Now the Prices you've been waiting for are here

The old year took away, for ever, we hope, the old burden of war prices. For months conditions have been working toward the great climax that brought the remarkable merchandise that is here assembled for this our greatest January Carnival of Economy.

The results came in two ways: 1st. The drastic lowering of prices on our own stocks, down to the new low basis, and often far below it—to double your interest in January buying in our store.

2nd. We have combed the markets—taking utmost advantage of the opportunities created by far sighted manufacturers who were ready to co-operate with us in presenting to you now the lowest prices that will be possible, for the next six months, at least.

We can just see the delight of our Customers when they see the splendid assortment of goods, in every department of our store, and then realize that prices are away down to the bottom, where it is a pleasure to buy things.

Many Manufacturers have ACCEPTED LARGE LOSSES.

We shall forgo a large part of our profits on the new goods and accept large losses on our own mark-downs—to inaugurate this first New Year under the New Management and

THE MOST STIRRING PRICE-UPSET THAT THIS COMMUNITY HAS EVER KNOWN.

No matter what you need or desire, now is the best time for months to come to buy it. Some of the reasons are told on this page; but scores of others are here that can get no mention today, even in this broad space.

Sermons On Catholic Worship

Orate Fratres and Secret Prayers. The Nineteenth Sermon of the series of Catholic Worship was prepared by the Rev. U. R. Stack, S. J., of St. Francis Xavier Church, Missions, Mont.

After washing his hands the priest returns from the Epistle corner to the middle of the altar, and first raising his eyes to the Crucifix he bows reverently and says: 'Receive, O Holy Trinity, this oblation we make to Thee, in memory of the passion, resurrection and ascension of our Lord, Jesus Christ, and in honor of the Blessed Mary ever Virgin, of Blessed John the Baptist, of the holy apostles Peter and Paul, of these and all the saints, that it may be available to their honor and to our salvation, and may they vouchsafe to intercede for us in heaven, whose memory we celebrate on earth, through Jesus Christ, our Lord, Amen.'

The priest then kisses the altar, and facing the people with downcast eyes extends his hands and joins them, saying in a low voice: 'Orate Fratres—Pray, brethren.' Whilst turning to the altar again he continues in silence: 'That my sacrifice and yours may be acceptable to God, the Father Almighty.'

SOLEMN MOMENT DRAWS NEAR

The solemn moment of consecration is drawing near. Soon the bread and wine will be effected by the power of the Most High. The Son of God, Mary's Son, our blessed Redeemer, Jesus Christ, will be really, truly and substantially present under the humble appearances of bread and wine. Impressed by the awful thought of soon standing in the presence of God, the priest asks for the prayers of his brethren. He feels that petitions which ascend to heaven from hearts that are united in faith and hope and love are very pleasing to God. Did not the Master say: 'Amen, Amen, wherever two or three are gathered together in my name there I am in the midst of them?'

BROTHERS ALL

The priest calls the people his brethren. They are such indeed, for we are all children of the same heavenly Father; we are all redeemed by the precious blood of Christ, who by the Incarnation became our elder brother; in baptism we are born into the supernatural order and become children of God by grace; in Holy Communion we sit at the same divine banquet, and we have a right to the same everlasting kingdom of heaven. The priest is but one of us, set aside, it is true, as our representative and leader in the things that pertain to God; but he is still our brother.

THE SUPREME FUNCTION.

The reason why the priest asks the people to pray is clear from the words, 'that my sacrifice and yours may be acceptable to God, the Father Almighty.' In the holy sacrifice of Mass we have the grandest function of the priesthood. At other times God's minister is the teacher, the judge, the doctor, the consoler, the friend, but when he stands at the altar he is properly a priest. He it is, then, who offers the sacrifice, and hence calls it 'my sacrifice.' But he is at the same time the representative of the people, because he offers the sacrifice in the name of the whole Church. Hence all the people, in a certain sense, concur in the sacred oblation. In a more perfect way do those concur who assist at the Mass and are united in mind and heart with the officiating priest, and especially with Christ, the principal offeror. Above all do those participate in the sacrifice who serve at the altar or partake of its fruit in Holy Communion. With reason, then, does the priest, addressing the people, call the Mass 'my sacrifice and yours.'

