When there is no immediate danger to the Canadian public, it is difficult to understand the justification for resorting to back to work legislation in the situation we are facing today. Taking away a basic right of Canadian workers cannot be taken lightly and cannot be done lightly. The truth is that the right to strike exists in this country for a reason.

Back to work legislation does not only limit the bargaining power of the striking employees. It seriously limits the government's ability to negotiate an agreement in the best interests of the country. This can be construed as an abdication of the responsibility of both the employees involved and the Canadian public at large.

The use of back to work legislation is generally regarded as negative. When everyone knows that the government has this tool in hand the incentive to reach an agreement through bargaining is weakened. Are there not better ways to foster co-operation and avoid confrontation? In my view there are.

The government has introduced back to work legislation. There is no national crisis at stake. This is an admission that our system of collective bargaining has failed.

Can the government assure Canadians that every effort has been made to arrive at a fair and equitable agreement? Have all the avenues been explored? Is the government willing to go back to the bargaining table? So far the answer is no to all of these questions.

This dispute involves the government on the one side and over 3,500 of the lowest paid members of the Public Service on the other.

[Translation]

The government is employing 2,200 ships' crew employees on Coast Guard vessels, fishing boats, lifeboats and other boats of the Department of Public Works, both on the eastern coast and the west coast and the Great Lakes. Those skilled workers are risking their lives on a daily basis to ensure the safety of margation of sea and on our seaways. Their average salary, which is 16 to 28 per cent less than that of their counterparts in the private sector, is only $21,000.

In the area of hospital services, the government employs 1,200 workers who on a regular basis extend care to our veterans and people in National Defence hospitals and homes. There are nursing attendants janitors, kitchen attendants, and so forth. They are to every patient some kind of an extended family. The majority are women, Mr. Speaker and forty-eight per cent of these workers earn $20,000 a year or less.

They are not striking without reasons. They are on strike because they could not get decent, fair salaries. The issue of equal pay for equal work is central to these two labour disputes.

[English]

The Canadian Human Rights Act has three sections referring to the equal pay for work of equal value principle. Equal pay for work of equal value became law for federal public servants in March 1977. The government has made commitments to Canadians over and over again that work will be judged on its value, on the basis of skill and knowledge, mental and physical effort, responsibility, and the nature of working conditions.

People must not be paid based on which part of the country they live in, whether or not they are man or women, black or white. It is a principle we have endorsed as a government and as a nation. This is what we are all about. This is what Canada is all about.

Fairness is a principle which is extremely important to the productivity and efficiency of our Public Service. Yet here we are in 1989, almost 1990, and coast guard crews working aboard vessels on the east coast are paid $2,000 less than similar crews working on the west coast of our country. They are doing the same job for the same employer and getting substantially less money for it.

At National Defence hospitals here in our city and elsewhere in Canada hospital service workers, the majority of whom are women, have had to fight for over a decade to achieve wage parity with their general service counterparts. They went to the Human Rights Commission because their rates of pay trailed by 10 per cent or 40 per cent the wages of those in the general service category. The Human Rights Commission agreed with them. They were awarded $28 million, the largest pay equity settlement in the history of the Public Service. More than two years later these employees are still not getting the pay they deserve.

Retroactive pay from 1980 to 1987 based on new classifications has not yet been received by these workers. Retroactive pay from 1987 to the present also has not been paid out by the Treasury Board. These hospital workers are living on wages close to the poverty line. On average, they are entitled to an additional $3,000 per year. Given that the salary range of these workers is between $16,000 to $22,000 a year, an additional $3,000 is a lot of money.

• (1410)

The President of the Treasury Board assures us that he is working to comply with the equalization order given by the Human Rights Commission. He has stated that the various stages of the pay equity process are to blame for these delays which are proving so costly.

Blaming the delays on the pay equity system is not a valid argument. If we have a system where workers earning poverty level wages must wait for two, three or ten years to get fair wages and pay equity, then I say there is something wrong with that system. We cannot ask these employees to bear this burden.

Our Public Service is already burdened with serious problems such as downsizing and job insecurity, the increasing age of the workforce and the lack of promotion opportunities. Women are still under-represented in upper levels of the Public Service, representing only 12.3 per cent at the management level and 83 per cent in support positions.

So far attempts at employment equity have not been very successful. The matter before us today is only a symptom of the problems facing public servants and their employer, the government. The bottom line is that these workers want a fair deal. As a government, we should be setting an example for the private sector, an example which includes real efforts to address critical issues such as wage equity and constructive collective bargaining practices.

The federal government must be a role model for other employers in this country. It is disheartening to see Public Service employees having to fight for fair treatment from the federal service. The government has told this House that these employees are essential employees and should therefore not be allowed to strike. I would reply that every single public servant in this country is an essential employee. Each one deserves to receive a fair wage for his or her work. Each one, regardless of gender or region, deserves to be paid the same wage as another employee doing a comparable job.

Back to work legislation is not the answer. The striking employees are responsible and dedicated to their jobs. They want to go back to work. The Public Service Alliance has offered to go back to the bargaining table.

This morning we have received a call from Mr. Whalen of the hospital services union who indicated that the President of the Treasury Board's statement that employees were seeking 14 per cent for each of the next three years is an unfair statement. In fact, they are seeking 6 per cent for each of the next three years. He also said that the dispute is about two issues: resolving the pay equity first and getting the pay increases second.

It is time for the government to make the concerns of these hard working Canadians a priority and resume negotiations. Legislating these workers back will not resolve the deep-seated concerns at issue today. We must work out a fair and equitable solution at the bargaining table, not on the floor of the House of Commons.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the bill before us, Bill C-49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services. As Your Honour can well imagine I will be speaking mainly on the part of the government services provided by federal ship crews.

Late last week, on the advice of the Canadian Coast Guard the Laurentian Pilotage Authority and the Corporation of Lower St. Lawrence Pilots, the Minister of Transport announced that navigation would be temporarily halted on the lower St. Lawrence because safety could not be assured.

Subsequently, on September 4 after a further review and assessment of the situation, it was decided to permit navigation in the lower St. Lawrence with certain restrictions such as daylight navigation and the requirement to have two pilots on board the vessel.

The cold weather has caused earlier than normal ice formations in the river from Tadoussac west. Floating aids have become iced up. Ice floes have moved many others out of position and these now pose a navigational hazard. Still others submerged by the ice will come to the surface as a ship passes by with the risk that the buoy's anchor cable will foul up the ship's propellers. These are among the reasons navigation was temporarily closed between Quebec City and Les Escoumins.

By this time of year Canadian Coast Guard buoy tenders usually have recovered the summer buoys and replaced them with winter aids, but they have been tied up by the strike since November 14. The Seaway's reopening in 1990 could be affected by the loss and displacement of the buoys.

The temporary closure of one section of the waterway left some 100 merchant ships waiting to start or to continue their voyage. In addition, other ships are currently in the seaway system above Montreal and will have to exit the seaway by December 19, the announced clearance date of the shipping season.

Ice-breakers need to be deployed without delay to ensure the safe and orderly exit of these vessels and to assure the safety of ships carrying general cargo and petroleum products to St. Lawrence and seaway ports. These ice-breakers are normally assigned to the Quebec City-Trois Rivieres area from mid-December to mid-March each year. The federal government must step in now to restore safe navigation in the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes and ensure the safety of mariners and fishermen in all parts of Canada.

The St. Lawrence Seaway system is the world's foremost inland waterway, used for decades by ships of every seagoing nation. The provision of essential services such as aids to navigation and ice-breaking are fundamental to the safety and integrity of this ocean link to central Canada and the industrial heartland of the United States.

The provision of these services is a key mandate of the Canadian Coast Guard. We have a long-standing commitment to ensure the safety and efficiency of this route for trading nations of the world. Transport Canada has a reputation of efficient and reliable safety services to shipping and the fisheries. The recent cold weather serves to remind us of the importance of these services, especially search and rescue operations.

Many fishermen who go to sea in the perilous winter months are alive today thanks to the Coast Guard search and rescue efforts. Since the strike began, basic search and rescue services have been provided by Canadian Coast Guard SAR operations through co-operative efforts with the union. I want to compliment the unions on the co-operation that they have shown throughout this labour dispute.

While the arrangement has also allowed for the provision of search and rescue services in life threatening circumstances, the strike has curtailed the full range of SAR services. We are thus hindered in our efforts to fulfil our national and international commitments to provide safety services on a continuous basis. Our external trade depends on the provision of these services.

Many of the ships now in the St. Lawrence system are loaded with export grain. It is estimated that one million tonnes of grain must be shipped overseas from ports along the St. Lawrence from now to January, but the Seaway must be open if our grain shipments are to be set apart.

Canadians rely on the St. Lawrence system for a variety of other commodities. General cargo and petroleum products are moved by ship to remote communities and major cities alike. An interrupted supply route will have negative impacts on the livelihood of many people. A reduction in the supply of raw materials carried on the seaway to our industries spells economic hardship.

• (1420)

During 1988 the St. Lawrence Seaway carried over 20 million tonnes of bulk cargo such as iron ore and coal to and from ports in the Great Lakes system. Over 15 million tonnes were also moved through the Seaway. A further 4.5 million tonnes of general cargo were also moved by this great waterway.

The economic significance of such figures is enormous. The seaway's yearly cargo throughput is in the order of 40 million tonnes. Some 60 per cent of the Seaway's traffic is shipped to and from overseas ports chiefly in Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

As of midnight, December 6, there were 51 ocean going vessels in the Great Lakes system west of St. Lambert lock. Of these, 33 are still above the Welland Canal. There are an additional 8 Canadian inland vessels per day requiring service. The average operating cost of these vessels varies from $5,000 to $25,000 per day and more, depending on the type of vessel. Many of the vessels face long delays. These delays will be longer if ice-breaker support is not available. Some ocean vessels may even be trapped in the system for the winter if ice-breaker assistance is not provided.

Should a number of the 51 ocean going vessels currently in the system be trapped, the losses incurred would be huge. Early system closure will also have a major impact on the viability of the Canadian inland fleet as it will be unable to meet all of its commitments.

With the outlook for below normal temperatures to continue for the remainder of December, the announced clearance date of December 19 may not be achievable and the dependability and reliability of the Seaway as a transportation route will be jeopardized. It is therefore critical that the Coast Guard services be restored as soon as possible so that the seaway can be closed in an orderly fashion and all vessels can complete their transits.

In addition to the seaway, the St. Lawrence River ports have substantial impact on the local, regional and national economy. Traffic at Ports Canada facilities located on the St. Lawrence River generated over 16,500 jobs and $750 million in total income.

Let us look at the problem of ships currently delayed and the time lost. Today there were in excess of 70 ships experiencing delays in the St. Lawrence River below Montreal. In addition there were 51 ocean going vessels still to exit the St. Lawrence Seaway before its announced clearance on December 19.

This gives, in total, in excess of 120 ships affected or potentially affected if this strike is not immediately resolved. At an estimated daily cost per ship of from $5,000 to $20,000, the losses and ship time alone are presently about $1 million per day. This figure could escalate to millions per day if all the ships are not able to exit the seaway.

This strike has gone on for more than three weeks. Mediation talks began on November 26 and broke off three days later. We had hoped for a resolution on this labour dispute through mediation, but this strike which has gone on longer that we can tolerate has meant Canada has not been in the position to meet its national and international commitments to maritime safety.

I want people to note that we are not legislating a settlement to the issues that are involved in the strike. We are asking the workers to get back to their job so that they can carry on. They have an enviable record which is second to none. They are world class in their work. Nonetheless it has a tremendous impact on the Canadian economy as a whole.

More important, this bill calls for the establishment of two conciliation boards, one for either side of the equation. They will bring forth a settlement to the issue but we are not legislating the settlement per se. That is a very fundamental distinction.

We still want the unions to have the rights of the collective bargaining process, but there does not seem to be a possibility of that settlement right now between the union and management.

Nonetheless, we feel it is paramount for the shipping industry of Canada and for the economic well–being of the prairie grain system as the cargo flows through Thunder Bay and through the seaway system that the facilities and the efforts of the coast guard be put back into service so that we can be dependable and have a system that is working for the good of our country.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that I get up to speak today in opposition to this legislation. Today is the forty–first anniversary of the UN Declaration of Human Rights.

I strongly oppose this legislation and I want to outline the bad faith bargaining on the part of this government, which is the employer in this case. I would also like members on the other side of the House to understand the valuable contributions of the labour movement to our Canadian society.

The collective agreements for both the ship crews and the hospital services members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada expired in December 1987, two years ago. We are talking about the lives and the livelihoods of 3,600 people across this country.

In September 1989 the Federal Court rendered a decision that precluded Treasury Board from designating any of these members. For the first time all members of the hospital services and ship crews classification of the Public Service Alliance enjoyed the right to strike. Strikes commenced on November 11, 1989 for the ship crews members and on November 29, 1989 for the hospital service members. Emergency services were still being provided by the members of these unions. Ship crews suspended their strike on at least 10 occasions to respond to emergency search and rescue calls.

This is one of the many reasons why back to work legislation is terrible. These alliance members have shown themselves to be principled and responsible Canadians. That is more than can be said of this government. There is no reason to designate them as essential workers when they know when emergency services are needed, and they have demonstrated that.

The Federal Court obviously agrees that they like all other workers have the right to strike. They have the right to withdraw their labour. The right to strike, the right to withhold one's labour from a bad faith employer, is a fundamental right in our society. It is one of the most effective bargaining tools workers have in a society where business has almost total economic control over many people's lives.

Along with destroying workers' right to strike, another reprehensible part of this legislation is the targeting of women workers as objects of contempt who do not deserve to be paid what they are worth. The majority of the federal hospital workers are women. They earn an average of $18,000 a year.

The key issue throughout the hospital workers' negotiations have been that of equitable pay. These workers have every right to expect restructured rates of pay and an economic increase reflecting the levels of the major economic indicators in Canada. These workers have experienced at least 10 years of pay inequity and have faced the refusal of the employer to address in any rational manner the issue of equitable rates of pay.

Instead the federal hospital workers were forced to file a complaint with the Canadian Human Rights Commission. They did so on September 9, 1981. The government delayed for almost six years before agreeing to an interim settlement in July 1987.

As I said earlier, it is ironic that this is the forty-first anniversary of the UN Declaration of Human Rights.

The consent order states:

> The parties are agreed that the Hospital Services—Group, which is predominantly female, has received less wages than the General Services—Group, a predominantly male group, for performing work of at least equal value.

• (1430)

The consent order lays out the method and terms for retroactive and future equal pay rates for the hospital service workers. The retroactive phase covered the periods from September 9, 1980, to July 26, 1987. On July 26, 1987, the payments stopped. In November 1989 Treasury Board began to make retroactive payments for the period since July 1987 to the present.

These workers deserve more than haphazard retroactive payments for the money they earned long ago. They deserve the fair rates established in the pay equity settlement to be inscribed in the collective agreement. They deserve to see that money a week after they have earned it, not two years later.

The government is stubbornly refusing to be fair to these workers. The government is openly practising discrimination against women workers. Instead of negotiating in good faith, establishing equitable rates of pay, entrenching the equal pay rates in the union contract, this government is forcing these workers who are on legal strike back to work.

I say abandon this legislation and just give these women the deal they deserve. The government is offering a settlement of between 4 per cent and 5 per cent. The difference in the rates of pay between this group and the general services group is estimated at more than 13 per cent. This issue will not go away by legislating unfairly treated workers back to work. It can only be addressed with a fair settlement.

All of this really comes as no surprise from a government whose own record on employment equity and pay equity is abysmal. The 1988 report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission specifically berated the government on the incredible delays in its study on pay equity in the public service.

The Employment Equity Act came into effect in 1986. It has been roundly criticized by labour, by women's groups, especially immigrant and visible minority women's groups, and by the New Democratic Party as having no teeth.

It is unfair to have to rely on the individual complaint process through the Canadian Human Rights Commission. The commission is not equipped to handle all of these complaints. We should establish and enforce employment and pay equity plans with goals and with timetables in a systematic way.

Some of the other outstanding issues for both the ships' crews and hospital workers negotiations are Article M-16, a no discrimination clause. The bargaining team wish family status and mental or physical disability to be added to the grounds of prohibited discrimination in the union agreement.

The union is asking for changes to Article M-21 of the contract. It wants its members to be able to partake of the new parental leave provisions of the UI Act. It is asking for 26 weeks of maternity leave.

We can compare this with what most workers in some western European countries have access to. In Sweden, women are eligible for nine months paid maternity leave and at a benefit level of 90 per cent of their earnings. They do not have to negotiate with a tight-fisted employer for a 26 week maternity leave.

In this case, the regressive Conservative government is also the employer. This government does not understand that policies that benefit workers also benefit the country. The government does not understand that progressive policies do contribute to a healthy economy. Tory economic policies such as the GST, the decimation of unemployment insurance and the constant attack on labour serve only to impoverish this country and to oppress working people.

The New Democratic Party has been enriched by the active participation of labour. When the Canadian labour movement and the CCF, the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, joined together in the early 1960s to form a political party, a powerful force in Canadian politics emerged. Since then, labour has helped to guide the New Democratic Party to adopt the most progressive and sound economic policies of any elected political party in Canada.

Labour and the New Democratic Party have fought for medicare, unemployment insurance, maternity and parental leave, child care, collective bargaining rights, employment and pay equity. We have fought together for a better Canada, one not controlled by the rich few, a democratic Canada in which everyone has the economic and social resources to fully participate in Canadian life and Canadian society. We are committed to an economic strategy of full employment. We are committed to fairness for all working people, men and women.

In my riding, I consult with labour. Labour can always be relied on to come up with practical strategies to build a progressive Canada. Labour can always be relied on for energy and for a wholehearted commitment to bettering the situations of Canadian workers and the most disadvantaged of our society.

I am proud that the New Democratic Party is fighting for the rights of working people. Labour and the New Democratic Party are united against the unfair treatment of working people by this government. We are united in opposition to this back to work legislation.

I am also proud that our new leader, the hon. member for Yukon, is taking a strong leadership role on all of these issues, especially in opposing this back to work legislation. She is following in the footsteps of her predecessor, the hon. member for Oshawa.

We are a party and a movement that is united and forward looking. We put our common goals and our principles ahead of our individual differences. This government must bargain in good faith. It must not put back to work legislation into effect. I urge all members on both sides of this House to vote against this regressive legislation.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to join with my colleagues in this debate because of the very special significance that this concern that we are debating today in the House of Commons has for my riding at the west end of Montreal.

As many of my colleagues will know, the Ste. Anne's Veterans Hospital is an outstanding institution at the immediate western point of the Island of Montreal. It accommodates some 726 veterans, many of whom are in their final years, and is recognized in the community by the Legion groups which support it with their volunteer hours and by the many citizens who join with the professional staff to assist in providing services needed in caring for people in their final years.

Included in the Ste. Anne's Veterans Hospital are some 250 permanently bedridden patients. There are also some 400 who can move about in wheelchairs but who, without the assistance necessary to handle wheelchairs, are like the others, bedridden.

In the past days and weeks, my office has received calls expressing concern on behalf of families or volunteers having limited access to those needing care. All these people, my neighbours, electors in the riding of Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis, electors in Vaudreuil to the west and Pierrefonds in the north, all are concerned about the health and care of the citizens in the hospital.

Patients with Alzheimers and dementia need routine in their life. If people change or meals are not regular, they become disoriented. It is a time when personal care and assistance is so vital to making life possible. All patients need care with bathing and shaving. Most need care with feeding.

• (1440)

One of the ladies who called my office and with whom I spoke expressed concern that regularity and meals for her family member was becoming very critical and that not receiving lunch until three or four in the afternoon is having a negative effect on the well-being and health of these patients.

Those patients who need physiotherapy or psychological care are not receiving it. The absence of that care at this time in their lives carries with it without question a threat to their well-being.

The volunteers at the Ste. Anne's Veterans Hospital are themselves elderly, many of them senior citizens. Many are becoming very tired. They have been working long hours and extra time to fill in for the services that are normally rendered. It is difficult or awkward for them to cross picket lines.

The Ste. Anne's Veterans Hospital cannot function without its volunteer group. There are many hundreds who visit the hospital to assist the staff. The situation is now reaching a crisis point. Most staff members have been working hard, some of them for eight days straight on 12-hour shifts.

There was originally an evaluation of the work of the some 600-odd workers who service the hospital and it was determined that to keep it operating safely, operating with care, it would require that 90 per cent of the workers contribute. The offer that was made by the union to designate certain workers to assure essential services was 8 per cent of that number.

The seasonal events which are so much looked forward to at this time of year and enjoyed by all Canadian citizens will have to be cancelled at the hospital. Whether it is the music or whether it is the special food that comes with this holiday season, it becomes for those directly affected very much of an emergency.

A patient who is not able to receive physiotherapeutic treatment, perhaps for leg problems for some time, and is not able to walk on the wards, could be expected to suffer a major set-back to the point where he might never be able to walk again.

An Hon. Member: Negotiate then.

Mr. Layton: I know that the negotiations are continuing. We have sat in this House of Commons listening to the reports of the minister that negotiations are ongoing. It is my hope that there will be a negotiation that will bring the workers back together. In the meantime, we have to concern ourselves with the well-being of the veterans. These are the people who actually represented this country with the risk to their lives in the wars of the past.

During the strike, the physiotherapy department has had to be shut down. Another major impact on patients is the change in routine that makes older people nervous, especially when the change is beyond their control. The hospital is for many of them, at this stage in their lives, their home and it is the one area where they feel comfortable.

Quite a number of the Ste. Anne's patients cannot eat by themselves. They require spoon-feeding. If any of the members of this House have shared in the experience of a senior citizen in his or her last years, they will know how key to their happiness and to their good feeling of still being alive comes from having someone there to help and someone there to care. Volunteers are doing that job at the moment, but they are not trained to recognize, for example, the onset of choking. Nor are they trained to act upon the problems of a patient once he has experienced choking.

How can we balance these tremendous needs in our community? On the one hand, the patients should have our very best in service. At the same time, we must consider those who are anxious to share fairly in the distribution of resources of the country, the workers who make it happen.

I can add concerns of their cardiac patients who are becoming more and more anxious. This anxiety is brought on when meals are not served on time and when medication is not being given at the usual time. Daily activities are being rearranged and activity rooms are being changed. These are not big problems for most people, but are part of essential routine for some cardiac patients to whom anxiety can lead to fatality.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Department of Veterans Affairs runs a hospital and two veterans' homes. The hospital is located in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue, at the western tip of the Island of Montreal. There is the Rideau Veterans' Home in Ottawa and the veterans' home in Saskatoon.

I shall only talk about the situation in the Saint-Anne-de-Bellevue Hospital. The problem is most serious there, mainly because the patients in that hospital need much more care than those in our two homes.

[English]

In the Ste. Anne's hospital, more than half of the staff belong to the hospital services group. While there are procedures in the event of a strike, the House will be aware that there were provisions that allowed designation of positions. This requires people in such positions to continue to perform their services if a strike is called. In this case, the essential service is to safeguard the health and security of the patients and to maintain their welfare.

The department did receive an offer from the union, but it was considered impossible to maintain the services on the basis of that offer. The response of the department indicated that while it was prepared to make an offer, the offer of 45 employees was well short of what was needed.

Now that the hospital at Ste. Anne's has been operating during the strike, it is important first to recognize that the strain on the employees did not begin when the strike started but had begun some considerable time in advance. Doctors, nurses and professional and support staff have been working 12 hour shifts. The nurses, in addition to their own work, have been doing the work normally undertaken by the higher levels of orderlies. The situation is becoming more and more critical.

[Translation]

Our doctor, nurses and other professional staff are working 12–hour shifts. In addition to their own duties, the nurses are doing the work normally done by the higher level assistants. The work of the other members of the hospital services group has been done in two ways: first, by the group of volunteers who usually help at that hospital.

[English]

It is an immense team of volunteers who contribute to the well–being of our veterans. In addition, they have moved some of the staff from other centres to try to assist. All have been working long hours and all are now, as might be expected, very tired.

• (1450)

I think we should pay tribute, and I am sure the House would wish to join me in doing so, to those who are keeping services available to our veterans and who have committed themselves to this end. Despite our best efforts, the health and safety of the patients is coming into jeopardy and this has been noted over these past days.

The deputy minister, as reported by the minister in his report to the House on this matter, studied personally the situation in Ste. Anne de Bellevue and concluded that we have to act now because the health, safety and security of the patients is in danger. I believe that we have demonstrated why this situation cannot be allowed to continue any longer.

[Translation]

As I already told the veterans, my department considers its employees most important and wants to treat them fairly. I believe that the arrangements proposed in this legislation will allow an independent third party to help solve the dispute.

Our personnel is entitled to expect fair treatment.

[English]

I would like to ask that the House respond rapidly to pass this legislation so that we may properly care for our veteran patients and look after those who did so much for us and are now unable to look after themselves. It is for this reason that I fully support the government's back–to–work legislation which is absolutely justified under the circumstances.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to rise in the House today to speak to Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services.

I am pleased to speak to the bill but I am not so pleased about what the bill entails. In addition to this motion, the government has moved closure on this bill to cut off debate on this issue, something that I find absolutely appalling.

I believe there is no one more anxious to go back to work than the health services and the ships' crew workers. We all know that the work of these two groups provide an essential service to Canadians. These two groups of public servants have a long history of being ignored by the federal government, a history of pay inequity. The hospital workers went out on strike in the wee hours of November 30 and the ships' crew workers went out on November 13.

There are provisions in the Public Service Staff Relations Act which allow for the designation of essential personnel who are prohibited by law from going on strike during a labour dispute. However, nine government departments failed to meet the deadline for submitting lists of personnel that they felt were essential.

The federal court ruled that the departments' mistake could not be overlooked and that these groups had the right to strike. As a result, all members of any of those groups were in a legal strike position if talks broke down. These groups have exercised that right. They are among the lowest paid in the federal Public Service. Is it any wonder that there are also the same groups that rejected the tentative agreement in March?

The major issues that led to the ships' crew group's rejection of a tentative agreement in March of this year were wages, hours of work, a sea duty allowance and wage parity on the east and west coasts. As of July 1987, wages on the west coast were behind private sector wages by 16 per cent and on the east coast wages lagged by 28 per cent. An east coast ship worker makes $2,000 less than his counterpart working for the same government on the west coast.

Given private sector wage increases over the past two years, these percentages are now much higher. The Public Service negotiators are not prepared to compromise any of the employees' requests in exchange for one benefit.

The members of this group work on the east and west coasts, on the Great Lakes and on the Canadian Coast Guard vessels, the fisheries vessels, search and rescue lifeboats, Public Works vessels and on Canadian forces auxiliary vessels providing support for naval vessels.

During the strike these federal employees have shown their good will and dedication by leaving the picket line whenever emergency services to the Canadian public were required. This to me indicates that these employees are dedicated to their jobs. They were dedicated when an emergency arose and they laid down their strikers' pickets and went back to work for those emergencies.

They are proposing, instead of higher pay scales, that they be given across-the-board sea allowances of $210 per month. The Department of National Defence already pays $177 per month to all personnel. The higher amount is because their pay scale is so much lower. The government could have settled this matter for $6 million. Considering how many days that they have been out on strike, they could have saved this $6 million by preventing lost business during the strike period.

The hospital services workers have been on strike since November 30. I listened to the gentleman across the way from a riding in Montreal who spoke just before me and his whole speech was based on the veterans' homes in Ste. Anne de Bellevue and on the volunteers and how great it was that the volunteers were providing this much-needed service. Only briefly did I hear him refer to the workers, those workers who have been so dedicated to these veterans all these years, and those workers who too do not like to see those veterans not being cared for to the extent that they know that they themselves would care for them. I did not hear the hon. member address that.

On July 15, 1987, the Human Rights Commission Tribunal ruled that this group of people is undervalued and underpaid. When is the government going to recognize that? The tribunal's consent order called on the employer to compensate the workers for past discrimination, re-evaluate seamstresses and community health representative positions using the federal general services standard and to revise the health services classification standard to parallel.

The classification system was changed but only equalization payments were issued. No salary adjustments have been made.

This is not something that has gone on for a year or two, it has gone on for years. The Human Rights Commission has ruled that they are being discriminated against, that they are undervalued, that they are underpaid and the government is not recognizing this.

On average, the health services workers are entitled to an additional $3,000 a year. Given that their salaries are as low as $16,000 and average about $22,000, this is a significant amount and a disgraceful wage.

Health services workers offered to provide emergency services but the government would not come to an agreement with them, thinking they could provide services with military personnel and volunteers. I kept hearing from the previous speaker about how these veterans were not being cared for and how these volunteers were overworked and how tired they were. Well, these public servants offered to do the job and they will not let them do the job and they will not pay them for doing the job.

The bill orders back the ships' crews and the hospital services workers immediately to their jobs. It establishes penalties for failure to comply; $500 to $1,000 a day for an individual. Someone who is making $18,000 a year is going to have to pay $500 to $1,000 a day if he or she does not comply.

• (1500)

It is unfortunate that this government is making out that these workers are the irresponsible ones. It is this government that is irresponsible. It is not bargaining in good faith. If this were really a caring government, then it would bring these salaries into line and get how these ministers would like to live on wages of $18,000 and $22,000 a year. We come into this building every day and we see the limousines sitting there with the motors running to keep the chauffeurs warm. In the summer time we see the limousines sitting there with the motors running to keep the chauffeurs cool. It is probably costing $18,000 a year in gasoline to keep those limousines out there. And these people do not have the courage nor the strength of conviction to pay these workers what they are worth and get them back to work.

This is a disgraceful situation. We have our veterans in the Rideau Veterans' Home who deserve the best care that we can give them. This quality care is given by these dedicated employees. I beg this government, if it wants these people to go back to work and if it is going to legislate them back to work, to make the commitment that it will bring their pay into line with other workers and show that it is bargaining in good faith.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian marine aids to navigation system is one of the fundamental elements of marine safety in Canada. The system consists of both floating and fixed aids to navigation on the east and west coast and on our major inland waterways. In all, there are some 8,000 floating aids to navigation comprising buoys of various types and sizes, ranging from seven-tonne buoys to lighter smaller spar buoys. These floating aids are complemented by fixed or shore-based aids to navigation, including light stations, ranges and day marks. The larger floating buoys are complex pieces of equipment that carry radar reflectors, whistles, battery power sources, lights, bells, and in some cases, radar transponders. These aids are marked and located in accordance with international conventions so that they are understood by the international marine community. The positioning of floating aids is carefully determined to take into consideration many factors such as channel configuration, local weather conditions, the presence of hazards and the local requirements of marine traffic.

Because of our Canadian climate it is normal practice for many lighted buoys to be removed from service at the end of the summer navigation season because they cannot withstand ice. In areas where navigation continues year around, in spite of the presence of ice, the summer buoys are removed and replaced by a limited number of winter spar buoys which are able to withstand severe ice action. In the St. Lawrence, lighted summer buoys are normally replaced by unlighted spars during the latter part of November. These spars do not provide the same level of service as the normal summer buoys. For example, it is most common on the St. Lawrence when the winter spars are set to restrict river traffic to daylight hours because of the absence of the lights on the buoys.

With the strike of ships crews, the Coast Guard's ability to bring in the summer buoys and, in some areas, to replace them with winter spars has been hampered. In the St. Lawrence, all buoys between Sept Isles and the Seaway normally would have been removed or replaced by this time, particularly with the present weather.

The situation which has developed in the St. Lawrence was entirely dependent on climatic conditions. In view of the severe and early winter weather this year, the summer buoys, beginning in the section between Quebec and Tadoussac, have become iced over. Others have capsized and some are partly submerged. With the accumulation and movement of surface ice, many of these buoys have also been dragged off position severely. Some have been dragged into the channel where they have become potential hazards. Some buoys have had anchor chains broken and some of these have actually floated free.

This situation is deteriorating upstream from Quebec, all the way up to the Seaway, with some 200 of the total 404 river buoys being iced over, off position and sometimes entirely extinguished. The safety of marine navigation was recognized by both the Canadian Coast Guard and the pilotage authorities. This has been compromised. It was for this reason that navigation on a section of the river was closed to traffic last Friday. As a result of the ongoing assessment of the safety of navigation, the lower section of the St. Lawrence was subsequently reopened to navigation on December 5 under restricted conditions.

The safety of marine navigation is a primary responsibility of this government. To let this situation continue is to risk an accident involving shipping on the St. Lawrence River. Such an incident could possibly result in the inability of all ships to clear the St. Lawrence Seaway above Montreal prior to the closing of navigation.

Because the aids-to-navigation system on the St. Lawrence is essential to marine safety, we must move immediately to remove any buoys that are potential hazards and to restore the system with winter spars so that traffic to and from Montreal can continue through the winter months. The current situation is most critical, given that a number of ocean-bound vessels remain in the St. Lawrence Seaway and must exit the system prior to the announced clearance date of the Seaway, which I understand to be December 19.

I would mention that critical situations also exist in other parts of the country, particularly off the Labrador coast where the Coast Guard maintains some 36 buoys that are normally lifted by this time of year. New Brunswick's Saint John River, now frozen over, holds some 27 buoys which normally would have been removed in May and will now be lost or will be hazards to the navigation system in the spring.

This situation has gone on long enough. It cannot be permitted to continue to threaten the safety of navigation and, most important, the economy and financial well-being of Canada.

I know that when we get into a debate like this, there is always a question of individual rights versus the rights and responsibilities of the Government of Canada. I believe that it is the responsibility of the Government of Canada to ensure safety in shipping. For that reason, I think we have to move in the direction that we are moving. We are doing it for the good of the country.

We are talking about balancing rights in this House on almost a continual basis. This debate today is no different. It is something like the abortion debate in a sense; a balance between the rights of the mother and the rights of the unborn. I think in this debate the rights of Canadians to ensure the safety of their navigation is of prime importance. When the negotiation process breaks down we are all losers in a sense. We hate to see it happen but from time to time in a democracy it does happen. That is what this debate is about today. It has been a long day. It has been a long couple of days in this House. But I believe that we are doing what is right for Canada. We are doing what is right for navigation.

In conclusion, I would simply reinforce the fact that the Canadian government has a responsibility to move quickly. I believe we are doing the right thing for the Canadian people.

• (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, After the series of articles that appeared in the press about this strike, which is clearly legal, after talking to some of the strikers living in the riding of Gatineau—La Lièvre, who told me about their concerns and what they consider to be unfair—Obviously, I read the documentation. If I may be allowed to quote, I read a decision that came the PSAC, which said that the federal government's decision to introduce legislation ordering federal public service employees in the ship's crews and hospital services groups to end their legal strike constitutes unjustified abuse of legislative powers.

However, I would not go as far as to say that. I think that what we see here is negligence, when we consider the position of these workers, whether they are on ships or in hospitals.

During the three and half weeks they have been on strike, members of the hospital services and ship's crews groups made sure that public safety was never at risk by always providing essential services. Consequently, it is clear that this bill contravenes the international conventions on freedom of association ratified by that same Canadian government.

[English]

If you may permit me, there have been so many articles and so many declarations on this issue it is obvious that the whole issue gets cloudier as each day goes by. The strike continues and we want to put an end to it because we realize it has ramifications, not only for the hospitals, for our ships but for security on the St. Lawrence and elsewhere.

Another person involved in this strike is a representative of the workers. Instead of negotiating a contract for the workers, the government is spending it seems hundreds of thousands of dollars of taxpayers' money. It would make more sense to have the employer sit down to negotiate a settlement with the employees, ratify it with the union and get things back to normal.

When you consider that the Human Rights Commission, not last week or three weeks ago but over two and a half years ago, declared that these men were underpaid, it seems to me that knowing this issue would come to a head that sooner or later the President of the Treasury Board could expect that these men would be in a legal position to strike, which they are, and the whole thing would come to the surface.

If there is anything that governments do, it is to be sure that everything is done equitably; equal pay for equal work. This could be an anomaly, some kind of an exception that could have been overlooked, if we can use the term. We will give them the benefit of the doubt. But two and a half years after the Human Rights Commission declaration which is an independent body respected by everyone, it seems that that should have been the signal or cue to the government to say: "Let us go by the principle of equal work for equal pay, and sit down to negotiate a contract that will stand up to any rigorous examination, be it by the workers or their union". But that is not the case here.

We have had disputes and all kinds of excuses over the past few weeks. The problem is it is not the last three weeks of the strike. It is the fact that it is has been dragging on for two and a half years. Maybe this is unfortunately an aspect of government, that it constantly hedges on time. There is an expression in French that says: "Tout ce qui traîne se salit. Evidemment.", and this is the case. Tout ce qui traîne se salit. Evidemment. What was rather interesting to me was my Liberal colleague from Ottawa who wrote a letter of nearly two pages to the President of the Treasury Board and concluded with the following paragraph:

> I again assure of my strong commitment to the implementation of equal pay for work of equal value and ask for your support in helping our public to understand what can be a complex and lengthy process to implement.

Like I said, we will give them the benefit of the doubt. There is no doubt that it is a complex and limiting process to implement. But it has been two and a half years. We are not dealing with thousands upon thousands of employees, we are dealing with a group who, for some time, were 26 per cent behind in pay compared with the private sector. Some workers, paid by this government, are 16 per cent behind.

For example, those who are responsible for the maintenance of the Parliament Buildings are paid 16 per cent more. It is not that they are being paid more. They are paid for work, which is justifiable. But here we have the same employees in another part of the country doing important work in our hospitals getting 16 per cent less.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we could, of course, go on indefinitely about this issue and invoke all kinds of principles. I listened to the hon. member from the Quebec City area, I don't remember his riding, who spoke very well and very sensibly, but we cannot avoid the facts. It doesn't take a university degree to realize that the problem has been around for two and half years. It was bound to come to a head, and it was bound to end in a strike. Of course there was going to be strike. They said that after waiting for two and half years, they were not going to wait anymore.

The government had plenty of time. There was no problem from that point of view. However it was the kind of negligence that we see all too often. I am not saying that the present government, the Progressive Conservative Party, is more to blame than anyone else. That is not the point. I think that the problem is that the government underestimated the will and determination of the people who work in our hospitals, and who know theirs is an essential service, and as so often happens, our governments tend to think that these people are very conscientious and that the chances of their going on strike are minimal. However, after two and half years, especially considering the support they got from agencies like the Human Rights Commission, they knew something had to give. In fact, it is surprising that it took two and half years.

So I believe that under the circumstances we cannot—In their letter they ask that we understand the complexity of the issue. Quite so, but how can we defend the government's position when we know there has been enough negligence to trigger a strike. The workers walk off the job and obviously the government, faced with a situation it has ignored for two years, is unable to settle the issue once and for all in two or three weeks. So it introduces special legislation—I have seen some in the past—to force them back to work, promising it will negotiate in good faith. But I maintain that after so many years the employees are in a good position and their strike is justified. It is unfortunate to realize that some essential services might be curtailed, but I do not believe that such is the case. But we have to admit that the government is guilty of negligence in this case. It is as simple as that. Never mind the statistics and the various statements, practically anything can be justified, but still we have to acknowledge the fact that the President of the Treasury Board has indeed been very negligent.

• (1520)

Of course we cannot support them on this issue, but at least we can tell them we hope this is the last time we see a government—which can afford to do much better—bring in special legislation to order back to work a group of people who are underpaid when compared with colleagues doing the same job, a fact which has been proved by all organizations. Basically, the way I look at this problem, and I want to put this a simply as possible, is that I am convinced the government will order them back to work. However, as I read the last paragraph of the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board, I believe there will be a final meaningful negotiation to do justice to these men, the kind of justice they have not seen in years.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in a way I am very sad to be participating in this debate today. I am also sad from the perspective of producers in my riding, farmers who depend on the system to export grain to market. This is their livelihood.

But I am also glad because it will give members and myself an opportunity to talk about what is wrong with the system that permits these sorts of stoppages and what we should be trying to do collectively to make a better system for the future.

I come from a riding on the prairies which is approximately 25,000 square miles in area and which is almost entirely dependent on agriculture. Indeed, agriculture produces, even now some 16 per cent of the gross domestic product of the province of Saskatchewan. It is quite clear that neither Saskatchewan nor, I suggest, Canada can long continue to endure these sorts of work interruptions. I am trying to be as non-partisan as possible in saying this because I am not anti-labour and not anti-management. I think what I am anti is this sort of senseless system we have which permits stoppages of work that do less damage to the parties than to the nation as a whole causing immense problems for third parties whether it be farmers, whether it be students, you name it.

Whenever the system of collective bargaining breaks down, the safety valve mechanism that we have dates back to the Stone Ages. We live in a modern, sophisticated society. We are capable of putting men into space. We are capable of transplanting organs. Messages can go around the world in the twinkle of an eye through sophisticated telecommunication systems. We live in a modern, sophisticated society and yet our dispute settlement mechanism is one which goes back, surely, to the days of the cave man.

When the system breaks down, it is time for the parties to start slugging each other on the forehead with rocks until one or the other falls down or, as is most often the case, it is time to come crawling into the House of Commons for some back to work legislation. Clearly things should change.

First I would like to talk about this particular bill from the perspective of prairie agriculture, then from the over-all perspective of labour relations generally. I will try to make what I believe to be a constructive suggestion. I think we all know that Canada has a mammoth handling and transportation system which moves grain from the prairies to market. The well-being of much of western Canada hinges on the continuing flow of this grain, particularly wheat, through the system of rail, river, road, canal and sea to purchasers throughout the world.

I am told that there are some 37 unions involved in the handling of grain between the farm gate and the port. They are involved in the country elevators, the railways and the grain terminals, the seaway, the St. Lawrence, the various ports, and they represent all sorts of individuals and occupations: grain handlers, grain trimmers, grain inspectors, weighers and samplers, seaway workers, lake carrier deck hands, mates and engineers, port stevedores, longshoremen, pilots, tugboat operators, railway trainmen, locomotive engineers, non-op shop craft workers, rail traffic controllers, various country elevator and grain service union personnel. There is a considerable number of employees and a considerable number of employers as well—the grain companies, railway, seaway, port authorities and so on.

Any one of these groups, at any given time, represents a vital link in the chain that is capable of breaking down and curtailing really remains the lifeblood of the southern prairies.

Canada exports more than 80 per cent of its wheat crop. Canada enjoys her reputation as a reliable supplier to the world of high quality wheat. The Canadian Wheat Board, which this government supports fully as the sole marketing agency for prairie export wheat, has been doing a good job maintaining and even expanding Canada's share of the world market in the face of unfair and cut-throat foreign competition.

The European Economic Community and the United States are both offering substantial export enhancement bonuses in order to maintain their share of market. These programs seriously undermine world grain prices, and this, in turn, has had devastating effects on our country which is so heavily dependent on exports. The Common Market has some 330 million people to draw from as a domestic population. The United States has some 250 million people. We in Canada have about 26 million people and so we are doubly dependent on export. We export a far greater share of our product than any of the other major wheat growing areas and, in turn, we have a much smaller domestic population to be able to match support programs.

Clearly it is a buyer's market out there. The importing countries value the quality of Canada's wheat but they can buy wheat elsewhere. The buyers do not have to put up with uncertainty of supply and delays in delivery. So when interruptions occur in our grain handling and transportation system, causing Canada to be unable to meet its obligations, other grain exporting countries will. Indeed, even the threat of labour-management induced interruptions in grain movement could lead to lost sales.

The Canadian Wheat Board, in effect, has to sell wheat to make sandwiches. The wheat has to be there to make tomorrow's bread. The nature of the business is that importers require large quantities on short notice and if the product is not on the shelf then it is simply not going to be sold. Canadian Wheat Board Commissioner Kristiansen, speaking of another work stoppage a couple of years ago, said that the stoppages at Thunder Bay had resulted in a million tonnes in lost sales. He is further quoted as saying:

> As things drag out longer you lose more. There is no question in our minds that we lost sales and substantial sales.

The major cost of these interruptions is lost sales opportunities. Other costs involve demurrage and the back-up following the stoppage, as well as additional rail costs in the case of seaway closures. Given the past history of stoppages in this country I suggest that this legislation is absolutely necessary. I will later suggest that we come up with measures in this House which would deal not just with this problem but with all similar problems so that there will not be the necessity to keep coming back here to resolve problems for which there should be a modern up-to-date mechanism.

I do not believe for a moment that there is anything to be gained by adhering to this status quo, this business of either side bashing the other on the forehead until one drops and there is some sort of a settlement. Meanwhile, there are people out of work, there is grain backed up, there is misery being inflicted in the country. It is archaic; it is antiquated; it does not make any sense in our society today.

I have been disappointed to say the least with some of my colleagues in this House who tell two stories. They go home to the prairies and tell the farmers that they are 100 per cent behind them and that this government is terrible and does not pay attention to agriculture, and yet they come back to Ottawa with a different story. Then it is time for them to start kowtowing to the big union bosses and saying: "Yes, sir, Mr. Bean" or "Yes, Shirley, whatever you want that will be the way it is". There is one story told on the prairies and then the farmers are stabbed in the back by those same people down here in Ottawa.

• (1530)

I think prairie producers are wise to this sort of tactic. They are getting sick and tired of it. I suggest that colleagues across the way in opposition would be well advised to co-operate in the passage of this bill.

I would in a way dare them to keep it going until Monday and Tuesday when we have the agri-food conference here in Ottawa. They will have the opportunity to hear first hand from producers and those involved in the industry right across Canada. They will tell them how they feel about the stupidity of delaying and continuing to filibuster this sort of measure.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Same old Tory philosophy. It is a shameful travesty.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we are hearing some interruptions of course from our colleagues in the NDP who like to hand it out but are of course are incapable of receiving anything. The difficulty with the simpering pantywaists who are sitting across the way is that they are too, too dependent on the apron strings of organized labour.

As a matter of fact, since we have been so rudely interrupted here by my NDP colleagues, I have to draw the attention of the House to a form letter from one Daryl Bean of the Public Service Alliance of Canada dated December 6, 1989. "Dear Member of Parliament," he states. He goes on to state that we are going to be asked to pass some back to work legislation. He points out that both groups provide services of enormous social and economic importance to the nation.

There is no argument there. Mr. Bean is right on. He is back. He is fresh from his bit part in "Saturday Afternoon Live" in Winnipeg which, as an aside, was really a marvellous spectacle for the nation to observe.

On the second page of this letter that Mr. Bean directs to members of Parliament, he goes on to get the old class knife in here. He states: "Could it be that some ice in the seaway is causing economic pain to the friends of the government in corporate Canada?"

It seems to me that this has been going on now for some four weeks. Indeed there is important work to be done by these people. As Mr. Bean says, they provide services of enormous social and economic importance to the nation. I would think that four weeks of work stoppage is adequate. I would suggest that it is more than time for people to get back to work.

If Mr. Bean really means what he says on page one, he should be very pleased to see legislation such as this which recognizes that importance. I would urge all members to co-operate in passing this legislation as quickly as possible and getting these people back to work.

What is there to do in regard to the problem generally? I have been in this House for five years, and measures such as this have become annual exercises. Here we are now dealing with legislation in regard to the Seaway. Last year it was the Prince Rupert grain handling situation. The year before it was the Postal Services Continuation Act. The year before that it was the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act. We came back in the summer for that. The year before it was the Maintenance of Ports Operation Act. This has been the case all the way along. There is a long list of back to work legislation that had to be passed.

It is clear that the system is not functioning as it should. As I indicated earlier, we have a modern, sophisticated sort of society. Why is it that in the area of labour relations when the collective bargaining process breaks down it is necessary to have a work stoppage? Whether it is on the part of management or on the part of labour, I do not care. It is debilitating for all concerned. It is an embarrassment to the country. There is a great cost to various classes of Canadian people, generally those who can least afford it. In the particular case at hand it is prairie farmers who will bear the brunt of this thing. It is on their behalf that I urge members opposite to co-operate in this particular piece of legislation.

Over all, I say again that this is not a case of being pro-labour, anti-labour, pro-business or anything else. It is a case of wanting to be anti-stupidity. Our failure in our modern society to come forward with some better way of resolving these impasses in the collective bargaining process is unforgivable. We have to do better.

This is a sort of abrupt cutting off. Hurtful, harmful measures inflicted upon people can cause damage, risk lives, costs innocent third parties considerable inconvenience and costs, cause embarrassment to our nation, threaten our markets and our reliability as a supplier. All these things point again and again to the need to do something better.

It is in that light and with that sentiment that I again make an appeal to this House, as indeed I have done through four or five private members' initiatives past and present, to try to work toward finding a better dispute settlement mechanism, some manner in which we can resolve these disputes before they get to this harmful, hurtful stage.

I do not pretend to know what the answer is, but it seems to me that we could form an all-party committee. Members from all sides of this House could hear evidence, could see what is being done in other countries. It may be a two-envelope system or it might be some form of court. There are specialty courts in some countries. There is the admiralty. There are obviously courts which specialize in matrimonial matters and probate matters. Why not in the resolution of labour disputes?

The collective bargaining process is good. It has to be there, clearly. There is no question about that. But let us have a better way of trying to resolve the breakdowns when they come, because the human cost and the dollar cost to our country are simply too great.

In regard to this particular bill I urge members on all sides to give speedy passage to the legislation in order to stop the terrible damage occurring to Canada's grain sector, to help out prairie agriculture and to help out farmers who are being beset by real difficulties in world export markets.

Over all, in regard to the big picture in terms of labour disputes generally—not just this one, but all of the other ones which have occurred and which we see in here year after year after year—I again say: let us look upon it from an all-party point of view. Let us try to get together to find some new mechanism to deal with it. I do not know what the answer is, but I think we have to get together. Surely collectively we can come up with something. We live in a modern society. There is a lot of talent in here. Clearly there is a need which must be addressed.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House this afternoon to oppose this bill and oppose it strenuously.

This piece of legislation tries to deal with three fundamental points. First, it talks about pay equity between men and women, between the east and west coasts and it deals with equity between private and public labour. The government has brought this bill in because it has failed to live up to its commitments to bring in pay equity. That is one of the points which I will come back to later.

The second point that this bill is dealing with is the whole question of labour rights. It is part of a Tory government program to undermine systematically the rights of labour in this country. Workers have won the right to organize and to bargain collectively. They have won the right to work or to withhold their work. This bill is part of an agenda to undermine this right.

It is always comical to listen to the Tories at a time when the eastern bloc countries are recognizing as a part of fundamental democracy that one must allow workers the right to collective bargaining and the right to strike. Even the eastern bloc countries are now recognizing this. Yet the Conservatives are going in the opposite direction.

The third thing that this bill shows is the incompetence and bungling of this government. This is a result of total incompetence. Is this not part of a Tory agenda? I sit here bewildered, wondering why they are not willing to settle. It is going to cost $6 million. What is behind it? Why will they not give workers the rights and the money they deserve? It is a measly amount of money.

• (1540)

I begin to ask myself: What ulterior motives do the Tories have? Why are they being so hard-nosed about this? You begin to wonder if it because John Crow has said: "If you give these workers fair wages, with the GST coming in next year there is going to be a push for additional wage increases in the public sector and the inflation rate will go up". Is this not part of their GST package?

Much of this has to do with the lack of the government's fairness with its employees, particularly hospital workers. I have worked in long-term care. I have worked with veterans, particularly elderly veterans. Hospital workers form one of the hardest working groups you will ever get. It is difficult working with seniors. These are dedicated people. They provide care and nurturing. They provide a whole range of services that must be recognized. Yet, in this case, there is a yawning gap between the fine words of the government and the meagre actions that have been taken at the ministerial level.

Let us listen to the fine words of the Prime Minister when he was debating the leader of the NDP in the 1988 election campaign on pay equity. The NDP leader said: "In this area of pay equity in which you have direct responsibility, you made a commitment in 1984 in terms of narrowing the gap between men and women. Why did you not act?"

The Prime Minister's explanation was: "Because we did. We passed the Employment Equity Act that Flora McDonald was responsible for in the first case. Second, we have the joint union–management committee to implement pay equity in the Public Service that is now going on to Treasury Board under Pat Carney, with all of our unions, where we are agreeing on a policy of pay equity for women for equal pay. This is what has been going on. This is the hard work that is going to produce, I think, quite remarkable results that will meet the objectives we both seek".

Those are nice words but nothing has happened. The Prime Minister is saying "a policy of pay equity for women". Why does he not implement it?

In the case of hospital workers they have been fighting for equity since 1981 and have argued successfully that their work was fully comparable to higher paid general service government workers. Finally in 1987 there was an interim consent order to give these workers $28 million. This was to be followed by job classification changes in a final settlement.

But the government has not kept its word. It has not kept its word on changing classification and pay scale. Instead, it has proposed a token payment as an attempt at compensation. The principle is not token, nor is the amount of money. These people are entitled to a full rate of pay of nearly $3,000 a year more than they are now earning. Their earnings are among the lowest in the Public Service, anywhere from $16,000 to $20,000 a year. That is not even what the members over there get for their tax free allowance, and they are expecting working women, many of them sole bread winners, to support their families on that.

Let us go back to the fine words of the Prime Minister in response to the leader of the NDP. Let us realize that they were spoken on national television during the leaders' debate. Surely this is as close to another one of the Prime Minister's famous declarations concerning a sacred trust.

What did the Prime Minister say? First, the leader of the New Democratic Party said: "But the gap has been widening, not narrowing. The gap between men and women, since you have been Prime Minister, in the Public Service has been widening, not narrowing. Again you say that you have legislation here that is right. It has been passed. You could run off a nice little list saying that we have passed this, that we have done this, but unless it is followed up by administrative actions to bring about fairness and equity it means nothing".

The Prime Minister's response was: "Mr. Broadbent, I am trying to explain to you that this is precisely what we have done. This is being done by the Treasury Board as the representative of the employers of all Public Service unions to work out with the unions in a mutually safisfactory manner a program that will give rise to exactly equality".

Listen to this: "We are budgeting for funds required on an ongoing basis to make sure they are available so that this money will be given to those women who have been deprived of the degree of equity that we seek". That is what the Prime Minister said.

I will repeat that. He said, "We are budgeting for funds required on an ongoing basis to make sure they are available so that this money will be given to those women who have been deprived of the degree of equity that we seek". That is very nice for him to say during an election campaign, but it is so typical as happens with the Prime Minister. Once the election is over he forgets all about it.

What has happened then? The Prime Minister was talking as though there was an inevitability, that there would be pay equity. Have the workers been given the amount due to them? No. Has the government conceded their case as to classification and salary? No. Has the government even recognized that it is paying in some cases below poverty level wages? No. In all of these things this is what the dispute is about.

Before I go on to labour aspects I wish to deal with the whole question of the people working in the coast guard, the ships' crews. I had a letter faxed to me today from one of my constituents concerning this legislation. I want to read it because it states succinctly what is involved here. It is addressed to myself and reads:

> I am writing you to register my extreme dissatisfaction with the manner in which the Treasury Board has conducted negotiations with the men and women belonging to the Public Service Alliance of Canada, (Ships' Crews). I feel the Treasury Board has not bargained in good faith, indeed they have hardly bargained at all.
>
> Please consider: That after 2 years without an agreement, the PSAC members (ships' crews), out of repeated disappointment and frustration, has engaged in a legal strike with their employer; that the Ships' Crews provide search and rescue functions, on both coasts of Canada, in addition to maintainence and supply services of the Canadian Coast Guards; please consider also that the union and the crewmen themselves, at the outset of the strike, agreed unilaterally to maintain vessel response capability in the event of a marine distress. This has been done. During the course of the strike there have been several instances where striking crew members have responded to emergency distress calls or co-operated in the handling of emergency situations such as the recent oil spill and resultant fouled beaches near Sooke, B.C.
>
> If the Treasury Board is unable to conclude an agreement after 2 years, I submit it is either government policy to delay the implementation of a new agreement or indicative of ineptitude on the part of the Treasury Board. It certainly isn't due to unreasonable wage demands, as a comparison with comparable jobs and duties within the federal, provincial, and civic public services will show. In the event of either government policy or ineptitutde of the Treasury Board, the situation is wrong and should be corrected.
>
> As employees of the federal government, these "—Brave and dedicated men and women—" (Minister of Transport, the Hon. Benoit Bouchard, in Hansard, October 16, 1989), to whom the House of Commons recently paid tribute, deserve better treatment from the Treasury Board. As Canadian citizens they have a right to believe that their government will treat them fairly and justly.
>
> After having engaged in a legal strike, as a means of last resort, and after having conducted themselves in a responsible manner consistent with the finest traditions of seamen and democratic trade unionists and citizens, the government has proposed legislation to force these men and women back to work.
>
> This is akin to moving the goal posts in the middle of the game. I urge you to vigorously oppose this forthcoming legislation and I further urge you to apply as much pressure as you can to the Treasury Board to end this dispute, by proper negotiation, in a fair and just manner, not by force of legislation.

I think that sums up a great deal of what is taking place in this House. What we now have is the Tory agenda to undermine the rights of workers in Canada.

• (1550)

I just want to recall a story about my father when he emigrated to this country. He arrived in Edmonton in March and he, like many other men, sought work. Most of the work available was manual labour. At that time there was a need for ditch diggers. The way the ditch diggers were hired was that the boss would put out 100 shovels and the men fought for the shovels. If you got a shovel, you dug and you worked. If you could not fight and get a shovel, there was no work.

Then they put the biggest man up at the top of the ditch. If he dug 10 feet, you dug 10 feet, because if you did not there was another man there to take your place.

It was because of these kinds of working conditions that my father was involved in some of the first organizations of trade unions in this country. I see, systematically, right wing governments like the Vander Zalm government in British Columbia and this Tory government, trying to return labour's rights and workers' conditions to those of pre-World War I.

Labour law in Canada is usually statutory law in which collective agreements between workers and management are worked out under the auspices of labour codes, labour standards and other legislation. Yet it should not be forgotten that the freedom of association is a hard won freedom which has a long and honourable history, both here and in the United Kingdom where much of the fight for labour recognition began.

This freedom of association was recognized—some would say imperfectly—in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in 1981. Canada has further ratified international covenants recognizing collective bargaining. It is a member of the International Labour Organization which among its roles serves as an international watch-dog on labour practices of members. It has been disturbing to many of us to see Canada, in the eyes of the ILO, turn from an international innovator to an international violator.

Unfortunately the truth has been that punitive and coercive legislation of several provincial governments and the federal government has brought the International Labour Organization's rebukes. The most recent case involved the federal government itself and its Bill C–68, the Postal Services Continuation Act in 1987.

Not only is there an attack on labour through direct legislation, but many of the other programs introduced by this government are intended to undermine the position of labour. Examples of this are the erosion of the Unemployment Insurance Act, to make it more difficult for people to receive unemployment; the continuation of a high unemployment rate which forces workers to accept underpaid jobs; and the harmonization of wages in Canada with the United States forced by free trade.

Yesterday I was at a committee meeting in regard to truck leasing companies. These are the companies that lease the big rigs and large trucks to truckers and do their servicing in Canada. Their representatives appeared before the committee. These companies are saying that now with the free trade deal it will be cheaper for them to establish their shops across the line and then lease back into Canada these large trucks.

The attack on labour legislation comes with such things as this high–handed piece of legislation that has been brought in by the very government which refuses to bargain in good faith.

If you ever want to see an inherent conflict of interest in labour–union management negotiations, it is when management has also got the power to legislate people back to work. Then they simply sit back and say: "We don't need to bargain in good faith because when the chips are down we will force the workers back to work."

It is also interesting to take a look at the timing of this back to work legislation. The strike has been going on for some time. The employees have acted responsibly. There has only been action by the government when its friends, the big shipping companies, start to get antsy that they are losing money, that they start to be concerned that they are going to lose income. Yes, they are. It is so silly. Their loss of income is significant to this government, but the equity and fairness to the workers does not appear to be.

You wonder about the Prime Minister and how he is able to say that he is a self–proclaimed friend of the working man. Yet what does he do? He certainly does not believe in the rights of labour to organize, to bargain and to negotiate a fair and equitable contract. He certainly does not believe in the rights of women to pay equity and equal pay for work of equal value.

I am proud to be part of the New Democratic Party. I am proud of our alliance with labour. I am proud of the fact that I also have a union background and have been involved in a variety of unions from the steelworkers, to mine mill, to CUPE.

A fundamental part of a democracy is based on the freedom of workers to organize, to bargain for fair wages and to work with other people like the New Democrats for fairness not only in the workplace but for all Canadians.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset how well the chair becomes you. It is nice to see you back in your seat.

I have watched the individual presentations on this very serious subject since the outset. I think it is safe to say that I have seen practically every speaker. I put myself in the position of members of the public who have watched the debate. I think there is certainly a risk that some people may be confused about what precisely is going on here. Quite frankly, I don't blame them. It is difficult to understand.

We have a situation here in which people who do a great service for Canada and who, in the opinion of certainly this side of the House, are seeking what is at least a minimum fair compensation are being told: "We have not the time to discuss the problems with you. We are going to legislate you back to work."

I have never belonged to a union and I have not been involved in these kinds of activities. I think, however, there is a logic here that one has to look at. At least from the perspective of where I sit and the perspective of where I have been for the last 30–odd years, I wish to try to put some kind of a sense into what it is we are doing here on a Friday afternoon.

I would like to begin by giving a recount of some of the maritime activities that Canada is involved in and what things maritime mean to this country. I would like to go on and have a look in a little more detail at what this bill does. I would like to have a look at what it does and to whom. Then I would like to be able to give you, Mr. Speaker, some of the ideas that I have on the question of whether it is right or whether it is wrong, in my opinion and in the opinion of many of my colleagues on this side of the House.

• (1600)

We tend to forget from time to time but those of us in Atlantic Canada are constantly reminded of the great maritime country in which we live. Canada is a great maritime country. We also have extensive maritime interests and substantial maritime obligations to go along with that.

I would like to quote some figures. To begin, we border on three of the world's largest oceans. We have the largest coastline in the world, 250,000 kilometres, the second largest continental shelf and our economic zone is so large that it covers about 8 million square kilometres in the three contiguous oceans. That is nearly equal to our land mass of about 10 million square kilometres.

Our continental shelf is rich in oil, natural gas and other exploitable mineral resources. In addition, it is no news to Atlantic Canadians or Pacific Canadians, and I hope to all Canadians that large rich fishing grounds lie off both our coasts. Canada claims jurisdiction over them to a distance of 300 nautical miles now and we on this side of the House are hoping that in the future we will be claiming jurisdiction for a little bit outside the 200 miles, so we can put some order into what it is that happens and we can take control of our own resources.

Canada is the world's largest exporter of fish. One sometimes wonders if that is true by the importance the government gives to the fishing industry. I can assure all members that in the very near future when we talk about total allowable catches on the east coast of Canada off the coast of Newfoundland that it is going to get a profile here that this House hasn't seen in some time. I am certainly guaranteeing that those of us on this side of the House will make sure that that is so.

Our seaborne trade, which is what is involved here, has grown impressively in the last 20 years. As a major trading nation, Canada has to transport many of it products to western Europe and to and from several trading partners along the Pacific Rim, including Japan, which is a very large trading partner of ours.

Exports today represent 30 per cent of Canada's gross national product, making it the third most trade reliant nation in the industrialized world, and 35 per cent of these exports leave Canada by sea. Those exports include wheat, grain, oil. Bauxite and tin are, in addition to some of the strategic materials in the import field.

The last figures I had which I could quote with accuracy were in 1982 and our international seaboard shipping, both exports and imports, totalled approximately 200 million tonnes. That is a lot of shipping. The value of the deep sea portion of the water based trade, excluding the shipping to and from the United States, was $40 billion. To move these goods, to give you some indication of the volume, Mr Speaker, some 110 merchantmen and tankers enter and depart Canadian ports daily.

I want to look at the third ocean, the one that we tend to forget from time to time. Over the past two decades the strategic importance of the Canadian Arctic archipelago has been enhanced for a number of reasons. We have had the discovery of high grade mineral deposits and the development of technologies for their extraction and transport. In addition, the increase in commercial scientific military use of the Northwest Passage has kept the Canadian Arctic in the forefront and indeed has kept all of us in this House in debate on that subject from time to time.

Last, but certainly not least, the three oceans contribute vitally to Canada's security in that they separate our country from the territories of potential enemies.

That has given some indication of the maritime interests that we have in Canada. To say that they are vital is perhaps the understatement of the day.

Who are the people involved in making sure that these maritime interests continue to be served properly? This is not the time or the place to speak about Canada's navy, and I am hoping that there will be other occasions to do that.

It goes without further explanation. It is axiomatic that a country that has a maritime interest must also have personnel, services, measures and policies to make sure that these interests are properly served.

One of the things that we have been very proud of in this country is that we have always responded to the call of the sea, and I think I can say from personal experience and from the knowledge of my history of Canada's maritime heritage, we have done it well.

To quote you one example, and I do not think it would be out of place, I would remind this House that when World War II started, Canada's navy had 10 ships and 2,000 people. By the end of World War II, in something like 2,150 days, the Canadian navy was the third largest allied navy. It had 100,000 officers and men and it had close to 400 ships. If you work that out on the back of a cigarette package, it is around one ship every five days and about 50 men a day.

For my own case in my own province, less than two weeks ago I was honoured to have been the guest speaker with a group of Newfoundlanders called The First 200. They were the first 200 men who answered the call when the call for volunteers went out in Newfoundland in 1939. Within two months of World War II beginning, 200 men were on the Furness Withy jetty in St. John's, Newfoundland, to set sail to serve their country. I was delighted that a goodly number of them attended this meeting and they were as ready to go now, 50 years after the event, as they were when they were in their late teens and their early twenties.

This is one example of the kind of fortitude that our people who served Canada and our maritime needs have shown and will continue to show in the future.

Let me have a look at our auxiliary forces. I am talking now about the crews involved in this particular issue. We are talking about the coast guard. We are talking about the auxiliary forces that serve the Canadian navy. We are talking about fisheries and oceans and we are talking about certain elements of the research categories.

I say in modesty and with a certain amount of humility that I suspect that there are a few people in the House who have a real feeling for what it is that these men and women have to do. I have a real feeling because I have had the honour, the privilege, the duty and the responsibility of being a sailor at sea, all my life. I might add also that my family have followed this tradition for seven generations. I come from a fishing family. I come from a family of seafarers. All my colleagues from Newfoundland have had personal experiences in the sea and with the sea. It is a heritage that we are very, very proud of. I know that I speak also for my colleagues from Atlantic Canada and from other parts of the west coast.

• (1610)

Let me try and paint a picture for you, Mr. Speaker. If it is a a normal situation, you proceed to sea on a Monday morning. If you are lucky you will have a reasonable sea and you will return to harbour with few difficulties. You are not in communication other than by radio with the rest of the world once the lines are slipped until you return to harbour. The captain of the ship is in his own way master of all he surveys and the ship's company, the team that makes up that crew, live a life and death situation from the time they leave until the time they get back.

Let me take an unusual situation. You may sail at any time and you may never return. I reluctantly make reference to a very sad occasion which I recall more vividly than I would like. In mid–October members of the coast guard rescue team went to rescue a diver in distress in a cove just outside St. John's, Newfoundland. Due to the nature of the elements, the crew of four, the coxswain and the crew of that fast response vessel, within view of the public essentially were lost at sea. In fact, their bodies have not been recovered. How do you portray that in the heat of a negotiation? How do you translate that to somebody, either in the highest court in the land, in this House, at a negotiation table, or in any other way, shape or form. It is very difficult.

As I stand and talk with my colleagues here today, I am told that there is a storm in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and around 250 kilometres off Prince Edward Island at least one ship is in dire straits and we fear that something even more difficult may have happened to another one. Eight metre seas, that is a 25–foot swell. Can you imagine launching a small craft in a 25–foot swell to carry out a rescue operation?

Well, Mr. Speaker, enough of the drama, but it is not meant to be drama. These people are on strike through a proper organization. It was deemed totally legal what they were doing. They would not let life and safety suffer. On many occasions they met the normal criteria, they laid down their pickets and placards and went to sea and, in some cases, carried out some of those rescues that were attempted off Newfoundland that ended so tragically.

People who would do that I believe deserve something in return. I believe that they deserve in return more than an unprecedented action of legislating them back to work, an unprecedented action of closure to do this and an unprecedented action of rewarding those people who give of their time, energy, talents, heritage and, yes, their lives, with an order to go back to work and the inability to continue to negotiate for what is theirs, a fair settlement.

These people earn around $20,000 a year. These people I just discussed take home $240 a week. What are they asking for? They are asking for 50 cents an hour. Should we legislate them back to work for 50 cents an hour? I have no shame and I have absolutely no second thoughts about standing in this House today and going to bat for these people. I do not think they would expect anything else from anybody with a seafaring background, and I do not think they would expect anything else from a background of people who care, like my colleagues around me here today.

We are not asking for something unreasonable. Where I stand on this issue is not determined by where I stand on this side of the House. I feel strongly about this, I feel almost emotional about it and I believe that these people are not getting a fair shake. This is why I am speaking here today and if I were allowed to, Mr. Speaker, even with the great flexibility that you have allowed me in this House, I would go on as long as you would allow me, because I believe it is an issue that needs to be discussed and I hope I have the credibility to do that.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, there are not many of us in this House who can speak on this issue with the knowledge of our colleague who has just spoken. Perhaps, with the unanimous consent of the House, the hon. member could be given another five minutes or so, because I do believe he is able to contribute something that few of us could in this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there agreement? The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with giving the hon. member another five minutes or so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So ordered.

Mr. Mifflin: I have heard the figure of $2 million per day for the ships; I have heard the $6 million total that will make up the difference. Perhaps there is a principle involved on the other side of the House and with the President of the Treasury Board that we do not know about. If there is, could the next speaker please tell us? Will somebody let us know?

There is something that I do not understand about this. If it is as simple as the 50 cents that we are talking about, in return for the services that are provided by these brave men and women, then I cannot understand why we are here on a Friday afternoon and why somebody does not just go back to the table right away and negotiate. There is not a great deal of negotiation to be done. I think it is very fair.

There is another aspect that bothers me. I do not have evidence for this, but I find it passing strange that the hospital service workers for the veterans' hospitals are included in the same business. It was not too long ago that the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs stood in this House and gave a very eloquent and excellent presentation as a tribute to the men and women who served this country. I believe there are still 144,000 veterans, many of whom are being cared for by the hospital service workers that are the subject of our debate here this afternoon.

From what I know about the issue, these workers are looking for parity. They were, according to the Human Rights Commission, at some point in time at least $34 million behind in what they were owed by an objective standard. That leads me to believe that perhaps what they are looking for is perhaps as fair as what our sailors are looking for. Equally, I have difficulty understanding why we cannot seem to be able to go back and bargain with them, because I think what they are asking for is equally fair.

I am told that the 144,000 veterans, or a number of them who are hospitalized, are receiving care. My colleague, the hon. member for Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis described the circumstances at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. It is not in my riding, but I made it my business to be in contact with some of the people as part of my responsibility as critic for Veterans Affairs, and I was equally satisfied that, at some cost to the government, these services are being maintained. Therefore, what are we dealing with? We have a situation of dedicated people who are asking for fair treatment. We are not asking for the world for them. In both the case of the ships' crews and the hospital services workers, their demands seem reasonable, and after less than two weeks' of negotiations, everything has come to a standstill.

• (1620)

The logic of this I find very difficult to understand. There will be a great disappointment when we stand in this House and vote on closure. It will be a great disappointment, I believe, for those people who are affected: 2,300 sailors and 1,300 hospital services workers. I think they will believe, and they have every reason to believe, that they have been let down.

I hope that in my small way I have made some contribution to those of us who are going to vote to try and convince them that in my heart of hearts and on this rare occasion, I must say, speaking totally apolitically, but speaking more as a sailor and as somebody who has been involved in this way of life for many years, I can honestly say that what they are asking for is fair and just and, I believe, quite frankly we owe it to them to go back and have another look.

If I had a closing remark, if I had a closing statement, I think I could convey the business of being a sailor and going to sea by quoting a remark made by Samuel Johnson a few hundred years ago. He said: "Should a man contrive to be in jail, he would never go to sea because being at sea is like being in jail with the chance of being drowned."

That is what we are dealing with, Mr. Speaker, and we need to respect that and do something just and real about it.

I thank you for your indulgence and I thank all my colleagues for their indulgence for the extra time.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, in some 21 and a half years in this place, this is the tenth or twelfth time I have been present dealing with back to work legislation.

I want to say at the outset, Sir, that the passing of such legislation has never been a sign of success by the government. It has been a sign of failure by the government on all those occasions. I will not deny that there will be a rare exception that would cause a national emergency or something like that when Parliament probably unanimously would pass back to work legislation, but it is so rare as to be almost inconceivable.

I listened to speeches of spokesmen for the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Veterans Affairs yesterday and may I say something about the matter. As I recall, it was stated that in the realm of safety, security and emergencies this legislation was necessary.

Of course, the coast guard and the people in the onshore facilities guaranteed that they would be there in the event of an emergency, in the event of a requirement for search and rescue. On this very day they stood by their word and they did their job. Apparently two ships have been lost in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and tragically 39 lives may have been lost in the most horrible of conditions. Our search and rescue and coast guard people are still there trying to find survivors. I do not want to hear any more nonsense from government spokesmen about emergencies and search and rescue. The problem is that the Department of Transport is going to lose quite a few thousand dollars on buoys that should have been stored for the winter, but are going to be sunk by the ice.

I listened to the Minister of Veterans Affairs yesterday. He gave a good speech, particularly about what was happening at Ste. Anne de Bellevue. If it is that serious, how come it took this long to take action? I will tell you why it took this long. It was not until it cost the ship owners a couple of million bucks and they put some heat on the government that we got the legislation. Then and only then did it happen. If the government had been bargaining collectively, we would not have reached this impasse.

When you have a stupid or bad employer you are going to have a tough, mean union. It is inevitable. When you have a good conscientious employer, you have a good conscientious union and there is a minimum of difficulty. I have been through this too many times, both in this House and when I worked on the railroad. The deck is stacked. They play one group in society against the other.

PSAC put it very well today in its circular. When the hospital services group attempted to negotiate similar arrangements as the coast guard did regarding emergencies and providing a minimal number of staff, the government would not agree. I would like the Minister of Veterans Affairs to explain that. It was a negotiable item in the immediate term. Nothing happened. They go on to say, and I agree with them, that it was deliberate. The employer and the departments are preferring to pit one vulnerable societal group against another, making hostages of aged people, the infirm, veterans and poorly paid hospital workers. In terms of being any kind of a manager, that is despicable. It is not good, sound, fair management.

These people have been two years without a contract and three years without a raise in pay. Nobody could say that they were impatient. They have been more than patient. That is a degree of tolerance that I doubt most of us would have. MPs automatically get 2 or 3 per cent every January and do not even have to bargain for it. It is laid on.

However, when there is a situation where employees go two years without a contract, three years without an increase, any government or any management, any bargainer on the government side who would think that these people are not going to fight for and demand to catch up are kidding themselves. If they refuse to recognize and face up to that, they are faced with a strike. Their solution is to fly in the face of every tenet of free collective bargaining. It is called stacking the deck, and the government holds the cards.

• (1630)

I have suggested to various unions for a number of years now that they should return to what John L. Lewis always did with the United Mine Workers. Six months before a contract expired they would submit their demands for the next contract. If a settlement had not been reached when the contract expired they went out on strike. His principle was no contract, no work.

These people have gone two years without a contract. There were instances when they have gone three years without one. I remember once, when I was in the railway, we went two years without a contract. When we had a strike, mostly over retroactive pay as well as the 40–hour week in 1950, it was a chief justice who told the government and the railroads where to head. We got retroactive pay and we got the 40–hour week. We had to shut down the whole country for 10 days and I can tell you the employees were the first ones not to enjoy it.

When you have a situation where management sits around on their hands for two years and there is no contract settlement then something is fundamentally wrong. I listened to the hon. member for Swift Current—Maple Creek talking about the poor farmers. I think he mentioned a million tonnes of grain that is in the Great Lakes Seaway ports, the St. Lawrence ports and on board ships. My first point is that the whole western half of Saskatchewan, all of Alberta and the Peace River country in British Columbia ship their grain west, not east. So, none of the grain in the hon. member's constituency goes east. There might be the odd rare carload of malting barley or something. He was weeping tears for the farmers in his riding.

The point is, as the PSA said, here we have the government playing off one societal group against another. I have always been straight with my farmers and the trade union members in my riding. On countless occasions I have tried to put each side's case for argument to the other. Thanks to the Farmers' Union and the trade union movement there have been countless conferences on the prairies among farmers and workers to sort out the problems that they both have.

There is a principle here that gets continually ignored, not just by this present government but by the previous one too on several occasions. The principle is that when you have a collective agreement, management submits its proposals for the coming year, and the union, on behalf of the employees, does the same thing. I would not mind seeing something in the law that requires both sides to submit proposals at least 90 days and maybe six months before the expiration of a contract so they would be required to bargain.

I am not suggesting for one minute that there have not been occasions when the union has not been wrong. The union doesn't claim to be perfect, but in the overwhelming majority of cases in my experience it has always been management which had the economic power and the political influence, either by the government or from the government, to get its way. Today is another classic example of how any employer, but particularly this government as an employer, could sit back and watch its own lowest paid employees go three years without an increase.

Now, I expect my friend from Fraser Valley to take that into consideration, the fine Christian gentleman that he is. It must twinge his conscience a little bit at least. I would like to think and hope that he went to people in the Department of Transport, the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Treasury Board and said that it is not right. I hope he has done that. If he has not, maybe he should, like an hour ago.

There has been a certain atmosphere here for the last several years when it came to collective bargaining no matter whether it was in the private sector or between the government and the employees. But have you not noticed and remarked, Mr. Speaker, that in the last few years most of it has been between the government and its employees.

A remarkably high degree of settlements are reached between the trade union movement and the employers in the private sector. In fact, the truth of the matter is, that 95 to 96 per cent of contracts are reached through collective bargaining. A very small percentage end up in a strike or a lock-out. I remember when the longshoremen went out on the west coast. They appreciated then, as they do now, the difficulties that the grain producers of western Canada and the potash producers were having. So they went to the government, the Maritime Shippers Association and the port authorities and said: "Look, we will move grain. Our disagreement is not with the handling of bulk commodities. This strike is about containers, shift work and how far away we have to go to go to work". They said: "We'll move the grain". There would not have been a single bushel of grain left sitting.

You know what, Mr. Speaker? Management refused. Management refused to see the grain moving. Then I listened to the hon. member for Swift Current—Maple Creek saying that we should have some kind of a law. Well, I can tell him the kind of law we should have. He mentioned marriage breakdowns and so on although I noticed he did not mention mortgage deals. like that happens as happened to the grain handlers and the employer says no, the law says the employer is going to have to do it anyway.

I am sad to say that even our own Prairie wheat pools would not agree to keep the grain moving even though the strike had nothing to do with the movement of grain. Why? Because the other shippers and owners were calling the shots.

I have something else I want to mention and I am glad the Minister of Veterans Affairs is still here, because I want to talk about what the cost of the strike is to the department, the government, Treasury Board or whoever. I have figures which I received from a reliable source. I would like him to check on it and tell us if it is true that the government is paying $50,000 a day for catering? Is it true that the government is paying $163,835 per week to provide extra security over and above what it is already paying for?

• (1640)

Can you imagine, $163,835 per week is what the government's stubbornness and the strike is costing. I would like to know if it is true or not. Nurses being hired from various agencies are costing $350,000 a week. That is what this strike is costing.

The government is currently paying in overtime at St. Anne de Bellevue $840,000 per week. The total cost to the employer during the strike is $1,633,835. Before the strike the cost was $385,000. In other words, the government is putting out $1,300,000 more than it was before. Even if the employees got all they were asking for these figures would only increase by 6 per cent whatever the cost would be of the human rights settlement.

Who do you think is getting that $163,835 for security? Pinkerton's, naturally, those friends of the working man for the last 150 years. Pinkerton's are getting an extra $163,835 a week. It pays to be friends of the government. This government has no objection. I want the minister to get up and tell us if these figures are inaccurate because we are looking at something over $2 million per week that he has frittered away because of his stubbornness and his refusal to be fair.

Some employees have not had an increase for three years. My goodness, it is a good thing he is not commanding a regiment under those kinds of terms because he would have to watch his back more than his front. The doctors are getting an extra $100 a day at St. Anne de Bellevue on weekends. Some of them are prepared to say, and we are looking for some of them, that the patients are starting to suffer. If that is true there is nobody else to blame but the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I can assure you we will find out.

The staff and nurses who are still working have been given an extra $300 each in overtime bonuses. I am assuming that those are bonuses over and above the overtime they made. The government has brought in 80 agency nurses at a total cost of wages, living expenses, travel et cetera of $500 per day each.

I think the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the President of the Treasury Board have something to answer for. How can they say that somehow or other this legislation is necessary because the unions are not being reasonable? The one not being reasonable is this government. The government is not being fair and is victimizing farmers and shippers as well as employees. It is this government and nobody else. You are the architects of your own problem and you are the perpetrators.

I have enjoyed doing this, although I did not relish it. I have enjoyed getting after these birds for what I have seen this government and the previous one do repeatedly. They never learn. Governments continue not to learn, and they will keep making the same mistakes.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to this debate all afternoon and I think there are some fundamental facts we are not putting forward. The government stated earlier today in one of the speeches settlement is equal to a 49 per cent increase over 36 months. The government talked about the fact that it cared for the quality of life in this country, about the fact that legislating these people back to work was for the greater public good. It talked about the fact that it cares about the deficit. It talked about the fact that the only reason we are here today is to oppose for the sake of opposing.

Well, I know we are here today to challenge this government's value system. To state that this is a 49 per cent increase over 3 years is really not putting the right face on this legislation. These men and women are making $18,000 a year and they have to be on standby 24 hours a day, seven days a week. They have to put their lives at stake because they are going to sea to rescue others. Obviously most of these rescue missions are at times when they are in danger. They must face twenty–five and thirty–foot waves.

People in my community in downtown Toronto cannot imagine that. These are waves two or three storeys high. We get three and four foot waves in Lake Ontario and we run the other way. These men and women who are at sea are guarding our waters, our fisheries, and they are asking for 50 cents an hour more on a base of $18,000.

I cannot understand the logic of the government because I know there are many members on the other side who care. They are approachable, and they love this country as much as we do, but I think we are going to have to change our style in this House and when situations like this arise from time to time we are going to speak up. This has nothing to do with unions or government. These are basic values and we are just looking the other way.

• (1650)

I have never been on a coast guard vehicle. I probably would not have the guts to go on a coast guard vehicle on the high seas. However, I tried to imagine who in my community has a similar task, provides a similar public service that my constituents of Toronto can relate to. I thought of fire–fighters in Toronto, a group of men and women whom we are proud of and are on stand–by 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. They put their lives in danger for the public service. Their starting salary is $31,500. After five years on the job, a first–class fire–fighter receives $42,800.

We are here talking today about coast guard crew who are only making $18,000 a year. They are asking for approximately $2,000 a year more, 50 cents an hour. I cannot understand this, because when I think of a husband and a wife and maybe one or two children with the take–home pay of $18,000 to $20,000 a year which I calculate to be approximately $260 to $280 a week, I do not know how these men and women make a go of it.

We are sitting here in the national chamber, where we are supposed to have national standards, where the person in an outpost in Newfoundland has as much chance and as much opportunity and is given the same dignity as a person in downtown Toronto. This bill is not meeting that national test.

It is December, the Christmas season, and we are supposed to have a spirit of generosity. We are supposed to have a spirit of understanding. We are sitting here on a Friday afternoon arguing about 50 cents an hour for people who are putting their lives at stake.

I think, and I have seen this repeatedly with this government, that the government is really tearing away at the national will. It breaks down the national will by not showing respect for our human capital. In my mind that is not only bad nation building but it is also bad economics. What of an incentive? What kind of motivation does one have? What kind of pride does one have in one's job when his employer does not think he is worth 50 cents an hour? I just cannot understand the logic.

The Prime Minister of Canada has a reputation for being one of the best deal makers in Canada. After an 11-hour marathon discussion with the premiers of Canada he was able to come through with a constitutional deal. Why can this same Prime Minister, who has children as I do and as do the fathers on coast guard crews who are risking their lives, not display the same leadership and ability to craft a deal? Why can he not do that on an issue like this one? It is a mystery to me. It escapes me.

That is another problem we have in this House. Sometimes we only pay attention to those voices, to those lobby groups and to those organizations that are well financed and the best organization behind their cause.

We are not in this chamber to oppose for the sake of opposing. We are here to oppose constructively. We are here to care about deficit and debt as is the government. Yes, we have made some mistakes in the past, but I must tell Your Honour that there is no excuse for us to be bantering back and forth today in this House for 50 cents an hour for men and women who go to high sea, without notice, saving lives of others, protecting our waterways and protecting our oceans. There is no excuse.

Sometimes the government becomes captive of officials who will tell it that we have to save 15 per cent of this budget and 10 per cent of that budget. They just calculate the gross amounts and they never see the human capital that exists behind those numbers. I believe this is another example where we are just looking at the gross numbers and we are not looking at the bottom line. The bottom line is the human capital, the men and women who put their lives at stake.

I do not want you to think that I am forgetting about hospital services. The hospital service system of this country is the envy of the world. If we are going to play around with the spirit, the attitude and the dignity of hospital workers, I think we are putting a lot more at risk than the government realizes.

I want to repeat: we are not here to oppose for the sake of opposing. What we have today is a situation where there are people who are genuinely disadvantaged and it is our role to speak on their behalf. Again I repeat: a fireman in downtown Toronto after five years of service makes over $40,000 a year. The crews on the coast guard want $20,000.

We have got to be fair here. We have to be daring. The minister with the stroke of a pen could get an order out and deal with this situation immediately. We tend to forget because these organizations are not well organized as lobby groups, but we should prick our conscience and remind ourselves that we are here in this House not for the privileged but for the disadvantaged.

While I was listening to some of my colleagues speak today, I was going through one of my files and I was reminded of an old John Denver tune that I thought was rather appropriate. Even though I have never been on a coast guard ship and I have never met the men and women who have been on those ships or who have been to sea on rescue, it does not mean I cannot feel for them because I am from another region of this country.

I think John Denver says it best in his song It's About Time: "There is a man who is my brother, I just do not know his name, but I know his home and family, because I know we feel the same. And it hurts me when he is hungry and when his children cry for I too am a father; that little one is mine. It is about time we begin to turn the world around. It is about time we realized this is the family of man. It is about time, it is about changes".

• (1700)

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I know that we will all have an opportunity again next week to discuss this, because of the unprecedented decision taken by the opposition members to ensure that this bill not only will not receive the support of both the Liberal party and the other opposition party in the House of Commons, but will not receive any assistance facilitating the bill. We will all have an opportunity again next week to deal with this matter.

I simply want to point out very briefly on behalf of opposition members that the long-standing tradition of this place when this kind of legislation is brought before Parliament is that very often, opposition parties vote against it. But very seldom, in fact I cannot think of a precedent, do opposition parties actually behave in a manner that forces the government into using closure on back to work legislation.

I hope Canadians will reflect on this and realize that this decision is a direct result of the contemplation, of the searching of one's conscience, individually and collectively, and of the conclusion that the government has not bargained fairly with public servants in critical sectors, both ships crews and hospital services workers who are, comparatively speaking, among the lowest paid, given the value of their work, employees in Canada. They have asked for nothing but a fair break.

In the case of ships' crews, they have responded in every instance they could with the emergency search and rescue services, and have conducted search and rescue. They have saved lives by laying down their pickets during the course of the strike.

In the case of hospital services workers, they have offered to provide emergency service and have been rebutted, refused, by the employer.

Canadians who are wondering what is going on this afternoon should realize that process is unprecedented in Canadian parliamentary history. It is a profound statement by members of Parliament who sit in opposition benches—and it is an extremely unusual statement—that there comes a time when the power of government, the big hammer of government, should not be wielded against ordinary citizens, against employees of the people of Canada, not employees of government, not employees of the party in power, but employees of the people of Canada.

There comes a time to stand up, notwithstanding the tremendous political power represented opposite by a majority government, notwithstanding the tremendous pressure coming from corporate Canada, for those who are least able to defend themselves, particularly when they have bargained in good faith and they have been faced with a government that has but one plan and that is to destroy fundamentally their right to collective bargaining.

It is for that reason that we in this party, the Liberal Party of Canada, refused unanimous consent to allow the introduction of this bill, this draconian measure, by the minister responsible for the Treasury Board. We stood up, the Liberal Party of Canada, and we said no, there shall be no unanimous consent.

We say to the government that it is Friday and the weekend is upon us. We want a quick settlement to this strike. We do not want ships tied up in the St. Lawrence. We do not want patients at hospitals having anything less than the full services they should have. We do not want the potential of health and safety being put at risk. We do not want commerce to stop. We do not want trade to be affected.

We want Canada to function smoothly, but we are not willing to sell out the ordinary employees to the power of a government which wants to paint as villains those employees who are hard-working, selfless individuals asking for a fair shake. We are not willing to sell them out as villains to a government that behaves in a villainous manner.

We say to the government, if you want, as we want, a quick settlement, then go to the table with justice in your heart. Go to the table with a commitment to a fair deal, not necessarily a gracious deal but just a fair deal. If you want a quick settlement to the strike, resolve it at the bargaining table because that is where this issue belongs, not with back to work legislation.

We say to the government at the end of a day, a Friday, we will be back here again Monday. There will be no quick passage. We are going to fight for these employees. If you want a settlement that is right and just, sit man to man, woman to woman, across the table and settle it like human beings. Put away the hammer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Halifax. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 140)

YEAS

Members

Allmand	Assad
Benjamin	Berger
Black	Boudria
Brewin	Butland
Catterall	Clancy
Dionne	Duhamel
Fisher	Gaffney
Gardiner	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan	Karpoff
Kristiansen	Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan	MacWilliam
Manley	Mifflin
Milliken	Mills
Mitchell	Murphy
Ouellet	Parker
Peterson	Riis
Robinson	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Tobin	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—38

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Attewell	Beatty
Belsher	Bertrand
Bosley	Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Bourgault
Boyer	Brightwell
Browes	Cadieux
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Cooper
Corbett	Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)	Crosby (Halifax West)
de Cotret	Della Noce
Dobbie	Epp
Feltham	Ferland
Fretz	Gérin
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene	Guilbault
Halliday	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
Jelinek	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Langlois	Layton
Lewis	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	Marin
Martin (Lincoln)	Mazankowski
McCreath	McDermid
McKnight	McLean
Merrithew	Monteith
Moore	Oberle
O'Kurley	Paproski
Plourde	Pronovost
Reid	Reimer
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tardif
Thacker	Thompson
Thorkelson	Van de Walle
Vankoughnet	Venne
Vien	Weiner
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Winegard—88

• (1740)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Québec-Est (Mr. Tremblay) on a point of order.

Mr. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to chair the Legislative Committee on Bill C-49 and for that reason, I abstained from moving.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, you may find that the House would be favourably disposed to applying the same vote in reverse one more time, in order that we may be able to go home just a little bit earlier. This is the usual co-operation of the opposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore we will apply the votes in reverse.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 141)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Attewell	Beatty
Belsher	Bertrand
Bosley	Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Bourgault
Boyer	Brightwell
Browes	Cadieux
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Cooper
Corbett	Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)	Crosby (Halifax West)
de Cotret	Della Noce
Dobbie	Epp
Feltham	Ferland
Fretz	Gérin
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene	Guilbault
Halliday	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
Jelinek	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Langlois	Layton
Lewis	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	Marin
Martin (Lincoln)	Mazankowski
McCreath	McDermid
McKnight	McLean
Merrithew	Monteith
Moore	Oberle
O'Kurley	Paproski
Plourde	Pronovost
Reid	Reimer
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tardif
Thacker	Thompson
Thorkelson	Van de Walle
Vankoughnet	Venne
Vien	Weiner

Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Winegard—88

NAYS

Members

Allmand	Assad
Benjamin	Berger
Black	Boudria
Brewin	Butland
Catterall	Clancy
Dionne	Duhamel
Fisher	Gaffney
Gardiner	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan	Karpoff
Kristiansen	Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan	MacWilliam
Manley	Mifflin
Milliken	Mills
Mitchell	Murphy
Ouellet	Parker
Peterson	Riis
Robinson	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Tobin	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—38

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

It being 5.45 p.m. this House stands adjourned until Monday at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 5.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 11, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 84(1) I have the honour to lay upon the table copies of a notice of Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and related Acts together with supporting documents. I ask that pursuant to Standing Order 84(2) an order of the day be designated for consideration of said motion.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8) I have the honour to table in both official languages the government responses to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

COMMITTEES

TABLING OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-49

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-49, an Act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, without amendments.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to thank all committee members and the technical and administrative staff, who are to be commended for the excellent job they have done. More particularly, I would like to mention the dedication and kindness of our clerk, Mrs. Sirpaul. The Chair will recall that we sat yesterday, on Sunday, for over seven consecutive hours. I may say it was a very interesting and worthwhile experience.

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE STATUS OF DISABLED PERSONS – FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the first report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons in both official languages. Pursuant to Standing Order 109, the committee requests a comprehensive response to this report within 150 days.

I want to compliment the members of the committee for the very effective and non-partisan way they approached this topic which was very becoming to the nature of the topic, namely the court challenges program. This program, as members know, is extremely important to disadvantaged groups in the country and we were pleased to give it a very favourable report during the course of our study.

I should also remind members and colleagues in the House that the standing committee has unique terms of reference, inasmuch as we are mandated to propose, promote, monitor, and assess programs of government as well as those across the country with respect to disadvantaged people.

I commend this report to members of the House and the public because of the nature of our committee and the responsibilities we have.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Translation]

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I wish to present a petition which rejects the recommendations made by the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas. Your petitioners, who represent the isolated community of Lebel-sur-Quévillon in the Abitibi region, believe that although isolation is above all a psychological factor, it can be expressed in dollars and cents: no library, no movie theatres, no art galleries, no swimming pool, no museum of fine arts, no in-door bicycle track, no subway, and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Lebel-sur-Quévillon feel that the task force has failed to reflect the daily realities of the northern areas of Abitibi.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to present petitions certified by the clerk of petitions signed by 3,595 persons who humbly pray that the Government of Canada abolish the proposed goods and services tax. They believe that this tax is inflationary, regressive, and will reduce the standard of living of Canadians generally.

RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition to the House of Commons pursuant to Standing Order 36. This petition, which contains 466 signatures is from people in the constituency of Oxford and is certified correct as to from and content. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass a law which recognizes the right to life for everyone from conception to natural death without exception, without discrimination, and to abolish the practice of abortion.

I submit this petition for the consideration of this House and ask that the clerk determine, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8) the possibility of referring it to the government for consideration and response.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions at this time. One is signed by constituents of the riding of Davenport who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

I have another petition on the same subject, with the same message, from residents and voters from the city of Edmonton. I submit them for your consideration.

• (1110)

VIA RAIL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by several petitioners from southwestern Ontario. They call upon the Government of Canada not to make any cuts in VIA Rail service until a full investigation and report comes from the National Transportation Commission, which I believe is investigating transportation in the 1990s.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to this House three petitions, certified correct by the clerk of petitions. They contain the signatures of constituents in the three Conservative held ridings of Hamilton—Wentworth, Lincoln and Burlington. The petitioners call upon this Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr Speaker, once again I rise in the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, honoured to present a petition on behalf of the residents of the riding of Kent, who feel they are being raped by the present government. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, I stand again in this House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition on behalf of another 500 Londoners who ask this government to rescind its action with respect to VIA Rail. This brings the total number of petitioners from London to close to 10,000 who are asking for this government to change its mind on VIA.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I too have the privilege and the honour of presenting a number of petitions carrying hundreds of signatures. Most of these petitions have to do with the GST, the goods and services tax. These petitions have been certified correct as to form and content, and they, in effect, say that this tax is regressive and that it is going to be a horrible burden on Canadian taxpayers. The petitioners ask all parliamentarians to reject this tax outright.

RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which has to do with the abortion issue. This petition has been certified correct as to form and content. The petitioners are concerned about the pre-born in this country, as all of us are, and certainly, in my opinion, the legislation currently before the House will not deal effectively with the abortion issue.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have some more signatures from people who are just absolutely devastated by this government's plan to introduce a goods and services tax. Irrespective of the level, whether it is a weasel level of—

Mr. Lewis: Read the petition and forget the speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the hon. member just to summarize the prayer of the petition, please, and not make a speech.

Mr Simmons: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I felt I was summarizing.

An Hon. Member: It is a good speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It may be a good speech but it is not—

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, I have some more signatures. And in summary, for the government House leader, I want to summarize for him, what this petition says. It says that people from Parkhill, Ontario, from London, Ontario—almost every street in London—London West, these people are sending me petitions from all over now, telling me, as the prayer says—I will just summarize and will not take the time to read it—that they are absolutely disgusted with this goods and services tax, whether it is 7 per cent or 9 per cent. They are against it, absolutely against it.

EL SALVADOR

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and present this petition containing signatures collected on November 17 and November 18, from residents in my riding. It concerns the situation in El Salvador. There are over 100 signatures from residents of my area. They condemn the bombing of the civilian population by the government forces in El Salvador. They request that the Canadian Government halt all bilateral aid to the government of El Salvador immediately and to refuse further bilateral aid until it is demonstrated that all members of the military and security forces are acting in accordance with the Convention on Human Rights.

They also point out that Canada is a member of the Organization of American States now and should be very careful to pursue an independent diplomatic policy, leading to full protection of human rights as a peaceful resolution of conflict in El Salvador. The petitioners call for an independent investigation by the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights of the OAS into the murder of the six Jesuits in San Salvador and a full report on the protection of human rights in that country.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by the residents of Fort St. James in my riding, expressing concern about the proposed grief and suffering tax which will place a significant financial burden on the families of young athletes, thereby detering athletes from entering and continuing in the sport.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36. I have a page of briefs from 50 people in Charlottetown—Bonavista Bay. I will summarize it. They are sick and tired and fed up with the 31 additional taxes do not want the goods and services tax at 9 per cent, 7 per cent or any per cent. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I stand in my place today pursuant to Standing Order 36, to submit a large number of petitions concerning VIA Rail. In total there are 1,274 signatures on these petitions from people of Kenora—Rainy River, who ask the government opposite to wake up and smell the coffee and realize that VIA Rail is an integral part of our transportation system in northern Ontario. They humbly beseech the government on the other side to do something about it before January 15, in order that we may maintain this service that is so very important to the region.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition duly authorized under Standing Order 36, signed by members of the communities of Yorkton, Saltcoats, Neudorf, Melville and Domremy, in the province of Saskatchewan who decry the government's action of removing oats from the Canadian Wheat Board, particularly without consultation with the farm organizations in western Canada.

They point out that the marketing boards are farmers' organizations and are essential to the orderly marketing of commodities and certainly ought to be consulted whenever these kinds of changes are made. The petitioners beg and pray that Parliament not remove oats from the marketing boards and that it put oats and barley under the Canadian Wheat Board Act so that in future, farmers and their organizations will be consulted before the government takes this kind of action.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, question No. 167 will be answered today.

[Text]

SOCIÉTÉ RADIO-CANADA—BROADCAST IN FRENCH IN THE YUKON

Question No. 167—Ms. McLaughlin:

1. Has the government taken any action to resolve the problem of the inacessibility of Radio-Canada in northern Canada and, specifically, in the Yukon, as outlined to it by the Association des Franco-Yukonnais and, if so, what action?

2. Is it the intention of the government to pay the $60,000 set-up cost and the $7,000 annual maintenance cost of bringing Radio-Canada to every Yukoner on the same basis as CBC broadcasts in English?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): 1. The Government is very aware of the broadcasting situation for francophones outside of Quebec and in particular of the difficulties experienced by those in the Yukon.

The situation in the Yukon has been a matter of active collaboration among federal government departments. Discussions have taken place among representatives of the francophone associations of Northern Canada, the Minister of Communications and the Secretary of State.

It is not, however, the government's responsibility to establish and operate broadcasting distribution systems. Discussions are now being held between representatives of Radio-Canada and the Association of francophone residents of the Yukon. The objective is to define, in concrete terms, what measures can be taken and what resources are required in order to ensure the extension of French-language services to these areas.

2. The Secretary of State has already received a request from the Yukon's francophone association for financial support in the amount of $60,000 for capital expenditures.

The government hopes to provide an expedient response to that request once the different parties involved have come to an agreement on the best way to provide Radio-Canada's French services to francophone communities in Northern Canada and, specifically, in the Yukon.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. member from Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the parliamentary secretary has answered question No. 167. On the same date I put in question No. 169 which the government has yet to answer. It refers to various law firms which had business with the government, including firms that involved senators or former senators. I wonder if the government could indicate if they are having any problems answering this question, or could tell us when that question will be answered?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am not exactly certain on the member's specific question. I would be happy to check into it.

The Deputy Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (1120)

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-49

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order or practice of the House, for the purposes of consideration and disposition of Bill C-49, An Act to provide for the resumption of certain government services:

1) there shall be, following the adoption of this Order, one day for the report stage and one day for the third reading stage of the Bill;

2) on each of the said days, at 15 minutes before the time normally provided at the conclusion of Government Orders, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then under way and shall put forthwith, successively and without further amendment or debate, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the Bill; provided that if any such day be a Monday, Tuesday, Thursday or Friday, Private Members' Business shall commence, and continue for one hour, immediately following such proceedings; and

3) following such hour of Private Members' Business or, on other days at the conclusion of proceedings on Bill C-49, as the case may be, the Speaker shall adjourn the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise, with not a great deal of pleasure to speak to this motion. The intent of the motion before the House is to try to speed up, without in any other way seriously inhibiting the present Standing Orders vis-à-vis Bill C-49.

Bill C-49, as the House will know, is back to work legislation. It is an effort to bring the two groups, that is the Coast Guard workers and the people who work in veterans' homes and hospitals, back to the table in an effort to settle a dispute between management and workers which has been going on for some time.

I think everyone—except if one lives in a large city in central Ontario such as Ottawa—who has any experience with the weather and the transportation system in this country appreciates the dangers of the oceans at this time of year.

Furthermore I think it is fair to say that the farmers of western Canada who have grain on the ships that are presently in danger of being trapped in the seaway appreciate the great cost to the country that is going to ensue if those ships are trapped in the seaway over the winter. I understand there is a possibility of some 41 ships—which would be a record—that could be caught in the seaway as a result of the actions of the Liberal and NDP parties in stalling this legislation.

That may not bother members from Windsor, but if I were representing Windsor, a seaway port, I would be concerned about it. It does not bother anybody from London, they are landlocked. It does not bother anybody from Ottawa because they do not have emphathy for the people out on ships.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if they are not concerned about people out on the ships at sea and stalling the seaway over the winter, maybe I could ask the member from Ottawa and the member from Windsor to have some concern for our veterans and the people in veterans' hospitals. These services are presently being looked after by volunteers and if my hon. friend from Ottawa thinks that veterans should be inconvenienced that way and members to have it in their hearts to think about other people.

I see some members here who represent ridings with people at risk on the seas and I do not know how they are going to face their people back home if there are any accidents. I just ask them to think about that. Surely, if I, somebody from Orillia can understand that, the members who have constituents who are at sea might just think about that. They might just think about it the next time they go home.

In any event, I think I have their attention. Kingston is on the seaway. There is the odd big ship going by there but in case of an accident the crews can always swim to shore. That is what these people in Ottawa do not understand.

Why do you not talk to your members from Ottawa and tell them that it may be a big thrill to hold up legislation that puts people back to work if you live in

Ottawa, but if you live somewhere where there is risk at sea, one might have a better appreciation for it.

I did not want to speak for long but I got so incensed at the insensitivity of members opposite that I thought I would put those items on the record. There are some people to which you just cannot get through to.

For fear that there will be some suggestion that we are breaching the rules, I want to point out to the House that there were two ways of moving this legislation through the House; either by a time allocation motion or by this motion. Let us just draw the comparison between a time allocation motion and this motion for fear that after I leave the House there may be some unfortunate comparisons in which there is some variance between the truth and the comments of the members opposite.

One will know that time allocation under Standing Order 78(3) provides for one day at report stage and one day at third reading. This particular motion provides for one day at report stage and one day at third reading. Standing Order 78(3) calls for a two-hour debate. I am sure that by the time we debate this from 11.20 until one o'clock and then probably tomorrow with the opportunity to go until 1 a.m. on Wednesday morning that there will be far more than two hours debate. This will enable us to have met that particular problem in comparison with Section 78(3). The third point that I am sure my hon. friends will want to mention is that they will have the opportunity to speak for longer than 10 minutes. One knows that the debate on a time allocation motion is two hours with 10-minute speeches and the government is providing for much longer speeches by moving.

We think this is an appropriate way to deal with a very serious situation. I would implore my friends opposite to stop the political posturing which may gain some points in Ottawa but which is causing serious problems in other parts of the country where they are just trying to ship grain and look after veterans. I wonder at the reasoning behind the stalling of the opposition parties in not allowing this motion to be voted on immediately and for the report stage of the committee report which was tabled this morning and third reading to go ahead quickly.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, first of all, let us remind ourselves, it being Monday morning and the start of another week, what we are doing here. Bill C-49 would provide for the resumption of certain government services.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that this thing started late last week when the government decided to circumvent the normal process of collective bargaining. It used the sledgehammer approach on 3,600 workers, that is 1,300 hospital workers, and 2,300 ships crew people, some of the lowest paid workers in this country. On Thursday and Friday the government began the process of shutting down the collective bargaining process for these people, their right to strike in particular. It arranged to have a committee sitting yesterday, Sunday, in an effort to railroad this whole thing through as quickly as possible. Here we are again today with Bill C-49 and now with a motion to rush things up even more.

• (1130)

Listen, first of all, to the words of our good friend, the government House leader. If piety were for sale, he would be a billionaire. He tells us: "If you lived by the sea"—I say to him, I live by the sea. I will show it to him some time. He might be surprised by how big it is.

It is one thing as a government to try to use its parliamentary majority to bludgeon and hammer people. But on top of that it is an insult to intelligence to say this morning to those 2,300 men and women who earn their livelihoods in very dangerous situations patronizingly: "If you lived by the sea", I say to the minister, that is their first sin. They do live by the sea. The problem is they are not finding enough wages to keep body and soul together by the sea, thanks to this particular stingy government.

Now, the minister tells us as he continues his pious little lecture this morning that he is really helping veterans. I am touched. Where was he when this thing started three and a half weeks ago? Where was the minister's concern for veterans then? He tells us he is concerned about safety. Well, bully for him. If he were so concerned about safety, why was he not talking to the Minister of Transport and the President of the Treasury Board who a few weeks ago were telling us there was no consideration of safety. There was no problem whatever.

When is this honourable crowd going to learn that they cannot have their cake and eat it too? There is either a safety concern or there is not a safety concern, one or the other.

As I review my notes of the pious lecture from the government House leader, I recall that he told us this morning that he and the government are not inhibiting the process. No, no. He probably believes it is midnight outside right now, too. Not inhibiting the process!

For three and a half weeks, it plays with the negotiators on the union side of the table. The government toys with them. Now, day after day, the government brings in every parliamentary manoeuvre it can dream up to shut down the process altogether, trampling on the basic rights of a lot of people. First, the 3,600 people directly involved in this labour dispute. But it went further on Thursday and Friday and particularly this morning. Now it is in the process of trampling on the rights of every parliamentarian in this House because now the government wants to throw the rule book out the window.

Finally, if I may for a moment get away from the particular elements in this dispute, as important as they are, and look in a more global way at this whole issue is about incompetence. This really has to do with incompetence. We would not be here this morning discussing this particular issue if that crowd over there had been competent in their management of the collective bargaining process. That is the problem right there, absolute incompetence.

You only have to go back to late 1987 when Treasury Board missed a deadline for submitting to the Public Service board the list of personnel to be designated essential during the round of bargaining. It missed the deadline. That is basic incompetence, incompetence in the governing of the country, in the administering of the collective bargain agreements and the collective bargaining process. That is where it started, but it did not stop there.

If there is one thing you can say for this crowd, they are consistent about their incompetence. The Tories have used the same tactic here that they used on the free trade issue. When they could not win according to the rules, they threw the rules out of the window. They trampled on the election laws relating to financing of election, and that is another issue we will come back to in time. I just bring that forward now as example to show how this crowd stops at nothing. The law means nothing to this crowd at all. If you cannot do it within the law, you flout the law.

So the Tories completely missed the deadline back in the fall of 1987 by failing to designate. They could not even do the thing legally and properly. Now they have brought their incompetence one more time to the floor of the House of Commons.

What are the rules we are supposed to live by here, Mr. Speaker? Let me remind you. The rule book we are going by now was written by a committee under the chairmanship of the Hon. James McGrath, now the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland. But in that incarnation he was a member of this House and chairman of a committee to rewrite the rules. Before he was chairman of that committee in 1984, he was a member with me and some other people of another committee on reforming the rules. This committee on reforming the rules was chaired by a man who is now a senator, Senator Tom Lefebvre.

In 1982–83, Mr. McGrath, the Deputy Prime Minister, several others in this House and I, 18 of us altogether, did a very thorough review of the rule book, the so–called Standing Orders of this House. Some of the rules were implemented and then, of course, came the election of 1984, and a change of government. So it was appropriate, notwithstanding the fact that Senator Lefebvre had done a magnificent job, that the Tories appoint a government member as chairman of that committee. The succeeding committee was in effect the same committee by another name.

Many of the reforms that were contemplated and designed in 1982, 1983 and 1984 were then refined and recommended to the House, again post–1984, by the then member for St. John's East, Mr. McGrath.

Those rules were embraced to the credit of the Prime Minister and his majority in 1984–85. Those rules, recommended by Mr. McGrath, concocted, designed and crafted by two committees between 1982 and 1985, are the rules that we are using in this Chamber today to the credit of the Prime Minister.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, these rules in theory if allowed to work are a set of rules that makes for a pretty full debate and the representation of the concerns and interests of people from coast to coast. House of Commons rules or Standing Orders, as we call them, like everything else finally depend on goodwill, but particularly do they depend and rely on the goodwill of the majority.

This morning, as you heard from the government House leader, goodwill goes out the window too when this crowd gets its back against the wall. So the government that bungled through incompetence its undertaking, its obligation to give notice of a list of essential service people back in October 1987, now brings its bungling here to the floor of the House of Commons.

• (1140)

I took a minute just now to outline to you the background of the rules under which we live and work here in this Chamber because it reinforces, does it not, the hypocrisy of the government House leader in coming here and saying that we want to suspend those rules one more time. We not only want to hoist or hijack the rules, we now want to accelerate the hijack. We want to speed her up now. We want to ram her through just as fast as we can.

What is the rush? I will tell you what the rush is. I was in Burgeo in my riding two weeks ago and the eight Coast Guard people who work in that community came to me with a letter signed by all eight of them, a letter reasonably worded asking the government to get on with the job of finding a workable, mutually satisfactory collective agreement for those coast guard people. In simple terms, negotiate.

That was the rush and that rush has been on for three and a half weeks. It was on for many months before that, before the people got to the point where they had to use the ultimate weapon in the collective bargaining process, to withdraw their services, to engage in a legal strike. Let there be no doubt about it. It has been a legal strike in every sense of the term.

The government House leader unwittingly this morning gives away the government's game. He talks about the Seaway. For those of you who do not know it, the Seaway is not off the coast near Burgeo. It is not anywhere off the coast of Newfoundland. Indeed, it is not even near Dartmouth where so many of the people are suffering because of this particular strike. That was their sin, that the Seaway did not go by their front doors.

Until such time as there was a bottleneck, an ice jam, a problem, a loss of money for the Seaway and until such time as big bucks were on the line, we heard no talk of safety. We saw ministers stand in this House and deny there was any safety consideration.

The minister this morning, in making his plea to the House, his pious little lecture to the House, his hypocritical nonsense to the House, says that there are some problems in the Seaway that are as a result of Liberal and NDP actions. These were his words. How warped! How warped can you be and still be loose? Because of Liberal and NDP actions, the government House leader says, we've got some problems in the Seaway.

I will tell him why we have problems in the Seaway. It is his incompetence, his stubbornness on this issue not to have settled this thing before it came to a strike three and a half weeks ago. That is why we have problems in the Seaway. If he thinks that is Liberal and NDP action, he should have a talk to himself in the mirror.

Mr. Murphy: Who are you talking to? There's no one over there.

Mr. Simmons: The NDP are back. Have you noticed? They are back this morning.

My friend from Churchill asked me who I am talking to. Let me tell him, because like his colleague in the committee yesterday, this whole issue is obviously passing him by. I will tell him who I am talking to. I am talking to the 3,600 people out there. I am talking to the 1,300 people out there who are on a picket line who would rather be in a hospital doing their thing.

I am talking to the 2,300 ships crews people out there, some of whom are on the picket line, but I will tell you where a lot of them are this morning. They are out keeping their commitment off the south coast of Newfoundland, looking for the Johnny and Sisters II, out of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, with eight souls aboard. These people, when they went on strike said two things, in effect. "First, we are going to exercise our right to strike to make a point to the government, to our employer. But, number two, notwithstanding, if there is an emergency, we will be there."

They have been true to their word, whether it is off the Madeleine and Cape Sable area with the Capitaine Torres or the Johanna B, those two terrible tragedies over the weekend. On 11 or 12 occasions since this strike began, the coast guard people have been there keeping their commitment.

Now, I hope that answers the question of the gentleman from Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: I just asked if you were talking to government members. They're not there.

Mr. Simmons: The member makes a good point that not as many of the government members are here as we would like to have this morning. However, we have with us from Calgary the minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We know, of course, that when he is not busy with the post office and other matters, he is giving his undivided attention to the plight of those 3,600 people. I do not know what the member for Churchill is implying but I certainly have great faith in the minister from Calgary to take the message back to the government on this very important issue.

Now, what message is it we want the gentleman from Calgary to take back to the government? I should not neglect to say, of course, that not only is he here in the House—and I should say to the gentleman from Churchill that we are not allowed to say who is absent from the House—but the rules have been kind. We are allowed to say who is present in the House and I can see the Minister and I can see a member there, and a member there, and a member there, and I can see a member there, and a member there. I have seen neither one of those in a Liberal caucus, thank God, and I do not believe, judging by their right-wing speeches, that they would be caught in an NDP caucus either.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Oh, oh!

[English]

Mr. Simmons: Good morning to you, too. I thank the hon. gentleman from Lotbiniere.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): You could at least say the name of my riding in French!

[English]

Mr. Simmons: You know, Mr. Speaker, I believe the member feels his maiden speech coming on.

As I was saying, Sir, I want to acknowledge the presence here this morning to hear my speech on this important issue of the minister and five Tory MPs. It is nice of you to drop in this morning, and I hope between the six of you, you will take to the government a message. The message is very simple. I have it written out here, word for word.

In case you are wondering what the problem is in this strike, it comes down to 50 cents an hour. Fifty cents an hour! Now, the government House leader talks about safety, and problems in the St. Lawrence, and big bad Liberals, and big bad NDPers who are causing all the problems. Fifty cents an hour is what is causing the problem.

• (1150)

If the government would go back in good faith and negotiate, this thing would be over in jig time. Would you take that message back to the government?

Would you also tell them that those people who you are characterizing as a bunch of tyrannical people somehow are actually people who are earning about $18,000 to $20,000 if you are talking about the ships crews people and less than that if you are talking about the hospital support service people. These are the people who are asking for some attention from this government.

Let me see what else the government House leader said this morning. I was making the point earlier that the Coast Guard people, on 13 separate occasions, have interrupted their strike to keep their first commitment to the people of Canada, their commitment that they would never let their salary or wage demands stand in the way of or interfere with the safety of or the lives of Canadians.

Some of their people in the last year paid very dearly for their commitment to safety, four of them in this year alone. Albeit they were only earning $18,000 or $20,000 a year, yet four of them have given their lives. Three did so off the Coast of Newfoundland, I say to my friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, trying to rescue a diver, as I recall. I look at him because he was speaking about this particular issue in the House at the time, a month and a half ago.

Mr. Mifflin: Mid-October.

Mr. Simmons: Mid-October. Three Coast Guard people trying to find a diver lost their lives. Of course, the diver was lost at that particular time too.

Back in January on the other coast, near Port Hardy, B.C., the crew of a tug boat was in some trouble. A Coast Guard individual was lost there. Four people, three on one coast, one on the other coast, lost in the pursuit of their duty, in trying to save the lives of others, in trying to assure the safety of other people.

I was away from the Chamber on Friday. I watched much of the debate on the rerun Friday night on television. When you sit there dispassionately, not being egged on by partisans, able to hear the pros and cons from both sides and distil it all for your understanding, you find yourself asking the question, what is this fuss all about?

This in some respects is a tempest in a teapot. Why? Why did the government allow it to come to this? Then you remember who is in charge. You remember what party has got a hold of the reins of power these days. You remember the litany of bludgeoning of rural people by government members in the last few years, particularly in the last year. You see what they are doing to rural Canada.

On every single front, whether it is double-speak or double-talk in terms of the ACOA program for Atlantic Canada, the butchering of the unemployment insurance regulations, the change in job creation for rural Canada, regional development programs and cutbacks in transfer moneys going to the less wealthy provinces, it all translates into one simple, blunt reality which is that the lot of anyone who lives in rural Canada is threatened and undermined by this government at every turn.

In the Coast Guard situation particularly, government members thought they had another winner; they thought they had another cudgel; they thought they had another baseball bat to beat the people of Dartmouth, Halifax, Nova Scotia generally and Newfoundland and northern B.C. over the heads with. They were going to teach rural Canada another lesson.

Just as they were right in the midst of their lesson, teaching rural Canadians who was in charge, something happened. The government overlooked one small detail, a little, tiny, minuscule detail called the St. Lawrence Seaway. The government overlooked the possibility that one day, the strike would begin to have an impact on the less rural parts of this country and that one day, the fellows who financed the free trade debate might be hurt by this particular strike.

The government overlooked that until it started getting calls and until the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the various ministers over there began getting calls. "Brian, old buddy, remember, I underwrote your campaign? I helped get you back into office. You had bungled it badly in the middle of the election campaign and we, in the business community, had to lash out our millions to save your neck. Well, the jig is up; we are calling in the favour. Lower the boom! Use legislation. Change the rules of the House. Send the government House leader in to make pious little speeches if you have to. Do what you have to do. We are hurting down here on the St. Lawrence. That is my boat down there".

That kind of message, Mr. Speaker, gets through to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister says to the President of the Treasury Board: "Remember that fine speech you made last week about no problems with safety? Get up now and make the opposite speech". Being the dutiful Tory he is, he got up and made the opposite speech. We heard him last week lament about safety, he, the man who assured this House three weeks before, that safety was not an issue.

One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, 10, 11. Mr. Speaker, there are 11 Tories in the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière, (Mr. Tremblay) on a point of order.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I realize that here in the House we have certain privileges, including the right to say what we think. However, I think a right that can so easily be abused should be exercised very carefully. When someone takes advantage of this august assembly to make nasty insinuations about the presence or absence of certain members, about whether or not they are listening to the more or less interesting speeches being made by certain members, and when someone is constantly harping on this, it boils down to a rude display of political partisanship before this assembly, especially at a time when we are considering whether certain people have the right to strike or whether they should be forced to go back to work, considering the fact that the health of Canadians is at risk. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Hon. Member that he has no business commenting on how hon. members get along in the House and whether they are or are not in the House.

• (1200)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Just one comment on the point of order by the hon. member. I understand why he raised the point of order but as far as the Chair is concerned the comments made by the member for Burin—St. George's are in order. What would be out of order would be to mention either the absence or the presence of a specific member, which the member for Burin—St. George's, with the experience that he has, has not done. The member is in order and I give him the floor.

Mr. Simmons: I thank the member for Lotbinière. He is one of the 11 people whose presence I had acknowledged. I was about to pay him a compliment. I was about to say that he is one of 11 people who is giving my words of wisdom some thought. If the rules did not prevent me from saying so, I would have reported that I assume that somebody has just gone to take a message to the government.

Mr. Andre: You can clear a room quicker than anyone I know, that's for sure.

Mr. Simmons: The minister can fill certain rooms pretty fast too, as long as he gives out FBDB grants to the right place.

There is one other issue I want to address briefly. Because so many of my other colleagues want to speak I intend to sit down very quickly. My good friend from Hillsborough, Prince Edward Island, is going to have a few words and then other speakers will want to have a few words. You see, Mr. Speaker, it is very important that we convey to the government the strength of feeling that is out there.

I want to close on a note that the government House leader struck when he was giving us that pious lecture a few minutes ago. He talked about empathy. What I want to know is who loaned him the dictionary. He has discovered empathy, has he? We who live by the sea, to use his words, who represent those Coast Guard people have been empathizing, have been sharing the pain of those people for some time, long before the strike began, long before he discovered there was such a thing as coast guard workers.

Empathy—if this government understood the word "empathy", there would be no strike today. If this government understood empathy, it would not be here trying to railroad legislation through the House, it would not be having a legislative committee sit on a Sunday afternoon. It would not be here now hijacking the rules of the House, the rules that the government itself brought in four short years ago.

I say to the minister, if he wants to talk empathy, let him leave this place and have a quiet chat with his buddy, the President of the Treasury Board, and tell him he can put his money where his mouth is when it comes to empathy simply by finding 50 measly cents an hour per employee. That is not 50 cents on top of a million, that is 50 cents on top of 14,000, 15,000, 16,000, 17,000 or 18,000 bucks a year. These people are not earning enough to keep body and soul together now.

If the minister wants to practice a bit of empathy, let him take a few of the shekels which he is going to drag out of the people with the goods and services tax and pay it to those 3,600 people. Instruct the people on the government side of the bargaining table to get serious. Give them the wherewithal and give them the instruction to settle this thing now. In doing it, remember that the people of Canada will be grateful to you, that you are really just saying thank you to the men and women who have come to the aid of people in distress as recently as this weekend.

If there was ever an occasion where the rug of argument was pulled right out from under the government, it was this weekend when they were in the House talking about safety, saying: "If we don't get this strike over, lives are going to be at stake", and so on and so forth. Right in the midst of that we had no fewer than three separate tragic occurrences, two off Nova Scotia and one off Newfoundland, with a total loss of life of 47 people. The spokesman from the Ministry of Transport was on television Friday night. I saw his face and I heard his words. When he was asked if the strike had in any way impeded or interfered with the response time he said "No". Indeed he said the response time was better than average.

One of the government's own spokesmen is telling us that although there is a strike on, although these people are demoralized because their employers are treating them as adversaries, as enemies. That is an issue that some of our members will talk about today. They will speak of the morale of those people who have to go to the high Arctic and work for months on end for a pittance, of the tension of living in close quarters for months on end with the same few people. The least they could ask for is a fair wage. The least they could ask is not to be kicked in the teeth by their government and by their employer.

But I digress. The point I was making for the minister is that on Friday night a spokesman for the Department of Transport spoke on national television about the response time to those emergencies, those three terrible tragedies this weekend; the Johanna B, the Capitaine Torres off Nova Scotia and the one south of Cape Race, Newfoundland, the Johnny and Sisters II. In the case of those three tragedies the spokesman for the Ministry of Transport says that notwithstanding the strike, because the question was put to him in that context, the response time to all three of those emergencies was better than average.

I urge the House to resist the government's insatiable appetite for throwing out the rules. Let me say it differently. I urge the House not to become party to the shameful incompetence of this government, an incompetence which in this case started with failing to designate the essential workers and which has now been brought to the floor of the House with the government trying, first of all, to hijack the rules and then speed up that hijacking process.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate and speak against this motion which the government has introduced. I think it is interesting that in the process that has been involved in these negotiations and in this legislation the government is not only the employer but is using its power, through the legislation, to achieve what it could not achieve at the bargaining table.

This is triply repugnant because it goes against a ruling of the International Labour Organization which found this government in contempt of the convention that is signed by Canada with regard to free collective bargaining.

Let me make reference to that ruling. It is with regard to the 1987 Postal Services Continuation Act, introduced by the government of that time. It is important to realize that that legislation is basically the same as the legislation we have in front of us at this time. In other words, with the legislation forced through Parliament by the government in 1987 which was found in violation of Article 3 of Convention No. 87, the government learned nothing.

• (1210)

Let me read from the finding of the committee. I will not read it all because I only have 20 minutes to cover the whole topic. The committee said that under the circumstances, the legislation was "not in conformity with the principles of freedom of association".

> The committee draws to the Government's attention that section 11(1) of the Postal Services Continuation Act, 1987, constituted an interference in the free functioning of union organizations, and violated the right freely to elect representatives, guaranteed to the workers by Article 3 of Convention No. 87.
>
> The committee invites the Government to keep all these considerations in mind in the future.

That was what the International Labour Organization, of which Canada is part, on which Canada has served very well over a number of years, said about legislation passed by this House in 1987. Why would this same government come back two years later and introduce legislation which has already been found in violation of an international treaty? Remember that Canada freely signed the convention, freely signed the International Labour Organization convention. It is expected that when our nation puts its signature to a convention, we should live up to that convention. We did not and the government has obviously not learned a lesson. It is going to continue to violate the International Labour Organization.

I should point out to those members of the government and others who may not understand that this is not an organization just of unions, the International Labour Organization is composed of unions, all the governments of the countries affected, including Canada, and the employers associations. We were not found in violation strictly by a group of unions. We were found in violation by nations throughout the world, by employers throughout the world, and by unions throughout the world. We had a fair tribunal, we were found guilty and here the government comes back again with essentially the same legislation.

The motion in front of us today will restrict debate on report stage to basically Wednesday afternoon. In other words, after quickly rushing this legislation through committee on a Sunday afternoon, where there was not really opportunity to do any clause-by-clause study, where amendments were really not presented, this House is going to have to go through the amendments which were proposed and were presented to the government ahead of time and deal with them in approximately two and a half hours on a Wednesday afternoon. That is assuming there are no procedural wrangles or the government does not have some other trick up its sleeve to even further limit debate at that time. Two and a half hours to consider amendments at report stage.

As the former labour critic of our caucus, I know that there have been amendments made on back to work legislation in the past. I know that at the present time there are discussions going on to see if this bill can be improved. However, all desire by the government to improve the legislation is taken away if this motion passes. The government members know they can get the legislation through report stage in two and a half hours on a Wednesday afternoon and then they can all go off to their Christmas party.

I think that is one of the reasons for the legislation. Why is it that they are quite willing to speak all night on Tuesday on procedural wrangles, but when it comes to the legislation itself we must have those bells ringing by a quarter to six and we must start voting at six o'clock, just because the Conservatives want to go off to their Christmas party. That is their idea of essential services.

I said that this is an abuse of Parliament. We have in the past, and there are members on the government side who know this, amended back to work legislation. I have said that already. But restricting our debate to two and one-half hours on a Wednesday afternoon takes away any initiative by the government to be reasonable in improving this legislation.

That is especially important to understand because the government is the employer. The employer has written this legislation. It is obviously a concern, not only of the workers but of anybody who believes in fairness, that the employer should write the legislation and then force it through the House, force it through committee, force it through report stage and force it through a quick final reading without anyone having the ability to effectively amend that legislation.

When the railway workers were ordered back to work the legislation was amended. When the postal workers were sent back to work there were improvements made. This time the government is trying to thwart that possibility. If you are someone who is being ordered back to work, if you are someone who is losing your union privileges, if you are someone who is going to be subjected to severe fines as a result of this legislation, you cannot feel that you have been treated fairly when the government uses its majority and uses a jackboot approach to the rules of this House to prevent adequate study at each and every stage of this legislation.

The government has said that this legislation must pass because it affects essential services. The government failed, we all know it failed, to designate those employees it deemed to be essential within the time limits required by its own legislation.

If the government thought that these services were essential, why did it not live up to the requirements of its own legislation? Why did it not designate those employees doing essential services as is required by law? My colleague, another former labour critic, says the government is incompetent. That is true. But why, as a result of its own incompetence, would it try to rush the legislation through this House negating all sense of fairness, all sense of decorum, all sense of the rules and procedures of this House and against an international labour organization ruling?

The government House leader got up and said: "Aren't you concerned about safety?". Of course we are concerned about safety. "Aren't you concerned about the veterans?". Of course we are concerned about the veterans, but let me speak on a personal level for a few minutes. Both of my parents worked in the Deer Lodge Hospital which was a veterans' hospital. I visited that hospital a number of times when I was growing up and I saw the plight of the veterans, but I also saw the way the workers were treated by the government. There were low wages in the 1960s and there are low wages today.

If the government is so concerned about the plight of veterans and the way they are treated, then why does it pay the people who work in those hospitals and veterans' homes such low salaries? Why has the government failed, in every way, shape and form, to pay salaries that are equal to those paid to people who work in hospitals run by the provinces or by the municipalities? Why has the government kept the salaries so low for those workers?

A human rights tribunal has already ruled that the government has failed to meet the requirements of pay equity and the government has dragged its heels on that issue. We know that workers in the coast guard on the east coast are being paid less than those in the western half of this country. Again, the government has dragged its heels. When it comes to pay equity, when it comes to regional equity, this government has failed to take the leadership and has failed to deal with these problems in negotiations.

• (1220)

If we allow this government to introduce this motion and pass it through the House without making any attempts to amend the legislation, then this House is being unfair to the employees of the Government of Canada. This House will fail in its requirements to make sure that when legislation passes both sides in an industrial dispute are treated fairly. It is always offensive when one side, in this case obviously the employer, writes the legislation ordering people back to work. It is unfair when the fines in the legislation are so high. It is unfair that people lose their rights as a result of this legislation.

It is unfair for us in Parliament to speed this legislation through because the government finds it inconvenient to do otherwise as Christmas approaches, because the government members want to go to a Christmas party on Wednesday evening, because the government itself failed to live up to its obligations with regard to designating essential employees and because the government really has no understanding of or support for the concept of pay equity or regional development and regional equality. How can we, as parliamentarians, allow them to do this?

Unless there are amendments to this legislation making it fairer, we have no choice but to oppose it vigorously at all stages.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to oppose this motion which is another method of limiting debate on what, as some members opposite have stated here this morning, is a very, very serious issue. A very serious issue it is. This back to work legislation introduced last week will undermine Canadian values and traditions.

We are dealing with an issue that would allow the government to destroy the collective bargaining process. Ironically, it is this government's own ineptitude which resulted in the situation at hand. I am referring to Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services. Nicely worded so that Canadians do not read between the lines. They will not be certain just what has been accomplished by this legislation.

Let us be clear about just what is going on. The ships' crews group and hospital services group will be forced to abandon their legal strikes. Both groups have attempted to bargain in good faith with the government since the expiration of their collective agreements. Both groups have merely asked for the right to earn a living, which is hardly an excessive demand. Treasury Board has not attempted to resolve these issues in any way, shape or form. It has done nothing more than use stonewalling tactics from the very beginning.

The introduction of this legislation is basically unjust. There is no need for this legislation and the government should not interfere in any way with the free collective bargaining process. This process has been established in Canada for many years. Inherent in the collective bargaining process is the right to strike although, as we who have been in the collective bargaining business for some years all know, not many people want to strike here or anywhere else.

These unions are exercising their right to strike only to have the government react with strong arm techniques. Not only is this a demonstration of a lack of concern and of caring on the part of government, it also provides us with yet another example of the government's incompetence. The list of illogical and incompetent actions taken by this government continues to grow. I need not give examples because it would take far longer to cite them than the time allotted to me today to speak.

When the collective agreement for the ships' crews group expired in December 1987 the union served notice to Treasury Board. Treasury Board had 20 days after the expiration of the agreement to serve notice designating the group. It let the period expire without designating any of the services as essential. When it later tried to designate the group the Public Service Alliance appealed this move to the Federal Court and won, and rightly so. The Public Service Staff Relations Board supported the position of the Alliance so Treasury Board appealed to the Federal Court and the original decision was upheld. This went on until September of this year and because of this the collective bargaining process was continually delayed.

If Treasury Board had done the job properly the unions would not have been in a position to strike. It did not and now the government has tabled this legislation and passed it on to a committee, which legislation is intended to force these people back to work.

The scenario I have just described reeks of incompetence on the part of this government. When one asks the government why it is introducing back to work legislation, the answer now is "for safety reasons". As has been stated in this House many times in the last two or three days, safety is not an issue here, as was witnessed this past weekend.

Both groups have been conducting reasonable strikes. In the case of the ships' crews, emergency search and rescue vessels have been on standby across the country and the crews have responded on numerous occasions to life-threatening and disastrous situations. While the workers have exercised their legal right to strike, they have continued to provide emergency search and rescue services to all Canadians.

The same can be said for the hospital service workers presently on strike. The Public Service Alliance has offered to provide essential services but the government contends that the level of services offered are inadequate.

A recent article in a local newspaper suggests that the residents of veterans' homes support the position of hospital workers. One resident is reported as saying, and I quote: "We have very few residents who show resentment. We support the strikers because they are really extraordinary people who have given us the best of treatment".

Where are the serious violations of safety that this government is suggesting? In the case of the hospital workers Armed Forces personnel are filling the gap and at the homes temporary nursing assistants and volunteers are providing services. These hospital workers make between $18,000 and $22,000 per year. That is not very much money to survive on in this day and age. These workers did not seek out a strike but they were given no choice. In the words of PSAC Vice-President Jim MacEwen, and I quote: "We didn't seek this strike, but we have an employer who stonewalled us during two years of negotiations, has refused to comply with the findings of the Canadian Human Rights Commission with respect to pay equity. They have so exasperated the patience and goodwill of our members that they see no alternative but to take this type of action".

The reference to the Human Rights Commission decision on pay equity refers to a decision to award those workers $28 million in pay equity settlements. This means that the 1,200 hospital workers are owed $3,000 each. This decision was handed down in July 1987. Twenty months later they were still waiting for their money. Three thousand dollars is a lot of money to these workers. It is the difference between having food on the table or not.

Federal hospital service workers did not go on strike until November 29. A week later the government refused to allow it. The government fails to realize that these workers are undervalued and underpaid. The Human Rights Commission tribunal has called upon the government to compensate these workers for past discrimination, to re-evaluate all positions and to revise the hospital services classification standard to parallel the government services group.

The ships' crews workers legally went on strike on November 13. The major issues, as have been talked about here daily, are wages, hours of work, a sea duty allowance and wage parity between east and west coast workers. Last week in this House I called upon the minister responsible to finalize the wage parity issue and to negotiate the remaining issues. I have been informed that a carrot was dangled before the union, that being drop the other issues and you will get wage parity. The minister denied that such a condition exists. Either he is mistaken or he has been misinformed by his own people because Treasury Board officials have stated that that conditional offer was put on the table.

Last week I also indicated that this strike, in my opinion, could be settled quickly, and it must be. The Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway economy alone is losing over $2 million a day and there is only between $5 million and $6 million in dispute between Treasury Board and the union.

The minister keeps saying that he is willing to negotiate, and negotiate they did. I say to him, stop talking about it and do it. We can end this strike today.

• (1230)

Maybe that is the real reason behind this legislation. Perhaps this is the minister's idea of negotiating. The true motivation has not been to send the workers back because of safety reasons, but to force them back and to break the unions, thereby setting into motion the gradual elimination of the collective bargaining process in Canada, period.

Once again I must remind the House that these groups are in a legal position to strike. It is their right. Now, through this proposed legislation before us, the government intends to fine these underpaid—and I stress underpaid—workers. The fines are quite large—$500 to $1,000 a day for a worker, $10,000 to $50,000 a day for an individual who is a representative of the bargaining agent, and $50,000 to $100,000 a day for the bargaining agent. Those are awfully high penalties for people making in the vicinity of $20,000 a year.

Let us look briefly at what else the legislation does. It orders all ships crews and hospital service workers back to work immediately. It sets in place binding conciliation, that is, both sides have to accept an imposed settlement. The legislation names two chairpersons to the two boards. Normally the process is for each party to name its members for the board and then the members agree to a chairperson. I say that there is no need to do this at all—just settle the strike.

The government must admit that it has bungled the entire process. But why does the government not lick its wounds, return to the table to settle this mess?

I am acutely aware that there are problems out there and that businesses are being affected by the strike. I have received two faxes over the weekend from businesses in the Great Lakes area. I talked to people in Prince Edward Island. There are problems with the shipment of potatoes. The ships are going to be stuck in the harbours. I can appreciate the problems these people are having, because they have to earn a living. The whole economy of the country is suffering. The residents of veterans' hospitals and homes deserve to receive full and adequate services, but the hospital service workers deserve to earn an adequate living.

In order to restore rights to everyone concerned I call upon this government to do the right thing. Negotiate today in good faith. Do not force these men and women to accept an unfair settlement.

The government gave no indication, back when it was negotiating, that it was going to introduce legislation, because it has refused to act in good faith. Sadly, that is typical of everything that this government has done in the past five years.

We must remember that these legal strikes have in no way affected the lives or the safety of the Canadian people. The government is trying to destroy the very existence of collective bargaining in this country, and that is the bottom line.

Because of this I oppose this legislation. We on this side of the House implore the government to settle the strikes fairly and equitably. The government has no right to force these Canadians back to work. That tactic may, more than anything else, affect the quality of service that these groups provide. When you take away a person's legal right to self-expression, you deny them their self-worth and self-dignity. That, Mr. Speaker, will benefit no one.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I think it is worth while right at the beginning to remind the government and members of the House that the day closure was first introduced on this piece of legislation was the forty-first anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights. There were, I thought, rather eloquent speeches on behalf of all three parties concerning this memorable occasion. But, at the same time, we have to be very aware of how fragile human rights are.

It is not sufficient to simply stand up in the House and acknowledge the forty-first anniversary of this, to say how wonderful the United Nations is and how wonderful human rights are unless we put some kind of action behind those words. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that the action of the government in bringing in closure the first time in this particular round of the debate on this proposed legislation really does show its commitment, or lack thereof, to the whole concept of human rights. That is further exemplified as we go through the history of the dispute between the government, the employer, and some of its employees. These are employees who, I would point out, are among the most poorly paid in the Canadian civil service.

The government's commitment to human rights and equality are stated on a lot of different occasions. In some cases it has been forced to live up to what ought to be its commitment. Here is an example of where that is the case.

There was a complaint by the Public Service employees in 1981 which actually precedes the life of this government and goes into the life of a previous government. This was a complaint brought by Canadian civil servants against the government wherein one of the groups which we are involved with in this legislation pointed out that they were improperly paid in relation to other groups of civil servants, that is, paid less. The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal decided that that was so. I quote the tribunal's decision, "The parties are agreed that the hospital services (HS group)," which is one of the groups we are dealing with in this legislation, "is predominately female and has received less wages than the general services group, a predominately a male group performing the same work of at least equal value."

The government has fought that decision all through the piece, rather than doing the proper thing. I think it is fair to point out that this decision predates the present government, but that does not excuse it for not having taken immediate action when it did come to power.

Nonetheless, during election campaigns the Prime Minister himself has reiterated time and time again—I am not going to read what he said during election campaigns—that this government is unequivocally committed to affirmative action. He said that it is unequivocally committed to making sure that women receive equal pay for work of equal value. In fact he stated on more than one occasion that there was money actually being set aside in order to accommodate the equalization of pay for work of equal value.

This concept on the part of the Prime Minister goes back as far as the 1984 election when I think the nation as a whole was really quite taken up with what appeared to be the sincerity of that man when he spoke to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and other groups during the debates in that election campaign. Subsequently, very little has happened. The fact that the hospital services group in this particular instance did not receive the kind of amelioration for the problem which they faced is evidence that that did not occur. Not only did it not occur between 1984 and 1988, nothing of any particular substance has occurred since the 1988 election.

When we compare the forty-first anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights and the government's apparent commitment to it and its actions, we can only conclude that there certainly is a sense that the government has not lived up to its commitments. Of course that is really not too surprising considering some of its other actions since it came to power even as far back as 1984.

• (1240)

The problems did not start there. When we look at the problems that the ships crews are having, as well as the problems the hospital groups are having, and compare that to the time when there was another strike in progress a month or two ago with the parole officers and another group of employees in the federal government, we see that these three groups make up the total of those who have gone on strike in the civil service within the last short period of time.

I do not suppose it would be a surprise to anyone if I were to point out that if the government had had its way and followed its usual course of action, then these three groups of people literally would not have been able to strike. Since the inception of the ability of the Public service to go on strike these three groups of employees, along with many others, have not been able to go on strike. That is because each year as contract time comes up, the government designates a certain number of people within particular groups whom it considers to be performing essential services, therefore precluding them from being able to go on strike. This year, that did not occur.

The course of action on which the government proceeded as a result of its having overlooked designating these people as essential certainly reflects incompetence. It goes back again to its lack of commitment to the very basic human rights which were spoken of so eloquently when this legislation was first introduced. Once the government realized it had made a mistake, once it realized there was a possibility that not only these three groups, but many, many others within the civil service action that it conceived possible to prevent these people from going on strike anyway. Specifically, it went to the courts. It made a mistake, and then went to the courts to try to get the courts to overturn the fact that it had made a mistake. It went to the courts to try and get the decision that these people would be able to go on strike overturned. It went to the courts not once but twice.

I suspect it would have gone to the Supreme Court as well had it not been for the fact that by the time the Supreme Court decision would have been rendered the contract would have long since expired. The government had other fish to fry, other ways of getting these people back to work, even though there was a possibility they may go on strike.

I think it is important to point out, as I said before, that many, many more people within the Public Service were able to go on strike other than those in these three groups. In spite of the fact that many other civil servants had the right to go on strike, because of the government's mistake only those three groups did go on strike. I refer to the parole officers, ships crews and the hospital services people who did go on strike, exercising their democratic right for the first time since 1967, when it first became possible for civil servants to be unionized at all, and ostensibly at least to have the right to strike.

There are some very good reasons for these people to go on strike when for the first time they had the opportunity to do so. It in no way signifies that they are strike-happy. What it does signify is that they had no other alternative. Through all the preceding years of their employment with the government they had been prevented from going on strike. As I pointed out before, they had become the most poorly paid within the civil service. I was on the picket line the other day with them and there were different ones pointing out to me the problems they were having. One woman was a single parent with two children earning $16,000 a year.

I do not think there is a community within Canada where $16,000 with one child constitutes anything above the poverty level. That is an atrociously low amount of money for a person to make who is trying to support a family in any kind of meaningful style.

Another woman, a widow with four children, pointed out to me that she was earning $20,000 a year. I guarantee that at those levels of earning, unless one lives in a rural area that is certainly below the poverty level.

It is shameful that the Canadian government, and I am sure that the Canadian people, would find it impossible to support a situation where the Canadian public are condoning—and I guess that is the only way to describe it—employees of the government making so little money and living in such dire straits.

We have a situation where out of desperation these three groups did exercise their democratic rights. They have gone on strike in order to try, as is the common practice in such a situation, to improve their condition in life.

The arguments put forth by the government concerning the need for this back to work legislation certainly begs a question. We have been through one day of debate. We have been through the legislative committee process on this issue. Nowhere has the government been able to point out that there is any threat to the livelihoods of Canadians, or any threats to the lives of Canadians. There was reference made earlier to a decision of the International Labour Organization. I do not intend to go into a description of how the ILO is constituted, that has already been very well pointed out.

The decision of the committee of the ILO states in part, "Nevertheless, unfortunate as these consequences are, they cannot justify an abridgement of the fundamental rights guaranteed by conventions number 87 and 98, unless they reach the point where they affect the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population." In no case has this been evidenced. The Coast Guard workers, the ships crews group, as admitted to by the government, have exemplified the greatest of responsibility in this situation. Before they went on strike they offered to supply personnel wherever it was necessary in order to protect the safety of the Canadian public on our national waterways. The government admits that in no way has there been any threat whatsoever as a result of the strike.

In the case of the hospital group, the hospital services group offered to supply services in their places of work. They offered to provide 8 per cent of the people who would ordinarily do the work. The government said that was not satisfactory. It summarily dismissed the whole situation as if there were no other alternatives which may not have been any more complicated than asking the hospital services group, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, whether or not the 8 per cent was the absolute maximum which they would supply. That was never done. There was a great deal of evidence in the public domain to show that the government was very insincere in its approach to the hospital services workers. In addition, it has been adamant in trying to prevent them from going on strike at all, in spite of the fact that it has been so demonstrably uncaring with regard to its obligations under the decision of the Human Rights Commission.

• (1250)

There have been references made to the different people affected by this strike. There is a veterans home in Saskatoon. Long before these people were able to go on strike legally, the government had taken action to remove people from the home and to put them into different medical facilities within the city of Saskatoon. That was much to the dismay, I would point out, of the families of the people involved. These hospital services workers are a part of the families of these veterans who are in our home. In many cases they are the only families that some of these veterans have, since their own families live very far away. They have become part of the daily lives of these people. Even where the family members do not live great distances away the families themselves have said, "Please do not move these people". It is going to be far more disturbing to them to have them moved. The government could have found a way to accommodate the union's offer to provide the essential services that these people would have required without having disturbed them unduly.

The issue of pay equity with the hospital services workers are something which the government is going to have to address sooner or later. The decree is there. If the government wants to settle this strike quickly, then it can start by showing good intentions by simply saying "Look, we do not have to wait for the long process of the Human Rights Commission Tribunal to be implemented." It could just go ahead and do it as it is. I cannot understand why the government has not done that.

These people will never get another chance to strike. If the government is going to designate workers as being essential then I challenge it to pay them as they are as valuable and as essential to society as the government now claims. That has not been the case in the past. If the government is going to designate them, then pay them.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I have some comments about the speech that was just given by my colleague from Saskatoon. The comments that he made deal with a very important principle in this country. It is a principle of paying people what they are worth. It is a principle that this government has absolutely steadfastly refused to adhere to.

We heard a lot of rhetoric in this House over the last number of weeks as this issue came before us. I think my hon. colleague would agree that there are a lot of individuals out there who are not exactly sure what the main issues are that have precipitated the strike and this very unusual motion, which I think has only been introduced twice before in this place. Basically, it is an advance closure motion. Not only will this government not negotiate in good faith with the unions and adhere to the collective bargaining principles, it is trying to override the established principles and the standing orders of this place by using strange motions in the House.

What I want to get to is the issue of pay. I think many Canadians out there are saying, "Well, we have these two groups of public servants who are on strike and causing some dislocation in the economy". It is in the economy that the dislocation is taking place—the St. Lawrence Seaway economy. We have heard everybody from all sides of this House say that they are concerned about that, and we are concerned about it.

But let us not blame those employees who have exercised their right to strike for just pay for the work that they do. The individuals that I have talked to who work with the ships crews get paid on average about $20,000 a year—a wonderful salary. People who work in the retail sector, restaurant sector, transportation sector and private sector in the marine industries get paid much more than that. But for some reason this government is hell bent on painting these employees as somehow trying to gouge the public purse, somehow trying to pick the pockets of the taxpayers because of their greed.

I just want to put that on the record. I think my hon. friend will agree, since he has been following this issue as intently as members from my party have been doing. These individuals are getting $20,000 a year. What do they do? They come and say to the government, "We want a couple of things. First of all, we want to negotiate in good faith". They did that for over two years. They did not go on strike the first day that they could have, they negotiated for two years. Did they ask for a 50 per cent increase? No. Perhaps they should have. If they had known they were going to get the treatment that they are getting now in this place by this government, they should have asked for 100 per cent. They would be well worth 100 per cent. But that is not what they did. They came in with a reasonable request.

First, they said, "Don't discriminate against us for the job that we do based on where we live. Get rid of that regional rate of pay". That is exactly what the union asked on behalf of its membership.

The second thing that they asked was that they get paid a shift differential, that they get paid for sea duty. It works out to $177 per month. They asked for a couple of other very small fringe benefits. The over-all cost of the package was not the 17 per cent that the government and the President of the Treasury Board continue to push out, the actual increase was closer to 6 per cent. That is terribly misleading to the Canadian public and a great disservice to those men and women who work as ships crews.

I would like to ask my hon. colleague to make some comment on the government's misleading figures, about this terrible group of ships crews who are looking for 17 per cent, when in actual fact we both know that it is 6 per cent. I would like him to comment on that.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for the questions. I would point out that that is not the only area in which misleading statements have been made by the government.

There is one very misleading statement that came out as a result of questions in the House of Commons the other day when the President of the Treasury Board implied that the President of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada was condoning the introduction of back to work legislation.

I have a letter which I am not going to quote, but I would certainly like to put on the record that Iris Craig, president of that organization, wrote to the President of the Treasury Board and stated in no uncertain terms that she was in no way in favour of the back to work legislation and was condemnatory of the government's actions, as the rest of us are.

On the matter of rates of pay, it is very hard to understand why the government would distort what is actually happening. It is true that if these agreements are implemented, the rates will be a little bit higher than the general percentage of settlement within the rest of the public service. But it is not the rest of the public service that is complaining about this, it is the government itself. The basic principle is that this kind of settlement has to be put in place in order for these people to receive the kind of pay that they ought to get.

It is certainly not 14 per cent every year of the contract. For the government to imply that that is the case is so erroneous as to be beyond description. It is a reasonable 5 per cent, 4.8 and 4.6, something like that, over what will probably be, in the end, 42 months. That is certainly what is being negotiated now. I thank my colleague for raising that and the opportunity to respond to it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

The House took recess at 1.02 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

TRAGEDY AT SEA

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words about the sailors lost at sea in Atlantic Canada the last few days, some of whom were Nova Scotia fishermen.

We all know how cold a Canadian winter can be, but just imagine how cold it is on the deck of a 50-foot fishing boat in seas with 30-foot waves in the middle of December. Imagine trying to work your hands on frozen lines and nets while being sprayed with freezing water. Imagine seeing a huge wave coming at your boat and wondering if the boat can take it.

It appears now that three such vessels were victims of such waves and did not make it.

Any time a small vessel goes to sea there is always a chance that it may not come back. It is still a shock and a great loss when it does happen.

All Nova Scotians feel the loss of these sailors and our sympathy goes out to all those who lost relatives, loved ones and friends in these three related tragedies.

* * *

SOCIAL SCIENCES

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I have previously stood in this House and condemned the government's decisions with respect to the centres of excellence project, in so far as they excluded completely and totally any project from the social sciences or the humanities.

I would like to quote briefly from the words of Allan Bromley, the American assistant to the President for science and technology policy. It is a very important quote which states:

> Many of the outstanding problems we face today—such as the fate of the environment, the danger of nuclear war, the curse of world hunger, and the burgeoning costs of medical care, to name just a few—are often laid at the door of science and technology. Yet in all of these cases, the science and technology needed to solve these problems are effectively in hand. What we do not know are the social, behavioural, and economic consequences of the various possible courses of action available to us.

On this day, the third symposium of scientists and parliamentarians, I think it is befitting for the government to review its decision and to fund a social science or humanities project.

* * *

CAMBODIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, with all that is happening in the world it is easy to overlook the crisis in Cambodia. Yet immediate international attention is required because of the possible return to power of the reprehensible Khmer Rouge.

Since the Vietnamese withdrawal from Cambodia, the Khmer Rouge have launched a number of attacks and made some territorial gains. Their membership in the opposition coalition, recognized by the UN—thanks ironically to western support—creates a real possibility that they will be participants in a future Cambodian government.

I urge the Prime Minister to withdraw Canadian diplomatic support for the coalition and to oppose any new arrangement which would include the Khmer Rouge. Canada must also pressure other nations to follow suit and to act together to have China exercise a more responsible role in that region.

It is also time—indeed overdue—that Canada put in place, through non-governmental organizations, a development assistance package for Cambodia. Improved ties with the Hun Sen government might also be in order.

Finally, let us look at improving ties with the Vietnamese government. The war in Vietnam is long over. Vietnamese troops have now left Cambodia. Let us try to reintegrate Vietnam into the international community.

* * *

[Translation]

CHILD ABUSE

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon our country paid a last tribute to the victims of the tragic incident that occured last Wednesday. As a result of these events, we have given serious thought to some of the situations in our society.

Today, I would like to consider one of these situations in particular, namely, child abuse.

In some countries, children die of hunger. They cannot ask for help because they do not have the strength to do so. In our supposedly wealthy and civilized country, there are also children who cry for help. These children have been abused, shifted from foster home to foster home, and often left fo fend for themselves.

There are children who are unloved, street children, children of divorced parents, unwanted children. And they are all very much alone.

At a time when people talk about the rights of the unborn, and so they should, perhaps we should also consider the rights of those who have already received the gift of life, but a life that is often one of undeserved suffering, with terrifying consequences.

* * *

[English]

HIGHWAYS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, in this last week the Ontario government has committed almost half a billion dollars toward improving the highways in northern Ontario.

Premier David Peterson, the Minister of Transport, Bill Wrye, and the Minister of Northern Affairs, Rene Fontaine, realize the needs of the north. They have acted, and they should be congratulated.

We need this government to develop a national transportation policy which addresses the needs of the highways in northern Ontario.

If the planned cuts to VIA Rail proceed on January 15, residents of rural and small-town Canada will become more reliant than ever before on our highway infrastructure. I urge this government to follow the leadership demonstrated by the Ontario government and allocate sufficient resources to the development of highways in northern Ontario. This government can no longer use the excuse that it is waiting for the province of Ontario to act. Ontario has taken positive action, positive action to the tune of $460 million for future highway expansion.

The onus is now on this government to reciprocate. Show your commitment to northern Ontario. Prove that you do have a total commitment to the north of this country.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program was introduced on May 3, 1988.

The program was a response to the concerns expressed by the natural resources sector about the impact of two factors that may make things difficult for companies that try to raise new capital by issuing flow-through shares to finance exploration activities, and I am referring to the stock market crash in 1987 and tax reform.

The CEIP expires on December 31, 1990, and today I am worried about the survival of this program.

Mr. Speaker, the next federal budget is imminent, and we must ensure that the finance minister does not get rid of the CEIP in the next Budget.

* * *

[English]

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities has at long last decided to release a partial list of corporate donors that eagerly lined up to donate money to the free trade advertising extravaganza launched by big business in the last general election.

Contrary to earlier promises, this is not a complete list. Many American multinationals that were only too happy to go public with the support for the sell-out free trade deal have become surprisingly modest about releasing information about how much money they spent propping up the Tory Party. Companies refusing to release such information includes such huge U.S. companies as AT&T, GM and 3M. After shouting support for free trade from the roof-tops, why skulk in the closet about how much they spent supporting their Tory pals? Are they having an attack of conscience after seeing the disastrous effects of the deal on the Canadian economy? Or are they afraid to draw attention to themselves and endure the wrath of a duped Canadian public?

The most shameful aspect of this list is that every one of these huge corporations earned a tax deduction by donating vast sums to support the re-election of their cronies in the Tory Party. For example, Alcan contributed $250,000. Not only did this outstanding corporate citizen deduct every cent of this blatantly political contribution, but in 1986 the company managed to make so many tax deductions that it received a tax credit of $32 million after earning profits of $220 million. The Tory Party was so concerned about Alcan's measly profit of $220 million that it decided to top it up with another $32 million of taxpayers' dollars.

In addition, four Canadian donors contributing over $250,000—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret having to interrupt the member.

* * *

• (1410)

[Translation]

PATENT ACT

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, December 7 was the second anniversary of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, created as a result of the 1987 amendments to the Patent Act, contained in Bill C-22.

With these amendments, our government intended to guarantee consumer access to drugs at reasonable prices, while at the same time providing an incentive to medical research in Canada. And those are exactly the results we are seeing today.

According to the first report, this new policy saved the Canadian consumer betwen $60 to $80 million last year.

Furthermore, during the first years the act to amend the Patent Act was in effect, the pharmaceutical industry invested over $72 million in research and development in Quebec, with Montreal benefiting most from these investments and the new jobs they generate.

Mr. Speaker, without those endless discussions by members of the opposition, especially by Liberal senators who did everything they could to prevent these changes from being enacted by Parliament, consumers, industry and workers in Quebec and across Canada would have enjoyed benefits much sooner.

[English]

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, December 10, was International Human Rights Day. It is therefore fitting to consider today the case of Reverend Laszlo Tokes of Romania.

Reverend Tokes is a well known religious leader and human rights advocate. Last year he boldly protested the "village destruction program" undertaken by his government. He has continued to knock on government doors and seek, through peaceful means, full enjoyment for all Romanian citizens of their right to private worship and community life.

For his determination to pursue his mission, he was evicted by his government from his congregation. Canada must persuade Romania to live up to its international responsibilities on human rights. Reverend Tokes, in fact all citizens of the world, have the right to practice their religion without fear of persecution.

I ask this government to take action to ensure that the Romanian government allow Reverend Tokes to continue to minister to his congregation. In the name of international solidarity, Canada must ensure that all citizens of the world be given their rightful place in their own country as we in our own land support the work of the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

* * *

[Translation]

TOURISM

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to pay tribute today in this House to a distinguished Quebecer who has made a name for himself in tourism in the Quebec city area.

Mr. Speaker, Jacques du Sault has just been named president of Canada's Capital Visitors and Convention Bureau following a nation-wide competition in which more than 220 candidates competed this prestigious position.

Jacques du Sault will be able to bring together people on both sides of the river in Ottawa—Hull and pool everyone's efforts in the National Capital Region for properly planned and coordinated tourism development.

