worn black silk frocks and the simple pearl ornaments left them by their mother, and returned to chat by their sitting room fire till it was time to go downstairs for dinner. Alister Fingall, sitting at the foot of his dinner table, seemed for the first few minutes to be still living in the book that had enchained him all day. He was a slight fair man with dreamy eyes, and a sweet lazy smile In the company of others he required time to come to the surface of the conversation. After he had eaten his soup his eyes rested with pleasure on the fresh faces of his young sisters, gleaming and glowing with the pure cool tints which are produced by exercise and mountain air

"Any news in the village, girls?" he asked. "I hear you have trav he asked. "I near you day," elled half the country to day," said Shana, "except "No news," said Shana, "except that Betty Macalister talks of giving up her holding and emigrating. She annot see her way to paying her rent. shade crossed Alister's face. "Betty must not go; anybody but Who is her landlord, by the Betty.

"Mejor Batt," said Rosheen with a

"She can go to the Land Court now like others," said Alister, "and gether rent reduced, if it be too high." The soldier turned on his cot and "I must say," said Shana, "that I don't think Major Batt is to be partipened his eyes. They looked into those of a Sister. cularly blamed in this matter, for Betty seems to think that she and

She smiled and he returned the Nancy are unable, on any terms, to manage their land." though he could hardly have smile. explained why. She might be of the enemy's nationality—but a defense-Lady Flora gave Shana a glance of less little woman with a smile like "Major Batt is a most worthy gentleman," she said, "and, unlike that couldn't be much of an enemy She was waiting for him to return some others, will be able to stand against the worst attacks of the Land complete consciousness and think-ing how very boyish he seemed.

THE SPY

Court. His fortune is too substantial He spoke-in a foreign tongue. to be undermined by any number of "I suppose that by all the rules I defaulting tenants."
"'Others' meaning your unhappy ought to begin by asking, 'Where am I,?' and, you ought to reply, 'Sh hhusband," laughed Alister. "What a pity we were not all born to an inbe quiet now. After a while you may talk a little, but first drink this heritance in the Three per Cents like you, Flora!" broth.

She smiled again and replied in and said nothing, and the children came into the room for their share of his own tongue, though not with his native accent. She was an Ameri-

"Well, anyway," she said, "I will get you the broth. It's cubes—the American kind—and you pour hot water over them and serve, just as the advertisement says."
"Lat's skip the scup," he suggested.

'I always do when I order. Skip the soup and go straight to the meats and entrees."
"Well, I think you will have to be contented with the soup this time," she returned, "because the doctor dosen's prescribe meats and entrees "Duck, you nearly upset Aunt Shana's raisins into her lap!" said Besides, there aren't any meate and entrees here now.' And the smile was rather a pathetic little effort this shaking, papa," said Duck. "I saw it before I poked her with my head."

The man's face clouded percept-They were both thinking of sad things.

"A glass of milk, maybe?" suggested the Sister. creamy?"

"It sounds better than the cuby broth, at any rate," he returned wondering how such a frail little woman could be so cheerful and so in the chimney, and Shana and Rosheen lay awake listening to the brave. "Besides, milk sounds more like home," he added wistfully. But honest, if you don't mind, I really don't think I want anything to eat at all. I'd much rather talk, for I've a presentiment that presently you'll say, 'Sh.h.!—be quiet now. You've talked long enough, Try to go to sleep again.' That's the way all the nurses do that I've ever heard Say Mr. Callender, Rosheen. It is not nice, dear, to call young men by their Christian names." But we know him so well. What anything about. But I don't want to go to sleep again. Seems to me I must have been asleep a week or two or three already."

"I've been here only since yester day," said the Sister.

"At any rate, that's according to and a profession," continued Shana; "so what is there for any one to like prescribed rules ; no professional information from the nurse. If a fellow wants to find out anything about "that when a young fellow has such a pleasant face and such a kind, himself, it's a waste of time to mention the fact to the nurse-or to the gentlemanly manner any one might doctor, either."

"Only since yesterday," assured the Sister. "And now I'll bring the And if you can raise yourself milk on the pillows, that's a sign you may

"Fine," he returned, evidently much pleased. "That means I'm pretty fit, doesn't it?" "You will soon be well again," she told him, and went away to get the

When she returned she found him propped up among his pillows, a troubled expression on his face, as i he had been trying to understand a perplexing situation-trying to con "Stand in your light? Encroach on your little worldly inheritance? No, my Duck, your Shana has more pride for herself, more love for you nect some disconnected thoughts She had often seen such expressions on the faces of persons returning from a period of unconsciousness. He looked up. "I appear to be remarkably free from breaks and bandages," he announced significantly.

"You really aren's very much of an invalid," she acknowledged, offer-ing him the milk. He drank it slow-"It is nice and creamy," he said with appreciation. "Any news ?"

She shook her head. "I don't know anything," she said.
"Hopeless agaiv," he sighed. "But how's a fellow to find out anything,

Everything's quiet in the city, if that's any news." she replied. "It isn't my city," he said. my city. I was only sent here." He paused and the troubled expression returned to his face. His brows drew slightly together. "Don't y know anything at all?" he asked. "Don't you "Not anything at all," she assured him as she took the empty glass and set it down. He sighed again as he trailed his fingers through the heavy hair that came well down over his forehead toward his contracted brows. 'I think that this must be the very room," he announced. "And this bed -it must be the very bed that she died on-and over there is where they both died.

"Yes," said the Sister gently though she understood none of it. She was accustomed to listening to many things and she knew that a gentle "yes" was nearly always soothing, whereas questions some-times had the opposite effect.

"You are mighty good," he said, bringing his trailing fingers to rest beneath the side of his face against the pillow. "Can't you stay a

She sat down. She was a true nurse. "I am so glad you don't adjust the covers," he stated. "I like 'em better all mussed up. I knew you were the right kind when you said I could prop my own pillows. low hates to have some one fussing with his pillows. But presently running off somewhere. warning; for this is a day when nothing is not pried into, nothing is not published, nothing is not laid They always do. I suppose there's other fellows besides me?"

"Yes," she admitted, "but there's another nurse besides me, too."

She did not add that there were many other fellows, nor say how hard she and the other nurse had been working among them. was a very true nurse. 'But you don't need a nurse so very much though," she said consolingly. "Now I know you are going to run away," he complained.

"Not immediately."

He closed his eyes. It was such a good place just to rest; and he was very tired. He must have drifted off to sleep after all, for when he opened his eyes again the Sister was gone. Perhaps she had just thought he was asleep and had slipped quietly away to look after some of the other fel lows. She must have come back once, however, for there on the little table beside his bed stood a glass of delicious looking beverage. He drank a part of it and lay thinking. "They are all alike," he decided. "All alike." The "they" included many persons.

For a long time he lay there think ing quietly. He was beginning to recall more distinctly the events that had brought him to that house. They—the other soldier and himself -had followed the priest there. He didn't even know the other soldier's name. They hadn't spoken to each other, for the matter of that. They had been delegated to go together and they had gone. It was no time for small conventions—no business for talking. They had been told to follow the priest, and they had followed him; and there had been much haste. In such moments soldier does nothing but obey orders. They had been informed that the priest was a spy, merely disguised as a priest. He wasn't disguised, though. He was a priest.

He had seemed so young, toothat priest—so young to die. Yet how bravely he had died! Soldiers died like that sometimes. But that priest was something more than a soldier, for however bravely a soldier may die, he can only be said to have accepted death ; but that priest had chosen him. The martyrs Church had probably died like that

How quickly it all had happened He remembered. It was night and They-the other soldier and himself-had first caught sight of the priest as he emerged from the dim shadows of the cathedral, and they had followed him down the street. He appeared to be looking out for danger as they hurried along. The bombarding was getting pretty fleres by that time, though they were in the best protected part of the city. They could hear the shells bursting and now and then the whiz of the bullets, and over on the other side of the city, closer to the front, they could see that some of the buildings were already begin ning to burn. The streets were lights were to be seen anywhere. He and his companion had keep very close to the priest in order not to less sight of him. He could remember that part of it very

The priest appeared to be carrying something inside his coat over hi breast, and he kept it well covered with his hand as if to protect it. didn't seem afraid, though; just cautious. And apparently he did not notice the presence of the two soldiers only a few paces him, or else he did not think of associating their presence with himself. When they were nearly in front of the house, he hesitated as if to make sure it was the right house. Evidently he wasn't accustomed to the darkened streets.

They came very close to him as he stood there. It must have been then that they were all three hit. That part of it seemed very hazy. other soldier had been mortally wounded, though. As for himself, he must have been more stunned than anything else. There was a great pain somewhere in the back of his head, he knew, and he had felt very queer and dazed. The priest's left arm had been terribly injured all the way up to his shoulder, though no one seemed to notice it till long after they were in the house.

The door had been opened by some one inside, and the priest had reached out with his one hand and had caught the other soldier just as he had staggered forward and was about to fall, and had managed somehow to get him into the house. Maybe the girl inside had assistedshe who had opened the door, maybe he himself had managed to help a little. That part of it was difficult to recall.

No one spoke, not even the girl who had opened the door. She had simply dropped to her knees and, crossing herself, had risen up again and had stood there looking at the priest as if mutely waiting some com mand from him.

And the command had come. "The soldier." the priest had directed, in dicating the unconscious man on the floor at their feet. And without waiting further, he had crossed the room to the bed where the sick lady

The girl had turned quickly and hurried away. He remembered watching her leave the room, and he himself had made some kind of an effort to rouse himself and to be of assistance. He could recall getting down on the floor beside his com panion and trying to find his wound. There was a great deal of blood running down all over the other's coat and he was breathing with great diffi-

Then the girl had come back, bringing some towels and a basin of water. And, placing them on the floor beside the wounded man, she had begun to apply the dampened towels to his wound

Liquor and Tobacco Habits

DR. MCTAGGART'S REMEDIES

C. M. B. A. Branch No. 4, London Meets on the 2nd and 4th Thursday of every month at eight o'clock, at their Rooms, St. Peter's Parish Hall, Richmond Street. Frank Smith, President.

R. HUESTON & SONS Livery and Garage. Open Day and Night.
79 to 483 Richmond St.
Phone 423
Phone 441

Capital Paid Up, $1,750,000. Reserve $14,50,000 Deposits received, Debentures issued, Real Esta oans made. John McClary, Pres. A. M. Smart, Mg Offices: Dundas St., Cor. Market Lane, London.

PROFESSIONAL CARDS

FOY, KNOX & MONAHAN Barristers, Solicitors, Notaries, &c. n. J. J. Foy, K.C. A. E. Knox, T. Louis Monahar E. L. Middleton George Keough Cable Address: "Foy" L. Middleton George Keou
Cable Address: "Foy"
Telephones { Main 794
Main 798
Offices: Continental Life Building CORNER BAY AND RICHMOND STREETS

TORONTO H. L. O'ROURKE, B. A. (Also of Ontario Bar)
BARRISTER, SOLICITOR, NOTARY Money to Loan
Suite 5, Board of Trade Building, 231 Eighth Avenue West,
CALGARY, ALBERTA

OHN T. LOFTUS,

712 TEMPLE BUILDING

FRANK J. FOLEY II. B. The Kent Building BARRISTER, SOLICITOR

Corner Yonge and Richmon TORONTO ONT. D. BUCKLES, Crown Pro R. DONALD

M. A. MACPHERSON, LL. B. BUCKLES DONALD & MacPHERSON Barristers, Solicitors, Etc. Suite 206 Healy-Booker Block Swift Current, Sask.

St. Jerome's College Founded 1864 BERLIN, ONTARIO

Excellent Business College Department. Excellent igh School or Academic Department. Excellent ollege and Philosophical Department. REV. A. L. ZINGER, C.R., Ph. D., PRBS

Westervell School Y.M.C.A. BLDG., LONDON, ONT. Students assisted to positions. College opens pt 1st. Catalogue free. Enter any time.

J. W. WESTERVELT J. W. WESTERVELT, Jr. C.A. Vice-Principal FINNEY & SHANNON'S COAL The Coal of Quality

Best Grades of Hard Wood

Domestic Soft—Cannel, Pochahontas, Lump

Funeral Directors

John Ferguson & Sons 180 King Street The Leading Undertakers and Embalme Open Night and Day
Telephone—House 373 Factory—548

E. C. Killingswerth Funeral Director Open Day and Night 491 Richmond St. Phone 3971

It was then that a voice reached them from the other side of the room. It was the priest speaking, or rather he was praying. He had probably been praying all the time. His voice came soft and low, a little more audible, and it held the rhythm of a kind of chant, as of petitions many times repeated. The lady on the bed was dying, or perhaps was already dead. She had probably never been conscious of anything that was taking place about her had probably never known that the

The girl still bending over the counded man, was carefully applying the dampened towels to his wound. He remembered watching her and admiring the deftness with which she handled the towels. Possibly he himself might have assisted her. If his head hadn't been hurting him so terribly at the time he might have remembered better about it. He could recall, however, won-dering hazily if she might be the other lady's daughter, or a sister, or only just some kindly neighbor. And he had finally decided in favour of her being just some kindly neighbor. Strange what a fellow will think of at such a time.

The wounded man had stirred and had opened his eyes, but apparently he had no idea where he was. Nor did he seem to be conscious of the presence of any one else near him. made several feeble efforts to raise himself, and the failure of his efforts had probably conveyed to him some faint realization of the fact that he had been mortally wounded. His lips had moved painfully in an effort to speak-poor, dying, un-known soldier! And his words had come broken and labored.

"A priest! a priest!" he had managed to cry out in a kind of agonizing appeal. "A priest! a priest! O Blessed Mother! I haven't been to confession in twenty years!'
The girl, still holding the towels against his wound, had bent nearer and had whispered something into his ear, and after she had raised her face again her lips were still mov-ing. She must have been praying. Then she rose to her feet and addressed some one—it must have

Then the priest had returned to puss the case against the Anglican the side of the dying soldier and had claim for Continuity when he despoken to him very gently, very softly. Then it was that the priest's arm showed very plainly in the candle light. The sleeve was all torn away and terribly soaked with blood, and his hand, all covered with blood, hung limp and lifeless by his side. But the priest had seemed to see only the dying man. And as if by some miraculous effort the dying man had appeared suddenly to revive and had begun speaking to that priest, pouring out to him the pitiful story of his life. With sobs and broken sentences, with labored breathing and many gasping pauses, he had recounted the history of his wretched, wasted years to that priest, a stranger—the very man he had been sent to arrest as a spy.

And they in that room had heard it-every word of it, all the pent up secrets of that other's harrowed soul. It was a miserable, miserable story

Strange, though, that now, however, after it was all over, he couldn't recall even the smallest part of it. How very hazy his head must have And yet he could remember quite clearly that sobs and expressions of sorrow and remorse poured forth from that soldier's lips as he lay there dying in that awful hour. Yes, that part of it was clear enough; and he could remember quite well, somehow, the words of the priest speaking now and then, to whisper hope, to ancourage and console, and blessing, actually blessing that soldier, his enemy; touching his eyes, his lips, his ears, his hand, his feet, with quick, sure motion, and speaking-or was he praying ?-all the while. And the soldier lay very still and breathed heavily, though he was apparently quite conscious and his lips were moving slightly, as if he, too, might have been praying.

Then the girl had come back to them, carrying a white cloth or two over her arm and something in either hand—a cup, he thought or maybe it was a candle and something else, though he couldn't recall just what it was. These she placed on the floor by the side of the dying man, and she had laid one cloth over his breast. Then she had knelt there very quiet in the candle light. The tears were falling, but she had kept her hands folded together close against her

The priest had taken something from inside his coat, from over his heart, probably that something which he had been guarding so carefully on his way up the street to that house. He had taken it from out the bosom of his coat and had held it toward the dying man. It was Something small and white, immaculately white. Something, he didn't know what It was, but to that priest and to that soldier, too, It must have been something very sacred, for when their eyes beheld It, a kind of holy reverence had been revealed in their faces. The priest had used his arm with much difficulty and he had raised his hand only with great effort. He was growing rapidly weaker. And after that soldier had received that small, white Something, his eyes had closed and he had become so still and so silent it seemed he must have died instantly. But presently he had opened them again and ap-peared to try to speak, but could not.

The priest, still on his knees, had sunk forward, overcome by weakness and his head had found its resting place against the arm of that dying soldier, close to his heart.

And even as he sank forward, he had reached out his hand across the other's breast, as if in a kind of final blessing to those that remained in precious and dear.

And there they both had diedthat soldier and that priest—close to each other's hearts. Yet, after all, that soldier could only be said to have accepted his death. That priest answers: had chosen his. That priest had not wound, he could have lived.

Perhaps the girl was thinking of that, too, as she knelt there sobbing | Church.

He could recall that he had had He could recall that he had had a fenders of the Anglican Church, says, desire to comfort her. He believed Lingard in effect, that while they adthat he had made some kind of an effort to speak to her, to reach out his hand to her. And she had prob-ably become conscious of his efforts, for she had looked up at him and, with some quick exclamation of surprise, had risen and started toward him. And that was all that he could remember.

And to think that they had followed the priest there to arrest

The soldier on the cot closed his eyes again. He was still very tired. And when he opened them once more they looked again into those of the Sister bending over him. Perhaps he had drifted off to sleep again and had not heard her enter. Or was it that she moved so noiselessly? She smiled. He returned the smile. You are all alike," he said. "Yes," she agreed, though she understood none of it. She was a very true nurse.-Myrtle Conger in the Magnificat.

DR. LINGARD ON CONTINUITY

The famous Catholic historian, Dr. Lingard, author of what is considered by many non Catholic historians been himself, though he couldn't read historical students to be the member what it was she had said. most reliable history of England, clares: "... when we read that the actual governors of the (pre-

Reformation) Church were changed the Bishops in possession being ejected and new men put into their places; that the public worship of the Church was changed, the sacri-fice of the Mass being abolished and another service substituted for it; that the acknowledged doctrines of the Church were changed, many of its former tenets and practices being condemned and new articles of religion promulgated; when, in a word, we find bishops, worship, doctrine all swept away and little remaining of the old establishment but the bare walls of the religious edifices which it had raised and consecrated -in view of all this, we do not see it was possible for reasonable men to come to any other conclusion than that the Ref. ormation in England was in reality the work of civil power which ousted the old Cnurch and intruded a new Church by Act of Parliament."

However, says the Professor, as the result of much reflection on the absurdity of her position and claims, a new light burst upon Oxford Anglicans who sought to dispel the dark. ness which covered the ecclesiastical transactions of the reigns of Henry VIII., of Edward VI. and Elizabeth. To these distinguished characters,' says Lingard, "it appears that his-torians have been doing continual injustice," and, after all, they find that the Protestant Church of to-day is really the Catholic Church of pre-Reformation days, just as, to quote Theodore Hook, "a man who has Theodore Hook, "a man who has washed his face in the morning, remains the same man as before he had washed." All this, says Lingard, real Catholics can only look upon as a "theological novel in which a few grains of truth lie concealed in the midst of an immense mass of flotion." Dr. Lingard, while expressing his regard for Oxfordmen as a rule, declares that the very best and most sincere among them always retain some of that anti-Catholic leaven which Protestant education is careful to deposit in the Infant mind.