ACCEPTABLENESS.

The priest prays that the sacrifice may be acceptable to God. The sacrifice itself is acceptable to God because the victim is none other than Christ Jesus, His eternal Son, in whom the Father is always pleased, but the priest fears that through lack of proper dispositions on his own part and on that of the people, the offering rather than the blessings of God, may be drawn upon them. This is why, turning to the people for the last time before the consecration, he warns them of the necessity of renewed and earnest prayer.

Complying with the request of the priest, the people through the server answer: 'May the Lord receive the sacrifice from thy hands for the praise and glory of His name for our benefit and for that of his entire and Holy Church. Here we have heartily and beautifully expressed the object and purpose of the sacrifice of the Mass. On the one hand the sacrifice is offered for the redemption of our souls, and to glorify His infinite majesty, and to thank Him for His favors; on the other it is offered to be for us and the whole Church an inexhaustible source of pardon, grace and blessing.

THE SECRET PRAYERS.

The priest approves of the sentiments of the faithful by silently answering 'Amen.'

THE SECRET PRAYERS. The secret prayers are now recited. They are so called because they are repeated in a low voice which cannot be heard by the congregation. The secrets are much like the collects, which we considered some months ago. They differ however in some respects. The collects have a direct bearing on the feast of the day, whilst the secrets are concerned chiefly with the oblation. They are in a way a continuation of the prayers of the offertory. But they are inspired also by the particular feast or mystery which is being commemorated. Thus for example, the secret prayer of Ascension Day is as follows: 'Vouchsafe, O Lord, to accept the offerings laid before Thee in memory of the glorious ascension of Thy Son; in Thy mercy deliver us from the many dangers that threaten us, and lead us safely into the path of eternal life.'

AS IN GETHSEMANE

The silent prayers of the priest before the act of consecration remind us of the great Highpriest Himself, who silently prayed to His Father in the Garden of Gethsemane the night before He offered Himself in sacrifice upon the cross. They teach us also that, in the midst of our daily occupations, we can pray to God in the secret of our hearts as effectively as when at morn and eventide the words of prayer are on our lips.

Honesty may not always bring success, but it does always give a clear conscience.

Losing Respect For Womanhood

Correspondence from time to time in the daily papers gives strong grounds for the opinion that the world is losing its respect for womanhood. The harrowing experience of conflict have lulled the finer sensibilities, and the men have lost what Burke called the 'chastity of honor' that characterized the day of chivalry. There is much that is true and much that is untrue in this indictment. Surely, from signs appearing around us, there has been a sad derogation from the former ideals of men in regard to woman-kind.

Woman comes into the world with the dignity of a queen. Her power is boundless if only she will not misuse it.

Women who have consistently cherished the ideal of honor never have to complain the world is losing its respect for them.

Church Prayers

Visiting non-Catholics complain that they do not understand our congregational prayers. Are we not to blame? Suppose that the beautiful prayer, the Rosary, is said. Does it not often happen that it rather represents a mumbling than a prayer. The prayers overlap. The answer is taken up before the preceding is concluded. Are the prayers after Mass always said distinctly, or is it simply the roaring of the wind? Let us say our congregational prayers distinctly; this will edify ourselves and visiting non-Catholics. Let us be polite when we converse with God. If you visit a friend you are attentive and careful about your speech. The friend is a poor human being. At least treat God as well as a poor mortal.

NOT ONE WOMAN IN TWENTY HAS A STRONG BACK

No woman can be strong and healthy unless the kidneys are well. The reason is that the kidneys are to blame, nine times out of ten, for that weak, lame and aching back, from which they suffer so much.