He has been a hotel keeper, founding president of the Quebec City Region Tourism Board, president of the Tourism Committee of the Chamber of Commerce and Industry of Metropolitan Quebec and director of the tourism development plan management committee for the greater Quebec region. His great personal experience, perfect bilingualism and desire to develop this beautiful region harmoniously will make Jacques du Sault an effective president.

* * *

[English]

GUN CONTROL

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, today in Montreal thousands of people are mourning the deaths of 14 women at the hands of a gun-toting madman. He was able to buy his semi-automatic rifle because he had met all legal requirements.

On Saturday, the Prime Minister said the ease with which Marc Lepine obtained his instrument of mass murder was "serious and unacceptable". He is quoted as saying his government would deal with the problem if necessary.

The fact that a man with serious psychological problems was able to legally obtain a powerful rifle and kill and wound more than two dozen innocent people should make it obvious even to the Prime Minister that action is necessary.

At the end of October, the Minister of Justice said he expected to bring in gun control legislation before Christmas. On Friday, the Solicitor General said it would be January or possibly later before legislation is tabled.

The time for action is now. We cannot wait for more innocent blood to be shed.

* * *

THE LATE ROBERT HAMILTON HUBBARD

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask this House to note the passing of a distinguished and scholarly Canadian gentleman. I refer to Robert Hamilton Hubbard who, until his sudden death this past November, served this nation in a quiet, unassuming and scholarly way, adding to our knowledge of ourselves as a nation and gently refining our view of the world.

It is not my intention to recite the details of Robert Hubbard's illustrious career, his entry into the Canadian Who's Who is almost four inches long, but to ask this House to note his passing and to acknowledge his aid to the ordinary business of Parliament.

I refer to the fact that the work of his later years; historian and cultural advisor to our governors general, and his unchallenged position as Canada's foremost art historian, made it an entirely natural matter to ask for his advice in an important artistic and cultural endeavour, such as the creation of national monuments.

As adviser to the committee formed to produce the splendid Diefenbaker monument that is engaged in similarly honouring Lester B. Pearson, Robert Hubbard will be missed both for the fine mind that he used to our benefit and for his gentlemanly and courteous demeanour which was a model to us all.

* * *

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, since the government announced its disastrous decision to close CFB Summerside, Prince Edward Islanders have presented many valid objections but their protests continue to fall on deaf ears.

Now the Medical Society of Prince Edward Island says the relocation of the 413 Search and Rescue Squadron to CFB Greenwood will jeopardize the health and lives of islanders due to delays in medical evacuations to the mainland. Under the most ideal conditions, a one-hour delay in missions will occur. In bad weather, departures from Greenwood are time consuming and dangerous, whereas from Summerside they are safe and efficient.

Islanders are already isolated and therefore vulnerable. Why is this government deliberately exposing them to unnecessary delays in medical treatment resulting in distress, pain and even death? Islanders have a right to efficient medical services which means keeping the 413 Squadron at CFB Summerside.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, the carnage at the University of Montreal surely represents the manic edge of hatred and resentment by men against women achievers in non-traditional fields. Almost every woman in this House and other women who compete against men have experienced actions that reveal the misogyny that confronts women in universities, colleges, the workplace, the home, and on the streets of our nation. This hideously unjust desecration has brought home to most Canadians the need for action.

I urge the Prime Minister to establish a joint parliamentary committee to investigate violence against women, the harassment and the structural obstacles confronting women as we attempt to take our rightful place in society.

I also urge the Minister of Justice to bring forward gun control legislation to prohibit the sale or possession of automatic or semi-automatic weapons with the exception of those required by police forces. Lethal weapons should not be easily available to disturbed individuals. There should be no repetition of a mass killing such as the one in Montreal.

* * *

TOURISM

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my concern over the grave and ominous future that confronts the tourism industry in the north. The futile and uncoordinated policies that this government has put forth will do nothing but decimate this key mechanism for northern development.

Tourism is perhaps Canada's biggest hidden industry, hidden to the tune of $21 billion per year. It plays a major role in stimulating northern development. Yet this government has done nothing to promote tourism in this country. On the contrary, with the cutbacks to VIA Rail and the impending goods and services tax, the government has come a long way in promoting tourism in other countries except our own. The loss of VIA Rail's Canadian route, combined with the loss of other northern routes, does not bode well for prospects for further development.

The government has said that the GST will not affect tourism. However, the Conference Board of Canada estimates that $1 billion will be lost in 1991 alone and the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association has predicted a 20 per cent decline in tourism in the north. The government should be seizing every opportunity to expand this sector of the economy. When will this government give tourism the high priority status that it deserves?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Finance Minister have insisted that there will not be any major changes to the goods and services tax proposal. The minister said no tax on groceries, and some Conservative MPs said: "Well, let's try it". The minister said no to GST on existing housing, and the Blenkarn report says: "Let's do it".

Now, in what has been described by some as a non-criminal leak, the government says: "No taxes on groceries, no taxes on existing housing, but a GST rate of 7 per cent".

Will the Finance Minister not wait this time for polling results and withdraw his crazy quilt patch-work proposal because Canadians are not prepared to take seven strokes of the tax whip any more than they are prepared to take nine strokes of the GST tax whip.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might take that particular suggestion more seriously if I had had any sort of alternative proposal from the Liberal party during the course of the last four months.

Ms. Clancy: Scrap it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member from Halifax says "scrap it". This is the sort of tax that we have been struggling with as a country for 65 years now. There was a Royal commission in 1940. There was another commission in 1955, another one in 1966, another one in 1973, and another one in 1983. All of them said: "Let's get rid of the tax". We have to move to a new type of sales tax system because the existing tax is hurting the economy.

• (1420)

We are going to be proceeding with this tax. As the Prime Minister said, we will be making an announcement sometime before Christmas. As soon as I have the precise timing on that announcement, I will be advising the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the federal government is now negotiating with the provinces, no doubt to force them to accept an agreement on a national sales tax. Does the government intend to force the provinces to accept a national sales tax by freezing transfer payments for post-secondary education and health care? My question to the Minister of Finance is this: Does he now intend to put through his goods and services tax on the backs of the provinces?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of forcing the provinces to do anything. We had a meeting of federal and provincial finance ministers last Thursday. At that meeting there was a discussion of the goods and services tax. The provinces indicated there were a number of areas on which they wished to have further discussion. We have established a process, starting with meetings probably very early in January so we can pursue some of these concerns that the provinces have.

There is no question, there never has been a question, of whether or not we will force the provinces to do something. If they wish to join a national sales tax at some time in the future we have said all along that the door was open. There will be nothing done in the proposal, either in the design or in the implementation, to preclude that from happening.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the government now has been dog-dancing around the goods and services tax proposal for quite some time. The minister just referred to whether or not there were any alternatives.

What I think would be interesting for Canadians to know is whether the Minister of Finance recognizes that he must focus on interest rates in this country that are up to 5 per cent higher than interest rates in the United States and on a Canadian dollar that has gone over 86 cents. Those two single things alone cause more damage to exports in Canada than anything that the MST has done over the years.

The question to the Minister of Finance is: After all this time spent on the goods and services taxes and all the flaws that are in it, is he prepared now to focus on doing something about the high interest rates and the high value of the Canadian dollar in this country to try to protect our export industries?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think that the hon. member can only look back over the last five years to the number of statements I have made which recognize very clearly the importance of the export industry in this country and also the importance of having low interest rates.

We do have a problem of inflation in the country, a problem that is not just limited to certain parts of the country, but is growing more and more widespread across it. It is this problem that we feel we must deal with and we are going to deal with it, but that takes time. Unfortunately, it is taking longer than we expected because of the underlying strength in the economy. There are some signs that have appeared in the economic data over the last little while which indicate that there is some subsiding here, and hopefully there will be some time in the future when we can see lower interest rates.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, after months of hearing the Minister of Finance say that the goods and services tax rate could not be reduced from 9 per cent, Canadians are not going to be fooled by the suggestion of a 7 per cent rate. The Minister's problem, I suggest to him, is his own credibility.

No one believes that this government is not going to bring in the tax at one rate and increase it as soon as it gets a chance to do so. Canadians know that no matter what rate the GST is at the tax is going to be an administrative nightmare. They know that no matter what the rate is, it is not going to be visible. They know it is going to hurt the poor and the disadvantaged.

Why does the Minister not listen to what Canadians are saying and scrap this insane tax instead of sitting around listening to the pollsters trying to figure out how to hoodwink Canadians?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is so much that is wrong in the preamble of the hon. member's question that I do not know where to start. Let me make it clear.

The question has not been whether or not you can get an 8 per cent rate, a 7 per cent rate, or a 6 per cent rate. It is how you get to that rate, and that is where the difficult trade-offs come. This is what I have been pointing out time and time again. When people ask me that question on rate, I say there are very difficult trade-offs and the question that you have to respond to is what trade-offs are you prepared to make.

We had some useful suggestions from the Conservative members of the finance committee. We got absolutely nothing from the Liberal Party of Canada as to how we might get the rate down. As I replied in answer to one of the earlier questions, it strikes me as very unusual that we should have this posturing on the part of Liberal members when they have done absolutely nothing to contribute to the dialogue and the debate that is going to result in a better sales tax system in this country.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I turn the minister's words back to him. The problem with the GST is that it is such a mess it is hard to know where to start to criticize it.

The government is proposing to replace a tax, which is currently paid by about 75,000 firms, with one that is going to be collected by about 1.25 million firms, and most of them are going to file monthly forms. Whatever the rate, Canada is going to be the only developed country in the world with a two-tier retail tax, and the minister will enjoy the distinction of having introduced the single most complex fiscal measure in Canada's history.

Will the minister not admit that implementing the GST in January, 1991, will be an administrative fiasco and the only reason for his obsession with this date is that he hopes election.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, at some time governments have to decide on these major issues and do something.

As I indicated in response to an earlier question, the Liberal party looked at five consecutive reports every ten years and ignored each one of them. Each time a report came back it stated: "Get rid of the manufacturers' sales tax." The point is that at the time when we know there is a tax that is a bad tax for the country, it must be removed and we are going to remove it.

The hon. member said there are only 75,000 people who pay the tax directly, but indirectly every Canadian consumer pays the existing federal sales tax. But it is invisible. No one knows that it is there. In response to my friend from Gloucester, this tax is going to be a very visible tax. There will not be one person in the country who will not be aware that there is a goods and services tax, and that is accountability. For years and years the Liberal party ignored the fact that the existing tax is hidden. This is one of the things we are going to change because it brings about better accountability in government.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Government figures for next year's farm net income show declines of 54 per cent in the province of Alberta, declines of 87 per cent in Manitoba, and a whopping decline of 101 per cent in Saskatchewan. His anti-inflation program seems to have wiped out farm incomes altogether on the prairies.

Farm families have no unemployment insurance, they are not eligible for welfare, and other safety nets miss them as well. Since they will not have enough income to pay cash costs, let alone something to support families and make capital payments, what does the government intend to do?

• (1430)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture has addressed that question in the House. There is a major conference on today and tomorrow that will involve discussion of that very question. I expect that the more appropriate time to respond to that question is after the consultation has occurred, after the Minister of Agriculture has listened to the concerns of the farming community. After that we can make some decisions.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, global farm production has failed to meet global demand in three consecutive years. Yet, Canadian grain prices are lower this year than last year. Will the Minister of Finance abandon his high interest rate, high dollar policy to allow farmers to reduce their input costs and increase the export value of their grain?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member reflects on the purpose of the goods and services tax, he will see that that is a means by which all farmers can remove the tax on all of their—

Mr. Althouse: That wasn't the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member is shaking his head. Clearly, the hon. member does not understand what the goods and services tax is all about. It will allow the farmer to remove all forms of taxes on all business inputs into the farming operation.

The hon. member has raised the question of interest rates. If he thinks back to 1980–81–82, at a time when interest rates were very high in this country, it was because the government of the day forgot and ignored the whole question of inflation that was building through the course of the seventies—

Mr. Althouse: You wiped out income.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It did not address the problem, and the result was the blow-off of high inflation of 13 per cent, high interest rates of about 20 per cent to 25 per cent and the tremendous disaster which resulted from that. That is what we are trying to avoid. We understand that there are concerns which are being expressed now, but if we do not address this problem we are going to get right back into the mess—

Mr. Althouse: No income is not inflationary.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can only yell. If he could listen a bit, he might learn something.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, I will also direct my question to the Minister of Finance. Article 703 of the free trade agreement states that in order to facilitate trade in agricultural goods, Canada and the United States shall work together to eliminate what is termed "restrictive trade barriers". Given the fact that supply management programs are under heavy attack during the current GATT negotiations and also by the international Cairns Group, constituting what we could define as "restrictive trade barriers", will the minister agree that the future of Canada's supply management systems under the provisions of the free trade agreement in fact hinges on our successful performance at these negotiations?

Second, will the minister specify what actions his government is prepared to initiate and to take to ensure that our supply management systems, as we know them today, are going to be maintained?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to the hon. member, especially at a time like this when we have so many farmers and agri-food people in Ottawa to attend a conference. This conference is one of the largest ever held, where all of the sectors of the agri-food industry are brought together to work toward a common goal of achieving a better income and a future for the industry.

The member addressed supply management. Part of that meeting is devoted particularly to supply management, where these issues will be addressed. I hope that some hon. members will be there and take part by providing input and listening to the concerns of their constituents as well. We would welcome all of you to come to that conference this afternoon and tomorrow.

We are firmly committed to the continuation of supply management. We are addressing it and working hand in hand with the producers on supply management to keep a viable industry operational and working with them at GATT in what decisions are being taken there. We will stand firmly committed to working with them and to the supply management sector.

* * *

PORNOGRAPHY

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the fact that violence in the media contributes to violence against women is accepted by virtually all experts. Twice this government has introduced legislation against pornography and twice has had to withdraw it.

My question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister undertake today to bring in legislation against pornography that includes sanctions against violence, violence outside of sexual context, in movies, television, videos and magazines?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my colleague is correct that during the last Parliament we brought in legislation which would have tackled the very serious problem of pornography. It included child pornography, violence and all sorts of pornography.

Had my hon. friend been here I am sure she might have been able to persuade the members of her party who filibustered it to let it go to committee so that it could have been studied in detail. Unfortunately, we were unable to move it through the House due to the intransigence of the Liberal party.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the minister knows better. That legislation was very defective. One of its shortcomings was that violence in itself, apart from sexuality, violence against women was not identified in that legislation as pornography. Is the minister prepared to bring forward legislation that this House would support that will deal with that kind of pornography?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome my friend's transformation on the road back from Damascus. I hope that my hon. friend will know that during the previous administration this area was never properly addressed. We tried in good faith to address it. We brought in a bill. We do not claim, as did the previous liberal administration, that everything we do is perfect. We brought it in and had we got it to committee that very important subject could have been addressed. I regret that. However, we are working on it and I hope to bring something forward in the near future.

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Transportation is a key factor to Canada's economic and social well-being. It is the life line I would suggest to all the outlying regions of our country. Yet the proposed goods and services tax will apply to all transportation costs whether it be at 9 per cent, 7 per cent or any per cent. Northerners will pay more. They will pay more for the snowsuits for their children. They will pay more for their heating bills and they will pay more for all other necessities of life because transportation costs will be built in, and those are higher.

Will the minister admit that the goods and services tax discriminates against people in outlying regions? What does he propose to do about it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say very clearly that the tax on transportation cost is removed by the particular design of the goods and services tax so that there is no tax on the transportation cost.

The hon. member is expressing some surprise on that. I would suggest that she learn how the tax is designed to remove the tax from all business inputs, and one of those inputs is transportation costs. The hon. member has zeroed in on one aspect of the tax but I think it is very clear in the economic analysis that has been done that the regions of the country, because they normally depend more on exports, normally depend on very capital intensive industries, are beneficiaries of the goods and services tax. That is why the regions of the country benefit more than parts of the country like southern Ontario or southern Quebec. That comes from the nature of the tax itself.

• (1440)

Mrs. Marleau: Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe this. The Minister of Finance does not understand his own tax. Since when does a vendor pay a cost of transportation and not add it into the cost that he charges to the consumer? When you buy a refrigerator in northern Ontario, do you not pay for the transportation costs in the final price, and then there is a tax?

What will the minister do to offset this double whammy to people who live away from the major centres? Maybe he should study his own tax.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker I think that I understand the tax having sat around boardroom tables and talked to people from coast to coast to coast on the nature of this tax. I think I do understand how the tax is constructed.

Let me again go back to the comments that the hon. member has raised. There is no question that transportation costs are one of the costs in a product that is consumed in any part of the country. That is only one part of the cost. There are other costs that are part of the over-all cost of the product that is consumed but the key here is that you have to look at the broad benefit, the broad impact of the tax to different parts of the country as opposed to identifying one particular element of it.

As an example, the costs of accommodation in downtown Toronto are far greater than they are in other parts of the country. If we want to zero in on one particular aspect of the tax, I could draw an argument that says the tax is unfair in downtown Toronto. You have to look at the broad impact of the tax and that is where the economic analysis says that the regions of the country are greater beneficiaries than is the case in the more developed areas of southwestern Ontario.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. He knows that today National Sea Products announced that 1,562 people will be losing their jobs.

The minister has had a special cabinet committee on this crisis for the last six months. Name one thing that the government is going to do to keep those plants going and to help those communities. Why has the government done nothing after six months of having a special committee? Why has it done nothing to keep those plants going, even on a part-time basis?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, no words exchanged in this House could capture the distress that families are going to feel as a result of the decisions announced by National Sea Products this morning. These decisions affect the communities of Canso, St. John's and North Sydney as well.

It is true to say that the government has not announced a major package of initiatives to date but we do recognize the serious dilemma facing the groundfish sector in Atlantic Canada. We are very much in tune with the needs, sentiments and anxieties of the people living in communities affected by these matters.

That is why my colleagues, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister for Public Works, in Canso and St. John's East this morning announced major initiatives in the area of industrial adjustment and industrial diversification. There will be further information to follow, as appropriate.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the minister completely ignored the question. The government has had a special committee of cabinet for six months. No announcements have been made. They have known for weeks and weeks and weeks that these closures would be occurring. Why has the government done nothing to maintain the jobs in those communities? Why has it done absolutely nothing?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, it is not true to suggest that anyone has known for weeks and weeks that specific communities would be impacted by specific decisions.

These are decisions that are taken by the corporate side and they depend very heavily on the circumstances in the market-place and with respect to resource supply. I repeat that the government is taking measures to ensure that there is a bright future, that there are in many cases alternatives and in some cases alternatives within the fishery in order that these communities can continue to to survive and prosper as this government would intend to be the case.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Since November 29, Richard Bilodeau, a Canadian living in my riding, has been detained in prison in New Hampshire, in the United States, following an automobile accident in which three people were killed. U.S. authorities object to his release. They claim, on the basis of a written opinion by the U.S. Department of Justice, that the extradition treaty between Canada and the United States does not apply in the case of manslaughter and criminal negligence, when such offences are committed while driving a car. The district attorneys of the State of New Hampshire are concerned about the possibility that Canadian authorities might not observe the extradition treaty.

Clearly, Mr. Bilodeau's rights, are not being respected, and he has every right to our support and assistance.

Could the Minister of Justice reaffirm his confidence in the extradition treaty between Canada and the United States, and re-establish the facts with respect to its scope and eventual compliance with the treaty? Furthermore, could the minister reassure Mr. Bilodeau's family and contact the U.S. Department of Justice to ensure that his rights are respected?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question, if I may, on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

The extradition treaty which is in effect between Canada and the United States does apply to this type of situation. The government is aware of Mr. Bilodeau's case and his difficulties in New Hampshire. We are following the situation carefully. I am sure the United States of America and the courts in that state will preserve Mr. Bilodeau's rights. I understand that the matter should be solved shortly.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is indeed a sad day for Atlantic Canada, especially for the workers in St. John's and Canso. There will be over 1,500 jobs lost and in the case of Canso, a loss of 750 jobs means the closure of the community. This government cannot allow this closure to go ahead without proper plans and proper programs to save the community.

What considerations were given by this government for the people and the workers of that community. Did the bottom line of National Sea Products weigh more than all those people put together in those communities?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is very important to know that the government will be very concerned with the workers and with the communities. That is our first concern.

There are a number of things under way as the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Public Works announced this morning. First of all, we are ensuring in the short term that all of the workers will qualify for unemployment insurance and if they do not that they will obtain sufficient weeks of work to qualify. Second, there is a particular concern for older workers and the Older Workers Adjustment Program will apply in this case. Third, there is a community development fund that will be a significant step for the communities which are affected in terms of helping them to build a future.

It was also said this morning in our announcement that the level of funding will be determined by the size of the lay-offs and the needs of each community because we want to ensure that each community is looked at individually.

Mr. Robichaud: This still means that the plant will be closing.

• (1450)

[Translation]

How can we really be sure that the government has looked at all the options for keeping the Canso plant open? Why did National Sea announce all these cutbacks even before the fisheries plan for 1990 was published? My question is as follows: Is the government an accomplice in all these lay-offs and plant closings?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, that is certainly not the case. My colleagues who have sat and discussed these pending developments without knowing which specific communities would be hit and to what degree have wrestled intensely for several months with the dilemma posed to a number of communities in Atlantic Canada, not only because of the market factors I mentioned but also because of the deteriorating abundance of supply to these plants.

The question then arose as to whether a number of plants could be kept open by operating on such a marginal basis that they no longer became economic and viable. We decided that those decisions in the final analysis were best left to the private sector but that the government would move in with the full strength of resources to look after the needs of people, to look after the rejuvenation of these communities. My colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, will in the days ahead be giving further detail on how we intend to do that.

Oral Questions

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. At the end of October the northern tax benefits report was made public. If the recommendations are implemented as proposed, some 72 communities in northern Ontario will lose this benefit and drain some $5 million from the economy. Some of the communities like Marathon, Terrace Bay, Schreiber and Geraldton should also have qualified.

Considering that seven sawmills have closed and 2,000 jobs have been lost already, can the minister assure this House and northern Ontarians that he will totally reject the report's recommendation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member has said, the report was made available some time toward the end of October. We have been reviewing this report and are continuing to do that work. At this point I do not have any statement as to what the government's position will be.

We appreciate the work that was done by that task force, a task force composed of people who live in isolated communities and who spent a good deal of time going around the country understanding the problems and trying to come up with a proposal that was an equitable and stable proposal. That is the result that they have presented to the government.

As I said, we are studying this now and I hope that not too far down the road we will have a decision.

* * *

FORESTRY

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry that also deals with the serious northern Ontario problem.

It seems contradictory that on the one hand the government claims that the manufacturers' sales tax is hurting Canadian exports and uses this as a rationale for introducing the goods and services tax, yet this government has turned around and hit our forestry sector with a 15 per cent export surtax in this era of so-called free trade.

In view of the fact that our dollar has reached a 10-year high, making our exports less competitive, when will this government stop sabotaging our primary resource industries and ensure that we are competing on a level playing field?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, we are, of course, sensitive to the difficulties of this particular industry, particularly in northern Ontario. A number of factors are at play, including the fibre supply situation, the exchange rate and perhaps, more important, a decline in housing starts in the United States. All of these are important factors.

The hon. member knows that it would be up to the province of Ontario principally to propose, as other provinces have done, that certain offsets be required before this particular tax can be eliminated.

Let us not forget that the tax does not accrue to an American jurisdiction, but accrues to the province of Ontario which, of course, has the option to return some of this money back to the resource in northern Ontario.

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

On Saturday the Prime Minister announced that the government was prepared to drop the rate of the proposed GST to 7 per cent through major spending cuts of up to $6 billion per year. This promise carries an implied threat. Since the 1988 election we have seen the elimination of universality in our social programs, further cuts to health care and education, cuts in regional development, the gutting of VIA Rail, the removal of government financing of the UI program and the lay-off of tens of thousands of Canadians.

Will the Minister of Finance confirm that the proposal to reduce the proposed rate to 7 per cent will mean further massive cuts to programs affecting Canadians and will he tell us where he plans to cut back?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the preamble to the hon. member's statement was as loaded with inaccuracies as I have heard in any preamble since I have been in the House.

The Prime Minister did not say that. He did indicate that there would be some spending cuts over the course of the next little while. I think the hon. member, if she is listening to people in Canada, will find that they are concerned about the debt. They are concerned about the level of government spending. They are concerned about the level of taxation.

Canadians want to be assured that we are spending taxpayers' dollars as effectively and as efficiently as possible. They also want to know that we are doing everything we can to get the level of debt down so that we are not carrying over to future generations a very heavy burden of trying to support that debt.

This is what we have been trying to do since November 1984 and we are going to continue to do that because we understand the significance of debt control in the future health of this country and in our ability to be able to maintain the programs that Canadians value.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the finance minister maintains the pretence that the GST is inevitable and he has said again today in this House that he has no intention of withdrawing it.

I think he has already answered this question but I am going to put it so I can get it straight from him. Is it not the strategy of this government to feed the anxiety over the federal deficit in order to sell this regressive sales tax?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is a question of feeding any anxieties. It is simply a question of reading the facts. The facts are there. The debt in this country is too high. It must be controlled. The deficit when we came in was $38 billion. We got it down to $28.7 billion last year, but that is still too high. It means that we have to continue to control government spending. That is the best way—

Ms. Hunter: What about interest rates?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member throws in another question. Possibly she could get it all together and put the question to me at one time and I will give her the answer she wants.

FISHERIES

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries.

If, as the minister suggests, some of those plants are not economically viable, I believe he will agree that he must bear a fair amount of the responsibility for that. While he stood by and let the Spanish and the Portuguese rape our fish stocks those plants were having trouble finding enough fish to process.

I ask him, now that St. John's and Canso is shut down thanks to his mismanagement of the fishery, what is he prepared to do to prevent further closings, including plant closings by FPI down the road?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, later this week I will be meeting again with the Atlantic fisheries ministers who provide guidance and whom I consult regularly on the proper management plans for the Atlantic groundfish industry.

At the end of December we will be announcing our plans for 1990. In view of the extraordinary circumstances in the market-place and the persistent decline of the resource in some zones, extraordinary measures are going to be required. I will be prepared to give the member a full account of some of these measures later this month.

• (1500)

Meanwhile, I want to assure the hon. member that we have taken every measure necessary to eliminate foreign over-fishing of our domestic stocks within the Canadian 200-mile economic zone and to bring all possible pressures to bear internationally to end foreign over-fishing beyond that limit, two initiatives which the government of which he was a part failed to take in all the time it was in office.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, I want to come to the question that has been put to the minister in various forms as to what the government intends to do to help those people who are affected by plant closings. He can look up the line to his minister of manpower, but if she stands up, I hope she does better than she did the first time.

I am not talking about the established programs, the stuff to put people on UI. I am asking the minister of fisheries or the minister of manpower what programs there are to give these people alternate job opportunities, not the stuff we already know about the UI. That is not what they want.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already told the House that the entire adjustment mechanism that we have put forward is designed to ensure short-term assistance. I see the hon. member is not even listening.

Mr. Simmons: Point of order.

Mrs. McDougall: It is to ensure short-term assistance that will help to facilitate some long-term solutions.

The problem clearly is a resource problem, as the hon. member knows. That means that our resources as a government working together with the provincial government have to be to help people through the short term and then to move toward some solutions for the long term.

The community diversification issue which I spoke about before is one that is going to help communities to establish new directions and it will help deploy the resources in a way that is helpful to them.

The Deputy Speaker: We will close Question Period with one question from the member for Vancouver East and one question from the member for Abitibi.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

This past weekend, the Canadian Ethnocultural Conference on equality rights for ethnic and visible minorities established that racism in Canada is increasing and cases which will take years to process, involving discrimination, have yet to be tested under the Charter.

I want to ask the minister if he will assure minority groups and disadvantaged people across Canada that the court challenge program which is essential if these people are to have access to the courts will not be terminated in three months' time and that there will be funding assured for 1991 and beyond, as our own Human Rights Committee of this House has recommended today, that it should continue to the year 2000. Will he recommend this?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know of no thought being given to changing that program.

* * *

[Translation]

NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

At the request of the Quebec Treasury Board, the Bureau de la statistique du Québec has conducted a study to reclassify northern and isolated communities in Quebec according to the disparity index of 84 isolated communities in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, my question is as follows: Could the Minister confirm whether the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas has read Quebec's final report,—I repeat its final report—which classifies isolated communities from 1 to 84, Joutel ranking 45th, Radisson 64th, Lebel-sur-Quévillon 70th, Matagami 79th and Chapais 88th. This study is a contradiction of the task force's report—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me confirm that it is my understanding that the members of the task force appointed by the federal government did consult with the members of the Quebec study group that were looking into this particular situation. The federal task force report did come out before the Quebec report was made available, but they had consulted prior to the completion of the conclusions they came to in the federal task force report.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the Order of the Day is called for resuming debate on government Motion No. 1, and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C–4, an act to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act and to amend the Access to Information Act in consequence thereof, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few moments just to review Bill C–4. Just over ten years ago, the Energy Supplies Emergency Act was put into place to ensure that Canada has an appropriate contingency plan in place to deal with any possible disruption in the international oil market.

As a result of the oil market crisis in 1973 and 1974, Canada became a party to the agreement of an international energy program which is administered by the International Energy Agency, the IEA. Through the IEA, 21 nation members are joined in planning for their collective energy and economic security.

The Energy Supplies Emergency Act established the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, ESAB, and made it responsible for Canada's fulfilment of the act's objectives and programs.

The act underwent a series of amendments in 1982 to improve the allocation and rationing programs. Again the government is advancing another series of housekeeping amendments in Bill C–4 to overcome operational problems which the industry and the board together have identified.

I will very briefly review the clauses of this bill. Clause 1 amends the definition of the wholesale consumer to include owners of homes, farms and small businesses and thus ensure their fair share of available supplies in case of allocation or rationing.

Clause 2 amends the composition of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, removing Petro–Canada's membership from the board. Since its appointment to the board over a decade ago, Petro–Canada has evolved from being an instrument of public policy to becoming a major competitor in the market–place. It is now an inappropriate time to have Petro–Canada represented on the board, given the confidentiality of information supplied to the board and the control which the board would exercise on the marketing side of the petroleum industry, in the event of a declared emergency. This amendment is designed to remove Petro–Canada's conflict of interest.

In line with the Clause 2, amendment Clause 3 replaces Petro–Canada on the international agency's standing group on emergency questions with a senior official from ESAB or Energy, Mines and Resources.

Clause 4 removes an ambiguity in relation to ESAB's powers to regulate wholesale prices in an allocation program. It authorizes the board to set the manner for determining wholesale prices for controlled products. This is in addition to the existing authority to set prices or a range of prices and would allow ESAB to be sensitive to market forces.

Clause 5(1) would provide flexibility to ESAB to use any department or agency of the Government of Canada including Canada Post Corporation to distribute, return and account for rationing documents.

Clause 5(2) extends the powers of ESAB to regulate rather than prescribe retail prices under the rationing programs.

Clause 5(3) would allow financial institutions under provincial authority, for example, credit unions and caisse populaires, to participate in the delivery of the rationing program along with banks and trust companies.

Clause 6 relates to the contractual supply obligations at the time of allocation and rationing. This amendment would make clear that contracts would remain in force despite price changes arising from the board's regulation in times of emergency.

• (1510)

Clause 7 concerns petroleum companies and their role in ESAB. During a national emergency, it is essential that companies be able to discuss their supply situation at meetings of the petroleum industry advisory committee. This is made possible by exemption from the Competition Act. The amendment simply extends the protection under the Competition Act from 12 months to 24 months in order to save time and effort, as the process of obtaining the exemption involves a number of months each time.

Clause 8 would place a duty of confidentiality on ESAB, its officers, its independent contractors, agents and employees assigned to it. It further provides that confidential information may not be released for legal proceedings except for administration and enforcement of this act and for criminal proceedings under an act of Parliament.

As a consequence of adopting the aforementioned amendment of confidentiality of information, Clause 9 amends the schedule to the Access to Information Act by adding the Energy Supplies Emergency Act.

The need for Canada to maintain its state of preparedness against a possible petroleum emergency continues to be an important component of Canadian energy policy. The bill before the House today is simply a further step in the process of strengthening the provisions of the Energy Supplies Emergency Act so that they may be more effectively implemented in the future.

I would like to thank the members of the committee on all sides for the work that they have done.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, today we debate a bill which has been given very little attention by the press and will likely leave this House with little fanfare.

This legislation does not take power from the National Energy Board. It does not make possible controversial energy megaprojects in the west and in Atlantic Canada but it does have the potential to be more important than all of those. That is because this bill deals with what Canada has planned in case of an international energy emergency, what we do when a major political incident threatens international trade in oil and forces energy consumers to drastically alter their consumption habits.

As the minister himself has said during second reading of Bill C–4, and I will quote:

> We want Canadians to be assured that the best plans are in place in case emergencies have to be met.

However, I have to question the government's sincerity on that point. If the government was really intent on preparing for an emergency, why did it wait for two full years to introduce this bill? In fact, an official from the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has said that the government did not consider the bill a priority.

The Government of Canada must prepare for emergencies, and it is shameful that this government has been so slow to take the necessary steps in preparing for doing so. This carefree attitude is characteristic of this government when it comes to energy issues. It seems to be content to sit back comfortably as the world turns and let the free market take care of things.

But not so with the Liberal party, which had the foresight to introduce the original bill that dealt with the international energy emergency. The Liberals introduced that back in 1974. This present government, on the other hand, prefers to cut programs like conservation and alternative energy, which would help Canada prepare for the future and would do a great deal to protect our fragile environment. But we will get to all that a little later.

First on the matter of Bill C–4, I think there are some very important issues raised by this bill, issues which are of great concern to me. One of them is the privatization of Petro–Canada and Canada Post. Another issue of great concern is the effect of the free trade deal on Canada's energy future. A third is the fair treatment in times of emergency of various groups in Canada including farmers and small business.

At this point, I am certainly glad to see in Clause 1 of the bill that owners of homes, farms, and small businesses will be included in the definition of a consumer so that they will get their fair share of available energy supplies in times of emergency. However, I have to say that on the first two points, I have some serious concerns about this bill.

On the issue of privatization, this bill would remove Petro–Canada from the Energy Supplies Allocation Board in the International Energy Agency standing group on emergency questions. While the government claims that a conflict of interest exists because Petro–Canada is now more a commercial enterprise than a government representative, I am concerned that the government's action may be another step on the role to privatizing Petro-Canada.

The reason we are so concerned about this happening is that once shares are privately owned, the policies of that company will serve the interests of the shareholders and not necessarily the interests of Government of Canada or the interests of Canadians. If it ever happened that Petro-Canada was privatized, concerns with profit could come before concerns with the environment, with energy self-sufficiency and with security of supply. This would remove options the government and all Canadians now have regarding their energy future.

I also have concerns about whether there will be a full and frank debate on the merits of privatization or whether the government will go blindly ahead as it did on other issues. The VIA Rail issue comes to mind as one example of this. In this instance, the government refused to listen to Canadians and even to Parliament. Instead, it chose to follow a policy that suited its own political interests. So will a Petro-Canada debate be another example of this arrogance? I certainly hope not.

The other concern I have with regard to privatization is the sale of Canada Post. In my province of Prince Edward Island and in other areas of rural Canada, post offices have been shut down because of this government's policy. In Clause 5 of this bill, the government continues that process by removing Canada Post from the plan and allowing other government agencies to perform functions that would have been performed by the post office.

By removing the reference to Canada Post, the government is signalling a third change of plans for the post office. By nudging Canada Post even further along the path of privatization, this government is putting more rural post offices at risk. In so doing, it is putting a way of life in rural communities at risk as well.

Another important issue raised by this bill is the free trade agreement. As we know, this deal makes it possible for the United States to continue to receive energy from Canada while Canadians are being forced to cut back. Under Article 904 of the agreement, if Canada wants to cut back its energy exports to the United States, it must first cut back supplies to Canadians.

The amount we keep from the Americans is just a drop in the bucket by their standards, but the amount that we deprive our fellow Canadians of may be much more serious. In a country like Canada with a cold climate, energy reductions could have major effects. If Canada proceeds with energy conservation and energy efficiency in an effort to protect the environment, the room for cutting back will be even smaller. That is another reason to safeguard our energy supply.

• (1520)

We think that the trade deal fails to do this. Instead, what it does is it puts at risk Canada's future energy security. As we see it, Canada's energy bounty should benefit Canadians first and Americans second. We are not convinced that the free trade agreement follows that philosophy.

The Minister of Energy has said that Canada's obligations under the international energy agreement are more demanding than those under the free trade agreement, and therefore we should not be worried about the FTA, but rather the IEA. But as the minister knows, the free trade agreement governs trade in normal as well as emergency situations. So that argument really does not convey the whole picture.

Under the international energy agreement, Canada is obliged to share up to 7 per cent of its oil with other countries at the time of international disruption. The free trade agreement does nothing to limit our obligations. In fact, it increases them by extending our obligations to non-emergency situations as well.

I would like to comment briefly on the context into which Bill C-4 fits, and what this government should be doing in this regard in the future.

As we all know, major disruptions in the oil supply do not occur every day. The last two, in 1972-73, and in 1978-79, were due to international conflicts concerning oil-producing countries. But the world today is not the same as it was 20, 10 or even one year ago. Major political, economic and social changes have taken place which bode well for the future.

The dismantling of the Berlin wall, for example, is just one event, but it symbolizes the whole easing of tensions between east and west. Canadians can be encouraged by such events. In fact, a recent poll by the Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security found that Canadians today consider environmental and economic threats to be more serious than military threats. When asked what will be the pressing concerns in the year 2000, Canadians ranked the environment even higher.

I think the lesson that we learn here is that the government should be stressing the environment in its policies. Oil spills, not oil shocks, are threatening to become the real energy emergency issue in the future.

This government has been slow to respond to environmental issues which threaten not only our energy future, but our very survival as well. For example, the government has cut back spending on conservation and alternative energy from $410 million in 1984–85, to $49 million in 1989–90. In my province of Prince Edward Island, the federal energy conservation office has been closed. The same is true all across this country.

These programs help provinces like mine diversify their energy mix and become less dependent on oil. In Prince Edward Island, we are trying to do this by using biomass fuel. In doing so, we are not only helping the environment and getting ourselves off oil, we are also creating jobs.

The federal government would do well to assist provinces like Prince Edward Island generate industries which not only reduce our dependency on oil, but on federal transfer payments as well.

I would urge this government to prepare for the real energy emergency in the future, and of right now, the environment. It should be listening to Canadians on environmental issues, working within the IEA to push for global action on the environment. Opponents of measures such as carbon tax have argued there is no point in putting a carbon tax on fuel sold to Canadians while fuels sold in the United States and elsewhere are not similarly taxed. This would only hurt Canadians, they argue.

I suggest by working within the IEA and within other organizations, the government could push for measures by all countries so that both Canadians and the environment come out on top. Mr. Speaker, that generally covers my concerns about the issues raised in and by Bill C–4.

I just want to conclude by saying that while I am pleased that the government is taking steps to prepare for emergencies, I have some serious concerns about how it is doing so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C–23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING—MOTIONS IN AMENDMENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are 16 motions in amendment standing in the name of the hon. member for Malpeque set down in the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C–23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof.

[Translation]

All of these motions are in order and deal with three different areas or subject matters.

[English]

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 9 deal with international power lines and are in order. They will be grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 1 will apply to Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10 which deal with interprovincial power lines are in order and will be grouped for debate.

A vote on motion No. 6 will apply to motions Nos. 7, 8 and 10.

[English]

Motions Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 deal with the exportation of electricity. They are in order and will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 11 will apply to Motions Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16.

[Translation]

I will now propose the first grouping, namely motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9, to the House.

[English]

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 20 to 28 at page 10 and substituting the following therefor:

"58.11(1) Except in the case of an international power line in respect of which an election is made under section 58.23 and which the Board considers to be an international power line that is to be constructed and operated under a certificate issued under section 58.16, the Board shall, on application to it, without holding a public hearing, and following an assessment by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, issue a permit authorizing the construction and operation of an international power line."

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 7 and 8 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"mine whether the international power line should be designated as an international power line that is to be constructed and operated under a certificate issued under section 58.16."

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 9 to 32 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"58.14(1) Where it appears to the Board that it is necessary to complement any measure taken in respect of an international power line by the governments of the provinces through which the line is to pass or to take any measure that should have been taken in respect of an international power line by such governments, the Board may designate the power line as an international power line that is to be constructed and operated under a certificate issued under section 58.16.

(2) In designating an international power line as an international power line that is to be constructed and operated under a certificate issued under section 58.16., the Board shall have regard to all considerations that appear to it to be relevant, including

(a) the effect of the power line on the provinces other than those through which the line is to pass; and

(b) the impact of the construction or operation of the power line on the environment."

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 34 to 41 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"make an order revoking any permit issued in respect of an international power line."

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 10 to 20 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"ernor in Council and pursuant to an assessment by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, issue a certificate in respect of

(a) an international power line in relation to which an order has or has not been made,

(b) an international power line in relation to which an election is filed under section 58.23, or

(c) an international power line in relation to which a designation is made under section 58.4,".

Motion No. 9.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 37 to 42 at page 20.

• (1530)

She said: Mr. Speaker, it is important to note that we are debating Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act. This year is the thirtieth anniversary of that board, an organization that has served Canada extremely well and one which has developed a reputation as a defender of the national interest in energy matters, no matter which way the political winds happen to be blowing.

The board's solid reputation and the importance to Canada of not hurting that reputation means that any amendments to the board's legislation must be made with great care. The government has not done this with Bill C-23. Witness after witness at the standing committee poked holes in the government's arguments concerning C-23 and from that committee I come with the amendments that I am proposing today.

I would like to explain and defend the motions before you, Mr. Speaker, regarding Bill C-23. Motion No. 1 deals with international power lines. This group of amendments would accomplish several things. First, it would eliminate the potential for most kinds of political interference by the cabinet in the regulation of electricity and also in matters that rightly belong under the jurisdiction of the non-partisan National Energy Board.

As you know, right now, when the board receives an application for a power line application, it automatically holds a public hearing. But that will no longer be the case. Under Bill C-23 the board will have to ask the federal cabinet for permission to hold that hearing. Mr. Speaker, we disagree with that kind of interference which the government could use to further its own political agenda at the expense of the national interest. This motion would eliminate that by giving the board the power to call a hearing.

Also, with this amendment the National Energy Board would do a better job of protecting the environment from the effects of electrical production and export. It would do this by assigning to FEARO, the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, the task of helping to assess an application to the National Energy Board for environmental effects. It would do so in the context of providing a second opinion for the NEB to consider.

As it stands now, the environmental team at the board look at the applications for environmental effects. We feel that the House of Commons should be able to call on the Minister of the Environment to account for what the government is doing to safeguard the environment, and this amendment will allow the House of Commons to do that.

Bill C-23, as it is presently worded, allows the Governor in Council certain unwarranted powers. These powers include deciding whether there will be a hearing on electricity export or power line projects, setting the criteria for whether the National Energy Board recommends a hearing and deciding what the NEB will examine at the hearing.

At the Standing Committee hearings we heard mainly negative comments on these sections which give a good measure of power to a political body, the federal cabinet. From Nova Scotia Power we heard:

> These provisions interject too much uncertainty into the process and could serve to discourage exports.

New Brunswick Power said that through Bill C-23 the government is:

> —transferring a jurisdiction away from an independent and impartial National Energy Board, according to well-defined legal rules, and giving it to the cabinet to be exercised according to no rules whatsoever.

We agree with what New Brunswick Power has said because we feel that the decision as to whether that public inquiry should be held should be the decision of the National Energy Board and not the cabinet.

I would, in fact, suggest that the government take the wise advice of the Quebec Cree who said: "Bill C-23 must be completely rewritten". The Cree of Quebec are very concerned about the prospect for public hearings if Bill C-23 passes, and they are concerned with good reason.

At this point I would like to refer to a statement by one of the government members of our committee who expressed his confidence in the bill. He said:

> If I thought that (the) opportunity (for hearings) was not there, for anyone in Canada, I would be the first one to demand changes.

I shall attempt to prove to you today, Mr. Speaker, that that opportunity will likely not be there. I hope that afterwards the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Energy will honour his word and support this motion.

I would like to begin by taking a moment to compare the National Energy Board to the Federal Court of Canada. The Federal Court has greater powers than the National Energy Board and its rulings are binding. The court's advice to the cabinet is open to the public as the National Energy Board's advice to the government would be in the case of an export of electricity or power line application. The public, including groups like the Quebec Cree, has a chance to go before the court and make its case.

In a recent case the Cree went before the court to demand hearings on the James Bay hydro project. Despite a court precedent against them regarding a Saskatchewan dam project, despite the fact that everything was made public, the government still refused, until this fall, to allow a public hearing on James Bay. Even the way the government arranged the hearing was objectionable, for it violated both the spirit and the word of the 1975 James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement.

This agreement requires that the Cree be involved in any discussions on the James Bay project including those leading to an environmental review. Talks were held between Ottawa and Quebec but they excluded the Cree. After months of foot dragging and after being dragged through the courts, the federal government probably feared it would face the embarrassment of being ordered by the court to call a hearing so at the last minute it agreed to a joint public hearing with the province of Quebec.

If this bill passes as it is, it is going to be very difficult every time for the National Energy Board to convince the cabinet to allow a public hearing. We can only look at other examples in the government's record. As stated earlier, in the case of the Saskatchewan dam project the Minister of the Environment was shown to have failed to implement his own guidelines. If we take the decision to shut down or cut back on VIA Rail we find that no public hearings on environmental effects on the decisions were held, let alone hearings on economic or social effects.

• (1540)

The government just decided to shut down or cut back parts of VIA Rail. It made that decision without any public discussion, with no concern whatsoever as to how this decision would affect the people of Canada. If we look at the record of the government we can easily see why the Cree would be concerned about public hearings.

I know that my time is about up. I have further arguments to make on other amendments which I will put forward later. I want to conclude my remarks on the first motion by saying that Bill C–23 gives too much power to the cabinet. We are proposing this amendment so that the National Energy Board, not the cabinet, will decide if a public enquiry is necessary.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House today to speak on the first group of amendments to Bill C–23, an Act to amend the National Energy Board Act. My colleague from Malpeque would know that my hon. friend from Edmonton East, who is our energy critic, has done a considerable amount of work on this legislation. I know he brings considerable expertise to this House and to this party, being the first New Democrat elected to this House from the great Province of Alberta.

In committee a great deal of work was done in studying this legislation and many of the concerns were raised by my colleague, and we rise here today to support the amendments that are being brought forward by the hon. member from Malpeque. In fact, if I am not mistaken, most of these amendments were presented in the committee in its legislative review of the bill. Unfortunately, the government refused to accept them and we are here today in one final effort to try to improve this legislation. We hope that with our convincing arguments we will be able to have the government support our view with regard to the changes that are required to this legislation.

Let us take a look at the general problem we have with Bill C–23. In our view it undermines the National Energy Board, politicizes the decisions, makes the exports of a strategic resource easier, public hearings will become more rare, and environmental concerns, already given short shrift by this government, will receive even less attention in the future.

One of the principal concerns we have with this bill is that the final decision on whether or not a public hearing is held on the construction of a power line or the export of electricity is made by the cabinet and not the National Energy Board. With the passage of Bill C–23, these decisions would be much more likely to be made on narrow political grounds. We know the reasons we have argued in this House for independent bodies. We argue for those to make sure that, as much as possible, the decisions that are made are made in the best interests of that particular sphere and in this country, not just for cheap political gains as has all too often become the case with the government opposite.

During second reading, my colleague from Edmonton East pointed out how this could easily result in the national interest being poorly protected and in the interest of a small province being unfairly trampled by a cabinet trying to please a large province, something we all know about from the federal election.

We pointed out that the authority of the National Energy Board itself could be seriously undermined if cabinet decided to override a recommendation by the NEB merely for political reasons. We also pointed out that under the changes in this bill the National Energy Board will routinely approve applications for power lines and electricity exports. As a result, in the vast majority of cases public hearings will not be held.

Well, what have we proposed? We proposed a system of licensing power lines and electricity exports that had at its core the notion of prudence. The hon. member from Edmonton East is a man of great prudence and he considered this strongly when he was making these suggestions in committee.

For example, we are hearing now that the Government of Ontario is speaking of future electricity shortages although some people are in fact suggesting that this is mere manipulation by the Liberal government in Ontario, in effect, to implement what would appear to be a shoddy electrical generation procedure and policy already in place and, of course, to whip up support for future nuclear projects.

We heard evidence from the province of Quebec before the energy committee the other day that hydro reservoirs are much lower than normal. We are hearing from climatologists that global warming will likely change weather patterns and that this could affect rainfall and the viability of certain hydroelectric facilities. We are hearing further from Canadians all across this country, on television and in the newspapers, that Canadians are deeply concerned about the environment and they want public officials, government, to take real action and not just spout rhetoric.

I have no doubt that south of the border demand for electricity will increase in the future, partly because the pollution it causes is emitted mainly where electricity is produced rather than where it is used. I think that is an important point to remember. Our approach in dealing with this increasingly strategic Canadian resource is to be prudent. I come from the province of British Columbia where electricity is considered a resource by the provincial government and one that we must take pains to ensure that we develop properly in environmentally sound ways. The key is to be prudent.

We believe that the Governor in Council, the cabinet, should act not as an accelerator for the National Energy Board but as a brake of last resort. That is why my colleague proposed in committee that if the NEB refused a proposal to build a power line or to export electricity that that would be the end of it, the cabinet could not overrule a refusal by the NEB. On the other hand, if the NEB accepted such a proposal the cabinet could still review and overturn the NEB decision. This would have the effect of protecting the national interest by having a double check on electricity projects and exports.

Let us take a look at some of the proposals presented by the Liberals. The amendments proposed in this package do not go that far, but they do proceed in the right direction. These amendments would have the effect of helping to protect the independence of the NEB and we support that. Protecting the NEB's independence may not be the main aim of the amendments but that is the effect that they would have.

We believe that the National Energy Board should be able to make the decision on its own, without interference from the cabinet, about which power projects should receive close environmental scrutiny, and in the case of these amendments, by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office. We learned just last week that, in fact, legislation on a legislative environmental assessment review process has yet to even make its way to cabinet ministers or into the cabinet. That gives rise to concern among many people about, again, the ongoing rhetoric from the government and no real action being taken.

We also believe that the environmental consequences of public policy must be considered much more fully than is currently the case. This is especially true for energy policy. More and more Canadians recognize the environmental consequences of energy consumption; flooding valleys when hydro dams are built, trying to manage nuclear waste, adding to the greenhouse effect—you name it. Canadians are more and more concerned about the environmental consequences of energy generation.

When it comes to power lines, there is great concern on Vancouver Island over this matter. Scientists from either side are lining up to present their arguments as to the impact and effect on not only the health of all of us but the health, in many cases, of farm animals.

There is an argument to be made that the role of the NEB and other regulatory bodies should include environmental reviews as part of their mandate. This bill goes some way toward that but we need a great deal more impact when it comes to the legislative environmental process that has been promised by this government.

We are looking forward to the debate on this bill. I know my colleague from Edmonton East has done a considerable amount of work on this. We will be supporting the amendments as proposed by the hon. member from Malpeque and I hope the government will listen today so that we can ensure that we get better legislation out of this proposal.

• (1550)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the fine intervention by my colleague from Malpeque and the arguments that she made in connection with the importance of public hearings. Before I do that, however, I would like to point out that this bill is another measure down the slippery road that we have undertaken by way of the free trade agreement.

I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, particularly to Division III and section 119.5 which commits ourselves and forces the National Energy Board to commit itself to the overall energy agreement with the United States which we opposed in the last election and which we continue to consider to be detrimental to our national interest.

For that reason alone, we must rise in this House and oppose it because we do not think that the long-term interest of Canada is served by taking us down this slippery road in connection with our long-term energy interest because of the commitment that was made, unfortunately, under the free trade agreement which in the last election, of course, we opposed.

Bill C-23 is another example of a bill prepared without sustainable development and the long term in mind. Despite the proclamations, commitments and statements that the Prime Minister of Canada makes abroad, despite the commitments that the Environment Minister makes in his speeches at the UN and when he appears before the Environment Committee, here we have a bill that restricts even further the powers of an institution that has served Canada well, namely the National Energy Board, and says that we will let cabinets of the future make certain decisions, but you as a board should have less and less power.

What does that mean? We all know that cabinets have, by virtue of their political nature, so to speak, short-term sights. They can think at best, under the best of circumstances, of the next election. To think beyond that requires a supernatural effort, let alone thinking of the next generation and generations after. By that I mean the long term, 50, 60, 100 years from now. That is why the National Energy Board was formed and that is why a stronger National Energy Board is necessary and not a weaker one.

Here we have, in the name, allegedly, of sustainable development as interpreted by the Progressive Conservative government, a bill coming into the House which weakens instead of strengthening the National Energy Board. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, does that make sense to you? That is one reason alone to oppose it in addition to the other one I gave you a moment earlier, namely, Division III, the section related to the free trade agreement.

The importance of holding public hearings, and not at the whim of cabinet, has been eloquently described and underlined by the member for Malpeque. Of course we all agree with her. We know that that should not be a political decision of the day. It should be an established practice because we know the importance of seeking public consultation.

I cannot for the life of me understand, considering the commitments that the Progressive Conservative Party made in the election of 1984, proclaiming its great belief in consultation with the people, that the government would come into the House with this bill today and practise exactly the opposite, as it does in Bill C-23. It is inconceivable, it runs counter to all the commitments made in public at election time by the Progressive Conservative Party.

If anything, the National Energy Board should retain that function. It should not be made a decision of cabinet because we know what the political pitfalls are of that process. If anything, the powers of the National Energy Board to hold public hearings should be strengthened.

But what is worrisome about the long-term implications of this bill is the mindset in the political philosophy behind it because it reinforces the destiny of Canada as a provider of energy for export purposes. It reinforces the notion that Canada's future is to be more and more a hewer of wood and a drawer of water with this increased dependence of our well being on the export of our natural resources instead of using our natural resources as a tool to attract investment to Canada and to create jobs at home rather than creating jobs abroad.

That notion has not penetrated the foggy collective minds of this cabinet. Probably they do not have one, or if they do it is so thick that they have not yet understood that energy means jobs and that if you insist on exporting energy and expanding those energies, you export jobs. Is that not elementary? We are facing a profound malaise in the thoughts of this government as to what constitutes the long-term interest of Canadians when it comes to energy.

The fourth disturbing aspect in Bill C-23 is the total absence of any reference to the importance of renewable sources of energy as a mandate that the National Energy Board should not only make its own but also strengthen and expand. Obviously, one day we are going to run out of our non-renewable sources of energy. At least when it comes to oil, the horizons are already visible. With natural gas, perhaps they are beyond the horizon, we do not know. The same may be said of coal. But in the very long term we cannot hope and expect that these resources will remain forever available. They will run out.

Therefore, when you discuss a bill that relates to the National Energy Board, it is necessary to introduce as a responsibility the concept and the importance of giving renewable sources of energy the place that they deserve.

It is astonishing to learn from the minutes of the proceedings in committee that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources would say that the board may be perceived to be in an apparent conflict of interest situation and that "the board would literally be deciding how much more work it makes for itself", when it comes to the question of public hearings. I can hardly believe that a minister of the Crown would interpret the role of one of the major agencies under his or her jurisdiction in that manner, as an agency whose main task would be one of deciding how much more work it can create.

Obviously, if that is the opinion that the Minister of Energy has of the government's own National Energy Board, then a change is necessary at the top, namely a change with the minister himself.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-23 would seek to amend the National Energy Board Act if you take the bill literally at face value from its cover. That it is what it proclaims on the cover sheet.

If you read the bill in the form we have it to date, without the amendments that are being proposed, you will find that a more apt characterization of what Bill C-23 does is to gut the National Energy Board Act. So that is why I rise in support of the first group of amendments put forward by my colleague for Malpeque.

• (1600)

If you were to listen to the rhetoric of this government, one of the themes that comes through again and again, whether you are talking about VIA Rail, Canada Post, or so many other Crown agencies, is that this government because of its basic purity of ideology maintains an arm's length relationship. That has been the message again and again. This government has repeatedly sent out the signal that its philosophy or way of operating is to give agencies statutory authority and let them operate within that authority to make decisions within their mandated area.

What is happening here in so far as the National Energy Board is concerned is that we have an agency with adequate statutory authority and broad powers that has ensured over the years that Canadians, both individually and in groups, can automatically through the vehicle of public hearing have their say whenever there is a contemplation to export electricity out of this country. Under statute there is a provision that there be a public hearing by the NEB.

Mr. Speaker, does it not make you back up and wonder what is behind the effort here to restrict the National Energy Board's ability to proceed with a public inquiry? As I pointed out, it flies in the face of the way in which this government has been operating on Canada Post and VIA Rail, just to use two examples.

In this case the government is going against the strain. It is going in the opposite direction. It is not arm's length—it is fingertip. The government wants to keep the question of electricity exports right at its fingertips. What does it provide in its unamended legislation? It provides that the cabinet will decide as to whether or not there will be a public inquiry.

I direct you to an example, Mr. Speaker. We all know how American Express got into this country in the way it did. We all know it was not as a result of any public inquiry. We all know that it was as a result of an order in council, a cabinet decision, made either on election day or hours before election day.

I submit to you, Sir, that the timing of that decision was no accident, that American Express' entry into Canada, and the fact that the decision was made on election day or thereabouts, was a direct trade-off between American Express' support for the government's position on free trade and American Express' objective of getting involved in the Canadian financial community.

By example that is my concern with this piece of legislation and that particular provision in it. It is that once again government gives to itself the vehicle, the wherewithal to do a political trade-off. It is not the NEB that will decide whether an inquiry is needed. Under this legislation the NEB will have to go to cabinet and ask it to make the decision.

Compare that procedure with what happens with the competition bureau, which is provided for in legislation introduced, sponsored by and passed by the current government. At the competition bureau the director of competition, up until recently Mr. Cal Goldman, makes the decision. He makes the determination as to whether or not there will be an inquiry—in the words of the act, a tribunal. It is left in that case to the judgment of a senior bureaucrat. I have difficulty with that because the discretion is left in the hands of one person. I raise it here in terms of an example to draw a contrast for you, Sir.

In the one case government has deemed that something as important as the merger of Canadian Airlines and Wardair, or the merger of Imperial and Texaco, to use a recent example and a very current one in the case of Imperial and Texaco, is to be left to the decision of one man, a bureaucrat. But on the question of exporting electricity, energy from this country is taken out of the hands of the National Energy Board which has administered it very competently over the years, and it is now put into political hands. I submit that it is being done for a very direct reason.

I come back to what my colleague from Davenport was saying when he spoke a few moments ago. He was asking whether this government has a mind or whether it has a collective mind. I would say to him: "Yes, this government has a mind all right."

Mr. Hockin: You guys are split all over the place.

Mr. Simmons: I am looking forward to the participation of the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism in this debate. It sounds like he has something on his mind on this issue. We have been here waiting. There have been three or four Liberal members in a row, together with my colleague from the NDP, four or five speakers all together from this side of the House. As you know, Mr. Speaker, normally with your renowned reputation for fairness you would have one from each side of the House stand. Here we have had five from the same side of the House. The reason is that the Minister wants to interrupt what I have to say. I do not mind. I rather enjoy his interjections, they are so few and far between, and so easy to understand at the same time. If he wants to speak I will yield the floor now because I am sure he has some concerns as well about the issue that I have raised here.

I was about to say before the minister made his speech that my friend from Davenport wondered whether this crowd has a mind. I say to him: "Yes, they have a mind, and they have a mindset, too." The mindset has to do with subservience to the American agenda at all times. I gave the example of American Express, and now I give the example of changes in the National Energy Board Act. What is at the bottom of this change that I have been talking about is that the government is looking for a guarantee. The government wants to have it all completely within its power, no ifs, ands or buts. It does not leave it up to bureaucrats, or to the National Energy Board, or to any agency in this case. The government sitting around that table wants to be able to deliver the political plums. It wants to ensure that no independent bureaucrat, no arm's length board gets in the way of exporting electricity to its American friends.

There is something drastically wrong with the mindset of this government when it is so preoccupied at all times with dancing to the American tune, serving the American agenda at all times, instead of asking once in a while: "How can we better serve the people of Canada?"

I intend to support the amendment put down so ably by my colleague from Malpeque because, if carried, it will help to ensure that there will not be undue political interference in the question of decisions about electricity exports from here to the United States.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Brant—National Defence; the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing—Health; and the hon. member for Burnaby—Human Rights.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-23, an Act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and the motion of Ms. Callbeck.

• (1610)

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to the amendment put forward by my colleague from Malpeque. The issue is the fact that the legislation as it now stands leaves a tremendous amount of not only power in the hands of cabinet itself but, as my colleague so ably pointed out a few minutes ago, power in the hands of one or two individuals who will be advising cabinet on these issues.

My colleague from Malpeque spoke very eloquently about the impact that this bill would have on the environment. I want to expand on that very briefly and speak about the environment in which we live in close proximity in many cases to high voltage transmission lines. I have a proposed line across the constituency of Lambton—Middlesex. I say "proposed" line because we already have two lines at the present time. They are 230,000 volt lines. One of them will be raised to 550,000 volts.

Until recently, until some of the citizens started to complain, they were going to take these right through the heart of three small villages and in close proximity to a fourth. Yet I do not see any guidelines in this legislation whereby cabinet would be directed to keep away from the built-up areas. There are enough questions at the present time to indicate that these transmission lines do impact on human health. In fact, if you are wearing a pacemaker you do not dare go anywhere close to a high voltage transmission line or else your pacemaker will act up and you could have very serious health problems resulting immediately.

I think we have to stop and examine the type of power we are leaving in the hands of the cabinet when there are no guidelines established at the present time regarding how close these lines can be to built-up areas. There are some areas in the United States where they make them stay back approximately 1,700 feet from a built-up area. In Russia it is 2,300 feet.

Yet when we talk about this here in Canada they say there is no proof that these lines do have an impact on human health. There is no proof that they do not have an impact on it either.

I think it is foolhardy for us to go through with a piece of legislation that does not recognize that there is an area here that must be studied further as to the impact on what it does to an individual. It is well documented as to what it will do to a dairy herd that is pasturing under one of these high voltage transmission lines, or a milking herd that is living in a yard or a barn close by. There are problems with conception in those herds. There are problems with the milking in that the quantity of milk produced drops dramatically.

In my constituency I have an individual who has a dog kennel close by one of these lines. He could not understand why the dogs killed their pups at birth if they did conceive. A lot of the dogs would not conceive until they took them a few kilometres away to another location. If there are impacts on the health of animals living in close proximity, then what is it going to do to humans who live close by?

There is a lot of suspicion at the present time that this may cause cancer, particularly to young people. I also have to point out that a young person in close proximity to one of these 230,000 volt transmission lines is already being treated for that dreaded disease at the present time.

We do not know enough about the electromagnetic fields that are created by these transmission lines. I suggest that it is not acceptable to Canadians to place the health of our citizens at risk in order to export energy to another country. It is fundamentally wrong to give such powers to cabinet to circumvent hearings whereby people are allowed to speak. It is morally wrong to allow any utility to create an environment that is dangerous to public health for the sake of exporting power to another country and placing the health of our citizens at risk.

I suggest that to allow cabinet to bypass public hearings would deprive Canadians of the chance to voice their concerns they may have about the serious health consequences I spoke about. Before any decision like this is left to cabinet there have to be guidelines drafted based on information now available. If it is not available in Canada, then let us look at the records and the measures being used in other countries. We need guidelines that place the health of the citizens of this nation first and foremost.

I suggest that these guidelines should not be drafted by the utility companies but by known experts in the field who have watched the development of these transmission lines, not only in this nation but in the nation to the south of us, and Russia. This must be done recognizing that in many cases the utility companies are more interested in the export of power and the profits generated thereby than in the health of those who are living close by.

I would ask this House to support the amendment put forward by the member from Malpeque. I do so because of the unknowns that are facing us here and the tremendous amount of power that is to be left in the hands of cabinet to bypass these public hearings that give our citizens a chance to voice their concerns.

I recently attended a meeting in my constituency where one of these high voltage transmission lines was being discussed. There was a tremendous depth of fear there that was based on the best information available. The utility company downplayed it and tried to assure the people in attendance that there really was no problem. If there was a problem, it would tell them about it. The people did not accept that, and I do not accept it either. If that is the kind of information that is going to be available to the cabinet when it makes a decision to bypass the public hearings, then we as Canadian citizens deserve better. It is for that reason that I wholeheartedly support the amendment of my colleague from Malpeque.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the first grouping?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A vote on Motion No. 1 will apply to Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 9.

The question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the appropriate Standing Order, the recorded division shall stand deferred.

Motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 10 which deal with interprovincial power lines are in order, as I said earlier, and will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 6 will apply to Motions Nos. 7, 8 and 10.

• (1620)

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 22 and 23 at page 14 and substituting the following therefor:

"respect of which a designation is made under section 58.4."

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 10 and 11 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"provincial power line in respect of which a designation is made under section 58.4."

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 14 and 15 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"respect of which a designation is made under section 58.4 as they apply in".

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 23 by striking out lines 1 to 14 at page 21 and substituting the following therefor:

"58.4(1) The Board may designate an interprovincial power line as an interprovincial power line that is to be constructed and operated under and in accordance with a certificate issued under section 58.16.

(2) No person shall construct or operate any section or part of an interprovincial power line in respect of which a designation is made under subsection (1)".

She said: Mr. Speaker, this motion contains amendments which follow the ones in the previous motion. They deal basically with the same issues—cabinet powers, public hearings and the reputation of the National Energy Board. They also deal with the subject of interprovincial power lines.

I urge this House to adopt the motion for the same reasons that I stated earlier. It would eliminate the potential for unhelpful and potentially very harmful political interference by the federal cabinet.

It would do this by leaving the decision as to whether a public hearing on an application to the National Energy Board would be held not up to the cabinet but up to the board. I think the reasons stated during debate on the previous motion are well understood and need only summarizing here.

The fact is that when trusted to decide in the national interest in similar situations in the past the federal cabinet decided rather in its own political interest. We saw this with the Rafferty Dam in Saskatchewan, with James Bay, with VIA, and I suspect that we will see it under Bill C-23, unless these amendments are adopted.

We heard from a lot of witnesses before the legislative committee on Bill C-23. Some of them indicated that they feel this bill will not accomplish the goal of deregulation, but may in fact do just the opposite. That is to say that it may cause more headaches for the electric utilities than it solves.

With such a conflict between what government claims to be the purpose of the bill and what industry says it will accomplish, the real reason behind Bill C-23 becomes clear. That reason is simply to give the cabinet the power to control Canada's electricity trade to a far greater extent than it does today, and certainly more than is in the national interest.

Some of the most interesting testimony that we heard on Bill C-23 came from the minister himself. At our committee the minister gave a somewhat incredible explanation as to why cabinet wants more power over the National Energy Board. The minister says that the board may be perceived to be in an apparent conflict-of-interest situation because: "The board would literally be deciding how much more work it makes for itself".

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-23 will mean that the board will have decide whether to recommend to cabinet that an application before it go to a public inquiry, or whether adequate regulation is already in place.

I would like to draw to the attention of the minister the National Energy Board's reasons for a decision regarding Trans Mountain Pipeline of July, 1988. The length of this pipeline was such that the board did not have to hold a hearing. In its report the NEB decided to hold a public hearing on the application, thereby making more work for itself.

The government does not seem to have any problems with the NEB's powers on its potential for a conflict of interest when it comes to pipelines. For what reason should the government be taking this power away from the board and giving it to the cabinet when it comes to electricity exports and international power lines? I suggest that it is a purely political one. Certainly, the witnesses whom we had before the legislative committee hinted at this.

The witnesses we have heard have pretty well all expressed nothing but the highest faith in the board and its procedures, which means that they believe not only in the people who make up this board who are there now but in the whole process. Take for example the minister's parliamentary secretary who said he had full faith in the National Energy Board, in the guidelines and in the people who work within the board.

He also said he was certain that if they feel any of the guidelines are not met, any public hearings or input required will be there. This seems to contradict what the minister has said about the board not wanting to make more work for itself. I certainly have to agree with the comments of the parliamentary secretary as I have just quoted him. It seems that practically every witness that we had before this committee agreed.

The Quebec Cree have not had that much faith in the NEB, but they have even less faith in the federal cabinet. Really who can blame them?

New Brunswick Power is more complimentary and well represents the evidence given before the committee. I want to quote what it had to say: "The point is that after 30 years of operation the National Energy Board has not acted in a rogue way. It has acted in a highly respectable way. Its decisions have been a credit to the Government of Canada".

It seems that the only person who doubts the National Energy Board's character is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has more faith, understandably, in his own cabinet whose opinions he knows and can count on. But not so the Cree who say: "We need an independent body which is concerned about the public, not a party that has gotten into power, not Progressive Conservatives, NDP or Liberals". I could not agree more.

Also in agreement with this last point is the advisory committee of the energy options report that this government set up in 1987. The committee states in its report:

> It is of paramount importance that the NEB be seen as a non-political institution if it is to ensure that its messages to Canadians are effective and credible.

We agree. Therefore we are concerned that a board that gets overruled on major decisions often enough by cabinet may in time lose some of its credibility.

Just last month the committee's former chairman, Tom Kierans, told our committee that the board ought to be free to inquire into something and the inquiry ought to be public. He said that the only instance in which the cabinet should intervene is at the end of the process, after the NEB makes its final decision. Again, this is exactly our position. That is why we are proposing this motion.

• (1630)

Let me add one last piece of testimony on this point. It comes from the legal counsel to the Maritime Electric of Charlottetown who stated: "The NEB ought to be given authority to designate exports rather than authority only to recommend designation."

The evidence on this point is clear and it points in the direction of giving the National Energy Board the power to regulate in Canada's national interest. I have more arguments to make regarding Bill C-23 and these deal with the important issues of free trade, electricity, the effects of energy development on the environment.

I will conclude my remarks on Motion No. 2. I certainly call on members of the House to act in the national interest by letting the National Energy Board act in the national interest and I would urge members to adopt the motion now before the House.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few brief comments on the second grouping of amendments to Bill C-23 which is before the House today. The member for Burin—St. George's commented about the concerns that we have on this side, and I trust and hope that members opposite also have, about the politicization of the National Energy Board. In fact, I think the government has made a mistake in the title of the bill. It should more accurately read, "an act to gut the National Energy Board and to unduly politicize the export of electricity from Canada" because for all intents and purposes that is exactly what Bill C-23 is doing in this legislation that we are debating

We are beginning to see the results of this government's record of making decisions within cabinet, behind the curtains, behind closed doors where the public does not have an opportunity to participate, to discuss, or to share in those decisions. The decision regarding VIA Rail has already been mentioned today, the complete about face by the government from its previous position when the Liberals were cutting VIA Rail. We now have the example of the Conservatives in office cutting VIA Rail with no public hearings or any other provisions. If the Canadian public asks for anything when government is making decisions on such critical issues as hydroelectric lines or the export of power, it is that those decisions are made with ample opportunity for public input. In many cases, all we ask for is a chance to make our comments then, fair enough, a decision has to be made at some point.

Bill C-23, which we are debating today, goes in completely the opposite direction of the kind of openness that all members of this House have been calling for, at least certainly those on this side of the chamber. I know that my colleague, the member for Edmonton East, raised these matters in committee in the legislative review of this bill. We are rising here today in support of the Liberal amendments because we think they will help move this legislation in the right direction. I certainly call on the government members also to support this very important amendment.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to speak to these motions, especially the motions proposed by my colleague for Malpeque.

Bill C-23 is really a wolf in sheep's clothing or vice versa. I am very worried about some of the things that are being proposed today. One of them is the politicizing of the decisions on our future energy needs and of the power lines. In effect, this bill states that the National Energy Board can now recommend a public hearing and the cabinet will decide whether they will agree or disagree with the National Energy Board.

A comment that I have heard is that of course the cabinet is always going to act in the highest regard because there is always public pressure. I hasten to point out to some members opposite that that is not always the case with this cabinet. sometimes, there are other times when political expediency certainly plays a very large role in their decisions. I will bring to light something that came up just recently, and that was a request by the Auditor General that the cabinet release documents concerning their travel expenditures. The cabinet decided not to release these documents because it was not necessary, or for whatever reason they had, but I do not believe this decision is in the public interest. It would be far more in the public interest to have the details released.

What happens if the National Energy Board decides that there should be a public hearing because the provinces concerned have not held the proper hearings and the cabinet decides not to? There is nothing preventing the cabinet from deciding against a public hearing.

Future energy needs and the whole reason for the National Energy Board would be undone. Because cabinet can overrule any decision, why even bother with a National Energy Board, if that is the case? I believe that the future energy needs of our country have to be safeguarded. They must be safeguarded. One must not play lightly with some of the best resources that we have here in our country, and that is our energy.

With these amendments the National Energy Board would have the power to ask for a hearing and I believe it should have this power. Therefore, I support the amendments of my colleague.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the second grouping?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will be voting on Motion No. 6 and that vote will apply to Motions Nos. 7, 8 and 10. The question is on Motion No. 6.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division shall stand deferred.

Motions Nos. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15 and 16 are in order and will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 11 will apply to the other motions.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque) moved:

Motion No. 11.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 5 to 8 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"119.03(1) Except where the Board considers that an exportation of electricity is an exportation that is subject to the issuance of a licence under section 119.08, the Board, following an assessment by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, shall, on application to it and".

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 26 and 27 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"mine whether the exportation of the electricity should be subject to the issuance of a licence under section 119.08."

Motion No. 13.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 34

(a) by striking out lines 28 to 41 at page 26 and substituting the following therefor:

"119.06(1) Where it appears to the Board that it is necessary to complement any measure taken in respect of an exportation of electricity by the governments of the provinces where the electricity is generated, or to take any measure that should have been taken by such governments, the Board may decide that the exportation of the electricity shall be subject to the issuance of a licence under section 119.08.

(2) In determining whether the exportation of the electricity should be subject to the issuance of a licence under section 119.08, the Board shall"; and

(b) by striking out lines 23 and 24 at page 27 and substituting the following therefor:

"(d) the effect of the exportation of electricity on the energy supply in Canada; and

(e) the effect of exportation of electricity in regard to Article 904 of the Agreement."

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 26 to 32 at page 27 and substituting the following therefor:

"may make orders revoking any permit issued in respect of the exportation of electricity."

Motion No. 15.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 3 to 6 at page 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"ernor in Council and following an assessment by the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office, issue a licence for the exportation of electricity."

Motion No. 16.

That Bill C-23 be amended in Clause 34 by striking out lines 35 to 42 at page 29.

She said: Mr. Speaker, these motions deal with many important issues raised by Bill C-23. They include free trade, the environment, and the whole question about how clear this legislation could be.

The last point is certainly important because Parliament has an obligation to make its laws as clear as possible so that misunderstandings do not arise.

• (1640)

First, the issue of free trade. The motion before the House would make Canada's electricity exports to the U.S. with regard to Article 904 of the free trade agreement an explicit concern of the National Energy Board. As the House knows, Canada exports a great deal of electricity to the United States, but with the free trade agreement Canada has to guarantee the Americans an opportunity to buy these exports in the future.

Generally speaking, if Canada is forced to cut back on exports for some reason, we have to guarantee the United States the chance to bid on the same proportion of exports we sent them during the previous three years. The other side of the arrangement is that we can only cut the supply to the Americans if we do the same to Canadians. Therefore, we along with other groups, feel that it is a good idea that the National Energy Board be given responsibility for making sure that Canada does not bite off more than it can chew. That is, we want to ensure that Canada can sustain its level of exports for some time so that Article 904 of the free trade agreement does not come crashing down on us.

The Council of Canadians has certainly supported this idea. It recommended to our standing committee the widening of the mandate of the NEB to take into account the new situation under the free trade agreement with the proportionality clause. The government may scoff at the advice of the Council of Canadians, which opposed the trade deal during the election last year, but the same argument was also made by the advisory committee to the Energy Options Report which this government set up in 1987. This report advocates a market based approach on most energy matters, but on one issue they are clearly in favour of involvement by the NEB, and that one issue is free trade.

The committees say in the Energy Options Report that with free trade it becomes even more important to keep a vigilant watch over export levels to ensure that they do not exceed long-term sustainable proportions. That is exactly what this motion will accomplish.

The government has said that there are issues and matters today which were not foreseeable when the NEB act was originally passed in 1959. Surely concern about the environment is one of those issues, and some duplication of provincial regulations may be a second. But there can be no doubt that a major new development is the free trade agreement which will be colouring Canada's energy policy for many years to come.

What happens when one province's exports of electricity significantly tilt the balance for all of Canada? All of Canada will have the responsibility of meeting our export requirements under Section 904 of the free trade agreement. With responsibility come certain rights. In this instance, all of Canada through the National Energy Board should have a right to examine this country's energy exposure to the United States.

This motion will also ensure that the National Energy Board considers how an export affects Canada's energy supply position. The government says that the question of surplus is not as important today as it was back in 1959 when Prime Minister Diefenbaker said the NEB was supposed to ensure that exports were: "surplus to the needs of the Canadian economy in this and foreseeable generations in order to ensure for Canadians an adequate supply of the natural resources which are the heritage of this country—"

We are told that provincial utilities will only export when they are in a surplus position. But will this always be the case? A recent article in The Globe and Mail reports that demand is threatening to outstrip supply for the first time in Hydro Quebec's history. The crunch is the result of low water levels in the James Bay area and also labour difficulties at Hydro Quebec. Hydro Quebec says that no one could have foreseen today's climate conditions. But that is not the point. The point is that if utilities are not going to plan in case of shortages, someone should. We think that someone should be the National Energy Board.

This motion also contains an amendment that aims to further protect the environment from the effects of electricity projects. The goal here is to allow a preliminary study of an application that is presented to the NEB. There would be a preliminary study Office, and that study would help the National Energy Board decide whether to hold a full public hearing on the application. FEARO would report its decision to the National Energy Board and they would make that recommendation public. The advantages of this is that FEARO is an independent body. It is free from political interference. The Minister of the Environment cannot tell it what to do. The minister, however, must be responsible to Parliament for FEARO's work and can be questioned on such matters in the House.

For these many reasons, I recommend that the House adopt this motion. This motion also deals with some small matters which were raised in committee. Some confusion exists as to whether the National Energy Board can act in the public interest where the province being examined takes no action to be complemented by the National Energy Board. The original bill said that the board could complement measures taken by the provinces of regulating electricity, but what happens when provinces take no action of their own? As Maritime Electric has stated, you cannot complement measures—add to something—if they have not been taken in the first place. So, if no provincial measures get taken, there will be no measures for the National Energy Board to complement.

While the government amended the bill in committee to take out the words "complement measures", we would still like to amend it in this way, because for one thing the wording of our amendment accomplishes several things, this technical correction being only one. In the interests of efficiency, this amendment is still being proposed.

Some confusion also exists as to which province the board ought to look at. Should it be the province where the electricity is generated or the province from which the electricity leaves Canada, or both, or even three provinces may be involved once in a while. This change means that the board can look at measures taken or not taken in whatever province it finds relevant. Again, as Maritime Electric told us, even if Parliament expresses itself clearly, differences in interpretation of legislation will occur. That means if Parliament does not express itself clearly, differences and disputes are almost certain to arise.

• (1650)

For all the reasons stated above, I urge the House to adopt this third motion.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to speak on the third grouping of amendments to Bill C–23, the act to gut the National Energy Board and unduly politicize electricity exports, and to make a few comments before our hour of adjournment.

We on this side of the House have already expressed concern about the independence of the National Energy Board, or how it is threatened by this legislation, because it is going to allow cabinet to overrule the NEB on energy projects and power lines. The same point has to be made in relation to electricity exports. The energy future of Canada demands that our consideration of proposals for the export of electricity continues to be characterized by impartiality and prudence. By allowing cabinet to override the NEB in order to increase exports, this bill politicizes that process and thereby threatens the national interest.

As I mentioned earlier, my colleague for Edmonton East, our energy critic, made this point on many occasions in committee. Unfortunately the government did not see fit to adopt some of the amendments that he proposed. We rise today to support the amendments presented by the member for Malpeque. They appear to be not necessarily aimed specifically at the problem, but do happen to have the effect of helping to maintain the independence of the NEB and we support that.

My colleagues and I pointed out during debate at second reading of this bill that the government was putting in place a mechanism that would make public hearings on export proposals very rare. In fact, under this bill the granting of export permits will be routine and public hearings for the vast majority of export applications will not be held. We pointed that there was no good evidence that the existing process was overly burdensome. In fact, evidence at the committee hearings show that this was the case. We pointed out that a closed process seldom serves the public purpose well. We have heard other examples of that today, VIA Rail being one, especially when dealing with such an important strategic resource like electricity. Once again, my colleague proposed in committee that a public hearing on major export proposals be held by someone at either the provincial or the federal level. This very sensible suggestion was turned down.

The main focus of this set of amendments, the third grouping, is to allow the NEB to refer proposals to export electricity to the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office. We understand that the spirit of the Brundtland Commission demands that the effect of public policy on the environment should be considered in all sectors of government. That means all departments and all agencies of government. It means that the NEB itself will be charged with conducting the basic environmental assessments of its decisions. Bill C-23 makes some progress in that regard. Under the proposal envisioned in this amendment, FEARO, the Environmental Assessment Review Office would be used as the "environmental protector of last resort to make assessments of those export proposals the NEB feels that it cannot handle adequately itself." That sounds like an entirely sensible idea and something that the prudent member for Edmonton East would recommend.

Let us take a look at how some of these amendments affect the most important free trade agreement as it now impacts between our country and the United States. My colleague, the energy critic, the member for Edmonton East, pursued this bill in some detail when it was in committee, and he offered a number of amendments. In effect, by signing the energy provisions of the free trade deal, the government has placed a boa constrictor around our neck. Under the trade deal, exports of energy to the United States will never decrease in relative terms, but will much more likely increase and increase. Article 904 of the FTA states:

> Either Party may maintain or introduce a restriction—with respect to the export of an energy good—only if:
>
> a) the restriction does not reduce the proportion of the total export shipments of a specific energy good made available to the other Party relative to the total supply of that good of the Party maintaining the restriction compared to the proportion prevailing in the most recent 36-month period—

Now that makes a lot of sense. This proportionality clause is like a ratchet that gets tighter and tighter. It is like a boa constricter, squeezing its prey and it never lets up. That is why it is so dangerous for Canada's energy future.

The point that has been missed in all of this, when it comes to electricity exports, a kilowatt hour is a kilowatt hour is a kilowatt hour. A buck is a buck is a buck. It does not matter if an export consists of a long-term firm contract or merely supplies of interruptable power, every kilowatt hour of power that we export defines the amount that we must offer the United States in following years. It will not be a one-off deal. If that amount is more than we usually send, the ratchet, that boa constricter will tighten. The proportion that we will have to offer the U.S. will continue to increase and we will have lost forever that degree of energy flexibility that we talked about so proudly before in this House.

We know that this government, this party delivered the free trade deal for its friends in big business. We know that they are not even proud enough to tell us where their donations were from. Members in this House have to do that. I only expect that from those people who bought all of those ads during the election campaign.

In the meantime, the least we can do is ensure that the National Energy Board takes the ratchet effect, that boa constricter again, into account in every one of its decisions respecting electricity exports. That is prudent. It is simple common sense. It is something we hope this government will follow.

The Deputy Speaker: In this grouping, a vote on Motion 11 will apply to Motion Nos. 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The recorded division on the motion shall stand deferred.

Pursuant to Standing Order 45.5(a), I have been requested by a representative of the chief government whip to defer the division until a later time. Accordingly, the divisions on the questions now before the House shall stand deferred until tomorrow at 3 o'clock, at which time the bells to call in the members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

[Translation]

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[English]

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, October 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Althouse:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of introducing measures to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act to include coverage for producers who feed their own grain to their livestock; and on the amendment of Mr. Funk:
>
> That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the words "Western Grain Stabilization Act" the following:
>
> 'and Agricultural Stabilization Act'.

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue my speech on this motion and the record of safety net programs such as the Western Grain Stabilization Program and the Agricultural Stabilization Program.

In recent years, world grain subsidy battles, heavy debt loads and drought have combined to place Canada's grains industry under tremendous pressure. Changes in the world trade environment have led to a re-examination of the role of government support programs. Many of us from this House have joined hundreds of producers and others concerned in the agricultural industry at the minister's agri-food conference today at the Congress Centre. They are there to initiate the most thorough review of agriculture undertaken in this country for many years. Government support programs are going to be part of that review.

Programs like the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Agriculture Stabilization Act have been doing the job that they were designed to do, protecting producers from the impact of a sudden drop in cash flow because of disruptions in markets or production costs.

The WGSA was set up in 1976 to stabilize farm incomes when grain prices dropped below a five-year average. The program has done just that. Since the 1985-86 crop year the Western Grain Stabilization Act has paid out over $3.2 billion to participants in the Prairie provinces.

A farmer who had been enrolled since the beginning of the program will have received $6 in benefit payments for every dollar of levy contributed. Over the same period the Agricultural Stabilization Act has also made substantial payments to grain and oilseed producers in eastern Canada and to producers whose products are not included under the Western Grain Stabilization Program. These programs are working but that does not mean that they cannot be improved.

Since 1984 the government has been working with producers and their organizations to make the Western Grain Stabilization Act more responsive to the needs of those producers.

In February of 1985, the Western Grain Stabilization Act was amended so that in years when a substantial pay-out was evident, interim payments would be made before the end of the crop year. This provided farmers with cash when they needed it most in time for spring seeding.

The program was further improved in 1988. Amendments were made to encourage participation, extend crop coverage and put the program on a sound financial footing. A 10 per cent penalty for producers rejoining the program was removed, and the deadline for non-participating producers to join the Western Grain Stabilization Act was extended.

Nine additional crops were made eligible for payments. These included buckwheat, peas, lentils, fababeans, canary seed, mixed grain, sunflower and safflower seeds.

Amendments were also passed to raise levies in the joint government-producer funded program. The federal government now pays 6 per cent, instead of 3 per cent, of eligible grain sale receipts while producer levies increased from 1 per cent to 4 per cent. This combined with a write-down of $750 million of the stabilization fund deficit put the program on a sounder financial basis. Without this write-down, the future of the program was in doubt.

The 1988 amendments provided immediate benefits to producers for the 1987-88 crop year. Producers rejoining the program received about 70 per cent of the payment that a full participant with the same level of grain sales received. The payment level increased to 85 per cent for the 1988-89 crop year. Without the amendments, producers rejoining the program would have received only 30 per cent of the full payment.

The success of these improvements is in the statistics. Participation has increased 8 per cent since the latest amendments, to the highest level since the program began. It now stands at 90 per cent of eligible Wheat Board permit book holders. The total number of participating producers is over 129,000, up from 113,000 in the 1986-87 crop year, an increase of 12 per cent.

This government is willing to consider further amendments to improve safety net programs for farmers. Today, we are being asked to consider the inclusion of farm-fed grain in the Western Grain Stabilization Program.

The issue is not new. The present program provides protection to farmers based on grain sales receipts. However, it does not cover farm-fed grain. Producers who feed a large portion of the grain they grow to livestock are not included.

Since this issue and motion was first discussed in the House, I had the occasion to discuss it with a number of my farmers. Many of these people would benefit from the program if it were extended. They asked me point blank why I was not promoting and actively supporting this. I have assured them that the government is taking a very broad look at the issue. The farm sector clearly needs assistance to improve its long term financial stability.

In recent years we have relied on ad hoc government support programs such as the 1986 and 1987 Special Canadian Grains Program, which paid out $2.1 billion to producers, and the 1988 Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program, which paid producers another $850 million. But designing a special program for each crisis situation is not the answer.

Farmers also agree that whatever we do must be consistent with international efforts to reform agricultural subsidies.

Last April in Geneva ministers from countries involved in talks under GATT agreed that the long term objective of the negotiations is to establish a fair and market oriented agricultural trading system. The short term agreement provides that current support and protection levels in the agricultural sector will not be increased during the period of the negotiations. Countries have agreed not to change policies in a manner which would further restrict access to markets.

The government is now involved in an extensive review of Canadian agricultural policies. The review was launched in the summer of 1988 and grain stabilization is part of that total review. Government representatives met with farm leaders across the country to determine options for a national stabilization program. These options were developed by Agriculture Canada's National Grains Bureau in Winnipeg and presented to a meeting of farm leaders. Discussions have continued and right now a national conference discussing policy directions for the future is under way at the Congress Centre.

The issue of farm-fed grain will likely be raised at that conference but will be examined in the light of a need for a stabilization program, but one which treats Canadian farmers in an equitable way.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on Motion No. 310 which requests the government to consider doing something about the effect of paying stabilization on grain that is sold commercially but not paying stabilization on farm fed grain.

At present most people involved in the production of grain recognize that the terms of the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Act do not treat those who produce the grain and sell it on the commercial market in the same way as those farmers who grow the grain and then feed it to their own livestock. The process is very clear.

I was reviewing the remarks made by the member from Brandon—Souris and wondered why the government is being somewhat dense on this in the sense that it does not seem to recognize that there is a detrimental effect upon the rural communities because of the forced separation, to a great extent, of the meat sector in farming from that of the grain producing sector.

The Stabilization Act kicks in when farmers growing and selling their grain on the commercial market get a low market price. Otherwise stabilization acts would not become effective. The stabilization payment they get brings them somewhat closer to the cost of production.

The farmer who grows that grain and feeds it to his own livestock does not get that stabilization payment. Even if he is on the stabilization for one of the hog programs or one of the beef programs, the cost of that cheap grain is factored in. In other words, the stabilization payment is lost to that particular farmer. He does not get it as part of his income for that year.

This has had the effect of forcing families to separate their feeding operations from their growing operations to the point where, in some cases, they quit one of them entirely and sell the grain to the neighbour when, if farm-fed grains were treated the same way as commercial grains as far as stabilization was concerned, those farmers would continue to produce cattle and hogs.

• (1710)

The Pork Marketing Council makes a very good case. It suggests that this different treatment of people who grow their grain and feed it to their livestock and those who sell it on the commercial market is so detrimental that it is forcing some farmers to leave the production of hogs and go entirely into the production of grain in those years when make very much money producing either the feed or the hogs. Consequently, the need for the stabilization becomes very obvious.

This Motion No. 310 asks the government to deal with this discrimination in some way. It does not suggest that we eliminate either one or the other of the programs. It suggests that in the process of dealing with this, one has to look at the differentiation, recognize that there is a differentiation and then do something about it.

That was the recommendation made to the Department of Agriculture by Daryl Kraft a number of years ago. And it is the recommendation made by a good number of farm organizations which have had the opportunity to make presentations to the government. Daryl Kraft included the recommendation, when he made his report, that farm-fed grains be made eligible for stabilization coverage. He gave two alternatives that the government could consider in order to close that gap. The government has taken no action on this recommendation at all.

The pork producers go on to suggest that there should be no difference in the treatment of grain that is fed to the livestock operation on the same farm on which it is is grown and grains sold through commercial channels. If there were no difference between the two, we would not have the situation that is negatively affecting rural communities with mixed farms that have small numbers of livestock. Rather, farmers would specialize.

Not so long ago, a lot of our policies were established with the idea of getting people to produce more grain or more hogs. Now, under the present circumstances of the economy of agriculture, we need to take a look at those things and make sure that one of the programs does not detrimentally affect another, and that is all that is being asked here in Motion No. 310.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in entering into this debate today. I might say to the hon. member who introduced the motion that it is not a motion void of merit. Certainly, it is one that commands our attention and reflection. And for those of us who live in agricultural communities, it is a fact that this motion is very much on the minds of those who are involved in a combination of both feeding and raising grains. The important point to underscore at the moment, however, is one that I am sure the hon. member for Mackenzie will appreciate. We have in Ottawa at the moment one of the largest collections of farm leaders from across Canada who are disposed in part with this very question.

Because they are undertaking to look at and review the nature of feeding farm grains and the relationship that ought to be with the whole question of grain support programs, it would seem to me that it would be an important consideration to wait until they have had the opportunity, as farm leaders, to reflect upon this matter. They can give us the value and the wisdom of their good counsel before we, as members, make a precipitous motion that might put us into a position which subsequently might lock us on to a direction for which the farm community itself might want to go with some variance or in some slightly different direction.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program and the Agricultural Stabilization Programs provide supports to producers when grain prices drop below the five-year average. However, livestock producers in both eastern and western Canada have expressed concern that farm-fed grain is not included in the two stabilization programs. In some livestock support programs the price of grain is included in the formula for triggering these programs. So, when grain prices rise, support prices for livestock rise. But livestock support programs do not account for the cost of producing farm-fed grain. If the price of grain is unchanged but grain production costs increase, this is not reflected in the payments through livestock support programs.

This is an important issue but it should not be considered in isolation. Including farm-fed grain in stabilization programs is an issue which must be looked at in the broad context of all agricultural stabilization programs. Including farm-fed grain in the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the ASA seems like a simple way to provide additional protection to producers who feed grain to their livestock. It really is not. Including farm-fed grain in these programs would create a whole new set of issues.

First, some stabilization programs, such as the dairy program, already include a portion of the cost of producing farm-fed grains. If farm-fed grains were included in the Western Grain Stabilization and the ASA some producers would receive compensation twice on the same grain. Second, including farm-fed grain in the Western Grain Stabilization and the ASA would change these programs completely. Both programs would be based on production rather than on commercial sales. This has a number of implications. Both the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the ASA were based on production. Good yield data would be essential. Individual yield data would likely not be available in all cases and the program would have to be administered on the basis of regional yield averages.

Farmers will not be getting payments based on individual data and that could raise some questions of inequity. Producers with yields below the regional average would be overpaid and those with higher yields would, unfortunately, be underpaid.

Including farm-fed grain in the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the ASA may give livestock producers more protection. But taking this step would remove the protection which the grain producers have from being unable to market their grain.

• (1720)

Right now if producers cannot make deliveries, that is reflected in the reduced sales and the Western Grain Stabilization Act payment can be triggered. If the Western Grain Stabilization Act were based on production, payments under both programs would not be triggered because of reduced deliveries.

Finally, including farm-fed grain in the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the ASA, would make both programs more expensive. In the case of the Western Grain Stabilization Act, farmers would share those increased costs along with the government.

Farm-fed grain plays a significant role in our agricultural economy. About half of the cereal crops produced in Canada, excluding wheat, are fed to livestock. In the Maritimes, the proportion of farm-fed grain is even higher. Even when wheat is included, about 30 per cent of cereal crops are fed on farms. The federal government realizes the significance of farm-fed grain in our agricultural economy. We have talked with producers and their organizations about including farm-fed grain in the stabilization programs.

Most recently, in the summer of 1988, this issue was raised at a series of regional meetings with the Minister of Grains and Oilseeds held with farm organizations to discuss farm safety nets. Farm-fed grain was an issue raised at all of those meetings and it is an issue that was raised again in January, 1989 on farm safety nets held in Winnipeg.

The Standing Committee on Agriculture also looked into the issue of farm-fed grain in its January, 1986 report on the Western Grain Stabilization Act. This is what the committee concluded on the issue of farm-fed grain.

> It should be only for the final products marketed that the producer receives market risk protection under the Western Grain Stabilization Act, or the ASA. In the case of livestock producers, they face the livestock market, but not the grain market risks. Treating livestock producers as grain producers means that the grain may be covered in the raw form and again as it goes into the final product.

That, I hasten to mention, was a recommendation of an all-party committee of this Parliament.

The federal government is about to undertake an agricultural policy review. One of the topics we will be discussing with producers and their organizations is how farm-fed grain should be dealt with under the grain income stabilization program. A number of suggestions have already been put forward for discussion. We have been debating just one of those options, including farm-fed grain in grain income stabilization programs.

Another option is including the cost of grain production in the formulas for calculating support under meat and poultry stabilization programs. This type of system is already in place for the dairy program. One drawback to this option is that livestock support prices would go up when the cost of grain production goes up, but not when actual grain prices rise. This would mean less protection for producers who buy feed rather than grow it themselves.

Another option is a program which would stabilize income for both livestock and grains. This option would be targeted toward the profitability of the producer's over-all operation. Livestock and grain incomes would not be considered then in isolation. The program would have to be operated at individual farm levels to take into account how significant livestock and grain receipts are to each operation.

The federal government is currently undertaking a review of all farm safety-net programs and the issue of farm-fed grain will be included in that policy review. The goal of the policy review is to work with industry and with the producers to knock out a national policy for Canadian agriculture.

The Minister of Agriculture has set out four principles as the basis for a national agricultural policy. They include market responses, self-reliance, sustainable and regional sensitivity. I would like to address the issue of market responsiveness and how it relates to the Western Grain Stabilization Act—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the member but his time has expired. The only way to continue would be through unanimous consent. Is the House ready to give a couple of minutes more to the member to complete his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for Crowfoot has the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the House for giving me an extension of time. I appreciate it very much.

I would like to address the issue of market responsiveness and how it relates to the Western Grain Stabilizatin Act and the ASA for a moment. Concern has been expressed that the two programs discourage the use of grain on farms as feed, and promote off-farm sales instead. The livestock sector represents a major opportunity for value-added and diversification in the agriculture sector.

Here is what "The Road Not Taken", a study done by producers through the National Grains Bureau, "Grains 2000"program states about the opportunities for value-added activities in the meat sector:

> The livestock sector serves as the principal feed stock to an expanded food processing sector. The meat processing sector represents the third largest industry in Canada with annual sales exceeding $8 billion. It employs 31,000 people with a payroll of $764 million and purchases almost $7 billion worth of goods and services a year. More importantly, it is almost totally a value-added industry. Properly managed, it could provide the main engine to a much more diversified and substantially better stabilized Canadian agriculture.

We are willing to work with industry to develop programs which will encourage value-added activities and diversification. But simply tinkering with the Western Grain Stabilization Act or the ASA will not be enough.

As I have pointed out, including farm-fed grains in these programs would bring a new set of inequities. We have to take a much more comprehensive approach. That is why the federal government is reviewing all agricultural programs, including the Western Grain Stabilization Act and the ASA. We want to find out how these programs affect market signals, the decisions producers make about their operations, the environment and the region, and we will be working with industry to come up with better policies and programs which will be more in tune with the needs of the industry.

With that, again, Mr. Speaker, I extend my appreciation to the House for the extended time that was allowed me to complete those comments.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate today, a debate about the extension of the Western Grain Stabilization program to the livestock producers who grow their own grain, as well as the amendment that extends the coverage under the Agriculture Stabilization Act to those same producers in other parts of the country.

I have to commend my colleague for bringing in a motion like this because I think it is time well spent, not only to look at the current issues but in consideration of the projected farm income figures for the coming year. We find that the incomes are going to be dropping drastically. In Ontario, incomes will be down by 8 per cent; in Manitoba, 87 per cent; in Alberta, 54 per cent, and in Saskatchewan by 101 per cent. While these incomes to the producers are dropping like this, we see in the documents prepared for the conference today and in the news release they expect that pork prices will decline moderately in the next year even though beef prices may go up slightly.

• (1730)

Because we have the supply management systems in place for both dairy and poultry, they are not going to be hit as hard unless the government continues on its trend to pull away the underpinnings of these national supply marketing systems. Then, of course, there will be a return to the law of the jungle, disaster for all those involved and a massive take-over of those markets by the huge corporate farms to the south of us.

When you stop and look at the rationale behind the motion, you have to realize that those producers who grow their own grain always hit the same cycle. When the prices of grain are low, the livestock prices are similarly low as well. Even though they may qualify for tripartite stabilization on the livestock they are producing, at the same time that is only a break-even price and they have already suffered the same production losses. Those are the losses in their cost of production per acre on the grains they used to raise that livestock.

I am very concerned as I speak today because we have already seen many of our farm programs changed in the way of legislation. Most recently was the change in the Crop Insurance Act for the producer to be required to pay a full 50 per cent. Yet the federal government is going to get off the hook for 25 per cent of what the costs have been to it in the past, even though the provinces will be expected to pick up part of the balance of the costs.

I think it would have been much more prudent on behalf of the federal government when we have the forecast losses in the coming year to have put forward a bill that would have brought about a system of tripartite crop insurance.

I also have to think back on Bill C-36, the farm crop cash advances with the interest-free loans and how the government delayed from late in April when the budget was brought down until legislation was finally introduced in Parliament some five months later. Then it was brought through the House of Commons at second reading and into committee and out again. Then there was a further delay of three weeks before it finally got third reading.

Also, we have to look at the At and East program that will impact dramatically on those in Atlantic Canada and on the availability of grain to them at reasonable prices. That is being removed at the present time under proposed legislation. I have to remind the government that this was an initial market for western grain that could now very well be filled by offshore grains and deprive our Canadian farmers in western Canada of yet another good market.

When I look at these various programs that are being phased out by this government, I wonder where all these ideas are coming from. Certainly they are not all cost cutting in terms of savings they are going to give to us. When we rob Peter to pay Paul, Canadians are still going to suffer.

In terms of farm crop cash advances, as I indicated when I spoke in that debate, the increase in taxes from tobacco and alcoholic beverages alone amounted to approximately $475 million in the last budget. Yet this total program only cost $27 million in terms of the crop advances. The rationale does not hold up that they are cutting some programs in an effort to control the deficit when, in fact, they raised the taxes on the same commodities that benefit from those programs by $475 million.

I have to reflect back to a speech made in the Senate committee on agriculture in Washington on April 19, 1989, a statement by Clayton Yeutter, the Secretary of Agriculture. At the top of page 7 he states that if the GATT negotiations are successful, we will be writing a segment of the European Community's 1991 farm bill in Geneva rather than in Brussels.

The Secretary of Agriculture in the United States is going to write the farm bills for these other countries in Europe. He goes on to state that this is obviously one of our objectives. Then he says that the U.S. will also be writing a major segment of the farm bills of Canada, Brazil, Argentina, Australia and several other countries in Geneva.

Here we have a U.S. Secretary of Agriculture writing farm bills for Canada. We see the proof of the pudding when we see these programs cancelled in the budget that came down in the House of Commons in the last few days of April, a leaked budget, I should add. Then we see these programs brought in to be gutted or cancelled in the House of Commons.

I think it is deplorable that any nation such as this should have to dance to the tune played by a fiddler in Washington who openly admits he is going to write the farm policies for this country when a policy is desperately needed to provide more help to the farmers in Canada.

I received a letter from the Canadian Pork Council dated December 7, 1989, asking us to support this bill because it is desperately needed. Many of the pork producers grow their own grains but they too have been hit hard, not only by the disastrously low grain prices we have had since this Tory government came to power but also the fact that we have had three drought years. Particularly in my area, there have been droughts in 1985, 1987 and 1988.

I look at what has happened in western Canada, particularly in the province of Saskatchewan. Some areas of that province were hit equally hard this year as they were in the previous two years. Now is not the time to be cancelling some of these programs but rather it is the time to be adding to and broadening that support we have had in the past to cover the grain fed to livestock.

It is a sad commentary when I look at what is happening across this nation, particularly at a time just before Christmas when we have heard a lot of talk here about how many people have become unemployed during the last few weeks as the various plants laid off workers or announced closures. It is equally sad to see the plight of some of the farm people across this nation in the provinces. I am referring particularly to Saskatchewan. One man who called me this morning suggested that there would be as many as 8,000 farmers forced off their land this winter in Saskatchewan.

I call upon the government at this point to stop and take a look at what it is doing.

An Hon. Member: Eight thousand?

Mr. Ferguson: Up to 8,000. Those are the figures he gave me. I am not talking about Farm Credit Corporation, I am talking about the whole group regardless of where they are financed. There could be up to 8,000 forced off their land in Saskatchewan this winter. I heard that from a reasonably good authority, perhaps someone closer to it than a lot of members in this House. He is involved with some church groups that are trying to find a way to help these people.

I think it is tragic that we find ourselves in a situation like this at this time of year before the Christmas season. It is tragic that we find ourselves in a situation where a province that is noted as being the bread-basket of the world is now forced into a position where its farmers cannot even make a break-even living, where they have to find outside employment, not only for the husband but for the wife, in order to carry on their operation.

• (1740)

This area has been neglected too long and I would have to suggest to this government that it is by the strengthening and building on the programs that are already there, rather than taking them away, that this problem will be resolved. It is with proposals such as the one we have here today that we will be able to maintain a strong livestock sector across this nation, rather than see the decline we have had in the last few years and the hardships inflicted upon these people.

I wholeheartedly support the proposal that is before the House this afternoon. I hope it will move forward for consideration into committee.

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in the debate on Motion No. 310 standing in the name of the member for Mackenzie, and its amendment.

I am tempted to address some of the comments made by the previous speaker, the member for Lambton—Middlesex, but I will resist that temptation and restrict my comments to the motion before us.

Motion No. 310 supports the inclusion of farm-fed grain into the existing stabilization programs for marketed grain. Including farm-fed grain in the grain stabilization framework is an issue we have heard brought up before by producers. It has been raised many times in previous years. In particular, the Prairie Pools, for example, have made the proposal recently.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program and the Agricultural Stabilization Act provide protection to farmers based on grain marketings. Farmers who do not market their grain, but instead feed it on their own farms to livestock have argued that they need similar protection.

About half of the cereals other than wheat grown in Canada are fed to livestock on farms where the grain was grown. This is the case across most of the country, except in the maritimes where the proportion of farm-fed grain is higher. If we include wheat, about 30 per cent of the grain is fed on the farm.

Producers in western Canada feed slightly less of their grain production to livestock than is the case in eastern Canada. Amending either the WGSA or the ASA to include farm-fed grain would involve major changes in the structures of these programs. It would involve basing the calculations used to determine support levels on grain production instead of on grain sales.

A production-based program would rely on good yield data which may be very difficult to get. Using yield averages for different regions could penalize producers with higher yields while benefiting those with lower yields.

As we can see, the issue is a very complicated one. If changes are made to those programs, the result could well be stabilization programs which create more inequities than presently exist among regions and types of farm operations.

In addition, we can see this issue as one which involves producers in all regions. One of the earlier speakers, the member for Crowfoot, mentioned the 1986 report of the agriculture committee, and without mentioning some of the specifics that he mentioned, I would mention recommendation No. 10 of the committee in 1986. It was that undesignated sales remain ineligible under the Western Grain Stabilization Act. The two major reasons for this were that first of all it would be very difficult administratively because levy collection in the case of undocumented sales would create extreme difficulties and the second major reason was that the Western Grain Stabilization protection should only be for the final products marketed. In this case, the final product is the beef or hog production as the case may be.

Some protection for farm-fed grain does exist in the form of livestock support programs, but for the most part, those programs use market price for grain in support calculations rather than the cost of producing the grain. When grain prices fall, livestock support prices fall. For the producer who buys grain to feed his livestock, lower support prices reflect lower costs, but for the producer who grows his own grain to use as feed, there is no reduction in costs to offset the reduced support price.

However, some dairy producers are at least partially protected as the cost of grain production is factored into the price support formula. To include the cost of producing grain into the price support calculations for all livestock programs would cause the reverse of the situation I have just explained. That is, when the costs of producing grain increase, the livestock support prices will increase. That is fair for the producer who grows his own feed, but protection is reduced for the farmer who has to buy his feed.

There are still inequities. This clearly indicates the importance of dealing with stabilization in a broader context. We must consider the impact that making changes to any stabilization program will have on other programs or other sectors of the industry.

This is why grain stabilization is a major component in the agricultural policy review now under way by the federal government. This comprehensive review is being undertaken to prepare Canada's agricultural industry to keep pace with the changing and increasingly globalized market-place. Our agriculture industry must be prepared for the next century, and a solid foundation for agriculture must be built now.

One of the more important considerations in this extensive review is the issue of safety nets. This is very timely because tomorrow morning, in fact, as part of the conference entitled "Growing Together", the agri-food conference being held in Ottawa this week, there is a major session on safety nets. This session is being chaired jointly by the Ministers of Agriculture for Manitoba and Newfoundland.

The federal government is attempting, through conferences like the one being held this week, with the help of the industry, to develop a safety net system to assist producers in managing risk better. At the same time, it is essential that these safety nets do not interfere with the way in which farmers make their management decisions, nor hamper Canada in marketing our agricultural products abroad.

I think it is important to mention briefly the four basic principles of the foundation of the agriculture policy review. First, national agricultural policies must be market responsive. Our agriculture industry must be able to respond to market signals and demands, both in Canada and abroad. Opportunities for value-added production and diversification must be pursued.

Second, the industry must be self-reliant. This means federal policies and programs must nurture a climate of opportunity, without undermining the independence of the industry. Third, agriculture in this country must be sustainable. The long-term economic health of the industry depends to a large degree on a clean, healthy environment. Sustainable agricultural production must be economically viable.

Finally, a national agricultural strategy must be sensitive to the regional differences in this country. It must build on regional strengths and resources.

A vital part of the development of a national strategy for Canadian agriculture is consultation with the industry. The federal government is seeking input from farmers and from industry representatives from across Canada representing the many sectors of Canadian agriculture.

In closing, I would like to stress that we cannot look at stabilization of farm-fed grain in isolation from other agricultural policies and programs.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in favour of the motion which is before the House today. I think that the views which have been expressed in this House have been to the point, particularly in respect of this bill. However, I think that there is a broader issue that must be discussed when looking at this issue and, in fact, when looking at other issues in respect of agriculture.

All agricultural programs must be discussed with some broader objectives in mind. We must ask ourselves the question, what future do we want for agriculture in this country. That is a question that in the past has not been addressed properly or with any real sincerity. The basic question with respect to agriculture is, of course, do we wish to maintain viable family farming units or do we wish to move to the industrial corporate farming model.

Since World War II, the programs and policies that have been implemented by various Liberal and Conservative governments through the years have not had any underlying foundation or any underlying base to them. Often we found programs and policies that have been divergent, that have not accomplished the tasks which they set out to accomplish. It is important that we address our attention to this fundamental issue.

• (1750)

The government has put together a paper Growing Together, and there is a conference that is presently taking place. There are four pillars which have been suggested and which have been recounted by the government a number of times. Just to review them very briefly, they are calling for more market responsiveness, greater self-reliance, a national policy which recognizes diversity and increased environmental sustainability.

Those are very general concepts which can be supported in the abstract. The question, of course, is how will these translate into actual government policy. I think it is clear from attending the conference today that the direction this government is going in is a direction that is not considering the future viability of family farms. It is encouraging and moving toward the industrial corporate model and that is the direction that this government has chosen to take and I believe will be submitting policies with respect to that end.

This is a good opportunity to discuss agricultural issues but it is unfortunate that the government will be taking that direction. The government does state that it is a government of consultation. It is a government that desires to maintain a family farm model. But the evidence is not there. Certainly other bills that have recently been passed do not project that. Certainly the bill on advance payments which was recently passed increased the amount of advance payments to a limit of $250,000. I do not know how many small producers, even medium producers, can take advantage of a $250,000 loan. That is a large amount of money. It is simply passing that legislation to the detriment of the family farmer in this country.

The idea of consultation that the government says it is entering into is certainly not clear from its handling of the oats issue. There was an outcry across this country when the government announced that it was going to remove oats from the Canadian Wheat Board. I and my colleagues have been in this House every day introducing petition after petition calling for the government to maintain oats under the Canadian Wheat Board. In fact, I just received today an answer to one of those petitions which says after careful consideration of the unique market potential for Canadian oats and in consideration of how that market could best be served, a decision was made to have the industry market oats. This change was made solely in the best interests of the Canadian oats producer.

The Canadian oats producers do not want that. In fact, it is very clear that over two-thirds of producers in western Canada would prefer oats to remain under the Canadian Wheat Board. There is not consultation in the general sense of the word. There is simply consultation with those groups that agree with the government's position. That is unfortunate for the government. It is unfortunate for the producers and it is unfortunate for the people of this country.

There is also a broader issue that deals with rural Canada. We have to address the future of agriculture. We have to address the future of rural Canada generally. That includes small business, seniors and young people.

Across this country, many of the issues that are of concern to rural Saskatchewan are also the same concerns that exist in rural Nova Scotia, rural Prince Edward Island, rural Quebec or rural Ontario. The fact is that the rural infrastructure in this country is collapsing. Unless something is done to change that trend, rural Canada is in very severe trouble.

Certainly the small business people are closing their doors. Seniors are not remaining in communities where they grew up because of the lack of health care and transportation services and the lack of other amenities. Young families are not moving there for the same reason.

There needs to be a viable economic base in those communities in rural Canada in order to help maintain those areas. Certainly the recent projections for farm income reveal that fact. While farm income is projected to be down by 50 per cent across Canada, western Canada is severely hit. In the province of Saskatchewan, it is expected that people will have a negative net income next year, something that I find quite remarkable. Manitoba will be down by 87 per cent and Alberta by 54 per cent.

The producers in this country are in a severe financial situation. In my home province of Saskatchewan, we have something like over 39,000 farms which have an acreage of less than 1,000 acres and only 14,000 with acreages above 1,000 acres. The programs that are being developed and the way this government is talking is not looking at those smaller producers. Those producers, if they maintain themselves on the land, are the ones going into the general stores and buying the goods. They are the ones who are supporting the local pharmacies, doctors and dentists. If those people are gone, then there is severe economic hardship for the community as a whole.

On this particular motion, I would like to make a couple of very short comments before my time runs out. The motion is really designed to help provide some equity and to help provide some fairness in the farming industry. If the goal is to encourage viable mixed farms in this country, then this motion should be supported by the government. We have the odd situation where a producer in times of low prices, instead of feeding the grain to his livestock which he would normally do, because of the situation is encouraged to deliver the grain to market. He is going to get a higher price for it because of the stabilization payment.

We have an irony here in that we have a free enterprise government which is hampering a farmer's ability to make some market decisions. What we want is to have some equity and some fairness in this program so that farmers can make those decisions and so that the farming economy will progress in a fashion that will be best for the local producers and allow them to make those decisions to maintain some viability.

We would ask that this bill be supported.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you will find that there is consent among the three parties that we suspend the sitting of the House to the call of the Chair for the purposes of considering a special order later in the day.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That would be all right at six o'clock. At six o'clock, the Chair would suspend the sitting of the House for a few minutes. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is now 5.58 p.m. In the meantime, on debate, I recognize the member for Wild Rose.

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wild Rose): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to say a few words about the Western Grain Stabilization Program and the Agricultural Stabilization Program.

All agriculture programs, including WGSA and ASA, are currently under review. The federal government has released a discussion paper to bring producers and their organizations into the policy review process. This paper is the focal point for discussion at the national agri–food policy conference being held at the Congress Centre today and tomorrow.

It is clear that our policies and programs need to change. We have worked with producers and their organizations to improve these programs in the past. The Western Grain Stabilization Program was amended in 1985 to improve the timing of issuing payments to producers. The act was amended so that producers would receive an interim payment in the spring during crop years when calculations indicated that there would be a substantial program payout. This amendment put cash in the hands of producers right before spring seeding when they needed it most.

In 1988 the Western Grain Stabilization Act was amended again.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I regret to interrupt the hon. member. The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 93 the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: According to the order previously passed by the House, this sitting is suspended to the call of the Chair.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 6:01 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to inform the House that we have been unable to come to an agreement among the three parties in spite of our best intentions, so we ask that you simply adjourn the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Accordingly, the House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 7.01 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 12, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to 161 petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table today 25 petitions signed by people of the riding of Ottawa—Vanier, people who object strongly to this government's proposal to impose a goods and services tax, whether it is 9 per cent, 7 per cent or any per cent.

The federal Conservative government wants to impose this tax, which will be hidden from Canadians and applied to just about everything they buy.

In the petition, these constituents insist, that the imposition of this new general goods and services tax will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle income Canadians and that the tax will create an onerous burden on small business.

On behalf of these Canadians who strongly oppose this new goods and services tax which, in their opinion, is an unprecedented tax grab from their pockets and will hit them not only with higher taxes but with higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this proposed goods and services tax.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my privilege today to present a petition rejecting the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas. Your petitioners, who represent the isolated community of Lebel-sur-Quévillon in Abitibi, are concerned about the recommendations in this report which may cause many workers to leave these isolated communities. They believe that the Government of Canada has refused to consider the fact that people in the north live in a harsh and isolated environment and that the cost of living is high.

Mr. Speaker, according to the disparity index for 84 isolated communities in Quebec in 1989, Lebel-sur-Quévillon ranks 70th and Fermont 81st.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX AND REQUEST FOR EXEMPTION OF SKATING LESSONS AND RELATED COSTS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have one more petition. Today it is my privilege, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition rejecting the proposed goods and services tax, especially on skating expenses. Your petitioners, who represent the communities of Malartic and Rivière Héva, are concerned about the heavy financial burden that the proposed tax will put on the families of young athletes, and they ask Parliament to designate skating lessons as an educational service and thus exempt related costs from the proposed goods and services tax.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 and on behalf of hundreds of British Columbians, I wish to present a petition signed mainly by citizens of Port Alberni, British Columbia, and collected during our visits to British Columbia, explaining to Canadians what exactly the goods and services tax is all about, a hidden tax on virtually everything they use, everything they buy, a tax that whether it comes in at 3 per cent, 5 per cent, 7 per cent or 9 per cent, will undoubtedly go the route of the same tax that was introduced in New Zealand at 10 per cent and went to 12.5 per cent.

• (1110)

On behalf of British Columbians who oppose the goods and services tax, I want to present this petition to the House.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today under Standing Order 36 to present petitions to this House. I have three petitions from my constituents who strenuously object to the proposed goods and services tax and call upon this House to reject this unfair burden.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition to table on behalf of the residents of Hyde Park, Ontario, who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a common grievance in the certain assurance this honourable House will therefore provide a remedy.

Mr. Speaker, 270 people signed this petition and they call upon this Parliament to instruct Canada Post to continue to maintain the Hyde Park post office as a federally operated post office and reappoint a permanent postmaster to this position.

I present this petition on behalf of these people who are concerned that the government plans to privatize the post offices across Canada which will effectively close down and destroy the small towns and villages of this nation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by 32 petitioners from Lumsden in the northern part of my riding.

These constituents are concerned that the Government of Canada is proposing to dramatically cut unemployment insurance benefits by making it more difficult to qualify, and reducing the number of weeks covered. They are also concerned about the negative effect this is going to have on job development strategy and the community infrastructure in their riding. They are concerned that the Government of Canada is proposing to withdraw a contribution of $2.9 billion to the unemployment insurance fund.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject these cuts in the unemployment insurance system.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give wholehearted support to a petition against the goods and services tax. These petitioners from Grand Bank, Lamaline and Red Cove and many other communities in Burin—St. George's now join the hundreds of thousands of people who have already signed petitions on this issue.

The prayer of the petitioners is that Parliament will reject the proposed goods and services tax. I wholeheartedly support it and ask members to give heed.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by a total of 409 Canadians, almost all of whom are resident in Alberta and many of whom are resident in Edmonton.

The petitioners believe that the clawback action might well be unconstitutional, that it is unfair as those with similar income are taxed differently. It is discriminatory on the basis of age and marital status and it destroys the credibility and trust that Canadians have in their government. The petitioners pray that the budget proposal to claw back payments under the social programs, old age security and family allowances be withdrawn.

With these 409 names added to the literally thousands I have presented before, it brings the total to over 11,000 names against the clawback I have presented in petition to this House.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present petitions on behalf of petitioners from Prud'homme, Alvena, Biggar and Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, who call upon the government to reject the current proposed goods and services tax. The petitioners point out that they want the government to ensure that if and when there is a broad public consensus on the sales tax measure to replace the manufacturing sales tax, this reform should not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab. They call upon the government to not proceed with the goods and services tax.

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present to Parliament a number of petitions duly signed and certified pursuant to Standing Order 36. Thousands of the residents of Aurora, King City, Richmond Hill and Vaughn, workers, senior citizens, students, businesspersons, people I meet in factories, shopping centres, train stations, schools and at town hall meetings strongly oppose the proposed 9 per cent goods and services tax.

The residents of York North are against this tax that will bring about higher inflation, increased unemployment, higher interest rates and will be a nightmare to administer.

On their behalf, I urge this Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present three petitions from my constituency of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke dealing with the 9 per cent goods and services tax. These petitioners are from Pembroke, Petawawa and other communities throughout eastern Ontario. I also have another petition covering a good many communities in New Brunswick.

The petitioners ask the government not to introduce the 9 per cent goods and services tax. They feel that with the 31 increases in taxes which this government has brought in already, and this being a major one, the thirty-second one, that enough is enough. As well, they feel that this is going to be a great burden on small businesses to administer and indeed it will, so they are petitioning the government not to go ahead with this tax and to take a second look at its policies.

FORESTRY

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 with two petitions signed by some 56 persons from the constituency of Kootenay West—Revelstoke. The petitioners reside in Revelstoke, Trail, Castlegar and also other parts of British Columbia, such as Golden, Victoria and Kamloops.

They point out that the forests of Canada sustain an industry which employs, directly and indirectly, more Canadians than any other industry. They also point out the valuable work that has been done during the term of the present agreement and encourage the Parliament of Canada to renew this important agreement with British Columbia, thereby providing for a renewed commitment to restocking our forest land, advancing forestry research, promoting silviculture and assisting the forest industry in developing the new products and markets that will provide us with forestry jobs in the future.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to present, pursuant to Standing Order 36, six petitions on behalf of residents of Grand Forks, Christina Lake, Greenwood, Midway and Beaverdell in the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. These petitions contain 878 names.

The petitioners call on the government to take another look at the goods and services tax, ensure that if and when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, that the government should not use this as an opportunity to impose a massive tax grab. They ask the government to cease with a proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I enthusiastically present to the House today a petition that is entitled "Help Save the Rouge".

The Rouge Valley is 5,000 acres of beautiful wilderness land in metro Toronto. A very important point about this valley is that there is a component of farmland within it that some of the members have not heard about recently. This farmland needs to be preserved because it contains the headwaters of the river itself. So its preservation is very much a part of preserving the valley.

The petitioners are calling upon the Government of Canada, which has already committed $10 million to this project, to work with the province of Ontario to establish a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park in the Rouge Valley system in Scarborough.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-49

The House resumed from Monday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, notwithstanding any Standing or Special Order or practice of the House, for the purposes of consideration and disposition of Bill C-49, An Act to provide for the resumption of certain government services:

1) there shall be, following the adoption of this Order, one day for the report stage and one day for the third reading stage of the Bill;

2) on each of the said days, at 15 minutes before the time normally provided as the conclusion of Government Orders, the Speaker shall interrupt any proceeding then under way and shall put forthwith, successively and without further amendment or debate, every question necessary to dispose of the said stage of the Bill; provided that if any such day be a Monday, Tuesday, Thursday or Friday, Private Members' Business shall commence, and continue for one hour, immediately following such proceedings; and

3) following such hour of Private Members' Business or, on other days at the conclusion of proceedings on Bill C-49, as the case may be, the Speaker shall adjourn the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 142)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Belsher
Bernier	Bertrand
Bjornson	Blais
Bosley	Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Chartrand	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Collins
Cooper	Corbeil
Corbett	Côté
Couture	Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling	DeBlois
de Cotret	Desjardins
Dick	Dobbie
Domm	Dorin
Duplessis	Edwards
Epp	Fee
Feltham	Ferland
Fontaine	Fretz
Friesen	Gérin
Greene	Guilbault
Gustafson	Halliday
Harvey (Chicoutimi)	Hawkes
Hicks	Hockin
Hogue	Holtmann
Horning	Hudon
Hughes	Jelinek
Johnson	Jourdenais
Kempling	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Kindy	Koury
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Littlechild
Lopez	MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)	MacKay
Malone	Marin
Martin (Lincoln)	Masse
Mayer	Mazankowski
McCreath	McDermid
McDougall (St. Paul's)	McKnight
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
O'Kurley	Plamondon
Plourde	Porter
Redway	Reid

Reimer	Ricard
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tardif
Tétreault	Thacker
Thompson	Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Québec-Est)	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Halton—Peel)	Valcourt
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vincent
Weiner	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Winegard
Worthy—133

NAYS

Members

Allmand	Althouse
Anawak	Angus
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Baker	Barrett
Bélair	Bellemare
Bevilacqua	Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie	Boudria
Brewin	Butland
Caccia	Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall	Crawford
de Jong	Dingwall
Duhamel	Ferguson
Finestone	Fisher
Flis	Gaffney
Gardiner	Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)	Harb
Harvard	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins	Hovdebo
Hunter	Jordan
Kaplan	Keyes
Kristiansen	Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
Laporte	LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
Lee	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLaren	Manley
Marleau	McCurdy
Mifflin	Milliken
Mills	Mitchell
Murphy	Nault
Nunziata	Nystrom
Pagtakhan	Parker
Peterson	Pickard
Proud	Rideout
Robichaud	Rodriguez
Simmons	Stupich
Taylor	Tobin
Vanclief	Volpe
Walker	Whittaker
Wood	Young (Gloucester)—76

• (1200)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

[English]

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, I was late getting from committee into the House for the vote.

Had I been in the House I would have voted in favour of the motion.

NORDION AND THERATRONICS DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, December 4, consideration of Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 1.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The hon. member for Burin—St. George's had the floor on debate. I would like to recognize the hon. member for Burin—St. George's on the great speech I know we are going to have this afternoon, but it is pretty difficult with members still holding conversations in the chamber.

Would members holding conversations please go behind the curtain.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying when I was interrupted some days ago, this particular resolution, this amendment by my colleague—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. Will hon. members who are having conversations please move behind the curtains. Order, please. The hon. member for Burin—St. George's.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, my good friend from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke put down a number of motions and of course this particular one would have us change the legislation so that some royalties would be collected from the two companies to be privatized, Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited, and that those royalties would be directed back to AECL.

There is a very good reason for that amendment. The people of Canada, the people who own those two companies through AECL which nurtured them in the early years before they improved their bottom line, ought to be the benefactors during some of the good times.

My colleague and I, and all my colleagues here in this caucus, do not think it is fair ball now to take those two companies and put them into the private sector without, in the process, providing some return to the people of Canada on the investment that they put into these two companies over the years. AECL could do with the royalties and it could continue, in turn, to do the kind of work that it has been doing so well over the years.

There is another issue that needs to be addressed while we are talking about the old matter of privatization of those two companies. It is an issue that has come up in pretty well every legislative committee that we have had in this particular session of Parliament. That issue is the government's determination not to hear opposing views on the legislation.

My colleague and I, together with one member from the NDP and several from the Tory side, sat as a legislative committee on Bill C–13. It is a bill which has many ramifications. In its simplest form it would just privatize two companies, but that says it much too simply.

In the process it would put in private hands matters relating to food irradiation, for example. Across this country there are many people who have very legitimate concerns about the issue of food irradiation. We on the committee from this side of the House wanted to call some people who could enlighten the committee in terms of their concerns about food irradiation. My colleague and I had taken the step of being in contact with many people who wanted to appear before the legislative committee on Bill C–13.

• (1210)

They wanted to come and tell us, those who represent the people of Canada here in this place, some of their concerns: their safety concerns, their health concerns. People from the Canadian Cancer Society wanted to come and talk to us about the nuclear medicine issue which arises from this particular subject, for example. Do you know what the Tories did in that particular case? They did what they are doing in every single case without exception.

This is the same crowd which back in 1984 brought in some new rules to give members of this House a fuller opportunity in committee to ensure that legislation would be properly scrutinized. It would give a greater role for individual members from all across this country, yes, but in the process it would give the committees a greater role and, more to the point, it would better serve the Canadian people by ensuring that the legislation proposed in this place which receives first and second reading is properly scrutinized in detail, clause by clause, before it comes to third reading and passage in this chamber.

That was the theory but something went wrong along the way. The government lost its commitment on this issue or, more to the point, decided it did not need the niceties of a committee procedure. So it now sends to committees its mobile gang, its group of parliamentary terrorists, almost, who come in every day with plugs in their ears and shut down the committees one by one, whether it is the committee addressing the question of clawing back seniors' pensions, the committee on Nordion, or any other committee for that matter.

I realize my time has run out so quickly, but there will be other opportunities. I appeal to all members of the House to do in this chamber what we were not allowed to do in committee because of the Tory majority: to say our piece, to express our concerns about nuclear medicine, about food irradiation and the other issues I would have got into had there been time.

Later in the day when we get to other amendments we will be up again, as I hope will every member of this chamber who shares these concerns.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, briefly on the amendment introduced by my friend from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, there has been a number of things raised in the comments on his amendment, the first being that we are trying to rush things through.

On March 4, 1988, almost two years ago, it was announced that Nordion and Theratronics would be divested from AECL and privatized. For the next year the work was done on these two companies to get them in shape for privatization. I had the privilege of introducing the legislation in this House on May 4, 1989.

At that time we had first reading. We went into second reading in June. The bill sat over summer, of course, and got into committee in October. I appeared before the committee and spent a considerable amount of time with my colleagues in committee answering their questions. I understand there were then motions in committee to put a time limit on the debate.

We are opposing this particular amendment, as my friend knows. I have chatted with him privately in this regard. AECL's future and its future funding is not related to the sale of Nordion and Theratronics in any way. I want to make it very clear that Nordion provided a very minor amount, I believe it was less than 5 per cent, of the funding for AECL. That is a separate issue that the minister of energy will address and is addressing at the present time, both the research and the development end of the Candu III, which we have heard a lot about and so on. Those statements will come from the minister of energy at another time and will be separate from what we are talking about here.

I must also comment on a couple of things that were said by my friends in opposition. One was that privatization is a Conservative ideology, that the Conservatives are hell-bent for election on privatization, and that it is strictly a Conservative bent.

If people look at what is going on in the world today they will see that communist countries are privatizing, socialist countries are privatizing, Liberal governments and countries governed by Liberals, God bless them, are privatizing, and Conservative governments are privatizing.

It is obvious that these various types of governments around the world have realized the benefits of corporations being held in private hands and run by the private sector, that in many instances these corporations can be better run and have better opportunities.

I wanted to make that point. I also wanted to point out that Nordion and Theratronics, being successful companies, will now be paying taxes to the federal coffers. We expect them to do extremely well in the private sector, so we would have to oppose this particular motion because AECL's funding requirements are not going to be solved by Nordion and Theratronics.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1, standing in the name of the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-13 be amended in Clause 5 by

(a) striking out line 20 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"5.(1) Nordion and Theratronics shall prepare articles of"

(b) striking out line 27 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"subsection (1), Nordion and Theratronics shall send the ".

Motion No. 3.

That Bill C-13 be amended in Clause 6 by

(a) striking out line 35 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"dion and Theratronics shall contain provisions imposing con-"

(b) striking out line 38 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"Nordion and Theratronics to prevent non-residents, together"

(c) striking out line 2 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"elect the directors of Nordion and Theratronics."

(d) striking out line 7 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"Nordion and Theratronics as if the constraints imposed pursu-"

(e) striking out line 38 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"that relates to voting shares of Nordion and Theratronics;"

(f) striking out line 43 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"Nordion and Theratronics; or"

(g) striking out line 10 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"shares of Nordion and Theratronics held or to be held by the"

(h) striking out line 26 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"securities register of Nordion and Theratronics that any"

(i) striking out line 32 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"Nordion and Theratronics and two thousand such votes, that".

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-13 be amended in Clause 7 by striking out line 5 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"7. Nordion and Theratronics and their shareholders and direc-".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious debate that we are having on these two Crown corporations being privatized. The minister said that the sale of Nordion International and Theratronics International is not going to solve AECL's financial problems because I believe Nordion has been directing only 5 per cent of its revenue toward AECL in the immediate past.

• (1220)

I want to point out to the House and to all Canadians that that is 5 per cent more than this government has been willing to give. I also want to point out that Theratronics and Nordion together have had for 45 years taxpayers' money invested in them. The minister says that these companies are going to make a return to the taxation department of Canada because when they are privatized they will be paying taxes to the Government of Canada. That is nothing new. Every other company that starts from scratch pays taxes into the public Treasury of Canada.

But where are these two companies starting from? They have their factory in place. They have their sources of material in place. They have their marketing in place out there in the world. They have their technicians already in their plant. They have their engineers. They have their specialists. They are starting from an ongoing successful operation.

The minister says that if we do not do this we are not going to give anything in return to the taxpayers of Canada. Both of these companies are predicted to grow considerably in the next few years.

The minister just said that everybody around the world is privatizing. Privatizing is one thing; the method of privatizing is another.

A large source of isotopes have been coming from the NRU reactor and the Chalk River nuclear laboratories. That NRU reactor is ageing. It will require repairs and indeed replacement. The Maple X reactor for the production of isotopes is still not on stream, and we do not know the time frame of when it will be coming on stream.

These amendments dealing with Theratronics were moved because there are no foreign control guarantees built into this bill. Nordion has a protection in this bill from foreign control. Theratronics has nothing. They have left it wide open because they want it to be flexible for investors.

We in this House all know what is going on today under the free trade agreement. We know what is going on in this particular case. If you are not going to put any controls on, then you must be looking for foreign investors. Are we going to stand idly by and allow this government to sell a Crown corporation off without any foreign controls on it after the taxpayers of Canada have brought that company to where it is today? There is an obligation here to deal with the taxpayers of Canada.

We hear often that when people buy things under privatization they have a right to profit, and that is quite true. Otherwise they cannot operate. If the taxpayers of Canada have an investment, should they not also have a return the same as any business?

The money for the sale of these two companies will be paid directly, as came out in the committee hearings, to AECL; but there is no guarantee that money is going to be left with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The government has already shown its hand. It has cut research and development by 50 per cent or $100 million in the 1985 budget of the Mulroney government. They lifted $70 million out of the reserve fund of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

When these companies are sold and the money paid to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited there is absolutely no guarantee—and this was said before our committee—that that money is going to remain there. They can lift it out and put it into the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and heaven knows where it goes from there. We are into the ways and means of doing things here. The taxpayers of Canada are the ones who are going to be the losers.

AECL has had many years of research and development since 1952 on cancer research, Theratronics deals with the cobalt therapy unit for the treatment of cancer and all other related equipment. After 45 years of research, how can we tell a Crown corporation as large as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited today that it is going to be sold?

At a time when we are criss-crossing this country asking Canadians to donate money to the Canadian Cancer Society, we are going to sell off this program which has developed so much specialized treatment, R and D for cancer, to private enterprise with no return whatsoever to the parent organization. We say that this is wrong.

What is going to happen if Theratronics cannot be brought together under a Canadian ownership umbrella? "We are going to have a very flexible agreement or arrangement" says the government "in order to provide funds and provide buyers for Theratronics". Flexibility can mean that any American company, British company and so on can move in, buy up this Canadian taxpayer sponsored company and either stop production or take what they need to add to their own specialized product and Canadians no longer have control of it. There has to be control factors in here on both these operations.

That is the purposes of Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4. Your Honour will notice that there is a whole host of changes in the bill. It simply means that wherever Nordion is mentioned in the bill—and there is protection built in for Nordion—we have applied through these amendments the same protection for Theratronics International on the production of cancer therapy units and related cancer equipment as we have in the Nordion company which produces the medical radio isotopes and irradiation for the industrial community. We feel very strongly about this point.

I want to make one comment before I sit down. I was very anxious to have the Canadian Cancer Society before the committee, but we all know what happened. Without even having one witness, not a single witness outside the presidents of the companies, the two unions of the companies, this government with its majority members in the committee and with the Minister of State for Privatization's legislative assistant sitting behind those members in the committee room, they moved a motion that witnesses not be heard and that we move clause by clause on the bill and report the bill back to the House. This government did not want the people of Canada to know what asset it was selling off. It did not want them to know that it is selling off and privatizing two companies which have done more for the treatment of cancer in this country than any other government agency, and at a time when we are asking people to donate to the Cancer Society of Canada.

I resent the fact that the government has run roughshod over the committee system in the House of Commons. This is only one example of it. Members of the government say that they are getting a hard time with this bill on the floor of the House. What can they expect if they are not going to let Canadians have their say before the committee and if they are not going to have any input from the members of parliament concerning the witnesses whom they want to appear before the committee? It is a good educational matter for all members of parliament and for the Canadian public to know what this government is selling off, to know what assets of ours it is selling off to private enterprise. It is not like any other company paying taxes. This company has all its organization in place from square one and it just takes off and buys a profit-making company.

• (1230)

Meanwhile the parent organization, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, will probably end up getting no return for the 45 years of research that has gone into that company. At the same time this government is saying to that Crown corporation, AECL: "You pay your own way because we are not going to give you any more money. You pay your own way, AECL, but we are going to sell off all your profitable assets". What kind of arithmetic and what kind of business planning is that? That is not business planning at all. That is selling off to your friends and looking for support. You are killing R and D in this country by doing this.

To say that privatization is the only way to go—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the hon. member. I have given him an extra couple of minutes. Is there unanimous consent to give him extra time?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a subamendment to Motion No. 3, section (b), which would strike out lines 38 to 43 and add the following:

> "with the associates thereof, from holding, beneficially owning or controlling, directly or indirectly, otherwise than by way of security only, in the aggregate voting shares to which are attached more than 25 per cent in the case of Nordion and more than 49 per cent in the case of Theratronics."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will take the subamendment under advisement. We will continue with the intervention of the hon. member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think that the member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke has very clearly put before the House a serious gap which exists in this piece of legislation as it presently stands.

The logic of the government tells it with respect to Nordion to move ahead and put a 25 per cent restriction with respect to foreign ownership on this company. There is, however, absolutely no restriction with respect to Theratronics.

Theratronics is, in my view, in a slightly different category than Nordion. Nordion is a company which has shown an expansion over recent years which is quite dramatic. It is in a field in which the products which it produces are moving ahead with an ever-widening market evident before it. To talk about a 25 per cent restriction is sensible. It is very much consistent with what this government claims to be its commitment to Canadianization.

However, this commitment to Canadianization is equally important to recognize with respect to Theratronics. Theratronics is not a company which has as completely a rosy future as Nordion appears to have. Theratronics is a company which, frankly, operates with a technology which is not as close to the frontier, one which faces therefore a more difficult future. I think in a case like this it is proper to look for an arrangement which stresses the Canadianization principle with somewhat less force than is true with Nordion. It is for that reason that I suggested the 49 per cent level.

Nevertheless, it seems to me that if one is prepared to take the principle of Canadianization and to put that principle into effect with one of these companies as it is privatized, then it is equally important to put that same principle into effect with the other company.

I agree that it is important to allow somewhat more flexibility, but to do so is one thing. To ignore the principle entirely, as this present piece of legislation does, is simply not to my mind a reflection of either government policy as it has been enunciated or of the logic which has been applied to Nordion in this very bill. Nor do I believe that it is consistent with the generally held views of most people across this country. While they may or may not be in favour of seeing the first case of a company in the nuclear industry being privatized, they certainly are not in favour of seeing us put this company into a position where it is possible for it to be lost to the Canadian people who have invested in the company and for it to become a privately foreign-owned firm. My subamendment provides sufficient scope to the employees of Theratronics to be able to work out some sort of a partnership if they feel that is necessary. That partnership will nevertheless be a partnership which remains under Canadian control. That is something which is extremely important, certainly to my mind.

• (1240)

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to say a few words on the subject.

I must admit that I have been following this issue perhaps not as closely as some other issues, but there is a logic with which I am concerned. It is a genuine concern. I am delighted that I have the opportunity to voice my concern. I am speaking on the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

Before we get to that, I do have to express my concern, which I think has been expressed by some of my other colleagues, about the general feeling about privatization of our nuclear industry. It is something I have always held dear, and I am certainly familiar with the background of atomic energy in Canada and the business of Canadians being in on the ground floor of this very important and key industry for the country. I was very surprised when I saw that measures were being taken to privatize this key industry in Canada.

On the issue of this particular amendment put forward by my honourable colleague, I have a problem in following the logic put forward. I believe it is safe to say that Canadians watching this debate are wondering what on earth the members of Parliament are talking about What is the issue at stake here? What is being discussed?

What is being discussed is a sense of logic and certain inconsistencies that do not seem to have any reason or any basis. I think it is worth while to look at and to review the similarities between the two companies being privatized and what they do.

Both Nordion and Theratronics go back 45 years. They were created as divisions of Eldorado Mining and Refining. In the early 1950s they were transferred to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

On September 30, 1988, Nordion was incorporated and transferred to CIDC in anticipation of privatization. Nordion is primarily a radio chemical company and has two main lines of business, isotope products and industrial radiation.

Theratronics on the other hand does have the same background in the sense that it commenced operations in 1946 as part of Eldorado Mining and Refining, was transferred to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited in 1952 and, similarly, on September 30 of last year was incorporated as Theratronics International and transferred to the CDIC in anticipation of privatization. But Theratronics is an organization that is concerned primarily with medical products. I think a lot of Canadians know and appreciate that Theratronics was a pioneer in cancer treatment. It was responsible for designing the world's first cobalt therapy machine in 1951 just before its transfer to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

The point made previously by my hon. colleague for Essex—Windsor was that there are some dissimilarities between the companies. The one he was concerned about primarily, and I share his concern, was that Nordion because of its product and the way it is, and because of its gross sales and the number of people it employs shows some expansion possibilities. It shows possibilities that would lend itself to one set of conditions. On the other hand, my understanding is that Theratronics for a number of reasons is not considered at this point in time to be on the cutting edge of technology. The general belief is that maybe the future is not as rosy as it is for Nordion. There is therefore a requirement for a Canadianization factor here.

Listening to my colleagues I was given to believe that there was some mechanical difficulty, or that there was some question of not co-operating, or maybe even a fluke of the committee system, but the Canadianization aspect of one company was not made as important as it was for the other. I am at a loss to really comprehend why this is so.

I look at the amendment that was put forward by my colleague for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke and, as I understand it, Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 relate to the several provisions to the sale of Nordion with regard to foreign ownership. These same provisions are not applied to Theratronics. I cannot understand why. I believe it should be so.

It is my firm belief that we should go forward in this regard and do whatever is necessary, whether it is a voting procedure, work of the committee, a deal that we can make behind closed doors, or some other way to deal with the Canadianization of this one company—indeed, the one that I believe needs Canadianization more than the other. We should move forward to approve these amendments to make sure this aspect is included in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in favour of the amendments proposed by my colleague to Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited.

It is known that both companies were, until recently, unincorporated divisions of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, but that after incorporation the two companies were transferred to the Canada Development Investment Corporation as a prelude to privatization.

In May 1988 the president of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited stated that AECL should realize some benefits from the sale of the two companies. These two companies have been seen as valuable properties. AECL had hoped the sale of both companies would help Atomic Energy of Canada Limited through a number of difficult years. The process occurred more slowly than expected and is no longer controlled by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

The president was worried that AECL would be deprived of the cash flow of these companies and would not receive any compensation from the sales. I think on that basis the rationale for Motion No. 1 was proposed, which rationale I support.

For the past 45 years the federal government, and therefore the Canadian people, have invested a large amount of money into funding, research and development of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. The two companies we are discussing today have provided very profitable divisions for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and provided it with a cash flow which will be lost when these two companies are sold, unless we have guarantees of safety for the Canadian people.

In addressing Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4, I would like the same type of conditions to be imposed on the sale of Theratronics as would be on Nordion. Canadian control is desirable if we are to retain control of their policy. If these institutions have to be used as instruments of public policy, we have to ensure that ownership by Canadians to a great extent is retained. No similar restriction is evident in the current bill on the future ownership of Theratronics, hence my support for the amendments proposed by my colleague. In this way we can ensure that ownership is not transferred beyond Canadian hands.

• (1250)

The medical products division of Theratronics International Limited has the technological leadership in the design, installation and application of cobalt therapy equipment. Because it is involved with this type of therapy equipment it is essential that we maintain that ability to control policies so far as this company is concerned. If we were to leave it purely to the grace of foreign hands it may in fact threaten our ability to deliver essential medical therapy to patients with cancer in this country. That we must safeguard with all our might.

Theratronics, when separated from Nordion some three years ago, was earning some $40 million in revenue. The vice-president of the Medical Products Division says it could have a 30 per cent to 40 per cent growth in revenue in the next five years. We would not like to surrender profit. We would like it to remain in Canadian hands.

Theratronics' employees have been offered a priority opportunity to purchase the company. That would seem to be a welcome message. However, if the conditions thereafter are not clear in terms of being retained within Canadian control then this seemingly welcome sale of first opportunity to the employees would lose meaning in the future. If our will is to see to it that it remains in Canadian control then we must prescribe it in the bill through amendments as proposed by my colleague.

The other aspect that I would like to indicate to the House is that Theratronics' manufacturers are involved with the process of irradiation of food. Since there is a continuing debate as to the safety or non-safety of this process, I think we first have to settle that issue before we relinquish this to foreign hands and thereby lose control over this policy question. If there was a loss of regulatory control over these companies, foreign private buyers could take irradiation technology and impose irradiated food on Canadians or, in fact, citizens of the Third World beyond our control.

Canada has to play a moral leadership role on health care for the whole world and ensure that citizens of Third World countries may not be allowed to be guinea pigs in the future.

In conclusion, I support the amendments proposed by my colleague to protect the interests of Canadians who have contributed through our tax system to the development of the company in question; to ensure the viability of Atomic Energy Canada Limited and in fact prevent a continuing loss on the part of that institution; and to ensure that use and research and development of nuclear technology remain within Canadian control and therefore properly use this institution as an instrument of Canadian public policy.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the hon. minister I would like to rule on the subamendment of the hon. member for Essex—Windsor.

The amendment which the hon. member from Essex—Windsor would propose to move would in fact add a new proposition not relevant to Motion No. 3. It should stand by itself as an independent motion, notice of which should have been given before the start of the report stage pursuant to Standing Order 76(2).

I also refer the hon. member to Citation 437 of Beauchesne's fifth edition. Therefore I must rule the amendment out of order.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the amendments before the House presented by my friend from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke and also the arguments that were presented in the amendment that was presented by my colleague from Essex—Windsor. The government has listened to the arguments for restriction of non-resident ownership of Theratronics. While it is our desire to sell Theratronics, hopefully to its employees with the fewest restrictions possible, it now believes that it would be in the interests of the company and Canadians to put some restrictions on the non-resident ownership of Theratronics' voting shares and to ensure that Canadian control is maintained.

It believes, however, that in order for the company to prosper in the future Theratronics will need to search for new technologies and new product lines. This may involve joint venturing or allowing a prospective partner to acquire an ownership interest in Theratronics. Therefore we have decided that limiting non-resident ownership to a maximum of 49 per cent of the company's voting shares would be appropriate.

I am prepared to introduce an amendment to that effect, if I have the unanimous consent of the House, and if my colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke with whom we have had discussions is prepared to withdraw his amendments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McDermid: I move:

That Bill C-13 be amended

(a) by adding, immediately after line 12 on page 6, the following:

THERATRONICS

8. Sections 5 to 7 apply to Theratronics as if

(a) the references therein to "Nordion" were references to "Theratronics"; and

(b) the reference in subsection 6(1) to "twenty-five per cent" were a reference to "forty-nine percent."

(b) by renumbering the subsequent clauses and the cross-references thereto accordingly.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker I have one all-encompassing question to ask the minister for clarification. We have not had time to look through all of these clauses. He knows that with my Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4, there are a whole host of amendments contained therein to make the foreign control protection of Theratronics the same as it is for Nordion.

I would like to have him give his guarantee in the House that this new amendment which will retain 51 per cent Canadian control and no more than 49 per cent foreign control is applicable to every clause and every subclause in every part of the bill. Will he give us that undertaking?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, yes, of course I would give that undertaking. We have designed our amendment a little differently from that of the hon. member. Rather than going through and doubling, if you will, the legislation, we have just applied Theratronics to Nordion with the one exception, that is, the percentage of foreign ownership. As the hon. member knows it is 25 per cent for Nordion. It will be 49 per cent for Theratronics. But all other conditions that apply to Nordion also apply now to Theratronics.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that clarification. I want to say that it pays to put motions down on the Order Paper around here and to put these amendments forward. I say that because we have had a lot of input from this side of the House. It is very important that these companies be sold with Canadian control on them. I am glad this has been done. I think we now have half a loaf instead of a whole one, but sometimes that is better than none.

• (1300)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call upon the hon. member for Essex—Windsor—we will not see the clock—but I would like to ask the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke if it is agreed by him to withdraw Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, we agree to withdraw Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 dealing with the foreign control measure on Theratronics in return for the 51–49 protection that has been offered.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there agreement by the House not to see the clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, and then I will recognize the hon. member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Milliken: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions between the parties and I think there would be agreement to continue the sitting from now until no later than 2 p.m. and that at 2 p.m. there would be an understanding that the proceedings on this bill would be interrupted and the question put on third reading of the bill. I believe you will find there is a disposition to deal with the divisions at report stage during the next hour, if it takes that long, in a way that allows them to be either passed or defeated according to the majority, but on division.

At two o'clock the proceedings would be interrupted, the question put on third reading of this bill, and any division demanded at that time would be deferred until 3 p.m., and I think it would be deemed to be demanded at that time and deferred until 3 p.m. so the division can be held at that time. I think that is the understanding reached between the parties.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We really cannot go to third reading until we defer Motion No. 1.

Mr. Milliken: Motion No. 1 has been deferred. I believe it will be dealt with on division at the appropriate time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to call upon the hon. member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, my two colleagues have made some brief comments on something which is perhaps rarer than it should be in the House of Commons, but I am certainly very pleased to see a degree of co-operation which has made it possible to achieve a double objective which all of us sought, an objective of ownership restrictions to keep Theratronics in Canadian hands, plus an objective to see as much latitude within that constraint as possible for this company which has somewhat more difficult prospects than Nordion in the private sector.

I would simply like to add my support to the arrangement which has been worked out and to say that I hope it is not just a sign of Christmas cheer, but a sign of better things in the future in terms of co-operation across the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are to be withdrawn. Is it agreed with unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion Nos. 2, 3, and 4 withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, as an interested member, I just thought I would try to capsulize what my understanding of the agreement would be. There is an amendment before the House, Motion No. 1. That amendment has to be disposed of before we can proceed to any debate on third reading. We would be agreeable right now to dispose of that motion at this stage and then proceed to third reading after that by unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question has already been put on Motion No. 1 and has been deferred pursuant to the Standing Order for a deferred division.

First, is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion standing in the name of Mr. McDermid?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Normally, the House should now proceed to taking the deferred division at report stage, particularly on Motion No. 1 of the bill before this House. Shall we take that on division?

Mr. Gauthier: We will see, Mr. Speaker. Put the motion and we will dispose of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has been put. The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier knows it has been put. But I will naturally put it again for the hon. member.

We are moving so fast here. It is just wonderful to see such Christmas spirit.

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-13 be amended by adding immediately after line 19 at page 2 the following new clause:

"5. There shall be paid to the Crown corporation Atomic Energy of Canada Limited by Nordion and Theratronics an annual royalty on any profits of these corporations that exceed the sum of ten thousand dollars during any calendar year, and Nordion and Theratronics shall pay the Crown corporation an annual royalty as follows:

(a) on annual profits in excess of ten thousand dollars and up to one million dollars, three per cent;

(b) on the excess above one million dollars up to five million dollars, five per cent;

(c) on the excess above five million dollars up to ten million dollars, six per cent; and

(d) on the excess above ten million dollars, a proportional increase of one per cent for each additional five million dollars."

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On division.

Motion negatived.

Hon. John McDermid moved that Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some Hon. Members: Now, by leave.

Hon. John McDermid moved that Bill C-13 be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am going to lead off the debate on third reading by first thanking my colleagues in the House, the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing, my hon. friend from Essex—Windsor, and also my colleague for Kingston and the Islands for their co-operation today in facilitating the minister in moving ahead on this very important bill. I do thank my colleague from Essex—Windsor, with whom I have had some very interesting times over the last few years, what with the free trade agreement and after being appointed a minister of the Crown, I found out that he is critic and I enjoy working with him very much. As he says, sometimes it is a little tense, but we do work well together. I want to thank them all for their co-operation.

We are at third reading of Bill C-13 which authorizes the divestiture of Nordion International and Theratronics. These former subsidiaries of Atomic Energy have made an impressive contribution to the advancement of medical science. Products and services provided by them are helping people around the world to live longer, healthier lives.

Nordion is a leading international supplier of industrial sterilization systems and medical diagnostic products. In addition, it is a major producer of radio isotopes and finished radio pharmaceuticals for international markets.

Theratronics produces and sells two main groups of products to radio-therapy clinics, Cobalt radio-therapy treatment and computerized treatment-planning equipment.

Both of these companies are export-oriented world-class companies in the vanguard of the nuclear medicine field. The new technologies pioneered by them have created sizeable market niches around the world for their products. To stay on the leading edge, however, they needed flexibility to respond or, better, anticipate a rapidly changing market-place. Transferring Nordion and Theratronics to the private sector will help make them stronger, more flexible, and more competitive. It will give them access to new capital and the freedom to pursue new synergistic relationships that contribute to the long-term growth and stability. Nordion and Theratronics already have a private sector operating philosophy. They will benefit by the opportunity to exercise it freely.

• (1310)

I had the pleasure of visiting both these companies and of talking to the employees. They are very excited about this privatization and look forward to participating actively in it. Strengthening these companies will benefit the employees because, as has been said many times in this Chamber, the best guarantee of jobs and future prospects for employees is a dynamic and growing company. As well, a stronger Nordion and Theratronics benefits the country as a whole because their exports are important to our future economic development.

No valid reason exists that justifies continuing government ownership of either Nordion or Theratronics. The companies serve no public policy purpose. As for concerns about safety, a strict regulatory regime controlling all aspects of manufacturing, handling and transportation of radioactive material is in place in Canada. This will not change one iota with privatization.

The legislation we are considering today sets out certain conditions under which the divestiture will take place. These conditions are designed to protect employees' interests and to maximize the benefits to the company and to the Canadian public.

Nordion and Theratronics are different companies with different strengths. Because of this, it is our intention to proceed with a method of sale unique to each company.

In the case of Nordion, we intend to offer the company for sale to a third party. Our financial advisers have recommended this approach because it provides maximum benefits to the company in terms of stability of operations, access to new capital, the opening of additional markets through the purchaser, and the synergy of relationship if the purchaser is in a similar or complementary business.

Theratronics is smaller and its market value is less than Nordion. It is as a result an appropriate candidate for an employee buy-out. To assist employees in developing a purchase proposal the government has offered to provide them with the necessary funding to hire financial advisers. It is our plan also to give their proposal priority before the company is offered to corporate purchasers.

I must point out that Nordion employees have also expressed an interest in purchasing an ownership interest in their company. They have similarly been assisted with funding to cover the cost of hiring advisers. They will, in addition, be given a 10 per cent discount on the purchase of a minority interest.

Since 1984 my government has worked hard to build a strong new foundation on which Canadians would achieve their economic potential. A number of structural policies and reforms have been introduced that have raised the prospects for growth and higher living standards for Canadians. Privatization is one of them. By transferring Nordion and Theratronics to the private sector, we are building for the future. I am proud to say that Canadians like what we are doing. Since 1984 our economy has expanded faster than most other industrialized countries, as a matter of fact, second only to Japan. More than 1.5 million jobs have been created, some 200,000 this year alone. Our economic strategy is obviously working. To assure that we continue to make economic progress, we must be steadfast in our goals in the face of those who prefer the status quo.

Nordion and Theratronics have the right stuff to become world leaders in the private sector. Bill C-13 gives them the chance to succeed. I want to wish both companies, their executives and, most importantly, their employees my best wishes for the future. I think they have an exciting future and Bill C-13 will help to guarantee that.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to have listened to the Minister who did not really at any stage talk about what these two companies actually do. I was wondering why he did not get into talking about the cancer therapy units, the medical radioisotopes and so on.

Mr. McDermid: I did.

Mr. Hopkins: You did on that one? All right, I thank you for that, but it was not really a blazing advertisement that I heard from over here.

The next question in all this, of course, is the future source of medical radioisotopes and the isotope market in general. The NR reactor at Chalk River is an old reactor and it produces our supply of isotopes today. It is rather scary that AECL is not being provided with a budget by this government to maintain the NRU reactor for this purpose. There are repairs going to be needed to it because it is becoming an older facility but we also have in the making a Maple X reactor which will be used exclusively for the production of isotopes. The original estimate of the cost of building the Maple X was $10 million five years ago, and the government has since updated that. Today it is going to cost about $35 million alone for that facility.

There has been an arrangement between Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Nordion International for the ongoing receipt from AECL of isotopes for the next 22 years. There is also a condition built into that which is the inclusion in this agreement of a provision that calls for Nordion to contribute $17 million through 1991 for new isotope production facilities.

The problem with the ageing NRU reactor has been identified. But my understanding is, and I have heard this talked about considerably, that the agreement signed between Nordion's previous personnel and Atomic Energy of Canada relating to this 22 years of guarantee of isotope production was done under pressure from the government because it wanted to sell these two profitable parts of the Atomic Energy Crown Corporation.

As a result, the agreement would show on the face of it that AECL will be losing money on that agreement for every one of those years. This is something that I would like the Minister to answer to. Is AECL going to continue to lose money every year on this agreement which now exists between Nordion and AECL for the production of isotopes and the receipt of them by Nordion? That is a 22-year guarantee.