Says Dr. Lingard :
"It is admitted by all parties that at the commencement of the Reformation there was a Church in England which had existed there, ever since the first conversion of the inhabitants to Christianity. Was the Church a living branch of the true apostolic Church of Christ, or not? They reply without hesitation that it was : and, be it observed, they are com-pelled so to reply, for without such admission, what would become of their claim to alleged apostolic succession? Without it, how could the Anglican Bishops of the present day show that, by ordination, they derive their mission from the Apostles and our Lord? Without it, how can every Bishop, priest and deacon, trace his spiritual descent from St. Peter and St. Paul? If you reject that Church, the chain is broken. You may go back to your female head, Elizabeth, or to her father Henry VIII.; but there you stop—a chasm of fifteen hundred years opens between you and the Apostles.' But, the reader will object—how could that unreformed Church be a living branch of the true Church of Christ? Did she not teach doctrines which the present Protestant Church condemns as errors in faith? Did resign their sacred duties; priests

Did she not prosecute, excommunicate and deliver for punishment to the civil mag'strate, the professors of opinions which the present Protest. that room. His hand, turned slight ly upward, had revealed his first finger and thumb pressed close together, as if they held something Lingard) that two societies, of which one is so opposed to the other in matters of the highest import, can be each the true Church of Christ? your Anglican theologian ers: "Yes, both are the very same Church, but in a different been vitally wounded, only his arm, state; the Protestant Church in a and he had died from loss of blood. If state of comparative purity; the he had only made them think of his Catholic Church deeply immersed in error, yet not so deeply as to cease to be a part of the true Apostolic

It is entirely overlooked by the demit that there was a true Apostolic Catholic Church in England, thay belong to a Church which describes Protestant. Protesting against what? Anglicans, it is well known, reject the term, and declare that they "protested against the errors of Rome, and by doing so, reformed herself." And as a condition precedent to this Reformation, the jurisdiction of the Pope was abolished the Kingdom, and that of Henry VIII. (who had been created Defender of the Faith by the Pope !) substituted. Even the Convocation which Henry VIII. summoned, in order to give a kind of spiritual sanction to his new title as "Protector and Supreme Head of the Church of Eng. land," struggled hard against the demand, and insisting on the insertion of the words "so far as the law of Christ allows"--a brief respite which the King's action in divorcing him-self soon put an end to, and which the fraudulent consecration of the Archbishop Cranmer (or at least consecration under false pretences and spurious oaths) was to emphasize as nugatory. In regard to this man it is now pretty clearly established, that in matters of the Protestant religion and belief, he was little better than an atheist, that he had no faith in the spiritual act form, or as a matter of etiquette, as we would say now a days. On the death of Henry VIII, he became the chief spiritual adviser of a child of nine years, Edward VI., under whose reign the practical details of the Ref. ormation were carried out and applied. To the interests of the people or of God ? Far from it-to the advantage of Cranmer and his ecclesiastical satellites, who saw the profit to themselves in supporting a new Church based on socio political lines -N. Y. Freeman's Journal

AN EXILED PRIEST'S VIEW

An exiled priest from Mexico whose name can be had at the office of the Catholic Register of Kansas City, Mo., recently delivered the following talk at a meeting of Spring. field, (Mo.) Council of the Knights of Columbus.

Carranza was recognized by this government in spite of his cruel and criminal course. The promise of religious liberty and the other liberties given us by our own constitution presented by the agent of Carranza to your government.

Since the recognition of Carranza Merida, Yucatan, has been sacked by the Carranzistas, its beautiful works of art destroyed, and the Blessed Sacrament profaned. These same scenes were in the other churches come days later. Only this morning received a letter from a friend in San Antonio, who tells me that he had recently met three Mariet Brothers, who fleeing from persecution, had succeeded in reaching San Antonio. They told my friend that just the day before they left Mexico thirty priests were thrown in jail, and it is not known what has happened to them.

The revolution is terrible. In Michoacan, my state, they said five priests had been killed lately. There. is universal discontent throughout he nation at the recognition. Both high and low fear that the persecution will be waged more flercely than ever. The Madams of Sacred Heart have been ejected from their schools also the Salisian Fathers. All this in the name of Liberty! It is true that in some places the persecution has abated somewhat, and the church bells are allowed to ring for service, but they still contique to confiscate much ecclesiastical property, as well as the property of Catholics. The bandits seized our Catholic schools and now compel parents, under severe penalty, to send their children to their schools, in which are taught errors against our faith and from which God is banished. Carranza and his men wish to make figure heads of the priests of Mexico, relegating them to a corner of the church, forcing them to live inactive, not putting a foot outside to work amongst the people, in order to maintain social Catholic action. They do not wish the priests to mingle with the people for fear they will obstruct their injustice and crime, or at least, protest against such abuses. In a word, they want apostate priests who will practically she not practice a worship which the present Protestant Church pro. | nounces superstitious and idolatrous? | who will leave in the hands of these carnivorous wolves the flock which Christ commended to them.

"There is religious liberty in in Mexico, and calm and troops control," says Carranza, and his agents, through his own press and through many daily papers of this country (paid by the bandits)
"There are guarantees in Mexico and in a short time peacs will come." re-peats every day the press. These lies make us angry, because we know very well the circumstances by circumstances by letters received at late dates. many, very many persons in this country believe what the press announces, and they await peace from Carranza, because there are at present some ways of communication and some commerce carried on. But peace will not come, please attend, peace will not come on foundations such as Carranza wishes to establish Peace is the result of justice, and this does not exist in Mexico.

"Peace is respect for another's rights," as says one of the same Liberals of 57 and in Mexico there is no respect for another's right, property, nor liberties, especially religious liberty. This does not consist in parmission to ring bells, nor in return of the exiled Bishops and priests, but in the freedom to exercise our sacred duties, social, political and religious. This the Carranzistas absolutely prohibit. I repeat, they want to make figure heads I voice the sentiment of every priest) the poor victims in chains in dark | Love. prisons in my poor country can not be heard here. It may be that some be heard here. It may be that some they would listen, the voice of the of them will be murdered tomorrow, Little Flower of Carmel? "I feel," as happens every day to many honorable men who do not accommodate differences with the bandits Here are not heard the sighs of the thousand poor men who food, nor the cries of the little orphan children whom the Carranzistas perfidy has left homeless, and not content with this, he wants to snatch from them their faith and confidence in God, corrupting their innocence. of consecration, which he looked If in Mexico there is any calm or upon simply as a mere "seemly" peace (I know very well my letters peace (I know very well my letters received at late dates), it is only an apparent calm of defenseless victims who can do nothing to defend themselves; it is the peace of weakness before a brutal force. What will a manacled victim do at the feet of the executioner but bear with patience? This is the calm, this is the peace of Mexico.-Intermountain Catholic

WOMEN WHO LEAD

It was the way of Mrs. Pankhurst that first led us to look seriously into that of Teresa of Lisieux. (She is otherwise known as the Little Flower of Jesus, a French Carmelite who lived an exceedingly holy life, and died some years ago in the odor of sanctity.) We discovered such differences, both in methods and results, that we propose to point out some facts concerning those differences which may help in a measure to clear our suffrage laden air.
It is said that comparisons are dious, and this must be indisputable to him who is unfavorably compared. But to the wielder of the brush upon canvas, or to the magician of the pen upon paper, comparisons are not only have remained only on the paper of the subject presented. When Correggio laid the Divine Infant in His cradle of light, over which the the persecution, far from ceasing, has continued. The Cathedral of whiteness, he was equally master of the encircling shadows that made the triumph of that light effect.

Similarly, it would seem that Teresa of Lisieux cannot be more luminously set forth upon a page of modern history than surrounded, as it were, by the female furies of our

When the distinguished suffragette was credited by the press with the proposal to lead a suffragette parade in Washington in the character of Joan of Arc, a chill as of sacrilege must have coursed down the spine of every upright Christian woman. If any actual protest was made, we do not know; but time developed a change of character and costume, and the lady appeared instead as a herald, blowing the silver trumpet of her own acclaim. The "charger" permitted by courtesy of war to Blessed Joan, did, if we remember, have a place in the program.

Apropos of this event, the traits of Joan of Arc were recently summarized by M. Maurice Waleffs, editor of the Paris Medi, in these words:

"If there ever existed an heroic figure around which all parties and all philosophies could unite in a common worship, is it not that miraculous incarnation, unique in the course of centuries and full of the most contradictory beauties; courage without hatred, pisty without superstition, patrictism without the idea of conquest, strength without harshness, candor without silliness, genius without pedantry, and all that leading to the dazzling brilliant feats of arms of a child who suddenly appeared in France and remained just sufficiently long to save her country and to suffer martyrdom of the most touching and cruel character ?" When the church put forward such a model of womanhood as the little Flower of Lisieux, it was found to comprise a simplicity as complex in essence as the Church herself; because Teresa of Lisieux was, like Joan of Arc, the very perfect efflorescence of Christian belief and human history! Landmarks of character and social economy, we can no more duplicate or multiply them than genius of any other sort—than sanctity may be duplicated or multi-plied. M. Walesse tells us that Joan displayed patriotism without the idea of congress. of conquest. One might say that the other type of woman displays the idea of conquest without patriotism.

As for Teresa's little way—that "little, safe way," which one finds so enchanting and so easily practical, she herself says: 'I know too that our trial is a wine of gold which our trial is a mine of gold, which we are to work. I, a little grain of sand —I mean to set myself to the work without courage and without strength; and thus my impotence will faciliate the enterprise, for I want to work by love. It is martyr dom that is beginning. Together, my darling sister, let us enter the lists. Let us offer our sufferings to Jesus for the salvation of souls. Many of our readers doubtless have lingered loog before the painting of Bastien le Page in the Metropolitan Museum of New York, called Joan of Arc Listening to the Voices. The slim child's figure with uplifted face and strained ear, without the idea of conquest, yet already nerved for battle. And then the mind's eye wanders, as under the law of contrast to the young suffragette rebal, glutcf the priests; they want apostate tonous of conquest, scated on the priests. Such a yoke (and I am sure steps of Parliament, the incarnate menace of government by authority. I could never tolerate. I would pre-fer chains and exile, which do not inspires her, while she kindles the stain or degrade my calling and my fices of her own self-destruction by conscience. Oh! the complaints of Hate. It is not the martyrdom of > Could these propagandists hear, if she declares, "the vocation of warrior, of priest, of apostle, of doctor, of martyr, I would accomplish all the most heroic works. I feel the courage of a crusader. I would die on the field of battle in defense of the Church. . . Like Thee, my beloved Spouse, I would be scourged. crucified. I would die flayed, like St. Bartholomew; like St. John, I would be plunged in boiling oil; I long, like St. Ignatius of Antioch, to be crushed by the teeth of beasts, in order to become bread worthy of God; with St. Agnes and St. Cecelia I would present my neck to the sword of the executioner, and like Joan of Arc at the burning stake, murmur the name of Jesus!

Here is the ardor enkindled by love, outdoing even the patriotism of Joan.

We are assured that our militant sisters are sustained in their sufferings by the greatness of the Cause which they have at heart. Teresa of Lisieux and Joan of Arc confessed that they were sustained by God alone O, how good God is!' exclaimed the Little Flower when in the agony of death. "Yes, He must be very good to give me the strength to bear all that I am suffering."

The desire for power was unknown o her. "My soul has never sought anything but truth. How earnest was her desire to make all things simple and practical for those who walk in the paths of fraternal charity! How confidently she relied upon the justice of God in bearing with our infirmities, declaring that she rejoiced quite as much in His justice as in His mercy toward us! She depended upon it, equally with charity to bring about that peculiar quality of social peace which is the ideal of every Christian heart.

Father dom Etienne, of the Grands Trappe of Montagne, said of Teresa, "I must confess that this speilt child of our Lord has no need of any one's praise. Her merit suffices for her before God, and before men.

If there is one thing more apparent than another in the militant women of our day, it is a certain childish self will which should ever be the object of mortification in a Christian

It was the little way of Teresa of Lisieux to exercise power as a nightingale sings, or a rose exhales, spontaneously, by reason of her own virtue. All strife for exaltation and "recognition" was as foreign to her as to the nightingale and the rose.
"Never," one of her sisters relates, "did she give her advice unless it was asked for. She never joined in conversation when she was not spoken to, always effacing herself, making herself little with regard to her sisters, loving to render service

If ever there comes a twilight hour, succeeding the noon glare of our lawful activities, let Christian women seize it to walk in the Garden of the Soul which is inhabited by the communings of women such as these we have cited. For there, nourished by silence and reflection, the campaigns of our domestic and social enterprises may be safely devised and charted.

The most martial of women need find no fault nor hint of "slowness" in companions of the temper of Catherine of Sienna or Joan of Arc. Pageantry and distinction, though undesired, were theirs, as they will never be granted to our militants, while, as for the contagion of the virtues of Teresa of Lisieux, those who walk with her will also sing with her: "To live by love!" — Emma S. Chester in The Missionary.

AN ATHEIST'S CREDO

Since the war began atheists and indifferentists and bad Catholics opened their eyes to religion by the roar of the cannon. Here is the latest "Credo," that of Lovredan, the famous litterateur, who, by the way, Teresa and Joan — two little girls, France will be Catholic after the we might say. Yet how they tower conflagration is extinguished:

"The past of France is great," he writes. "If was a France that believed. The present of France is a calamity: France feels that she could no longer believe. Will things be better in the future? This lies in the hands of God and only God's. Oh! a people dead covers the fields. How terrible it is to be an atheist here? I can say: I believe, I believe in God. I believe, I believe."

'I deceived myself, and you, who

Poer Lovredan, you did barm in read my books, of what do you sing? your time. By this time you prob-France, France return to the faith of ably have solved the green problem.

—Catholic Sun.

The Virtue of the Natural Leaf is perfectly preserved in the sealed packet. Young tender leaves only, grown with utmost care and with flavour as the prime object, are used to produce the famous Salada blends.

The Marvel of the Age. Luminous Crucifix

This wonderful Crucifix is especially useful an comforting in a sick room. One can imagine the company and soothing effect to a sick person lying restless in the darkness of the night.

Special Offer to Agents. COLONIAL ART CO.

THE ONTARIO Catholic Year Book and Direct

PUBLISHED BY THE NEWMAN CLUB, TORONTO

Directory of Churches and Priests. Calendar and Feasts for 1916. Interesting Illustrations. Timely Articles. 160 Pages.

25c. Postpaid

Publication Office: 97 St. Joseph St., TORONTO

You will enjoy your stay at the House of Plenty!

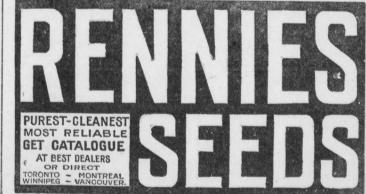

RATES

$2.50 per Day up American Plan $1.00 per Day up European Plan Special attention to the com-fort of ladies and children

SOME people who travel profess to regard hotel SOME people who travel profess to regard hotel accommodation as something that must be tolerated—one of the penalties of travel. But no guest who sojourns at the Walker House, Toronto, can long retain such an idea. Our service is enjoyable can long retain such an idea. Our service is enjoyable every detail of it. Your comfort and convenience are our chief concern, and every employee is imbued with correct ideals of his duty in helping to keep the service of the house working efficiently. We are anxious to maintain the reputation of the Walker House as the Toronto Hotel from which a guest goes with reluctance and with the determination to come again at the earliest opportunity. When you come to Toronto, stay at the Walker House. Porters meet all trains, and the House is within one block of the station exit. of the station exit.

"Toronto's Famous Hotel"

The Walker House Cor, Front & York Streets, Toronto

The Catholic Record

ce of Subscription—$1.50 per annum ited States & Europe—$2.00 " r and Proprietor, Thomas Coffey, LL. D. Rev. James T. Foley, B. A. Thomas Coffey, LL. D.

Associate Editors Rev. D. A. Casey, H. F. Mackintosh, pred and recommended by Archbishop and Sbaretti, late Apostolic Delegates in the Archbishops of Toronto, Kingston and St. Boniface, the Bishops of London, Peterborough, and Ogdensburg, N. Y., lergy throughout the Dominion, llowing agents are authorized. Amilion, Peterborough, and Ogdensburg, N. Y., und the clergy throughout the Dominion.

The following agents are authorized to receive mbscriptions and canvas for the CATROLIC RECORD:
General agents: Messrs, P. J. Neven, E. J. Brodersck, M. J. Hagarty, and Miss Sara Hanley. Resident Regins; D. J. Murray, Montreal; George B. Hewetson, Regins; Mrs. W. E. Smith, Hallfax; Miss Bride Saunders, Sydney; Miss L. Heringer, Winnipeg; illas Johnston, Ottawa and Miss Rose McKeaney, 49 D'Aiguillon street, Quebec.

Obituary and marriage notices cannot be inserted

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1916

PROHIBITION AND TEMPERANCE

His Lordship, Bishop Fallon, has made an unequivocal pronouncement on Prohibition. Our readers have doubtless read many references to that pronouncement in the daily press and looked from week to week to the CATHOLIC RECORD for definite and decisive information in the premises.

They will pardon us when we tell them that for some weeks past we were so busily engaged on other matters that the conduct of the RECORD was nacessarily left in other hands.

Following a reference to the matter at a public function His Lordship gave to the press this letter. A paragraph or two seem to treat the subject so fully that we were inclined to quots in part. Reading and re-reading we were convinced that every paragraph and every sentence was significant. We therefore quote in January 25, 1916. For more than twenty years I have been a priest of the Catholic Church. During that time, and longer, I have been a constant worker in the cause But I have always addressed any appeal to the conscience of the in-dividual, using arguments that might move his free will, and endeavoring to leave to him the merit of his actions.

I am opposed to the principle of prohibition in regard to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating My opposition is based on careful consideration of the reason advanced in its favor, on a wide acquaintance with its effects states and provinces where it is in operation, and, mainly, on my con-viction that prohibition is foreign to the history and genius of Catholic

I regard the present agitation in Ontario a dangerous invitation to the State to meddlesomely interfere with the rights of the citizen and an equally dangerous attempt to regulate all human conduct by statute. It is a return to the pagan idea of the omnicotence of the State, whereas the Christian ideal is the responsibility of the individual.

The action of the State marks the limits of the fess action of the individual, and the question how far the State sught to con trol the individual is the fundamental question of personal liberty. We are threatened with a multiplication of State that w grievously narrow the circle of individual rights.

The German empire of today is. among civilized nations, the supreme example of State omnipotence. The very principle for the vindication and safeguarding of which we are now engaged in a colossal struggle Germany, is precisely the principle which, in my opinion, is menaced by the present attempt to force the tment of prohibitory and penal legislation in the matter of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

+M. F. FALLON, Bishop of London.

For those who know Bishop Fallon it is not necessary to emphasize the continuous and strenuous advocacy of temperance and total abstinence which has in an especial manner marked both his priesthood and epis copate. Every child that he has confirmed, every young man that he has ordained to the priesthood has the indelible memory of Bishop Fallon's earnest and eloquent exhortation to total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks. But neither the child at Confirmation nor the priest at Ordination was placed under a false conscience; the Bishop's appeal was to the free will, the moral judgment and the conscience of the individual. The youth of the Diocese of London pledged to total abstinence until the vears of discretion, and the flourish. ing total abstinence league of the diocesan priests are moral achievements that may well gladden the heart of the Bishop far and away beyond statutary enactments.

Whether or not we shall be considered sincers in saying so, we have for Protestant clergymen who fuss themselves about moral legislation a very sincere sympathy. They have people. A handful, at best, listen to them. Not even when strident advertisement proclaims that sensational subjects will be sensationally treated do any respectable proportion of the Protestant people gather to listen to their supposed pastors. If these are to have any influence at all it must be through political agitation and what is generally considered moral legislation.

Perhaps we should except the inglican clergy who still, as a rule, conduct themselves as wielding a real spiritual influence.

We are so fully and entirely in sympathy with Bishop Fallon's declaration on the subject of prohibition that we hesitate to put in black and white some of the reasons therefor. If we do so we wish to make the reservation that we are not fully lice, to pay his school tax to a Cathoor adequately treating a question lic Separate school. that just now is on everybody's lips.

To start with we have ever been in favor of local option in rural municipalities in Ontario and we have no reason to change our attitude on that question. Indeed, while fully and unreservedly endorsing Bishop Fallon's pronouncement, we are, within the limits which we have always laid down, more strongly than ever in favor of local option.