When you find your kidneys out of order, when your back aches and pains and gives you endless misery, all you have to do is take a few boxes of Doan's Kidney Pills, and you will find that all the aches and pains will vanish, and make you healthy and happy, and able to enjoy life to the utmost.

Mrs. John McInnis, Newcastle Bridge, A.B., writes: 'Last spring I was so bothered with my kidneys and pains in my back, I could not rest or sleep at night. A friend calling told me about the benefit Doan's Kidney Pills had done for her, and advised me to try them. I only took two boxes, and I can truthfully say my trouble disappeared and I have had no trace of it since.'

Notable Quebec Tribute

L'Action Catholique, an independent paper of Quebec of Nov. 9th, 1921, has the following fine appreciation of Premier Meighen on the occasion of his recent visit:

Those who organized the meeting held in the Drill Shed yesterday evening, may well be pleased with the success that crowned their efforts, for the outcome far surpassed their highest expectations, and it was all due to him who was the hero of the demonstration, Honorable Mr. Meighen.

Close upon eight thousand people had invaded the hall, when the Prime Minister made his appearance, accompanied by his wife and a large number of his followers. The band from the garrison played "God Save the King" amidst the applause that greeted their entrance. Mr. Lalibart of Athabaska was the first speaker, and during his speech Mr. Meighen leisurely studied the audience.

When the Prime Minister rose to speak, he was received with courtesy by the entire multitude, and with warm applause on the part of his political friends.

This thoughtful consideration continued throughout his whole discourse. There were, it is true occasional interruptions, but they were only questions politely put and which he met without any show of impatience. Indeed, he seemed glad of them, for to them is due a large measure of the success of his tour.

What one could call a great orator. He is a dialectician of wonderful power, who reasons his way with the logic of a true philosopher. His voice is far-reaching and certain tones remind one of Henry Bourassa's, but his notes are softer and deeper, his language clearcut, without even an appeal to the flowers of rhetoric. What he has to say, he says clearly, and on occasions underlines his words with a gesture that adds to their energy.

He began his address in French, and thereby created an excellent impression. He speaks the language much more readily and with a far better accent than did Sir R. L. Borden on a similar occasion in Quebec.

As we have stated above, his style is clear and his pronunciation faultless, and these qualities never fail to appeal to a crowd, and while his language is English his wit is purely Celtic. This was particularly evident in his manner of treating the interruptions levelled at him from time to time during his discourse, and this is how his interrogators contributed to his great success. Scarcely was the question put when the answer was given clear, precise, brief and excessively plausible, sometimes indeed with the energy of profound conviction, but always courteous and sincere.

The speaker himself did not fail to realize the effect produced by his apt answers, nor was he slow to appreciate the volume of real sympathy he thus acquired; and conscious of his strength in this regard he seemed to court interruptions, that served only to bring forth into the limelight the best that was in him.

In referring to the marine he continued his remarks to the Merchant Marine, and entered not into the question of naval affairs, and when from the audience there came a reference to his last journey to England, he was able to side-step the question with consummate cleverness. Thanks to these interruptions Mr. Meighen was able to deliver an address, full of life and originality, to which the audience listened not only without fatigue, but rather with pleasure and interest that went on increasing to the end. Had he been permitted to make his speech without these interruptions it would have been far less interesting and its effect would have been small compared to the reality.

Another thing that contributed to Mr. Meighen's success is what we may call his "action under fire." He may not be a man who courts danger, but he certainly gives you the impression that he does not seek to avoid it. He plants his feet firmly before his adversary, looks him straight in the eye, and strikes out at once. This is the second and perhaps principal reason of his success at yesterday's meeting; for if he stood in the presence of an audience of whom four-fifths differed from him in politics, and to whom he could not hope to win but a portion, that audience he remembered, were French Canadians in whose veins flowed the blood of the heroes of Fontenoy, and who never fail to appreciate and admire the qualities of courage and bravery. Mr. Meighen will leave behind him in Quebec an excellent souvenir of himself, and it is only fair to say that he gained for his party every possible advantage. Despite his slender physique and his apparent youth, he leaves the impression that he is a man of great abilities and fitted with all the qualities of a great leader.