If Atomic Energy of Canada is going to lose money on that agreement that was brought about under pressure from the government to sign it, then this again drains funds away from the parent company, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Then the government's devastating program becomes two-fold. Number one, it says it is no longer going to finance AECL for R and D, that is must pay its way; and then is there indeed a loss of money each year for AECL on the agreement between Nordion International and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited? Those are the questions that the minister should answer today before the closing of this debate. He should state whether or not the government will revise that agreement to make sure that the user pays. The theory of this government is that the user must pay. So, since Nordion will now be the user of AECL, will the government make sure that it pays for that isotope production? The whole facility is in place throughout, the staff, factory and markets. It would be totally unfair to walk away and leave the parent Crown corporation with a loss in its own markets each year of that 22-year agreement.

• (1320)

Will the minister state to us today that he will see to it that Atomic Energy does, in fact, make money on that production when it sells or supplies isotopes to Nordion International? That is a very fair question because the government is after Ontario Hydro for greater contributions to the Crown corporation. So any products sold to any other organization or company in or outside of Canada should also more than pay its own way because it is obvious that this Crown corporation must have an income in the years to come.

It should be pointed out that Nordion has shown steady growth over the past four years and is projecting this trend to continue. It always had a good product to sell and has done very well. It has done well because it had an outstanding research and development facility on which to base its operations, namely the parent AECL operation.

The government says incorporation and transfer to the CDIC has had a positive effect on Theratronics, but it turned up in evidence in committee that Theratronics was making a profit before it was turned over to the Crown corporation CDIC. That should be pointed out because the government is trying to make people believe that this particular Crown corporation only became profitable after it had changed its status. That is not correct and there is no evidence to support it.

The amendment from the government today protecting Theratronics from foreign ownership and retaining ownership in Canadian hands is a big achievement.

In opposition you put forward your points and put motions on the Order Paper. With this majority government you know where you are going to end up. You are lucky if you get anything out of it. But in this particular deal a number of opposition members have taken up the cudgel and debated this bill very well. I want to congratulate my colleagues on the way they talked about this particular bill. I do not think the significance of the sale of Nordion International and Theratronics International, or what those two Crown corporations even stood for would have been known to many Canadians if this debate had not taken place.

Then, of course, we have that great theory in Canada projected by people who want to say that everything nuclear is bad. They try to relate it to nuclear weapons but there is no relation between the peaceful uses of the nuclear industry and war-time use. We must get that fact straight here in the House.

The reason I put forward the amendments on this bill and the reason we tried to highlight it becomes very obvious. It is time that we tried to educate everybody to the fact that if it was not for the CANDU reactors that have been produced by Atomic Energy of Canada over the years, there would be far more acid rain in the atmosphere than there is today.

You have heard me say it before, but I will repeat it for greater emphasis. This country would have had to spend more than $8 billion to buy coal from Pennsylvania to fire coal furnaces in this country to produce the same amount of hydro electric power in the Province of Ontario alone as has been produced over those years by the CANDU reactor. The CANDU reactor is indeed the safest one in the world. There is no relationship whatsoever to the structure of the one at Chernobyl. Of course, when there is an accident or someone who is not following the safety rules properly, it reflects on the whole industry.

It is the same thing in politics, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure you have seen a few occasions over the years when one politician gets into trouble and every politician becomes condemned.

When one nuclear plant gets into trouble because people have neglected to do the right things and neglected looking after it properly or maybe the design was wrong in the first place, then every nuclear reactor becomes suspect. That is wrong and it is bad.

We have here in Canada this great base of technology in the CANDU reactor and in nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. In this Canada of ours, we have one of the greatest foundations to continue to build this nation industrially. And as there is the energy to supply factories, jobs are produced. Without energy, jobs cannot be produced. As well, we have the capacity to continue the growth of that industrial and commercial base and, indeed, the tourism base and all others, including agriculture. With this we will have the jobs that are coming on stream for the future, but more than that, and this is something that is not very often talked about, is the fact that there is the industrial base, the taxation income for government to help it control its finances, if it is capable of controlling them in the first place, and to pay for those very valuable social programs for senior citizens, veterans and for those other Canadians who cannot look after themselves. Surely, that is the social conscience of our nation.

I am very disappointed that the government did not relinquish some ground on the royalties issue, because the income coming back into the major corporation, AECL, is really what is going to continue that in depth research down the road. That is needed because a great research company such as this is not one that can be judged simply in dollars and cents. It produces a great variety of activity out there. These two companies are a perfect example of it. Then, of course, Ontario Hydro has adopted the nuclear energy route and has certainly shown how great the corporation can really be.

I am disappointed that no further income has come into AECL's treasury via royalties from these two companies. I would have to say to the Minister of Privatization that I hope he will sincerely support the Minister of Energy in this House, in Cabinet, to make sure that the parent corporation is funded and that that great research and development, of which we have seen the results over a period of 47 years since the founding of the AECL Corporation in 1952, be continued as a thriving operation and continue to produce companies and great works and world famous products for Canada.

• (1330)

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate and thank the science community who, over the years, have contributed so much in the 45 years to research that has gone on in these two companies and the great work that it has done in combating one of the worst diseases we have in our society today, that being cancer. I would only encourage them to continue to do more.

I hope that the Minister of Energy, the Minister of State for Privatization, the Prime Minister and others will come to grips with the fact that this Crown corporation has got to continue. It has to be the parent company that is going to produce many more products and companies and be a great asset to Canada, not only for the revenue but for the social economic good of the entire country.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): I think this small bill in fact raises some major issues. It is a bill which has not, as with many bills which go through the House of Commons, received a great deal of public attention. In fact, it is a bill which raises in quite a dramatic way a number of important points which are quite significant for the future of our country and, to some degree, the future of our parliamentary system.

The first question is whether active parts of the nuclear industry should be privatized. I suspect that most people across this country would share my sense of unease at the privatization of parts of the nuclear industry. The president of the union at Nordion who was speaking on behalf of his workers said:

> On the issue of health and safety, the membership is concerned that under privatization the major concern of the new company would be high profit versus safety. The high cost of fail-proof safety systems might be more than the new company will be willing to install and maintain.

He went on to say:

> It is our membership's belief that a government-owned establishment is more responsible to its employees' needs in health and safety.

As well, he said:

> —a government-owned nuclear industry must be responsible to the public and respect the public's views of the unknown in the nuclear industry. A private company is only responsible to its shareholders and its customers.

That was Mr. Frank Amyot, the president of Local 70367 of the Public Service Alliance of Canada who is president of the largest group of employees of Nordion International. That is a person who represents workers in this company. Mr. Eades, president of Local 70367 of Theratronics, made the point that:

> Given the choice, most employees would prefer to remain a Crown corporation because of the disruption to our pensions, possible changes in working conditions and the apprehension of whether the business is viable at the present time as a private company.

I think this may be simply a misguided sense of nuclear power within our society. But, part of it has to reflect the realities of recent years within our world such as the accident at Chernobyl which only recently we have come to understand was much greater in terms of the negative impact on people and the environment than we were given to understand at that time. So there is a concern across this country with respect to the nuclear industry.

I would have to say were I a government minister searching industries for firms to privatize, the privatization of the nuclear industry would not spring to mind as something that most Canadians would feel comfortable with and strongly support. I think most Canadians, if they look south to the United States, would receive some further support for their scepticism.

The nuclear industry in the United States is by and large in private hands and because of that has been an industry which has created serious fears right across the United States. My constituents live nine miles from a major United States nuclear plant which has been identified as one of the least reliable and one of the most mistake-ridden of any nuclear power plant in the United States.

My constituents ask, why is this the case? They have come to the conclusion that a big reason for the mistake is the pressure of powerful private sector individuals and corporations who are behind this particular power plant, Fermi II, who have pushed it ahead without sufficient attention to safety and the health, not just of workers in that plant, but to the safety and health of communities on the U.S. and Canadian sides of the border.

The previous Liberal member who spoke I think made a valid point when he stated that we have a different kind of nuclear technology in this country. It is a kind of nuclear technology which nevertheless leaves us with tremendous waste products. We have not yet found a solution on how to get rid those waste products.

• (1340)

I believe, as someone who worries about the environmental future of our country, that it is simply inexcusable that we should continue to produce nuclear waste which we do not know how to get rid of, despite the fact that we have produced those nuclear wastes now for probably 30 to 40 years in this country.

I think there is a significant question which needs to be asked about whether it makes sense to privatize the nuclear industry. Most of us on this side of the House, certainly in the New Democratic Party, have very severe concerns about the privatization of two parts of the nuclear industry for the first time, and it is for that reason that we will not be able to support this privatization.

We also think, however, that there are some very important questions which need to be asked about the whole privatization thrust of this government. Much of it is a reflection of an ideological commitment, rather than the application of any kind of common sense, the application of an economic analysis, or an environmental analysis of what should be taking place in our country.

It seems to us that this is especially the case with respect to this particular set of privatizations. With Nordion and Theratronics, the minister and his officials have tried to paint for us a picture of these firms as somehow separate from the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. It seems to me that in reality Nordion and Theratronics were in the past and continue to be very tightly integrated into AECL's operations. They depend on AECL for their nuclear material. In so far as they do not depend on AECL, they depend on Ontario Hydro which is yet another public enterprise in this country.

It seems to me that to artificially take these two enterprises and to privatize them when they are caught in an excess of public enterprises is simply to a make gesture for the sake of ideology, which makes no sense from any practical perspective. I could continue to talk about the principles which are involved with respect to privatizations. I think it is perhaps especially unfortunate that this government has never at any stage given us any principles by which it intends to assess whether a company should or should not become privatized.

It seems to me that one must have some logical principles from which to begin before one can perceive and make sensible decisions with respect to privatization. I urge this government at some stage to make a statement with respect to its principles in thinking about privatization.

I am pleased that we have at least been able to maintain another important principle, the principle that high tech industries which Canadian taxpayers have paid to build in this country should have to remain in Canadian hands.

We have maintained the principle of Canadianization. With respect to Nordion it has been maintained at 25 per cent. In return for certain agreements on our side, the government has conceded that it would accept a constraint of 49 per cent with respect to Theratronics, so far as Canadian control is concerned.

I have to congratulate the government for accepting the need to listen occasionally to the opposition, and the need to see in this case the logic of applying Canadianization principles to both companies.

I have to finish with some final words of regret. I have been occupied elsewhere as some in the House have noted. I have to say in looking back over the committee proceedings at the legislative committee stage for this bill—and I know the minister shares my view with respect to this—there was a very vast and very sad effort on the part of the Conservative members of that committee to rush this bill through legislative committee.

Legislative committee, as members across this House have seen it, is a stage that permits members of the public to express their questions, concerns and uncertainties; to have them cleared up and in some cases accepted, and in other cases rejected. It is an important part of the new approach to the development and consideration of legislation which the House of Commons has adopted in recent years. I am therefore very disappointed that the legislative committee in this case did not even give consideration to the suggested witnesses from the opposition, neither from the Liberal party nor from ourselves in the New Democratic Party. I hope that this will never happen again in the future.

I would conclude on a non-partisan note by simply quoting one of the Conservative members of that committee, a member known to the speaker himself, the member from Edmonton—Strathcona. I think the whole House should take his words very seriously for the future. He said:

> I would agree with the two opposition members. Having gone to all that work, as you have done, and having phoned those witnesses, it is unfair on our side not to have notified you. It is my understanding that the government would like this through, and that is why we are proceeding.
>
> As a member of Parliament who sits on the Elections, Privileges, Procedures and Private Members' Business Committee, I think this does a great disservice to the process of legislative committees. I would just like to sympathize with you. I understand your concern.

• (1350)

I would hope in the future that we would see not just an understanding of the concern of the opposition that legislative committees operate successfully and fairly, but that these committees operate with a sense of fairness for everybody throughout this House of Commons.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to speak again on Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Incorporated and Theratronics International Limited.

In the spirit of co-operation that the government through its minister has shown in addressing one major concern raised by the official opposition and the other opposition, that of safeguarding the majority control of shares by Canadians and thereby safeguarding the interests of Canadians, I would like to give credit to the government.

Speaking of credit, I would like to compliment my colleague for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke for his dutiful and careful study of the bill, for the detailed amendments placed on the Order Paper and for sensitizing the government to the need to guarantee majority Canadian ownership of these two companies and thereby use these companies properly as instruments of public policy.

A year ago in December when I entered Parliament I recall having said that Parliament is an institution not only for the government, but for the Canadian people. It is a forum for reconciliation of competing ideas. Today we have shown that the opposition truly has a significant and important role in our parliamentary system, if only the government would from time to time and hopefully more frequently, listen to the opposition.

The bill, as amended, now allows the companies to be used as instruments of public policy. What do I mean by that? We will be able, by the continuing Canadian ownership of these companies, to use these companies as sources of revenues to finance and to allow jobs for Canadians; to ensure that research and development are undertaken on Canadian soil; to fund our many social programs such as medicare which is a program for all citizens; and to ensure the health and safety of Canadians, both consumers and employees.

Also Canadian ownership will allow us to set standards for health safety for other citizens of the world just as we do for Canadians. We will ensure that the availability of necessary nuclear technology for medical health, like cobalt therapy, will be ensured at reasonable cost and that last but not least, we will have the ability to impose environmental standards agreeable to the Canadian philosophy.

Speaking of philosophy, it should be a Canadian philosophy of approach insofar as nuclear technology and its development and use are concerned that we ought to always control it. It is so sensitive an area that we cannot let it go and pass to foreign hands.

In conclusion, the bill was amended by the government largely due I would say to the sensitization brought about by the opposition. I thank my colleague again. With the government having listened once at least, we will ensure a "Canadians first" policy. On behalf of Winnipeg North, my constituents in that riding, I welcome this amended bill and support it. Again, in the spirit of Christmas, I would like to see more of this happening for the interest of all Canadians.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, as you will know, by prior agreement we have decided to cut off the debate on this issue in about four minutes. I shall now proceed to give one of my famous short speeches. It may be my shortest speech of all. You may decide whether it is famous when I am finished, Mr. Speaker.

First I want to congratulate my friend for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. I tell the minister that I take pride in holding the record for another speech in another House.

Mr. McDermid: I remember it.

Mr. Simmons: That one, too. But in the Newfoundland House of Assembly it only went 16 hours and 42 minutes. The member is lucky we have a limit today. I congratulate my good friend for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke because he has done so much work on this bill and he has finally beaten some sense into the minister and the government.

I harken back to what my friend for Essex—Windsor was saying a minute ago about the committee process. I hope the government has learned another lesson. We have made the point during debate, and there is not time to make it at any length right now, but I believe members in the chamber know exactly what I am talking about. The government tried a particular ploy. It must admit that ploy is in disarray. Sending in the parliamentary goons to shut down the committee did not work. It worked in the short term because might is right in that situation. It had the numbers to shut down the committee.

Upon reflection, what we have done here in the last two or three days in the House could easily be done in an hour. The minister knows that and I know that. The reason it took several days is because we did not get an opportunity to do it in committee. We give notice again that we are going to have our say on those matters.

I would hope we can have our say in committee. I would also hope we can allow other people to come before the committee to have their say on matters of concern to them. But if the government keeps shutting us down in committee, we give notice we will take the time it requires to do it right here on the floor of the House.

We would rather it be in committee because that is where we can bring other people, people who are not elected members of the House but nevertheless have concerns about whether the nuclear industry ought to be privatized, concerns about food irradiation, concerns about nuclear medicine and I could go on. I make an appeal again that the committee process be respected by the government.

Finally, let me comment on the question of research and development. This debate has been very revealing in that particular regard. The government figures have been very revealing.

I saw the Minister of State for Forestry here a little while ago. I remember when he was in opposition and I was on the government side, he eloquently stated that when the Tories came to power there would be a great increase in the amount of dollars devoted to R and D. Well, he ought to look at the figures today. He will find that people are realizing from coast to coast that this government has not put its money where its mouth is on research and development. More and more of our research is being conducted outside the country, and we are the losers in many respects.

There are many other things I would like to say, but my time is up. I thank you for your usual tolerance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): According to the understanding reached earlier, the question on the motion for third reading of Bill C–13 is now deemed to be put, a recorded division deemed demanded and deferred until later today at 3 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Guy St–Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) signed an agreement with his provincial counterparts, which provides for reducing obstacles to interprovincial trade in food and agricultural products.

The diligent efforts of the Minister of State for Agriculture and hon. member for Bellechasse were also instrumental in helping this agreement materialize. This is a major step towards reducing or eliminating altogether about 170 interprovincial barriers that prevent Canada's agri–food industry from operating at full capacity. The agreement should also result in supermarket savings for Canadian consumers.

Mr. Speaker, one thing that is not working very well for Canadian farmers at the present time is the situation on the St. Lawrence Seaway and especially the fact that NDP members here in Parliament are getting their instructions from the unions.

• (1400)

[English]

INCOME TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, yesterday amendments to the Income Tax Act dealing with tax assistance for retirement savings were tabled in the House of Commons. By increasing the limit on the amount of retirement savings eligible for tax assistance, these amendments are largely to the benefit of high income earners; those who can afford to take advantage of the increased limits and shelter a larger proportion of their income in RRSPs.

At the same time that all Canadians are being asked to tighten their belts and pay the goods and services tax, high income Canadians are being provided with greater tax deductions for RRSPs at an estimated cost of $300 million.

Further, the principle of universality is being undermined by the clawback on old age security pensions. Our retirement income system is being privatized through tax incentives for individual retirement savings plans.

If the government were truly serious about fairness in Canada's retirement income system, it would strengthen the Canada Pension Plan. An expanded Canada pension plan would benefit all Canadians, and not just those wealthy enough to afford to purchase RRSPs.

* * *

HEALTH

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my statement is of particular interest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

On December 4, I wrote to the minister concerning the case of Candace James who died within 12 hours after beginning her participation in a study of Volmax, a new asthma drug. I was careful not to suggest that there was a correlation between the death and the study.

Last night I sent by fax new information to the minister which indicated that a similar incident had occurred in British Columbia in January of this year, in which another individual, Mr. Gary Bizzo, almost died within 12 hours of his participation in what appears to be a very similar study.

Will the minister indicate whether there is any relation between the two cases, whether the study has been stopped, and whether he has any further information to share with the House concerning these events?

Will the minister put an end to this study until the reasons for these events have been determined and made public? If necessary, will the minister put in place additional safeguards to protect future participants in such studies?

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, today most of the statements from this side of the House will be devoted to one very serious issue. That issue is the back to work legislation before the House.

This strike threatens Canada's reputation as an exporting nation. It puts vessels and seamen at risk for serious accidents. It penalizes Canadian farmers and businesses.

I understand that yesterday all three parties came to an agreement to move this legislation through the House, but it appears that in consultation with unions or others the new leadership of the New Democratic Party apparently bowed to their wishes.

This signals what we can expect from the new NDP leadership, that is, that the real decisions of the NDP will not be made by the party nor its members in this House but rather by others, perhaps by the big unions of this country.

Could it be true that sadly within the first month of the new leadership of the NDP, the mantle of that leadership has been subordinated to others?

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment proclaim their endorsement of sustainable development and repeat promises to put it into practice, the reality is very different.

Take the proposed massive James Bay II hydroelectric project. It would flood 5,000 square kilometres of land, contaminate water and fish with mercury, affect marine mammals and migratory birds, and damage the economy and lifestyle of Cree and Inuit people in northern Quebec. Yet the Minister of the Environment hesitates to make a firm commitment to hold independent public hearings to study the environmental and social impacts of James Bay II.

To put it bluntly, the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment are afraid of the Government of Quebec. If they mean what they say on sustainable development, they should exercise Ottawa's powers and hold public hearings before it is too late.

This government must start practising what it preaches on sustainable development.

* * *

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is a trite old adage that haste makes waste, but however archaic this government, in particular the Department of Finance, has given this expression new life.

It seems that after closure on second reading and the desire to ram the bill through before Christmas, the government has run into a terrible snag on Bill C-28, the infamous clawback bill.

We now know that all 125, I repeat 125, government amendments on a 60-clause bill have been deemed out of order. "No problem" says the government "we will pass the flawed bill now and tidy up the mess with a new bill in the New Year".

We cannot proceed this way. The amendments were flawed; therefore the bill is flawed without them. I call upon the government to halt this process now, admit its grievous error and start all over again. This time listen to Canadians who say no to clawback and no to the end of universality.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF CANADA

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, who is running the NDP? Who in the NDP cares about the economy of our country? Who in the NDP speaks for the agricultural industry?

Does the NDP care about the dozens of ships tied up in the seaway system, ships that carry Canadian grain to foreign markets? Some 45 per cent of all products transported into, out of, or within Canada are moved by ship; 55 per cent of Canada's international trade is shipborne.

Is Shirley Carr the new NDP leader, or is it Bob White? Who in the NDP speaks for all of Canada?

The House needs to move quickly to pass Bill C-49.

* * *

LAND CLAIMS

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, late last week, federal and Inuit negotiators reached an agreement in principle on the largest aboriginal land claim in Canada. This is the claim of the first inhabitants of the central and eastern Arctic to the lands and waters of the territory which Inuit call Nunavut, our land.

Inuit first brought their proposals for political self-determination to the federal government in 1976. Congratulations are due to the Inuit negotiators who have persevered over the last 10 years or more to achieve an agreement which recognizes the rights and aspirations of the Inuit people. They persevered under different governments, different ministers and changing rules. Throughout this long and complex process, the Inuit people have displayed extraordinary patience and goodwill. Their long and patient wait deserves our recognition.

While several steps remain to be taken before a final agreement is ratified, with this agreement in principle Inuit are closer to their goal of controlling their political, social and economic destiny.

[Translation]

TRAGEDY IN MONTREAL

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to ask those so-called feminists to respect the sorrow of all Canadians who were moved by the tragic events at the École Polytechnique in Montreal and keep quiet.

I think it is disgraceful that people should use these events to vent their anger, justify their feelings of rancour and put the blame on all men, indiscriminately.

Yes, there is violence in our society. Yes, there are violent men and there are women who suffer at their hands, just as there are children and men who are victimized in certain ways. But I do not think our male population, which was deeply moved and was very sensitive to what happened should be made to pay for the behaviour of an emotionally scarred individual.

Women who use this tragedy to blame everybody they can without considering their own responsibility, do not speak on my behalf nor, as far as I know, on behalf of the majority of the women in Montreal north.

I ask real feminists to remain silent so that this time of national mourning can be experienced with dignity.

This is a time for compassion and solidarity.

* * *

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear from the President of the Treasury Board trying to justify the government's behaviour during the current strike of hospital service workers in the Public Service, a strike which the government intends to end with back to work legislation when it could have negotiated a settlement.

Last Friday in this House I quoted figures the government has not yet contradicted which show how anxious the Conservatives are to avoid dealing fairly with hospital services workers, most of them women, who work for the Department of Veterans Affairs.

• (1410)

At Ste. Anne de Bellevue on the Isle of Montreal, the government is now paying $840,000 a week in overtime costs, paying $250,000 a week in catering costs, and paying its friends at Pinkerton Detective Agency $165,000 a week for extra security.

The normal wage bill at Ste. Anne de Bellevue is $385,000 a week. In an effort to break the strike, the government is paying $1,633,000 per week.

Why is the government which prides itself on its meanness throwing money away like this? Why does the government not authorize in the case of Ste. Anne de Bellevue alone an open-ended, strike breaking budget of at least $10 million?

Why is the government so anxious to spend millions bringing in Department of Veterans Affairs employees to act as scabs? Would it not be a lot cheaper to comply with the Canadian Human Rights Commission and give these hospital services workers pay equity plus a better pay raise than has been offered?

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues I too have a concern over this serious issue of the back to work legislation which is before this House.

I am concerned over reports that pickets are impeding the access of patients to the Department of National Defence Hospital by stopping cabs. I am also concerned, along with western Canadian farmers, about the very real possibility that Canadian grain shipments could become trapped in the seaway. We cannot afford to let this happen.

We need to act, and we need to act quickly. I am very disappointed that the leader of the New Democratic Party has allowed union leaders to dictate and overrule the advice of her parliamentary caucus.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are shocked to learn of the forced repatriation of about 40,000 Vietnamese boat people from Hong Kong back to Hanoi as a result of an agreement struck between Great Britain and the Vietnamese government.

Not only are these Vietnamese refugees being forcibly removed and returned to Vietnam, but the British government is paying $620 to the Vietnamese government for every person returned. In addition, the international press has reported a threat from Hanoi that an unnumbered quantity of future refugees are criminals who "will now be forced to suffer the penalty".

Just this past October at the Commonwealth meetings the leaders asserted their belief "in the liberty of the individual" and affirmed that all human rights and fundamental freedoms must be protected. The government's passive and non-committal response to this matter has demonstrated that the Canadian Government is not serious about its commitments in Kuala Lumpur.

Will the government try to redeem itself by, first, raising this infringement of rights immediately with the UN Human Rights Commission and by, second, taking a leadership role in addressing the international problem of refugees with the international community?

* * *

[Translation]

THE COAST GUARD

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, once again I would like to draw the attention of the House and of all Canadians to the urgent need for putting an end to the work stoppage by Coast Guard employees.

Mr. Speaker, at this very moment, shipments of iron ore from the ports of Havre Saint-Pierre, Sept-Îles, Pointe-Noire and Port Cartier are unable to reach their ports of destination on the Great Lakes.

The grain terminals at Port Cartier and Baie Comeau are losing money every day because the work stoppage is holding up grain shipments from the Great Lakes.

Ocean-going vessels have been tied up for days at Port Cartier and Baie Comeau, waiting for grain shipments that are being held up on the Great Lakes.

Something must be done about the situation as soon as possible to prevent many workers on the North Shore from being laid off.

Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to the new Leader of the NDP to listen to reason, not to the unions, and convince her colleagues of the fact that they should support the back-to-work legislation now before the House.

* * *

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, eight and a half months have passed since the last energy ERDA between Ottawa and the Government of Prince Edward Island expired.

This eight and a half month delay and Ottawa's late decision even to participate in this agreement has caused a great deal of uncertainty in the local alternative energy industry in Prince Edward Island.

This agreement promotes clean burning fuel, so it is environmentally friendly. It also creates local jobs. I would urge the minister to take immediate steps to see that this agreement is signed at once.

* * *

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF CANADA

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the St. Lawrence Seaway shutdown is costing Canadian farmers millions of dollars in demurrage and lost sales.

This back to work legislation exposes the duplicity of the NDP who pretends in the west to be the farmer's friend but who, all the while, is obstructing the legislation. Why? It is because it is 100 per cent beholden to the big eastern labour unions.

Organized labour and prairie agriculture—what an unholy alliance. When the crunch comes and the choice has to be made between big labour and the Prairie farmer, the NDP goes with labour every time.

Canadians had hoped the new NDP leader might have had a mind of her own. It is now crystal clear that she, like her predecessors, takes her policy direction from the Public Service Alliance and the Canadian Labour Congress.

When the union bosses say "jump", members of the NDP ask: "How high?" The trouble is they are jumping up and down on Canadian farmers.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, the question of pay equality between government workers on the east coast and the west coast has plagued labour–management relations for several decades. Earlier Liberal governments have justified this practice.

People like my colleague from Annapolis Valley—Hants have pressed for equal pay for government dockyard workers and ships' crews. Bill C–49 provided a unique opportunity to achieve pay equity for east coast ships' crews.

What happened? The opposition stood in this House and blocked any arrangement to pass that bill and bring about pay equity for east coast workers.

Let the blood be on their hands, the Liberals and the NDP.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

The plant closures announced yesterday by National Sea Products are a cruel blow to fish plant workers in St. John's and North Sydney, but nowhere will the decision be more devastating than in the town of Canso and in the surrounding communities of eastern Nova Scotia which face the direct loss of 750 jobs and many more as a result of the closure of the Canso plant.

Cansonians have been fishing for 400 years. No community has a more legitimate claim to the fisheries resource and, by virtue of Canso's location, no community is more dependent on this industry. As a shareholder in National Sea and by virtue of its disastrous management of the Atlantic fishery, the federal government is an accomplice to the closure of this community.

Why has the Prime Minister allowed Canso to be written off? Why are the people of Canso being asked to bear the brunt of this government's colossal mismanagement of the Atlantic fishery?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as we indicated in the House yesterday, no member of the House could appreciate and fully fathom the distress that the people of Canso and other communities affected by these unfortunate decisions must feel today.

That is why the special committee of cabinet, under the chairmanship of the Secretary of State for Externals Affairs and involving the participation of the Minister of Public Works, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has been working on a package of response measures, both immediate response measures to help these workers when their jobs end early in the new year, as well as a larger package of economic initiatives amounting to many millions of dollars, with a view to economic enhancement and diversification in communities such as Canso.

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the only answer the people of Canso want to hear is that their plant will stay open. My supplementary is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, who sets fish quotas and who ought to know that the plant closing in Canso will utterly destroy this community. Will the minister commit himself today to doing the only thing that can save the community of Canso and that is set aside a certain quantity of fish in his 1990 management plan for the port of Canso so that the plant can stay open? Will the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans make that commitment today?

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with here is an attempt to manage the resource which is diminishing in terms of certain stocks, to manage the fishery resource of Atlantic Canada on a sustainable economic basis.

It is a fact, as officials of National Sea and provincial governments of Atlantic Canada recognize, that we have overcapacity in the processing sector and the harvesting sector. We have a downturn of world demand and the price for the fish. All of these factors are leading us to this current and very unfortunate situation.

When we establish quotas we do not assign them to specific plants, but I am personally looking at the possibility of the underutilized species, which amount to over 100,000 metric tons of special species, being made available to some communities such as Canso if they can come forward with a viable economic plan.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I repeat my question. Will the Minister undertake to reserve a quantity of fish for the poor of Canso so that the Canso plant can stay open? That is what they want.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I have said and have always said, as has been the policy of the government for many years, that we do not identify specific quotas with specific communities. The hon. member knows that. If we did when we have such overcapacity, all plants would be running at such a low production volume that they would be economically non-viable. That is why, while we regret these difficult decisions that have been made, we are going to devote every effort to assisting the rebuilding of the economies of these communities.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As he will know, the European Community has once again thumbed its nose at Canada. Today it proposed fish catches for 1990 off Newfoundland which would be more than three times the quotas suggested and assigned by NAFO.

I ask the Prime Minister: Does he now accept the obvious, that his belated campaign, after sitting on the issue for four years, to educate the European Community has been a total flop?

Does he not agree that the time has come to stand up to the European Community, particularly Spain and Portugal? I want to ask him what steps he has in mind to stop the rape of our fish stocks while there is still some fish left to catch out there.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that this government has taken unprecedented steps to remove foreign fishing efforts from within the 200-mile economic zone and to bring various sanctions and forms of international diplomatic and political pressure to bear upon the members of the European Community that seem to defend the unacceptable practices of two members, Spain and Portugal in particular, that have been fishing vastly in excess of these quotas.

As of coming to this House an hour ago, I was not advised that the EEC had embraced any quotas for 1990. In fact I have been advised that that information will not be forthcoming for another week.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, let me advise the minister of the following, and I read to him: "The European Community, fuelling a long running dispute with quotas with Canada overfishing off the coast of Newfoundland, proposed Tuesday quotas for 1990 more than three times higher than those suggested".

I say to the minister by way of supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, that these are the facts. I heard his answer. I respect his answer, but my point to him is that that is not working. All the minister has said has resulted in one big fat zero.

Now that that is a failure, what does the minister propose to get these Spaniards and Portuguese off our backs while there is still a few fish out there?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, of course we have achieved significant progress since 1986 when the level of foreign overfishing by these countries reached an all-time peak. We have seen that level of overfishing decrease persistently these past three years, but it is still vastly in excess of the quotas that the NAPO scientific panel has been recommending.

We will continue to work. We have appointed a special ambassador on marine conservation, Ambassador Alan Beesley, and ministers are working in all of the international fora, including the Prime Minister and other ministers of this government, to bring the appropriate pressure to bear and to point out that these are not practices consistent with good international conservationism.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Yesterday Atlantic Canadians were shocked to discover just how bad fisheries are getting in their area and how unprepared this government has been, even though it knew that this has been coming.

More than 1,500 employees of National Sea will be losing their jobs in communities such as Canso and St. John's. We know that Fishery Products International may be announcing another 1,200 lay-offs later this week in Newfoundland.

This past June, the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that it would be premature for the federal government to institute some kind of aid package for the Atlantic fishery similar to what it had done about the western drought for western farmers.

When is this government going to do something to save this industry, to save Atlantic communities, and when will the government commit itself to assisting the fishery and commit those millions of dollars that the minister referred to yesterday?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think this is exactly what the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister for International Trade and I have been talking about in the last two or three days. We are focusing very closely on the workers and on the communities. We have been developing a package that includes our existing programs which are there to help people in the short term, while we at the same time work toward some long-term solutions.

Until the announcements are made, of course, it is not possible to know which communities will be affected. Each one will be treated individually depending on what are the particular needs of that community. We will be there for those communities and for those workers.

Ms. McLaughlin: I have a supplementary question, again directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to say that the unemployment insurance cuts this government instituted certainly were not designed to help the people in Newfoundland.

Atlantic Canada is a region already hit hard by the actions of this government. At the First Ministers' Conference on November 9, the Prime Minister was warned that Newfoundland could lose up to 6,000 jobs in the fisheries related industry. If we transferred that to Ontario, that would be something like 115,000 jobs.

I ask the minister of fisheries again: When will the government stop reacting to disasters and do something to prevent the devastating collapse in Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Siddon: In fact, Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in the House yesterday, because of the market circumstances and the situation of declining quotas, new tougher management measures will be required and will be introduced in the 1990 Atlantic groundfish management plan.

If the hon. leader of the NDP is asking when the government will act to deal with the dilemma of these 1,500 workers who became the victims of very unfortunate decisions yesterday, we have already acted and we will continue to act in major ways in the days ahead.

Ms. McLaughlin: My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Prime Minister. This government is showing that it is continually reaction, reaction, reaction. The people of Atlantic Canada want some action on what is happening there in the fisheries industry.

Over the past four years, fishing fleets of the European Community have overfished the area adjacent to Canada's 200-mile limit by some 600 per cent. We heard today that the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has not heard that there are new quotas, but the Conservative member for South Shore claims that while he was in Europe he was told there was an understanding reached among members of the European Community that in exchange for not fishing in European waters, particularly Spain and Portugal could fish in the Grand Banks off Canada.

Is the Prime Minister aware of such an understanding, and will he now tell the House what the government plans to do about the overfishing off our east coast?

• (1430)

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party understands that Canada has been a member of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization since 1978 and that quotas are established in the areas beyond our territorial sea by international consent, that quotas of what are called non-surplus stocks are made on a first priority basis available to Canadian fishermen and we make none of those quotas available to foreign vessels which would be able to harvest such stocks within our waters.

When those countries fish on the areas known as the nose and tail of the Grand Banks, beyond our 200-mile economic limit, we have to resort to various kinds of international pressure; sanctions such as the closures of ports and representation in the various fora of the international community such as the OECD, Commonwealth and other fora.

The Prime Minister and members of this cabinet have taken such initiatives, including making such representation to members of the community of nations and we will continue to do so.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the incident yesterday in which Her Majesty's Canadian destroyer Saguenay, on patrol off George's Bank, was repeatedly and aggressively rammed by a U.S. scallop dragger, the Concordia, out of New Bedford, Massachusetts, after being ordered to stop for inspection for fishing illegally in Canadian waters.

In view of the overwhelming difficulties our country, and Atlantic Canada in particular, is experiencing due to overfishing and the grave national concern this is causing right now as indicated by the questions we have just heard, particularly from the Member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso, can the Prime Minister say what positive action has been taken by the Canadian government in response to this incident?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the incident that the hon. member refers to was caused by the need for the use of ship days by the Department of National Defence for the Department of Fisheries to provide fisheries surveillance to that department.

As the hon. member knows well, probably better than anyone in this House, there are rules of engagement. It is not the practice of the Canadian navy to jeopardize civilian lives. Every effort was made in this instance to have the scallop trawler turn around. The opportunities were given to the trawler by American coast guard officials who recommended that they surrender. The actions that were taken by the captain, on directions, were appropriate but at no time, and I am sure the hon. member would agree, should HMCS Saguenay have risked the lives of those men on that ship who indeed were breaking Canadian law.

The difficulty, as he knows, is to use force without causing the loss of life to civilians and that is the appropriate action that was taken yesterday.

Mr. Mifflin: I thank the hon. minister for his answer to my question and, yes, I am very familiar with the rules for engagement. In fact, I have had to use them occasionally.

The name of the game with rules for engagement is minimum force required to do what it is you have to do. I would remind the House of an action taken by HMCS Athabaskan in 1985 when two Spanish vessels were arrested by armed boarding parties that were sent on board. A Canadian crew was put on board and they were towed back to St. John's, Newfoundland in Canadian waters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: It is very obvious that Saguenay was in hot pursuit of the Concordia, and by that I mean she was detected in Canadian waters and followed outside into international waters. On the basis that HMCS Saguenay has a top speed of 28 knots, why could our warship not overtake—which she could do—this particular vessel, stop it, board it, arrest it and take it back to Canadian waters and charge it, and not let it return to home port where it was going to get a much smaller penalty?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has pointed out that the rules of engagement involving violations of Canada's fishing laws also require a degree of prudence in terms of the forms of escalation that are used in these matters.

I might tell the House that had we the co-operation of the opposition parties so that our patrol vessels could be used to their full capacity by the return of fisheries patrol vessels and others to service, we might not have this kind of problem today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Siddon: If the opposition would permit an answer to the question that has been raised, I want to advise that External Affairs delivered a note to the State Department in Washington.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh.

An Hon. Member: Did the Prime Minister phone him after?

An Hon. Member: Was it signed "Love, Brian"?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, as a result of the onset of dusk last evening, it was not possible to continue the pursuit with a view to boarding, in dangerous conditions, this vessel. Therefore, when it entered the U.S. territorial sea, a note of protest to the U.S. Government, to the State Department in Washington, asked that appropriate prosecutions be initiated against the U.S. fishing vessel Concordia.

Today, officials of External Affairs have again met with officials of the U.S. embassy to ensure and secure the co-operation of U.S. authorities in this matter. The U.S. Ambassador has given his personal commitment to co-operate and ensure that such measures are taken.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is Human Rights Week in the world, but here in Canada our government offends all human rights sensibility by introducing yet more policy to widen the gap between the rich and the poor. One million children in this country are living below the poverty line, basic rights deprived, yet the government imposes regressive taxes and policies, the burden of which are felt most heavily by the poor.

My question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On November 20, Canada symbolically signed the Convention on the Rights of the Child at the United Nations. What is Canada doing to ensure immediate ratification of this convention by the provinces and the federal government and to establish publicly available and measurable instruments to assess our convention achievements, or better still, the lack thereof?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has indeed indicated its support for this convention. We are taking it up with the provinces very aggressively and are seeking their compliance to ensure that the provinces, which have the responsibility for the delivery of most of these services, are on side on this. It is our intention to move ahead as quickly as possible.

I am also able to give the hon. member some statistics which I think will bring her some pleasure. On December 4 of this year, Statistics Canada released new income statistics for 1988. It showed that the proportion of poor persons in Canada fell to 13.1 per cent in 1988 from 14.1 in 1987. Since 1984, almost 760,000 persons have escaped poverty.

As it relates to children, the figures are these: the proportion of poor children fell from 16.9 per cent to 15.4 per cent, a decline of some 80,000 children.

Mr. Peterson: It's still disgraceful.

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that that is still 920,000 too many poor children in this country.

My supplementary question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. The physical violence perpetrated against women students at the University of Montreal last week is symbolic of the institutionalized violations of women's basic rights in this country. Last Friday the Secretary of State promised an exciting announcement addressing human rights issues in this country. Instead, we get more talk.

• (1440)

When will this government commit itself to meeting women's known rights and needs, such as freedom from fear, pay equity, adequate child care, pension reform and financial recognition of women's and men's important role as parents caring for their children at home?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that there is any government which has taken more concrete measures than this government has in terms of both violence and women. I can mention the $40 million that we committed in terms of family violence, the actions that we have taken around child abuse, the actions that we have taken to ensure that maintenance support orders are kept, the actions that we have taken around pension reform and the actions we have taken around employment equity on which the report will be tabled tomorrow. The action that we have taken and the special initiatives on child care alone is directed specifically to those most in need; native children, minority children and immigrant children.

We have been working constantly for five years on things that help women and to deal with some of the violence and some of the undercurrents in our society. There is no government that can claim anything better.

Oral Questions

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He is well aware that Bill C-28, the notorious clawback bill, is before committee for speedy consideration after closure at second reading. It was suggested by committee members that they want to rush it through as a Christmas present for seniors and families across this country. I am sorry, Mr. Minister, but the present has come unwrapped. He is also painfully aware that—

Mr. Speaker: I ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Butland: He is aware that 125 amendments of his department have been withdrawn.

Explain how the bill can proceed without the 125 amendments and if the amendments were unnecessary, why were they proposed in the first place?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct, there were a number of amendments, primarily technical in nature. These are going to be handled through the technical bill that we will be putting into the House some time in the new year. There are a couple of elements that are more pressing than that and they will be introduced through new legislation at an earlier date.

Mr. Butland: May I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that one or two amendments is housekeeping and small business, but this is 125 amendments. I think this is a sign of flawed legislation. It should be withdrawn and the government should go back to the drawing board.

Will the minister withdraw the legislation and come back when it is improved?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, as I said, these are technical amendments. They have nothing to do with the thrust of the legislation to which the hon. member is referring.

I think he understands the position we have taken on this legislation. A very small number of upper-income senior citizens and families are affected by it. It is done because we have a serious deficit problem. As we said in the budget itself, we do not think that in this current situation it is appropriate to continue to subsidize upper-income people but that we should be more concerned and are more concerned with those in lower-income brackets.

Mr. Speaker, if I might just make a comment, it surprises me that the NDP are going to bat for the upper-income people in this country. It is quite out of keeping with their normal responsibilities.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, considering the finance minister's comments yesterday about the lack of agreement on the finance committee, I would like to ask him the following question. Is the minister of Finance prepared to accept the committee's unanimous recommendation to reduce immediately the Bank of Canada rate and bring it down to a level that is in keeping with the historic spread between Canadian and American interest rates? Furthermore, does the minister intend to let the value of the Canadian dollar go down, to protect the thousands of jobs that have been created in our primary industries and the export sector?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand the concern that the hon. member is expressing about the level of interest rates in this country. It is something that has been expressed on a number of occasions.

As I said as recently as yesterday in the House, certainly last week, we do have some very real concerns about elements of the inflationary pressures that are in our economy. I think it is very important that we get these out of the economy as quickly as we can. Once we have been able to do that we can see lower rates. Until we get confidence up and we have dealt with the inflation problem once and for all, I think it would be wrong to move precipitously.

I just draw the hon. member's attention to the fact that in the late 1970s governments did ignore the inflation problem and that led us to the mess of 1981-82, and I am sure the hon. member does not want to repeat that.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, we cannot get the interest rates down and we cannot get the dollar down, but that non-criminal leak that resulted in Canadians finding out that the goods and services tax would be introduced at 7 per cent has not really changed Canadians' minds about this tax grab.

Will the Minister of Finance advise the House if the government has entered into another agreement with Tom D'Aquino and his friends in the Business Council on National Issues to see if they can sell the GST as well as they sold the free trade deal to Canada?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was on the finance committee. He knows the number of people who came before that committee and said that it was very important that we scrap the existing federal sales tax and move to a new type of consumption tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Government of Canada has put forward a proposal. The proposal was the subject of extensive hearings across the country. The Conservative members of that committee put forward some very worth-while suggestions and we got zip from the Liberal Party of Canada. They do not have an idea in their head as to how we should deal with this pressing problem, a problem that has been before this Parliament since 1940. We get a great big zip from the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance as well. Just two months ago, Mr. Speaker, you issued a concise critique on the government's abuse of parliamentary procedures in spending $850,000 in GST advertisements.

Last week we learned that Revenue Canada is preparing a GST proposal. An advertising blitz has been reported today. Project managers for the GST started to be hired this week. Yet the bill has not been introduced to this House. What financial and human resources have been earmarked for the sales pitch?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, every government has not only the right but indeed the obligation to prepare for any upcoming legislation. That is a long-standing parliamentary procedure, from a standpoint of both parliamentary precedents and justice and legal precedents.

So far, as I have pointed out quite openly on a number of occasions both in public fora, outside this House and inside this House, the preparations that are taking place are to reach out to the business community, particularly the small business community, to assist them with technical information in the preparation to adjust for a smooth launch.

If we were not moving in that direction we could be classified as irresponsible. We are not irresponsible. We are doing what the Auditor General recommended we do. We are doing what parliamentary precedents recommend that we do, and we are doing what is good for Canada and good for small business. That is why we are doing it.

Mr. Pickard: It appears, Mr. Speaker, we get our information from leaks from the press, not from that side of the House.

• (1450)

Small Canadian businesses continue to battle high interest rates and high taxation. Fifty-one per cent of Canadian businesses cite high taxes as their number one problem. A GST, regardless of its rate, will not relieve the administrative burden, the time-consuming reporting, the cost of up to $2,000 per business to participate.

Will the Minister admit that the proposed GST initiative fails the small business community? Stop this needless attack. Take their concerns seriously and introduce tax reform that will—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. minister.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to remind the hon. member that Canada has the lowest rate of corporate tax of any country in the OECD and we are continuing with that. We have in fact an unemployment insurance program that helps small business. We have a medicare system that helps small business.

We do not have, though, as the Liberal government of Ontario has introduced, a payroll tax. We do not have a concentration tax for big cities which the Ontario government introduced. We are not adding that burden to the small business community. We are helping the small business community.

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is reported as having made a decision that there be cutbacks of over $1 billion in spending in order to drop the GST to around 7 per cent. There are also reports that the government wants to set an example by cutbacks on jets and limousines.

A story that came from access to information documents last week shows spending on jets to be up many times over the estimates. Can the Prime Minister tell the people of Canada the extent of the cutback that he is willing to make in terms of spending on government jets? Can he tell the people of this country the extent of the sacrifice that cabinet is going to make?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not have the figures for my hon. friend but I will be happy to ask the government to get them ready and provide them.

My information is that the utilization by government officials of executive aircraft is down very considerably from the previous Liberal government of five years ago, and remains at that low level. In other words, it is still down from 1984 levels.

Even with that, clearly it is the obligation of all of us, members of parliament, members of cabinet, to spend the public's money as efficiently and as effectively as is humanly possible. We will take that injunction very clearly into account in respect of all spending programs including the question of aircraft even though, as I pointed out, the utilization by this government is down very considerably from the previous government.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance and is in terms of another suggestion whereby the government can save money.

It is our understanding now that big business is talking about another advertising campaign similar to the free trade advertising campaign of last year. Last year, when they spent millions of dollars to advertise during the free trade debate, they were able to write off those advertising expenditures in terms of their income tax and thus save millions of dollars.

Would the Prime Minister instruct the Minister of Finance to bring in legislation that would disallow the advertising write-off of political messages by corporations in this country? In other words, will he bring in legislation to disallow the write-off of advertising costs for third parties in this country which is not fair to ordinary people in Canada?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I will take my friend's question as a representation. I know that he would want to apply that very stringent rule to corporations, unions, to assistance of all kinds that comes from outside interests. I will take that as a representation and examine very carefully what my hon. friend has said.

In respect of the first question which he raised with regard to flights, I have been provided with the information. From September 1988 to August 1989 there were 257 flights taken by members of this government. From September 1983 to August 1984, the last year of the Liberal Government, there were 677.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

REVENUE

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It has long been a fundamental principle of our parliamentary system that all government revenues are received in a consolidated manner and are not designated for specific purposes except through the annual budgetary process.

Recently we have seen some modest departures from this principle. For example, in the plant breeders' rights legislation certain royalties have been redirected for specific plant research, and in New Brunswick the provincial government has imposed a new fuel tax which is directly dedicated to highway construction.

In our environment committee, Mr. Speaker, we have had several proposals recently for a so-called carbon tax to provide funds for environmental research on atmospheric pollution or, as some would urge, to be used for Trans-Canada Highway improvements.

Is the government willing to reconsider the principles of revenue consolidation for dedicated funding purposes or user fee concepts? If not, are there other effective existing ways to direct government revenues from specific sources to specific purposes?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government has, over the last few years, been dedicating quite a bit of effort to user fee concepts so that people who are using a service of the government are asked to pay for that fee through some form of user fee or other charge.

Moving from there to the broader concept of what the hon. member has asked about, whether there can be dedicated taxes, these are a good deal more complex and more difficult to achieve. It is something that I have not a closed mind on by any means, but I would caution him that there are difficulties in doing so and in recent years governments have been trying to move away from this type of approach rather than moving toward it in a broader sense. This is something on which, as I said, we have an open mind on.

* * *

[Translation]

RAILWAY ACCIDENTS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I was very disturbed to hear just now about the derailment of a CN train with 40 cars, four of which contained chlorine, at Saint-Léonard d'Aston in my riding. As a result of this catastrophe, people will have to be evacuated. Will the minister give the population and farmers of the area who are attending a congress here in Ottawa some assurances as to measures that will be taken immediately to minimize the impact of this accident?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, just before Question Period I was informed a CN 40-car train had derailed near Drummondville, and that the whole population of one village had to be evacuated because several cars contained hazardous substances including chlorine, soda and other products. We have a number of teams, including the department's hazardous materials team, teams from the private sector and others that are now on the spot. I think I can give the people in the Drummondville area, especially the villages concerned, the asurance that we have covered all aspects of the accident at the present time. I believe that everything is under control and that there is no reason to panic, because, I repeat we have everything under control.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the press release he issued at noon about the Public Service Commission and a restructuring of the entire Public Service in this country. Could the Prime Minister, considering this government's reputation for patronage, give the House and Canadians the assurance that the changes he announced this morning will maintain the Public Service Commission's traditional role, its parliamentary role, which is to safeguard the hiring process by applying the merit principle?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course we will maintain the merit principle throughout the system. I think it is faintly ridiculous for a federal liberal to accuse anyone of dealing in patronage. They practically invented the system at the federal level and should at least have the guts to stop making these accusations——

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I could quote the Prime Minister in several statements he has made over the years concerning the intention of his party to get them to the trough, but I will avoid that and just ask him the following.

In the statement and the release put out by himself this morning we read that, "—hiring, firing, promotions and demotions will be decentralized and delegated to departments—". How does this government intend to protect the public interest and ensure that people get hired because of what they can do and not because of who they know? Will he give us the assurance that, indeed, his whole reform, so-called, will not be destroying the Public Service Commission by reducing it to nothing?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, the object of the entire exercise which has been worked out very carefully with very responsible career public servants is to improve the efficiency and the effectiveness of the Public Service of Canada, which I think most people in this House already regard as one of the finest to serve a Parliament anywhere in the industrialized world.

What we are trying to do is to further improve the conditions under which public servants function, their remuneration, their incentives to be better, more skilled managers, and to be able to exercise within their spheres of managerial responsibility greater personal leadership. We want to increase the productivity in the Public Service and its quality. I know my hon. friend would agree with that as well.

When he made, I am sure inadvertently, the reference to the intention of my political party regarding the quota—the trough as he says—it is true that I did make a reference to the trough, but in the national interest. It was on behalf of all Canadians to get the Liberal snout out of the trough. It had been there much too long.

Mr. Speaker: I have a question of privilege from the hon. member for South West Nova.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

FISHERIES COMMITTEE

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I feel that my rights as a Member of Parliament and those of other members will be directly affected if the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans does not allow the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee to appear before the committee.

We have been trying to get this group before the fisheries committee for a month. The new 1990 groundfish management plan will become effective in January, 1990. We have not been allowed to see the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee before the committee on fisheries.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to intervene and press the Minister of Fisheries to allow his officials to come before the committee. Everybody else has been heard by the fisheries committee except representatives of the advisory committee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South West Nova has raised a matter which is important and which is very much a matter on which she has spoken in the past. However, the matter is a complaint.

The matter lies with a committee. I do not think it is appropriate for the Speaker under the circumstances to intervene.

I suggest that perhaps a conversation between herself and some colleagues on the other side might bring about a reasonable resolution of the difficulty. It is not a question of privilege; it is a complaint. It is, of course, a serious matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 3.05 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions of the report stage motions of Bill C-23.

Call in the members.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

• (1530)

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, December 11, consideration of Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof.

The first vote will be on Motion No. 1. This motion also applies to Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9.

The house divided on the Motion No. 1, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 143)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair	Bellemare
Benjamin	Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)	Blondin
Boudria	Brewin
Butland	Caccia
Callbeck	Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall	Crawford
de Jong	Duhamel
Ferguson	Finestone
Fisher	Flis
Fontana	Foster
Gaffney	Gardiner

Gauthier	Gray (Windsor West)
Harb	Harvard
Harvey (Edmonton East)	Hopkins
Hovdebo	Jordan
Kaplan	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)	Laporte
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	MacAulay
MacLaren	Manley
Marchi	Marleau
McCurdy	McGuire
Mifflin	Milliken
Mills	Mitchell
Murphy	Nault
Nunziata	Nystrom
Ouellet	Pagtakhan
Parent	Parker
Peterson	Pickard
Proud	Rideout
Robichaud	Rocheleau
Simmons	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart	Stupich
Taylor	Tobin
Vanclief	Volpe
Walker	Wappel
Whittaker	Wood
Young (Gloucester)	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—82

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Belsher
Bernier	Bertrand
Bird	Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Bosley
Bouchard (Roberval)	Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Bourgault	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Chartrand	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Collins
Cooper	Corbeil
Corbett	Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret
Desjardins	Dick
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Duplessis
Edwards	Epp
Fee	Feltham
Ferland	Fontaine
Fretz	Friesen
Gérin	Gibeau
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Greene
Guilbault	Gustafson
Halliday	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Hicks
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
James	Jelinek
Johnson	Jourdenais
Kempling	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Kindy	Koury
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Littlechild
Loiselle	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	Malone
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Masse	McCreath
McDermid	McDougall (St. Paul's)
McKnight	Monteith
Moore	Nicholson
Nowlan	Oberle
O'Kurley	Plamondon
Plourde	Porter
Redway	Reid
Ricard	Richardson
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tardif
Thacker	Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)	Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vincent
Weiner	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Winegard
Worthy—135

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Therefore, Motions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9 are negatived.

The next question is on Motion No. 6. The vote on Motion No. 6 also applies to Motions Nos. 7, 8 and 10.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that there would be unanimous consent to apply the vote just taken on Motion No. 1 to Motion No. 6.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I was not present for the first vote but certainly if my vote were recorded for subsequent votes we would be in agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree that the divisions just taken be recorded as applying to Motions Nos. 6 and 11?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the Motion No. 6, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 144)

YEAS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair	Bellemare
Benjamin	Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)	Blondin
Boudria	Brewin
Butland	Caccia
Callbeck	Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall	Crawford
de Jong	Duhamel
Ferguson	Finestone
Fisher	Flis
Fontana	Foster
Gaffney	Gardiner
Gauthier	Gray (Windsor West)
Harb	Harvard
Harvey (Edmonton East)	Hopkins
Hovdebo	Jordan
Kaplan	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)	Laporte

LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLaren
Marchi
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mills
Murphy
Nunziata
Ouellet
Parent
Peterson
Proud
Robichaud
Rocheleau
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83

MacAulay
Manley
Marleau
McGuire
Milliken
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Pagtakhan
Parker
Pickard
Rideout
Robinson
Simmons
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Desjardins
Dobbie
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hudon
James
Johnson
Kempling
Kindy
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDermid
McKnight
Moore
Nowlan
O'Kurley
Plourde
Redway
Ricard

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Corbeil
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Dick
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Koury
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Monteith
Nicholson
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Reid
Richardson
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Thacker
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Weiner
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard

Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—135

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. Therefore motions Nos. 7, 8 and 10 are negatived.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I thought you were dealing with Motion No. 6 which does, indeed, apply to Motions Nos. 7, 8 and 10. I had not mentioned Motion No. 11, yet. If you want to put that motion and anticipate the vote, then there will be unanimous consent on this side.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry. I did anticipate, since it is the season to be jolly. Ho, ho!

Does the House agree that the division just taken apply to Motion No. 11?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the Motion No. 11, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 145)

YEAS

Members

Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Blackburn (Brant)
Boudria
Butland
Callbeck
Catterall
de Jong
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harb
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Kaplan
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLaren
Marchi
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mills
Murphy
Nunziata
Ouellet
Parent

Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Bevilacqua
Blondin
Brewin
Caccia
Campbell (South West Nova)
Crawford
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harvard
Hopkins
Jordan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Laporte
MacAulay
Manley
Marleau
McGuire
Milliken
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Pagtakhan
Parker

Peterson
Proud
Robichaud
Rocheleau
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83

Pickard
Rideout
Robinson
Simmons
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Desjardins
Dobbie
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hudon
James
Johnson
Kempling
Kindy
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDermid
McKnight
Moore
Nowlan
O'Kurley
Plourde
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Thacker
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Corbeil
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Dick
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Koury
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Monteith
Nicholson
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Reid
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet

Venne
Weiner
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard

Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—135

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Therefore, I declare Motions Nos. 12 to 16 inclusive negatived.

Hon. Jake Epp moved that Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof (as amended) be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

Is it agreed that the division just taken be applied in reverse to the motion for concurrence?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 146)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cooper
Corbett
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Desjardins
Dobbie
Dorin
Edwards

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Corbeil
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Dick
Domm
Duplessis
Epp

Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hudon
James
Johnson
Kempling
Kindy
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDermid
McKnight
Moore
Nowlan
O'Kurley
Plourde
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Thacker
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Weiner
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Koury
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Monteith
Nicholson
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Reid
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—135

NAYS

Members

Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Blackburn (Brant)
Boudria
Butland
Callbeck
Catterall
de Jong
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harb
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Kaplan
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLaren
Marchi
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mills
Murphy
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Bevilacqua
Blondin
Brewin
Caccia
Campbell (South West Nova)
Crawford
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harvard
Hopkins
Jordan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Laporte
MacAulay
Manley
Marleau
McGuire
Milliken
Mitchell
Nault
Nunziata
Ouellet
Parent
Peterson
Proud
Robichaud
Rocheleau
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83
Nystrom
Pagtakhan
Parker
Pickard
Rideout
Robinson
Simmons
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

• (1540)

NORDION AND THERATRONICS DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McDermid that Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to an agreement reached earlier this day the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion for third reading of Bill C-13, an act to authorize the diverstiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited.

Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find a good disposition on the part of the House to apply the results of the recent votes taken to the motion for third reading of Bill C-13.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 147)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)

Bourgault	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Chartrand	Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole	Collins
Cooper	Corbeil
Corbett	Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret
Desjardins	Dick
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Duplessis
Edwards	Epp
Fee	Feltham
Ferland	Fontaine
Fretz	Friesen
Gérin	Gibeau
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)	Greene
Guilbault	Gustafson
Halliday	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Hicks
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
James	Jelinek
Johnson	Jourdenais
Kempling	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Kindy	Koury
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Littlechild
Loiselle	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	Malone
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Masse	McCreath
McDermid	McDougall (St. Paul's)
McKnight	Monteith
Moore	Nicholson
Nowlan	Oberle
O'Kurley	Plamondon
Plourde	Porter
Redway	Reid
Ricard	Richardson
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Soetens	Sparrow
Stevenson	Tardif
Thacker	Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)	Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vincent
Weiner	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Winegard	Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
	Worthy—135

NAYS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair	Bellemare
Benjamin	Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)	Blondin
Boudria	Brewin
Butland	Caccia
Callbeck	Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall	Crawford
deJong	Duhamel
Ferguson	Finestone
Fisher	Flis
Fontana	Foster
Gaffney	Gardiner
Gauthier	Gray (Windsor West)
Harb	Harvard
Harvey (Edmonton East)	Hopkins
Hovdebo	Jordan
Kaplan	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)	Laporte
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	MacAulay
MacLaren	Manley
Marchi	Marleau
McCurdy	McGuire
Mifflin	Milliken
Mills	Mitchell
Murphy	Nault
Nunziata	Nystrom
Ouellet	Pagtakhan
Parent	Parker
Peterson	Pickard
Proud	Rideout
Robichaud	Robinson
Rocheleau	Simmons
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)	Stewart
Stupich	Taylor
Tobin	Vanclief
Volpe	Walker
Wappel	Whittaker
Wood	Young (Gloucester)
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and related Acts, laid upon the table on Monday, December 11, 1989, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the parties and I understand that the Liberal Party was in agreement with the concept I am about to describe and that the NDP wanted to check, once more, with higher authorities.

I move:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, following the adoption of this Order, but, in any case, no later than 4 p.m. today, the House will commence report stage consideration of Bill C–49, with the Speaker allowing debate on each of five motions to amend the said bill, such motions to be tabled by the President of the Treasury Board; and that, the report stage of debate continue until completed but, in any case, no later than 6 p.m., with all questions thereon to be deemed carried on division; and that, third reading debate on the said bill then be called forthwith, with at least one speaker per party to be heard, and at no later than 7 p.m. the Speaker shall interrupt and shall put the question on the motion for third reading of the said bill, and on any amendments thereto, forthwith and without further debate. Bells shall be rung for 15 minutes; and that, following such disposition of third reading, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until 2 p.m. on Wednesday, December 13, 1989.

There may now be unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, for the motion to be put and voted on immediately.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

There indeed have been discussions. This consent order refers to five motions. Members of the Official Opposition have not seen those five motions, nor another document that was discussed.

Despite every effort to assist the government, while not agreeing with its motion, there is no consent from the Official Opposition.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, we do not give unanimous consent. As the Minister of Justice, the government House leader, knows from earlier conversations today, he had indicated that he would not be proceeding with this type of an attempt to extend the hours in return for the vote that we allowed earlier. I do not know why there is this back-tracking by the government.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the motions in question are the very same motions that were discussed last night between my hon. friend opposite and the President of the Treasury Board. In any event, that can be cleared up in the 15 minutes between now and 4 p.m. We would be pleased to shorten the time for debate. If my hon. friends in the NDP would like to check with higher authorities, perhaps we could wrap this up today in the interest of the Canadian people, the ships that are in the seaway and the veterans.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I guess there is no consent.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, since the government House leader was allowed to have some editorial comment, if the government is now willing to change the Public Service Staff Relations Act to allow reclassification to go to an arbitration board, as it is under the Canada Labour Code, then we would agree to his proposal.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The House has voted on the report stage amendments and concurrence in Bill C–23. There have been discussions among the three parties and I am sure that you will find that there is consent to proceed with third reading stage of Bill C–23 at which time there will be one speaker from each party and then the vote. If there is a vote required at the end of the remarks of those three speakers, then it would be deferred until some time on Thursday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C–23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof be read the third time and passed.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, you have already heard a description of Bill C–23 and its objectives. I would like to outline the consideration which guided the government to introduce certain amendments.

The committee of this House which examined the bill heard numerous and very competent witnesses. The government has paid heed to the substantive concerns those witnesses raised. Our amendments responded to those concerns. But I would like to point out that the amendments are consistent with the policy announced by the minister last fall.

In the original version of the bill, if the Governor in Council designated an application for a full review by the National Energy Board, it would specify issues to be examined during the review. In other words, the Governor in Council would say to the board, "Along with whatever else you deem to be relevant, be sure you examine these areas." This measure was intended simply to let applicants and interested parties know why an application was being designated for public hearings.

• (1550)

However, some utilities which appeared before the committee had reservations. They were concerned that this provision could result in arbitrary criteria being imposed upon a particular applicant. In light of these comments, we have removed the provisions allowing the Governor in Council to specify concerns about an individual application.

The original bill provided that if the board approved a proposal without hearings, the Governor in Council, within six months, could order a review which would include hearings. Witnesses before the committee said six months is too long to delay an export or the start of construction of an international power line. The very publicly visible process entailed in this bill gives interested parties ample time and opportunity to formulate and submit their views before the board makes a decision. Therefore, should a difficulty arise after a board decision, it will come to the attention of the minister and the Governor in Council in short order. The government has reduced the time period in question to 45 days.

I would also like to comment upon the submission to the committee by the Grand Council of the Crees of Quebec. The Cree are concerned that there be a thorough public review process for proposed hydroelectric developments in northern Quebec. Should such developments entail exports, an assessment of the environmental impacts of the export proposal must be submitted with the National Energy Board application. Further, interested parties may submit their views to the board. If the board has reason to believe that there has not been a thorough and adequate environmental assessment, its duty is clear. It recommends public hearings.

However, I am pleased to point out that steps have already been taken to ensure that new hydro developments in northern Quebec receive thorough scrutiny. Our colleague, the Minister of the Environment, presently is engaged in discussions with his Quebec counterpart to establish a joint federal–provincial process of public review. The Cree and Inuit will have a major role to play in the review process. They have already been invited to assist the government in planning and setting up the review process and will participate in the review itself.

Some hon. members have expressed other reservations about this bill. These are matters to which the government has given consideration and which, upon reflection, we believe to be unfounded. Let me discuss them briefly.

Some claim that the existing National Energy Board Act is just fine as it is. Well, in 1986, the NEB held a public inquiry into the regulation of electricity exports. During that inquiry, representatives of many utilities, provincial government officials and other interested parties complained of the duplication between provincial and federal review processes.

Let me illustrate the impact that this duplication of regulatory procedures can have. An Alberta utility, which recently appeared before the legislative committee, said it would be reluctant to propose to build an international power line. It said that the regulatory burden would be too great. The utility also pointed out that the lives of those living or owning land along the proposed power line corridor would be disrupted throughout the whole provincial and then federal regulatory processes. Our policy eliminates needless duplication, while ensuring Canadian interests are safeguarded.

The NEB act also needed to be updated with a new listing of key criteria the board should consider in reviewing an electricity application. Bill C–23 makes environmental protection a priority. It also ensures Canadians will be given the opportunity of fair access to electricity supplies before those supplies are committed to export.

Some have criticized this bill because it gives the final say as to whether an application will be subject to federal public hearings to the Governor in Council. These critics argue we should retain the procedure in the existing National Energy Board Act, or leave it to the National Energy Board to decide whether hearings will be heard.

I, and other speakers, have explained the need to amend the existing act, so as to avoid duplicating provincial reviews of an application. Clearly, if unwarranted duplication of good work at the provincial level is to be avoided, some discretion must be employed in determining when hearings at the federal level are required. The question is: How do we establish sound processes to govern the use of this discretion?

We have heard many views on this matter. We have heard that you cannot leave these decisions entirely with the board. It has been argued that if a regulatory agency is placed in the position of repeatedly having to decide the degree of regulation to apply to proposals, the agency will tend to over-regulate.

Conversely, some have argued that if the Governor in Council alone ruled upon what review should take place, it would tend to avoid public hearings. Others have said cabinet might have a bias in favour of holding hearings.

The procedure set out in Bill C-23 involves both the board and the Governor in Council in the decision process. It establishes checks and balances between them to ensure that sound decisions are made about the extent of federal review.

The role of the board is to make a recommendation to the Governor in Council based upon its assessment of an application and the review of that application conducted at the provincial level. The National Energy Board will examine views submitted by interested parties and whatever considerations the board itself deems relevant. The check on the board is the fact that it must back up its recommendation by publicly stating the reasons it believes hearings are warranted and those reasons must be sufficient to guide the Governor in Council.

I would point out that the process for dealing with an application for an electricity export or an international power line takes place in the full light of public scrutiny. Applications, supporting documentation, the board's decisions and the reasons for those decisions all will be available to the public. And there will be plenty of opportunity for interested parties to comment to the board before it decides whether to recommend hearings.

The role of the Governor in Council in this process is to review the National Energy Board's recommendation and to decide whether to designate an application for hearings. It is obvious that a recommendation from such a respected agency as the National Energy Board, made in such a highly public fashion, will carry great weight with the Governor in Council. That is confirmed by history. Governor in Council authority over the National Energy Board recommendations is nothing new. Since the board was created 30 years ago, the approval of the Governor in Council has been required for all major board decisions respecting oil, natural gas and electricity exports. In all that time—three decades—not once has the Governor in Council overturned an export recommendation from the board. There is no reason to believe that trend will change.

Mr. Speaker, the government found the legislative committee's work on this bill valuable. We paid close attention to these deliberations, reflected upon them and acted upon some of the concerns raised. I would like to express my sincere thanks to everybody who participated, both with speeches in the House and with work in the legislative committee.

* * *

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell—Member of the Senate; the hon. member for Winnipeg Transcona—The Environment; the hon. member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing—Health.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp that Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof be read the third time and passed.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, we have come to the third reading stage of Bill C-23 where we debate the legislation in its final form.

I would like to explain this afternoon why I feel Bill C-23 should not be passed. There are two main reasons for this. One is that the bill does not adhere to the principle behind the bill as stated by the government. The other reason is that, as I said yesterday, I strongly disagree with what Bill C-23 in fact does. It takes the power from the National Energy Board and gives it to the cabinet.

Under Bill C–23 the cabinet will make the final decision as to whether there is a public inquiry on applications of electricity exports and power lines.

• (1600)

First let us deal with how the bill contradicts the stated intention of the government. During the second reading of Bill C–23, the deputy House leader twice referred to the principle behind Bill C–23. On one occasion the deputy House leader said that the basic principle governing the new policies was that there should be no unwarranted duplication of federal and provincial regulation. "Elsewhere" he said "the National Energy Board should complement and not duplicate measures taken by provincial governments". That is the basic principle underlying the amendments contained in this bill.

The deputy House leader in his speech referred to the history that led up to Bill C–23. He mentioned how provincial regulation of electricity is much greater today than it was 30 years ago when the National Energy Board was formed and therefore why a second layer of federal regulation was no longer necessary.

That is fine. I am familiar with the provisions of Bill C–23 which accomplish these objectives, but the source of the problem is not so much in the government's desire to reduce regulations but in its desire for more power over electricity trade. It is this second motive that I think will do the most harm and which I believe could in some cases result in increased regulation of electricity.

If I can be blunt, we are setting the stage for out and out political interference by the cabinet in the electricity business. As I argued yesterday, this bill gives the federal cabinet new powers to stop a federal hearing on an electricity power line or an export application to the National Energy Board.

As we know, the present situation is if an application comes before the board for electricity export or an application for an international power line, there is a public inquiry. However, under Bill C–23 the National Energy Board will issue a permit or, if it thinks there should be a hearing, it will recommend to cabinet that there be a hearing; but cabinet must have the final say.

Under this measure the federal government will be able to speed up an application through the board or, more important, shield it from public spotlight.

That kind of meddling has not been acceptable for the past 30 years ever since the National Energy Board started, and it is certainly not acceptable today. Not only is it unacceptable; it runs contrary to the stated principle behind Bill C–23.

Nowhere in the speech of the deputy House leader, or in any of the departmental policy documents is there a reason stated for giving this kind of power to the federal cabinet. The only explanation came from the minister himself in response to a question that I put to him at a legislative committee. When asked why the board was not given the power to make the call on whether there should be a public inquiry, the minister gave a far–fetched explanation of why the NEB would be in an apparent conflict of interest situation.

As reported in the Minutes and Evidence of Proceedings of the legislative committee on Bill C–23 the minister stated:

> There is the perception that the board would be in a conflict of interest situation, because the board would literally be deciding how much more work it makes for itself.

That argument is totally false, as I explained to the House yesterday. Not only is the reason false; it seems that it was something that the minister said on the spur of the moment during the committee meeting. That argument certainly does not appear anywhere in the department's documents concerning Bill C–23.

Did the department forget to mention the reason for the single most important change heralded in this Bill C–23? No, I think not. I think the answer the minister gave represents the true principle, or it is the true principle behind the bill showing through, that is, that Bill C–23 is designated to give more power to cabinet over electricity applications to the National Energy Board.

There was an article in The Calgary Herald this week which seemed to indicate that this policy would spill over into oil and gas export applications as well. The government is apparently thinking of preventing the board from holding hearings on any export applications that it deems too sensitive. Not only would that make a mockery of the National Energy Board, it would result in an energy policy that suits the government's political instincts and interests rather than this country's long-term interests. It is the same political principle behind Bill C-23.

Bill C-23 is not a technical document. It is a political document that the government is trying to pass for a technical one. It may very well pass, but let there be no doubt about what we are debating and giving third reading. It is really a licence for political interference.

I conclude my remarks and recommend, for the above reasons and for the reasons which I stated yesterday during debate on this bill, that the House not pass Bill C-23.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to repeat all the arguments we have already made on this bill during second reading debate last June and again in greater detail during meetings of the legislative committee in November. However, I do think the major points bear reiteration.

The first major point I would like to reiterate is that this bill is not about energy regulation. It is about energy exports. It is about a continental market for Canadian generated electricity. That is the principle at the heart of the bill. This entire shuck and jive about regulation is just that. It is a smoke screen and ought not to be allowed to get in the eyes of the prudent and sensible members of this House. However, more on that a bit later.

I would like, at first, if I may, to construct a little context here. The previous Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated in his speech to the board of directors of the Canadian Electrical Association on November 26, 1987: "Electricity's importance cannot be overestimated". He was quite right. The National Energy Board went even further in its report on the regulation of electricity exports, which was released in 1987, stating that in most uses "electricity qualifies as an essential commodity". A most trenchant assessment. There is every reason to believe that electricity will become even more important in the future. It will come to be considered a strategic resource.

The United States, Canada and other countries are becoming increasingly concerned about global warming which is caused in large part by the burning of fossil fuels, and there is no question that electricity has associated with it a host of environmental problems. These include, for example, in the case of hydroelectric facilities, the flooding of valleys and the destruction of the way of life of indigenous peoples. In the case of nuclear power, there is the never-ending problem of nuclear waste. In the case of natural gas-fired and especially coal-fired generating stations, there is acid rain and carbon dioxide emissions which contribute to global warming.

We in the New Democratic Party firmly believe that all of these environmental problems mean that how we produce electricity—and, even more important, how we conserve it—will become increasingly important in the future. The fact remains that electricity is convenient. There is also a widespread perception that electricity is clean. This reputation is mainly due to the fact that electricity is clean where it is used. In general, most of the environmental problems are associated with generating it, not with using it. But that perception of the cleanliness of electricity exists, and it means that the demand in the United States for electricity generated in Canada is bound to increase.

• (1610)

What has this government done in response to this new reality? Has it made changes to protect, to safeguard this strategic resource? Has the government added extra protections for our energy security just to be on the safe side, to be prudent? It is just the opposite. This government is making it easier to export electricity to the United States, and it is doing so immediately after it signed a deal that threatens our future energy security by assuring our United States customers a never decreasing supply of our strategic energy resources.

This government signed a free trade deal with the U.S. that will act like ratchet on our energy supplies. The proportionality clause, as it is known, will be, as was so trenchantly observed by my seat mate, the hon. member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley yesterday, a boa constrictor around the neck of our energy security. From now on, every single proposal to build a power line or to export electricity takes on a degree of importance that just was not there before. And I say every single proposal, including those for export of the so-called interruptibles because the interruptibles too—as the minister finally admitted in the committee after I perhaps unkindly badgered him for several minutes and several questions—are included in the total energy exports noted in the free trade agreement as being subject to the proportionality ratchet.

Every new kilowatt hour of exported electricity will, in effect, set the floor for Canadian offers to export electricity in the future. It seems inevitable that the export of this strategic resource will be jacked up and up and up over the years. In the face of this situation where every export proposal essentially circumscribes our energy future, where every export proposal sets the limit on our future energy flexibility, this government in this bill is making public hearings on these export proposals less frequent. Indeed it is making them optional. That is right, Mr. Speaker—optional.

There will be no requirement for a public hearing on export proposals. There will be no requirement for a public hearing on the building of export transmission lines. The decision will be, in the first instance, up to whatever provincial regulatory authority may seize the power conferred on it by this bill, and in the second instance, by the National Energy Board, always subject to the cabinet saying: "Sorry, NEB, you are off base, they can go ahead without a hearing". For all but exceptional cases, exports will be approved by the NEB without a public hearing.

In those cases where the NEB believes that a public hearing is warranted, for example, in the case of a proposal to export a huge amount of hydroelectricity, this bill gives the cabinet the power to block that public hearing, and even when a public hearing is held there is no provision for reasonable intervener funding for those wishing to bring absolutely pertinent information to the attention of the body holding that public hearing.

Not only is that imprudent; it is dangerous, it is foolish, it is totally unacceptable, which is why in the committee I attempted to propose amendments that would at least guarantee that in the event of the construction of a hydroelectric export power line, or in the event of an application for the export of electricity, somebody at the provincial or the federal level, it does not matter, somebody would hold a public hearing. The government members defeated that amendment and leave us consequently with the bill before us today.

In an attempt to justify this bill, the government has claimed that the electricity industry is over-regulated: in the aspects of the construction of interprovincial power lines and export power lines, and in the event of electricity exported south as a commodity, there is over-regulation to a degree that must be dealt with because apparently the industry is suffering accordingly.

What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? The National Energy Board has never refused an electricity export application. Not once. Never. Is this over-regulation? This is an export holiday.

During the legislative committee hearings, no one—and I asked them all: not the minister, not the chairman of the NEB, not a single witness—could come up with an example where they or any person in the industry was harmed by this alleged over-regulation. Not one instance. Only one witness was able to point to a case where inappropriate regulation had the effect of discouraging a project, and that was in my own province.

TransAlta Utilities said that because of the current regulatory environment they would not even bother applying to build a line across British Columbia because B.C. Hydro would stomp all over them. Fine. But that is an instance not of over-regulation, rather it is an instance of inappropriate regulation. Not duplication, not excessive regulation, but inappropriate regulation. And that we have no objection to dealing with. But that is not what this bill does.

This bill, rather, eradicates the final effective control of the National Energy Board, in the public interest, to oversee the prudent husbanding of electricity in the national interest in Canada.

We agree changes to existing legislation need to be made, especially in light of the disastrous free trade agreement. But the changes should not reduce the safeguards on our energy future. They should add a greater degree of protection for our strategic—dare I mention it—Canadian energy resources.

By way of conclusion, let me highlight one last item which I think illustrates clearly the direction in which this government is headed. There was a time—there really was—when the Conservative party believed that Canadians should benefit most from our resources, that most of the benefit of our natural advantages should not go to our neighbours and business competitors to the south in the United States, but should go to Canadians.

Listen to what the then Prime Minister said back in 1959. You may even remember this personally, Mr. Speaker. Let me quote from Hansard at page 4025, from a speech given in this House on May 26, 1959, by the Right Hon. John George Diefenbaker:

> —no longer will there be any suspicion that the Canadian consumer is being forced to subsidize the foreign markets or that Canadian industries will be asked to pay higher prices for their energy than those paid by foreign industries using Canadian energy.

The Mulroney Conservatives are selling out the Diefenbaker principles. Many Canadians know that the free trade agreement prevents our government from ever guaranteeing that Canadians will pay significantly less than American customers for our own energy resources, including electricity generated in Canada.

But what many Canadians do not yet know is that the Mulroney Conservatives will apply their new super tax, be it at 9 per cent or 7 per cent, to energy sold in Canada, but they will not apply it to energy sold to the United States. This means that Canadians could end up paying consistently more for Canadian energy resources.

Might I ask when is a natural advantage not a natural advantage? When it is left to the tender mercies of so blind and heedless a government. And what a government it is. Under the Conservative doubly whammy of the free trade deal and the GST, Canadian energy consumers will be penalized for living in Canada.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, we should be husbanding our strategic energy resources jealously. We should conduct open, public hearings when deciding whether to export electricity. We should protect the independence of the chief regulatory body, the National Energy Board. We should ensure that Canadians, not Americans, gain the most from our own Canadian energy resources. But, the government, in each instance, principally in this bill, is legislating the opposite.

This bill, even at this late date should be defeated, soundly defeated.

• (1620)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to the agreement reached earlier today, the question on the motion for third reading of Bill C–23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof, is deemed to have been put and a recorded division is deemed to have been demanded and deemed to have been deferred until 11 a.m., Thursday, December 14, 1989.

* * *

MUSEUMS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to consideration of Bill C–12, an act respecting museums, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING—MOTIONS IN AMENDMENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are three motions in amendment standing on the notice paper at report stage of Bill C–12, an act respecting museums.

Motions Nos. 1 and 2, standing in the names of the hon. member for Victoria and the hon. member for Mount Royal, are acceptable and will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion No. 3, standing in the name of the hon. member for Victoria, raises some concerns for the Chair; but I will give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt and allow the motion to be debated and voted on separately.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C–12 be amended in Clause 9 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 6 the following:

> "(2) Notwithstanding sub–section (1) the Canadian Museum of Civilization may not sell, exchange, give away, destroy or otherwise dispose of any native artifacts without written consent of the native community from which it originated."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it is in the interests of the House and those interested in this bill that we do what we can to deal with the various issues promptly so that possibly we can deal with this by five o'clock. I would be even more encouraged in that resolve if I heard sounds of enthusiasm from the government for these very good amendments that my Liberal colleague and I have put forward. We will see how the discussion goes.

Let me address specifically Motion No. 1. The motion proposes that there be a restriction on the right of the Canadian Museum of Civilization in respect of the disposition of native artefacts and that the restriction be that those artefacts could not be disposed of without the written consent of the native community from which they originated.

The underlying point behind this amendment is an acknowledgement that the House must make as to the treatment of native artefacts over the last 100 years. In many, many native communities across this country, the non-native community, the Government of Canada, private citizens, church groups and others have treated native artefacts as not the property and heritage of native people in the communities from which they have come but, instead, as something which could just take from them. That is not only a deep injustice. It is clearly a grievance of the native community in this country.

We had witnesses before the committee from the Kamloops area who discussed these issues and had a number of proposals to put to us. At one stage I put an amendment to the committee that would have representatives of the native communities serve on the various boards that are being established under this legislation.

Regretfully, Liberals and government members voted against it. I hope, as days pass, that they will find a way to recant from that particular position. I would hope the government, in making its appointments, will consult with the native leadership in this country to see if it can find its way to appoint representatives of the native community to these particular boards. It is important that we acknowledge the historic role of native people in the development of the treasures, the art treasures and historic treasures of this country.

I would urge upon the House that, at least as a minimum, we require the Canadian Museum of Civilization to seek and obtain the written consent of the native communities when it proposes to dispose of artefacts in its possession. This is an important issue of the native community, and one that I would hope would have the full support of this House.

Mr. Friesen: On a question, Mr. Speaker.

Speaker's Ruling

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There really are no questions at this point. I would have to ask for unanimous consent of the House to put a question. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question on a detail. Does the member propose that artefacts should not be sold even in Canada, or is it foreign sales that he is objecting to?

Mr. Brewin: It is within the country. What I am really proposing is that it in effect be acknowledged that the Canadian Museum of Civilization holds these artefacts in trust, not only for the Canadian people but particularly within the Canadian family for the native communities, and that it cannot dispose of these artefacts without the consent of the communities for which in a trust capacity it is holding those artefacts.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, very briefly, because we have debated this issue at some length in committee, I would point out to the hon. member for Victoria that certain commitments have been made in terms of appointments of natives to boards of the museums. In fact natives have served, and on behalf of the minister I gave a commitment to the hon. member in committee.

There is indeed a conference coming up on native artefacts. The main point I would make in rebuttal to my hon. friend is that this amendment attempts to deal with a non-problem in the sense that the standard practice now is that whenever the museum on rare occasions does dispose of artefacts it always secures the consent of the community concerned, with one exception, and therein lies the problem. The exception refers to those very few cases where the provenance of an artefact is unknown. In those rare cases, consent is not secured simply because the artefact has no identity with a known community.

There are numbers of examples of native artefacts from the Canadian Museum of Civilization which have now been devolved to museums and locations, many of them in the hon. member's province: 'Ksan Indian Village and Museum in Hazelton, the Umista Cultural Centre in Alert Bay, the Kwakkuit Museum at Cape Mudge, as well as the Thunder Bay Art Gallery and the Native Museum at Gleichen, Alberta.

The Canadian Museums Corporation, the Department of Indian Affairs and the Winnipeg Art Gallery have an agreement regarding the distribution of the Inuit art collection of Indian Affairs. Much of that collection will be going to the Northwest Territories. Indeed, the museum has the curator in residence program and curator training programs for curators from native and other museums.

In summary, the practice is that artefacts are returned and there is no disposal except by consent of the community, but the problem with the amendment of the hon. member, with respect, is that it would force consent to be obtained where consent cannot be obtained. Therefore, I am afraid that the government cannot accept the amendment.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. colleague for Victoria. The point was well made, and I think the sensitivity of the museology community and the boards of directors have been alerted by the hon. member bringing this to our attention at this time.

Debating it in committee is not as widespread as debating it within this House. I am sure that the interesting and legitimate concerns will now be far more carefully reviewed. As my hon. colleague the parliamentary secretary pointed out, there is that standard practice that does ensure no loss, no disappearance and the return where indicated. Certainly we did discuss and hear the concerns of the aboriginal and native peoples about the importance of all Canadians to enjoy their cultural products as absolutely fundamental to the constituency of Canadians. We are in a position to appreciate them even more by having them in our national museums. I cannot support the motion but I do support the principle and I hope that it will be part and parcel of the by-laws of a museum, a board, or a method of procedure they would adopt inhouse in policy.

• (1630)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 3. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion negatived on division.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-12 be amended in Clause 18 by adding immediately after line 5 at page 12 the following:

"(2) A person is not eligible to be appointed as a member of the Board if that person is not a Canadian citizen who is ordinarily resident in Canada."

She said: Mr. Speaker, in debating this bill on museums, I bring this particular amendment to the attention of the government because I consider that we are dealing with a very sensitive issue when it concerns Canadian cultural properties and Canadian cultural concerns.

It is my firm belief that Canadians have the talent, capacity and ability to fulfil the management positions, manage the funds, enable appropriate acquisitions, apply the mission statement or the mandate of the museum and be very creative in their approach to their responsibilities in the management of the four museums that we are referring to in this particular bill.

There is nothing more important than the historical record of Canada for Canadians, by Canadians and for the visitors to Canada. Our aboriginal people are our first founding peoples. Our bilingual nature is the result of our two founding European families who came from those nations which helped build this country. Our multicultural dimension is an increasingly important aspect of our Canadian reality which encompasses all our cultures. It is key that all of these realities be reflected in the board of directors and that they be Canadians of Canadian commitment and fulfil the roles that have been defined in this particular Bill.

I think that we have greatness in all walks of life in Canada and we can find the proper people to fill those jobs. I see no reason to have to look beyond our own

Canadian citizens in any way to fulfil the particular mandate that we have in mind.

There has been some concern expressed. While I understand that concern, I do not find it particularly well founded that those people who have chosen to come to live here in Canada but have not taken Canadian citizenship perhaps might not be enabled to sit on the boards of these four Canadian national museums.

To my knowledge, Canadian citizenship is required under the Constitution of Canada if we wish to be a member of this House of Commons. If you wish to summon someone to the Senate that person must be a Canadian citizen as well as a resident in the particular province that person is representing. If you wish to participate in the elections in Canada under the Canada Elections Act, you must be a citizen of Canada.

I suggest that there is no substantive jurisprudence and no clear precedent established that would indicate that we could not apply Section 1 of our Canadian Charter to say that it is reasonable and justifiable in an open and democratic society to have Canadian citizens, be they aboriginal, francophone, anglophone or from any one of our multicultural communities, represent the various required skills that enable a museum board to function most effectively.

I believe that we should and can have the kinds of expertise that we need to go out and market, explain and show the world the Canadian acquisitions that we have. I ask for the acceptance of Motion No. 2, hopefully with the understanding of the reasons behind this amendment.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think the concern that has been expressed about this particular motion, which I grant is on the side of the angels, is that it might infringe on the Charter, specifically the provisions of Section 15, the equality provisions.

In a recent decision in British Columbia the Supreme Court of Canada in the Law Society of British Columbia .v. Andrews et al, the finding was that a provision which restricted the right to practise law to Canadian citizens infringed upon the equality provisions of Section 15 of the Charter. There were two aspects to the analysis that was carried out.

Speaker's Ruling

To override a Charter-guaranteed right, the objective underlying the law must relate to concerns which are pressing and substantial in a free and democratic society. The nature and purpose of the enactment must be examined to decide whether the limitation represents a legitimate exercise to attain a desirable social objective which would warrant overriding constitutionally protected rights.

As a second stage of the analysis, a balancing of factors must take place, such as the nature and importance of the right of the individual or group concerned, the extent of its infringement, the degree to which the limitation furthers the attainment of the desired goal embodied in the legislation, and the broader social impact of both the impugned law and its alternatives.

All that having been said, there are some practical considerations too. I believe that the language which the hon. member has taken for her motion is parallel to the language that is in Bill C-40 which is also before this House. That bill is designed to protect the Canadian nature of our broadcasting system against all kinds of assailing forces which I need not go into here.

In this case, we are dealing with Canadian institutions, which are composed of Canadian exhibits by and large. All this having been said, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to ask whether there would be consent of the House, and I ask the hon. member whether she would be disposed, to just drop the last six words of her motion. The words are "who is ordinarily resident in Canada". That would have the effect of admitting only Canadian citizens to the board but would remove the practical consideration and the practical worry of distinguished Canadians who, for reasons of health or other reasons, have found it necessary to live outside the country for periods of time. The words "ordinarily resident in Canada" might be an arguable proposition. To remove any doubt, would the hon. member be prepared to delete those last six words of her motion, and would there be the consent of the House?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, in response to the parliamentary secretary, I thank him for that consideration and I certainly would accept the removal of those last four words.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, not only on our party's behalf do I accept the proposed amendment but I would indicate that we accept the motion.

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2, as amended, agreed to.

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty to inform the House that a communication has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C–50, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990.

Also, I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C–20, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House
Ottawa

December 12,1989

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that Her Excellency the Right Honourable Jeanne Sauvé, Governor General of Canada, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 12th day of December, 1989, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a bill.

Yours sincerely,
Secretary to the Governor General.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MUSEUMS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C–12, an act respecting museums, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C–12 be amended by adding immediately after line 25 at page 14 the following new clause:

"23. The Board of each museum shall appoint an Advisory Committee which shall consist of members representing each scientific and museological discipline represented in the Museum."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in the hope that we can deal with all of this, I do not want to unduly hurry, but I do want to say that this motion is intended to ensure that the boards do have on them a number of representatives of the scientific and museological disciplines representing the museums. It is a very important principle. It is very important that these boards not simply reflect either friends of the government or people who are dabbling at this business but people who are involved, who understand and who can reflect the constituency, at least a major constituency that these museums are intended to serve.

On that basis, I would urge the government to be as kind to me as it was to the Liberal critic by accepting her amendment and recognize the worth, the sense, the breadth of this amendment and, in the spirit of Christmas, agree to Motion No. 3.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Father Christmas it would be very nice if he came through the door. I just hope that we will not find ourselves with too many duplicate groups serving on the board of directors. That was my concern.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the sincere concern of the member in this regard. Rather than bind us with the legislation I can give him in this place at this time the assurance that every effort will be made to see that his objective is attained in the appointments. I can assure him that there will be people of definite scientific and museological competence and distinction appointed to the boards of the various museums.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 3. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

I declare the motion lost on division.

Hon. Jake Epp (for the Minister of Communications) moved that the bill, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Epp (for the Minister of Communications) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker may I say something?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member for Mount Royal would like to say a few words she can go ahead and say a few words.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the generosity of this House is making it become a very pleasant place. I think we can—

Mr. Harvey: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am just wondering if we might take this as precedent?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No you may not take it as precedent.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken in this House once before—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must say to the hon. member that we should really suspend the sitting. On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Victoria.

Mr. Brewin: This point of order is an elaborate point involving museums policy in Canada. I guess we should not really indulge in such a procedure. We did try to co-operate in order to get the bill through this afternoon. I know that members do have comments that, in other circumstances, they might have been prepared to make.

I do not know if we need unanimous consent for us to ramble for a minute or two about the joys, for example, of working with the parliamentary secretary who was courteous in the way in which he dealt with it. The speed with which we concurred today is not reflective of the amount of work that went into the committee itself. It was the first legislative committee I have had an opportunity to be on and I found the experience very constructive and helpful. We had some good witnesses come to the committee in a very useful discussion. On that order, Mr. Speaker, you might consider hearing the Member for Mount Royal as well as the parliamentary secretary.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to note that we are allowing a constructive use of this time. It was a pleasure to work with the new member from Victoria. It was a very courteous atmosphere for the parliamentary secretary, the other members of the committee and for the minister himself.

I hope many of the people who are watching will understand that the very confrontational Question Period is not the only business of the House. What is done in this place is often very constructive and there is a degree of friendship, co-operation and respect among members of all sides of this House.

It is in that spirit and as Christmas draws nearer that I would like to join my voice to the others and say thank you very much on behalf of the museums of Canada, the citizens of Canada who are going to enjoy those museums and their new thrust, their new mission and their new mandate. May they flourish and grow and may we find a few dollars in the treasury to enable that to happen.

• (1650)

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that I am impressed with the cordiality with which the two previous speakers have greeted the co-operation they apparently enjoyed from the hon. parliamentary secretary opposite and can only hope, at this point, that the hon. minister opposite has been paying close attention and might hereafter conduct himself in similar fashion.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order I am grateful for the remarks which my colleagues from the opposition have addressed on this particular issue.

I think that the whole domain of communications and culture has been blessed with an all-party harmony. I recall the seven or eight reports which the committee, under the chairmanship of the former member for Battlefords—Meadow Lake, John Gormley, and I had the honour of chairing, along with the hon. member for Lévis in the last Parliament. All those circumstances led to a remarkable commitment to hard work and to dealing with the cultural and communications aspect of our life in Canada.

I thank the hon. member for Victoria for his words because he worked on the legislative committee on this particular bill in a way that was in the tradition of his predecessor, Lynn McDonald, the former member for Broadview—Greenwood who had a genuine commitment to this domain.

The hon. member for Mount Royal, I hasten to say my favourite Grit, did bring a tremendous sense of dedication to her work in the field of museums not only with Bill C-12 but also in the work of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in dealing with the Richard-Woodrow report, the Task Force on Museums Policy.

With respect, this is an illustration of the best traditions of parliamentary reform that the issues of the day can be dealt with in an all-party way. I think there has only been one qualified dissent among the many reports which that standing committee has brought forward. Of course, very often the members of our legislative committees are drawn in part from the standing committees for the sake of continuity and expertise.

In the spirit of the season I wish to present a verbal Hanukkah bush to my hon. colleague from Mount Royal.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

[Translation]

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

> Bill C-20, An Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act—Chapter 22.
>
> Bill C-50, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1990—Chapter 23.

[English]

It being 5.07 o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[Translation]

BILL OF RIGHTS

SUGGESTED CHILD PROTECTION COMMISSION

The House resumed from Thursday, October 26, consideration of the motion of Ms. Langan:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of negotiating with the provinces to provide a comprehensive Bill of Rights for children which would standardize laws throughout the country, and that this Bill of Rights include a child protection commission and an emergency hotline which children could contact in times of crisis.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, before I start my speech, perhaps I may recall that I had already started to speak to this motion on September 25, and at the next opportunity, I was unfortunately, or fortunately, as you prefer, in Europe, which means that according to the Standing Orders, I still have ten minutes' speaking time.

Mr. Speaker, we welcome this opportunity to speak to the issue of children's rights, an opportunity afforded by the motion presented by the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan).

This motion concerns the very important question of how we can guarantee and protect children's rights in Canada. We believe that children form the cornerstone of our society and the family, our most important institution. That is why any attempt to improve the living conditions of families and their members deserves our undivided attention as decision makers. This government recognizes the importance of protecting the basic rights of children and the need for helping families which have the primary responsibility for bringing up children.

On November 20, the United Nations adopted its Convention on the Rights of the Child. As you know, Canada played an active role in drafting the text of the convention, following efforts by both federal and provincial governments. In 1981, a federal-provincial task force was created to determine what the convention should contain, from a Canadian perspective. Several versions drafted by Canada were used as the basis for the convention itself.

The draft Convention on the Rights of the Child, proposed by the United Nations, is aimed at establishing an international standard. Its purpose is also to protect a variety of childrens' rights whether they are social, economic, political, religious or civil. The 54 draft articles guarantee the protection for children who have no family or who are exposed to abuse, and the right to social security.

This draft convention reflects a comprehensive view of childrens' rights and is international in scope. The countries that signed the convention will be monitored to ensure that progress is made on children's rights. For instance, two years after the convention is adopted, every signatory country will be asked to submit a report on the nature of the measures it has taken to promote the rights of the child.

• (1710)

The draft convention also provides for establishing an international panel of experts that will be responsible for evaluating the living conditions of children in the signatory countries.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, signing the international convention means that the laws of that country must conform to the provisions of the convention.

Several aspects of the international Convention on the Rights of the Child are a matter of provincial jurisdiction in this country, or that jurisdiction may be shared by provincial and federal authorities. As a result, the process of ratifying the United Nations Convention requires, in the Canadian context, the co-operation of both federal and provincial governments in order to consider very carefully the implications of this document for our existing policy and future action.

It is expected that a certain amount of harmonization will be necessary among the various Canadian provisions in order to meet the requirements of the convention. We should also remember that the Canadian government has taken a number of initiatives whose objectives have already been to promote the well-being and protection, and to guarantee the rights, of children in Canada. Such programs are also designed to help families and children experiencing difficult situations or major changes.

However, although we are better acquainted with the specific problems of Canadian families, we must not forget that most of these families, whatever their structure, take care of their members and are proud of their progress and success.

My point is that government assistance in protecting the rights of children should be complementary to the role played by families, not a substitute. Nevertheless, there are a number of very serious situations where families are unable to play that role satisfactorily.

The Minister of National Health and Social Welfare already followed up on part of the motion presented in the House, when he recently announced financing totalling $1.3 million for an emergency telephone service to be used by children in a crisis. I am referring to the "Kids Help Line". This free service offers immediate help to children across Canada, providing information appropriate to the situation and directing them to agencies that may be able to provide longer term solutions for their problems.

In the mid 1980s, the Family Violence Prevention Division was created within the Department of National Health and Welfare to co-ordinate federal activities against family violence. The Division has a national information centre on family violence to inform the public and make it aware of this crucial issue.

In 1986, the government launched a five year $25-million initiative to fight the sexual abuse of children. This initiative includes legislation to amend the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act and measures to prevent sexual abuse of children and for protection and treatment.

In 1988, the government allocated $40 million to a four-year national family violence prevention initiative intended to create spaces in shelters for victims of family violence. Canada is not free of child poverty. That is why the federal government protects the most disadvantaged, including families with children, through the Canada Assistance Plan. Under this plan, the federal government shares the expenses incurred by the provinces for social assistance and some social services.

This year alone, the federal government plans to give the provinces over $5 billion under the plan. Nevertheless, there are encouraging signs in the battle against child poverty. Official statistics show that the number of poor children has decreased since 1984. The rapid rise in the number of families where both parents work outside the home and the increased number of single-parent families show us the importance of establishing an effective child care program. The federal government is already contributing to child care through the Canada Assistance Plan. We plan to spend $240 million this year to create more subsidized child care spaces.

Created in 1988 with a total budget of $100 million over a seven-year period, the Child Care Initiatives Fund is used to finance innovative child care projects to meet the special and diversified needs of children.

As announced by the Prime Minister and in the Speech from the Throne, a new national day care program will be implemented towards the end of this Parliament. In terms of additional measures to maintain the economic standing of families, I would point to the child benefit system which includes, among other things, family allowances and child tax credits.

With the advent of the new Goods and Services Tax, the tax system will become more progressive and more equitable through a number of changes which will enable low income Canadians to apply for fiscal assistance. This is why families earning less than $30,000 a year will be in a better position once the GST is in force.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, all the activities, initiatives and programs we have just mentioned are only a few examples which show that the Canadian government is committed to protect the security rights of Canadian children and to help families.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this particular motion. I am going to read it because it is a very specific request to the government. It reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of negotiating with the provinces to provide a comprehensive Bill of Rights for children which would standardize laws throughout the country, and that this Bill of Rights include a child protection commission and an emergency hotline which children could contact in times of crisis.

Hotlines are not particularly unknown in this country and in the few cases where hotlines have been used for children, the use has been fairly extensive.

Today, I want to spend a little time on the intent of this motion. During the two-hour debate that has gone on, our party has put on record some of the considerations that we think are important in establishing an atmosphere for the raising of children and ensuring that those children are protected in all kinds of circumstances.

Canada is a country without equal when it comes to the social standards and social justice system that we have put in place. Canada has been a leading nation speaking out for human rights, speaking out for dignity of the person, on behalf of the kind of government which allows this kind of dignity and these kinds of human rights. It is the kind of democracy that recognizes the value of the individual.

We in Canada have seldom been found wanting when it comes to speaking out about the protection of the world's children. We have seldom been found wanting compared to other countries in the effort that we have made to make it possible for world's children to be a little better off than they would without our efforts. Those efforts have not necessarily been government efforts, but they have been the efforts of the individuals and families across Canada who see the possibility of harm and the need for care of children.

• (1720)

These are good reasons why we as members of this House should take a good look at this motion and support it as much as possible. We should move toward a bill of rights which would, to some extent, formalize our commitment to the ability of children to survive in Canada.

It is surprising that when we look around the country, we see a great deal of child poverty. In my home constituency of Saskatoon, there are something like 1,200 people who make use of the food bank every month. These kinds of things are common right across the country and most of the people affected by those kinds of situations are children. So, we do need to have a continuing commitment to the welfare of children. That is what this particular motion speaks toward.

Events of the last few years and the direction we have been going in human rights, the direction we have been going in the care and protection of individuals, particularly children, are overtaking us. The first League of Nations adopted a declaration concerning children 65 years ago, and that seems like a long time ago, yet we have not really been more specific in the direction we are taking since then.

The United Nations adopted a declaration of rights for the child 30 years ago. Ten years ago, we celebrated the International Year of the Child. This year, the United Nations General Assembly, after considerable negotiations, will be adopting a convention which I guess could be called a bill of rights in some ways.

We in Canada have played a considerable role in drafting and negotiating this particular convention. It is imperative that to make sure this direction is sustained, we in this House guarantee that what we think is good for the international child is good for the Canadian child as well. Consequently, we must therefore clarify what we consider are the necessities for a bill of rights for children and move in that direction.

This motion attempts to clarify what should be considered part of what is necessary in a bill of rights for children. There is no doubt, as the previous speaker indicated, that there are jurisdictional problems as far as a charter of rights for children is concerned. Detailed negotiations are going to be required between the provinces and the federal government to achieve such a charter. It is imperative, therefore, that we begin these negotiations with the provinces as soon as possible so that when Canada does become the signatory to the United Nations convention, we can say truthfully and honestly that we are doing these things at home. Consequently, when we sign the convention, we will be able to say that what we believe is good for us is good for the other people of the world as well.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and support this private member's motion introduced by the member for Mission—Coquitlan and seconded by the member for Oshawa that, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of negotiating with the provinces to provide a comprehensive bill of rights for children which would standardize laws throughout the country, and that this bill of rights include a child protection commission and an emergency hotline which children could contact in times of crisis.

Certainly the objectives of this private member's motion are very laudable indeed.

Although it has been 30 years now since the United Nations decided that children have rights, it was not until last spring that an international legal convention was drawn up to make these rights stick. It was only last November 21 that the United Nations General Assembly did pass and adopt this convention and it will be in this coming January that the ratification ceremony will take place. Thereafter, it will require some 20 states to ratify the convention and then it will be binding, as international law, on those signatories.

It is with pride that we should say that Canada played a vital role in the design of this convention. But if this code is adopted, countries will have to change their laws and constitutions to comply with the convention, and certainly Canada is no exception.

It is easy to understand why it has taken so long to legalize the rights of children. Children do not have the right to vote, they do not have the political power, they are dependent on others for their well-being and, therefore, the responsibility on us is even greater.

During the Year of the Child 10 years ago, Poland stated that it was an appropriate time to establish a statement of children's rights with the power of law behind it. It took 10 years to draw up this convention. The United Nations General Assembly, as I said, just recently adopted it. Shall we allow Canada not to comply with it until 1991, as the former ambassador to the United Nations said it could take that long? We cannot allow that. I think we have a duty to act and to act promptly.

The guiding principle of this treaty is to promote the best interests of the child. I would add that it also protects the child from the moment of conception. The convention spells out a wide range of economic, social, civil, political and cultural rights for children. These include the right to an education, the right of minority children to practise their own culture and language, the right to be protected from exploitation, torture, maltreatment and the right of handicapped children to special services.

The 54 articles in the convention cover three major categories or areas: survival, protection and development. Although the convention sets out rights for children, it is truly directed at adults, for it is we adults who have the responsibility to ensure that these rights are truly respected and enshrined in a bill of rights.

The need for a bill of rights for children, both internationally and in Canada, to protect the lives and normal development of children is only too clear when one examines conditions that create injustice for children. It is imperative that in Canada, and indeed in the world at large, adverse conditions that create these injustices be addressed and addressed promptly.

It is not good enough to merely implement social services after damage has been done. I think it is important to mention some of the things which affect the well-being of children. These are: war, poverty, violence, abuse—physical, mental or emotional, trafficking in children, exploitation by the drug trade and malnutrition, especially under-nutrition. All of these factors can lead to illness and even to the death of children.

Canada is not immune. Millions of children die of chronic under-nutrition each year or grow up stunted in mind and body because there is not enough food for thousands of these children and also because their parents lack knowledge of health and nutrition. The single greatest killer of children is not war or malnutrition, it is dehydration through diarrhea. This is something that happens not only in Third World countries. Unfortunately, this still happens here in Canada. All that is necessary to avoid this is a solution of salt and sugar in water, but sometimes parents do not even make use of this or are not aware of this approach.

Children have a right to the highest attainable standard of health and access to medical services. This is something which should be protected not only through an international convention but through a bill of rights in Canada.

• (1730)

There are other issues affecting children. They include homelessness, education, child labour, and other health issues.

Let me refer to a fact sheet publication from A Choice of Futures: Canada's Commitment to its Children produced by a variety of organizations; the Canadian Child Welfare Association, the Canadian Council on Children and Youth, the Canadian Council on Social Development, the Canadian Institute of Child Health, the Child Poverty Action Group, Family Service Canada, and the Vanier Institute of the Family, institutions that truly are concerned about the welfare of children.

Six thousand children died in 1985 as a consequence of low birth weight, accidents and respiratory illnesses. Six hundred thousand children from birth to age 19 were hospitalized as a consequence, in the vast majority of instances, of respiratory illnesses. There are 275,000 disabled children between the ages of one and 14 in Canada, about 5 per cent of the child population. They are startling statistics in so far as the welfare or state of health of our children is concerned.

Canada's future will be determined by the children of today. In light of this, should we not have a bill of rights to protect our children, to ensure that they are adequately fed, that they are kept healthy, that they have access to an education? Protecting our children is imperative to maintaining the moral and ethical fabric of our advanced democratic society. It is imperative to the economic future of our country. Most important, it is imperative to the well-being of the children themselves.

To address the bill more specifically it is important to have a comprehensive bill of rights for children as proposed in this private member's bill instead of different provincial legislation dealing with this issue. The children of Canada are entitled to standardized rights which will safeguard their access to educational services and to social programs uniformly from coast to coast. A Canadian child is a Canadian child whether he or she is a resident of Newfoundland, Winnipeg, or Vancouver. There is a need for a universal affordable day care program.

Motion C-254 states that the bill of rights for children should include a child protection commission. This would be a beneficial first step toward the establishment of a national child abuse strategy.

The number of incidents of child abuse, especially sexual abuse, in this country is staggering. This government has rejected criticism that it has not moved fast enough to counter this increasing problem. The Minister of National Health and Welfare indicated that the government has acted on the majority of recommendations of the 1984 report of the committee on sexual offences against children and youth. But the first recommendation of that report calls for the office of a commissioner, and that has yet to be established, and so I suggest that it be established.

It is obvious that we must co-ordinate federal and provincial efforts to bring about programs to aid in the prevention and treatment of child abuse. A child protection commission would be a necessary first step.

In conclusion, the government could prove its commitment to the children of Canada by passing this private member's motion. Not only would this benefit the children of our country, it would ensure that the International Convention for the Rights of Children is signed and ratified by Canada and that Canada's ratification is not blocked by the refusal of provincial ministers to agree to the convention.

Children are entitled to the same rights that adults have and it is the responsibility of adults, especially adults that are in government, to ensure that these rights are respected and protected. We need political will and leadership on behalf of children. We can fulfil our commitment to our nation's children by adopting this bill of rights so that we can start the federal-provincial negotiation on this issue and make our commitment to the children of Canada a living reality.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address this motion on the advisability of a comprehensive bill of rights for children which would standardize laws throughout the country and which would include a child protection commission and an emergency hotline for children.

The protection of children is one of the foremost duties of any society. We can only be as strong as our most vulnerable and weakest members. I therefore laud the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam for the concern she has shown for all children in Canada in her motion on this matter. Having said that, I would now like to turn my attention to some of the real difficulties faced by this motion.

Canada is under a federal system of government, with both levels of government, federal and provincial, having certain areas of responsibility under the Constitution. Provinces have been allocated power over much of family law, including the welfare of children. Section 92(13) of the Constitution Act of 1867 gives the provinces the right to legislate with respect to property and civil rights in the province. In the adoption reference, 1938, the Supreme Court of Canada determined inter alia that the welfare of children was a matter of provincial responsibility.

We have in Canada two basic types of legislation which afford protection to children; the criminal law which deals with the physical and sexual abuse of children, and child protection legislation which deals with the involvement of the state where a child has been abused or neglected. The federal government has constitutional jurisdiction over the former and the provincial governments have constitutional jurisdiction over the latter.

Provinces deal with child protection in a number of ways relevant to their individual circumstances and with a wide range of statutes covering such topics as adoption, child welfare, custody and access, and education. Each province has a government recognized body which has the responsibility for enforcing child welfare laws in order to protect children and provide services to the child in his or her family. Given that these services are in place throughout this country, it does not seem to me to be advisable and necessary to involve the federal government in a long phase of negotiations to standardize these laws, removing flexibility from provincial legislatures and challenging the constitutional authority which has been in place since 1867.

Further, I am not at all convinced that a costly, central, monolithic child protection commission would or could provide better services than those now provided by each province and territory, nor am I persuaded that it would be constitutionally correct.

The hon. member has also included in her motion a reference to the need for an emergency hotline which children could contact in times of crisis. I would like to inform the House that the Canadian Children's Foundation has established a 1-800 number to serve just such a function. The number is 1-800-668-6868. It is called Kids Help Phone and it is my understanding that it is enjoying considerable success.

This crisis line handles calls from anywhere in Canada and refers children in distress to local authorities and services for assistance in dealing with their problems. This valuable service offers support and assistance to children from all across Canada. As a matter of fact, I spoke with Mrs. Heather Sproule of that agency recently. I might share with you a few statistics.

The crisis line was started in May of this year and already they have had some 75,000 calls. The average per day is about 800. On weekends they get as many as 1,000 calls. Unfortunately, they only have five lines now but with increased funding they hope to have ten. When it is fully operational they will likely be receiving as many as 200,000 calls a year.

The average age of the callers is between 11 and 14 years of age. They even have had over 100 calls from youths four years of age to seven years of age. I am told that 76 per cent of the callers are female, 24 per cent are male. I do not know the reason for that mix, perhaps it is the male ego not wanting to admit that they do need some help. Fifty per cent of the calls are from Ontario and that is partly because the start-up was there, but they will be advertising and communicating in all regions of the country in order that they may be able to help. I believe the federal government has contributed about $1.3 million to this most worth-while agency and $650,000 of that is to be matched by other donors. We wish them every success.

• (1740)

Children are our most important asset and, as I mentioned earlier, our society will be judged by how well we protect them. There are, in addition to child protection laws, criminal laws which protect our children. In particular, this government can be proud of its legislative achievements in the area of child sexual abuse.

In January of last year Bill C-15 became law. This bill amended the Criminal Code and the Canada Evidence Act to better protect children and youth from sexual abuse by enacting measures to permit more young children to testify and provide more sensitive procedures for obtaining their evidence. In addition, new offences were created and certain outdated and confusing provisions of the Criminal Code were repealed.

The Department of Justice has supported this initiative through law information activity such as an easy to read booklet for children aged four to ten that tells them to tell someone if they have been sexually abused, and a booklet for adults telling them how to proceed if a child discloses an incident of sexual abuse to them.

Concern for children is expressed not only in the Criminal Code but in the federal government's family law legislation. The Divorce Act, for example, provides that custody of a child is to be decided upon a consideration of the child's best interest only. This makes it clear that the needs and rights of the child are the central and, indeed, the only concern of the courts when deciding the difficult question of custody of a child.

The government has expressed its concern in other ways for children in situations of divorce through the Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance Act. This act plays an important role in the enforcement of child support payments as well as the recovery of children wrongfully abducted from the custodial parent by the non-custodial parent. All too often, it is sad to say, the parent who is to pay support for the child, usually the father, economically abandons his child by not paying or by paying late or by paying less than the ordered or agreed to amount.

The Federal Government Enforcement Assistance Act allows for the garnishment of designated federal funds to enforce delinquent support payments. I understand the program has been a tremendous success having intercepted a total of $6.3 million in the year prior to June 30, 1989. In many instances, the debtor father chooses to disappear rather then to pay child support. In such cases, the federal government will search its information banks in an effort to locate the father, thereby aiding provincial authorities in the enforcement of the support order or agreement.

In conclusion, information will also be released where a non-custodial parent takes a child contrary to an existing custodial arrangement. Information has been released in a total of 6,638 cases in the period from the establishment of the program on December 1, 1987, up to June of this year. The Federal Enforcement Assistance Act is part of a larger federal and provincial initiative to provide concrete assistance to children of divorcing families.

The government's work in the areas of support and custody and the Criminal Code are simply a few examples of our commitment to the protection of all Canadian children. The value of children cannot be overemphasized. They are the future of our country. This motion, however, fails, in my humble opinion, to significantly improve the lot of children in Canada.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to stand before you today and to address the motion focusing on children. I would like to commend the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam for bringing this matter before the House of Commons. Children are the cornerstone of this country, the basis for Canada's future.

The motion refers to a potential bill of rights for children, to a child protection commission and to a hotline; initiatives which are certainly diverse. But we must remember the other means by which we assist families and children. Their rights depend not only on laws or organizations but as well on other very practical means of support.

Families are the first form for socialization of our children, for shaping and teaching the social values vital to the well-being of children. We therefore need to ensure a positive environment for families so that they, in turn, can fulfil their nurturing and caring responsibilities for our children.

Over the past 150 years, governments all across the world have undertaken specific measures to support families and their children. The recent international report from the United Nations to establish and adopt a convention on the rights of the child is certainly evidence of this.

Domestically, Canada has established a comprehensive approach to supporting families. An important feature of the Canadian system of support is the shared responsibility between federal and provincial jurisdictions. Constitutionally, provincial governments have prime responsibility for the well-being of children and through, for example, their social services and social assistance programs they discharge their responsibility. The federal government assists or facilitates these provincial activities largely through the transfer of moneys through programs such as the Canada Assistance Plan and Established Programs Financing.

From the federal government's perspective the concept of a family benefit related to the child goes back to 1918 when an amendment to the Income War Tax Act introduced the child tax exemption. The family allowance program then came into effect in 1945 demonstrating that Canada has accepted its obligation to assist in the upbringing of children. It was established as a vehicle whereby the federal government could supplement family income in order to alleviate some of the costs of caring and raising children.

Several changes have been made to family allowance since its inception in order to make the system of family benefits better targeted to families most in need.

Currently the federal government delivers almost $3 billion in family allowance benefits to over 3.5 million families on behalf of 6.5 million children. Benefits are paid, usually to the mother, on a monthly basis. In 1989 the monthly benefit is set at approximately $33 per child amounting to nearly $400 per year. Current federal income support for families does not stop with family allowances. In this regard, family allowances are complemented by a system of child related benefits delivered largely through the personal income tax system.

The child tax credit program which benefits lower income families is another key source of income support for families. Since taking office in 1984 this government has significantly enhanced the maximum value of the credit by over 50 per cent, with the actual benefit increasing from $367 per child in 1984 to $565 per child in 1989. Family allowances and the basic child tax credit together support families and children by almost $1,000 per child annually.

As part of the recent child care initiative, the federal government also introduced in 1988 an additional supplement to the child tax credit in respect of children six years of age and under. The supplement is valued at $200 per child in 1989 and for subsequent tax years. The federal government has undertaken other income tax support measures to assist families with children. For example, we have proposed the new goods and services tax package which, when all elements are taken together, will mean that families with incomes of less than $30,000 per year will be better off than before the package had taken effect. As part of the package, families will benefit from an enhanced tax credit under the goods and services tax package which would be paid quarterly, in advance. The maximum value of the credit would be $275 per adult and $100 per child with special arrangements to support single parents.

Families will also benefit from a proposed reduction in the middle income tax bracket to somewhere in the order of 25 per cent. This rate reduction complements the enriched credit since the benefit it provides increases over the income range where the credit benefits are declining. We also assist parents with the cost and affordability of non-parental forms of child care. Through the personal income tax system, families are able to deduct up to $4,000 in work-related child care expenses in respect of pre-school age children and $2,000 in respect of school age children.

Through the Canada Assistance Plan, a cost-sharing program with the provinces, the federal government shares in eligible provincial expenditures on child care. In 1988-89 the federal government expected to spend some $200 million under this cost-sharing program in respect of child care. The federal government intends to enhance its support for child care through a new national child care initiative which, as reported in both the Speech from the Throne and the Budget, will be introduced before the end of this mandate.

Families with new-born babies should soon experience additional support as the result of new legislation which is currently before the House and which would completely revise the current regime of maternity and sickness benefits.

• (1750)

The legislation will amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and introduce a multi-tiered system of maternity, parental and sickness benefits, including 15 weeks of maternity benefits available during the period surrounding the birth of a child; 10 weeks of parental benefits available to natural or adoptive parents, either the mother or the father, 15 weeks of sickness benefits and so on. The new unemployment insurance regime will allow claimants to receive each type of benefit up to its maximum as long as the cumulative duration of special benefits does not exceed 30 weeks.

In all of this, of course, we cannot forget that the best source of social protection is a job, and parents who have jobs are better able to provide for their own children. This federal government has been very successful in its economic policy efforts and has created over 1.5 million jobs since taking office in 1984.

Nonetheless, as we are all aware, family functioning sometimes breaks down as a result of outside strains and pressures. The federal government is concerned about these problems and with ensuring that families continue to be able to operate effectively and efficiently.

We are also aware of the important role that the public sector can play, both directly and indirectly, in assisting families during times of crisis. At the federal level, several initiatives have been introduced recently in support of families in crisis situations. For instance, we have identified and are responding to the priority issue of child abuse and, more generally, family violence.

In 1986, a five-year, $25 million initiative on child sexual abuse was announced. This initiative included the appointment of a special adviser on child sexual abuse, as we have already heard, who is expected to present his report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare early in the new year.

A subsequent announcement in 1988 outlined a new $40 million family violence initiative. Under the second initiative, the majority of the funds, that is about $20 million, were allocated towards the creation of 500 new shelter units for battered women and their children.

The federal government is committed to undertaking further work in the area of family violence. To this end, we are developing a new family violence initiative which, in co-operation with provinces and the non-governmental sector, will improve the support available to families and children facing crisis and/or abusive situations.

The federal government has also eased the problems of marriage breakdown and divorce by introducing new divorce legislation which amended the grounds for divorce and humanized its consequences. To assist with the enforcement of support, the federal government also introduced services which provide for the release of information from designated federal banks to help locate persons who do not meet their obligations to a family order. They as well to provide for the garnishment of designated federal moneys from defaulting spouses.

Other federal initiatives in respect of families include efforts to reduce the problem of drug abuse in Canada and particularly among our young through the National Drug Strategy, and financial support to the provinces through the Established Programs Financing arrangements which supports the provision of health care in the education system.

The policies which I have just outlined are major federal programs which support families and children in Canada. These initiatives have helped families to cope with an ever-changing society by ensuring access to the key services and programs; child care, counselling, health care and education.

These initiatives have also contributed to lessening the problem of child poverty. In this regard, since 1984 the incidence of low income among children has continued to drop from a high of 20 per cent to just under 17 per cent in 1987.

We all have a vested interest in ensuring that today's children are provided with adequate social and health protection. I welcome this opportunity to speak on such a fundamental vital issue as our children.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, recently Canada joined all major countries in the world as a signator to the historic UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. Canada, as a result, is legally obligated to adapt our policies and our legislation to reflect this convention as it applies particularly to protect the rights of children in Canada.

This motion we are debating today, which was sponsored by the member for Mission—Coquitlam, reinforces the UN convention by advocating a bill of rights for Canadian children. I commend her for her initiative. We hope this motion will be adopted not only by this House but by all provinces and by the Government of Canada as a guideline and commitment to protect the rights of Canadian children.

When we see the plight of starving children on TV, children from Africa with their bloated bodies and eyes that we cannot bear to look into, we are moved. But do we take action?

UNICEF reported at a conference I attended last summer that 40,000 children die each day from simple childhood diseases that are preventable. The cost of curing these diseases is minimal and yet do we contribute, as citizens, to save one child?

Today it was reported on the CBC that the UN predicts 100 million children may die in the next 10 years because of lack of nutrition and neglect. It is almost unbelievable that we live in this kind of a world.

However, in our concern for the world's children we must not forget our own children in Canada. The problems of many of Canada's children are hidden behind closed doors in our cities, towns and countryside. Child poverty, child abuse and child neglect are not visible. Yet, in Canada, well over one million children live below the poverty line. Children are the fastest growing users of food banks in this country.

Many of these children are disadvantaged from birth. Child mortality rates are twice as high in poor households as in the rest of the country. Babies are born underweight and face medical complications because of their mothers' poor nutrition during pregnancy. Young brains, as a result, do not develop and progress in school is difficult. Poor kids face a high dropout rate in high school, further limiting their options. Many become homeless street kids in their teens, with all the dangers that lifestyle entails. Verbal, physical and sexual abuse of children also are on the rise. Many children who are sexually abused grow up to become prostitutes and patients in psychiatric hospitals, and we viewed this recently, in dramatic terms, in documentaries on television.

Canada was a signator to the UN convention on the rights of the child and we are morally bound to adhere to its precepts. Article 27 of this convention states that as a member nation we, as a signator, must ensure a standard of living adequate for children's physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development.

While parents have the primary responsibility to provide security of life for their children, this is often not within their financial capacities. This means that where there are difficulties and where incomes are inadequate in families—and there are many, many of these, one in four children are in families who are in this situation—the state must supplement incomes and provide support programs. But we are not doing that in an adequate way. Sure, we have token welfare programs, but they are far below the minimum standard that is needed to sustain a family with young children.

I think that this government has short-changed us. Our children surely are our future, and our future is in trouble. Our society creates child poverty and neglect because it is based on inequalities. Women are left alone to raise children, without adequate incomes and without opportunities for independence in the future. Many parents are unemployed or underemployed. Housing is unaffordable for many young families today.

Our Conservative government leaves people at the mercy of the market-place where corporations reap profits while people lose jobs, and of course children suffer. Instead of improving social security and family benefits, the government's tax policies have increased the burden on low-income people.

What can we do to ensure that the rights of children are protected in Canada? We need a policy of full employment so that parents will be guaranteed a job with pay equity and parental leave provisions and affordable, quality child care. We need a children's bill of rights that will be enforced by governments, and by the federal government in particular.

I support the motion of my hon. colleague for Mission—Coquitlam that this government should begin negotiating with the provinces to provide a children's bill of rights which will standardize laws throughout Canada. I also support her motion that this bill of rights should include a child protection commission and an emergency hotline which children could contact in times of crisis.

Why do we as Canadians and as world citizens tolerate the hardship that so many of our children are experiencing?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Because others profit by it.

Ms. Mitchell: As my colleague says, because others profit by it. People on this side of this House, I hope, do not tolerate that. Why do we sit back in complacency knowing that a generation of children who should be the leaders and parents of the future are instead being scarred by poverty and abuse? How can we give at Christmas to assuage our guilt and then feel free to ignore and forget our children's poverty and the problems of the children of Canada for the rest of the year? Why does poverty continue to exist in an affluent country such as ours?

• (1800)

These are the questions we must answer with action. One of the first steps is for all of us to agree to adopt and implement a children's bill of rights.

Mr. Allan Koury (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the list of many other speakers who have lent their voices to the important question of children's rights in Canada. I wish to thank the hon. member from Mission—Coquitlam for placing before the House of Commons her motion on this subject.

During the course of this debate on the issue of a comprehensive bill of rights for children, a number of speakers have alluded to the developments that have taken place internationally in regard to the human rights of the child. In fact, several members have suggested that as an alternative to elaborating a new bill of rights for children in Canada efforts in this country be focused on the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child. I wish to express my support for this suggestion, which I believe is a realistic means to enhance protection in this country for our children.

During earlier stages of this debate when reference was made to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child, it was with the knowledge that the convention had not been adopted in final by the UN General Assembly. That important step was in fact taken on November 20, 1989, when the General Assembly adopted the convention by consensus.

As a Canadian, I am proud of the leading role that this country played in both the drafting and adoption of this fundamental instrument. Now that it has been adopted, the process of examining the question of Canadian signature and ratification of the convention will commence.

As the debate on the motion before us has progressed, it has become increasingly clear that many, if not all, of the issues that would be included in the Canadian bill of rights for children are addressed in the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Members speaking on this question have raised a number of extremely important concerns relating to the need for enhanced protection for children.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order please. The hon. member will have six minutes the next time this bill comes up. I regret that time has expired.

The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38(1) is deemed to have been moved.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on an issue which has been raised repeatedly by myself and other members for the last number of years. It is the issue of a safe drinking water act.

Last May 10, I asked a question of the Minister of the Environment calling on him to act in a preventive way, for once, and to live up to this government's commitment to bring in a safe drinking water act.

The requests for this act have been more urgent than in previous years as people from Winnipeg, for example, have become alarmed, and rightly so, by the plans of Consolidated Professor Mining. This company has been testing the feasibility of opening a gold mine in Shoal Lake, Ontario, the source of Winnipeg's drinking water. They want to build this mine on Stevens Island in the middle of the lake. Their operation would involve the crushing of rocks, which contain arsenic, right on the island with the assurance, so they say, that none of the arsenic would make its way into the lake.

They say they have retaining ponds which will never, ever leak under any circumstances. We are told not to worry about their having arsenic so close to the intake for Winnipeg's water, because there will never be any accidents, nor will there ever be any spills. It reminds me of the assurances that I am sure the people of Ukraine got from the Soviet nuclear experts about the possibility of a reactor accident, or the assurances that the people of northern Saskatchewan got about the retaining ponds at Wollaston Lake and other places where we have had spills recently of uranium mining waste water into the natural environment there.

• (1805)

It does not take a great deal of wisdom and foresight to see that such an operation poses an absolutely unnecessary risk to the health of the people of Winnipeg. The response to this issue in Winnipeg has been strong. It has been led by the Winnipeg Water Protection Group and its president, Helen McCullough. I had the opportunity to meet with Helen last summer and subsequently on a number of other occasions. The research and effort that they have put into stopping this project has been remarkable and should be commended.

As well, I would like to commend three grade five students from John de Graff School in my riding who were concerned about this, perhaps concerned that the adult community was not doing enough. They gathered over 300 names on a petition about this issue. I had the honour of bringing their petition to the House last June. I commend them again for their actions.

These young people are right to be concerned that so far all that we have seen from the federal government on this issue is talk but no action. On May 10 the answer that I received from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who assured me that as a fellow Manitoban he shared my concern on this issue, stated, as reported at page 1541 of Hansard:

> No approval should be given until every assurance has been given that the water supply is safe.

This begs a question as far as I am concerned. Surely the government understands that the way to make sure that the water supply is safe is not to allow mines that leach arsenic to be built on islands in the middle of the lake in the first place. The way to do that is to bring in an act that ensures that commercial development such as this will always take a back seat to the safety of drinking water for Canadians. Surely if we have reached any point at all in our environmental consciousness we have reached the point where a gold mining company should not have a claim of any sort by which it could even think about establishing a good mine in the middle of the drinking water supply of 600,000 Canadians. Surely we should reach a point where that is not even on the table, that is not even an option, that is not even considered.

This is what I have in mind for a safe drinking water act. Such an act has been promised by the government in speeches and letters over and over again but the act has failed to materialize. My colleague from Beaches—Woodbine has been pushing for such an act for years, repeatedly bringing in Private Members' Bills to this effect. The government of the day, be it Liberal or Conservative, has always killed these bills at that stage.

Last June, Bill C-224, a safe drinking water act, was brought before the House by my colleague from Beaches—Woodbine and was talked out by a Liberal, the hon. member for Gander—Grand Falls. It is enough to make a person wonder if either the Liberals or the Conservatives will ever see the light as far as the safety of drinking water for Canadians is concerned.

We have been asking the government to take some initiative for years now. The government has been promising action but none has been seen.

In November, Helen McCullough received a disturbing letter from an Environment Canada official that told her the Shoal Lake management plan "has not directly involved Environment Canada to date". Why has it not? Why has it not, given all the assurances that we have received in this House from various federal ministers? Why has Environment Canada not been involved? What is the federal government doing with respect to this issue? Where is our safe drinking water act? The government has had years to move and the safety of as many as 650,000 people now is at stake. Why the reluctance to bring in the legislation?

This matter is clearly in the federal government's jurisdiction. It is time for the government to do something and not just talk about it.

I see that the hon. member for Brandon—Souris is preparing to respond on behalf of the government, someone who is also from Manitoba. Perhaps he will have some goods news for us, that for once this government will act in the interest of Manitobans. It did not with respect to Rafferty-Alameda. It got off to not a bad start. It did something right, but it has allowed that to lapse too.

Once again, in terms of the rhetoric of the government with respect to the environment, its bark has been a whole lot stronger than its bite. We would like to see some bite on Rafferty-Alameda, some bite on a safe drinking water act and some bite for the drinking water supply of Winnipegers.

• (1810)

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of the Environment first heard about the proposed gold mine which will be located approximately 12 kilometres from Winnipeg's water supply he immediately asked Environment Canada officials to investigate possible federal decision-making authorities over the proposed mine which could trigger the application—

Mr. Blaikie: Why do you say "will be", Lee, is it a foregone conclusion?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): If the hon. member will wait, I think he will find that there is some information here which applies to the question he has raised of the EARP process.

The Fisheries Act and the Navigable Waters Protection Act were the two acts that might have served this purpose. However, a recent decision by the Federal Court with regard to the Old Man River Dam in Alberta has cast doubt on the applicability of the EARP to the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

Under the Fisheries Act, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans may request plans and specifications for any project that is likely to result in the alteration, disruption or destruction of fish habitat, or in the deposit of a deleterious substance in water frequented by fish. While such a request may require the application of the EARP, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans does not consider the request to be justified in the specific circumstances of the Consolidated Professor Mine because the Ontario Environmental Assessment Act process will provide for the opportunity to address potential impacts on fish or fish habitat.

I wish to add that as a result of the expressions of concern by Winnipeg residents and as a result of discussions among the federal government, Ontario and the Province of Manitoba, Ontario decided to designate the proposed mine under its own Environmental Assessment Act. I understand the government of Manitoba is satisfied with the proposed review process. I can assure you that Environment Canada officials will also actively participate in the review of the project under the Ontario process.

The proposed mine is, as the hon. member probably knows, also subject to the federal metal mining liquid effluent regulations. Those regulations are rigorously applied.

With respect to the proposed federal safe drinking water act, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Hon. Perrin Beatty, has indicated that he intends to introduce a drinking water safety act that would establish drinking water quality objectives that would be mandatory within the federal domain. The proposed act would not directly address the issues that the hon. member has mentioned. It would permit the Department of National Health and Welfare to enter into agreements with other jurisdictions in order to solve drinking water problems of common interest. I think that is of considerable importance, Mr. Speaker.

Adjournment Debate

HEALTH

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, in May 1986 the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare produced a report on AIDS. The government responded by saying it was doing everything it could.

Two years later, in May of 1988, the Royal Society produced a report on AIDS. The government again responded by saying it was doing everything it could.

The former Minister of Health said in 1987 to the UN General Assembly: "In my opinion, we in Canada are doing our utmost to bring AIDS under control within our own borders." But AIDS groups and we in the opposition have said consistently that in fact the government was doing very little while this lawless fatal disease spread.

The current Minister of Health said he agreed with the opposition and recognized that his government had done virtually nothing to control the spread of AIDS. He said in The Medical Post on May 9, 1989: "I would have liked to have inherited a national strategy, but I didn't." He also said that affected groups are not being consulted. Looking at the way we have proceeded to date he said: "Too often the communications have not been adequate."

On August 11, 1988 the Prime Minister crowed over his government's AIDS policy saying it is part of a solid record of achievement of which all members of this Parliament can be proud. We on this side of the House have no pride in the inaction of this government, and apparently the Minister of Health is not part of his own government's action either.

Further, at the Montreal International Conference on AIDS, the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his speech talked about what his government was going to do in the future and did not indicate much about what the government had done in the past, and for good reason. The government's record on developing an AIDS strategy and responding to the AIDS crisis remains a record of inaction.

Five years ago when the Conservatives took office there were 122 cases of people living with AIDS. When I asked my question on AIDS in May there were 2,736 cases, an increase of 2,200 per cent in five years. Now there are in excess of 2,900 cases of people living with AIDS.

In addition to this massive and tragic growth in people living with AIDS are those tens of thousands—perhaps 50,000 people—testing HIV positive.

AIDS is a preventive condition. Yet many problems remain in reducing its incidence. I would like to relate a few of those problems which the government has yet to address.

• (1815)

It is known how the HIV virus is spread, but there remains a great deal of ignorance and misapprehension about the virus and about AIDS in general. While some have changed their behaviour on the basis of the information available, others have not. Condoms are not as widely available as they should be. Needle exchange programs have been thwarted by some provinces. Persons with AIDS or who have tested HIV positive are frequently discriminated against. The federal government has been far too slow to react to show the leadership needed. The same goes for provincial governments in Canada.

Insufficient research on AIDS and the HIV virus is being conducted and access to promising new treatments is too often hindered. Governments at all levels have funded the fight against AIDS in a totally inadequate manner.

Early testing and diagnosis in the treatment of HIV infection is critical. Yet the lack of availability of anonymous testing facilities prevents many from coming forward for testing.

Faced with inadequate government funding, leadership and co-ordination, community groups which have performed so well in the fight against AIDS are often understaffed and underfunded. The federal Centre for AIDS has not acted in such a way as to have gained the confidence of those in the field.

All these problems with the fight against AIDS should be seen in the light of the continued increase in the number of people with AIDS in Canada and should be seen in the light of inadequate funding and leadership by this Conservative government. This is in sharp contrast to the situation in other countries. Australia is a good example of this. There the federal government has shown leadership in the development of an effective strategy dealing with AIDS, including consultation with support groups. In addition, on AIDS the Australian government spends four times the per capita amount spent in Canada.

Canada has a long way to go and people are losing their future and, indeed, dying in the process. All the while this Conservative government sits back without taking leadership in policy development and a funding role.

Canada should have had a national AIDS strategy in place and in operation by now. There has been no valid excuse for the delay. The way ahead is clear. The strategy should deal with education and prevention, treatment, care and support, testing, cancelling discrimination and research. The government should develop a policy in the near future. It has an enormous amount of information available to it to do so.

In closing, if I may, I would like to pay particular tribute to all those working in support groups, voluntary and otherwise, for the very important work they are performing. They deserve and need the commitment and adequate funding which this government has not seen fit as yet to provide.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, at the Fifth International Conference on AIDS in Montreal the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced this government's commitment to develop a national strategy on AIDS by the end of the year.

The development of a national AIDS strategy is an exercise which requires the participation and the involvement of all those involved in the fight against AIDS. These include the federal, provincial and municipal governments, as well as the non-government organizations in the country. Discussions with the various agencies have been ongoing and will continue.

The strategy will delineate the appropriate objectives and propose a course of action over a medium term of five years and will require input from other federal departments which will include Justice, Secretary of State, Corrections, Treasury Board Secretariat, Employment and Immigration, Labour, CIDA, External Affairs, the Department of National Defence and the Solicitor General.

The strategy will also be developed through a series of bilateral discussions and consultations. These will provide a forum for the exchange of information and activities already under way at the federal and provincial levels in areas of education and community-based public awareness initiatives.

Ongoing consultations with the non-governmental sector are being conducted in parallel with the above process in order to obtain their input for the formulation of the national AIDS strategy.

Consultations have been held with such groups as the Canadian Public Health Association, the Canadian AIDS Society and their affiliates, the Canadian Haemophilia Society, the Canadian Council on Social Development, the scientific community and representatives from the educational field, including groups such as the Council of Ministers of Education, Canadian Home and School and Parent Teacher Federation, the Canadian Teachers Federation and others. The success of the development of a national strategy depends on the participation of all the partners.

The development of a national strategy on aids is a complex and important step in the fight against this deadly disease. It is crucial that we have adequate consultation with all the partners if we are to achieve a truly national approach. It is expected that the complete and comprehensive national strategy will be announced in the first half of 1990.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.21 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 13, 1989

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, FEDNOR is a government program that is a success story. This regional economic development program was designed with input from northern Ontarians, designed for northern Ontarians, and is benefiting northern Ontarians.

In its first annual report for the year ending March, 1989, FEDNOR recorded $8.7 million of assistance which levered $24 million of investment in the north. Through the Rural Small Business Assistance Program and the COR Industrial Program, 463 jobs have been created.

Recently a new FEDNOR tourism assistance program has been announced that will assist tourism operators and help to increase tourism throughout northern Ontario.

I am proud, as a northern Ontarian, to have been a member of a government which first gave my home region of the country the recognition it deserves. Northern Ontario has greatly benefited from our government's policy approach and the fine work done by FEDNOR's board, made up of and located in northern Ontario, its offices, which are located throughout northern Ontario, and FEDNOR's funding, specifically targeted to northern Ontarians and their business interests.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to address the ever deepening crisis which Canadian food processors are facing. Last week the Ontario food processors, at their annual convention, stated: "Ontario's $15 billion food industry just cannot compete with the United States under free trade".

This was backed up later in the week, unfortunately, when COBI Foods Incorporated announced the closure of its Whitby, Ontario, plant with the loss of 100 full-time jobs, 150 seasonal jobs and 8,500 acres of processed vegetables.

We need action to stop this disintegration and destruction of Canada's agriculture, not just the announcement of task forces to talk about the problems. Agriculture is running out of time. Canadian agriculture wants action, not more and more rhetoric.

* * *

EL SALVADOR

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, as many in the House will know, there is a delegation from the El Salvadoran government in Ottawa that will be meeting with the external affairs committee later this afternoon. Tomorrow this same delegation from the Arena government will be meeting with officials of External Affairs.

I would like to take this opportunity to urge those officials at External Affairs, and urge the government, that they instruct those officials to express to the Arena delegation, in the strongest possible terms, the outrage of Canadians at the murder of the six Jesuit priests which, in everyone's opinion, was perpetrated by people in uniform and, therefore, by the army; the disappearances, the human rights violations, the bombing and killing of trade unionists and all the other things that have come to be associated with this particular government.

I think it is incumbent upon the Canadian government, having made the decision to receive this delegation, to take every opportunity to impress upon it just how much offence Canadians take at recent events in that country.

S. O. 31

GUN CONTROL

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, the brutal slaying of 14 young women in Montreal last week has horrified all Canadians. We all share the grief and sorrow of the families.

That tragic event has also focused public attention on the availability of guns in our society. For under $500, a 16 year old in Canada can buy an AK–47 assault rifle that has been converted from fully automatic to semi–automatic. For an extra $60 that 16 year old can also legally purchase a trigger activator which will allow the gun to fire three bullets with one pull of the trigger. However, if that same 16 year old has any knowledge of guns, that AK–47 can easily be reconverted back into an automatic. An automatic AK–47 can fire 30 bullets in less than three seconds.

Last March I proposed changes to the Criminal Code that would ban any gun that was originally made as an automatic. The Minister of Justice threw his support behind the proposal and I urge him to introduce those changes as quickly as possible.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it has been a tough week in Atlantic Canada. An empty feeling pervades all sensitive Nova Scotians over the announced closures at Canso and North Sydney. We on the South Shore know the pain of closures at Port Mouton, Lockeport, Shag Harbour, Port Lehebert and Port Medway.

We must cope with declining stocks and seek to reduce our economic dependence on the fishery. But, Mr. Speaker, must we put up with American fishermen thumbing their noses at our law enforcement efforts? Must the proud officers, men and women of our navy, suffer the indignity of being rammed on the high seas in Canadian waters by foreigners who are in the process of violating our laws, without fear of retaliation? Now we have George Bush's signature on the infamous Mitchell lobster bill establishing clearly, lest there be any doubt, that the Americans are prepared to act in good faith only so long as it serves their own interest. If the Mitchell bill is allowed to stay in place it will suggest to Nova Scotian's that the FTA is not worth the paper it is printed on.

• (1410)

I believe that Canada will win the FTA panel and I urge the government to move quickly with the process in order to minimize the damage that is already being done to Canadian lobster prices in Europe as well as the United States.

* * *

[Translation]

RESPONSIBILITY FOR CHILD CARE

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): On November 24, the Minister of National Health and Welfare confirmed that ultimate responsibility for child care rests with the parents. The minister is right. The Conservative government sent a clear message that it feels no obligation towards young Canadians or their families.

[English]

By not delivering a new child care initiative, by not addressing the needs of more than one million Canadian children who live in poverty and by not declaring a national emergency to deal with the shocking increase in child hunger, this government has introduced the Conservative social philosophy that the rich should prosper but the poor must pull themselves up by their own boot straps.

The recent last–minute bail–out of the successful Kids First hot line is an example of the ad hoc manner in which programs directed at the youth are funded.

[Translation]

The Conservatives have no overall plan and, as the minister confirmed himself, no short–term or even long–term vision to help the thousands of Canadian families who are unable to find reasonably priced day care for their children. The minister should agree that his inertia is depriving our children of a future to which they are now entitled.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[English]

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, across the country we see horrifying examples of ignorance about violence against women.

A judge in Ottawa, in a wife battering case, said he was not going to worry about the woman being beaten. The same judge last year acquitted a man who threatened to rape three women because, according to the judge, these threats did not harm the women.

In British Columbia, a judge said a three-year-old girl was sexually aggressive, thus provoking her own abuse by an adult male.

In Manitoba a judge, said that it is sometimes okay for men to slap women around and he was told by a review that there was nothing improper in his remarks.

In Nova Scotia, a judge was removed from the bench for telling women to return to and to obey their abusive husbands. Also in Nova Scotia, a judge was given an absolute discharge for assaulting his own wife.

In Ottawa last spring, a man was given an intermittent 90-day jail term for beating his wife's head in with a baseball bat. She spent a month in a coma.

I call on this government to take concrete action to educate judges about violence against women.

* * *

[Translation]

SITUATION OF PEOPLE IN ISOLATED AND NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the task force on tax benefits for isolated and northern areas did not respect the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement reached between the Governments of Canada and Quebec, the James Bay Energy Corporation, the James Bay Development Corporation, the Quebec Hydro-electric Commission and the James Bay Cree.

The villagers of Waswanipi and Mistassini were not consulted by the task force on chapters 14, 16, 18, 19, 25, 26 and 28 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Cree-Naskapi Agreement.

The final report of this task force makes no mention of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and the inquiry into regional disparities conducted by Quebec in October 1989.

Mr. Speaker, the isolation of the Cree villages of Mistassini and Waswanipi is a reality in Quebec and in Canada.

* * *

[English]

JUSTICE

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, anti-pornography legislation is necessary but can only address the most explicit and obvious types of anti-social material. Mainstream pornography is far more insidious and pervasive in its impact on societal attitudes. Media studies education identifies positive and negative human values underlying media presentations. It helps students to recognize and deal with negative stereotyping, subliminal messages that create rape myths and make violence and domination of women, children and occasionally men appear sexually attractive.

Under the existing copyright legislation and the proposed exemptions, creators are able to prevent teachers from discussing and critically evaluating their material in the classroom.

The moral rights of creators should not be placed above those of other members of society. Educators must be allowed to address negative values inflicted upon us by the media. The commercial value of copyrighted material should not given precedence over the nurturing of positive human values in our society.

The Minister of Communications must bring in exemptions to the copyright legislation that will allow media studies education to continue legally.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it was one ago and four months ago when Rita Siliwa, a Canadian citizens of 11 years of age, went to Iraq to visit her natural parents. Rita had been adopted by her uncle in Canada when she was 14 months old. She had since spent her life as a Canadian learning Canadian values and believing in Canadian principles and human rights and justice.

Mr. Speaker, Rita is still being detained by the Iraqi government which refuses to issue her an exit visa. Article 13, Clause 1 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the United Nations, of which Iraq is a member, states: "everyone has the right to leave any country including his own and to return to his country".

Iraqi law recognizes neither Rita's citizenship nor the legality of her adoption. Therefore, it claims that it cannot allow her to return to her home.

I urge the Secretary of State to once again remind the Iraqi government of the gravity of this situation and to appeal to the Iraqi government to let Rita come home and continue to live her life as a Canadian.

As an adoptive parent myself, I call on the government of Iraq to respect the adoption laws of Canada.

* * *

STATEMENT BY SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if hon. members would indulge the Speaker's need to make a short statement.

I wish to inform the House that I have received several communications from all parties regarding testimony given before the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General relating to police investigations of certain members. I have given this matter my entire attention this morning and it was the major item of discussion at the Board of Internal Economy meeting this noon.

I want to assure all hon. members that the Chair will review with great care the testimony of the witnesses before that committee as it relates to the authority of the Board of Internal Economy and the rights and immunities of members of this House.

On this very important matter I shall, of course, report back to the House as soon as possible and I shall seek whatever advice and counsel is necessary in the process.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Conservative government has allowed the Spanish and Portuguese fleets to pillage our own fish. What few fish are left the government has allowed the French to steal. It has allowed the Europeans to set fish quotas which are absolutely absurd. It caved in to the Americans on the fish processing rules for our salmon and herring. It caved in to the Americans on our export tax for fish. It has mismanaged our cod, our herring, our pollack and our flounder stocks. It has mismanaged the snow crab industry until it is now in total collapse.

Now the Prime Minister's good friend, the President of the United States, has just signed into law a ban on millions of dollars of Canadian lobsters. It is a great trade deal that the Prime Minister of Canada signed. It has just done wonders for the Atlantic coast fishery, hasn't it, Mr. Speaker?

What is the Prime Minister going to do for the Atlantic coast about the disaster that he has created? Did he not promise, among other things, that the President of the United States would not sign that law?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition raises, on the one hand, the very serious question of the Atlantic fishery, which has been with us for some time. Then I think he destroys much of the value of the point that he tries to make by turning it into a partisan issue when, in fact, it is a very important national issue.

• (1420)

I refer my hon. friend, for example, to an analysis by Professor Anthony Davis in this morning's The Globe and Mail, who is a specialist in fisheries research at St. Francis Xavier University. Contrary to what the right hon. gentlemen has just said, the conclusion of the distinguished professor, the expert, seems to be that one of the root causes of the problem originated with the report culled together and presided over by Michael Kirby in 1983. He spells it out very clearly. So, I commend that—

Some hon. members: Shame on you.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Who's Michael Kirby?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Liberal Party has the nerve to stand up here and blame this government for all of the sins of the world. Yet, when I point out an analysis that was done by a distinguished research professor in fisheries this morning who has a different opinion, all of a sudden they start to howl. I have acknowledged it is a very serious problem. I have acknowledged that it is a very serious national problem and that the—

Ms. Clancy: What are you going to do about it?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to respond to a serious question. The Minister for International Trade, the Minister of Fisheries and I have pointed out the seriousness of the problem and the resolve of the Government of Canada to aid the Atlantic fishery.

Only a child would suggest that this problem of fish stocks disappearing was created in the last couple of years. Everyone knows, as the professor pointed out this morning, that this is a problem of long standing duration. It is a problem that commands the attention of the nation. We have taken some substantial actions and we propose to take more.

Let me summarize for my friend. When the farmers of western Canada were hurting, this government took action.

Some hon. members: They still are.

Mr. Mulroney: When Atlantic fishermen are hurting, we will take action as well.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister called for a non-partisan perspective and then cited a report from a previous government.

In the last five years, the overfishing has been permitted to take place. In the last five years, there was a trade agreement signed which eliminated our fish processing rules and eliminated the export tax on fish. All these things were as a result of this particular government. And his friend, the President of the United States, signed a law yesterday banning Canadian lobsters from the American market. I suppose the Prime Minister feels that Kennebunkport lobsters are better than Canadian lobsters. That is what he really thinks.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in Bas Caraquet the fish packing plant is closed. In Shippagan the plant is in receivership. In Murray Harbour the plant is in receivership. In Tignish the plant is closed. Summerside Sea Products is in receivership. Canso, North Sydney, Lockeport, Woods Harbour, Port Medway, Port Mouton are all closed. In Newfoundland the great Avalon peninsula, the northern peninsula, Labrador, the Straits of Belle Isle are all a disaster and this Prime Minister reacts the way he does in the House of Commons. He ought to be ashamed.

Some hon. members: Shame, shame!

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is simple. What is the Prime Minister of our country going to do about the collapse of the Atlantic Canadian economy, the collapse of the Atlantic Canadian fishery? They were doing just fine before this government took office and the Prime Minister ought to recognize that.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, two matters have been raised. The province of New Brunswick is leading the country in terms of investment and the Premier of New Brunswick says that the economy of the province of New Brunswick is doing better than it has ever done before.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. members: That's because it's a Liberal government.

Mr. Mulroney: The Premier of Prince Edward Island has produced a balanced budget, in large measure due to the assistance provided by the Government of Canada.

Since Newfoundland and Labrador has been admitted into Confederation there has never been such assistance, on a per capita basis, by the Government of Canada to the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Unemployment in all but one of the four Atlantic provinces is down dramatically today from where the Liberals left it in 1984.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: And the spectacle of the Leader of the Opposition, responsible for that chaos, suggesting that the fish stocks have gone away overnight because of this government is unworthy of the Leader of the Opposition. I have said that the kinds of broad, general, generous approaches that we brought in to help the western farmer will be in place to help the Atlantic fishermen. He should be applauding that kind of attitude of the Government of Canada.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister ought to be sharing my anguish for the hundreds and thousands of Atlantic families who are facing poverty and joblessness and for the towns that have been wiped out. That is what he should be reacting to.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is so intent on being a bigshot on the world stage that he sold out Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. members: Shame, shame!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is a national disaster. Fishermen and workers in processing plants on the Atlantic coast are out of work. They don't want frivolous answers from the Canadian government that shift the blame to our friends, they want a constructive response, an answer to the question how the economy of the Atlantic provinces can be revived. That is what they expect from the Prime Minister of Canada. Mr. Speaker, I have one more question. Aside from his partisan and frivolous remarks, what kind of concrete action will he take to try and revive the depressed economy of the Atlantic provinces? Let him do something so that people in the Atlantic region will not have the worst Christmas ever!

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend talks about a crisis in Atlantic Canada. I have already indicated the seriousness of the matter and the intention of the government to deal with it.

Mr. Tobin: It's too bad you don't have a conscience, you might do something about it.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask hon. members on both sides to put their questions or comments through the Chair, if they feel a very great necessity to get into the debate. In the meantime we probably could move on more effectively if all hon. members would listen to the question and listen to the response.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, to put it in perspective before the right hon. gentleman gets carried away with his own rhetoric, I ask the House to consider the numbers.

• (1430)

In September 1984 unemployment in Newfoundland and Labrador was 23.5 per cent.

Ms. Phinney: What is it today?

Mr. Mulroney: Today it is down to 17.1 per cent, a drop of 6.4 per cent under this government.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: Tell that to Canso.

Mr. Mulroney: The member for Halifax asks about Nova Scotia. It was 13.8 per cent under the Liberals. We have reduced it to 9.9 per cent, and it continues to drop.

In New Brunswick it was 16.3 per cent. It is now down to 12.8 per cent, and it continues to drop in New Brunswick.

In all of the provinces there has been substantial improvement. There is a new and important problem and that problem deals with the seriousness of the Atlantic fishery.

The Minister for International Trade, the Minister of Fisheries, the Minister of Employment and Immigration and all members of the government are involved in putting together a strategy that will assist not only the fishermen and the fishing communities but all who depend upon the fishery for a livelihood. Apart from the original, interesting and I think effective programs that have already been announced by the various ministers, I have already indicated to my right hon. friend that the Government of Canada will act in respect of the Atlantic fishery with exactly the same kind of generosity and enthusiasm that we brought to resolving the problems of the prairie farmer a few years ago.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: What we did then on behalf of the prairie farmer was criticized by members of the Liberal party. What we are doing and will do for the Atlantic fishermen will be criticized by them because they have not got a constructive bone in their bodies. They are nothing but negative destroyers of ideas and dreams.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

This government has known since July that there was a problem in the fishery. He has talked, he says, with President Bush on lobsters. He has talked to the European Community on groundfish, he says, and nothing has been done. Nothing. Instead of relating to the fishermen and the communities he has preferred to play up to the big companies.

This government should learn more about groundfish and lobster and identify less with sharks and bloodsuckers.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: They are all bigshots now with all the answers. Where are they?

Mr. Crosbie: What about Micronav?

Mr. MacLellan: One job and that's it.

The people in this country want support from their government. They are not getting it. When will this government help the fishermen and the fishing communities when this country and they need them most of all?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the government has been working on these problems and with some success since last July.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: What is your definition of failure then?

Mr. Crosbie: We can see the true interest in the problem by the fact that anyone who tries to answer a question is interrupted by guffaws and shouting from across the House.

With respect to Atlantic Canada, in the member's own constituency we saw to it that preference was given to Micronav, a company in the high-tech area of that city, to create employment in his area. The member knew who to contact then. He was not up playing in the House and making insulting statements when Micronav got the assistance it needed in his own district.

With respect to what we are doing, we announced on Monday what we are doing with respect to the immediate emergency. We are developing new programs, a community diversification fund. We are applying our program—the program for older workers—to those who are 55 and older who might not be able to get re-employment. We said that we are going to supplement that program for workers who are between the ages of 50 and 54 because these companies have not provided pension plans for their employees.

We are demonstrating concern. We are helping them. We are going to continue helping them. We are not just making cheap shots here in the House of Commons for supposed political advantage.

Mr. Tobin: You are an embarrassment to your province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Crosbie: He knows all about poverty with his $1.9 million mortgage.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. members: Cheap, cheap!

Mr. Tobin: Coming from a Crosbie, that takes a lot of nerve.

Mr. Crosbie: The cheapest little demagogue in the country!

Mr. Marchi: Talk about your brother.

Some hon. members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if it would help if all members on both sides considered that this is an extremely important subject and that there are a lot of our fellow citizens in the Maritimes who are hoping that something constructive will come out of the exchange today.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. He quotes Professor Davis. If he reads that article further he will see that Professor Davis recommends tying the quotas to the communities. Yet his own Minister of Fisheries said yesterday he would not specify certain quotas with certain communities.

In the 1970s when Petit de Grat was threatened with closure then Liberal governments federally and provincially said that if vessels at Petit de Grat were going to fish they had to stay at Petit de Grat or not fish.

Will the Prime Minister stipulate now that any fish company which closes a plant will be required to keep those boats at that plant or not fish, and if they do not fish they will have their quotas reduced correspondingly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to a meeting held in Port Hawkesbury, almost next to Canso, written by Professor Davis from St. Francis Xavier who describes a visit there by Senator Kirby in 1983 and laying out—

Ms. Clancy: What are you on about? Pay attention.

Mr. Tobin: This is 1990.

Mr. Mulroney: I am answering the question. He lays out what he says the solutions are. Those solutions turned out to be the genesis of today's problems.

What I am saying to my hon. friend is apart from the programs that have been initiated and apart from the statement that I have made in respect of our attitude toward the Atlantic fishery, which will be comparable to that which we displayed in respect of the prairie farmer, I am delighted to have from him any suggestions. We will look very carefully at any suggestions that he and other members of this House make to put together a package of initiatives and changes that will benefit the Atlantic fishermen.

Our objective is to restore the Atlantic fishery to its previous health. To do this will require less partisanship and much more progressive attitudes from all members of the House of Commons. I do thank my hon. friend for what I think is a constructive suggestion.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I think it will be small comfort to the people of Atlantic Canada, those fish plant workers who are going to be unemployed, that the right hon. Prime Minister has said that he will tackle the problem in Atlantic Canada with the same enthusiasm that he has done so for western farmers. I point out that according to Statistics Canada, net farm incomes in 1990 will fall 87 per cent in Manitoba, 54 per cent in Alberta and 101 per cent in Saskatchewan. There will be a negative farm income in Saskatchewan.

• (1440)

Some hon. members: Shame!