It may not, however, be out of place to recall that a year before the Liberal party adopted the Prohibition or Abolish the Bar policy that the present writer objected strenuously to committing the Liberal Party to the policy of Prohibition. The fact that we then were well known to have advocated local option made our unqualified opposition to provincial prohibition all the more remark. able.

Some of the reasons we then gave in our opinion still hold good :

While we acknowledge the right of each municipality to regulate its own affairs in the matter of licensed hotels we felt that the voters of Thunder Bay, Essex and Carleton had no right to decide whether or not Toronto should have licensed hotels. Moreover, we felt that the hypocrisy, the contempt of law, and the evasion of statutary provisions were inimical to all true respect for law and productive of a spirit with regard to law altogether undesirable.

While we recognized the right of each municipality to set its own household in order we failed to see why voters who never saw Toronto, should decide whether or not Toronto should have licensed hotels; even if Toronto should observe a law forced upon her by outsiders.

"I regard," writes His Lordship, the present agitation in Ontario as a dangerous invitation to the State to meddlesomely interfere with the rights of the citizen and an equally dangerous attempt to regulate all human conduct by statute."

This no thoughtful observer will egard as an imaginary danger.

Provided the hysteria lasts tobacco, tea and coffee should quickly follow alcoholic beverages into the list of the company holding reserves of things prohibited by law and sur. $10,317 more than the Dominion Gov. reptitiously enjoyed.

The reaction may, of course, set in before the utterly irrefragable vegetarian arguments against the use of flesh meat as a food convince our sumptuary legislators that meat should be prohibited and milk for babes prescribed.

There is, however, no reason to think that our Act - of Parliament moralists will limit their statutary morality to the matter of food and

Some barren fig tree of a woman may be authorized by law to initiate normal children of decent parents into the mysteries of sex hygiene. Men and women may have to secure a certificate that they are physically fit to contract marriage, and afterwards a license to have a certain limited number of children. Just where the social uplift by difficult to predict; for even these things have their advocates.

SEPARATE SCHOOLS

One of our contributing editors forwards to us the following letter which was addressed to him :

Dear Sir,-Your article on the school question in last week's RECORD is entirely wrong in one particular. You say a Protestant father, whose wife and children are Catholics, is not allowed to support Separate school in Ontario. is rubbish of the worst kind. very reverse of what you say is the truth. In passing, a word or two to our esteemed correspondent. The CATH-OLIC RECORD has one Editor. Two or three, it is true, contribute some-accept a contributing editor's opinion on a school question. We fully inform ourselves before writing on such a subject. And we wrote the article in question.

Our esteemed correspondent does not know whereof he writes so confidently. What we said is perfectly true. Even if our esteemed correspondent were able to get a glass of beer on Saturday night it would not prove that the law was such as to permit the serving of drinks during prohibited hours.

There are places where Public whose wife and children are Catho-

THE CAPITAL LIFE

The Capital Life Assurance Company has just held its annual meet-

For four years the CATHOLIC RECORD has had a good word for the Capital Life Assurance Company. We fully realize the responsibility that rests on us in saying to our readers that this is a safe Insurance Company.

In 1906 and 1907 all our legislators recognized the responsibility they were under with regard to insurance and they appointed a commission to enquire into the conditions and principles which underlay Life insurance. In 1910 all the necessary safeguards for the insured were incorporated into the Federal law. In 1912, two years afterwards, The Capital Life came into existence. It was inaugurated under the rigid conditions that the Insurance Act laid down for the protection of the insured.

Just because the Capital Life is Catholic in its inception and management the CATHOLIC RECORD is all the more particular in giving its assurance that this Company offers safe and sound insurance to our readers. Canadian Insurance, a technical journal which is not likely to favor a Catholic Company as such, has this to say of the Capital Life :

"It would probably be difficult to find a company more admirably managed in its early years than the Capital Life. At the end of the difficult 1915 it can boast of twelve months' business record superior to many of the oldest companies in the world. Its new business issued during the year was $749,218, and its insurances in force increased by no less than $267,000 during the year. This is a greater increase than in 1914, and it is a tribute to the success of the Capital Life, which measured when we explain that the total business in force of many companies at the end of 1915 was less than at the end of the previous year. The premium receipts again—unlike those of many other companies - showed an increase of whilst the expenses were $8,325. only a little more than in 1914 Consequently the policyholders' surplus (including stock capital) increased from $139,238 to $147,034, even after ernment basis requires. The Capital Life assets now total $321,710, and the insurances in force $2,779,898 and we can recommend the company to the public as thoroughly sound and safe and as one of the best managed institutions Canada possesses."

NOTES AND COMMENTS

THE REV. R. J. CAMPBELL, who, as minister of the City Temple, London, England, gained world wide notoriety through formulating a new system of Theology which eliminated the superas his word, and is now in full Anglican communion, with the prospect immediately of being admitted to clerical status. So far as this means his repudiation of practical infidelity legislation may stop it would be he is to congratulated upon the step he has taken, but in face of the doctrinal chaos which exists within the Anglican fold, Mr. Campbell is, after all, not likely to find that the shift has made any appreciable improve ment in his position. Indefiniteness. uncertainty, and toleration of any and every form of belief or unbelief -that is, comprehensiveness,-are England.

BE THAT as it may, there is a hope-these are subject to the Editor's the other to the negation of all posisupervision. We do not, for instance, tive belief in the Christian revelation. Mr. Campbell, since his "conversion" has been at the battle line in France, and what he there saw of the practical working of the Catholic Faith swidently made a deep and lasting impression upon him, and, if we may judge by his subsequent utterances, turned his thoughts in the direction of the former.

"SINCE THE WAR began," he writes, "I have realized in French churches, as I never did before, the devotional value, the practical helpfulness of the reservation of the Sacrament school supporters are ashamed to of the altar. It makes all the differenforce the law in the premises; but ence between a dead building and a the law does not allow a Protestant, place that is a sanctuary, indeed, wherein worshippers feel that they are in immediate contact with the supernatural and divine." There may be nothing, it is true, in such an expression from such a source, to indicate more than that devotional feeling which comes over so many devout Protestants upon entering a Catholic church. the wordsare distinctly hopeful, and indicate a train of thought which, followed consistently to the end, will lead him far beyond the hazy mists of Anglicanism, and bring him to his true home. That he may not be insensible to the "kindly light" is the devoutest wish we can have for him.

THE UTTER insensibility of the average Protestant to the supernatural character of the Christian religion, and the presumption which flows from the promiscuous reading of the Bible without light or guide may be seen in an incident related in an English Methodist paper, and reproduced, apparently without disapproval, by the Canadian Churchman in a recent issue. The thing will shock the pious Catholic reader yet we give it as the most effective illustration we have met with for some time, of the drift of Protestant ism in this generation.

"A Young Christian layman," who was an officer and a Methodist local preacher tells of the mortal wounding and subsequent death of a young fellow in a recent action. He begins his account by affirming that "Holy Communion acquires a new value in the trenches," and proceeds to tell how they carried the poor wounded soldier under cover and did what was possible to relieve his sufferings. Then came from the dying man a request for the chaplain-"he wanted the sacrament." As the chaplain was not available, the narrator tells how he, himself, administered it, and proceeds:

"I had neither bread nor wine, but I broke a bit off my dry biscuit and kneeling beside him, I repeated the sentences :

'The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto ever-lasting life. Take, eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed on Him in thy heart by faith with thanksgiving.' Then," he says, "I gave him a sip out of my water-bottle, and repeated the words: The Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and foul unto ever-lasting life. Drink this in remembrance that Christ's Blood was shed for thee, and be thankful."

FAR BE it for any Catholic to find fault with the intention of this Methodist layman, presumptuous and shocking though his action was to those brought up in the light of Truth and in the consciousness of the natural, and who later, within the supernatural character of the Sacrayear, announced his abandonment of ments. It simply shows to what that platform and his intention of lengths men may go when deprived transferring his allegiance to the of the guidance of authority and left Church of England, has been as good to their own wayward devices. And if this be so in a land still called Christian what may not be expected from heathen nations with a Book thrust into their bands and the injunction placed upon them to read it in the light of their own unaided reason and to interpret its deep and profound meaning for themselves ?

THE WELL INFORMED writer whose "fourth column" in the Mail and Empire is the vehicle of instruction to thousands throughout Canada, had recently some timely and impressive remarks upon the revival of the religthe watchwords indelibly emblazoned lous spirit in France as an effect of upon the standard of the Church of the War, taking the ruined cathedrals of Normandy as his text. We have barely space to refer to one or two of his paragraphs, which seem to us ful ring to some of Mr. Campbell's to testify in an exceedingly effective utterances since his admission to the | way to the innate religious character Anglican Church. There are, as all of the great body of the people of know, two extremes of thought France. Whether the spirit thus within that communion—the one evidenced will have a lasting influveering unmistakably to the return ence upon the body politic time alone are still infidel : will they be able to outlast the war, and to withstand the great uprising of Catholic devotion which cruel and devastating war has set in motion?

As To the creation of those great monuments of mediaeval piety, the cathedrals of Northern France, the Mail writer quotes thus from Sterling Heilig, a leading journalist of the day. The Cathedrals, he ejaculates, each one ruined is irreplaceable, and it is vain to say, we will rebuild them:

"How shall anyone rebuild them? They were built by entire populations. The Cathedral of Laon was a splendid mark for their cannons: and Jean de Bonnefon deem that it is wrecked for good. It stands high on a steep butte. In the year 1230 the people of two cities and 14 towns quarried the stone and transported every block to the summit by hand! As at Amiens, 'after giving their money, they gave their labor. They worked day and night, in re-lays, by the light of lanterns, singing hymns.' At Chartres in the year 1194 it was grandiose. All the country round about, burghers, artisans workingmen and peasants, 'flocked for 50 miles to offer their labor grataitously. Entire villages emigrated to Chartres in a body, for the pur-

HIMSELF TAKING up the strain, the Mail writer continues :

"Tourists never cease to admire these marvelous churches-wondering how they could have been built almost a thousand years ago, in ages supposedly dark and poor. It was accomplished only by this gratuitous working together of all the people. Have you any idea what it would cost to rebuild a cathedral like that Germanic forces out of the Balkans cruel wars in her history. In Paris of eminent French architects under Lassus calculated that if Chartres Cathedral had to be rebuilt in their time it would cost $25,000,000. At present values of material and labor, the estimate would be nearer $60. 000,000. Now, it is a matter of history that 80 great cathedrals and 500 abbay churches were constructed in France during the reigns of Philip-Augustus, Louis VIII. and Louis 1X., i. e., between the years 1180 and 1270. The Abbe Bulteau, in his monograph of the Cathedral of Chartres, thus estimates—in connection with the architects above mentioned—that had the work and material been paid, even at the cheap rates of the Middle Ages, the capital accumulated in those ninety years would represent

AND WHAT meaning has all this for modern France? Simply that by their Catholic instinct, the people in this hour of stress flock to their churches as to havens of refuge. Those that have escaped the hammer of the invader are never empty. Hour after hour, all day long, in the churches are black with worshippers. It is estimated that at the Te Deum in Notre Dame, Paris, for the victory of the Marne a congregation of 100,-060 overflowed that great edifice—a thing that has not happened for a hundred years. And so it is throughpasan of praise and supplication for its preservation thus far and for its change be permanent? That no man can say, but one thing is sure that at the present time France is

ON THE BATTLE LINE

A GREAT RUSSIAN VICTORY

At various times in this column we have pointed out the great importance of the Tusco-German Caucasus campaign, even going so far as to intimate that Grand Duke Nicholas had been assigned no unworthy role when given the command of the Russion forces in that region. A slight study of the map will reveal the vast importance of the recent Russian victory; as well as what it would mean if the Turks had been successful in the Trans-Caucasus field of operations. The fall of Erzerum is one of the most important and decisive victories of the whole War.

A Budapest despatch, received in London by the Exchange Telegraph Company, says a big battle is raging west of Erzerum between the Turks tho are making a desparate rally there, and the victorious Russians The remnants of the city's garrison -which is believed to have consisted of 100,000 men-are being hard pressed by the Russians among the mountains, but the main body of the Turkish army of Caucasus seems to be heading toward Sivas in a dis orderly rout. There are as yet no figures regarding the number of prisoners captured by the Russians, out despatches speak of the "large numbers" taken and the great sacri-fices made by the Siberian troops who constituted the attacking force. A thousand guns were captured and little or no influence over their own thing to its scolumns. But even once more to Catholic allegiance, and can tell. The governing authorities most modern construction. The Nicholas honorary headman of the Cossacks of the Caucasus.

Already the results of Russia's great victory begin to appear. Al-though the Turkish official despatches have not said a word about the fall of Erzerum, the news has become known in Constantinople. Serious riots occurred there on Thursday, the crowds denouncing the war and the Young Turks. German police attacked the mob, and German troops are guarding the Sultan's palace the Ministerial offices. More significant even than the anti-war demon stration is the action of Turkish troops ordered to Armenia, in ing to proceed to the front. Disturbances took place also at Smyrna and Beirut.

Ferdinand of Bulgaria, who has been depending on Turkish bayonets for the defence of the Black Sea coast while the Bulgars were conquering Serbian Macedonia, has hurried back to Sofia from Vienna to make other arrangements. Turkey is certain to recall her troops from Bulgaria to stay the Russian advance in Asia Minor. The fall of Erzerum may prove the equivalent of the removal of the keystone from an arch -Turkish power may come crashing the ground in all directions. Trebizond, the chief Turkish port on the southern shores of the Black Sea, is reported to be in straits, and there is no possibility of sending reinforcements, as the Russians control the Black Sea.

ROUMANIA

If Roumania is concentrating her army on the Bulgarian border, as reported, she is giving public intimation of her intention to join the Allies. The action reported would be that which the Government of Roumania would take preparatory to of France without realizing that she and begin the conquest of Transyl. vania. To cross the passes which separate the Transylvanian plain from Roumania while leaving her own territory to attack all along the Danube by a composite army of Bulgars, Austrians and Germans would bs folly Roumania is not likely to be guilty of. The first business of the Roumanian army will be to put Bulgaria out of action while the Russians hold the Austrians fast to the Galician and Bessarabian terrain. Roumanian intervention is expected some time next month. An advance from Saloniki simultaneously must have been arranged by the Allies before Bucharest gave consent to the

T. P. O'CONNOR'S LETTER

Special Cable to THE CATHOLIC RECORD (Copyright 1916, Central News)

London, Feb. 19. - Parliament reassembles in a curiously mixed mood. On one side the Ministry, especially Mr. Asquith, is more powerful than ever. On the other side, the daring and immunity centres of population those old of the Zeppelin airships and the exaggerated accounts of the success of Germany in breaking the blockade through Holland with iron ore have produced a good deal of popular unrest. This has been fanned into flame by the shricking appeals of the Daily Mail and the excitable extrem-

More reasonable people criticise out the country, until the voice of all the Ministry in a calmer way by refrance, as if realizing that Divine calling many moments of indecision forces are at work, is raised in one and tardy action. These criticisms inder the knowlcome to a common understanding resalvation as a people. Will this garding their objects. They are military and political council meet ing in Paris will subject all military and political movements to a single Premier, M. Aristide Briand to Italy, following the frequent visits of Mr. Asquith and Mr. Lloyd George to direction certain.

premiership is another favorable point, as many people in England have felt great misgiving at the triumphant position of the reactionaries, symbolized in studied insults to the Duma.

With all these things are the preparations for making the next few months decisive. But here there is a difference in the outlook of the Central powers and the Allies. As time evidently fights on the side of the Allies there is less inclination among them to force the issue by early and risky big advances with inevitably gigantic losses, with uncertain results. The Germans, on the other hand, are confronted with the growing discontent of the underfed population, including hundreds of thousands of widows, and, with an approaching financial crash, seem to press recently for some decisive victory on the western front.

This strategy is viewed with calmness and satisfaction by the Allies, who disregard a small advance into the first or second line of trenches in the confident knowledge that such advances are costly to the enemy with daily diminishing power in men, and that they will be easily arrested when they pass the first front.

As things look now a big advance of the Allies is more likely on the eastern front than on the western. . The recovery of the Russian army, their growing supply of ample munitions, no longer are doubtful. At the same time indications point to

Roumania entering the conflict on the side of the Allies when the Rus

Czar has appointed the Grand Duke sian advance begins in the Spring, and the expedition to Salonica has justified itself by the steady pressure it is exerting on the Bulgarian and German armies, and as a threat of joining this concentrated advance when the right moment comes.

A growing sense of this peril in the east among the Germans is indicated by the practical abandon-ment of the long trumpeted attack on Egypt. Thus in England to day are two sentiments. On one side is the growing sense of the immensity of her task, and consequently the necessity to put forth all her re-sources, with the equal necessity of economizing her resources. On the other side is the confident hope that her enemies have already reached their zenith and must begin descending, while she and her Allies are only now getting to their top note with a big superiority of men, money and munitions, which this year brings. The beginning of the end for Germany must be expected within the year. Some prophets, especially those who are in Switzerland, and have gained inner knowledge of Germany's internal conditions, believe the decision must come by July. Another view is that the war will last until the late autumn, especially in view of the Allies' growing faith in time and attritionrather than in big rushes as decisive factors

The Irish members returning to Parliament from Ireland bring hope-ful news regarding Ireland's attitude The success of the party in warding off conscription for Ireland has silenced the voice of faction Though well paid emissaries of Germany still try to stir up mischief. Ireland stands strong behind Mr. Redmond and his policy.

You can be of course in many parts a combined movement to drive the is passing through one of the most you are struck, of course, with the loneliness of the streats where people pass in units instead of in hundreds. There do not seem to be as many empty shops as at the beginning of the war, but there is even a certain approach to the normal.

I ran down to the south for som days to get rid of a troublesome attack of insomnia, and there bathed in sunshine and with the indescribably beautiful scenery still as in olden times, one might imagine that the world was in the same as in those now apparently remote days before Germany spent millions to fight and destroy one another. But here again, there is an enormous change. always choose Monte Carlo by preference from the other cities on the Riviera because I find the climate so excellent—not assuredly because I want to gamble. a passion that never had the least attraction for me. It is the old Monte Carlo, so far at least as the general setting is concerned; but what a different Monte Carlo from that with which the whole world is familiar. The greater part of the hotels remain closed. Some of them are turned into hospitals, and that area immediately around the Casino, which used to be parhaps the most crowded and liveliest spot in Europe, is painfully and sadly empty. The hotel de Paris has a few of its old clients but again if you go there at the hour of afternoon tea or dinner, where you met almost everybody in Europe, you find a yawning desert. But curious ly enough, the tables are not only going, but at some hours of the day you find psople in large numbers in pursuit of the fickle fortune of the roulette table or trente et quarante, But the shadow of the war never edge that the Allies have at last theless is over Monte Carlo as well as over every other place. Now and then a great singer attracts a large reaching the point when the joint audience to the Opera House; now and then a good play brings a number of people, and you might forget undergoing a tremendous religious direction. The visit of the French audience and realize how many if you did not take a glance at the women were there in black, and if you did not see a wounded officer on his crutches limping along to his Paris, have now made such unity of seat with everybody of course trying to help him-you might forget but The change in the Russian for these things that there was a great war. All around the coast you find military hospitals. The Riviera is evidently regarded as the best air for convalescence, with the result that there are many British as well as French soldiers scattered among the hospitals. I attended a little gather ing of French officers who were at a picnic on Mont Argel, the new Golf Club that was founded some years ago on the beautiful mountaintop above Monte Carlo. I was on these links-was it a few years or a few centuries ago?—with Lord Reading, then Sir Rufus Isaacs, and Mr. Lloyd George. It was as near, I think, as Mr. Lloyd George ever got to the fascinating and seductive capital of the gambling center of Europe. I don't believe that he was ever induced even by curiosity to enter the gaming rooms. In this he is in the same tradition as Mr. Gladstone, who never, in spite of his many visits to the Riviera, which he found an excellent remedy for the insomnia which now and then attacked him. could be induced to enter Monte Carlo, though he drove around it now and then. The golf ground at Mont Argel was, when I visited it last, so rough that a game there might be called mountain climbing rather than golf. Great improvements have been made since, and it now seems to me quite a good course; and the air is superb. It reminds me a little of a golf course in Switzerland, for you look up from the smooth grass of the greens to snow-clad mountains in the near distance. It was in the clubhouse that the picnic took place, and there were some fifteen wounded officers present with a large company of friends who had come to do them or. It was the first time that had met so closely so many French officers, and I was quite delighted with them. Most of them were quite young fellows, and most of them really handsome. There were just one or two—a colonel and a major who were older. How can I describe the ineffable charm of their manners? They were all gay, they all chaffed each other, they a'l seemed quite free from care. But when a foreigner, like myself, spoke to them, they immediately became the serious. dignified, courtly gentlemen that might have appeared in the drawingrooms of Versailles in the days of Louis XIV. Slight, muscular, alert, they suggested the swiftness and endurance of the greyhound.