The Prime Minister

On Thursday evening, Nov. 10th, Premier Meighen was accorded a most enthusiastic ovation in Ottawa, when he addressed 3,000 people at two meetings.

In the agricultural hall he faced an audience of 6,000, and in another hall he addressed 2,000 more. His reception and the enthusiasm of demonstration which greeted him in his triumphal procession from his home to the Exhibition Building have never been surpassed in the case of a public man at the Capital. Among the aftermath of the occasion the Ottawa Journal cites the following: "I have no politics. I heard Meighen speak the other night and I heard Crerar and King speak a few days before. There is only one thing I can do. I am going to vote for the man. He is head and shoulders above the others. And the people see it. He is winning the country to him every day."

That is the confession of faith the Journal heard voiced by a man in the street on Saturday. In the streets, in the homes, in the places where men and women come together in Ottawa and elsewhere throughout this country it is being spoken by those with party politics and those without. The Prime Minister is winning the country to him. He has been winning it steadily to him from the time he took the stump. He is winning it because he has "taken issues as issues," and argued them as issues, "because he has appealed "on one consistent policy . . . the same everywhere in the Dominion." Because he is big enough and fearless enough and honest enough to do it, and because his opponents have not even the shame to pretend they are not. "We know what we have got in Meighen; what have we got in the others?" asks the man in the street, the woman in the home.

The more the Prime Minister is heard in this campaign the more votes he makes for himself and the Government for which he is responsible. The more Mr. King is heard the more votes he loses for himself and his party. The only elements in this country on whom the outstanding superiority and honesty of Mr. Meighen are making no impression are those who want office for the sake of office, those who want office for class advantage at the cost of other classes, those who want revenge on the Government for one reason or another, and the cranks who want nothing that they can possibly get and whom no sane person would trust with an influence on the country's affairs.

If Mr. Meighen is removed from the Premiership on December 6 it will be by chiefly the ballots of office seekers who are now stooping to a degree of dishonesty for the purpose of vote-catching that has never before disgraced the politics of this country, of the anti-conscriptivists, of the class-selfish, and of the irresponsible rainbow chasers. To those elements the one great question of the national interest makes no sufficient appeal. They are willfully blind to it. To them it is of no consequence that in Mr. Meighen the country has a man it can trust and in Mr. King and Mr. Crerar men it must experiment with. They are not concerned for the country but for themselves.

The election talk that is to be heard in the streets today gives encouragement to the belief that it is not the office-greedy, the class-selfish, and the cranks who predominate in Canada but the clear-headed, open-minded citizens who think in terms of their country.

Result of Premier's Tour

Hon. Arthur Meighen recently completed his tour of the eastern provinces. His campaign of five weeks in Prince-Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario, where he addressed over a hundred meetings and more than 300,000 people, was the most strenuous and convincing in our political history. The prime minister's marvellous vigor and vitality has given the greatest encouragement to his friends and dismayed his opponents, who have been predicting that he could not maintain such a strenuous pace. He is now even more vigorous and convincing than at the beginning of his tour. During the campaign he has so far held twice as many meetings as the combined efforts of the leaders of the Farmer-Liberal entente, Messrs. Crerar and King. He has gone west to carry on an even more strenuous campaign, and returns to address thirty-nine meetings in Ontario before polling day.

The prime minister's tour has had a marked and permanent influence on public sentiment. His courage, sincerity and frankness have won support in every quarter and every class. With a definite national policy he has had his shifting opponents at his mercy, and the electors have quickly realized that a strong premier with a national policy is essential to Canada's stability, progress and solvency. His strength is displayed in seizing the issue raised by his opponents, incorporated in their platforms, and forcing the fight on these lines. His opponents admit that in ability and statesmanship he far exceeds the shifting opportunists, who have a policy for each class, section and race, and dare not repeat in Ontario what they say in Quebec nor in the West what they say in the East. Premier Meighen has won Eastern Canada, and not by promises or patronage, but by a fair presentation of the administrative work of the Government and also of its Canadian policy.