Ms. McLaughlin: The Minister of Agriculture has released a green paper called Growing Together which has ironically been subtitled "starving together" by prairie farmers.

Can the minister justify to the farmers of Canada his agricultural policy which he knows is destroying the family farm and the rural communities in western Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with respect, I might remind the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party that if members of her party were so interested in the welfare of the farmers they would have facilitated and expedited the back to work legislation that would get grain moving. That would be the first thing they could do.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Rather than selling out to the labour union leaders' interests, they may want to start paying a little more attention to the welfare of the farmers.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. leader will know that the projections are very preliminary. We had similar projections with respect to the 1989 crop year that were forecast about this time a year ago. While there has been a slight drop from the record high incomes of 1988, 1989 came in just slightly below the 1988 figures, but significantly higher as compared to the original projections.

I might remind the hon. member that the crop is not in the ground yet and there are a lot of considerations to take into account.

Obviously we are concerned about this. I met with the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool this morning and we had a good discussion on it.

As the Prime Minister said, to be quite frank about it, this government has provided $21.7 billion worth of federal assistance to the farmers of Canada in the last five years. We stood with the farmers then. We are standing with them now, and we will stand with them in the future.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, this party makes no apology for standing up for fairness and pay equity for people making $18,000 a year in the federal hospitals.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: Agriculture Canada estimates that one in ten Canadian farmers and one in three farmers on the prairies are in danger of going bankrupt. I think those figures speak for themselves.

This will devastate rural Canada. It will destroy the farms and it will destroy the rural communities.

Is the government going to sit back and wait until we see the collapse of the prairie economy, just as we are seeing with the Atlantic economy? Will this government put a moratorium now on farm debt or offer direct financial assistance to prairie farmers so they can keep going and put in their next crop this year?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, obviously the leader of the New Democratic Party had her question written out and failed to listen to the answer that I provided.

I might suggest to her that when it comes to moving grain, you cannot have it both ways. You cannot pretend to stand for the farmers and then defend the interests of the union leaders at the same time. She will learn that in a short time, I am sure.

The fact of the matter is that what has been discussed over the last two days was a very serious discussion about the future of agriculture. There were some very serious policy deliberations. There were 1,800 people from across Canada representing the total ambit of the agriculture industry. We sat down to try to project and propose new solutions and new policies for the future.

Of course the interim difficulty with respect to the collapse of grain prices and the corresponding reduction in farm incomes is a matter that is under serious consideration. I can assure the hon. member that this party has always concerned itself with the interests of the farmer. It is concerning itself with the interests of the farmer today.

[Translation]

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, this government seems to think that the laws of the market place should apply only to farmers, not to banks. High interest rates and a strong Canadian dollar have dramatically reduced farm income to levels below what they were in the 1930s. When will this government finally let interest rates and the Canadian dollar go down?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that in 1988, farm income reached record levels in several parts of the country, both in Quebec and Saskatchewan. This was largely thanks to frequent intervention by the federal government, which has always helped Canadian farmers. The proof is that during the past two days we have had a very interesting national conference or congress on future challenges to agriculture at the international level. Considering the importance of this congress, I think the leadership of the New Democratic Party will have every reason to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture, first for his generous treatment of farmers and also for what the future will bring. I remember, because I was here when the Conservative government intervened quite dramatically to help western farmers, that the New Democrats objected, as they do to measures that benefit farmers in Quebec.

* * *

[English]

FISHERIES

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, if there is one point that all fishermen and fish plant workers agree upon on the east coast of Canada it is that the codfish have got smaller in recent years and that this government should not be issuing licences to foreign countries or agreeing with foreign allocations to catch squid and capelin, which is the food stock of the codfish off the east coast of Canada.

I want to ask the Minister of Fisheries this. Why did this Minister of Fisheries, when he knew by a scientific report recently that the weight of a seven year old codfish in Newfoundland had gone down 50 per cent, or close to it, in the last 10 years, and in Nova Scotia more than 50 per cent, agree to these enormous foreign allocations for squid around threes and fours, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, for 1990 and an increase in the capelin allocations? Canadian fishermen want to know why.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important question. It is a fact that the size of Atlantic codfish has been declining at a particular age of their maturity for the past 10 years. Scientists are examining this question very carefully because it appears there are more older fish of too small a size. We do not know what the total reason is for this. We believe it is partly due to fishing practices, perhaps involving domestic fisheries, on younger fish earlier in the year and partly due to environmental factors.

There is no evidence to suggest that the surplus stocks of capelin and squid are a primary cause of this matter, although it is one of the factors that is being examined.

• (1450)

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the depletion of the food supply is not responsible for the decrease in size of the codfish. Is the minister suggesting that codfish have been on a diet for the past 10 years, that they switched from squid to oat bran? Fish eat fish—that's brain food, something which is drastically needed by this government.

I want to ask the minister this. Why does this government agree to these enormous quotas for foreign countries on the east coast of Canada and an increase in the capelin quota when Canadian fishermen are under restrictions in the capelin fishery, restricted to their bay, restricted to their boats? Why restrict Canadian fishermen and open the door to foreigners? Or is the Department of External Affairs operating fisheries policy in this country?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member were himself interested in consuming a little more capelin and squid we would perhaps not have to make this surplus stock available under international law to foreign fleets, which is our obligation under the law of the sea.

There is no scientific evidence to prove the fact that the hon. member has just alleged in this House, that there is a linkage between the quotas of capelin and squid and the growth factors of our northern cod stocks.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister knows that the figures released last Friday are the most devastating that have ever been put forward as to the net farm income for farmers in western Canada, especially Saskatchewan where farm incomes will be less than zero next year—the first time since 1933 and 1932.

Dairy farmers are threatened because the free trade deal did not protect their markets in Canada.

Pork producers are spending $2 for every hog marketed to buy access to the U.S. market.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture, with all of these uncertainties in every sector of the Canadian agriculture industry—a drastic drop of 50 per cent from last year to this year in net farm income—why the government is cutting support programs by $2 billion in 1990.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is totally wrong. The income for 1989 has dropped by about 6 per cent from 1988, which was indeed a record year.

He talks about devastation. The devastation was in place when the Liberals were in office. In 1984, 550 bankruptcies occurred on the farm, plus all the foreclosures and the voluntary retirement of farmers. That has been reduced by more than 50 per cent.

While there are still problems, which we are addressing, I can assure the hon. member and the agriculture community, as we discussed throughout the course of the last two-day meeting, there certainly is an air of confidence about our ability to deal with the challenges of the future.

There is a clear indication that farmers know that this government has stood with them in the past. They know that we will stand with them again. That is the best confidence that they can have.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, a zero net income does not give any farmers, certainly the large group in Saskatchewan, any confidence at all.

The Prime Minister promised in December 1986 that he was going to stand with the farmers throughout the trade wars that are going on in farm commodities between the European Community and the United States. Still the United States is putting more and more money into the export enhancement program to steal away our markets, to drive down grain prices.

I want to ask the Prime Minister why he is breaking that promise that he made to Canadian farmers that he would stand with them.

A spokesman from the Minister of Agriculture's office said just two days ago that Ottawa will not repeat the special $1 billion subsidies of the past three years and the Western Grain Stabilization Fund will not pay out this year or next.

If the government and the Prime Minister are not going to break their promise, then come clean and tell the farmers right now that you are not going to cut that $2 billion of support which you have been promising all these years.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend clearly has the wrong Prime Minister. It was the other fellow who said to the western farmers: "Why should I sell your wheat?" You have got the wrong guy.

It was the other fellow who let interest rates rise to 24 per cent and just about crippled every farmer in Canada.

It was this Prime Minister who stood by the western farmers and eastern farmers and will continue to do so in spite of the negative, pejorative attitudes and the carping and the criticism that comes from the Liberals, which is why they have been rejected time and time again and will continue to be rejected in the future.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry. Investment Canada has now approved the loss of yet another Canadian research and development company in approving both foreign bids for Connaught Biosciences. The minister will not stop it.

Will he, however, provide the specifics of the "extensive legal undertakings" agreed to by those two companies? In short, will he provide us the exact denomination of the 40 pieces of silver?

Mr. Beatty: I can see why you lost the leadership.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be bought for any $7,000, I will tell you.

As required under the Investment Canada Act, Investment Canada evaluated the two applications that came in for the takeover bids of Connaught. As you will recall, the terms of the first bid by Merieux were deemed to not provide net benefit to Canada. They went back, reconsidered, improved the offer considerably in terms of its net benefit to Canada.

It is part of the press kit. Question Period does not permit me to go through all the details of the submissions and commitments made by both sides. It is part of the press kit.

Certainly, in my judgment and in the judgment of any fairminded person, both bids provide net benefit to Canada.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last night Fifth Estate exposed the immigrants' investment fund, which is a scam seen overseas, especially in Hong Kong and Taiwan, as a buy–a–passport scheme. Wealthy immigrants are buying their way into Canada, investing hundreds of thousands of dollars, often in questionable investment, while lower income people are denied equal access.

Will the minister immediately discontinue this program and stop peddling passports? When are we going to get some fairness in immigration policy in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, just to put this in some perspective, in 1988 we had in Canada 249 investor immigrants out of a total of 161,000. This year, to the end of July, we had 269. This is a small part of our immigration program.

This is a program that was intended to attract sophisticated investors to Canada. There are other countries that are looking at this. The program has some growing pains. There are some problems in it. We have taken a number of steps to attempt to deal with those problems.

* * *

[Translation]

CANADIAN INDUSTRIES

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, this government allowed the sale of Connaught to foreigners. My question is for the Prime Minister.

Can he now assure us that no other leading-edge Canadian company will be sold to foreigners? What Canadian industries is he not prepared to sacrifice?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, since 1984 this government has been following an economic program calling for fiscal restraint, deregulation, privatization, and indicating to the world that we welcome investment. This economic policy has produced growth second only to Japan, only marginally so, has been applauded by the OECD as being exactly appropriate and the best kinds of policies that could be followed. Part of that context is our Investment Canada policy which says we approve investments in Canada which are of net benefit to Canada.

These investments for which a judgment was rendered this morning are of net benefit to Canada. That is why we did it and we will continue to do things that are of net benefit to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, with that answer, the Minister is telling our high-tech community and young Canadians, "Let them eat cake!"

[English]

With the sale of Connaught, Mr. Speaker, Canadians know Canada is up for sale.

The Prime Minister knows that with the free trade deal almost every single one of our high-technology companies can now be bought up by the Americans. Is he prepared to tell us that his policy is truly that Canada's economic future can be built if our key industries are all controlled by foreigners?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of answering because the question was broader and refers to the policies of the ministry. So my hon. friend, the minister, will allow me to respond on behalf of the government.

The Premier of Ontario and the Ontario Minister for Industry, Trade and Technology were in Paris earlier this year. They were indicating then in public statements that they believed that the free trade deal would now open up new economic opportunities for Ontario and for Canada and that the province of Ontario was positioned to take advantage of the free trade agreement. I believe that to be true. I believe the Premier of Ontario was dead on.

Mr. Peterson: He thinks it's a disgrace.

Mr. Mulroney: He says the Premier of Ontario thinks it is a disgrace. I want to tell the member that if the Premier of Ontario thought it was a disgrace, he did not say it in Paris. He thought it was a good deal for Ontario when he was in Paris.

Mr. Peterson: He does not.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Clearly, Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with two opposing schools of political thought. One is based on the private sector, based on investment including foreign investments, and on the rules of the market-place with an important role for government. The other is protectionist, timid, timorous, which takes the country back to the 1930s and puts a Wall of China around Canada. That is the Liberal view of Canada. Our view is a confident, modern Canada building into the next century. That is what we are about.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: Sell it off!

Mr. Speaker: I should advise hon. members that that concludes question period. I am proceeding to tabling of documents.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table in both official languages the government responses to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

TABLING OF 2ND ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the second annual report on employment equity.

* * *

WESTERN ARCTIC INUVIALUIT FINAL AGREEMENT

TABLING OF 1988-89 ANNUAL REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I have the honour to table, in both official languages, copies of the 1988-89 annual report on implementation of the Western Arctic Inuvialuit Final Agreement.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I just tabled the second report provided under the Employment Equity Act.

It has been only three years since the legislation was passed, but already some progress has been made towards creating a labour force that is truly representative of the various segments of the Canadian mosaic. Federally regulated employers, with over 600,000 employees, have shown they are becoming increasingly aware of their responsibilities. They are seeking new ways to facilitate the integration of members of designated groups in their workforce.

[English]

This year, 375 federally regulated employers and Crown corporations with 100 or more employees submitted reports. Information was provided on salary ranges, occupational categories, hirings, promotions and terminations of employment. The comprehensive employer reports provided information on the status of the four designated groups: women, persons with disabilities, aboriginal peoples and visible minorities.

[Translation]

If we compare with last year's report, we see that progress has been made in all four groups.

Women's representation in the labour force has gone up from 40.9 per cent to 42.12 per cent; that of native people from 0.66 per cent to 0.73 per cent; that of persons with disabilities from 1.59 per cent to 1.79 per cent, and that of members of visible minorities from 4.99 per cent to 5.69 per cent.

In each designated group, there has been an increase in the number of persons hired for full-time employment. Furthermore, representation of these groups has increased in several occupational categories.

[English]

It is clear that the employers covered by the act have taken their task seriously. To achieve some change in only one year since the first report is a tribute to the efforts they have made.

[Translation]

These changes are not, however, enough to guarantee equity in the workplace. Representation of the four groups designated under the act is still lower than their representation in the population as a whole. There also tend to be fewer members of these groups in key professional categories such as management, and their average salary is always lower than that of other employees. This fact, the reason why the Employment Equity Act was passed in the first place, is ample justification for the continued existence of this legislation and for increased efforts by all parties to improve the situation.

I think a lot remains to be done in the years to come. I will continue to examine what is done by employers to enhance employment of members in the four designated groups, and I will submit further progress reports and indicate where further improvements are necessary.

I may add that if the situation has not improved sufficiently by the time the legislation is reviewed in 1991, this government will consider introducing some amendments.

I know the situation is improving. Employees at Employment and Immigration Canada are working harder than ever before to help employers implement their employment equity programs.

Throughout Canada, regional consultants are monitoring the situation, and their services are available to all federally regulated employers. Communities and professional associations are urged to provide information and express their views.

Finally, to enhance the effectiveness of employer equity programs, instruments such as employment practice tests have been developed.

[English]

It is my sense that there is a realization among employers that employment equity is good business, yielding both economic and social benefits. Workplace shortages are a reality of the future. Members of designated groups will without a doubt be needed to fill those gaps and our competitive situation will be improved since we will be using all of our talents and skills. From a social standpoint, offering group members equality in employment leads to improved financial security and, in the end, a fairer and more compassionate society in which to live.

• (1510)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as employers become more experienced at implementing their equity programs, we will put greater emphasis on results. As was pointed out in the Abella report, employment equity will happen only if we work hard to make it happen. And that is what this government has done and will continue to do in the future.

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre–Dame–de–Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the report on employment equity tabled by the minister in the House today confirms the criticism that we made of this legislation when it was presented to Parliament in 1985. According to the report tabled today there has been very little progress with respect to employment equity, and in some industries there has been no progress whatsoever.

This is a law which deals with affirmative action. It applies to four target groups: women, aboriginal people, disabled people and visible minorities. It follows on the Canadian Human Rights Act of 1976 passed by a Liberal Government and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms introduced and passed by the Liberals in 1982.

In 1983 the government of the day set up the Abella Commission to advise the government on how to proceed with employment equity. Abella's report, which was presented in 1984 to the new Conservative government, suggested a law that would have teeth in it. When this law was presented to the House in 1985 it said that firms under federal jurisdiction must proceed with employment equity. But it did not provide for a sanction and it did not provide for a penalty if those firms did not proceed with employment equity.

We said at the time that unless there was a sanction in the law that these companies would drag their feet and they would not implement employment equity. That is exactly what has been done.

Let me refer to the report the minister just tabled. Let us look at some of the firms that reported. The report ranks these employers in terms of three categories. Category A is if they are close to what is supposed to be done; category B are those that do not meet the target but are only slightly under it and category C refers to those employers that have no members employed in the designated groups, or very few.

Let us look at some of these firms. The National Bank of Canada ranks C with respect to aboriginal peoples, C with respect to disabled peoples, C with respect to visible minorities. The Royal Bank of Canada, C with respect to aboriginal peoples, C with respect to disabled people, C with respect to visible minorities. Air Canada ranks C with respect to disabled people and C with respect to visible minorities. Gray Coach Lines ranks C in all categories. That means it has none of the designated categories. It ranks C with respect to women, aboriginal people, disabled people and visible minorities. The same was true with Greyhound Lines. Interprovincial Pipe Line ranks C in all four categories. Loomis Armored Car Services ranks C in all four categories. Maritime Ontario Freight Lines ranks C in all categories. Northern Transportation, a Crown corporation, ranks C with respect to women, disabled people and visible minorities and only ranks B with respect to aboriginal peoples, even though it is a company which operates in the north. Reimer Express ranks C in all four categories. Time Air ranks C in three categories out of four. Voyageur ranks C in all categories.

I will bring this to a close but there are some very important companies here, Mr. Speaker. Bell Canada ranked C in three out of four categories. Two Canadian Crown corporations, Canada Post Corporation and the CBC, ranked C at the bottom of the list in all four categories with respect to women, aboriginal peoples, disabled peoples and visible minorities. It goes on and on. Canada Council ranked C in three out of four categories.

If the government were really serious about employment equity and affirmative action it would bring in amendments to this legislation immediately and we would co-operate in seeing these amendments passed. This law needs a sanction. These companies will continue to drag their feet with respect to employment equity unless there is a sanction in the law. It is no good simply to say: "You must do it in legislation," and then let it pass just as if nothing happened. Let us see some action. Let's have amendments to that law as soon as possible.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the minister tabling this second report. I am sorry to say that the improvement is really rather pathetic. Native peoples' representation has increased by only 0.06 per cent. It is only 0.73 per cent in all of the federally regulated industries.

Natives make up in our society 2.1 per cent of the Canadian population, and this meagre improvement is just not satisfactory. The improvement for visible minorities is 0.7 per cent. The percentage of visible minorities employed under the act is 5.69 per cent, and yet their representation in the Canadian workforce where we know that they are represented already is 6.3 per cent.

With disabled persons, the improvement is only 0.12 per cent. The percentage of disabled persons employed under the act is 1.71 per cent, and in the percentage of the Canadian workforce disabled people total 5.4 per cent.

For women, the improvement is 2.2 per cent. The percentage of women employed under federally regulated industries is 42.12 per cent and the percentage of Canadian women employed in the Canadian workforce, in general, is 44 per cent. We know that the majority of these jobs are at the lower echelons of the federally regulated industries.

The enforcement mechanism in the legislation is very weak. It is so weak that it is criticized universally by a variety of organizations. It has been criticized by immigrant and visible minority women's organizations. Under the legislation it is up to individuals to lodge a complaint to the Human Rights Commission, or the overtaxed Human Rights Commission must conduct a review on its own after seeing the reports. We know that the Human Rights Commission does not have the resources to do this effectively. There should be mandatory work plans. There must be mandatory work plans. That has been brought up in this House before. The New Democratic Party brought it up in the committee and the government's response is always that we have to wait until the review of the Employment Equity Act in 1991.

The people of Canada are not satisfied with that answer. Women, native people, people with disabilities and visible minority Canadians are all tired of waiting. They have waited now for over a century. They are tired of waiting. They want action from this government. They want enforced timetables and a mandate for fairness for them. We need goals, we need timetables, and we need effective enforcement for this legislation. I urge this government to bring in those kinds of sanctions.

It is ironic that today this report is tabled. It is ironic because in this House we are debating back to work legislation. Part of that back to work legislation is dealing with women hospital workers who have already supposedly won pay equity. These women—the majority of these hospital workers are women—are demanding pay equity and they are not receiving it from this government.

I urge the government to deal fairly with all of these groups in society and to bring in effective measures for employment equity.

* * *

• (1520)

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PRESENTATION OF 26TH REPORT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the twenty-sixth report of the striking committee.

[English]

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in the report later this day and I would ask that we dispense with the reading of that report by the Clerk at the table as the report concerns only membership changes to committees.

BILL C-28—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-28, an Act—to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related Act, without amendment.

[Translation]

[Editor's Note: For above reports, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved pursuant to Standing Order 83(4) that Bill C-51, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-52, an Act to Amend the Income Tax Act and Related Acts, pursuant to Standing Order 83(4).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN TWENTY-SIXTH REPORT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I move that the twenty-sixth report of the Striking Committee presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

SOCIAL SERVICES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the following petitions containing the signatures of 7,000 senior citizens from across this country who call upon this government to withdraw its vicious proposal to claw back their pensions.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour of filing the following petitions containing the signatures of several thousand Canadians from Sarnia, London, Scarborough, Etobicoke, Mississauga, Keswick, Brampton, Toronto, Bramalea, Burlington, Hamilton, Vineland, St. Catharines, Brockville, Ottawa, Gloucester, Carp and Kanata, all in Ontario; Vancouver, Surrey, Parksville, Port Alberni, Smithers, Burnaby, Port Moody, Coquitlam, Richmond, Penticton and Princeton in British Columbia; Lunenburg, Bridgewater, Yarmouth, Charleston, Mahone Bay, Chester Basin, Springfield, Martin's Point and Liverpool in Nova Scotia; Saskatoon and Yorkton, Saskatchewan; Calgary, Alberta; Aylmer, Gatineau, Kirkland, Hull, Montreal, Westmount and Laval in Quebec.

These citizens humbly call upon the government to withdraw its proposal for a regressive, inflationary goods and services tax no matter what the rate.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions with some 6,000 signatures from across Canada of those citizens who are petitioning the government to cancel and to abandon the measure that it is proposing to claw back old age security and family allowance benefits.

These petitioners call for this measure because they realize that the government's intention is to begin undermining the principle of universality, therefore, undermining any kind of reason, in terms of geographical location or other factors in ensuring fairness in the Old Age Security system and family allowance system in this country.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure and the honour to introduce in the House a petition on behalf of students in higher education as well as concerned citizens who are calling upon their elected representatives to stop the erosion of quality and accessibility of our universities, colleges, and post-secondary educational institutions in Canada. In particular, they mention the over-crowded classrooms, obsolete laboratory equipment, poor library resources, high student-to-professor ratios, elimination of programs of studies, deteriorating buildings and physical plants that are now a fact of Canadian higher education.

Finally, they are calling on the government in the House of Commons to commit to arrange a federal-provincial conference of the highest political representatives to establish the obligations of the two levels of government in the financing of Canadian post-secondary education and to ensure an end to the shameful neglect of higher education in Canada.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present some 16 petitions containing more than 10,000 names from people in the following communities in Alberta: Spring Coulee, Magrath, Welling, Claresholm, Lethbridge, Raymond, Stirling, Cardston, Calgary, Waterton Park, Banff, Mountain View, Coaldale, Milk River, Champion, Pincher Creek, Fort Macleod, Warner, Lomond, Foremost, Medicine Hat, Hill Spring, Coalhurst, Picture Butte, Nobleford, Turin, Stand Off, Diamond City, Taber, and Blairmore. Also, some people have signed from British Columbia and Saskatchewan.

These petitions were signed by many people, including Bob Grbavac, Paul Pharo, and Senator Joyce Fairburn. They petition this chamber to call upon Parliament to reject the government's proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty as the member for my riding of York West, to present to the House and directly to the government five petitions from constituents in my riding who signed these petitions and have called repeatedly for this government to abandon its goods and services tax, whether it is at a 9 per cent level or a 7 per cent level. It is bad for average Canadians in my riding, it is bad for average small business enterprises in my riding, and it is bad for Canada.

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to Parliament, on behalf of the people of the Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold riding and the surrounding area in the Niagara Peninsula, a petition signed by some 8,000 people. This is a petition which was started by Mrs. Idris O'Neill, and it is the remainder of the 12,000-plus names that she has collected.

The signators oppose the goods and services tax completely. Notwithstanding the fact that this government has seen fit to back off from its 9 per cent position to its 7 per cent position, this is still going to impose an extremely difficult hardship on the old people in our communities, our students and also average Canadians in the middle-income group. We would hope that the government would listen to reason and indeed withdraw any proposed goods and services tax.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, as I did yesterday, I would like today to rise under Standing Order 36, especially in light of the presence today in this building of the One Voice Committee, to present the signatures of another 419 Albertans, bringing the total now to well over 11,000, Albertans who petition Parliament to withdraw the budget proposal to claw back payments from the social programs, Old Age Security and family allowances.

Yesterday, the signatures came from Albertans mostly from Edmonton, but today they come from Edmonton, St. Albert and Sherwood Park too. But as well, there are signatures of people from Jarvie, Fawcett, Flatbush, Barrhead, Gunn, Dapp, Rochester, and lots of them from Westlock.

• (1530)

They also come from Busby, Vimy, Clyde, Warrensville, Pickardville, Calahoo, Slave Lake, Mayerthorpe, Legal, Newbrook, Thorhild, Edson, Swan Hills, Bloomsbury, known for its wools, McLennan, Bon Accord, Faust and Sturgeon.

MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to table a petition signed by members of the Kingston community which urges the government to acknowledge officially the injustices suffered by Canadians of Ukrainian origin during World War I.

Between 1914 and 1920 over 5,000 Canadians from Ukraine were interned in prison camps across Canada. Their property and valuables were taken from them. They were denied the right to vote and their lives were altered forever.

In tabling this petition, I am not asking the government to apologize for those decisions taken over 70 years ago. I am asking, rather, that the terrible injustice committed and the hardship and pain which these people were forced to endure at the hands of their own government should be acknowledged and should never be forgotten.

This is the first of many petitions that will be filed in Parliament on this subject.

I say in presenting this petition that I am particularly honoured to do this because one of the principal internment camps was at Fort Henry in the riding of Kingston and the Islands. I am honoured to present this petition on behalf of the people who suffered so much at the hands of their government so long ago.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and the responsibility to table a petition signed by over 1,200 residents of the Nickel Belt area.

They are from such places as Azilda, Val Caron, Hanmer, Garson, Chelmsford, Verner, Copper Cliff, Timmins, Worthington, London, St. Charles, White Fish, Kenora, Keewatin, Wanapetei, Sudbury, Coniston, Lively, Onaping Falls, Falconbridge, Val Therese, Sturgeon Falls, North Bay, Naughton, Hagar, Dowling, Alban, Sault Ste. Marie and Sundridge. Most of those communities are within the riding of Nickel Belt.

The people who have signed these petitions are pointing out, first, that the proposed goods and services tax of the Minister of Finance is an unfair form of taxation because it does not respect the ability of consumers to pay.

Second, they point out that the government has not addressed itself to looking at the tax system, to ensuring that it is progressive and fair in that many wealthy individuals and corporations pay little or no tax at all while forcing lower and middle income taxpayers to bear more of the national tax burden.

Furthermore, they call upon Parliament to reject the current proposed goods and services tax. They also call on Parliament to reform the tax system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present.

The first was gathered from about a dozen communities in my riding and calls upon the government to abandon its plans to cut service under VIA Rail and to make VIA Rail a modern and effective transportation company.

RCMP DRESS CODE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the second petition was presented to me by a resident of my constituency who gathered the names in Calgary.

It calls upon the RCMP to continue with its traditional form of dress.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 with a petition signed by some 71 residents of the city of Revelstoke in the constituency of Kootenay West—Revelstoke.

The petitioners are alarmed and enraged at the proposal of the government to tax back old age security and family allowance benefits in part or in their entirety, depending upon the recipient's income.

They believe that the government's proposed clawback measure will undermine the principle of universality of Canada's social programs and will, as a result, create a potential threat to the income of future pensioners, particularly because the lack of indexing in that proposal will in fact be a threat to average income Canadians in a very few short years.

Finally, the 71 petitioners call upon Parliament to abandon the proposed measure.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of Saskatoon and residents in many parts of rural Saskatchewan complaining about the government's decision to remove oats from the Wheat Board.

They are calling upon the government to sustain and to ensure that marketing boards are improved rather than weakened, to not remove oats from the Wheat Board but to add barley and to ensure that in future consultation is carried out with organizations with regard to decisions affecting their activities.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions on behalf of the member for Lisgar—Marquette, signed by 76 petitioners who call upon Parliament to enact legislation which protects human life from conception to natural death.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a certified petition on behalf of the member for Lisgar—Marquette, signed by 36 petitioners who call upon Parliament to consider instruction in skating as an educational service and therefore exempt skating education expenses from the proposed goods and services tax.

BILL 178

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am pleased to present two petitions.

The first is from 50 people in my riding as a part of 50,000 people from across the country reacting to Bill 178, the sign law, a law which has created a great deal of rancour and acrimony not only in Quebec but across the country. This is unfortunate legislation.

Nevertheless they urge the government to react to the concerns of these petitioners.

SAULT STE. MARIE LOCK

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many thousands of people from my riding of Sault Ste. Marie.

It concerns the Sault Ste. Marie lock that has been closed for some two years now. As someone indicated to me, it would be like tearing the very face off the city if this lock is not reconstructed. I encourage the government to react to the demands and request of the citizens of Sault Ste. Marie. We will be meeting with the minister tomorrow, and I hope that he will listen to us intently at that time.

It is ironic that the government has produced a brand new book praising the technology and transition—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member shares with us his great enthusiasm for his own riding and places in it, but perhaps he is trespassing a little beyond the normal confines of the rules.

RCMP DRESS CODE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and responsibility to present many petitions today, under Standing Order 36, containing 5,190 signatures from residents of the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Ontario.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to preserve the distinctive heritage and tradition of the RCMP by retaining the uniformity of dress code with all the recognizable colour and trappings that have had such great historical value to the country.

The pride and esprit de corps should not be jeopardized by any concessions to religious or ethnic minorities which result in changes to this truly great police force, its proud traditions and uniform.

This brings the total to over 125,000 names that I have presented in the House to preserve this national symbol.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Pursuant to Standing Order 36, Mr. Speaker, I present a petition rejecting the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas. Signatories representing Abitibi's isolated community of Lebel-sur-Quévillon are concerned about the recommendations of the report which will signal the dismissal of a number of workers in these isolated areas. They believe the Government of Canada simply refuses to come to grips with the fact that their daily existence is different, for life in the north is difficult, isolated and costly.

Mr. Speaker, according to the 1989 disparity index of Quebec's isolated communities, Lebel-sur-Quévillon ranks 70th and Fermont 81st.

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 148 and 165.

[Text]

RRIF/RRSP

Question No. 148—Mr. Whittaker:

> For the most recent year for which statistics are available to the government (a) what was the total annual cost of tax assistance for (i) RRIFs (ii) RRSPs (b) Has the government estimated the annual cost of eliminating the termination of RRIFs upon the RRIF beneficiary's reaching the age of 90 and allowing RRIFs to be held until the death of the beneficiary and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): There are no statistics which directly show the cost of tax assistance associated with saving through registered pension plans (RPPs), registered retirement savings plans (RRSPs), or registered retirement income funds (RRIFs). Since the nature of the tax assistance is a tax deferral, between the time a pension or RRSP contribution is made and the associated retirement benefits are received, rather than a forgiveness of tax, tax assistance costs cannot simply be determined from the level of contributions made in a year. The most recent estimates of the cost of tax assistance for retirement saving were prepared for the Department of Finance publication, Account of the Cost of Selective Tax Measures, which was issued in August, 1985. That report contained a section which described alternative methods for estimating the revenue costs associated with tax deferral provisions. It also provided an estimate of $4.9 billion per year for the federal tax cost of the tax deferrals associated with RPPs and RRSPs (including RRIFs). No attempt was made to separate the RPP, RRSP and RRIF costs—an exercise which would be difficult since funds can be transferred back and forth between these types of plan. For 1989, the total federal cost of tax assistance is projected to be in the range from $5 billion to $6 billion.

There are no statistics available on the amount of RRSP funds that has been transferred to RRIFs. Qualitative information from financial institutions suggests that the usage of RRIFs was relatively rare until 1986 when the rules governing RRIF withdrawals were simplified. Their use has apparently grown strongly since that time.

The Department of Finance has not yet made any estimate of the annual cost of allowing withdrawals from RRIFs to be extended over a period beyond the year when the annuitant attains age 90. However, in response to requests to the Minister of Finance for such a policy change, the Department has begun to consider the implications of different options for extending the allowable RRIF payout period.

PAYMENT OF LEGAL FEES BY THE FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Question No. 165—Mr. Kaplan:

To the knowledge of the government, were legal fees paid to any law firms in connection with a loan made by the Federal Business Development Bank to Pluri-Canaux Ltée or to the University of Sherbrooke in 1987 for a home-study course to be produced by the former and, if so (a) to which firms (b) in each case, in what amount?

Hon. Thomas Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Insofar as the Federal Business Development Bank is concerned, the response is NIL.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, on Monday I gave the parliamentary secretary notice that I wanted an answer to Question No. 169.

I realize that it involves a search in a number of departments and government agencies with regard to contracts which have been let to legal firms of senators and former senators.

I was wondering, recognizing the parliamentary secretary may not be able to answer the question on behalf of all departments and agencies, if he could give us an interim answer from those departments and agencies that have given him or the government the information so far.

• (1540)

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member that first of all the 45 days requested on his question have not yet expired.

We are doing the best we can to answer his question. I should mention my information is that it requires gathering data from some 225 people, which of course is going to be complicated, costly and difficult, but we will do our best to accommodate the hon. member.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the parliamentary secretary if he would be kind enough to check why the government has not answered Question No. 162 of October 30, 1989. I believe Your Honour will find that this is the forty-fifth day today. It involves an issue concerning the travels of the Prime Minister and a few limousines to Costa Rica.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to advise the hon. member that I do not have the information on that specific question. However, since this is the forty-fifth day, I can assure him I will do my best to track down that information.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all Notices of Motions stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I wish call to your attention an emerging crisis which will have dire consequences for thousands of families in Atlantic Canada's fishing communities as a result of recent and anticipated fish plant closings in the Atlantic fishery.

Speaker's Ruling

On Monday, National Sea Products Limited announced layoffs totalling 1,562 jobs or 27 per cent of its workforce. In addition to its Lockeport operation which was closed earlier this year, National Sea will be closing permanently its Canso operation, its St. John's operation, and will be making significant reduction in its North Sydney operation.

Fisheries Products International in Newfoundland, we expect, is soon to announce massive layoffs in Newfoundland. Many smaller plants in Atlantic Canada have also closed. Yesterday, by signing a bill which restricts the import of Atlantic lobsters to the United States, the president has placed the income of thousands of lobster fishermen in jeopardy.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans will soon announce the 1990 groundfish management plan, setting fish quotas for next year. Scientists are predicting a dramatic decline in the amount of fish stocks, and the government's management policies are currently in disarray. The government's response to the crisis has not been spelled out.

There is a sense of foreboding and crisis in families in all Atlantic Canadian fishing communities. It is shaping up to be a very bleak Christmas this year and for Christmases to come.

In light of these circumstances, I urgently request that Your Honour grant permission for a special emergency debate in the House to deal with this pressing and urgent matter facing the future of Atlantic Canada.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso has raised a matter in which he is petitioning the Chair to set aside the ordinary business of the day and proceed to an emergency debate on an issue which is a very serious one.

I think all hon. members can understand perfectly why the hon. member, coming from that part of the country, is raising this matter.

A great deal of anxiety has already been indicated in this chamber by other hon. members on both sides of the House. There was very extensive debate today on the matter. That debate may very well continue in Question Period and other places. I will be watching with very great care the questions and the responses of the government.

Under the circumstances I am not going to order a debate today. The hon. member may have good reason to apply at another time. I thank the hon. member for bringing the matter to the attention of the House. As I have said, he is open to raise the matter again at another time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING—MOTIONS IN AMENDMENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are seven motions in amendment in the name of the hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn a 11 motions in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West set down on the notice paper at report stage of Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services.

They are all in order but not all will be selected for debate as there is some duplication of content.

Motion Nos. 1, 4, 8, 13 and 16 in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West are in order and will be grouped for debate. A vote on Motion No. 1 will be applied to Motion Nos. 4, 8, 13 and 16.

Motion Nos. 2 and 3 are virtually identical and the Chair will select for debate only Motion No. 2. It will be voted on separately.

Motion Nos. 5 and 7 and Motion No. 6 are in effect identical motions. I will select for debate Motion Nos. 5 and 7 and a vote on Motion No. 5 will be applied to Motion No. 7. Motion No. 6 will thus not be selected.

Motion Nos. 9, 10, 11, 12 and 14 all deal with the issue of equal pay for work of equal value. However, Motion No. 10 is a duplicate of Motion No. 9 and therefore it will not be selected for debate. Thus, Motion Nos. 9, 11, 12 and 14 will be grouped together for debate, but they will be voted on as follows:

A vote on Motion No. 9 will be applied to Motion Nos. 11 and 12.

Motion No. 14 will be voted on separately.

Motion No. 15 which deals with dates and time limits will be debated and voted on separately.

Motion Nos. 17 and 18 dealing with enforcement will be grouped together for debate. However, there will be a separate vote on these motions.

The House will now proceed with Motion Nos. 1, 4, 8, 13, and 16.

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C–49 be amended in Clause 2 by striking out line 8 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"tions Act, except that "Chair" wherever it is used in this Act shall mean the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board."

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C–49 be amended in Clause 8

(a) by striking out line 7 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"of this Act, the Chair shall"

(b) by striking out line 16 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"Ottawa, as the chair of the first board"

(c) by striking out line 19 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"chair of the second board therein"

(d) by striking out line 30 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"Chair shall appoint the nominee as a"

(e) by striking out lines 36 and 37 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"Chair shall appoint as a member of that board a person the Chair deems fit for"

(f) by striking out lines 41 to 43 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"to the Chair, the Chair shall appoint as a member of that board a person the Chair deems fit for that purpose."

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C–49 be amended in Clause 10

(a) by striking out line 3 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"10.(1) The Chair shall refer to the"

(b) by striking out line 14 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"Chair on September 22, 1989 and that"

(c) by striking out line 18 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) such other matters as the Chair"

(d) by striking out line 23 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) The Chair shall refer to the second"

(e) by striking out line 34 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"Relations Act by the Chair on Sep–"

(f) by striking out line 38 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) such other matters as the Chair".

Motion No. 13.

That Bill C–49 be amended in Clause 11

(a) by striking out line 1 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"Chair, after consultation with the par–"

(b) by striking out line 19 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"(d) report to the Chair on the resolu–".

Motion No. 16.

That Bill C–49 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 33 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"the Chair pursuant to subsection 11(1),".

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak on this group of amendments. I am sure the House will understand if I wish to put them in the context of the bill before us.

I find it regrettable that relationships between the government and 3,600 of its most vulnerable and valuable employees has reached the stage that the government must bring before the House legislation to force people back to work, because it is incapable of negotiating a fair and reasonable contract.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as members of the opposition, we recognize the serious effects of this strike. We understand the great impact of the slowdown in shipping on the St. Lawrence Seaway. We understand that essential services have become uncertain on our three oceans and we can appreciate the difficulties facing veterans in Canadian institutions.

[English]

It is unforgivable, knowing that these would be the inevitable results of its intransigence, that the government wasted over four months of valuable time when it could have been negotiating a fair and peaceful settlement for these workers. It spent that time trying to bypass the legal rights of workers instead of settling a contract.

• (1550)

Let there be no mistake. It is the government's inability to manage, its failure to meet its responsibilities as an employer, and its failure to anticipate and plan for possible disruptions in service which have led to this sorry state and this undemocratic bill before us today.

The aim of the Official Opposition has not been to obstruct the passage of this bill unduly, but unlike other times when back to work legislation was before this House we have certainly chosen not to expedite it. Indeed, since last week we have made every effort to moderate this unacceptable bill, to improve it, to have the government send a clear message to these valued workers that as undesirable, unacceptable and undemocratic as this bill is, at last it is prepared to come to a just and reasonable settlement.

Knowing as we do that the government has the voting power to make the passage of this bill at 6 p.m tomorrow night inevitable, we have been trying to put in place the best possible framework, or let us say the least damaging framework, that would at least give the workers a half decent chance of getting a fair settlement.

The government has used every tool at its disposal, including closure and time allocation, to limit debate on this bill. It has failed to anticipate problems. It has failed to solve problems. Now it is trying to force people back to work because of its own mistakes and incompetence.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we know that these employees are being forced to return to work in a poisoned atmosphere, rightly convinced that the government does not understand their work and does not value them, convinced that the government absolutely refuses to propose anything but a mean-spirited, intransigent settlement.

[English]

I urge the President of Treasury Board to accept these motions, including the ones that have been moved by myself and others on the Order Paper, to send to the workers a clear signal that he personally will take responsibility for seeing a just settlement to this strike.

[Translation]

I ask the President of the Treasury Board to make his negotiators understand that he wants to reach an agreement in keeping with the demonstrated value of the work done by these employees.

[English]

I speak specifically to the content of these motions that have been just moved and to put them in the context of the others on the Order Paper that will be moved. I think it is important to note that nurses from Ste. Anne de Bellevue hospital in Montreal have come here by the dozens today to support the hospital services workers; not their union but workers they work with every day who they know deliver essential and valuable services.

They have seen these people out on the picket lines in the freezing cold over the last two weeks and they know how much suffering this strike is causing. They know that these people have been waiting for pay equity for two years.

The first group of motions I moved may seem to be technical and may seem to be window-dressing to some members of this House. They change the word "chairman" in this bill to the word "chair" because women are tired of having every position of power and authority in this country and in our laws expressed in male terms.

Those kinds of attitudes creep into this bill that support income inequity for women which is at the heart of one issue of the strike of these hospital services workers. This government has refused to implement the fair pay that the human rights tribunal has determined that these people are entitled to. Even in the last week the President of the Treasury Board has failed to ensure that the matter of pay equity is referred to the conciliation boards being established with this piece of legislation before us today.

The matter of pay equity will be before the House shortly under several motions to be moved by my colleague and one I believe to be moved by myself. The government has known for two years that the issue of pay equity is fundamental to these hospital service workers being able to accept an agreement.

All they are asking for is what the Human Rights Commission of Canada has said they are entitled to—a fair wage for the work they do and equal wages with other people doing comparable work. They will not settle for less despite this legislation and, if the government is serious about what it says about pay equity, then let it accept some of the motions that will follow mine. Let it accept the spirit of the first amendments. Let it very clearly say that pay equity is referred to the conciliation boards established in this legislation.

The whole process that has led us to this despicable point has been controlled by Treasury Board, has been manipulated by Treasury Board, has been thwarted by Treasury Board. The President of the Treasury Board even tried to imply in the House that the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada supports this back to work legislation. That is not true.

The nurses from St. Anne de Bellevue hospital are here today. They have travelled all the way from Montreal. They are sitting in the gallery to let this House know that they as professional workers in the Public Service of Canada do not support back to work legislation. They do support fair treatment for the hospital services workers who they work with every day. They support a reasonable and fair settlement to this contract, not a forced resumption of work.

They know that when they go back into those hospitals with workers who have been forced back there with no hope of a fair contract, the situation will not allow for a pleasant working environment.

I ask the opposition, I ask the government and I ask particularly the President of the Treasury Board to recognize the importance of this issue and the importance of parity for the ships' crews workers as essential fundamental pre-conditions to be able to resolve these contracts that have been now outstanding for two years. I ask them to recognize that the kinds of wages these people earn are not fair and not just. The daily cost of them not being at work is more than it would take to settle this contract for a whole year.

The process has not been fair, and this piece of legislation today continues the unfairness and the manipulativeness of that process. It sets up two conciliation boards which are supposed to impose a settlement of something that the government has been unable and unwilling to negotiate for over two years.

The normal process in conciliation boards, the normal process in decent, fair, humane labour relations is that each side names its members to a conciliation board and those members get to name an acceptable chair. It means that the process is not weighted in favour of the employer or the employees and that the fairness of the arguments that come before the board will determine what the settlement is.

• (1600)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the hon. member's time has expired.

Mrs. Catterall: Just one more sentence to finish off?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes.

Mrs. Catterall: Therefore, I urge the government to look carefully at these amendments, to not act vindictively, to attempt to improve this legislation, to attempt to improve the atmosphere in which these people will be forced back to work and, above all, to sit down and negotiate fairly. I will have an opportunity to speak further tomorrow and I will do so.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday when the government introduced its last heavy hand into this House, that is, closure on this portion of the debate on Bill C-49, the justice minister said that there had been agreement between the government and the Official Opposition on certain matters which would have led to a speedy conclusion to the passage of Bill C-49 but that it was the members of the New Democratic Party who held it up because, he said, we had to appeal to a higher authority.

In his sneering fashion, he was referring to us having been in consultation with the Public Service Alliance of Canada. There is a very good reason to do that because it is the Public Service Alliance of Canada which represents the people who have been so demeaned by this government and by governments prior to this one as well, ever since they became eligible to be unionized and to go on strike.

Since 1967, this is the first time that these people have been able to go on strike. Certainly it is not any wonder to anyone who has been following the process why they have gone on strike. They are the most underpaid people in the civil service, and yet, one has to wonder why, if these people are as essential as the government has said they are—and if I have time in this particular part of the debate, I will get to that.

If they are as essential as the government says they are, why on earth are they so poorly paid? In our society, it is rather common, when people are deemed essential, when society cannot get along without their services, that they be paid commensurate to their value to society.

Successive governments have used the heavy hand of designating these people as being essential in order to prevent them from being able to go on strike and to make sure that their wages were kept down.

In spite of the fact that the justice minister was referring so sneeringly to us being in consultation with a higher authority, we were in consultation with a higher authority and that higher authority was something about which the justice minister may know something. I know doggone well nobody else on the government side knows anything about it. The only reason that he knows anything about it is because he is justice minister.

What we are referring to is justice, justice for these people who, for so long, have been kept under the thumb of tyrannical governments and have been prevented in a heavy-handed way from being able to receive the kinds of pay which their obvious value to society would dictate that they ought to be able to receive.

Justice is what we are talking about. The very day that this government introduced closure on Bill C-49 was the day when three people, one from each party in this House, stood up and praised the forty-first anniversary of the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights. The very day that closure, one of the most heavy-handed things that a government can use in any situation was introduced, was the very day that we were celebrating the forty-first anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights which includes the ability to go on strike, if it comes to that, if you are desperate enough.

I was an hourly paid employee before I was elected to Parliament. I have been on strike, Mr. Speaker, and I can assure you that going on strike is not the first thing you do. Going on strike is the last thing you want to do and it is an act of desperation. This has been true throughout the course of human history, whether strikes have been legal or not, with all due respect to the member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia who said there has to be a better way, that we have to look at the laws and maybe this will encourage us to do so. If he looked at labour relations history in any part of the western world over the last short period of time, he would find out that prohibiting strikes is not one way of solving the problem.

What we are talking about is a matter of justice. Can you imagine, in addition to these people never having been able to go on strike, that in 1981 it was brought to the attention of the government that these people in the HS group were being unfairly paid in relation to the GS group. Most of the people in the hospital services group are women. Most of the people in the general services group are men. The Canadian Human Rights Commission found that this group, mainly composed of women, were being underpaid and the government had a responsibility to pay them commensurate with those who worked in the general services group.

That was in 1981. It was 1987 before these people received any kind of financial recognition of what the Human Rights Commission had determined several years before. It amazes me that any group of people in a situation like this would have to go to the Human Rights Commission at all in relation to a government which is supposed to be elected to look after people's human rights and interests. These people had to force the government, albeit initially not the government we have here, but one populated by people down the hall on this side.

However, this government is certainly culpable. In 1987 when it decided to pay and it bemoaned the fact that it cost $28 million to finally divvy up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. member the motion which refers to taking out the word "chairman" and putting in the word "chair". I do not wish to bring up relevancy this afternoon but I just cannot understand why the hon. member is not speaking to the motions. I would just like to bring that to his attention. I know he is a new member but I would still like to bring that to his attention.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I recognize the relevance of your suggestion, but I think you will find it much more convenient if members can cover a lot of topics in one or two speeches instead of being forced to rise on six different occasions throughout the day. You may find it is to everybody's advantage if you are lenient in your ruling.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member knows that the Chair is always lenient in its ruling, and we like to help out members in this chamber. However, I would like to bring it to the attention of the hon. member, as well as any other hon. member who is going to be speaking on these particular motions.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, thank you for bringing that to my attention. I intend to address the motions momentarily. In spite of the situation we have before us where equalization, human rights, fairness and justice prevail, where we have tried in most of society to remove the discriminatory stigmas on these kinds of words, the word "chairman" is still used. Of course it should be "chair", "chairperson", whatever. "Chairman" is offensive and certainly ought to be removed, but this is just an example of the government ignoring the very essence of the subject which we are discussing. I do thank the Speaker for having brought that to my attention.

• (1610)

In 1987, when the government did bring in the equalization payments, supposedly to ameliorate the problem of having discriminated against this group of people, there were no payments subsequent to July 26, 1987 until November of this year. There is an amazing sidelight to this. For the purposes of calculating income for pensions, the equalization payments which the government has reluctantly, I would suggest, come up with, do not count toward the pensions of these people.

This group, primarily composed of women, is perhaps even intentionally deprived of their full pension benefits because of the intransigence of this government in paying them what they ought to be worth. The main issue in this whole problem as far as the HS group is concerned is that the government will not only not pay up, but it will not include it in wages. That is the issue.

When I talked the other day about justice, that is precisely what I was referring to. It is a matter of justice that these people receive equal pay. I would suggest that somehow or other, the government either ought to be forced or ought to voluntarily include those equalization payments back to the time when the original matter was brought up.

I see my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker. I am sure I will have opportunities to speak later on, but I do thank you for bringing to my attention the topic of the motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the hon. member for Halifax West and then the hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Crosby: May I defer to the hon. member for Churchill?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Churchill has the floor.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I thank the parliamentary secretary. I realize that he would like to speak after me to try to cover up for the government's inactions.

Mr. Speaker, I heard your ruling with regard to speaking to the motion, but rather than rising a number of times this afternoon, I would like to speak on our position with regard to the bill and the amendments that have been forward by the member for Saskatoon—Dundurn on behalf of the New Democratic Party caucus.

Much has been made of the fact that on Monday night, the New Democratic Party would not agree to have this legislation passed that evening. The reason we did not do so is that we could not accept the fact that workers would not be able to negotiate or have a conciliation board, in this case, rule on job classifications.

We believe that all workers, whether they are under the auspices of the Public Service Staff Relations Act or the Canada Labour Code, should have the same rights to negotiate something that is as basic and as important as job classifications. We believe that that was doubly important in this particular case because we were talking about a mechanism to ensure that pay equity could actually come into force under the collective agreement.

We have made it very clear that we accept the fact that there must be a resolution of the regional disparity between the workers on the east coast and the west coast. We had made it very clear that we were concerned about the potential for loss of life, but we were not going to compromise our principles when it came to the very important issue of pay equity and the ability of workers, through their collective bargaining process, even when the collective bargaining process breaks down, as it has in this case, to have the right to have an impartial third party ensure that job classifications were looked at and that pay equity would be treated fairly.

I was particularly upset when some Liberal members, especially some from Atlantic Canada, went to the media and attacked us for our position. This can be seen in the Atlantic newspapers and particularly those of Nova Scotia.

I think it is important, if the Liberal Party members want to say that they oppose the legislation, they should say the same thing in Atlantic Canada as they are saying in Ottawa and on the west coast of Canada. It is not acceptable to have some Liberals say one thing and other Liberals say something else.

If you believe that pay equity is important, and that workers have a right to negotiate job classification, then that should be the position you put in the House of Commons and it should be the position that your members put in other parts of the country as well.

We will support the Liberal amendments and we obviously will be supporting the amendments put forward by the New Democratic Party caucus. We will be consistent in what we say and what we do.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that on December 6, 1989, when Bill C–49 was presented to the House, the President of the Treasury Board made it very clear in this House that he was prepared on behalf of the government and on behalf of the Treasury Board to continue negotiations with the representative of the two labour groups involved in the bill at all times, through day and night, whenever the Public Service Alliance was willing to meet to negotiate.

This negotiation could be taking place right now. There are no barriers to negotiations. If the union representatives have anything to present, any offers to make, they can put those offers on the table and they will be considered. Negotiations have never been terminated as far as the President of the Treasury Board is concerned. I want hon. member to keep that in mind so that we do not poison the atmosphere, do not prevent settlements from being reached by rhetoric in the House of Commons.

Even at this moment, the President of the Treasury Board and the Minister of Veterans Affairs are meeting with the leadership the hospital workers group to discuss matters of common interest. The atmosphere of good feeling, if it is retained, will eventually lead to settlement. I want everybody to understand that.

It is not my intention in rising in the House to speak to Bill C–49 to do anything that would poison the atmosphere and prevent a settlement from being reached because we all realize that that is the resolution to any dispute but particularly to a labour–management dispute.

No one takes any solace in Bill C–49 or in any kind of back to work legislation. Back to work legislation is only introduced when the system has failed, when the parties who are responsible for negotiating a settlement of a labour–management dispute have failed to come to an agreement. They have not been able to bring together the demands of the workforce and the needs of the government to produce a settlement.

In those circumstances, Parliament must act in the public interest. It then becomes the duty of the Parliament of Canada to act in the interests of all Canadians. The labour–management dispute has to be put aside. We recognize the value of the collective bargaining system. We recognize the value of settlement of disputes. But those values have to be put aside in the common interests of all Canadians.

What is that common interest? There are ships in distress on the high seas. There are ships locked up in the St. Lawrence Seaway system at great cost and expense, not to ship owners, as has been said, but to the people of Canada, the people who will be paying for the goods carried on those vessels, the farmers whose grain must get to market, or else. They will suffer at home.

I do not have to tell that to hon. members. They should know about the emergencies, the difficulties, the distress that a strike will cause in both the hospital sector and in the transportation sector. It is because of those interests that we are here today legislating back to work legislation, not because of any malice or animosity to the workers involved. It is fully recognized that their contribution is of value to the country but there are other interests that have to be recognized.

Let me deal very quickly with the amendment that we now have before us. That is the amendment which changes the word "chairman" to the word "chair". We have recognized in the House of Commons for years now that this sexist language must be removed from the statutes of Canada. That is an ongoing process. The word at present used in the Public Service Staff Relations Act, which has been on the books of Canada for some years, is "chairman". Bill C–49 merely picks up the wording of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and uses that terminology.

• (1620)

If the hon. member wants to effectively change this sexist designation, she could introduce in the House of Commons a private member's bill changing the terminology of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. I am sure if she did that, it would meet with the approval of all members of the House. At the moment, we are simply using the terminology that is already there.

While the change would readily meet the support of members in terms of the principle involved, in terms of the merits of the particular application it is not a useful exercise. Bill C–49 before us is a transitory bill. It will be expended, hopefully, in a matter of days and, certainly, in a matter of 90 days. So it will produce nothing for the future. The change in the Public Service Staff Relations Act will go on for decades to come. So my suggestion to the member is that she withdraw her amendment and seek a change in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

Let me address very briefly, because I know we are limited to 10 minutes on these speeches, the two issues that have been brought to the floor by members opposite. One is pay equity for the hospital workers. As I said, the President of the Treasury Board is even now prepared to meet with representatives of the hospital workers.

I want the House and all Canadians to know, because it has now become public, that an offer was made to conciliate, under a binding conciliation board, the matter of pay equity in relation to the hospital workers. Everyone knows that there is litigation outstanding under the Canadian Human Rights Act and that there is a decision of a human rights tribunal relating to pay equity. That is an ongoing process. That is a process outside the form of this bill. Even with that process being external to this bill, there is the resolve on the part of the Treasury Board to have that matter settled as well as all other matters, because it is obviously in the interests of the government, the Treasury Board, the Department of Veterans Affairs and, most especially, the workers to have all matters resolved.

The problem is how do you resolve these matters. How do you bring the parties together? It is very difficult for all of us who realize that we have reached the point that it has to be by legislation passed by this House. That legislation is pursuant to our public duty in the House of Commons and in the Parliament of Canada to protect the public. We do not want to do that at the expense of workers and that is why there is provision for a conciliation board on which the workers will be represented. The union will be there to ensure that their interests are protected. That is quite a normal process in labour–management relations.

Let me speak for one moment about the ships crews because that is very personal to me. I live on the east coast of Canada and I am well aware of the work of the Coast Guard, fisheries patrol vessels and the auxiliary vessels of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Public Works. I know the difficulties of engagement in that kind of occupation, but the ships crews know this very day that part of this process would have yielded to them what we have sought for decades. That is pay equality between east coast workers and west coast workers. It is a personal loss to me that the opportunity to bring about that pay equality, which could have been achieved Monday night by negotiation, was lost.

I can only hope that it will still come to those valued workers that they will receive pay equality through the process as established by this bill. It was in the hands of members of Parliament to deliver that goal which we have been trying to achieve for decades. It is unfortunate that that goal was lost. It was also the failure of the bargaining parties, but we had our opportunity. We had our chance and we did not take it.

Let me end by saying that we have a bill before the House of Commons, Bill C–49. It is not the kind of legislation in which members take any special heart. We recognize that it results from the failure of the system and the persons involved, the parties administering the system, but at some point in time, it becomes the duty of parliamentarians to respect that broader public interest.

We have to put aside errors in judgment or otherwise of the past. We cannot assess fault. We have to deal with the realities of the situation. We cannot have our ships on the high seas unprotected. We cannot have ships tied up. We cannot have veterans, deserving of care, not receiving that care.

[Translation]

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-49, legislation which forces two groups in the Public Service to go back to work.

First, I would like to comment on what the hon. member who spoke earlier said about language. I am sure he is more knowledgeable than I am about the English language, but I think the hon. member should understand why people want to make Canada's statutes gender-neutral. If we have a group of people, in this case Canadian women, who feel unfairly treated because of language, I think we have a moral obligation to take the time to make these changes. The hon. member talked about making changes, in French or English, to make all Canadians feel at home in this country. The hon. member who spoke earlier said in this respect that it was a lot of trouble and that it would be a full-time job to make all these changes. A change for the better is never too much trouble. These are things that have to be done.

We are equal in this country. We are all equal. Men are not more important than women, and vice versa, and if we are in a situation where we use language that will offend one group, we must change the words we use.

To get back to Bill C-49, the back to work legislation—-the previous speaker is from Halifax on the east coast. I fail to understand why he refuses to stick up for his own people. It seems seamen in eastern Canada are paid less than those on the Pacific coast. It is like saying that lumberjacks from one community are to be paid less than lumberjacks from another community. I don't understand that. Do they do the same work? Do they work for the same employer? Is the Atlantic Ocean easier to sail than the Pacific? Maybe someone could explain why one is more difficult than the other. If there is no difference, if the same kind of work is involved, why don't these people get the same salary? I don't blame seamen on the east coast for wanting to be paid the same as seamen on the west coast. I am told that on the west coast, seamen are prepared to accept a lower wage increase to compensate for what the seamen on the east coast will get. I think that shows the seamen with the Coast Guard in British Columbia have heart.

The words "emergency" and "safety" were mentioned, and the fact that a few days ago, the Coast Guard was needed in an emergency. Coast Guard employees were at their place of work, with their picket signs. It didn't take 35 minutes or an hour or two hours to find them. They were right there, in front of their place of work. It seems they were at sea 20 minutes. They did their job. That is really fantastic. We have a group that is walking the picket line, that is on strike, but when lives must be saved, whether they are Canadian or foreign lives, they are concerned, they take their work seriously and get on the job when people's safety is at stake.

• (1630)

When we talk about the people who work in our hospital services, I think they are right to ask for fair wages. I think it is horrifying and even immoral to see a woman working in one hospital and a man who does the same work in another building, two miles away or three or four kilometres away, and earns up to 40 per cent more. This is really beyond me. Are people paid on the basis of gender or are they paid for what they do?

I fail to understand the hon. member for Halifax West who is so concerned about gender in the legislation where it concerns the Public Service. He even goes so far as to tolerate the fact that women are paid less than men and that if women work in a field where they readily encounter the kind of attitude I just heard described—-I don't think that's fair. I think it is heartless and shows a lack of responsibility.

It seems that the men and women employed in hospital services are at the bottom of the wage scale in this country. Well, when we are sick—-maybe government members should be sick enough to go to a hospital where they could put their stupid arguments to the people who look after them and care for them. I wonder how they would feel then!

I wouldn't wish ill health on anyone, but perhaps a short experience of this kind would make them understand. If they had relatives, cousins, a sister or their mother, especially their mother who did this kind of work and they knew that one of their friends was earning 40 per cent more than their mother who works very hard, that should bring them to their senses.

Mr. Speaker, we live in Canada, we work in Canada, we were brought up in Canada, we want to raise our families in Canada and we also want to develop a sense of justice and improve our quality of life, and this is not done by downgrading either men, if one is a woman, or women, if one is a man, and especially not by downgrading people who are not as rich and not as powerful as we are. We must be fair, and as I said earlier, we must have heart.

I repeat that as a man, I would like to remind my fellow members, and especially those who do not speak my language, that they should improve their own language, if necessary, by removing all sexist terms, and learn to treat everyone with a sense of fairness and equity.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1. A vote on Motion No. 1 will be applied to Motions Nos. 4, 8, 13 and 16.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 2 and 3 are virtually identical and the Chair has selected for debate only Motion No. 2. It will be voted on separately.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C–49 be amended in Clause 6 by striking out lines 37 to 39 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"employer and the bargaining agent and shall be binding on the employer, the bargaining agent and the employees in that bargaining unit, on all matters relating to the employment of employees."

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is every likelihood that, just as surely as in the previous motion dealing with the Chair of the committee being referred to as Chairman in the text, this omission was something which could have been avoided. The omission of reference to the bargaining unit in this motion was probably due to either the government's lack of caring or understanding, or perhaps it is just simply an expression of the government's right–wing distaste for bargaining units.

The continuation of this whole concept certainly can be illustrated by the way in which the government has treated the members of the bargaining unit of the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

I mentioned previously that all through the history these two groups, the hospital services group and the ships' crews, have been precluded from going on strike. Successive governments have to do this consciously. Within a certain period of time after they receive notice from the bargaining unit, they have to let the bargaining unit know who within a particular group they wish to designate as essential. In the history of both of these groups the designation has been total. It almost begs the question, because they even do it in excess of total, if you can believe that. There have been times when the governments have actually designated as many as 110 per cent of the people involved as being essential.

Mr. Murphy: They're going to hire them and then force them back to work.

Mr. Fisher: That is right. So we have this concept of designation in addition to the obvious inequities which the hospital services group have suffered through the unwillingness of the government to come to terms with the human rights decision and pay the hospital services group equitably.

In this case both the ships' crews group and the hospital services group are being adversely affected by the intransigence of the government. Intransigence hardly covers it. It is Draconian. Draconian in this context is not my word, it happens to be the description of a process which was used by the government back in 1986 when previous negotiations with the ships' crews led to an impasse and conciliation was followed through as is normal under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, the law governing negotiations with the government's employees.

The conciliation board reported that yes indeed these people had been underpaid. Its recommendation was that they be paid in a certain fashion and that fashion exceeded the general settlement which had been reached with the rest of the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

• (1640)

The government said no. The government refused to accept the conciliation board's report that these people, having been paid in an unfair way by the government, ought to be paid more. Again, out of desperation, just as surely as the situation we have before us now is a desperate one, the ships' crews went on what is commonly referred to as a wildcat strike. If you have been designated as being unable to go on strike and you do, certainly there is no question about it, everyone involved would admit that the law has been broken.

The government of course, in its usual benign fashion, summarily went to the courts and got an injunction. I would like to read something that the judge said in his decision on granting that injunction. Judge F. C. Muldoon said:

> Doubtless, these incidents do evince frustration in regard to the plight in which the defendants find themselves vis–à–vis statutory provisions which, without undue exaggeration, can be termed draconian.

When I used the word "Draconian", it is not a word which I alone have used in relation to what is happening. When a judge imposing an injunction against people refers to what is happening to them as being Draconian, it gives you an idea of the mentality of the government opposite. Obviously the mentality of the government has not changed, its outlook has not changed, its feelings toward its own employees have not changed in the intervening years.

There are many more things that could be referred to in relation to this and I would certainly like to refer to one or two others.

One of the parliamentary secretaries alluded to danger which was being faced by sailors on the high seas as a result of ships' crews who man our coast guard vessels being on strike. In every instance when these people have been called upon to respond to a situation of distress on the high seas, these crews have dropped their picket signs and gone on to those ships. Not only that, their union, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, in a case or two where these ships were in foreign lands, actually paid for these people to go to some place where they could be manning ships. The Public Service Alliance of Canada is paying for the hotel bills of these people standing by, it is paying for the meals of these people standing by, and when the need arises these people spring into action. The government has admitted that in every instance the response has been as good as ever and in some cases better than average, more expedient than is usually the case.

I think that speaks very highly of these people. Perhaps as the debate goes on I will be able to refer to how expediently the hospital services people tried to respond. The hospital services people tried to respond in a very similar manner to that of the ships' crews. The government accepted the offer of the ships' crews but turned down the hospital services group much, I would suggest, to its chagrin. Had the government behaved more kindly toward these people in the first place it would not have found itself in the nearly the trouble it is in and we would not be here debating this issue today.

I think I will probably have an opportunity to address this question a little later this afternoon.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the fact that this motion even has to be debated today is a sign of the arrogance that the government has demonstrated throughout the last two years on negotiations with these workers. It has demonstrated that it is quite prepared to put an end to collective bargaining in the Public Service. It has abused over the last few years the designation process, disobeying the laws and then trying to go back through the courts to get approval for its disobedience of the laws of Parliament.

The government knows perfectly well that this is a legitimate, acceptable amendment. It probably does nothing more than correct an oversight in the drafting of the legislation by asking that the law before us today that is part of the collective bargaining process simply recognize the bargaining agent as the other part of the contract between the employer and its employee.

In fact there is court precedent for this. The Supreme Court of Canada in two cases stated that a collective agreement replaces the terms of a master-servant contract for individual employees. The law relating to individual employment contracts is irrelevant when the employer-employee relationship is covered by a collective agreement in which case the agreement is between the bargaining agent and the employer.

All this motion is trying to do is correct a sloppily written piece of legislation to recognize the legal fact that a collective agreement is between a bargaining agent and the employer and not between the individual employees and the employer.

There has been a very recent decision on that when again this government tried to introduce a system of bonuses into the Public Service feeling that it could totally bypass the legitimate representative of the employees it was dealing with and deal with those employees one-on-one. The Federal Court of Appeal told the government that it could not do that, that it has an agreement between a bargaining agent and the employer, in this case the Government of Canada, and that its obligation is to change that agreement with the bargaining agent.

This government must be really paranoid or really arrogant if it is afraid to accept this amendment. That this should even have to be debated is a waste of the time of the House. It is an amendment that simply recognizes what the legal facts are in any collective bargaining situation.

I cannot disagree with the Public Service Alliance of Canada that represents the workers who are hit by this legislation when it says that the text of the clause, as it is now written, appears to be directly aimed at excluding the bargaining agent as a party to the agreement being put in place by the legislation, despite court rulings that say you cannot do that.

Instead of the government recognizing the havoc it has caused in hospitals across the country, in shipping lanes across the country and on the high seas, and trying at least to get through a half decent piece of legislation, it just sits there and ignores its legal obligations.

We are going to be voting on a lot of motions before this day is over and I have to express my personal absolute abhorrence for the government that refuses to even accept what the minister himself said was government policy and the policy of this place, that being that we no longer use sexist language in legislation. How dare they and how dare the Minister of State for the Status of Women sit there and say that she will pass another piece of sexist language based legislation in this House.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I do not see any point in prolonging the debate on this amendment. It was dealt with at the legislative committee. Members opposite had the opportunity to question counsel learned in the law on the complaint about clause 6. The answer was given that the amendment now being proposed was redundant, involving a kind of legalese that has no real effect.

• (1650)

Notwithstanding that, I suppose that under other circumstances the government might be willing to accept an amendment, but at this point in time, bear in mind that the bill is transitory, it will only last for a limited period. It will not have any long-term effect beyond the resolution of this labour management dispute. There did not appear to be any point in responding to the proposal to amend in a positive way.

It is as simple as that. If anybody wants to look at the records of the legislative committee, they will find a complete answer to the matter given by the counsel. I have seen no legal-based opinion to indicate that the amendment was necessary and there seemed to be no real purpose served by responding to it.

At the same time, no one wishes to poison the possibility of settlement and better negotiations. It would only be in that spirit that the amendment would be accepted. With no commitment on the part of members of this House to agree upon other amendments which would advance the cause of the hospital workers and advance the cause of the ships' crews in matters of pay equity and pay equality, there is no real purpose served by superficial amendments that just cater to the purists or people who have very defined legal views of the language used in the statute.

While I am on my feet I would like to again address the whole point behind this legislation. The situation in Canada is that we have no clear definition of essential services. I think everyone would be better off if all workers engaged in essential services knew that the work and activity in which they were involved was subject to special legislation that precluded the possibility of a work stoppage.

I hope that some day the Parliament of Canada will establish essential service legislation so that those engaged in that activity will recognize from day one that when they engage in that activity, they will not be allowed to stop that work contrary to the interests of the whole nation. Until we get this legislation we are going to have to deal with these matters on an ad hoc basis as they arise. We will have to assess in each case whether the legislated rights of workers will govern in a particular circumstance or whether the broader public interest will govern.

Again, let me remind all members of the House that the difficulty is in our failure to define essential services and our failure to deal with those services on a clear statutory base. We are left with dealing with situations as they arise. I think everyone in this House will agree that that is an unfortunate situation but until we can come to some consensus on appropriate limitations to the right to stop work, even where it is at the expense of the public, we are faced with these situations and we have to deal with them as our best judgment allows.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister referred to proceedings at the committee and I think inadvertently he has misinformed the House as to the discussion that took place at the committee. I have the minutes with me.

Just so the House will know the content of the discussion, in fact the motion was not accepted or rejected, but there was an agreement that the wording would be looked at to accomplish the objective. It is that wording that is now before the House. There was no advice or recommendation from the officials there that this was not necessary and I would be happy to provide the member with the actual discussion if he wishes to review it. I think it is important that this House not be misinformed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is a disagreement between two members. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8) the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): moved:

Motion No. 5.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 8 by striking out lines 15 to 20 at page 4.

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 8 by adding immediately after line 38 at page 4 the following:

"(4) The members of the Conciliation Board shall, within five days of their appointment, attempt to agree on a nominee for chairman of the Conciliation Board.

(5) On receipt of a nomination within the period referred to in subsection (4), the Chairman shall appoint the nominee as the chairman of the Conciliation Board for which the person was nominated.

(6) If the members of the Conciliation Board fail to agree on a nominee for chairman of the Conciliation Board, the Chairman shall appoint as the chairman of that Board a person the Chairman deems fit for the purpose."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is merely a continuation of the theme of heavy-handedness of this government which extends back to when it tried to prevent the hospital services people from receiving the just equalization payment vis-à-vis the group services people.

Something that keeps coming up throughout this discussion is how much the government cares about people. Government members refer constantly to how important it is that ships' crews go back to work so that the people at sea are well protected, in spite of all the evidence that they have been. They refer to the veterans and how important it is that they receive the care and attention to which, without doubt, they certainly are entitled.

I would suggest that that is something the government should have thought about when it was negotiating. It is something it should have thought about when it went back and tried to overturn a decision of a court to have these people designated as essential in the first place. The government probably spent as much money trying to have these people designated, after it made a mistake and it became impossible, as it would have if it had just agreed to the settlement which both these groups have proposed in negotiations.

This government cares not a whit for people. This is the same government that is bringing in the general sales tax which is going to hurt us all, including many of the nurses from one of the hospitals which is being so adversely affected because of this government's action, and the veterans who live there. I am glad to see the friends, neighbours and fellow workers of the people who are on strike supporting them.

This is the same government which brought in changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which is going to devastate all parts of Canada. This is the same government which brought in the free trade deal. The government says that the strike is affecting farmers adversely. This is the government that is threatening the marketing boards of the agricultural communities in this country. This is the government that has accelerated the abandonment of rail lines. This is the government that has taken oats out of the Wheat Board, which is severely affecting the farmers of Canada.

I think it is atrocious that this government would take particularly vulnerable people, the veterans and the most poorly paid members of the Public Service, and then try to turn the farmers against them by saying that unless this strike is settled, there will be severe adverse conditions affecting farmers. I am sure that most of the farmers in this country do not feel any better about those hospital service workers being as badly paid as they are; that they are not receiving the kind of pay that they ought to be; that they are not going to get the pensions to which they otherwise would have been entitled.

• (1700)

I would suggest that on the basis of what has happened in particular to western Canadian agriculture in the last few years, they can sympathize with a group of people who have been out without a contract for two years. But what that really mean is that those people have been without a raise in pay for three years. That comes awfully close to the same kind of conditions in which the western Canadian farmer finds himself.

On that basis I am sure they can sympathize. To have circumvented the usual process of putting a chairperson in place by the parties involved rather than having one proposed to them is just a continuation of the same Draconian theme.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, this motion refers to Clause 8 of the bill. This clause perhaps more than any other exemplifies the reason that these two groups have been without a contract for over two years. It exemplifies quite clearly the approach that this government has brought to negotiations, the attempt to use its power, every ounce of delaying tactic, and every ounce of devious and cruel means it possibly can not to reach a settlement with these most vulnerable workers of the Canadian government.

These people earn $16,000, $17,000, $18,000, $19,000 a year. The value of their work as we have seen in the last couple of weeks is millions of dollars a day.

I have been speaking with the professional people who work in the hospital in Montreal. I have been hearing about what it is costing us in that hospital to keep services delivered to our veterans; how we are importing nurses from the west coast, putting them up in hotels; how we are bribing the professional workers to keep on working—these people who support the hospital service workers, who support their work, who provide meals, cleaning, personal care, love and attention to the veterans in that hospital—and how it is costing us millions of dollars a day to keep these people away from work. They are providing special meals and are being provided extra pay. They are using the word of these professional workers who say: "Yes, conditions in the hospital are deteriorating". Then they are taking those words and twisting them, something which seems to be a speciality of the government with seniors as well, and saying: "That is why we need back to work legislation". That is not what those professionals are saying. They resent their words being used in that way.

I said that this demonstrates the arrogance and the willingness of this government to use its power instead of using good management and good labour negotiation techniques to reach a mutually amicable settlement to send people back to work with some sense of dignity, some pride in the work they do and some sense that their government appreciates the work they do. What this clause does is stack the negotiations, stack the conciliation process against them.

I want to remind the House that the conciliation process will be binding. These people will have to accept whatever comes out of that. That is what this government is imposing on them. It is stacking the deck against them by not following the normal procedure whereby each party to a negotiation names its representative and then those people agree on a mutually acceptable chair. It is instead appointing two out of three members of the conciliation board. What possible chance does the other side have when the government, with all its power, is saying: "We have got the majority on the board before it ever starts"? They are particularly concerned because the government has chosen in the conciliation of the hospital service workers' contract to bring in a new chair. This is not the person who throughout October listened to the arguments of both parties and was acceptable to both parties, who knows the issues, the situation, the status of the negotiations and might be able to proceed reasonably quickly to reach a settlement. They have chosen to bring in a new person, unfamiliar with the situation, somebody who has not been previously agreed to by both parties to the negotiations.

Is it any wonder that the hospital service workers think the government is deliberately bringing in a chair of this board who is favourable to the government's position, or likely to be?

The government could quite easily accept this amendment and put in place a fair process. It might give some remote hope to these people who are being forced back to work because the government has failed and neglected to fulfil its duty as an employer to reach an agreement with them and that they could go back with some optimism that this might be settled fairly. With the government stacking the deck against them this way they are going to go back to work bitter, defeated, and convinced that this government has no concept of the value of their work. Their patients do, and I think that is what has sustained them throughout.

The veterans in those hospitals and the Armed Forces personnel who they look after support these people. The volunteers in the hospital issued a press release just yesterday in support of the work they do and urging the government to be fair with them. The Human Rights Commission supports them. The Human Rights Commission has said: "Yes, since 1981 these people have been working for far less than they are worth and because of the inaction of this government they are still working for far less than they are worth."

Don't give me words about pay equity, equal pay for work of equal value, respecting the work of women as well as we respect the work of men, respecting the work of people at all levels. You have the chance to put in place a reasonably fair process, even in the context of this legislation. If the government members stand up and vote against this motion, don't ever say nice words in this House again because nobody will believe you.

I urge the government members to acknowledge that this is a fair amendment, that it gives the conciliation boards a reasonable chance of succeeding in the difficult work before them, and that it gives the workers a chance to go back in the two weeks before Christmas in a reasonably good frame of mind and not to simply be stubborn and arrogant in refusing this motion.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to say that one is pleased to rise to address a bill such as the back to work bill now before us, but I am pleased the motion that stands in the name of my colleague, the member for Saskatoon—Dundurn, at least attempts to introduce a little bit of civilized procedure into what is an objectionable piece of legislation.

To comment briefly on the proposal before us itself, the present bill as it now stands would directly name and appoint the chairs of both conciliation boards. It is not just our opinion, but I believe it would be accepted as a fact that in the history of back to work legislation this kind of process is highly unusual and that the normal process would simply outline, within the bill, the process for such appointments after some discussion, or at least take into consideration the rightful opinions of the parties to the bargaining dispute. What this motion would do is delete that whole section and attempt to introduce a procedure whereby the parties themselves would have some opportunity to make the mechanisms involved in conciliation and the methods involved in choosing chairs for the conciliation boards more acceptable.

• (1710)

The failure of the government to take what has been the normal process into account is just one more example in a long history of bungling, ineptitude and lack of consideration shown by this government throughout this entire dispute.

The dispute itself deals with two categories, both ships' crews and hospital services. The employees are represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Both of these groups have been without any economic increase since December, 1986. Their various contracts expired on December 21 and December 31, 1987. In a two-year period the government has bungled so much, so often and in so many ways that it must almost set new precedents in the history of bungled collective bargaining on the part of the federal government.

There are two issues that underline so much of this whole dispute. One is regional parity between the group on both the Atlantic coast and the Pacific coast and on the Lakes, which is involved in Coast Guard services. For hospital employees it is largely a matter of pay equity and equal work of equal value, largely for women workers and those in other lower paid categories who are attempting to get what they are really entitled to by the Charter of Rights of this country. The government has stalled, and stalled, and stalled, and stalled for so long that the workers have been left with no other opportunity but to withdraw their labour, a right which is as old as Magna Carta, even though it has not always been practised.

"No man shall be forced to build bridges" was written into the Magna Carta hundreds and hundreds of years ago. This government still does not recognize that right. That is a long time to go back, and a long time to learn a lesson. We are dealing not only with ineptitude, incompetence and what appears to be the worst of bad faith bargaining on the part of this government, but also a failure to recognize basic human rights in accordance with the right to strike.

In my own industry, which was the lumber industry in the province of British Columbia, in which I worked for years before coming to this place for the first time in 1980, we had a strike in 1967 dealing with exactly the issue of regional parity. There it was a matter of parity between the interior of British Columbia and the coastal areas of British Columbia. That strike makes this one so far look like a picnic. It went on seven and a half months and shut down virtually every lumber producing community throughout the southern interior of British Columbia. Feelings were strong. It was 22 years ago that we resolved that issue.

In 1989, is it too much to expect the Government of Canada to recognize that people who operate on the ships doing what they regard as essential services, life-saving services, have not earned that same kind of right 22 years later? That is hard to comprehend.

These two groups of employees are among the lowest paid in the public service, averaging some $18,000 to $23,000 per year. That puts them significantly behind their counterparts in the outside sector—anywhere from 14 to 28 per cent, depending on the group and area of employment. Any single parent or one-income family in that kind of group would be at or below poverty levels. That is obviously unacceptable and an unacceptable manner for us and for this government in particular to treat the employees who work so hard to save lives, whether in hospitals or at sea. Both these groups provide services of enormous social and economic importance to the nation. The government has recognized that simply by declaring them absolutely essential, although it did not do it at the proper time in order to keep designated employees on the job. That was some of its bungling. But it has accepted how valuable these employees are to the nation at large by saying that we cannot afford to do without them and that is why it is choosing to force them back to work in an arbitrary manner.

During Question Period this morning I was absolutely astounded by the scandalous attitude portrayed by ministers of the government when they were being asked questions about the lack of government action to assist farmers in this country and the way they answered. It has to enrage people from one end of the country to the other when they suggested, "You cannot be interested in helping farmers or else you would force these other people back to work in order to get the grain moving". That is absolutely unacceptable. That is playing one group off against the other in an attempt to cover up your own failure to deal with either problem.

I do not know how we can appeal to the conscience of a government that engages in that kind of thuggery. But I would hope at least it would recognize that it is its responsibility to carry through this legislation in at least the most acceptable manner possible. One of the ways it could do that would be to accept this motion. That would at least give the employees within these two sectors the feeling that they were being listened to and that the kind of processes we have used before would be used to set out procedures to choose the chairs of the conciliation boards that are going to be dealing with their very legitimate grievances so that they will be appointed in a fair and impartial manner. That is all we are asking for by this motion. It will make a bad action somewhat more palatable.

I hope the government has enough common sense in spite of all its bungling prior to this time to accept this motion with the grace with which it is presented.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr.Speaker, the letters and calls of support received in various members' offices, both government and opposition alike, lead me to conclude that the overwhelming majority of Canadians support these public servants in their efforts to attain pay equity. So what do we have? Once again we have this government surrounded by its friends in big business taking on the rest of Canada. The honest worker, the labourer, finds him and herself in a fight with government and big business. To add insult to injury the government wants to limit the debate on this question.

The government is in fact saying: "We will force these people back to work regardless of what anyone wants and we will do it without having to listen to your objections one instant longer than we have to."

At stake here are several important principles. The principle I would like to talk about first is the principle of pay equity.

We heard today the sorry state of pay equity in this country and the number of companies under the supposedly active legislation which do not even have the fortitude or the ability to stand up in Canada today and say: "Yes, we are implementing true pay equity."

We have a Royal Commission report that every member of parliament should read. I refer of course to the Abella report on employment equity. In that report Judge Abella called for employment equity legislation with teeth. That is not what we received. It is certainly not what the members of the Public Service who are on strike today are going to receive when this legislation is rammed through the House of Commons.

The question of the women seeking pay equity—pay equity that the Human Rights Commission has already stated they deserve—is something that has become nothing more than a national disgrace. Women in this country still make 67 cents for every dollar men make. That, Mr. Speaker, is when you add into the equation professional women, women running their own businesses and, yes, women who are members of Parliament and cabinet ministers.

• (1720)

When you take out of the equation women, in whatever small numbers, who are in the higher salary levels, women in this country make 50 cents for every dollar men make.

In this country today, a woman with a university education or a professional degree, such as a registered nurse, can expect to make the same as a man who dropped out of high school in grade 10. Where is the fairness, where is the equity in this situation for the women of Canada?

The women of Canada look to their government to protect them from the greed rampant among many of the people who employ them. When the government of Canada is that employer and it pays no heed to the calls for common justice and common fairness, then we are in a situation on the edge of 1990 that is absolutely unacceptable for anyone who believes in truth and in justice.

Everyone recognizes that this strike is affecting profits, that this strike is affecting the movement of ships in the Seaway, that this strike is affecting hospital care across this country. No one is in favour of the problems that this strike creates. Yet this strike is there because of a fundamental lack of justice in government policy.

The issue is whether or not the right to strike, the democratic right to dissent against unfair and unequal treatment, transcends the right to profit monetarily. The answer is and must be yes, individual dignity and individual search for justice and fairness has to be of a higher priority for the government of all of the people than the question of profit.

It would be pleasant, indeed it would be surprising, if even once this government tried to help the underdog and tried not to step on the average Canadian. But sadly, this has not been and apparently will not be the case. In all its pomposity, the government places the interests of big business ahead of anything else, ahead of human rights.

We have seen the government open up contacts, for example, with China, just one short month after Parliament unanimously condemned the Chinese government for human rights abuses. I guess an expectation on the part of Canadian workers, women and men, of justice in light of that kind of a development is a vain one. Just one short month after hundreds of innocent students protesting in a democratic fashion were massacred in China, this government cosied up with big business and the almighty dollar and wheeled and dealed with the butchers of Tiananmen Square.

There is another equally important principle which this government needs to address and that is the democratic right of association. Time after time, this government and the Prime Minister have challenged the authenticity of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. "It is not worth the paper it is written on", the Prime Minister said, "because of the notwithstanding clause".

Well, if the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is worthless, it is only so because this government puts the sale of Canada and the sale of Canadians ahead of all other interests, ahead of all the traditions that we have held so dear, ahead of all those institutions in this country that have made us uniquely Canadian and a wonderful, individual society on the North American continent.

The democratic right of association, which includes the right to strike, is a principle, a legal, moral and ethical principle. But to this government, it is nothing more than an idea which is second to money, money and more money, and sadly, most particularly, American money.

In 1986, the government of Saskatchewan came under attack from various human rights organizations because it invoked the notwithstanding clause for legislation it passed on January 31 that ended rotating strikes by 12,000 public employees and imposed a legislative contract agreement. Saskatchewan invoked the notwithstanding clause before a challenge could be issued because the government was aware that its legislation was inconsistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

According to Chief Justice Dickson, the guarantee of freedom of association, Section 2(d) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, includes the freedom to bargain collectively and to strike. Such legislation as that which is before us now interferes with the employees' freedom to engage in strike activity that would be lawful in the absence of Bill C–49.

I believe that the profits lost by the continuance of the strike would not merit exclusion under Section 1 of the Charter. The legislation is wrong. The government is wrong. The people are being put down and exploited because there is not a sense on the government side of the House of what is right and what is fair.

I see that the minister responsible for the status of women is in the House. Most particularly it is a tragedy that the rights of women to pay equity are being ignored and even vilified in this legislation. When the time comes I assure you the women of Canada will not continue to be silent. They will stand up for their rights. They will exercise their rights at the ballot box, as well as elsewhere.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, if I may I would like very briefly to direct some remarks toward the proposed amendment.

Let me begin by saying, as I have tried to tell the House before, there comes a time in labour-management disputes when the matters at issue go beyond immediate concerns of that labour dispute and affect the broad public interest. That has been recognized in this House of Commons and in this Parliament of Canada time and time again. It has not been with any relish. Nobody enjoys back to work legislation. At some time Parliament has to accept its responsibility to the general public and introduce legislation.

May I indicate to the House some remarks made by a former Liberal cabinet minister who this very day sits in the House of Commons representing Papineau—Saint-Michel. He said it very well back on October 17, 1978 when he said in this House of Commons:

> Unfortunately, however, there are times and situations when the spirit of compromise and the demonstration of good faith so necessary on the part of all concerned are found wanting. In such circumstances the federal government, as custodian of the economy and protector of the public interest, must assume its responsibility.

That is the very case in which back to work legislation is introduced into the House of Commons—not to anybody's particular desire but as a way to protect the public interest and terminate a labour-management dispute and bring about a settlement.

The question that is posed by the amendment may be: "How do you bring about a settlement?" Obviously, you want to do it in the fairest and most expeditious way possible. The choice of the way in which you do it differs from case to case and from time to time and as the circumstances change. In the particular case, as was explained at the legislative committee, it was thought expeditious to name the chairpersons of the two conciliation boards who would deal with the separate disputes between, on the one hand, the hospital services group, and on the other hand the ships' crews group. That was the purpose of naming the chairpersons of those two conciliation boards, as explained by the minister and by his officials.

If it would serve the purposes of settlement to change that, I am sure there would be a disposition to make that change. But that disposition has to be evidenced, not by members opposite. They represent their constituencies. This is a bargaining situation. We have the Public Service Alliance on the one hand, the Treasury Board on the other. Who speaks for the Public Service Alliance? Not the member from Halifax, not the member from Ottawa West, not the member from Saskatoon—Dundurn. If the officials of the Public Service Alliance of Canada want specific changes made, they can speak in the negotiation that the President of the Treasury Board offered them in this House. Stay at the table and those changes can be negotiated, but not in debate in the House of Commons.

Surely the member from Ottawa West knows that that is not the way you resolve a labour-management dispute. You cannot resolve it on the floor of the House of Commons. It has to be resolved by the parties.

If the members want to serve a useful purpose in the resolution of this labour-management dispute, they should go back to the people they represent and urge them to sit at the table with the appropriate officials of the Public Service Alliance and of the Treasury Board and resolve these matters.

• (1730)

We are here to reflect the will of the parties once that will, that consensus, that agreement is achieved. I do not think, certainly speaking for the President of the Treasury Board, that his concerns are any more than I have stated. If there is a will on behalf of the bargaining parties to come to some agreement, the net agreement can be reflected in the legislation. But if there is no agreement, no meeting of the minds, there is no change that can be made that will advance the resolution of that dispute.

All members have to join in to ensure that this labour-management dispute is resolved as quickly as possible in the public interest, knowing full well that it takes away from the normal collective bargaining process. But we are here because the normal collective bargaining process has failed, just as the former Liberal minister said. There comes a time when it becomes our responsibility as legislators on behalf of all of the people of Canada to resolve the dispute.

Let me talk for a moment about letters and cards. We are getting letters and communications. I received a very sad communication from a lady who wanted to remain anonymous. She said in a conversation with my constituency office that her husband was a member of the ships' crews sailing out of Halifax. She said that there were a lot of men who wanted to be legislated back to work. There was no food on the table. I do not know how many people are represented by this lady. But if there is one woman out there who has no food on the table, then I want to pay attention to her concern. At this stage of the labour dispute it is up to us to exercise our responsibility and get people back to work.

I do not want to exacerbate the problem of safety, but when someone from Saskatoon tells me that there is no problem on the east coast in seas two storeys high, I cannot let that pass; I have to address that subject.

Mr. Fisher: Your own minister said that the response has been terrific.

Mr. Crosby: We have this very day a barge carrying 150 tonnes of light diesel fuel that has broken away from its tow in high waves off the coast of Nova Scotia. We could sit here and do nothing. We could say: "So what? They should not have gone out if they did not have access to safety services". That is not the way I view it and that is not the way the government views it.

Ms. Clancy: You had two years.

Mr. Crosby: There is no point in looking back over the last two years. What mistakes were made are history. We have to deal with realities of this very day, December 13. We dealt with them on December 6. We brought legislation into the House to get workers back to work, to perform the services that people demand from the Government of Canada. We said the negotiations would continue, and they have. They could be going on right at this very moment. The dispute could be resolved. We could know even before voting time that the dispute is resolved, and I hope it is.

However, in the meantime we are exercising the responsibility that we have to exercise as parliamentarians. We know there are difficulties out there, but the resolution will not be aided by amendments in this House of Commons. It will only be aided by the parties getting together and resolving the dispute.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 5, which will also dispose of Motion No. 7.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing order 76(8), the record division stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to Motions Nos. 9, 11, 12 and 14.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn) moved:

Motion No. 9.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 5 the following:

"(b) all matters relating to the Human Rights Tribunal order concerning equal pay for work of equal value for this group rendered on July 15, 1987;".

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West) moved:

Motion No. 11.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 17 at page 5 the following:

"(b) all wage matters relating to equal pay for work of equal value;".

Motion No. 12.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 10 by adding immediately after line 42 at page 5 the following:

"(3) Nothing in this section shall be construed as derogating from the rights of the employees under the Canadian Human Rights Act."

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn) moved:

Motion No. 14.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 11 by adding immediately after line 8 at page 6 the following:

"including implementation of the Human Rights tribunal order referred to in paragraph 10(1)(b)."

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is one item that I would like to touch upon just before I get into the essence of this motion. I would certainly like to set the record straight. If the member who just spoke was referring to me as being the person from Saskatoon who has no interest in what goes on on the east coast, I would like to assure him that indeed I do. Having lived on the west coast for a considerable period of time, I am familiar with the oceans and seafaring. I can assure the hon. member it is the government itself that has said the response of those people has been exemplary. The parliamentary secretary is playing with words and using the situation to try to alienate people, and he is not being successful.

The motion we have before us at the moment goes to the very heart of what this dispute is about, particularly for the hospital services people. We know from the debate which has gone on this afternoon that the Canadian Human Rights Commission made a decision long ago that the hospital services people should be paid at the same rate as the general services people. The decision was made on the basis that the HS group was primarily women and that there was a discriminatory action being taken by the government in not paying them equally.

This motion would put into place the provisions whereby this inequity can be addressed in this round of negotiations so that we do not have to wait for some long drawn out process. It escapes me entirely why the government is so insistent on drawing it out, other than the fact that it is reluctant to expend this money, I suppose. Maybe that is it.

The Conservatives have not said it yet. This is about the only piece of legislation in the last year where they have not made reference to the deficit. Perhaps they expect to recover from the deficit at the expense of these people. Considering what they have done to them already, I suggest that maybe that is the case.

That is the heart of the matter. It is a mystery to me why the Canadian government at any stage, whether the Liberals before this government or this government since it has come into office, would drag a situation out so long. Why would they not include those equalization payments as part of wages so that they can be included in these people's pensions? Why they will not do it within this legislation and get on with it is a mystery to me.

There are a couple of other things that ought to be referred to but which time is not going to permit us to debate at any great length, and that is a motion which refers to the length of the contract. It is doubtful whether we will get a chance to debate it this afternoon. It is important that when the legislation is passed—and I know the government is going to vote against it, but I would hope that the conciliator would take note of it—to make sure that the lengths of the contract do not extend beyond the present length of the contract of the Public Service Alliance of Canada general agreement.

In addition, there is reference in the legislation to liability in cases of non-compliance. We are suggesting that if government members are going to include reference to the union in that clause, they ought to be making reference to the employer which of course is themselves. The government ought to be making reference to agents of the employer. I do recognize that in its most definitive sense what we are really referring to is the Queen. It is rather doubtful whether or not if the government were to be non-compliant we would be wanting to incarcerate the Queen. Certainly not.

• (1740)

There ought to be references to the employer. Having referred to those two issues in addition to the very essential one of affirmative action, the government ought to stop dithering around, get down to work, and negotiate with these employees in good faith. It has been demonstrated since 1981 that it has not been doing this. Certainly it has been demonstrated in the last two years that it has not been doing it. It is a little late, but I would suggest that the government ought to be doing that and doing it now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Halifax West on a point of order.

Mr. Crosby: The amendment was proposed by my hon. friend who has just spoken, Mr. Speaker. I think it would be appropriate for the government to respond to that specific amendment in the interests of the debate, but I will be governed by your wishes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That really is the way it should be done. There are still a few minutes left, and I am sure the hon. member for Halifax West will split the time with the hon. member for Ottawa West.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, we have a group of motions before us, some of which were moved by the hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn and some of which were moved by myself. I presume I can speak to my own motion before its is responded to rather than after.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Ottawa West has the floor. The hon. member for Halifax West.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I would like to get the ground rules straight. I thought we would divide the time equally. Of course, if the members are not interested in what the government has to say about pay equity, it once again demonstrates that they are not interested in the realities of this dispute: pay equity, equality of pay; they are just posturing in an attempt to appeal to somebody outside this chamber.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, obviously I am going to have to speak extremely quickly. This group of motions before us is at the heart of both these strikes. It has to do with pay equity.

The government should have dealt fairly with the issue of pay equity with basic human decency, with the basic right of people to be paid a fair wage for the work they do equal to anybody else doing work of equal value. It has had over two years to do that. This strike of the hospital service workers would not be happening, and there is a very good chance that the strike of the ships' crew workers would never have happened.

This government is paralysed with fear to have a conciliation board deal with the issue of pay equity. I have a letter from the minister responsible for the Treasury Board which states that the adjustment of wages to meet equal pay for work of equal value can only happen in negotiations. It cannot happen through the Human Rights Commission, and the minister responsible for the status of women knows it.

This week we commemorated the passing of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights. We are trampling on human rights with this legislation. We are trampling on human rights with the way these workers have been treated for the last two years. The minister responsible for the status of women sits there as if this is a matter of no concern to her.

We have talked about violence against women for a week. We have been shocked by the implications of what we have seen happen in Montreal. We have seen a consciousness raising among both women and men like I have never seen happen before in a short period of time. Violence against women takes many forms. One of the most pernicious, damaging and dangerous violences against women and as a result against their children and their families is economic violence. We know that women are underpaid for the work they do and now this government wants to perpetuate that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to Order made Tuesday, December 12, 1989, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the bill now before the House.

The question is on Motion No. 9. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 14. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 15.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): moved:

Motion No. 15.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 11 by striking out lines 14 to 16 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall not be earlier than December 21, 1990 or later than June 21, 1991, in the case of the agreements referred to in paragraph 10(1)(a) or not earlier than December 30, 1990 or later than June 30, 1991 in".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 17.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West) moved:

Motion No. 17.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 14 by striking out lines 9 to 20 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"14. (1) Subject to subsection (2), an individual who contravenes any provision of this Act is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable, for each day or part thereof during which the offence continues, to a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $1,000.

(2) Where an individual contravenes any provision of this Act while acting in the capacity of an officer or representative of the employer or the bargaining agent, the individual is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable, for each day or part thereof during which the offence continues, to a fine of not less than $10,000 nor more than $50,000."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76 (8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The next question is on Motion No. 18.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West) moved:

Motion No. 18.

That Bill C-49 be amended in Clause 14 by striking out line 21 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Where the employer or the bargaining agent contra-".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Call in the members.

And the division bells having rung:

• (1805)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is agreement on Motion No. 1. It will be adopted and there will be no recorded division on Motion No. 1.

Therefore, I declare Motions Nos. 1, 4, 8, 13 and 16 carried.

Motions Nos. 1, 4, 8, 13 and 16 agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 2.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 148)

YEAS

Members

Allmand	Althouse
Angus	Assad
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)	Bélair
Bellemare	Benjamin
Berger	Bevilacqua
Black	Blackburn (Brant)
Blaikie	Blondin
Boudria	Butland
Caccia	Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall	Clancy
Crawford	de Jong
Dionne	Duhamel
Ferguson	Finestone
Fisher	Fontana
Foster	Gagliano
Gauthier	Guarnieri
Harvard	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hunter	Kaplan
Karpoff	Keyes
Kristiansen	Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)	Laporte
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	Lee
MacLellan	Manley
Marchi	McCurdy
McLaughlin	Mifflin
Milliken	Mitchell
Murphy	Nault
Nunziata	Nystrom
Pagtakhan	Parent
Parker	Peterson
Phinney	Pickard
Proud	Prud'homme
Riis	Robichaud
Robinson	Rodriguez
Rompkey	Simmons
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)	Speller
Stupich	Taylor
Tobin	Vanclief
Walker	Wappel
Whittaker	Wood
Young (Gloucester)	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—82

NAYS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Belsher
Bernier	Bertrand
Bird	Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Bosley
Bouchard (Roberval)	Brightwell
Browes	Cadieux
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)	Cardiff
Casey	Chadwick
Champagne (Champlain)	Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)	Cole
Collins	Cook
Cooper	Côté
Crosby (Halifax West)	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret
Della Noce	Desjardins
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Edwards
Epp	Fee
Feltham	Ferland
Fontaine	Fretz
Friesen	Gérin
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene	Grey (Beaver River)
Guilbault	Gustafson
Halliday	Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes	Hicks
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Horning
Hughes	James
Jelinek	Johnson
Jourdenais	Kempling
Koury	Landry
Langlois	Layton
Littlechild	Loiselle
Lopez	MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)	MacKay
Malone	Marin
Martin (Lincoln)	Masse
Mayer	Mazankowski
McCreath	McDermid
McDougall (St. Paul's)	McKnight
Merrithew	Monteith
Moore	Nicholson
Oberle	O'Kurley
Plamondon	Plourde
Porter	Pronovost
Redway	Reimer
Ricard	Richardson
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields	Siddon
Sobeski	Sparrow

Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—133

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. The hon. member for Churchill on a point of order.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I think you will find that there is agreement among the parties to count that vote against all the other deferred votes from this afternoon on the assumption on the final vote on report stage would be reversed.

Miss Grey: In the interest of saving time I would like it recorded that on Motion Nos. 5 and 7 which are grouped together and Motion No. 17, I would like my vote registered in the affirmative and then to concur at the report stage with Bill C–49, voting yes with the government.

• (1820)

Mrs. Gaffney: Mr. Speaker, had I been here for the last vote, I would have voted with the yeas, and any other votes I will vote in that manner.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 5.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 149)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria
Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches —Woodbine)—84

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault

Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—132
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Winegard

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. I therefore declare Motion No. 7 lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 9.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 150)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria
Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83
Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard
Bosley
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Grey (Beaver River)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—133

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. I therefore declare Motions Nos. 11 and 12 lost.

The next question is on Motion No. 14.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Government Orders

(Division No. 151)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria
Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83

Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Grey (Beaver River)

Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Winegard

Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—133

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 15.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 152)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria
Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy

Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marchi
McLaughlin

Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83

Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Grey (Beaver River)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker

Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard

Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—133

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 17.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 153)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria
Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches —Woodbine)—84

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Brightwell

Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—132

Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Winegard

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost. The next question is on Motion No. 18.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 154)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria

Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland

Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83

Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

NAYS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)

Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Grey (Beaver River)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse

Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—133

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. de Cotret moved that the bill, as amended, be concurred in.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 155)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Atkinson
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Bouchard (Roberval)
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Crosby (Halifax West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Dobbie
Dorin
Epp
Feltham
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Guilbault
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Holtmann
Hughes
Jelinek
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Littlechild
Andre
Attewell
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Bosley
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Cole
Cook
Côté
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Domm
Edwards
Fee
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Grey (Beaver River)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Horning
James
Johnson
Kempling
Landry
Layton
Loiselle
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
Mayer
McCreath
McDougall (St. Paul's)
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vincent
Wenman
Wilbee
Assiniboia)
Winegard
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
Mazankowski
McDermid
McKnight
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plourde
Pronovost
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vien
Weiner
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—133

NAYS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bellemare
Berger
Black
Blaikie
Boudria
Caccia
Catterall
Crawford
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Foster
Gagliano
Guarnieri
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Kaplan
Keyes
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
Manley
McCurdy
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Parent
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Robichaud
Rodriguez
Simmons
Speller
Taylor
Vanclief
Wappel
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—83 *ediv
Althouse
Assad
Bélair
Benjamin
Bevilacqua
Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
de Jong
Duhamel
Finestone
Fontana
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harvard
Hunter
Karpoff
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacLellan
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Pagtakhan
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Riis
Robinson
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stupich
Tobin
Walker
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

It being 6.23 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, December 14, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp that Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: It being 11 a.m., pursuant to Order made Tuesday, December 12, 1989, the House will proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources for the third reading of Bill C-23, an act to amend the National Energy Board Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 156)

YEAS

Members

Anderson
Andre
Atkinson
Attewell
Beatty
Belsher
Bird
Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bosley
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Brightwell
Browes
Cadieux
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff
Casey
Chadwick
Champagne (Champlain)
Charest
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Cole
Collins
Cook
Cooper
Corbeil
Corbett
Côté
Couture
Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling
DeBlois
de Cotret
Della Noce
Desjardins
Dick
Dobbie
Domm
Dorin
Duplessis
Edwards
Epp
Fee
Feltham
Ferland
Fontaine
Fretz
Friesen
Gérin
Gibeau
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene
Guilbault
Gustafson
Halliday
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hawkes
Hockin
Hogue
Holtmann
Horning
Hudon
Hughes
Jacques
James
Jelinek
Johnson
Jourdenais
Kempling
Koury
Landry
Langlois
Layton
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis
Littlechild
Loiselle
Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Marin
Martin (Lincoln)
Masse
Mazankowski
McCreath
McDermid
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McKnight
Merrithew
Monteith
Moore
Nicholson
Nowlan
Oberle
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Plourde
Porter
Pronovost
Redway
Reimer
Ricard
Richardson
Robitaille
Roy-Arcelin
St-Julien
Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields
Siddon
Sobeski
Sparrow
Stevenson
Tardif
Têtreault
Thacker
Thompson
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle
Vézina
Vien
Vincent
Weiner
Wenman
White
Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Winegard
Worthy—140

NAYS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bélair
Black
Blaikie
Blondin
Boudria
Butland
Caccia
Callbeck
Campbell (South West Nova)
Catterall
Clancy
Crawford
de Jong
Duhamel
Ferguson
Flis
Fontana
Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)
Grey (Beaver River)
Guarnieri
Harb
Harvard
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins
Hunter
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Kristiansen
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)

Lee	MacAulay
MacLellan	Manley
Marchi	McCurdy
McGuire	Milliken
Mills	Murphy
Nault	Nystrom
Ouellet	Pagtakhan
Parker	Peterson
Proud	Rideout
Riis	Robichaud
Rocheleau	Rodriguez
Stewart	Stupich
Vanclief	Volpe
Wappel	Whittaker
Wood—65

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I noticed during the vote today the hon. member from Davenport came half-dressed. I wonder if the hon. member would consider doing the honourable thing and withdrawing his vote, or else going to borrow a tie from Herb Gray.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think most members are aware of the way members should dress in the House. It is stated quite clearly in Beauchesne's that the dress of members should be conservative, contemporary dress. That is the rule.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It does happen, when we have votes, that members may come in at the last second and may not technically fit the criteria set out in Beauchesne's. It is for that reason that in the past we have allowed those members their voting privileges. However, if the time came for the member to speak in the House then the decision of the Chair could be different.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

• (1140)

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[Translation]

REGULATORY AFFAIRS

TABLING OF THE FEDERAL REGULATORY PLAN 1990

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 32(2), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, copies of the Federal Regulatory Plan 1990.

* * *

NATIONAL BLOOD SUPPLY SYSTEM

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have one of the best health care systems in the world. The national blood supply program is a vital component of this system. Canadians give blood generously, and tens of thousands of lives are saved thanks to these blood donations and the products derived from that blood.

For decades, our national blood supply has been a key component of Canada's public health policy and practice. The public must be able to have confidence in the system.

Thanks to new technologies and our bank of donors, Canada has one of the safest blood supplies in the world.

In fact, never at any time in our history has our blood supply been as safe as it is today.

[English]

There is absolutely no risk of contracting AIDS by donating blood, and less than one chance in a million of contracting AIDS from the blood supply or from blood products. Each and every unit of blood is thoroughly tested by the Canadian Red Cross Society for HIV and for other blood-borne infections.

For a short while in the early 1980s the blood supply in many countries, including Canada, was contaminated by the AIDS virus. Scientists and governments banded together in an immense and successful effort to restore its purity. We developed methods of identifying the virus and treating blood which justify our confidence in the safety of today's blood system.

Before these measures were developed some people who received blood transfusions or who needed blood products to manage blood disorders such as haemophilia were infected with the virus which causes AIDS.

The Canadian Haemophilia Society and a small group of blood transfusion recipients asked the federal government for financial assistance for those who were affected. We have had many meetings with the CHS. I have been very impressed with the tireless efforts of the president of the Canadian Haemophilia Society, Elaine Woloschuk. I would like to thank her and her team for all of the work which they have done on behalf of their membership.

I am pleased to announce that the Government of Canada will provide $120,000 in assistance to each of the approximately 1,250 Canadians who became infected with the AIDS virus through blood transfusions or blood products in this country.

This tax-free sum will be paid in four equal annual instalments beginning next April. The plan will apply in full measure to those who are currently living with AIDS, as well as to the estates of those who have died.

Full details will be provided to potential recipients within a month. Every effort will be made before next April to ensure that their entitlement is established in a prompt manner while protecting rights of privacy and security.

I would like to assure the House that the funding that I am announcing today is over and above the money that we have already earmarked for AIDS. It will not be taken from other programs to provide assistance to people living with AIDS.

[Translation]

The measures announced today should not be considered as a compensation plan. Our decision was not dictated by a fear of legal liability. In any case, no amount of money could ever compensate for the loss suffered by a person infected by AIDS.

My colleagues and I have looked for a fair and equitable solution that acknowledges the fact that haemophiliacs, most of whom are unable to obtain life insurance, must be given special assistance, above and beyond our universal health insurance and social security programs. We have looked for a way to help a group of Canadians who do not have insurance and who in most cases are the family's bread winner.

Canada is not alone in taking this kind of action. Governments of other countries are helping people who were infected by blood products.

[English]

Our goal is twofold, to ensure that public confidence in our blood supply system remains high; and to provide a form of disaster relief to Canadians who are facing extraordinary hardship.

I have discussed the federal government's position on this issue with provincial Ministers of Health. Together we have reviewed the unique circumstances, particularly of haemophiliacs who have produced so urgent and tragic a problem.

We have also discussed the concern of both levels of government for maintaining the integrity of Canada's blood supply system. Doing so depends upon public support, technological, medical and scientific excellence, and when extraordinary circumstances arise, a willingness to respond with understanding.

I have received expressions of support for this assistance from many Canadians including from many members of Parliament. In turn I urge all those Canadians whose gifts of blood have been gifts of life for many to please continue to give blood. We have a system that is safe and we need their support to make it effective.

I would like to close my remarks today by saying a few words about other discussions currently taking place. As the House will know, we have received representations from the parents of vaccine damaged children. In some ways their situation is similar. Promoting public health in Canada requires encouraging parents to have their children vaccinated. Even though we know that, in some unpredictable cases, children will have a severe reaction to the vaccine.

Not encouraging vaccinations, however, would lead to a much higher incidence of sickness and death. The government has discussed this issue with provincial governments over the past several months. I hope that we will be able to work co-operatively with the provinces to meet some of the concerns of those families and to ensure that public willingness to have their children vaccinated remains high.

As well, my officials have been discussing the report of the Thalidomide Task Force which we received earlier this year. Thalidomide victims have asked that they be considered separately, and our study of their needs is ongoing.

I have been heartened by the compassion that Canadians continue to show to those who are in need, who will continue to work diligently so that all of us can feel justifiably proud to live in a country that cares for those who are less fortunate.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, persons with haemophilia who have contracted the deadly disease AIDS by relying on our Canadian blood banking system in the past were victims of a national medical catastrophe. The government has announced today assistance for them which is, indeed, welcome. But I wonder whether in fact it is enough.

The Canadian Haemophilia Society had asked on behalf of the victims for three times as much assistance as the government announced today. I would like to ask the government during this Christmas period why only about a third of the society's request has been granted. I would like the hon. minister to account for that discrepancy.

The reasons that assistance is warranted for this group of patients are of course that most haemophilia patients, by the very nature of this disease, are uninsured and hence are not eligible for disability insurance. Also, they had and they continue to incur out of pocket medical costs. For these two fundamental reasons the assistance requested by them and given by the government is truly welcome at this point. But the Canadian Haemophilia Society had asked for $340 million for about 1,000 victims. Thus we see the inadequacy of the assistance announced today.

• (1150)

The other point I would like to make is that it took almost a year to respond, and it will still take some months for it to be effective. I wonder why it does not start today upon the announcement.

Another point is in relation to the time frame of notification. If a victim does not apply to the government within a year, perhaps the privilege will be waived. I would like the government to consider that should there be haemophilia AIDS patients who are unable to apply within the year, special consideration be given to them even if cases emerge after the end of the year.

On the question of whether this particular announcement by the government would be a prelude to a policy of compassion for victims of failed public policy, that I would like to see established indeed. I would welcome it. We should compensate parents of vaccine damaged children and compensate thalidomide victims. This ought indeed to be a policy of government—if I might paraphrase the Minister for Health—if he would like to have the confidence of the public to follow our national public health policy.

In conclusion, I welcome this announcement although I feel it is not quite adequate. Any government of the day has a moral responsibility to assist victims of national health policy. The story for AIDS victims is not yet complete. The Government of Canada must take steps to alleviate the suffering of all individuals who become victims of this disease. It would then be consistent with our philosophy of universal health care that all people with diseases, as with AIDS, deserve similar assistance.

I urge the government to develop more quickly a comprehensive strategy on how to help all people with AIDS since only such a comprehensive national strategy will lead to the development of a unified and more effective national response to the AIDS/HIV epidemic, a response which will ensure access to drugs and treatment for all people with AIDS.

Again, I welcome this announcement. I had hoped that it would be more, but in the spirit of Christmas, we give credit as well.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I also rise to support the government's announcement today of financial compensation for those users of Canada's blood supply who contract AIDS, or become infected with HIV. In the words of the Canadian Haemophilia Society, this is an horrendous medical catastrophe, a colossal failure of the country's blood supply system. By failing to adequately screen the national blood supply system after it became clear that some blood products were contaminated with HIV, and the failure to recall potentially harmful blood products, the government is responsible for part of this tragedy. It is only right that it has moved to compensate the innocent victims.

I note that this announcement today has only come after intense effort by the Canadian Haemophilia Society over 18 months, and after the Royal Society of Canada recommended last year that the government compensate persons infected through the blood supply system.

Now that the government has finally moved to help these people, there is an opportunity for them to finally act to prevent the spread of AIDS through the general population. I note that the total compensation offered to those persons infected through the blood supply system is greater than the entire budget allocated to the fight against AIDS.

Mr. Beatty: Wrong!

Mr. Axworthy: It seems likely that it was only the possibility of legal liability that encouraged the government to compensate those infected through the blood supply system. Other persons with AIDS, those infected with HIV, and those who will be infected in the future have only a moral and compassionate claim on this government. We have seen how reluctant the government is to act when it is not forced to do so. The Minister of Health has said in the past that he is very concerned about the spread of AIDS, for the plight of the 3,272 persons with AIDS and the approximately 30,000 to 50,000 persons infected with HIV. Yet this often repeated concern has not meant any action to date. It is negligent of this government to continue to stall while new cases of infection are reported each day.

There must be an immediate and national preventive education program. There must be palliative programs to assist persons with AIDS, as this government has already admitted through its announced assistance today the enormous personal and financial cost endured by persons with AIDS, their families and friends.

The minister has pledged that he will not allow AIDS to destroy the human spirit. Perhaps the time will not be too far away before he also sees fit to act to prevent AIDS from destroying ever greater numbers of human lives.

Steps must be taken to alleviate the hardship of old people infected with HIV or with AIDS. The federal government and its provincial counterparts must bear the responsibility for not acting sooner to instigate adequate education and prevention programs. Everyone with HIV or AIDS deserves the same sort of assistance which the minister has announced today for those contracting AIDS from the national blood supply system. Canada does not have adequate social and health facilities for dealing with HIV and AIDS and this situation should have been addressed a long time ago.

The federal government must act with urgency to ensure the adoption of an effective and adequately funded national AIDS strategy. While the announcement today is a welcome one, more is required than a piecemeal approach. It is the government's responsibility and that of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to address the concerns of all of the 3,272 people with AIDS and the estimated 20,000 to 50,000 people infected with HIV.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there remain the other claims on the government, as the minister has mentioned, vaccine-damaged people and the tragic thalidomide victims. If we are to maintain an effective universal vaccine program, it is essential that those harmed by the vaccine be compensated by government, given their difficulty obtaining compensation through the courts.

Likewise, the government bears a special responsibility to those harmed by the drug thalidomide. Their claims are based on strong moral grounds, including the gross failure of the drug approval process which led to government acceptance of a dangerous drug, and the past promise of the Government of Canada to help those harmed by the drug.

I welcome this announcement, Mr. Speaker, but as I have indicated much more needs to be done, and I urge the minister to quickly settle those other outstanding claims on a fair and just basis.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-53, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (arson).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-54, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (joinder of counts).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CUSTOMS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (for Mr. Jelinek) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Customs Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Translation]

PETITIONS

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to present a petition from young students at the Charles-Rodrigue School in Lévis.

The purpose of this petition is to send an important message to our legislators about the environment, the ozone layer, the greenhouse effect and acid rain.

I would like to pay special tribute to students Marie-Ève Préau and Julie-Anne Vien who helped to promote this petition. Mr. Speaker, I may add that the message sent to us by students of the Charles-Rodrigue School is supported by their teachers and all the people responsible for transmitting to our young students a collective awareness that must be translated here by our legislators into concrete measures to protect our environment.

• (1200)

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today, under Standing Order 36, to present a petition signed by the residents of southwestern Ontario objecting to the government's goods and services tax.

PORNOGRAPHY

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I also have two petitions duly certified by the clerk of petitions to present on behalf of the constituents of Lambton—Middlesex to the House of Commons.

The constituents are very concerned about the impact of pornography on the outlook and views of our children. They are concerned specifically that obscenity involving children is degrading and harmful to the human mind, and also that organized crime is usually the beneficiary of the proceeds that this bleeds from the economy.

I present these petitions on behalf of these constituents in my area who are concerned about the level of pornography in the country.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 and certified correct by the clerk of petitions.

It is from a number of constituents from Brampton who are very concerned about the government's intentions regarding the 7 per cent goods and services tax. They point out that it is a very regressive tax in that it hits the low and middle income earners the hardest.

They also point out that Canadians, as we all know, are not only overtaxed but that the tax system is discriminatory, unfair and biased in favour of upper income earners and large profitable corporations.

They also draw our attention to the fact that over 60,000 large profitable corporations do not pay any income tax at all and therefore obviously our tax system needs to be improved and made more fair, just and equitable.

They go on with a whole page of concerns that point out why this is wrong-headed, why the government has misread the people of Canada, that over 80 per cent of Canadians have indicated clearly that they oppose the tax, that this tax will particularly hit the regions of Canada, and that with the news of the last few days regarding the thousands of people who have lost their jobs in Atlantic Canada this 7 per cent tax on most of the goods and services which they utilize will simply be a cruel and a brutal tax.

In summary, the petitioners are simply asking the House of Commons to do whatever we can to bring the government to its senses to abolish and abandon its plans to implement such a cruel, brutal tax on the people of Canada.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition from 25 of my constituents who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the pre-born child without distinction as to the stage of development.

EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have a second petition to present pursuant to Standing Order 36. It contains 97 signatures of petitioners who call upon Parliament to revise the laws of Canada relating to extradition to allow the Justice Minister of Canada to order the extradition of alleged or convicted criminals at any time after their apprehension in Canada, even during their period of incarceration for crimes committed in Canada.

These 97 constituents represent over 100,000 names that have been presented here in the last three months.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by people from Surrey, B.C. who are calling upon Parliament to introduce legislation that will effectively protect the life of the pre-born child without distinction as to the stage of development.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON TAX BENEFITS FOR ISOLATED AND NOTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am today tabling five petitions which reject the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Isolated and Northern Areas.

The signers representing the isolated community of Lebel-sur-Quévillon in Abitibi are concerned about the recommendations of this unfinished report.

Mr. Speaker, the final report of this task force makes no mention of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement and of the inquiry into regional disparities of isolated posts by the Quebec Government in October 1989.

[English]

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, signed by 161 people most of whom live in the riding of Durham, in the Bowmanville area of the town of Newcastle.

The petitioners call on the government to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of a pre-born child without distinction as to the stage of development.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I stand in this House once again to call on the government to come to its senses with respect to the way it is taxing the people of Canada and its concept of a goods and services tax.

The words on the petition express the very sincere worry of Canadians across this land that they are not going to have any disposable moneys, that they are not going to be able to make this economy work. Since September 1984, this Conservative federal government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers at least 31 new taxes and tax increases. Since 1984, the federal sales tax, which we have called the silent killer of jobs so many times in this House, has been increased from 9 per cent to 13.5 per cent. Now they want to put it back to 9 per cent and tell us that they are giving us a gift.

The Conservative federal government wants to impose a new federal goods and services tax. Whether it is 9 per cent, 7 per cent, or any per cent, the public does not want it. Obviously this government cannot hear or does not care to listen. This new tax will be hidden, irrespective of what this government says that it will be an open and well understood tax.

It will apply virtually to everything they buy. The imposition of this new goods and services tax will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle income Canadians. There is not enough money in what it is proposing to enable people to buy fairly and evenly across this land. The imposition of this tax will create onerous burdens on small business.

I would suggest that in the name of those Canadians from the Mount Royal riding who have called on me to oppose strongly in their name this new goods and services tax which is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians and will hit them not only with higher taxes but with higher inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment. I think this government does not realize what it is doing.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the privilege of presenting a number of petitions this morning which have been certified correct as to form. They all relate to the goods and services tax, that abominable tax proposed by the Conservative government. I would like to cite one petition, in particular.

This particular petition is on behalf of private music teachers in my Province of Manitoba. It specifically mentions that the taxation of these private lessons would impose a financial burden on the parents and students involved. They would be required to pay such a tax on a weekly basis for at least nine months of the year and often for more than one member of a family.

They ask all of us who are members of this House to reject, and soundly reject, this goods and services tax.

• (1210)

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth—Wellington—Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition under Standing Order 36 from people in the town of St. Mary's concerning figure skating. They plead that we consider instruction in skating as an educational service and therefore exempt skating educational expenses from the proposed goods and services tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to present two sets of petitions to the House this afternoon. Both have been certified correct according to Standing Order 36.

I have a petition here that has been signed by residents of the London—Kitchener, Ontario area; Melville, Saskatchewan; Yorkton, Saskatchewan; a number of other places in western Canada, Prince Albert, for example; and Ottawa.

These Canadians are very concerned about the government's plan to drastically reduce VIA Rail services. They call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail services in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid economic, safe, convenient, environmentally sound, and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I also have a group of petitions signed by 232 residents of the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan, primarily the community of Thunder Bay but also from Upsala. These petitions have been circulated by merchants in the community who are concerned about the goods and services tax: Intercom Supply, Michael's Hair

Design, Galaxy Lanes, Superior Cartage, Peran's Music, Hugh Wilson's Body Shop, G&G Esso in Upsala, and Aesthetics by Linda.

They all collectively call upon Parliament to reject the goods and services tax at any per cent.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 36 to present petitions on behalf of my constituents.

These petitions are signed by over 200 people who live in New Westminster and Burnaby, British Columbia. They are very upset about the goods and services tax.

They call upon this Parliament to reject the proposal for a goods and services tax. They say that the tax is a very regressive tax, that it will hurt mostly people in middle and lower incomes, and that the wealthy will pay the same tax on a pair of shoes as the poor will pay on a pair of shoes. They are upset about that.

They call on this government to withdraw the tax and to bring in fair taxation for Canadians.

ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present a petition to the House of Commons today. This petition is called "Help Save the Rouge".

This is an extremely important issue that the petitioners are presenting to Parliament and that I have the privilege of presenting. We are talking about 5,000 acres of land in metro Toronto that is presently in a wilderness state, presently in its natural beauty, and we want to protect it. The threats to it are a metro Toronto garbage dump in the Rouge Valley or a 12-lane freeway up through the valley.

The petitioners are outraged. The citizens of Scarborough are outraged with this kind of thinking. Right across Canada the people are concerned about this. We are most encouraged today to see that the federal Minister of the Environment has made a commitment to quadruple by the year 2000 the national park land. This is most encouraging to the petitioners.

The Minister of the Environment has toured the Rouge Valley. This government has committed $10 million to save the Rouge Valley. The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to work with the provincial government. The Canadian people own the land through the provincial government, and they want the Government of Canada to work with the provincial government to establish this area as Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 with a petition signed by some 63 persons from the communities of Revelstoke, Nelson, South Slocan, and the other B.C. communities of Golden and Salmon Arm.

The petitioners are upset that the federal government is getting its hands even deeper in their pockets and is now trying to tax reading, haircuts, diapers, coffins and home heating fuels, among other commodities.

The petitioners also call upon Parliament to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, and to ensure that if and when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

That is perhaps too much to ask, but the petitioners are upset in any event.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise with two petitions today that have both been certified under Standing Order 36.

The first is in objection to the goods and services tax from people who live in Coquitlam, Port Coquitlam, Pitt Meadows, Mission, and Maple Ridge. They feel very strongly that the suggested goods and services tax will not only affect them as individuals but will dramatically affect the financial viability of the community. The reason for that of course is the impact that the goods and services tax will have not only on small business in the community but on the municipal infrastructure.

RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the second set of petitions that I have come from Surrey, Vancouver, my riding of Mission—Coquitlam, as well as Alberta and Ontario.

The petitioners are asking Parliament to support Private Members' Motion No. 254 regarding children's rights and are calling on the government to negotiate with the provinces to provide a comprehensive bill of rights for children in Canada.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): The last for petitions but I am sure the first in the heart of the Speaker.

It is my pleasure today to stand and present 13 petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36, with 1,954 names from various places in my riding, such as Naramata, Kaleden, Princeton, Rock Creek, Bridesville, Okanagan Falls, Keremeos, Hedley, Oliver, Osoyoos, Christina Lake and Penticton.

The petitioners are upset with the goods and services tax as proposed by the government. They are asking Parliament to reject the current proposal for the goods and services tax, to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, to ensure that if and when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab, and, finally, to cause the government to cease with a proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, one month from tomorrow the policy announced by the government to scupper our national rail system will take effect and the VIA cut-backs announced by the Minister of Transport some time ago will go into effect to the great dismay of thousands of Canadians from coast to coast, indeed millions of Canadians.

I have a petition signed by some of the people who are so concerned and upset about this bad decision on the part of the government.

The petitioners are residents of the riding of Kingston and the Islands. They went to the time and trouble to sign a petition to call upon this Parliament to urge the government not to cancel in whole or in part rail passenger service in Canada.

I note that the petition was signed before the disastrous government decision was announced, and I know, if these people could be approached again to ask their views of the decision that the government announced, there would be even a stronger objection than that contained in the petition.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to advise the House on behalf of the deputy House leader that all questions should be allowed to stand.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has received notice of an application under Standing Order 52 from the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

The Chair has also received notice of a question of privilege from the hon. member for Ottawa South.

* * *

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to move a motion that the House adjourn to discuss a matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the dire consequences facing thousands of families in Atlantic Canada's fishing communities as a result of recent and anticipated fish plant closings in the Atlantic fishery, and the urgent need for government action to deal with this crisis in Atlantic Canada.

• (1220)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The matter raised by the member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso is no doubt a most serious and important matter. For that reason I will consider it before giving a decision, which I would intend to give at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

COMMENTS BY MINISTER

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I gave notice yesterday to the Chair of my intention to raise a question of privilege arising from a series of questions and answers given in the House last week with respect to the proposals of the government to apply a special tax to old age pensions and to family allowance benefits under Bill C-28.

If I might very quickly refer to that series of questions and answers, I think the question of privilege will become apparent. I should also advise the Chair that my intention to raise this matter was indicated to the office of the Minister of State for Privatization yesterday afternoon as well.

The first question and answer occurred on Tuesday, December 5, 1989, in a question directed to the Minister of Finance concerning the clawback tax. He responded by quoting from a document given to him in February 1989 by One Voice, which is a group representative of seniors in Canada. He quoted from that document at page 6509 of Hansard.

The context of his quotation indicated that the One Voice seniors network supported the proposed clawback measure, and in response to that implication from the quotation One Voice issued a press release on December 6, 1989, in which they stated that the Minister of Finance had "twisted their words", to use the wording of the press release, and I quote from it:

> Mr. Wilson invited us to consult on the budget while it was in preparation. At that meeting he specifically promised us he would not touch social programs but then he went ahead and proposed this awful clawback. That was a real betrayal. But now he is taking our own words out of the context of our brief to make it look as though we agree with the clawback. This simply is not what we said. Mr. Wilson has aggravated the anger and mistrust seniors are already feeling.

In light of that press release I raised the question in Question Period on December 7. In the absence of the Minister of Finance, the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs rose to reply to the question. He said at page 6615 of Hansard, and I quote:

> In the pre-budget consultations which the Minister of Finance had with various interested groups, Mrs. Woodsworth was there.

Mrs. Woodsworth being the president of One Voice. The quotation continues:

> And I want to quote exactly what she said as part of the presentation that was made to the Minister of Finance. She said, "We agree with the Economic Council that people with over $50,000 of income should have their OAS taxed back."

He went on in answering a supplementary to that question, again at page 6615 of Hansard, and I quote:

> It is very plain exactly what Mrs. Woodsworth who was representing that group said. She said it and I will read it to you again. I will do so slowly, "We agree with the Economic Council that people with over $50,000 of income should have their OAS taxed back."

I might note that there was a touch of sarcasm at the time that that second quotation was read.

This matter was raised on a point of order as you will recall, Mr. Speaker, on Friday when I asked that the minister table the document from which he was reading. He said, and I quote, on page 6671 of Hansard:

> I was not quoting from a document yesterday. I was quoting from one-page notes that I had in front of me.

He therefore refused to table anything.

On December 11, the One Voice, the Canadian seniors' network—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member raises a question of privilege which the member obviously has a right to do. The Chair would like to know as soon as possible where the member believes his own privileges have been breached. What the member has raised may be an important matter for the member and may be a question of debate, but so far I must indicate to the member that I do not see at all how the member's privileges have been breached. Could the member please address that question?

Mr. Manley: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am concerned very much with the privileges of the House. I think these become apparent.

There are two issues of privilege here. The first emerges clearly in the letter from One Voice to the minister dated December 11. I will quote from that letter:

"During Question Period on December 7, 1989 you made reference to a pre-budget consultation meeting between representatives of One Voice and other national seniors' organizations and the Hon. Michael Wilson, Minister of Finance. The meeting took place February 28, 1989".

"In response to Mr. John Manley, Ottawa South, in the House of Commons you quoted me as saying at that consultation: 'We agree with the Economic Council that people with over $50,000 of income should have their OAS taxed back' ".

"It has been the consistent position of One Voice that the clawback is a serious threat to universality of Canada's social benefit programs and we have never supported the measure. I know that I personally never made such a comment".

"We have contacted the Economic Council of Canada and they have been unable to locate any report which makes a reference to the clawback or the $50,000 threshold. What concerns us more is that the clawback was not announced until the budget was released in April. We wonder how discussion of the clawback or the $50,000 threshold could have taken place in February before it had been announced in April".

"Your reference to our organization and to my supposed comments in particular as supporting the clawback have created a mistaken impression in the House. We insist that you clarify this error as soon as possible".

The issues of privilege are these: first, it would seem that Mrs. Woodsworth, the author of this letter on behalf of One Voice is indicating to the minister that he has either inadvertently or advertently misled the House in answering the question on Thursday.

I think this is a very important matter of the privileges of the House, that the House be given fully truthful and correct information.

And related to that is the minister's refusal to table the document from which he was—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That matter I must remind the member has already been settled by the Chair. The member has the floor.

Mr. Manley: The second issue of privilege is that of the use of the House of Commons as a forum in which to use in debate the confidential advice given in pre-budget meetings with the Minister of Finance. Many groups and organizations are invited to meet with the minister prior to a budget being completed and tabled in the House of Commons, this group among them.

What has happened here is that this chamber was used to take the words given in a confidential session where there was no transcript of the meeting held and to use them in debate in an apparently, at least as far as the organization to which the words were attributed is concerned, misleading fashion.

This can only undermine the pre-budget consultative process and I believe is therefore an offence of the privileges of the House of Commons because of this chamber being used as a forum in which to take these private and confidential submissions and make them public.

That completes my submissions, Mr. Speaker.

• (1230)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The minister may or may not wish to answer, but the Chair does not feel it is necessary for the minister to answer.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I listened very closely to my colleague from Ottawa South who is debating facts on a point between a group known as One Voice and their president, and the meeting that was held and the understanding of what the Minister of Finance heard at that meeting. We are very aware that One Voice has changed its stand since that meeting. I think it is incumbent upon us to let the people know the type of advice we get at these meetings when people say they did not give us that advice when, in fact, they did.

I indicated to the House on December 8 that I was not quoting from a document during question period on December 7. I had a one-page note in front of me that I was referring to. First of all, the member has not brought this up at the earliest possible opportunity. Second, he has not given the Minister of Finance an opportunity to reply to the letter that One Voice very conveniently sent to the member before the minister had seen it, and has not given the minister a chance to reply to that letter.

I believe that the point of privilege is frivolous, it has wasted a tremendous amount of time in this House and the hon. member should get on to more important things such as the business of this country rather than wasting time on such frivolous things in this House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will listen to the hon. member for Kingston and The Islands, but I must say that unless he has very compelling arguments the Chair intends to rule that both questions raised by the hon. member for Ottawa South are not questions of privilege. That will probably be the ruling I will make and at the earliest possible opportunity I will give the reasons to the hon. member in the proper way. I will hear the member for Kingston and The Islands out of courtesy for the member.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of State for Privatization misunderstood the point. I just wanted to clarify it for the House. The letter that was sent was addressed to the Minister of State for Privatization, not to the Minister of Finance. I would not want the minister to think that my friend had not raised this issue at the earliest opportunity. The letter was delivered to him yesterday, the notice was sent to the House yesterday, I believe, or first thing this morning. It was at the earliest opportunity. The matter was raised properly and in an appropriate way.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, be read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by 16 minutes as of one o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as the House and probably many Canadians know, Bill C–49 has been before us for several days, having been introduced in the House of Commons on December 6, 1989. Each hour that the House delays the passage of this legislation causes more difficulty and upset to Canadians, both in the health sector and in the marine transportation sector. However, it has been very clear that the need and desire for termination of this work stoppage has been recognized by the government and the government is proceeding to ensure that this legislation is passed and put into operation so Canadians can have the government services to which they are entitled in marine transportation and in hospital services.

In introducing the legislation to the House on December 6, the President of the Treasury Board made it abundantly clear that the presence of Bill C–49 and the back to work provisions would not prevent the negotiations being continued in order to reach a settlement of matters in dispute, both with respect to hospital workers and with respect to ships' crews, which are the two work groups affected by the current strike situation.

The President of the Treasury Board has made several attempts to have negotiations continued. There have in fact been negotiations taking place but to date no successful resolution has been arrived at, so we must proceed to pass Bill C–49 to terminate this situation.

Nobody, and certainly not the President of the Treasury Board, the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the Minister of Transport, who are the members of the ministry immediately involved in this matter, approach back to work to work legislation with any sense of relish. It is done in light of the need of Canada and Canadians to have government services and not to be deprived of those services for any protracted period of time.

It is important to note immediately that the ships' crews, who provide very valuable services through the Canadian Coast Guard, through fisheries patrol, through auxiliary vessels on behalf of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Public Works, have been on strike since November 14.

Hospital workers have been on strike since November 30, with the effects that has had on the services provided in hospitals under the jurisdiction of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I do not think there is any point in exacerbating the situation with rhetoric in the House of Commons and certainly no government member in the ministry would involve themselves in that pursuit. But it is important to underline the risks to Canadians and persons on the high seas and in our hospitals that occur in a strike of this kind and particularly when the strike is protracted over a long period of time.

I do not like it, but I have an obligation to remind members and the Canadian public that during the period of the strike three vessels were lost at sea off the east coast of Canada with a loss of life of 48 seamen.

The Minister and the President of the Treasury have made it abundantly clear that there is no linkage between the strike situation and the loss of these vessels. But that loss of life, that dramatic event of a ship going down to the bottom of the sea with all personnel aboard, focuses our attention on the fact that the services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard are vital to seamen and persons who go out on the sea in ships.

The member from Dartmouth and other members have said in this House of Commons that there is no risk, there is no danger, there is no immediate problem. Of course the coast guard have indicated that they would provide emergency services and have in cases. That is not the point. The point is that there is an important government service available to ships and persons who navigate our waters and that service is not being provided. Had the strike been settled after a short period of time or had there been some immediate hope for settlement, it may not be that we would have to deal with back to work legislation. But that was not the case. The government has a duty to act and did act.

There have been numerous cases in the past when the House has considered back to work legislation and invariably the House has co-operated because there was a recognition that government services affected on railways, in postal services and in other essential services had to be restored and reinstated.

A current member of the House who was a former Minister of the Crown, the member for Papineau—Saint-Michel, has stated the circumstances under which back to work legislation is justified. I have repeated this several times but I am going to repeat it once more because I hope hon. members will listen to this criteria, especially members of the Liberal Party, because it comes from a Liberal.

• (1240)

The member said in 1978: "Unfortunately, however, there are times and situations when the spirit of compromise and the demonstration of good faith, so necessary on the part of all concerned, are found wanting. In such circumstances the federal government, as custodian of the economy and protector of the public interest, must assume its responsibility."

We have in Canada a process of collective bargaining that has been developed over a long period of time and which resolves most, if not all, cases. This is one case where collective bargaining was not effective to resolve the matter in dispute. The Parliament of Canada that makes the laws proscribing collective bargaining, which creates the right to strike, now has to intervene to enact a new law to resolve the situation.

At the same time, every effort has to be made to continue negotiations to ensure that if the parties can reach a sensible agreement that is in the interests of all Canadians and of the particular workers involved, then of course that is the course of action that we would like to see followed and completed.

Because I think there has been in this debate disinformation that might affect people in Canada who expect from their parliamentarians fairness and good and proper treatment for all Canadians, I want to indicate some events that led to this strike.

First, we do not have in place in Canada a clear definition of essential service and we do not have legislation that prohibits strikes and work stoppages in relation to those essential services. Of course that is our fault as parliamentarians, all of us, for not bringing forward legislation that would make it clear that we cannot have work stoppages that affect some essential services.

Considering that void in the laws of Canada, it is essential for the well-being of all Canadians that when events do occur that involve withdrawal of essential services we must meet the exigencies of that situation. In this case there was collective bargaining over a long period of time, the parties could not come to an agreement and it was apparent that no agreement would be reached in an appropriate period of time. At that point one must look at the facts.

In the case of hospital services, what can one say? These hospital services involve the veterans of Canada who require hospital care. If any member of this House of Commons wants to deprive the veterans of Canada of hospital care over a protracted period of time, I invite that member to get up and say so. I invite that member to get up and say: "Yes, I believe that the veterans of Canada should be deprived of effective and proper hospital care services over a protracted period of time, because the workers who administer those services are having a wage dispute with the government".

If that is the view of members, I wish they would say that very clearly and not say that they believe in collective bargaining and that they believe that the collective bargaining process should be let alone to resolve any labour disputes. Of course we all believe in the collective bargaining process. We also must recognize that when the process fails, when the system fails, then there is a duty to consider the effect of that failure and the effect of that failure on the persons involved, in this case the veterans.

I say with some concern that we should have a better system in Canada, but I do not say with any embarrassment that I for one, and all members of the government I am sure, are agreed on this point, that if it comes to choosing between continuation of effective hospital services to veterans and the temporary deprivation of a right seen by the workers involved, we have to choose the veterans, and that is what we are doing in Bill C–49. We will do everything possible to see that the workers involved get a fair and effective settlement in the end result.

Now let us talk about the ships' crews. We are talking about the coast guard, fishery patrol vessels and so on. I do not have to go too far to find examples of why back to work legislation is necessary in this situation. Yesterday when we were debating this bill a barge off the coast of Nova Scotia broke away from its tow line. It was carrying 150 tonnes of light diesel fuel. I do not think any member would like to see that barge go up on the rocks and cause a massive oil spill that would result in environmental damages that would take months, years and even decades to resolve.

According to an Ottawa Citizen report, there were on December 11, after this bill was introduced in the House of Commons, 41 large ocean–going ships which would be jeopardized in terms of not being able to remove themselves from the St. Lawrence Seaway before the closing date of December 19.

What did those 41 ships have on board? They were carrying grain. They were carrying 1.3 million tonnes of grain. I wish some member from western Canada, from the grain–growing area, would get up in this House of Commons and say that they do not really care what happens to that grain, that what they care about is that the government and the workers involved should resolve their dispute over whatever period of time it takes to resolve it.

Would somebody in the New Democratic Party from Saskatchewan get up in this House and tell western farmers, grain producers, the people who are involved in this process, that the strike will go on indefinitely regardless of the ability of the parties to reach a settlement, and that grain can freeze in the St. Lawrence, the 41 ships can stay there into March and April of 1990 when the ice breaks up in the St. Lawrence, then they can leave.

Again, we all appreciate the collective bargaining system. We all appreciate the desirability of labour and management settling their own disputes, but sometimes it becomes our responsibility to take action. If members from Saskatchewan want, they can say: "No, no, we have to live with the result of failure in the collective bargaining system. Let the 41 ships with millions of tonnes of grain freeze up in the St. Lawrence, to heck with western grain farmers, to heck with the grain industry. They will have to take the loss of that labour dispute".

We cannot accept that. We appreciate the good work done by the coast guard. We appreciate the desirability of having wage settlements and all matters involved in disputes resolved by the parties, but there comes a time for action.

What is the action we have taken? Very briefly, Bill C–49 provides for a conciliation. That conciliation will be binding on the parties.

Because I have a particular interest in their situation, I believe that as a result of this legislation ships' crews will have a very beneficial settlement.

I hope members opposite have not thrown away their opportunity for wage equality between ships' crews on the west coast and ships' crews on the east coast because members like myself and my colleague from Annapolis Valley—Hants have fought for this equality for years. In the 11 years that I have been in Parliament, I have raised it hundreds of times. Finally, we have come to the point where this could be a reality.

I hope members of the Liberal party, especially the member for Dartmouth, and members of the New Democratic Party have not thrown that opportunity away because they are going to have to answer to the ships' crews. The ships' crews knew that they had wage equality in their hands. If they lose that wage equality it will be on the hands of the members opposite and the member for Dartmouth can answer for that.

I say to the ships' crews, do not picket my office. Do not come and see me. I had delivered for you wage equality. Picket the Liberal offices. Go to the Public Service Alliance of Canada and ask Daryl Bean why he threw away wage equality on your behalf when we had it in their hands. It was on the table, it was theirs, and Daryl Bean and the Public Service Alliance of Canada gave it away because they wanted to delay this bill. They wanted to suffer through the process of the House of Commons. They wanted the ships to risk tie-up in the St. Lawrence Seaway. They watched ships go down at sea and they did not care. They showed no concern for that.

We could have had this bill passed on December 6. Those ships could be moving, the men could be back to work and they could have a favourable settlement, but they are not simply because the process of the House of Commons and the avarice of the members opposite in their leagues with the Public Service Alliance. They are lackeys of the Public Service Alliance. They would not make their own decision. They would not make the decision in the interest of the people of Canada. They delayed this legislation. The legislation will go through, it will be passed. People will be back to work and they will get fair settlements and those who suffered through the delay can blame the members opposite. The blood is on their hands.

• (1250)

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I see that I have very little time before the lunch break to respond but I would like to begin by responding to some of the comments that the hon. member opposite made.

He talked about the serious situation being created by this strike and he talked about it as if it were something that materialized the day the strikers went on strike. One fact of life in Canada is that winter comes every year. That means ice comes every year. That means traffic on the Seaway gets into difficulties every year and that sooner or later the Seaway closes down. The shippers are aware of that. The government is certainly aware of that. The ships' crews workers who are on strike are certainly aware of that because they are the ones who go out in those icy waters, keep the channels clear for commerce, for the grain ships, for the oil ships, for the chemical ships, for the ships bringing supplies to communities along the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes.

I am mystified totally by the hon. member pretending that these situations only arise because workers are on strike. The fact is that the Saguenay River is frozen which is something that happens every year. The fact is that ice-breakers need to be up and down that river constantly throughout the winter. This happens every winter. It has happened every winter since Confederation, and it happened for centuries before that when nobody was there to see it happen.

The member has done something on which he has been challenged before in this House, on which he has been challenged in committee, and I am going to challenge him once again. Despite the words of the President of Treasury Board, despite the facts of the situation, the member has unconscionably attempted to link this strike and the workers on strike with the tragedy at sea. That is an abuse of his ability to stand and speak in this House with impunity. That is a despicable attempt.

The member knows that in this, as in every other urgent situation at sea, even though these workers have been on strike they have responded and have responded instantly. They have never once failed to meet normal times for normal responses to an emergency or even a potential emergency at sea.

On the particular occasion to which the member referred, the ships' crews workers, despite the abuse by this government, despite the mistreatment, despite the fact that for two years their requests for equity and justice have been denied, delayed, fought every step of the way by the government instead of recognized and acceded to, those people put out to sea. Despite that even those who were not on a coast guard vessel, The Alert, put out to sea with a full crew above and beyond normal requirements of emergency services.

The union representing these workers has spared no effort to make sure that they are available at any time to respond to an emergency. They have not been sitting at home nice and warm and comfortable. They have been out on their picket lines, and they have put down their pickets the instant there was a requirement for their services.

The union representing them, the Public Service Alliance of Canada, has spent thousands and thousands of dollars, even though it has no obligation to do so, to make sure that these workers are available at all times for emergency services. Not the government, but their bargaining agent which this government refuses to even recognize in legislation, has kept them in hotel rooms. The workers have voluntarily left their own communities, stayed away from their families for weeks at a time to be available for emergencies. They have been put up in hotels and transported by their union. They have remained right on the scene so that they could respond to any kind of an emergency. This has been done at great personal sacrifice by the workers and has been done at a cost to all workers represented by this union. Despite that, the member has the nerve to stand up in this House and try to link the names and reputations of those workers with a tragedy.

The member tries to pretend that the members on this side of the House are unaware of the seriousness of the situation. We are well aware of the seriousness of the situation, and I will come back to some specifics on that. We know where the blame for that serious situation lies, it lies right across the aisle of this House. It lies with a government which is incompetent, incapable and unable to respect the collective bargaining process, which is unconcerned about paying people what they are worth and paying people who are doing the same job the same amount of money. This government is absolutely unconcerned about following due process. It is using every legal means at its disposal to try to bypass collective bargaining and waste valuable time and valuable dollars dragging people through the courts instead of trying to reach a settlement with them.

It is the members on this side of the House who, before the strike ever started, raised questions in this House and pointed out to the government the dangerous situation that was developing and the need to act quickly to settle these collective agreements.

Last spring we were raising in the House the question of pay equity for hospital service workers. That was at a time when the first round of collective bargaining had been negotiated, completed and referred to the bargaining units. It was at a time when the different bargaining units were considering whether they would or would not approve the particular agreements that had been worked out for them. I will be going through that case in a little more detail later, after the lunch break.

The hospital service workers wanted one thing, one sign that this government really understood the whole basic question of human rights, fairness and equity. They simply wanted the government to grant them what the Human Rights Commission had already said they were entitled to. They simply wanted the government to include in their contract the settlement of this whole pay equity issue so that people performing the same work, whether in a government office building or the veterans home on Smyth Road, were getting paid the same.

The government had gone through those 18 months of negotiations without ever addressing those issues. It had refused to address those issues. It had refused to recognize that the basic problem of a proper wage for their work needed to be recognized in their collective agreement with the Government of Canada.

If our veterans are suffering less than adequate care right now it is because when we raised that question in the House last June the government chose not to respond to that, not to address that question and, in fact, continued to stonewall. The government knew that this strike was going to happen. The government knew because we warned it in this House. The workers had warned that the agreement was unacceptable if the issue was not dealt with in that agreement. As far back as two years ago, this government knew the end result of its intransigence, its bull-headedness and its stupidity in refusing to recognize that fair is fair, just is just. The Human Rights Commission had told the government what was fair, what was just, and what was right in this situation. If one veteran is suffering a lack of comfort anywhere in this country, it is because of this government. It is not because of the opposition in this House.

• (1300)

We raised in this House the question of safety and security. My colleague from Leeds—Grenville pointed out to the minister the very specific problem of navigational buoys in the St. Lawrence Seaway and the fact that if an effort was not made to settle the strike, millions of dollars worth of equipment were at risk in the St. Lawrence Seaway, the value of which is far greater than the cost of settling this strike with the ships' crews workers.

Mr. Speaker, may I clarify that I may resume after lunch?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Brightwell): Perhaps the hon. member does not realize that the sitting will be extended by 16 minutes because of Ministers' Statements and she may proceed until 1.16 p.m.

Mrs. Catterall: I recognize that, but I understand I may continue after lunch.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Brightwell): Yes, by all means.

Mrs. Catterall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I said, my colleague from Leeds—Grenville did point out to the government that $6 million worth of navigational aids were at stake, safe navigation in the St. Lawrence Seaway was at stake, if the government did not act quickly to settle this problem. The government chose to ignore that.

I am not sure why the hon. parliamentary secretary is today saying that the opposition seems unaware of the problems that are being created by this strike. We seem to have been the ones to tell the government of the problems that were being created by this strike.

One of my colleagues from Prince Edward Island warned the minister in the House of the dangers of harbours freezing up, of the costs to commerce of that happening off Prince Edward Island and of the dependence of Prince Edward Island on keeping the sea channel open to the mainland. It seems that the members opposite do not remember that when winter comes, water freezes and it is necessary to anticipate problems, to be sure that the people who perform the work of keeping our sea lanes open and safe are there to do their jobs. I am sure if the government had realized that, it would have made some effort to act like a good manager and to negotiate a settlement that would be acceptable to their workers and a fairer recognition of the work they do.

We also raised with the Minister of Transport the question of safety and security when we realized that winter was coming on, the strike was still on, and there was no movement on behalf of the government to meet any of the needs of these workers for a settlement which they could accept with some dignity and some assurance that it would allow them to provide for their families adequately. In spite of the fact that the ice was creeping out on the St. Lawrence River, various harbours were starting to freeze over, what did the Minister of Transport say? The Minister of Transport said, "There is no problem with safety and security". He sloughed off our suggestions that the strike needed to be brought to a quick and speedy end with some movement by the government at the negotiating table. We asked the President of the Treasury Board about safety and security and he said, "There is no problem with safety and security. We have contingency plans in place; everything is under control".

We know now what the contingency plan was. It was, "Don't deal with the issue. Don't deal with the situation of the sea lanes and the harbours. Just pull back to work legislation out of your back pocket and force people back to work. Don't act like a responsible employer who is concerned about your employees and concerned about the service you are offering to the people of Canada. Just stonewall at every opportunity, walk away from the table". How often have we heard the President of the Treasury Board in this House stand at his seat and say, "We are ready to go back to the negotiating table. The union just has to come back to us."

Whose responsibility is it to make sure that collective agreements are in place, that workers are at work doing their jobs and earning a decent living for doing it? It is not the union's responsibility. It is not the opposition's responsibility. It is the responsibility of the government. It is the responsibility of the President of the Treasury Board, when he sees that things are going off the track, to take a hands-on approach and make sure that things are happening in a way that is going to get this issue settled.

The parliamentary secretary can stand there and talk about the deprivation of veterans. The government is responsible for the deprivation of veterans.

I also want to refer to some other comments from my colleague on the other side. He referred to back to work legislation that was brought into this House in 1978 and made a point of quoting from a predecessor of mine in the House. I would also like to quote from the same hon. member, the Hon. John Munro, then minister of labour when he introduced Bill C–45 to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations. What the former member said at that time is quite different than the impression created by the parliamentary secretary this morning.

Bill C–45 was introduced in the context of a pending election and a pending strike by postal workers. It is far from the Draconian piece of legislation that we have before us today, far from the piece of legislation that basically says, "You're going to get back to work whether it is fair or not. You're going to accept binding conciliation whether it is fair or not. You're going to accept the fact that we have loaded the dice in our favour, whether it is fair or not". That is the government speaking. "We're going to by–pass and over–ride every principle of collective agreement we can think of in this act."

I want to quote the Hon. John Munro. I must say that the members opposite who were in Parliament at the time agreed with him, including the parliamentary secretary who spoke just before me, because he did in fact vote for this bill. He stated:

> By introducing this bill I am not attempting in any way to interfere in the process of negotiations by officers of the Post Office and the bargaining committee of the trade unions in the Post Office. Nor do I anticipate that the amendment proposed by the bill would interfere with that orderly process in the future—with the single exception of a breakdown in negotiations that could occur during a federal election.

At that time a federal election was pending. Mr. Munro continues:

> I would like to assure hon. members that the government continues to rely on the voluntary determination of any new collective agreement by the parties.

Obviously, this government has no wish to rely on the voluntary conclusion of any agreement acceptable to both parties. It wishes, instead, to ramrod and to force its will upon these, the most vulnerable, the poorest paid workers in the Public Service.

The former minister went on to say:

> I would be among the first to recognize that public employees have normally used their democratic rights as trade unionists wisely and responsibly.

• (1310)

That is not an opinion obviously shared by this government. It obviously does not believe that it, as a government, can go into a collective bargaining process unforced by legislation and reach any kind of solution.

The Hon. John Munro said further at that time:

> Public service unions in Canada have not been strike–happy in the past, and I do not believe they are quick to call a strike at this time.

That is certainly the case in this instance. The workers have reluctantly and belatedly used the right to strike. They have not done this willingly. No worker making $17,000, $18,000, $19,000 a year willingly goes on strike and leaves his or her family with a much reduced income in the weeks just before Christmas. As winter is coming on, with the need for heating, with additional expenses on any Canadian family, no worker willingly does that. No worker willingly goes out on a picket line in temperatures below zero and does it day after day, week after week. They only do it when they are forced to do it and when they are faced by an employer who is unable, unwilling to come to any kind of an agreement with them.

I think the member has at least given his own interpretation—I tread carefully here—has at best given his own interpretation to the words of the Hon. John Munro back in 1978 and attempted to apply them to a situation which is hardly at all comparable. We are not facing an election, unfortunately. It would be kind of nice at this point in time if I thought we were.

The parliamentary secretary also referred to discussions which occurred between the parties early this week and he seems to have forgotten the actual course of events.

Mrs. Finestone: Maybe he distorted them.

Mrs. Catterall: I would not suggest, as my colleague behind me did, that he might have distorted them. I would not say that for a moment. He has been in the House of Commons since at least 1978, so perhaps it is just that his memory is failing somewhat since Monday and Tuesday.

He accused my colleague, the member for Dartmouth, of being responsible for not achieving wage parity for the ships' crews workers. I want to remind the member opposite and I want to make sure that this is clearly on the record, that in fact it is the member for Dartmouth who, earlier this week, was able to get a commitment from the President of the Treasury Board that parity for east and west coast workers would be effective the date an agreement was signed; that it would not be something that needed to be negotiated at the bargaining table. I will have more to say about those discussions later.

An Hon. Member: Time.

Mrs. Catterall: I have no intention of concluding before 1.16 p.m., so we are into a continuing situation here, Mr. Speaker.

Mrs. Finestone: It is up to the Chair to call it.

Mrs. Catterall: The member for Dartmouth has admirably represented his constituents. We will—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Brightwell): I regret to interrupt the member. She will indeed have time after the lunch break.

It being 1.16 p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.16 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this government is becoming skilful at recycling, particularly when it comes to old promises. Take for instance putting into law an environmental assessment process. It was first promised in the 1984 election, then in the 1988 election, and most recently in the throne speech last April.

We learn now that Cabinet has put this proposal on hold. Apparently it is the their opinion that an environmental assessment law is not an urgent step. To make matters worse, it is reported today that when and if an environmental assessment law is ever approved, the Export Development Corporation would be exempted. Why? Does Canada plan to export polluting practices?

From day care to universality of pensions, from public consultation to foreign aid, from fisheries to sustainable development, increasingly this government's decisions fly in the face of its own promises.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the unfair treatment by this government of veterans' hospital and other federal workers under Bill C–49, the back to work legislation, is just another sign that this government is no longer listening.

The employees of veterans' hospitals work very hard. They treat our worthy veterans with care, compassion and give more energy to the comfort of their patients than most of us will ever know. Families of these patients want an end to the labour dispute, but they also want these workers fairly compensated for their unending, unselfish and dedicated efforts.

Instead the government is trying to resolve this dispute using a hammer, rather than an approach of fairness and honesty. The government should stop playing with figures in distorting the truth. It must accept the fact that these people deserve equitable wage settlements for the work they do.

Is there fairness in withholding pay equity, an insidious form of blackmail, until an agreement is signed, making it a reward instead of a right?

We call on the government to end its heavy-handed approach, settle for our veterans who are owed this respect and help, and settle for our workers who deserve fair wages. Families and friends of those in veterans' hospitals are very concerned about getting service back to normal for they know the work that is done and believe in fair compensation that is rightfully deserved.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, coincidentally with the celebration of Human Rights Day last weekend, I am proud to advise that the Atlantic Human Rights Centre was formally opened at St. Thomas University in my home riding of Fredericton—York—Sunbury.

The purpose of this centre is to promote and carry out the ideals of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights among the citizens of the Atlantic region.

Its origin springs from a three-year pilot project in Atlantic Canada that revealed a compelling need for greater public knowledge and awareness about individual rights and freedoms as a foundation for peaceful and harmonious community life.

The Atlantic Human Rights Centre will mobilize our regional resources to advocate and stimulate the growth of social justice and equality for all citizens, thus encouraging the fight against racism, sexism and poverty.

As we have done in the past, the Atlantic region will continue to pursue leadership to eradicate cultural bigotry and racial discrimination.

On behalf of this House, I offer congratulations to St. Thomas University and all who have been involved in the establishment of this project.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise to applaud the striking ships' crews for the patience, perseverance, courage and dignity which they have shown in light of overwhelming and intolerable conditions.

In spite of the fact that the striking ships' crews are among the lowest paid members of the Public Service, in spite of the fact that ships' crews have been without a contract for two years, and in spite of the fact that this government has done everything in its power to ignore, isolate and discriminate against the ships' crews, last weekend the crew of the Alert downed their picket signs and ventured out into one of the most violent storms in Atlantic history on a search and rescue mission off the coast of Newfoundland. The entire crew was in great danger. Three crew members were injured and had to be airlifted to Halifax.

This is just one example of the bravery and integrity which our ships' crews have continued to show.

Given everything that this government has done and is continuing to do to the ships' crews, we should consider ourselves fortunate to have a group of people so committed to their profession and their country. I am proud to pay tribute to the Alert.