I have described the wounded fficers as gay, and so they were. But one could not help noticing in the expression of their pale faces the mark of the terrific strain through which they had passed. There wasn's a murmur: I never even heard an allusion to what they had suffered; but their faces spoke what their tongues refused to mention. One and all they discussed the future with confidence. I didn't meet a human being in France who enter tains the least doubt as to the necessity of continuing the fight to the bitter end and as to the certainty of final victory. The strain is terri-ble in France, but France is bearing it with universal fortitude.

I paid a visit to the hospital at Mantone. It is one of the monu-ments to the outbursts of devoted affection to France which this war has created in so many English minds. It was in a splendid and spacious new hotel, with marble floors, great halls, beautiful and spacious grounds. An Englishman named Cochrane had spentthousands of pounds of his private fortune in installing it, and all the nurses-or nearly all-were English womenthose quiet, silent, undemonstrative women who are the flower of the earth and ideal nurses. Here the patients were nearly all from the ranks. Most of them were sunning themselves on one of the numerous verandahs; but some were still confined to bed. Again there was the same sweetness of manners, which is such a charm in all the population of France without distinction of class. Many of them were playing cards on their quilts—horribly stained cards I must say which forced me to send them some new packs a few days later. Cards, I may say, are now rather a dear luxury in France. upon them, the Government takes enormous precautions to see that they are not passed from hand to hand. The clubs at Monte Carlo and elsewhere, where there are little games of bridge, are compelled to return one or two cards from each pack so as to make them useless for further play. One pathetic figure of a man in the hospital at Mentone, who looked like an artisan, still hauntame. He was playing patience all by himself, and evidently had been badly wounded. But he looked so patient and he smiled so swestly on us as we spoke with him, and he so lonely! that I could have broken down with pity, with sympathy and with aff ction. Lord Waleran, once an active pol itician, but now compelled to live on the Riviera because of his health—is one of the guardians of the hospital. He has just lost his eldest son, but could see heavier on his worn face, he went through the day's work for these French soldiers as though nothing had occurred to darken his own innermost life.

I have been reading in the papers on the morning of the day on which I write these lines, of the departure amid joyous songs and cheers and careless and tearless farewells of the new conscripts of eighteen to the training barracks. It is but one of the many signs of that cheerful, indomitable spirit with which the Frenchman or the French woman confronts the difficulties of life. But I protest that what most brought home the spirit of France to me was a visit to Cinema show in Paris. In the midst of other films there came one which professed to give a picture of the soldier who is back with his family on a few days leave. It was a screaming bit of farce from the first picture to the last. There was the crowd of relations, more or less absurd, hugging the returned here un. til he was almost sufficated. Above all, there was the mother-in-law, that classic and inevitable figure of all the farces from the beginning of time, fussy, interfering, domineering, foolish, and of course led about by everybody, and finally overcome, compelled to leave her daughter and her son in law without her un timely intrusions. Not a tear, not a moment of sentiment, still less of sentimentality, from the first moment to the last; and the audience just screaming with laughter from the first film to the final. It very silly, and very undignified and frivolous even ; but what a lesson in the courage with which France can laugh at everything; can laugh even when its heart is full and the widows' weeds proclaim to every how many homes have been darkened by heroic deaths of the loved ones in the trenches.

To possess a disposition to see the favourable rather than the unfavourable side of things conduces more to happiness than to be heir to ten thousand a vear .- David Hume.

A THIRD RECRUITING SERMON

reached in the Blessed Sacrament Church, Ottawa Jan. 30, 1916, by Rev. Dr. John J. O'Gorman, P. P. Fight ve to-day for your brethren." (I Math. v : 32.)

No apology is required for one more sermon on the duty of enlist-ing in the Canadian Overseas Force. Canada's relation to the Great War is so fundamental, so many-sided, so far reaching, that there is no one man who has an adequate comprehension of everything it means. Hence it is a question which must be approached from very many sides, and studied earnestly and honestly by many minds. The moral and religious aspects of this question are a fit subject for pulpit treatment. There are some who would confine pulpit preaching to pious platitudes, who would permit us to teach the principles of Christianity and make such application of them as is found in classic sermonbooks or in manuals of theology. but who prevent us endeavoring to apply these principles to the questions of the day. These people would minimize the function of the Christian religion. Religion is no mere academic theory or emotional excitant. It is the greatest force in this world. There is no question whose moral and religious aspects do not fall under the guidance of religion. Certainly purely political questions, which involve no moral principle, are not for the pulpit. But most of the problems which agitate society have a pronounced moral tearing, and the Christian teacher must face them and attempt to solve them. whether the problem be the citizen's duty in war time, or prohibition, or divorce legislation, or school regulations. It is perfectly true that the individual priest or bishop will not always be successful in his solution of the problem, but his individual contribution towards its solution will be supplemented and corrected by the actions of other priests and bishops and in this way, failing an official pronouncement, the Catholic attitude to the problem will be determined. If it should happen, as in the case of the Ontario bilingual regulations, that French bishops and priests consider bishops and priests consider them wise and just, then the average citizen will conclude that the question is a purely racial one which cannot be solved by theology. The question as to along what lines the relations of Canada and Britain should develop is indeed one which is not for the pulpit. On the other hand, however, as Canada is officially and effectively participating in this war, it is within They have gone up several times in urge the members of his flock to ful-price, and as there is a heavy tax the province of a bishop or priest to urge the members of his flock to fulbe a good Christian if one is a bad citizen. He who is disloyal to his country is disloyal to the Church. He who is only partially patrictic is only partially religious; for patriotism is a virtue. At all times and in all places the Catholic Church has loyally and enthusiastically support ed the legitimate authority of the State, and neither sneers nor sland ers will cause her to change her conduct. She practises herself what she teaches to her children: "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God, the things that are

> That it is Canada's duty in the present crisis to fight with the Empire in defence of her national rights and liberties as a British self-governing Dominion is the teaching of every Catholic Canadian bishop. Thus, 01 defined Canada's relation to the war as follows: (I summarize somewhat his remarks.)

God's." (Mark xii: 17.)

"England did not wish for war. Her reason for entering it was to avenge Belgium and to safeguard justice, liberty, right and honour. Canada is not an independent State, nor is the neutral. She is an autonomous Dominion in the British Em pire, and since Britain is at war, there result for us sacred obligations While Canada is not attacked diractly, she is attacked indirectly. She is menaced, and therefore must be defended. Were England defeated, Germany's first prey would be Canada. Hence we must do our utmost, for the fate of Canada is dependent upon the success of the British arms. The Bishops Quebec, at the very beginning of the war, in a joint Pastoral letter, taught that it was the duty of Canada to aid England.

In this Laval recruiting speech of Mgr. Bruchesi, there is no politics, but there is patriotism. Canada's duty to participate in this war is no longer debatable. It was decided year and a half ago by the Canadian Parliament.

The further question, however, yet remains. How is this general duty of the Canadian nation to participate in this war to be determined for and applied to the individual citizen There are some, second to none in their loyalty and purity of purpose, who maintain that till the State calls its citizens to the colours by conscription, the duty of becoming a soldier is not sufficiently precise to oblige the individual; that while voluntary enlisting is desirable and patriotic and praiseworthy and meri torious, it is not, strictly speaking, a duty. This is a respectable opinion, one which may be safely defended and followed. However, it appears to me that while this theory meets ordinary requirements, it falls short in the present extraordinary circumstances of indicating the full duty of our manhood, our wealth, our industhe citizen.

For it will be admitted that there position to do so. When a country is defending herself as Canada is to day, by a just defensive war, and the the citizen, who is in a position to case for the well-known principle : The safety of the State is the supreme law. This is all the more certain when, as in the present case, the Government urges him in every possible way, apart from compulsion, to perform this duty. An official call has gone forth for half a million men, that is, for all our available able bodied unmarried men, and for such married men whose duties per mit them to go. The Government has not yet indeed passed a law compelling individuals to become soldiers. It has based its general pelling call to the colors on the fundamental natural obligation binding the citizen, who is in a position to do so, to defend his country when the latter needs him. Hence, I have maintained and do maintain, not as a de fined article of faith but as a reasoned and reasonable moral pinion, that by virtue of the natural law which imposes upon citizens, who are in a position to do so, the obligation of defending their country when the latter is fighting for her liberty and existence, and by virtue of the just action of our Government in calling for half a million men which is practically the whole available manhood that our country can spare the able bodied Canadian citizen who is not detained by a more urgent duty is in conscience bound to enlist.

Do not tell me that a law must have a sanction, and that there is no sanction to enforce the obligation of enlisting. It is true that he who is in a position to enlist, and refuses to French bishops and priests consider do so, is not fined, is not imprisoned. them unwise and unjust, and English But who will say that he is not highers and priests consider the same and punished? What greater punishment could there be than to be stigmatised as a shirker? That the common sense of the community calls the citizen, who though able and free to enlist will not do so, a shirker, is to my mind an additional proof that there is a duty to enlist. There can be no shirker unless there be a duty which has been shirked. Since there are shirkers, it shows that the common sense of the com munity recognizes the duty of voluntary enlisting. No imprisonment can be a greater punishment than that meted out to the shirker. For the shirker the whole world is a prison. No matter where he goes he will be known and treated as one who forfeited his own self. Were a Canadian shirker after the war to go even to Germany, he would be treated by the very Germans as a man who was no man.

If enlisting at present cannot be said to be a duty because we have no conscription law, then it would be merely a praiseworthy counsel of perfection, like going to be a mission-ary among the heathen Chinese. To work for the conversion of the Chinese people to the Christian faith is admirable, praiseworthy, meritorious and heroic. But it is not the duty of any Canadian citizen. No Canadian citizen is a shirker because for example, the Archbishop of Montreal, in his Laval University address, defended and One's country is in dire peril, as Canada is to day, that no citizen has the obligation of enlisting as a soldier, because the Government, for excellent reasons, has not passed a conscription law.? While it would be wrong to call a counsel a command, it is equally objectionable to hold that there are no obligations without formal laws. On this point et me quote the words of the late Cardinal Manning: "The notion of obligation has been so identified with laws, canons, vows and contracts, that if these cannot be shown to exist no obligation is supposed to exist. It is true that all laws. canons, vows and contracts lay obli gations upon those who are subject to them. But all obligations are not by laws, nor by canons, nor by vows, nor by contracts. There are obligations distinct from and anterior to all these bonds. Faith, hope, charity, contrition, piety, all bind the soul by the most persuasive and constraining obligations. The law of liberty binds by love, gratitude and generosity. Compared with these it may be said that all bonds are as the letter that may kill to the spirit which gives

> The Bishop of Northampton has applied this doctrine to the duty of voluntary enlisting in a sermor he preached last April on Our Heroic Dead. He said:

"The moral obligation of the indiv idual citizen is equally imperative whether his country's call reaches him as a compulsory law or as a freeman's opportunity. The voluntary system does not mean liberty to give or withhold service. Is it not a trap to catch the young, the thoughtless, the adventurous, the brave, and to screen the shirker, the money grubber and the craven. If it worked in so ignoble a fashion it would break down in a month amidst the execration of mankind. Its success de pends upon the universal recognision of a universal duty, to place our all at the disposal of our countrytry, curtalents, our health, our limbs, our life itself. Is it the spontaneis contained fundamentally, at least, ous mobilization of an entire people :

in the natural law an obligation of the self confidence of a race which defending one's country, when the knows that its slackers and shirkers said: 'Gird yourselves and be latter is in dire need, and we are in will always be a negligible quantity. valiant men and te ready against the will always be a negligible quartity. Thus, from the moral standpoint, the main difference between a voluntary and a compulsory system appears to be as is the present one, is grave, this : under conscription the legisla tizen, who is in a position to tor decides for each citizen whatform do so, is bound by the natural law, that is by those obligations arising from the very nature of things, to fight for his country. Now when the Sovereign power is not in a posi fore the tribunal of his contraction. to perform this duty, it is the duty of the citizen to act without waiting age; the plea of health, the plea the citizen to act without waiting age; the plea of health, the plea for official compulsion. Here is a of domestic ties, the plea of necessary employment, in the public interest.

> place in the firing line." (Quoted in The Month, June, 1915) These words, be it remembered, were spoken in England some months before the Derby scheme went into force. What this Catholic Bishop said of England, a Catholic

Such a decision is always momentous even for the bravest. But for a never hang long in the balance. Unless the plea for exemption is clear and peremptory, he will find his in a position to go, is a strict obligation, or is on the eve of becoming

Those eligible Canadians who have look through a talescope and see that division one battalion of those insecure. But these unimaginative British lines on the West. It is who will think him unreasonable if difficult to be certain of this when we remember that during the past year, Germany with a small part of her forces was able to prevent the French and British armies from dis lodging her from one inch of French and Belgian soil, while at the same time the main German and Austrian armies won back Galicia, conquered Courland, Lithuania, Poland, Serbia that he may volunteer. I am glad to and Montenegro, and opened up communications with rich and far distant Asia Minor and Mesopotamia. I am not a pessimist, but I do not want to salute the spiked helmet in my own country. France cannot defeat Germany. The soldiers of the British Empire must. France at a terrible and irreparable loss has checked the German advance. We must drive it back. If ten thousand Canadian soldiers turned the scale last spring when the Germans were about to capture the rest of Belgium, and probably Calais, who will be bold enough to say that Canada's half million men will not be just what is required to break the western deadlock and save Hiberno-British and Latin civilization from being trampled under by Prussian Kultur? If Germany breaks through the Western lines and destroys the British and French armies, an attack on Canada would be an almost in-United States could not and would not defend us. It is idle to depend upon the British Navy as if its power were something preternatural or miraculous. It was made by men, and can be destroyed by men. A new type of submarine might render it obsolete any day. This is not probable but it is possible, and more improbable things have happened in you would defend Canada, come to Flanders! Be not terrified at the cost of the sacrifice it entails. Let our motto be that fof Judas Machabeus: "They come against us with an insolent multitude, and with pride, to destroy us, and our wives and our children and to pillage us. But we will fight for our lives and our laws." (I Mach. III:20) The man who would not fight for Canada as she is to day, would not defend a Garden of Eden Let us do our share in winning this war, and then those of us wh viva will be in a position to help in remodelling Canada after our ideals in the reconstruction period.

this war. It the Germans can smash there is nothing impossible in their landing half a million men in Quebec. It would not be pleasant to have them repeat in Quebec the procession of 500 000 soldiers that they lead through Brussels. Were they to get that far, I fear the most we could do would be to entrench west of the Great Lakes. I do not believe for a moment that all this will happen. It will not happen because the Germans will not break through our Western lines. But they will be prevented from doing it not by our talk, but by our soldiers. Men. if through the Allied Western Line,

Let those who are prevented by a ore urgent duty and those who are fearful stand back, but let the soldiers of Canada come forward: The Machabean leader, we read in Holy Writ, "appointed captains over the people, over thousands, and over hundreds, and over fifties, and over tens, and he said to them that were building houses or had betrothed wives or were planting vineyards, or were fearful that they should return every man to his house." And Judas morning, that you may fight with these nations that are assembled against us to destroy us. better for us to die in battle than to see the evils of our nation. Never-theless, as it shall be the will in heaven, so be it done." (I Mach.

If it is your duty to enlist, you are nevertheless free to choose your regiment; and the Catholic recruit is making a wise use of this liberty in choosing a regiment which has a Catholic chaplain. There is nothing bigoted nor narrow about such an advice. It is Catholic common sense, and do not be too thin-skinned true man and a true Christian it will to follow it. Catholics are found in every regiment which has been raised in Canada since the war bethose raised outside of Quebec, Catholics have been usually in a minority, as they form a minority in the Canadian provinces apart from Quebec. This is espacially true of Ontario and the Western Provinces. For while Catholics form 29 per cent. of the population priest can say of Canada.

Hence I conclude that the duty of enlisting, for the Canadian, sspecially for the unmarried Canadian, who is and the Western Provinces, the aver ages run only from 19 per cent. to 12 per cent. Hence as there has been no attempt made thus far to group not yet become soldiers, have not Catholics, they have been a minority failed to do so for lack of courage to in every regiment raised in Ontario perform a patriotic duty. They wait and the West. As a result, very few because they do not yet see their of these regiments have Catholic duty. It is not patriotism our chaplains. The Catholics in such slackers lack, it is imagination.

They are willing to defend Canada time to time by a Catholic chaplain, were she attacked; and they will not but this is only moderately satisdefend Canada, now when she is factory. It appears to me that it attacked. Their imagination cannot would be a wise thing that in each Canada's first line of defence is in recruited should have a Catholic Flauders, and that it is being shelled chaplain, in order that the Catholics daily. Were the Germans to land of the district might join, if they half a million men at Quebec, these chose, that battalion and thus know slackers would swamp the recruiting that in enlisting they would be out offices. But it would be too late. If to no religious inconvenience. Canada's first line of defence in These regiments would not be ex-Flanders were definitely broken, her clusively Catholic regiments but second line of defence on the shores they would be regiments with a of the St. Lawrence would be very large number of Catholics attracted there by the presence of the Catho-lic chaplain. If a Catholic soldier slackers say: the German cannot lic chaplain. If a Catholic soldier break through the French and has a right to a dentist and a barber

It was with a great deal of pleasure that the Catholics of this part of Can-ada learned of the authorization granted to Lt. Col. Trihey to form an Irish Overseas unit at Montreal. I know of more than one person who is waiting impatiently for his battal. ion to be allowed to begin recruiting, be able to announce that on Feb. 15, this Irish Canadian Regiment will begin recruiting. You will hear very shortly of the appointment of its chaplain. To the men of the parish that are about to enlist, I would say, join the Irish Regiment. Irishmen have been found in every regiment that has left Canada, as they are found in every English and Scotch and Colonial regiments in the British Army. There is no reason why they, who add so much to the glory and fighting ability of other regiments should not have the satisfaction of having several regiments of their own. This will be realized in Col. Trihey's regiment, and there is no doubt but that this Irish Canadian unit will acquire the same fams as the Dublin Fusiliers or the Connaught

Rangers But it is for no mere earthly fame that we are fighting. It is for liberty, for justice, and hence for God. Are we evitable result. In that case the not soldiers of Christ? Does not our regiment form one vast religious order ? Men, who, like all religious, are obliged to forego the pleasures of family life; Men who like all religious are required to leave all ; Men who, like all religious, are required to obey from morning till night a severe rule; Men, who unlike most religious, are called upon to expose perhaps daily, their very lives in the performance of their duty! these things form the very essence of the most heroic practice of Christian ity. They are the very conditions which Christ laid down for His dis ciples.