For four years the government have carried the tremendous war burden and the difficulties of reconstruction amid a world-wide depression, without time or thought for politics. During that period two political parties, Farmers and Liberals, jointly and severally, have devoted their time to political organization. When parliament dissolved they had their organizations ready for the fray, while the government had to create a political organization. In a few weeks' campaign the government is supreme in Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, and have rallied a magnificent fighting force that is successfully challenging the Liberal "solid Quebec," while Messrs. King and Crerar are confronted daily with serious defections and embarrassing factional fights. In Nova Scotia, Liberals in September claimed fifteen out of sixteen constituencies; in October, after the prime minister's tour of that province, they reduced this claim to an even division; and now they are worried over the danger of defeat to Hon. W. S. Fielding, Hon. A. K. McLean, E. M. Macdonald and William Duff. And the same cheering conditions are reported from all the other Eastern provinces. When the electors have been faced with a national decision, carping criticism has ceased, class and racial demagogues have been discarded, and they are rallying to the strong appeal of the prime minister for stability, unity and progress; for Canada for Canadians and the maintenance of our fiscal and political independence. Neither in 1873, 1890 or 1911 was there such a marked inclination on the part of the electorate to support a protectionist policy as there is displayed in the present campaign.

The government enters on the last four weeks of the campaign in a wonderful position. They have placed their opponents on the defensive. The five eastern reports from the tour are all of a cheering nature. The coming of victory is with the government and the victories of 1878 and 1911 will be repeated.

Bad Fire Yesterday At Ch'town Hospital

Hundreds of citizens assisted the city fire brigade in a hard battle against the bad fire yesterday which at one time threatened to wipe out the Charlottetown Hospital, on the Esplanade. The conflagration, which started just above one of the two boilers in the basement of the building, crept along the walls to the elevator shaft and chapel, and swept fiercely to the top of the building before the fire fighters had got well to work. By splendid work inside the burning building the firemen were able after four hours struggle to get the fire under control. In the meantime the patients were being removed to the vacant Convalescent home. Motor trucks, ambulances, run abouts and every type of car was utilized to carry bedding and equipment from the building and thanks to the efficient work of the hundreds who assisted in the evacuation operations every patient was removed safely and practically all moveable equipment salvaged.

The fire was first noticed by Sister St. Bertha. It had then worked its way up from the basement in the air space on both sides of the chimney and the second floor, as well as the maternity ward, were menaced. There were thirty-three nurses, including fifteen Sisters of Charity, in the hospital and these heroically stuck to their posts and assisted in the work of evacuation. The patients were first taken to the Connolly House and St. Anthony's Villa which adjoin the hospital. They were later removed to the Convalescent Home, where many of the voluntary workers were busy preparing for their reception. This hospital was placed at the disposal of the Charlottetown Hospital trustees by the Provincial Government.

The building is partly insured to the extent of some $25,000. It was splendidly equipped as a hospital and underwent repairs this summer.

Arthur Meighen
Outstanding Leader

Sticking straight out of the picture in this the most extraordinary campaign in the political history of the country is the fact that in Arthur Meighen Canada has found a real big man and a real big leader. He has demonstrated beyond all question that he is the outstanding figure in our politics. Good judges declare, without hesitation, that he is the best fighter, expounder and debater we have had in our time, and a very worthy successor to the great political leaders of bygone days. Easily he overshadows King and Crerar. Beside him these men look like neophytes. His marvelous grasp of detail, enormous industry, undoubted sincerity of purpose, wonderful gift of lucid and direct speech, broad national vision and his splendid courage have made a powerful impression on friends and opponents alike.