* * *

[Translation]

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, December marks the second anniversary of the passage of Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act. With the implementation of these changes, which came only after much debate from opposition members and especially the Senate, we see very clearly that the government was right. Indeed, more and more research is now being done in laboratories, clinics, hospitals and universities in Canada. This new policy saved Canadian consumers $60 to $80 million on the price of drugs last year alone. In 1988, 57 research and development companies invested $164.5 million in Canada, including $72 million in Quebec. Thanks to the changes to the Patent Act made by the Conservative Party, the pharmaceutical industry can look to the future with confidence and optimism.

* * *

[English]

PENSIONS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to ensure all members know that the government has initiated a new hotline to answer questions about the new Italian-Canadian pension agreement. Dial 1-800-263-8538. If you dare dial, the news is all bad.

First, this is likely the worst agreement that Canada has with any country.

Second, if you make less than $24,000—a grand sum indeed—your pension will be tax exempt.

Third, if you make $24,001 and have waited 40 years to collect a retroactive pension, Revenue Canada will collect 40 per cent of your pension after Italy has rightfully collected 10 to 15 per cent.

Fourth, despite the fact that the agreement is bad and has not been ratified it is fully operative.

Fifth, the Canadian government will collect $200 million from the 40,000 Italian-Canadian pensioners this year, even though they have no right to any of the money.

The deserved reply: con le parole dei amici Italiaini: questo patto fra Canada e L'Italia fa scifo. Translated, the reply means: This agreement stinks.

* * *

DISASTERS

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, this morning I learned that on Monday next at 10 a.m. a memorial service will be held at Sandy Point, Nova Scotia for the eight men lost at sea in the Johnny and Sisters II.

Whenever sailors put to sea their families know they may not return. But that does not make it any easier if they do not.

The north Atlantic is awesome and forbidding on a beautiful August afternoon. In the dead of winter and in a raging storm it can only be described as terrifying.

The courage of those who defy that terror to support their families through a life at sea in a small boat hundreds of miles from home in quest of fish is a kind of courage and commitment few others can understand, let alone contemplate.

Each time a vessel and its crew is lost we stop to reflect. What is even more sobering is the knowledge that as we speak and sit here today hundreds of other Canadian fishermen have their lives on the line in the north Atlantic. May God protect them so that the sadness now descended upon Sandy Point will not be repeated in other communities and on other families.

Monday next may all members of this place and, indeed, may all Canadians pause to remember the crew of the Johnny and Sisters II and the friends and families they left behind.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Americans refuse to release Richard Bilodeau, a trucker from Coaticook, on $50,000 bail following a road accident in which he was involved on November 29. The Americans are treating a Canadian citizen most unfairly.

The U.S. Embassy in Ottawa and the Americans persist in their unjust attitude towards this Quebec trucker. If we Canadians jailed all Americans involved in fatal accidents on our territory, they too would worry about coming here.

Mr. Speaker, as of today, the extradition treaty between the United States and Canada is no longer respected and I feel the Americans are acting in bad faith, unless their ambassador across the street has already left Canada to vacation in Florida. In any event, I call on all Canadian truckers to show solidarity with their Quebec confrère, Richard Bilodeau.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

* * *

• (1410)

[English]

CHILE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, today is election day in Chile. Today we look to Chile with a renewed sense of hope for a democratic future in which all citizens of that country can live in peace and justice. However, hope is not enough.

We must not forget that not long ago the duly elected government of Allende was overthrown by a cruel military junta which for years brought horror and grief to the lives of many Chileans.

We must not forget that Pinochet will continue to wield power as the head of the military. We must do all we can to assist and uphold the will of the Chilean people who, through a great deal of solidarity and effort, managed to bring about these democratic elections.

* * *

ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it is no secret the Atlantic provinces are facing a number of difficulties. However, economic indicators reveal the economy of Atlantic Canada has benefited under this government's economic initiatives.

Farm cash receipts are up by 9.7 per cent. Sawmill production has increased by 56.3 per cent. Fish landings have risen by over 34.1 per cent in the past five years.

Since 1984, this government has been creating an average of 2,314 jobs a month in Atlantic Canada. That is a total of 118,000 new jobs for Atlantic Canadians.

Hollow words from the members opposite will not put bread on the table of Atlantic Canadians. It takes vision and leadership to arrive at long-term solutions to the economic realities of Atlantic Canada.

This government has shown its commitment to bring economic development to the regions of Canada. I commend the Prime Minister for his continued commitment to Atlantic Canadians.

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a letter to a Canadian taxpayer the Minister of Finance wrote:

> The GST is a stable, reliable source of revenue that will secure our plan for year-by-year reduction in the deficit.

Could this mean that we will see year-by-year increases in the rate of the GST as well?

On the other hand, the government is reported to have told Canadians that it will lower the rate of the GST by cutting $1 billion from government programs. We have also been told that the government had already cut non-essential programs. Does this mean that essential programs will now be cut?

The Chairman of the Finance Committee has once again blurted out senselessly inflammatory comments saying that the city of Ottawa must be trembling because of these proposed cutbacks. When will he stop abusing Canadians and start addressing their concerns about the goods and services tax?

When are the Canadian people going to get the straight facts about the goods and services tax?

* * *

ETHIOPIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, the devastating famine confronting the people of Ethiopia is caused not only by drought, but also by a civil war and a government that refuses to allow relief supplies to reach the drought-stricken rebel held territories in Eritrea and Tigré.

According to international aid agencies, the famine threatens the lives of more than four million people in the northern provinces. A massive international emergency relief program must be put in place immediately.

I call on the Canadian government to take a leadership role in developing such a program. I also call on the government to pressure the Ethiopian government to open up supply routes to the territories, to establish corridors of tranquillity. As it stands now, supplies have to go through Sudan to reach the starving in the north, a long and difficult route.

Canadian and international aid to Ethiopia must reach the people who need it. The Ethiopian government cannot starve its own people. Canada must drive home this point.

Canada and the international community also have to state clearly that the Ethiopian civil war must end. A ceasefire, genuine negotiations and democratic reforms have to be put in place so that future suffering is eliminated.

Oral Questions

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to voice my concern for the youth of our country if a form of the proposed GST is not implemented.

If there is a primary reason for one to support the GST, it is to secure the well-being of the tomorrows for the children of today. It is indeed Canada's economic future that we must address. The GST allows us an optimistic economic future, one that we shall be proud to say we helped to shape.

The present economic situation necessitates a tax reform and a GST is a positive reform. It will raise productivity, improve competitiveness and lower the cost of capital goods and thus result in job creation.

It is estimated that as early as 1992, 60,000 new jobs will be created. This is the kind of outlook we want for the youth of this country. Implementation of a type of GST will achieve just that—a secure, promising, healthy economy for all the youth of Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

In December of last year in this House he had this to say to members of Parliament, "The free trade agreement continues the process of making trade more and more secure". Those were the Prime Minister's words.

Since this government was sworn in in 1984, we have seen our $20 billion trade surplus steadily fall to less than half of that in 1988, down to $4.4 billion for the first three quarters of 1989 and to a world-wide deficit of $421 million for the month of October—the first world-wide trade deficit since 1976.

We also have a reduction of $2.5 billion for the first ten months of this year in our trade surplus with the United States.

How can his government take comfort in these latest figures? Is this what the Prime Minister meant when he said to members of the House of Commons that his trade deal would make our trade more and more secure?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman knows, we have trade with the United States in the neighbourhood of $200 billion a year. It is the greatest trading arrangement between two nations anywhere in the world, and obviously there are fluctuations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I am surprised that a former Minister of Finance would either raise it or is chuckling about it. Our trade remains in solid balance. We have a $4 billion surplus as we speak today.

On the basis of figures for one month, the Leader of the Opposition is now projecting his usual doom and gloom. Why does he not share the optimism and the confidence of all Canadians in respect of trade with other nations and in respect of free trade with the United States, that will ensure growing prosperity? He knows better. He has been a Minister of Finance. He knows full well that it is very misleading to use one month's figures and try to project any serious results from those.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is just the latest month in a series in which the figures have shown a steady graph downwards over the past five years of our trade surplus for the world and with the United States.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this trade agreement with the United States, negotiated by the Prime Minister, proves that our government has abandoned our economy to the United States. Not only are our trade figures deteriorating, we see a restructuring of business across North America which tends to benefit the U. S. worker, at the expense of the Canadian worker. Plants are closing down one after the other, and the number of lay-offs is rising steadily: Gillette in Montreal, Ford in Windsor, Gerber in Niagara Falls, General Electric in Toronto, Indal Limited in Toronto, Inglis in Toronto, Burlington Canada in Toronto, Northern Telecom across Ontario and Dominion Textiles in Quebec. How can the Prime Minister justify this threat to Canada's interest, all because of the free trade agreement with the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, again, the Leader of the Opposition surprises me. He knows perfectly well that the Canadian economy is modern and dynamic. There are structural changes and job changes taking place. I believe the Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated that between 25 and 40 per cent of the Canadian labour force changes jobs in the course of one year. This reflects the reality of competition and the rapid technological changes that our economy and all economies have to cope with. I am surprised to hear the line of reasoning taken by the Leader of the Opposition, because since January 1, instead of jobs being lost in this country, 216,000 new jobs were created, and 73 per cent were full-time jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: I find it hard to understand their position. The Minister for International Trade tells me that the exact figure is 232,000 new jobs created since the elections, last year. Why does he keep saying the economy is going down hill? Our job creation rate is already impressive, and we will try to maintain it at this level, despite the obstruction and the reactionary views of the Liberal party.

• (1420)

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I can understand your impatience, Mr. Speaker. Nobody really believes that stuff any more.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We told the Prime Minister when he came back from telling the American bankers in New York that Canada was open for business again that this country should not be up for sale. This Prime Minister has put Canada on the auction block.

As part of the trade deal the government also sold out our fish processing industry on both coasts. There is now a crisis in the industry, as we described yesterday. Fish plants are closing down at an incredible rate. It is estimated that approximately 6,000 jobs are going to be lost in the industry in the next few months.

The Prime Minister keeps telling us he has a plan to meet this crisis. What is the plan?

The Prime Minister keeps telling us that there is a special cabinet committee. Where is the report of that committee?

Where are the programs to assist the workers and families of our fishing people on both coasts, both at sea and in the fish processing plants?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is fulfilling the prophetic statement of his erstwhile finance critic, the member for Etobicoke North, who said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: We've heard this before.

Some Hon. Members: Boring!

Mr. Mulroney: They can dish it out but they bloody well can't take it. They better get used to it because they are going to get a lot more from us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The finance critic of the Liberal party said, "The strategy of the Liberal party and the leader of the Liberal party is very simple. We are going to blame every sparrow that falls on the free trade agreement."

Ms. Clancy: The sparrows have fallen.

Mr. Mulroney: That is exactly the policy that you are following today. It was dishonest then and it is dishonest today. The Liberal party should be ashamed of itself for not having a policy for job creation in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This is where they really deserve the A for hypocrisy. The leader of the Liberal party has the nerve to stand up today and ask what we are going to do about hard-pressed fishing villages in Atlantic Canada when we have introduced a bill that will make it easier to draw unemployment insurance in some areas.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The Liberal Senators have received instructions—

Ms. Clancy: Read the bill again.

Mr. Allmand: You've got to be kidding. That's why every Atlantic government is opposed to the bill—even the Conservative government in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Mulroney: That bill will provide for unemployment insurance at 10 weeks. The Liberal Senators want to keep it at 14 weeks. You are betraying the poor people who need unemployment insurance in Atlantic Canada. You should be ashamed of yourselves!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: What a disgraceful bunch of hypocrites.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FISHERIES

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, let me assure the Prime Minister that the people in the Atlantic do not want unemployment insurance. They want work and a good fishing industry. They do not want your unemployment, and they do not want the policies of that Minister of Employment.

My question is for the Prime Minister.

To top off a week when an American scallop dragger flagrantly violated our maritime sovereignty, when the European Community proposed new quotas that continue to rape our fish stocks, when fish processing plants are closing all over the place, and now the President signs a bill that effectively wipes out a $30 million lobster industry, will the Prime Minister begin to take effective action to protect Canadian interests in the Atlantic fishery?

When is he going to come to the realization that the free trade agreement will be of little help in dealing with American attitudes that allow a bill such as the President signed this week to be passed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am intrigued by the statement of the hon. member who says that the people in the depressed areas of Atlantic Canada do not want unemployment insurance.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): They want work.

Mr. Mulroney: They want work, the hon. member is right. That is why unemployment since this government was sworn in has decreased in the provinces of Atlantic Canada by 4, 5 and 6 per cent from where it was left by the Liberals.

Ms. Clancy: Tell them in Canso.

Mr. Mulroney: I think it is disgraceful that the Liberal leader allows the Liberal Senate to hold up an unemployment insurance bill that would give more money to the poor fishermen in Atlantic Canada. I think he should give instructions today to Allan MacEachen to call off his troops and pass that unemployment insurance bill now because it is designed to benefit the people of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: You would get arrested in Nova Scotia after this.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the right hon. Prime Minister could complete his answer shortly.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister to complete his answer.

Mr. Peterson: He's finished.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for South West Nova.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would assure the Prime Minister that the statistics he has on unemployment insurance do not take into account the people who did not have enough work to get unemployment insurance—those fishermen who only had eight and not ten weeks, those workers who did not have 17 or 18 weeks of employment in order to qualify. Put them into your statistics.

Mr. Charest: That's the point.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): This past Tuesday the Prime Minister asked for a quick reference to a bi-national panel under the free trade agreement regarding a size restriction on lobsters by the United States legislation. So much for the assurances of the Prime Minister and the President that other discussions would be held.

Is it now the Prime Minister's policy to allow the free trade agreement to manage our fishery every time there is a problem with the Americans pertaining to fish?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, not at all. I have indicated to the President of the United States that not only have we already begun to contest that decision, but we are considering instruments of retaliation to protect the lobster industry in Atlantic Canada. This is the way it goes under the GATT, and this is the way it goes under the free trade agreement.

I have also indicated our plans to assist the Atlantic fishing industry in a very major way. But I must say that I am surprised, because it was pointed out today that delay of the unemployment insurance bill beyond January 6 means that people in areas of high unemployment would have to work 14 weeks to qualify for benefits instead of 10 weeks.

If the member really is concerned about the well-being of people in Atlantic Canada, then give instructions to those non-elected Senators to pass that bill now because it benefits the poorer people.

* * *

• (1430)

TRADE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister. For the past two years, the Prime Minister has tried to promote the trade deal to Canadians saying he was going to assure Canadians that this was going to give us secure access to the U.S. market.

Since this government was elected, we have seen our trade surplus shrink by $19 billion, our Canadian dollar go to 86 cents, the Atlantic fishery virtually close down, and tens of thousands of jobs lost in the manufacturing sector. Today, Statistics Canada released figures that show the manufacturing trade balance is in a deficit for the first time in thirteen and a half years.

Is it not time for the Prime Minister to admit that the winners in this trade deal were the Americans, who got secure access to Canadian jobs and Canadian markets, and the losers are Canadian families and Canadian workers who have lost their jobs?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is hard to take seriously a question like that which tries to ascribe to an agreement—which was to take place over 10 years—such alarming effects already in just 11 months.

Mr. Rodriguez: What other reasons are there?

Mr. Crosbie: I want to point out to the House that exports in October rose slightly from September but there was a substantial rise in imports. One of the reasons there was a substantial rise in imports is that we are importing considerable amounts of machinery and equipment to increase our capacity to produce, to become more productive.

One of the reasons for the diminishing trade balance is conditions in other countries because international trade is with other countries, it is not with your own country. This shows the weakness in the economies of other countries, not in our economy.

Mr. Peterson: It's their fault!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: We had a very slow Question Period yesterday. I intend to hurry it along. Perhaps the minister could answer the question.

Mr. Crosbie: To summarize, Mr. Speaker, the good news that can be drawn from these figures is that exports and imports are continuing to grow despite indicators of a slackening pace in some aspects of the economy. The continuing investment of Canadian business in new machinery and equipment will make provision for a more competitive future. That is the good news that comes from these figures.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to talk about machinery and all of the machinery that is coming in. I want the minister to tell the 1,900 people—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member could put her question.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr Speaker, I think the minister should talk to those 1,900 people who have been laid off at Canadian Airlines International. He should talk to those 150 people from Gerber who have been laid off in Niagara Falls. He should talk to the 200 people who are going to be laid off in Montreal at the General Electric lamp factory. Those are the people he should talk to. Those people have families and it is their lives we are talking about.

In the course of the televised debates during the election campaign, the Prime Minister told Canadians that the trade deal was merely a commercial arrangement, cancellable on six months' notice. Since it is evident that the trade deal is only giving pink slips to hundreds of thousands of Canadians, is it not time for this government to give the pink slip to the United States?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party does not want to talk about machinery and equipment. That apparently bugs her, as does much of the New Democratic Party bug her as well.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): You better talk to your mother, John and get some good advice.

Mr. Crosbie: I forgot to check with mommy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon.

[Translation]

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, this series of figures is cold comfort for the poor who are unemployed. People are not interested in statistics. People want work. They want a pay cheque, not welfare.

An Hon Member: Exactly!

Ms. McLaughlin: They want to feed their families and give them a comfortable future. They want to know what this government is going to do to find them a job so they can live in dignity.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, we have tremendous sympathy for all Canadians who become unemployed, whatever the circumstances. In fact, that is why the federal government has made broad-ranging retraining programs available to all workers. In August in Quebec, the unemployment rate was at its lowest in ten years. So far, since January 1, 216,000 new jobs, 73 per cent of which are full-time jobs, have been created, and 72 per cent of these jobs are held by women. Now that is progress! The Leader of the New Democratic Party should stop saying we are losing tens of thousands of jobs, because we are in fact creating hundreds of thousands of new jobs here in Canada.

[English]

FISHERIES

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. The European countries fishing off our east coast continue to thumb their noses at us. We told the Europeans, through NAFO, that they could catch no cod at all off the coast of Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador. They say now that they are going to catch 27,000 tonnes this year. That is a job loss of 750 additional jobs because of European overfishing in eastern Canada.

The question is very simple: When is the government going to stop pussy-footing? When is the government going to get tough with the Europeans? When is the government going to do something to protect the jobs that are being raped by the Europeans off the east coast of Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that we have had an intensive campaign with respect to the European Community and its ignoring NAFO quotas in the last six months or a year with some considerable success.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Big success story, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The quotas that the European Community announced for itself yesterday are a very considerable improvement with reference to flatfish stocks, but still deficient in the area of the cod stocks that the hon. gentleman mentioned, but all in all, below the catches of last year and a very great improvement from previous years. It is still not good enough. We are still not satisfied, but it is a very considerable improvement.

When the hon. gentleman's government was in power in the 1960s and 1970s, the Europeans took 800,000 tonnes of cod from the North Atlantic: 800,000—not 27,000—and the hon. gentleman's government did nothing for 12 years to stop that. Now he suggests that we can somehow, by some miracle, do something to stop what the Liberals could not do when 800,000 tonnes a year was taken from the North Atlantic.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, if the government cannot do something about the fish outside 200 miles, I want to ask the Minister of Fisheries if he can do something about the fish inside the 200-mile limit because he has jurisdiction and this year he has given away 8,000 tonnes to the French. That is 220 jobs. That is 220 jobs lost to the French. You have direct control. What are you doing, Mr. Minister, to stop the job loss to Atlantic fishermen?

• (1440)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member would recall when his government was in office giving the French—

Mr. Volpe: We want to know what you are doing. You are the ones who administer.

An Hon. Member: Let's talk about the Gulf.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): You have got the power. You use it on the GST. You use it on other things. Use it in fish!

Mr. Mulroney: You let them in the Gulf and you let them take 800,000 tonnes; that's what you get.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the right hon. the Prime Minister and those other members on the opposite side of the House who are engaged in a brilliant conversation with the Prime Minister to keep in mind that there are other members who wish to ask questions in this Question Period and I would ask for some co-operation. The Hon. Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Siddon: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member opposite would recall that when his government was in office it granted the French 20,000 more tonnes in Canadian waters than this government does, and the Liberal government granted Europeans quotas of our non-surplus stocks for 15 years.

I should point out that since the implementation of our $750,000 fines, the arming of our patrol vessels, that has dropped to virtually zero, with the exception of the last few weeks, partly because of the intransigence of opposition members in not being willing to get our fisheries patrol vessels back in the water.

Ms. Clancy: Not so!

TRADE

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Tomato farmers in Norfolk, Brant and Elgin counties have just been told that after 25 years Campbell's no longer needs their tomatoes.

With the ongoing tariff reductions in the free trade agreement, Campbell's plans to import from the U.S. some of the tomato paste that was previously processed in Canada. This will replace a net loss of 7,000 tonnes of tomatoes because of the closing of its Mississauga line and will put Canadian farmers out of work.

Will the minister now admit that all his government's talk of free trade, harmonized markets, and industry rationalization, means nothing more than Canadians losing their jobs?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no one in the country being fooled by this attempt to pick out individual companies and allege that they are all reducing their operations because of the free trade agreement.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): There won't be anything left. It's as simple as that.

Mr. Crosbie: Is this is a Question Period, or do we have to outshout the people who ask us questions?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Look who's talking.

Mr. Speaker: In answer to the hon. minister's question, it is Question Period. Perhaps the hon. minister could complete his answer.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, let me say that in November, 1988, 4,883,000 people had jobs in Ontario. A year later in November, 1989, 4,987,000 people had jobs in Ontario, which is a very considerable increase over the beginning of the year.

Ms. Clancy: We are talking about tomatoes.

Mr. Crosbie: Now, if all the hon. gentlemen and all the hon. ladies opposite who bring forward these individual instances were correct, the reverse would be true. There would have been a tremendous decrease in jobs. Get your act together for heaven's sake and stop getting up in the House with juvenile points like this.

Mr. Speller: Mr. Speaker, my question was about tomatoes. I will direct my supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture who represents farmers in this House, the same minister who promised Canadian farmers that free trade would be good for them. The minister should be aware that the farming industry and the food processing industry in Canada are under siege because of this free trade agreement.

Will the minister now tell the tomato farmers of southwestern Ontario what specific programs he has to help them with the loss of their livelihood because of this free trade agreement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member were to look at the facts, he would find this past year the investment in the food processing sector has increased by some 15.4 per cent; 40 per cent in the bakery industry; 23 per cent in the cereal industry; 21 per cent in the biscuit manufacturing industry—

Mr. Allmand: What about tomatoes?

Mr. Mazankowski: —73 per cent in the red meat industry. When you go through the application of the free trade, Pillsbury is expanding, Canada Packers is expanding, General Foods is expanding, J.M. Schneider is expanding, MLM Flour Products is expanding, CSP is expanding, the meat processing is expanding, all because of free trade and a buoyant Canadian economy.

* * *

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday, he and his minister of industry waxed eloquently and enthusiastically about the sale of Connaught BioSciences and Canadian R and D to France, and about the sale generally of Canadian industry to foreigners. Yet, his own national advisory board on science and technology has said that on R and D Canadian jobs depend and that "the high level of foreign ownership of Canada's industries contributes to our low industrial R and D spending".

Who really is timid and timorous, as the Prime Minister described yesterday, those of us who are concerned about the Canadian future, or his government which refuses to act to protect Canadian R and D, Canadian jobs and the Canadian future?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out yesterday and have said before in the House, it is regrettable that Connaught was not able to find a Canadian suitor with which to join forces in order to ensure its future.

In fact, in the applications, we were able to obtain from both applicants for Connaught assurances that there would be very, very substantial increases in R and D, whichever suitor ended up controlling Connaught. We have those guarantees. It is in the press release which I am sure the hon. member has. In fact, the transaction will result in significant increases in research and development in this important area in Canada.

* * *

HEALTH

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, my question is also about Connaught and it is directed to the Minister of Health. Connaught is the leading supplier of influenza vaccines in Canada. During the next imminent world-wide epidemic, it will be the only Canadian supplier capable of producing the five million or so doses needed here.

When Connaught was owned in Canada it responded to a health and welfare emergency request to supply vaccine sometime in 1976. I want to ask the Minister of Health, why did he fail to obtain a guarantee of supply in times of emergency from the foreign buyer of Connaught for such vaccines?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, one of the reasons why Connaught felt it was necessary to join forces with another suitor with deep pockets, as it were, was in order to ensure it had the processing capability to meet the demands for vaccines, including polio vaccines. The technology that Mérieux brings to these circumstances will help ensure that Connaught will be able to meet the demands of Canadians for polio vaccines and indeed for a whole host of other vaccines which are important to human health.

FISHERIES

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Reference has already been made to the infamous U.S. lobster bill, and I commend the Prime Minister and the government for moving quickly to advise President Bush that the law is simply unacceptable to Canadians and that we will apply for an FTA panel on it.

However, lobster prices are falling already and time is of the essence. Can the minister advise as to when we might reasonably expect a panel decision, and as to what countervailing measures Canada will take during the interim to let President Bush and the Americans know that we expect them to live up to the spirit, as well as the letter of the agreement, and to show Canadians that the FTA process works?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a truly concerned question about the fishery.

Luckily, we have the free trade agreement so this matter can be proceeded with and adjudicated upon in a few months rather than the year or longer it might have taken under the GATT. Thank heavens, we have the free trade agreement.

The government has already taken preliminary steps. We did not wait for the President of the United States to make up his mind whether he would sign this democratic bill or not, a bill sent to him by the democratic majority in the Senate and in the House. We have had consultations. We have had the matter before the Trade Commission, so we have saved weeks by doing that. We are now seeing if we can get an expedited process.

We were talking to our U.S. colleagues to see if they will agree to a quick process. Even if they do not agree, we can reasonably expect that there would be a decision, and by the middle of May there should be a final report, if we go with all due expedition as we can under the agreement. It could be quicker if we can have an expedited process as we did in the case of the B.C. salmon.

We did not wait for the President to make his mind up. We started long ago on this process, and we have advice that we have a very strong case. We are going to press it in every agency that we can press it in. We are going to go on with the support of the House, I trust, to see that this trade distorting measure of the United States is found to be trade distorting.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, and it is very simple.

The government agency, Stats Canada, reported today that our trade surplus with the United States is down 21 per cent over last year, that the investment income deficit is up 25 per cent over last year, but the trade in services is down 21 per cent over last year.

I want to ask the Prime Minister this simple question. Does he agree with the comic logic of the Minister for International Trade that this is good news, or does he recognize that this represents a serious challenge to the economic well-being of this country, and that this government has got to do something to repair this serious situation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the point of view expressed by members of the ministry that, clearly, interest rates are high and that is taking a toll on the economic situation. Imports are high and that is impacting negatively on our exporters. The state of the dollar is doing that, and we recognize some important structural difficulties in the economy. Productivity is not as high as it should be.

The object of the policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance is to squeeze out of the economy the inflationary pressures to avoid what I am sure my friend wants to avoid, a repetition of the tragic situation of 1981 and 1982 when inflation got out of hand and crippled the economy for five years.

We believe that while there have been figures that have been out for one month the Canadian trade balance remains in a favourable posture by something in excess of $4 billion. We believe that the policies set out by the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade are valid.

We have not heard any alternatives to them whatsoever that make any sense from the opposition. We have delivered now almost six years of economic growth and prosperity second only to the economic growth of Japan which led the world. Canada was number two. We believe those policies are right and we are going to pursue them.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I say through you to the Prime Minister, Sir, you do not have a government, you have a flat earth society. You are not looking at the reality of our economic situation.

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, I would ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I put this question directly to the Prime Minister.

In light of his recognition of the serious structural difficulties in the economy, will the Prime Minister instruct his Minister of Finance to take actions to bring down interest rates and the exchange rate so we can begin exporting again and represent our full responsibility as world traders?

What is happening is that this government is going into recession.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if there is anyone in this House qualified to discuss recessions, it is the hon. member and his colleagues.

Mr. Peterson: Then why don't you listen?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to the flat earth society in reference to the policies we have followed. Last week the OECD produced a report which indicated that it was in full substantial agreement with the policies followed by the Government of Canada. In August, the World Economic Forum from Geneva indicated that Canada's competitiveness had increased from number 11 position where we were in 1984 to number 4 today, indicating major strides by Canada to achieve a better competitive situation.

In Canada, 1,555,000 new jobs have been created. There have been record profits, record job creation, record reinvestment, record jobs for women, 750,000 people have been taken off the poverty roles. There have been good times, not perfect times, but good times all around, infinitely better times than those of the Liberals and we want to keep them going.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

How can the Prime Minister continue to pretend that assessment of human rights policies and practices are a concrete factor in decision making in Canada on our aid determination, while numerous international and Canadian non-governmental organizations have condemned the El Salvadoran government for human rights violations, for death squads and for the murders of six Jesuit priests? How can his government receive representatives of the El Salvador government this week in Ottawa to discuss new aid programs for this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made very clear the position of the Government of Canada with respect to any attacks on human rights in El Salvador, Central America and elsewhere. It is a policy that has been very, very consistent from the beginning. I think it is an enlightened and effective policy.

Further, I think my hon friend will applaud the fact that in the area of human rights, yesterday the government announced the appointment of the Hon. Ed. Broadbent to be in charge of the International Institute of Human Rights. I think that is probably a good move as well.

Mr. Ouellet: I think the Prime Minister should listen to the question and try to answer it. We are talking about El Salvador, with a representative of this government being here in Ottawa to meet with officials of External Affairs to discuss new aid programs, at the very moment when the government in El Salvador is universally criticized for violating human rights.

In the past week, the Salvadoran air force dropped thousands of pamphlets from the air urging the killing of international aid workers it accuses of supporting the FMLN guerrillas. Dozens of churches, humanitarian and community groups have been forced to close their offices after they were raided by security forces.

Karen Ridd who appeared before the Parliamentary Committee on External Affairs this morning confirmed this, and said that while she is now back in Canada, she still receives death threats.

What is the Prime Minister going to do in light of all of this evidence that shows certainly the Canadian government should not continue aid to this government?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is referring to the delegation that is visiting at the request of the government of El Salvador, there are at least two meetings with the government that will be held with the Acting Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Raymond Chretien, and the Acting Vice President of CIDA for Latin America. The visit provides them with the unique opportunity of conveying the position of the Government of Canada to them, receiving their point of view. After these meetings, the government looks forward to receiving specific recommendations from the Under Secretary of State, Mr. Raymond Chretien, in whom we have great confidence.

* * *

• (1500)

HOUSING

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing. This government has cited Project Haven as an example of action it is taking to combat violence against women. Well, some action.

The government promised over 18 months ago that within four years it would provide shelter for 500 more battered women each day. To date, a year and a half later, there are 22 more shelter beds in all of Canada.

Will the minister tell us when this government will take concrete action to lessen violence against women and keep his and his government's promise to battered women?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the government has made a commitment under Project Haven to provide the capital funds for shelter beds for victims of violence: women and children.

Some $22 million was committed to be put in place over a period of time. Proposal calls have been put out for that. A number of those proposals have been accepted and put in place. Others are in the process of being put in place. Some of the provincial governments involved have raised concerns with respect to providing the maintenance funds to look after those shelters once they are put in place, and that has been a factor which has delayed the process.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. I would have preferred to go on longer but we are out of time. The hon. Minister of Justice.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the House leaders with respect to the most appropriate method of dealing with communications which have been received from all parties regarding testimony given before the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General relating to police investigations of certain members. Those discussions have included yourself and officers of the House.

This is a matter of grave concern to all of us as members of Parliament and we have searched long and hard for an appropriate solution. We have arrived at a two-part solution which will address the current situation and assist the House and its members in the future.

First, I will propose a motion to be jointly moved and seconded by myself; the member for Windsor West, the Official Opposition House leader; and the member for Kamloops, the New Democratic Party House leader to deal with the request for a question of privilege raised by members from all three Parties. The motion will read as follows:

> That the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business be empowered to study the rights, immunities and privileges of members of the House of Commons.

We also feel that it is appropriate to review our current practices and therefore following the passage of the motion which I just suggested I would move the following motion, again jointly moved and seconded by myself;

the member for Windsor West, the Official Opposition House leader; and the member for Kamloops, the New Democratic Party House leader:

That a special committee of the House be appointed and empowered to review the Parliament of Canada Act regarding the powers, duty and obligations of the members of the House in relation thereto and regarding the authority, responsibilities and jurisdiction of the Board of Internal Economy;

That the said special committee shall have all powers of a standing committee pursuant to Standing Order 108(1);

That the said special committee shall report its findings and recommendations no later than March 5, 1990;

That the said special committee be chaired by the Deputy Speaker; and that seven additional members be recommended by the striking committee.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you have a copy of the first motion.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard both the motions put forward by the hon. Minister of Justice. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Motions agreed to.

[Translation]

RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITY OF MEMBERS

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, I raised a question of privilege after what happened last Tuesday before the Justice Committee.

We have listened carefully to the proposals made by the Leader of the Government which met with the agreement of the House, and we are very pleased with these proposals. The Quebec caucus had been considering the matter for several weeks, and it proposed this long-term solution in the form of a special committee as provided under Section 53.1 of the Parliament of Canada Act.

It will be an opportunity for us to clarify the jurisdiction of the Board of Internal Economy and to suggest publishing the rules of internal economy by which we are probably governed. The special committee will also give us a chance to consider not only the rights but also the obligations, privileges and duties of members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker, our main purpose in seeking this long-term solution is to preserve the independence members of this House need to do their work, which is not always easy. The budgets we are given are not only tools, they are absolutely essential.

We also asked for this to be a public debate, and we want to thank all parties in the House of Commons and all members of this House for agreeing to this solution. The committee's proceedings and the entire review process, will be public and open. That, Mr. Speaker, is what Canadians expect of their members of Parliament.

We need the co-operation of all concerned, especially and including RCMP authorities and members of the force.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the hon. member for his comments.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate to ask the government House leader to give the usual weekly statement of business.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that tomorrow at 10 a.m. the House will consider Bill C-28 at report stage.

After Routine Proceedings at twelve o'clock we will deal with Bill C-40 and it is expected we would complete second reading. We will then move to Bill C-47 in all stages; that is the amendments to the Elections Act.

We are still negotiating to try to find appropriate business which could be proceeded with on Monday.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, in discussing the business to come up, I think it is fair to say, concluding from exchanges earlier in Question Period, that Bill C-21 may likely not receive Royal Assent by the New Year.

Of course we are concerned about that because of the variable entrance rates for qualifying for unemployment insurance. I simply wanted to say to the government House leader that usually at this time of the year we give rapid passage to a bill to continue the variable interest rates.

I want to offer our co-operation again to pass without debate legislation that would continue, until this legislation is eventually passed, the variable entrance rates that are presently in place.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, before the Minister of Justice gets up again I would like to raise an issue with him. He wants Bill C-47 passed tomorrow. Could he assure the House that no Canadian elector will be barred from running in a by-election by the passage of this legislation?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in answering the second question first, I would advise the House that the amendments to the Elections Act which are before the House at the present time in Bill C-47 are simply to correct a section of the Elections Act which was left out of the Revised Statues of Canada in error.

I am not prepared at this time to give a legal opinion on my hon. friend's question. I will certainly take that under advisement. If he has any specific questions he wishes to ask on that issue, I think those would be best addressed to the Chief Electoral Officer.

* * *

• (1510)

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ATLANTIC FISHERY—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair received this morning an application under Standing Order 52 for an emergency debate. I have given careful consideration to the request made by the member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso and at this time the debate will not be granted.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, be read the third time and passed.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, when we adjourned for the lunch break I was responding to some of the points made by the hon. parliamentary secretary while speaking in support of the bill. I was just commencing comment on his statements on the role of my colleague, the member for Dartmouth, in the discussions on this bill that have taken place.

The hon. parliamentary secretary stated quite clearly that my colleague has in fact not well represented his constituents and that he is responsible for the matter of parity of pay between east coast ships' crews' workers and west coast ships' crews' workers not being granted.

I had alluded to the failure of the memory of the hon. parliamentary secretary. He is well aware that it is my colleague from Dartmouth who was responsible for ensuring to the best of his efforts that pay equity would be a given, that it would not be something that would be referred to the conciliation board, that it would be decided and accepted by the President of the Treasury Board before the conciliation board was even struck, before the conciliation board even met, and that it would not be included in the matters to be decided by the conciliation board.

My colleague, the member for Dartmouth, had assured those ships' crews' workers that they would finally have—not out of the goodness of the heart of this government but because of the position he took—parity on the signing of this contract, that it would not be used as blackmail or as a tool to pry from them concessions on any other matter to be dealt with in those negotiations.

I think it is unfair of the member who spoke to relate what happened in a way contrary to the events that actually took place. I hope that perhaps he might consider seeking professional advice for the obvious lapse in his memory.

The lapse in his memory has applied to other things as well. I think I am being kind here and within the rules of parliamentary procedure. The member also referred to the meetings of the legislative committee that took place last Sunday at which members of the government were not prepared to accede to the request of members of the Official Opposition for information on the severity of the situation.

Neither he nor his colleagues would accede to our request that we have before us the Minister of Transport who could give first-hand information on the situation in the Seaway, on the situation on the Saguenay River, on the situation in the Great Lakes, and on the situations on the Atlantic coast and on the Pacific coast.

Members of the government were very clear that their intention was to have this committee meet for a matter of a few hours and to have its business over and done with. They would not give permission for the Minister of Veterans Affairs to come before the committee and provide us with accurate information about what was really going on in the Veterans Affairs homes and what was really going on in National Defence hospitals.

The government members of the legislative committee wanted to make sure that a request by the Liberal opposition to hear from the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board was not acceded to. I challenge members of the committee to say that they felt that they were fully aware of the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act and fully aware of labour law and the positions that the courts had taken on various matters relating to collective bargaining within the Public Service.

I certainly did not feel that I was and my colleague from Dartmouth certainly did not feel that he was. We both felt that we needed the counsel of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, the impartial advice of the chairman of that board, to advise us as to the implications of certain aspects of this act. This very clearly interferes with the normal collective bargaining process. This very clearly sets in place a process that abrogates some of the normal rights to negotiate which workers enjoy within the Public Service of Canada.

Government members of the committee had a majority and indicated every intention of using that majority with a heavy hand to ensure that the committee did not have a careful and close look at that bill. They had every intention of ensuring that this bill was reported back on Monday morning to the House, regardless of whether or not the committee had completed its deliberations.

The legislative committee, on Sunday afternoon and Sunday evening, did hear from the Public Service Alliance of Canada, the union representing the workers in both these strikes. The Public Service Alliance of Canada put before the legislative committee certain amendments that it felt did not make this a good bill, did not make it a palatable bill and did not make it a bill that it wanted to see adopted or passed by this House. But it did put before the legislative committee some reasonable amendments that would at least represent a token acknowledgement of the normal process of collective bargaining.

Government members of the legislative committee, with their majority, chose not to consider in detail those recommendations of the union representing 3,600 workers. They simply said: "We have not got time for this. We have not got time to seek the advice of people within the departments, people from the justice department. We have absolutely no way of knowing if these are reasonable amendments or acceptable amendments or not".

They said that in general the amendments did not seem to be a problem. They were not going to give this committee established by this House of Commons the time to consider each of these amendments and to get the advice of professional Public Service employees, advice that would allow us to word the amendments properly, to determine whether in fact they were acceptable to the government.

• (1520)

They were not even prepared to allow that process to take place because they were so anxious to ram through this bill. They were intent on bringing it forward and reporting back to the House on Monday.

I think that is a real abandonment of duty when there are amendments before a legislative committee. The responsibility of a legislative committee is specifically to review in detail the provisions of a bill and to recommend back to the House what if any changes should be made to that bill. It is the obligation of that committee, whether government members or members from this side of the House, to review every clause to assure themselves that that clause is proper, that it accomplishes what it is intended to accomplish, and that it does not put in place something which in fact is going to defeat an otherwise worth–while objective of the legislation.

However, government members of the committee chose not to do that. They quite blatantly said that they did not want to take the time to look at these proposed amendments. They did not even want to consider the representations of the alliance that represents over 160,000 Public Service employees; that is over half the people who work for the Government of Canada. They did not think they had anything worth while to say to us on this. That is certainly not the way the Official Opposition feels about it.

Instead of the careful and due consideration that the Standing Orders require them to give to the bill, government members said that if we wanted to suggest these for consideration they would agree that they be considered and that the appropriate wording would be developed by the government.

We saw yesterday how much consideration they got. The fact is that these amendments were put one by one for discussion by the committee. In every case there was agreement that they would be considered, that an appropriate wording would be worked out, that members such as myself from the opposition on that legislative committee would then have the opportunity to move those amendments in the House, and that perhaps by then the officials of the Treasury Board, of Transport Canada and of the Justice Department, having had due opportunity to consider those amendments, might in fact be prepared to support them.

My hon. colleague across the aisle has suggested that something quite different happened at that legislative committee, but we did have an agreement—and it is recorded in the minutes—on each and every one of those motions. I know because either myself or my colleague from Dartmouth put forward each and every one of those motions for consideration. We did have an agreement that they would be considered and that the wording would be seriously reviewed by the government as to whether they could be incorporated into the legislation. The parliamentary secretary himself made it quite clear that there was no real and serious objection to these amendments.

We obviously have seen that those assurances to the opposition members of the legislative committee really were not taken seriously by the government members of the committee. If they were, we would have had quite a different outcome yesterday afternoon on the amendments and we would have had quite a different bill before us today.

I have dealt with some of the points made by my colleague opposite.

I think it is fairly important in this House that we all try to reflect as fairly and as openly as we can what discussions really have taken place at various times, and not in any way to have a convenient lapse of memory so that we can place our colleagues in an undesirable situation or attempt to place them in an undesirable situation simply to save our own necks.

I want to go now to the words of the Minister of Justice, the hon. government House leader. I took his comments of Monday, December 11, at approximately 11.20 a.m., quite personally because I have been involved in the issues related to this strike since last April, shortly after entering the House of Commons, as Public Service employment critic for the Official Opposition.

The hon. Minister of Justice demanded to know what a member from Ottawa could possibly know about the situation on the east coast, about the situation on the Seaway, about the situation in veterans' homes and hospitals across the country. He demanded to know how the Liberal opposition could possibly be opposing this bill when it should understand, if it had any responsibility at all, how important this bill was.

The member for Ottawa West knows because she listens, something this government does not do. This government could well learn a lesson about listening. This government could well learn a lesson about listening to Canadians when it comes to the punitive effect something like the goods and services tax would have.

I cannot believe that I heard the Prime Minister of Canada stand up in this House today and say that it is okay if well over 1,000 fish plant workers in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and throughout Atlantic Canada are without jobs because we are giving them better unemployment insurance. They do not want unemployment insurance; they want jobs. They want this government to do something to stop its destruction of the fishing industry, its destruction of their livelihood, and its destruction of their very communities. They do not want better unemployment insurance because unemployment insurance is a pitifully low level of income to live on. These people want to live with dignity and they want to know that their government is doing something to save Atlantic Canada from being lopped off from the prosperity that a good part of Canada enjoys and set adrift in the Atlantic Ocean. The government could be listening to that.

The government also could be listening to people when it talks to them about the clawback of seniors' pensions. It could be listening to people who are saying: "We have saved all our lives. We have paid through our taxes for our old age security. We have made plans for our retirement. We have invested in certain ways so that we can enjoy retirement in comfort and not be dependent on the state to support us in our retirement".

It could be listening to pensioners who say: "Yes, I get a little more than I need right now but I know that the likelihood that I am going to die before my wife is very high and I know that my pension dies with me. I know that that leaves her dependent on nothing but old age security and the guaranteed income supplement and, if that is all she has, that still leaves her at a poverty level income".

The government should listen to the pensioner who says: "I have provided for my old age. When my children were little they did without things. When they were in high school they did without things. We lived in a smaller house. We did not have a car. We sacrificed so that now in retirement years we would not have to face poverty". He says: "I do not want my wife to face poverty after I am gone".

What the pensioner says, and what he wants this government to listen to is: "I want to be able to take what I have now that is over and above my immediate needs and to be able to ensure that my wife does not become one of the two-thirds of elderly women who are alone who are living in poverty". This government is robbing those pensioners of that opportunity to provide for their spouses after their death. That is another example of where this government does not listen.

• (1530)

On Monday morning the Minister of Justice challenged my ability to understand the situation. I suggest that it is the Minister of Justice who does not understand the situation. If he and the government understood the situation they would have taken far more seriously the need to negotiate and reach a settlement with their workers, they would have known that the daily cost of this strike is far more than the yearly cost of settling this strike, having these people back to work and happy to be there because they know their government has recognized their right to a basic and decent wage for the work they do.

The member for Ottawa West knows what this strike is about because she listens. She also understands basic democratic rights. These rights are enshrined in the International Declaration of Human Rights. They are rights that are enshrined in other conventions to which this country is signatory. We see those rights being shattered here. They are rights that apply right across this country, whether it is in Bull Harbour on the north tip of Vancouver Island, or in Cambridge Bay where that imaginary line comes down and if you dock on one side of the dock you get $1,600 less for doing the same work than if you dock on the other side, or if it is Hamilton Harbour, the right of workers to organize, to negotiate and, if necessary, to withdraw their services so that they can negotiate for a proper recompense for the work they do is not something that applies to, or depends on, or should depend on, the whims of this House or the whims of the government of the day. These are basic human rights.

They are a basic human right because there are times in every labour situation when the right to withdraw your services becomes the only means of equalizing the balance of power between the employer and the employee. The employer has much power over the employee, the right to hire, the right to fire, the right to promote, the right to lock out and the right to pay less than is required to provide for one's family or for one's own survival. That economic power is a tremendous power. The government has that power over these workers. The only thing they have to counterbalance that power is the right to say "this isn't fair, this isn't just, and I choose not to work for those kinds of wages in those kinds of conditions for this employer".

The member for Ottawa West understands this situation because she recognizes the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. She recognizes the right of people to be paid the same for the work they do if the work they do has the same value. She recognizes the right of women to be paid the same as men for doing the same work. That is one of the fundamental issues at stake in this strike. Without that issue there would be no strike.

Finally, the member for Ottawa West knows enough to listen to her colleagues who have spoken eloquently in this House. If there is any misapprehension on the part of the government, any member of the government, the parliamentary secretary or the President of the Treasury

Board, that the position taken on this side of the House is in any way to continue to prolong a situation that is becoming increasingly grave by the moment, then the minister and the government do not understand the situation.

If there is any misapprehension that somehow my colleagues from Atlantic Canada, the west or along the St. Lawrence Seaway are somehow being dictated to or bludgeoned into accepting the debate on this back to work legislation, who want to see the grain moving, of course they do. People want to see their constituents back to work a couple of weeks before Christmas and having a half decent paycheque coming into the house.

The statement by the Minister of Justice suggests that in fact he has not been listening in this House. If he had been listening, he would have heard the people who represent these workers who live by the ocean and know what 10, 20 and 30-foot waves are like, who know what going out on the ocean in 100-mile-per-hour gales is like, who know what going out on the ocean in 16 degrees below zero is like. The people who have spoken in the House know all these things. They know what is going on in our hospitals because they have been in touch with their constituents.

I have been to the veterans home on Smyth Road in Ottawa. I spent time with those veterans, long before this strike was an issue, long before I knew what hospital service workers were. I spent time in that home and I know the needs of those veterans. I know the ones who are confused and a little out of touch with reality. I know the ones who cannot control their own bodily functions and, therefore, need constant care and attention to ensure that they have basic cleanliness. I also know the people who look after them. I know that this job is not done for the miserable $16,000, $17,000 or $18,000 a year they get paid. It is a job that is done out of love and compassion and caring and wanting these people in their retirement years to be well looked after.

There are people at this home who have spent virtually their whole working life there because it is work that is meaningful and matters to them. I can almost believe that the government knows that is the way they feel about their work, that their patients matter to them, whether they are working in the laundry making sure the sheets are clean, in the tailor shop to keep things in good repair, in the kitchen to prepare nutritious and tasty meals, or whether they are stripping the soiled bedsheets and making sure the elderly patient is clean and comfortable.

I cannot help but wonder if the government does not know that they do those jobs out of love and real concern for those patients and that, therefore, they withdraw their services very reluctantly, and despite the low wages they will continue to work in that job because they are dedicated and committed. For nearly a decade they have been waiting for fair recognition of the value of work they do, despite a decision of the Human Rights Commission in 1987 that these people have been underpaid by, at that time, an interim amount of $28 million. This was not something the government did out of the kindness of their heart. It was simply returning to them what was and should have been theirs by rights all along. The member for Ottawa West understands perfectly the issues before us today and for the last week.

• (1540)

I want to go back to the words of the Minister of Justice on Monday morning. I want to go through them very carefully and point out just how lacking his own understanding is of the issue. He states at page 6725 of Hansard:

> I think everyone—except if one lives in a large city in central Ontario such as Ottawa—who has any experience with the weather and the transportation system in this country appreciates the dangers of the oceans at this time of year.

Well, yes we do. All my colleagues from Halifax, Dartmouth, Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and New Brunswick have spoken eloquently on this matter. What they fail to understand is why the government does not understand these dangers. We raised these matters in the House before the strike ever began, and several times since and the government has not understood the urgency of reaching a settlement that would get these people back to work.

My colleague from Dartmouth, particularly, asked about the 1,700 lobster fishermen putting out to sea at a dangerous time of year and under dangerous circumstances because there is a great rush to get to those lobster grounds. It can be dangerous. There is no question about that. The minister was not concerned about that. His reply in the House indicated clearly that he was not concerned. I think that was the day he talked about contingency plans being in place to take care of any eventuality.

It is obvious there were not contingency plans or we would not be dealing with this legislation today. Again, I am confused about whether the ocean became more dangerous before this bill was introduced last week than it had been the day before or the day the strike began, or than it had been two weeks before the strike began when we raised the issue in the House, or than it had been, in fact, two years ago when this contract expired and throughout the two years since when it has been subject to negotiation.

I think we in the Official Opposition well understand the dangers of the sea. The member for Ottawa West has not experienced it personally but she certainly listens to and is supported by colleagues who have.

The Minister of Justice also talked about the possibility of some 41 ships, which would be a record, that could be caught in the seaway as a result of the actions of the Liberal and NDP parties stalling this legislation. The one inevitable result of being a Canadian is that you prepare for winter. Every year winter comes. Every winter it gets colder. Every year ice forms on the waterways. Every year it snows. If there is anybody who lives in this country and does not know that, they obviously have not been outside in 100 years.

Mr. Harvard: You haven't been to Winnipeg, Marlene.

Mrs. Catterall: Yes, I have stood at the corner of Portage and Main and I do know that that corner exemplifies what Canadian winters are all about. In case the government did not know that, we made a point of letting them know. We let them know before this strike began. Before the government thought of this legislation, we made a point of letting them know. My colleague from Leeds—Grenville did stand up and remind the government that there is $6 million worth of navigational aids in the St. Lawrence Seaway and that if those aids are not brought in before winter, they are lost. They are destroyed by the ice.

I guess the government did not hear him, or chose not to respond. It certainly had many, many weeks after we were aware of the problems to make itself aware of the problems and to get back to the bargaining table and say: "We had better get these people back to work". It chose not to do that.

The minister on Monday also said: "It doesn't bother anybody from Ottawa because they don't have empathy for the people out on ships." I think I have said enough on that particular point. The Official Opposition well understands that the government obviously does not care about the problems of people out on ships.

Then the Minister of Justice said: "Maybe I could ask the member from Ottawa to have some concern for our veterans and the people in veterans hospitals." If I did not have personal experience at those veterans hospitals, I only had to listen to the co-workers of the hospital services workers from Ste. Anne de Bellevue in Montreal who came to this city yesterday to show their support for the hospital services workers who work with them. These were not the people on strike. These are the professionals—the nurses, the dietitians, the doctors, the X-ray technicians. They are not on strike. They are the ones who are keeping the hospital running. They are the ones who are working 12 and 13-hour shifts, being bribed, cajoled, coerced and threatened into crossing picket lines and keeping the hospital going, working to the point of exhaustion.

They are the members of the Professional Institute of the Public Service of Canada, the union whose president wrote a letter to the President of the Treasury Board. The President of the Treasury Board used that letter in this House to imply that the professional workers in that union were in support of this back to work legislation. In fact, what they were supporting and urging was that the government get back to the bargaining table to recognize the legitimate claims of these hospital services workers and to reach a settlement with them.

The people who came here from Montreal yesterday to sit in and watch this debate, to meet with myself and with other members of the Official Opposition, came because they completely understand the value, which the government does not, of the work these workers perform, its importance to veterans in Canada living out their last years in those homes. They understand that their work as nurses is much more difficult. In fact, it is impossible without the assistance of nurses aids.

The dietitians understand that their work is impossible and meaningless without the support of the dietary assistants who are among the workers on strike. The nurses know that if there are no clean sheets to put on the bed, their patients will not be healthy and will not be comfortable.

They came here yesterday because they have seen those workers on the picket line for two weeks in freezing temperatures. They know them personally. They know how much the families suffer from lack of adequate income. They wanted to show their opposition to this piece of legislation, and their support for the government's return to the bargaining table, where it has not been since Sunday afternoon, and has not successfully been for over two years. They want this strike settled so things in their hospital can get back to normal.

They talked to me about the cost of keeping that hospital running without these workers. The cost being incurred by the government and the wastage of taxpayers' dollars to keep the hospital running without the hospital services workers exceeds the cost of settling the strike.

The Minister of Justice said: "If my hon. friend from Ottawa thinks that veterans should be inconvenienced that way, then I hope members have it in their hearts to think about other people." I challenge this government to think about other people. I challenge the Minister of Justice not to sit there and lecture me about thinking about other people. The Minister of Justice said: "I see some members here who represent ridings with people at risk on the seas, and I don't know how they are going to face their people back home if there are any accidents." The Minister of Justice knows perfectly well that the ships' crews workers on strike, those people represented by my colleagues about whom he was talking, have gone above and beyond the call of duty. They have ignored the heartless and arrogant way in which they have been treated by this government in not reaching a settlement. They have ignored all that and put the welfare of their fellow citizens first. They have kept themselves ready 24 hours a day, leaving home to be where they could be ready on a moment's notice to put out to sea, whatever the weather, and to respond to any emergency calls.

• (1550)

There are people working full time through this strike because they figured out that that was necessary to ensure the safety of those who put out to sea. Do you know what they are doing? They are not collecting their salaries, but are turning them over to the Public Service Alliance. They are accepting strike pay just as their other colleagues who are on strike because they do not want the fact that they are working to protect the public to put them in a better economic situation than those who are on strike and fighting for their rights.

That kind of self-sacrifice has been evident in other ways throughout this strike. It shows that the workers have a better understanding of the needs of their colleagues than the government. The west coast workers have said that they are prepared to accept a wage increase in this contract that is below what the rest of the Public Service is getting, provided their colleagues on the east coast, who take the same risks and have the same responsibilities, get the same wage.

They know that it is not right that one person's life is considered more important and more valuable than another. They know it is not right that if you live in Halifax the responsibilities and the risks you take are worth less than if you live in Vancouver. They know that able seamen in the private sector are now getting well over 40 per cent more than they or their colleagues are getting. They want to see those inequities corrected.

If the Minister of Justice wants to talk about those members who have constituents at sea and to tell them that they "just might think about that", he should be aware that they have just thought about that, thank you very much. I think it is the government who should just think about that.

Then the Minister of Justice chose to talk about Kingston and chose to point out to the members on this side of the House that Kingston is on the Seaway. We know that. We have the member for Kingston and the Islands and the government does not any more.

He pointed out that there is the odd big ship going by Kingston, just in case the members for Ottawa do not know that. Well, we know that because we talk to our colleagues on this side of the House.

Then he said: "In case of an accident—". What has the government done "in case of an accident"? How has it let things get to this stage?

The minister even went so far as to suggest that the member for Kingston and other members along the Seaway might talk to the members from Ottawa and tell them that it may be a big thrill to hold up legislation that puts people back to work, but if you live somewhere where there is risk at sea, you might have a better appreciation for it.

I wonder what kind of big thrill the government, the Minister of Justice, the President of the Treasury Board and the parliamentary secretary who spoke to us this morning are getting out of hammering people who are earning $16,000, $17,000, $18,000 and $19,000 a year, withholding from them salaries that they are entitled to, salaries to feed and clothe and house their children properly. Is the thrill of the exercise of power so tantalizing that you cannot even see justice in the situation, that you cannot move to give these people justice? Are you prepared to risk the shipment of grains from the prairies? Are you prepared to risk a chemical transport ship in the St. Lawrence? Are you prepared to risk, hon. parliamentary secretary, those people setting out on the high seas from your own community?

I have to ask: where has the Minister of Transport been in all of this? He was not allowed to come before the legislative committee. How strong were the submissions he made to the President of the Treasury Board about the need to settle this strike? Was he anticipating the closure of the Seaway? Was he anticipating more than 100 ships being trapped in the St. Lawrence Seaway or in the Great Lakes at a cost of millions of dollars a day? How did he think he was going to cope with that when he was standing here telling the House that there was no problem with safety and security.

We did not hear from the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Where has he been for the last two years? Has he been encouraging the President of the Treasury Board to settle this strike? Has he been speaking on behalf of the people who run his department's veterans homes? Where has he been while these workers have been dragged through the courts instead of being at a negotiating table and dealt with fairly?

The Minister of Justice, in what my grandmother liked to call "high dudgeon" says: "I did not want to speak for so long." Well, I don't either, Mr. Speaker, but I am going to. The Minister of Justice said: "I got incensed at the insensitivity of members opposite". Where is the sensitivity of the members on that side of the House? Where is the sensitivity of members toward workers who have won the legal right through the Human Rights Commission to equitable pay and still do not have it two years after that Human Rights Commission decision?

The Minister was talking about "political posturing, which may gain some points in Ottawa". If we have ever seen political posturing there has been two years of it through these negotiations and through these people not having a contract settled with their employer, the Government of Canada. There has been political posturing that promises, tantalizingly, that there will be a settlement of this pay equity issue. There has been political posturing, dragging the issue through the courts instead of sitting down and solving it. There has been political posturing that somehow the government thinks the public of this country will support that the lowest paid workers in the federal public service are going to continue to be underpaid, are going to continue to be paid less than colleagues doing exactly the same work. And not a little bit less, but an average of $3,000 a year less.

One person involved in that human rights tribunal settlement was paid $40,000. That is the amount by which that person had been underpaid. That is the amount of money that family had been deprived of and, despite that human rights tribunal ruling, members opposite are quite content to sit there and let that unfairness and that inequity go on, to let those workers continue to be deprived of a fair wage level to which they are entitled. Now that is political posturing.

• (1600)

The minister wondered at the stalling of the opposition parties. We are not talking about stalling. We are talking about a few days of honest and fair debate on this matter. Stalling? I will move on to stalling in a moment and the people can be the judge of who is stalling.

The government has moved closure at every stage of this bill. It has moved time allocation, and used every rule it can use to limit debate to as little time as it can possibly get away with. We are not stalling. We are not the ones who have been sitting at the bargaining table and playing with people's lives. We are not the ones who have been taking people to court and delaying that whole bargaining process even getting started. We are not the ones who sit in a legislative committee and say: "We do not have time to take seriously the representations and the motions put forward by the union that represents over 160,000 people who work for the Government of Canada". This is a shameful example for the largest employer in this country to be setting for other employers.

I want to read a letter I received, because I think this kind of letter speaks far more eloquently than I can. It comes from a person in Atlantic Canada who writes on behalf of herself and her family. She is the wife of a ships' crew worker who is on strike. She writes, "Your speech warmed my heart, to see that someone in government cares about us. The so-called leaders of our country feel that we are the little people and should be paid and kept the little people".

I will just read a few of the more poignant sentences from this letter. "My wish is that the government members who are against us would have to spend a month on strike, especially at Christmas, with no pay and children wondering if they will have a Christmas. This is the time of the year for goodwill, something the Progressive Conservatives do not have, or even know what it is". She says, "I am ashamed that the member of Parliament for the region I live in is a government member and after talking to us voted against us". That is the feeling of the people in Atlantic Canada. I think the parliamentary secretary would know that better than anyone.

I have accused the government of stalling, and I think it is important that I expand on that statement so the members of the caucus can judge for themselves whether they think their ministers, in particular those involved in this whole negotiating process, have acted fairly. I urge them to listen carefully, because if they do not think this is a fair process, they have an obligation on behalf of their own constituents to urge the President of the Treasury Board or through him, the parliamentary secretary, or the Minister of Transport, or the Minister of Veterans Affairs or the Minister of Public Works, or the Minister of National Defence and the ministers of several other departments for whom these people work, to get to the bargaining table to deal fairly with people, to settle this strike in the way a good, responsible employer settles it, by negotiating, not by forcing people to work.

If the government does feel people's services are essential to the safety and security of Canadians, it has the legal tool to ensure that those essential public services continue. That tool is called designating people. The government has the ability to designate people as "essential". But in its arrogance, in its sloppiness, in what was called by the Public Service Staff Relations Board its own administrative negligence—and the Public Service Staff Relations Board had a few other choice words—this government failed to do that. Now, that is irresponsible.

The government knows when a contract with its employees is going to end. Most contracts are for four years, so from the moment a contract is signed it knows when that contract is going to end. The government knows that after the end of that contract, when the union has given notice that it wishes to begin bargaining a new contract, it has 20 days in which to designate those employees it wishes to have declared as "essential" employees. That is a tool the government has to keep people from going on strike and to keep them from withdrawing their services as a bargaining tool. Every department involved with essential services employees failed to meet that deadline. Treasury Board and the President of the Treasury Board failed to make sure that that legal requirement was met.

Once you realize that you have goofed, you admit it and say, "Okay, now what can we do to deal with the situation?" The thing to do is recognize that negotiations have started. And having bungled, you had better darn well sit down at the bargaining table and try to solve your problem another way. In early 1987 the government knew that it had failed to use the one tool it had to stop these people from going on strike. It knew that it had broken the law, that the winter of 1989 was coming, that negotiations were coming and that it had a couple of options.

At that point the government could have said, "Okay, we have goofed. What contingency plans can we put in place to make sure that those essential services continue if we do not reach a successful conclusion, if we do not manage to settle with these people and if they do exercise their legal rights, which we have left them, to go on strike?" That, it seems to me, would be a responsible approach by the government. The government should say, "Okay, the minister should take charge of this". The minister should say, "We have goofed. How are we going to handle our goof? How are we going to make up for it? How are we going to make sure it does not hurt the Canadian people"?

In fact the minister, weeks after the strike had started, was still denying that there was any problem. If there is no problem, why do we have this legislation in front of us? The government did not choose to take the productive path and say, "How can we manage responsibly and how can we ensure that things are done properly and that the public is protected"? Instead, the government said, "How can we get these workers? How can we put it to them? How can we skewer them? How can we prevent them from exercising their legal right"? The government spent over a year and a half doing that, instead of trying to settle this before it became a problem.

• (1610)

The government went to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and said, "Yes, we know we did not listen to the law and we know we missed our deadline but we still want to designate these people. We really do not want to have to deal fairly and up front with people who are on strike because we know we will be under a little bit of pressure to reach a settlement. We did not do what we were supposed to do but we want you to let us do it now". The Public Service Staff Relations Board, unfortunately, said, "All right".

The government has ignored this law before. It said Parliament did not really mean "shall", when it said "shall". Surely Parliament does not mean to tell the Treasury Board what it must do. Surely Treasury Board and the President of the Treasury Board are above and beyond the laws of Parliament when it says "shall" be done within 20 days.

But this time the union got smart. This time the union took them to court and asked the court to rule on whether "shall" means "shall" or may, or could, or might if you want to, or if you get around to it, or if you feel like it. This time the court said that when Parliament says "shall", it means "shall". It does not mean that it is your option, it is your choice Charlie Brown, do it if you feel like it, but do not worry too much about it because it is just a law of Parliament. The court said that when Parliament says "shall", it means you must do it. That is what any other normal citizen understands by "shall" in law. It means it is something I have to do, but the government does not seem to understand that.

Despite this, the Treasury Board then went back to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and tried to argue that it should be allowed to designate these people anyway. Of course, the Public Service Staff Relations Board, faced with a court decision said, "I am sorry, but the courts are very clear. You have not done what the law says you must do and therefore you cannot designate these workers as essential workers". It had some very unpleasant and very critical things to say about the way the government had handled this whole situation.

Mr. Speaker, you would have thought Treasury Board, back in June, would have said, "We better get on with the business of planning for a strike contingency. We better get on with the business of sitting down and seriously bargaining with these people". Oh no. Treasury Board controls the purse strings and so Treasury Board was able to say, "How many thousands of dollars—is it tens of thousands or is it hundreds of thousands—will it take us to drag this out for another three or four months and let it get into September before we have to start doing any contingency planning?". So they took it back through the courts to say, "Surely, you didn't really mean 'shall' means 'shall'. Surely, you really meant that we can do it anyway". The court simply reiterated its earlier decision and finally in September said to Treasury Board, "No, we meant what we told you in the first place. When Parliament says 'shall', Parliament means 'shall'. It does not mean you can mess around with it and do whatever you want".

What had happened in that period of time was that settlements had been reached with the Public Service Alliance and the bargaining groups across the country were voting on the aspects of the agreement that pertained to them. It was either late May or early June when the government knew that the hospital services workers said "no" to this agreement. The ships' crews workers said no to this agreement. They said no for some very good reasons.

You would think a wise employer would say, "I had better get serious about this bargaining business and find out what it is they really want and how we can sit down and reach a settlement with them so they will be back to work. We will then not have a disruption of essential services or a disruption of grain shipments. We will not have an undermining of international confidence in the St. Lawrence Seaway. I would think that that is important as we are trying to build up our trade and signing new export wheat deals with Russia and other countries. I think it is kind of important that the reliability of the Seaway be well known internationally and that the international companies and the international markets know they can trust us". Apparently this is not important to the government. Instead of spending June, July, August and September when a settlement of this could have been reached, they chose to again go off to the courts at great cost to the taxpayers of Canada. I am sure you can imagine how these trips back and forth to the courts would poison the atmosphere for negotiations.

Is it any wonder that in October, when a conciliation board was finally appointed to try to reach agreement between these two parties it could not reach agreement? It just said, "The two sides are too far apart. There is no possibility of a settlement here." That is one part of the story. That is the part of the story that applies to both of these groups and, I must say, it also applies to a third group. Remember the welfare program workers, the parole officers inside our prisons, the training officers inside our prisons? They were on strike, too. They were on strike for very much the same reasons. The government had dragged them back and forth through the courts instead of sitting down at the bargaining table and negotiating in good faith.

The other side of the story is the hospital service workers. Although it will not do any good in this debate, because we know that the government has every intention of forcing this legislation through and that there are no open minds, open hearts or open ears even, I suspect, on the other side of the House. This issue of pay equity for the hospital service workers has been around for a long time. Going back to last spring I have had substantial correspondence with the President of Treasury Board on this problem.

The issue really is that people who are doing identical work are being paid different amounts of money, and substantially different amounts of money. That is contrary to the Canadian Charter of Human Rights and Freedoms. It is contrary to the pay equity policy that this government enforces on private sector employers and it is not a matter of debate. Or is it? It has been to the Human Rights Tribunal. It has been decided that, in fact, one group of workers called "hospital service workers" do the same work as another group of workers called "general service workers" but they do not get paid the same. One of the reasons they do not get paid the same is because it is largely a female group.

That is a fundamental problem of pay equity. It is why, in the government, women get paid 67 cents for every dollar a man earns. It is why women do not get into senior management positions at the same rate as men do. It is why, after 10 years, women are still not getting promoted in the scientific and professional categories. They are still at exactly the same state as they were at in 1976 despite policies, laws, and stated good intentions from the other side of the House. That is a reality for women. They do not get paid as much for the work they do.

They pay the same price for a loaf of bread. They pay the same price for a car. They pay more for a haircut. But, for the basic necessities of life they pay the same price as men but they do not earn as much to pay for them. So, they do without things more than the population, in general, does.

I wrote the President of Treasury Board about this first in July of 1989. It is over two years since the Canadian Human Rights Tribunal ruled this way. What has been done to give these people the classifications and the wages they deserve? He wrote back and told me all the bureaucratic hoops that this has been going through for two years. It was, I must say, a very informative and helpful letter that helped me understand why bureaucracies do not always get things done that are fair and just and right.

• (1620)

I wrote back and said: "It does not seem fair to me that in the time these people have been trying to seek justice, many of their children have grown from pre-schoolers to adolescents. They have done without and they have been deprived of many of those things and many of those comforts that children should have as they are growing up, because their mothers and fathers are not getting paid what they deserve". The Human Rights Tribunal has said that. I am not making this up. I am not pulling it out of the air. I am not on some rant and rave about equal pay for work of equal value. We have got the Human Rights Tribunal saying this.

What I was questioning was this idea of equalization payments. I thought when the Human Rights Tribunal said people should get paid the same amount as certain other people, that it meant they should get paid the same amount. But that is not the way they do it in government. They do not give them the wage to which they are entitled. They give them their same old wage and then they add what we call an equalization payment on top. The problem with the equalization payment, of course, is that it does not roll into the contributions to their pension. It does not roll into the amount of pension they are entitled to and it does not, in fact, have the same status as wages.

Therefore, you have these workers, even though they are getting more money through equalization payments, which by the way, they are not getting yet, even two and a half years later. But even if they were getting them, they would still end up poorer when they are old, as compared to other workers doing exactly the same work.

The President of the Treasury Board wrote to me and said: "We cannot deal with wages under the Canadian Human Rights Act, only under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, because that is where wages are negotiated". Well, I kind of knew that. I wondered why these negotiations that have been going on for two years had not managed to come to grips with this issue. That is where these things should be dealt with, at the bargaining table. Yet the employer, knowing full well that this was a crucial issue for which these hospital services workers had been fighting for nearly nine years, that is a fair wage, as the Human Rights Tribunal had said they should be receiving, refused to address that issue in its bargaining. It has known for two years that if that issue was not addressed, there would be a strike.

So do not accuse me of being insensitive to the needs of the veterans in our hospitals. Where have the government members who have veterans homes in their ridings been? Where has the Minister of National Defence been while the needs of these workers have been ignored? Where has the Minister of Veterans Affairs been while this issue has been sitting on a shelf, going through layers and layers of bureaucracy?

In 1987, $28 million was paid to these people. That was not the gracious gift of a generous government. It is the amount by which they had been underpaid. The President of the Treasury Board stood in the House and said: "We have got another $10 million". Well, that is what he told me in a letter back in August, that there was $10 million, and that the departments had been instructed to get this out to these people as another interim payment, not a final settlement by any means of the problem or the decision of the tribunal, but as an interim payment. It still has not been done. I ask, why not? Is that $10 million being held over their heads? Has it been withheld from them deliberately for over four months, in fact for over two years, as a bludgeon, a pry, as some way of forcing them to accept less than a fair settlement? That is the only conclusion I can come to. It is their money and it should be in their hands. It should be putting shoes and clothes on the feet and the backs of their children and food on the table, not sitting in government coffers gaining interest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I do not mean to interrupt the hon. member but I notice that the clock is working now and according to the order that was passed earlier would suggest that we have to put the question at a quarter to the hour. I am wondering whether the hon. member would indicate whether she is prepared to conclude her remarks so that a member of the New Democratic Party can participate at third reading stage, because the vote has to be put at a quarter to five.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I hear some members saying that this is not a point of order. Technically speaking, it is not a point of order. It is more in the form of a question to the member who has the floor. I will hear the member for Halifax West. I gather that it is on the same point.

Mr. Crosby: In a sense. On the same point of order, if it relates to speaking time, because it may well be that the member from Ottawa West does intend to wind up her remarks. Before she does I thought it might be important to clarify a matter which has arisen in debate, that is, between the hon. member and myself.

Mrs. Catterall: Let him take his turn.

Mr. Crosby: I thought you needed a rest.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa West has the floor.

Mrs. Catterall: I must say that I do appreciate that the letters from the President of the Treasury Board are always informative, always accurate and always complete. But, I do not always like what they say.

What the President of the Treasury Board said I found quite disturbing. He said, "Unlike the pay equity legislation in Manitoba and Ontario, there is no requirement for a collective agreement to be re-opened and negotiated wages to be incorporated and pay equity to be incorporated through negotiated wages". The President of Treasury Board also says, "Our legislative provisions do not demand a corrective process when there is a matter of pay equity".

I have said this a number of times in this House and I am going to keep on saying it. I think the government, as the largest employer in the country, on environmental issues and on issues of equity, has an obligation to do not the minimum the law demands but the maximum that justice demands. I have no tolerance for a government that says it is not going to be fair and it is not going to be just because the law does not say it has to.

There have been interjections from the other side of the aisle about the problems being created. I shall conclude, when I conclude, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Angus: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I fully appreciate that the standing orders, the rules of this House, allow the official spokesperson for the Official Opposition to have unlimited time. I accept that as one of the rules. However, we are in a closure situation and I just want to point out that clearly what the Liberals are planning on doing is preventing the New Democratic Party from speaking on this important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the same point of order, the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to get into an argument with the hon. member, but I could quote a number of instances in the past when a similar request was made but the roles were reversed, and the member who was speaking at the time refused to oblige. He said: I am sorry, but it's not my fault, I have the floor, and I have a few more things to say. So I am not anxious to hear about all the precedents, but there are precedents. That's just the way it is.

• (1630)

[English]

Tough luck, but that's life. She has the floor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Ottawa West has the floor.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I think by this action, by bringing in this legislation and by its absolutely intransigent bull-headedness and stupidity over the last two years the government has probably done more for collective bargaining in the Public Service and more for worker solidarity than has been done in many decades. It has brought a cohesiveness to these workers that I think they have never felt before. Often it is true of the lowest paid workers in any environment that they find it hard to come together, to work together and to feel good about their association with each other because they are too worried about the necessities of life. But I think the government by its actions has in fact brought these workers together. They are out there in the freezing cold on the picket lines. They are determined to support each other until there is a reasonable and equitable settlement of these contracts.

That is what happens when you try to beat people into submission. I do not know why this government always picks on the lowest paid workers. I do not know why it is always the clerks at the bottom salary scales in government who go out on strike and get left there for month after month. I think it is because the government knows that strike pay is no picnic and you can only survive so long when you earn so little and you have so little saved because everything goes on the necessities of life. So it is easy to pick on these vulnerable workers, the ones who work in the laundries, in the sewing shops and in the kitchens of the hospitals, and the ones who go out to sea for miserable, lousy wages that this government should be ashamed to pay.

We have heard about the problems being created by this strike. We are well aware of the problems being created by this strike. Those problems are on the head of this government because it refuses to treat its employees with decency, with dignity and with the respect of sitting down across from them at the bargaining table with a determination to reach a just settlement.

Private sector employers are learning lessons that this government needs to learn, that bargaining with people and a co-operative relationship with your workers is more productive, more satisfying and a more profit-producing way to go than to hammer them with your power. This government needs to learn that lesson, but it has not. It prefers to treat this like a game in which winning is more important than solving problems.

I do not know who gets the kicks out of this. I do not understand the President of the Treasury Board sitting in this chamber saying: "I am waiting for the union to call me. All they have to do is pick up the phone". He is the employer. It is his responsibility. It is several ministers' responsibility to make sure that service to the Canadian public continues and that people are paid a decent wage for the work they do.

The government has created this problem. I do not think it is fooling anybody when the problem has been in its hands for over two years. It has known it was there. It has chosen to do nothing. It has chosen to waste taxpayers' dollars going to court. It has chosen to leave ships tied up on the Seaway and on the Great Lakes to the tune of $2 million a day. It has chosen to waste $6 million worth of navigational aids on the Seaway by having them destroyed by ice rather than getting people back to work.

I doubt if many members on the opposite side even know that this will cause problems this spring when the Department of Transport will not have enough navigational aids in the spring to start the ships moving through the Seaway. It is irresponsible to suggest that the responsibility for that lies anywhere except with the government side of this House.

Despite this and despite the fact that normally the opposition would not support back to work legislation, but at least assist its quick passage, we have chosen not to do that. We have done that because we know it is the government's fault that this situation has arisen. We will not co-operate in the breakdown of collective bargaining in the public service.

We did have discussions with the government and the other party in opposition about how we could expedite this legislation and try to use the seriousness of the situation to try to get this legislation improved to the point where we would be prepared to give up a few hours of debate and let it go through. The government failed to do that.

I want to spend just a couple of minutes on the amendments that were wanted to this legislation, amendments that the union representing these employees wanted.

Very simply, it wanted recognition of the bargaining agent as the party to the collective agreement. The government somehow forgot and left that out. In the legislation it sets up the individual employees as the other party with the employer to the collective agreement. That is not what the courts have ruled. The Public Service Alliance wanted what it believed to be an oversight corrected. We thought the government was agreeable to that, that, in fact, it was an oversight and it should be corrected.

The union wanted the ability, which is theirs legally, to agree to the chair of the conciliation board. They did not want to go into a situation where the government had picked two out of the three members of the board. For heaven's sake, who would go into a stacked game like that?

If the government had any fairness and any willingness to send these people back to work with a shred of hope that they might be able to get a decent settlement out of this binding conciliation process, it would have agreed to that.

It would have agreed that the matter of pay equity would be referred to this conciliation board. But it did not.

It would have agreed that parity between the east and west coast workers would be settled before this conciliation board started its work.

It would have agreed that this contract should not be allowed to go on for whatever indeterminate period and it would have amended that clause to make it clear that this contract had to conform with the other contracts in place in the Public Service of Canada.

We had discussions, and I would not have referred to them in the House today if the parliamentary secretary had not done so. I am going to put on the record what happened in those discussions.

We had discussions throughout Monday to say: "Look, if you will accept these amendments which at the legislative committee you agreed were reasonable, but which we just did not have time to consider the details of, then we are prepared to expedite passage of this bill. We are prepared to agree that it can go through quickly and that the ships can be put back to work, the people can get back to work in the veterans' homes and hospitals with a bill that is not good, not acceptable, not palatable—that is in fact outrageous after the government's two years of bungling—but they can get back to work with a bill that at least gives them a chance of coming out with a decent settlement".

These issues were all agreed to on Monday. We felt that we had achieved for those workers out there changes to this bill that were going to give them at least a half decent chance of getting a fair settlement, not something that was imposed by conciliation boards dominated by government appointees. Do you know what one sticking point was, Mr. Speaker? The President of the Treasury Board was not prepared to unequivocally say that the matter of pay equity was before the conciliation board. This is the question of the wage equity that these people have been waiting for since 1981.

• (1640)

These are the amendments that the government members opposite voted against yesterday. The amendments recognized the bargaining agent as a party to the agreement and set up a fair conciliation board where all parties agree on whom the chair will be. These amendments recognized that all parties are equal in that process. They would have set up a situation in which there would be pay equity, and would get rid of an open-ended section that could have had the contract go on for five, six, seven, eight or nine years unlike contracts in the rest of the Public Service.

The people who really blew it for the workers in this case are the members of the New Democratic Party. I regret very much that members of the New Democratic Party, knowing that this bill was going to go through by tonight at the latest, were not prepared to say: "We want to get a bill that is better for the workers. We want pay equity on the table. We want the issue of parity between the east coast and the west coast off the table. We want that settled and not a matter for negotiation. It is a matter of right. We want to see a matter for a balanced conciliation board."

We resent that they chose not to send a member of Parliament into those negotiations, but that they chose to send a staff person. That will never happen again.

We resent that the Leader of the New Democratic Party in Nova Scotia was misrepresenting the nature of those negotiations to a couple of hundred ships crews workers in Halifax earlier this week. We resent that the New Democrats were implying—and I want this on the record—that the Liberal opposition was talking to the government without them being involved at all. We had no negotiations and no discussions that they were not involved in. They misled the leader of their party in Nova Scotia. She, in turn, unknowingly misled the ships' crews workers in Halifax.

Those ships' crews workers know who has been standing up in this House fighting for them long before their strike even started.

I regret very much that the members of the government yesterday chose to be vindictive by saying: "We didn't get our way and so we're not going to agree to amendments that we know are perfectly reasonable, perfectly rational, fair and just." They chose to say: " We're going to take our bats and balls and go home because we didn't get our way." That is wrong.

They know those amendments were right. When vindictiveness gets to the point where the minister responsible for the status of women can sit there and not support a motion that is in favour of the issue of pay equity being put before a conciliation board, which is the only place it can be included, then I wonder who in this Parliament and who in this government speaks for the women of Canada and is responsible for the status of women in Canada.

The arrogance, the vindictiveness and the meanness of this government throughout these negotiations and its willingness to pick on the most vulnerable people has become its hallmark. The people out there know that that is what is happening.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am impressed that the hon. member has dared to let me have a minute—a minute—to rebut the charges she has made.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Angus: The hon. member who has just spoken at length saying the same thing over again in order to prevent the New Democratic Party from responding to the charges that she laid in this House about what we did and what we said—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have a number of points of order.

[Translation]

By seniority, the hon. member for Saint-Denis comes first.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely shocked at the hon. member's insinuations about our colleague's intentions. We all know this is highly irregular and against the Standing Orders of this House, and if he would care to rise in the House and apologize—-

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to order made Tuesday, December 12, 1989, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the bill now before the House.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 157)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Belsher
Bertrand	Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Blenkarn
Bosley	Bouchard (Roberval)
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)	Brightwell
Browes	Cadieux
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)	Cardiff
Casey	Chadwick
Charest	Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)	Cole
Collins	Cook
Cooper	Corbeil
Corbett	Côté
Couture	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Crosby (Halifax West)	Darling
DeBlois	de Cotret
Della Noce	Desjardins
Dobbie	Domm
Dorin	Duplessis
Edwards	Fee
Feltham	Ferland
Fontaine	Fretz
Friesen	Gérin
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene	Grey (Beaver River)
Guilbault	Gustafson
Halliday	Hawkes
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
Jacques	James
Johnson	Jourdenais
Kempling	Koury
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Littlechild
Loiselle	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Mazankowski	McCreath
McKnight	Merrithew
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
O'Kurley	Plourde
Porter	Pronovost
Redway	Reimer
Ricard	Richardson
Robitaille	Roy-Arcelin
Schneider	Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Soetens	Stevenson
Tardif	Tétreault
Thacker	Thompson
Thorkelson	Tremblay (Rosemont)
Tremblay (Québec-Est)	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Halton—Peel)	Van de Walle
Vankoughnet	Venne
Vien	Vincent
Weiner	Wenman
White	Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Winegard	Worthy—129

NAYS

Members

Althouse	Angus
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)	Baker
Barrett	Bellemare
Berger	Black
Blackburn (Brant)	Blondin
Boudria	Caccia
Campbell (South West Nova)	Catterall
Clancy	Copps
Crawford	Dionne
Duhamel	Ferguson
Finestone	Flis
Gagliano	Gauthier
Gray (Windsor West)	Harb
Harvard	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins	Hunter
Karpoff	Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Kristiansen	Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Lee	MacLellan
McCurdy	McLaughlin
Milliken	Mitchell
Murphy	Nault
Nunziata	Nystrom
Pagtakhan	Parent
Parker	Peterson
Phinney	Proud
Rideout	Riis
Robinson	Speller
Stupich	Vanclief
Wappel	Whittaker
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—61

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

HEALTH

ELECTRO-MAGNETIC FIELDS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of studying the effects of electro-magnetic fields created by high voltage power lines on human and animal health and reporting the findings to the House.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the issue of electro-magnetic fields created by high voltage power lines and its effect on human and animal health is one of some interest to Canadians wherever they live when their residences are located near these power lines.

In researching this issue I found that in 1984 the World Health Organization produced a report which concluded that "it would be prudent in the present state of scientific knowledge not to make unqualified statements about the safety of intermittent exposure to electric fields".

The report also indicated: "It is recommended that efforts be made to limit exposure, particularly of members of the general population, to levels as low as can be reasonably achieved". You can see how carefully worded the conclusions of the WHO report are.

In September 1986 we discovered that the New York State health department launched some 16 studies to investigate possible links between high voltage lines and cancer among children living near such power lines. The conclusion of these studies were published in July 1987 and indicated that children with leukaemia or brain cancer are more likely than healthy children to be living in homes where the exposure to the magnetic fields generated by electric power lines is high.

In addition to the increased risk of childhood cancer, the study suggested that exposure to a magnetic field causes behavioural changes in laboratory animals. However, the researchers noted that they could not explain the higher incidence of cancer and that the study did not establish a direct cause and effect link.

In Canada this issue had some repercussions among the population in September, 1985. At that time Ontario proposed a 500-kilovolt line through a part of Canada known as Bridlewood. The line would follow an existing 230-kilovolt right-of-way which passed closed to two parks and a new primary school. The New York State study results, when they were subsequently made public, caused a considerable amount of anxiety, and understandably so, among the families living in Bridlewood.

• (1720)

Ontario Hydro argued then and still does that there is no health hazard posed by its high voltage lines, with good reason, because if a link were to be found the implications for all utilities are enormous.

More recently, in September of this year we have the following headline appearing in The Montreal Gazette: "Deformed rabbits become symbol in British Columbia debate on power line safety".

We learned that some rabbits born in rabbit hutches stacked near high voltage lines were born missing half or all of their ears with oddly twisted feet or curved spines. There were also a more than usual number of stillborn. According to the owner of the rabbits, these birth defects never happened until the hutches were placed near such power lines.

A spokesman for B.C. Hydro denies any link between birth deformities and power lines but adds that "it is unfortunate the community has been stressed; people are literally terrified by these fields".

In a newspaper story which appeared on November 30, 1989 in The Ottawa Citizen we find this headline: "Scientist finds possible power line–cancer link". From that story we learn that Dr. Genevieve Matanoski of Johns Hopkins University seems to have found a possible link between cancer and exposure to electro–magnetic fields from power lines. Dr. Matanoski is reported as saying that while her findings require further testing, the study results have changed her view of the theory about the cancer link to power lines. She stated: "I thought before the theory was wrong. I am not so sure any more".

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there has been sufficient controversy about this issue so much so that a book has been written about it by Paul Brodeur entitled Currents of Death.

According to a review in The Winnipeg Free Press dated December 2, 1989, Mr. Brodeur details the counter campaign by the electrical industry and the military, stressing that there is no purity in the politics of science and in the interpretation of science by the military and industry. The author concludes that there are sensible steps that we can take to reduce exposure to electro–magnetic fields, including restringing or burying neighbourhood power lines. It is the technology of restringing and burying that needs to be examined closely and would require economic resources.

Only this morning at the environment committee, we learned that the TransAlta Utilities in Alberta is the only Canadian utility among more than 50 utilities participating in a North American study of the occupational health effects of exposure to electro–magnetic fields. Exposure measurements for some 2,000 volunteers are being collected over two three–month periods. We all look forward to the outcome of this study and urge through this motion the Minister of National Health and Welfare to match this effort with a government sponsored study of potential health hazards to people living near high voltage power lines.

Why do we do that, Mr. Speaker? It seems to me that a government sponsored study would be the most objective one rather than leaving the study in the hands of utilities that for understandable reasons of course would have a vested interest in the outcome of such a study. Therefore the neutrality of the sponsor is of enormous importance for this particular type of investigation.

In conclusion, increasingly transmission lines affect the lives of literally millions of Canadians and millions of people around the world. It is important to be able to determine whether there is a real threat, particularly with regard to the health of children. In that type of investigation it is also important to find out what remedial or mitigating action or even what avoidance type of action can be put into place. Bridlewood School in Ottawa and the experience in Courtney on Vancouver Island are two examples of the national nature of this issue which therefore requires the attention of the national government.

Evidently there is no clear consensus on the part of the scientific community as to the health effects of the magnetic fields created by high voltage transmission lines. It seems to me that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has an obligation to study this particular thorny problem which affects Canadians from coast to coast and advise the public, the government and this Parliament on the necessity and the content of the necessity of such a strategy or plan so that action is taken to counter any health threats that such power lines may pose to human health.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the proposal before us today is to consider the advisability of studying the effects of electro–magnetic fields produced by high voltage power lines on human and animal health and reporting the findings to the House.

Generation, transmission and use of electricity are associated with human exposure to electric and magnetic fields, not only under high voltage power lines but also in homes and offices. On a daily basis, most Canadians are exposed to electric and magnetic fields produced by household wiring and lighting. There are electric and magnetic fields wherever there is electric power. When we consider what effects these fields may have on our health, we must concern ourselves not just with power lines but with all other sources of these fields.

Power lines are certainly highly visible, but our daily exposure comes mostly from the use of electricity in our homes and offices. Even in houses close to power lines people may be exposed to weaker fields than people far away. Many factors determine the actual exposure. Recognizing that we are practically continuously exposed to electro-magnetic fields, it certainly is important and prudent to consider whether these fields may detrimentally affect our health.

Public concern about high voltage power lines developed in the late 1960s as extra high voltage lines comprising large towers were built. The initial concern was about the aesthetic and ecological impacts and various nuisance effects.

The nuisance effects are audible noises, radio interference, and shocks and sparks when people touch ungrounded metal objects such as trucks or farm vehicles close to power lines. By the late 1970s and early 1980, some scientific evidence emerged that electric and magnetic fields could affect living organisms and that possibly some of these effects might prove to be harmful to man.

• (1730)

The Department of National Health and Welfare recognized this problem a few years ago and has done a thorough review and assessment of the existing scientific evidence. Let me briefly review this evidence for you.

Health effects of electric and magnetic fields produced by power lines have been studied in the U.S. and Europe for over two decades with intensified efforts during the last five years. Until recently conventional wisdom has held that these fields pose no threat to human health. Two reasons are behind this thinking.

First, the fields are low energy and unlike X-rays and other ionizing radiation they do not break chemical bonds, and unlike microwaves they do not cause heating.

Second, all cells in the body have large natural electric fields across their outer membranes.

However, despite the low energy electric and magnetic fields at power line frequencies can cause biological effects. While very many studies have showed a lack of effects, some research has unequivocally demonstrated that under some conditions these fields interact with biological systems.

Evidence today indicates that electric and magnetic fields can affect critical changes to cells in laboratory experiments. Examples of such changes are the modulation of ion flows, interference with DNA synthesis and RNA subscription, interactions with hormones, enzymes and neurotransmitters and perturbations to the immune response of cells and interactions with cancerous cells. The observed interactions with cancerous cells suggest a possibility of electro-magnetic field effects on tumour development as promoters or co-promoters with other agents such as toxic chemicals.

This hypothesis appears plausible because electro-magnetic fields have been shown not to cause genetic effects and cell mutations. What makes it very difficult in evaluation of these effects is that more is not necessarily worse, as we used to think.

It has been observed for some effects that a stronger field does not cause a specific effect while a weaker field does. It must be kept in mind that it is hard to predict whether and how these biological effects on cells in the laboratory translate into health effects on the animal or man.

On the level of studying the whole animal, as I mentioned before, many studies do not show any effect. Most animal experiments were screening experiments looking for all kinds of effects.

Very many studies were performed with very strong electric fields, higher than those encountered under high voltage power lines. No effects were found on blood and the immune system and on the reproductive system of rodents, but malformations in chick embryos were observed under some conditions. The best documented effects in experimental animals are shifts in daily circadian rhythms and associated hormonal changes, changes in response to drugs and some changes in behaviour.

Regarding humans, laboratory experiments with volunteers showed that people can usually perceive an electric field above 7 kilovolts per metre, but some individuals can perceive fields as weak as 2 kilovolts per metre. Magnetic fields are believed not to be perceived by people.

In a carefully conducted study it was found that exposure to fields did not change most vital signs, physiological parameters, daily life activities, memory span and fatigue. But small changes in the heart rate, slowing by 3 beats per minute, were observed in some individuals. Also, small effects on alertness and reaction time were observed.

Limited epidemiological studies have indicated an increased incidence of cancer, particularly leukaemia and brain tumours in children living close to high current wires, presumably producing above average magnetic fields in their homes. Studies of workers in so–called electrical occupations have found an increased risk of cancer. Because of limitations of these studies, this evidence can be judged only as suggestive.

It is also known that electro–magnetic fields are used in medical practice for treatment of broken bones which do not want to unite for a long period of time. Other beneficial medical uses are being currently tested such as the prevention of osteoporosis, wound healing and nerve regeneration.

In conclusion, regarding health effects of electro–magnetic fields, we have found the available evidence inconclusive and inconsistent. The emerging evidence does not allow us to categorically assert that there is no health risk, but on the other hand it is not sufficient to prove that there is significant risk. If exposure to fields does not turn out to pose a health risk, it is unlikely that high–voltage power lines will be the only or even the main source of concern. Electrical wiring in buildings, appliances and light fixtures are much more common and could play a far greater role than high voltage transmission lines in any public health program.

In this complex situation we did recognize a few years ago that both more departmental involvement in this area and, even more important, more research was needed. In the fall of 1986 we formed a working group of electric and magnetic fields. The groups consists of representatives of labour, utilities, academia and provincial and federal governments. The purpose of the group was to assess health effects, to foster research and to educate the Canadian public. In the spring of this year we received their report which will be published shortly. Their assessment of the current status of knowledge is quite similar to ours as I earlier outlined. The report also calls for an increased research effort and departmental involvement.

Another important action that we have taken is the signing of an agreement with two Canadian utility companies, Ontario Hydro and Hydro Quebec, to sponsor an important animal study. The National Health Research and Development Program has allocated over $400,000 for this study to take place over a three year period. The study concerns effects of chronic exposure to magnetic fields on cancer development. The study will be done by an independent university research team and will be subject to a strict peer review process.

In our laboratories we have also just finished the first stage of a pilot animal study which we are planning to continue. This project deals with the possibility of cancer promotion by magnetic fields.

In summary, this government recognizes the importance of resolving through research the issue of health effects of electro–magnetic fields as underscored by our recent increase in research expenditures. This enhanced level of activity will be assisted also by an ongoing effort in the U.S. and Europe which we are closely monitoring. We anticipate that in the next three to four years a better data base will be available. At that time we certainly will further reassess the score of Canadian research on the issue.

We therefore wholeheartedly support the principles behind the hon. member's bill but we would suggest that the government's activities show a real concern in this area and represent the best route at this time.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with the member who proposed this motion. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement from the government and look forward to reading it in more detail to try to learn what it is all about. I appreciate that the government is paying attention to this and I am pleased that the government is, but I am not exactly sure what it is doing. I would like to, as I say, read that report before I decide.

• (1740)

The member suggested in his statement that it might be that very low voltages or very low amounts of power might do or could do more damage than the very high voltage lines. The whole statement was riddled with this idea that something could happen or could not happen. It might be worse, it might not. Obviously all the member was really saying to us is that they do not know, and we appreciate that. There is not enough known about the subject and that is why the motion was moved, urging that something be done to make sure that more is known about it.

There is concern about this on Vancouver Island. A lady has gained some international fame trying to raise this issue and trying to make more governments aware of just how serious a matter it can be. Can be, I say. It may not be. There may be other reasons for the instances we have heard about, read about, and been told about, where there is an apparent effect on people who live near high voltage lines. That may not be the reason at all. It may be that it is the low voltage lines that are worse than the high, we just do not know.

In these days when people are much more concerned about and much more aware of what we are doing to the environment and the effects of human activity upon the environment in which we are living, it is important to know as much as we can. There is some apparent evidence. We have to examine that very closely. More studies can be done and I believe, from the statement that was just read, that studies are being done not only in Canada but in other countries as well.

I support this motion and urge the government to take this very seriously. We want to know, as soon as we can, just exactly how important this is. We want to know the risks. We want to know what can be done to protect our people, our animals and our plant life from the effects of living near low voltage or high voltage lines. Let's get with it, let's do everything we can to study this issue and let's gather some information that at least can be reassuring or can point out the ways in which we can protect ourselves because doing away with the high voltage lines just is not practical right now. Perhaps there are some ways of protecting ourselves and life in general from what may be the effects of living near high voltage or low voltage lines.

However, let us get the information and let us not say that we have all the time in the world to do this because we are building more and more high voltage lines and it is more and more important that we deal with this as an urgent matter and one that is capable of being studied if we determine internationally that it is something upon which we should work. We should certainly exchange information, co-operate with other nations in the world and try to get as much information and as much real knowledge as we can and then deal with it and make it public.

The statement tells us that all this work has been going on. I have heard, read, and been told about people who have experienced situations which they attribute to the high voltage lines, but until this moment I did not know that the government was studying it at all. Perhaps that is my fault, perhaps I should have known. If the government is doing anything, it is being very quiet, very reticent about sharing its activity, let alone its information with the public generally. Mr. Speaker, we support this motion.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I commend my colleague for bringing before the House today this motion that the government should consider the advisability of studying the effects of electro-magnetic fields created by high voltage power lines on both human and animal health and report the findings to this House.

Electro-magnetic radiation is suspected to be damaging to the body's ability to fight diseases and to the central nervous system. Residents living near the lines have long complained about headaches, memory loss, more illness than usual, and a constant irritating hum.

I have to take issue with the parliamentary secretary who pointed out that perhaps there are enough electro-magnetic fields in homes with microwave ovens, various other appliances and the wiring of homes to have caused this. I would have to refute that because, if that is the case, why has it impacted on the health of animals that are grazing in close proximity to these lines or living in barns which are in close proximity? Why has the milk production of dairy herds dropped dramatically? When you move these herds away from these lines milk production eventually picks up again. There are also animals which fail to conceive until they are moved away from the effects of these lines. There has to be an impact there. We know the signals are there and if it impacts on animals certainly it must impact on humans as well.

The list is really impressive. Often the argument that high voltage lines are responsible is dismissed.

A report of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning in 1980 states:

> As in the case of nuclear radiation there is controversy as to whether there is a safe "threshold" level below which there is no physiological effect of whether the effects of exposure up to any level no matter how low are cumulative over a person's lifetime. Until these questions are answered by research, reasonable steps should be taken to avoid the unnecessary exposure of individuals to electro-magnetic fields from transmission lines.

That was a royal commission which made that statement. I believe that the motion before us today ties right in with that recommendation.

Two case studies of the Denver, Colorado area, conducted by Nancy Wertheimer and Edward Leeper found a possible association between chronic exposure to magnetic fields created by high voltage transmission lines and the incidence of childhood leukaemia and adult concerns in 1979 and 1982.

A study in Denver by David A. Savitz, using a completely different set of cases, shows the apparent connection between childhood cancer and exposure.

Thus a growing number of studies suggest that long-term exposure to power line frequency magnetic fields may promote cancer and may accelerate the development of existing cancer cells.

Biophysicist Andrew Marino of Louisiana State University would not live in a house near an overhead power line. The chances of getting sick, he said, are just too great.

A Maryland study of 951 men who died of brain tumours between 1969 and 1982 turned up a high proportion of electricians, utility linesmen and electronic technicians. Fifty of the men, compared to the scientifically expected 18, died of two supposedly rare tumour types.

A civil court in Texas recently ordered a utility company that has complied with all existing state laws to shut down a new double circuit 345,000 volt transmission line and pay $25 million in damages, holding that the company had acted with callous disregard for the safety, health and well-being of the children in the building 60 metres from that particular line.

In Russia they do not allow these lines within a half mile of built up areas. Andrew A. Merio, Ph.D., Louisiana State University, puts the figure at 1,700 feet for 500,000 volt lines and 800 feet for a 230 volt line. Ontario Hydro states the sphere of influence for the 500,000 volt line is 246 feet.

According to the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office spokesperson, to date electro-magnetic radiation has not been considered in their review, although he cautioned that to date no federal transmission project where FEDR has taken place has been near a populated area.

One of my concerns in this whole issue is a proposed line that will run across my constituency. It was originally planned to go through the villages of Alvinston, Inwood, Oil City and Brigden. The line is there already carrying 230,000 volts, but they plan to upgrade that line to a 550,000 volt line. I would hope that we will have studies done by this House in time to put the minds of those citizens at rest before that line is constructed.

One of the things that really bothers me is the fact that this will tie in, not only with the Bruce Nuclear Station and the big transmission lines that come out of that, but will also tie in with the Lambton generating station along the St. Clair River on the west side of Lambton County. That in turn is tied in with the electrical grid of the State of Michigan.

• (1750)

Consequently, we may very well be putting the lives of our citizens at risk in order to tie into a grid that will allow us to export power to another country. This is not acceptable. It is not acceptable to build these lines in close proximity even to our own communities if the power is to be used within Canada.

I am delighted that my colleague has seen fit to bring in this motion that I wholeheartedly support today. I know that he will have the support of the people in my constituency as well. I want to congratulate him on his effort.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, today we have a motion before the House suggesting that it would be useful to study the effects of electro-magnetic fields created by high voltage power lines on humans and animals, and to report the findings to the House.

Electric power has been in common use for about a hundred years, and its presence has become increasingly widespread and indeed essential.

For more than ten years, public concern has been growing about the possible effects of electro-magnetic fields created by high voltage power lines. I may add that all electrical appliances, both at home and at work, create electro-magnetic fields. We are constantly exposed to these fields. High voltage power lines are only one source of électro-magnetic fields, and if we are concerned about high voltage power lines, we should be concerned about all electrical appliances.

Unlike X-rays, electro-magnetic fields are very low energy. They are incapable of modifying intercellular connections or even of producing heat like microwaves do.

So far, many studies on the effects of these fields on animal cells and human health have been made, both nationally and internationally. On the whole, cell studies have indicated that electro-magnetic fields can produce biological effects whose significance is not clear but which are not thought to be very serious. Some of these effects may cause cancer, although no specific mechanism has been identified to explain the cause and effect link satisfactorily.

There is an interesting hypothesis that has found favour among the scientific community. Today, Mr. Speaker, we know that cancers are created by cancer causing substances, in several stages. There are at least two: the first stage is the induction of the tumour and the second stage is its promotion. At the induction stage, cancer-causing substances can produce a malignant and irreversible change in the genetic systems of several cells. The change may be limited to only a few cells, and be overlooked and remain stable for a long time, even forever. However, at a given time, one may be exposed to certain promoter substances that could cause these malignant cells to multiply. This is the promotion stage of the tumour, when the cancer's presence can be detected. Some substances only act as inducers, other substances only act as promoters, while some substances do both. It is thought that electro-magnetic fields might be promoters of malignant tumours.

There are no valid data on studies with animals, which is unfortunate, since animal testing has been a unique way to provide scientific evidence when investigating a substance that is suspected of causing cancer.

Perhaps I should also mention that some animal experiments have shown well documented effects on the daily circadian rhythms and behaviour of animals.

Studies on humans have concentrated on the health of exposed workers and on children living near high voltage power lines.

In the studies on workers, various occupations were investigated such as electricians, electrical engineers, linemen, power station operators and workers in aluminum plants. Some of these studies show that certain types of cancer increased: leukaemias, brain tumours and melanomas. Leukaemias, however, showed a more consistent increase than other tumours.

Studies of exposed workers were recently reviewed.

In some analyses, the results of all the studies were combined and together they showed a slightly increased risk of leukaemia. Many unknowns prevent identifying the cause of this increase in cancer: workers' actual exposure to electro-magnetic fields is not known because valid dosimetry is lacking; that is, in the group of exposed workers, there might be some highly exposed individuals and some almost unexposed. But it is impossible to know whether or not the increase of cancer lies in the highly exposed workers' environment. This increase could be due to chemicals that are also present in the workplace.

The results of studies on those living near high voltage lines, more specifically, on children, are not unanimous. Some studies show no increase of cancer in children and others show a slight increase. Many methodological problems have been identified which might easily compromise the validity of the results of these studies.

The most recent study done in the United States, in 1987, is considered much more valid than all the previous studies because it corrected the errors of the past. It is based on a population of children exposed in their homes to electro-magnetic fields emitted from electrical sources inside and outside the home.

You see that the focus of this study was not just high voltage lines but electricity in general. It must be noted, Mr. Speaker, that this study found a slight risk for cancer, particularly leukaemia.

In conclusion, the evidence of increased risk for cancer, particularly leukaemia, is slight, but it cannot be eliminated entirely. Any risk for leukaemia would be slight. But people's exposure to electro-magnetic fields is significant because we must include not only high voltage lines but also all the other electrical appliances that surround us everywhere all the time. What are the implications of all this for health?

Mr. Speaker, we are now at the stage of evaluating what must be done to shed more light on this problem.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has been studying this question for several years and a laboratory study on mice exposed to electro-magnetic fields has already been developed and is nearly complete. This study involves a research hypothesis specifically related to tumours allegedly induced by electro-magnetic fields. As well, we are in direct contact with various international researchers who also work in this field.

The department has set up a task force—it includes spokesmen from government, labour unions, hydro power companies and universities—to organize future research in this field. The task force's findings confirm the importance of closer department monitoring and the need for new research projects. The final report will be out shortly.

Two other major studies are now under way in Canada. The first has to do with the health of workers likely to be affected and it is funded by Ontario Hydro, Hydro-Quebec and Électricité de France. This project focuses on the use of a dosimetre which was developed in Quebec recently to give accurate readings on the degree of exposure of people working in such fields.

The other, sponsored by Ontario Hydro, Hydro-Quebec and the department, involves research on leukaemia hazards in mice constantly exposed to magnetic fields. Researchers in this on-going study will use exposures of varying intensity to determine whether the effect, that is incidence of leukaemia in mice, spreads as the intensity increases.

The project will cost in excess of $1 million, including a $400,000 contribution from the department's research and development program.

This study will be under the independent supervision of a research director chosen from the academic field. Both projects are very important even though the results of the studies will not be available before three years. We are quite confident that they will make a significant contribution to the scientific lore on this issue.

For a number of years now medical scientists have acknowledged that electro-magnetic fields have beneficial effects in the treatment of non-self-curing bone fractures.

• (1800)

Research is going on to assess the effect of those fields in preventing osteoporosis, and in healing wounds and nerves.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that in the department's views, research on the effects of the electro-magnetic fields on humans is important and relevant. We will be using improved and innovative research methods, Mr. Speaker, and take co-operative actions both nationally and internationally. For at least two years the government has been supporting those essential projects carried out by the industry. We have made a significant contribution to research in this area by increasing our links with universities and utilities.

I believe my time is up, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, we appreciate the concern of the hon. member for Davenport regarding high voltage power lines and the effect that their electro-magnetic fields may have on human and animal health.

This is a controversial issue and one that is of growing concern to Canadians and, therefore, to this government. I want to assure the hon. member and this House that no issue is of greater importance than the health of Canadians. This controversy was heightened by an article published a few months ago in the New Yorker magazine. In that article there are several serious claims about electro-magnetic fields and what they may mean to human and animal health.

Since then, the author's claims have been subject to much debate. While this is a relatively new area of concern, I would like to take this opportunity to inform the House about what we do know about high voltage lines and their effects on animal health.

World-wide research is under way. As the hon. member for Athabasca noted, studies are being undertaken in Canada, United States, Sweden and in several other countries. To date, these studies have not yielded any conclusive evidence. There is still much to be learned about the specific effects of electro-magnetic fields on animal health, on growth, and on reproduction. I enter this debate not to diminish the concern but to put the matter into realistic perspective and in so doing perhaps relieve some of the unwarranted anxiety that unsubstantiated speculation may have aroused. It is my purpose to shine a light on this issue, to consider and encourage scientific examination.

Work in the United States and Sweden has so far suggested that there has been no ill effects on milk production or fertility as a result of long-term exposure of animals to high voltage power lines. A U.S. study on pigs has also indicated that there are no negative effects on fertility, growth or behaviour as a consequence of exposure to high voltage power lines and their electro-magnetic fields. Similar research with poultry has turned up no evidence of adverse effects in these areas.

Experiments have also been conducted under laboratory conditions. Scientists have looked specifically at growth, development, metabolism and the immune system of animals exposed to electro and magnetic fields. For the most part, there has been no effect on these areas or on over-all health of animals.

I would like to assure this House that the government will continue to follow this issue closely. It is the federal government's responsibility to set and enforce standards to safeguard human and animal health. It is a responsibility that we take seriously.

I would like to thank the hon. member for Davenport for raising this important issue and thereby allowing this opportunity to provide the House with information that has been substantiated to date. As more information becomes available, we will take what further action is required.

I think that the debate today has shed an appropriate light on this issue. It is a growing concern to Canadians and one that the government is actively looking at. The hon. member for Davenport has raised an important issue and the debate today has given this House and Canadians valuable information.

• (1805)

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the proposal before us today is to consider the advisability of studying the effects of the electro-magnetic fields produced by high voltage power lines on human and animal health and report the findings to the House.

Public concern about high voltage power lines developed in the late 1960s as extra high voltage lines comprising large towers were built. The initial concern was about the aesthetic and the ecological impacts and the various nuisance effects. The nuisance effects are audible noise, radio interference and shocks and sparks when people touched underground metal objects such as trucks or farm vehicles close to power lines. By the late 1970s and indeed, in the early 1980s, some scientific evidence emerged that the problem is more complex and of more concern.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, generation, transmission and use of electricity are associated with human exposure to electric and magnetic fields, not only under high voltage power lines but also in homes and offices. On a daily basis, most Canadians are exposed to electric and magnetic fields produced by household wiring and lighting. There are electric and magnetic fields wherever there is electric power. When we consider what effects these fields may have on our health, we must concern ourselves not just with power lines but with all other sources of these fields. Power lines are highly visible but our daily exposure has come mostly from use of electricity in our homes and in our offices. Even in houses close to power lines, people may be exposed to weaker fields than people in houses far away from power lines. Many factors determine the actual exposure. Recognizing that we are all practically continuously exposed to electro-magnetic fields, it certainly is important and indeed prudent to consider whether these fields may detrimentally affect our health.

Health effects of electric and magnetic fields have been studied in the United States and Europe for over two decades, with intensified efforts during the last five years. Until recently conventional wisdom was held that these fields posed no threat to human health. Two reasons are behind this thinking. First, the fields are of low energy and, unlike X-rays and other ionizing radiation, they do not break chemical bonds. Unlike microwaves they do not cause heating. Second, all cells in the body have large natural electric fields across their outer membranes. This way of thinking has recently been revised as new scientific findings have emerged. These new findings show that electric and magnetic fields can interact with some biological systems at lower levels than it was previously thought possible. There are many scientific studies, some showing effects and very many not showing any effects or indeed any detrimental effects.

The Department of National Health and Welfare recognized this problem a few years ago and has done a thorough review and assessment of the existing scientific evidence. In addition, specific actions have been undertaken to address the issue.

To start with, let me briefly describe what scientific evidence we have on interactions of electro-magnetic fields with living systems. In general, the three types of studies have been conducted. These are studies on various cell culture preparations, studies on laboratory animals and studies on human volunteers and human populations. Scientific studies today indicate that electric and magnetic fields can cause critical changes to cells in laboratory experiments.

• (1810)

On the other hand, these fields do not cause genetic effects and cell mutations. Although observed interactions with cancerous cells suggest a possibility that electro-magnetic fields affect tumour development and that they may act as tumour promoters as co-promoters with other agents, such as toxic chemicals.

In evaluating scientific findings derived from experiments on separated cells, it must be kept in mind that it is not easy to predict whether and how these biological effects on cells in the laboratory translate into health effects on the animal or man. What makes this task even more difficult is that for some effects a stronger field does not cause a specific effect, while a weaker field does. This behaviour is contrary to our traditional thinking in the field of toxicology as we are finding that with electro-magnetic fields, more may not necessarily be worse.

Let us review now the studies on intact laboratory animals. Very many experiments were performed with very strong electric fields, higher than those under power lines. Fewer experiments so far have been done with magnetic fields. Some critical systems were not found to be affected by the fields. For instance, no effects were found on blood and immune systems.

On the other hand, mixed evidence exists in the area of reproduction. No effects were found for rodents but malformations in chicken embryos were observed under some conditions. The best documented effects in experimental animals are shifts in daily rhythms and associated hormonal changes, changes in responses to drugs and some changes in behaviour.

Regarding humans, laboratory experiments with volunteers showed that people can usually perceive an electric field above seven kilovolts per metre, but some individuals can perceive fields as weak as two kilovolts per metre. Magnetic fields are believed not to be perceived by people. In a carefully conducted study it was found that exposure to fields did not change most vital signs, physiological parameters, daily life activities, memory span and fatigue but small changes in the heart rate slowing by three beats were observed in some individuals. Also some effects on alertness and reaction time were observed.

A lot of attention and concern are associated with some of the epidemiological studies. Some of these studies have indicated an increased incidence of cancer particularly leukaemia and brain tumours in children living close to high current wires, presumably reducing above average magnetic fields in their homes. Studies of workers in so-called electrical occupations have found an increased risk of cancer. However, the studies suffer from many limitations such as small populations studied, weak associations, a lack of consistency and a lack of assessment of actual exposures. Despite the limitations, these studies must not be disregarded. At the same time, this evidence can be judged only as suggestive until we learn more.

It is also important to note that electric and magnetic fields are used in medical practice for treatment of broken bones which do not want to unite for a long period of time. Other beneficial medical uses are being currently tested, such as prevention of osteoporosis, wound healing and nerve regeneration.

To conclude, regarding health effects of electro-magnetic fields, we have found the available evidence inconclusive and we have found it inconsistent. The emerging evidence does not allow us to categorically assert that there is no health risk. But at the same time, it is not sufficient to prove that there is a significant risk. If exposure to fields does turn out to pose a health risk, it is unlikely that high voltage power lines will be the only or even the main source of concern. Electrical wiring in buildings, appliances and light fixtures are much more common and could play a far greater role than high voltage transmission lines in any public health problem.

We did recognize the complexity of the situation and the importance of gaining better understanding and what risks are associated with our use of electricity. If there are risks, how we can eliminate or limit them. As a consequence, we have stepped up our effort.

Let me give you some examples. Are you indicating my time is up? My time is up. Mr. Speaker, it has been a pleasure to address you and the other members in the House today. I am grateful for the opportunity and thank you very much.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the hon. member for Mercier that there is less than one minute left. The hon. member for Mercier.

Mrs. Carole Jacques (Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank my colleague for Davenport for raising this issue in the House of Commons, he has excellent information on a matter of interest to us all Canadians. In the opinion of this House, Mr. Speaker, the government should consider the advisability of studying the effects of the actual electro-magnetic fields created by high voltage power lines on human and animal health and reporting the findings to the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), this item is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being 6.16 p.m, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.16 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 15, 1989

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are 10 motions in amendment on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-28, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related act.

These motions are standing in the name of the hon. members for Sault Ste. Marie, Mr. Butland, and Ottawa South, Mr. Manley. I have reviewed them and I am now ready to make a ruling.

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 10 are admissible and each of them will be debated and voted upon separately. Motions Nos. 4, 6, and 7 will be debated together but voted upon as follows: (a) an affirmative vote on Motion No. 4 obviates the necessity for a vote on Motions Nos. 6 and 7; (b) a negative vote on Motion No. 4 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 6. Any such vote would be applied to Motion No. 7. Motion No. 5 is identical to Motion No. 4 and therefore Motion No. 5 will not be selected. Motions Nos. 8 and 9 raise procedural difficulties for the Chair. As hon. members are aware, it is not competent within our parliamentary practice for a private member to move to increase the amount of tax or a charge on people in a bill which is based on ways and means motions.

In my view, both of these proposed motions are attempting to do just that by attempting to lower a deduction from $10 million to $1 million. I must therefore rule Motions Nos. 8 and 9 inadmissible. In this connection, I would refer hon. members in the House to the various citations of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition and May's Parliamentary Practice.

The hon. member for Kamloops on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the member for Sault Ste. Marie in whose name the various motions have been put is not here. He is away on other business.

• (1010)

I wonder if I could seek the unanimous consent of the House to have the motions in his name be put in the name of the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of Christmas, kindness and generosity, we are more than happy to allow this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like some clarification. You stated that Motions Nos. 4, 6 and 7 will be debated together, but a negative vote on Motion No. 4 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 6, and the words that I have a problem with are "any such vote would be applied to Motion No. 7".

I take it that it is the result of the second vote that would be applied to Motion No. 7, not the results of the first vote? Is that the correct interpretation?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is correct.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Ms. Joy Langan (for Mr. Butland) moved:

Motion No. 1.

That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 7

(a) by striking out line 26 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"April 26, 1990, other than"

(b) by striking out line 30 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"Time, April 26, 1990 under which the"

(c) by striking out line 37 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"1990,"

(d) by striking out lines 40 and 41 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"Daylight Saving Time, April 26, 1990 and before June 12, 1990, subsection 16.1(1) of".

She said: Mr. Speaker, this proposed amendment to Bill C-28 is to change the date of implementation of the clause from April 26, 1989, to April 26, 1990. This clause is poorly drafted and the fear of leasing companies is that this change will cause many small leasing companies to go out of business, therefore, we should be taking a very careful second look at this clause.

The Income Tax Act amendments on leasing are an attempt by the Department of Finance to close off an area of tax revenue loss. The department feels that some firms are using leasing in preference to outright purchases because the leasing companies can capture some tax advantages that the lessee firms themselves cannot.

The strategy behind the amendments is to treat leasing companies as if they are financing companies making loans and to allow those lessee firms which can claim tax advantages to do so if they want to, but the assets are to be treated as a purchase of the lease asset for tax purposes.

The goal seems to be to make those lessees who were only leasing for tax reasons indifferent between leasing and buying with the purchase being financed by loan, and to put those lessees who were leasing for non-tax reasons in exactly the same financial position as before.

As I said earlier, the clause is poorly drafted primarily because it describes how lessees are to be treated under the new clause only, with the description of how lessors are to be treated under new income tax regulations as opposed to insertion of an entirely new clause into the Income Tax Act which is what clause 7 is.

The culmination of this new clause in the Income Tax Act and the new regulations introduce a fundamental change in the way leasing is viewed by the Department of Finance.

It is rather peculiar to do one-half of the changes through amendments to the Income Tax Act and the other half through amendments to the regulations.

The new regulations introduced a considerable change in the complexity of a leasing agreement. The calculations required are not of themselves difficult, nor do they require any information.

On the other hand, the old system is clearly designed to minimize bookkeeping by allowing aggregation over property classes. The new system does show a different approach by the Department of Finance to the ending of perceived tax abuses. Normally, the Department of Finance rewrites the act or regulations to stop the abuses directly by saying "you cannot". The new system for leasing requires the lessor to compare two options and choose the least favourable.

In the words of the legislative committee's researcher, it is not hard to believe that the conclusion of this computation is not foregone. If the Department of Finance had done its job of identifying loopholes in the tax system and found a mathematical formula that catches the abuse, then it is hard to argue that direct regulations or amendments could not be written that could equally well attack the abuse at lower compliance costs.

This confusing approach called "treatment by loan analogy" by finance officials has engendered fear within the leasing industry that the increasing administrative complexity it introduces will drive up costs.

On the other hand, companies that lease equipment fear that the disappearance of tax advantages for leasing as opposed to outright purchasing will constrain their cash flows. Both are problems, especially for smaller companies. The change of the date of implementation is designed to allow finance officials to implement the change to lessors through either an additional amendment to the Income Tax Act or, preferably, to redraft the entire clause in a technical bill which they will introduce in either January or February.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the Motion No. 1 stands deferred.

Ms. Joy Langan (for Mr. Butland) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 5 to 10 at page 24.

She said: Mr. Speaker, the reason for this change is to nullify the effect of the gross up. The gross up of a quarter on income earned from dividends has the effect of driving up many seniors' incomes solely for the purpose of income tax calculation, if they earn part of their retirement income through dividends. This means that even if they do not earn $50,000 a year, the threshold for the clawback, they will be pushed over this mark and, as a result, have part or all of their old age security taxed back.

The grossup was originally introduced in order to avoid the double taxation of dividends. Dividends are taxed both at the corporate level and at the individual level. By including the gross up in his or her income tax calculations, the individual taxpayer receives a tax credit to avoid being taxed at the individual level. This is not a problem until the introduction of the clawback which has the effect that I have just described.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add to the words of our friend from Mission—Coquitlam. The whole concept of the gross up is to create some fictional income for purposes of income tax. The hon. member has correctly described what the reasoning behind it is. The idea was to avoid any perception of double taxation on dividends, and individual taxing on dividends would occur at a fairer level since some of those dividends had already had tax paid on them at the corporate level.

• (1020)

As the hon. member pointed out, what we have here is a situation where, assuming that the pensioner has retired with stocks which yield him or her something in the order of $40,000, with the 25 per cent gross up for reporting purposes that becomes $50,000, and suddenly the pensioner is in the position of losing the old age pension through the clawback. It was not real income, they still have the $40,000 to spend, but for a bookkeeping nicety they lose their pension income. That is the reasoning behind the proposed amendment. Once government members and backbenchers have a few moments to think about it, they will see that this particular clause ought to be deleted in the interest of fairness to pensioners.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I have raised this matter of the dividend gross up a number of times in the context of questions to the minister in the House on the issue of the clawback. I am not sure that I agree with the amendment because I do not think it directs itself to the key issue. I think the amendment relating to the gross up in this context has to do with certain dividend rental arrangements that are provided for elsewhere in the amendments to the Income Tax Act contained in Bill C-28.

The point that my colleagues in the NDP are making with respect to the threshold and how it is calculated under the Income Tax Act for purposes of the clawback is an important one to make, that being that for the purposes of the clawback, which we will come to later on in the amendments, the threshold of $50,000 income is defined as income under Part I of the Income Tax Act.

That means that all dividends received from Canadian corporations will be grossed up by 25 per cent and that grossed up amount is the amount that is considered income for the purposes of the threshold of $50,000.

It has been pointed out by departmental officials that that is okay because to generate that many dividends, you have to have a lot of stocks, and that is true. But I would suggest that the essential inequity of treating different kinds of income differently for the purposes of the Income Tax Act undermines the integrity of the system. Whether we like the clawback or not, which clearly we on our side do not, if you are going to say that the threshold is $50,000 of income then let it be $50,000 of real income, not the notional gross up received on dividends.

Whether a senior puts his or her assets into interest earning investments or dividend earning investments should not make any difference in determining whether or not they have reached the threshold for clawback purposes. One of the most distressing things that has happened in this Chamber over the last 10 days is that the Minister of Finance in answering questions did not seem to understand what the dividend gross up was.

All of that being said, I do not think that this particular amendment addresses that problem. If there is going to be an amendment to address that problem, it needs to be done elsewhere in the act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 2. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Ms. Joy Langan (for Mr. Butland) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C–28 be amended in Clause 47 by striking out line 1 at page 45 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) 0.05 percent of tax payable under Part 1 by".

She said: Mr. Speaker, the reason for the changes in this clause which reduce the surtax from 5 per cent to .05 per cent, is to greatly reduce the amount of the surtax. The finance minister indicated that he would get rid of the 3 per cent surtax on individual income once sales tax changes were announced. Instead, as with many promises which have been made by this government, he has done exactly the opposite. In fact, he wants to raise it, despite the introduction of the goods and services tax, to 5 per cent.

Originally, it was suggested that the clause describing the surtax be deleted altogether. However, the Parliamentary Law Clerk has indicated to us that for technical reasons this would be very difficult. Therefore, we present to this House the proposal that the percentage be changed to a much smaller level to at least prove to be fair and equitable and certainly much closer and in keeping with the commitment that the finance minister made regarding getting rid of the 3 per cent surtax.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak in support of this amendment. This amendment raises an issue that is very bothersome to many Canadians. When we had phase one of tax reform and were promised phase two, which was to be sales tax reform, it was clearly stated that phase two was going to be revenue neutral. This concept of revenue neutrality went through a whole series of phases. Revenue neutrality meant that the new tax was just going to replace the old federal sales tax, then revenue neutrality meant replacing the federal sales tax, eliminating the surtaxes, and reducing the middle–income tax rate, and there were other things thrown in. The concept of revenue neutrality, as far as the goods and services tax is concerned, became a moving target. Whatever the minister happens to feel like on a given day, is what revenue neutrality meant that day.

One of the principles behind revenue neutrality was that we were going to do away with the surtaxes, either temporary, for a special purpose, or they are an attempt to fool around with provincial revenues. Because as the government well knows, provincial income tax revenues are based on a percentage of the base income tax revenue collected under the federal income tax system for almost all of the provinces. To impose a surtax is a way of milking the taxpayer and avoiding letting the provinces get their fair share.

Bill C-28 is an attempt to make permanent the surtax, to avoid letting the provinces get their fair share of income tax revenue, and also to renege on a promise of revenue neutrality, and that promise should be respected. Canadian taxpayers are fed up with what they are having to pay. The goods and services tax, bad as it is, should be replacing the surtaxes so that we go back to a reasonable, comprehensible and fair tax system in Canada.

• (1030)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. On the lead up to tax reform the Minister of Finance indicated several times that he would get rid of these surtaxes as soon as he had a policy on sales taxes. The sales tax changes were announced in this past budget. It was announced that it would be 9 per cent. There are now some rumours that perhaps it will be 7 per cent. That is irrelevant. The fact is there has been a decision made to go to a sales tax.

I do not think, and I am sure my colleagues agree me, that we should put into the basic tax law as is being proposed here this 5 per cent surtax when we had a commitment by the Minister of Finance that this would be temporary. It is not temporary when you put it into the basic law. The minister can do what he wants to do by regulation, I submit. I do not think this has any place in here at all. We would have preferred to have deleted it altogether but apparently there were some procedural problems with that so we will make it to a fraction of a per cent and I hope that the House would concur with that move.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion, will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed, will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8) the recorded division stands deferred.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South) moved:

Motion No. 4.

That Bill C-15 be amended in Clause 73 by striking out line 14 at page 37 and substituting the following therefor:

"73. (1) The Minister shall constitute an".

Ms. Langan (for Mr. Butland) moved:

Motion No. 6.

That Bill C-15 be amended in Clause 75 by adding immediately after line 5 at page 38 the following:

"in consultation with the advisory committee,".

Motion No. 7.

That Bill C-15 be amended in Clause 77 by striking out line 24 at page 41 and substituting the following therefor:

"expiration of the period of seven years begin-".

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is very simple. It is to delete the provisions of Bill C-28 that would introduce the clawback of old age pensions and family allowance benefits. I think it is fair to say that this one provision of Bill C-28 is the single most important social policy change in a generation in Canada. This, as the hon. member for Mississauga South, chairman of the finance committee has said, is the end of universality of social programs in Canada.

First, let me say that it is a disgrace this kind of social policy change is being made in the context of a budget bill so that there is no adequate opportunity for Canadians to debate this kind of change.

In January, 1985, that government issued a discussion paper under the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare dealing with the universality of social programs and saying specifically that the clawback—it wasn't called that at the time—the idea of taxing back old age pensions, was unacceptable. It did suggest that maybe it was not so bad with family allowances, that is something we can debate, but it put it forward as a change in social policy that needed to be considered by Canadians, discussed and debated, in order to go forward with the evolution of social policy in Canada. That is the way it should have been done. It went to a parliamentary committee and nothing more was heard of it.

Then, in this year's budget, out comes the clawback as a fiscal measure. Yet it is changing a fundamental social policy in Canada. We could debate universality here, but we are not going to get very far in this forum on this kind of debate. Nor has there been an opportunity for the social agencies, for those groups representing the poor, those groups which are concerned with issues of social policy, to come forward and discuss this and give their input to it, given that it is put forward in a budget measure.

When you begin to change the principle of universality, the change goes far beyond affecting those few people who the government recognizes may be earning more than $50,000 a year at the present time. We believe that many of the programs that we offer, at all levels of government in Canada, should be made available equally to Canadians at whatever their income level. That has been true of the old age pension since 1952. That has been true of medicare. That has been true of education in the provincial jurisdiction. We say that Canadians should all receive the same basic social benefits, regardless of what their income is. That has been the principle. In abandoning that principle without full debate the government is doing a great disservice to Canadians across the country.

Government members will say, as the Minister has said, that this is not the end of universality. They think Canadians are so dumb that if they put money in one pocket and take it out the other, they will think they have been getting a universal benefit.

Let me put it to them this way. If this is not the end of universality, then what the government has introduced with this measure is a discriminatory tax. It is a tax not based on ability to pay, as our other income taxes are supposed to be, it is a tax based on age or family size. No other groups in our society pay 100 per cent of any kind of income except, after this is fully implemented, those over 65 and have $50,000 of other income or those who are families.

I know I have very little time on this amendment. On old age pensions the fact is that Canadian pensioners paid for this pension. They paid with a special tax that was on their income tax forms from 1952 to 1971. If you go back to the debates in this Chamber in those years and read the words that were then spoken, it is clear the intention of the House of Commons was to ensure that all Canadians, regardless of their level of income, were entitled to the old age pension and that they were paying for it. When we changed the system in order to simplify it in 1971, Mr. Stanley Knowles rose at that time and expressed his concern that this was the beginning of the end of universality. Promises were made at that time that it was not going to be the end of universality. But here we are in 1989, and that is exactly what the government is doing.

What the government has forgotten on family allowances is the basic principle of fairness that should underlie the income tax system of horizontal equity; the fact that taxpayers who may have the same level of income carry different burdens on the part of our society. Taxpayers with families, with young children, contribute greatly to the future of Canada and that burden of doing so should be borne by all Canadians. This clawback measure does several things.

First, it puts families who have one income on a different footing from those who have two incomes. Two income families, in which both spouses earn $49,000 a year, do not face the clawback. A one income family, in which that one parent earns $60,000 a year, loses all of its family allowance. Is that fair?

The second thing is that years ago the government froze the child tax exemption and it changed it to credits. The government has whittled away the support for families and now, for many families, it has eliminated the family allowance benefit. It is clear that this government no longer believes that all Canadians have a stake in helping families with young children to contribute to the future. It has forgotten the basic principle of horizontal equity, if it ever understood it in the first place.

• (1040)

There is only one solution for this bill and that is to remove the discriminatory tax, the clawback tax, and send it into a discussion on social policy where it should have been in the first place so that all Canadians have an opportunity to present their concerns about it.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I speak in support of the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa South. I would just enunciate the danger that if this clawback tax is allowed to pass it will end the principle of universality in Canada.

I spoke earlier on this bill and I called it an attack on the very principle that has made the people of our country secure and which has been the cornerstone of our social policy.

This morning I would like, as a last attempt to change the heart of the government, to read from some of the thoughts of the very people who will be affected by this proposed tax by the government.

The National Council of Welfare, in its press release of September 13, 1989, said: "The elderly have already paid for their old age pensions through a lifetime of paying income taxes".

A letter from the President of the Senior Citizens Federation to Prime Minister Mulroney on June 23, 1989 stated: "We view this proposal as a serious breach of faith by our government and an insidious effort to undercut the social security programs that you have on numerous times stated are a sacred trust".

One Voice Canada indicated: "That penalizes people who receive benefits, specifically pensioners and families, and destroys the universal nature of the benefit."

The Coalition of Quebec Seniors, in a letter to Finance Minister Wilson on May 24 stated: "Your proposal creates a steeper tax rate for seniors than for others at similar income levels. Seniors who, with great difficulty, have succeeded over the years in saving for their retirement are being penalized".

The Coalition of Quebec Seniors in essence truly reflects the voice of seniors across the country. Not giving up the fight, in a letter addressed to most members of Parliament on November 29, 1989, they again call to our attention that the implications of the clawback would be to reduce the purchasing power of seniors, to discriminate against them and to deal a death blow to the universality principle that we have so long cherished in Canada.

I would like to remind the government that the then hon. Minister for Health and Welfare, who is from my home province of Manitoba, promised on December 21, 1984, about this season of the year that: "All savings generated from any changes will be redistributed to social programs and will be applied to deficit reduction". And he continued: "The benefits from old age pensions will be taxed no differently from any other form of income".

That was a sacred promise of an hon. gentleman—whom I continue to esteem, a member of this government, a member of the cabinet in 1984—not so long ago, and this government today is doing just the opposite.

This government has broken a lot of promises and I submit that a litany of broken promises does not create a rosary of sacred trust. I am adamantly opposed to this clawback taxation of the pensions of the seniors of our country. I truly hope that in this spirit of Christmas there can be a change of heart, a change of mind and that the House will adopt the amendment proposed by my hon. colleague.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to stand here this morning and speak to the amendment to remove the clawback portion from the bill. I have spoken on this previously in the House and expressed my point of view on behalf of constituents of my riding of Nepean. This morning I would like to read excerpts from letters. We have all received hundreds of letters speaking out against this dreadful proposal to clawback seniors pensions. These are from individual people, not from large organizations. This letter from D. Atkinson says:

> I am very disillusioned with the current trend by government to get itself elected by whatever means and by whatever promise. I want to speak out, however plaintively, of my outrage over how the government reneged in an '84 denial of free trade, and now in the recent denial of the campaign promise not to meddle with the universality of the OAS.
>
> I thought that Mr. Wilson was once our last bastion of integrity on this bill, now I am not so sure anyone is.

The next letter is from a P. Payne who says:

The Finance Minister's budget abolishes universality of old age pensions—. But that is precisely what the government solemnly promised not to do before the last election. Prime Minister Mulroney said that if the Conservatives did anything to old age pensions they would improve them.

I personally do not believe that the rationale behind the tax grab is sound. I do not think that the national debt versus the tax grab of OAS payments make sense.

But the fact that the people of Canada have seen that the Government of Canada has discriminated against people of 65 years of age is a significant point which they will remember—

This next correspondence from D'Ornellas reads:

Seniors of Canada expect that the integrity of the PM should be beyond reproach—.the PM promised that any government he led would improve pensions rather than downgrading them.

There are other vehicles government could utilize in meetings its objectives for reducing the national deficit instead of the unethical and illegal proposal to progressively increase the bite on seniors on fixed income.

The next letter is from M. Messel who writes:

We seniors are being asked, basically on a fixed income, to curb our standard of living so that the present government can have more money to spend, in my opinion much of it carelessly. Have the "members of Parliament" made any sacrifices personally to help the Canadian debt situation—if so what?

The next letter is from R. Paskell who says:

I must protest the proposed budget provision for the taxing of old age security pensions—

It is intolerable that this lack of trust now pervades both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance. Mr. Wilson has the nerve to maintain that this budget proposal maintains universality. How stupid does the minister think the electorate is?

—taxpayers have paid their premiums and if this were a private plan there would be no question of full entitlement regardless of other income.

This next letter was written by C. Monette to the Minister of State for Seniors and copied to me. It reads:

I am a chartered accountant, worked hard to earn a middle class income, contributed my services during my working years in the community and for my church, and gave as generously to charity as I could. I paid the old age tax from its inception.

The clawback gives the lie to election promises, and breaks faith with those of us who built this country after our services in the Armed Forces. —this is our reward for 45 years of service to the Crown and to the country!

Do you realize that we still must pay the old age security tax included in general taxes, plus showing the old age pension as taxable income—

If taxes must be raised, adjust the tax rates progressively against income, not against classes of people.

The next letter is from Mr. F. Reynolds:

We seniors paid for the right to have the old age pension at age 65 through our taxes in past years. I feel that just because many of us have through the years denied ourselves of some luxuries to provide a comfortable income in our old age, we should not be penalized for this. Had we spent frivolously and at age 65 had only our old age pension to live on, we would be entitled to the "Supplement". Under Mr. Wilson's proposed "clawback" we are going to suffer for being careful during our working years.

• (1050)

Mr. G. Tessier writes:

Why does the Government of Canada discriminate against seniors on OAS and on family allowances—

Under the Charter of Rights are we not guaranteed equal treatment? Since Canadian seniors and families making more than $50,000 a year are not the only Canadians to have contributed to the national debt, why should they be penalized?

A letter from P.R. Webb reads:

As one affected, I urge you to oppose the OAS clawback.

We've got to get rid of the right wing group manipulated by big business who are in the process of destroying Canada. I'm strongly tempted to pull out and join my daughter in Los Angeles!

Mr. McDermid: Oh yeah? Then see what her heart bypass costs her.

Mrs. Gaffney: Mr. and Mrs. Woodward write:

We are writing to express our objections to the clawback of the Old Age Pension—

Many seniors have declining health and must pay large amounts of money for additional help and transportation and to pay for expensive medication. Not all provinces give financial help with these.

Surely someone who has worked a lifetime and paid taxes all those years is entitled to what he has accumulated to use for his own living purposes. His planning for retirement has included the OAP which he had a complete right to expect to receive. This attempt at clawback is a breach of contract to be compared to a life insurance company's failure to honour the terms of annuity.

This next letter is a from Mr. and Mrs. Larocque who write:

My husband and I would like to add our names to the growing list of pensioners who are protesting the government's cutback—

> We understand that cutbacks are necessary, but we feel that attacks on the old age security payments are an unfair and irresponsible means of doing this.

The last letter is from a Mr. and Mrs. Neveu. They write:

> My wife and I wish to voice our protest against Mr. Wilson's proposed "clawback" of OAS payments. Even though these proposals will presently affect the rich—we believe that they will eventually affect those with much lower income.
>
> The universality of the old age pension should, in our opinion, be respected as a right of every Canadian.
>
> We believe the proposals made by the Minister of Finance threatened the financial stability of our retirement years. We have been retired for the past nine years and hope to be able to afford to stay in our own house for many more years.

These are not my comments, Mr. Speaker. I have expressed my comments before in the House of Commons. These are written comments of only a minute number of retired people within my community who have written to me as their member of Parliament. I am not the only one who has received hundreds of such letters. I am sure that everyone on the opposite side of the House has received hundreds of such letters as well but for some reason or other they have not got the courage to go against their Minister of Finance and vote out this clawback.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was concerned about some of the other clauses that we have been discussing this morning, but I am downright outraged about the proposed clawbacks of the old age security pension and the family allowance.

I have said before in this House, and I will say it again, that measures like the old age security and family allowance clawbacks are turning social policy into welfare policy and it is all being done in the name of harmonization.

My colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie, said that under the Prime Minister Canada's national vision has been replaced by a completely corporate vision. This government has sold off, shut down, privatized or cut back the best parts of that national vision. Air Canada, VIA Rail, Canada Post and CBC are only a few examples. Now, under this bill, the attack is on the most precious part of our national vision, universality of social programs.

Universal programs first attacked our old age security and family allowance. The question becomes what universal programs are going to be attacked second, third, fourth and fifth?

One of the members discussing this motion earlier talked about a CP wire story of 1984 which quoted the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said: "Our position is simple and straightforward. We are in favour of universality in social programs and it shall not be touched". Has the Prime Minister lost touch? Has he lost control? Has he forgotten that promise?

I wanted to believe him during the last election campaign, as most Canadians wanted to believe him, that universality would not be touched. Seniors certainly wanted to believe him. But I submit to you, Sir, that actions speak louder than words. This legislation was introduced in a very secretive way, not through social policy as somebody earlier said, nor with any proper discussion in committees. It was in fact slipped through in this sort of catch-all of amendments in the hope that we would all forget and not notice. I suggest that this is not acceptable to Canadians.

Under the system of the finance minister, the income level at which the clawback starts will move upwards according to the same deindexing formula that exists in the tax system. In other words, a worker earning $40,000 a year and watching his or her income rise with inflation would be earning enough to put his or her income over the clawback level for family allowance of $56,309 by 1997.

For retirees the clawback is even more complex and phases in more slowly. But a simple rule of thumb is that a worker who earns his or her age, say a 28-year-old worker earning $28,000, or the average industrial wage today, will be hit by the clawback by the time he or she retires. This assumes that income keeps pace with inflation and that retirement income is 70 per cent of a pre-retirement income.

It follows that at $28,000 for a 28-year-old worker, $40,000 for a 40-year-old worker, $50,000 for a 50-year-old worker, within 20 years one in four Canadians will have all or part of their pensions clawed back. One million pensioners, within 20 years, will be caught in this clawback grab.

Mr. McDermid: If we got back to a balanced budget you wouldn't have to worry about it.

Ms. Langan: I am sure that the minister across the way who wants to interject will have an opportunity to speak to this too if he so wishes. The clawback will move our pension system closer to that of the U.S. where workers are covered by contributory pensions like RCPP and QPP or by means-tested programs like our Guaranteed Income Supplement, but not by a universal pension program like our Old Age Security. No pension exists in the United States, as a right of citizenship, for those over the age of 65.

It has been the finance minister's mission to shatter the universality barrier and once that principle is gone it will be a very simple matter to refine the clawback even further and make the programs more and more selective by taxing back higher and higher levels of benefits.

This clawback requires that some fundamental questions be asked. Why should an individual be entitled to receive $100,000 in capital gains, tax free, but lose the $4,000 he or she gets in Old Age Security simply because it was paid as a universal social benefit?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 35, the House will now proceed to Statements by Members Pursuant to Standing Order 31.

The member will have three minutes remaining for debate when the bill is next called.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

THE LATE ANDREI SAKHAROV

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, Canadians and human rights activists around the world will mourn the passing of Mr. Andrei Sakharov. We will remember that more than 20 years ago Sakharov led that early fragile movement within the Soviet Union on behalf of human rights and international peace.

Sakharov was an individual who gave true meaning to the words of "courage" and "heart" and was concerned with his fellow men and women everywhere.

Sakharov, even in the last days of his existence, was challenging the present regime in the Soviet Union to move toward more progressive, open and democratic institutions. During his lifetime he challenged four separate Soviet institutions and in 1975 received the Nobel Peace Prize.

We mourn his passing. We recognize his great heart and his contribution to human rights world-wide.

* * *

THE LATE ANDREI SAKHAROV

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I too was deeply aggrieved to hear that Soviet human rights activist Andrei Sakharov died of a heart attack last night.

Mr. Sakharov, correctly called "the conscience of the Soviet Union", was recently elected to the Congress of the Peoples' Deputies and was working on constitutional reform of the Soviet political system when he died.

Mr. Sakharov in a real sense was a man of beautiful contrast. He built his eminence as a Soviet physicist who contributed to the development of the Soviet hydrogen bomb, but he did not allow that that tool of destruction should continue to be, for he later won a Nobel Peace Prize in 1975 for his advocacy of atomic disarmament, U.S.-Soviet co-operation in solving world problems and intellectual freedom in the U.S.S.R.

He was arrested in 1980 and sentenced to internal exile for his public opposition to Soviet foreign policies and for the Soviet government's suppression of dissidents and human rights activists. Later he was released. Despite personal persecution and exile, Mr. Sakharov worked tirelessly to promote the human rights issue in the Soviet Union and, indeed, the world over.

He will be remembered for his courage, his honourable principles and his selfless devotion toward peace. He died, but his mission to promote international respect for human rights as a guarantee of world peace will continue to live. We mourn his death. We are the beneficiaries of his mission.

THE LATE ANDREI SAKHAROV

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, today the world mourns the passing of human rights activist and Nobel Peace Prize winner Andrei Sakharov.

Sakharov will go down in history as a man dedicated to peace and protection of individual liberties. As we watch the swirl of change in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union we often associate that change with the name Gorbachev, but for most of his adult life Andrei Sakharov was persecuted for promoting greater freedom and democracy for the Soviet people.

From his forced exile in Gorky, Sakharov was a beacon of hope for his compatriots and a symbol of dissent for peoples from around the world. He not only criticized the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, but U.S. involvement in Vietnam, repression in the Middle East and racism in South Africa.

With his wife Yelena Bonner, Sakharov worked to change what was thought for so many years to be the unchangeable. Although we mourn the death of a great world figure and transmit our condolences to his wife and partner, Yelena Bonner, we take solace in the knowledge that Andrei Sakharov was able to see the fruits of his life work and long persecution.

The transformation of geopolitics we have experienced over the past months is a direct result of Andrei Sakharov. The world and our children's future are brighter for him.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the minister of immigration recently responded to the forced deportation of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong by the British Government by criticizing their actions but did not offer any assistance on our behalf; nor did the minister show any international leadership to help the boat people who have been interned in refugee camps for years.

In fact the Canadian government's assistance to the Indo-Chinese over the next three years plans to accommodate only 16,000 people, which sadly pales in comparison to the 90,000 brought to Canada during the 1979-1980 period.

Conversely, under this government, the largest group of the wealthiest immigrants arriving in Canada under the immigrant investor program is from the same country in which the Vietnamese are presently being interned.

By refusing to assist the Indo-Chinese properly in their hour of need, the Minister of Immigration has set a course toward the rich and powerful. That is not only a dangerous course; it is also a colossal shame.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, despite record economic growth and the increasing prosperity of Canadians, NDP and Liberal members are busy perpetuating the myth that Canadians have been worse off since the Conservatives came to power. According to the statistics, the opposite is true. The number of Canadians living below the poverty line today is three-quarters of a million less than the figure recorded in 1984. Poverty levels have declined since 1984, from nearly 17 per cent to 13 per cent. The average family income has reached its highest level ever, with an increase of 1.8 per cent over 1987, after adjustment for inflation. Low income levels for children under 16 declined between 1984 and 1988 from 20.1 per cent to 15.4 per cent. The number of adult women—16 years of age or over—living below the poverty line dropped by 30,000 last year, adding up to a total decline of 229,000 since 1984. Poverty levels for senior citizens dropped between 1984 and 1988, from 21.6 per cent to 17.2 per cent. This is good news, Mr. Speaker! Our economic recovery program works. I think we should tell Canadians, and I hope the media will help us explain what is really happening in our society!

* * *

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, on October 30 and again on December 6 constituents of Nepean and myself met in open fora to discuss the government's proposed GST. In addition, hundreds of letters have been received in my office and, with the exception of a handful, all are opposed to the goods and services tax.

Nepean constituents are telling the government something very important. Despite the government's condemnation of people who dare to speak out against the GST and the assumption that they do not understand it, these people do indeed understand what the proposed GST is all about. They are vehemently opposed to it.

I find it appalling that this government seems not to care what the people are saying. I find it appalling that this government is ignoring the cries of millions of Canadians. I say these millions are right and the 167 members on the government side are wrong.

Canada is a democracy and Canadians are disillusioned and have lost faith because of the actions of this government. Canadians are saying: "Listen to us and drop this GST".

* * *

TRANSPORTATION OF GRAIN

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the House should know that despite the rhetoric of several Conservative back-benchers, grain movement is proceeding normally off the prairies. Before freeze-up the Wheat Board always tries to empty Thunder Bay and leave lower St. Lawrence elevators full to meet sales commitments over winter.

Thunder Bay is still cleaning out. There are some 1.3 million tonnes of grain in stock; ample to fill the one ship loading, the two that are waiting and the six expected to arrive later in the week.

Lower St. Lawrence ports have plenty of grain to fill export demand. The flow to market has not changed.

There are problems within the seaway system with St. Lambert locks, as well as other operational problems, and recently the government has been unable to manage its labour relations. Back to work legislation only masks this point. Bill C-49 fails to live up to the government's own legislation on pay equity.

However, the bottom line is: the farmers' ability to deliver grain has not been affected. The Wheat Board has grain in position at the lower St. Lawrence in store and available for ocean ships. Thunder Bay will have space to receive prairie grain during the coming winter freeze-up.

[Translation]

ROBERT GIFFARD HOSPITAL

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, the Robert-Giffard Hospital near Quebec City is one of the most prestigious health care institutions in Canada. It is now conducting major research on psychiatric risk factors in children. This study is part of the Laval University-Robert Giffard Research Centre's clinical epidemiology program and follows a ten-year pilot study of child behaviour.

Mr. Speaker, today I wish to pay tribute to researchers at Robert Giffard Hospital who, under the supervision of Dr. Michel Maziade, an internationally known psychiatrist, are making an impressive contribution to the advancement of our medical knowledge of mental illness.

The people of Quebec and Canada owe a debt of gratitude to the Robert-Giffard Hospital for helping to improve the quality of life of the mentally ill and of society in general. I also wish to congratulate the Robert-Giffard Foundation which, together with the Government of Canada, provides financial support for this major research project.

* * *

• (1110)

[English]

FISHERIES

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the deplorable condition of wharfs in my riding such as Graham's Pond, Georgetown and Launching, to name but a few.

If repairs are not done immediately, these wharfs will be washed into the sea by next spring. The harbour at Launching is well on its way. Part of the sea wall has given way and sands are filling the harbour.

At MacAulay's wharf the disrepair is threatening the environment. Diesel fuel tanks are sitting on a section of wharf that is sinking and diesel fuel is leaking into the harbour.

Once again I implore the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to recognize the gravity of this situation, make Prince Edward Island fishermen a priority, and commit funds for the repair of wharfs today.

* * *

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago we were all shocked and saddened by the senseless killing of 14 of the cream of our youth in Montreal.

I wish to draw to the attention of the House today that every day, 365 days of the year, we are killing 12 Canadians in traffic related accidents. In other words, over 4,000 Canadians lost their lives on our highways last year. At this time of year the carnage usually increases due to darkness, poor road conditions and increased alcohol consumption.

I call on all Canadians to use extra care in driving at all times, especially during the holiday season.

I call on all levels of government to pass and enforce whatever laws are necessary to reduce this terrible carnage on our highways.

I also make a special plea for support for research to help solve this escalating problem.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, for years the world has been concerned about the flagrant situation of human rights in Iran.

Reliable reports indicate that 90,000 political executions have taken place. The Peoples Organization of Iran has published a list of names and particulars of more than 16,000 of these victims which exemplifies the dimensions of human rights violations by the ruling regime in Iran.

While human rights violations continue unabated and news of mass executions in public are reported every day, international pressures and efforts of the Iranian Peoples National Resistance are taking place.

Those are the testimonies from the people who have escaped from the prisons and appeared before the United Nations special reporters. What is basically happening is violations of human rights according to the United Nations Charter which are unprecedented anywhere in the world.

The Canadian government could offer its assistance to the special committee that will be going to Iran in a relatively few short weeks. The Canadian government could offer the help that is needed to substantiate all these charges against Iran and thereby call the regime in Iran to task to prevent such violations of basic human rights.

* * *

CHILDREN'S RIGHTS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations Children's Fund in its 1990 report on the state of the world's children spelled out that 38,000 children a day die and 100 million children in the next decade will die from hunger and its effects.

One must question the Canadian government's commitment to the 1.2 million Canadian children living in poverty when the Canadian government continually threatens to break our deficit over the backs of our children through measures like clawbacks on family allowance, reneging on child care, an ill-conceived 9 per cent tax grab, and threatened cut-backs on transfer payments under the Canada Assistance Plan.

The U.S. spends $1.5 million a day on military aid to El Salvador; twice as much as would be required to ensure that all of the children who die in the world each day would have been immunized and fed. Yet our federal government turns a blind eye.

What kind of credibility can Canada have at the UN on the matter of children's rights when the government is so negligent at home and abroad?

* * *

[Translation]

TRIBUTE TO MARGUERITE BERNIER

Mr. Jacques Tétreault (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Mrs. Marguerite Bernier, to whom I had the privilege of transmitting, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Volunteer Canada Award's certificate of merit. The certificate is awarded annually to recognize and encourage the dedication of Canadian men and women who volunteer their time to improve the health and the quality of life of their fellow citizens.

Mrs. Marguerite Bernier has been a dedicated fund-raiser for the Eye Bank Foundation of Quebec, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Heart Foundation and the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

President of the Saint-Claude-de-Laval senior citizens club since 1977, she has given her fellow members a new lease on life by organizing recreational activities and providing the help they need to have a better quality of life.

Mrs. Bernier, who will be 80 years old on March 3, 1990, is still an active member of the Laval-des-Rapides meals-on-wheels program and has been since 1982.

* * *

[English]

CANADA-ITALY INCOME TAX CONVENTION

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the comments made yesterday by the member for Sault Ste. Marie concerning the recent protocol amending the tax convention between Canada and Italy which addresses the taxation of certain pensions paid by the Italian state to residents of Canada.

At the outset I wish to indicate that the purpose of the new protocol was not to provide a fairer system of taxing pensions covered by the Canada-Italy Income Tax Convention.

Although the government believes that the protocol largely benefits Canadians in receipt of pensions from Italy, it should be pointed out that its purpose was not to secure a special or preferential status to a specific class of taxpayers but, rather, to ensure that the taxation of Canadian and Italian pensioners would be in accordance with Canadian tax policy.

An Italian pensioner with a small pension who is a resident of Canada receives the Guaranteed Income Supplement despite his level of other income.

To ensure that those in lower income brackets receive the exemption a threshold of $24,000 was provided. Residents earnings less than this amount receive their supplement free of tax; I repeat, free of tax.

For the majority of Canadian recipients Italy does not withhold tax. Where tax is withheld by Italy the Canadian resident can deduct the Italian tax from any Canadian tax payable on their pension. There is no double taxation; I repeat, there is no double taxation.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Minister of Finance.

Over the last several weeks this government has attempted to sugar coat the emerging economic crisis in this country. As the President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association said yesterday, "there is clear evidence that we are slipping into a recession".

Is the Minister of Finance not alarmed by the fact that a Statistics Canada report points out that there will be 100,000 less jobs created this year than last year?

When is the Minister of Finance going to take his responsibilities seriously and correct the serious structural deficiencies the Prime Minister talked about yesterday?

When is he going to do something about the accelerating interest rates and the high exchange rates which are killing our exports?

When is the Minister going to start taking his responsibilities as the Minister of Finance and put some growth back in this economy, put some exports back in this economy, and do something about the people who are unemployed?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think if one looks at the record of this government and the ability and commitment of this government to deal with issues and to deal with problems as they come up, one can seriously understand why we are doing the things we are doing and why we have been successful over the last five years in having growth that is second only to the growth of Japan and just marginally behind the growth rate of Japan which is the fastest in the major industrialized countries.

The hon. member mentions structural problems. Are we dealing with structural problems? Yes, we are dealing with structural problems. One of the ways is the goods and services tax.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wappel: That's a problem all right.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Hon. members do not like me to mention this. The goods and services tax has been a major structural deterrent in the tax system for the last 50 years.

Mr. Gauthier: It's going to be in future years is what you mean.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier is giving me his advice.

• (1120)

Quite frankly, I will take the advice of the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development and the International Monetary Fund, which organizations are saying that the importance of moving from the existing federal sales tax to the goods and services tax is a major structural change, a major initiative of this government. I intend to have something more to say about this with a statement in the House next Tuesday.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the minister that the proposed GST is a major structural problem. It is going to force up the inflation rate. It is going to force up interest rates. It is going to cause even more unemployment.

We now see the Canadian dollar at the highest rate in a decade. Interest rates are way beyond the historical average of 4.5 base points above American interest rates. Yet in his remarks yesterday the Governor of the Bank of Canada showed himself to be totally oblivious to the fact that the high interest rate policy is acting as a major deterrent to our exports, is having a crippling effect upon our regional economies, and is pushing this country into a recession.

When is the Minister of Finance going to assume his responsibility as the chief public policy maker in finance and to start setting guidelines that will bring interest rates down, bring the exchange rate down and start putting this economy back on track?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think I have demonstrated over the last five years that I understand fully the importance of low interest rates. That was clearly a very important part of the strength of the economy during these past five years.

The hon. member says that the Governor of the Bank of Canada is oblivious to the problems. The person who is oblivious to these problems is the hon. member himself.

Let me quote from the report of the Organization of Economic Co-operation and Development which states: "Recent Canadian economic performance has been impressive and has brought the economy back to full capacity utilization". However, it noted that inflation and the budget deficit remain problematic and need to be addressed.

These are exactly the two issues that we are addressing. We addressed them in the 1989 budget. We are addressing them through monetary policy. We are going to continue to address them until we have these two problems solved.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a tragedy that we have a Minister of Finance who prefers to listen to international bureaucrats and refuses to look at the reality in his own country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, considering the latest alarming figures on Canada's international trade balance, will the Minister confirm that his government will not make any cutbacks in the export development program's budget? In other words, considering the major decline in our exports, would the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Trade not agree that any action to diminish the export development program would be disastrous?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I delayed standing because I wanted to give my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, an opportunity to say what we are doing to promote international trade. I wanted him to talk about the broad program he has put in place which is supporting trade development both in Europe and the Far East as well as in the United States.

These initiatives are all very carefully co-ordinated so that the Canadian exporting community will have good support from the Government of Canada in order to ensure that we are able to tap these markets and bring the jobs that will come from expanding international trade.

One key element of this is that we can have all the trade promotion in the world but if we do not have access to markets, then we do not get the trade coming back from it. The free trade agreement is so important to Canada in order for us to have access to the United States market and so that we do have the opportunities that will flow from that. That will come from the very aggressive trade promotion program my colleague has put in place.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. To pretend that that free trade agreement has given us major enhanced access to the U.S. is a pot of nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: To pretend that the record level of the Canadian dollar is enhancing our exports is again misleading the country.

Is the minister not going to recognize now the new economic realities? We are into a recession. Is he not going to alleviate and get away from this stubborn, bull-headed, pig-headed, one-way track of high interest rates?

Is he going to change his policy, which he is taking out on the backs of the unemployed, the farmers, the fishermen, the manufacturers and the exporters?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, that sort of excessive language is not going to make his points any better than the comments of his colleague from Winnipeg.

Let me just make reference to what the Pace University study on U.S.-Canada business had to say. It was announced just yesterday. It states: "The free trade agreement has had an extraordinary effect in stimulating the Canadian economy".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is going to continue to have an extraordinary effect on ensuring that the opportunities open to us in the United States economy will be there because of the free trade agreement.

The hon. member makes reference to monetary policy, as did his colleague in his earlier question. We understand the impact that this has on the economy, but we also understand that we have an inflation problem.