He that loveth father and mother more than Me is not worthy of Me.' (Math, x:37.) "Every one of you that doth not renounce all that he possesseth cannot be My disciple."
(Luke xiv: 33) "Fear ye not them that kill the body, and are not able to kill the soul." (Math.x:28) "For to kill the soul." whoseever would save his life shall lose it; but whoseever shall lose his life for my sake, he shall save it. For what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world and lose or forfeit his own self." (Luke ix: 24, 25) These words are for him who is tempted to be a shirker. On the other hand the Christian soldier, no matter what may happen, has his consolation in hese words of Him for whom he fights: "Every one that hath left louse, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife or children or lands for My name's sake, shall receive a hundred fold, and shall possess life everlasting." (Math. xix: 29.)

If you still hesitate, read the First and Second Books of the Machabees. You fathers, remember Mathathia who led his sons to battle; you mothers, remember her who encour aged her seven sons to advance to an heroic martyrdom. You young men, imitate Judas the Hammerer. even him who said "If our time be come, let us die manfully for our brethren, and let us not stain our glory." (I Mach. ix:10.)

Erratum,-In Rev. Dr. O'Gorman's sermon on "Religious Motives for Enlisting," which appeared in our "Religious Motives for

Your Savings

The War has already brought great changes. National leaders in all countries are urging the practice of Thrift. The Prime Minister of Great Britain said recently: "There remains only one course to diminish our expenditure and increase our savings."

What are you going to do with YOUR SAVINGS? You cannot keep your cash in a stocking. You must either put it in a Bank; invest in a Bond or Stock; or purchase Life Insurance with it. Some men will do all three.

By Putting YOUR SAVINGS INTO LIFE INSURANCE

You will be practising Thrift in its best form. You will be making definite provision for your family. In the event of your early death, they will receive many times more than you have paid in. If you live, you will be adding each year to the value of your security.

Let us sell you a Policy in the Capital Life Assurance Company, We have all kinds, at all prices, with valuable privileges and perfect security always.

Write us, giving the date of your birth

he Capital Life Assurance of Canada Head Office - Ottawa issue of January 22, the word "anele" was misspel?. The sentence should have read: A regiment of the most splendid non-Catholic chaplains in the world could not shrive, housel or anele a single Catholic soldier.

FROM GLORY TO GLORY

mighty mass of ice translucent Like heaped-up emeralds, upon the shore Of our great, frozen river-prized no

Flung from the store-house, soon to melt away. Each block, square cut, showed no bright color play, more

Its own pale native hues were all it wore, Yet oh, how lovely !- then, the great ice-floor Beneath caught down the blue, as souls that pray Catch Heaven's own reflex, "'Tis And bore away the lesson, Hours had sped Ere my return ; the crystal blue had rolled Into the sunset and the ice was gold. O lower life," I cried, "sullen and dumb, Put on, at last, that dazzling life to come!"

-CAROLINE D. SWAN

DEPLORABLE IGNORANCE

The Protestant bishop of Carlisle in England recently stated that Catholics purchased indulgences and paid well to have their sins forgiven. When he was challenged for proof of his statement he replied that he imself had often given money to poor persons who pleaded with tears for money with which to purchase indulgences.

Father Vaughan, the well-known non-Catholic friends what he thought of the statement of the Protestant bishop. Father Vaughan said he presumed that the bishop knew what he was talking about; but, if his Lordship's assertion was true, then he (Father Vaughan) had a good deal of money owing to him. had been hearing confessions ever since the year 1881, and in many countries and on many continents but, up to date, he had received not even so much as a trumpery shekel for all the thousands of absolutions he had pronounced. It was too bad. Some of his brother priests heard more than 20 000 confessions in the year, and ought, in consequence, to be nearly as wealthy as the Lord Bishop of Carlisle himself, only they were not. Being only Catholic priests, they could not cry out with cabinet ministers: " It is my salary and I mean to stick to it." Father Vaughan said that he had often given to his penitents, for their penance after confession, some dulgenced prayers to say: but in spite of the bishop's contention, not one of them bad, as yet, paid him any fee for the indulgences gained. did they not hurry up? "I rather fancy," continued Father Vaughan, that the ladies and gentlemen who pleaded with tears for his Lordship's money with which to buy indulgences went and spent it on 'a plenary in dulgence' in the tap room nearest the episcopal palace.'

We can only wonder at the simplicity of the bishop of Carlisle if he really believed the statement he made. Father Vaughan's caustic comment should spur him to make inquiries from authentic sources before committing himself to paper on a matter of which he seems to be sorely in need of information. The pity is that educated persons of which this Protestant bishop is an example, trouble themselves so little to learn what is the teaching and practice of the Catholic Church be fore assailing it with charges learned from lying beggars.-True Voice.

FATHER FRASER'S CHINESE MISSION

Taichowfu, China, Dec. 11, 1915. Dear Readers of CATHOLIC RECORD:

It may be a little surprise to you to learn that it takes $100 a week to keep my mission going. I am glad when I see that amount contributed in the RECORD, but when it is less I am sad to see my little reserve sum dim inished and the catastrophe arriving when I must close my chapels, discharge my catechists and reduce my expenses to the few dollars coming in weekly. I beseach you to make one more supreme effort during 1916 to keep this mission on its feet. will be surprised to learn what a great deal I am doing with $100 a week-keeping myself and curate, 30 catechists, 7 chapels, and free schools, 8 churches in different cities with caretakers, supporting two big catechumenates of men, women and children during their preparation for baptism and building a church every Yours gratefully in Jesus and Mary.

J. M. FRASER. Previously acknowledged ... $6,613 50 Reader, Charnwood, P.E.I. Subscriber, Lake Verde.... 5 00 John Dray, Little Bona A Friend, Melrose 1 00 John Murphy, Melrose R. G. McIsaac, Sydney 1 00 Kentville. 1 00 Friend of the Chinese Missions.... Lochiel..... 1 00 Jno. J. Gibbons, Lucknow 1 00 1 00 2 00

5 00

70 00

2 00

A Friend, New Glasgow ... J. Doherty, Holmesville ... St. Joseph's Convent Rev. J. F. MacMaster, Mabou, N. S ... J. McAtominey, Steelton ,...

Thornton-Smith Co. Mural Painting

Church Decorating

11 King St. W.

Capital Trust Corporation, Limited Authorized Capital $2,000,000.00

President, M. J. O'Brien, Renfrew; Vice-Presidents: Hon. S. N. Parent, Ottawa President, M. J. O'Brien, Kenfrew; Vice-Presidents: Hon. S. N. Parent, Ottawa; Denis Murphy, Ottawa; R. P. Gough, Toronto; A. E. Corrigan, Ottawa. Directors: A. E. Provost, Ottawa; Hon. R. G. Beazley, Halifax; W. P. O'Brien, Montreal; E. Fabre Surveyor, K.C., Montreal; Hugh Doheny, Montreal; E. W. Tobin, M.P., Bromptonville; Hon. Wm. McDonald, Cape Breton; Edward Cass, Winnipeg; T. P. Phelan, Toronto; Michaed Connolly, Montreal; W. J. Poupore, ex.M.P., Montreal; Lt.-Col. D. R. Street, Ottawa; J. J. Lyons, Ottawa; Gordon Grant, C.E., Ottawa; C. P. Beaubien, K.C., Montreal.

Offices: 29 Sparks St., Ottawa, Ont. Managing Director: B. G. Connolly. Assistant Manager: E. T. B. Pennefather.

Our Booklet, entitled "The Will That Really Provides" sent on request. "THE MAKING OF A WILL is one of the most simple and at the same time one of the most important duties of every man and woman. There are reputable lawyers and trust companies who will see that a will is properly made and that an estate is properly administered. Endless troubles and worries are caused by neglect to make a will. It is a matter for to-day."-Judge Lennox.

FIVE MINUTE SERMON

SEXAGESIMA SUNDAY

" A sower went to sow his seed." (Luke viii, 5.) led to hear Jesus, brought no doubt by various motives. Some came cut there were few whose hearts were this to have been the case.

effect : then He looked into them all. and all their hearts lay bars and open preached to them.

Your hearts, too, lie open in our Lord's sight. You may be able to action of a worldly disposition. hide from men how much or how But softness of heart is comp little you care for the salvation of your souls, but you can conceal nothing from Jesus. You may impress men with an idea that you are deeply interested in the things of God, but you cannot deceive God. You may mislead men by a merely respectable, orderly way of life, devoid of all inward love and fervor, but your appearance, looks and manners are nothing to our Lord, Who cares only for your hearts, and not the outward husk, as is were, of your hearts, but their inmost centre. We may describe as the outward husk ourfeelings, which appear to be good, gentle and pious, but, like the apples of Sodom, often contain nothing but repulsive sition. Amen. dust and ashes. The centre of the heart is the will, which should be firm and steadfast, ready for any conflict and any suffering for the sake of what is right. This is what our Lord sees and He found it in very few of the multitude that followed Him.

We are but few; would that He could find such a good will in every one of us, few as we are! May the seed of the word of God, sown by the Divine Sower, not remain without fruit in our hearts! "The sower went out to sow his seed, and as he sowed, some fell by the wayside, and it was trodden down, and the fowls of the air devoured it." Our Lord explained this parable : The seed is the word of God, and they by the wayside are they that hear, then the devil cometh and taketh the word out of their heart, lest, believing, they would be saved. Our Divine Master speaks of the word of God as seed, it is not yet fruit. The seed requires labor on the part of men and God's blessing before it can grow, blossom and bear Much toil and exertion are necessary before God's word can produce in us true piety, and practical, living Christianity. It is not enough merely to hear and know God's word. The misleading argument: "I have learned my religion "is worthless; we must be able to say also: "I have practised it, practised it by selfaud wholesome severity towards myself." Why do so many people learn our holy religion, and yet possess so little real religion? At school they sit and listen, they go to church and hear sermons, and in the confessional they receive good advice. They talk about pious subjects, they read good books; they romance about supernatural things, but their way of life remains unaffected by all this. They take no pains to practice their religion, nor to make the seed of God's lice what they hear, in the third part | that lays the golden egg. their hearts with a much trodden path, where the seed is trampled down and carried away by the birds.

I teach and preach, and scatter the seed of God's word in the name of Christ: but what is the use of my speaking to you, if your hearts are set only on earthly desires and fan. cies, and if you do not try to control your perverse inclinations, your whims and fancies, your temper and passions? What I say makes no impression upon you, for you are hard as a well trodden path. The word is uttered; it is a tiny seed and yet how powerful! The sound of the word soon dies away, but your sentence of everlasting misery or eternal happiness depends upon your reception of it with a hard or a docile heart. Your hearts should be docile, not soft and yielding to sweet, romantic feelings, but ready to accept what is Some day we shall meet again, face to face, before our Judge, Who "Where is the fruit of the seed that I entrusted to you to scatter ?"--" Lord, I scattered it with a good and honest purpose." where is the fruit?".—" Lord, it was my task only to sow the seed; it did not depend upon me whether it fell on good soil or on bad," And then the Judgs will turn to you and ask Where is the fruit?' Well will it be for you if you can produce some; but if you cannot, excuses will evail you nothing.

Many people on that day will probably plead as an excuse that the birds of the air devoured the seed i.e., that the devil took the word away from my heart. Adam and Eve put the blame of their transgression upon Satan, and human beings have always followed their example. But would be be able to take away the seed from a heart in which it was lanted deep in the love of God? uch an excuse is worthless. If your eart had not been hardened by the sootsteps of worldly thoughts and by the constant hurrying to and fro of evil thoughts and desires, Satan could not have carried away the seed of the Word of God, for he has power only over such as are superficial and frivolous, not over those who love God. The excuse is worthless and the punishment eternal.

You ought to have soft hearts "When a very great multitude was gathered together and hastened out of the cities unto Him, He spoke by a similitude." Very many people assemb good. Our hearts are softened to emotion at times of prayer as well of mere curiosity, so as to be able to as in temptation; in prayer, they are say: "I have heard Him"—probably inclined towards what is good, in temptation towards what is evil. eager to receive His teaching, and Emotion makes us shed tears when the parable that He uttered shows our sins are laid bare before our eyes, and tears, too, of self pity, when Jesus looked at all the crowd, but we have to carry out our good reso-an outward glance did not have much lutions. Emotion leads us to listen patiently both to the teaching of religion and also to words and sugbefore Him as He began to speak, to gestions against if. Emotion makes teach them how these hearts should us enthusiastic admirers of morality appear and how they should not appear when the word of God was false doctrines of immorality. It ex ists simultaneously with the hardnes of heart that arises from the constant

But softness of heart is compatible with firmness and strength of character, the want of which often causes the sower to sow in vain, and the birds of the air, that is to say, bad companions, bad books and bad examples, to destroy the seed, so that many hear the word of God, but have no faith and therefore are not saved.

Think often of this first part of today's gospel! Consider how neces-sary it is for strength of character to be united with readiness to accept all that is good. May God preserve your hearts from the two fatal extremes, which have plunged so many into destruction, namely, weak emotion and the hardness of a worldly dispo-

TEMPERANCE

THE HANDWRITING ON THE WALL

A vary significant straw which shows how the wind is blowing appeared in Sunday's Examiner. It was a letter from Mr. Hearst to his editor, ordering his papers in the future to reject all advertising of ardent liquors and ordering them begin an active campaign against the drink evil and the drug evil as a matter of public health, morals and righteourness.

Hearst is reading the hand-writing on the wall. It may sound like Satan rebuking sin, but as a matter of fact, the prohibition wave, which has been sweeping the country, added on New Year's Day seven States to the dry column, making eighteen States in all at present on the list. A resolution for National prohibition is now before Congress and promises to be one of the important features of the present session.

In foreign countries the temperance tide has been accelerated by the war, bringing about the abolition of the sale of vodka in Russia and absinthe in France and curtailing considerably the sale of spirits in the British Isles While the Church has ever taught emperance and her children scarcely ever abused the use of light wines and beers as in Italy and France, the real evil arose in more northern countries addicted to the use of heavy alcoholic drinks. On account of these excesses the Fathers of the Councils of Baltimore in the United States branded the business of selling intoxicating liquor as a "dangerous business," and an "unbecoming way of making a living." If total prohibition sweeps the country the word bear fruit. Our Lord referred saloons will have to blame themto those who hear, but do not prac- | selves, for they have killed the goose of the parable, where He compares | mend to our readers the letter of the Rav. J. M. Cleary of Minneapolis, a noted and baloved advocate of tem perance, which was published in this month's Ecclesiastical Review .-San Francisco Monitor.

SOWING AS THEY REAP

We learn from a correspondent that a prominent man of Oklahoma City who has always boasted that he was free born and could drink all he pleased, filled his young children with egg nog on all occasions and freely served it to everybody in his own home, had the pleasure of see ing his eldest son, now a young man, locked up in the city jail for being beastly drunk at a so-called respect able watch party on New Year's eve

Those who seem so surprised at the modern prevalence of women drinking, need not be so. When fathers, husbands and brothers insist on keeping liquor and serving it in their homes with their womenfolk as "waitresses," they need not feel astonished if women first learn to astonished if women first learn to endure, then pity, then embrace the thanked me, and in unmistakable But habit.

We don't believe there is a woman in the world who has the same respect for a man, once she has seen him under the influence of liquor, that she had before-is matters not who he is or what his station. If women feel this way towards men, what disgust there must be in both men and women who see a woman drunk or even drinking freely.

The man who teaches his children and wife to drink, telling them never to get drunk, uses about as much sense and logic as the simpleton of a parent who gives his baby matches to playwith and then spanks it for starting a fire.—Catholic Advance, (Wichita, Kan.)

No man can make a habit in a moment or break it in a moment. It is of Paraguay. Moreover the Indians, a matter of development, of growth. But at any moment one may begin to make or begin to break any habit.— William G. Jordan.

MISSIONARIES

The Sunday Watchman, Jan. 2, 1916 The missions conducted by Protestants in South America have been a failure for seventy years. Rev. Mr. Spear's pamphlet on South America was intended only for private circula tion among the missionaries; but I was fortunate enough to come into possession of it. It contains a surely humiliating confession of ineffici ency, 1,586 propagandists are working for 41,807 communicants. That means an average of 26 souls to each missionary. Of course, the numbers vary in different places. In Ecuador, 24 missionaries have gathered a flock of 61 souls. In Venezuela, Paraguay and Peru, the relative numbers are about the same as in Ecuador. There is an unintended touch of humor in this Protestant record of apostolic work. Imagine the tremendous output of energy required for one man to lookafter 26 souls ; cr for 24 missionaries to take care of 61 souls. Now their failure is not due to a lack of funds; for the E. U. S. A. spends more than $48 000 a year on its missions, is it a good business prop osition for any moneyed man of St. Louis to contribute to a fund so un-productive, an abnormally large portion of which must go to the supp of the missionaries themselves, their wives and children?
And, in the light of facts, is it not a piece of concentrated brass, to head-line the billboards of this city with a phrase like this, "National Mission-ary Convention, a world movement for better living for all mankind," as though the missionaries were doing a titan work in South America Five thousand men wanted-5.000 to enlist for service " is their other cry

What do they want men for? Aren't 536 men sufficient to take care of 41,307 disciples? Why not use the men they have to better advantage? Or are they sticks, as Bishop Kinsolving himself hinted the other day that they are ?

Moreover a considerable part of the total sum of money, collected for the missions, never gets to South America. The year before last $56, 000 was collected by E. U. S. A. Nearly $20,000 of this sum appear to have been expended on home charges, including the expense in curred in villifying Catholic South America in printed matter and lec tures. But you may say: Do they villify and do they pay to do it? Here are a few choice samples of their courteous attitude towards Catholics Do you know that S. A. is a con tinent without Christianity, without God and that its people have never heard of a Saviour? Do you know that the Christian Indians (so-called) i. e., those who belong to the Roman Catholic Church — know nothing whatever of Christianity?" Taken from leaflet: "Do you know?" published by E. U. S. A. Rev. C. Inwood improves on this. Speaking of South America he says that Catholicism " hates, curses, proscribes and burns the Bible; it belittles and discrowns Christ; it pollutes womanhood; it is the most active propagandist of vice and immorality. ism but not Christianity. Is South America to be allowed to go to the devil unwarned because it is cursed with a baptised paganism? Hamlet would say that this out-menaces the Menace. Personally, I can almost stomach the Menacs. It is so delightfully outrageous, so rampantly abusive, and it makes no bones about it; it at least wants everybody to know that it abominates the name of Rome. But when men and Ypres, everywhere men were with claims to respectability indulge talking of him with hushed voices. in such amenities of speech among their own, against Catholicism, while rofessing before the world at large mankind," I feel a great disgust. acceptable appeal for help to fair-minded Americans if they thought and said with Edmund Burke: by depreciating the merits of my competitors." If I were partial to "raking among the rubbish to see what I can find to fix a blot on their escutcheon." But, it may be urged: Are not these aspirations of theirs deserved? I answer in the negative and refer the reader for proof to the Globe the gentle art of throwing bricks, I among the opposition with some Democrat of December 4th. I might, however, add one more argument in favor of the Church's work. Don Figuerido, Consul from Brazil, called me up on the phone terms expressed his indignation at such crude misrepresentations of his country. He knew the Right Rev. Kinsolving in the South, found him courteous there; and fails utterly to understand his change of front here. He says that the reverend gentle-man's statements about the degree of illiteracy and irreligion are a gross exaggeration. I may add on my own account that much of the illiteracy which prevails can be condoned. Slavery among the negroes of Brazil was abolished only in 1888. Can we of North America point to a greater proportionate improvement in our liberated slaves than the improvement in Brazil As to the Indians, the Church would have done better work but for the greed of adventurers. Witness the destruction of the Jesuit Reductions tion does not appeal to them. The Church has done a fine piece of work cave by a stream, and the Comrade even in making them good. She in White was washing my wounds vanity and inanity.

thinks that though the acquirement of secular knowledge is very desirable. morality is far more so. She thinks more of the ten C's of Mt. Sinai than of the three R's of the classroom, Finally no one can then I saw that he too had been get around the big fact that she preserved the Indians, whether illiterate a shot wound in his hand, and as he or not. The Right Rev. Kinsolving prayed a drop of blood gathered and tags the South American Indian "il- fell to the ground. I cried out. I literate;" we must, to our shame, could not help it, for that wound of tag the North American Indian 'ob his seemed to be a more awful thing literate." For he is practically done out of existence. The S. A. I. is a live illiterate; the N. A. I. is a dead illiterate. The one (L. L. K. says) is buried in the depths of ignorance; the other (I say) is buried in the depths of ignorance; the other depths of the grave. The Paraguay late. And then I noticed sorrow Indians of the Jesuit Reductions fully that the same cruel mark was were only interned. The North on his feet. You will wonder that I American Indian has been interred. did not know sooner. I wonder my-"No safe Indian but a dead one," has self. But it was only when I saw obtained too often among us. "Let his feet that I knew him." the Indian live by all means and then, if possible, let him shed his illiteracy," illiteracy," has prevailed, under the influence of the Church in the South. "Sir: I was much struck by the Can these new missionaries do better in South America than the Catholic Church did? They have to law." Their past work certainly gives them no encouragement. Moreover if they went there to help, no objection would be entertained. But they go to destroy the Catholic influence, if they can, as their utter-ances abundantly testify.-J. A. McClorey, S. J.