We doubt whether any Canadian political leader has had a more uphill task before him. He became Prime Minister at a time when the whole world was disturbed to a degree never previously experienced in all history; industrial turmoil, unemployment and unrest; class consciousness rearing its head and demanding government by class and for class; trade conditions throughout the world completely out of joint; the currencies of nearly all countries depreciated; the world's credit system endangered; all nations loaded with mountains of debt due to the war; the people still suffering generally from the awful tragedy of the great human holocaust; agitators of all kinds stirring up strife—these were among the many unparalleled conditions he had to face.

Resolutely and with fine native courage he set to work, and it is doing him but simple justice to state that he has well measured up to his great task. Steadily, persistently and without variation, turning neither to the right, nor to the left, he has expounded the doctrines of moderate and reasonable protection and of trade independence as the best and only material policies for Canada under present conditions. Just as strongly and consistently he has urged the necessity and desirability of unity among all classes in order that the country may work out its salvation to the best possible advantage. With equal persistence he has told the people that in work, serious, earnest, honest work, lies the hope of the future, not in the frittering away of energy by stirring up class and racial strife and division.

So far a large measure of success is his. He has driven both the leaders of the Opposition parties to shift their fighting ground and change front, which is as good testimony as could be added as to the strength and wisdom of his own policy. Under the fire of the Prime Minister's criticisms, Mr. Mackenzie King has made himself ridiculous. The cartoon poster comparing his policy to the fifty-seven varieties of Heinz pickles fittingly describes his wobbling and vacillating.

But Mr. King is not alone. Gouin, Lemieux and other Quebec leaders, responsive to public opinion largely developed by the powerful presentation of the Prime Minister, have abnegated the tariff platform of the party which they helped to make, and notwithstanding their party affiliation, are now advocating the same policy which the Government stands for. It is all very absurd and would be amusing if the times were not so serious. In Ontario the situation is much the same. The relatively few Liberal candidates are almost to a man preaching the doctrine of protection for their own constituencies while sticking to the party platform for the sake of the Farmer vote it may bring them.

To sum up on this point, Mr. Meighen has succeeded in convincing the public that the Liberal leaders have no well defined policy except that of getting into office and that they are merely trifling with the public at the most critical time in the country's history. If a street colloquialism be permitted, without offence, Mr.

Meighen has made the one great Liberal party look like thirty cents.

Mr. Crerar, too, has found it necessary to modify his position. Starting the campaign with the bold and solemn declaration that protection is morally wrong and economically unsound, he has been driven by the force of public opinion and the strength of the Government's case to say that he would not change things in a hurry, would not bring about free trade all at once. Like King he has been forced into a ridiculous position. After three years' preaching and expounding the specific free trade trade policy of his party, which is his only mandate, after declaring that he and his party are men of high, nay lofty principles, and that they were determined to carry on until their righteous views prevail, he coolly shifts his ground and tries to make the people in the industrial centres believe that his policy would be modified in operation. A sorry business! The Western emancipator who set up his immature opinions on the tariff question in opposition to the views of the leading statesmen of the world has fallen from grace. We greatly fear he is a modern Don Quixote. We are quite sure that the people will not be fooled by his grotesque and absurd antics. They know that Mr. Wood—the visionary, the idealist, who holds the organized farmers of the West in the hollow of his hand and is the real power behind the throne—will insist upon the carrying out of the farmers' platform, and they will act accordingly. They have been quick to recognize that postponement of free trade as suggested by Mr. Crerar means a lingering rather than a sudden death to industry, and they do not want sisher.

The old year took away, for ever, we hope, the old burden of war prices. For months conditions have been working toward the great climax that brought the remarkable merchandise that is here assembled for this our greatest January Carnival of Economy.
The results came in two ways: 1st. The drastic lowering of prices on our own stocks, down to the new low basis, and often far below it—to double your interest in January buying in our store.
2nd. We have combed the markets—taking utmost advantage of the opportunities created by far sighted manufacturers, who were ready to cooperate with us in presenting to you now the lowest prices that will be possible for the next six months, at least.
We can just see the delight of our Customers when they see the splendid assortment of goods, in every department of our store, and then realize that prices are away down to the bottom, where it is a pleasure to buy things.