If the hon. member wants to look at the inflation statistics released just this morning, he will see that the inflation performance is still too high. We have to get this done because we know that far from having a temporary problem now with high interest rates we will have a long-term problem of lost productivity and lost competitive position. That will rob us of those opportunities in the United States on a long-term basis.

We learned some lessons in the 1970s. We on this side are not going to forget those lessons, not like the people on the other side of the House did. Clearly, they have forgotten the mess they got this country into in 1981.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, with a record high Canadian dollar we are effectively shutting ourselves out of that American market.

The minister, in addition to giving us the second highest interest rates of all major industrialized countries in the world is also, according to the Prime Minister's statement in the House last week, on another type of economic mission: it is to increase the record level of foreign investment in Canada. We already have the world's highest record of foreign control over our economy.

Let us look at the facts about foreign investment. Statistics Canada has shown over the last 10 years that we have brought in $1.2 billion through foreign investment. The outflow to those foreign investors over that 10-year period has been $128 billion. If for every one dollar of foreign investment that is brought in there is $107 that flows out, who is benefiting, Canada, or is it the foreign investors who are buying up Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member asks who benefits from investment. Canada benefits from investment by the jobs that are created and so on.

We applaud when GM expands its automobile plant in Oshawa. We applaud when Freightliner opens up a Greenfields plant in St. Thomas, Ontario. We applaud those investments.

Incidentally, Canadians are investing overseas in record amounts as well. However, over the last decade, in fact the percentage of foreign ownership in Canada has decreased, not increased.

The hon. member raises a valid question about foreign borrowings and the need to service that debt. He might ask the Government of Ontario about its extensive foreign borrowings, particularly the utilities. If you look at where the borrowings are occurring, it is more at the provincial level than at the federal level, particularly by Ontario and Quebec utilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1130)

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I am not quite sure who he is, whether it is Mr. Crow or the member who is sitting there, but one of them can answer.

The government has created over one million fighters against inflation. There are over one million inflation fighters out there. The only problem is that they are all unemployed. I would like to know the minister's position on the following facts. According to the Canadian Exporters Association, every one cent increase in the value of the dollar costs us $1.3 billion in exports. In the lumber industry alone every one cent appreciation of the dollar costs us $100 million. This affects my province of British Columbia.

I would like to know when I go home and answer questions of people there who is running this show. Is it the minister or is it Mr. Crow? Who is responsible and who is making the decisions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a curious question the hon. member asked. They ask me that same type of question. They say: "Who is asking the questions, the member for Esquimalt or the President of the Canadian Labour Congress".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The simple answer to the question is that the government and the Governor of the Bank of Canada have extensive discussions on monetary policy. As a matter of fact, I had my regular weekly meeting with the Governor of the Bank of Canada just before coming to Question Period this morning. We have an ongoing relationship, an ongoing dialogue with the Governor of the Bank of Canada. We support the approach that the Governor is taking because we know the importance of getting the level of inflation down in order to avoid the problems that we got into as a country in 1981–82.

I remind the hon. member that the level of inflation was about 5.5 per cent in 1976. The government of the day forgot about that problem. It swept it under the carpet. Inflation started to creep up year after year. It reached a peak of 13 per cent in 1981. That led us directly into the huge mess that we got into with high interest rates of 20 and 25 per cent.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Every country did.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member says every country did. The hon. member should go back and check the numbers. She will see that the recession that we got into in Canada was far worse than that of the other industrialized countries.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I am interested in hearing the minister respond by saying he met with Mr. Crow this morning and I am glad that he got his instructions from him. The instructions are what concern me.

Mr. Crow is suggesting that an unemployment rate of around 8 per cent is necessary to control inflation in Canada. Eight per cent will mean over 1.5 million unemployed in this country, all of whom will either have to go on unemployment insurance or social assistance.

Is it this government's policy to substitute a lower interest rate that would create jobs in this country by Canadians for Canadians? Is it the policy to substitute that for an increase in costs of welfare and unemployment insurance as a social and economic policy of welfare by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and Mr. Crow?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member's frustration with high interest rates. I would like to get interest rates down as well. I know the difficulty of doing that in the face of the inflationary pressures in the economy today.

The growth in business credit was at 11 or 11.5 per cent in recent months. The growth in household credit, while it has come down from about 18 per cent to 15 per cent, is still high. Those two levels of growth of bank credit at a time when the economy is growing at a nominal rate of 7 or 8 per cent is clearly inflationary.

The hon. member is suggesting that we jack up this growth in business credit, jack up this growth in household credit. What will that bring, Mr. Speaker? A great big bout of inflation and that is something we have to avoid in this country if we want to get back to the level of sustainable non-inflationary growth that we had in the last few years.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, it is a question of choices. The minister knows very well that by moving in the goods and services tax the government will move into the economy in a way that will draw more disposable income out of consumers' hands into the government's hands. That is number one. Number two, the minister knows very well that by keeping interest rates high the cost of borrowing by his government and previous Liberal governments continues to be high. That money is drained out of the economy as well. Therefore, you have to make choices.

The choice by this government is obvious. It would rather pay high interest charges, pay money out of general revenue to offshore borrowers and not create more wealth inside this country with manageable inflation figures. The choice is clear. I ask the minister: is it his decision, is it Mr. Crow's decision or is it the government's decision to keep paying high interest on borrowing and keep people unemployed in this country in order to serve some right wing mania?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the hon. member, but I ask him to reflect on his own record. When he came into office as Premier of the province of B.C., there was a hundred million dollar surplus. When he left, there was a hundred million dollar deficit. That is how much that hon. member knows about how he should run a government and run government policy.

The hon. member has said this is all about choices. Yes, it is about choices. There are very important choices to be made here and we have made those choices. I think the record stands for itself over the last five years of what we have been able to do.

The hon. member has pointed out high interest rates and the effect that can have on the fiscal position of the Government of Canada as well as on the economy. We understand this. There has to be a reason why we have chosen this course of having a government fiscal policy and a monetary policy which is designed to get inflation down. That is because we understand what inflation will do to this country. We understand what that will do to interest rates on an ongoing basis and we understand how high inflation will damage the competitive position and the productivity of this economy on a long-term basis. This is what we are trying to stop. That is the choice we have made and I will stand by that choice.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Prairie farmers are facing the worst financial crisis in 50 years. In my province of Manitoba it is estimated that next year farm income will drop, not just a few percentage points, but a whopping 87 per cent. These are the minister's own figures. This is the man who has to be held accountable. This is the man who slashed farm support programs. My question is this: what is this minister going to do about this impending farm calamity?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, just to set the record straight, between 1981 and 1984, when the Liberal party was in power, net realized farm income averaged $3.1 billion per year. In the last five years that average of realized net income has risen to over $4 billion, an increase of 30 per cent over the Liberal years. Therefore, Conservative years are certainly much better for the farmers of Canada than Liberal years.

In terms of direct assistance, between 1981 and 1984 under the Liberals some $500 million to $550 million in direct assistance was provided. Between 1985 and 1989 some $2.5 billion in direct assistance was provided. That is more than a fourfold increase.

We acknowledge that the projections for 1989 are not very good. It is a combination of low commodity prices, drought and a whole other host of factors. They are preliminary projections. We are as concerned as the hon. member. I appreciate him raising this. We are looking at it with the provinces. We are assessing it. As before, when the need is there, we will be there.

• (1140)

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I will tell you what the record is. The record is that 8,000 farmers in Saskatchewan are facing foreclosure. In that province food plants have closed and communities are dying. One person leaves Saskatchewan every 23 minutes. In the province of Saskatchewan, farm incomes are estimated to drop 100 per cent next year, worse than Manitoba. My question is this: how can this minister rip the guts out of farm support programs when farmers are losing their land and losing their livelihoods?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, when the Liberals were in office in 1984 there were some 550 bankruptcies occurring on the farm. That has dropped to around 200 in this year, which is still not good enough.

We have announced in the form of the Green Paper Growing Together the need for the establishment of new stabilization programs and safety nets. That is precisely what the agriculture conference this week was all about. That is a track that we are on, a program that we are proceeding with, in consultation with the provinces and with the producers.

As to whether there is a need for interim assistance, we are assessing that at the present time. As I have indicated before, the farmers know that this government has stood behind them in the past and it will stand with them again in the future.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The President of the United States has turned thumbs down on Atlantic Canada lobster fishermen. So much for the Prime Minister's cosy relationship with the President of the United States.

The minister will know that as a result of this particular decision, lobster fishermen in Atlantic Canada will lose $30 million a year for the next three years. Since we are not certain as to what sanction might be imposed under the free trade panel, which this issue has now been referred to, I ask the minister specifically whether he is prepared to provide today compensation for those fishermen in Atlantic Canada who are going to lose as a result of this negative decision by the President of the United States under the auspices of the free trade agreement.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the problem caused for the lobster fishermen of eastern Canada is a problem caused by the Congress of the United States, the Democratic majority leader in particular, Senator Mitchell, and the main delegation, who had Congress pass this particular law which the President signed for whatever his reasons were.

We have already taken steps to ensure that the matter is resolved as quickly as possible. We have asked the United States to expedite the free trade panel procedure so that we might have a decision at least a month earlier than would otherwise normally be the case. The estimate is that the damage to Canadian lobster fishermen could be in the area of $20 million to $30 million in a year. We hope to have the matter resolved in under a year.

With respect to the question of compensation, I am afraid this is not damage caused anyone by the Government of Canada. Therefore, there is no plan to give compensation to anyone in this connection.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, during the last election it was debated very vigorously by government members that we would have guaranteed access to the United States market. As a result of this decision by the American Congress, supported by the American President, that guarantee of access is no longer possible. This decision on the Atlantic fisheries is causing a major crisis, along with a lot of other issues in the fisheries.

I am fully aware of the representations that have been made and the fact that the minister is trying to expedite a decision under the free trade panel. We do not know what the sanction will be. As a measure of good faith, does the minister not think it appropriate, fair and just for him to place on the floor of the House of Commons an undertaking to Atlantic lobster fishermen to the effect that he will provide compensation up to $30 million to those who are losing as a result of a regressive, negative attack on Canadian fishermen, particularly those in Atlantic Canada? Will the minister give us that undertaking?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the rhetoric of the hon. member is certainly very impressive. I wonder if he could refer me to any precedent of a previous government, particularly our Liberal predecessors, where such compensation was arranged in any case similar to this.

No country has an alienable right to export its goods to any other country. Each receiving country decides what its domestic laws are and what laws that country will pass. We are taking steps under the GATT and under the free trade agreement, which is an improvement on the GATT, to have this action by the U.S. Congress and the administration reversed. If we are successful and the Congress does not reverse this legislation, we will proceed in accordance with international practice to impose a penalty on American exports to Canada. That is why the system works, and that is the way we will be pursuing this vigorously and I hope effectively.

* * *

NORTHERN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): My question is to the Minister of Finance. As the industry knows, the minister has had for the last two years the northern tax benefit which has benefited many Canadians.

He also knows that many thousands of communities could be cut off from that benefit unless he makes a decision soon. As 1990 is only a couple of weeks away and the House is only sitting one more week, will he reassure Canadians in northern communities that they will have a full tax benefit next year?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there has been a task force report. It has made some recommendations. Those recommendations are being considered by the government. I can say to the hon. member as well as to colleagues on this side of the House who have a concern about this that whatever decision is taken by the government, it will not affect taxation in 1990.

Mr. Murphy: In the same sense of fairness, will the minister assure those northern communities and a number of provinces right across the country which lost part of their benefits last year that they will receive a full benefit next year, a benefit they were entitled to two years ago.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I repeat the same answer. There will be no change in the northern benefit in the isolated post allowance as it affects taxation in 1990.

* * *

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Health. I made a statement earlier today in which I pointed out that over 4,000 Canadians have lost their lives on our highways in the last year. This amounts to 12 people every day who are killed on our highways. It is particularly true at this time of year. In the statement I implored all levels of government to do whatever they can to improve this record.

I ask the Minister of Health today just what the federal government is doing to reduce this carnage on our highways.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question is particularly timely at this time of year when issues related to impaired driving are particularly important.

Today my department is releasing a major survey as to Canadian's attitudes and practices in drinking and driving. One of the things that it shows is that in the year that preceded the survey, two and one half million Canadians had driven with a driver whom they felt was impaired, whom they felt had had too much to drink.

This also indicates the degree of danger that there is to the rest of us on the highways. The problem is particularly acute among young Canadians between the ages of 16 and 24 who represent only a small part of the total population. But when it comes to all impaired drivers, they account for some 36 per cent of impaired drivers. The federal government has a program on impaired driving which is designed to discourage impaired driving and to do everything we can, particularly among young Canadians, to ensure that highways remain safe.

NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Health. Canada's aboriginal peoples are living in this country as they do in the Third World countries.

My question basically is based on the fact that we have an undue amount of violence, alcoholism, drug abuse and suicide. Will the government now admit that the programs it has in place do not work? Will the minister immediately implement a government-wide strategy to support the aboriginal peoples of Canada?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, indeed we do have such a strategy. There are a number of elements to it. We have programs designed specifically to deal with problems related to alcoholism and drug abuse on reserves.

• (1150)

In addition, we believe strongly that a program of transferring responsibility for health services on reserves to the native populations allows local control in terms of planning and delivery of health services. We believe that something is vital.

There have been many examples, most strikingly in the Hobbema reserve outside of Edmonton, where there has been dramatic progress by the local community working to bring down, first, the suicide rate and, second, to dramatically bring down the rate of problems related to drinking and to drug abuse. It is an example of how things can be done. The department continues to work closely with native groups in terms of assisting them.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Justice. The horrible social conditions faced by aboriginal peoples is borne out over and over again in evidence brought before several judicial inquiries.

There have been many calls for a native justice system. Will the minister inform this House when the government will take steps to establish such a system?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the government has been following, with great interest the Marshall inquiry in Nova Scotia, the inquiry in Manitoba and also the inquiry in Alberta—I think it is on the Blood reserve—with a view to taking the information that comes from those inquiries and making whatever improvements we can to the justice system.

As far as a separate native justice system is concerned, that idea has been brought forward. At the present time the government has no intention of implementing a separate native justice system. We have every intention of doing what we can to improve the present system for native people.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

As you know, the American judiciary is still detaining trucker Richard Bilodeau, and there seems to be a great deal of confusion here in Ottawa about the extradition treaty.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear from the Minister of Justice whether today, the government, which been dragging its feet from November 29 to December 15, whether the Minister of Justice could inform the House whether he intends to do everything he can so that Mr. Bilodeau can go home, considering the fact that today, the court refused to reduce bail from $500,000 to $50,000, because of the federal government's failure to do its homework on the extradition treaty.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the kind of exaggerated and unfair criticisms inserted in questions here are certainly illustrated by that question.

The government has been working and members of the government, including the Minister of State (Youth) and the Minister of Justice on this matter since Mr. Bilodeau was first detained in New Hampshire after the terrible accident in which he was involved. The case has been followed very closely.

I have instructed the embassy in Washington to review the judgment with the appropriate U.S. authorities with a view to finding a satisfactory solution as soon as possible. Our officials are maintaining consultation with our colleagues in Quebec. Several of our ministers have been in touch with the prosecuting attorney in the state that is involved. We have assured and reassured the Americans that manslaughter is an extraditable offence under the legislation. Everything possible has been done to assist this unfortunate Canadian citizen, Mr. Bilodeau.

It is unfortunate that the hon. member wants to grandstand and get up with unfair and unjustified criticism. Everything possible has been done for the Canadian citizen in the United States who is involved with the judicial authorities there.

[Translation]

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, I wish the government and the minister would remember that Mr. Bilodeau's wife and children are waiting for him to come home and that Mr. Bilodeau is bearing the brunt of this unfair situation which was created because the extradition treaty is apparently not crystal clear.

I want to ask the minister whether the Canadian government intends to underwrite Mr. Bilodeau's bail so that he can return home immediately, while the problem is being cleared up.

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I have just explained that ever since the government learned of this situation, it has been doing everything possible to assist Mr. Bilodeau so that he can have a reasonable bail hearing, reasonable bail set and return to his own home. He will of course have to show up for trial. It was a very serious accident that occurred and the judicial authorities in New Hampshire are entitled to proceed with the trial they have initiated.

The government is doing everything it can for him, his wife and family and because of our obligations as a government concerned about every one of our citizens. The Minister of State for Youth, the Minister of Justice and our department will continue to make every effort to see that Mr. Bilodeau is released because everyone is presumed innocent until they have been proven guilty.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): I have a question for the Minister of Housing concerning Mr. Jarvis, president of CMHC, and his failure to follow the very clear CMHC conflict of interest policy. On page 3 of his policy it states that a confidential report on conflict of interest must be provided within 60 days of employment.

Is it acceptable to the minister that Mr. Jarvis failed to file his confidential report until three months after the deadline and then only after I raised questions in the House and only after there was a public disclosure that he had not complied with CMHC policy?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member I am sure is well aware, having examined the CMHC conflict of interest guidelines, the matter was before the board of directors of CMHC in June of this year and it was only in July of this year that it was finally approved and put into effect. Obviously there have been some delays in the filings in relation to those guidelines but, as the hon. member confirms, Mr. Jarvis has in fact made his appropriate filing at the present time.

Mr. Karpoff: He has made it within the last few days. I know that the minister, as a lawyer and a minister of the Crown, is very concerned about due and proper process. On page 2 of the conflict of interest guidelines it states:

> Before or upon employment board members must sign the certification documents certifying that they have read and understood the policy and that they will observe them as a condition of their appointment.

Did Mr. Jarvis sign the certification as required and if so, why did he continue to serve when he was in violation?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, most definitely I am absolutely concerned about compliance with all of the rules and regulations and conflict of interest guidelines. In this instance Mr. Jarvis has confirmed that he was certainly well aware of those guidelines and that he would comply with them. In fact, as a member of the board of directors which approved the guidelines, he obviously was aware of them and now has complied with the requirements as indicated.

ETHIOPIA

Hon. David MacDonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs or in his absence, the acting secretary of state, with respect to the very rapidly deteriorating situation in the northern part of Ethiopia, the resumed threat of famine to as many as 5 million people, the increasing civil conflict that prevents many of those people from being reached under the present circumstances.

In light of the call this week by the President of Kenya for open relief corridors into the most affected parts of northern Ethiopia, can the acting secretary of state indicate what actions the Government of Canada is taking to ensure that badly needed Canadian relief assistance and relief from around the world will get to these people who are so very much going to be in need in the early part of next year?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who just asked that question of course has had extensive experience in Ethiopia and I know his concern is very genuine. We have been working with other donors. We have been working with UN organizations and international relief agencies to persuade the Government of Ethiopia to allow access to those who are starving in northern Ethiopia. We were encouraging the UN organizations to ensure that a co-ordinator, either in New York or Addis Ababa as was the case in 1984 and 1988, act as a focal point for the relief organizations and strive to win co-operation of the parties in Ethiopia.

• (1200)

Finally, the government has approved $17.7 million in food aid and emergency relief assistance to Ethiopia this year: $13.4 million to the Canadian non-governmental organizations and $4.25 million to the World Food Program and UNICEF.

I might also inform the hon. member that CIDA's country program manager for the Horn of Africa has just returned from a visit to Ethiopia and Sudan where he reviewed the situation on the ground. His report is being reviewed urgently to try to ensure that we have in place a mechanism which is adequate to meet the challenge. This is being given every attention and priority.

TIEM CANADA

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I would like to address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

TIEM Canada was a national company located in five cities including Winnipeg. TIEM was designed to assist small and medium sized businesses. It received huge amounts of public funds. In May this year it closed its doors.

Why did the ministers involved in providing huge amounts of public funds refuse to renew its contracts?

[Translation]

Why didn't those departments, including the Department of Employment and Immigration, the Department of Industry, Science and Technology and the Federal Business Development Bank, renew these contracts and why won't they give us the report on this company's performance?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I carried a file around for several months on that particular company.

I do not happen to have it here today, so I will have to take that question as notice and I will get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East, followed by the hon. member for York West on single questions.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration. Federal regulations and bureaucratic delays are barring children of refugee claimants from attending school until their parents have passed the credible basis test. This can take up to four months in the Kitchener, Toronto, and Vancouver areas.

Will the minister of immigration waive the present regulations and issue a no objection letter as was done in the past to allow children to attend school while their parents are waiting?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to remind my colleague that schools are a provincial jurisdiction. However, we have an administrative agreement allowing us to reduce the backlog of applications.

Our officials send an information letter to school authorities and this normally gives very good results.

[English]

Officials are now working on regulations to resolve any remaining problems. The regulations will give such personal legal status as students. We expect the regulations to be ready in the very near future.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Employment and Immigration. It concerns her government's response to the forced deportation of Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong by the British Government.

The minister has said to be against the forced deportation, but her planned levels to accept Indo-Chinese refugees for the next three years is only 16,000 which pales by comparison to the 90,000 accepted by Canada in the 1980 period.

My question is very straightforward and very simple. In light of these numbers, why is this government turning a blind eye to the boat people while at the same time embracing and extending an arm to the yacht people from the same part of the world?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, our colleague knows full well that our immigration level is reviewed annually. Our policy has five components. However, we are contemplating flexible measures which could take new developments into account. The situation described today involves one component of our immigration policy and our government will consider any humanitarian aspect as it has in the past.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Justice on a point of order.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

NOTICE OF ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-28

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Orders 78(1) and 78(2) with respect to an allocation of time to the report stage and third reading stage of Bill C-28, an act to amend the Income Tax Act and the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related act.

Under the provisions of Standing Order 78(3), I give notice of my intention to move a time allocation motion at the next sitting of the House for the purpose of allocating a specified number of days for consideration and disposal of proceedings at those stages of the bill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

TREASURY BOARD

TABLING OF BRIEFING PAPER

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a briefing paper completing the statement I will make in a few minutes.

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government's response to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the government's expenditure review process, I am in a position today to announce a package of initiatives designed to make government operations more efficient and to save Canadian taxpayers $1.4 billion over the next three years.

These actions are the latest step in our constant efforts since 1984 to manage frugally. They follow the hard decisions announced last spring in the budget.

I would like to underline that the Minister of Finance and I will be announcing further reductions in spending in the new year. The government is continuing to review expenditures in order to adhere to our fiscal plan as we prepare early in the new year for the next budget and the Main Estimates.

When Canadians used to look at the federal government operations they would see red: red tape and red ink. The measures I am announcing today will help us make solid progress on both.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the very real success we have had in bringing government spending under control is sometimes overlooked. Since 1984, we have taken a number of steps, often difficult and sometimes unpopular, to eliminate wasteful practices and spending by introducing a more businesslike approach to the operations of government. These have included expenditure and program reviews, reductions in payments to and privatization of Crown corporations, reductions in the size of the Public Service and cost-recovery measures.

As a result of these measures, we have kept annual growth in program expenditures to 3.6 per cent, well below the inflation rate. Compare that, Mr. Speaker, to the annual 14.1 per cent growth which occurred during the last five years of the Liberal administration.

• (1210)

We have met our objective of reducing the size of the Public Service. It is now the size it was 17 years ago, and that in spite of a heavier workload.

[English]

We have improved cash management. This alone has saved taxpayers nearly $1 billion since 1985. We have been leading the country in terms of leadership vis-à-vis wage settlements.

In the last round we have averaged an increase of 4.2 per cent per year for the total of the federal Public Service. We have reduced program spending to the point where we expect budgetary revenues to exceed programs spending by about $9 billion this year. That is a very significant improvement. We inherited on coming into office a $12 billion deficit in program spending, and we now have a $9 billion surplus.

This government has done more to control spending and to improve programs and services than any other government in recent history. We know that Canadians have not found it easy to accept many of the restraint measures that were necessary to manage the economy and ensure our future. I want Canadians to know that the government has been tightening its belt and will continue to do so.

Today's package is real. It is difficult. In fact it will not only mean doing better and more with less; in some cases it will mean doing without. However that is what leadership is all about and there is no better place to start than right here in this great institution.

This week the Board of Internal Economy which oversees the expenditures of the House of Commons reached an all-party agreement on a number of measures which will save Canadian taxpayers several million dollars. First of all we will save half a million dollars by cutting grants to parliamentary associations and by cutting budgets for foreign travels and visits by parliamentarians by 20 per cent.

We will save up to $730,000 by closing two parliamentary cafeterias and a private dining room and lounge for members of parliament, as well as reducing cafeteria operating hours. We will be raising prices to increase cost recovery from the parliamentary dining room and catering services.

We will save $300,000 by implementing a two-year freeze on certain aspects of members' non-salary budgets.

[Translation]

We will terminate a broadcasting studio service to Members of Parliament for an immediate saving of $300,000 and we will save over $1 million through a 20 per cent reduction in the cost of pamphlets which Members send to their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate Members of all parties on the Board of Internal Economy for deciding to take these measures because they have shown their willingness to provide leadership during a period of fiscal restraint. In so doing, we, as Parliamentarians, are setting an example in our own house.

That is why the governmeent will reduce the budget of the National Capital Commission by $8 million a year. It will also defer expenditures on projects such as underground parking and statues on Parliament Hill.

Furthermore, we will reduce spending on Confederation Boulevard and official residences. Specifically, renovation of 7 Rideau Gate, the government's guest house, will not proceed. This alone will make it possible to save $3 million over the next three years.

Other major capital projects, totalling $3 million, at Rideau Hall, 24 Sussex and Harrington Lake are also being deferred.

[English]

We have ordered an immediate 20 per cent reduction in international travel by public servants.

In addition, we will sell two of the eight Challenger jets used by the government for ministerial travel. One reason we can do without the two Challenger jets is that ministerial travel has decreased very significantly since 1983-1984. The average number of flying hours per month has dropped by 25 per cent. The average number of flights per month has decreased by 37 per cent.

There is much more that we as a government will do to make major savings of taxpayers' dollars and make those dollars work harder and better. We have decided to extend by two years the two per cent cap on increases to the operating and maintenance budgets of government departments.

This 2 per cent ceiling has been in effect for the past four years and was due to expire. Extending the ceiling two more years will challenge managers in the Public Service to do better with less. In some cases it will lead to trimming in some programs and services. This measure, which is the largest single saving in the package, will require ongoing restraint in government departments and will realize roughly $450 million a year.

We have ordered a two-year freeze on construction projects worth some $460 million planned for the national capital region. Only those projects required for safety or health reasons or to maintain essential operations will be allowed to proceed with construction during this period. This will save $70 million over the two-year period.

We will reduce the operating budget of External Affairs by $70 million over the next four years. In addition, we will cut Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation's administration and research budget by $3 million.

[Translation]

We will introduce a "blue box" paper recycling program and related measures which will improve the environment and save more than $1 million a year.

The government will also be taking a series of cost-recovery initiatives, totalling $390 million over three years. This reflects a new policy which gives departments the opportunity to retain a portion of cost-recovered revenue. The following initatives will be taken: we will increase fees for processing immigration and visitor visa applications and for entering and using national parks; we will add new administrative fees for processing student loans and improve the collection of overdue payments on those loans; and we will eliminate the $175 million annual subsidy to the Post Office and replace it with a better-targeted program of direct support to Canadian publishers. Part of the savings will be redirected to other programs of the Department of Communications.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: As I said earlier, these cost-saving measures will challenge managers in the Public Service to do better with less. A supporting component of today's package, therefore, is an important set of measures to improve the management and delivery of government programs and services. This includes incentives for more effective program and budget management, as well as the restructuring of several government agencies and organizations. A major innovation will be to allow Public Service managers to carry over three per cent of non-salary operating and maintenance funds into the following fiscal year. This should allow wiser spending by putting an end to the pressure on managers to use funds at the end of the fiscal year just to avoid losing them.

[English]

We are also introducing an innovative concept of management in government called special operating agencies. These agencies are pilot projects to improve the delivery and cost efficiency of services offered by the government. They will operate within government in a business-like manner with flexibility that is necessary to achieve agreed upon bottom line results.

Some of these agencies will compete with the private sector as suppliers of services to the government and will have to give account for the results at the end of each year. We will convert the passport office, the government telecommunications agency and the Public Service Commission staff training program into special operating agencies. As a result they will have multi-year business plans and specific business goals.

• (1220)

We are merging the publishing and printing operations of Supply and Services Canada and the mapping service of Energy, Mines and Resources Canada. They will then become one special operating agency.

Two other divisions of Supply and Services—the Audit Services Bureau and the Bureau of Management Consulting—will also be consolidated and converted into one special operating agency.

We are closing down the government's exhibit production facility and the Canadian government photo centre.

We will use computer based systems to improve asset management. We will provide incentives to managers to dispose of surplus assets and to increase fees for service by allowing departments to retain a portion of the proceeds for reinvestment to improve the services that generate the revenue.

We will contract out the operations of the Canada Student Loans Program and increase contracting for translation services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, these are all substancial measures. As I said earlier, they are designed to cut red tape and red ink.

Canadians have demanded that the government improve its performance and budget management. We have heard them loud and clear.

As the Prime Minister said recently when he announced the Public Service 2000 Program, it is essential that the Public Service be modernized to meet changing conditions and to provide better services.

He also rightly pointed out that the Public Service has to be improved as an institution that can offer careers to people devoted to serving their fellow citizens.

Mr. Speaker, the measures I have announced today are substantial, but more has to be done. That is why I say that today's announcement is part of an on-going process.

Mr. Speaker, this government is committed to more than the bottom line. It is committed, in a thoughtful and on-going way, to providing Canadians the quality of service and the quality of life which they so richly deserve.

I had the pleasure to table, in both official languages, detailed information on the package I have just announced.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond this afternoon to the statement made by the President of the Treasury Board who henceforth will be renamed Ebenezer Bob. Ebenezer Bob has perpetrated the announcement this afternoon on Canadians just before the Christmas season.

In large measure this statement is a smoke screen announcement. It is to hide the real biggy which will happen next Tuesday, as admitted by the Minister of Finance a little earlier this morning in response to a question by one of my colleagues.

Next Tuesday, I predict, the Minister of Finance will be announcing the biggy to which I referred previously. It will be a sledgehammer on Canadians, his much dreaded GST which is known as the goods and services tax or perhaps more appropriately the grief and suffering tax.

The GST the minister will announce in a few days at whatever rate will be unacceptable to Canadians. The measures announced today will not camouflage or hide the fact that Canadians are displeased with what the government is proposing.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, there are in fact three main components in today's government statement. For openers, there is a reference to cut-backs in parliamentary services. I will get back to this point later on, but for now I want to point out that when services are reduced the immediate victims are always the people who are on the lowest rung of the salary scale. I have in mind the employees in the parliamentary cafeterias who will hear this news in a few minutes. Again the lowest-paid workers bear the brunt of these tragic circumstances. I hope none of them will lose his or her job.

Capital expenditures and public services will also be curtailed and, finally, higher fees will be paid by all Canadians.

[English]

Let me deal first with the cut-backs in the previously announced national capital region projects. Your Honour will notice that I said "national capital region".

I am going to name a few projects that are cancelled: underground parking and other measures on Parliament Hill, repairs to the Rideau Canal, new headquarters for the National Archives, new headquarters for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, new headquarters for the Federal Court, and so on.

The one thing all these announcements have in common is that these were projects in the national capital area. I see the minister responsible for the national capital area here with us today. I say to him that this is probably not one of his better days as a cabinet minister.

In fact, all cut-backs in construction projects are in the national capital area. We are talking about cancelling projects to the Rideau Canal system, not the Trent-Severn system, not any other system across the country, but merely in the national capital area.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: I hear some of the Tories across the way saying "Hear, hear". Let me read to the members across the way and remind them of something.

In The Ottawa Citizen of November 24, 1988 the hon. member for Mississauga South was interviewed. Here is what the article said: " 'If Ottawa voters felt neglected before, they don't know the meaning of the world', said Don Blenkarn, chairman of the commons finance committee".

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker: "Why would you bring any goodies to Ottawa? Why wouldn't you cut back on everything you could in Ottawa? Why wouldn't you take some departments that have good employees and move them into areas where there is some slack? Who's to care about a bunch of public servants who lose their jobs?"

Those are comments by the member for Mississauga South. Today those things are coming to pass.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: We are now seeing the face of the Conservative government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am upset by these announcements and by this attack on the national capital region on the part of the government across the way. I would be upset if any member of the government had done that. The President of the Treasury Board only a few years ago was the member of Parliament for Ottawa Centre. It is difficult for the people of the national capital area. The people of this city and this region will clearly not swallow that.

The Tories may have elected only two out of fourteen members in eastern Ontario, but the next time they will lose every single seat in this area. It is that kind of arrogance, combined with the failure of the few members from eastern Ontario to defend the interests of this area, which will make it such, I predict.

Members opposite and the President of the Treasury Board were telling us a few moments ago how the number of public servants had gone down. They were saying what a great thing this was in their view. What a great thing it is to cut back on services to Canadians, according to the Tories across the way.

Just in case the government is trying to fool all Canadians, let me remind Your Honour of what was said in an article of The Financial Times—and I am sure it is a publication read frequently by the Minister of Finance and the President of the Treasury Board—as reprinted in The Ottawa Citizen.

This particular story, of which I have a copy dated December 5, speaks of the number of consultants which the government has hired at the same time as cutting back civil servants and pretending to save money.

• (1230)

The Department of Supply and Services—and the minister is right here listening to this—spent $143 million on consultants in 1986–1987. In 1987–1988, in the continuing restraint of the government across the way, it spent $247 million. Now, that is restraint from this government. What they are doing is cutting back on civil servants and hiring consultants, hiring friends of the government, hiring people on contract and otherwise, in an attempt to fool the people of Canada that they are cutting back when they are not. It is simply not true and that needs to be repeated in this House.

I want to discuss the individual cuts that have been made by the government. I mentioned a moment ago the freeze in capital projects that will be only in the national capital area, but nowhere else in the country. I also want to speak about the cutbacks at the National Capital Commission. I know my colleague for Hull–Aylmer is very upset about these cuts. We have built a beautiful museum across the way and now many of the ancillary facilities to surround it will be terminated or at least will be delayed.

We were told this morning that Canada Mortgage and Housing will be imposing user fees. As my distinguished colleague for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke mentioned at that time, this will cause additional charges to municipalities and others that need services from the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation. This is not a cut, this is not a saving, this is a transfer of the burden from the federal government to the municipalities.

Mr. Hopkins: Passing the buck!

Mr. Boudria: Passing the buck, as my colleague for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke has so eloquently stated.

There is one provision that the minister is trying to implement and I would ask him to withdraw it above all others. On page 6 of the minister's document, which was provided to us today, it speaks of mandatory direct deposit for government employees pay cheques. This will also apply to people on pensions.

I do not see how this government could in all conscience tell a 73 year old widow that she has to give her bank account number to the President of the Treasury Board or his staff, otherwise her cheques will be cancelled. That was what we were told this morning and it is not right. I ask the minister to consult with the Privacy Commissioner and with others and to please withdraw at least that provision.

We may disagree in certain policy areas, but on this particular one I hope that the minister will understand the impact that this could have on the individual rights and freedoms of Canadians. If I do not want to have a bank account or if a civil servant does not want to have a bank account, he or she should not be forced to have one and to provide the number of that bank account to the President of the Treasury Board or to anyone else. If the minister wants to impose such a measure on new employees, we could argue about that. To impose that not only on present employees but on people who have retired and are receiving superannuation benefits, is not right and I really question the legality of such a measure.

I hope the President of the Treasury Board is a fair person and that he will look at this measure again. I had some discussions with his staff this morning and suggested to them that they have a second look at that measure. I know that sometimes staff or bureaucrats prepare documents for us and when they are looked at again by someone in elected office they are seen in a different light. I ask the minister to do this in that regard.

[Translation]

Earlier today, Mr. Speaker, the minister said there will be cut-backs at Canada Post. Well, this is not quite true because if this is a reference to subsidies concerning publications it is in fact a subsidy offered to companies that publish magazines and small newspapers, mainly weeklies, to enable them to sell papers at prices Canadians in rural areas can afford to pay. Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is familiar with the town of Hawkesbury in my riding. Indeed I believe his wife was born in Hawkesbury and that he goes to my riding quite often. He would know just how important it is to publishers of small newspapers and magazines to do everything they can so that as many Canadians as possible have access to the news out of rural ridings.

I do not see this as a charitable gesture. I rather think it is intended to maintain proper balance between small newspapers in the various regions of Canada and the major dailies in urban centres. The same goes for magazines. Sure enough, the widely published magazines can do without government assistance, but most smaller Canadian publications will be hard-pressed to face higher costs.

[English]

A little earlier I consulted my colleague, the member for York West. He mentioned to me some features of this new so-called Immigration Cost Recovery Program. He reminded me that in 1984 when this government was sworn into office, the cost of processing an immigration document was zero. It was then set at $125 and today it is $250. A new Canadian or anyone else who wants to sponsor their brother, mother, or sister in Lebanon or another country will now have to pay $250 in order to be able to present an application to the government across the way.

Not all new Canadians are rich. Not all people applying to come to this country are rich. As a matter of fact, in many cases it is the opposite. They have, of course, many resources in terms of their energy and their willingness, but their financial resources are very often small. These potential new Canadians deserve our compassion and should be assisted in a fairer way than charging them $250 before we decide whether or not we want to roll out the welcome mat.

My colleagues, the member for Ottawa West and the member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke and I will be making further comments later this afternoon on the cuts announced today and this cost recovery package.

I want to remind the minister of one topic where I think he is in error, and that is the cutbacks at External Affairs and International Trade. We learned this week that for the first time in many years, we now find ourselves with a trade deficit. That is all the more reason why the minister should look at the expenditures of those departments. But not to take the money out of the department, not to cut back. Reallocate it, make better use of it, and even increase those budgets in order to ensure that we can once again find our place in international trade and have the trade surpluses that we have had in this country in prior years.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I must say I could not believe what I heard from the President of the Treasury Board. What he said today in the House of Commons is an insult to the intelligence of Canadians everywhere in this country, to think that they are going to buy this kind of line. Here he is, the artful dodger of the cabinet. It reminded me of the old riverboat gambler who would play out and lose a couple of hands to lure in the gamblers and then put it to them.

He is trying to lure in Canadians today. If I had the opportunity, the first question I would like to put to the minister would be, how much is the government going to spend on convincing Canadians that these are serious cuts he has announced today? What are those expenditures going to be?

What is this all about? The government has on its hands a goods and services tax of 9 per cent or 7 per cent that has been rejected by people right across this country. Virtually every single organization that has spoken out on this issue has been against it. The government has to find some way to recoup and to try to convince, or fool with a snow job, a con job, a smoke and mirrors trick, to give the impression that the government is cutting back on its expenditures. The President of the Treasury Board has the gall to stand up and announce a number of these cosmetic cuts today.

We are trying to sell a goods and services tax that is unsaleable, that is unpalatable and unsavoury to virtually every Canadian, and the government is going to say: "Here is what we have done. We have cut back".

• (1240)

I noticed that the President of the Treasury Board did not mention the government propaganda machine. He has already spent $9 million trying to convince Canadians that the goods and services tax is good for them. God knows how many millions will be spent next year. Has he any cuts in that area? Has he any cuts in the advertising of government programs, or any cuts in the propaganda department? Not a single cut.

We notice that there are some cuts to the services of members of Parliament. Fair enough, Mr. Speaker. However, are there any announced cuts to the ministers' budgets? Are there any announced cuts to any of the budgets of one of the largest cabinets in Canadian history? No other government has had so many people in cabinet. Are there any announcements that the cabinet ministers are cutting back on their political staff and the huge entourages that surround them? No, there are no cuts there, and no cuts at all to the slush funds that the ministers have for handing out plums to their friends.

What about our Prime Minister? Here is a Prime Minister that gallivants around on the international stage trying to impress, not everybody in the world, but the people back home, with these huge shows that he conducts when he goes around the globe. He should be called the Mick Jagger of international politics, out there with a lot of flash, a huge stage and a lot of sound. He travels with a huge entourage and a number of planes wherever he goes. By leaps and bounds it is becoming the largest entourage following a prime minister that we have ever seen in this country. Are there any cuts there, Mr. Speaker? There are no cuts in those areas.

If the government was serious about sending a signal to the people of Canada that it was going to cut back on its expenditures, it would have cut back on the budgets of the ministers. It would have cut back on the gallivanting of the Prime Minister. It would have cut back on the massive advertising propaganda of the government.

There was one area that the minister did not even mention, and that is the whole area of corporate tax expenditures. If the government was serious and went through the list of not the hundreds of millions, but billions and billions of dollars that the taxpayers of Canada lose every year because of corporate tax expenditures, he could have come up with billions of dollars in cuts. Then the people of Canada would have applauded him. But no. He chipped away, for example, at the area for encouraging Canadian publishers. Canadian publishers are struggling under the threat of the free trade deal, trying to withstand the pressures from the United States. What does the minister announce? They are going to cut back on support to the publishers of Canada.

There is another group that has been hit right between the eyes. Time and time again, not only has this government cut back on support for universities, colleges, technical and vocational schools, they have cut back on the support for students in terms of loans and bursaries. Now they are going to add new charges to the student loan process, an administrative fee of 3 per cent to all new Canada student loans. Well, isn't that the perfect way to encourage Canadian students and send them a clear signal that we appreciate the efforts of young people to improve themselves in terms of post-secondary education by adding more fees to this area.

Obviously we are seeing the free trade agreement poking its head into the minister's discussion today. The Americans have said that they do not want to see the Government of Canada helping out Canadian publishers. So the government today announced that that is fine. Once again, like it did on the unemployment insurance area, the Government of Canada is backing off in the support it provides to those small Canadian publishers.

What about user fees to national parks? The fees for Canadians visiting a national park will go up. These parks are a common heritage of all Canadians, but slowly and surely as a result of privatization programs, user fees on the various aspects of the federal government's park programs are now making the parks not for all Canadians, but for those Canadians with money.

Let us talk about new Canadians and the doubling of the immigration application fee. While we have the entrepreneurial program that says if you have $200,000, you can just buy your passport, for those people who do not have lots of money, we are going to make it even more difficult by doubling the amount of fees they have to pay simply to apply to visit and to enter Canada as a landed immigrant.

I could go on and on. If the minister thinks that this snow job is going to fool Canadians, this little smoke and mirrors show, this little cosmetic act that he has performed today in the House of Commons, which is an insult to the intelligence of every Canadian, is going to somehow say to the people of Canada that the government is cutting back on expenditures while at the same time smashing the people of Canada between the eyes with the goods and services tax, that this is going to make the selling of your goods and services tax any easier, you have something coming.

* * *

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the twenty-seventh report of the Striking Committee.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in the report later this day.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings]

* * *

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (for Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology and Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-56, an act to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the hon. minister have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING—CONCURRENCE IN TWENTY-SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to move concurrence in the twenty-seventh report of the Striking Committee presented earlier this day.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to stand in the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, and present petitions from many residents of my constituency of Nepean who are opposed to the establishment of a goods and services tax.

These petitioners come from all walks of life and yet their voice is as one. "Do not implement the GST", they are saying, and they call upon Parliament to reject the proposed tax implementation.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the pleasure to introduce a motion on behalf of Canadian citizens who are requesting the Minister of Employment and Immigration Canada and Health and Welfare Canada to revise the medical standards for admission to Canada with a view to compliance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the enhancement of the human rights and dignity of persons with disability.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to rise and present to you 96 petitions. In order to facilitate the perusal of petitions, they have been condensed into nine major petitions, but there are 96 petitions here with a total of 3,900 names of residents of the Okanagan—Shuswap area in British Columbia.

• (1250)

These residents are asking the government to reject the proposed goods and services tax, to consult with business, labour and consumer groups, in order to reach a broad consensus on reform of the tax system before implementing any further changes, and to ensure that there is a process of fair tax reform that will provide a healthy climate for future economic growth in Canada.

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to stand in this House today and present a petition on behalf of my constituents and those, in particular, in the Montague area. My constituents feel it is grossly unfair that the goods and services tax be levelled on skating expenses, including instructional fees, rentals and purchases. Instructional skating is an educational service, therefore it should not be taxed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 129, 134, 154, 155, 170 and 171.

[Text]

PAROLE HEARINGS ADJOURNED BY THE CORRECTIONAL SERVICE OF CANADA

Question No. 129—Mr. Brewin:

1. From 1985 to the present, have there been parole hearings which adjourned from month to month due to lack of case preparation by the Correctional Service of Canada and, if so, by region (a) has their number been growing (b) what proportion have been (i) full parole (ii) day parole hearings (c) has the same prisoner's case been adjourned more than once and, if so, what number of times (d) what number of prisoners are required to double-bunk with other inmates as a result of delays in Parole Board hearings?

2. What is the cost per day to keep a prisoner in (a) a medium-security (b) a minimum-security institution?

3. What is the estimated cost of hiring sufficient staff to perform the case studies and evaluations required by the Parole Board without undue delay to the parole process?

4. What number of new employees have been hired by the Correctional Service to prepare the assessments needed by the Parole Board?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): 1. Yes, there have been parole hearings which were adjourned or waived, however, the Correctional Service of Canada (CSC) does not have data on waivers available prior to the 1988-89 fiscal year.

(a) Yes, when comparing the period of April 1 to September 30 for the fiscal years 1988-89 and 1989-90, the total waivers issued, by region, were as follows:

Region	1988-89	1989-90
Atlantic	3	15
Quebec	72	58
Ontario	109	168
Prairie	8*	16
Pacific	11*	15
	203	272

* Full reports were not received from the Prairie and Pacific regions during the first quarter of the 1988-89 fiscal year.

(b) (i), (ii) Statistics are not kept in a manner to differentiate day parole and full parole hearings. However, a system to provide this type of information is currently being developed.

(c) It is not possible to isolate individual cases that have been adjourned more that once. In order to provide such information, a case-by-case review of every inmate's file would have to be conducted. CSC does not have the resources available to conduct such a review.

(d) Statistics on inmates double-bunked solely as a result of delays in the National Parole Board (NPB) hearings are not available.

Double-bunking is reserved primarily for newcomers. Inmates are moved into single cells as soon as they become available. Normally, inmates awaiting parole decisions would have progressed to single accommodations. 2. (a) The annual cost of maintaining an inmate in a medium security institution during the fiscal year 1987-88 was $40,783, thus resulting in a daily average cost of $111.73.

(b) The annual cost of maintaining an inmate in a minimum security institution during the fiscal year 1987-88 was $28,797, thus resulting in a daily average cost of $78.90.

3. It is not possible to estimate this exact cost as the case preparation work for NPB is only one segment of the total workload of case managers. Other factors include supervision, preparing regular ongoing reports, intervening in crisis situations, suspensions and follow-up, liaison with different community members or organizations important to the parolee (i.e. family, employer, social agencies, etc.)

4. CSC recognized that additional resources were required and reallocated 28 person-years prior to 1989-90. For the next three fiscal years, 1989-92 inclusive, the following reallocations are planned:

1989-90—75.5 person-years

1990-91—47.0 person-years

1991-92—16.0 person-years

EMPLOYMENT IN METRO TORONTO

Question No. 134—Mr. Heap:

In planning for labour market needs, has the government made predictions as to employment in Metro Toronto and, if so, according to these predictions (a) what will the absolute number of manufacturing jobs be there in (i) 1994 (ii) 1999 (b) what percentage will that be of the current level (c) which ten manufacturing sub-sectors will experience the greatest net job loss over the above time-frames (d) what size will that loss be (e) what is the predicted employment level in the clothing industry for the above time-frames (f) what job categories, overall, are expected to have the greatest absolute increase through 1994 and 1999 (g) in each case, what is their average expected pay level?

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Employment and Immigration Canada has not produced any official projections relating to the industrial and occupational configuration of the Metro Toronto labour market to the year 1999. The technical difficulties, the most serious being the lack of reliable data, involved in such an exercise are many. Until these constraints can be overcome, small area projections, rather than providing a useful planning tool, may in fact give an unrealistic picture of the future Metro labour market.

"GREENPRINT FOR CANADA: A FEDERAL AGENDA FOR THE ENVIRONMENT"

Question No. 154—Mr. Caccia:

Is it the intention of the government to make an official response to "Greenprint for Canada: A Federal Agenda for the Environment", given to the Prime Minister on June 22, 1989 by the Greenprint for Canada Committee and, if so (a) by whom will the response be prepared (b) by what time and, if not, for what reasons?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): a) Environment Canada Officials are presently preparing a response to the Greenprint for Canada: A Federal Agenda for the Environment. This document has been Central in establishing a proposed framework for the Environmental Agenda for Canada.

b) Environment Canada hopes that representatives of the Greenprint Coalition group will be able to meet with departmental representatives in a Pre-Agenda discussion before the end of this year.

MR. FRANCISCO NOTA MOISES

Question No. 155—Ms. Hunter:

Is it the intention of the government to conduct an investigation into the refugee status of Mr. Francisco Nota Moises and into the possibility of violations of the Immigration Act by him and, if so (a) on what date will the investigation commence (b) what are its terms and mandate (c) is the Department of External Affairs or the Canadian Security Intelligence Service to be involved in the investigation and, if so, in what way?

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): A careful and thorough investigation has been conducted regarding Mr. Moises who was granted refugee status. This investigation was conducted in conjunction with the Department of External Affairs and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS). No evidence was established to conclude that Mr. Moises' admission to Canada was irregular or that he could now be removed from Canada under the Immigration Act.

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED INFRACTIONS OF THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA ACT

Question No. 170—Mr. Murphy:

Is it the policy of the government to investigate alleged infractions of the Parliament of Canada Act by (a) Members of the House of Commons (b) Senators?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): The policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) is to investigate offences against any Federal Statute where a complaint has been received and there is sufficient grounds to believe that an offence may have been committed.

Should the RCMP receive a complaint relative to an infraction of the Parliament of Canada Act and the complainant provides sufficient evidence that an offence may have been committed then the matter would be duly investigated.

THE VOLUME OF WATER PER MONTH REMOVED FROM LAKE MICHIGAN THROUGH THE CHICAGO SHIP CANAL

Question No. 171—Mr. Milliken:

For (a) 1985 (b) 1986 (c) 1987 (d) 1988 (e) 1989 to date, what is the volume of water per month removed from Lake Michigan through the Chicago Ship Canal?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): The Chicago Diversion, initiated in 1848, removes water from Lake Michigan at Chicago for the purposes of domestic, sanitary, navigation and hydro-electric power in the Illinois Waterway. The waterway connects with the upper Mississippi River. Diversion prior to 1900 averaged about 500 cubic feet per second (cfs). Upon completion of the Sanitary and Ship Canal, diversions progressively increased to a maximum of about 10,000 cfs in 1928. Due to challenges from other states (mainly Wisconsin), there have been several U.S. Supreme Court decrees issued (1922, 1925, 1930 and 1967). The 1967 decree limited the diversion to an average of 3,200 cfs effective March 1, 1970. A 1980 court amendment allows the use of a 40-year period in calculating long-term average diversion for compliance.

Lake Michigan is located entirely within the United States territory and is not considered as "boundary water" according to the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909. However, it is connected to, and flows into Lake Huron and downstream, thus affecting the rest of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence River System. The present diversion rate of 3,200 cfs causes reductions in the flows in the St. Clair-Detroit River System by 1.7 percent, in the Niagara River by 1.5 percent, and in the St. Lawrence River by 1,3 percent.

The 3,200 cfs is equivalent to 7.8 billion litres per day, or 1.7 billion imperial gallons per day.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions as enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Government Orders

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I wish to resubmit the application I made yesterday. I believe you have my notice.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member. As hon. members will know, the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso has been rising repeatedly with requests for an emergency debate on fisheries matters in the maritimes and Newfoundland and Labrador. I am acceding to the request and I am setting the debate for eight o'clock on Monday night.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BROADCASTING ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, November 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Masse that Bill C-40, an act respecting broadcasting and to amend certain acts in relation thereto and in relation to radiocommunication be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended 39 minutes. Therefore, private members' hour will begin at 2.39 p.m.

When the House rose at three o'clock p.m., Friday, November 3, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications had completed his speech. The question and comment period following the hon. member's speech is now available. Otherwise, the Chair is prepared to recognize other members. The hon. member for Winnipeg.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this debate. I consider it an important one. I must say at the beginning that I find the process extremely slow. There was a bill in the last Parliament and this bill is the successor to the one that died with the last Parliament. It did reach the House on November 3 and here it is getting close to Christmas and we are now just trying our best to finish second reading. I find the process slow and frustrating. I sometimes think that the games played by government with respect to introduction of bills and the processing of bills are rather puerile and not becoming of grown up men and women. It is very little consolation to me that it is played by all parties when they are in power.

It goes without saying that broadcasting touches all of our lives and it is extremely important to this country. In my opinion, broadcasting is to the 1990s what the railways were to Canada in the 1880s. Broadcasting ties us together, it binds us, and it makes us one family. At least, that should be the result.

It is important to our parliamentary democracy, and if the system works well, broadcasting, in my opinion, gets a lot of credit for that and plays a huge role. Broadcasting is as important an institution as this institution right here in which I am speaking. That is the kind of rating I give it. It is little wonder that we refer to it along with newspapers as the fourth estate.

It is also important to our unity, and it is important to Canadian identity. If our unity is tenuous and a little weak, broadcasting has to take some small blame for that. If our identity is fuzzy, again broadcasting is partly to blame for that. In my opinion, broadcasting has not always done a very good job vis–a–vis national unity. That issue should be addressed in this particular bill that we are talking about today.

Before I deal with some of the specific provisions of the bill, I would like to discuss where we stand today in broadcasting. The statistics are staggering. Our children spend more time watching television than they do in school. Watching television is the favourite pastime of a vast majority of Canadians.

At the same time, 95 per cent of Canadians are radio listeners. More than half of Canadians say that broadcasting is their principal source of news and information. For these reasons, the legislation before us today is of critical importance as it will affect virtually every Canadian every day of the year. The ongoing problem of low levels of Canadian content in broadcasting continue. In fact, 71 per cent of all programs viewed by English–speaking Canadians on television are American. That is disturbing. Less than 7 per cent of television drama available to us in English is Canadian, yet we spend nearly half of our viewing time watching it.

In the face of technological change, the threat to Canadian content will only increase through more and more foreign programming entering our country via satellite dishes and other technologies. In my opinion, we must develop quality Canadian programming which can compete with the continuing onslaught of foreign programming in the years to come.

I want to turn my attention to some of the specific shortcomings of the bill as I see them. There is the matter of national unity which I referred to earlier. The current CBC mandate specifically refers to the development of national unity. This new act does not do that. I think that this is a serious omission and I find it disturbing. The new act refers only to the maintenance and the enhancement of national identity and cultural sovereignty. The word "unity" is gone, Mr. Speaker, you will not find it. I do not think that that is good enough.

Back in the days when the current act was drafted, which was 20 years ago, there was a perceived threat to national unity. You will remember those days, Mr. Speaker, as well as I do. There was restlessness in the country. Quebec had awakened. There was the B & B commission. There were many passions stirring in the country. National unity was on people's minds. The new Broadcasting Act of the day recognized and responded to that situation.

National unity is still on the minds of Canadians. It is still very much an issue. It is as worrisome as ever. For example, there are the stresses and strains that emanate from the Meech Lake Accord, and with the Prime Minister refusing to lead, constitutional difficulties grow.

I believe that in the absence of a strong federalist voice, strident provincial voices get louder. They do not get quieter, they get louder. Witness what has happened in the province of Alberta with a loud party called the reform party. Witness the proclamations of the leader of the Parti Quebecois in that province. Instead of all of us fighting for one strong Canada what we find very often is a free–for–all emerging, one province against another.

Consequently, in the midst of the inevitable discord we get last month a cartoonist in Quebec equating Manitobans with the Ku Klux Klan. I am sorry to say that the same has happened vice versa. There have been intolerant expressions in so-called English Canada vis-a-vis Quebec. That does not make me very happy as a Canadian.

• (1300)

I believe national unity is very important and deletion of a specific reference to the development of national unity from the CBC's mandate is therefore of very great concern to me. The major function of the CBC in times when the country is divided over issues such as Meech Lake and free trade must be to foster national unity. So I suggest that we address ourselves to this particular weakness in the bill and I would hope we will spend a considerable time on that aspect when the bill reaches committee.

I want to refer to the CBC in somewhat greater detail. I was delighted, as I think most Canadians were, when I heard that Patrick Watson was appointed chairman of the CBC, a new position for the CBC. I think Mr. Watson is a great broadcaster. He belongs to the CBC family. I was once a member of the CBC family. He is a child of the corporation. He understands it, and I think that augurs well for public broadcasting in this country. I can tell you that when his appointment was announced it worked as a morale booster for the staff of the CBC. I think he is going to do a good job.

It bewilders me, however, that he was appointed as a part-time chairman. Here we have this man whom I could describe as a national treasure with respect to broadcasting, and we appoint him as a part-time chairman. Why? If we have this resource, why do we squander it? If he is worth half-time, I would suggest he is worth full-time. I think it was a serious mistake to appoint Mr. Watson only on a part-time basis.

There is another aspect of this which concerns me and it has to do with an appointment for only five years. As you know, up until now the president of the corporation has been appointed to seven-year terms, not five. Now, under this act, the government is proposing five years. I find that somewhat disturbing because I think it is better to have what I might call an overlap from one administration to another or from one Parliament to another. To me there is too much convenience in having a five-year term. It sort of fits with the life of a Parliament. I think that we may have changes from one government to another or from one Parliament to another and I believe that an overlap would work much better. That is something else that we are going to have to look at very closely when this bill gets to committee.

The state of the CBC is not good and has not been for a number of years. It is in a real financial bind. It has the enormous job of fostering national unity and promoting our identity. Yet, it does not have the resources to do that.

Telling the story of Canada is not easy for anyone. It is not easy for the CBC because in that mandate the CBC has to reflect Canadians to Canadians. The CBC cannot just be satisfied, in my opinion, with doing what it is doing now, it has to do more. It has to present more drama, for example. There are limitations on journalism. I think the CBC does a pretty good job of journalism, but there are limitations to it. I think if you truly want to get the Canadian story across, truly reflect one region to another, you have to spend more money and devote more resources to drama. That is how you get to the guts of Canadians. You get to their insides through drama. Journalism can do only so much.

I know that the CBC is working on a plan to wrestle with some of these problems but there is still concern that when it is all said and done, when the re-organization is completed, the CBC will still face a serious financial shortfall. As I understand it, the CBC is working on a plan to change the face of the CBC in two or three years, particularly for those who are working there. Hopefully there will not be any serious program cuts in the next two or three years.

As I understand it, when all is said and done, even after all the organization is completed, the CBC will still be facing a financial shortfall of perhaps as much as $100 million. Certainly as much as $50 million. That is disturbing. The government is going to have to come to grips with that. There is a point when the government is going to have to say: "Is the CBC worth what it is? Has the CBC done its job in trimming fat and that kind of thing?" And if so it is going to have to come up with the cash. I feel the day is going to come when the government is going to have to support the CBC. If I am right in believing that the corporation is as important as an institution as is this place and as is the Supreme Court, then we have got to fund it and we have got to fund it properly.

There are other parts of this bill which concern me. There is in the bill this proposition for what is called "alternative programming" for the CBC. That has got to be the joke of the year. In my opinion, this so-called "alternative service" for the CBC is a sham. I do not see any evidence that there would be money for it. What is it supposed to do? When I read that section I got the impression that somebody somewhere, some bureaucrat, thought, gee whiz, wouldn't it sound good, throw "alternative service" for the CBC into the bill. That will sound great. That will turn people on. Well, it does not seem to make much sense to me.

I want to say a few words about what is called cabinet power of direction and review. I think the bill will jeopardize the CRTC's ability to carry out its role. The bill will grant both the power to review and to provide policy direction over the CRTC. The bill would give cabinet enough power to override the commission.

In my opinion, the bill would make cabinet both the legislator and the judge. That is pretty serious business. The government does not have to take my word for it. If it wants to consider someone who occupies a very senior position perhaps it should listen to its own appointee, Mr. Keith Spicer, who was appointed chairman of the CRTC not too long ago. I will tell you what he said about combining the power of review with the power of direction. I think it is worthwhile repeating.

Just as an aside, when I was in television I used to have a director who would give me time signals. You do not do that but I wish you would, Mr. Speaker. I have six minutes? All right. I think you would make a great television director. You should consider it as a possible future after you have finished this place. That is not to suggest you are not doing a good job.

Mr. Spicer offered these words at a committee meeting about power of review and power of direction. He said:

> I do not like the tandem of the power of direction in the government's hand and the power of review. I think it is very unhealthy. It is the law, and bad law even administered by good people is still bad law.
>
> I have had no worries about the present people whom I have been dealing with in the government, but this is a law that is going to stick around for a while and I think they ought to take a little look at it again. If I could suggest a compromise, is that in a given case that they have one or the other, but not both; they have the power of general direction policy or review, but not both in the end. Because, otherwise they are going to make the CRTC into a way-station. We are going to be the monkey and they will be the organ grinder and people will say: "Why bother, let us go to the organ grinder."

That is what Mr. Spicer says. Those are pretty powerful words. We are going to have to look at that extremely carefully when we come to committee.

• (1310)

There is the limitation of the role of cable. I think that we must limit the role of cable television systems in providing programming that is complementary to that offered by licensed Canadian stations and networks. Cable should have a special limited role and should contribute to the system. There is a real possibility of unfair competition and conflicts of interest in the present legislation.

There is also the matter of regulation. The new legislation, in my opinion again, must provide some means to regulate cable television. The essential role of cable systems is to distribute Canadian radio and TV signals in both official languages. An important question in cable TV regulation is priority. In many parts of Canada tens of channels are now available. With more and more channels available, only a handful can now be made available on ageing equipment.

By the way, some of that equipment is 20 years old or older. Much of the television equipment presently in use is of that age. The older the equipment gets, the more it falls apart. There are a lot of people in this country who can get only from channel 2 to 13.

There is also the matter of programming in representative native languages. The new bill does not specifically refer to aboriginal languages but only to aboriginal culture. The danger to native languages is very real and it is very apparent, particularly in southern Canada. In my city, the city of Winnipeg, for example, where there is a significant native population, services are not available in native languages.

I think the act should specifically refer to the need to protect representative native languages lest they be lost forever. We must stop the erosion of native culture foremost through the protection of native languages. Language, after all, as we all know, is an important component of a cultural identity. Its importance must be reflected by specific reference to it in the legislation. The lack of reference to the protection of native languages in this legislation is of grave concern to our native peoples and the Liberal Party as they fight the erosion of their cultural heritage.

On another aspect of the bill, there is no provision to protect exclusive rights which Canadian broadcasters acquire to show programs in Canada. The difficulties arising from non-simultaneous substitution must be redressed otherwise exclusive rights mean absolutely nothing. When you combine increased pressure from U.S. broadcasters for access to Canada and the refusal by the government to limit access through legislation, it is sure to lead to rapid erosion in our home programs.

Let me just finish by talking about the need for licensing foreign networks. There is presently no requirement for foreign networks which do business in our country, and that I think is quite incredible. Foreign networks receive increased revenues and viewing audiences by being carried in Canada and at the same time they are not required to be licensed. On the surface certainly that is unfair. I think it goes beyond the surface though. The same rules which apply to Canadian broadcasters should be applied to foreign broadcasters earning revenue directly in this country.

They also contribute to the country by providing Canadian programming. I am talking about our programs. American networks receive expanded audiences and advertising revenues by being carried in Canada and as a result they should have to contribute through a licensing fee.

In closing, I want to say that the bill is important because of the industry that we are talking about. I was fortunate enough to work in the industry for more than 30 years. You get a sense, when you work inside the industry, of just how important it is to the country. That is not to suggest that people who are outside of it do not appreciate its importance, but it is a paramount industry. We as politicians, as parliamentarians, have to come to grips with this. Whatever we can do to strengthen this bill, which will ultimately lead not only to better programming and a better industry but to foster national unity to promote the Canadian identity, is well and good. In fact, I think that should be our primary motivation. So I look forward to this bill going to committee where perhaps we can do a lot more work to strengthen it.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to keep my remarks mercifully brief this afternoon. I will be emphasizing some of the points made by my colleague, the hon. member for Port Moody—Coquitlam and our caucus's communications and culture critic, in his excellent address to second reading of Bill C-40 on November 3. I do not expect to be repeating much.

I would like instead during the course of my remarks today to propose perhaps something of a context in which this bill can be considered by this House. To do that I would like to call reference to what I consider to be one of the most important books published in Canada, certainly since the 1960s, put out a couple of years ago. It is by a west coast author named Brian Fawcett and the book is called Cambodia: A Book For People Who Find Television Too Slow. It is a series of loosely-related stories, observations, essays, pensées, all of which take as their central consideration how it is that a society, how it is that a culture maintains its history, its collective memory, and how vital that is to the health and survival of that culture and society.

Culture can be defined in many, many ways. It can be defined as narrowly as the fashion in which we choose to sing and dance for our own amusement, to as broadly as including those aspects of education, indeed of our working lives, that allow us to express and rework over time that which we are individually. So coming up with a definition of culture is not an easy thing. But I think we can all agree that one of the crucial aspects of culture in a societal sense is that culture is the vehicle through which a separate and distinct people maintain and distil their history and, hence, maintain their memory of who they are and what they are for. It is how we continually recreate ourselves.

It is in this context, with reference to this definition of culture that I would like, if I may, to consider this bill and some of the other aspects of culture in Canada that help to context, if I may use a noun as a verb, this bill.

I think it is must be agreed that there are two conditions that must be present for culture, as I have defined it, to work for a society. The first is that that society, obviously, must have a history and a memory of that history. It must have a culture. The second is that it must have a means or several means of distribution, of conveyance, of duplication, of inculcation of that culture.

It is in this regard that we are in grave peril in Canada. We are on the verge of losing, perhaps finally, our history, our cultural memory of who, what, and for what we are. This is because we have failed to retain national control over our principal means of cultural transmission which in our modern age have got to be seen, first, as television but as well must include things like books, films, newspapers and other such means of mass communications, because it is through mass communication that we transmit to ourselves our images, our ideas, our understanding of who and what we are. It is through such mass communication means that we retain our memory.

• (1320)

Examples abound of recent and not so recent alienation of these means of communication in Canada. As we know, prior to the last election under the leadership of Flora MacDonald the department which she headed was preparing to bring forward a bill that would have the effect of loosening the 97 per cent stranglehold the Americans now have on our film distribution industry.

It is pointless to speculate here but, for whatever reason, that legislation was abandoned. It seems none other will be brought forward to take its place and in consequence that American stranglehold of one of those most vital aspects of our culture will remain and perhaps deepen, although I cannot imagine they would be too anxious to scramble up the last 3 per cent when they have the 97 per cent.

This has implications, coupled with the ongoing overwhelming American content of our television broadcast media, for all sorts of Canadian means of cultural communication, even those areas in which there is unquestionably at the moment a vital, alive, thriving Canadian cultural community.

I think especially, for example, of live theatre and, to a lesser degree, Canadian film production—not distribution, but production. In terms of live theatre I think of the incredible array of new plays created and produced in Edmonton, my own town, every year and, indeed, exported across this country. Theatres from St. John's to Victoria are hosting plays written and originally produced in Edmonton.

I think as well of film works such as the works of Ann Wheeler from Alberta, her most recent hit, Bye Bye Blues, being a stirring example. There is no question that the cultural product is there. Ken Brown's Life After Hockey, from Edmonton, is an example. The attempt to maintain and, indeed, enlarge upon the Canadian memory is there and is thriving.

What is lacking is the means of conveying that memory and the expression of that memory to the broad majority of Canadian people. Those avenues are cut off in film distribution and increasingly those avenues are cut off in television broadcasting. That is where the great problem lies. I do not think anyone will argue this point.

The private sector has failed dismally to advance the cause of the dissemination, the growth, the maintenance of Canadian culture and, again, I do not mean song and dance. I mean Canadian culture in the sense of what we understand it is to be Canadian, how we dream of ourselves when we dream. Because the private sector has failed miserably, we must absolutely maintain a strong, effective, wildly dispersed public sector role in culture conveyance in this country.

The Caplan–Sauvageau committee put it very succinctly and very well in their report when they noted: "The reasons for this problem"—the problem being the lack of access to Canadian cultural markets by Canadian cultural producers—"are clear. The public sector, which must be the chief purveyor of quality Canadian programming, is inadequately scaled and funded. The private sector which should complement the public sector is not doing its job".

That is very clear, very straightforward, very correct. Instead of heeding this fundamental Canadian wisdom the government is in this bill creating a so-called alternative television network, a whole new alternate network without, when the bill was introduced, specifying what that network might be, without assigning any resources to it, without, indeed, describing it in any fashion by which we might come to judge it.

Perhaps this is intimately connected to the events which occurred yesterday. Mr. Izzy Asper finally, after years of struggle with his erstwhile partners, achieved effective control over the Global Television empire in Canada, an empire which has a great deal of growth potential yet, as I am sure every member of this House will agree, an empire which may come to be understood as the alternate network originally envisaged in this bill.

The point is that we risk the gradual but unending constriction of our societal memory, and in so doing we risk the future of the country itself. It matters not if there remains on the northern half of the North American continent a country called Canada. It matters not that that country maintains a flag with two red bars and a red maple leaf in its centre. It matters not that at the beginning of every hockey, football or other sporting game people who call themselves Canadians get up and sing a national anthem called O Canada if those are simply hollow symbols of what once was. If we lose our collective memory as Canadians, which is the price we will pay, if we lose the means of recreating that memory constantly and conveying it among ourselves, then Canada may exist as a name, but it will most definitely not exist as a country.

That is the context in which I want this bill viewed and that is the reason that I think this House, in all fairness, must reject the bill as it is currently constituted. The principle of the bill that we are debating at second reading is a principle for the governance of the growth of private sector, principally American broadcasting in Canada. It is a principle with which I cannot agree.

We should have before us instead a bill, the principle of which should be fostering the rapid growth of broadcasting that will convey Canada to us. That is not the principle of this bill. Neither I nor my caucus can support it.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on behalf of the approximately 3,000 people in my riding who are employed in cultural industries.

I must tell you that the first time I read this bill I did not really notice a big difference from the previous bill. At first blush it seemed to be consistent with the national objectives. Upon review and some support from my colleagues, it was brought to my attention that the government has removed the words, "to contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity". The words that were put in place were, "to contribute to shared national consciousness and identity". I looked at these words and my first reaction was why would the minister want to remove those words at a time when our national will is being assaulted by tendencies in every region of our country to balkanize? We have taken our most powerful instrument of galvanization, our broadcast systems, and we seem to have removed the spirit of what their main purpose is supposed to be.

• (1330)

I tried to think of an example that people on the street might understand when we talk about national unity and the frustrations that people experience in every region of our country. I go back to an experience that I had last January when I was studying French in Quebec City with my colleague from Brampton. One evening we were at a concert and witnessed the Quebec francophone recording artist, Richard Séguin. I left that concert and could not get over how much talent this man had. I returned to Toronto and told my wife about this artist. I went to Yonge Street and went into seven record stores before I finally found a Richard Séguin tape. It was on the third floor, in the back corner, one cassette.

About two weeks later I went to Montreal. I visited with Richard Séguin and I told him this story. He said: "Dennis, this is the frustration, this is the problem we face as francophone recording artists in this country and this is part of the reason why we sometimes say 'what's in Canada for us'?" Richard Séguin can sell 100,000 albums in Quebec but beyond Quebec he is not heard. He is not heard on the CHUMs or the Qs. He is not heard. He is heard on one instrument of communication that is national on a consistent basis, MuchMusic.

The frustration that people feel is that their music and artistic endeavours are not given a national presentation. I have tested this over the last few months. If you go into a university or a grade school and say: "How many people have heard of Rita MacNeil or Gordon Lightfoot or Blue Rodeo?" most will put up their hands in recognition. When you mention francophone recording artists, very few do outside Quebec.

I think this bill is here to promote all recording artists, not just in each region but from coast to coast in every region. That is not happening today. I realize that this bill is going to committee. I think there has to be a way that we can be a little bit more progressive and that we can dare to challenge our broadcasters, even the private broadcasters, with promoting Canadian recording artists on all radio stations in Canada, making sure that our national specials promote Canadian content in not just greater percentage but also of quality which will make all Canadians proud.

We have had several studies on the importance of our broadcast systems. There was the mass media study by Senator Davey and his committee many years ago that talked about the importance of using our broadcast and communications instruments for cultural survival. One of the better Canadian programs today is The Journal. The producer of this show is a fellow by the name of Mark Starowitz whom I have never met but who has been quoted repeatedly. He said: "It has become apparent to Canadian legislators that one of the definitions of a sovereign, political entity in the 20th century was the ability to control its national airwaves. Further, it has become equally obvious that a broadcasting system, based entirely on private profit, could not deliver the desired end".

He went on to say: "The reason the issue of television and national identity is felt so viscerally in many countries these days is because television is not simply an entertainment issue, it is a political issue. Television has become essential to the maintenance and functioning of any industrial body politic today".

We have to be sensitive to these men and women who are experts and who are working in the broadcast field.

I consider this bill to be more important than the free trade bill because this is the bill that makes sure that we become and stay galvanized as Canadians. I am concerned that if we do not keep that thrust on promoting the national spirit, then we are going to balkanize and we are going to become regionalized in our communications thrusts.

The other thing that I am concerned about in this bill is the fact that there seems to be some question as to whether or not the CRTC has the ability to regulate all of our broadcast systems. In fact I have had a little bit of legal advice on this. Section (2)(3) states that the act should be applied in a manner that is consistent with journalistic independence enjoyed by broadcasters. This flies in the face of the ability of the CRTC to regulate. I think we are going to have to clarify that when we go to committee.

We have a very special opportunity over the next period to make sure that our broadcast systems are here to promote national unity in every respect. We should make sure that we do not as legislators give any position out there that we want to decentralize it and we want the regions to have sort of a priority position.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate because I know there has been an agreement reached. It was mentioned in the hon. member's speech and I want to add just a little bit to what he said about Mr. Séguin, the Quebec artist.

He has just finished a cross Canada tour which was very successful. It was sold out. I think Mr. Séguin—I don't know if the hon. member has spoken to him since the tour—made the statement that he was very surprised. This was his first cross Canada tour. He was very surprised that he had sellouts across this country. He could not believe the wonderful reception he received.

Since that tour I am now hearing his music on more and more English stations. He has some very wonderful French-Canadian music that is very catchy and is now being played. I think it is because of the tour.

I would not want the hon. member's comments today to make it sound like artists are being isolated and not being listened to in other parts of the country. Primarily they are not being listened to in other parts of the country because we are not getting them out into those other parts of the country. If we promoted the artists in Quebec and took them into the rest of Canada and displayed that talent across Canada, I think that you would not find one tape in one store in Toronto but you would find a huge number.

• (1340)

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to that. I would like to inform my hon. friend that we met with Standard Broadcasting three months ago. We told them of the frustrations of the Séguins of the world. It was Standard Broadcasting which took the initiative and organized at the Canadian Association of Broadcasters a joint concert with Sash Jordan and Richard Séguin. That concert was syndicated last Sunday night to over 300

English radio stations. This was a private initiative. I think they are on track. We applaud them.

Richard Séguin has said to me personally that the reason you sell albums, the reason people come to your concerts is because you are heard on the radio first or you are seen on television first.

Mr. McDermid: It is the chicken and the egg.

Mr. Mills: No, it is not the chicken and the egg. This is the artist's view. It is a standard understanding. When you see something on television or hear something on the radio that is what motivates you to go to these concerts and that is what sells albums.

I think I am well aware of the concerts he is selling out. He is a prime example of why we must continue to add support to our artists for them to travel in all parts of the country. I think that feeling of interaction, that feeling of confidence that there is something in every part of the country for all Canadian artists is the thing that is going to galvanize us. It is the thing that is going to sort of contribute to national unity much more than sometimes the legal documents we prepare in this Chamber.

[Translation]

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to a bill that I consider to be an important piece of legislation. There are three points I would like to make. First, what I like about the bill, second, what I don't really like because it is not up to standard, and third, the fact that perhaps we should look at potential improvements in this area.

As we all know, this bill is much like the previous one. There is not much difference between the two. However, a number of changes would have been desirable to deal with certain fundamental problems.

I must admit, and I am also very pleased, that a number of provisions have been included that are very positive with respect to women, children, cultural minorities, aboriginal peoples and disabled persons. I am glad to see this.

I also admit that the bill recognizes the French language environment. To me, this is a step forward, not just for Quebec but also for the areas outside Quebec.

[English]

I am pleased as well that the orginators of program signals will be protected and that educational broadcasting becomes an integral part of the law. I shall have more to say about that shortly.

I am pleased that local stations have priority when carried by cable and that broadcasting is defined to give CRTC more flexibility in dealing with new types of programming services.

Some of the concerns that I have are as follows. The fact that national unity, l'unité nationale, has been left out causes me some concern because I, like a number of my colleagues from all sides of the House, believe that the country has never been in greater need of some unifying force or forces. It appears to me and to many other Canadians as well that this is indeed a vehicle that could reach that particular objective. I shall want to expand on that briefly.

I am concerned as well about the part-time position for the CBC chairman. The questions of course that are being asked are why, because of the prominence of the individual, was it primarily motivated as a PR gesture? Was the half-time position to limit the person's influence and role?

You will note as well, Mr. Speaker, that the CBC president is to be appointed by cabinet. Some people have suggested, and I certainly appreciate what they are saying and can see the possibility, that it could involve more political control.

We have talked about a new alternative programming service, and my colleagues have referred to this point. It seems to me when one looks at the way the CBC has been severed in a number of ways, reduced by cut-backs and what have you, that this will be a challenge indeed, and one which we will follow with a great deal of interest.

I am concerned as well because I believe that the Canadian Broadcasting System should be owned and controlled by Canadians. I would have liked the bill to require that at least 80 per cent be Canadian owned and that no single foreign shareholder own more than 10 per cent.

I note that while there is some acknowledgement of les peuples aborigènes, or aboriginal people, there is no guarantee for aboriginal people to receive service in representative native languages. I would have liked that to have occurred.

Foreign networks, I believe, should be licensed. There is no provision, to my knowledge, for this to happen, for them to have to obtain a licence.

I want to ensure that people understand the following point. While I am wholly supportive of cable operators I think that they should be encouraged, and I say this in a very positive way, to offer programming that is different and complementary to that which exists.

The cabinet power with respect to direction and review is one that I think we need to be sensitive to. It will be recalled that cabinet can review CRTC decisions and provide policy direction to the CRTC. Of course the question that comes to mind is: "Is there some potential for abuse? Is there some potential for political interference?" I believe that it might be possible—in fact desirable—for cabinet to review CRTC decisions when they go contrary to cabinet directions, or when that decision has national policy implications.

There is no provision for non-simultaneous substitution. When Canadians buy a foreign service it seems to me that that service should not be shown to Canadians at a different time by that foreign power, if you wish, that is the one that sold us the service. There again there is potential for abuse.

The status is unclear for MATV systems. Condominium and apartment dwellers need to know where they stand with respect to this issue.

The final point that I want to raise before I talk about the educational role is the seven-year versus a five-year term of office for the chairman of the CBC. It may reduce the ability to operate at arm's length from government. I have reviewed some of the positives, and perhaps some of the negatives, and some of the issues that I think we need to be sensitive to.

[Translation]

At this point, I would like to discuss one role I believe is very important, and I am referring to the educational role, in the broadest sense of the word. Earlier, it was said, and I have noticed this many times, that our young people spend more time watching television than they do in the classroom. I do not recall exactly how many hours adults spend watching television, but I know it is quite a lot. We tend to point to young people and children as the culprits, not adults. Not so. The vast majority of Canadian men and women spend a lot of time watching television.

It was also said that the majority of our programs come from other countries. Now this raises two very important questions. If we spend as much time watching television as people say, and I think we do, this is a golden opportunity to learn more about what is going on in our society, to be informed, to be aware and to increase our knowledge.

• (1350)

Furthermore, if most of our programs come from outside Canada, the question arises: What are we learning? Is it really what we need to develop our abilities and gain a better understanding of what we are, what our country is all about and its place in the world?

Personally, and a number of colleagues have said this as well, I think one of the most important roles of television, radio and the media generally is to educate, to share information honestly and accurately. I think this educational role could build Canadian unity, something we already have but which, we must admit, is gradually deteriorating.

I wish we would consider the possibility of increasing the role and impact of radio, television and other media with respect to our primary objective in this House which, I think all members will agree, is to present national unity.

[English]

Quite apart from making a major contribution to national unity broadcasting can foster racial, religious and linguistic tolerance. To me that is part of the package of national unity. What better medium is there to sensitize us to those differences, to bring out the similarities and yet at the same time permit us to grow in tolerance, understanding and sensitivity?

I think as well that there might be a prime role for language education for our official languages of course, but also for the languages of our own aboriginal peoples, languages which are disappearing. And of course a number of languages spoken by new Canadians.

[English]

This medium, that is television, radio and others, can in fact contribute to not only the appreciation of the different languages used in this country, but as well to the learning of those particular languages.

[Translation]

Cultural education is another role. We do not always have a very clear understanding of the meaning of the word "culture". To many people, it means the clothes people wear and the holidays they celebrate throughout the year. It goes deeper than that, and there is a real dilemma because we have not tried to go further and understand more about this. To me, culture is not just what I wear, what I eat or the holidays I celebrate. It is the way I look at the world, receive and interpret information, and try to solve problems.

Providing cultural education is so important because it means explaining to people what culture is and what impact it has, and how one culture's perception of a given problem differs from that of another culture.

[English]

Regional concerns are another wonderful opportunity for broadcasting. We know that we have a wonderful country. It is not one of the most wonderful—it is the most wonderful. We need only consider the small province of Prince Edward Island with roughly 120,000 people; the giant province of Ontario with over 9.5 million people; and the Northwest Territories with one-third of Canada's land mass and a little over 50,000 inhabitants.

We have in the western Arctic roughly seven native languages that are being used on a daily basis without a whole lot of friction. We have special problems in each of those regions. The smallness of P.E.I. makes it unique and wonderful in a number of ways, but it creates certain unique problems as well. With the largeness of Ontario and its uniqueness, the distinctiveness, if I may say, of Quebec and the Yukon, there are special and unique concerns.

It seems to me that broadcasting could play a greater role than it now plays in helping us understand those regions, in helping us to understand the problems that exist in our cities with our rates of crime, alcoholism and abuses of different kinds. Surely these are regional concerns, but they are real. They include the problems of our rural population, the depopulation of the rural areas, the farming problem, those tremendous difficulties that have to be surmounted on a regular basis.

Distance education for remote areas is another golden opportunity. What about providing learning opportunities for men and women who do not have flexible schedules for a number of reasons, be it because of work, family responsibilities or what have you?

As well, I would like to see the consideration of continuing education, including literacy. All of us know that we must keep learning continually on a regular basis in order to be able to contribute to society as we would want to. Many of us know that there are roughly 5 million Canadians in Canada today who are considered functionally illiterate. It is not a disease. It simply suggests that they do not have the literacy and the numeracy skills that will permit them to develop their full potential. This costs Canada roughly $10 billion a year. What better opportunity is there to try to reach those particular individuals to give them the kind of confidence they need and want in order to participate fully in Canadian life?

[Translation]

It seems to me there is another objective that is very useful and extremely important, and that is to explain government to Canadians, and I am talking about federal, provincial and municipal governments.

It is often said that today's young people do not understand politics and are not terribly interested in the subject. This is only partly true. We must also recognize the fact that among young people today, and I believe this very strongly, there is as much, if not more, knowledge about the political process at various levels of government as there is among adults. I believe that we have a democracy which has certain great strengths and certain weaknesses but is not as well known as it should be to each and every citizen across Canada.

We could consider another extremely important objective: the impact of our domestic economy on social programs. Let me give a few examples.

[English]

Let us talk about the economy to Canadians via our media. Let us make sure that they understand what it is that we are trying to do. It is necessary in a democracy to have different values, a different vision and different priorities. Let us explain that to Canadians so that they can participate more fully, more meaningfully in understanding economic development, in understanding what it means to have a deficit and in understanding the different kinds of approaches that various parties or governments would take in order to reduce that debt and deficit.

[Translation]

Let's talk about the constitutional crisis. Let's do it. It is quite obvious that at this very moment, there is a constitutional crisis in this country. Let's talk about it. There are people who have various points of view, and I think it is very important for us to be aware of these differences so that even if we do not agree, we can appreciate the fact that there is a problem. But there are ways of getting at the problem and untying all these knots.

[English]

Cultural misunderstanding is another objective. I mentioned it briefly, but I need to mention it again. I am alarmed and I am hurt in fact when I see people defining culture as dress, food and dance. I simplify perhaps a bit too much. I do not do it to denigrate. I would welcome to be challenged in an open debate on this question if anyone should like to do so.

Culture is more than dress, food and dance, music and feasting. It is how I see the world, you see the world, how I receive information, decode information and approach the solution of problems. One of the problems we have in this country is we have oversimplified what the cultural differences are without identifying the similarities.

Let us talk as well about racism and bigotry because it exists. I am not proud of it. I am not happy. But let us talk about this. Let us make sure that our media makes its contribution.

At the same time we could talk about major health issues, the question of ageing. What are the implications on Canadians, on Canada, on the economy, on social affairs? What about major health problems such as AIDS? This is a wonderful mechanism in order to explain the difficulties and in order to teach people more about this difficult situation.

What about international affairs? If one looks recently at countries such as Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, one notices massive changes. I was delighted to see last night a major program trying to explain what the economic, social and cultural implications will be of those political changes. What better medium than our media to do that. Let us talk about global pollution, let us talk about famine and world hunger. Perhaps the most significant point that I want to make with respect to broadcasting and all that surrounds it, is a marvellous opportunity to learn about Canada and its place in this world. It is a wonderful mechanism for helping parents, schools, colleges and universities to educate the Canadian people. If we want to be leaders and not followers, especially when comparing and talking about the importance of education, training and retraining, the teaching of science and technology, research and development, we have to consider that broadcasting has the same kind of potential.

• (1400)

[Translation]

I feel that we need a very close link between our educational institutions and the media. Together, they provide information to Canadians. Together, they can make me more aware of things and provide information on subjects I feel are very important, so that I can make my full contribution to Canada's development.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gerry Weiner (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C–47, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I believe you will find there is consent that this particular bill be referred to committee of the whole rather than the legislative committee.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, there was not only consent to that but we have already agreed with the government that we would go through all three stages today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: House in committee of the whole on Bill C–47, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

On Clause 1—Qualifications of candidates

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, if I could be permitted to make a few very short comments about this legislation with respect to Bill C–47, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act.

The bill corrects an omission in the Canada Elections Act of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985. By inadvertence, former Section 20 of the act in the first supplement to the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970 which required that candidates at an election qualifies electors was omitted from the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985.

The bill is very short and technical in nature. Clause 1(1) adds former Section 20, now proposed Section 76.1 to the Canada Elections Act. This section specifies that a person who qualifies as an elector may be a candidate.

Clause 1(2) establishes as the date for the coming into force of the amendment as December 12, 1985, the day on which the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985 came into force. It is unfortunate that former Section 20 was omitted in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985. It is crucial that the bill be enacted as soon as possible as it affects the qualifications of candidates in elections.

Without this amendment, persons who do not qualify as electors, that is, minors and non–Canadian citizens could be candidates in future elections. Given the technical and non–controversial nature of the bill I am very pleased that we have had agreement with the other parties of the House to rapidly deal with this situation.

I believe it would be in order to present the amendments at this time. Would I read them or would I dispense with reading them? I believe the other members have copies of the amendments. They are in both official languages.

The Deputy Chairman: I believe all members have seen the amendment. I do not think it is necessary for him to read it.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Weiner (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that the bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Weiner (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on this important bill this afternoon. My friend the parliamentary secretary, will appreciate the co–operation that has been shown by all parties in agreeing to pass this bill through all stages today.

We recognize the importance of correcting this portion of the law. Having shown such co–operation, I would like to draw to his attention the lack of co–operation shown by the government in respect of the appointment of the commission to look into the matters affecting the electoral law of Canada.

During our break in November, we came back to find that the Prime Minister had named a commission without any consultation, either as to the members of the commission or as to its terms of reference. We had had in an undertaking by the Deputy Prime Minister by way of a statement in answer to a question in this House that he would, in fact, consult with the members on this side of the House.

I regret very much that that consultation did not take place and I am sure that my friends in the New Democratic Party share my concern. Here we are co-operating with the government in expediting passage of a bill today and I wish we had had the same co-operation with respect to the appointment of that commission. I just wanted to make that point. Otherwise, we support this bill fully.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I just wish to re-emphasize the point made by my Liberal colleague. We are also concerned, certainly not with the calibre of the person representing the New Democratic Party, but the process that was followed was inadequate. It shows a lack of real commitment to the parliamentary dialogue and consultations by this government.

With regard to the bill in front of us, we have agreed to the quick passage of this legislation after we were reassured by officials of Elections Canada and the department that this, in no way, would prevent people who did not live in an area where there was the by-election from seeking election. There was some concern over the actual wording and the meaning, but I believe all those concerns have been dealt with and that people who wish to run in the Chambly by-election or other by-elections that will be called in the next six months, once the Prime Minister calls it, that those people, all Canadian citizens who are electors will be able to seek election.

• (1410)

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Gerry Weiner (for Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology) moved that Bill C-16, an act to establish the Canadian Space Agency and to provide for other matters in relation to space, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed to on division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Parliamentary Secretary to the House Leader.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, that completes the legislation which the government had on the Order Paper for today. I would ask at this time that we suspend the House to the call of the Chair so that we may later in the afternoon receive Royal Assent.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the government on its co-operation today and, as usual, the opposition is always available to co-operate with this government when it wants to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there agreement to suspend? The hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, we are agreeable to this with the understanding that the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Essex—Windsor would be just dropped to the bottom of the Order Paper to be dealt with at a future time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have received written notice from the hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River that he is unable to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business on Monday, December 18, 1989.

It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in order of precedence pursuant to Standing Order 94. Accordingly, I am directing the table officers to drop the item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. The hour for Private Members' Business will thus be cancelled and pursuant to Standing Order 94, the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour.

In accordance with Standing Order 94, notice was published for consideration today of a motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Essex—Windsor. Since the member is not present to move his motion at this time, the motion will, in accordance with Standing Order 42, be dropped to the bottom of the Order Paper.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being no business before the House at this time, is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 2.14 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 4 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, without amendment.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Royal Assent

Rideau hall
Ottawa,

December 15, 1989

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. John Sopinka, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 15th day of December, 1989, at 3:45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills

Yours sincerely,

Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services—Chapter No. 24.

Bill C-10, an act relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the governments of certain countries in sub-Saharan Africa—Chapter No. 25.

Bill C-36, an act to amend the Advance Payments for Crops Act and the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act—Chapter No. 26.

It being 4.16 p.m., this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 4.16 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 18, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to 16 petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

COMMITTEES

BILL C-18—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-18, an act to establish the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and to amend certain acts in relation thereto, with amendments.

I wish to express my appreciation for the co-operation of the members of the committee, and as well to the staff of the committee who performed a great service.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

INTEGRATED CIRCUIT TOPOGRAPHY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): moved for leave to introduce Bill C-57, an act to provide for the protection of integrated circuit topographies and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. minister should have leave to introduce the bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

WOMEN

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ADOPTION BY THE UNITED NATIONS OF THE CONVENTION ON THE ELIMINATION OF ALL FORMS OF DISCRIMINATION AGAINST WOMEN

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, today is an important day for women in Canada and around the world. On the one hand, it allows us to reflect on the progress we have made towards equality, as we celebrate the tenth anniverary of the adoption by the United Nations of The Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women.

[English]

At the same time, we are reminded that we have barely scratched the surface of our understanding of the root causes of discrimination against women, and we are profoundly disturbed at the depth of that discrimination and frequently at the horror of its manifestation.

In this battle to eliminate discrimination, the convention is the legal instrument setting out the basic standards necessary to achieve women's equality. It covers areas as wide-ranging as employment equity, equal access to education and health care, participation in public life and equal treatment before the law. Its adoption in 1979 represented the culmination of decades of work by women's organizations and by the UN Commission on the Status of Women.

Canada was proud to ratify this convention in 1981, recommitting itself nationally and internationally to the goal of eradicating discrimination against women in all its forms. As of today, 98 other nations have also pledged to embody and enforce its principles.

• (1110)

In Canada as a society we see the necessity for economic self-sufficiency for women as fundamental to the elimination of discrimination. The ability to economically sustain oneself and one's family is as important to women as it is to men, not simply for survival but for pride, dignity, self-confidence and optimism for the future of one's children.

We also know that violence toward women and sexual harassment are linked at least in part to women's lack of economic self-sufficiency. Unhappily, our struggles to achieve equality and self-sufficiency have failed to eliminate the humiliating and tragic consequences of these most ancient and obscene forms of discrimination.

There is no clearly marked map which delineates the boundary where natural and healthy sexual tension between men and women begins to break down into offensive and demeaning behaviour. Men, as well as women, are struggling to redefine their relationships with each other so that the end result is sexual expression with dignity and mutual respect.

However, for too many still in our society as in other societies there is no boundary. There are still some men who view harassment and violence as their right and as their legitimate means of expressing superiority. It is, in other words, their right to discriminate against women. In recent days, we have been made more acutely aware than ever of where the aberrant form of that manifestation of this so-called right may lead.

The stark tragedy which we have been faced with in Canada can lead us to oversimplify the causes of the barriers we, as women, have still to overcome. It can reinforce our view of ourselves as constantly vulnerable, as perpetual victims.

Let us remember today, as we celebrate this tenth anniversary, that much has been done, that in every avenue of Canadian life, there is activity that is building a better life for all of us. Let us take pride in the fact that women have been the leaders in defining the means to eliminate discrimination and in promoting a broad social agenda that has been embraced by political parties of all stripes and that is changing the way we deal with each other. Let us remember as well that men as well as women must consciously, in their every day behaviour, seek to end the discrimination that diminishes all of us.

In February 1990, Canada will present its second progress report to the United Nations on the measures we have taken to implement the convention. Although much is still to be done, Canada can be proud of its record on women's rights. On the legislative front, the principles of the UN Convention have been embodied in Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Our employment equity legislation reflects the fundamental principle that business and employers, as well as governments, must become responsible for solutions to discrimination in the workplace. Proposed amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act will enhance maternity and parental benefits. We have put in place measures to enforce court-ordered support and maintenance payments and programs to encourage women entrepreneurs, to name a few, among a broad range of initiatives.

In addition, we are urging the provinces to examine women's training needs and health concerns with us and together we are working on the availability and affordability of child care.

There are urgent objectives still to be met. For example, obstacles remain much more acute among certain groups such as aboriginal women, immigrant women, visible minority women, disabled women, elderly women, and, as a government, we are paying particular attention to their needs and concerns.

As a signatory to the convention, Canada has also made a commitment to implement measures that enable parents to combine work and family obligations in new ways that deal with our new social forms, and here governments at all levels are developing strategies to prompt changes in attitudes, programs, services and legislation. But let us not forget that while governments can lead, there must be leadership through a broad range of activities in our community.

Discrimination against women violates the basic principles of equality of rights and respect for human dignity that are the due of all citizens of our planet.

[Translation]

I am confident that, despite difficulties and setbacks, Canada will continue to set an example towards the elimination of obstacles that inhibit the ability of women to achieve their full potential as participants in, and contributors to, society.

[English]

Women have much to take pride in, and those of us here today honour them in their ability to contribute and participate as we have in the past. We must all of us remember together that women who perform so much in our society out of their talents and their natural ability to contribute to our well being will continue to do so in the future and will continue to take pride in their ability to do so.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mark the tenth anniversary of the adoption of the United Nations Convention on the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women. The day is important because it marks the acceptance, at least on paper, of a new global direction, a direction that will eventually tear down the walls of inequality and allow each one of us to live and work without the unfair burden of gender discrimination.

But let us make no mistake. The minister's statement has highlighted an important point, namely, that we still have a long way, a very long way to go in addressing major issues in our society here in Canada which affect women.

The force of the United Nations Convention is only as strong as each independent signatory wishes it to be. As in the case of the United Nations Charter of Rights and Freedoms, some signatories continue to be the greatest violators of human rights.

Can we stand and proclaim that we here in Canada are seriously addressing the problem of inequality and that we can be proud of our record on women's rights? I do not think so. The minister cited the work of this government listing the first embodiment of the principles of the UN Convention in Section 15 of our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

But while the non obstante clause exists and Section 15 is in jeopardy, I do not think that we can congratulate ourselves. What message is this government sending to the women of Canada when we have professed to entrench equality in a document where equality is essentially not entrenched?

The minister further pointed to the employment equity legislation that exists. This is remarkable considering that the government is still embroiled in a dispute with hospital service workers, predominantly women, who are being paid substantially less than their male colleagues. Even with a ruling against the government from the Human Rights Commission, this government has refused to move toward pay equity.

A recently released study has shown that women employed in Canadian banks make only 56 cents for every dollar paid to male employees and, further, although women outnumber male bank workers 70 to one, there are virtually no women in banks' upper management in Canada.

This government recently introduced legislation on abortion which criminalizes women for exercising control over their own reproduction. This government professes to be committed to the cause of women but with a sweep of its mighty arm, it slashed funding by 15 per cent from vital national women's programs. It is one thing to say that we are leaders in the realm of equality and it is another thing altogether to actually lead.

• (1120)

Where is real pay equity and where, oh where, is a national child care program that is acknowledged by all to be the only true bridge to true employment equity?

The road to eliminating discrimination is a long one. I applaud the intentions of the United Nations and of Canadian governments past and present, but indeed let us not forget that there is much work still be done.

The examples that I have listed illustrate that we are a long way from achieving a truly equal society. More distressing, the events two weeks ago at the University of Montreal reinforce the notion that women are still perceived by far too many to be a group infringing on the natural domain of men.

Is there hope? Of course there is. But the hope lies in progress, courage and government action. The hope lies in such government action that is honest, consistent and progressive. The hope lies in government that shows its true commitment to gender equality and acts rather than congratulates itself for work which is still unfinished. The hope lies in the recognition, some day in the future, by this government and by all governments that women truly do hold up half the sky.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women has requested that this day be a day of national mourning for the 14 young engineering students who were massacred in Montreal. I would like to support the call for that day of mourning and also the request that Canadians make donations to their local rape relief centres, to organizations that are working toward ending violence against women, and I would urge members of Parliament and all Canadians to take that day of mourning seriously and to perhaps make donations if they are able.

The minister focused her remarks on the progress that women have made toward equality, and I congratulate the women of Canada for that progress. But on this tenth anniversary of the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination against Women, I would like to look closely at the Convention and point out here what still needs to be done in our country.

The minister has said that Canada can be proud of its record on women's rights. I wonder if the government is proud of spending $17 million on 38 strip clubs in Canada while still withholding the bulk of $22 million that is earmarked for Project Haven, a capital grants program for shelters for battered women, because of regulatory red tape.

It is ironic that Article 13(b) of the convention asks signatories to observe equality in credit lending. Women are still discriminated against in terms of bank loans and credit, while this government invests in strip clubs.

Also ironic is this government's recent and rather flagrant violation of Articles 2(c) and (d) and Article 11(d) which deal with equal pay for work of equal value. Pay equity is what the federal hospital workers, mainly women, have been demanding since the early 1980s. They had to take this government to court and they won. The government still refuses to entrench fair wages in the collective agreement. Instead, within the past couple of weeks, we have witnessed the sorry sight of these unfairly treated workers being legislated back to work.

The government's abortion law, introduced this year, contradicts Articles 2 and 16(1)(e) of the convention. This proposed abortion law will discriminate against women because it controls women's reproduction and not men's. It limits women's choices. It targets women's fertility by imposing arbitrary regulations on women's decisions whether or not to bear children.

In Canada it is illegal to discriminate against women because they are women. Yet Employment and Immigration's language training programs for immigrants contain an inherent bias against women that has not yet been addressed by this government. In fact, the government is being taken to court again over its human rights violations.

One in 10 Canadian women is not covered by the Canadian Human Rights Act. In Canada's second report to the convention, on its progress toward equality it mentioned the 1985 Equality for All report. The recommendation to include sexual orientation as a prohibited ground for discrimination is still being ignored by this government some five years later.

Article 7 of the convention guarantees women's rights to participate in the formulation of government policy and to participate in non-governmental organizations and associations concerned with the public and political life of the country. The Conservative government responded to this by slashing the Secretary of State's program for women by 15 per cent and funding to the National Action Committee on the Status of Women by 50 per cent.

I am glad that our party, the New Democratic Party, has contributed to the government's next report on the participation of women by being the first national political party in North America to elect a woman as its leader.

Article 11(e) establishes a right to social security, contrary to the government's clawback policy on pensions and on family allowances. Article 11(2)(c) speaks of a development of a network of child care facilities. Where is Canada's much needed child care program? Will this government once again introduce a program two months before an election, only to have it die once again on the Order Paper?

Articles 3 and 5 can be applied to bring in pornography legislation, legislation that attacks violence and pornography and not sexuality.

There are three other points made in Canada's second report on its implementation of the Convention that need examining. One is its glorification of the Court Challenges Program. I hope that this means that the program will be extended. The second is the repeal of discrimination in the Indian Act. However, there still does remain discrimination in the Act since reinstated women can only pass status down to the first generation while men can pass status down to subsequent generations.

The report also discusses the prison for women. I visited the Kingston prison for women and I found the conditions there just absolutely shocking. I would hope that in Canada's next report, there will be real, rather than imagined, progress to comment on as far as the prison for women in Kingston goes.

The preamble of the convention says that signatories are "concerned that in situations of poverty, women have the least access to food, health care, education, training and opportunities for employment and other needs, convinced that the establishment of the new international economic order, based on equity and justice, will contribute significantly towards the promotion of equality between men and women—".

In Canada, the devastating reality is that one in three female single parents in the paid workforce cannot keep her family out of poverty and 53.4 per cent of female-headed, single parent families are poor. Three-quarters of all poor seniors are women.

What we need to fulfil our convention obligations is really a new economic order, one that puts people first, one for which full employment is a priority, one that redistributes wealth, an economic order that is based on equality and justice for all.

[Translation]

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I wish to present two petitions which reject the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas. Your petitioners, who are residents of the isolated community of Lebel-sur-Quévillon in Abitibi, are concerned about the recommendations in this as yet unfinished report.

Mr. Speaker, the task force's final report does not contain single reference to the James Bay and Northern Quebec Cree-Naskapi Agreement or to the final report published in October 1989 on regional disparities among isolated communities, carried out by the Government of Quebec.

• (1130)

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, certified correct by the clerk of petitions from a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia. The petitioners are distraught at the news that the government is going to proceed with the goods and services tax and make the announcement tomorrow that it will be reduced to 7 per cent. I personally feel depressed to read all of the things they have drawn to our attention which cause them to be so discouraged and disillusioned with the government.

In summary, they are asking the government to please have some sensitivity as to what is going on in the country and back off from this cruel, brutal tax.

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by hundreds of Canadians from Montreal, living in the constituency of Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who strongly oppose the new goods and service tax. They state it is an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians. It will hit them not only with higher taxes, but with higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to present a petition to the House of Commons pursuant to Standing Order 36. There are actually eight petitions signed by 417 people in the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt, from the communities of Carmi, Salal, Princeton, Hedly, Merritt and the Lower Nicola.

These people are concerned, as are so many others across this country, with the imposition of a goods and services tax of any nature whatsoever. They have asked the government to ensure, if and when there is a broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, that it not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

They are asking this government to ensure that the tax burden is not shifted to ordinary Canadians but is fairly shifted throughout the whole of Canada.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by quite a number of British Columbia residents opposing the goods and services tax. The petitioners state that this is an unfair form of taxation which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no tax while forcing lower and middle-income taxpayers to bear the burden of national taxes. The petition also states that the government is now trying to tax reading, haircuts, diapers, coffins and home heating fuels.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to reject the current proposal, to reform the tax system and to cease with a proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

VIA RAIL

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have a second petition which opposes cuts to VIA Rail. The petitioners ask Parliament to guarantee VIA sufficient support to carry out its mandate to provide passenger services in Canada.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to present two petitions. The first petition, certified correct under Standing Order 36 by the clerk of petitions, comes from a number of people in the Big River community of Saskatchewan in the Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency. It is a petition circulated by One Voice, the senior's network, that calls upon Parliament to abandon the proposed measures that will clawback the old age security and family allowance benefits undermining the principle of universality in social programs. They state that it is a tax that would discriminate against recipients of old age security and family allowance benefits. They call upon Parliament to abandon this and maintain an old age security and family allowance benefit program that is tied to the level of income.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I also want to present petition today signed by residents of the Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency, primarily from Battleford and Wilkie in the North Battleford area.

The petitioners are indicating that the goods and services tax is a regressive tax. They call upon Parliament to reject the proposal for the goods and services tax, to reform the taxation system so there is an effective minimum tax tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, to ensure that if and when there is a broad public consensus on sales tax measures to replace the manufacturers' sales tax that this reform not be an opportunity for the federal government impose a massive tax grab and, finally, for the government to cease with the proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of a thorough real tax reform.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to this house four petitions certified correct by the clerk of petitions. They contain the signatures of Canadians who reside in the communities of Hamilton, Burlington, Stoney Creek, Ancaster, Dundas and Caledonia.

The petitioners state that the Conservative federal government wants to impose on Canadians a new general tax of 9 per cent on all goods and services which will be hidden from Canadians and applied to virtually everything they buy. They say that the imposition of this new general goods and services tax will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle income Canadians and that the imposition of this tax will create an onerous burden on small business. They call on Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax, be it at 9 per cent today or 7 per cent tomorrow.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition from my constituents on the Bonavista Peninsula; Newman's Cove, Amherst Cove, Birchy Cove, Bonavista, Elliston. These communities are looking at the crisis in the fisheries that we will be talking about later on today. They are looking at Bill C-21 under which 26,000 people will have reduced UI benefits and under which 9,000 in Newfoundland will probably lose all their UI. They are looking at the goods and services tax on top of this and on top of the provincial sales tax of 12 per cent, which itself may even rise.

If there is any such thing as a humble prayer and resolution, my constituents are asking for this to get rid of this goods and services tax. As was said by one of my colleagues, the member for Kamloops, let us reduce it from 7 per cent to 0 per cent. Let us get rid of the whole thing.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 36 to present petitions from a number of small businesses in my riding.

This is a petition about the goods and services tax and these small business people, 441 of them, say that the goods and services tax is an unfair form of taxation because it forces small businesses to carry a disproportionate share of the tax burden. They state that it will be an implementation nightmare for small businesses in Canada and that the $600 motion offered to small business to offset the cost of administering this tax is completely inadequate.

The petitioners call upon this government to reject the goods and services tax at any percentage rate and to consult with business, labour and consumer groups to reach a broad consensus on reform of our tax system and to ensure that there is a real reform of the tax system to provide a healthy climate for small business in Canada.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present 11 petitions from people in many communities of Canada; from Waterloo, Toronto, Saskatoon, Kamloops, Nanaimo and Vancouver who are opposed to the implementation of the goods and services tax.

These petitioners point out that the government has not adequately addressed the unfairness in the present tax system and that the goods and services tax is particularly unfair because it does not tax people on their ability to pay. Having to pay a tax on reading material, educational material, haircuts, and heating oil is certainly not a fair way to collect taxes. They say that there ought to be an effective minimum tax on wealthy corporations and wealthy individuals who can pay, and that whatever tax reform the government brings in must be based on ability to pay and not be a massive tax grab.

• (1140)

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition to this House under Standing Order 36 regarding the grief and suffering tax. It is signed by residents of the central interior of British Columbia who express their concern that this new tax will be a regressive tax. They request that the tax system be reformed so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations and to ensure that, when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

Indeed, Tory times are tax times.

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, the petition that I have comes from the community of Gananoque. The petitioners object to the effects that the proposed goods and services tax is going to have on the pastime of skating, a pastime for children. The tax applies not only to skates but also to the instructors' fees and everything associated with that pastime for children in that particular community.

In addition to that, I have another petition which meets all requirements. In the community of Kemptville, not too far from here, a great activity in which seniors can participate is bowling. The seniors are objecting strenuously to the 9 per cent additional cost of bowling. That is one of the few activities in which seniors can participate at most any age so residents of the community of Kemptville are really objecting to that.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I have about two dozen petitions to present today on behalf of constituents throughout the Algoma-Manitoulin area in which they oppose the implementation of a goods and services tax. My constituents point out that some 31 new taxes have been imposed since 1984, that the manufacturers' sales tax has been increased from 9 per cent to 13.5 per cent, that the new goods and services tax at 9 per cent or even at 7 per cent will still be a hidden tax that will cause unfair hardship for low and middle income Canadians and that it will be a special burden to small businessmen because of the cost of administration and the time involved in administration.

I present these on behalf of these constituents who are opposed to the goods and services tax.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 146, 161 and 163.

[Text]

THE JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUÉBEC AGREEMENT—OPERATING AND CAPITAL BUDGETS FOR CREE SCHOOL BOARD

Question No. 146—Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni):

Under the provisions of Section 16.0.28 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement for approved operating and capital budgets for Cree School Boards (a) what was the budget for capital and operating costs approved under the agreement in each school year from 1978-79 to date (b) of the approved budget in each school year how much was contributed by Canada in (i) dollars (ii) percentage terms (c) has Canada's initial responsibility to provide 75 percent of these budgets been changed and, if so (i) in what years (ii) in each case, by what percentage of the approved budget?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) Québec and Canada have not, to date, agreed on a common budget approval process for the Cree school board. In the past the Québec government has determined the annual budgets and billed Canada for its 75 percent contribution. Negotiations are continuing to correct this situation.

(b) (i) The table attached indicates Canada's contributions to the Cree school board budget from 1978/79 to 1988/89. The 1989/90 budget is still under discussion.

(ii) These contributions represent 75 percent of the expenses Canada has accepted to fund annually. Canada is also discussing with the Québec government the approval of additional Cree school board expenses incurred during past years.

(c) This percentage has not changed since 1978/79.

CONTRIBUTIONS BY THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA

FISCAL YEARS	OPERATING	CAPITAL	TOTAL
1978/79	$ 7,626,800	$ 1,373,077	$ 8,999,877
1979/80	10,125,700	1,452,748	11,578,448
1980/81	11,698,500	2,235,263	13,933,763
1981/82	13,453,300	1,319,000	14,772,300
1982/83	15,471,300	941,900	16,413,200
1983/84	14,731,000	3,561,500	18,292,500
1984/85	16,238,200	1,700,900	17,939,100
1985/86	17,403,300	2,721,800	20,125,100
1986/87	19,437,000	4,172,200	23,609,200
1987/88	18,460,460	4,624,500	23,084,960
1988/89	20,517,427	6,048,200	26,565,627
Totals	165,162,987	30,151,088	195,314,075

APPLICATION OF FEDERAL TAXES

Question No. 161—Mr. Saint-Julien:

As of October 25, 1989, are any Canadian products subject to a federal tax and, if so (a) which ones (b) what is the tax rate applied to each of these products?

Hon. Otto John Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): A general rate of federal sales tax at 13.5 per cent is imposed by the Excise Tax Act on all goods manufactured or produced in Canada, or imported into the country. A reduced sales tax rate of 8 per cent applies to various construction materials. The Act also provides for a number of exemptions from the tax. For example, most food for human consumption, most clothing and footwear, and certain drugs and devices for the handicapped are exempt.

Excise taxes of various rates are also imposed under the Excise Tax Act on selected commodities such as jewellery, playing cards, wine, tobacco products, lighters, heavy vans and automobiles, and gasoline.

Excise duties are imposed at various rates by the Excise Act on domestically produced beer, alcoholic spirits and tobacco products.

In addition to the above taxes on commodities, the Excise Tax Act imposes a tax on certain insurance contracts effected outside Canada and a tax on air travel.

The Excise Tax Act also imposes an 11-per-cent telecommunication programming services tax and an 11-per-cent telecommunication services tax.

APPLICATION OF FEDERAL TAXES

Question No. 163—Mr. Saint-Julien:

As of October 30, 1989, are any Canadian products exempt from federal tax and, if so, which ones?

Hon. Otto John Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): The Excise Tax Act imposes federal sales tax on all goods produced or manufactured in Canada. Subsection 51(1) of the statute exempts from this tax the goods which are enumerated in Schedule III to the Act under the following headings: Coverings or containers diplomatic; educational, technical, cultural, religious and literary; farm and forest; foodstuffs; fuels and electricity; goods enumerated in Customs tariff items; health, marine and fisheries; mine and quarries; miscellaneous (including such disparate items as baler twine, British and Canadian coins, and ice); municipalities; production equipment, processing materials and plans; goods manufactured in institutions; clothing and footwear; construction equipment; transportation equipment.

In addition, provision is contained in sections 68 and 69 of the Excise Tax Act for refunds of federal sales tax for the following purposes: exports; ships' stores; use by province; certain systems (primarily municipal drainage or sewerage systems); certified institutions; hospital cleaning establishments; educational institutions; incinerators; small manufacturers; tourist literature; motor fuel used by diplomats; fuel tax rebates to farmers, fishermen, loggers, miners, hunters and trappers who buy gasoline or diesel fuel for commercial, off-highway use solely in qualifying operations and not for resale.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, if Questions Nos. 147 and 153 could be made Orders for Returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Questions Nos. 147 and 153 be deemed to have been made Orders for Returns?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT

Question No. 147—Mr. Whittaker:

For companies regulated by the Pension Benefits Standards Act (a) what is the breakdown of required contribution rates for employees and employers (b) of companies that have established a pension committee with pensioner representation (i) what number provide funding to assist this representation (ii) what are their names (c) for each company that has provided "ad hoc" voluntary inflation adjustments to pension plans (i) what is its name (ii) what is the nature of the adjustments (iii) over what period of time have the adjustments been provided (iv) what is the cost to employees of these adjustments (d) what companies have claimed excess pension fund earnings (e) of the companies that have printed a revenue and disbursement summary, which companies have made the summaries available to pensioners and employees?

Return tabled.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Question No. 153—Mr. Caccia:

In (a) 1987 (b) 1988, were any charges laid as a result of the violation of federal pollution legislation and, if so (i) what number (ii) under which statutory authorities, with what number of separate charges laid under each (iii) what number led to successful prosecutions, with, in each case, what penalty?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 21 minutes, beginning at 1 p.m. today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-28

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-28, not more than one further sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and, one sitting day to the consideration of the third reading stage of the bill; and

That, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the day allotted to the report stage consideration and on the day allotted to the third reading stage consideration of the said bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise with a great deal of sorrow to speak to this particular motion because I know that my hon. colleagues opposite had wanted to prolong the debate on this motion ad nauseam. Actually, this is a government measure to save them from themselves because we were getting calls from there was this great uprising in the Liberal and NDP parties in an effort to come to the rescue of people with incomes of over $50,000 who were having their old age security taxed back.

We in this party believe in distributing income to those people who need it.

Mr. Riis: Charity in other words.

Mr. Lewis: I didn't say "charity", I said "income distribution". We are doing that through the modernization of a tax system which was left to us in decrepit shape by a decrepit Liberal party. We are making great strides toward doing that. I know I speak for people on all sides of the House when I say that my hon. friends are waiting in anticipation of the declaration by the Minister of Finance on the new great services tax which we are going to be bringing in shortly. I am sure that by the time the Minister of Finance is finished there will be a great deal of support for this tax.

While I am on my feet I want to mention that I understand the hon. member from Ottawa Centre is organizing a demonstration against the budget cuts that the President of the Treasury Board announced on Friday. I want him to know, although I know it is rather public to do it here, that if he should in any way contemplate a cross-country tour to speak to this, I want him to come to Orillia, Midland, and Penetanguishene to speak to this important issue. We want him in Kamloops and probably in Peace River. We want this noble quest carried across the country. And if he needs money we will be glad to raise the funds to get him there.

Having said that, we are making good progress on the legislative agenda. Upon passage of this motion we intend to call report stage on Tuesday next, tomorrow, and third reading on Wednesday and complete the debate on this very important tax measure and send it off to the other place for final review and, I am sure, speedy passage.

I do not think I need to speak any further. I am sure my hon. friends opposite will probably see the wisdom of this and, thanks to my words, we will probably be able to vote immediately.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Madam Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to have the opportunity to reply so immediately to some of those comments.

On the matter of the cutbacks I feel that I have some obligation to respond to the minister's remarks. I think that the people of the national capital region are indeed aware of the fiscal mess into which the government has got the country. I think they are willing to do their part to try to alleviate the incredible burden that has been thrust upon the nation by five years of fiscal incompetence which has more than doubled the national debt in that time.

I think the government needs to be aware at this time of the importance of national symbols, the importance of realizing, on the part of all Canadians, the fact that we have institutions as well as programs in this country that tie us together.

• (1150)

The national capital plays a major part in the development of a system of national values and an awareness of the fact that being Canadian has a symbolic importance beyond where we were born or where we happen to live. I think we should all be concerned, whatever side we are on, when the government and its ministers try to excuse the inability of the government to manage its finances by somehow criticizing or dumping on one region of the country, especially when that region, more than others, in a way embodies the identity of the nation. I think it is very important that those institutions that are centred on the national capital continue to play that role.

Even as the President of the Treasury Board was standing in the House of Commons on Friday talking about what he was going to cut, the Prime Minister of Canada was in Chambly, Quebec, where there is a by-election by some coincidence going on, talking about how he was spending, about what he was doing to buy votes in that area. I suggest that the government start to look at its own iniquitous practice of trying to buy votes before it starts to talk about the national capital region being some kind of privileged area.

On the matter of time allocation on this bill, I think the minister has also said some things that bear examination. He has talked about the effort on this side of the House to protect the wealthy. I hardly think that asking the House of Commons to take the time to consider the most important social policy change in a generation in this country should be interpreted merely as trying to protect the wealthy.

We have built, for better or for worse, a series of programs in this country based on the assumption that universality should be the guiding principle. We have done that not just with respect to our family allowances and old age pensions, although those are important. We have also done it with our educational system. We have done it as well with our medical aid system. We have accepted the idea that Canadians, whatever their economic situation, should share a common basis of well-being based on being Canadian, whether they are rich or poor, whether they live in Ottawa, Orillia, Peace River or Halifax. Wherever they live, whatever their income, Canadians are entitled to a common basis of social programs in this country.

The government is tearing down national institutions. It is going across the country encouraging criticism of the national capital. It is underfunding the National Arts Centre and its ministers say we should not even call these institutions national because it offends some separatists in Quebec, that we should call them Canadian rather then national. While the government is tearing these things down it is tearing down the basic social concept, the contract whereby we live together in this country, and it is saying, "You can only have a few hours to debate it".

The clawback should not even be in an income tax amendment bill. If the clawback is going to be introduced it should be done as part of social policy change. There should have been a discussion paper following up the one that was issued by the minister of health in 1985 in which the minister of Health at the time, now the minister of energy, said that to tax back old age pensions would be unfair and unacceptable. He said at the same time that it might not be unfair with family allowances. We could argue about that, but he specifically mentioned that the old age pension should be protected.

What happened to the discussion paper? It went to a parliamentary committee, it was studied, it died. There was no further discussion, no more policy papers, no more indication that the government was considering introducing the most significant social policy change in a generation. None of that was done.

Instead the government, and the Prime Minister in particular, went around during the election campaign and said, "Social programs, especially for the elderly, will not be diminished. They will be improved". And with the very first budget after the election we had the clawback introduced. Did he tell his mother, I wonder.

I am sure all Canadians are disgusted at the memory of the Prime Minister of Canada parading his own mother on to an election platform as an example of his good faith to the seniors of Canada. Four months later the Minister of Finance gets up and says he is going to tax back Mrs. Mulroney's old age pension. Why was that not put before the people during the election campaign? Why is it that now, four days before we are to adjourn for Christmas, in an Income Tax Act amendment bill, which has all kinds of things in it from the budget, which the Department of Finance itself tried to amend in committee and all of its amendments were out of order, we have to be constrained in the time we have to debate such an essential issue?

Instead of having time to study it, instead of having time to hear the groups of Canadians across the country who are concerned about whether the erosion of universality is going to lead to the erosion of universality in so many other areas, we have to abandon that debate, we have to turn it over to the editorial writers and hope that they will take time to raise with Canadians this essential issue of public policy.

This is scandalous, Madam Speaker. It is scandalous not just because it is closure but because it is closure on such an important measure. It should not be done. I suggest to the government, in view of the failure of the Department of Finance to get its amendments introduced at committee stage, in view of the implicit recognition that comes with that failure that the bill itself is fundamentally flawed, that it needs to be amended, that the government should withdraw the bill, forget about trying to push it through this week, introduce a proper income tax amendment bill in the new year and put the clawback aside until it has been considered and debated by Canadians across Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, when the young people of Canada are studying the history of Canada years from now they will look back on 1989 as the year that the Government of Canada decided to abandon one of the crucial principles of what being a Canadian is all about. Being a Canadian means that if you get sick, it does not matter who you are, rich or poor, whether you live in Newfoundland or Saskatchewan, you will have adequate medical attention. It means that your children will go to school. You do not have to pay extra. You do not have to send them to private schools or special schools which are going to cost you money. Your contribution through the general tax system will take care of that education. It means that if you are raising children you get a family allowance cheque every month until the children are age 18. And it means that if you are an elderly person, no matter who you are, rich or poor, no matter what your ethnic origins, your religion, or where you live, you get a pension. That is what it means to be a Canadian.

This year the government decided it was going to change all of that, that it was going to tear universality up and throw it out of the window. The government says that it has had enough. It does not want a fair system for everybody in this country, it wants charity. If you can prove to the government that you are poor enough to receive a pension, then you will get a pension. If you are poor enough to prove to the government you require family allowance, then you will get family allowance cheques.

This means that we are going back to the old days of the means test, a degrading experience. That is Tory times. This is what being a Conservative in this country is all about. I suspect that those people who are watching the House of Commons on their television sets today, trying to understand what is going on, Canadian is all about. If they look through all the veils and so on of what the various ministers have said, lo and behold, way out there is the free trade deal staring them in the face. Because the free trade deal says that we have agreed, as a country, to harmonize our social programs with those in the United States of America.

• (1200)

We know how abysmal the health care system is in the United States. We know how families are the last sort of caring aspect of the American administration, the American way of life, in terms of support and care,. That is what is happening here today. To make it worse, not only is this government dismantling something that is fundamental to being a Canadian, it is now saying: "We don't want the opposition members of the House of Commons to speak about this because if they speak about it the people who are watching their television sets at home today will be aware of what is going on". It decided: "We are going to muzzle the debate. We are going to curtail the debate. We are going to shut down the debate. We are going to introduce dictatorial, totalitarian methods that say we no longer want the Parliament of Canada to explain to the people of Canada what this government is doing".

That has to be a very dark day for freedom of speech. It is a dark day for those who believe in the fundamentals of a parliamentary democracy. It is a dark day for those Canadians who actually believe that democracy is something we are struggling to keep. As we see other countries, particularly in the east bloc, begin to slowly introduce the principles that we have held high for generations, this Conservative government has decided to dismantle this and make this House of Commons and Parliament of Canada into an ineffectual place. As soon as it hears criticisms coming from members of the opposition parties it says: "We don't want to hear this any more. We are going to curtail debate".

That is what the government has done this morning. I do not know if members on the government side realize what is going on today. The Minister of Justice—of justice of all people—stood up and said: "Listen, I know that we introduced this legislation, that it is dastardly legislation, mean-spirited and cruel." What it means to be a Conservative government is to introduce that kind of legislation. He went on to say: "We are going to drive this through". The government closed off debate at second reading and sent it to committee.

Committee is where experts are asked to come from across Canada and examine legislation. We know what happened. It went to committee and members of the New Democratic Party stood up and said: "Listen, if we are going to change the social policy of this country so drastically as a result of this Conservative government and this legislation, let us bring in experts, let us bring in those who understand the implications to explain to the members of the government what this is actually going to do to people and how mean and cruel this whole legislation is".

Did the government do that? Absolutely not. Once again it did not want to hear what people had to say. It did not want to hear the experts. It did not want to hear what it was actually going to do to families living in Atlantic Canada, western Canada and northern Ontario and Quebec. It did not want to hear what this actually means to those people who struggled and built this country. Now the government says: "Well, we changed our mind. You no longer will get an old age pension cheque. Because you have saved and worked hard to provide for yourself we feel you do not need a cheque any more and so we are going to take away this critical right of what being a Canadian is all about". That is the essence of this legislation.

What did the government members do in committee? They said: "We do not want to hear all of this information because if people understand what we are doing they are going to get very, very concerned." They cut off the witnesses.

We thought that here we are back in the of the House of Commons, we will have a chance now to explain to the people of Canada what this all means. Then the government introduced today time allocation, the muzzling of Parliament, closure of Parliament. "Do not let them talk on the terms of the legislation". That is what has happened. Two days from now we will not be able to speak on this legislation. This legislation will be passed, all gone, done. This government will have changed the direction of the country forever and ever until the new government, the New Democratic government decides to put it right back where it should be and introduce the principle of universality once again.

Not only is it bad that the Conservatives want to take away people's pensions—which is what they are going to do essentially—not only is it bad that they are going to muzzle Parliament, curtail debate and use their jack-booted tactics to close this debate down, which is bad enough in itself, but the bill itself is a disaster. The government came into committee—something which has never happened in the history of Canada before—and said: "Listen, we have made such a disastrous mistake in drafting this legislation, we are going to require 125 amendments just to make it workable". It is incredible that the government is so sloppy, so loose in its thinking, so uncaring, so callous, so stupid when it comes to drafting legislation that it has to have 125 amendments to it just to make it tolerable to its own members.

As you know, the Speaker said: "This is all nonsense" and threw them all out. He said: "These are not even procedurally acceptable". If the government was just to do the honourable parliamentary thing it would say: "Let's go back and at least draft a bill that you can pass through the House of Commons and do what we want even though it is mean and cruel and against senior citizens and families. If that is what we want to do, then at least let us make it properly acceptable in the House of Commons".

Members of the government did not even do that. The government has shown nothing less than utter contempt for this place. It just said: "Well, if we just draft up anything that is sloppy, you know, we will get it through the House of Commons, the Speaker will let it through". Thank goodness, Madam Speaker, you did not let it through. You said: "Listen, there are some standards in here. They can use closure and muzzling of debate and all sorts of procedural tricks to jam inappropriate legislation through". But at least the Chair said: "That is far enough and we are not going to tolerate this nonsense".

If this were the only time the government decided to bring in its heavy hand of the majority and just ignore the minority—if you like the tyranny of the majority—then I suppose we could say: "Well, they did not know any better. They do not understand parliamentary democracy. They do not understand what it means to govern within a democratic framework". This is now a trend. This happens time and time again. It is the only way of course that it can get bad legislation through. From time to time the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party try to improve legislation and make it the best we can. We are not always happy with it but we try to do our best.

The government has brought in legislation that essentially, as I said, takes universality and eliminates it, something that as Canadians we have struggled to achieve, something which we hold up high on the world stage and say: "This is what it means to be a Canadian. It does not matter who you are and what you are, you will be able to get the old age security cheque when you are aged 65". Yet this government says: "Well we have changed our mind. We are going to change all that now". This is not the Canada we want to see.

This has happened time and time again. There has been closure, muzzling of Parliament, shutting Parliament down, making it impossible for members to speak. That is not what a parliamentary democracy is all about. That is why we say this government shows contempt for Parliament, the principles of Parliament, the traditions of Parliament and the practices of Parliament day after day.

I want to send to the Prime Minister a very clear message this morning. It is that as far as the New Democratic Party is concerned we are not going to take this any more. To make this place work properly you need to have the support of all of the parties and you need to have the will to make this place work.

In closing, I am simply putting the government on notice this morning that in the future if it plans to use the heavy hand of closure, the jack-booted approach to the parliamentary system, we in this party will not stand for that. We will pull out all the countless ways and means that we use to make this place effective and efficient. If the government is not going to recognize the practices and traditions of the parliamentary democracy in this country, then I am putting it on notice that we will not co-operate any further in the future and it will not be able to pass, without an incredible struggle, this kind of mean, cruel-spirited legislation that we are seeing here before us today.

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I cannot say that I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. As you know, there are Canadians who would like to hear Members of the House of Commons discuss this bill. They realize it has some extremely negative implications. However, instead of discussing those implications today, we ought to consider the fact that the government will not let us have the kind of open and full debate that we should have here in the House.

[English]

One of the problems facing Canadians is to try to figure out why the government is so stubborn about dealing with this particular proposal. It has tried to suggest that people who are suggesting the clawback is not an acceptable proposal are defending the indefensible, defending people with high incomes. Canadians understand the need for a debate on this matter, particularly senior citizens. They understood from the very outset that this was an attack on what was called a sacred trust. They understood from the very beginning that clawing back any amount, no matter what the threshold, was the beginning of the end.

• (1210)

What I find very unsettling is the fact that we have seniors across this country who are among the best organized groups of citizens in Canada telling the government, telling MPs who are not members of the government that we have to debate this issue, that we have to clarify all of the implications that will arise now that the crack is in the facade of universality. We have to go back and tell them that the government has decided unilaterally, because it has more members sitting to your right, Madam Speaker, than to your left, that it is going to impose closure.

The government has told us that some seniors support the proposition. I want to quote from Hansard of November 20 when I was involved in a debate on this very issue. I want senior citizens in Canada to understand exactly why closure is being imposed, why time allocation is being imposed. That debate was fairly lengthy and rather heated. I have had people come up to me to suggest that during that debate I should have repeated what hecklers to your right, Madam Speaker, were saying. Out of courtesy I was allowing them to make their interventions, realizing that they were not being picked up and that people who watch these proceedings were not able to understand what was being said. It was suggested to me that that was not a very effective means of proceeding because the fact that I might respond could not always be understood because the intervention had not been heard. What I want to do is simply refer to the debate that took place on the clawback proposal on November 20, 1989.

In that debate I was asking members to indicate whether or not when they went back to their constituencies and talked with senior citizens they were being told that this was the kind of legislation that should be introduced, whether it was appropriate, whether it was acceptable, whether it was fair. I was listening to people saying things like: "What about the deficit? What about the debt? Everybody has to pay their share".

It was my argument at that time that many senior citizens in this country have paid enormously to benefit from our system. They have paid in times of war. They have paid in times of depression. They have paid taxes. Most significantly they have paid into retirement plans, the Canada Pension Plan and old age pensions with the thought that the Parliament of Canada would respect what they had done and that the rules of the game would not be changed at a time when they were less able to defend themselves against legislation such as this.

The reason I bring this up is that I want to remind people that the reason the government wants to impose time allocation is that it does not want any more statements like the one I am going to quote. In that debate I was asking the questions: "Do you want senior citizens to pay down the debt? Do you want senior citizens to reduce the debt? Ask them, tell them. Do not say it is because you have too much and we want to take some away from you."

In response to my comments the hon. member for Winnipeg South said: "No, that is not what we are saying". Out of courtesy and recognizing what she said I indicated: "What are you saying then?" I asked that in order to provide the hon. member with an opportunity to explain her concern. I want to quote from the debate on November 20, 1989. The hon. member for Winnipeg South said this about the clawback:

> What is being said is that what has been given to you is only deserved if you have an income that is less than what it takes to live on.

Imagine that, Madam Speaker. That is why we are faced with time allocation today. Imagine a Conservative member of this House saying, and I am quoting from Hansard:

> What is being said is that what has been given to you—

The senior citizens of Canada:

> —is only deserved if you have an income that is less than what it takes to live on.

That is why we are getting time allocation. When you ask members of the government party to speak out and to explain what is the philosophy behind this, what is the purpose of going after senior citizens in this country, what is the purpose of trying to embarrass them they say: "If you are getting over $50,000 a year there should be a clawback. Never mind whether it is indexed or not. Never mind whether the threshold can be lowered or not". That is why the government cannot afford to have us talk about this too long. People will say, as the member from Winnipeg South said: "What has been given to you is only deserved if you have an income that is less than what it takes to live on".

I cannot believe that all members to your right, Madam Speaker, share that kind of an attitude. Certainly it is shared to some extent. Again in that debate not that long ago—on November 20—the following was said in this House on this very same matter. I was saying that I had been to Alberta and Manitoba and that my experience had not been to have senior citizens say: "My goodness, I am glad that you have begun the process of eroding our security". I have not even heard people 50 and 55 years of age saying that.

I was explaining that what we are hearing from senior citizens around the country is that they are very, very concerned. They are anxious. They see the beginning of the end for any kind of long-term security. Day after day we read reports indicating that people in Canada are living longer and longer. Life expectancy even in the last 10 years has increased dramatically. I am sure that as life expectancy has increased and people are aware that they are going to be around longer the level of anxiety has increased. We have a government that does not seem to understand the need to maintain security in the minds and in the hearts of Canadians—not only senior citizens but, as I indicated in that quote from Hansard, people who are not receiving pensions now but who are very much aware that those days are rapidly coming. They are not very secure.

The point I am making is as to why the government feels the need to clamp down on Parliament, to shut off debate, and we can quote again from that debate in response to the comments I made. I said that I had not heard senior citizens, not even people 50 and 55 years of age, say that they wanted this process of eroding security to begin. The hon. Minister of State for Privatization in response said: "They have said: 'We do not need it, so tax it back.'"

I do not think the government can take much more of that. I believe that it would need to recognize that its members are having a hard time articulating the problem that it is addressing with the clawback. You have one person on the government side saying: "What is given to you is only deserved if you have an income that is less than what it takes to live on". Another member, a member of the Cabinet, is saying that senior citizens are telling him: "We do not need it, so tax it back".

I think Canadians are extremely concerned. As my friend the House Leader for the New Democratic Party said, every time a sensitive issue comes up we are being told: "You cannot discuss it any more. We are going to put it through". I hope that Canadians understand that we are going to continue to fight for the rights, not only of senior citizens in this country, but for everyone who believes that Canada has developed a system second to none in this world. We are going to fight to protect it.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I rise today to express my great displeasure at this government's attempt once again to gag Parliament. I can certainly understand why the government would introduce such a closure motion today. It is because hon. members opposite have been checking with their constituents. They have been finding out that the longer this debates continues on this and other regressive measures that this government has introduced in this place the lower and lower the popularity of the Conservative Party falls.

• (1220)

This is an abuse of the rights of parliamentarians to a full debate on social policy changes that are taking place around us. This government is intent and hell-bent on making sure that that type of debate does not see the light of day.

I listened earlier when the Minister of Justice spoke. It is no wonder he had such a hard time keeping a straight face. He said that he was getting calls from our constituents. I do not think that he has received calls from any of my constituents telling him that they want this bill passed as quickly as possible. He says that the opposition parties have spent too much time, way too much time, holding it up at report stage. Either he has gone into a deep sleep or he has lost all sense of timing.

This particular measure, Bill C-28, has been debated at report stage for only one hour. It is one of the most major changes that we have seen in any bill before this place. Perhaps the only more significant change was with the free trade debate, and the government did the same as it has done today. When it has a piece of legislation that it does not want Canadians to listen to debate on, it invokes closure or time allocation. It did it then and it is trying to do it now.

On this particular piece of legislation it is important for Canadians to know that what members of this government are doing is ending universality of social programs through the back door. It is doing it in a bill called C-28. It is doing it with the clawback, the scratch back, the gouge and screw back. That is exactly what it is doing.

The Minister of Justice said earlier that the Liberals do not want the rich to be taxed. I hate to tell him this but since 1984 with the inflation rate the purchasing power of $50,000 is equal to about $33,000 in 1984. Not even that member opposite would have had the gall to get up in this House in 1984 and say that somebody who makes $33,000 a year is rich. I do not think he even has the gall to get up today to say that someone who makes $50,000 a year is rich. Let us look at how regressive this particular bill is. Then we will understand why they wanted to invoke time allocation again to kill the debate.

Let us take an example of two individuals who worked the same number of years in the workforce. Those two individuals made about the same amount of money. Both are heading for retirement. One of them made sure that they lived on as little as they possibly could. They did not take their trips to Florida. They did not move into a five--bedroom house when a three bedroom house would do. They did not spend money on Bingo or go to the horse races to bet at the track. They had a pretty tough life. What they did was put their money into investments so that when they retired they would reap the benefits of good fiscal planning.

Buddy next door said: "This is crazy. I could be dead tomorrow. So what I am going to do is have a heck of a time. I am going to Florida. I am going to spend every penny that I can possibly spend. I am going to go out boozing every night. I am going to go to the racetrack. I am going to drive the biggest car on the block. I am going to have one hell of a time". That is what he says.

He spends his disposable income. He does not invest. Then he turns 65. Under this legislation because he did not plan and because he had such a great life he is going to be allowed to keep his old age pension. The poor bugger next door who planned all his life and had a pretty meagre life will now find himself because of good planning getting his old age pension taxed back.

Surely to goodness there are no members opposite who are going to look at that particular scenario—and it is not a far-fetched scenario—and say that this is fairness, that this government policy wreaks of fairness. It wreaks of something, and it is not fairness.

The other thing that most Canadians and I have a lot of problem with in this legislation is the fact that this government has misled the Canadian public on its intentions on universality and its intentions to tax back old age security. Let us not forget—and I know members opposite would love to have this forgotten, which is why they are trying to put closure on this debate—that in 1984 the Prime Minister told everybody that the Conservative Party would never touch social programs, that they were a sacred trust. Then they came in and tried to deindex the old age security pensions. That is what they did. If it was not for a lady from Ottawa—Vanier who pointed her finger at him and said: "Good-bye Charlie Brown", we would have had the deindexing of the old age pension. You know: "Fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me".

In 1988 during the election campaign we had the Prime Minister—and this shows you, in my opinion anyway, the complete lack of faith in the Canadian electorate, and I guess perhaps the single-mindedness and the almost arrogance of this government—knowing full well that he had misled the seniors of Canada in 1984 during the election campaign using his mother as a prop. He took his mother out during the campaign and said:, "My mother is on old age security. Would I ever do anything that would harm my mother? I certainly would not do anything to harm her." He used his own mother as a prop. How low can you get? That is pretty low, Madam Speaker. I cannot think of anything lower, except the use of closure on the debate of this bill.

Mr. Gardiner: They are digging a well, that is how low they will go.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): My hon. friend over here says: "They are digging a well—" If the Canadian public had their way they would dump them in the well and they would fill the well in.

This particular debate that is not going to take place is a debate on our social programs. It is a debate on fairness. Let us not forget that up until 1971 the people of Canada who were working and paying income tax paid in to the old age security system. I think 1971 was the last year that it was still on the income tax forms. It was a special surtax of about 4 per cent. This was not a bit of welfare. It was the Canadian people saying through their government that they believed that those individuals who built this country and made it strong had the right, when they were looking at retirement planning, to expect something back from the government. They paid taxes all their lives. They built this country and made it strong. They paid into the fund and the least that they should expect is a few dollars a month coming back from the federal government when they go into retirement.

What this government has done with this bill is to ensure that those seniors who are making over $50,000 start to get their old age pensions taxed back. If that were not bad enough, what it has also done is to ensure, because there is not full indexing on that particular provision, that the older Canadians get the poorer they get. That is absolutely despicable.

I think the Leader of the Opposition back on May 9 in a question in the House put it very well. He talked about what effect the Consumer Price Index minus 3 per cent would have when the threshold would be reached in the future. What it means is that somebody who is going on retirement right now and perhaps making $35,000—and that is not a lot of money—as a result of good planning, by the time they are 75, just 10 years down the road, they are going to have some of their Old Age Security taxed back. It is not just that this bill is so unpalatable right today, it is the effect in the long term of making older Canadians poorer that this government will have to pay for.

I see that my time is nearly up. I wish to join with other members from my side at least who find this motion on time allocation to be absolutely inappropriate. It is nothing short of an attempt by members opposite to hide their latest dirty deed.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, this is not a timed speech so you may invoke closure at any time. We are all very used to that on this side of the House.

As to the definition of universality, we have had a difficult time in getting the government to define it for us. I have taken the opportunity to check in the dictionary. It means "of or belonging to or done by all persons or things in the world or in the class concerned applicable to all cases". The thesaurus goes on to say that universality means cosmic. It means global. It means infinite. It means pervasive. It means total. It means usual.

• (1230)

However, this government has rewritten not only the rules in the House of Commons—closure is a rule rather than an exception— it has begun to rewrite the dictionary and thesaurus.

It does not say that they will give it to you only to take it back. It does not say that if we take back 4 per cent it is still universality, or we recognize that in 10 years it will be 25 per cent. I am sure eventually it will be 100 per cent. That is universality in reverse.

I think that is what the government has planned for us. It is rewriting not only the rules of the House, not only the dictionary and the thesaurus, but it is rewriting social policy for the whole country.

Every once in a while we forget—and we get tired of mentioning it—the free trade agreement, but I think this is what it is all about. Universality is a watershed of social policy that this government is eroding, in fact decimating.

May I talk about the sad chronology of events of Bill C-28. I was to be the lead speaker for our party on Bill C-28. When I heard the speech of the Minister of State for Finance I was sitting here in great trepidation because I thought I was going to speak to the wrong bill. Not once did he mention the words "universality" or "clawback" in any of his very abbreviated speech. That gave me some trepidation that I was going to speak to the wrong bill. Lo and behold, that was a plan. No one in the government speaks about universality or clawback, and now we know why.

This bill has received very little fanfare. It is suggested that it is not a significant bill; let's push it through very quickly and keep its contents quiet. Member opposite are saying that the New Democrats are speaking for the rich. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The people for whom we are speaking are the entire population of the country. That is what they want to keep quiet. They just want to talk about the $50,000 for the seniors. Those are the only people. No one out there wants to suggest that we should not take it back. That is what they are saying but that is a lie. The whole thing has been a fallacy. The whole thing has been a scam.

We have spoken to universality. At least we have tried to, but this bill touches on many other things. It is an omnibus tax bill. It talks about transfers to provinces, regional development, and post-secondary education. However, because of the way the government has handled it, ramming it down everyone's throats, we have not been able to address most of the issues. We have zeroed in on universality. At least we have tried. The government's suggestion is: "Let's keep them in the dark. What they don't know won't upset them."

We presented to the committee a list of 20 possible witnesses. The government members said: "Let's take five or six. We will pick them. You don't. They will all come and say the same thing over and over again." I suggested at that time that government members did not want to hear what they have to say. They were mute and did not ask any questions of any of the witnesses who did appear. It is a story they did not want to hear. That is a sad evaluation of some of those people. The five or six who did come suggested 35 minutes for presentation and questions.

For the committee members on the government side it was a revolving door of individuals. Once in a while I do not mind being laughed at, but throughout the hearings there was a great deal of laughing: "Why are you concerned? Let's wrap this up for Christmas. Let's give the seniors and families of this country a Christmas present."

Some 120 government amendments were thrown out. They were heavier than the bill itself. It was suggested that they would come back with another bill in the new year and clean it all up. I suggest that that is not acceptable. Why this week? Why are we hurrying this up? Tomorrow is GST day, another bit of sad news from members of the government. They know that this claw-back will get lost in the GST, another cover-up of the whole thing. They have worked out a very sad stratagem. It is indeed a sad evaluation of the government.

The opposition is growing, but we know it is growing too late. Everybody is tied up with the Christmas shopping rush and they are preoccupied with Christmas spirit, but it is not in the spirit of Christmas that this government operates.

Bill C-28 is personified by Scrooge. They say: "Seniors, humbug. Families, humbug". We are not surprised by the government action. It is expected. We do not accept it, but we are powerless to do anything. Powerless now, but time is on our side. The seniors' time will come; the families' time will come; the Canadian people's time will come. The Canadian people will turf this government.

We shall not forget their callous attitudes and actions. They are changing the direction of this country. We are headed southward. History will recognize this bill for what it is. Unfortunately history will not unfold for quite a long period of time, but this government and its members will be judged very harshly.

Fie on this government for this bill, fie. If one does not understand what fie is, it is a euphemism for a curse or a plague upon this government for introducing this legislation. The Canadian people shall not forget.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Madam Speaker, I must say that I rise today with great difficulty to discuss Bill C-28 or, more important, the closure that comes with it. As a new member of Parliament I have a lot of difficulty, as do a lot of members, trying to figure out the procedures of the House. When we first came to the House we were told that this was one of the procedures that would not be used very often. I recall the discussion we had with the Whip who told us not to be too worried about closure, that it only happened once in a while.

All of a sudden I notice that closure takes place almost every day in the House. I am getting to know the rules quite well and understand the procedures, but I want to talk a bit about closure and about what this House is supposed to be for. I think it would be important in this debate for members opposite to pay a little attention so they could understand my reasons for thinking why they are here and why they were elected by their constituents.

I was elected to voice my opinion on behalf of the people of Kenora—Rainy River. When I return to the riding on weekends and when the House is not sitting, on a regular basis the people of Kenora—Rainy River give me their input on what is important to the country and what direction they want us to go.

One thing that really bothers me is the fact that on all bills that we have debated closure, in particular, nobody on the other side gets up to represent their constituents. I find that deplorable. It is one thing to vote with the government side because you are a member of the government; "Hold your nose", as they say, and "go ahead and do it".

It is difficult in our party system to vote against your own party. That is understandable. I think people can understand that, but they do not understand when people come to the House, sit here all day long—or in this case for an hour—and not rise once to defend the reason closure is in place, to defend the reason this particular amendment of Bill C-28 is taking place. If they agree with closure, then let us change the procedures of the House so that we only debate for an hour and, if that is acceptable to Canadians, then so be it. However if it is not, then we should stop using this particular procedure which was put on the books for purposes of emergencies.

This is not a great emergency. I do not see any seniors outside saying: "Hurry up and put this in place. I can hardly wait to have my hard earned funds taxed back and clawed back as quickly as I can, so get on with it!" I think that is something that the members opposite should pay close attention to.

• (1240)

The people back home are starting to pay closer attention to what the Conservative members are doing. One thing they must be asking themselves over and over again is: "Who is speaking for me? Who is speaking out? Why are they not saying what they think?" If they really believe that this is the way to go for the future, then by all means they should be standing up in their place and doing that.

Another thing that we should touch on is: What does closure really mean? You close the door, the window, or perhaps the lid on something that is open. Whether it be in the fridge or in the cupboard closure means basically that. You put a stop to something. The environmental aspects of closing a door is that you do not want the cold air to come in or, for that matter, they might not want the fresh air to come in.

What we are seeing here with members opposite is that they are putting closure in place because they do not want us as opposition members to use our abilities to speak in the House and to tell the people of Canada what is taking place. That is a very dangerous precedent. To continue doing that on a regular basis really undermines democracy and the ability to speak our minds whether or not they agree with it. Really, it does not make any difference whether they completely agree with my point of view. In this country I have the ability to speak for the people I represent.

Another thing I have noticed is that the government opposite does not like the members of the opposition, members of the Liberal Party in particular, to speak about the clawback. In essence, they believe that we do not know what we are talking about.

Today I have prepared some quotes we have heard over and over again to make members opposite more aware that aside from the seniors we are not the only ones who are saying it is not good. There are other people who have a common voice, a lot of exposure, and are well respected members of Canadian society speaking on this issue. I think the government should pay closer attention to that.

One Voice, the Canadian seniors network states: "History will remember the clawback as the end of universality, not for its drop in the deficit bucket".

Then there is Don McGillivray, our good friend from The Ottawa Citizen who states: "The policy pretends to continue universality, but in fact cancels it".

Then there is Hugh Winsor of The Globe and Mail of all places who states: "If, as Mr. Mulroney subsequently admitted, tampering in the indexation was wrong in 1985, attempting the same thing with the threshold levels is wrong in 1989".

Leonard Shifrin, in an article published in The Ottawa Citizen states that the finance minister "proceeded to undermine the universality of family allowances and old age pensions".

A report from the National Council of Welfare states: "A social program that delivers benefits to everyone and then collects them all back from some recipients is not universal".

We are not the only ones in Canada who are disappointed that what this government is doing through the back door in a sneaky way is moving away from universality. What it is doing is changing the way we look at ourselves. That is something that should be heavily debated, not something that should be just fed in there very quickly.

A perfect example is the discussion we have had in the House for the last months about VIA. There was no heavy debate on VIA. Therefore we still do not know what we are going to do with VIA Rail.

Do not make the same mistake as other governments have made by not discussing that particular issue. If they want to change the way that Canadians look at themselves, then change the way we as governments are either to give benefits to Canadians or take back benefits through the tax system. Let us stand up in our place and debate it. If Canadians accept that, then so be it.

One thing of utmost importance is how we as Canadians look after other Canadians. Is this to become a dog eat dog or an "I'm okay, Jack" type of country where if you are lucky enough, you get a good education, good employment and are able to save the amount of dollars required in this day and age to have a long retirement.

Senior citizens are having longer and longer retirements because there are early retirements and people are living longer now than they used to. We are really talking about our future seniors, not necessarily the seniors of today, because the level and the threshold will reduce themselves over time. It will not happen over night. People 20 years from now will be more adversely affected than those of today.

Members opposite keep using the argument: "Why are you protecting the rich, those who make $50,000 a year and over?" I say to them that we are not. We are talking about a fundamental change in direction in how we are looking after the people of Canada. If we are going to do that, we should do it a constructive way.

We should not have closure and one measly hour to debate something so fundamentally unacceptable to Canadians and something that we as opposition members will have to explain in our ridings time and time again in the future. That is very difficult when nobody on the government side wants to stand up and argue the point.

How do I go back and tell the people in my riding why the government is clawing back old age pensions if government members have not stood up and told me why. Therefore, I have to go back and say: "The Conservatives do not know anything. They have not got a clue where they are going, no agenda whatsoever". I suggest that there is no agenda because if they had an agenda they would not be afraid to stand up in their place and tell us why they are doing what they are doing.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to stand up in the House to participate in different debates. However, the one we are participating in today is one where this particular government has gone back on its promise. Let us look at the record.

In 1984 the Prime Minister was running to become the Prime Minister of this country. I guess this was probably the biggest mistake the country ever made. At that time he stated: "We will not deindex seniors' pensions. We will not even touch them, the sacred trust". What did his buddy sitting next to him, the Minister of Finance do? In 1985 he turned right around and said: "Seniors, we are going to stick it to you". They attempted deindexing, and the Prime Minister had to face some seniors in front of this House and say: "I would not do it to my mother". Then they tried to deindex seniors' pensions.

What they were not able to accomplish then, they seem to want to accomplish now. The government is preaching one thing and on the other hand tries to do another. It speaks of universality. However I do not think it knows what the word "universality" means. The government continuously preaches one thing and does another: "We are all going to be equal, yet if you make over a certain amount and you happen to be a friend, as we have seen, you will end up being better for it".

There are many examples where the government of the day has let its rich friends eat from the public trough. We could go through them, but the one I really want to touch on is the deal whereby CN Express was sold to Route Canada. It is a great example of how the friends of this government ate from the public trough. They sold CN Express for $29 million and then Route Canada turned around and went to the bank and borrowed $50 million. They walked away with $21 million clear. They will not open the papers yet so many jobs were lost at CN Express. Where does one go?

In 1988 the Prime Minister gave to this country what we should be calling a "Scrooge proposal". After the election, he again put forth closure. We were limited on the amount of time that we were able to debate the free trade legislation.

After one year, at Christmas 1989, what do we see? In Toronto only, 7,000 jobs were lost and the Prime Minister stands up and says: "We have created 1.4 million jobs." I wonder what kind of jobs, hamburger helpers at McDonald's?

• (1250)

In my riding alone, just south of my riding, the van plant of General Motors closed costing many of my constituents their jobs when 1,700 jobs were lost.

Now the government is proposing a goods and services tax. Small business is going to get hit over the head. The average Canadian is going to get hit over the head. Seniors will have to pay an extra 9 per cent for everything they buy. We are going to have the clawback taking it away from them because all their lives they were frugal. They spent all their lives earning and because they have something extra now we are going to take it away from them. That is not enough. We are going to turn around and we are going to hit them over the head with a 9 per cent sales tax.

The Prime Minister is practising one thing and saying another. I think that the meaning of Ebenezer Scrooge is going to have a new sense in the 1990s. Ebenezer Scrooge at least saw the light. I wonder how many ghosts our Prime Minister would need in order to see the light.

This government I believe is discriminating. Yes, it is discriminating against the seniors who worked so hard all of their lives. I was visited just last weekend in my constituency office by a delegation of seniors. They said to me: "We voted Conservative last time around. However, this time we are not going to vote Conservative. We do not even want to think Conservative; we do not even want to say the name of the Prime Minister". They strongly voiced their opinions to me.

I wonder what the Prime Minister's mother would be thinking today. Would she be proud or would she be sad? I think she should be sad.

We are going to give our seniors a Christmas present they will remember the rest of their lives. We are not only going to say to them: "I as your member of Parliament cannot voice your opinion. The democracy that we fought so hard for over the years is going down the tubes. If you make more than $50,000 we are going to claw back your pension". The government of the day states that it is going to stay at that level, but I reassure you, Madam Speaker, that in two years time it will go down to $45,000. A couple of years down the line it will go down to $40,000, and then to $30,000 and $25,000. Where is it going to stop? I wonder.

We have fundamental changes to what we call universality. We have taken the word "universality" and said: "If you make x amount of dollars we are not going to touch you, but if you make more than that we are going to hit you over the head". It is going to go lower and lower and lower. What we are doing is discriminating against the seniors of this country who worked so hard over their lifetime building what we have today, and as we and our children continue to get older that discrimination is going to continue.

I feel very saddened that this House is not let to debate this particular bill. This government time and time again does not do what it preaches. It brings closure on bills in order to steam roll them along. It seems that every Christmas history repeats itself: 1988 and 1989. I wonder what will happen in 1990. To whom are we going to stick it?

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on this particular motion today regarding Bill C-28, which is referred to as the clawback bill. A number of members in the House have raised their concerns about this very regressive legislation that is being introduced by this most incompetent government.

First I would like to mention a few points about what we are dealing with right now, this motion on time allocation and closure. What has the House dealt with when it comes to time allocation and closure? First, it is not the Conservative party any more; it is the closure party. That is what it is going to be known as from now on, because of the number of times the closure party has brought in time allocation and closure in the House.

Let us take a look at a bit of history. In 1969-1974, time allocation—not closure but time allocation, basically a form of closure—was used three times. The Liberals were in office then. As usual the Liberals say one thing on this side of the House and another thing on the other side.

In 1974-1979 there were 15 Liberal time allocation motions. In 1979 there was one time allocation motion. That was the only chance the Conservatives had during that time in office, I suppose, to move it.

In 1980-1984 the Liberals were running the country, and it was probably the worst time that the Liberals had to offer this country. They are still paying the price for that. During this time they brought in time allocation 20 times. To try to outdo the Liberal Party of Canada in its destruction of this country, we have the Conservative party making its best effort. What is its best effort? In 1984 to 1988, the Conservatives first term in government, time allocation was brought in 20 times.

The record is being broken in this House by the antics of the government opposite in the way it is ramming legislation through this House. We all remember the debate last year at this time around free trade. I did not even count how many times time allocation and closure was used then. I wonder if the members opposite can remember that or kept track.

An hon. Member: They are trying to forget.

Mr. Gardiner: They are trying to forget it, as my hon. friend says. You are darn right; that is what they are trying to do.

We know that in 1992, when they have the gumption or the courage to go to the polls again, it is not the Conservatives who will remember time allocation, closure or the clawback. It will be the Canadian people who will remember that.

This House came back in April 1989. Let us take a look at closure motions and time allocation motions since April alone. Closure has been used six times and time allocation has been used four times. The government has already reached 50 per cent of the goal it had in the four years of its first term of government and the last four years of the Liberal administration, and we are only through one year of Parliament.

Members opposite in the Conservative government should look closely at their record of ramming legislation through this House. The committee which deals with rules and procedures in the House of Commons should examine the use of time allocation and closure by the government. We should adopt some measures that ensure a return to this Parliament and this House of those rules of Parliament that we have stood by for so long and which are being trashed by the Conservative party. It is called democracy, and we ask government members to support our call for the return of democracy to the House of Commons.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq):

[Editor's Note: Member spoke in Inuktitut.]

[English]

Mr. Anawak: I rise on this occasion to state a few of my concerns with regard to this bill. One must realize that in terms of the clawback provisions certain areas of the country—and I would like to give special attention to the north—are not quite as well off as the rest of the country, particularly the Northwest Territories.

As far as old age pensioners are concerned, I would think that the government would want to reward old age pensioners who are enterprising enough to make in excess of $50,000 net.

• (1300)

However, the government now wants to tax anybody who makes in excess of that after that senior has accumulated that pension over the years. I cannot understand why anybody would want to tax the hard-earned savings by that person which have already been taxed.

It is difficult enough for anybody to make $50,000 in the north because the cost of living is about twice the average of the cost of living in the south. Why would the federal government want to tax a senior who makes over $50,000 in the north when that person's earnings are about half compared to what it costs to be able to live down here? For anybody making $50,000 up north, it would probably amount to $30,000. I remember my colleague said earlier that in 1984 $50,000 was equivalent to about $33,000. That figure would have been approximately $22,000 to $27,000 in the north.