Cutting Down Expenses

A great number of people have, unfortunately, had their earnings re-duced since the war, and consequently they deem it wise to cut down living expenses. One sensible plan is to ea ess of the highly refined foods an meat and more of the coarser and more utritious cereals such as Dr. Jackson' Roman Meal. This is the most whole-some, most nourishing, and most healthful cereal food on the market, and costs much less than the highly refined breakfast foods. Sold by live grocers at 10 and 25

ents. Try the ready-cooked Roman Meal luggets. They are delicious with hot

Made by Roman Meal Co., Toronto.

THE COMRADE IN WHITE

"Voices" are heard again at Domremy; angels are seen by the English at Mons; St. Michael and St. George appear; and now one is told of the Friend of the Wounded, who has been visualized by both French and English. The French call the Friend of the Wounded LeCamarade Blanc or the "White Comrade," and they claim to have seen him after many a violent battle. Soldiers lying in the hospitals at Nice, say they have seen the vision on the battlefields of Soissons, Nancy and Ypres.

An English soldier writes to "Life and Work." a British paper :

"George Casey asked me if I had seen the Friend of the Wounded. "After many a hot engagement a man in white had been seen bending over the wounded. Snipers sniped at him. Shells fell all around. Nothing had power to touch him. This mysterious one, whom the French called the Comrade in White, seemed to be everywhere at once. At Nancy, in the Argonne, at Soissons

"I exclaimed that for me seeing was believing, and that I didn't wounded. "It was the next day. At noon we They would make a nobler and more got word to take the trenches in front acceptable appeal for help to fair. of us. They were two hundred yards away, and we weren't well started till we knew that the big guns had shall never attempt to raise myself failed in their work of preparation. We had advanced 150 yards when we found it was no good. Our captain called to us to take cover, and just also could distribute a few of them | then I was shot through both legs.

"I fell into a hole of some sort. I suppose I fainted, for when I opened force and precision of aim. But with my eyes I was all alone. The pain was horrible, but I didn't dare to Daniel Webster I shall refrain from move lest the Germans should see me, for they were only fifty yards away, and I did not expect mercy. I was glad when the twilight came. There were men in my own company who would run any risk in the darkness if they thought a comrade was still alive. "The night fell, and soon I heard a step, not stealthy, as I expected, but quiet and firm, as if neither dark-ness nor death could check those untroubled feet. So little did I guess what was coming that, even when I saw the gleam of white in the dark ness I thought it was a peasant in a white smock, or perhaps a woman deranged. Suddenly I guessed that it was the Comrade in White. "At that very moment the German rifles began to shoot. The bullets could scarcely miss such a target, for he flung out his arms as though in entreaty, and then drew them back till he stood like one of those wayside crosses that we saw so often we marched through France. And he spoke. The words sounded familiar, but all I remember was the beginning, 'Is thou hadst known,' and the ending, 'but now they are hid from thine eyes.' And then he stooped and gathered me into his arms-me, the biggest man in the -and carried me as if I had regimentbeen a child.

" I must have fainted again, for I awoke to consciousness in a little

The following letter on the subject appears in our London contempor account in 'Light' of the Comrade Blanc, as for some time past I have heard of him through the wounded prove it; and not merely presume it. soldiers I came across in the hospi For the Church is in possession and tals at Nice. Many of them men "possession is nine points of the from the 87th and 128th Infanterie who have been fighting in Argonne have seen him, and on several occasions he has walked through their trenches.

> "He has chiefly been observed after severe fighting, bending over the dying and helping them to pass away in peace; he has often been shot at by the Germans, but apparently pays no heed to them. I had heard all this weeks ago, and had been much interested, so that when the article in Light caught my eye I translated it into French and gave it to some of the men to read; they said it must be the same apparition which comes to the soldiers in the Argonne; they also added that it seemed to flit from one place to another, and has been seen by many at Spissons, Nancy and Ypres.

Yours, etc E. B. M. "Nice. France, June 6, 1915."

WHAT THE CHURCH WAS IN THE MIDDLE AGES

Canon Farrar in "The Victories of Christianity

"From the fifth to the thirteenth century the Church was engaged in elaborating the most splandid organization the world has ever seen. Starting with the separation of the spiritual from the temporal power, and the mutual independence of each in its own sphere, Catholicism worked and in hand with feudalism for the amelioration of mankind. Under the influence of feudalism, slavery became serfdom, and aggressive was modified into defensive war. Under the influence of Catholicism the monasteries preserved learning and maintained the sense of the unity of Christendom. Under the combined influence of both grew up the lovely ideal of chivalry, molding generous instincts into gallant institutions, making the body vigorous and the soul pure, and wedding the Christian virtues of humility and tenderness into the natural grace of courage and strength.

"During this period the Church was the one mighty witness for light in an age of darkness, for order in an age of lawlessness, for personal holiness in an epoch of licentious rage.

ENGLAND'S CELTIC CHAMPIONS

to be innocently engaged in "a world if I were found lying out there who lately paid a visit to the Front, movement for better living for all wounded. has summarized his impressions to a tribute to the gallantry of the Irish regiments. "There is no doubt," said Father Vaughan to an Evening Standard representative, "that the best fighting stuff in the whole world is supplied by the Irish regiments. Supernaturally, as well as naturally, they are the best equipped men that I know to report themselves with effect to the enemy. No man who is an impartial student of history would care to deny that both on land and sea the Celtic race is serv ing the British Empire with a gallantry, a dash and daring that falls nothing short of heroism. You would think that Paddy was born to fight, and, what is more, he knows how to prepare for the life and death struggle. During this present scientific slaughter, so carefully prepared for forty years by the enemy, the Irish regiments have lived up to their fine traditions of gallantry. You may ask, as I ask, why have they not been singled out for more conspicuous commendation in despatches from the Front? To that question I answer it might per haps be invidious to make too clearly a defined distinction between the nationalities fighting under one and the same flag. But though the Irish names have not been poured out upon us as much as some of us could wish, still everybody knows what they have done, and every right-minded man is proud of the services rendered to the Empire by the Celt, whether from Ireland itself or from the Colonies.'

PRAYER WITHOUT WORK

There is no good in praying for anything unless you will also try for it. All the sighs and supplications in the world will not bring wisdom to the heart that fills itself with folly every day, or mercy to the soul that sinks itself in sin, or usefulness and honor to the life that wastes itself in

BELLS, PEALS, CHIMES E. W. V.\NDUZEN CO., Prop'r Buckeye Bell Foundry (Estab. 1837). 602 E. Second St., CINCINNATL O

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER

"Fruit-a-tives" Cleans, Purifies, Enriches

Fruit juice is Nature's own remedy. 'FRUIT-A-TIVES," the famou fruit medicine, keeps the blood pure and rich because it keeps the whole system free of impurities.

'Fruit-a-tives' improves the Skin Action; enables the stomach to digest food properly; makes the bowels move regularly; and relieves the strain on the Kidneys.

By its cleaning, healing powers on the eliminating organs, "Fruit-a-tives" rids the system of all waste matter and thus insures a pure blood supply.

50c. a box, 6 for 2.50, trial size 25c. At dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

For Sprains, Lame Muscles

Absorbine, Jr., brings quick relief. Keep it always at hand for instant use. Athletes use Absorbine, Jr., for the muscle that has been strained, for the cut or laceration that runs a chance of infection; for the abrasion that pains and the limbs that are stiff and lame from over-exertion.

Walter Johnson, the famous pitcher of the Washington Americans, says: "Absorbine, Jr., is a first-class liniment and rub-down for tired muscles. I have used it myself to advantage and can heartily recommend it to ball players everywhere."

Absorbine, Jr., is a concentrated antispetic liniment—only a few drops required at an application. It is safe and pleasant to use—leaves no greasy residue. Sold by most druggists, $1.00 and $2.00 a bottle or postpaid. Liberal trial bottle for 10c in stamps.

W. F. Young, P. D. F., 299 Lymans Bldg., Montreal, Can.

Stop Backaches

pain.

You will realize their value when you read what Mrs. J. P. T. Wedge, of Summerside P.E.L writes:

"Gin Pills are the greatest of all Kidney remedies and a medicine which is at present doing me a world of good. They are worth their weight in gold to any sufferer."

Get GIN PILLS to-day at your dealer's 50c. a box, or 6 boxes for $2.50. Trial treat ment FREE if you write

National Drug & Chemical Co. of Canada, Limited, Toronto

14th and K Sts., N. W.

Washington, D. C. THE New Cochran is just a short walk from the White House, Department Buildings, Churches, Theatres, Hotels and Shopping district.

The Hotel New Cochran combines all the comforts of home with the added luxuries of an up to date hotel.

RATES RAIES
European Plan Room without bath—
one person $1.50 and up Room with bath—
one person $2.00 and up

American Plan Room without bath— one person $3.50 and up Room with bath— one person $4.00 and up

Ask for booklet Eugene S. Cochran - Manager D GOOD CLUB COME COME COME AN

SELL HOLY PICTURES Given Away. Sterling Silver

Girls! The newest thing in jewelry. Elegant that money can buy—given for selling only 20 thrilling pictures of Sergt. O'Leary, V. C., the great Irish-Canadian hero; and magnificent Sacred Pictures in brilliant colors, exact copies of tamous sacred paintings: Crucifixion, Our Lady of the Rosary, the Redeemer of the World, Sacred Heart of Jesus, Immaculate Heart of Mary, Holy Family, etc. These big 16 x 20 inch pictures are well worth 50c. each, and at our price of ONLY 16c. EACH, you will often sell several in one home. ORDER TODAY; sell; return the money and, same day, we will send your solid sterling silver Friendship Bracelet, postpaid. The Empire Art Co., Dept. R. 97, Toronto, Ont.

Little Things Count

Art Co., Dept. R. 97, Toronto, Ont.

Even in a Match you should consider the "little things" -the wood-the composition - the strikeability - the

Eddy's Matches

Are made of strong dry pine stems, with a secret perfected composition that guarantees "Every Match a Light." 65 years of knowing how-that's the reason!

ALL EDDY PRODUCTS ARE DEPENDABLE PRODUCTS—ALWAYS

You Earn $100

when you buy a Sherlock-Manning 20th Cen our factory-to-buyer method of doing business Saving you fully $100, giving you the highest quality piano made anywhere, and protecting you on your purchase with our famous ten-year guarantee, we are justified in calling the

SHERLOCK-MANNING 20th Century Piano

"Canada's Biggest

Piano Value"

The big saving we effect is appealing with ith the big record of 1914 Write for handsome Art Catalogue "M" o-day, addressing Dept. 3.

THE SHERLOCK-MANNING PIANO CO. LONDON (No street address) CANADA

DRUNKENNESS CAN BE CURED

It is a disease - not a habit

Some years ago I was a heavy drinker. Demon drink had me in his grip. Friends, business, family were slipping from me. Ruin stared me in the face. But one friend remained, a physician. Through his efforts

I WAS SAVED

This man had made a scientific study of drunkenness as a disease. He had found a cure for it."

It was a case like this that made me It was a case like this that made me realize how many others were in need of aid, and determined me, if possible, to offer Samaria Prescription to the world. The treatment is absolutely different from others. It can be given without the patient's knowledge if desired. Thousands of wives, mothers, daughters and sisters have saved their men-folk from the curse of alchol through it.

IT CURES In a few days, all craving for alcohol is gone, and the patient is restored to health, happiness, family and friends, and the respect of all.

I am ready to tell you about it absolutely

FREE-SEND NO MONEY

Just send me your name and address, saying. "Please tell me how I can cure drunkenness," that is all you need to say. I will understand and will write you at once telling you all about my wonderful cure for DRUNKENNESS, and will also send you a TRIAL PACKAGE, which will show you how the treatment can be given without the PACKAGE, which will show you how the treatment can be given without the patient's knowledge. All this I will send you ABSOLUTELY FREE in a plain, sealed package, at once. Do not delay; send me a post card, or write me a letter to-day. Do not be afraid to send in your name. I always treat correspondence as sacredly con-fidential.

E. R. HERD, Samaria Remedy Co. 1421 Mutual Street Toronto, Canada

CHATS WITH YOUNG

MEN THE STONE WILL ROLL AWAY

Holy Scripture tells us that "when the Sabbain was past, Mary Magda-len, and Mary the mother of James, and Salome, bought sweet spices. that coming they might anoint Jesus, and they said one to another: Who shall roll us back the stone from the door of the sepulchre? And looking. they saw the stone rolled back. For it was very great." (St. Mark xvi. I. When a hard thing is to be done, the natural inclination of most of us is to allow ourselves to think on the effort necessary to do it. inad of going ahead and doing it. And here we make one of the most common mistakes in our lives. When one is confronted by a severe a duty which seems almost beyond one's powers, it is fatal to pause consider its difficulties. Never mind how hard it may seem, nothing should be tolerated in the mind except the accomplishing it. It is a wise economy in daily life to train the mind to take the attitude of determination in the beginning; to be deat to the self which insists upon to take the affection of the young dwelling on difficulties, and at once to bring into action the self that is determined to succeed. Most persons have had the experience of looking back over an accomplished task with amused surprise at the exaggerated idea they entertained of its difficulty before hand. Do the thing first and consider its difficulty afterwards.-The Missionary.

THE TRANSFORMATION OF A KICK

Sometimes a knock is a boostwhat seems a misfortune turns out to be a blessing in disguise. Adversity, hard struggle, defeat, narrow circumstances, are, if courage be not lost, merely obstacles to be overcome by a further exertion of strength The exercise will develop will power. grif, manliness, independence, and fortitude. The very obstacles may lead the way to final victory.

He had seemed to be without ambition, worthless, absolutely unsuccessful, in short amounting to nothing. Then the kick came. lost his job and everybody said it was the end of him-there was nothing he could do.

But that kick aroused him-it stirred his sleeping energies, it fired his ambition, it kindled his indignation and he vowed he'd prove himself -and he did.

Someone must have discovered a latent spark of ability for our unfor-tunate was induced to take up life insurance. He worked early late, he studied his own weak points and those of his competitors—he learned every special feature of his own company's policies and exploited them and first and last and all the time he talked protection. He made the one appeal that never fails, he came back always to first principles. to the original idea of life insurance -protection for the family and the home and this he dwelt upon with increasing success. He was only another example of which we have all seen many-of the change made in some men when dire disaster threatens them. He had drifted along getting some sort of living and might have gone on in way for ever-just barely existing when what seemed a tragedy occurred, but it was a kick that proved to be a boost-a blessing in Some men go under when such a kick comes, but a few swing around completely and show their mettle, all their strength, all their fighting blood is roused and they car. fight the world back, blow for blow, and slowly they gain ground. When one learns to put fear aside —fear of losing one's position, fear of all the nameless ills with which imagination threatens us, then does one gain strength and poise. Then there is opportunity for the best selfexpression, the best development.

The worst had happened to our agent, he had nothing more to fear and this seemed to give him a new courage for the fight. Pride car his rescue and would not permit him sink under the misfortune and thus the kick which was supposed to be his undoing proved a ward heights undreamed of in former unambitious years.

We are none of us eager to suffer reverses in order to prove ability, we are always praying that misfortune may pass by our door. But how often do we need just some such spur

If we would shake off dull slothif we only keep our ambition reined up and ready to go a smart pace— but human nature is lazy and even from earliest childhood we do our tasks better for promised rewards.

So the kick that at first seems like a death blow often proves, as in this case, the beginning of a successful business, to say nothing of the awakening to good of the whole nature of

If we would only take what life us in the right spirit we should learn to transform many a into a blessing.—Catholic Columbian.

The teaching of theologians even though unanimous, will not make matter of divine faith; but their consent creates an intellectual tradition against which no man can set his judgment without rashness. We should be rash if we measured ourselves against any one of them; we should be more rash if we set ourselves against their unanimous

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

TOO LATE

Out of the negative failures, which rob life of so much that is fair and sweet, few things can compare with the habit of taking for granted that our friends will understand our love and gratitude, and appreciation, all without a word on our part. Strangely enough it often happens that the girl who is quite outspoken in her affection and admiration where outsiders are concerned leaves the home folk to take everything on

The girl who does not think her nother a pattern of beautiful unselfishness is something of a rarity, and yet there are comparatively few mothers who have their daughters' assurance on that point. If the average girl was half as likely to tell her sister that her new dress is wonderfully becoming, and to compliment her on the way she is getting ahead in her music, as she is to make the same agreeable statements to some new acquaintance, family life would take on a new charm.

But perhaps it is the fathers of households who most of all are left people for granted. Afterthe sudden death of a New York business man not many years ago, his oldes daughter seemed absolutely inconsolable. So passionate was her grief that her friends were given to remonstrate with her, and talk of resignation.

'You don't understand," she cried. "I'm not mourning for my father, but for myself and my lost opportunities. Oh, how he has worked all these years. He was off in the morning before any of us were up, and home at night, too tired to share in any of our pleasures. He made a fortune for us, but his board and clothing were all he got out of it. And I, along with the rest, took it as my right, and never even told him that I loved him for his self forgetful-

After it is too late, one recalls such things with blank wonder. How could it have happened that the little tender word that would have meant so much was never spoken? did it happen that love and sacrifice were accepted as a matter of course, and those who gave them were left to take our gratitude for granted? There is no answer to the question, except an unceasing heartache, for those of us who have let our chances slip. But some of you who are making this mistake, have the opportunity to retrieve the past, and put into words all that your heart feels.-Catholic Sun.

TWO APPLES

Such nice rosy apples as they were! Bennett fondled them lovingly. His mother had set the dish upon the study table just before she left to make can evening call. Bennett selected the rosiest one he father. Then she sat looking at the

"I'll take the next rosiest one my it to night. I'll take it to school with me to-morrow."

'That is a good idea. I'll not eat mine, either," Mr. Rockwell observed, handling his apple thoughtfully. "I'll take it to the office with me to morrow. Then we'll both report to morrow night how they tasted," he added.

The next morning both left the house. each with a rosy-cheeked apple stowed away in his pocket.

"Good bye, son; hops you'll enjoy your apple," Mr. Rockwell called back as he ran to catch a passing electric

Bennett had polished his apple until it was so slippery it slid around in his pocket like a big marble.