November Again

Written for The Catholic Herald by Dr. James Hepler

November again, the death of the year

The time when all nature has frosted and sear'd

When days are choly and sadness are here

November again, Ah, a wing flushing by,

A note in the meadow, a softness of sky

Makes us feel 'tis a pleasure to pass out and die.

November again, Ah the sweet dreamy ways

The dear, brooding landscapes, the colorful days

And far purpling mountains that fasten our gaze!

November again and 'tis sweet to be here.

There is something entices and something holds dear

Yet something that pains us and calls for our tear.

November so lonesome, November so old

When soft leaves were falling— Ah, that I might hold

In memory my treasure, my sad heart unfold!

Yes, you, must come, November, you must come I know

Bringing joy in your basket, and too bringing woe,

It must, while time, lasteth forever be so.

The Last Figure

My, but it's blustery out, exclaimed Susanna Bryer, she breathlessly shut the storm door behind her and unrolled the peaceable blue scarf that gave such piquant relief to her little pointed face. "This house smells spicy, I'll say, I mean," she corrected herself, laughing a little, "there's a fragrant aroma about your domicile, ma'am, that is most entrancing. There you see, I'm like Hosea Biglow; I can talk long tailed of I please."

"If you'd please often," responded her mother with fond severity it might get to be more of a habit with you. "Twas all right for you to be kind of childish when you were Rosemary's assistant at the library, but now if you're going to be a librarian— She paused anxiously.

Susanna's face clouded. "It doesn't look much that way," she remarked, gloomily. "Rosemary resigned a month ago and she's been off duty altogether for the last week, and Judge Bruce has been in once or twice, and Mr. Fairbanks stopped in today after a book for his wife. Goodness, just as soon as an author writes his third book Mrs. Fairbanks starts to read the first; I guess she thinks, if the public can stand him so long, he must be all right to put her time on. Anyway he was in—Mr. Fairbanks—and as nice as you please, but he didn't say a word about the committee's plans." "Oh, hello, granddad!" She peered into the living room. "Didn't see you! Have you come over to stay?"

Granddad Blair's refusal to spend all of his time with either one or even with both of his children was a family joke. He had a comfortable, well-kept house of his own, with continually blooming geraniums in the windows, and with cheerful sunny rooms that a spinster niece presided over. Occasionally he spent a few days with Alberta, Susanna's mother. When he wished to get away from town he hired the horses and drove out to the farm and stayed a while with Tom and his family.

"Get the cream of ye now!" he chuckled. "Always company to be. Always entitled to preserves and new cookies." He laughed now at Susanna's familiar greeting. "Not yet," he told her tranquilly. "Well, Susanna, I s'pose you're going to be head of your institution down there, now that Rosemary's getting through."

Susanna shook her head. "I was just telling mother it doesn't look that way. Rosemary's been gone a week now, and none of the board has said anything to me. That's what comes of trying to make something of yourself in the town where you were born and raised." Her usually sunny face was unsmiling. "If I'd gone up to Boston as Rosemary did and taken a library course—it

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic. "I was ill for four months with catarrh in the head and throat. Ever's bad cough and raised blood. I had become discouraged when my husband bought a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and persuaded me to try it. I advise all to take it. It has cured and built me up." Mrs. Helen Rose, 256 St. Albans, N. S.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cure catarrh—it soothes and strengthens the mucous membrane and builds up the whole system.

Isn't that I'm too young, you know? Rosemary isn't more than a year or two older than I am, but—

"Pretty competent, be ye?" inquired granddad, gen'ly. He was so bland about it that Susanna laughed.