If the Conservatives think that somebody who was making $25,000 is rich and are willing to tax somebody at $27,000, I would hate to see what they would do to tax somebody who is making $15,000 to $20,000 which is what most people are making in the north. They ought to do away with this bill because it is going to create hardships for those people who have, over the years, earned the right to their pension.

I would just like to add my voice to those who have already spoken ahead of me that this is not a fair treatment of our seniors who built this country over the last number of years. Thank you for giving me this opportunity to say a few words.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Madam Speaker, I feel compelled to take this opportunity to speak to the time allocation motion on Bill C–28, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

I feel compelled to speak because I feel that Bill C–28 to amend the Income Tax Act belies the real intent of the bill which has been spoken to by several of my colleagues, the intent to put an end to the theme of universality in social programs in this country.

Through the amendment to this act the government proposes to put an end to the universality of the Old Age Security program through the clawback of that program whereby, when instituted, seniors in higher income tax brackets will be repaying back to the government the total of the benefit that they receive.

The problem with this is that at this point in time it affects seniors at one income level, but because the clawback is not totally indexed in a very few years every senior will be paying back the totality of the Old Age Security income and, in fact, there will be no benefit to anybody in this country through this program.

The government proposes to do this in view of the serious national debt and the increasingly high deficits that we have on an annual basis in this country. The government uses a totally unacceptable moral ethic in the way it brings about changes to programs which are supposedly going to address our mounting and ever increasing deficits. It uses the lifeboat ethic, where it is seen that the most important problem is our debt and if we cannot afford to keep everybody on the Canadian life raft, we dump those at the bottom level.

In this instance, it disguises that fact by clawing back the Old Age Security from those seniors in the highest income bracket. It is a principle, and the clawback not only applies to Old Age Security but to family allowances as well, and will have in the future, and even today, a very sad impact on those in need in our country.

This government not only has an economic financial problem in terms of the national debt, but in my opinion, it has a more serious bankruptcy problem. It is bankrupt in terms of ideas and leadership in this country.

I do not think there is one member in this House who is not concerned about our national debt and would not be willing to sit and discuss ways and means of addressing it. I am very concerned. I have the sense that I am an elected member of Parliament here to warm a seat in this House and in various committees. We in this House and in committees have the opportunity and the privilege to listen to people who have very broad experiences and expertise. But this government proceeds with very drastic and dramatic changes, in this case to social policy, without any consultation with any of the elected members of this House.

For example, we have a tremendous change in passenger rail services in this country through Order in Council. Again, it is the lifeboat ethic. The government says it cannot afford to maintain the service so it will just throw off certain people. There is total neglect to the strategic need and the ultimate importance to certain people in this country of having services such as rail service. For some people in my riding it is a matter of life and death. They depend on that service for their health needs.

We are seeing here the erosion of the notion of universality. It is an erosion which will lead to its total elimination and yet there is a total bankruptcy in terms of this government's ideas for addressing the needs of those people who are dependent upon our social programs. Instead of providing for those most in need, as is the proposition from this government through effective programs, it simply eliminates all programs in the name of trying to address a national debt problem.

This government, I believe, has only two masters. One is the United States and the other is big business, overlooking totally the most important contribution of the middle and low–income people in this country, who, because of the national debt and through paying taxes, are paying interest to the high–income people in this country who can afford to invest in bonds. The masses of people in this country at the lower spectrum of income are those who are most hard–hit by this government, a government that does not have a conscience or a modicum of concern for them seen through consulting with the members of Parliament in this House who have been elected by the Canadian people.

• (1310)

I object totally to the time allocation motion made concerning this bill. I think that when you are bringing in a bill that has such a serious impact, which totally changes the nature of our social policy in this country, we must have a full debate and consultation among all members of this House. If it is this government's opinion that it is necessary to erode or do away with the idea of universality, we must replace it simultaneously with something that is going to address the needs of those most in need in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, this debate will not last more than two hours because of the government's motion for time allocation, which will limit debate to one day per stage, the debate on this very important bill, Bill C-28, which contains measures whose purpose is to claw back sums of money from Canadians Old Age Security Pensions, from people who were often counting on those amounts and who depended on the money to be able to plan for a well deserved retirement.

Madam Speaker, the government is once again using a measure to limit debate because it wants to tell Canadians as little as possible. The government wants to keep bills that are difficult to explain to itself. It wants to keep them from away as the public opinion as possible, and to do so, it uses measures like closure, which limits debate to one or two days on a very important subject, or time allocation, which is also in our Standing Orders, a measure that the government has used as well.

I asked the clerks in the House for some statistics. During the 33rd Parliament which ended with the 1988 election, the government used time allocation 20 times. Madam Speaker, this government decided to limit debate 20 times, and one wonders why Canadians have trouble understanding what this government wants to do! Because it doesn't want to explain. It doesn't want to. It limits the time for debate. It hides important details from Canadians, and Madam Speaker, if today Canadians are confused and cynical about this government's policies and objectives, it is the government's own fault.

As far as this session is concerned, since November 1988, the government has used closure ten times on ten different bills. Don't get me wrong. These are not your run of the mill bills. These are very important pieces of legislation. In this case, we have Bill C-28, a bill that, as you know, is a concerted attack on the elderly, aimed at recovering certain sums of money paid to Canadians for their old age security pensions. This bill proposes to attack these pensions, one more instance that belies the fact that the Prime Minister said that Old Age Security Pensions were a sacred trust.

[English]

I want to remind members of a statement made by the Prime Minister in Sydney, Nova Scotia during the last election campaign. He said:

> As long as I am Prime Minister, social programs, especially those for the elderly, will be improved not diminished.

This is the same Prime Minister whose government today is proposing a bill that attacks senior citizens, that attacks old age pensions and that attacks the rights of children because it will clawback some family allowances.

It, therefore, is an attack directly on Canadian families. It is an attack, no doubt, on the universality principle which has been with us for some years. As the members have been told before in this debate, the Prime Minister and his government said these were "sacred trusts". Well, they sure as heck did away with that commitment. There is nothing sacred any more as far as this government is concerned, social contract or no social contract.

I view this as a betrayal of the Prime Minister's promises. It is a betrayal of the Prime Minister's so-called "sacred trust". We take exception that these important pieces of legislation are being bullied through the House through time allocation or closure. The government will say to Canadians: "In the interest of balancing our books, in the interest of dealing with the deficit, we are indeed in a hurry to get the legislation dealing with old age pensions through, so we are going to use time allocation or closure".

This bill got first reading on June 20, 1989. It was called by the government, which brings forward whatever bills it pleases, on October 11, 17, 18 and November 20, 1989. Closure was put on second reading and the bill was sent to a committee. As of November 20, the House had spent 15 hours and 37 minutes in debate, discussing a bill which contains 48 amendments to social programs and which ends universality and penalizes Canadians.

I do not know how the Prime Minister and his Cabinet can continue to say they know what is right for Canadians, when Canadians across this country have been telling them: "We don't want you to meddle with pensions especially with the universality principle which to us is a very important principle".

I want to read something that was said by an important group of Canadians concerning the proposed measure to claw back some of the pension benefits. I quote an editorial from the Vancouver Sun: "As a political issue, the clawback is a sleeper because initially it will not affect many Canadians, and even those will not be seriously inconvenienced at first because the plan is to phase it in over a three-year period".

It goes on to explain that the government has sold the plan as a "high income taxpayers measure". I will not read the whole article, but it goes on to say that the real problem is the inflation which becomes, in the editorial's own words, "a two-edged sword against Old Age Security Pensions, cutting their value through the clawback as well as through increased consumer prices".

We would have loved on this side of the House to debate the importance of preserving the value of our senior Canadians' pensions that inflation reduces every year. This measurement will claw at their pensions. Today, $50,000 may sound like a big number but eventually with inflation this figure will soon affect a million Canadians whose entitlement to pensions will be reduced.

We would also love to discuss the impact on married seniors. There is a good article written by Leonard Shifrin in the Ottawa Citizen of December 14.

Mr. Shifrin makes the point that indeed women, particularly senior women, are getting a raw deal from this legislation.

When I was on the government side, I remember the Trudeau government facing the problem of seniors, especially female seniors who were found to be in need. They were not entitled to the CPP because the way in which the CPP was structured did not allow those people to receive a justifiable amount of money since they were not contributing to the plan. Therefore they depended upon Old Age Security. What did we do? We increased the Guaranteed Income Supplement to allow these people to at least get a reasonable income so that they could cope with day-to-day requirements.

I find it totally abhorrent that this government has more or less abandoned women, especially seniors. I happen to have many seniors in my riding, who deplore the fact that this government in the last five years has not increased the GIS. We would like to have a debate on that. Why is the government clawing back the old age pension upon which these people depend for their livelihood in the years to come?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being 1.21 p.m., I do now leave the Chair till two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1.21 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

TRADE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, to show Canadians that support for Canadian culture would be business as usual under free trade, this government promised prior to the last election that postal subsidies for Canadian magazines, newspapers and books would remain close to current levels for five years.

How times have changed. With the election over and free trade a fait accompli, the government has now caved in to American pressure and broken its promise not once, but twice. First, the Conservative budget slashed $45 million from postal subsidies and last week they cut another $64.5 million.

Do the Ministers of Finance and Communications not realize that publishers earn pre-tax profits of only 2 per cent and that is why for more than 100 years all governments, regardless of political stripe, have supported this subsidy? It gives all Canadians equal access to magazines, books and newspapers with a Canadian perspective, no matter where they live.

This Conservative government's slashing of a vital link between publishers and readers will affect 95 per cent of Canadians who read our magazines. Does this government not realize that Canadians like to read Maclean's, Equinox and Chatelaine? Where is the government's sense of Canadian cultural priorities? Is it in Newsweek?

* * *

[Translation]

MINES

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in Grevet, in my riding, a new mining camp is about to open. According to Mr. Christian Derosier of Exploration VSM, the one deposit is worth $700 million and exploration was financed by means of flow-through shares. A pre-feasibility study is now under way to assess various options for opening the mine between Miquelon and Chapais.

However, one of the concerns of people at VSM and SEREM is railway transportation. Representatives of both companies have attended public hearings and also emphasized the need for maintaining the Franquet-Chapais subdivision of Abitibi, which CN closed down without prior authorization or consultation.

Mr. Speaker, this is another underhanded manoeuvre by CN management. The people of Senneterre and Chapais and the people of Quebec are waiting for the National Transportation Agency's decision on CN's unwarranted application.

* * *

[English]

HOUSING

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, this government's goods and services tax will impact very heavily on the Canadian housing industry. The Canadian Home Builders Association estimates that the goods and services tax will increase the price of an average home, average being around $150,000 now, by at least $3,000. Most Canadians realize when we mortgage our homes, by the time we pay off that mortgage, the $3,000, that goods and services tax will be well above the $6,000 or $7,000 level.

The implications for the home building industry are evident. Not only will this tax put the Canadian dream of owning a home well beyond the reach of many Canadians, it will affect the very heart of the lumber industry in our country.

The lumber industry in British Columbia, Alberta, northern Ontario, Quebec and Atlantic Canada will be hard hit. Not only are we an export-based industry, but we rely very heavily on domestic consumption and the domestic market. In light of the 15 per cent export tax on the softwood lumber industry and the continuing appreciation of the Canadian dollar, the lumber industry in Canada cannot afford another set-back.

This government must realize that our single largest industry is in some difficulty. This industry should be helped and not hindered.

* * *

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, today is a national day of mourning instituted by the National Action Committee on the Status of Women to commemorate the death of the 14 young women in Montreal. All Canadians are encouraged to reflect on violence against women and, if possible, to make donations to rape crisis centres and to shelters for battered women.

On Saturday, a vigil was held in Vancouver for a foreign domestic worker who was continually raped by her employer. Foreign domestics are often the victims of violence and economic exploitation.

The National Organization of Immigrant and Visible Minority Women has recommended that the federal government work with its provincial counterparts to establish employment standards and to ensure that these standards are being implemented and enforced with sufficient resources.

It is imperative that domestic workers be given more protection. I hope the Minister of Employment and Immigration will attend to this serious issue, and not make it more difficult for domestic workers to receive landed status in Canada.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, 1990 will be a very busy year for Dow Chemical, located in my riding of Sarnia—Lambton, in the environmental area.

Last Friday Dow announced its Sarnia division vision. This policy statement affirms the company's commitment to work in a safe, healthy and environmentally responsive manner. Indeed, it complements a 10-year, $55 million spending history on ecology related projects at Dow's Sarnia division.

Financially, Dow announced a commitment of an additional $10 million toward some further 25 separate ecology projects in Sarnia. The key goal is to separate Dow's plants from direct contact with the St. Clair River, virtually eliminating the potential for spills and harmful discharges into the river.

I applaud those on-going efforts by Dow Chemical to achieve environmental excellence and fulfil a commitment to not adversely impact the environment. I strongly encourage other private sector interests as well as public sector organizations to demonstrate a similar commitment to our most valuable infinite resource, our environment.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, there is a crisis on Indian reserves in Manitoba. In the past year, four young children have perished in house fires, two on reserves located in my constituency. These tragedies are further compounded by the fact that in every one of these cases, a fire truck was available at the reserve but was not functioning due to one cause or another.

Steps must be taken to make sure that no more lives are lost. Bands should be encouraging their residents to inspect their homes at least once a year. It seems the Department of Indian Affairs cannot handle the problem. I call upon the Minister of Indian Affairs to enlist the help of outside independent professionals to do the job that it seems this department is unable to do.

* * *

FISHERIES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the federal Minister of Fisheries was quoted as saying on the weekend with regard to the east coast fishing industry: "Some of these guys are making over $100,000 a year. You sure wouldn't know it the way they sing the blues."

Did the minister really say this? Does the minister believe that? Is he not concerned with the 1,500 people who lost their jobs at National Sea last week? Is he not concerned about the potential lay-offs at Fishery Products International? Is he not concerned about the severe cuts in the total allowable catch in Atlantic Canada? Is he not concerned about the American lobster restrictions? Is he not concerned about the European quotas in our waters which are three times what Canada requested?

If the minister is not concerned about all of this, he is in the wrong job.

* * *

CANADA POST

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I informed this House about a Canada Post decision to close the McKernan postal outlet located in my riding before Christmas.

The corporation insisted that the outlet, located in Maurice Pharmacy, would be closed unless the pharmacy's new owner, Eugene Barabash, purchased a franchise at a cost of roughly $40,000, an impossible amount considering Mr. Barabash had just bought his new business.

Since then, Canada Post has proven that, like the Grinch, it too has a heart. After meeting extensively with Mr. Barabash, officials from the corporation have determined that the outlet which has served the community for 20 years will not close after all.

I would like to commend Canada Post for its response to the concern of area residents and for demonstrating sensitivity to the needs of its customers. I would also like to commend the residents of McKernan for uniting together to save the Maurice Pharmacy outlet. Their determination should be admired by us all. Merry Christmas, McKernan!

* * *

STUDENT LOANS

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, last Friday there was an announcement by the President of the Treasury Board to introduce an administrative fee of 3 per cent on any student loan application that will be processed next year.

• (1410)

Students in the 20th century continue to suffer with the additional costs this government so frequently finds necessary to pile on to the minimal budget with which students have to work. The combination of Treasury Board's student loan administration fees, the Finance Department's proposed GST and Consumer and Corporate Affairs copyright fees will leave some students in the position of not being privileged enough to attend post-secondary education institutions.

I believe our youth need to foster growth and maturation through higher education. If this government's extra fees preclude individuals from becoming involved in higher education, then yes, all these fees that are being tacked on by this government do hit the lower income groups, contrary to what the people of our country have been told.

This is going against the Canadian tradition if it affects Canadians in this way. I continue to question how it can be interpreted otherwise if only the rich can still afford a higher education.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, Richard Bilodeau, a Canadian resident of Coaticook, was released by the American authorities last Saturday on $100,000 bail.

Mr. Bilodeau has come home to his family and will be able to spend Christmas with his wife and children. This was made possible thanks to a tremendous movement of solidarity on the part of all Quebecers, the involvement of all levels of government—federal, provincial and municipal—and especially, thanks to the much appreciated help of the media which made their contribution towards dealing with this terrible injustice.

Mr. Speaker, this spirit of solidarity went beyond the province of Quebec and was felt across Canada and even in New Hampshire and other states in New England.

This proves that when we stand together, there are no obstacles we cannot overcome, and what was accomplished by this general support for Richard Bilodeau, Mr. Speaker, is reassuring when we think of our future safety on trips in the United States.

[English]

THE CENSUS

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am quite concerned about the content of the 1991 census. Officials representing the Canadian disabled community fear that the people they represent will be excluded from this census.

It is of paramount importance to the livelihood of the disabled community that they be included in this census. For the first time in 1986, four questions on the disabled were included. The information obtained by Statistics Canada from this census allowed for more complete and accurate data regarding employment equity. If questions about the disabled are excluded from the 1991 census, Statistics Canada will be unable to gather current information regarding the disabled community in Canada.

I want to inform the Minister of Employment and Immigration that we are indeed aware that the questions regarding the disabled may be left off the 1991 census. Inclusion, not exclusion, is what Canada's disabled community would like.

* * *

TRADE

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to pay tribute to a very successful project in my riding of Delta. Taking advantage of the balmiest climate in Canada and using waste wood as an energy source, Houwelling Nurseries are a true success story.

Starting in 1985 with six acres under glass, they now cover 15 acres and are currently shipping the last of their poinsettias, 62 per cent of which are shipped to the United States. They are currently planting English cucumbers, tomatoes and peppers which they will start harvesting at the end of January to be shipped as far east as Montreal and Pittsburgh and as far south as Los Angeles.

There is a vast market in Japan for their produce but the Japanese have not allowed the regular import of these choice Canadian products. I call on the Canadian government to assist this excellent company to open the doors to the Japanese market to bring greater prosperity to Canadians.

S. O. 31

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Yes, Virginia, there is a Santa. He is sitting right over there in the Minister of Finance's seat but he is known as Santa Clawsback.

This Santa claws back your old age pension. This Santa claws back family allowances for young families. This Santa claws back door-to-door postal delivery in rural post offices. This Santa claws back the national dream of Canadians of passenger rail service from coast to coast.

This Santa claws back decent, affordable child care. The Santa claws back programs to promote women's equality. This Santa claws back support for our regions, for those of us who live a distance from the money barons of Toronto and Montreal.

This Santa claws back support for students at universities. This Santa claws back support for health care in hospitals and medical research. This Santa claws back our social safety net. This Santa claws back protection from unemployment. Finally, this Santa claws back 9 per cent or 7 per cent or whatever he feels like from virtually every dollar spent by every Canadian.

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, a columnist in The Globe and Mail has recently pointedly summed up five years of Conservative government. "The Conservative government," says Michael Valpy, "is a statement such as we have not heard in this century. It is a statement of evaporating social compassion, of a government who favours the bottom line over people".

The Minister of Finance says that if he lowers the proposed GST rate, he will have to tighten the government's belt. What he really means is that while he and his colleagues continue to travel in luxury, more and more Canadians will be forced to brown-bag it. He says that there has to be a little give and take. Yes, taxpayers give, give and give and he takes.

The Prime Minister says that he needs the GST to reduce the debt. What he really means is that he needs a convenient excuse to severely reduce social programs like the clawback of the OAS, and in the process, closure, closure and more closure, because this government is not interested in hearing from Canadians.

The reality of five years of Conservative government is that today in metro Toronto, there are more food bank programs than there are the combined total of outlets of the three major burger chains. The reality is that the Prime Minister is demanding even more cuts in spending at the expense of his government's social programs.

* * *

"CHARTING CANADA'S FUTURE"

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, in April of 1986, the federal government initiated the review of demography and its implications for economic and social policy. The study was mandated to report on the changes in size, structure and distribution of the population of Canada between now and the year 2025.

On Thursday, December 14, the Minister of National Health and Welfare released the results of the study and presented the report to the standing committee. A total of 167 studies, prepared by over 200 Canadian scholars from across the country, culminated in this report. The projections for the future show what will happen if fertility, mortality and immigration levels remain at the current level. The Canadian population will peak at 31 million in the year 2026.

Contrary to popular belief, the baby boom did not cause the aging population. In fact, it delayed it. By the year 2026, between 20 per cent and 25 per cent of the population will be over 65 and approximately 10 per cent of the population will be over 75. Women in this latter age group will outnumber men two to one.

The research indicates that Canada is not facing an imminent population crisis, but that current demographic trends will produce such fundamental changes that the Canada of the 21st century will be significantly different from the Canada that shaped today's attitudes and policies. The implications for Canada in areas such as immigration, social policy, tax structure, health care and housing will all be impacted by these changes. I would urge all members of Parliament and Canadians to avail themselves of the information contained in Charting Canada's Future.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, during the last election, I said that the Conservatives would try to attack senior citizens' pensions and the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance called me a liar. I said that the east coast fishery would suffer as a result of the trade deal and again I was called a liar.

I said the dollar would go up and hurt our exports, and they called me a liar. I said interest rates would rise, and they called me a liar. I said the GST would cost billions of dollars more, and the Minister of Finance called me a liar and said it would not cost one single penny more to the taxpayers of Canada.

A year ago, the Minister of Finance said to us in this chamber: "Conservatives have spending commitments and we have sufficient money to handle those announcements". The Prime Minister said: "Every nickel has been accounted for".

Will the Prime Minister explain to the students of this country, the senior citizens, the public servants, and to Canadians generally, what he was talking about last year when he said he had enough money to handle our spending commitments? I ask the Prime Minister exactly who was lying during the last election?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows explicitly what I said in the speech when I was referring to the veracity of the things that he was saying, and they were not what he referred to in his remarks. So again, he is misleading people by what he is saying.

• (1420)

Clearly the fiscal position of the Government of Canada has been greatly affected by the change in interest rates. what was anticipated at the time of the election and also at the time of the last budget. To be precise, we were looking at interest costs of, I think, $33 billion. Instead, they have gone up to $39.5 billion. That has meant a significant change in the fiscal position of the government and it did require a number of the actions that we have taken.

The point that must be made here is that if you apply the increase in the debt of the country from 1984 to the present time and relate that to the interest costs on the debt that was in place at the time that we took over, you will find that it is almost exactly the same.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The fact is that this Minister of Finance, advising his Prime Minister, told the people of Canada during the last election that all the spending commitments were commitments for which there was money and that the sales tax that he contemplated would not cost one single cent more to Canadian taxpayers. That is what he said.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's statements are very revealing. Last week, when he was campaigning for the Tory candidate in the Chambly by-election, the Prime Minister of Canada repeatedly told voters how much money the government had spent in their riding. He was practicallly saying: Vote for the Conservatives and money will come pouring into the riding. However, as soon as he left, he started talking about the need to cut spending. Why is the Prime Minister prepared to spend taxpayers' money on winning a by-election, when he reduces appropriations for students, the elderly, food assistance organizations and regional development?

Does he think he can buy a by-election in Chambly like he bought the Environment Minister's seat in Lac-Saint-Jean?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition will leave this House with very little ceremony if he maintains the tenor of his questions. He ought to know that, contrary to what he said, in Chambly I never made single reference of the kind the Leader of the Opposition is putting into my mouth. I did refer to economic expansion in the Montreal area, which is occurring thanks to this government's intervention in industries such as the automobile industry, petrochemicals, aerospace and pharmaceuticals, while the Liberals in the Senate and here in the House were effectively smothering Bill C-22. I mentioned, quite appropriately, what the federal government, together with the Quebec government, has done to stimulate the economy in the greater Montreal area including, of course, the town of Beloeil.

Now if the Leader of the Opposition is against economic recovery in Montreal, if he is against intervention by the federal government in high-tech industries in the Montreal area, including the riding of Chambly, let him come out and say so, instead of applauding this in Beloeil and speaking out against it in the House.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I dare him to say anywhere else what he says in Chambly, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

Interest rates in Canada are too high. The spread between Canadian and American interest rates is at an almost historic high. The government's tax policy is in a mess. Instead of scrapping the GST, it is now trying to perpetrate some phoney changes on us.

The fiscal policy is a mess. They make all kinds of special promises during the election and then they break every one of those promises. The trade deal is a mess and we are now moving into a trade deficit.

What is the Prime Minister going to do to avoid a recession in this country? Does he think that the deceitful promises he used during the last election are going to work this time to salvage the Canadian economy?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I will tell you what we will not do. We will not follow policies like those followed by the Liberals when the Leader of the Opposition was the Minister of Finance and gave rise to the deficit and the recession that this country began to go through. He is responsible for it.

Program spending in Ottawa increased by 20 per cent a year when the right hon. gentleman was the Minister of Finance. Program spending has been held to 3.5 per cent by this government as opposed to the 20 per cent under the Leader of the Opposition.

Last week, a leading columnist in The Globe and Mail said that the period from 1975 to 1984, led by the former Prime Minister and his ministers was the period that devastated the economy of Canada. He was right. The policies of this government are making the economy stronger and more competitive and we will pursue them because they do not involve printing money and bringing on inflation and dragging up unemployment. They involve getting Canada ready for the next century in a very confident and modern economy.

[Translation]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Everybody agrees that the goods and services tax is more bad news for the Canadian economy. Small businesses are already struggling under the burden of interest rates that are too high, while at the present time, consumer spending is going down.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Finance whether he agrees that his proposed goods and services tax will bring Canada into a recession. Will he now listen to people across this country who are asking, who are begging him to withdraw his proposal for a goods and services tax?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have listened very carefully to the consultations that we have had as a government and that the finance committee has had in the course of its hearings across the country. We have listened carefully to what Canadians have had to say. I will be reporting to the House on that tomorrow, as I indicated last week.

I say again to the hon. member that he would have more credibility as a spokesman for his party if he would come up with some alternatives rather than saying scrap this, scrap that. That is no way to deal with the problems that we are facing today.

The members of the Liberal Party are walking away from the problems of taxation, the problems of high inflation and saying you can't do this, you can't do that, but they have not got a brain in their heads to propose another alternative policy.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, two quick proposals would be to reduce the interest rates and try to reduce the value of the Canadian dollar. That would do more than anything else to help exports and business in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Young (Gloucester): That would be a nice start, Mr. Prime Minister, to reduce interest rates.

The Minister of Finance has said consistently that he would not change his position on the goods and services tax. The Prime Minister defended the Minister of Finance saying that the proposal would stand as it was presented.

Since it was to be revenue neutral, visible, and have provincial co-operation, the proposal that the Minister of Finance has presented to this point and undoubtedly will continue to put forward tomorrow has none of those components in it, will he not understand that the only appropriate thing to do at this time is to withdraw his proposal, reduce interest rates in this country, make sure that exports are protected and try to get it right?

• (1430)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member. He says: "Get interest rates down". This is not Santa Claus. This is not Christmas Eve and this is not just a question of saying: "Let's have lower interest rates".

I ask the hon. member to consider how he is going to get lower interest rates. We have seen bank loans growing at 11.5 per cent. To get interest rates down the hon. member would start printing money, which means that bank credit would be increasing at 12, 13, 14, or 15 per cent with an economy that is growing at around 7 per cent.

How is that going to address the problem of inflation? It is going to feed inflation, it is going to feed higher interest rates, it is going to feed the very problems that he is concerned about today. All he is saying is deal with the symptoms of the problem and ignore the cause.

We on this side of the House understand the causes and we are dealing with the causes of that problem, not just fluttering about saying: "Do this, do that" about the symptoms, which he knows will do absolutely nothing to solve the problems we are facing today.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance as well. The minister said in this House on Friday that he fully supports the high interest rate policy of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. Also on Friday the chief economist from the Bank of Montreal said that Governor Crow wants to deliberately weaken the economy to prepare for the introduction of the GST.

Some hon. Members: Oh come on.

Mr. Nystrom: Those are the words of the chief economist of the Bank of Montreal.

Is it government policy to deliberately create slack in the economy in order to create unemployment so that workers will be scared to push for wages to compensate for the rise in the cost of living when the GST comes in? Is that the policy of the government? Was the chief economist of the Bank of Montreal right when he said this is happening?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say right off the top that I completely reject that machiavellian interpretation of the policy of the government.

The hon. member knows exactly why we are following the policies that we are, and that is because we have some very real concerns about the level of inflation. I ask the hon. member to reflect on the impact of inflation on senior citizens, on people who are on fixed incomes, on people who are in low income brackets. These are the people whom we are concerned about when we follow the policies that we are following today.

If the hon. member wants to ignore those policies, again I ask him to think back to 1981–82 when there was that sense of despair in the country, when people were saying: "We are going to have a 12 or 13 per cent inflation rate for a long time to come". With that came the high interest rates. Think back to that time and reflect on whether or not the policies that we are following are the right ones because we are doing everything we can through the policies that we are following to avoid that happening again.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, thinking back to 1982, the Prime Minister at the time, Mr. Trudeau, said: "It is still possible to scare the hell out of people by creating more unemployment". What I really want to know from this Minister of Finance is whether or not he is following a similar policy.

We now have about the highest interest rate in the industrialized world, a rate that is about 400 basis points higher than in the United States. We have rising unemployment and we have the first monthly merchandise trade deficit in some thirteen and a half years.

How much more of a decline in the economy is the Minister of Finance going to accept before he has a heart-to-heart talk with John Crow and demands he bring down the interest rates? Has he, for example, ever thought of firing John Crow, giving him a pink slip?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly never going to defend the policies of Pierre Elliott Trudeau, so don't ask me to do that.

Here we have a question comparable to the last one asked by the Liberals, possibly with a little more attention to what might come up on the evening clip on television tonight. The answer is the same. The NDP are saying: "Please Santa, give me some lower interest rates". You cannot just wish these. You cannot just wish lower interest rates, you have to follow some policy direction to get them.

The policy direction that I have heard from the NDP and from the Liberals is print money and that will raise interest rates a few months down the road, although there may be a short-term drop. That is not the right way to cure inflation.

That is exactly what happened in the 1970s under the policies initiated by my friend across the way. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce was there at the time as well. They started printing money. They took the inflation rate from 5.5 per cent up to 13 per cent. They took the unemployment rate from about 7 per cent up to 13 per cent and they took interest rates from about 10 per cent up to 24 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Finance wants to know how to bring down the bank rate, all he has to do is ask the chairman of the finance committee. He will tell him how to do it, and so did the finance committee last June.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance about the unemployment rate. We now have an unemployment rate of some 7 per cent in this country. About 1 million people are unemployed. What unemployment rate is the Minister of Finance going to tolerate before he changes monetary policy in this country? Is it 8 per cent or is it 9 per cent, because at 9 per cent another 250,000 people will be unemployed.

What is the bottom line? What unemployment rate will he tolerate before he instructs the Governor to roll back that bank rate? People in this country really want to know.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member is very well aware of the performance in this country on employment. We have seen 1.5 million jobs created. We have seen unemployment come down in every province, except for one, Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Gauthier: Oh, come on.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member across the way says: "Oh, come on". Those are the facts. I know the hon. member does not like to face the facts. He does not want to listen to what has happened over the course of the last five years, partly as a result of the policies this government has followed.

Mr. Gauthier: Go ahead, I'm listening. Just don't mislead.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Again, we go right back to the source of the problem, and that is inflation. If the hon. member would stand up and tell me how he feels we should get inflation down, I would be quite happy to listen to that. For the last year and a half members from the New Democratic Party have been saying: "Forget about inflation. You can't have interest rates go up. Forget about inflation". When we see that those pressures are still there today we know that if we had forgotten about inflation we would have a rip-roaring inflation problem now, and that is what we are trying to avoid.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When the minister took office in 1984 he inherited a $20 billion trade surplus. In the last eight years he has managed to produce the first month-over-month trade deficit. There are some economists who are suggesting that over the next year our trade deficit could go as high as $20 billion.

What plan of action does the minister have to avert this economic disaster?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there are some pressures in the economy. That is clear. The hon. member is falling into the same trap as his colleague who sits behind him. He is dealing with the symptoms of the problem and not dealing with the cause of the problem. I would appreciate if the hon. member would stand up and tell me what he thinks we should be doing about inflation, how we should be getting the inflation problem under greater control, because it is the inflation problem that is causing the things to which he has referred.

At the heart of this is the difficult fiscal problem that we inherited in 1984, which he very conveniently avoided mentioning, and that is a deficit that was close to $38.3 billion which we have brought down year by year with a very great deal of difficulty, and we are committed to getting it down further. That is one of the difficult causes of the inflation problem that we have today.

Mr. Mills: My supplementary question is for the same minister, Mr. Speaker. It really frustrates me that he cannot take responsibility for his own actions. The fact of the matter is that in the last four months our inflation rate was around 2.7 per cent on average. I would just like to know at what point in time he would react to inflation.

• (1440)

The Governor of the Bank of Canada is not responsible for managing the economy of this country; the Minister of Finance is responsible. At what time will the Minister of Finance assume his responsibilities? At what point in time will he ask the Governor of the Bank of Canada to act? Will it be when there is 100,000 jobs lost, 200,000? At what level of human misery will the minister act?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has said that I am not prepared to accept my responsibilities. I am quite prepared to accept, and I accept those responsibilities day by day, every day that I am in this job.

The hon. member again is playing kind of loose with those numbers. If he takes notice he will see that the inflation rate increased last month, not decreased. These are the pressures that are still there in the economy. I say to him again if he is going to have credibility as a spokesman for his party stand up and talk about the cause of the problem, and that is inflation.

Some hon. Members: It's you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): How is the government going to deal with the problem of inflation today? If he has any ideas on that I will be happy to listen to them, but don't just talk about the symptoms because, as he knows, dealing with the symptoms of the problem is exactly what got us into the mess we inherited in 1984. That government, for years and years, dealt with just the symptoms of the problem and did not get down to dealing with the causes.

* * *

[Translation]

ATLANTIC FISHERIES INDUSTRY

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The entire fisheries industry in the Atlantic Region is in a slump, and this applies to Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Eastern Quebec and New Brunswick. Our economic base is crumbling.

Last week the Prime Minister told us here in the House that generous, comprehensive programs similar to those created to help Western farmers would be put into place for the Atlantic fisheries. We have now heard about these programs several times but we have yet to see the colour of them. Could the Prime Minister explain to Canadians this afternoon what he means by comprehensive and generous programs?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman may not be paying all that much attention, but a week ago today, I believe it was, the government announced the measures it was taking with reference to the immediate consequences of certain plant closures that have occurred in Atlantic Canada, or that may occur in the next several months.

Included among the measures to be taken was the formation of a community diversification fund to help the people in the communities affected, to try to diversify their economy to assist those communities. Improved programs were announced in order to help the individuals who might be affected, including the application in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia of the program for older worker adjustment which applies to those who are over the age of 54. If they cannot be retrained or find other work they will be assisted until they are 65. It was announced that there would be a supplement to that program for workers in this industry who are over 50 and find themselves in that position, because the workers in this industry are not entitled to pensions and because in some cases they are not even receiving a separation allowance.

Steps have already been announced and taken and, as the Prime Minister has indicated, longer term plans are being developed with the province of Newfoundland in particular to deal with the long-term consequences of the fact that the fishery is now trying to sustain many more people than can be sustained at an economic or living wage from the fishery, and that problem has to be tackled as well. It was not tackled in the past. It is going to be tackled now under the leadership of the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is true what he meant by comprehensive and generous programs.

[English]

Is the Prime Minister ready to commit his government before Christmas, right here, today, to a $1 billion program like the programs that are used to aid the western farmers? Is he ready to do that today? Is the Prime Minister ready to put his money where his mouth is?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated on behalf of the government and on behalf of the people of Canada that we would be assisting the Atlantic fishery and the communities affected by problems in the Atlantic fishery as vigorously as we intervened on behalf of the prairie farmers. I have already indicated that very publicly. I do not know why the hon. member is quarrelsome in regard to his question.

I know of the hon. member's sincere interest in this. As a result of this I would ask him, on behalf of those in the Atlantic fishery who are badly affected, to speak to his Liberal colleagues in the Senate to make sure that they pass the unemployment insurance bill because that will give fisheries workers benefits at 10 weeks rather than 14 weeks.

Mr. Robichaud: Let's hear a number then.

Mr. Mulroney: Atlantic families are today being penalized by Liberal senators, and I ask for your help to get this thing back on the rails so that Atlantic Canadians can benefit from UIC.

EDUCATION

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. Recently the Prime Minister pledged to make education the highest priority of his government. He promised all young Canadians a world-class education.

Now the government is imposing user fees on student loans and adding hundreds of dollars to debts of already overburdened students. The government keeps telling us it does not like debt. Why is the government forcing students into more debt?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Student Loan Program is a very important program that will help some 220,000 students in need this particular year.

The government will be guaranteeing student loans worth some $600 million this year and will be spending $431 million on student assistance. That is double the amount that was spent five years ago. We are very cognizant of what has to be done. We certainly want to do all we can to be helpful. The small administration fee that is being asked is intended to help offset some of the cost of the defaults which are now running very high.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, students all over the country are finding it difficult to get to university because they do not have enough money and have difficulty paying back the loans when they do get there.

My supplementary question is also to the Secretary of State. The government is also privatizing the student loan program. It is doing what its business friends have told it to do, privatize education. Canadians want to know whether, under this government, the qualification for university admission is to be high marks or high income.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of benefits that students receive, including the loan guarantee. There is an interest subsidy. There are favourable interest rates and an easy repayment schedule. We are trying to increase the efficiency of the program. We would like to encourage responsible borrowing and we want to deter the default payments.

There is every reason to target some funding, for example, to the disabled, to the really disadvantaged, and to women. We are going to be examining the program, as we have very recently. We are going to be doing a very full review to see how the program can better respond to the changing needs of the community.

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

In Quebec, all corporations have to pay tax annually on their capital. However, Quebec's income tax legislation provides an exemption for mining companies that have not yet reached the production stage.

Bill C-28 does not contain the same exemption. It taxes all companies with capital in excess of 10 million, like Ressources Yorbeau in Rouyn-Noranda.

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: Will Bill C-28 provide the same treatment, and if not, will he consider a change in the legislation for mining companies that are not in production?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the concern that the hon. member has indicated on this particular tax, the large corporations tax. It was a tax which was brought in to ensure that all corporations with capital over $10 million, which amounts to 3,500 or 3,600 corporations in Canada, would pay at least a nominal amount of tax and that amount varies with the size of the corporation.

The hon. member has expressed interest in a variation on this. I would be happy to look at the proposal and get back to him.

* * *

• (1450)

AGRICULTURE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture recently released farm income figures showing that as a result of government policy farm income will drop by 39 per cent in 1990. This includes an incredible 101 per cent drop in Saskatchewan and 87 per cent in Manitoba. Now the minister's office has told the Globe and Mail that program expenditures will drop 64 per cent in 1990. The farmers of Canada cannot accept these massive cuts.

What plans does the government have to ensure a fair return for the producer rather than encouraging the vicious winner-take-all battle that this government has forced upon the agricultural industry and the food processors of Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question would have certainly expressed the urgency of the matter if he had not tried to preface it on the basis that the decline in farm income projected is as a result of government policy. He knows that and he should not mislead the House in that regard because the Government of Canada has been very generous in supporting farmers all across Canada, whether it is western Canada, eastern Canada or central Canada. The hon. member knows that very well.

As a matter of fact, that resulted in large part in the average income of the farming community in Canada being raised from an average of $3.1 billion during the time when his party was in office to over $4 billion during the period of time that we were in office. That is a 30 per cent increase. That hardly demonstrates that this government has not been there in support of the agricultural community. Some $21.7 billion, to be exact, has been spent since this government took office.

What is the government going to do about it? We have put in place a process for the examination of new policy alternatives which is clearly needed to overhaul the crop insurance program, the safety net program and stabilization programs which have been put to the supreme test. I ask the hon. member, rather than carping from the sidelines, to get involved in this process. Bring forth your ideas and I am sure that they will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Ferguson: The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that the price for grains has dropped dramatically since the government took office.

If this minister is unable to recognize the impact of his own figures, a look at what is happening in the food processing industry will allow him to see the writing on the wall. Three more food processing plants announced closings this month: Cobi Foods, St. Lawrence Starch and Gerber Baby Foods. Five hundred more jobs are lost. Twenty-two processing plants have closed across the country this last year with 3,071 jobs lost, and that in addition to what is being lost in the fish processing industry.

Given the disastrous effects of the free trade agreement on agriculture in Canada and on the food processing industry, will the minister call upon his government to invoke the six month cancellation clause of the free trade agreement, or will he just continue to bluster and evade the issue that Canada's food production and processing industry is in serious trouble?

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, Mr. Speaker, every sparrow that falls will be blamed upon the free trade agreement.

An hon. Member: What a turkey.

Mr. Mazankowski: When it comes to turkeys, the hon. member knows who they are because they are all surrounding him, and as Christmas grows near they get fatter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could conclude his answer.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I find it rather ironic that the questioner who preceded the member for Lambton—Middlesex sort of suggested that we were too generous to the agricultural community and this gentleman now is indicating that we are not generous enough.

He knows as well as anyone else in this House should know that the price of grain is established in the international market-place and Canadian grain is largely exported and it must be competitive to meet competition. The Hon. Member should know that.

He talks about the processing industry. As I have said in the House before, the processing industry has had a very good year. Investments are up by some 15 per cent. Investment is up by 40 per cent in the bakery industry, 21 per cent in biscuit manufacturing and 73 per cent in meat processing.

He wants to talk about what is happening because of free trade. Pilsbury, Canada Packers, General Foods, J.M. Schneider, M.L.M. Flour Products and C.S.T. are all expanding because of free trade.

* * *

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it has been eight long months since this government asked for the closure of CFB Summerside. Since that time the economy of Prince County and indeed the economy of Prince Edward Island has suffered severely, as the Minister of Finance has already indicated.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister. Now that the Prime Minister and his cabinet have had eight months to respond to their commitment of a significant federal presence to replace CFB Summerside, is he prepared to make that announcement today following his meeting with Premier Joe Ghiz?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Just say yes.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Liberals ask a question and yet they refuse to let anybody answer. That is the problem with the Liberals.

I will be meeting with Premier Ghiz this afternoon and any matters that have to be announced will be announced then or at an appropriate time in the future.

Mr. McGuire: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that the Atlantic fisheries is in a state of crisis and the fact that the elimination of the 880 Squadron will only make that crisis worse as 50 per cent of our air surveillance will be eliminated with the elimination of the tracker squadron, will the minister offer some support to her beleaguered colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, and order a full reinstatement of the 880 Tracker Squadron or at least a partial reprieve because service to the Atlantic fishery is needed now more than ever? Will the minister do her part toward solving this crisis?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the hon. member is aware that the Department of National Defence will, of course, continue to provide services through Aurora aircraft and the newly purchased Arcturus aircraft when they come on board.

I am sure he is also aware that in October of this year the cabinet approved additional funding for the Department of Fisheries of some $28 million to provide for fisheries patrol surveillance and that should more than meet their needs. In fact it is substantially more than what had been provided by our department previously.

* * *

HEALTH

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. To date approximately 2,000 Canadians have died of AIDS and another 3,300 have contracted this deadly disease. In spite of all the efforts of our best doctors and scientists we have not found a cure. The best thing we can do is help prevent it. In this regard the government on December 1 presented an excellent video on AIDS.

Does the Department intend to issue any more of these informational videos?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in addition to the video Live which we released on World AIDS Day, December 1, we have a further video about AIDS which we are currently negotiating with the CBC for airing on the national network.

We have already shown the video to a number of community health people and educators have been very supportive of it. We are currently preparing materials for use in classrooms to go along with the release of the video.

* * *

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. He will be aware that during the Canada-U.S. negotiations on the free trade deal there was great pressure by the Americans on our cultural industries, including postal subsidies to keep Canadian magazines afloat. The previous minister, Flora MacDonald, proudly told this House that she had won the battle and she was going to keep the subsidies on for at least five years.

Last week the minister cut those subsidies. On what basis was Canadian culture chosen as a cutback and was this, in fact, just a guise? In fact, it was a concession as a result of the free trade deal under the guise of a budgetary cutback.

• (1500)

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the government's decision in this area has nothing to do with the free trade agreement.

We are trying to develop a program that meets Canadian cultural objectives in the book and magazine publishing industries, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Waddell: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has spoken eloquently in the House about the five million people who are illiterate in the country. He has turned around and put a tax on books and has now removed the subsidies to Canadian magazines.

What are the priorities of the government, given in the last week that the principal victims—not the cafeterias or the dining rooms—or the real victims of the cut-backs were students and the Canadian cultural industry? Where are the priorities of the government?

[Translation]

Mr. Masse: Mr. Speaker, the government's priority in this respect is to ensure that our cultural industries are viable and that communication between the Canadian creative artist and the Canadian consumer is effective, and that is what is foremost in our minds.

[English]

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board.

The National Capital Commission's budget has been chopped by $24 million over the next three years. This comes after a $5 million cut in last April's budget.

By reducing the NCC's budget by 25 per cent, by forcing the NCC to sell off federal properties, by leaving the NCC competing for money in the private sector, and with the potential for staff lay-offs in the future, is the government really committed to the concept of the NCC playing a pro-active role on behalf of the entire nation? If not, why not? If it is, when is it going to prove it?

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, the National Capital Commission plays a very important role in the life of the community of Ottawa, being the nation's capital. With a budget of in excess of $96 million a year, I think any other city in the country would also be pleased to have such a forthright and progressive institution.

The fact that the cut-backs happen to be with regard to the residences of the Prime Minister and Rideau Hall do not affect the ongoing programming the NCC is carrying out.

Mrs. Gaffney: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Minister for Supply and Services does not support the National Capital Commission.

In 1986 cabinet approved an expanded mandate for the National Capital Commission with the key objective of, and I quote, "making the capital more representative of Canada and ensuring that it is perceived as such by all Canadians".

If this government is really committed to the National Capital Commission, why is the minister making it impossible for it to carry out its mandate? How can the minister seriously expect the NCC to maintain a nation's capital of which all Canadians can be proud?

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand. We are very much in support of the NCC and think that the chairman has been doing an excellent job.

However, it is obvious that the Liberals would sooner have a new roof on the Prime Minister's residence than get on with the new programming and the work carried out by the NCC.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

CONTENT OF BROCHURES—PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I have two questions of privilege to deal with.

On November 20, 1989 the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands raised a question of privilege related to certain pamphlets on the goods and services tax which a constituent of his had informed him were being distributed in a local grocery chain outlet.

In view of the Chair's ruling on October 10, 1989, the hon. member questioned the propriety of the distribution of the pamphlets. He suggested that this constituted a contempt of the House, pointing out that in the text of the pamphlets the presumption that the GST will be law by January 1991 is everywhere asserted with none of the appropriate references to the legislative process through which the GST must pass.

[Translation]

Later that day, the Minister of Finance rose on a point of order to explain that the pamphlete in question were part of the initial information package prepared by the Department last summer and distributed last August. The Minister assured the House that the distribution contracts for the dissemination of that material had been completed by October and that, subsequent to the Chair's ruling on the advertisements for the GST, steps had been taken to have all offending materials returned to the department.

[English]

The hon. member for Windsor West intervened to question whether the disputed material was still being distributed.

[Translation]

The Chair undertook to look further into the matter. I have now carefully considered the issue raised by the Honourable Member for Kingston and the Islands and the remarks made by the Honourable Minister of Finance. It appears that the point at issue is the timing of the removal of the pamphlets from public distribution.

[English]

The Chair is satisfied that the material in question was part of the summer advertising campaign and that given the intricacies of the nation-wide distribution of such material some time delays may have occurred in recovering material from that campaign. The minister has assured the House that the department had taken appropriate steps to have the material returned to it and has asked, in light of the complaint raised by the hon.

member for Kingston and the Islands, if members would bring such aberrant cases to his attention so that corrective action may be taken where required.

In light of this information the Chair is satisfied that the hon. member's complaint has been fairly and expeditiously dealt with and considers the matter settled. If hon. members have further information to bring to the Chair, the Chair of course will hear further applications.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS AND GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the question of privilege raised on Friday, October 20 by the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell regarding proceedings in the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations the previous day. The hon. member had made the case that he had been convened to a meeting of the committee to discuss the specific subject matter, that during the course of the meeting a motion was moved relating to an entirely different subject, and that this constituted a breach of his privileges as a member.

He further argued that the committee notice of meeting is equivalent to the Order Paper of the House and that if a single item of business appears on the committee notice of meeting then only that item can be dealt with by the committee.

[Translation]

I have carefully considered the argument of the hon. member and the excellent points made by hon. members on both sides of the question. The Chair finds itself in some difficulty in addressing the specifics of the case made by the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. According to our traditions and practices, the Chair ought not to intervene with the proceedings of a committee unless a problem has been reported by the committee to the House or in extremely unusual circumstances. It is also clear that disputes arising from committee meetings ought to be dealt with in that committee and not raised on the floor of the House.I will therefore not comment on the specific incident in the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Chair is pleased, however, to comment on the larger questions which arose during the discussion of the hon. member's grievance, which relates to committees dealing with business other than that listed on the green sheet announcing the date, time and place of the meeting.

[English]

Although Standing Order 116 states in part that "in a standing, special or legislative committee, the Standing Orders shall apply so far as may be applicable," it is nonetheless a long-standing convention that notice is not required for any motion in committee.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition in Citation 571 reminds us that flexibility is the watchword in committee deliberations when it states:

> Proceedings in the committees are more relaxed in nature than those in the House as the requirements which must be observed in the chamber are not so strictly enforced when members sit in committee.

This difference in practices between the House and its committees is nowhere more evident than when dealing with motions in amendment to the clauses of a bill. Motions to amend a bill in committee require no notice whatsoever. In the House, on the other hand, the Standing Orders specifically require that 24-hour written notice be given for motions in amendment at report stage of a bill.

[Translation]

This being the case, and while some members may feel that it causes inconvenience and creates difficulties for the orderly pursuit of a committee's agenda, the Chair must rule that there is no procedural impediment to a committee's dealing with any matter within its mandate at any meeting of that committee regardless of the stated purpose or purposes of a particular meeting.

• (1510)

[English]

The Chair must also inform hon. members that it has been unable to find any procedural authority to support the position of the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and other hon. members that the committee notice of meeting constitutes an Order Paper for the committee.

Should the House in its wisdom wish to alter this long-standing practice it can certainly do so, and there are several avenues open to achieve this end.

[Translation]

I thank the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for raising this most interesting issue.

[English]

I hope that this judgment has helped to clarify the matter for all hon. members.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period and in response to a question the Minister of Agriculture stated that I had misled the House.

This is very serious. I would like to point out that some of the figures I used came from the minister's own department. I would suspect that likely he was referring to the fact that I said as result of his government's policy farm income would drop by $2.6 billion in the coming year. The minister's own figures show that there will be a drop of $1.7 billion in expenditures of the Department of Agriculture for the coming year.

Therefore I would suggest to you, Sir, that the drop in his own expenditures is in effect as a result of government policy.

I would ask to have that remark withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: I am prepared to hear further argument.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture who has another engagement at the present time. He is unable to be here to make any comment. We would ask him to respond at the earliest opportunity when he returns to the House.

Mr. Speaker: We certainly will accommodate the minister and hear his response.

I want to point out to the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex that the word "mislead" is sometimes used on both sides of the House. It always gives me a certain concern because the question has to be whether the word is used in the sense that the minister or the member is intentionally misleading the House. That is what I would have to determine.

The hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex would know that that would be the question I would have to decide. I have some difficulty in sorting out the merits of an argument over various allegations of numbers and figures on both sides of the House. However I will hear the minister at an appropriate time.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER REPORT AND THIRD READING STAGES OF BILL C-28

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

> That, in relation to Bill C-28, not more than one further sitting day shall be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and, one sitting day to the consideration of the third reading stage of the bill; and
>
> That, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for government business on the day allotted to the report stage consideration and on the day allotted to the third reading stage consideration of the said bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the stage of the bill then under consideration shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I am not very happy to be speaking this afternoon on a motion to impose closure on a bill that deserves to be heard.

I sat in the House throughout this morning's debate just as you did, Madam Speaker, and I listened to argument after argument by opposition members. These opposition members were stating the obvious, that is this government has imposed closure and time allocation more times than any other government in the history of this country.

It is a sad state of affairs when the government has to impose its will on the people of Canada, rather than do the will of the people of Canada and carry out their wishes and needs. I sat here and listened to the various arguments that were being made. I was quite surprised that I did not hear a single word in response from members on the opposite side of the House.

All morning we debated this bill and the only words we heard from across the way were a very few short statements from the Minister of Justice who said they had to impose closure on the clawback legislation, Bill C-28.

We have no evidence whatsoever that members opposite have listened to a single thing that Canadians have said about this Bill—not in committee, not in debate here in the House of Commons, and certainly not from the people of Canada.

Just prior to that debate this morning I presented a petition from people in Big River, Saskatchewan. It is a smallish community in the northern part of my riding, The Battlefords—Meadow Lake, in north west Saskatchewan. Big River is on the eastern side of my constituency.

The seniors of that community sent me a petition that had been provided to them by One Voice, the seniors network. These people from this small community in the northern part of Saskatchewan were adding their names to those of other Canadians and seniors from right across this country who are telling this government that it cannot claw back the old age security pension, the family allowance program, or take money our of the pockets of seniors and do away with universality.

Did the government listen to those petitions? Did the government listen to the petitions that have been presented by the other members of this House who we have heard day after day after day in here? No, not at all.

I have been listening to the debate in this House. I have not heard much debate from the other side of the house. Obviously they must be listening if they are not speaking. However, if they are listening, why are they not doing what the people of Canada are suggesting to them?

It is like the other things that we have heard about in the last little while on the subject of interest rates. It was demonstrated quite clearly in the House today during Question Period. Is this government listening to the people of Canada, to the small business people of western Canada, to the farmers of Canada on the subject of interest rates? No, it is not listening to the people of Canada.

Has it listened to people on the subject of VIA Rail? Has it listened to the seniors from coast to coast who are using VIA Rail? Has it listened to the students who are using VIA Rail? Has it listened to the tourists who have travelled this country all summer long on VIA Rail proclaiming it to be not the best service but a good service for them as tourists coming to this country? Has it listened? No, it is not listening on Bill C-28. It is not listening on clawback or on universality. I think it is a shame and a sham that it is trying to impose this on us. I say that, the people of my constituency say that and certainly, as I indicated this morning with my petition, the people of Big River are saying that to this government.

There is total chaos in this bill. Certainly the process by which we have seen the matter handled through committee, the introduction of amendments, the whole mismanagement of this matter, tells me that rather than imposing closure on this bill and rushing it through the government should be doing everything in its power to withdraw the bill and start over again so that we can have good, unflawed legislation and a government that demonstrates that it can manage not only this piece of legislation but the economy.

An hon. Member: And that it cares for Canadians.

Mr. Taylor: That is right. My colleague is absolutely right. It has mismanaged the economy and this piece of legislation, and we should have none of it.

I know that I do not have much time, but I just want to indicate something here about the bill. Bill C-28 is essentially a clawback on the old age security pension. This is being done by not fully indexing the program—an attack on universality.

I just want to put a couple of thoughts on record. Talking about universality, obviously the government has accomplished the withdrawal of universality by not fully indexing what it calls a trigger figure of $50,000. If inflation rises by 4.5 per cent next year, the trigger figure will rise by only 1.5 per cent. That means that over time through inflation more and more of us will be caught in this whole process.

Here are some examples concerning the old age security pension. Right now a 25-year old who makes $25,000 a year for the rest of his life will have part of his old age pension clawed back at retirement. Where is the $50,000 there?

• (1520)

Here is another example. A 30-year old making $30,000 will have part of her OAS pension clawed back when she retires at the age of 65.

The same is true for 35-year olds making $35,000 a year, for 40-year olds making $40,000 a year, and for 45-year olds making $45,000 a year.

This is where the end of the universality program attacks a growing number of seniors in our society as time goes on. All told—and the government knows this, which is why it is not saying a darn word today—the clawback will catch about 128,000 Canadian pensioners in 1990. In 20 years from now that figure will rise to over one million Canadians. Where is this process of universality? Where are the government members standing up and saying: "Universality is a sacred right in this country"? We have on the old age security program more and more seniors coming under attack.

Is it any wonder that at national conferences across this country when seniors get together they talk about how this government is hitting them harder and harder with every single move that it makes? It is happening on this old age security program, on VIA Rail that transports them from one place to another, and on the GST which attacks almost everything that they buy and reduces their buying power.

I am appalled that this government wants to oppose closure and does not want to talk about the legislation here in order to give Canadians the opportunity to hear what we have to say. I am appalled that I have to stand here today and talk to them about this, but I know it is the only way that Canadians across the country will know exactly what those people across the way are thinking and doing, because obviously they are not interested in communicating that message themselves.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, once again I rise in this House to address the issue of closure. It seems that it is becoming such a habit with the government opposite that it appears to have embarked on a one-party quest to change the rules of the House of Commons.

I would say that this party, the Conservative party, was a party of parliamentary reform. When it came into office in 1984 the Conservatives said how much Parliament needed to be reformed. They had been in opposition for decades and had all kinds of ideas on how Parliament would be improved. They instituted a series of reforms that Your Honour knows about. We are now faced with a situation where instead of living up to the spirit of those reforms and following through with them they are going back to the old closure rules that they condemned so vigorously when they were in opposition and which they now use willy-nilly on almost every bill that comes along.

I see the hon. member for Macleod is grinning. He should be red-faced with shame at the constant use of closure that this government has embarked on in this House. I want to make some reference to this.

I think the record is a broken record, a dreadful record. This government has used closure in this Parliament already, and we have not yet been sitting for a full year from when we started last December. The government has used closure more than any other government in any other Parliament in Canadian history. Not by one or two times more; it is almost double the number of times. I think it is at 11 on closure, and that this is the second or third time we have had time allocation. That is not counting the fancy suspension of the standing orders we have had: one on the bill last week and one on the free trade bill a year ago in December.

That is the kind of record that most governments would be terribly embarrassed about. Instead, this government goes on with its dictatorial ways trampling on the rights of Parliament right, left and centre.

I want to go through the history of its dealings on this particular bill. The bill was introduced following the budget and was given first reading on June 20 this year. It was called for second reading on October 11. I would like to remind you, Madam Speaker, that the House adjourned on June 27 last summer and, at the request of the government, we did not meet again until September 25, a full two weeks later than the rules would normally have provided.

If the government were that concerned about getting this bill passed, surely it would not have allowed an extra two weeks of holidays, as they are called, for members of Parliament to be away from this place. Surely it would have called Parliament back promptly.

Mr. McDermid: Holidays?

Mr. Milliken: I said so-called holidays. I know the Minister of State for Privatization works like a Trojan when he is not here, but the fact is that Parliament could have been recalled. We could have been here to deal with that issue. Instead government members chose to ignore the facts. They said: "We will wait. We will get Parliament back together and then after two or three days of debate we will close her down. We will stop members from debating this bill any more", because they are so embarrassed by its contents.

It was debated on October 11, October 17, October 18, and finally on November 20. Let us look at the days just to see. That sounds like a lot, four days on second reading of a bill. Let us look at the days. October 11 was a Wednesday. October 18 was a Wednesday. Those are the shortest possible days that you can discuss government business in Parliament. Yet those are two of days on the list of four which the government says that this bill has been debated.

On October 17 it was debated for a full normal Tuesday and then on November 20 they applied closure. We had a late night sitting to deal with the bill because of the application of the closure rule. We went on until 11.30 at night. We could have gone to 1; if the minister had been here to speak perhaps we would have.

The fact is that the debate ended and the minister did not participate, as I recall, on that particular evening. I regret that. I would have enjoyed a speech from him. Perhaps he will speak tomorrow. The fact is that the debate was closed off on November 20 and the matter went to a committee. It has come back to the House by report.

When was it debated at report stage? There were about, as I recall, seven amendments moved at report stage. It was debated for one hour on Friday morning from 11 until 12 and then the heavy-handed Minister of Justice walked into the House and slammed down a little time allocation motion on us.

The Minister of Justice was here this morning introducing his motion. It was one of those flippant happy speeches that the minister so likes to make, designed to charm the people in his riding but not designed to charm the opposition or anybody who has a responsible view of the duties of a government in Parliament.

The duty of the government is to account in this House. I see the minister running from the door. The obligation of this particular bunch is to come in here and tell the House what is going on, to account and be responsible. Instead they say: "No, we do not want to discuss this bill. We will simply close off debate as soon as we can get an opportunity".

One hour at report stage and the government is in here moving a time allocation order. It is a disgrace. It is an absolute disgrace. It says that we will have one more day.

Guess what is going to happen, Madam Speaker: One day on report stage. That will be on Tuesday. It will be a full day and then one day on third reading. It will be Wednesday, another short day; probably two and a half hours of debate maximum at third reading on this bill. That is what the government calls a full day of debate. That is what the government calls a responsible attitude to Parliament. That is what the government calls the spirit of parliamentary reform.

I see the Minister of Justice has appeared from behind the curtains. He should come and sit in this House and tell the House his views on this motion, instead of the flippant speech he gave this morning when he smirked and snickered his way through what could only be regarded as a travesty for the rights of parliamentarians to discuss an issue of great importance. This bill is one of the major bills coming out of the budget that was introduced, that leaked budget that the Minister of Finance had all across the television screens before he could introduce it in this House last spring.

This bill, as everyone knows, claws back pensions. It is a totally unfair package of tax increases for senior citizens. No other group in Canada is being discriminated against the way senior citizens are being discriminated against. The Minister of Justice, of all people, the representative of the sovereign as the fountain head of all justice in Canada, is in here applying closure and this kind of tactic to a bill that is designed to be unfair, to discriminate, to do everything that a bill should not do. The Minister of Justice is the one who is seen to countenance this kind of injustice toward the seniors in this country. No other group is being subjected to 100 per cent tax on their income or any portion of it and yet that is what this bill does for the seniors of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: A "portion" of their income.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. minister of state for privatization is getting excited again. Certainly it is a portion of their income, but it is their old age security pension that is being attacked in this way.

• (1530)

Mr. McDermid: Got to keep you honest. The people from Kingston and the Islands are honest.

Mr. Milliken: I agree with the hon. minister that people from Kingston and the Islands are honest. I do not disagree with him one bit on that statement. But the fact is that part of people's income is being taxed at 100 per cent. No other kind of income is treated in this way under the tax laws of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Part of my income is taxed 100 per cent, too.

Mr. Milliken: Hon. members opposite are getting overwrought. The minister of state says part of his income is being taxed at over 100 per cent. I say to him, he does not have an Old Age Security pension and he is not getting taxed on that particular portion of his income.

Mr. Andre: Family allowance is taxed to death.

Mr. Milliken: Family allowances, also. I am sorry, I forgot about his family allowance. Not being a family man, I am not concerned about the family allowance in the sense that I am unaware of my family allowance being taxed back. But I agree with the minister, he should be ashamed that that kind of income is being taxed in this way too. It is highly discriminatory. It is highly unfair and the minister knows that. He should oppose this bill.

Here we have the largest cabinet in history, 38 members of the cabinet sitting in this House. If there were any sense of democracy in that group, surely they would get together in the cabinet room and vote down this kind of bill. Surely they would say to the Minister of Finance that this breaches all sense of decency, of fairness, of equity, of propriety, and of justice, I say to the minister. Yet 38 of them did not manage to vote this down. Where is the sense of democracy in the treasury benches opposite? I ask the Minister of Justice, why did he not put to his colleagues the question of whether there would be time allocation on this bill this afternoon? Surely, if he had put that question to his colleagues they would have said: "No, Mr. Minister, we cannot have time allocation on such an important and unfair measure", and surely the minister would then have agreed.

I ask the minister to stand up in the House in the minute remaining in this debate and withdraw his motion so we can proceed with detailed consideration of this bill as it requires.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 158)

YEAS

Members

Anderson	Andre
Atkinson	Attewell
Beatty	Bernier
Bertrand	Blais
Blenkarn	Bosley
Bouchard (Roberval)	Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Bourgault	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Cardiff
Casey	Chadwick
Champagne (Champlain)	Charest
Clark (Brandon—Souris)	Cole
Collins	Cook
Cooper	Corbeil
Corbett	Côté
Couture	Crosby (Halifax West)
Darling	DeBlois
de Cotret	Desjardins
Domm	Dorin
Duplessis	Edwards
Epp	Fee
Feltham	Ferland
Fontaine	Friesen
Gérin	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)

Greene	Guilbault
Gustafson	Halliday
Hawkes	Hicks
Hockin	Hogue
Holtmann	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
James	Jelinek
Kempling	Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast)
Koury	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Loiselle
Lopez	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone	Marin
Martin (Lincoln)	McDermid
McDougall (St. Paul's)	Merrithew
Monteith	Nicholson
Oberle	Paproski
Plamondon	Plourde
Porter	Pronovost
Redway	Reid
Reimer	Ricard
Richardson	Robitaille
Roy-Arcelin	Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)	Shields
Siddon	Sobeski
Sparrow	Stevenson
Tardif	Tétreault
Thacker	Thorkelson
Tremblay (Rosemont)	Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Turner (Halton—Peel)	Vincent
Weiner	Wilbee
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Winegard
Worthy—114

NAYS

Members

Allmand	Anawak
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair	Bellemare
Benjamin	Bevilacqua
Black	Blackburn (Brant)
Blondin	Boudria
Butland	Callbeck
Campbell (South West Nova)	Catterall
Clancy	Crawford
Dionne	Duhamel
Ferguson	Finestone
Fisher	Flis
Fontana	Fulton
Gaffney	Gardiner
Gauthier	Gray (Windsor West)
Guarnieri	Harb
Hopkins	Hovdebo
Hunter	Jordan
Karpoff	Keyes
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)	Kristiansen
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)	MacAulay
MacDonald (Dartmouth)	MacLellan
MacWilliam	Maheu
Manley	Marchi
Marleau	McGuire
Mifflin	Milliken
Mitchell	Murphy
Nault	Nystrom
Parent	Parker
Pickard	Prud'homme
Rideout	Riis
Robichaud	Rompkey
Simmons	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart	Taylor
Volpe	Whittaker
Wood	Young (Gloucester)—72

• (1600)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Abitibi, on a point of order.

Mr. Saint-Julien: Madam Speaker, I abstained from voting on this motion because mining companies in my riding have a problem with Section 181 of this Bill.

[English]

Mr. White: Madam Speaker, I was late arriving for the vote, but I would like it recorded that had I been here I would have voted with the government.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CROP INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-48, an act to amend the Crop Insurance Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to present to the House for second reading Bill C-48, which is legislation amending the Crop Insurance Act.

This new legislation amending the Crop Insurance Act is crucial to protect Canadian farmers from economic losses due to uncontrollable natural hazards such as drought, hail, and waterfowl, and many other elements of weather that are uncontrollable by man. Without that protection farmers can face extreme financial hardships. Such risks and disasters are unacceptable for individual producers and our agricultural crop industry in general.

Although responsibility for crop insurance lies with each province, the federal government, through the Crop Insurance Act, provides mechanisms and support to ensure that the Canadian farmers can afford this protection. The federal act is enabling legislation that permits the transfer of federal funds to provincial programs that operate within the Federal–Provincial Crop Insurance Agreements. It is also very consistent with the agricultural policy review that this government has put into place, and the recent conference here in Ottawa last week entitled "Growing Together". It is all part of the safety net program that will be introduced. This is the first part of that program. We feel it is very important to have an affordable crop insurance that will give the producers of crops the protection that is necessary to carry on viable operations right across Canada. We hope with this legislation that provinces will provide the programs which are necessary for that to happen.

The legislation that the House is considering is designed to assist in the economic survival of our crop producers when confronted by natural disasters over which they have no control. We all are certainly aware of those disasters. It seems that they happen somewhere in Canada every year. The amendments proposed in this bill will provide the best insurance coverage at the lowest cost to the greatest number of farmers.

Originally passed in 1959, the Crop Insurance Act was a response to the concerns of both producers and governments about existing levels of crop loss protection. Until that year, crop insurance was really a permanent disaster relief program based on a 1 per cent levy on all grain sold or on ad hoc emergency funding at times of crisis. Although these programs did offer some security to the industry, farmers complained that payments were too small and that the program did not distinguish between those farmers with good yields and those with poor yields. In effect, efficient crop producers subsidized less efficient ones.

Ad hoc funding was less popular and producers could never be sure of how much they would be indemnified for losses. It was very difficult to do any financial planning with those types of programs. Governments and producers believed that the Crop Insurance Act was the answer. This act introduced stability into crop production by offering assistance to producers to cover insurance premiums.

Since its inception, the act has been amended several times. These amendments reflected the need to share costs more equitably among the federal and provincial governments and producers to extend coverage to more crops and more farmers, and to reduce reliance on ad hoc assistance.

The time has come when we must again amend the act to reflect modern realities.

The new legislation adheres to sound actuarial practices. In keeping with the original intent of the act, Bill C–48 will lessen producers' reliance on ad hoc assistance. While providing producers with a flexible and a greater range of coverage, the amendments ensure that the crop insurance pays for itself in the long term.

We have conducted extensive consultations with the provincial ministers of agriculture and with provincial and national producer organizations. Based on these consultations, we are proposing four classes of amendments to the Crop Insurance Act in time for the 1990 crop year. It is very important that we have this legislation passed to give the provinces time for their enabling legislation and regulations to be passed to make sure that it is there for 1990. It is a must that that is in place.

First, one major area of change modifies the calculations used to determine how much producers are reimbursed. This amendment gives the provinces more flexibility in estimating the probably yields for insurance purposes. It raises the maximum coverage from its current level of 80 per cent to 90 per cent and ensures that the price paid for a lost crop is fair.

Second, we have provided a more equitable rate for sharing the cost of insurance premiums. Third, we have strengthened the act's regulations to present more clearly the criteria governing federal support for crop insurance. Finally, we have added special provisions to extend coverage to new and minor crops and to crops lost to waterfowl. That is a new provision totally.

Producers greatest concerns were with three key elements: probable yield, maximum coverage, and unit prices that are used to calculate compensation. All those things are very necessary. We have amended the act to bring compensation more in line with lost revenues.

Looking at the first element, the current act provides a method of predicting yield based on the simply historical average of a producer or a geographic area. Producers consider this method inflexible and often punitive. For instance, the act does not recognize increased productivity as a result of technological imprudence. We all know from the way farming and the production of crops have changed over the last number of years that all of those things are very important and have to be recognized and considered, and this bill does look after that.

Producers were also concerned that major losses could significantly erode their yield guarantees. Many producers claim that basing yield exclusively on an historical average for a given area disproportionately of benefit to those with lower yields. The area-average approach does not accurately reflect an individual farmer's productivity. Based on sound actuarial principles, amendments in the new legislation offer new approaches to determine insurable yields. These approaches take into account whether producers acquire new technology and buffer producers' yield calculations from successive losses.

• (1610)

The second key area in determining how much a producer is indemnified is the maximum coverage. Many producers feel that the current level of 80 per cent is too low. This new legislation proposes to increase allowable coverage up to 90 per cent for lower risk crops and areas.

Controls have been added to ensure that this increased level of coverage will not be abused. Greater coverage must be statistically justified, thereby ensuring that low yield variability is the basis for higher limits.

The third key element in the compensation calculations is the value of each unit. Provinces will have the flexibility of basing unit prices on market value or on costs of production.

The second major amendment proposes a more equitable cost sharing arrangement. Under the current act, one formula allows provinces to pay all the administrative costs while the federal government and the producers jointly assume the relatively higher costs of the premiums.

The result of this formula has meant that the federal government pays, on average, 45 per cent of costs, the producers pay 45 per cent and the provinces pay 10 per cent. The legislation has been amended to eliminate this formula and in its place is a more balanced method to share costs.

The arrangement is provided for in the current act, although to date only Newfoundland and Quebec have adopted this approach. Under this arrangement, producers pay the same proportion they have paid since 1973. That is, 50 per cent of the premiums and nothing towards administration which means that they pay 45 per cent of the cost. The federal and provincial governments share the balance of premiums and all administrative costs. The two levels of government do that equally.

There have been many enhancements to the Crop Insurance Act, such as the increase of the federal level of funding over the last number of years to make the program more viable. On an annual basis there have been more federal dollars go into the crop insurance program than before. In the 1987-1988 crop year, for instance, it was $181.5 million; 1988-1989 it is estimated to be around $314; in 1990 it is going to cost approximately $233 million. Some of these changes and different figures are because of drought and greater participation in some parts of the country.

I want to make it absolutely clear that this is not a cost reduction exercise. The purpose of this change and amendments to the Crop Insurance Act is to make sure that we have a program that meets the needs of the producers of crops in Canada.

The third major class of amendment strengthens the crop insurance regulations. This is necessary because the regulations in the current act are vague and incomplete. Regulatory provisions have been rewritten to set out more clearly the basis for federal contributions in order to move to a more level playing field by basing federal contributions on a more consistent and sound footing.

The new legislation will clarify many of the vague sections of the current act by including a comprehensive list of subjects to be defined and detailed in the regulations.

Adding new special provisions is the fourth major class of amendment. Crop insurance has traditionally ensured commercially viable field grown crops. However, recognizing that it is in the best interests of producers and government to diversify agriculture production, we have amended the act to cover new and minor crops as well.

Another special provision compensates producers when their crops are damaged by migratory waterfowl. The current approach to compensation has been based on average crop insurance coverage not directly related to the amount or value of the actual crop lost. The amendment proposes increasing compensation to 80 per cent of the value of crops damaged at no cost to the producer. This provision will give producers a reasonable return on their crops and at the same time it will support Canada's international commitment to protect North American migratory water fowl.

I think it is very important that we have lived up to two obligations here. We have assisted the producers who have experienced damage from waterfowl and migratory birds. Many of us with rural ridings can relate to that problem. In some areas there is always damage by waterfowl. Also I want to point out that this cost is born equally by the federal and provincial governments with absolutely no cost to the producers. These four groups of amendments are improving the method for calculating compensation; providing a more equitable cost-sharing formula; strengthening the regulations; and adding provisions covering new and experimental crops and damage done by waterfowl. These are the major improvements to the Crop Insurance Act. But the new legislation also addresses other very important issues.

The current act has been criticized for not clearly specifying the responsibilities of the federal government and the provinces. Similarly, the conditions under which the federal government will fund provincial crop insurance plans are vague. This lack of clarity has led provinces to form different interpretations of what is permissible. This in turn has led to inconsistencies in the insurance program and varying levels and kinds of protection being offered.

Finally, sound administration is necessary to encourage more producers into the insurance program. Inadequate resources for administration generally results in increased premiums beyond what they should be and could put at risk the financial viability of crop insurance. The new act attempts to rectify this problem by requiring all major elements in the program to be outlined in regulations. We are giving provinces a clear idea of what will and what will not be eligible for federal contributions.

Crop reduction losses can result in financial fluctuations that are not in the long-term interests of either the agricultural industry or individual farmers. We have certainly experienced what has happened to our producers in this great country as a result of those fluctuations in prices and shortfalls that have occurred, particularly in the 1980s.

The ad hoc programs that were there were very unpredictable by nature and have made planning federal and provincial budgets extremely difficult. Producers have never been sure of how much support they could expect from one situation to the next. That has been part of the problem in agriculture. We know that the ad hoc programs have been very much supported by the producers but it is very difficult for any type of business, including farming, to establish a long-range plan when you are receiving ad hoc programs. Whether it be the borrower or the lender, it is very difficult to forecast the future and that is something that we have to do.

This is the first step we are taking to put that in place. It is one of the areas we are addressing. The financial element is a major component of this measure which we feel will assist in long-term planning for the agricultural sector and we look forward to the other measures that will complement this.

A more sound approach for protecting farmers against production losses is multi-peril crop insurance. Through Bill C-48 the federal government will ensure that crop producers can get the protection of crop insurance they need. We are amending the Crop Insurance Act to make it more responsive to the concerns of the provinces and producers.

As we approach adjournment at the end of the season, we would certainly hope that we could give consideration very rapidly to this bill at second reading and send it to committee so that it would be able to work on this legislation as soon as the House resumes in the new year.

I know that the producers of this country are anxious to have this legislation in place, to work with the provinces and have the protection and assurances that we need for the 1990 crop year. I think that will give the producers of this country a lot more confidence in planning for their future.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak on the crop insurance bill. I have to concur with the parliamentary secretary that the producers want this legislation in place, but not in this form.

The producer organizations asked for a tripartite approach in this legislation whereby they would pay one-third of the premiums, the federal government would pay one-third and the provinces would each pay a third. Consequently, it would be a saving in outlay not only to the producers at a time when farm incomes are going to be down dramatically next year but also a saving to the federal government.

As it stands now the producers pay 50 per cent of the premiums, the federal government pays 50 per cent and it is administered by the provinces. That is why they are referred to as the Canada-Ontario, or Canada-Saskatchewan, or Canada-Alberta crop insurance program.

• (1620)

It is really enabling legislation that is implemented by the provincial crop insurance commission and, of course, these have to vary somewhat from province to province, depending on the crop being insured and the crop being grown.

The coverage under this bill would improve from 80 per cent to 90 per cent of probable yield for some crops. This is an improvement in this legislation, if it is an improvement. However, I have to point out that if a farmer was insuring for 90 per cent coverage in a field of corn, the premium would go up from $5.71 per acre up to $10 per acre. The premiums would almost double for the additional 10 per cent coverage.

In the many years I have been farming, only once have I ever been able to collect on crop insurance, and that was on some new seeding that would have been clover and legumes which smothered under the ice cover. But for those farmers in the drought-prone areas of Canada, particularly the prairies and other areas where we have frost damage and frost risk, it is essential that we have good sound legislation for them.

It is in this context that I and producers across Canada believe that at a time when many farmers are facing financial difficulties it is wrong to have the federal government cut back on its expenditures in this program. Even though it said it will not be spending less, the budget from last April indicated it would save $2 million over two years.

Consequently we feel that we should re-examine this bill and give the farmers a break in the premiums they pay as well as a saving to the federal government by reducing the premiums from 50 per cent for each of the farmers and the federal government down to 33.3 per cent.

The farmers across the country want this tripartite sharing and I think it would be a very solid improvement to a program that has served the farmers of Canada very well in the past.

We have tripartite stabilization payments for pork producers and beef, with the producers paying 33 per cent, the provinces paying 33 per cent, and the federal government paying 33 per cent of the cost. Why not the same for crop insurance? The precedent has already been established. I believe that we should be following through in that context.

We are sharing the risk. After all, the producer has no control over weather, nor does the government either at the federal or provincial level, although some would like to claim they do. Because we are dealing with mother nature and the elements I think we should look for a tripartite sharing of the cost.

I should point out that with the higher premiums which will be required, the farmers will take less coverage and there will be a continuing demand for ad hoc programs such as the Special Grains Program, or the drought and flood relief programs we have had in the past five years.

Therefore, I would suggest that we should re-examine this bill and I would ask the government to think very seriously about changing that to a straight one-third, one-third, and one-third arrangement.

This legislation has served the producers of Canada very well for a number of years. But it is on a voluntary basis and the all-risk insurance provides, and most of the provinces demand, that all acres in crop be insured. I would have preferred to be able to insure individual farms if that was possible, and I would like the government to look at this as well, because you do not insure all of a person's buildings and then only give a partial payment if only one burns down. You only pay on the individual buildings.

I think we should consider crop insurance in the same way because within a few miles there can be different levels of rainfall or a low lying area that is prone to frost damage in the fall of the year. Therefore, there are areas where there is higher risk than in others. Unlike fire insurance where the insurance is on individual farms or individual buildings, crop insurance covers the whole property. I think that is something we should be looking at in the future to see if that can be accomplished. Again, by going with the one-third, one-third, and one-third sharing, the risk would be spread to everybody.

The 90 per cent provision would increase coverage to a maximum of 90 per cent of the probable yield in the area with respect to any farm. The increased coverage would be optional, and not all crops would be subject to the increased coverage. It would be only the low risk crops, and Ontario corn would be one that would fit into that group.

The current act offers production guarantees reflecting the long-term average. The new amendment would base coverage on a probable or expected yield process. This would permit adjustment for exceptionally high or low occurrences while accounting for productivity increases due to technological advance or management skill improvements. For example, the new probable yield would be based on a 10-year trend line as opposed to the 20 to 30-year average.

If the government had accepted the recommendations of the farmers for a tripartite sharing of the costs, I personally could support this bill. The original act has served us well for a lot of years, but it is time for a change. Unless the government does bring in some amendments like that, either at second reading or at committee, then I will have to go against this particular bill.

I look back a few years to the task force report entitled "Economic Growth—A Study Team Report". It was the task force on program review on agriculture. This report is dated February, 1985 and is referred to as the Nielsen task force.

When one looks at some of the recommendations one sees that it certainly has laid out the direction that this government has taken in agriculture over the last several years. One of the things that shocked me was that in this report there were several pages of acknowledgements of people who contributed to this report, including various assistant deputy ministers, department people, a lot of organizations, a lot of individuals, many of whom are academics.

I could only find the names of two farmers. One of these farmers is from Buffalo, Alberta, and the other is the President of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. These were the only two farmers who were consulted, according to this task force report. I think that is despicable because it is the livelihood of farmers that is at stake. There are literally thousands of farmers in Saskatchewan who are going to be forced off their land this winter through no fault of their own. They had no input into this document that has obviously set the program and the policy of this government.

This policy has resulted in a forecast loss of income for the coming year. I believe it was in The Globe and Mail on December 8, where the minister himself stated that one of the biggest factors in the loss of income to farmers in the coming year was the fact that the program expenditures of Agriculture Canada were cut back dramatically.

There were recommendations in the task force report regarding the At and East legislation. It says it does not serve as a vital link in Canadian grain trade. I would have to suggest that the At and East program is a very vital program that provides western Canadian grain to the mills and the ports in Atlantic Canada. There is a bill before the House at the present time, I believe, to dismantle that program. That was one of those identified in the budget last year. It was going to be discontinued. That, of course, is in this task force report.

• (1630)

The crop insurance is touched on here as well in this Neilsen task force report. It makes recommendations suggesting that producers should pay more of the cost. That is one of the options that is suggested. It also suggests that the federal government pay 30 per cent of the actuarial cost. That is the one I am hoping the federal government will look at and increase not just to 30 per cent from the 25 per cent proposed in this bill but up to 33-1/3 per cent.

This task force report also talks about privatizing the Farm Credit Corporation. It talks about eliminating the Consolidated Revenue Fund borrowings and privatizing this institution which has provided money to the farmers over many years. It served very well until it became so harsh and unrelenting on those in arrears in those last three or four years. Policies are forcing farmers off the land through no fault of their own, policies that are not acceptable to the economic conditions of agriculture in Canada today.

Just recently we debated Bill C-36, the Advance Payments for Crops Act to eliminate the subsidy for interest payment under those crops and the interest free part of the prairie advance payments was also eliminated under Bill C-36. That is here in the Nielsen task force report. This plan has been in place for a long, long time. I cannot understand for the life of me why in the world the government did not make this available and talk about this a little over a year ago during the federal election campaign.

Little did the farmers know what was in store for them. The fuel tax rebates as well are being hit hard under this last budget. Then, of course, the national marketing boards and the Marketing Agencies Act are being hit. One of the clinchers is to eliminate the present structure by eliminating all dairy subsidies and putting them under the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

I think that we should be looking at all of this in context and just wondering what is going to be cut next. We do not have much left in the list here, just the privatization of the Farm Credit Corporation and then, of course, the dairy. Why did they not tell the farmers who were here on Parliament Hill protesting on November 22 what they were really intending to do?

Mr. Milliken: It is an embarrassment.

Mr. Ferguson: It is a tremendous embarrassment, but I think the farmers have a right to know. It is little condolence to the thousands of farmers who are not able to afford Christmas this winter.

I cannot get over the fact that of all the people who were consulted in the formation of this report, as I indicated earlier, there were only two farmers. Literally dozens of people from other sectors of the economy, the food processing industry, from various departments, from the National Farm Products Marketing Council, consumers associations, banking institutions and associations were advising the government on how to set the policies for agriculture. They were the ones who convinced the government that it should cut back on all these programs that have provided a safety net to agriculture in Canada for many years.

I cannot accept the fact that there are so many food processors who are finding themselves behind the financial eight ball in view of the free trade agreement that was brought in January 1. Twenty-two further processing companies have either gone out of business or have announced that they will be cutting back and going out of business, three within the last month.

Somehow the government has the feeling that if it can do away with the marketing boards and allow these processors to buy the food at a lower cost, everything will be okay. That is not the case because if we look at the amount of wheat that is in a loaf of bread, the cost of that wheat is 14 cents. The cost of wheat in a box of cereal is 11 cents. The box of cereal sells for over $3. There are three cents worth of wheat in a box of cookies.

A neighbour told me just a few days ago that if we gave them the wheat for nothing, they still could not compete because of what is happening to the food processing industry in Canada at the present time and the pressures brought to bear under the free trade agreement.

We talk about the system in the country to the south of us. We look at what they did in dairy a few years ago when they slaughtered a million cows. A million cows passed through those golden arches and were converted into hamburger. Yet the milk production actually rose during that period.

Then all of a sudden something happened. The returns were so low in the dairy industry in the United States in the last few months, 1 per cent of the producers have been leaving the industry each month. There is a shortage of milk in several states in the United States. These shortages are impacting on the processed cheese industry.

There are shortages in Michigan, in the area north and west of Lansing. If you want to buy milk on a weekend, you have to get it before three o'clock in the afternoon or you do not get any. There is just not enough to go around.

By comparison, here in Canada we have had systems that have served the producers very well over the years. They planned production to our needs within Canada and the potential export markets that we have. It is a system that has given a stable income to the producers and a return on management, risk and labour, the same as any other sector which society has to have if it is going to operate efficiently. We see in this task force report where they are going to eliminate all dairy subsidies and put the industry under the jurisdiction of the Farm Products Marketing Agency Act.

I was very shocked a little over a week ago by a speech made to the United States Senate Agriculture Committee. The Secretary of Agriculture in the United States indicated that he was going to write the agriculture policy not only for the European common market and his own country but for Canada, Australia, Argentina and Brazil.

I have to wonder if between this task force report, which had very little farm input, and the statement by the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, that is why we are seeing all of these bills coming forward in this session of Parliament, bills that will tear down those structures which have served this industry so well for so many years.

It is not hard to tear things down, but it takes a lot of imagination, foresight and determination to build them back up again or to establish them in the first place. It is for this reason that I think this government should have thought a little longer and a little harder about the changes here in Bill C-48, an act to amend the Crop Insurance Act.

If we are truly partners in this country, if we are partners of Confederation, I think it should be done in a manner that involves both levels of government and the producers in an equal way. We all have responsibilities to ensure that there are adequate supplies of high quality Canadian grown food available for our consumers. We also have a responsibility to make sure that we not only have these supplies of food, but that there is a continuing supply and that the infrastructure is in place for farmers five or ten years from now to make their way into the industry and to continue that supply based on the concept of the family farm operation.

• (1640)

Dr. John Kenneth Galbraith, who was born in Elgin County, Ontario, and attended the University of Guelph, pointed out to us in October when he was in Glencoe in my riding that the family farm is the most reliable form of food production and probably the most efficient that we have in the world today. It is part of our economy and part of our social fabric, and to allow this to be undermined and destroyed is not acceptable, particularly here in Canada.

I want to say that I hope the government will reconsider what it has here in this legislation. I am pleased to see that it has gone ahead with the increased coverage up to 90 per cent. To allow the government to cut back on its share of the premium from 50 per cent to 25 per cent is definitely not acceptable.

The provinces have increased their share from strictly administration costs up to a level of 25 per cent. I think the federal government should help the producers roll back their input costs at a time when they are facing such financial hardship.

The input costs to the farmers have not decreased. In fact, they have actually increased in spite of the fact the world grain prices dropped dramatically in the summer and fall of 1984. They dropped dramatically in Canada and in some other countries, not through any fault of the producers themselves, but through the fault of governments that failed to respond to world conditions.

There are no big surpluses of grain, no unmanageable surpluses of grain. Because trade has fallen into fewer and fewer hands and the element of greed has made those corporations look for larger and larger profits, the farmer has been at the low end of the totem pole.

In conclusion, I simply ask the government to abandon this Nielsen task force report on agriculture, to stop and listen to what the producers of Canada are saying and to make the amendment to this bill that is acceptable to the farm organizations that contacted us over the last summer.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, things are not great in the agricultural industry these days. The position taken by the government on most issues, many of which were just mentioned by the member for Lambton—Middlesex, have not increased the confidence of residents of rural Canada that they are going to get anything better in the future.

Farming is an integral part of rural Canada, but the feeling of being abandoned by the government, by society to a great extent, extends from one coast to the other and through all kinds of rural communities. Regardless of what part of the country you visit, if you go to small town rural Canada, you will find a feeling of being abandoned. As Newfoundlander Gerald Smith from Port au Port put it, people in decision-making circles in this country are completely out of touch with rural Canada, or maybe they just don't give a damn.

That feeling is common across the country. Both the federal and provincial governments have made a commitment in the last year or two to reduce subsidies. This is especially disturbing to farmers in places like Saskatchewan where the combination of drought and low prices have been devastating and have pushed the return from agriculture to the lowest it has been since 1933. In fact this year, for the first time since 1933, the return from agriculture will not be enough to pay the bills. The actual income from agriculture this year will be negative in Saskatchewan.

Saskatchewan has lost 20,000 farmers in the last two decades. That amounts to 1,000 farmers a year or almost three per day for 20 years. At present, Saskatchewan is losing one resident every 20 minutes. More than 200 people are leaving Saskatchewan per day. The cities in Saskatchewan are not getting any smaller. We have to assume then that those 200 people who are leaving Saskatchewan every day are leaving from rural and small-town Saskatchewan. They are leaving because they feel abandoned by society, by the federal and the provincial governments.

Cities like Saskatoon are not able to take up the slack within those areas. Saskatoon, which is a medium-sized city, has the second highest unemployment rate in Canada, following only St. John's, Newfoundland. The drain in population in Saskatchewan is from rural and small-town Saskatchewan. Of the 17,000 people who left Saskatchewan for the first nine months of the last year that we have statistics on, 7,000 were in their early twenties. As the former member from Nipawin who was previously in this House stated, Saskatchewan exports its youth better than it exports its wheat.

Bill C-48 is part of the government's move to reduce the costs to the government in agriculture across Canada. It is very doubtful that this bill is going to do much to improve farm viability or to reduce the exodus of population from rural communities. All it will do is reduce the cost of the crop insurance program to the federal government.

That reduction of cost to the federal government seems to be the only driving priority for the government's changes in agricultural policy over the last few years. It is the only driving priority for changes in legislation, for changes in program and changes in regulation.

The paper entitled Growing Together is a discussion paper on farm policy. It covers a number of areas for discussion. Those areas are market development, farm finances, safety nets, supply management, transportation, food safety and sustainability. On the surface it would appear that this is a relatively worth-while approach to be taking and, except in a couple of minor areas, the theme of the discussions which are outlined in the paper Growing Together is how the government can cut down its involvement and costs in agriculture.

• (1650)

How can this improve the viability of the family farm? How can the government reduce these agricultural costs? Well, it has been doing very well in the last few years. It has been doing very well indeed. I can list just a few.

Last week we passed a bill which provided for amendments to the Advance Payments Act. It was a move in the direction of reducing costs of this government for agriculture. It saved the government a considerable amount of money, $24 million.

Second, over the last few years the cost of inspections in meat, seeds and almost all areas of agriculture has been moved from the government to the farmer. This has created a saving to the government and an increase in cost for the farmer. It is another move to reduce the expense of assistance to agriculture by this government.

There is the commercialization of the Farm Credit Corporation. At the moment, a considerable amount of money is going out of that, but the aim of that particular move is exactly the same. At some time in the future, the government intends to have the Farm Credit Corporation not costing it a thing. Again, there will be a saving to this government by the removal of assistance to agriculture.

Reduction of the industrial milk crisis sounds like a very easy and straightforward way to go, but what it does do is reduce the subsidies that were given by this government to the dairy industry and reduce the income of dairy farmers in the country. Again, this provided for a saving to the government and a reduction to the income of farmers.

I can go a long way back. We do not have to blame the present government entirely because we have the loss of the Crow rate, a considerable saving to the government but an increase in costs to farmers. We have increased freight rates which a few years ago were kept at a certain level at an expense to the government. This is no longer going to be kept in place. Again, there is a saving to the government and an extra cost to the farmers. The elimination of the fuel rebate provided for a saving to the government and an extra cost to the farmers.

The GST that is being planned is going to increase the cost of production to the farmers and add nothing to their incomes. In fact, if the GST is charged on products of the farm, it is likely that that GST will be higher than the cost of the farm product going in for sale.

We are here to talk about Bill C–48 dealing with crop insurance. This bill also has as its main reason for being an attempt to reduce the costs to the government. In this case I have to say the costs are not being passed on to the farmer, they are being passed on to the provincial government, but they will probably end up coming out of the pockets of the farmers anyway. As far as the farmer is concerned, there is really no appreciable improvement.

The amendments to the Crop Insurance Act will save the government money from crop insurance in most cases because it will only be paying 25 per cent while before it had paid approximately 45 per cent. I want to quote from Farm and Country an article by Tom Button. He states, and it is pretty much the viewpoint of much of the farming community at this time:

> If you couldn't afford crop insurance in 1989, don't expect to be able to pay the premiums in 1990.
>
> If you could afford it, but found it so tilted against you that you could almost never expect a pay out, don't expect any improvement.
>
> After four years of crop insurance debate, farm leaders have finally seen exactly how Ottawa and Queen's Park intend to reform the country's crop insurance plans.
>
> They're shaking their heads in disbelief and disappointment.

That is a quote from Farm and Country about the changes in the plan in Ontario. In the west, Mr. Speaker, where you and I come from, it is not going to be that much better, although there is a much larger use of insurance in the west than there has been in most of eastern Canada.

We have to recognize that there have been problems with the crop insurance program and those problems are the reason that the government should be moving in that particular area. Most of the problems that were there before are being dealt with in some method in this bill and a lot of that is worth while. But if this bill was intended to improve the lot of farmers, to make family farms more viable, then the government missed the target.

The quote that I just read indicates that the changes are not contributing to the viability of the family farm particularly. The process of change, I guess, is laudable in that a paper was put out for discussion, there was consultation between producer groups and the government, then there was more consultation. The consultation brought in 64 briefs that the government looked at but there was no feedback from those consultations. None of those producer groups were contacted to be asked why they wanted to do what they wanted to do and were not told why the government rejected the proposals.

The final changes in the act were brought forward by the federal and the provincial governments in an agreement in Prince Albert a year ago. That is the basis of the legislation in the House and I think it is one of the weaknesses of our legislative process because quite often the legislation could be improved if the consultation took place after the decision that the government had made to go ahead was already in place.

What does the bill do? It changes the basis of the yields on which you can be paid which is basically a good idea. It increases the maximum coverage to 90 per cent. That is something that the farmers asked for. The result is pretty much an illusion because what it suggests is that you can buy 90 per cent insurance coverage, but according to the Ontario Agricultural Commodity Council, the act will be changed to allow optional insurance coverage at 90 per cent of farm average yields but a restrictive formula would be put in place so that many Ontario crops would not receive 90 per cent coverage.

• (1700)

Farmers have asked for premium levels to be determined for each crop at the 90 per cent coverage level with farmers having the flexibility to determine whether such rates are affordable. Since coverage levels are now at 80 per cent, improvements in many crops will be either marginal or non-existent under the proposed formula.

In other words, he is saying that the process by which the government has done this and the formula which the government will use mean that the return for the farmer will not be improved at all under this particular act. The formula is a complex one and will not particularly help in increasing the pay-outs to farmers in cases of disaster.

The farmers also asked for extended coverage. I have to say that that is good if it works. I want to talk about how it is going to work a little later.

There is a clause in this bill which suggests that water fowl damage will be paid for. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture made the statement that another special provision compensates producers more fairly for crops lost to protect migratory water fowl. Producers would receive 80 per cent of the value of lost crops. This compensation is cost shared equally between the two levels of government and producers do not pay any premiums.

That is all very nice, except that it is not in the bill. This statement was made by the parliamentary secretary, but all the bill says is that the federal government will share with the provincial governments whatever the provincial governments will share. There is no guarantee in this bill that the provincial government will pay anything. That needs to be looked at very closely in committee before this bill is moved on.

There is a cost sharing concern. Farmers believe that the cost sharing should be improved. They were paying 50 per cent, the federal government was paying 50 per cent, and the provincial governments were paying administration. I did not see too many of the 64 briefs that were presented, but the ones I did see all recognized that there needed to be a change in cost sharing and the logical change was the tripartite system which has been developed and put in place in most of the stabilization programs that we have been working on in the last few years.

We have established that as a basis, but if we had gone to the tripartite system the federal government would have had to pay a little more and, as I said before, the aim of this bill was to reduce the amount of money that the government would have to pay. Instead of a tripartite system we have a system which actually increases the amount that the farmer will have to pay. He paid 45 per cent before. Now he is to pay 50 per cent of the total bill.

Much of the legislation that we pass in this House depends on regulations. It works only if the regulations are properly put in place and are aimed properly for allowing the bill to work. The parliamentary secretary suggested that these regulations were already in place and that we could look at them, but they are not. They are not necessarily available and will not be available when we take this to committee.

In committee we will want to know very specifically what those regulations are intended to do and whether or not they are going to improve the situation and allow the farmer's situation to be improved. The people who work on those regulations should be farmers, not the bureaucrats whose aim is to have the bill work smoothly and not to allow farmers to have a little better deal in the pay-outs from the insurance plan.

As I said before, these changes were started to get rid of the ad hoc programs. Again I want to quote from Tom Button's article in Farm and Country. He makes this statement:

> Ottawa started its crop insurance review by saying that if crop insurance were more affordable and flexible it could stop making emergency ad hoc programs such as the recent $850 million drought relief bail-out.
>
> "Farm groups supported that goal", LeDrew says.

LeDrew is the manager of the Ontario Corn Producers Association. The article goes on to say:

> "But what Ottawa is doing doesn't coincide with what it is saying," he asserts. "Crop insurance isn't going to be significantly more affordable or flexible".

George, who is the vice-president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, adds this:

> "If we get hit with another drought, Ottawa will argue that the crop insurance reforms let it off the hook". He predicts: "In truth, crop insurance really hasn't been reformed, and I am afraid we are going to have a real fight on our hands."

The government has dealt with the shortcomings of the Crop Insurance Act but in the process has reduced the security on which farmers depended in that act. I could talk about the ups and downs and the values and the shortcomings of the act. Those have been dealt with to a great extent, but the net result is something which is difficult for the farmers to understand and to deal with if the aim of this act were to improve the viability of family farms.

We are in the process of studying all phases of agriculture. In this process we are setting up a number of task forces that are supposed to deal with each of the phases of agriculture. One of the first things that we want to be sure of is that the same thing does not happen in further so-called improvements, that the direction taken by the task force is to improve the viability of the family farm, the viability of agriculture; the viability of the production part of agriculture.

It scares me that this particular paper is called "The Agricultural and the Food Industry". The food industry is not doing badly in many areas, but if there are no farmers on those task forces we are going to end up with another bureaucratic direction which will not increase the possibility of farmers staying on the farm.

Right now in Saskatchewan there are 10,000 farmers who have been served foreclosure notices. A good number of those farmers will be losing part of their land or machinery. The discussion paper which is supposed to cover all of this does not even mention how we are going to keep those farmers on the farm, how we are going to deal with the $23 billion of debt which they carry.

As I started out saying, Saskatchewan, with 110 per cent reduction in income this year, is not in a position to pay more money for crop insurance. Consequently, although we agree with the direction of the bill and will support this in principle, we feel that we must very strongly discuss the shortcomings of it when we take it to committee.

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the members.

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a), I have been requested by the chief government Whip to defer the division until a later time.

Accordingly the division on the question now before the House stands deferred until tomorrow at 5 p.m., at which time the bells to call in the members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Given our experience today, I think it might be a good idea for the console to be manned when the bells are ringing because the House does on occasion defer votes and so on. It would be helpful if it were to be manned at all times, even when bells are ringing.

There have been some consultations, Madam Speaker, and I think you would find unanimous consent for the House to suspend briefly to allow consultations to take place between now and the normal hour of adjournment. I suspect that that suspension may be for only five minutes and then we might be ready to proceed with the next order.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, there have been such discussions. I just want to point out that it is our understanding that this brief adjournment would not extend beyond the normal hour of termination of our sitting; in other words, this is not open ended.

If at six o'clock there has not been a conclusion to these negotiations, then of course the House would adjourn at six o'clock. With that proviso we are prepared to give that consent.

Mr. Hawkes: That is my understanding as well.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting to the call of the bell?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Accordingly the House will suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 5.17 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.28 p.m.

* * *

HIBERNIA DEVELOPMENT PROJECT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-44, an Act respecting the Hibernia Development Project and to amend certain acts in relation thereto be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, today is a great opportunity for us to be able to debate Bill C-44 and likewise Bill C-45 which bills represent important stepping stones along the road to a vibrant energy future for Canadians. They give the go-ahead to the development of two of this country's largest and richest energy resources.

Three hundred and fifteen kilometres off the coast of Newfoundland, under 80 metres of water, lies one of the largest deposits of oil to be discovered in this decade anywhere in the world. In all, we estimate that 650 million barrels of oil await recovery under the Hibernia site.

Almost a continent away, in northern Alberta, beneath the earth's surface lie the oil-soaked sands containing one and one-half times the recoverable light crude oil in all of Saudi Arabia—350 billion barrels of oil or 600 times the amount that Canadians consume each year.

Canada has benefited significantly from a thriving oil and gas industry. Today, one out of every seven dollars invested in the Canadian economy goes to the oil and gas sector. To a considerable extent this reflects the importance of the industry in our economy—including refining and petrochemicals, it accounts for about 12 per cent of our gross domestic product. Net energy exports have significantly improved our balance of payments in recent years, reaching about $7.5 billion in 1988.

Even though their economies are diversifying, our western producing provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan rely heavily on the petroleum sector for employment and economic growth.

This government has placed special emphasis on maintaining a strong and active domestic oil and gas industry. We have moved to a more market-oriented energy policy while remaining sensitive to the industry's special needs. When oil prices collapsed in 1986 we also acted quickly to assist the industry. The petroleum industry is so vitally important to Canada, we must ensure that its viability is maintained well into the future.

The government's investments in the OSLO and Hibernia projects are of vital importance to our future oil and gas industry. We are close to peak levels of production from the western sedimentary basin. These fields are forecast to decline in productive capacity.

If this industry is to continue to grow and prosper as we approach the 21st century, Canada must increase its investment in the non-conventional, higher cost deposits in Alberta and off the coast of Newfoundland.

Granted, there are risks involved. These projects will take nearly a decade before peak production levels are reached. Long lead times make it very difficult for the private sector to proceed on its own. Without public support, these projects will stay on the shelf. Our critics would have us pull out of these investments, to hold back, to wait for another day. "The projects are uneconomic," they say, "oil prices are too unstable".

The critics are too quick to judge. This government will not support investments in our higher cost oil reserves unless it makes economic sense to do so. The investment of public funds in both the OSLO and the Hibernia developments is not only wise planning, but it is economically sound.

Let us first speak of the Hibernia project development. The Government of Canada and private companies have already spent millions of dollars testing the deposit off the coast of Newfoundland and determining how best to extract it.

There are formidable obstacles to be overcome. The waters of the North Atlantic are among the most hostile in the world. Icebergs and storms are an ever-present danger to workers and equipment. Recovery platforms must be located far from shore making them difficult to service. Compounding these hardships is the lack of an existing infrastructure in Newfoundland to support and service this type of an enormous offshore operation.

The Government of Canada has struck a long-term deal which will prove to be a sound investment for Canada. It is true that we are taking a substantial share of the risk in this project, but we will also reap our share of rewards when the returns begin to come in. There is a genuine sharing of these risks—the project's corporate sponsors are carrying their fair share of the load.

The federal government has offered two principal, special incentives—a loan guarantee and a cash contribution. In exchange we will earn a net profits interest as well as normal tax revenues. The province of Newfoundland has complemented these incentives with some adjustments to its royalty regime—principally to make it more profit sensitive.

Our loan guarantee, which amounts to about $1.7 billion, is a key element of the deal. It involves no cash requirement for the government—and its terms give a high level of confidence that our contingent liability will never be called.

The guaranteed debt will be repaid fully at real oil prices above $15 U.S. a barrel. Currently, the price of oil is about $20 U.S. a barrel. This provides a powerful financial leverage to the project with relatively low risk to the government.

Moreover, the government of Canada will contribute $1.04 billion, or roughly 20 per cent of the project pre-production cost in cash. This adds real value to the project. This component is large in absolute terms, but less so in relation to the $20 billion cost over the life of the project.

More important, the federal government sees its cash contribution as part of the total government investment in the project. Even if the prices were to remain at the current real levels, the government could be expected to fully recover all investment—not only our cash incentives, but any incentives delivered through the tax system—in this project and earn a small return.

The government will earn a major share of the upside. Governments' net real revenues from Hibernia will be more than $3 billion if real oil prices average $25 U.S. over the life of the project, from 1996 to 2010. While we all know that oil price forecasts are not infallible, petroleum companies are making long-term decisions based on modest real price projections.

These positive results do not include the considerable external economic benefits that will accrue to the province of Newfoundland and to the rest of Canada. These benefits will indeed be substantial in terms of jobs, spin-off economic benefits, and lower unemployment insurance payouts. In fact, every dollar spent on this project will yield several dollars in primary and secondary benefits to Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders.

Over the life of this project $11 billion in expenditures will pass into the province's economy, as companies drill, operate equipment, and bring the oil from the Hibernia wells onshore.

But the benefits will not stop at the Newfoundland border. About 50 per cent of Hibernia's $5.2 billion development costs will be spent in Canada, with over one-half of the jobs going to Canadians, mainly to Newfoundlanders.

In all, 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the project will be "Made in Canada". Hibernia will have a higher percentage of domestic content than was enjoyed by the British or the Norwegians when they began extracting oil from their North Sea regions.

Without a doubt, Hibernia will be a truly Canadian venture. The main platform to be built for the field—the gravity base structure—will be a massive, reinforced-concrete structure that will extend above sea level to provide a stable base for drilling and production operations. The oil will actually be treated out at sea in facilities built atop this giant platform, and will then be moved to market via ice-strengthened tankers.

The GBS, which will require almost half a million tonnes of high-quality concrete and cables to build, will be able to store 1.45 million barrels of oil. It will be built to stand up against the worst that the North Atlantic has to offer, and it will be built in Canada. It will offer producers a decided advantage and help offset the difficulties of operating so far out at sea.

Canadians will learn from Hibernia. We will develop our skills, out on the rig 300 kilometres off our coast. We will become experts in offshore oil recovery. That expertise will constitute an invaluable commodity to be marketed around the world.

• (1740)

Environmental reviews of the project have been completed. The Governments of Canada and Newfoundland have held extensive public reviews. We have studied the briefs and concentrated on the concerned parties. The decision of the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Petroleum Board, issued in June, 1986, was that the project would proceed once the 50 recommendations of the environmental assessment panel were adequately addressed.

Let me remind hon. members that the project must be regarded in the long term. It will span some 20 years, beginning most probably in 1996, and will produce from 110,000 to 150,000 barrels of oil per day.

This is a sound investment, especially in view of the taxes, royalties and profits that we expect to recover for Canada and for Newfoundland. There are no special tax incentives for companies operating in the Hibernia field. All the activities will be carried out within the existing tax system. All financial arrangements are visible and above board.

Bill C-44 and the introduction of this bill today indicate to Canadians how important the future of Hibernia is for Newfoundlanders and for people on the east coast. It has been a great honour for me to speak on behalf of the minister who will be speaking on both Bills C-44 and C-45.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, it is certainly with pleasure that I have the opportunity today to address the House on Bill C-44 at this most important stage of the bill, second reading.

Bill C-44 is an Act respecting the Hibernia development project and to amend certain acts in relation thereto. The principle of the bill is to grant the government the authority to enter into an agreement with the other parties involved in the now well-known Hibernia development project.

Nine years have passed since Chevron, on a farm-out well from Mobil Canada Limited and its partners, discovered the Hibernia oilfield approximately 315 kilometres east of St. John's, Newfoundland. After its initial discovery, tests subsequently confirmed oil reserves of more than 500 million barrels in a 20,000-acre area. This is one of the largest offshore oilfields in the world.

The Hibernia development project has experienced nothing but delays since its initial conception. In 1986, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at that time advised Newfoundlanders in St. John's that negotiations on Hibernia would wrap up in the next two or three months. That was in 1986. After that—two and a half years later on July 18, 1988—the Prime Minister of Canada stated: "—the prospects, the possibilities, the prosperity of Hibernia may now be realized".

This timely comment came three months before the last federal election. It was in reference to the statement of principles signed on July 18, 1988, by the project owners and the federal and provincial governments. That statement of principles confirmed that the legal agreements for Hibernia would be officially signed on March 31, 1989.

However, there is nothing legally binding about this statement of principles. My colleagues addressed this issue in the House immediately after that statement on July 18, 1988. Their concern was for project guarantees for the province and the people of Newfoundland. The Minister for International Trade assured Canadians that day by responding, and I quote:

> —that Hibernia project is going. It is agreed. The companies have agreed. The Government of Canada has made it all possible with the initiative that we have taken and with the agreements that we have made. They will all be legally bound by the end of March.

Here we are in December of 1989—seven months after that statement by the Minister for International Trade—and there is still no master agreement in sight, at least for another six months or maybe a year, who knows?

While the negotiations continue, offshore contractors based in Newfoundland are suffering their worst year since 1977. The delays to the Hibernia project have paralysed a local economy that geared up for an oil bonanza almost ten years ago. Instead, they have received nothing, nothing but false hopes and false promises from this government.

Today, however, we are debating a bill which allows the federal government to enter into a binding agreement with the Hibernia project owners and the Newfoundland government.

I would like to examine briefly some of the costs associated with this project. The estimated cost of Hibernia has been stated at $8.5 billion. That is for the start-up and the initial development costs. The start-up costs alone are $5.2 billion, out of which the federal government is assuming $2.6 billion, or 50 per cent. This includes contribution to both the capital costs and loan guarantees.

The province of Newfoundland has agreed to contribute $11 million to the project owners out of an offshore technological transfer fund, plus $95 million will be allocated from the Canada-Newfoundland Offshore Development Fund.

In addition, Newfoundland has agreed to waive all of its retail sales tax on all capital items purchased during construction and during operation. On top of that it has further agreed to reduce its retail sales tax that all citizens pay from 12 per cent to 4 per cent for items purchased during the operation of the oilfield.

It is difficult to calculate exactly in dollars and cents just what those taxes would amount to, but certainly the figure would be very, very substantial. Newfoundland's contribution to Hibernia is extensive, when one considers the low returns it will receive and when it receives them for this investment.

The statement of principle that was signed in July of 1988 provides for Newfoundland receiving only a nominal royalty. It starts out at 1 per cent and every 18 months it increases 1 per cent until it becomes 5 per cent after six years. Even that basic royalty will be reduced by the same proportion that the average oil price, current at the time, is below $30 a barrel in U.S. dollars.

Even if everything worked out perfectly and the full average of 110,000 barrels a day were produced for 365 days the first operating year, Newfoundland would only get $6 million in royalties for that year even if the price of oil as it is today increases every year until then by an amount equal to the inflation rate.

• (1750)

I think that we must take into account when reviewing Newfoundland's role in the project that the province represents only 2 per cent of the population of Canada. Therefore, the financial burden being borne by the people of Newfoundland is at least twice that of the people of Canada as a whole. Coming from a small province, Prince Edward Island, whose population is approximately 128,000, I understand and appreciate the extent of this burden that Newfoundlanders must be feeling.

The problem in terms of royalties appears to stem in part from the Atlantic Accord. The accord applies to all gas and oil resources in—and I quote from the document:—"that area below the low water mark lying off the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador out to the outer edge of the continental margin, coming within Canada's jurisdiction". Its main financial stipulation is that the Government of Newfoundland and Labrador can establish and collect resource revenues as if these resources were on land. However, the form that this revenue gathering will take in the extent of the revenues has already proven difficult. In effect, the accord grants Newfoundland the right to negotiate with oil companies on this issue.

The project owners will be supporting the balance of the start-up costs with what is offered by the federal and the provincial governments. This amount is roughly $2.94 billion for the start-up costs of Hibernia.

After the production start-up costs there is another $3.3 billion that has been estimated for additional development costs, which will be the responsibility of the project owners.

The total private sector contribution to the $8.5 billion project is $5.79 billion, which amounts to approximately 68 per cent of that $8.5 billion.

In July of 1988, when the statement of principle was signed, the document also outlined provisions for industrial benefits to be gained by the Hibernia project. The main concentration for industrial benefits was on the gravity based structure's main support frame and where it was to be built. In 1988 it was agreed that this could be done in the Come By Chance area of Newfoundland. However, in June of this year the Minister of Energy, while speaking in St. John's to the Newfoundland ocean industries, said:

—while industries and governments were prepared to proceed with Hibernia on the basis of the $5.2 billion estimate, we would all feel more comfortable at a lower cost.

To this end Mobil Oil Canada, the leader of the four-company consortium that has agreed to develop Hibernia, is completing a redesign of the project's massive production platform. Needless to say, this new redesign causes the almost certain prospect of fewer jobs in Newfoundland.

This is of grave concern to the province of Newfoundland because under the statement of principles this platform was to be assembled in that province. It guaranteed the province three million man hours. Now it appears that this new platform may be assembled elsewhere.

If that happens Newfoundland stands to lose two-thirds of the original planned construction work. There is is no doubt that the industrial benefits of Hibernia should be maximized in Newfoundland.

Based on the original technical requirements of the project, Newfoundland would have been the location for construction and the mechanical outfitting of the concrete gravity based structure. The general management of the project was to be located in Newfoundland as were the important aspects of the design of the gravity based structure and the topside facilities.

The mating of the topside and base, the assembly and outfitting of the main support frame, the hook-up and the commissioning of the topside were also to take place in Newfoundland. All of these activities were expected to generate approximately 10,000 person-years of employment for the residents of the province.

But the minister's June statement, however, has changed the province's employment prospects. It is no wonder that the government of Newfoundland is concerned. With the new design planned by Mobil, the number of permanent jobs created by Hibernia may only be as many as 1,600. This is a large reduction indeed from the estimated 3,500 permanent jobs summarized in the statement of principles. The fact is that this represents a reduction of 54 per cent.

There is no doubt that regional development concerns are part of the incentive push behind Hibernia. We must ensure that the industrial benefits promised to the province, which are briefly mentioned in this bill that we are now discussing, are met. We cannot ignore the disastrous state of employment conditions on the east coast. Certainly the present conditions in the Atlantic fisheries have created a frightening crisis. Tonight we in this House will be discussing that problem in an emergency debate.

Atlantic Canada does need employment opportunities. Hibernia will answer part of that need.

Energy is the lifeblood of a nation. National energy security must be the long term strategic objective when your country is one of the largest per capita users of energy in the world. Energy policy must anticipate future disruptions at world energy markets. It must be sufficiently flexible to endure those shocks with minimal disruption to the lives of Canadians.

Although energy security is a necessary part of policy, it is not sufficient to build energy policy around this concern alone. Energy development must also be environmentally sound.

Mr. Cooper: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I apologize for interrupting the member, but I believe that the time allowed her would take us beyond six o'clock.

I think you will find consent amongst the members in the House, Madam Speaker, to allow us not to see the clock, to allow the hon. member to finish her speech and the NDP critic in the area of energy to finish his speech. The House would then suspend at that time until the 8 o'clock emergency debate.

• (1800)

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I just want to make it clear to the hon. member across the way that we are giving unanimous consent to do this. There is an understanding that the government would not move to extend the hours while the hon. member for Malpeque is completing her remarks, or during the comments of the hon. member from the New Democratic Party. In other words, there is an understanding that there will not be a motion, during the rest of this day, to extend the hours without unanimous consent.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, obviously we agree to that. We are prepared to say that there will be no further dilatory motions for the rest of the evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion made by the hon. parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Malpeque may wish to conclude her remarks.

Ms. Callbeck: We certainly believe that those conditions can be met by the Hibernia project, but that they will take continued work, monitoring and action by the government. We intend to ensure that the federal government meets all of its responsibilities to the Hibernia project.

Hibernia is a national project, one which the Liberal Party of Canada has long supported. The commitment of the federal government to Hibernia has been questionable, to say the least. The April 1989 throne speech did not even bother to mention the Hibernia project, the deal that was supposed to be signed, sealed and delivered four days earlier, on March 31.

This bill may be heading toward a master agreement for Hibernia. But there are many obstacles we still must cross before this project is the best deal for all Canadians. Hibernia is seen as the cornerstone of the Canadian offshore industry. Hibernia could be the key to future development, it could be the springboard discovery which provides us with much of the infrastructure, the technology and the impetus for development of our eastern offshore industry.

My colleagues and I will support the second reading of Bill C-44, which serves as implementation legislation. What it really does is allow the federal government to enter into a master agreement with other parties involved in Hibernia. We note that the minister shall present a summary of each of the agreements before the House. Certainly I am looking forward to this bill being sent to the legislative committee. I hope that it will lead to a far swifter management of the Hibernia project than this government has demonstrated to date.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I must say at the outset that I intend to take the liberty of addressing both this bill and Bill C-45.

Given what I understand to be the principle both of this bill and of Bill C-45, the bill which sets up the fiscal regime for the government's participation in the OSLO project, and given that the central principle in each bill is to create the fiscal structure under which the government will participate, and given the sums of money involved, I must say that I am somewhat surprised that these bills are sponsored by the minister of energy and not the Minister of Finance. However, they are sponsored by the minister of energy and must therefore be seen to constitute, at least in part, the government's energy strategy. So, I will be dealing with that aspect of the bills as well.

If I might, I would like briefly to summarize the two bills. Both of them set out the proposal for the expenditure of government money in the two projects.

In the case of Bill C-44 which deals with Hibernia, we are talking about a grant for the defraying of capital costs in the amount of $1.04 billion. We are, as well, talking about loan guarantees on the capital project of up to $1.66 billion, a direct loan in the amount of $300 million, loan guarantees for what is called a temporary financing facility in the amount of $175 million, and interest payable guarantees on the $1.66 billion loan guarantee. In other words, if the loan is going to default what the government has guaranteed, not only will we pay the principle but we will pick up the interest charges as well.

Therefore, we are talking about a direct expenditure, a grant to Hibernia of up to $1.04 billion, a $300 million loan, and various and sundry loan guarantees and interest guarantees in the amount of $1.835 billion for a total possible government investment of $3.139 billion, a tidy little sum in anybody's books.

For OSLO, we are talking about a grant for the capital costs of up to $425 million. We are talking about a price of oil production subsidy of $48 million. This is a sort of project specific guaranteed floor price for oil. If the cost of production of oil exceeds the price the OSLO project is getting, then this $48 million will kick in. You will find a floor price for Canadian oil in no other aspect of the industry even though New Democrats, federally and provincially, have been vigorously calling for such a thing for many years now. However, for OSLO this is a sort of "most favoured" status, I suppose.

OSLO will have this $48 million floor price guarantee. As well, there will be loan guarantees on the capital project of up to $642.5 million. There will be loans—the terms are not set out, of course, in the bill—of up to $250 million. And loan guarantees, again, for this temporary financing facility of $62.5 million. We are looking once again at a direct expenditure in OSLO of up to $425 million, direct loans of up to $250 million, various guarantees of up to $705 million, for a possible total government involvement in OSLO of $1.4 billion.

These bills would allow the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, with the approval of the Governor in Council, to enter into firm agreements on both the Hibernia and OSLO projects, thus involving the potential for government fiscal involvement in the two projects of up to $4.5 billion.

I do not want to consider these complex financial arrangements or get into the details of the bills today. That is a job most properly left to be handled in the committee. I want, instead, to deal with the principle of the bills which is the commitment of this amount of money to these particular projects. I also want to deal in part with what I understand to be the government's energy policy, of which these two projects are definitely centrepieces. In other words, I will make some general remarks about where these bills fit into that over-all policy.

Since the initial plans for these projects were drawn up, there has been a revolution of sorts in the energy sector. Canadians, regardless of what their governments have done, believed or wanted, have themselves added a new criterion to those by which energy policy is to be judged in Canada. Canadians have added the new criterion of the effect of our energy sources on our environment.

After all, in the words of the Brundtland report called Our Common Future, quoting from page 7-1: "—choosing an energy strategy inevitably means choosing an environmental strategy".

I would note that the government has been very quick to adopt the rhetoric of the Brundtland report. But they seemed somewhat more reticent in adopting the counsel of the Brundtland report.

Listen to what the Prime Minister said on June 27, 1988 at the International Conference on the Changing Atmosphere held in Toronto. He said at that time: "The world is coming to recognize what we believe to be self-evident—that development and environmental protection are mutually reinforcing, not mutually exclusive. Our economic activity must be increasingly compatible with today's environmental facts of life".

Later, in the same speech the Prime Minister added: "In no area is the link between our economic activity and environmental disruption more evident or more troubling than in the area of energy policy".

• (1810)

This is not Audrey McLaughlin speaking, this is not Ed Broadbent speaking. This is the Prime Minister of Canada, the leader of the Conservative Party. He goes on: "Canada is committed to applying the principles of sustainable development to our energy future".

That is commendable, Madam Speaker. One of the most important environmental issues of the day is global warming. In the statement coming from the Toronto conference that I just finished quoting, the International Conference on the Changing Atmosphere, June 17, 1988 entitled "The Changing Atmosphere: Implications for Global Security" stated: "The earth's atmosphere is being changed at an unprecedented rate by pollutants resulting from human activities, inefficient and wasteful fossil fuel use and the effects of rapid population growth in many regions".

It was stark language that the conference used in speaking of the changing atmosphere, and again I quote: "Humanity is conducting an unintended, uncontrolled, globally pervasive experiment whose ultimate consequences could be second only to a global nuclear war". These are very strong words and in the opinion of many, absolutely warranted words.

The Prime Minister, again a fine sounding environmentalist, on March 11, 1989, signed The Hague Declaration entitled "Our Common Future: It's in our Hands". That declaration emphasized the importance of all countries doing their bit to prevent atmospheric pollution and stated: "Because of the nature of the dangers involved, remedies to be sought involve the duty of the community of nations vis-à-vis present and future generations to do all that can be done to preserve the quality of the atmosphere".

So on the level of official pronouncements, the Mulroney government is quick to agree that much needs to be done to protect the environment, but its pronouncements do not mean anything significant, because Canada has to begin to put its own house in order.

We clearly have a valuable role to play. After all, while Canada is directly responsible for only about 2 per cent of the total global CO_2 emissions, carbon dioxide being the key greenhouse gas, we are one of the most energy inefficient countries in the world. Canadians consume more energy per person than is the case in the U.S.A., Sweden, Germany, the United Kingdom and Japan, and the situation is getting worse. From the perspective of energy use per $1,000 of GDP, we also use more than the U.S.A., Sweden, the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan.

It is true we live in a cold country. Mainly our population is spread out along a long thin southern line. Our industries have to deal with the effects of cold winters, as do our people. But this is no excuse, because in taking account of all that, nonetheless we are extremely wasteful energy users. We could use substantially less energy, thereby polluting much less, without significant changes to our way of life.

So far the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been running in the wrong direction and has been using as an excuse that he favours a market oriented approach. So what has the government done? In the last budget, the government eliminated completely the 12 conservation and renewable energy offices across the country. These offices were run on a shoestring and provided information to people in the regions on how they could save money and energy at the same time. They were not even a significant intrusion into the market-place. They were funded at too pitiful a level to be that. Nonetheless the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources closed them all down.

As well, the government also dismantled the branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources that oversaw research on energy conservation and alternate energy sources. The government cut funding for conservation and renewable energy—using its own department's figures—from $410 million in 1984-85 to $49 million in 1989-90. What is the justification for all this slash and burn of alternatives and conservation? The argument is that conservation efficiency and renewable energy sources just cannot compete. They cannot compete. They are not as marketable, they are not as efficient.

There is not a free market in energy in this country, there is no so-called level playing field between the fossil fuels and the alternatives, between spurred consumption on the one hand and conservation on the other. To all Canadians who may have any doubt that there is not a level playing field in energy resources in this country, I simply say, look at Bills C-44 and C-45: up to $4.5 billion in government commitments to two fossil fuel projects.

This government, in proposing to provide the $4.5 billion to these two energy projects, is simultaneously slashing funding for conservation and energy alternatives to just $49 million per year. That is the government's level playing field. That is the government's demonstration of the hallowed free market in action, an increase of $4.5 billion for just two fossil fuel projects, and a decrease to $49 million for all energy conservation and renewable projects.

Most Canadians believe their tax money should be put to wise use, in part to influence the choices that we will have in the future. That is why most Canadians want their money to help prevent environmental degradation. But these bills will use their money not to fight global warming but to add to it.

Think for a minute of how far $4.5 billion could go in the sectors of energy conservation, efficiency and renewable energy.

We could have perpetual energy savings by encouraging better insulation of the houses of ordinary Canadians. We could have energy savings through the use of energy efficient lighting in commercial buildings. We could have vastly more fuel efficient cars. We could have greatly enhanced support for public transportation systems, especially in the urban areas. We could have the development of an ethanol fuel industry in Canada. We could have viable co-generation production. We could have solar power. We could have small, independent power producers feeding into provincial grids. Think of the harnessing of a good portion of the wind energy streaming off the mountains in southern Alberta or around the Great Lakes and Hudson Bay shorelines of Ontario.

As the August, 1989 DPA study conducted for the minister recently pointed out, many of these investments would not only save energy, they would also save money.

Let me offer an analogy. Let us say you want to wash the walls in your living room and for this purpose you have a bucket, but the bucket has a number of holes in it. These holes, when the water runs out of the bucket, gets your beautiful carpet wet. So you have a choice: you can spend your time and money pouring in more water as fast as you can and rushing the washing job before the carpet gets completely soaked, or you can plug the holes in the bucket and get on with the job.

What will OSLO and Hibernia mean for the environment? They will mean more CO2 leaking out the holes. The parliamentary secretary made mention of the Environmental Assessment Panel and the study conducted on Hibernia in 1985, and as he correctly noted, they came up with 50 recommendations. But that study did not even consider CO_2 emissions. It was never on the agenda. It was not considered and no recommendations were forthcoming. You can bet that people in Atlantic Canada will be very interested in whether the changes in design will affect the project's safety.

OSLO will doubtless mean a greater burden of sulphur dioxide emissions on to the soils in northern Alberta and even more in Saskatchewan. During the recent environmental review for the ALPAC pulpmill, it was pointed out that the vast majority of these soils are very sensitive and prone to acidification.

When it comes to carbon dioxide, environmentalists know and have told us that heavy oil is particularly bad from a global warming perspective. A recent paper by H. G. Hengeveld, on staff at Environment Canada's Atmospheric Environment Service, titled "Climate Change Implications for Energy" points out that on the basis of emissions of carbon dioxide per unit of energy, energy from oil sands is worse in the sense of being a greater producer of CO_2 than biomass energy, gas, oil and even coal. I hope that our scientists in the various pertinent departments are studying this aspect in some detail, because CO_2 emissions are clearly going to be an important issue when these bills get to committee, especially when there is considerable pressure for Canada to reduce over-all CO_2 emissions by 20 per cent by the year 2005.

• (1820)

The best estimate that I have seen is that these projects combined will cause, and contribute to, the emission of between 20 and 30 metric tonnes of CO_2 each year. That is one hell of a lot of CO_2. It is an increase in total current Canadian CO_2 emissions of between 4 and 7 per cent, and that is just between these two projects.

Even the energy minister is worried about CO_2 emissions and global warming. I was delighted to read in the transcript of the hearings of the environment committee on December 11 last week that the minister stated, and I quote from the transcript:

> Based on every information I have received in the department from the scientists and others who are working on global warming within the department, I am convinced that we have to reduce emissions, that they have negative effects on climate, that they have negative effects as described by those who have studied the project in detail.

Admirable, Mr. Minister. Unfortunately, these projects fly in the face of that statement. However, I consider that to be the minister's problem, not mine.

Let us ask for the moment what will the projects mean for jobs and regional development. There is no question that jobs will be created. Any large capital project creates jobs. When you are talking about $4.5 billion in maximum total contribution to the two projects, you have to be talking about a lot of jobs. The question is how many jobs and at what cost per job?

Canadian experience shows it is quite common for large projects to be very inefficient creators of jobs. Indeed, I would note parenthetically that decentralized energy efficiency programs would probably be much more effective job creators. In Atlantic Canada, people are more deeply concerned about jobs than ever because of the actions of this government. I note, for example, the cuts in unemployment insurance benefits; the ACOA funding being spread over even more years and, of course, for all the reasons that will be made clear during the emergency debate tonight, the threats to all of the jobs in the Atlantic fisheries.

Yet the number of jobs for Newfoundlanders and for Albertans that will be created by these projects will, I think, be few in terms of the capital invested. We know from past experience with energy megaprojects, that the dollars per job created is incredibly high by any kind of economic average. But I assume that this too will be the subject of extensive study in the committee.

In that committee, we will also be looking at the question of royalties and tax revenues that will accrue to the provinces involved and to the federal government. Many people doubt the glowing estimates that were made just a few years ago, and they have reason to.

If I may, I would like to return to the question of the government funding, especially in light of Section 3(2)(a)(i) in each of the bills. Those are the sections in each of the bills that mandate the gifts of money, the $1.04 billion for the Hibernia project and the $425 million for the OSLO project. These are gifts. This is free money. No strings attached. It is an incredible thing. I have not really encountered anything like it before.

At the Ottawa Airport this afternoon when the plane came in I was talking very briefly to a member of the government benches who expressed surprise to me when I told him that this was not equity for the federal government, these were gifts. We get nothing in return for this $425 million and $1.04 billion. That is absolutely astonishing. Even in Alberta we know from our experience with the Syncrude project that you can get equity in an energy megaproject for the government that is shelling out the money. We did that in Alberta with Syncrude. That, too, is something to which we will be paying very close attention in the committee study of these bills.

I would like to conclude by reviewing the four conditions for these projects that my party set in a news release and background paper on November 7, 1989, the same day the minister introduced Bills C-44 and C-45.

The government is obviously going to press ahead with these bills. Consequently we want to have on record for the government's consideration, as well as the consideration of others, those four very constructive suggestions that, I will note, received the approval of the energy and environment critic for the federal New Democratic Party in this House, and as well, of the energy and environment critics of the New Democratic Party in the Legislative Assembly of Alberta—that all four of these individuals could come to an agreement on anything is little short of miraculous; in this instance, I think it doubly so.

Let me note very clearly that we are not opposed in principle to these two projects. We are opposed to the fiscal arrangements set out in the bills, and we are opposed to the government's energy policy generally because of the lack of cognizance it takes of environmental concerns.

However, with specific regard to the two projects, the following four conditions constitute the minimum acceptable for the projects to enjoy the support of the New Democratic Party.

First, no investment of public money without equivalent equity held by the Crown.

Second, guarantees, in the agreements among the parties, that production costs will not be subsidized, now or in the future, by the public purse, unless, I will note, such floor price subsidization applies to all oil and gas production in the country.

Third, the immediate restoration by the federal government of expenditures on research into, and development and commercialization of, energy alternatives and conservation up to a minimum of the $400 million budget in 1984.

Fourth, concrete steps and guarantees to minimize the environmental impacts of the projects, including: (a) complete, thorough, joint federal–provincial environmental impact assessments, with extensive consequent public hearings featuring full intervenor funding, to be undertaken in each instance prior to any project commencement; (b) in addition to all measures implemented or planned for the purpose of reducing Canada's CO_2 emissions by 20 per cent by the year 2005, the further reduction of CO_2 emissions, principally through conservation and greatly enhanced use of fuel ethanol and propane, to a degree equal to the total CO_2 emissions from the projects, such that the projects result in no net increase in Canadian CO_2 emissions; and, (c), the use of best available technologies for pollution abatement and emissions control, especially with regard to CO_2 and SO_2.

These are not unreasonable conditions. In fact, these are conditions that I think most Canadians, on reflection, would find not only warrantable but indeed necessary.

I would just note that because the government at the moment cannot for whatever reason see its way clear to accepting these conditions, especially with regard to these two projects, we cannot, in conscience, accept the principle of the fiscal arrangements set out in the bills and consequently will not be supporting them at second reading.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6.29 p.m, I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock, when the House will proceed with the emergency debate on the situation in the Atlantic fishery.

At 6.29 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

[Editor's Note: For continuation of proceedings see Volume B.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 18, 1989

[Editor's Note: Continuation of proceedings from Volume A.]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[English]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has granted leave to the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 52 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the situation in the Atlantic fishery.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that an arrangement has been entered into among all three parties in which it is the disposition of the House to hear the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, but on the understanding that the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso will be heard later. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking my colleague from Cape Breton Highlands—Canso for moving the motion which we are debating before Your Honour tonight.

This young member has shown more compassion and more concern for Atlantic Canada in one year than the federal Conservative government has shown in the last five.

What we are debating here this evening is not just another crisis. It is not just another local problem. What we are debating here this evening is the collapse of the entire Atlantic fishery. I want the people from other parts of Canada who may be watching this debate this evening or following Parliament to understand the depth of what we are saying here.

For many Canadians, Atlantic Canada seems remote. Put yourself in a situation where the entire steel industry of Sault Ste. Marie or Hamilton were to be closed down, everybody thrown out of work. Imagine what the reaction would be in the province of Ontario, particularly when the Prime Minister of Canada told them they never had it so good. It is as though the financial district, Montreal or Toronto, was closed down and then the prime Minister were to tell the workers, clerks, office people, they have never had it so good. This is what this Prime Minister has said to the people of Atlantic Canada.

It is more than a crisis. It is a calamity. It is a calamity which is driving people out of the Atlantic provinces, a calamity which is wiping out whole towns and villages, a calamity which is destroying a way of life. What has this government done? Let's look at the record of the Prime Minister who in 1988 said during the last federal election in Saint John, New Brunswick on October 13, 1988:

I feel something special for Atlantic Canada and its needs.

If that is something special, the people of Canada want something different and they want something different fast. What are we seeing? We have seen the Marine Ecology Laboratory at the Bedford Institute disbanded, repeated cuts in the fisheries staff, mismanagement of the fish stocks, slashed unemployment insurance payments to Atlantic Canadians.

The federal government has withdrawn the government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund, reduced commitments to post-secondary education and health care. The provinces of the Atlantic are particularly vulnerable. It failed to renew regional development agreements, closed Armed Forces bases in Atlantic Canada and announced a new national sales tax which in most crippling to Atlantic Canada, because the farther a region of the country is from the source of production the more transportation is needed to bring that good to market, and the more that tax will bear.

[Translation]

To this show of serious concern on the part of the Prime Minister shoud be added the pirating of our fish stocks, something the government does not seem to want or be able to stop. It lets Spanish and Portugese fleets pillage our fish stocks, it lets France steal what is left, and it lets the Europeans set incredibly high quotas.

The present government is being made a fool of by others and, instead of defending the interests of our fisheries, yields to the demands of other countries.

France wants more fish? Our government sees no problem! Just reduce the quotas for our own fishermen. If French traulers don't catch enough fish, our government gives them a consideration to compensate for their loss.

Spanish and Portugese fleets sailing under flags of convenience exhaust the fish stocks just outside our territorial boundaries. What could be more normal.

[English]

Let us turn to the United States. The Americans do not like our fish processing regulations. They are the regulations which used to ensure that fish caught in Canada would be processed in Canada. It meant that the Canadian fish plant workers on both coasts, on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, had jobs. This government sold out the fish processing industry in the trade deal with the United States because it gave up our right to impose an export tax on fish, thereby allowing us to be competitive in the fish processing markets.

Mr. Crosbie: What does that have to do with it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That export tax was permitted under the GATT.

Mr. Crosbie: Show us the relevance.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister for International Trade is here and he ought to be ashamed because he sold out our remedy to the United States.

An Hon. Member: He sold out his province.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And who is paying for the mistake of the member for St. John's East?

Mr. Tobin: West.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): St. John's West. He will be St. John's nowhere in the next election, I can tell you. Who is paying for his mistake? The people of Canso. In the town of Canso in the constituency of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, 742 plant workers have just lost their jobs, in a town of 1,200 people.

Mr. Crosbie: Malarkey.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What does it mean to the people of that community, or any community of that size? Not only the fishermen and the fish process workers, but take any small business in the town, the general store, a real estate operator, a food supplier, a clothing distributor, take any professional; who is going to pay for the service? Who is going to pay for the food? Where is the money going to come from? What is going to happen to the only equity that most of the people in Canso have, namely their own homes? What is going to happen to home values as people try to get out, finding no market for a lifetime of saving and equity based in that home.

What is a fisherman going to tell his children on Christmas morning? What is he going to give his teenage son or teenage daughter? It will probably be a one-way ticket to Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver because there will be nothing left for them in Canso.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The only choice they have is to move out. The irony of it is they will not even be able to take the train out any more because the government has cut the VIA Rail service to that part of Nova Scotia.

It is the same story in North Sydney where another 280 workers are losing their jobs, and in St. John's, Newfoundland where 492 workers are being let go without even getting a severance payment. It is going to be a bleak Christmas for Atlantic Canadians. An estimated 6,000 more jobs are expected to be eliminated in the next few months. Fishery Products International is expected to announce major layoffs very soon.

What about National Sea's U.S. operations on the east coast, their operations in the state of Florida and in Portsmouth, New Hampshire. Why is this Canadian company closing Canadian plants when it's U.S. plants are not affected? It's former president was one of the great promoters of the free trade deal. In 1987 he said the deal would create 400 new jobs. Now, only two years later, his company is closing its Canadian plants.

• (2010)

[Translation]

How did the Prime Minister react when we raised the question here in the House? He had no answer and no plan. He brandished statistics. He said the Atlantic region was doing well. He even quoted double-digit unemployment in Newfoundland as if it were an achievement, and the trained seals behind him applauded enthusiastically.

The answers given by this Prime Minister and this government are invariably the same: it's all the Liberals fault! Mr. Speaker, I think we should recall that the Conservatives have been in power for five years, and it was the Conservatives who formed this government.

[English]

The Canso closure is a direct result of this government's mismanagement of the fishery in Atlantic Canada. Chalk up yet another ghost town to the Tories.

Premier Joe Ghiz was in town today, talking to the Prime Minister about Summerside. Summerside, now Canso. That is something this Prime Minister has been well trained for because he closed Schefferville. At least in those days he was only taking orders from Cleveland. Now he gets them direct from Washington.

The Prime Minister also promised that a committee of cabinet would investigate and come up with a plan to deal with the crisis.

Mr. Crosbie: This is your swan song, is it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They said that there would be compensation for those thrown out of work. They said that there would be other programs, other initiatives. Where are those other programs? The fish processing workers on both coasts are still waiting. They are going to join that long line of other employees across the country who are being thrown out of work by the trade deal, waiting for the adjustment programs the Prime Minister promised and continues to promise.

Do you remember those programs, Mr. Speaker? Do you remember that commitment? The only people in Canada who no longer remember that commitment are the Tory ministers who made it.

One of the main reasons they have done nothing is that under the trade deal with the United States they have agreed over the next five to seven years to negotiate the definition of an unfair trade practice or a subsidy with the American government. What has happened is that the government's own trade deal has tied its hands. This government is afraid to come to the aid of a threatened fishing industry because the Americans have told them that any financial support for that industry, particularly when it is export-based, will be considered to be an unfair subsidy by the United States. We are being told by the Americans now much we can finance and rescue our perishing industry in Atlantic Canada.

What about the rate of exchange? The high value of our dollar is killing our exports of fish.

Mr. Crosbie: What was it when you were in?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I believe, as do many others, that there was a side deal—

Mr. Crosbie: What was the dollar when you were there?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —there was a side deal transacted with the Government of the United States by the minister's predecessor, which allowed our dollar to rise because the Americans would not have considered this kind of an agreement if they had not got a commitment on our exchange, as well. What about the U.S. lobster law signed by President Bush?

Mr. Crosbie: What about your dollar?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have the hon. minister from St. John's. I tell you he ought to feel red as one of those lobsters because even he couldn't be exported to the United States under those rules. He is as red as a lobster tonight when he listens to the truth here in the House of Commons.

What about that U.S. lobster law? It was signed by the president. Has our Prime Minister told his great friend, the President of the United States, that this is a serious blow to Atlantic lobster fishermen? Did they discuss the issue at all, at his last visit? Or is a Kennebunkport lobster worth more to the Prime Minister of Canada than the lobsters from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and the east coast of Quebec?

Take another little incident. What about the ramming of the Canadian destroyer Saguenay by the U.S. scallop dragger The Concordia. In this and other instances of American overfishing our government has allowed us to be internationally embarrassed by the fact that we cannot arrest American boats which flagrantly fish illegally in our waters. The minister should refer back—

An Hon. Member: What would you have done?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is a back-bencher who is skulking, he is skulking—

An Hon. Member: What would you have done?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will tell you what I would do. The minister and the back-bencher who has just spoken, behind the curtain, should refer back to the? I'm Alone case of 1929 to understand the international rules of hot pursuit moving from within territorial waters into international waters. In 1929 the U.S. Coast Guard pursued a Canadian vessel, the I'm Alone for two days and nights in international waters and finally sunk it when its captain refused to surrender.

I am not suggesting that we need to blow U.S. fishing boats out of the water. What I am saying is that it is about time that we started to uphold our rights to protect our fish stocks from this kind of piracy from American and French boats by arresting them and bringing them back into Canadian waters.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs is here and he is one of the nice guys, one of the international patsies on behalf of Canada. When we have got a problem he cannot stand up. We concede, we make concessions, we yield but never when there is a confrontation do we stand up and protect our rights.

As if our fishing industry were not in enough trouble, the government has slashed the unemployment insurance scheme. The Minister of Employment and Immigration who has defended the cuts to the unemployment insurance program tells us that by cutting benefits and putting money instead into training her department is doing a great and wonderful thing.

We all ask the question, on this side of the House, training for what? Are you going to train a New Brunswick fisherman to be an automobile worker? Training for what? Where are the opportunities? Where are those other industries? The minister can talk all she wants about her training programs. It is a wonderful theory, a wonderful plan on paper, but what does it mean to the people in those communities where there are no other job opportunities.

In the words of one local co-ordinator: "It is a disguised resettlement program". In other words, if you want a job to use that retraining, move to Halifax or Montreal or Toronto.

[Translation]

And the Prime Minister blames the Senate for delaying legislation on unemployment insurance reform that will raise variable entrance requirements from 14 weeks to 20 weeks.

The Prime Minister failed to tell Canadians that every year since 1977, we agreed here in the House to an exemption for our fishermen which set this requirement at 10 weeks. His government has failed to table a similar bill. In fact, the present government has put everything into one single bill, and is trying to blame the Senate for its own incompetence. The Maritime Provinces and the rest of Canada will not swallow this explanation, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The government has been talking about taking action to meet the crisis in the fishing industry. It has been talking for months about the crisis brought about in large part by the mismanagement of the industry by this government. It is all talk and no action. The government is bankrupt of ideas. It is about time they faced the brutal truth. It is their own mismanagement which has got the Atlantic fishery into this mess.

In October the minister of fisheries, who is here in the House, said the industry was in good health. That is about the dumbest thing that any fisheries ministry in this country has said since Confederation. Here is how Brian Giroux, Executive Director of the Nova Scotia Dragger Fishermen's Association responded to the minister's ridiculous statement. He said:

> Maybe he should have his salary tied to our fish quotas. We have got to take a 30 per cent cut in our quotas. Maybe if he had to take a 30 per cent cut in his pay he would think different.

Well, I would think different too. A 30 per cent cut. That minister ought to have a 100 per cent cut.

This same minister is now telling impoverished east coast fishing towns that lose their fish processing plants that, in the minister's words, and I quote The Globe and Mail of December 12, 1989: "They have a bright future". The people of Canso, the people of the Avalon Peninsula, the people of the Acadia Peninsula, Caraquet and Tracadie, you have been told by the minister of the Crown that you have got a bright future. What a minister.

Here is another example of his great compassion and understanding at a time when thousands of Atlantic fishermen are being laid off and thousands more are facing incredible hardship. The minister said this, and I am quoting The Toronto Star of a conversation he had December 17, 1989: "Some of those guys are making over $100,000 a year. You sure would not know it the way they sing the blues". If that is sensitivity, I want to hear something else.

We have a Prime Minister who has joined the jet set, burning up fuel not to mention taxpayer's dollars with fleets of government jets to take them all over the capitals of Europe, Africa and Asia, not to mention those obligatory stops in Washington. What does he do when he gets there? What does he talk about when he meets all those leaders? Why has he not been able to convince his counterparts in Europe that the quotas they set for the northwest Atlantic are totally unrealistic? Has he ever raised the issue with those governemnts or is he just there for a few photo opportunities and really does not want to deal with the tough questions?

• (2020)

This government has cut Atlantic Canada adrift. This is not nation building. This is not national reconciliation. This is not building a stronger, more prosperous, more independent and sovereign Canada. This is the destruction of an entire region of Canada, the destruction of a way of life, the destruction or the dreams of thousands and thousands of people who trusted their government to defend their interests.

Frankly, I bleed for the people, the fishermen and the fish workers of Atlantic Canada, good hard-working honest Canadians who have been sold out by their government. My cry to the people of the country and to this House of Commons: Let those of us who are members of this place take notice of the negligence of this government. Let us condemn this government for that negligence, condemn it for the shameful and utter disregard of the people of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised and disappointed—

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Where is the minister?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —that in the light of these very serious problems being faced by the citizens and by the communities of Atlantic Canada—

Mr. Tobin: Will the real Mister of Fisheries please stand up?

Mr. Clark: —what we received from the right hon. Leader of the Opposition tonight was just another partisan speech, partisanship as usual. He talks about free trade. Free trade has nothing to do with this problem as he would admit if he were seriously interested in the concerns of the people of Canso, North Sydney, or St. John's.

He suggests we go to war with France, with Spain, with Portugal.

Mr. Mills: That is ridiculous.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, this is pure bunkum, and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition knows it. He insults the people of Atlantic Canada by putting his shrill partisanship ahead of their real interests.

Sir, we are discussing tonight a very real national problem. It directly affects whole communities of Atlantic Canada. It affects directly the livelihood of thousands of our fellow Canadians. It is not just a regional problem, but one that requires national attention as earlier crises in Canadian agriculture have required national attention and received it from this government.

Mr. Robichaud: What are you doing about it?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Nor is it just a fishery question. It involves the broader question of the long-term health of Atlantic Canada. Nor, Sir, is it just a federal matter. We have our responsabilities as a national government and we intend to continue to meet them, but the policies of provincial governments have contributed to the problem and naturally provincial governments must help contribute to the solution.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Because it is a major national problem with significant international implications the Prime Minister established a committee of senior ministers in May to design effective—

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): You are trying to blame the provinces.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I find it surprising that having sought this debate, having sought a discussion of serious problems affecting the communities and individuals of Atlantic Canada, instead of proposing anything, the Leader of the Opposition simply repeats partisanship as usual and now his colleagues, when I try to set forth some of the action this government is taking to respond to that serious problem, try to shout me down.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): You guys are to blame.

Mr. Speaker: I should remind hon. members that when the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was speaking he was extended the courtesy to which he was entitled.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): From time to time.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister established a special committee of senior ministers to design effective short-term help and constructive long-term measures to assist communities and individuals who would be affected by serious changes in the Atlantic fishery. I chair that committee which has met a dozen times and drawn together ministers with a particular interest and responsibility in Atlantic Canada. It is supported by a task force of senior officials chaired by Ken Stein, a task force which has met extensively with the fishermen, with the industry, and with provincial governments.

The problem, Sir, is the following: In January of this year federal scientists determined that northern cod stocks were not growing as fast as predicted. There were fewer fish to catch. Unless the quotas were reduced we would seriously jeopardize future stocks and thereby put the industry at even greater risk. Quotas for 1989 were reduced from 266,000 tonnes to 235,000 tonnes. Dr. Les Harris has been asked to check those scientists' findings. If his report confirms the lower growth of the stock an even lower quota will be required for 1990.

Members of the House should understand that the northern cod stock is the largest commercial fish stock in the northwest Atlantic. The fishery is the sole source of employment in hundreds of communities in Atlantic Canada. Many of those communities are isolated from other economic opportunities.

Mr. Tobin: We knew that a long time ago.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): In Newfoundland the fishery accounts for more than 20 per cent of total provincial employment. In Nova Scotia it accounts for more than 6 per cent. A week ago—

Mr. Tobin: I don't believe this. What insulting pap.

Mr. Speaker: Just a minute. An application was brought to the Speaker for an emergency debate. After appropriate consideration we are now having it. I want all hon. members to respect each minister or member who is speaking. When this is done I would hope that some of the people who are a lot more unfortunate than others in this country may feel that at least there had been an appropriate exchange.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. A week ago, as the House knows, National Sea Products announced the closure of fish plants in St. John's and Canso and the significant downsize to the plant in North Sydney.

That day my colleagues, the Minister for International Trade and the Minister of Public Works announced an immediate assistance plan to help the individuals and the communities involved. That plan involves counselling, training, income assistance under unemployment insurance and special help under the program for older workers. These programs are designed to provide immediate help to the individuals and the communities concerned.

Once the full extent of action to be taken by large companies is known, we will be able to give more details about the amount of assistance. What is important at this stage is that each and every affected worker has complete access to the short-term programs that we will have available. The larger challenge for all of us, Sir, is to deal with the long-term impact of these changes in the Atlantic fishery.

We have been reviewing the role that the federal government plays in areas such as scientific assessment, enforcement and regulations. We believe there are ways in which these functions could be better carried out and in some instances we have already taken action. We expect to receive the Harris report before the end of this year.

We are continuing our work with the provinces with a view to identifying the most effective means by which we can encourage the long-term diversification of the Newfoundland-Nova Scotia economies. Newfoundland, in particular, is far too dependent on a resource that is cyclical. Obviously, this is due in part to a lack of other viable options. We will do our utmost to identify effective options for viable diversification of these economies and to create a more viable and a more reliable fishery.

While it is important to find alternatives to the fishery it, of course, will continue to play a major role in the economy of these provinces. We must take steps now that will allow these important stocks to grow at a sustainable level. No quick or magic solution is available. What is needed is years of prudent conservation oriented management. The temptation to artificially prop up the industry is strong, obviously. However, it would be in no one's interest to do that. The problem we face today has been faced and avoided too often before. If we put off dealing with these problems now they will only return again as they have consistently returned throughout the past.

What I can promise tonight is the commitment of this government to find viable and effective options for those communities and those individuals who have been affected or will be affected. The work of the Stein task force, the Haché task force, the panel of Dr. Harris, will all be important parts of the process determining what action we can take and should take.

In addition to the work of the cabinet committee, my colleagues and I have been actively pursuing the problem of overfishing outside the 200-mile limit of Canada. The Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, known as NAFO, was established in 1977 to ensure that the fisheries in the areas outside Canada's 200-mile limit are harvested in accordance with sound conservation principles. From 1977 until 1986 when Portugal and Spain joined the European community NAFO operated effectively and all members benefited from this co-operation.

There are 12 members of NAFO. The European community is one member. NAFO traditionally reaches decisions by consensus and until recent years that consensus was respected and maintained. The NAFO agreement contains an opting out procedure which enables a member to object to its NAFO quota and to set its own quota instead. Clearly such a procedure was intended for exceptional circumstances since to use it frequently would undermine the whole system of conservation management. If NAFO were to collapse chaos would ensue with every fishing fleet battling for as much as could be caught. Harvesting in those circumstances would become strip mining. There would be no winners.

• (2030)

Every year since 1986 the European community has invoked the exceptional objections procedures and has established its own unilateral quotas at levels often many times higher than those approved by NAFO. Those quotas have been so high that they have never actually been caught. Even so, the actual catches, mainly by Spanish and Portuguese vessels, have far exceeded the European community quotas set by NAFO. Thus the European Commission has abandoned in the north west Atlantic the very conservation principles it applies off its own coast. The problem of overfishing has been exported to the other side of the Atlantic, to our side.

All other members of NAFO, including the U.S.S.R., Japan, Norway, Cuba and eastern European countries, have continued to accept their NAFO quotas and abide by the NAFO conservation regime, sometimes at great sacrifice. Only the European community has resisted doing so in spite of two NAFO resolutions appealing for respect of NAFO decisions. The result, Sir, is a very serious threat to important fisheries stocks, an obvious and an unnecessary threat. Much damage has been done and we are seeing the price that must be paid for that damage here in Canada. The situation can still be remedied, but the point of no return is approaching rapidly.

In the past several months, the Prime Minister, the Minister for International Trade, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and I have put substantial effort into making the European community aware of the serious consequences of overfishing. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition asked the rhetorical question as to whether the Prime Minister has raised the question. Of course he has with the leaders of Spain, with the leaders of Portugal and with the leaders of the European Commission directly. We will continue to do that. We have stressed the importance of consistent conservation rules for the long-term viability of these stocks. This has been done through political pressure and through diplomatic pressure, and it will continue to be done until the problem is resolved.

The Minister for International Trade, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and I have met several of our counterparts in the European member states. In Brussels last week, I took the opportunity to discuss our concerns again with Hans Andriessen, the European Commissioner for External Relations and Trade, and with the Foreign Minister of Portugal, de Deus Pinheiro. We have also done this through a public information campaign in which federal and provincial governments, parliamentarians, industry and labour have all participated. To enhance and co-ordinate those efforts, we designated a special ambassador for marine conservation, Mr. Alan Beesley, who has been leading our campaign since the summer.

We have been able to correct some misconceptions regarding the seriousness of the problem of the fishery in the north west Atlantic and to establish the urgency of addressing these problems. We have made some progress that would not have been made without that kind of pressure.

Mr. Mills: What about the progress?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I will tell you about the progress.

This year, for the first time since 1985, the European community has recommended unilateral quotas which in some cases accept NAFO quotas and in other cases reduce the European community quotas below the level of actual European communicty catches in recent years.

We were particularly interested to note that the commission was proposing a reduction for two flatfish stocks, American plaice and yellow tail flounder, and for one cod stock, 3NO cod on the southern tail of the bank. This is a positive step and is consistent with decisions taken by NAFO.

Unfortunately, however, the proposals of the commission include quotas which far exceed those of NAFO for the 2J3KL cod stock. Some 27,000 tonnes of stradding stock cod are proposed as the unilateral European community quota, as opposed to a quota of zero set by NAFO.

Clearly there is still a long way to go on this problem, and it is essential that Canada continue the discussions with the community on all aspects of fisheries managements and fisheries relations.

While this first step taken by the European community is important and welcomed, I urge the community to take a giant step now and work with all other NAFO members along the difficult but rewarding path of sustainable development, because if they do not, as the Prime Minister has made clear in his representations directly to European leaders, it is not simply Canadian fishermen who suffer. When the stock is depleted regularly as is now the case by overfishing by European nations, it affets the livelihoods and the future of fishermen everywhere. It affects them here directly, of course. It affects them in the community as well.

The problems that we face in the Atlantic Canada fishery are complex and they are difficult, but they are problems that affect the lives of thousand of Canadians and we must alleviate that burden as much as possible.

Over the coming weeks and months, my committee and our officials will continue our work in this direction. We will be continuing our discussions with the provinces on a long-term diversification program in which we expect them to play a full part. We will be providing the short-term adjustment programs that are necessary in these difficult times, and we will be looking into decisions that we can take that will help us to better manage this important resource. We recognize that the effect of this problem upon the lives of Atlantic Canadians is considerable and it is difficult.

I can assure this House that we will do our utmost to ensure the long-term economic security of the affected regions and to ensure also adjustment assistance for the affected individuals.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, as we go into the Christmas season there is a sense of desperation in Canada. It affects many communities. It affects many family homes, many apartments. I would be the first to admit that it does not hit each family in each community, but its grasp is extensive and it affects the lives of many Canadians.

Communities will lose their train service next month, farm families will lose farms that have been in the family for generations, miners in my own community of Lynn Lake will not only lose their severance pay as a result of a mine closing. Towns like Portage la Prairie have not only had the government action of closing down a military base but have also had Campbell's Soup announce that it will be closing its plant as well.

There is desperation for many Canadians who only have short-term jobs and know that they will lose their UI benefits. There is desperation for families who are hard pressed to pay their own bills and who found out on Friday that their children's education is going to have a surcharge put on it, that the government wishes to charge hundreds of dollars to an average student in order to pay for the privatization of the Canada Student Loans Program.

Area of this country that had hope for their own future now see cut-backs in regional development programs, in tourist programs, and in forestry agreements. People are uncertain whether under the free trade agreement this government will ever again help their region or help their industry. People feel that the government is continuing to turn its back on the Canadian people. Nowhere is this more true than in Atlantic Canada and no industry was more directly hit than the fishing industry.