Recess time came. He had been thinking constantly about the rosy apple in his pocket that it fairly into his hand when he filed out behind Jimmy Fagan, who never was known to have anything in his pocket, unless it might happen to be a hole.

Suddenly a bright thought popped into Bennett's head. And quick as the thought the apple popped from his hand into Jimmy's pocket. When Jimmy discovered it, the boy's were playing tag.

Then that apple slid out of Jimmy's pocket just as easily as it had slipped into it, the polishing that Bennett had given it had been so thorough. It disappeared, too, just about as quickly. For when a little boy hasn't tasted an apple for weeks and weeks, and then suddenly finds one in his pocket, he doesn't stop long to wonder how it got there; he just goes to eating.

"Well, son, how did the apple taste?" Mr. Rockwell queried when the two were alone in the study together at the twilight hour.

"I-I didn't eat it," Bennett stammered, hanging his head. 'Didn't eat it? What did you do with is? "I-I slipped it into Jimmy Fagan's pocket papa. Jimmy never has an apple, and I thought perhaps he'd like one. How did yours taste?"

Bennett asked. "I didn't eat mine, either, son ; I gave it to a newsboy," his father con-

Then a smile lit up both faces, as both thought how they had enjoyed those two rosy cheeked apples.-Ex.

Never think it is too late to touch

A POET'S SERMON

In a "Poet's Corner" we chanced on a new version of the old story of St. Philip Neri and the penitent whose tongue "did speak a vile, malicious lie" of one he judged to be his enemy. The lie did its work. Men passed by the slandered man with looks of scorn; old friends stood aloof; no one seemed to pity him as his face paled and his lips trembled when insult followed insult. The slanderer revelled in the result of his evil deed. Revenge was sweet, and he gratified it to satiety. Then came the reaction. The prompting of his better self made him see at would call back the lie .

But when I sought to call it home again, Alas! though black and foul it had gone forth, I knew it not in very truth for mine Hailed and caught up and hurled as it had been

By eager friends who call such

So the penitent sought St. Philip, asking:

Father, what shall my great atonement be! can I unto him whom I have wronged. And unto God Whose truth I have deformed, Make reparation for this mighty

The saint looked at the sinner with a reproachful yet compassionate glance, and bade him : My son go thou into the market place, Take thence a bird the archer has brought down. With dead, limp feathers waiting to be plucked.

Take these between thy fingers, one by one. Gazing not in thy walk to right or Marking not which way this one floats, or that. But still pursuing thy appointed way Until the dead bird in thy hand lies left.

bare; Then backward turning, stooping in thy path, Unlift each tiny feather lying low,

Missing not one from out the scatter ed shower: Then will thy sin return to thee dis armed

Powerlass as when its poison lay undrained, Then will thy reparation be complete.'

Aghast, the penitent protested that the task was beyond the power of man to accomplish. A bird's feathers airy and light, floating hither and thither on the breeze, could not be gathered back. The wind had borne them where sight and touch could reach them nevermore.

'Thou sayest well," the patient saint replied. And thus the breath of slander wafted far Into the market places of the world Bearath its scent of plague, its poison On waves that widen and return no

From the vast sea of everlasting death.

The poet draws the moral thus :

Even so, good friends and neighbors Read we the page, con we its lesson

And, while we seek its moral other where, Take heed lest haply it may touch ourselves.

"Take heed!" To day, as in St Philip's time, a reputation is easily smirched by an evil tongue; irreparable injury is done by the malicious lie, by idle gossip. - Sacred Heart

Review.

THE CHURCH IN ENGLAND

In examining a new issue of the Catholic Directory for Great Britain, the Universe of London asks: "Is only absolutely but relatively? Unfortunately, the question can not be answered unless against the figures of conversions we can set figures of leakage, and that we presume, is impossible-at least, with anything approaching accuracy. Nevertheless the number of conversions is considerable-9.034; this figure, be it noted, being for the year 1914. In proporting to the total population the province of Liverpool shows a greater increase than the provinces of Westminster or Birmingham. Another evidence of growth is to be found in the statistics of marriages. In 1914 the number celebrated wa 13,729 (excluding the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man), an increase of 380 over the previous year, of 1,014 over 1913, and of 1,727 over 1912 When we come to the statistics relating to priests and churches, we find that in England and Wales at the end of last year there were 3,892 secular and regular clergy and 1,891 churches, chapels and stations, the latter including only those where a weekly Mass is celebrated. As compared with the previous year, the clergy show a decrease of ninety-three; but it may be pointed out a soul. One more prayer, one more that there are about 300 Army chapappeal, tender and strong, too, one lains, many of whom are not included more act of self sacrifice offered in in this year's total. The churches silence, may prove to be the trumpet show a gratifying increase of that shall level the walls of Jericho.

Are you scrupulous? If you are perhaps you pride yourself that the cause is a highly sensitive spirituality But a great Catholic theologian Lehmkuhl, enumerates other prob able reasons: 1 A melancholy and timid disposition 2 A diseased state of the brain and of the nervous system.

3 Weakness caused by overwork, study or austerities. Weakness of judgment.

Pride and self-conceit.
Suggestion by reading scrupu-of his better self made him see at lous authors or coming under the in-last the enormity of his offense. He fluence of a too scrupulous confessor. As the causes of scrupulosity are often purely physical, physicians are often called upon to handle such cases. Their offses are not, as a confessor's are apt to be, concerned with moral problems purely. But they classify all such patients under the head of those who are laboring under fixed ideas.

In the first class of fixed ideas, the intellect alone is concerned. An example of this sort is one who is 'datt" on the subject of arithmeticlike the ecclesiastical student who attended Mass at a certain church, Sunday after Sunday, in order to count the number of men, women and children who were there.

In the second class the emotions as well as the intellect are concerned Here is where scruples are placed. The scrupulous person is obsessed with the idea that he is committing sin, and is morbidly auxious about it—like the worker in a cocoa factory who became fearful that the poisonous taught to resist his unhealthy

In the third class come those who have lost all control over their will.

to recommend his penitent to see a doctor, or he will himself advise a holiday or feeding up. As the scruples are nothing but empty fears, he will briefly point this out to his penitent, and as the scrupulous state has been formed by indulging those fears, the confessor will take care as far as possible to stop the process of fostering them. He will not allow anything to be said about them, they must not be confessed, nor even thought about if that is possible. With this object in view, he will prescribe constant occupation in interesting work of one form or in the same way that a horse is taught to face objects at which it is accustomed to shy.

If the scruples have their origin in indiscreet fervor, the penitent should be taught that God asks for reasonable service, and that spiritual progress, if it is to be lasting, is always slow and gradual. If the cause is some form of pride, the con-

An humble consciousness of one's weakness and a consequent trust in God are great safeguards against the danger of scruples.—New

CAN PROTESTANTS BE SAVED?

Oftener than one would suppose red lead used in fastening certain hot is this question put by non-Catholics pipes would become mixed with the to priests who are conducting a cocoa. He used to clean and reclean mission, or to Catholics in a course mission, or to Catholics in a course the tine. Finally, five years after he stopped manufacturing, he read of a the query is put in a satisfical sense, child dying from some chocolate she had eaten, and thereupon accused bent on knowing the truth, one canhimself of killing her. The will of not always say; but the fact remains for Swiss Catholics, and which has the scrupulous person is not, however, gone, and he therefore can still be that take place between Protestants and the people of our faith, the non-Catholic is desirous of knowing the Catholic position with regard to those outside the pale of the true

ARE YOU SCRUPULOUS? Thomas Slater, S. J., also take care a good life, love God and their neighor, and are blamelessly ignorant of the just claims of the Catholic religion to be the only one true religion (which is ca led being in good faith) are excluded from heaven, provided they believe that there is one God in three Divine persons; that God will duly reward the good and punish the wicked; that Jasus Christ is the Son of God made man, Who redeemed us, and in Whom we must trust for our salvation, and provided they thor-oughly repent of having ever, by their sins, offended God. Catholics hold that Protestants who have these dispositions and who another. Such indirect remedies are often most effective, but they should have no suspicion of their religion being false, and no means to discover, be supplemented by direct or fail in their honest endeavors to against the scrupulous dread, much discover the true religion, and who are so disposed in their heart that they would at any cost embrace the Catholic religion, if they knew it to be the true one, are Catholics in spirit and in some sense within the Catholic Church without themselves knowing it. She holds that these Christians belong to and are united to the "soul" as it is called of the Catholic Church, although they are fessor will know how to adminster a not united to the visible body of the paternal spubbing when the occasion Church by external communion with her and by the cutward profession of her faith,-The Missionary

LEADERS IN SWITZERLAND

Switzerland is happy in having three Catholics occupying the most important positions in her national affairs at the present time. The president of the Helvetic senate or premier, as we should say, M. Python is a veteran Catholic of the Fribourg canton, which has already given
Miss Blanche Rose, a well-known Monsignor Colliard to the Bishopric of Lausanne and Geneva. M.
Python was largely responsible for the foundation of the University of Fribourg, which has done so much for Swiss Catholics, and which has rendered great scientific and literary services to the world in general.
The vice president of the Council of State, M. le Landemann Bueler, who was recently feted at Morgarten, is also a Catholic, and the so ual president of Switzerland. M. Mosta, who Here belong kleptomaniacs, dipsomaniacs, and many other instances.

When the confessor realizes that scruples are caused by physical degeneration, he will, while prescribing other remedies, according to the confessor remedies, according to the confessor remedies, according to the confessor remedies are caused by physical degeneration, he will, while prescribing other remedies, according to the confessor realizes that such confessor realizes that scruples are caused by physical degeneration, he will, while prescribing other remedies, according to the confessor reply as comes from the Italian Canton of the confessor realizes that such comes from the Italian Canton of Ticino, is also a Catholic. Thus the three divisions of the federal states, the French, the German and the confessor realizes that can of switzerland, M. Motta, who comes from the Italian Canton of Ticino, is also a Catholic. Thus the three divisions of the federal states, the French, the German and the confessor required shade. This will make a gray the cost. Apply to the dent of Switzerland, M. Motta, who comes from the Italian Canton of Ticino, is also a Catholic. Thus the three divisions of the federal states, the French, the German and the confessor required shade. This will make a gray the cost of the confessor required shade. This will make a gray the cost of the federal states, the french of the confessor required shade. This will make a gray the cost of the federal states, the french of the confessor required shade. This will make a gray the cost of the federal states, the first of the federal states, the first of the federal states, the first of the federal states, the federal states are considered to the federal states, the federal states, the federal states, the f lic exponents in the government of the federation at the present time.

Actress Tells Secret

Well Known Actress Tells How She Darkened Her Gray Hair and Promoted Its Growth With a Simple Home Made Mixture

FIFTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT OF

THE HURON AND ERIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION

The Fifty-Second Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders was The Fitty-Second Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders was held at the Corporation's Office in London, Ontario, on Wednesday, February 9th, 1916. The President, Mr. T. G. Meredith, K.C., took the chair, and Mr. M. Aylsworth acted as Secretary.

The Annual Report and Financial Statement were submitted as follows:

After defraying the expenses of management and all other charges, and making allow ctual and possible losses, the balance available for distribution is $450,542.14, as follows Brought forward from the previous year's account... Net profits upon the past year's business....

Of which the following disposition has been made:
Four quarterly dividends of 3 per cent. each (making the total distrittion 12 per cent)....
Government and Business Tax Government and Business 14a.
War Tax.
Set aside for Transfer to Pension Fund
Set aside for Transfer to British Red Cross Fund Transferred to Branch Extension Fund Transferred to Reserve Fund.
Transferred for Geserve Fund

cent. of the paid-up Capital.

The sum of $10,000 has been set aside for transfer to the Pension Fund, and $1,500 for transfer to the British Red Cross Fund. The Shareholders will be asked to approve these fers.

The Corporation has no real estate on hand other than office premises, all properties which come into the passession of the Corporation by foreclosure, failure to obtain purchasers power of sale, or otherwise, having been sold.

The Directors desire to bear testimony to the very efficient manner in which the Officers e Corporation have discharged their respective duties.
All of which is respectfully submitted.

Statement for Year Ending December 31st, 1915 ASSETS AND LIABILITIES ..$5,378,117 94 ... 3,651,007 69 ... 2,394,623 00 ... 92,748 69 $11,516,497 32

Canadian Debentures.

Deposits
Interest accrued but not due

To the Shareholders:
To Capital Stock paid up.
To Reserve Fund
To Officers' Pension Fund
To Officers' Pension Fund
To Branch Extension Fund
To Quarterly Dividend No. 113, due 3rd January, 1916, at 3 per cent. .$2,458,414 93 5,492,759 92 $17,009,257 24 By Cash Value of Mortgages Less amount retained to pay prior mortgages By Office Premises
By Dominion, Provincial and Municipal Debentures
By other Bonds and Securities
By Canada Trust Company Stock at cost.
(Value on basis of Reserve, $1,395,111.50)
By Cash in Office.
By Cash in Bank 1,141,943 77 $17,009,257 24 PROFIT AND LOSS To Four Quarterly Dividends of 3 per cent each
To Government and Business Tax To War Tax...
To Set Aside for Transfer to Pension Fund...
To Set Aside for Transfer to British Red Cross Fund...
To Transferred to Branch Extension Fund.
To Transferred to Reserve Fund
To Balance ..$ 292,297 70 ... 5,821 11 ... 10,882 87 ... 10,000 00 ... 1,500 00 ... 10,000 00 ... 79,378 27 ... 40,662 19 $450,542 14

By Balance Brought Forward ..$ 22,344 80 By Profits for the year, after paying Interest on Debentures and Deposits, defraying Expenses of Management and all other charges, and making allowance for actual and possible losses HUME CRONYN, General Manager. $450,542 14 RESERVE FUND AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS
 Reserve on 31st December, 1914
 $ 2,767,883
 56

 Transferred from Premiums on Stock
 53,228
 17

 Transferred from Profits on 31st December, 1915
 79,378
 27
 Undivided Profits for 1915

Reserve Fund and Undivided Profits on 31st December, 1915.....

AUDITORS' REPORT

$2,940,662 19

We hereby certify that for the year ending December 31st, 1915, we have audited the Booka and accounts and have examined the Securities of The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation, except those of its branches at Regina and Winnipeg. All our requirements as Auditors have been complied with, and in our opinion the above statements are properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Corporation's affairs as shown by its books. The Books and Accounts of the Branches at Regina and Winnipeg have been audited and the Securities there have been examined by Mr. J. C. Pope, C. A., and by Messrs. Lang & Turner, C. A., respectively, and the results as certified to by them are incorporated in the above statements. A., respectively, and the results as certified tents.

London, January 25th, 1916. M. H. ROWLAND, F. G. JEWELL, C. A., Auditors. DIRECTORS—The following directors were re-elected for the ensuing year: T. G. Meredith, K. C., President; (ume Cronyn, First Vice-President; F. E. Leonard, Second Vice-President George T. Brown, F. R. Eccles, M. D., Robert Fox, H. E. Gates, A. H. M. Graydon, Philir Proceeds.

FOURTEENTH ANNUAL REPORT

THE CANADA TRUST COMPANY

(Managed in Connection with The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation) The Fourteenth Annual General Meeting of the Shareholders was held at the Company's Office in London, Ontario, on Monday, February 7th, 1916. The President, Mr. T. G. Meredith, K. C., took the chair, and Mr. M. Aylsworth acted as Secretary.

The Annual Report and Financial Statement were submitted as After defraying the Expenses of management and all other charges and making allowance for actual and possible losses, the balance available for distribution is $122,389,15, as follows:

Brought forward from the previous year's account. $5,388 38

Net profits upon the past year's business. $17,002 77

$122,389 15

The Reserve Fund now amounts to $435,000, or 43 1-2 per cent, of the Company's paid-up capital. The accounts, vouchers and securities have been duly examined by the Auditors, whose report is appended.

The Directors desire to bear testimony to the very efficient manner in which the Officers of the Company have discharged their respective duties.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

London, January 28th, 1916.

T. G. MEREDITH, President.

Statement as at December 31st, 1915

LIABILITIES Capital Account Reserve Fund : 31st December, 1914...... Added 31st December, 1915..... Balance at Credit of Profit and Loss. $1,472,392 15 Guaranteed Funds: Sum for Investment . .$3,045,144 45 3,045,144 45 Estate Funds — Estate moneys for Investment...
Unrealized Assets..... 1,754,332 01

$6,271,868 61 ASSETS Capital Account:

By Cash Value of Mortgages and Municipal Debentures.

Less Retained to pay assumed Mortgages...... ..$1,399,021 54 47,153 82 $1,351,867 73 Call Loans on Municipal Debentures, etc.. Real Estate on hand...... Cash on hand and in Banks..... $1,472,392 15 Guaranteed Funds: 3,045,144 45 Estate Funds: Cash Value of Mortgages, Bonds and Debentures.... ..$1,150,997 97 ...503,591 00 ...99,743 04

$6,271,868 61 HUME CRONYN, General Manager. PROFIT AND LOSS 59,994 00 55,000 00 7,395 15 To addition to Reserve...
To Balance..... CR. $122,389 15 By Balance from 1914 .

By Net Profits for the year, including Interest Earned, after defraying expense Management and all other charges, and making allowance for actual and post losses . $ 5,386 38 117,002 77

AUDITORS' REPORT We hereby certify that for the year ending December 31st, 1915, we have audited the Booka and accounts and have examined the Securities of The Canada Trust Company, except those of its branches at Regina and Winnipeg. All our requirements as Auditors have been compiled with, and in our opinion the above statements are properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and accounts of the Branches at Regina and Winnipeg have been audited and the Securities there have been examined by Mr. J. C. Pope, C. A., and by Messrs, Laing & Turner, C. A., respectively, and the results as certified to by them are incorporated in the above statements.

M. H. ROWLAND, Auditors London, January 25th, 1916. DIRECTORS—The following directors were elected for the ensuing year: T. G. Meredith K. C., President; F. R. Eccles, M. D., Vice-President; H. S. Blackburn, H. E. Gates, George T Brown, A. H. M. Graydon, Isaac Campbell, K. C., F. E. Leonard, E. P. Clement, K. C., J. B McKillop, John Cowan, K. C., V. Cronyn, K. C., R. O. McCulloch, Robt. Fox, Philip Poccok The Hon. F. G. MacDiarmid, Hume Cronyn.

"I USED TO BE AGAINST THE ROMANS'

"I used to be as hard as any one at home against the Romans," wrote a young Scotchman to his father re-cently, "but after what I have seen out here you can count on me when there is anything to be done in the way of knocking out the men who do say the Catholic priests aren't among the finest Christians that God ever put the breath of life into.

'Although I have been brought up a strict Protestant, I must plainly express that I have never seen nor ever heard of such heroism as these priests show. They practically fight among themselves to be able to go into the first line of trenches, and when the wounded are brought into our ambulances and are beyond aid the priest will suffer any danger to be able to pray by their side. I have never seen one of them show any signs of weariness.

"I trust that this letter will not bore you, but my opinion of the Catholic priests will always be of the highest, although my religion will never change from Protestant." . . . The life story of one of these priests, whose name is known today from one end of France to another, Gilbers de Gironde, who fell at Ypres Dec. 7, 1914, is one of glorious heroism. They are speaking of him in words of hushed veneration all along the firing line; and in the streets of Paris, where before the war only mockery and irreligion dwelt to a great extent, they are mentioning his name as the flower of the army. They are saying that in him the and soldier have met and embraced and that he stands today as the very ideal of all that betokens gallantry and the fame of France.

was born of a noble family and was a refined gentleman from the south of France. He was a brilliant scholar, an excellent soldier, an incomparable leader of men. He had all the quick intuition of the artist and he possessed the soul of a saint. His military career lasted just four months and seven days, but it has left upon the army of France an impression so extraordinary that his name stands out alone among her Gilbert de Gironde was born thirty four years ago on May 9, 1881, in the ancestral home of his family at Tou-louse, from which in the course of ages many a gallant soldier had gone to meet his death bravely on the field of battle. He was pious, but there was nothing narrow or childish about his spirit of devotion. He was strong. minded and independent, but it was an independence coupled with docility, obedience and loyalty to his superiors. On a flyleaf of his prayer book, which is still preserved at his college, are written the words: "Video, possum, volo." (I see, I can,

After leaving college he began the study of law and he threw himself with all the ardor of his young man hood into the Association of Catholic Youth, which was being organised at that time to offset the immoral philosophic tendencies current in so many intellectual circles before the war It was on account of this exceptional field of activity or service for others that his thoughts were directed toward the priesthood.