"O granddad, you'd make me laugh if I were leaving the library altogether. Yes, I am competent and I ought to be, too. I've had just the same thing as a library course and lots of practical experience. Rosemary's been a brick. From the first minute when I begged to go in and help her just for love of the books and—before they voted me any salary at all she began teaching me. And it wasn't in any catch-as-catch-can-fashion; she taught me all about the work just as systematically as if she'd been planning to have me take her place. And I can do it, or I could if I had a chance. But I'll bet," she concluded inelegantly, "just because I was born in this town and went to school here, and Judge Bruce has known me ever since the day he picked me down off the cherry tree when I got stuck there, that he and Mr. Fairbanks and the rest of 'em think I don't know the Duchess from Shakespeare. Mother, if I have to wait till supper for one of those cookies I'll— With a luxurious sigh she bit into one of the rich disks. Mother, was not to suspect, she thought fondly, how much the library worried her. Granddad sat figuring silently at the old walnut secretary. Presently he began to stir restively. "Dret this figuring, anyway," he muttered. "I declare I'd better keep my money under a brick on the hearth even if it don't earn me a cent than spend my last days getting all het up figuring interest. Susanna, you come here and look at this thing, will ye, and see what I've done?"

Susanna chuckled. Granddad was always funny, but he was funniest of all on the few occasions when he was petulant. His cheerful rosy face with its crown of white hair contrasted so oddly with his cross, old-man tone. She bent over the page of neat figures.

"I've got it all reckoned out, granddad," told her defensively. "I done it by the rules too. Just as I always do. But drat the thing, Susan; I ain't got it right. But Fletcher, owes me a lot more'n nine hundred and fourteen dollars. I know he does. Why, he s'pt. made me but two sizable payments, and that mortgage was for twenty-four hundred. And here I can't make it but nine hundred and fourteen. I must've made some mistake."

Susanna interrupted him with a shout of laughter. "I should say you had, granddad. Why, see here—"

The old man peered down at the page. "Sho," he murmured deprecatingly. "Found it, have ye? Multiplied I s'pose, when I'd ought to have subtracted, or something about like that."

Susanna went off into another gale of laughter. "No," she answered as soon as she caught her breath "you didn't make such an intelligent mistake as that, granddad. Mother, come here; it's too good to keep to myself. He's added all right and done everything all right—"

"Well, taint the right answer, persisted granddad stubbornly.

"Of course it isn't. But it's all right as far as you've gone; it's

HAD WHOOPING COUGH

WOULD GO BLACK IN FACE AND STIFFEN RIGHT OUT

Mother should never neglect whooping cough, and on the first sign of this disease we would advise the use of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This famous remedy will clear the bronchial tubes of the collected mucus and pleura, and in this way ease the wracking cough and in a short time make it disappear entirely.

Mrs. J. W. Mortimer, 25-6th Ave. East, Vancouver, B. C., writes—"When my little girl was born she was not very strong, and when she was three months old we moved into a damp house. A few days after we were settled she became very ill. I called in a doctor and he said she had whooping cough and bronchitis. He gave me medicine for her, but still I saw no change. In fact, she seemed to get worse and several times I thought she was dead as she used to go black in the face and stiffen right out. I was nearly crazy for fear she would die. A friend of mine asked me to try a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, as she had three children of her own. I took her advice, and after giving my little girl half a bottle she was quite a lot better, and when the bottle was finished she was well again."

COULD NOT SLEEP NIGHTS

When the nerves become unstrung; the hands shaky; you can't sleep, and you are practically on the verge of nervous prostration, then is the time to take

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

They regulate and stimulate the heart and strengthen and restore the whole nervous system.

Mr. Fred W. Watson, Newport, N.S., writes—"I have been troubled for several years with nervous headaches and they were so bad I could not sleep at nights. My hands got so shaky I could hardly hold anything in them. A friend told me to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, so I got a box and began to get better after I had taken them. I continued to use more, and now I am no more bothered with nervousness, and would recommend them to any one who has nerve trouble."

Price 50c a box at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by the T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.