What his mother, the Vicomtesse de Gironde, felt at this news is easy to conceive. Her only son, as handsome as he was well torn, the light of his grandfather's life and the fond hope of the family name, was about to enter beyond the gates of the house of God on earth and leave all his wealth, his honors and his advantages behind him. She was too much the Catholic mother to oppose carrying out his desire.

His week's retreat before being ordained was spent in the quiet and solitude of Tronchiennes and on Friday, July 31, 1914, he returned to Enghien, and that same night Russia and Belgium sent out their mobilization call, which was followed in France by the call to arms on the following morning. He was ordained to the priesthood on Sunday, Aug. 2.

Immediately afterward he started for Montpelier to take up his post as private in the ranks of the 81st regiment of infantry. On his way to Montpelier he stopped at Toulouse to visit his mother, the Vicomtesse de Gironde. From Montpelier his regi-ment went to Gerberville, in Lorraine, where on Aug. 30 he received his baptism of fire.

Twice during the engagement he gave the soldiers a general absolu-tion after they had repeated aloud with him the act of contrition, and he proved himself the support and the consoler of his men, He volunteered for dangerous missions so simply and quietly that it seemed quite natural to let him go. During the night after the battle of Gerberville, he was known to be absent from his place, and he came back shortly re dawn the next morning, and, calling the stretcher bearers to him. he pointed out a farmhouse nearby

"I believe that in that farmhouse there are twelve French wounded soldiers whom you might remove to the hospital."

The ambulance men learned afterward that Father de Gironde had carried these men single handed one by one during the night to the shelter of the farm.

He was a born leader with a marvelous influence over his soldiers, and by September officers and men recognized that in the young priest dwelt an extraordinary amount of personal bravery. They all acknowl-edged, even the roughest among them, that no heart could possess a finer sense of duty.

"We have an extraordinary man in our regiment," one of the soldiers at remunerative rates of interest, and the loaning of these funds at a count, and he fights like the very devil !"

On Nov. 27 he was named sublieutenant of his company for having sought out the wounded in the very near Ypres. Two days later another brave act in leading his men caused his further promotion as lieutenant. His men now began to look upon him as the possessor of a charmed life, so accustomed had they become to seeing him pass untouched through the enemy's bullets. "If I did not hesitate to use a pagan word about one so thoroughly a Christian," mydivision!"

On Dec. 6 the company to which

Father de Gironde belonged was ordered to occupy the trenches nearest the enemy. He had heard of a certain spot just beyond these trenches where several French sol-diers were lying in a heap, where they had fallen in an attack the day previous. It was an exposed spot and he was warned not to try to danger was so great that the French had not yet removed the bodies of

The company took up their posi tion in the trenches, and early the next morning before daylight Father de Gironde crept out of the trench he was in and made his way to the dangerous spot where the French soldiers were lying. It seems that he had watched that spot for a long while through his periscope and was convinced that the men were not dead. He knew that they were mortally wounded, but he knew also that his duty was to give them the conso-lations of religion before they went to meet their Maker.

When he reached the men he found this to be true, for one of them gave a cry of relief as De Gironde water bottle between his lips. That cry was Father de Gironde's end. In an instant from several quarters bullets whizzed ast his head and lodged in his arms and back, and finally one of them reached him fatally.

When the dawn came and his comades saw him lying out over the dead bodies of the French soldiers with arms stretched out in the form of a cross their fury knew no bounds. and in a wild torrent of rage they swept out of their trenches and took the position at the point of the bayonet, driving the enemy in flight be-tore them. Tenderly they gathered Father de Gironde into their arm and that same night, in the little village of Verbranden, about two miles from Ypres, they buried him with full military honors.

'It was one of the most impressive funerals I have ever witnessed," wrote his colonel. "In the darkness only a few officers accompanied the men who carried the body, but the cannon of both armies, echoing in the distance, gave the most solemn homage that has ever accompanied a hero's interment."

Father de Gironde was middle sized in stature, was always respect-ful to his chiefs and always ready to obey an order from his superiors Without affectation, without any change of expression and without any touch of fear he advanced under the shells and the bullets, helping everybody, giving a word of courage to this one and a word of consolation to that, and in everything that he did wearing the white flower of a blameless, sincere life, which will deavor of those in charge to incul-make his name linger forever in the annals of the army of France; for the highest ideals of Christian life, her son's wishes, but she persuaded him to wait for some time before "greater love bath no man than this, together with an abiding loyalty to that a man lay down his life for his friends."

(These excerpts are from a letter by Dr. Peter Guilday. The complete article appeared in The Chicago Daily News of January 29.)

STRIKING INCREASES IN CANADIAN BUSINESS

STRONG LONDON INSTITUTIONS PRE-SENT RECORD STATEMENTS OF

The result of the 52nd year's work of the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation appears in another column of this issue, together with the 14th annual statement of the Canada Trust Company.

In comparing the reports with those of the previous year, many interesting features present them selves. The City of London and the wide spread farming community of which it is the hub have long been famed for the prosperity of their residents The increase during 1915 of over $900,000 in savings deposits and investments as shown by these institu-tions, not only adds to the financial importance of this banner section of Ontario, but also reveals in no un certain manner the confidence of all classes of people in the Huron and Eric and the Canada Trust Company, and the appreciation of their services in the community.2

Large additions have been made during the year to the already ample security afforded investors and depositors. The paid-up capital and reserve fund of the Huron and Erie now, totals over $5,300,000, while the Canada Trust Company now has surplus security of over $1,440,000.

The combined assets of both institutions now amount to over twenty-three million dollars, an institutions now amount to over twenty three million dollars, an increase during 1915 of $1,277,858.16 hunger and thirst for adventure; having been made,

The field of service of the Huron of each individual will play some part, and Eris lies in the gathering of sav-ings deposits, the issue of debentures current rates mainly upon the secur ity of first mortgages covering choice

Canadian real estate The Canada Trust Company has two chief branches of service, that of the sate investment of funds, and teeth of the enemy's guns. His regi-ment was then ordered to the trenches that of the care of estates, and the past year has seen great activity in both departments. In the investment department sums of $100 and apwards are accepted at excellent interest rates, and over $3,000,000 has now been invested by the public in this way.

Most careful attention is given by a trained staff to the important work about one so thoroughly a Christian," said his commanding officer, "I would call Father de Gironde the fetich of mydivision!"

On Dec 6 the company to which inexperienced heirs, appreciate the security, economy and privilege of appointing a never dying executor such as the Canada Trust Company.

These progressive institutions are under the same management and control, Mr. T. G. Meredith, K. C. City Solicitor of London, being President, and Mr. Hume Cronyn being General Manager of both The Huron reach them in the daytime, for the and Erie and the Canada Trust Company.

THE ST. THOMAS OFFICES It is expected that the new St. Thomas offices at 472.474 Talbot street, which are in charge of Manager Gordon C. McConechy, will be ready for occupancy very shortly.

NEW CORPORATIONIS LAUNCHED AT OTTAWA

HEADED BY CANADIANS The National Cash Register Company, of Canada, Limited, is the style of a company which has recently secompany's capital of $1,000,000 is all paid up.

The Canadian business of the National Cash Register Company has heretofore been operated as a branch of the National Cash Register Company, of Dayton, Ohio, which concern is recognized as one of the most highly organized manufacturing and selling organizations in the world.

The Canadian business has been under the management of Mr. H. J. Daly, who will be managing director of the new corporation. The other officers of the new company will be made up of Canadians entirely, with Mr. W. J. Irvine as assistant manager, Mr. C. H. Rooke as office manager, and Mr. W. L. Tobias as factory superintendent.

The large plant on Christie Street, Toronto, is said to be one of the most modern and efficient manufacturing institutions on this continent and the company, in completing this plant have had in mind the growth of Canada for many years to come. The National Cash Register Comany, of Canada, Limited, will concentrate its efforts on devising and manufacturing modern money-saving systems for stores and offices.

THE NEWMAN CLUB

By John Callahan, President

The Newman Club is an organization formed by His Grace, Archbishop McNeil, to guard the temporal and spiritual interests of the Catholic students attending Toronto University and Osgoode Hall. Although it has been in existence for only three years it numbers some two hundred members. It has been and is the enwhat is best in Canadian citizenship.

That success has crowned their efforts is manifested in the enlisting of some twenty members in oversea regiments.

The past presidents of the club, Dr. Vincent O'Gorman and Mr. Wm. J. O'Brien, are now on active service. One member, Mr. H. Kelleher, met death in Flanders. One other, Lieut. Thomas D'Arcy Leonard, was seriously wounded. Some twenty other members are either at the front or in training.

When it is taken into consideration that some are physically unfit for military service, that some, too, are not of military age, that some for family reasons, cannot go, and that in the club there are sixty or more young ladies, it will be seen that the Newman Club has given one in every five to the cause of their country.

The end is not yet. Some twenty-five are in the Officers' Training Corps. A large percentage of these may be relied upon to do their duty.

The Toronto Daily News.

GOD IN OUR THOUGHTS

Practice to make God thy last thought at night when thou sleepest and thy first thought when thou wakest; so shall thy fancy be sanctifled in the night, and thy understand ing be rectified in the day; so shall thy rest be peaceful and thy labors prosperous.

God, while blessing the earth with its beautiful and precious things, wants for Himself only the spirits of angels and the hearts of men. -

The history of the past proves that desolate islands do not remain desothat some day in some way the life even though it be a small one, in the rounding out of the eternal plan

Riddle of the Neighborhood atter how early her neighbors got up, shing was always first on the line.

There are 5 important points about a Washing Machine: 1. Does it Wash Clean?

2. Is it Easily Operated?

3. Does it Wash with Speed?
The "1900" Gravity Washer takes just six minutes to wash a tub full of very direct plaths.

Is the Tub Well Built?

18 the Tub Well Built?
The "1900" Gravity tub is made of Virginia White Cedar, which we know, from 90. years' experience, is positively the best wood for making washing machines. It is bound together with heavy galvanized steel wire hoops, which will not break, rust, or fall off. The tub is detachable—an important feature. Need this Machine. It will Save You

Try it at our expense. We will send it to you for free trial, without a cent deposit. Do as many washings with it as you like within the trial period, and you then find that you can afford to do without it send it back at our expense. If you want to keep it as we know you will, pay for it out of what it save you, week by week, ble. a week if you like, until it is paid for. If you want to know specially about ou trial offer, better address me personally.

A. A. MORRIS, MANAGER 1900 WASHER COMPANY 357 YONGE STREET, TORONTO

St. Patrick and Easter Cards GIVEN AWAY Luminous Crucifix

WONDERFUL! MYSTICAL! The exquisitely moulded metal Corpus shines white by day, and by night irradiates a glorious, mysterious light, from the highly polished black cross. Height 14 inches, width 5 inches, Perfectly visible in the darkest room. A priceless treasure for the nursery or the bed chamber—a blessing to the arsery or the bed chamber—a blessing to the ck; a comfort to the weary. Absorbs the light of day and sheds a steady glow all through the ght. Everlastingly luminous. The regular ish price of this marvelous Crucifix is $5.00 but hat all may possess one, we will present this easure as a reward for selling only $5.40 worth the pretitiest and greenest St. Patrick cards DIED O'GORMAN.—At Ennismore, on Feb. 11th, Mary McCue, wife of Jeremiah O'Gorman, aged fifty-eight years. May her soul rest in peace.

Marshall.—At Ottawa, on February 12, 1916, Mr. John C. Marshall, aged thirty nine years. May his soul

TEACHERS WANTED

CATHOLIC TEACHER WANTED FOR Public school. Nearly all Catholic schools. Good Catholic boarding place. Will pay Sr calendar months for 2nd grade teacher. For particulars apply to Rev. T. P. Caraher, Marquis, Saak. 1949-1

HOUSEKEEPER WANTED on accepted, testimonial from parish pries be required. Apply to Box T. CATHOLI CORD, London, Ont. 1948-2

PRIVATE NURSES EASILY EARN $25 weekly. Learn without leaving home. Booklet free. Royal College of Science, Spadina Ave., Toronto, Canada.

YOUNG LADIES WHO DESIRE TO ENTER a Training School for Nurses, may apply to St. Joseph Sanitarium, Mt. Clemens, Mich.
Applicants must have a good education. Address
Sisters of Charity, Mt. Clemens, Mich. 1946-4

WANTED WANTED
WANTED GOOD HEALTHY CATHOLIC woman, about fifty years of age, to keep house for young widower, with three small children. Duties to commence April lst, 1916. Apply to J. J. Coonan, Jarvis, Ont. 1946-4

EXPERIENCED PIPE ORGANIST AND Choir Director for St. Mary's Church, North Bay, Ont. Male preferred. Apply with testimonials to Rt. Rev. D. J. Scollard. North Bay, Ont.

POSITION WANTED POSITION WANTED

CATHOLIC OF LONG BUSINESS EXPERIence, temperate and reliable, conversant with office details, financing etc. is open for good position. Apply Box P., CATHOLIC RECORD, London, Ont. 1946-4

NURSE WANTED

NURSE WANTED

WANTED PROBATIONER NURSE. (CATHolic) at once. Apply Lady Superintendent, Welland County and General Hospital. Ont.
1948-3

PARTNER WANTED

WANTED A CONSCIENTIOUS PARTNER TO start in Manufacturing business. Have Canadian Patents for Men's Trouser Pins (to replace sewed on buttons). Hook and Eye Pins.
Coat and Skirt Hangers. Applications for patents have been applied for in all Foreign Countries.
More inventions are now in process of develop-More inventions are now in process of devel ment. Apply Box S., The CATHOLIC RECO. London Ont. 1948.

MISSIONS AND RETREATS

Pastors of Parishes, Superiors of Religious Communities desirous of securing the services of a Jesuit Father for Missions, Retreats, etc., will please communicate at once with The Rev. J. F. Cox, Loyola College, Montreal, P. Q.

FOR ROUGH SKIN, SORE LIPS, OR CHAPPED HANDS

Campana's Italian Balm is oothing, healing and pleasant. Special size sample 10c. 28 years on the market. E. G. WEST & CO., 80 GEORGE ST., TORONTO.

BUILT FOR YEARS

This is not an Organ simply built to sell. A

Karn Church Organ

satisfaction years hence Is not that the kind you want for your church? Let us estimate for you.

The Karn-Morris Piano & Organ Co., Limited Head Office, Woodstock, Ont. Factories: Woodstock and Listowel

For Every Farm and Dairy there's a Labor-saving "EMPIRE" Machine

EMPIRE Mechanical Milkers: Remove the grind of daily milking—make their owners independent of hired help—induce the cows to let down more milk—protect the milk

EMPIRE Disc Separators: Have exclusive features which give them the lead over all others in mechanical excellence and close skimming.

BALTIC Separators: Are high-class small machines for the man with a few cows. They sell at from $15. to $45.

EMPIRE Gasoline Engines: In sizes from 11/2 to 16 H. P. Stationary and portable—are simple and easy to run—sturdy and durable—saving on gasoline—and pay for themselves many times over. The workmanship and finish of Empire Engines delights everybody.

AGENTS WANTED:

In some territory where we are not now represented we are anxious to secure good agents. Write if interested.

Send for illustrated booklets and literature on any or all of the above machines and for prices for cash and on easy payments. Address Dept. K.

The Empire Cream Separator Co. of Canada, Limited MONTREAL, TORONTO, WINNIPEG.

Be Patriotic, Order from a Canadian Firm ORDER NOW

PALM FOR PALM SUNDAY MISSION SUPPLIES

A SPECIALTY FROM

J. J. M. LANDY

WANTED

WANTED EVERYONE TO SELL OUR
shamrocks for Patriotic or church purposes.
Lat year we sold over 500 gross. They are going to be very scarce this year. Plain silk threaded shamrocks, $1.25 a gross; with every order of gross or more we will give free 50 perfumed carnations. Rose Buds, $1.50 a 100; Easter Lilies, 50 cents a dozen; Violets 40 cents a dozen bunches;
Iris Lily, 40 cents a dozen; Carnations, perfumed, long stems, 30 cents a dozen carnations with buds, 20 cents a dozen; Tulips, 50 cents a dozen; Easter Lilies, waxed and diamond dusted, 75 cents a dozen; shaded Roses, 75 cents a dozen. We pay postage or express. Write at once. Brantford

ORDER

W. E. BLAKE & SON, Limited 123 CHURCH STREET TORONTO, CANADA RIDER AGENTS WANTED

Sell St. Patrick and Easter Postcards BIG SCHOLAR'S OUTFIT GIVEN AWAY

SUIT CASE AND 13 OTHER PREMIUMS

Pencil Box with lock and key, drawing compass, pen, fountain nib, erases ruler, 28 colored crayons, rubber printing outfit, Scout whistle, boek of 40 Populai Songs, 2 lead pencils, 2-blade knife, and—worth mere than all the rest—a handsome strong, light, waterproef, metal bound, brass trimmed, fibre suit case—all 14 premiums given for selling only, $3.50 worth—at 3 for 50 of the finest, greenes and prettiest high class St. Patrick cards you ever saw (90 different designs); also charming Easter cards (250 beautiful designs) with Crosses, Banners, Angels Lilies, Chicks, Bunnes, etc.; and hundreds of lovely Birthday, Floral, Motto, Lover Leap Year and Scenery cards; all in brilliant colors, righly erabossed and decorated in gold and silver. At 3 for 50, these cards are snapped up as fast as you can show them. We tell you how any of these cards can be mailed for 10. ORDEN TO-DAY, set]; return the mency, and, SAME DAY, we will send the suit case and the other CRPremiums, POSTPAID. The Gold Medal Co., Dept. J. 63, Toronto, Oat

CHEAP SEEDS ARE DEAR IF YOU GET THEM FOR NOTHING.

JOHN A. BRUCE & COMPANY, LIMITED Established 1850

BRANCHES AND CONNECTIONS THROUGHOUT CANADA

The Home Bank was originally established as a Savings Bank sixty years ago, and it now does a very large volume of business with thrifty depositors. Full compound interest paid at highest

JAMES MASON, General Ms

OFFICE 394 RICHMOND ST. W. J. HILL Manager BRANCHES IN MIDDLESEX COUNTY Thorndale Ilderton

Delaware

Melbourne

THE IRISH CANADIAN'S ST. PATRICK'S DAY ILLUSTRATED SOUVENIR NUMBER

Lawrence Station

Every Irish Canadian should order the St. Patrick's Day Illustrated Number, which will be especially interesting this year. It will contain Irish Illustrations, Irish Stories, Irish Songs, Irish Music, Irish Poetry, Irish Wit and Irish Humour. Historical sketches of the Famous Irish Regiments at the Front and in the Front.

The Dauntless Dublin Fusiliers (The old Toughs), The Gallant Connaught Rangers, The Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, The Irish Guards and our own Canadian Regiments in the Fighting line. A Proud Record of Service for "King and Country". The Souvenir Number Edition will be limited.

Send your order now. Price, 25 Cents. Postage Prepaid. THE IRISH CANADIAN PUBLISHING CO., 204 St. James Street, Montreal.