Last week we heard question in the House about the closure of National Sea Products, one of the two largest fishing corporations in Canada. It announced a series of plant closures that will affect 1,500 workers and their families in Atlantic Canada. The plant in St. John's, Newfoundland will be closed and will eliminate 492 jobs. The facility at Canso will close throwing 742 people out of work. This processing facility is the largest single employer in that community. The plant in North Sydney, Nova Scotia, will be converted to a salt-fish operation with a job loss of 280.

Earlier in the year, the National Sea Plant at Lockeport, Nova Scotia, was closed with a job loss of 220 people. Another 150 jobs were lost when the Port Mouton facility of Clearwater Fine Foods closed in March, while another 100 plant workers in New Wave Fisheries found themselves unemployed when their plant closed. That is the action so far and we are now awaiting the Fisheries Products International announcements which are also expected to be very devastating to Atlantic Canada.

One of the most upsetting things about listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs speak earlier today was the appearance that this was a new problem, the kind of feeling that he was trying to give people in Atlantic Canada and people in the House that they set up a committee six months ago because they discovered there was something new, something which was very damaging to the Atlantic Canadian fishing industry. Nothing could be further from the truth.

• (2040)

We have known for years that the fishing industry was in jeopardy. As far back as 1981, when the government through its own report Resource Prospects for Canada's Atlantic Fisheries, 1981-1987 allowed for a projected increase in the resource, it stated the following:

> While 1981 predictions are based largely on formal calculations—projections of stock status in later years are to considerable extent best guesses, based on inadequate knowledge.

No action was taken. In 1982 the Kirby report, while projecting a northern cod stock viable enough to have a total allowable catch for 1987 set at 380,000 tonnes, contained the following statement:

> A reliance on growth cannot be sustained indefinitely and in many stocks the biological limits of prudent harvesting have been reached, or nearly so.

Again no action was taken, except that Kirby went to the Senate.

In 1987 the federal government commissioned the Alverson report which examined the trends of the cod stocks off Newfoundland. This report warned, and again I quote:

> Estimates of the growth in the total stock may have been overly optimistic and—has not reach expected levels.

Again no action was taken.

Finally in early 1988 there was the Canada–Newfoundland Inshore Fisheries Agreement which contained the following:

> With few exception the fishery resources of the Atlantic have reached their maximum utilization and in some cases there is an indication that overexploitation is occurring.

Again no action was taken.

There have been years and years of Liberal and Tory governments, years and years of government reports, and years and years of Liberal and Tory inaction on a very important process.

Mr. Milliken: Years and years of NDP whining.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, one of the Liberals sitting in his little box back there says that we were whining. Yes, we were whining. We were complaining about Liberal inaction just like we are complaining about Conservative inaction now.

It comes to the same issue when it comes to foreign overfishing. It is nice for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to get up and say that we have had a special high ranking commission, with he himself as the head of it and with senior cabinet ministers, that has been meeting for six months. In addition we have officials, all of a very senior level, and they have been meeting for six months. Why were they not doing something when this was a problem four, five and six years ago?

The problems that Atlantic Canada faces now in the fishing industry are not new. They are not something which occurred six months ago. The overfishing is not something that occurred six months ago. The only thing new is that now government is trying to do something to save its own political rump, while Atlantic Canadians are losing their jobs and their homes.

There are things that could have been done and there are things that can be done now. In Iceland, for example, there is a program to make sure that there is no overfishing in the spawning season. We have a spawning season in Atlantic Canada for the cod, which is basically mid–March to mid–May. Why do we not have a similar program in place? Why was this not in place not six months ago but six years ago? Why has that not happened? When is the government finally going to announce that we will have a similar program in this country?

Again, with all the concern that we have as Canadians about our lack of ability to have adequate surveillance off the Atlantic coast, why has the Government of Canada announced this year that the work of the Tracker aircraft will be suspended in that region? Why is it, in the same year that a Canadian destroyer cannot adequately protect our shores, the government is not announcing something to ensure that we can have the necessary surveillance both by ship and by air of our Atlantic fisheries?

Again, this is a government that has prided itself on environmental assessments, saying it is necessary for every major undertaking of the government. Why have we not had a full environmental assessment of the process by which quotas and allocations of our fish resources are set? Why has that not been done? These are not new ideas. These are ideas that the government could have been acting on for years.

Why have we not had Canadian leadership to fight the foreign overfishing off our coasts? Why have we always reacted? Why have we reacted to the lobster decision? Why have we allowed Portugal and Spain continuously to overfish in our areas and off our 200–mile limit?

We listened to the government. We sense that government members really do not have a plan. With each and every decision, whether it is by National Sea or by Fisheries Products International, we get the sense that all of this was a surprise, that they did not know the decision was going to come down, and that they did not know the Americans were going to make the decision on the lobsters. Yet, they have reports in the Deparment of Fisheries and Oceans which indicate that they knew what the American decision was going to be. For that matter, from the department's own report, they actually defend the upcoming American decision with regard to the lobsters:

> For conservation reasons, the U.S. government is trying to increase the size of lobster that can be caught or imported into the United States.

This government, in its own report, knew what was coming. You would never know it from the reaction of the Minister for International Trade who shouted once the decision was finally made that the full weight and influence of the Canadian government will be brought to bear on the U.S. Congress and the U.S. administration in an attempt to settle this very serious problem in the interests of our fishermen in eastern Canada.

We are waiting to see what reaction is. The people of Atlantic Canada are wondering why there was no protection earlier. Obviously the Department of Fisheries and Oceans knew that this was going to happen.

The same thing is true with regard to the situation with Spanish and Portuguese overfishing. Why do we continue to pretend that this is a new problem? Why do we continue to pretend that the first time ever we have to go to Spain or we have to go to Portugal to deal with this matter?

We have known about it for years. If it is this most recent government or the government that preceded it, it has basically been a program of reaction, a lack of any leadership, a lack of any planning.

I mentioned in my opening remarks there is a sense that the Canadian government has turned its back on many Canadians and that is especially true in Atlantic Canada. When you see your train service going and you see your fisheries going; when you realize tourist programs are not being renewed; when you see that the government cuts back on its own touted Atlantic Canada Development Agency; when you see forestry agreements not being renewed; or agreements when they are renewed, such as the tourist agreement, have only half as much money put into them; when you know that you can no long afford to send your children to university and the government says "go get a student loan and we will charge you a surcharge on that now," costing as I mentioned earlier, hundreds and hundreds of dollars to an average family; when you get that happening time after time, day after day, how can people in Atlantic Canada say that the federal government is going to represent them?

How people in Atlantic Canada say that their members of Parliament from that region really are concerned with the decisions that are made in cabinet? How can any Atlantic Canadian feel that this Parliament and this government is addressing his or her concerns?

• (2050)

I have received more phone calls today on this issue after it became known that I would be speaking for our caucus, than I have on a number of other issues over the last few months. There is a real desperation out there and without all the political rhetoric there is a real need for real government action to make people in Atlantic Canada feel that we care and that government is going to do something more than hold a committee for a mere six months.

Mr. Reid: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think you will find that there have been discussions and that all sides would consent to allowing the debate to proceed past midnight so that all members can be heard on such a particularly serious issue and an issue of such great concern to all Canadians.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, as the spokesman for the Official Opposition, I confirm that we would extend the hours as the parliamentary secretary has indicated.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Will the ministers speak?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member for South West Nova would leave it to others who have been designated to assist the Speaker.

I recognize the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say that we in the New Democratic Party would be more than willing to co–operate on this most important matter and to indicate that our leader will be speaking later in the debate when she returns from the west coast.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it is with gravity and emotion that I rise this evening to address a matter of the utmost importance for Atlantic Canada and indeed for the country as a whole, that is the crisis of the Atlantic fishery. That industry employs 10 per cent of Atlantic Canada's workforce, contributes millions to the Gross Provincial Product of the four Atlantic provinces, sustains hundreds of coastal communities and is a way of life for thousands of families throughout our region, a way of life which is now in peril.

I want to begin by expressing my sincere thanks to Your Honour for granting this emergency debate and thereby raising the profile of this issue to the top of the national agenda. My colleagues from Newfoundland, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island will speak to the dimensions of the crisis in their provinces. I will focus my remarks on Nova Scotia and in particular on the town of Canso.

The town of Canso is located at the eastern apex of mainland Nova Scotia and has been the heart of the fishing industry in that area for nearly 400 years. The communities which surround Canso have been dependent upon the fishery, on inshore fishery and on the offshore fishery, for generations. The Canso plant, now known as the National Sea Products plant, has through successive ownerships sustained an industry and an economy stretching from Canso all the way to Antigonish. It is the main employer in that area.

A week ago, National Sea Products Limited announced the closure of its fish processing plant and its trawler port thereby directly affecting some 800 to 850 workers. If the decision is not reversed, a $1 million monthly payroll will dry up. Local services which depend on the fishery will be crippled. The town and county, faced with the loss of its tax base, will be unable to cope. The closure of the National Sea Products plan in Canso, if it is not averted, will mean the devastation of not only the town of Canso but of the entire county of Guysborough and much of eastern Nova Scotia.

I was in Canso on the weekend, I spoke with workers at the National Sea Products plant. I spoke with trawler workers, those hardy souls who pursue their livelihoods on the stormy seas of the north Atlantic. Across the street I met with Cansonians doing their pre-Christmas shopping at the co-op store. I met with the mayor, Mr. Ray White, and members of his council on the prospects for the town and surrounding communities in light of the National Sea Products decision. Mayor White and the warden of Guysborough County, Herman Long, have travelled to Ottawa to attend this debate and are in the gallery tonight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): They and the council of the town of Canso want to underscore the importance of this industry to their future.

The reaction of Cansonians to the National Sea announcement has been one of disbelief. They do not believe that a company which as recently as a month ago praised the workforce at its Canso plant and on its trawlers would suddenly close the entire operation. They cannot believe that a community which has survived on fishing for 400 years, a community where no other conceivable economic alternatives exist, would permanently shut down because of a temporary depletion of fish stocks.

That National Sea Products would choose to pull out of Canso and close its other Atlantic plants after spending millions of its recent profits to acquire a vast international empire, including processing plants in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, in the United States, is unbelievable to the people of Canso.

What Cansonians find most difficult to believe or what they cannot accept is a Canadian government, which purports to speak for all Canadians, which is a shareholder in this company, and which has known for months that the situation facing the Atlantic fishery, has so quietly acquiesced to this corporate decision.

The crisis facing the Atlantic fishery was not begun with these recent announcements of plant closures by National Sea Products. The writing has been on the wall for many months. Little has been done to offset this crisis.

When questioned on the matter, the government has always evaded the issue by stating the facts and figures of scientific studies which have been proven to be an inaccurate measure at best. Then they stalled by saying that they are waiting for the reports of Harris and Haché.

It is fine to have independent studies done, but why have they not come up with a strategy for saving this important industry? As usual, the cart is before the horse with this government and the blame falls on poor leadership and mismanagement by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The government response to the plant closures announced by the Minister for International Trade in St. John's last Monday, and echoed I presume by the Nova Scotia minister in Canso, is a slap in the face to the workers who have invested their lives in this industry.

What is new about telling workers they will be able to qualify for UI? What is new in that? What is new in telling them that they can be retrained for some other industry? What is new in that? What is new in telling them that they can retire early? What is new in telling them that they can leave Canso and find jobs in some other industries elsewhere? That is not a response to an urgent crisis.

The response of the Minister of Fisheries is even more contemptible. He says the fishing industry is fine. His response to the workers is: "Don't worry! Be happy". They are worried in Canso and they are not happy. They are worried about their future and they are worried about the loss of their livelihood.

Phyllis MacDonald spoke for all fish plant workers in Canso when she told me on Saturday: "I've worked for ten years at this plant. I'm trained to process fish. I'm good at what I do. I don't want to be trained for something else. I don't want UI. I just want to work."

• (2100)

Canso has become a symbol. It is a symbol of the neglect of Atlantic Canada by this government. It is a symbol of the insensitivity of this government to the regions of this country. And it is a symbol of the gross mismanagement by this government of the Atlantic fishery.

How else can one explain the sudden revelation that fish stocks throughout Atlantic Canada are seriously depleted? Who has been managing these stocks for the last four years? Who is responsible for licensing and regulating fishermen and fishing vessels? Who determines where and how much can be fished? Who monitors and collects information on fish landings and on fishing activity? Who polices, or does not police, illegal overfishing by foreign vessels in Canadian waters? Who has been issuing foreign licences to foreign factory-freezer trawlers from Russia, Spain, Portugal, Poland, from everywhere? Who has turned a blind eye while the mid-shore dragger fleet off the Scotia shelf suddenly tripled in capacity at the same time as stocks in this area and in Georges Bank were being decimated? If this is not mismanagement, Madam Speaker, then what is it?

This government talks about diversification. It promises a community development fund to wean fishing communities off fishing and onto other activities. But who can believe the government when it slashes regional development spending in Atlantic Canada, when it pulls out of towns like Summerside after promising the moon during the election campaign and when the minister for ACOA announces in Port Hawkesbury, two weeks before the election, that Thyssen of Germany will invest $58 million and create 500 jobs in the Strait of Canso area, and a year later nothing has happened?

The people of Canada are fed up with empty Tory promises. This government, unable to come up with solutions of its own to the messes that it has created with its policies, is constantly asking the opposition, and in particular the Liberals, for solutions. Well here are some solutions.

Begin by lowering interest rates and the value of the Canadian dollar, a policy which is crippling the export industries of the Atlantic region. Sit down and, in return for a package of assistance, oblige National Sea and Fishery Products International to spread out its quota among Atlantic plants so that towns like Canso, with an historic attachment to the fishery and no alternatives, can continue to survive and stay in the fishery until fish stocks improve. Find innovative markets and uses for under-utilized species, encourage Canadian fleets to catch these species and process them in Canadian, not foreign, plants. Put in place stock-management programs that make sense and that provide benefits to Canadians, not to foreign governments.

I recognize that the Atlantic fishery must continue to be economically viable and that to force companies like National Sea Products and Fishery Products International into bankruptcy would not contribute to its health. However, the Government of Canada can never forget that the fishery belongs to the people of Canada to be managed for the benefit of Canadians, in particular Canadians in Canada's coastal communities who depend with a larger stake in the Atlantic fishery, with a more legitimate claim to this resource, than the town of Canso and the surrounding villages of eastern Nova Scotia. They must not be allowed to die.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, to paraphrase my colleague who just spoke, the Government of Canada will not forget the communities of Atlantic Canada and does not overlook the fact that the fish stocks of Atlantic Canada belong to Canadians, but especially to those of Atlantic Canada who have depended on them for their sustenance and livelihoods for centuries.

I understand the intensity that the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso brings to this debate and I compliment him on requesting that this debate be held this evening. I listened carefully to his comments. Having grown up in a small coal-mining town myself and having seen a succession of mine closings I think I can personally feel the hurt, the anxiety and the frustrations that are being experienced in communities like Canso as we approach the holiday period.

I recognize that Mayor White and an alderman from Canso are in the House tonight. I have had the privilege of visiting communities like Canso, Black Tickle and Meteghan up and down the coast of Atlantic Canada. I know that there is no option that the fishery, particularly the inshore fishery and the fish plants, is really what give people an adequate income in a situation where they can properly raise their children and look forward with confidence and optimism toward the future. So I do not take lightly any of the contributions that have been made this evening to this point and I will listen with great interest to the balance of the speeches this evening.

I think we all feel a special admiration for men and women that go down to sea and we must share their sadness when tragedy strikes, as occurred last week when the Johnny and Sisters II sank in a fierce storm, losing Captain Harry Thorneburn and eight men of the crew, including his son. I think all members of the House would want to send our heartfelt regrets to the families of these lost fishermen.

The problems of the Atlantic fishery are not problems that have just sprung upon us. Were I sitting on the opposition side I would probably be as wont to finding simplistic excuses or criticisms to offer. These problems have been a fact of the fishery for as long as it has been conducted but have become increasingly difficult in these times when we have modern, sophisticated industries and technology allowing us to sell a very valuable product into an international marketplace where we are very vulnerable to the swings of supply and demand and exchange rates.

Even more seriously, we are constantly faced with the increasing advancement of technology and the ability to find fish wherever they are, to put large nets in their path and to harvest them in abundant quantities. Coupled with that, we have to face the real problem that our science is not as highly developed as it ought to be because there are many things that defy the ability of scientists to make accurate predictions about the magnitude of the fish stocks.

I want to point out for the benefit of members that the life cycle of the Atlantic cod being eight years plus makes it very difficult to learn about the first two or three years of that life cycle in order to be able to predict the abundance and set quotas for that stock from five to ten years after it was originally spawned.

We have developed a very elaborate system over the past 15 years, at least since the extension of jurisdiction, to involve all of the interested parties, all of those whose future hinges on the health of the fishery to be a part of the quota-setting process.

• (2110)

So we have an elaborate system of consultation which involves the input of scientific advice produced by our scientists who we believe are among the world's finest. They present, through the Canadian Atlantic Fishery Scientific Advisory Committee, quota proposals based, as I conceded a few moments ago, on an inadequate understanding of how many fish lurk beneath the surface of the sea and how they are managing in terms of food supply, in terms of water temperature and currents and the presence of predators. We take this scientific advice and we then sit down with all of the industry groups each autumn through a structure called the Atlantic Groundfish Advisory Committee and together with scientists and officials discuss what the quotas should be for the coming year.

That consultation culminates in a meeting each December between myself and the Atlantic provincial fisheries ministers at which the proposed groundfish management plan is further discussed and at which time I try to seek the support of the four maritime ministers, the Newfoundland minister and the Minister of Fisheries for Quebec as we finalize a document which contains the proposed quotas for some 50 groundfish stocks in Atlantic Canada.

This process has evolved, as I mentionned, over some 10 to 15 years and it represents the finest example of consultation in reaching decisions which contribute to the orderly and sustainable management of a finite resource. The policies within which those decisions are taken are modified as a result of suggestions from the Atlantic Regional Council. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, in another incarnation, created this policy advisory group which helps us to decide the forms of policy by which the Atlantic fishery is managed.

All of this to say that the question of what went wrong is not simply a matter of accusing or laying the blame at the feet of any particular individual or agency of government. This is a complex process and one which has improved and evolved. I think it was the member for Selkirk who made some helpful suggestions of things we should be doing to better assess the environmental sustainability, I think was how he put it, of these precious stocks of fish. In fact, that is what we have been doing. For some two to three years now we have been working to improve our knowledge of this resource and the means by which we predict the quotas.

I would like to just list a few of the things that I have been privileged to initiate in the more than four years that I have been Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and to state that we would not have taken these initiatives if we were not concerned about the future stability and integrity of the Atlantic groundfish industry.

In January, 1986, at an Atlantic Council of Fisheries Ministers meeting in St. John's we tackled the problem of foreign fishing within and beyond the Canadian 200–mile limit. As a result of that and numerous meetings that I have held with Atlantic provincial ministers, we announced a new policy in June of that year which involved the re–arming of our fisheries patrol vessels, an increase in fines under the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act from a level of $50,000 for a summary offence to over $500,000. We introduced armed boarding parties. We apprehended and pursued vessels half way across the Atlantic and beyond. As a result of the intensification of our enforcement against foreign vessels that would violate our fishing zone, we saw in the subsequent years, 1987 and beyond, a substantial decline in the number of sightings of and alleged offences by these foreign vessels. We introduced full observer coverage on all foreign vessels fishing within our waters.

Another important initiative that we decided was that no longer should the right to fish our precious, non–surplus cod stocks in Canadian waters be tied to some kind of market access consideration. We said the only quotas available within our waters would be of surplus stocks, that is, those which were not of interest to the Canadian fishing industry. We said the countries, in most cases members of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, which qualify for these quotas would, in turn, have to exhibit good behaviour in terms of meeting our conservation requirements. We introduced increased aerial surveillance, with both fixed–wing aircraft and helicopters, in both the Newfoundland and the Scotia—Fundy region.

One of the most important initiatives of all that I recall taking arose from my visits to small inshore communities in Newfoundland in the summer of 1986, and then Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador in the summer of 1987. I listed to fishermen. I visited them at the wharves early in the morning to learn that they were extremely alarmed and troubled by the shrinking size and the disappearance of the inshore cod that they had been traditionally accustomed to catching.

I was troubled by this to the extent that we took major initiatives early in 1987 to end the practice of discarding young fish at sea and to placing observers on our domestic offshore vessels when they were fishing in areas where the cod would be spawning at that time of year. We introduced stiff penalties for the discard and wastage of young northern cod and required that the fishing effort be spread out among the three sub–regions known as 2J, 3K and 3L. This had some initial effect, we believe, in helping the inshore fishery to begin to recover as it appeared to do in 1988.

But when I returned in the summer of 1987 the fishermen were still alarmed. They felt that the quotas which had been set in the mid to late 1980s as a result of the projections of scientific advice in the late 1970s and the advice of the people who advised the Kirby Task Force apparently were too high. The inshore fishermen banded together and created a group called the Newfoundland Inshore Fisheries Association and demanded that we set the quota lower. Contrary to scientific advice, I set the quota lower and at the same time I commissioned a group of eminent international scientists headed up by Dr. Lee Alverton of the University of Washington, Dr. Pope of the University of Lowestoft in Britain and other acknowledged experts to find out whether our scientists were properly predicting the abundance of the northern cod stock.

As we look back now we can see that those were the beginnings of a process which has led to a much more accurate means of predicting the abundance of cod stocks. The age classifications and the survival rate of each age group is much more carefully taken into account. The result was that the scientific advice presented for northern cod last winter suggested that our quotas had been far too high, that the overly optimistic notion that we could extract some 400,000 metric tonnes of cod from the northern cod resource was vastly exaggerated and that we would have to lower the quota to about half of that and perhaps even less still.

• (2120)

In February of 1989, early this year, I had to take the difficult choice, notwithstanding all of the consultation and all the advice we had received, of reducing that quota temporarily to 235,000 metric tonnes. I commissioned Dr. Les Harris, President of Memorial University; Dr. Alverson, other scientists and other leaders of the Newfoundland fishing industry to re-examine this whole question as to whether we were using the proper scientific methodology to predict the abundance of these stocks.

I am elaborating on this because the member for Selkirk seemed to suggest that we should be doing some kind of a comprehensive environmental study of this resource. In fact, that is the process that has been evolving for three years. We are trying to find the cause of the problem to fix it. I am sorry to say that our findings are not producing popular results. In fact, there are many people who do not want to believe the scientists and do not want to believe these international experts. Those who have made investments predicated on a continuing healthy offshore fishery have now had to re-assess those decisions.

We have all had to re-assess the size of this industry in terms of the capacity that was encouraged by the restructuring of 1982 and 1983, by a royal commission of inquiry at that time, by the pouring of tens of millions of dollars into creating and industry predicated upon certain expectations about the abundance of the resource only to find, as we have suspected for some time, that the resource cannot sustain the levels which had been envisaged for it.

Something has gone wrong in the projections of the resource but all is not disaster in the Atlantic fishery because we have some 50 stocks of Atlantic groundfish producing over 850,000 metric tonnes of abundance. We have the problem of an excessively high price for cod block in 1987 which collapsed in 1988. We have the problem of a declining appetite for fish in the large United States market which is important. Most of all, we have the problem of communities dependent on fish plants which are the very heart and soul of those communities.

We have to find solutions through the package of economic measures which have been described in this House this evening and last week and which we will elaborate upon in the coming days. No amount of economic assistance, no tens of millions of dollars will restore the self-respect, the sense of pride, the sense of fulfilment and happiness that we wish for all Canadians at this time of year.

I hope through the findings that I have described tonight, this new scientific advice, through measures we are taking to tighten up on the overcapacity in the industry, through increased fines under the Fisheries Act for domestic violation, and through the initiatives to end the blatant foreign destruction of our stocks beyond our 200-mile limit, that we can create a greater sense of optimism about the fishery of the future.

It troubles me no end that we have something in the order of 325,000 to 350,000 tonnes of very fine protein in the water of Atlantic Canada which our Canadian industry is not interested in catching; whether this be in the form of redfish, turbot, Greenland halibut, capelin or other species. Under the international law of the sea and Canada's international obligations, if Canadian interests—fishermen and investors—are not willing to harvest that resource, other nations, in this case through the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization, have an opportunity to ask our permission to harvest it. It does not belong to Canada but as the coastal state we have first refusal on it.

Last year some 160,000 of those surplus species were allocated to Canadian companies and something less than 50,000 tonnes were harvested. There is a surplus there of about 120,000 tonnes of these species which I believe we can further develop and further exploit for the benefit of communities such as Canso, St. John's and others.

I am not saying that this is the solution to all of these problems but we are putting together a pool of these under-utilized species, and I believe that with the kind of assistance available through the Community Development Program and the economic diversification initiatives that this government will be funding we can help some enterprises in some of these communities to find ways to harvest that significant amount of Canadian resource which, for many years, has been left in the water or given away to the foreigners. In fact, we could claim the full 325,000 or 350,000 tonnes if we could make it work for us.

That is the commitment that I am making together with a commitment for additional measures to bring the capacity growth under control, to create a fishery in which we all show more responsibility toward the resource. In a more personal sense, we need to create a future, to create an industry and to add diversification to that industry in the communities such as Canso and Lockeport and other which have not yet been named to ensure that ther is a continuation of a strong and healthy fishery in their futures.

I ask all members of this House to try to understand the complexity of the issue but yet to share with me the optimism that the problem can be solved for the greater good of all Atlantic Canadians.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the parties and there is an agreement that, at least in so far as the members of the Official Opposition are concerned, speeches from this point on by members of the Official Opposition will be limited to 10 minutes each. So we would have two 10-minute segments for each member of the Official Opposition recognized.

The government may wish to do that in so far as members on that side are concerned after the speech of the Minister for International Trade. The New Democrats may choose to do so after their Leader has spoken.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the proposition put by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. I take it that there is agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. LeBlanc) for persevering in his request for this emergency debate. I also wish to thank the Speaker of the House who approved this request. It is a sign that the Chair has fully understood the seriousness of the situation. There are more than enough problems in the fisheries, whether we are talking about the Atlantic, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, eastern Quebec and New Brunswick, or about the West Coast, with the salmon and herring fishery. We also have problems with pollution in certain waterways on the coast of British Columbia. We have problems in the Artic fishery. We have problems in the Great Lakes. We have problems across Canada, but we have one major problem, and that is that our fisheries have no one to defend them. We saw an example of that this evening. When it is time to talk about the fisheries and to provide solutions, who rises in the House to talk about the fisheries ? The Minister of External Affairs (Mr. Clark). That is the problem. Because the Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has been given a free rein to visit foreign countries and conclude all kinds of agreements, we have lost the fisheries. The Minister is simply out to lunch as far as the fisheries are concerned. That is our major problem.

• (2130)

Mr. Speaker, to get back to the Atlantic region, what we are now seeing is a major crisis. For us, in the Atlantic region, it means our economic base is crumbling. Our cod stocks are disappearing. We are faced with overfishing by foreign fleets and a government that refuses to act, a government that lets everything pass. We have been hit by unilateral action taken by the Americans, a decision that restricts exports of lobsters to the United States. The crab season has been a real disaster. There again, stocks are exhausted, which has a particular impact on New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

In New Brunswick and elsewhere, we have been hearing about plant closures, which in some cases, especially in Canso, will cause an entire community to disappear. The community will close down. And what does the government do? What does the government say? Not much! And the worst of it is that the government is siding with the big corporations instead of defending the interests of fishermen and plant workers. What the government fails to understand is that the fish stocks in the sea are there for all Canadians and for the communities that depend on them. So far, this government has refused to protect this resource for those communities. The government has preferred to listen to the corporations which want to do what suits them and transfer fish stocks from one location to the other. In the case of Canso, the whole economic base will disappear. There will be nothing left in that part of the province. We have a government that promises assistance, assistance that has yet to materialize, although the plant closures have already been announced. Those are a few of the reasons why I support the motion by the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso. This perseverance is truly admirable.

Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words about the serious impact of this crisis on the fishery in New Brunswick. I realize that my colleagues from other provinces will consider the specific impact on their respective provinces.

We in New Brunswick sympathize with other Atlantic communities because we know what it means to lose a community's only source of income. I would like to quote what was said by the hon. Denis Losier, New Brunswick Minister of Fisheries and Aquaculture, who stated: "New Brunswick's economy will lose as much as $130 million this year because of declining snow crab stocks and the low prices offered for lobster and herring roe".

The snow crab fishery is in trouble. We had a terrible season last spring, catches were very low and quality was poor. A number of communities have been affected, including Caraquet, Shippegan, Cap-Pelé and Shediac. Some examples: Chaleur Bay Packers closed down in Bas-Caraquet; 160,000 people are out of work. Three hundred people lost their jobs when Connors Brothers closed in Shippegan; 250 jobs were lost at L. Gauthier and Sons in Shippegan. The situation has taken on crisis proportions, and this is just in the snow crab industry.

Now a few words about herring roe. Here again, the season was a disaster, not because there wasn't enough fish, but because prices were so low, it wasn't worth the effort.

And now about lobster. Last summer in my riding, fishermen were practically giving the lobster away. They were selling it for $1.50 a pound. Why? Because the packers were stuck with big inventories. Why were they stuck with big inventories? Because our lobster was too expensive for the American market. They were too expensive because the Canadian dollar was too high as result of this government's high interest rate policy. The government refuses to budge. Our lobster is no longer competitive on American markets. We are losing our export markets.

An Hon. Member: Not true!—

Mr. Robichaud: Not true—Tell that to the people of New Brunswick! Tell that to the packers! Just look at the inventory they have. Just try and sell lobster to the United States. You can' sell it. You'll have to give it away.

[English]

Madam Speaker, as if we did not have enough problems, the Americans have given us some more. They came up with legislation that will limit the import of lobsters to the United States. This will affect about $30 million worth of lobsters.

This means that we will have to process that lobster. We will not be able to sell it live on the American market. Why? Because the Americans decided to bring in a regulation that limits those exports, after the Prime Minister said that he would do everything to stop that measure from going through. What did he do? Well, we do not know. We know that whatever he tried did not work.

And what do we hear from this government?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I have come to the end of my speech. We would like to see a far more positive reaction from this government. The government has to act aggressively. It must be prepared to do some serious funding. It must ensure that funding is available to promote the use of under-utilized species. It must help fishermen make the necessary adjustments to be able to catch those species. It must also help the processors and the plants to change their equipment so they can process these fish.

The government must also make and effort on the marketing end, to promote species that will no longer be under-utilized, species that our fishermen will be able to catch.

Finally, Madam Speaker, this government must provide assistance to communities and help them through this crisis, so that as soon as fish stocks have been rebuilt, these communities will still be able to make a living from the fishery.

• (2140)

[English]

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, I understand that by virtue of a prior agreement I have only 10 minutes to speak on behalf of—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will try to be helpful to hon. members who are sharing a 20-minute period.

If one hon. member takes 12 or 13 minutes, to be fair to everyone in the House I will have to cut the other member short after seven minutes. I will try to be helpful to hon. members and let whoever has the floor know when there is a minute left in the 10-minute period. After that I will have to cut short the intervention in order to be fair to everyone.

Mr. Simmons: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As I was saying, I have only 10 minutes to make some points on behalf of no fewer than 16,000 or 17,000 fishermen and plant workers who live in the riding of Burin—St. George's. I understand the reason for the agreement and I respect it because so many people in the Official Opposition want to speak on this very important issue.

First, let me deal with a very important specific that has come up already in this debate. I hear members of the NPD with their fairly limited knowledge of fishery from the perspective of that great ocean-going fishing port of Churchill tell us that it is not a new problem. No, it is not a new problem, and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans says it is not a new problem. But it is a problem that has taken a new twist in the last few years.

When we talk about overfishing I invite members to look at the figures. The overfishing began in 1985 and 1986, after this government took office and after it sent out a very different signal to the foreigners than was being sent out by previous governments. The basic signal being sent out by this government is, "Rape my fish, but love me. As long as you love me, as long as you smile at me, what difference about the livelihoods of fishermen and plant workers?"

My friend from St. John's East, myself and others were in Portugal in November of this year. We had the Director General of Fisheries, Dr. daBreto, look across the table at us. He said to us in the fall of this year, in November, "If the overfishing problem is as serious as you fellows say it is, why are we only hearing about it now?" Why did it take four years to realize that maybe the minister of fisheries, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister for International Trade, should saunter over to Europe and tell the boys and girls over there, we have a problem? Yes, we have a problem, a problem these people created by not sending out a signal that they were going to fight for the fishermen and the plant workers of Atlantic Canada.

Now we have another problem. It is not called the overfishing problem, it is the underfishing problem. The ever-accommodating minister of fisheries took time from his busy schedule to rush into cabinet one day last month to say, "Look, our good friends the French have not caught quite enough fish, I think we owe them a few bucks". He then goes and pays them $456,000 and has the gall in the process to say it is because they have reduced quota. I know he has his usual good academic explanations for this, but it is another example of his not knowing what side he is on or who he is fighting for.

I am glad he spoke because he gave us what must be the best academic discourse we have had in a long time. What was lacking from that minister tonight, as is always lacking, is something in the gut, some feeling for the fishermen and plant workers he is supposed to be fighting for.

If the government is looking for suggestions—and I noticed my good friend from St. John's West is writing very hastily over there—why does he not put down this one as a first step? Step one, get rid of the minister of fisheries. Take over the job yourself, boy. At least you know what it is all about. You know one end of a fish from the other. At least you will have something in the gut for those people down there. God help us if you do not have any more in the gut than you had for your own people in St. John's last week, though, when you stood by and let the facility down there be shut down.

The minister of fisheries tells us that he believes in the future of the fishery, that it is going to be a stable fishery. He should compare notes with the fellow who spoke before him, the Secretary of State for External Affairs who was talking about diversification. That is a fancy term for saying we are going to have the fishermen do something else other than fish.

What is it they are going to do in Ramea, an island off the south coast of Newfoundland. Are they going to have a chocolate bar factory there, maybe, for them? How about a car plant on the island where Gaultois is located, on the south coast of Newfoundland? Maybe there could be a bit of agriculture in Habour Breton, if you can find room to get the roots down between the rocks. Maybe we will move the Canadian Mint to Grand Bank. That ought to do the job. And what are you going to move to Fortune, to Burin, to Marystown and to Burgeo? How about St. Lawrence, Rose Blanche, Codroy, and Belleoram? You are going to need a lot of diversification.

I have a better idea. Why do you not have these people do what they know how to do well? Why go through the handstands of diversifying, of training, of retraining? These people split fish very well. They catch it very well. And if as the academic the minister of fisheries tell us, it is only a matter of time before the scientists get this thing in hand, and if it is all going to bounce back in four or five years, then does it not make some sense to you, Madam Speaker, that we ought to preserve our facilities, keep the skills in those communities so that when the fish stocks rebound there will be people there to catch the fish, to process the fish, to get a livelihood from the fish, to continue the way of life that they have had for four or five centuries on that particular coast? Why diversify? Why not find something, maybe a share of the paying process? Maybe we cannot have all the plants operate 12 months around. These people have said community by community that they are prepared to have something less than a full loaf during the short term for the next four or five years.

If the government wants a plan of action, I have a plan of action for it. And it is not fancy words like "diversification". It is the suggestion that it draw on the strengths of those people.

What this government needs to do is to go out and take the initiative, with a bit of seed money, and undo that terrible decision of National Sea last week as it affects St. John's, North Sydney and Canso and forestall the decision that we hear FPI is about to let drop on us in some of the communities that I mentioned a few moments ago. Find a bit of seed money.

Do you know why the government cannot do that? Because just as it sold down the river is landing rights on the British Columbia coast and sold down the river its option to do anything for the lobster fishermen in Atlantic Canada, it has also sold down the river to the Americans under the free trade agreement the ability to subsidize a bit, to shore up this industry a bit, at this particular time.

This is what puts the lie to the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that this has nothing to do with free trade. This has everything to do with free trade. The government's response or lack of response, its mealy-mouthedness talking about diversification and so on and so forth is uncoded, an admission that because of the free trade agreement the government is now leaving 16,000, or most of them, fishermen and plant workers in my riding, plus tens of thousands of other fishermen and plant workers throughout Atlantic Canada, dangling. Why? Because our friend the Prime Minister had to choose between Ronald Reagan and George Bush and some fishermen. And guess who he chose, one more time?

It is not fair. It is not good enough. I see the gentleman from St. John's West is getting in gear. When he gets up, after he gets through with the bafflegab and waving his arms, I want him to respond to my suggestion. If the stocks are going to rebound, as his colleagues have been telling us all night, will he in the interim put to cabinet the idea that the limit of stocks ought to be shared among the several plants to help them continue do do what they do well until the stocks do rebound? Will he do that for us.

• (2150)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself tonight to the people who may be watching, in particular those from the district of St. John's West, Trepassey, St. Marys Bay, St. Joseph's—

Mr. Tobin: You'll need all the saints to save you after this.

Mr. Crosbie: —from Peter's River, Fermeuse, St. John's from elsewhere in Newfoundland because we do have a serious problem, and not for the first time in the Atlantic fishery.

The last time we had a severe problem it was caused by human mistakes. The crisis of 1981 to 1983 was caused by record high interest rates, by double digit inflation, all during the time of the previous Liberal government. That is what induced our last fisheries crisis in eastern Canada. That compares to the fisheries crisis that we have today, which is not caused by anything this government has done or not done. It is caused by a lack of fish, as reported to us with a changed estimate by our scientists earlier this year.

The brilliant analysis is this. Our problem is caused by the fact that we no longer have fish in the water in sufficient quantities to feed the plants that are in trouble now or may be in trouble in the next several months. The fish are no longer there. Why are they no longer there? I do not know why they are no longer there, but I know this. Last year, 1988, the fishery scientists of the Government of Canada said that the total allowable catch for northern cod could properly be 295,000 tonnes. I know that we set the total allowable catch in 1988 at 265,000 tonnes to make sure that we were not taking too much fish.

I know this too, Mr. Speaker. In January and February of this year the same scientists came along and told the Government of Canada that the northern cod fish stock was not as they had thought it was, but that this year, 1989, we could take only 125,000 tonnes fish as our total allowable catch, a reduction from 295,0000 tonnes to 125,000 tonnes, which is a reduction of 170,000 tonnes in just a few months in the estimates by our scientists of what we could take. That is what has caused this present situation.

We set the total allowable catch at 235,000 tonnes this year. Why? Because we were not going to wipe out the whole eastern Canadian fishery on the whims of scientists who one year say that it is safe to take 295,000 tonnes and the next year tell you that you can only take 125,000 tonnes. Whole communities, whole economies cannot be held up to ransom at the whim of scientists. No.

We saw that the total allowable catch for this year was set at 235,000 tonnes. That is a reduction of 31,000 tonnes from the actual amount set last year of 266,000. We appointed Dr. Harris and the eminent people serving with him to review what had gone wrong in the scientific assessment and to tell us what the safe total allowable catch might be for next year and the years to come and what needs to be done so that this does not happen again.

We are advised in an interim report that the safe TAC for next year of northern cod might be 190,000 tonnes. If it is, that means that the catch has to decline again next year by a further 45,000 tonnes. That is why Canso is having the diffficulty that it is having. It is being told by National Sea that the Canso plant must shut. That is why the St. John's plant has been told by National Sea that it must shut. That is why other plants in my province are in danger of having their own fish plants shut as well. It is not by some human error of this government, not by interest rate policies, not by the economic conditions that a government allowed to be created, but by this totally unexpected calamity visited upon us that is no fault of ours but which we are trying to deal with.

I never heard tonight one suggestion as to what other approach we could take, other than the approach we are taking.

Mr. Robichaud: You did. You were not listening.

Mr. Crosbie: I have serious matters I want to discuss with the people in my district and the members opposite are not interested. The people of my province are interested.

Mr. Tobin: You're the minister for all of Newfoundland, not just for your own district.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not want to have to contend with the braying of the untutored and the uncaring.

I quote now from the Kirby task force report. Mr. Kirby was appointed by the last Liberal government to look at the crisis it created with interest rates and double digit inflation. What did he recommend? He recommended enterprise allocations. Fifty-one of these 57 recommendations were approved. One of them was enterprise allocations or company quotas to the large offshore companies.

He said in his report that the northern cod quota was projected to reach 380,000 tonnes by 1987. What was it in actual fact in 1987? It was considerably less than that. In 1987 the actual total allowable catch was 256,000 tonnes, not 380,000 tonnes. Even the great Kirby was far out in his projections.

Then there was an Atlantic Fisheries Restructuring Act. What was the purpose given in the legislation? To facilitate the development of viable Atlantic fisheries that are competitive and privately owned through the restructuring of fishery enterprises. That was what the last government did. The last government put over $300 million into these companies—Fishery Products and National Sea they eventually became. It put $300 million into companies.

It was the one who introduced the big company solution of 1983, which members opposite now decry and would they blame us if we give these companies any understanding at all or try to see that they remain viable economic units. There is nothing but scorn from the other side. These are the companies created by the big company solution, the Liberal solution of 1983. It was their restructuring which did nothing for the smaller companies and the inshore sector.

This time that is not the route we are going. We are going the route of helping the communities. We are going the route of helping the people and helping the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

We are looking at two things—a long-term solution which was never attempted by the last government. That involves the restructuring in Newfoundland and Labrador of our fishery. Just listen to these figures and give some thought to what they reveal.

Fishing contributes 6 per cent only to the Newfoundland Gross Domestic Product but 25 per cent to total employment. Is it any wonder that our people who are in the fishery and in fish processing have only low incomes to look to?

The average Saskatchewan farm family in 1986 had an income of $32,000—34 per cent from farming, 40 per cent from other employment earnings, nothing from UI and 26 per cent from other sources.

The average Atlantic farm family had an income of $33,750.

The average Nova Scotia fishing family had an income of $35,000—53 per cent from fishing, 25 per cent from employment earnings, 16 per cent from UI and 6 per cent from other sources.

In Newfoundland, the place that I am most concerned about, the average fishing family income in 1986 was $19,850 of which only 24 per cent came from fishing, 30 per cent from other employment earnings, 41 per cent from UI and 5 per cent from other sources.

Is this the state that we want to leave our people in who are engaged in the fishery in Newfoundland now or do we want to build a viable fishery? I opt for building a viable fishery, and that is what we are darn well going to do.

Just consider this. In 1975 we had 10,283 plant workers in the fishing plants in Newfoundland. In 1988 we had 28,446 just about triple.

In 1975 we had 15,812 part-time and full-time fishermen. In 1988 we had 29,826 full-time and part-time fishermen.

Is it any wonder that the people involved in the fishery have low average incomes with a large percentage of their income coming from UI. What can we do to change this?

There are two approaches to this problem that we are taking. One is to deal with the immediate results of plants that might have to close because there is no fish there to put through the plants.

Mr. Tobin: Why is there not fish?

Mr. Crosbie: Why? I do not know. I can only tell you what the scientists tell us.

What is the approach? In a community where a plant has to close or is severely affected, all regular programs of course apply—UI, the industrial adjustment service, Community Futures, all of the help that can be given for training or retraining or helping somebody secure other employment. This is an industry where the workers have no rights to pensions. They do not even have a right to separation allowance in Newfoundland. We have the program for older workers which we have introduced and which the Newfoundland government is going to participate in. Those 55 and over who cannot get other employment will receive assistance up to $1,100 a month, 70 per cent if their UI benefit until they become pensionable.

• (2200)

Apart from that program which applies to those 55 and over, we are going further. We are introducing a supplementary plan in this extraordinary situation in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. In this extraordinary situation we are introducing the same kind of benefits to those 50 and over who cannot secure other work or who cannot be retrained for other jobs. We are looking after the people, not the big companies that were looked after by the Liberals in the early 1980s.

In addition, for the immediate crisis we are establishing a community diversification fund to help the local communities see what other job opportunities can be created, what other industries can be introduced and what other work can be made available. That is an additional program. That is for the immediate problem that affects the communities that are now affected by the plant closings. That is our approach, not the corporate approach, not the pouring of $300 million into two companies as was done by our predecessors.

For the longer term program, we are working in Newfoundland with the government of Newfoundland to see how we can build a viable fishery, to see how we can create diversification in the economy and other job opportunities, because this industry cannot support the number of people now involved in it as the figures show. It cannot support them with a decent income, so other measures had to be taken to try to give those people another income. That is what we are doing. We are not sitting in this House hurling abuse every day at someone else with no constructive alternatives.

What do some people in responsible positions think of that? If we look at what Premier Wells has been saying in Newfoundland, we are not getting a parade of abuse from him. I am reading from a transcript of a December 11 press conference where he states:

> The federal government has clearly acknowledged its responsibility and is prepared to take it, and I express appreciation to the federal government for that.

That is a Liberal who is in a responsible position expressing appreciation. He said this at page 10:

> I think we're seeing the beginning of a significant change in the Newfoundland fishery, and we must stop burdening the fishing industry with the responsibility to be the employment opportunity of last resort. We must find the means, and this is what we've been saying for two years in the Liberal Party. We must find the means of providing alternative economic opportunities, and the federal government has a responsibility, along with the provincial government because they can benefit, in fact, even more than the provincial government can by doing so. But we must stop burdening the fishing industry with the responsibility of being the employment opportunity of last resort for our people, and provide other alternatives.

That is from Premier Wells, the Liberal Premier of Newfoundland who approves absolutely of what we are doing. He is not sitting there cackling and abusing the government. He is saying the government is doing the right thing and the Newfoundland government is going to participate with us in doing the right thing, building a viable future for the Newfoundland people in the fishery.

Here is a statement made on the same day by Premier Wells which states at page 4:

> We have worked closely with the government of Canada on this problem. Despite some early differences of view on the magnitude of the problem, our discussions have focused largely on appropriate response measures, and I am pleased to state that these discussions have proceeded in a positive atmosphere of common concern and common purpose.

Where is the concern on the other side of the House. Did I hear any concern expressed tonight? Not likely.

On page 5 of the same statement it states:

> I wish to commend the federal and provincial task forces for the diligent manner in which they have conducted their work—I also commend the federal government for recognizing its ultimate responsibility for its resource management decisions.

On page 6 it states:

> Considerable work and discussion have taken place on this proposed program which could be cost-shared by the federal and provincial governments.

Further down it states:

> This would be a long term process and the province is prepared to provide a substantial sum each year for this program over the next 10 years.

That is what is going on. There is no lack of action. You will hear what the program is, Mr. Speaker, when we have finished and completed the details of it with the Government of Newfoundland.

What else are we doing? We are pouring more money into northern cod research with an additional $3 million being spent this year, additional electronic equipment obtained to improve the efficiency of the research, the computer upgraded at St. John's to handle the increased amount of the data, the Gadus Atlantica will be modified during the winter to utilize research acoustic equipment in ice-infested waters and the amount of acoustic surveying in 1990 to be increased significantly, including a doubling of surveys inshore. Additional tagging will be carried out. Other activities being funded include necessary electronic equipment to go aboard fishing vessels to collect oceanographic data.

Those are some of the other things that are being done. Much is being done. Much is being done by our Minister of Fisheries whom hon. gentlemen opposite try to criticize and denigrate and knock down, but who is doing a great job on behalf of the fishermen and the people of Atlantic Canada.

In 1988 we had a TAC of 266,000 tonnes. I have in my hands a list of Fishery Products' various plants and how much capacity was utilized in the plants. Even when the TAC was 266,000 tonnes they could only utilize the capacity at Marystown 53 per cent; Trepassey, 60 per cent; Harbour Breton, 49 per cent; Ramea, 88 per cent; Gaultois, 43 per cent; Bonavista, an inshore plant, 29 per cent. There is the problem. Even in a year when the TAC was 266,000 tonnes, not 190,000 tonnes, this was the capacity utilization of their plants.

It is suggested that somehow they can keep all plants open and just open them for several months or a few months a year. That way they will go to their economic doom. If they cannot be economically viable entities, who is going to lend them money? Who is going to give them credit? Who is going to invest money with them? No one. Unless they can be economically viable, they are finished. If they are finished, who is going to operate these plants? Not the government. I hope to God it is not the government. That is the kind of problem that we have.

Let us look at the inshore and the offshore catches. In 1982, 113,000 tonnes were caught inshore, 117,000 tonnes caught offshore; 1983, 106,000 inshore, 126,000 offshore; 1984, 97,000 inshore, 135,000 offshore. I will skip up to 1988, 102,000 tonnes inshore, 156,000 tonnes offshore. Now we are faced with a situation where next year the TAC may be 190,000 tonnes. That is the problem. It was not caused by this government. It was not even caused by the last government because they knew nothing about the fact that the cod out in the water was not as the scientists were saying it was, that the mass had not quintupled, that it had only tripled, which we were told last February. It is not even their fault.

To set the record straight with reference to the free trade agreement, the free trade agreement does not prevent us from subsidizing plants. If we want to subsidize plants, it may or may not result in a countervail case in the United States. There was a case in the United States against the fishing industry in 1985. It has nothing to do with the free trade agreement. The free trade agreement does not give them the right to take a countervail action or not take a countervail action. They have that right under their own domestic legislation. They have that right under their own domestic legislation. They had it in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988, well before 1989 which was the year of the free trade agreement. The Leader of the Opposition knows that but gets up tonight and says something different. Instead of going out taking the larger view, he is going out with this kind of—well, I will not even characterize it. I do not want to waste time.

The free trade agreement has nothing to do with this situation. If we want to subsidize plants, if that was the way to go, if that was the answer to the problem, we could do it and take our chances on countervail. There was countervail in 1985. There is a countervail duty now of 5.82 per cent on fresh. Atlantic groundfish. It is not the free trade agreement.

• (2210)

These are the people I represent, all these people in Newfoundland. I am the cabinet minister in this government who represents them and I have not had a worse six months in representing them since I have been here. I want to tell them tonight that I am making every effort that I can to see that this problem, this crisis, is resolved in the way that is best for them and in the way that is best for their children. If I don't succeed, they can let me know that they think I have failed them and I am quite willing to resign, or they can deal with me at the next election. I can tell you as long as I am here, every possible effort is going to be made to resolve this crisis. The people of Newfoundland, and the fishermen and the fish plant workers will be looked after to the best of my ability, or the best of the ability of any government that can do that.

I am confident that before this is over we are going to have a better fishery in Newfoundland, a more viable fishery, a fishery that contains fishermen and fisherwomen who are better paid and better recompensed and fish plant workers who are better looked after, who are going to have pension rights, and separation allowance rights. That is what we are going to have in the next 10 years if we are successful in the longer term approach that has never been taken before.

I want to repeat here tonight something the Prime Minister said on December 13. The leader of this government said this: "We have taken some substantial actions and we propose to take more. Let me summarize for my friend. When the farmers of western Canada were hurting, this government took action, When Atlantic fishermen are hurting, we will take action as well."

That is the pledge of the Prime Minister. That is the pledge that I expect the Prime Minister and the government to fulfil. That is the pledge we are going to fulfil. There are going to be a lot of tough times. It will not be helped by hon. gentlemen opposite with their cheap shots, but by God, with the help of my colleagues in this government, with the assistance of the Newfoundland government, with the support of the Newfoundland people, we are going to overcome this problem, and when we leave we will leave behind a better, viable fishery, better for the people in it, better for the people who participate, better for their families. That is our pledge. We are going to go through some rough times, but they are going to find me by their side. They are going to find the government by their side and together we are going to lick this problem, not caused by us, but caused by events that were outside our control.

Mr. Speaker: There has been some discussion with all sides of the House. Ordinarily, I would recognize a member from the New Democratic Party. I understand the hon. member who might have spoken wishes to stand down at the moment. I am informed that the leader of the New Democratic party is on her way and I am sure that hon. members would co-operate in that. Therefore, I will go onto the next on the list and look to the government side, to be followed by a member from the official opposition.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): If you are trading, you trade with the Liberals.

Mr. Speaker: The New Democratic Party is not at the moment prepared to put up a speaker. They want to stand down and hope that their leader will be here. I have been informed, and I think members can accept my word, that she is on her way. I understand that.

In the event that she is not here, on the list that I think has been accepted by everybody, I must now move to the government side, followed immediately afterward by the official opposition.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to begin by thanking you for allowing this debate to take place this evening. I would like to compliment the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso for bringing this very important matter to the attention of the House and for providing us with an opportunity to discuss these very serious matters.

It is my view that Atlantic Canada has generally fared very well under this government, and indeed the statistical data that we have seen from time to time brought before this House has made that abundantly clear. However, I have to say in all honesty that coastal Atlantic Canada today faces the greatest challenge it has faced sice the post-war depression of the 1920s. Fifty per cent of the economy of coastal Atlantic Canada, in particular Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, is directly dependent upon the fishery and that fishery is in a very difficult situation, especially I might say the groundfishery which has always been thought of as the backbone of the Atlantic fishery.

It is important to note that there are other sectors of the fishing industry that are doing extremely well. The shrimp fishery is healthy. The tuna fishery, the scallop industry, the sword fishery, the mussels and other mollusc industries are all doing extremely well right now. Indeed, our lobster fishery is healthy although we do have a problem to face with this pernicious piece of legislation that has recently been passed in the United States and which I am sure will be a temporary thing in view of the fact that it will be thrown out because we have access to a free trade panel as a result of the free trade agreement signed a year ago.

Our coastal communities grew up around the groundfishery. The groundfishery and the plants as well as the fishermen are the key to the social and economic life of the communities along the coast of Atlantic Canada and in particular in Nova Scotia. When you close a plant you close a town. It is not like the prairies where the farmers have an idea of what their harvest is going to be. They are able to know pretty precisely what is going to happen. From time to time, they have to put up with the difficulties of grasshoppers, drought or whatever, but they can see it coming and know it is going to be different the following year.

Fishing communities are in a very different situation because you do not know what the harvest is going to be in any particular year. You can set tax and quotas and so on, but when you go to sea, you go as a hunter and you are never quite sure what you are going to find or what you are going to bring back. As the people of Sandy Cove, Shelbourne County, found out last week, and as everybody who lives in a coastal community knows, you are never quite sure even if the men themselves are going to come back. It is a hazardous and difficult life.

When the fishery is in difficulty, it has a domino effect throughout the community because within a fishing community you have not only the fishermen but you have the plant workers. Indeed, if the fishing industry is not healthy, not only do the plants have a problem but the boatbuilders and the people who support the industry, not to mention all the other people in town, the merchants, the grocers, the restaurateurs, everybody suffers if times are tough in the fishery.

When we look at what is taking place in Atlantic Canada right now, we see that it has a profound impact on communities that are frequently very isolated. I am not so sure, quite frankly, that people in the west or in central Canada fully understand the depths of this issue. We are told sometimes that we should consider it just a problem and not, as some of us have said, a crisis in Atlantic Canada. They say: "Let's not escalate this to be a greater problem than it really is."

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a problem and anybody who does not recognize the profoundness of this problem for coastal Atlantic Canada should have been with me in Lockeport on Saturday last when they opened a community support group in that town and asked the question: "Why is it necessary?" "Why do we not have the government solving our problem?" As we heard from the last speaker, it is not as simple as the government being able to create fish. Anybody who suggests that this is not a serious crisis should go to Port Medway. They should go to Port L'Hebert, Woods Harbour, Bear Point or Shag Harbour. These are only communities within my own South Shore riding that have suffered plant closures in the last year.

I see the mayor and a councillor from the town of Canso here tonight. They can tell you about the crisis that exists in the life of their community with the closure of a plant. It is a serious problem, one that we all have to recognize in a national context even though it applies to us in our small coastal communities.

The concept of crisis is a very simple concept. Crisis is something that happens to your town, to your community, to your family or to yourself. If you happen to be in a remote community that for 400 years has relied on the fishing industry there does not sometimes appear to be alternatives. Let there be no doubt in coastal Atlantic Canada there is a crisis today and a crisis to which the government must respond.

I would suggest that there are three means by which the government can respond. The first, of course, has to do with dealing with the resource itself. That is the responsibility of the minister and the Department of Fisheries. Their responsibility is to see that this problem is indeed temporary and that those stocks will regenerate themselves. At the same time, part of that process is allow the industry to rationalize itself in such a way that we have those numbers participating in it that the resource itself can sustain.

• (2220)

I must say that measures have been and are being put in place as a result of the capacity committee struck by the minister a couple of years ago, the outcomes that will occur from the various consultations in the Stein task force and the special cabinet committee and indeed the Haché report. It is tough to say no because everybody wants to go fishing. Everybody wants a licence. Everybody wants a quota. If the resource cannot sustain it, it is the responsibility of the minister to be the guy who has the tough job of saying no to people. Thank goodness that we have a minister today who has the responsibility and the integrity to put in place measures that within three or four years will see the regeneration of our groundfish stocks so that once again we will have a healthy groundfishery in Atlantic Canada.

The second responsibility of government, of course, falls within the domain of Employment and Immigration Canada and the special cabinet committee and that is to provide the support that is necessary to families and communities during this transitional three or four year period until such time as we can both have economic diversification as well as the regeneration of a strong fishery in Atlantic Canada.

I look forward to the measures being brought forth. We have had announcements that there will be special measures brought forward. The hon. Minister for International Trade made some reference to it in his remarks tonight, but what I am looking forward to is support for families as well as communities, at least until we have the restoration. We have programs in place such as community futures and we were very pleased to see that program beginning to be put in place in the county of Shelbourne. I look forward to it being put in place in Queen's County as well where the Port Mouton plant was closed.

We have excellent work being done by the industrial adjustment service committees in Lockeport and Port Mouton, and of course the changes that are being introduced to the Unemployment Insurance Act will make available more funds to improve the quality of the labour force development strategy programs, programs that are going to enable Canadians and communities to get back to work again.

Would hon. members opposite be kind enough to suggest to their colleagues in the Senate that they let the will of democracy be done and the government's will be done as it should be and stop the interference of that which on January 6 could cause grievous damage to people in Atlantic Canada.

We look forward to more support coming with the announced package. Particularly, I look forward to and urge the government to provide support to the municipal units involved. The town of Lockeport depends 55 per cent on its municipal tax base for the National Sea plant that has now been closed. With a reduction in the value of that plant, the revenues available to that town will make it difficult for the town to function as a municipal unit. There is a growing need to have assistance provided there to make these things work effectively for the town.

These support measures are an interim thing that are very important. We look forward to the government's announcement being made and I urge it to make sure that it is fully comprehensive and includes not only those communities affected by the northern cod difficulties, but the problems with respect to the Scotia–Fundy region as well.

I will be particularly looking to see support for Queen's County and Port Mouton and indeed for the town of Lockeport in particular.

The third arm or the third challenge to the government is in the area of economic diversification and development. Here I look to Industry, Science and Technology and ACOA, as well as the co–operation and participation of the provinces. Clearly the number one challenge we face in Atlantic Canada, and our greatest need, is to reduce our dependency on the fishery as a resource for economic development. We have to look to other potential industries. Tourism is an industry with tremendous potential in Nova Scotia, and indeed in the Maritimes. We have to see this as a potential primary employer and not simply as a secondary industry.

We need more Michelin plants. The government has said that Canada is open for business and we are attracting interest from potential investors all over the world, but we have to see the deals closed. We had an announcement that the Tissan Corporation was going to settle. What a marvellous thing that will be for eastern Nova Scotia when that first plant comes. We look at that company eventually having the impact that Michelin has in Nova Scotia, with its three plants providing 4,300 excellent jobs for people. But the deal is not done. Why is that deal not done? There is an industry anxiously interested in settling in the town of Bridgewater, but the deal and the contract is not signed. When can we expect that?

There is potential for development for Aspotogan. There is another for the north shore of Nova Scotia. I urge the government, and particularly the ministers involved in economic development to get on with getting these deals signed so that we can see the diversification beyond the fishery.

We also have to diversify within the fishing industry itself. The minister spoke about 350,000 tonnes of fish not being utilized by Canadians. We have to utilize those fish and we need to have an economic development diversification fund that will encourage the use of these resources.

Unfortunately my time is up. There are a number of things we have to do and in the last minute I will just mention some of the things we have to do in the fishery. All parties involved in the fishery must not see it as a partisan issue but work co–operatively together with it. We must get rid of the misconception and stick to the facts. Let us solve the problems that exist rather than those that do not. Our fishermen must be prepared to obey the law. We must use science but not be the captives of science. We must preserve people and community as well as stocks. We need to work together and have effective working relationships with the United States as well as to see that they obey the laws that we have set and we must be prepared to enforce them.

My time is up, Mr. Speaker. I thank you for your indulgence. I have to say this: it is a tough time and it is going to be a tough time for a few years for us in southern Nova Scotia, but we have had other tough times and we are going to overcome this one. As the member for South Shore, I am going to continue to work with the government and with members opposite if they wish to work with me to see that better days are ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House and speak to the opposition motion requesting an emergency debate on the present situation in the Atlantic fishery, following the closing of processing plants on the east coast and U.S. legislation restricting imports of Canadian lobster in the United States.

No government can remain indifferent to the difficult economic situation now prevailing in the fisheries industry in the Atlantic region and the Gulf of the St. Lawrence. Today, workers at National Sea Products in Canso and St. John's have been laid off. A few weeks ago, Madam Speaker, the entire Gaspé area was facing the same problem.

The Atlantic fishery is going through a difficult period, due to reduced quotas, overcapacity of fishing boats, a fiercely competitive market and the high value of the Canadian dollar. These are some of the factors that have made fishermen and their communities feel powerless, bitter and desperate.

Madam Speaker, I may remind hon. members that what we are seeing and experiencing today is a very complex phenomenon that would take some time to explain.

We are all aware of some of the factors that have led both National Sea Products and independents in Quebec to close some of their processing plants.

The crisis now facing fishermen and their communities is due to the natural environment, the present state of our scientific knowledge, to administrative decisions and, of course, to market forces. The interaction of natural and human factors is constantly changing and thus unpredictable, hence the onus on the government to act with prudence and discretion.

Before considering the concrete measures that have been taken to deal with this crisis, Madam Speaker, I would like to recall a number of facts and figures to illustrate this complex situation.

About 65,000 registered commercial fishermen, nearly 30,000 fishing boats, 890 fish processing plants and about 309,000 plant workers, spread over 1,300 communities in five provinces in Eastern Canada, are involved in the Atlantic fisheries.

About 95 per cent of all fishermen are in the coastal fishery, which consists of relatively small fishing boats, not more than 65 feet long, which are owner-operated. These fishermen take about 60 per cent of all catches on the Atlantic coast.

Annual catches in this sector total 1.2 million tons, with a production value of $2.1 billion. Over 80 per cent of these catches are exported.

Groundfish, especially cod, is a very important part of the Atlantic fishery. Groundfish accounts for two-thirds of all fish landings and for over 40 per cent of the total value of those landings.

Catches of northern cod make up 50 per cent of cod catches on the Atlantic coast.

Madam Speaker, I would like to dwell on an increasingly serious problem in the Atlantic region which plays a decisive role in the present crisis, and I am referring to overcapacity of fishing vessels.

Nowadays, fishermen are more efficient than ever before. A recent study conducted in the Scotia-Fundy area reported that the groundfish fleet already had twice the capacity it needed.

Today's vessels are faster. They have electronic equipment capable of locating the fish and they have far more sophisticated fishing gear. Therefore, catches are larger and fishermen can now catch in one to three months the same number of fish they used to take a whole fishing season to catch.

• (2230)

In the past, an ordinary trawler could catch 33 tonnes of fish. Today, it can take 164 tonnes in the same fishing season. The cost of the trawler has gone from $200,000 to $750,000, which is a much bigger investment for fishermen.

As you see, Madam Speaker, any improvised solution to the problem of overcapacity could have disastrous consequences not only for the fisheries themselves but also for many fishermen and their families.

Our government reacted. If you look at our government's four initiatives, (1) the Special Committee of Ministers, (2) the Harris Committee, (3) the Scotia–Fundy Task Force and (4) our reaction to overfishing and plundering of fish stocks, you will have to admit that they show the government's determination and are a positive step to help ensure prosperity for the fisheries in the 1990s.

However, I would have liked our government to be more attentive to our fishermen's requests and to control the seal population which is so destructive of living resources.

If additional resources are required to help people, to diversify the industry, to develop new technologies and to discover new markets, our government is ready to consider these options. We will ensure that federal government agencies and departments are prepared to support the people of the Atlantic region as well as possible during this period. Furthermore, we intend to propose amendments to the Fisheries Act in the near future, partly as a result of suggestions from many representatives of fishermen and the industry who are demanding heavier penalties for fisheries infractions.

These amendments will stress stronger deterrents, more efficient enforcement and an updated and improved fisheries management system.

Madam Speaker, if we want our fishermen and plant workers to continue to earn their living from marine resources, we must stop dramatising. We must instead deal attentively with the problems, as we are now doing, find long–term solutions and apply management principles which will ensure the future of our fishing communities and provide them with a relatively stable income. Only when we have finished analysing the present problems can we give lasting answers.

There are no miracle solutions, Madam Speaker, but if everyone in the fishing industry works together with management, I am sure that we will find innovative management methods to conserve and protect our precious resources for future generations.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton–The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I have been listening tonight to the most unbelievable, crass bunch of windbags I have ever heard from the government side of the House. Their completely preposterous arguments do not hold any water whatsoever. This is what they are giving as an excuse to the people in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland for the botched up policies of the fishery since they have come into power.

Canso has been a fishing community for 400 years. It has withstood the 30–year war, the 100–year war, the 7–year war, the Napoleonic wars, the Crimean wars, two World Wars, and the Korean war, but it could not withstand this Tory government. It could not withstand the Mulroney government. They are trying to tell us that after 400 years the fish lost their way and did not come into Canso.

It is unbelievable, crass and obscene to pass off the arguments they are making on to the people of Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

The Leader of the Opposition said that this is a crisis. Make no mistake about that, it is a crisis. I say to people in other parts of Canada who may not think this is a crisis that they had better wake up. Not only is this happening in Atlantic Canada. With this government in power it could happen anywhere in Canada because people do not matter. They do not matter.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is telling us that we brought forward a plan in 1983, that we are responsible for that plan and that we are responsible for the fishery. What unmitigated poppycock. Michael Kirby did not take those shares with him when the Liberal government was defeated and the Mulroney government came into power. Some 20 per cent of the shares of National Sea belong to that government in power on the other side of the House. What has it done with them? It has chosen not to represent the Government of Canada at the board of directors meeting. It has chosen not to act upon its shares.

What happened in 1988 when the fishery was coming apart all over Atlantic Canada? National Sea chose to buy a Treasure Island fishery in the United States at a cost of $28.6 million. It chose to buy two French companies at a cost of $16.4 million. It chose to buy 50 per cent interest in an Argentinian company for $12 million, to raise its indebtedness to $200 million.

This is after two years of profits. In 1986 National Sea made $36 million. In 1987 it made $24.8 million. Where did those profits go? They went into buying foreign fishing companies, not into looking after the fisheries in Atlantic Canada. The purpose of expanding to the 200-mile limit was not to safeguard and make big fishing companies wealthy. It was to look after the fishing communities and the people in the fishing industry in this country.

This government has breached the faith with the people of Atlantic Canada. It has completely neglected to look after their interests. It has completely destroyed any confidence that the people of Atlantic Canada would have in this government now or for any time in the future.

If this government allows the trawlers to be moved from Canso or the fishing vessels to be moved from North Sydney or St. John's to another port, it is in fact saying that this fishery does not belong to the people. It is saying once and for all that it is acting in the interests of the big companies. That will result in nothing more than theft from the port of Canso, the town of North Sydney, the city of St. John's, Newfoundland and other fishing communities that may have the misfortune to have their fish plants closed in the future as a result of this non-caring, nonsensical government.

It is absolutely devastating to see what is happening, to experience what we are experiencing here in this House and what people are going through in Atlantic Canada. What are we getting? We are getting programs that are in the system for months. Yet, the Minister for International Trade said this evening that the government knew in February the quotas in the opinion of its experts were going to be reduced from 295,000 tonnes to 125,000 tonnes. That is 170,000 tonnes in a few months.

It is not strange that these experts and this government were predicting 295,000 tonnes during the election campaign when National Sea was advertising in all the major newspapers in this country that free trade was going to mean the success of the fishery in Canada? What treachery. This government is in league with big business at the expense of the fishery and the fishing communities of our country.

We have seen the result in less than one year after we were told what a wonderful thing free trade was going to be. The Leader of the Opposition told us what free trade would be like. He told us about free trade because under the GATT we are not allowed to restrict the export of unprocessed fish and we could put an export tax on that fish so that it would not be able to leave the jurisdictions. Because of the free trade agreement we cannot place an export tax on that fish. As a result, we cannot restrict the export of that fish.

The United States wants to be given national status on point 105 of the free trade agreement. It wants to be able to buy over the side of vessels all of the fish it can handle while they are still at sea and before they come into port. How will we ever know, then, how many fish are being caught?

• (2240)

How will we be able to judge the quotas? How will we be able to judge the catches? This is a mess we are in. They are bailing out. They are not providing answers. They are running and hiding. They are falling over one another. They are whimpering and whining on their own behalf, not on behalf of the people who are affected. They say: "We did not know. Who could tell? Our experts told us. By gosh, what could we do?" The Conservatives tell us that 400 years is only a blip in time. Canso was bound to have a string of bad luck sooner or later.

The people of Atlantic Canada are not going to be fooled. This government has run out of any credibility in Atlantic Canada. It is an insult to the people of Atlantic Canada to have to listen to this nonsense day after day from this government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to participate in this debate this evening. The crisis in the Atlantic fishery, particularly in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, strikes close to home.

Although the crisis has not struck my riding in the same magnitude as it has in St. John's and Canso, we in Cardigan certainly know the frustration, the hardship and the fears caused by this government's callous and incompetent approach to the industry which is a region's economic life line. In Atlantic Canada we are still reeling from the blows struck by the multinational corporation, National Sea Products, in the closure of its plants in Canso and St. John's.

My constituents and I feel for our Atlantic neighbours. Our thoughts and our prayers are with them as they face the bleakest Christmas they have ever known. I have some trouble reconciling this government's intentions and actions. On December 11, 1989 the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans stood in this House and said:

> We are very much in tune with the needs, sentiments and anxieties of the people living in these communities.

How do we reconcile these words with this government's inaction, its failure to avert this crisis? The people in St. John's and Canso have no where to turn.

Yes, a special cabinet committee is looking into the problems in the Atlantic fisheries. We have the Haché task report and the Harris panel, but what concrete measures has this government taken to save the industry, the mainstay of the Atlantic economy?

We are not talking solely of money, although that is certainly what the government cares about. We are talking about our history and our heritage, a way of life that is precious to us and Atlantic Canadians. This government seems to think it can solve this problem merely by handling out money in the short term while saying it has something up its sleeve in the long term. Who knows?

Maybe it will provide the unemployed fish plant workers with transportation to Toronto or some other thriving metropolis. It will not work. The Atlantic fishery must be saved. Fish plant jobs must be saved. The government must explore other avenues and alternatives. We need a solution that will allow Atlantic Canadians to stay in their homes with their roots and their families, where their children would grow up and continue their culture and heritage.

The problems in the fishery in eastern P.E.I. and Cardigan start at the very foundation. The basic infrastructure of the industry is literally rotting away. Our harbours and wharfs are in desperate need of repair. Maintenance and in many cases reconstruction are necessary.

My fishermen might as well be knocking their heads against a brick wall as asking this government to fix their wharfs and keep them in workable condition. How can lobster fishermen make a decent living when they have no room to moor their boats or set their traps because big sections of the wharfs are unusable? For that matter they may not even be able to get their boats to the wharfs because the harbour is not properly dredged. They run the risk of getting caught on the sand bar and damaging their vessel.

The lobster fishery in P.E.I. is equivalent to the groundfish industry in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in economic terms. Our lobster industry in 1989 was not as healthy as it has been in the past. Inventories were high, demand was down and prices were soft. These problems were felt in Cardigan in a concrete way. A fish plant in my riding closed its doors, leaving 150 workers unemployed and over 100 fishermen with no place to sell their lobsters, groundfish, herring and scallops.

More bad news came to the P.E.I. lobster fishermen with the passing of the U.S. legislation banning the import of Canadian whole live lobsters that do not meed the American minimum size of three and three–quarter inches.

This measure is based purely on protectionism. It will certainly distort our markets. It will close the doors on fishermen who would like to ship whole lobsters of the intermediary size to those states outside New England. It is estimated that the loss of these potential markets will cost Prince Edward Island lobster fishermen approximately $2 million. That is a large figure in a small economy. So much for open access to the American markets promised under the free trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. MacAulay: This government has to stand up to the Americans and stop allowing them to bully us. The handling of the case of the American scallop dragger fishing in Canadian waters was an absolute disgrace. The American vessel should have been stopped by our warship. The crew of the American vessel should have been brought back to Canadian waters and arrested. Instead the dragger went back to its U.S. port where it will receive a much softer penalty.

This incident is especially frustating for the people of Summerside. It has been confirmed by a senior DFO official in Halifax that a Tracker aircraft stationed at CFB Summerside first spotted the American vessel in Canadian waters. This only spells the lack of logic in the decision by the government to cease the operation of the Tracker squadron at Summerside.

The government is cutting down fisheries surveillance at the very time we need more. Overfishing by the Spanish and Portuguese has gutted our valuable fish stocks, cutting off the life line of our region of the country. The government has been ineffective in controlling foreign plundering of our ocean's treasures.

In conclusion, there are families and communities in Cardigan and the rest of Atlantic Canada who are suffering at the hands of this government's mismanagement of the fishery. This government must take a good look at how it has contributed to this crisis, and it must undertake saving this industry which is at the base of our Atlantic economy.

It is about time this government proved that Atlantic Canadians are part of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to speak in this debate tonight. I think, like all members of this House, I would rather that this debate did not have to take place.

I, like other members in this House, sympathize greatly with the people of Atlantic Canada, and particularly the people of my province and my city who have felt the despair and hopelessness of this last eight or nine days.

The announced closing of fish plants in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland just before Christmas poses more than economic problems for workers and their families. For many, drawing a living from the sea goes back to ancestors who first settled our coastline many hundreds of years ago. Fishing is literally the soul lifeblood of many communities. I realize that asking whole towns to give up this livelihood is like asking someone to relinquish a precious family heirloom. It is an heartbreaking and emotional issue.

I want to assure the House that this government has already stepped into those communities most affected by the closing. The programs those people need to survive are already in place, but more than that, the assistance this government provides today is not going to last until plants reopen or entire towns disappear. The support that we offer today and tomorrow is propelled by a vision to stabilize the economy of Atlantic Canada and sustain the fishing resource.

• (2250)

It is a fact that the environmental realities of the ocean stocks are dictating the need for management. Scientific studies tell us that the oceans are not as fruitful as even a few years ago. Those who make their living from the fishery have no choice but to withdraw for a while so that the resources can renew themselves.

What does this intentional slowdown signify for those who work in the fishing industry? It means that fishing may be a more viable industry in the future. It also means that communities have to find an alternative means to survive and perhaps eventually to thrive. They need new industry and new skills so their economies can be diversified. We will assist them in those efforts.

National Sea Products announced the lay–off of 1,562 last Monday. Within hours Employment and Immigration personnel moved in with the Industrial Adjustment Services Program. They are setting up a committee of employers and employees to respond to the shutdown by helping workers find new jobs, training and counselling.

Also within a short time of the announced closings, unemployment insurance officials set up shop in plants to help the employees start their claims as quickly as possible. The aid programs that we have provided have had an immediate impact on the lives of workers and their families, but that is not all we are doing.

New skills and businesses can breathe life into communities that previously depended on fishing. Since 1985 Canadian Jobs Strategy programs have been operating in Atlantic communities to retrain people and encourage entrepreneurship. Building on the individual needs of a community and its citizens, innovative programs have been created to revive former fishing communities. In the long haul the initiatives under the CJS aim to equip people and towns to be competitive and prosperous for a long time.

I need not tell members of this House of the success of the Community Futures Program particularly in a community like Port aux Basques in the constituency of the hon. member for Burin–St. George's. Through a number of initiatives from the people and the employers in the area companies were recruited to open plants, including one Norwegian fabricating company that created more than 200 jobs.

As well, more than $1 million in Community Futures funding has been used to train 120 residents as high–tech welders, pipefitters and sheet metal workers. Some 70 are now working full time, another 30 are working part time and the rest are still in school. Further assistance was provided to 24 residents to start their own businesses through the self–employment initiative.

This is just one example of how innovative and flexible programming can serve the needs of communities that must adapt and that must change.

In the last fiscal year the government directly invested $17.4 million in Canadian Jobs Strategy projects in the fishery sector. Of course when the fisheries workers are without work so too are service workers, be they pharmacists or shop keepers, who depend on their business. The strategy helps those too.

Altogether in the last two years $434 million in Employment and Immigration Commission funding has helped 145,000 people in Atlantic Canada attain worthwhile skills that allow them to contribute to their communities. In addition, for several years now the government has responded with additional emergency job development money for fishing industry workers in the region and in Quebec. In 1989 we provided more than $5 million. About 4,000 workers are training and working on employment projects which will allow them to qualify for unemployment insurance while learning new skills.

Let me remind the House also of the recently announced community development fund which will allow for community directed investments to strengthen the local economy and create meaningful job opportunities. Fishing communities can use it to supplement existing adjustment programs. Moneys can be directed at attracting small businesses and establishing a base, for example, for a viable aquaculture.

Furthermore, as the Minister for International Trade announced last week and has said tonight, we are working with the province of Newfoundland and Labrador to develop a program that will take care of the older workers affected by changes in the fishing industry.

Adjustment strategies for fisheries workers have not been developed in a vacuum. The fact is our attempts to create jobs and businesses for the long term have the approval of the provincial governments. Newfoundland and Labrador's Fisheries Minister Walter Carter said recently: "The fishing industry can no longer be the centrepiece of the province's economy. It can and must be an important employer however and, with the help of the federal government, new industry and training can help stabilize the economy".

Bill C–21, having passed through this place, sits in the other place today. The changes brought in by that legislation will free up $800 million which will be used to train UI claimants and encourage the start–up of new business ventures under the Labour Force Development Strategy. Under that strategy funding for industrial adjustment services would be doubled and Community Futures will be boosted by an additional $50 million. Both programs help towns and workers who once depended on fishing for a living.

The government is sensitive to the historical and economic importance of the fishery in Atlantic Canada. We want to help workers in communities affected by those changes. The support we are offering goes beyond helping people buy groceries and pay their rent. In the long run, our programs assist people in communities to build a stronger and stable economic foundation for themselves.

The fishery, under proper management, will survive and will provide good jobs for Atlantic Canadians. We recognize its indispensable economic value and the important contribution that it pays to our economy and our way of life, but we know it will not be worth anything if we keep combing the depleted Atlantic waters. Our programs meet the needs of fishing communities undergoing change. While workers are learning skills and new businesses are established, workers, communities and provinces will be creating with this government's help a viable fishery for the future.

We face realities in the fishery. Decisions must be taken that none of us like. These decisions, with the innovation and the determination of the people in Atlantic Canada, with the support of this government, members on this side from Atlantic Canada and hopefully members on that side from Atlantic Canada, will see a viable, professional fishery that can be depended upon in good times and bad and that can support our communities well in the future because have strong fisheries management and we have a government that responds when the need dictates it.

[Translation]

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure–Îles–de–la–Madeleine): Madam Speaker, I would like to start my comments this evening by saying that to us in the Gaspé and the Magdalen Islands, in Eastern Quebec, the fishery is vital. And in addition to everything that has been said this evening in the House, I would like to say that technological change has necessarily had an impact on the catches of groundfish in the Gulf. The quantities of fish that are available are caught far more quickly and as a result, the fishing season gets shorter and shorter and plants are swamped at certain times of the year.

[English]

In taking into account this statement that has been made, I must say that as a member of Parliament involved in a constituency with a very large fishing industry we should look also at what the government has done. However, I think that we should go beyond the politics.

I would hope—and I speak on behalf of small fishermen and big fisherman and fish plants in my riding—that we would leave politics aside. We know there is a crisis in the east coast fishery and that we can work together.

• (2300)

I state, for the record, a couple of statements that had been made after the federal minister met with provincial ministers. I quote Walter Carter, Newfoundland's fisheries minister: "We welcome these changes to the Fisheries Act".

The second quote is from Donald McGuinnis, Nova Scotia's fisheries minister: "Fishermen are ready for new measures".

The Minister of Fisheries and Aquaculture echoed Mr. Siddon's remarks and added: "These issues are important to all Atlantic provinces and I appreciate the opportunity to contribute to the decisions that affect all of us".

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, this was also said, in French, by the New Brunswick Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The pressing need to change this legislation was also stressed by Mr. Denis Losier, the New Brunswick Minister of Fisheries and Aquaculture, who said these changes should have been made a long time ago.

Finally, Madam Speaker, Mr. Michel Pagé, Quebec's Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, sent a message to Mr. Siddon in which he said: "I wish to join my provincial colleagues in co–operating with the federal government, in order to obtain the necessary assistance for fishermen in the Gulf and the Atlantic and for their communities".

[English]

We listened to those remarks that were made by people across provincial governments and across different party lines. We must realize when we talk about a crisis in our fisheries that we have one. We have created that.

What we have become in terms of our fisheries is hunters. We are not farmers. With the equipment that we have, with our boats, with our sonar, with our radar, with everything we have, we have become hunters. We have an overcapacity of fish plants, an overcapacity of boats. The big get a little bigger and the little get hurt a lot more.

What we have to do is come from all sides of this House when we talk in an emergency debate. We must say to our inshore fishermen as well as to our offshore fishermen that we are not Liberals, we are not NDP. We do not come from Newfoundland. We do not come from the Gaspé. We want to work together. We have to work together, because we must have a sustainable resource. If we do not have a sustainable resource, then we are going to be in trouble.

We listened to the people heckling across the House this evening. They are not serious, because they are playing petty politics. I do not play petty politics with my fishermen. I say to my people who are listening this evening, my fishermen and my fish plants, the women and the men who work in the fish plants and the small fishermen, that when they have their quotas, we must stabilize our fishing industry, whether it be in the Gaspé or whether it be in the Magdalen Islands, whether it be in groundfish or whether it be in lobster. Whatever we do, we must work together on this and we must put aside our petty politics.

I would put three recommendations to the House this evening. First, with a reduction in jobs for the surveillance of our fish stocks, priority must be given especially to the inshore fishermen that they will work on the surveillance. I would impress upon the minister of fisheries that he take that into consideration.

Second, for new species that are non utilized presently, we ought to look into the harvesting of these stocks and going into secondary and tertiary transformation of those.

Third, which is a very touchy subject that no one has dared to mention this evening is that of seals on the east coast. People on the other side are talking because they might find me a little boring. We have the question of the Malouf commission, the question of the seal harvesting, the breakage in fishermen's nets, the consumption of fish by seals on our eastern coast stocks and then there is the cod worm. What we should do is look at the three recommendations that I have proposed this evening very seriously and what we do as an outcome of our debate tonight–

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, at the end of our debate this evening, I hope the opposition will be able to say: We are going to work together to help our fishermen. These fishermen are not interested in political factions, Madam Speaker, they are interested in their work, and they want the fish to be there. That is what we want, Madam Speaker.

[English]

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Madam Speaker, I sometimes wonder why the party across the hall fought the last election. The Tories fought to win the government. They are the government, they have got the government, that is where the responsibility lies.

I heard the hon. member talking about non–partisanship and this is everybody's responsibility. The buck stops with the government and they can talk all they like about what affects the stocks. I will tell you one thing that affects the stocks. Sure, there is some Canadian overfishing, but there is a lot of foreign overfishing too. This government has failed to stand up to the foreign interests that are raping and pillaging our stocks, particularly off the nose and tail of the Grand Banks.

If the stocks are in crisis, it is because of overfishing, yes, by some Canadian fishermen but also by foreign countries too. Clearly, the responsibility for that lies with the Government of Canada.

The Europeans are thumbing their noses at the Government of Canada. The Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister for International Trade travel around Europe offering some comforting words but no action is taken. When foreign vessels invade our waters, Canadian ships are sent out and, again, no action is taken and those ships are not brought to port and no fines are levied.

Off my own coast, 27,000 tonnes is what the European community has set for its own quota this year. NAFO, the toothless tiger of which the Government of Canada is a part, said: "You can catch no fish at all off the Labrador coast this year". The EEC says: "We're going to catch 27,000 tonnes whether you like it or not. It may be affecting your fishermen."

Do you know how many jobs a tonne of fish will create? Roughly 30 jobs, so you can imagine how many jobs are being lost potentially by the action of the European community off the coast of Labrador. The Government of Canada allows that to go on. It takes no sanctions whatsoever. It does not stand up to the foreign fleets and the hon. member has the audacity to say that this is a non–partisan problem and there is nothing the government can do about it.

The government can do something about it. The Tories can stand up to the Europeans. They can say this is our fish and it is affecting our employment and we are going to do something about it.

At the same time as those stocks are being depleted, what does the Government of Canada do? The Government of Canada chooses that particular moment to cut back on the surveillance of our fishing zone. We fought for a 200-mile limit. We got a 200-mile limit. We do the economic analysis in it and we protect those stocks.

What does the Government of Canada do as those stocks are in jeopardy? It cuts back on the surveillance. It is known that no plane, the Aurora included, can do the kind of low-level surveillance that the Tracker aircraft out of Summerside, P.E.I., can do. The people in the Armed Forces will tell you that. The fishermen will tell you that. Everybody in the industry will tell you that. Yet, the government has chosen this time to say, "We are closing down Summerside and we are moving those Tracker aircraft out of there."

The Tracker aircraft has another 10 years of life at a minimum investment, relatively speaking. Yet this is the time that the government chooses to cut back on the best means of support we have.

Apart from that, the whole co-ordination of surveillance off the east coast needs drastic revision. There is a hodge-podge of government agencies and vessels and equipment and personnel trying to do a job. It needs much better co-ordination.

The stocks off our coast are being fished by the Europeans and they are being fished by some large Canadian companies too. Who does not have access to those stocks? Many of the smaller fishermen on the Atlantic coast have been denied access to those stocks.

• (2310)

I am glad the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is listening because he will know that both co-ops on the Labrador coast have applied for a supply of offshore fish and have been denied. The Europeans, the French, have been given 8,000 tonnes off the coast of Labrador this year as an enticement to get them out of the Gulf.

The large companies from Canada and other countries are fishing off the Labrador coast, but the two fishermen's co-ops on the Labrador coast wanted to deep-sea fish and applied to the government and were turned down.

If you want to see the difference between Liberal policy and Conservative policy, here is where you have to look. Let me take the example of shrimp. In the late 1970s, we discovered a shrimp stock off the coast of Labrador and the northeast coast of Newfoundland. The government of the day and the minister of the day took the decision that those people who were closest to the resource got a priority. It was not all theirs. It was to be shared, but the priority was given to those people who lived closest to the resource and depended on it. That is the way the shrimp stocks were divided up and that is the way the licences were allocated.

But in cod, with this government, it is a different thing altogether. The priority is given to the foreign countries. The priority is given to the large companies and the small inshore fishermen, whether they are individual fishermen or whether they band together in co-ops, come last. That has got to be changed.

At the same time as the stocks are in jeopardy and as the surveillance is being cut back, this is the time the government chooses to gut the only support system that we have which is the unemployment insurance system. Let us look at special response first of all.

The member for St. John's East mentioned that program a moment ago. He knows and I know that that money is not going to support those who need it most. I will tell you what the figures are for the Labrador coast. We have 129 people who qualify, we have 128 people who do not qualify. Those fishermen and plant workers in my area, 50 per cent of them who qualify and have a long-term attachment to the fishery, are getting no help whatsoever. They are being forced to fall back on welfare. Well, you cannot fall back on welfare because you cannot qualify for welfare if your are able-bodied.

So what will people do this year? I will tell you what they will do. On the Labrador coast this year, there will be people bartering, there will be people trading goods and materials and food as they have done in the past. That will be happening in Canada in 1989. So much for the special response feature.

At the same time as that is happening, action is being taken now to completely gut the unemployment insurance system and the government is withdrawing completely from that system and turning it over to the private sector instead of making the kind of changes that would make sense.

On the coast of Labrador, for example, the cut-off date for unemployment insurance is May 15. Yet the ice is there in the bays until the end of June. That is the kind of sensible change that should have been made and that could have been made now while that act is opened up, to give some fairness and some justice to the people who live on that coast.

The government saw fit to ignore changes like that, sensible changes that would have given some income support to those who need it. Instead the government is withdrawing completely from that system and, indeed, putting hurdles in the way of people who want to depend on that for a support system.

What about channelling the money into training? What do you train a 40-year old fisherman for? The answer is that this government has instituted what amounts to a resettlement program. The Minister for International Trade, when he was speaking about the response of the government, did not say that the largest amount of money of all in the government's response program is $5,000 for moving to other places. That is what will happen. We have seen it. We have seen them moving from the northern peninsula. We have seen them moving from small communities all over the province to places in central Canada, to places in western Canada.

That, unfortunately, is going to happen because of the lack of imagination and the lack of charity and the lack of concern of this government. Now is the time.

What could they have done? Now is the time to start building infrastructure. Now is the time to start building wharves. We have communities where there are no water and sewer systems. We need road connections. There are all sorts of things that could be done now, action that could be taken by this government to build the infrastructure so that when the fish stocks revive, and they will, then we will be in a position to do the harvesting, to have the onshore facilities that will help us to build in the future. But that kind of imagination was not used. Those dollars were not put into those programs, because this is not a government that wants to invest. This is a government that wants to cut the Atlantic provinces adrift. If you cannot survive in the private sector, well, that is too bad. There is no recourse as far as this government is concerned.

Our people do not want to move away. Their families have lived there for 400 years. Fishing is what they do best. These communities have survived on fishing. These communities are made up of very strong families who want to live there and they can live there. This is the richest resource anywhere in Canada and the richest marine resource possibly in the world. The irony is that with that kind of resource off our shores we, because of the carelessness and the lack of imagination of this government, have no alternative but to move away. But the people will remember, and they will survive. They will outlive this government. Long after this government is gone, these communities are going to be there.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Hunter—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Madam Speaker, it is always difficult to speak following the member for Labrador because the member for Labrador has demonstrated, in the years he has been in this House, a particular passion, a great ability to articulate the views of the people of not only Labrador but all of Newfoundland.

I want to contribute to this debate by referring to a letter I received in the mail today from my riding. I just want to quote a couple of lines. The letter reads:

> Dear Mr. Tobin:
>
> It seems it's getting a bit tougher all the time as you know. This has been a very bad year for fishermen—I know for a fact it's going to be a very tough winter—
>
> My Dear God, is there some way to knock some sense in the heads of that crowd we call a government? My God, we will have no one left in Newfoundland; they will have to leave Newfoundland or starve.
>
> It's ridiculous, the Minister of Fisheries is saying there are too many fishermen. Utter nonsense. Oh, yes, drive them out of their fishing boats and let the bloody French have the fish—
>
> I am a senior citizen with nobody but myself and I find it tough. My heart goes out to those who have only one income in the house, and that one very small. I just don't know what is going to happen. I'm very, very concerned—
>
> That free trade deal with the U.S. What a nice thing that is. Crosbie said we could get out of it in six months. It's about time this government started to get us out. Everything is turned bottom up. Food prices have never been higher, and things we sell have never been lower. May God help us.
>
> Trusting you can knock some sense into McDougall and the others who have anything to do with these programs.
>
> Yours truly,
> Eli Payne,
> Cox's Cove.

Now, that is a letter from just one gentleman, a senior citizen. But it could have been a letter from John Hedderson from Straitsview. It could have been from Cook's Harbour or Boat Harbour or Green Island Brook or Port au Choix or Castors River, Nipper's Harbour, or it could have been from the sea.

What Canadians have to understand and what this government has chosen to ignore, other than dealing with statistics, other than dealing with numbers, other than dealing with limp-wristed explanations for the failure of this government to manage the fishery properly, what this government has to look at is not its own face in the morning when it wakes up. This government has to leave this gilded chamber with these fine wrought-iron chandeliers and these great stained-glass windows and the ministerial cars waiting for cabinet ministers warm outside this Chamber, where the temperature is minus 20.

This government and the ministers have to go down to Atlantic Canada, out of the hotels and the ministerial suites, and into the communities and onto the streets. They have to look the Eli Paynes in the face. What they will see when they look into the faces of the fishermen and the plant workers of Atlantic Canada, contrary to what they are hearing here tonight, is not anger because we are angry, is not great emotion because we are emotional and is not a sense of outrage because we are outraged. What they are going to see when they look into the faces of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada is a profound sense of betrayal, of abandonment on the faces of a people who understand what they are undergoing and are victims of a cultural genocide. It is cultural genocide of a way of life, a rural, labour-intensive way of life that is being brutally destroyed by a government that has been indifferent, not to the statistics because we can quote statistics, but indifferent to the human beings who live in those communities and the sense of community and shared values that they have created over 500 years. That is what is happening in Canada today.

• (2320)

I find it incredible that members opposite say: "Let's be non-partisan. Let's all be together. Let's find the solution". It is just like Clifford Olson saying, when he stands condemned before the dock, that it is all a mistake, that he misunderstood the values of this society, let us just forget it and from now on he will be good.

This government has managed the fisheries over the last five years and it has taken a deliberate decision that nobody on the other side has talked about, because while the total allowable catch is being reduced from 290,000 tonnes in 1988 to 190,000 tonnes this year–a 100,000 tonne reduction–within our 200-mile zone this year, France took 15,600 tonnes of fish, a quota the French set for themselves. Next year they are going to take 15,100, a quota they set for themselves. The year after they are going to take 14,600, a quota they set for themselves within Canada's 200-mile management zone.

In my riding, an area called the Great Northern Peninsula, an area of a splendid national park, great peaks and the most beautiful scenery on the planet, an area that people are proud to be in and make a living from, this government is ripping the "Great" out of the Great Northern Peninsula because this year the fishery was an utter failure. Those inshore fishermen are being told that next year, they will have no fish. But you know what, somebody is going to have fish there next year.

In the Strait of Belle Isle, there are nine miles of water between Quebec and Newfoundland. Do you know who is going to be sailing through those nine miles next year when the fishermen in my communities are told to stay home? French factory freezer trawlers are going to take 4,000 metric tonnes of cod with the permission of the Government of Canada in the middle of a crisis.

Some Hon. Members: Resign!

Mr. Tobin: This minister of fisheries, if he had any sense of being the voice of fishermen around the cabinet table, rather than cabinet's apologist to fishermen in the fishing communities, if he had any backbone, if he believed that there was a role for him to play around that table for people who do not have the privilege to speak for themselves around that table, if he had any pride in his responsibilities and the traditions of those who have gone before him, he would resign today in protest at the cruelty inflicted upon the people of Atlantic Canada.

Let me say, and if it be partisan to say it then so be it, I am partisan, that I have never before in this House been ashamed of a colleague of mine from Newfoundland. I have been partisan, I have been angry, I have disagreed, I have had battles, but I have never been fundamentally ashamed of a colleague from Newfoundland, but the spectacle of the member for St. John's West, Newfoundland's member in the cabinet, tonight in this House was pathetic. It reminded me of the words of Marie Antoinette who said of the peasants in France: "Let them eat cake". Well, in Newfoundland they are not going to eat cake and there is going to be a revolution because we are not going to take this kind of treatment by our national government.

I hope Canadians realize that we are here tonight, and the fact that we are here is an extraordinary event. As you know, Madam Speaker, there are countless petitions for emergency debates, and 99.9 per cent of the time they are turned down. But the Speaker of the House of Commons said in response to the member for Cape Breton Highlands–Canso that indeed in the Speaker's judgment, and he is not partisan, he is not playing a game, he is presiding over this Parliament and we call upon his judgment from time to time, there is a crisis of national importance in Canada today.

What we ask of this government is a substantial response to the human plight and misery that exists in Atlantic Canada and what we ask of our fellow Canadians, what we Liberals are sure of, is that our fellow Canadians will give us their support because we know that while this government believes it can turn its back on Atlantic Canada, we know that Canadians from coast to coast shall rally to the cause of those who are in greatest need among us.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton–Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to be in the House tonight speaking on this most important concern to Atlantic Canadians. It is a debate, as many have mentioned this evening, that I guess many of us would be happy not to have to take part in because it clearly indicates there is a crisis in Atlantic Canada, one that we would much rather not have.

Thinking that this is December 18, we are only one week away from Christmas, many individuals are going to have a very difficult Christmas in Atlantic Canada. Many of them, of course, are fishermen who have worked their entire lives on the water and have made their living from the water. This year of all years, they have found it most difficult, very, very distressing and are having a most trying time doing the things they have traditionally done.

I believe that the Government of Canada does understand the problem. We are trying to do something about it and obviously that has to happen in this House. I do agree that the problem has to go beyond partisanship, that we can blame one another, we can blame successive governments, we can blame provincial governments, we can blame the federal government, but I think that if we are going to approach this problem, we have to approach it in a very positive sense. That is what I propose to do.

If I could, I would like to go through some steps that I think we should take as Canadians. Perhaps I could refer to something I would call the fishermen's bill of rights.

Whereas the primary goal of fisheries policy is to maintain successful and sustainable fisheries an whereas the fishermen of Canada are the people most affected by and most knowledgeable about successful and sustainable fisheries, therefore Canadian fisheries policy shall be founded upon and guided by the following principles: (1), that fishermen, as the people with the most immediate knowledge and interest in the fishery stocks of a region, shall be consulted to the maximum extent possible whenever stock assessment procedures, conservation measures or quotas are in issue; (2), that no action detrimental to the interests of the fishermen of any region be implemented until all available appeal mechanisms have been fully exhausted; (3), that in all instances government or departmental decisions relating to stocks, licensing, assessment or quotas be made known to the fishermen of the region affected at least one year before they take effect; (4), that licensing policies be consistent, practical, equitable and predictable, that no such policies be given retroactive effect; (5) that regulatory changes be unambiguous and understandable and be available in both languages at least six months before they are implemented; (6) that public hearings with sufficient notice be part of this stock assessment and quota setting process; (7) that in the development or enforcement of any policies relating to the fisheries the health and safety of fishermen be a paramount consideration; (8) that fish allocations be made with particular regard to communicaties dependent on the fisheries to maintain a traditional way of life; (9) that fishermen be entitled to compensation for the unfair taking of any licensing or quota privileges and that any changes or reductions not complying with this preamble be deemed an unfair taking.

• (2330)

I think we have to be constructive in this House and that is what I am attempting to do. I do not think it does anyone any favour to simply point fingers, holler, shout and wave arms. It is pretty good theatrics but it does not put bread on the table, and I think that is what we are speaking of.

In my riding of Carleton—Charlotte we have gone through some difficulties as well. In the early 1980s we had some difficulties in the herring fishery. I am proud to say that we have the largest herring fishery in Canada. In fact, we have what used to be the largest herring processing in the world and I think is still close to being the largest in the world in Black's Harbour. When that fishery got in trouble a number of years ago, we pulled together as a community and a province and explored other ways to do things and other areas of the fishery that we could make a living in.

One of the things we did as a province, with help from the federal government, was look into the aquaculture industry. The aquaculture industry, and the raising of salmon in particular, is one of the largest single industries in my constituency, second to none in Canada or in the world. It is producing a fine product and that came about simply because the people cared and they decided they were going to do something themselves and the government was there to help them out.

It was positive thinking that accomplished this. I refer back to my opening comments about it being one week before Christmas and I think that is the frame of mind that we have to put ourselves in. We look for the good that can come from adversity. That rings true with some of these difficulties and the determination of some people you meet when travelling through a riding like mine. I was speaking to a ground fisherman in my riding who, for some unknown reason, was not able to go out and do the thing that he is good at doing, and that is fish.

I said that this was for some unknown reason but I guess if you dig deep enough, or perhaps not so deep, you will find the reason. Somehow some of these people have been caught up in the system. This gentleman whom I mentioned has a small boat and was taking part in a quota system that was gobbled up by some of the bigger boats. What does he do? He says, "What can I do? I am 60 years old. I cannot go out and look for another job. I have payments to make on my boat. I have payments to make on repairs that I put in."

What does he do? He is in an area in which options are not readily available to him as they are in other parts of the country. Those are the people whom governments have to help and governments should help. Those are the people who get caught up in this nightmare of fishing in Atlantic Canada in that ground fishery. Those are the people whom I believe this government wants to help.

The Prime Minister has committed resources of this government to help those very people who have been caught in that unfortunate situation. We have been promised the same kind of help that was given to western Canadians, in particular the wheat farmers after the severe droughts and devastation that they have experienced in the last number of years. We owe this to the fishermen as we do to all Canadians. I believe that all Canadians have to enjoy the standard of living that we have all come to expect in this country. When difficult times arrive, we all have to pitch together as we have never done before to help these people over the hurdle.

I would like to conclude by saying that we have a caring government, a government that wants to do something, a government that will do something. I am proud to be part of this government that is not afraid to recognize that there are problems in the industry. This government is prepared to assess these problems honestly and in a comprehensive manner. This government understands that these problems are best addressed by building on the sound practices that we have adopted for the management of this very vital resource.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): This evening, Mr. Speaker, in response to the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. LeBlanc), I intend to direct most of my remarks to the conservation angle. In the next few minutes I will attempt to argue in favour of taking measures aimed at promoting the conservation of fish species landed by Canada's east cost fishermen.

Mr. Speaker, there is one basic principle which cannot be ignored in fishing for and harvesting marine species, to wit: Mankind must not take more of a given fish species than the species is able to reproduce itself. To put it another way, we cannot guarantee the survival of fish species caught along and off the shores of our coasts unless we prevent people from taking more than specific species are able to replenish their own stocks through reproduction.

My immediate concern, Mr. Speaker, is that too many years have gone by without our realizing that fishing and harvesting activities along our coasts ignore that fundamental precept.

There have been major changes in the fishing industry over the past 25 years. During that time fishing boats have been equipped with sophisticated facilities, the fishing and harvesting techniques of fishermen looking for ever more numerous species have improved extremely rapidly, and the year and equipment used by fisherman have been highly refined.

These changes in the three fields I have mentioned have made it possible for fishermen to draw maximum resources from known fishing grounds. They also paved the way to new fishing sites and, finally, they enabled man to reach remode areas which until then had remained untapped.

As conditions evolved, new operators appeared in the commercial fishing industry, not to mention the fact that existing plants were modernized and fitted with the latest and ever more sophisticated processing facilities. Technology revolutionized processing methods and plants became much more efficient. At the same time, new larger and better equipped plants were built in all the eastern Canada provinces.

In only a few years eastern Canada's commercial fishing industry made the transition from the rudimentary conditions it had been in for three centuries to a modern and effective undertaking.

These radical changes in the fishing and processing industry put added pressure on traditionally harvested species and led to the discovery of new untapped resources in areas which until then had been beyond the reach of fishermen.

As fishing methods improved at an accelerated rate and processing plants became more efficient, the then government under the Liberal Party forgot something which was to have a catastrophic impact on the future of fisheries and the processing industry. Madam Speaker, they failed to evaluate the fish stocks that were being used and neglected to conduct scientific research on stocks of fish species that were not being used.

• (2340)

The government at the time lacked the vision to consider the medium and long-term consequences of additional pressures on fish stocks and increased fishing of new species. It saw the profound changes that were shaking up the fisheries and processing industries, but remained unconcerned about the condition of existing stocks and the negative impact that increased fishing would have on those stocks.

The government at the time should have had the foresight to increase its efforts in pure research on fish stocks and research directly related to the fishery.

Research on fish stocks would, at the time, have made it possible to establish the state of those stocks and determine allowable catch levels. The scientific data would have made it possible to guarantee the continued existence of the species being used and that of new species that were starting to be used by the fishery.

This oversight and lack of vision of the party in power during those years produced the situation that now prevails in the Atlantic fishery. This evening, the opposition is trying to make the present government take the blame for the situation. I may remind the Official Opposition that the government of the time must take the blame for the present situation and that the government of the time was formed by the Liberal Party.

I would like to quote the example of our Atlantic salmon. The main parties concerned about the fate of the Atlantic salmon have known for some like that this species cannot tolerate years and years of overfishing. However, it was not until the Atlantic salmon was nearing extinction that radical action was taken to ensure its survival.

People at all levels, the federal government, the provincial governments, sports fishermen, commercial fishermen, native peoples, owners of river property, fishing associations and outfitters realized that to ensure the continued existence if the Atlantic salmon, they had to establish a minimum number of spawners in a given river and let the fish come back to their river of birth to spawn and reproduce. This basic datum has to be known before harvesting levels can be set, and only then can they be allotted among users on the basis of seasonal quotas. This sound management principle has stood the test of time, for the Atlantic salmon stock depletion seems to have stopped. We can therefore hope for a return to safer conditions for Atlantic salmon stocks. People have gone back to orderly and prudent harvesting of or stocks.

Eastern Canada producers and commercial fishermen must now acknowledge and accept this basic truth. I would suggest it is the only way to ensure the health of Atlantic fish species and the survival of the fishing and processing industries on the east coast of Canada.

Our government has already taken bold steps in that direction. Our guarantee of success now depends on supportive action on the part of the provincial governments of the fishermen and processors. Five years of good management by this government cannot undo all the harm done by the overfishing and incompetence which prevailed under the previous administration. We on this side of the House are quite prepared to continue to set up the research mechanisms which will enable us to widen our knowledge of Atlantic fish stocks and species. We need the co-operation of fishermen and producers, we need to combine the resources of the federal government with the ingeniosity and skills of fishermen and producers.

Such concerted efforts will make it easier to achieve a double objective: ensure the survival of fish stocks harvested along the eastern seashores of the country, and ensure the economic survival of communities and families whose bread and butter comes from the fishing industry. Let us look confidently to the future and make a joint effort, for I am convinced we will be able to reach these objectives.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House this evening to participate in this very serious debate about the state of Canada's Atlantic fishery.

We are faced with an emergency in Atlantic Canada. We in Parliament tonight have to turn more of our attention to this very serious issue of the future of this resource in Atlantic Canada, for Atlantic Canada and for the future of all of Canada. We have to turn our attention to the prolonged mismanagement of Canada's natural resources and our fish stocks, to the failed regional economic development policies and to the elimination of viable small communities and rural life in this country. These are the results of decades of Liberal mismanagement and now five years of Tory incompetence and neglect.

In 1982, the Kirby report to the Liberal government of the day warned and I quote: "A reliance on growth cannot be sustained indefinitely and in many stocks the biological limits of prudent harvesting have been reached". In 1987 and 1988 these warnings were again issued.

The previous Liberal government did not pay any attention to this and other warnings about the fate of the Atlantic fishery. The present Conservative government did not pay any attention either until, in 1989, they began to close down the fisheries and the communities in the Atlantic.

Even a few days ago, in the wake of massive lay-offs in the fishing industry, the Prime Minister's response was to blame everything on the previous administration, despite the fact that the studies were there for the government to see. This government has been in power for about half a decade now and it is time to start accepting a little responsibility. In fact, as I have said, this government has been repeatedly warned about the growing dangers to the Atlantic fisheries.

I said that in 1988 the government had been warned. In fact, the background paper for the Canada-Newfoundland Inshore Fisheries Agreement contained the following warning: "With few exceptions the fisheries resources of the Atlantic have reached their maximum utilization and in some cases there is an indication that over-exploitation is occurring."

Where was the planning when that information came? Where was the planning for more rural development and development in those communities? Why has the government waited until 1989 and caused this devastation in Atlantic Canada?

Let me briefly review, as people have been doing tonight, the emergency that is now gripping the Atlantic fishery. Last Monday, National Sea Products, one of the two largest fishing corporations in Canada, announced its series of plant closures and lay-offs. The St. John's facility will be closed with a loss of 492 direct jobs. The Canso, Nova Scotia, processing plant will close with a cost of 742 direct jobs. In North Sydney 280 jobs will be lost due to plant changes.

These are statistics, but these are people. These are families. These are families who are going into 1990 without knowing what their future is going to be, without knowing whether there is even going to be a future in their community and in their region of the country.

According to the Fishermen, Food and Allied Workers Union, 1,300 more jobs may be lost in the coming weeks if Fishery Products International announces plans to close other operations in Newfoundland. The situation is that in the coming year Newfoundland could lose up to 6,000 fisheries-related jobs. A comparable figure in central Canada would be 115,000 jobs.

This is why we are pleased that this House has seen fit to debate this as an emergency. It is a serious emergency for our country and for that region because these job losses come on top of what is already happening to Atlantic Canada. Cutbacks on VIA Rail have taken jobs away from Atlantic Canada and have reduced options for the people who live there.

In the fisheries industry there are clearly too few fish and not enough jobs for people who fish and for workers in related industries. Today we learned about the number of small plants and small businesses in Nova Scotia which build boats and provide additional services to those in the fishing industry that are closing.

Successive governments have failed to manage the resource. The government must take responsibility for that failure, both in terms of the inability of the government departments to adequately assess the quantities through their own scientific research and in terms of dealing with the impending doom that has been clearly outlined for a number of years.

• (2350)

Past and present governments have set catch quotas, granted foreign fishing rights and allowed the introduction of new technologies without fully comprehending the sustainability of the fishery.

One issue in particular, the foreign overfishing of the Grand Banks, has been a longstanding problem. It is not something new, it is not something that just happened in December of 1989, two weeks before Christmas, but has been a longstanding problem.

The European community recently announced plans to take more than 50,000 tonnes of fish from the Grand Banks, more than three times the quota suggested by the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization. This announcement comes in the face of the Canadian government's promised commitment in the speech from the throne last April to work toward ending foreign overfishing on the Atlantic coast.

Yet between 1986 and 1989 the nations of the European Community overfished the Grand Banks by 600 per cent; not 2 per cent or 10 per cent or 100 per cent, but 600 per cent. The evidence could not be clearer. Surely it is time for the government to admit the mistakes that have been made and to help these people in the Atlantic to deal with these issues and to keep this industry alive.

Meanwhile, there has been inadequate Canadian funding and resources for the kind of research that might have added to the sustainability of this industry, as well as for planning and coastal patrol. Atlantic Canadians, of course, like everyone in Canada, face the other cuts; the VIA Rail cuts, the unemployment insurance cutbacks, and the possibility of being hit with this goods and services tax which is going to burden even more people already in a very difficult situation. On top of that there is the Conservative erosion of social programs as a consequence of the trade deal. There is no question that there is a serious crisis in Atlantic Canada in the fishery.

Tonight in this House and in the coming days and weeks we have to face the facts and seek real solutions to these problems. Newfoundland New Democrat leader Cle Newhook said today that Atlantic Canadians want to know if this government has the guts to avert the economic and social disaster that is going to take place in his province and in the maritimes. I and my party want to know that too.

We have some suggestions about the kinds of actions that this government should take and take now. Jobs must be saved and jobs must be created. People in the Atlantic do not want a welfare cheque, they want a pay cheque. We have to save the communities of the Atlantic. We in this party do not accept the age-old practice of monopoly corporations and companies that close down plants and whole towns on the basis of short-term profitability. We believe in long-term commitment in Canadians and Canadian resources.

We do not believe in the short term of shutting down, whether it is a Schefferville, an Ocean Falls, a Canso, a Lockeport or the Grand Banks. Canadians, wherever they live, in large communities or small ones, on family farms or in fishing villages, deserve the security of knowing that their communities will survive, prosper and nurture and that their children will have a future. Canadians have a right to expect that our rural communities and our resource based economies can develop and can be protected by a government that does not plan just for the short term but plans for the future of our children. That right and those values must come before plant profits and the quick movement of capital.

We are suggesting that some companies should be encouraged to keep processing plants operating, at least seasonally, in order to continue to provide work in a community economic base. Surely people who are working for at least part of the year are in a better position to keep their communities going than if they have no means of employment.

The federal government should facilitate, help and, if necessary, underwrite the continued operation of presently threatened processing plants to be owned and managed by workers and producers through co-ops if the companies themselves refuse to continue to operate.

The government must undertake a full environment and fisheries resources study on the Atlantic coast to determine the fish stocks and the preservation of spawning grounds and to review how fish quotas and allocations are set.

As we in this party pointed out in our review of Canada's security policy in April of 1988, Canada must improve its own offshore surveillance and coastal patrol capacity, both in the air and on the sea. Canada has to get tough with our European neighbours. For most of this century Canadians have taken up responsibilities for European security and peace. We have every right to demand European recognition of our national resource, our environment and our economic interests in the Atlantic.

The government is obliged to make this clear and definite and to press an immediate European recognition of NAFO quotas for the Grand Banks. Canada, in the end, must make it clear that we are willing to unilaterally extend our economic jurisdiction to all of the Grand Banks if the Europeans fail to co-operate.

The government must take some necessary action at home. It must end its plans to gut the unemployment insurance system, because under these plans 45,000 Atlantic Canadians will lose their qualification to unemployment insurance. The government can help the desperate Atlantic economy and Atlantic fishery by ensuring that there is bread and butter on the tables of the thousands of families already wholly or partially reliant on some unemployment insurance benefits.

Finally, the Atlantic fishery situation is yet another reminder of the total failure of the trade deal. Thousands of jobs continue to be lost across Canada from coast to coast, whether it is in agriculture, in the industrial sector or in the fisheries on the west and the east coasts. Consumers, as we read again today, have gained nothing from the trade deal. So what have we gained from this? As I said the other day, what we gained is that many Canadians are getting the pink slip and it is time that this government gave the pink slip to the United States on this trade deal.

There is a new term, it is "economic restructuring". That is very nice if you do not happen to be one of those people who is affected or one of those communities that is affected by this term. We said a year ago that Canada's social programs are under attack by the government itself in response to demands from the American economy. The trade deal must go. The sooner this government wakes up to that fact the better for all Canadians and for the chances of survival in Atlantic Canada, in western Canada and in all of Canada.

I returned from the Yukon and British Columbia for this debate this evening because it is an important debate about the future of our country and the survival of the Atlantic. It is also a reminder that much of Canada is under a threat at the moment and, indeed, much of our way of life. Northerners face new environmental and economic threats. West coast fisheries face resource problems, foreign catch and territorial disputes, and serious threats from pollution. As leader of my party I am committed to the survival of rural Canada and of our smaller communities and way of life.

In the north, in the east, and in the west we need policies and new commitments to build a country that is fair and prosperous for all Canadians no matter where they live or how they choose to work. I pledge my efforts and the energies of my colleagues to building that kind of Canada. I urge this government to take action now to save the fisheries in Atlantic Canada so that in the 1990s we can show that we are once again a strong nation that protects and invests in our resources and in Canadians in all parts of this country.

• (0000)

Mr. J.W. Bud (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I also travelled tonight to get here from my riding, not as far as the hon. member for Yukon but certainly deliberately to participate in this debate. While my riding is not directly involved in the fishery, this is an issue with which I can and do identify, an issue with which I am deeply concerned and share the legitimate sense of crisis and perhaps even tragedy at this particular time of year for those families, those people and those communities who are suffering as a result of the closures which we are witnessing at this time.

It is always tempting to engage in political rhetoric, to pontificate and to cast blame at a time like this, but I think that the fisheries situation in Atlantic Canada is really much too serious for that. That is especially so when we contemplate that National Sea has closed or is about to close 1,200 jobs in Canso, close to 500 in St. John's and 300 in North Sydney. When we read today in the newspaper about receivership of a fisheries business in Prince Edward Island; when we read about more than 100 boatbuilders who are in difficulty throughout Nova Scotia, the impact of the Atlantic fisheries and the serious nature of this crisis hits us very strongly and very deeply.

I was disappointed to hear some of my hon. colleagues from the Official Opposition tonight, particularly the member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys when he read selectively half of an article that was in The Globe and Mail today about National Sea. He attempted to blame this government for all of the difficulties that are upon the fishery. He was even blaming us for the international diversification of that company.

He left out the first part of that article which pointed out that the Liberal government of his day invested $70 million in the pay-down of a loan, $10 million in preferred shares—$80 million in that company to end up with 20 per cent of the shares, which those who now own 80 per cent of the shares got for $20 million. It was a terrible piece of business. Of course, it has proven to be a terrible example of resource management and fisheries management.

As I have said, I really feel it is not the time for rhetoric. It is really a time for care and compassion, for response, for planning and long-term action. I would like to quote an article of last week from the Fredericton Daily Gleaner, our home-town paper, in which it quoted as a prelude to the editorial a statement by John F. Kennedy when he said—and I believe it pertains to this House tonight—"Our task now is not to fix the blame for the past but to fix the course for the future".

What we have on our hands in the Atlantic fishery is a serious case of unsustainable development, of fishing and processing capabilities and capacities which are now clearly beyond the tolerable yield of the ocean's fish resources. The causes are many. We have heard of scientific forecasting which has been in error and inadequate. We have seen excessive investments in boats, in plants and equipment. We see evidence of overfishing of quotas both domestically and by foreigners. There are no shortage of causes, but there are not many solutions, certainly no easy ones.

I think the first thing we must commit to do is to fix the resource itself. Our fish stocks are declining and must be rebuilt urgently. They must be built to sustainable levels so that we will not have them only for one time in a sustainable fashion, but we will have them for future generations in a sustainable fashion as well. This means that there will be dramatic cuts in quotas and there will be new disciplines in catches. It will mean fewer boats and fewer plants and fewer jobs. We may not be able to gain the levels of the past.

As I listen to my hon. colleagues from the fishing constituencies of Atlantic Canada, particularly those on the other side, criticizing the government and talking about how sinful it is to talk about training people for new kinds of work, to talk even about the horrible word of "relocation" to areas where jobs are plentiful, I cannot help but wonder if there is not just a political blind spot. They just refuse to accept the realities of the facts of the fishing industry, the fact that it is not sustainable, the fact that to make these communities and these people slaves to an industry that is unsustainable is a crime in itself. I think that in these fishing communities the people equally with the resource are the compelling priority.

To his credit, when the hon. Elmer MacKay first addressed this crisis on behalf of the government last week his first words were clear and unequivocal. He said that the Government of Canada is fully committed to assisting individuals, families and the communities affected by the downturn in the fishery.

How is this commitment of support to be delivered? In many ways; through the industrial adjustment service for one, which I believe is a service that is going to have to be expanded and made more comprehensive in this day and age in Canada, not just with respect to the fishery. For example, it was designed, my understanding is, to support the free trade agreement in recognition that there would be dislocations, structural emergencies as a result of the transition to free trade.

We have the Summerside situation which I believe is the most compelling single area for care and compassion by this government, one that we must address through the industrial adjustment service and otherwise. I believe that we must address the fishery throughout Atlantic Canada in a very strong and profound way with this service.

As well of course we have the broad range of programs and services through the unemployment insurance administration, the Canadian Jobs Strategy, income support emergency response, job training, relocation assistance, community initiatives and special aid for older workers.

A special response for the longer term is also essential. I agree with what has been said by the hon. member for Yukon tonight. This is a long-term problem we are addressing in part, and we must have long-term answers. We must, as I said earlier, face the facts of the fisheries, that there are limits to the potential of the fisheries. We must accept those limits not just for the sustainable harvest in our time, as I have said earlier, but also to serve future generations.

What does this mean? It means establishing new ways of life for many people in many communities. It means finding new economic activities, new industries and new jobs.

I believe that the greatest single challenge facing Canada today is to confront the realities of unsustainable development, to take the action that is necessary, to be sure, but even more critically to address the need for viable alternatives and to create those alternatives, to replace jobs which have become unsustainable.

This challenge is probably greater in Atlantic Canada than in any other part of the country. We do not have to apologize for that either. We are founding shareholders in the Canadian confederation. The truth is abundantly clear. There is economic disparity in the Atlantic region which must be balanced with the more economically favoured parts of our country.

Regional development action is essential to provide long-term growth in Atlantic Canada that would otherwise not occur. That special kind of assistance must be more than just a sharing with the boom areas of Canada. It must provide an advantage to Atlantic Canada that will help rationalize our disadvantages of distance, of size of our markets and of scale. It must be a unique extra that will attract new industry to our region, that will spur development by our entrepreneurs and that will relieve our overdependence on sensitive natural resources such as the fishery.

For example, while interest rates are justifiably high defending against inflation right across Canada and an adjustable or variable interest rate policy is not possible, there is a special need for regional measures to ameliorate those rates in Atlantic Canada where, frankly, the economy cannot stand the impact of those rates to the extent that it can in the overheated areas of southern Ontario.

• (0010)

What can be done to address the crisis in the Atlantic fisheries and what can be done for Atlantic Canada?

I mentioned special measures to ameliorate things such as interest rate policies. There are other things that can be done, that are being done, that will be done.

In terms of regional development I have said several times in this House that regional development spending in Atlantic Canada will touch $.5 billion in 1989—by far the largest in the history of the Atlantic region. It will average $425 million for the balance of the five-year fiscal plan. Perhaps, in view of the fisheries crisis, that is not enough.

The ACOA fund of $1 billion has been a major and significant initiative for Atlantic Canada. In the context of the fishery, in the context of Summerside, in the context of the structural dislocations we face in Atlantic Canada, perhaps it is time to consider increasing the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Fund for the future.

The unemployment insurance fund has a wide array of assistance both for immediate response and for long-term alternatives. The Liberal-dominated Senate of this country must pass Bill C-21 or it will penalize these very fishermen commencing January 1 of whom we speak tonight.

With respect to the free trade agreement, I would hope that the wishes of the hon. member for Yukon would never be realized. I believe that all Atlantic Canadians would hope that because one of the really bright spots in the future of Atlantic Canada is the 50 million person market that exists less than 24 hours trucking distance from our major centres. That market represents the greatest single potential for the future of the Atlantic region of any other economic factor.

We will process in the Atlantic, and the free trade agreement permits us to process it in the Atlantic region. That will help us to realize the potential of that megalopolis of the northeastern United States. I trust that the hon. member for Yukon will change her tune and come to realize that if she ever hopes to get a seat in Atlantic Canada, which I would seriously doubt, it will not be by turning off the few bright potential spots that we have.

Going beyond that, I have mentioned the industrial adjustment services. My colleagues have mentioned the community future services. There are initiatives that are required. There are major undertakings for communities such as Canso and Summerside.

In closing, I would like to remind you that in the throne speech earlier this year the government did announce a strategy for Canada. It contained several pivotal factors. One was financial stability. We are moving in those directions.

Another was economic growth. We are moving in those directions.

Another was sustainable development. We are grappling now with sustainable development in the fishery. For the first time we are confronting, as the Minister from St. John's West said tonight, the reality of people enslaved to a fishery that is inadequate to be sustainable for them.

The last thing that the throne speech stated was that we are committed to a compassionate and caring society. I call on all members of this House tonight to address the Atlantic fishery and other problems in the Atlantic region with this sense of care and compassion, with this sense of constructive, co-operative debate that will lead to solutions and not merely rhetorical problems such as we hear so often in this House.

I would like to assure Atlantic Canadians that this government is a caring and compassionate government. I would like to assure them that the Atlantic fishery has my support. Coming as I do from an area that is not directly affected, I would want them to know that I and my colleagues support the concerns and the problems. They can count on us to see that they are resolved in the future.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Madam Speaker, it has been a long evening and an interesting one. I have sat and listened to most of it. I have learned something, but not from all of the speakers. I can recall the Minister for International Trade speaking for example. I could not help but think of the description of a previous speech a couple of hundred years ago, "full of sound and fury signifying nothing". Add his reassurances to the people of Newfoundland that he was going to look after them to the reassurances of the previous Minister for International Trade, Pat Carney, and to those of the present Minister of Fisheries who promised also to protect the traditional jobs in the fish-processing industry in B.C.—and we know what happened there. If you put all those reassurances together in one handful it would still take 80 cents to get a cup of coffee in the government cafeteria.

The Leader of the Opposition accused the government of mismanagement. Government members have accused the Liberals of mismanagement. Madam Speaker, they are both right. But none of those accusations, right or wrong, is going to add one pound to the biomass of cod out there waiting to spawn. There is no point now in saying who did something wrong or who did not do something right. That is not the argument. The question is, what are we going to do from here on? What is the government doing right now?

I would say if either party is more to blame than the other, it would be the Conservatives because they have been in office for over five years and they have done nothing to improve the situation in those five years. In fact, it is getting worse. There is no question about that.

In 1988, the total allowable catch of northern cod was set at 266,000 tonnes. In 1989, the federal scientists urged that the total allowable catch be reduced to 125,000 tonnes, and the Minister for International Trade proudly boasted that he would not accept that figure from the scientists. He insisted that the total allowable catch would be 235,000 tonnes. He did that to protect the jobs of the fishermen and the people in the fish-processing industry in Newfoundland—short-term gain for long-term pain.

Harvesting more than twice as much as the best scientific evidence told us should be harvested was nothing short of a disaster for the industry. For the minister to say that he is a responsible minister in this government, it would be better to say that he is an irresponsible minister when he is treating the codfish stock in that manner.

The Harris report for northern cod, released in May of 1989, talked about the codfish stocks. Bearing in mind that in 1977 the best advice available was that there should be 1.4 million tonnes in the cod biomass for spawning, the Harris report said in 1989 that the figures at that time were 725,000 to 500,000 tonnes, an average less than half of what there should be to maintain the proper spawning population. If the figure is actually 725,000, the upper limit of what Harris said, we could rebuild the cod stocks gradually if we harvested 200,000 tonnes a year, if he was right with the 725,000 figure. If he was right at the 500,000 figure, harvesting 200,000 tonnes a year for five years would reduce the stock to the point where there would be no hope of it ever coming back. It is just that close. We have to be below the 200,000 to be able to achieve anything, to be able to guarantee the protection of that resource. Yet the Minister for International Trade proudly boasts that he insisted on it being 235,000—much higher than it should have been for any safety.

We like to blame the Europeans, and several have. Certainly, I was part of that group that went overseas. We listened and we talked. We blamed the Spanish and the Portuguese for overfishing of the nose and the tail of the Grand Banks. It was great fun. I think there is no doubt but that they are overfishing in those areas.

There is also some question as to what the Canadians are doing, and the Europeans kept throwing this at us. What about our own fishing? I talked already about us harvesting 235,000 when the scientists say it should be 125,000. Do you think they do not know that? Do you think they do not know that we are harvesting twice as many as we should be? Of course they know it. We are pointing a finger at them and they are pointing it right back at us.

Then they say: "What other scientific evidence is there to back up your claim that it is our overfishing in the nose and the tail that are being destructive and somebody else's overfishing is not?" What about other factors? What other factors are there?

For example, what about predators? The question was raised when I think one of the government members talked about the seals and what they are doing. As far as I know, the only reports I have heard is that they have not actually found cod in the seals that have been killed. If not, perhaps the seals are eating the food of the cod. Certainly, they must be having some effect when they are increasing in the numbers that they are. Should something be done about that? I do not know. It is one of the things that has to be considered. Certainly cutting back on the harvest is also something that has to be considered pretty seriously.

• (0020)

What about mismanagement? Yes. What about mismanagement by both parties? Yes. Let us forget about that and let us do something about the future. That is what we have to agree to do.

Being pushed around by the Americans has been mentioned. I think again it was the Leader of the Opposition who mentioned that. Of course that is true, no question about it. Look what happened on the west coast. I spoke earlier about the promises from government members to protect jobs in the processing industry and protect the fishermen. We know that has not been done. We can blame it on GATT, but there was a solution to that which we ignored. We can blame it on the free trade panel. What is happening there? The Canadian government said: "Yes, we accept 20 per cent." The Americans said: "No way." They are not willing to accept that, and I have not heard what has happened since. This was supposed to be decided quite some time ago.

We gave up control of our resources when we became part of this free trade deal, not just of fish I am afraid, but other resources as well. We certainly said to the Americans: "You can have our fish." That is the way they are interpreting the agreement. They are threatening that if we do not interpret it the same way that they are going to take retaliatory action that will make us play ball the way they want us to play ball.

On the east coast there are similar problems. The same Minister for International Trade is quoted as saying as much as much as 80 million pounds of unprocessed fish could have left Nova Scotia in 1988. How many jobs is that? Those fish could have been processed in Canada, on the east coast where all these plants are shutting down. We could have kept some of those plants open had we insisted on processing all our fish in our processing plants with our workers. The Conservative member of Parliament for South Shore, Nova Scotia, said: "Nova Scotia alone is exporting 1,000 jobs a year." That would have kept some of the smaller plants open.

There has been some talk of the alternatives to cod fishing. The Minister of Fisheries, I believe, talked about some 350,000 tonnes of other species that are available for harvest. I do not think he really assigned blame, although I had the feeling when he was saying this that it was because the fishermen were not catching them, were not harvesting them. I see him shaking his head. I am glad to see that. It is not the fishermen. They would be delighted to harvest all these 350,000 tonnes of any species if there was a market for them, but we need the market. That is where the government has to come in.

I attended a meeting in Lockeport when that plant had been closed, a meeting that I think was originally organized by the United Auto Workers Union which brought together people from the community, from the council and from various organizations. They all agreed on a plan for something that might be done with Lockeport. The essence of it was: "Let's use Lockeport as a sort of research place to find some way of using these species that are not currently being used."

I have one small example in my constituency of Nanaimo where a small processor of fish tried for years to do something with dogfish. The problem was the ammonia. What do you do with the ammonia? How do you get rid of the ammonia? He eventually produced a very tasty product, smoked, canned dogfish. The ammonia was out of it. I asked him how he did it but of course he wasn't going to tell me that. As far as I know that product is still being produced.

Through research that one person on his own was able to do something with the dogfish that was and is such a nuisance on the west coast. What about these species on the Atlantic? It would seem to me that the proposal to use the Lockeport plant or any other place as a research facility to find some way of utilizing what the minister called the under-utilized species that are there in such large quantities is a good proposal. It cannot be the fishermen who do it. Industry will not do it. Industry will go out and buy more boats. I think NatSea spent some $16 million just buying another freezer-trawler after it closed several plants in the Atlantic provinces. It has money to buy these big trawlers that put fishermen out of work, but it does not have any money for research to find what should be done with these under-utilized species.

Apart from management that has to be cleaned up, apart from using the under-utilized species to provide more economic opportunities, we also have to sustain the workforce that is being cut back now because of the closures. We hope that with proper management there will be an increase in fish stocks and we would hope to be using others. The workers are there now. It is not their fault. As I say, government members have accused the Liberals. The Liberals have accused the government members. Nobody has accused the people working in the fishing industry, whether the fishermen or the workers, of having done anything wrong. It is not their fault that the resource was mismanaged. They are there ready, willing and able to work. Hopefully, there will be job opportunities for them. In the meantime they have to be sustained.

Unemployment insurance is being cut back seriously. The government has to have the responsibility of making sure that those people, even if they are not able to work, have a decent income to keep them going until these plants reopen. If they are not going to reopen, then there has to be a period when the government will help them and help them get re-established, but not in retraining them to take jobs on VIA Rail that is going out of business or to take jobs in the tourist industry at minimum wage. They need decent jobs that will enable them to contribute to the economy in their communities.

We have to manage the stock properly. Yes, Spain and Portugal are overfishing. But one of the messages I heard in Europe time after time was that if we clean up our act in Canada and do a better job of managing the resource here, then we will be in a much better position to recommend to them that they clean up their act and we might be listened to more carefully. Let us put our own house in order. They said it is not enough just to juggle the catch. We need to have scientific analysis to find out exactly what is going wrong. Why are we so short of fish? Maybe it is the catch. They want more work done on it than to simply count the number of fish that somebody is catching.

The minister in the press release he put out talked about penalties, enforcement powers, changing the system of quotas, better systems for 1990. That is all very well, but the immediate step has to be taken to cut back on the total allowable catch. These other things make a pretty small contribution toward building up the population. It is the catch that is doing it.

The predators I have mentioned. The Minister for International Trade blamed the scientists for having gone wrong. They gave wrong information. Well, even scientists can do that. Usually the latest information is the best information. Let us go for the best we can get.

Another thing that is in some of the material I have here is that if you cannot get the truth from scientists, go to the fishermen. It was in 1988 that the fishermen said the total allowable catch of 266,000 tonnes was too much for the fish. They could not stand it. They were right. I am missing a comment from across the way. The minister said, I think, that that was why he reduced it. Remember, the scientists said reduce it to 125,000 tonnes, and I do not hear the minister saying he is going that far. It takes drastic action. There is going to be unemployment in the meantime that the government has to look after. If we are going to build that up, we have to deal with it as a serious problem that requires drastic action. It is up to the government to accept its responsibility to save that stock.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Madam Speaker, I rise tonight to participate in this emergency debate because it has profound effects on the economy of Atlantic Canada and in particular it has profound negative economic effects on communities such as Canso, North Sydney and parts of Newfoundland.

Fortunately, in my constituency we were spared a closure of a National Sea Products facility. However, Madam Speaker, I want to tell you and members of this House that residents of my constituency take no great pleasure in the anguish, the uncertainty that the people in Canso, North Sydney and parts of Newfoundland are confronted with at the present time.

Some weeks ago I participated in a major rally in Louisbourg, Nova Scotia. At that time, before 700 individuals, I made a number of observations with regard to the Atlantic fisheries, particularly with respect to the solutions which were necessary to be put in place in order to resolve a very serious situation.

• (0030)

While the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is in the House, I would like to share with him for a moment or two the unanimous consent of those who attended that particular meeting on this cold wintry night and of individuals in communities who did not have a National Sea Products fishing plant. Nevertheless they were involved in the fisheries, whether it be the inshore or the offshore, whether it be plant workers in other plants. It was unanimous by each and every one that the first thing the Government of Canada must do and should do very quickly was ask the minister of fisheries to resign.

This minister has lost the confidence of those individuals who participate in the Atlantic fisheries. When you lose the confidence of those individuals you are supposed to represent at the cabinet table, I think it only appropriate and responsible for that individual who holds such high office as the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to exercise those responsibilities and resign forthwith as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

That will not be the cure-all, but it will provide some segment of confidence in an industry and a region which have been bastardized by the present administration in Ottawa.

There are other solutions that could be made to address this very serious situation. The second thing that the government ought to do is to allow the Department of Fisheries and Oceans under the direction of a new minister to exercise paramount control when it comes to fisheries management of our stocks. No longer can the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the senior bureaucrats in the Prime Minister's office be giving directions to the federal Department of Fisheries and Oceans. Fisheries and Oceans must be paramount with regard to External Affairs when it comes to fisheries related matters. No longer can we accept a secondary status.

That leads to an issue which I believe is fundamental. Even the parliamentary secretary has spoken eloquently tonight but was substantively wrong. He ought to know, not as a newcomer to the House of Commons but as an individual who has played around in the halls of power in Ottawa, that the foreign overfishing taking place on the offshore is crucial and devastating to our Canadian fishermen.

When are we as a nation going to exercise our own control? When are we as a nation going to say no to the foreign fleets whether they be Portuguese, Spanish or French, whether they be ships from the United States of America? Is it not high time that the Government of Canada stop kowtowing to foreign interests and stand up for Canadian interests first?

Recently we have seen the President of the United States confirm a law which was passed through the Congress of the United States that negatively affects lobster fishermen in Atlantic Canada. In the province of Nova Scotia it will mean a lessening of $30 million into our economy. What it means is that jobs will be lost and the domestic price for lobster will be substantially reduced not only for this fiscal year but for fiscal years in the future. What did we have? We had the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, the Minister for International Trade and yes, the almighty one, the Prime Minister, sending notes to the President of the United States pleading with him not to pass this particular legislation.

Somehow those of us in Atlantic Canada are to be secure in the knowledge and in the fact that this matter now must go before a free trade panel. No one knows the sanction that it will impose. We know a bit about the time frame, but we do not know the sanction that will be imposed. Even if we knew the sanction there is no guarantee that the Americans will accept it.

I say to the parliamentary secretary who is the only one in the Government of Canada listening to the debate at this late hour that they should spend $30 million now readily available on those fishermen who are going to lose as a result of this regressive measure in the United States. If that were done, it would show a measure of good faith by the Government of Canada.

In the remaining time I want to say a few words to those people in Canso, Nova Scotia and in North Sydney in my province. I am embarrassed to stand here tonight with no federal representative from the Conservative Party of Canada in cabinet saying one word, not one sentence for those fishermen in Nova Scotia. I am sure there will be good reason for this lack of attendance tonight, but no one from cabinet has spoken out for the economic interest of Nova Scotians. We talk tonight not of statistics contained in the briefing book of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. We are talking about people, ordinary Canadians, who have mortgages, who have children, who have bills to pay and dreams yet unachieved.

Yet this government has said to those Canadians in Canso, Nova Scotia and in North Sydney: "We don't care. That is not our problem. That is National Sea's problem. Because it is their problem, we are not going to come to your assistance. We are not going to provide the kind of aid which is needed. We will dance with you for a little while, but when the song is over your future will not be in those communities; it will be elsewhere in this great country".

The situation is of a crisis nature. It requires leadership. It requires financial aid. It requires co-operation. It also requires political will by a government that has yet to show any interest or any substantive concern for those men and women in Atlantic Canada who depend so heavily on the fisheries.

I would hope that we would support both in substance and in spirit the emergency motion put forward by my colleague from Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, stated by my colleague from Cape Breton—The Sydneys and by other members from eastern Nova Scotia. We will try to resolve this particular problem, but it requires political will by the Government of Canada which is not any being exhibited now nor has it been in the immediate past.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, I rise tonight in support of the motion of my hon. colleague from Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, specifically that the Liberal party condemns the government's mismanagement of the Atlantic fishery.

This motion is allowing members on this side of the House to explain the real situation in Atlantic Canada, not the situation as seen from the government's point of view or expressed by Conservative members opposite.

• (0040)

The Government's agenda has been questioned by all Atlantic Canadians at this point in time. In fact we have been questioning it for a long time. "What does the federal government have in store for Atlantic Canada", we ask? Not much.

It has closed Canadian forces bases. It has cut back Via Rail. It has proposed major changes to the unemployment insurance system and has mismanaged the Atlantic fishery to such an extent that it is rapidly declining, causing the closure of plants throughout the maritimes and in some cases shutting down small communities. The fishery is a vital resource to all Atlantic Canadians and its preservation is integral to the survival of the Atlantic region.

It is ironic it was the Canadian government that did so much to contribute to the management of the Canadian fishery by introducing fishing quotas, fishing seasons, and minimum size for fish. Now we are seeing the government destroy the fishery by closing down fish plants in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, allowing overfishing by foreign fleets and, moreover, in the wake of the agreement signed last week, virtual inaction from either the minister of fisheries or the Prime Minister. The plant that will close in Canso causing the loss of 742 jobs, the reduction in operations at the National Sea plant in North Sydney causing the loss of 280 jobs, and the closure of the National Sea plant in St. John's, Newfoundland will add to the deplorable state of the Atlantic economy.

The Canso plant which employs over 60 per cent of the community's population of 1,200 will be closed in April 1990. This is the only industry in this small community. The government has promised to provide funding for the introduction of new industries to the area, but what good will that do for a town that knows nothing but fish? The fishery was the backbone of Canso and now it is the cause of the destruction of Canso.

Nothing has been done by this government to remedy this terrible situation. It fails to understand just how vital the fishing industry is to Atlantic Canada. It is the economic backbone for thousands of Atlantic Canadians. Prince Edward Islanders are used to hearing the horror stories attributed to the shutdown of industries and businesses. We have only to look at CFB Summerside to understand how the people of Canso are feeling right now. Prince Edward Island is reeling from a multitude of economic disasters initiated by the federal government. As well, it is reeling from the recent decision made by the United States that our own government seems powerless to fight.

I need point no further than to the signature of the President of the United States on a bill limiting the sale of Canadian lobsters. This will have serious implications for the already downtrodden economy of Prince Edward Island.

The fishery is one of the three major industries on the island, along with agriculture and tourism. The fishing industry is responsible for 30 per cent of the island's exports and contributes approximately 13 per cent to the Gross Provincial Product. The lobster fishery accounts for 70 per cent of the total value of the island fishery, a value that has been declining given the low prices during the past season resulting from a high concentration of lobster on the international market.

The major market for island lobster is the United States. Some 70 per cent of the lobsters are exported to the U.S. With the passage of the aforementioned U.S. legislation, where will the island fishermen sell their lobster? Let us think of the damage this will do to our provincial economy, an economy already suffering from massive fiscal restraint programs brought on by the federal government.

I believe that the free trade agreement is the main problem here. The import limitations brought forward by the U.S. legislation last Tuesday are a direct result of the free trade deal. Senator George Mitchell, the man behind last Tuesday's bill, attempted to have these provisions included in the FTA and now he has what he wanted all along. What has the Prime Minister done in the wake of such punitive actions? Nothing. He seems to be more concerned with building a reputation as an international statesman. Obviously he hesitates to oppose his friend, the President of the United States.

The implications for the unemployment rate in Atlantic Canada are frightening. The Prime Minister has been citing statistics for years now. Just last week he boasted about lower unemployment rates in Atlantic Canada. I would like to inform the Prime Minister that the unemployment rate in my province of Prince Edward Island has not fallen. I am also telling him that the numbers will rise drastically when the full impact of this government's assault on Atlantic Canada is realized.

With respect to fish plants, Prince Edward Island has had its share of closures. The crab plants in Tignish and Murray Harbour have shut down. These closures put 200 people out of work. That has quite an impact on P.E.I., not only on the individual workers but also on their families and the communities that depend on the spending power of these families. Another example is the Summerside Sea Products that closed its doors earlier this year with a loss of some 120 jobs.

The future of the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada is bleak, as is the future of the Atlantic economy in general. Economists are predicting that Canada is on the verge of major recession due in great part to the government's policy on high interest rates. I say that Atlantic Canada is in one now and that it will only get worse if the government does not show a firm commitment to Atlantic Canadians.

There is a growing feeling back home that this government cares very little about the four provinces on the east coast because it has done nothing to prove otherwise. In Atlantic Canada alone there are more than 100,000 fishermen and fish processors. Historically they have depended on a stable Atlantic fishery for their livelihoods. These men and women are now looking at a bleak future square in the face. They are facing plant closures and lower imposed quotas as well as increases in quotas by the European community. EC nations continue to overfish the transboundary stocks. The European community refuses to respect and support quotas established by the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization.

Atlantic Canadians working in the fishing industry want to work, need to work, and expect nothing more or less than that, but that is not the reality they face. The reality is that more than 1,000 people lost their jobs in the crab and lobster industries in New Brunswick. The job loss in my province was 465. In Newfoundland more than 10,000 plant workers and fishermen have been affected, and in Nova Scotia at least 3,000 workers have been affected. These are ugly statistics, and the future looks even worse.

What we in Atlantic Canada face today is nothing less than a crisis, a crisis that this government could have prevented. The Prime Minister suggested today in the House that unemployment insurance was an answer to this crisis. He stated that if the UI bill were approved by the other place, it would assist fishermen who are victims of this crisis.

This is not much of a solution for fishermen facing long-term chronic unemployment. Atlantic Canadians need long-term solutions, not political rhetoric. I call on this government to put in place immediately an emergency program to financially assist these Canadians. The fishermen and plant workers of Atlantic Canada deserve nothing less.

To conclude, I support the motion put forward by my colleague and I urge this government to act immediately.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I rise at 10 minutes to 1 in the morning in Ottawa, a bit later in my riding, with no one on the other side of the House to hear what is going on. However, a few of my colleagues are here, those who are interested, and there is a lot of back-up support in the lobby.

This is a difficult subject to speak on in some ways, and in other ways I welcome the opportunity to get up and try to show some indication of the pain people are experiencing in my riding. I have heard a lot of statistics here tonight. I have heard a lot of excuses. I have heard a lot of non-partisanship and a lot of partisanship, but I have not seen much concern or compassion or imagination.

I would like to start with a definition of "crisis". I thought I had better look it up before I came here tonight. It is in the Oxford Concise Dictionary, page 225, Edition 1988. It states that a crisis is a turning point derived from the Greek work "krisis". It means turning point. In order to have a turning point somebody has to decide to do something.

I have not heard much from over there tonight to tell me what that something is going to be or what is going to be done. All I have heard are excuses. "It is not our fault". I do not see how somebody can tell me that they have been running the system for five years and that it is not their fault that we are in a crisis situation.

• (0050)

It happens to be a crisis situation in the offshore fishery that has been brought to the attention of everybody here and has us here at one o'clock in the morning, Ottawa time. There has been a crisis in the inshore fishery for the last five to six years. It is only now that this whole thing is coming to the forefront.

There are so many issues to attack and there are so many suggestions to offer up that it is hard to know where to start. Let us not talk about the scientific gross underestimation of the stocks. I am not blaming them. I am not pointing the finger. I do find it strange that it came shortly after an election, and I do find the range strange. When one estimates something at 50 per cent or overestimates it by 100 per cent, how scientific that is is beyond me. I wonder what they knew when the election was going on, but I am not going to suggest that there are things beyond our control that we can point the finger at.

The fishermen have been telling the scientists, the politicians, and anybody who would listen that there was a problem with the estimate of the 260,000 tonnes, and they would not listen. The fishermen are saying: "If you had listened to us you would not be in this condition today".

Let us lay that aside for the time being and let us look at overfishing. They do not seem to recognize on the other side of the House that overfishing is a pretty major part of this problem. If there had not been overfishing we may not be in this crisis.

In 1986 that crowd over there was managing this economy. It was managing the fisheries. What happened? Spain and Portugal joined the economic communities. That year 23,200 tonnes was allocated by NAFO. They took 140,000 tonnes. The next year they took 170,000 tonnes. Spain and Portugal were the ones that were really responsible.

This year the Secretary of State for External Affairs says: "It is going to be better. We are going to allocate them 13,000 tonnes, and they are only going to take 50,000". That is great. In 2J3KL, the area that we are concerned about in Newfoundland, NAFO is recommending zero and they are only going to take 27,000. That crowd over there thinks this is wonderful. I do not think that is wonderful. I think that is terrible, and my colleagues would say that that is terrible.

What are we going to do about that? We trade with Portugal and Spain. With Portugal we had around a $48 million deficit, so let us set them aside. With Spain we did almost $1 billion in trade last year, $945 million, and there was a favour to them for almost $500 million.

We are playing hard ball. Let us look at trade sanctions to Spain and Portugal. If the Europeans are to come over here and tell us when we can catch our seals, then at least we should be able to go and tell them when they cannot catch our fish.

What do we do about surveillance? We should know who is in our waters. Last year we had 165 trawlers—I am quoting the hon. member for Gander—Grand Falls—in our area and we had two patrol boats in the area. We had Tracker surveillance. The Tracker surveillance gives 50 per cent of the valuable, medium range time as quoted by the hon. member for Labrador this evening. What have we done with that? We have closed down Summerside and we have taken away the Trackers.

I have evidence that DFO claimed at a committee meeting last week that they were not consulted, and my ex-military colleagues say that they were not consulted. It was a decision that was made. Summerside was closed down. It was an ill-advised decision at a time when we need increased surveillance. The surveillance capability that we had was taken away.

Last year, in our economic zone we went to bat for in 1977, we had 200,000 tonnes taken inside our area by foreign ships. One thousand tonnes equals around 30 jobs a year. It does not take a Ph.D. in mathematics to work out that is around 6,000 jobs by giving away 200,000 tonnes. In the last four years the overfishing to which I referred a few moments ago was 400,000 tonnes. We are literally giving away the shop. We are giving it away. Don't worry about the scientific advice. Don't give away the stocks.

My hon. friend from Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte talked about 4,000 tonnes of fish being given to the French off his coast where the people are looking out and they cannot catch anything because of the allocation. What a way to run a country. What a way to run an economy. What a way to run a fishery.

I was surprised but it made sense when I thought about it. The first speaker up tonight was the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. The next minister to speak was the hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. It is pretty obvious who is telling whom to do what. Domestic policy does not matter a darn here. We are more interested in kowtowing to the Europeans and making our mark in the international arena than we are concerned about protecting our fishermen at home in Newfoundland.

How interested are we in enforcing our laws? We send out a ship to patrol an American dragger that is transgressing against our laws. What do we do? We allow HMCS Saguenay to be rammed. I do not know what else happened. The dragger went off into American waters where the fine can be $10,000. In Canada, the same fine is around $750,000.

The Minister of National Defence asks: "What do you want us to do? Go and shoot them?" Our concern is for our people. You do not have to shoot them. There are all kinds of things you can do. I would remind the House that with a different minister of fisheries in 1985 HMCS Athabascan went out, followed, stopped, boarded, arrested Spanish vessels and brought them back to St. John's, Newfoundland where they were tried for overfishing, found guilty, and fined a lot of money. It would be interesting to watch the incidence of decreased Spanish fishing at that particular point in time.

I am going to make some recommendations the other side of the House might find interesting. We should rescind the Tracker decision. We need to be more aggressive and imaginative in the enforcement of our laws. We need to consider trade sanctions. Although I did not speak of it in the body of my presentation, we have seriously to consider looking at extending our jurisdiction over the nose and the tail of the bank. I think it is about time that we started to do that seriously.

Along the backdrop of Bill C-21, 26,000 people in Newfoundland are going to have their UI reduced by $2,500 and 9,000 will be cut off. We have this thrown at us, and we have GST staring us in the face. There is an awful lot of people out there tonight who are saying: "We don't mind politicians talking about this because it is going to be a rough Christmas for us".

To think that there is not a crisis, you would have to be figuratively deaf, metaphorically dumb and literally blind. We are here tonight to say that something can be done, something should be done and, by God, as long as there is an opposition on this side of the House something will be done.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak in this emergency debate with one major concern. I have a great deal of sympathy for my friends in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, but I do want to point out the tremendous crisis we have been going through for months now in New Brunswick in the fishery, particularly in the Acadian peninsula.

Before I get into those details, I want to say that I do not often take pleasure in pointing out individuals who have suffered some misfortune. However, I can't help but say that it must be some solace to the people of Canso and Newfoundland who are anticipating further reductions in the workforce in fish plants to see that Gordon Cummings is looking for work as well.

• (0100)

If anybody deserved to be turfed out and to know what it is like to be looking for a job, it is the former president of National Sea, who ran a company with public funds right into the sea, if I can put it that way. I make no apologies to the House for taking some pleasure in recognizing that a person who was significant in the fight for free trade, who took the money made available to him by the Government of Canada and spent it in the United States, made a mockery of the restructuring of the fisheries, that at least that individual now shares the fate of many of his compatriots in Nova Scotia and in Newfoundland.

I listened to my friends on both sides of the House talking about the Spanish, Portuguese and the French, when they talked of overfishing. There has even been an admission in part to the effect that some Canadians overfish. One significant omission has been made, I think, and I have tried to listen to most of what has been said here tonight. That is the question of American overfishing.

I do not think we need to be delicate when we see the problems that are occurring in Atlantic Canada as a result of mismanagement, but also as a result of our not defending our sovereignty. The American overfishing is a serious problem, not just because of the incident that my colleague referred to just moments ago, with HMCS Saguenay. The people who know the fishery off the Atlantic coast recognize just how serious American overfishing is and that it must be addressed.

I think the Europeans need to be told that we are not a bunch of wimps who will sit around and scatter when someone talks about seals. I have had some experience in the fisheries as Minister of Fisheries and Aquaculture for New Brunswick. One of the greatest threats to a new and burgeoning fishery in Atlantic Canada in my province of New Brunswick is seals. We have to defend our aquaculture industry and our salmon in cages from the attack of voracious seals. They attack the cages in the Bay of Fundy. They attack our fishery all over eastern Canada in the North Atlantic.

We worry about people who have their own problems, and this is not an opportune time to debate, but it is time we stood up and told people around the world what our fishery is about and what our communities are about.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, this emergency debate on the fisheries crisis in the Atlantic provinces is an extremely important one, and I simply want to point out certain elements that are creating an enormous amount of disquiet in my province, New Brunswick, and especially in the Acadian peninsula.

Just now people are focusing their discussion mainly on the situation in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. But I want to remind the House that what is happening in Shippigan, Caraquet, Le Goulet, Tracadie and Lamèque is also very serious. Plants have been closing there for the past few months. Madam Speaker, suppose I told you that in the past two years more than 5,000 jobs in Acadia have disappeared with the collapse of the crab-fishing industry. If we put that figure in the context of central Canada, either Quebec or Ontario, it would proportionate to the larger populations there, represent the loss of 100,000 jobs. Already this fall, 1,000 other jobs disappeared when three plants in the Acadian peninsula closed—Connors and L. Gauthier in Shippigan and Baie-Chaleurs Packers in Caraquet.

Other closures are anticipated. This truly is a crisis. With respect to the value of the Canadian dollar, Madam Speaker, people don't seem to understand how disastrous the 86-cent dollar is for exports. Obviously it hurts sales, but it also hurts all the traditional arrangements between processing plants and fishermen—the pressure on prices, the uncertainty in the industry because people know the dollar isn't about to fall.

Madam Speaker, as if it weren't enough that the resource is disappearing in certain cases, the recent decision by the President of the United States, Mr. Bush, to ban part of our lobster exports is going to cost us, in the Atlantic provinces, upwards of $30 million. In my province of New Brunswick the loss will be more than seven million dollars. The government of New Brunswick has estimated that the province stands to lose up to $130 million this year because of shrinking crab stocks and the low prices offered for lobster and herring roe.

Madam Speaker, I have listened very attentively to speeches giving the impression that no one has any alternatives to offer in this debate tonight. Well, Madam Speaker, I am going to take this opportunity to suggest that the federal government must give the same priority to the New Brunswick fishing industry as it seems prepared to give to Newfoundland and Nova Scotia, because as I have pointed out, the closures of the plants in Shippigan and Caraquet have the same impact as the closures in Canso and St. John's.

We must subsidize local fishermen who want to go after under-utilized species. We must provide financial and technical help to plants that want to diversify their production by processing under-utilized species. Madam Speaker, we must work with the industry to establish five-year development plans for each species of fish, and also to create, because this is very important, a seafood marketing agency for each of the under-utilized species, such as mackerel and herring. As we know, the fishing industry did for a time profit chiefly from the price offered when crab was abundant, but we are going to have to encourage our plants to process value-added products, which they haven't traditionally done.

And because of the unpredictable character of seasonal industries like fishing, Mr. Speaker, the government must find a more flexible formula for access to unemployment insurance benefits, especially in light of the crisis that is currently shaking the fishing industry in all the Atlantic provinces.

[English]

I listened with interest to my friend, the member from Fredericton, who talked about some of the things that we need to do. He mentioned ACOA. Certainly if ACOA has done some work that has had significant positive results in Atlantic Canada, surely now the government has to look at enriching this program because when that program was put forward with its funding, no one could foresee the kind of difficulty that we would be faced within Atlantic Canada as a result of this crisis.

There are many things that must be done, but surely in these few remaining days before Christmas we do not want to hear too much more talk about relocation. Surely there is a capacity in this country to recognize that we do not want to go through "The Grapes of Wrath" in Canada. We did not do that in western Canada when we went through the drought and experienced the crisis in the agricultural community. We do not want to talk about moving people out of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or off Prince Edward Island because we have lacked the will to find ways to diversify our economic base.

It is not a question of being confrontational with the Spaniards or the Portuguese, or the French or the Americans. It is a question of putting forth our views and having people recognize our sovereignty and our commitment to our own people. It is a question of recognizing that this country cannot survive if everybody has to move to Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

If we are going to go back to a system as we had several hundred years ago when people came from Europe and fished the banks of Atlantic Canada and returned to Europe, or what if people come down from central Canada to make sure there is enough fish caught to take care of the Canadian market, we would then be dealing with a situation that no one could ever have envisioned. Surely that is not the kind of scenario that we want to paint for the people of Atlantic Canada.

I ask the government to look at some of the suggestions we have made. There has to be a way to deal with this crisis in a meaningful way to reassure people now that something will be done in the short term, not just by throwing money at the problem in the short term, but through a medium and long term plan recognizing the reduction in the resources. But what does the government have as a plan, other than simply to react and try to play it by ear, so to speak?

• (0110)

I hope that all members of this House will recognize that the crisis in Atlantic Canada in the fisheries is equal if not superior to anything that has happened anywhere else in this country. We talk about the Scheffervilles, we talk about the western farmers, and we talk about the closing of mines in one-industry towns in the north. We cannot allow this to happen in Atlantic Canada.

I would suggest that all members of this House will finally come to realize that it is going to take a concerted effort. I am sure that Canadians from coast to coast in this country are prepared to share with one another and to ensure that Atlantic Canadians can feel that not only are they a part of Canada, but that people want them to survive and to have some opportunity to thrive as well.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to the travesty, the tragedy that is occurring in the Atlantic provinces today. This tragedy is not merely frightening, it is eerie. This government is acting as if it were on a lifeboat, choosing who may remain and who must go. In this case, the government is telling Atlantic Canadian fishermen to jump off the boat into the cruel sea so that Americans, Spaniards and Portuguese can stay on.

Something is fundamentally warped with a government that so blatantly turns its back on the people it is supposed to represent. Then again representation is not one of this government's strong suits. Were we in a court of law and the government an independent player, charges could be levied for the premeditated, vicious butchering of the Atlantic fishery.

The devastation of the Atlantic fishery has not been the effect of nature, it has been the effect of government. For five years, mismanagement. For five years, ignoring what was going on. The fish did not decide one day to swim away. The government has simply done everything in its power to keep Canadian fishermen, to keep Canadian fishing boats, away from the fish. Keep up away, and let others have them. This is just another example of how the government will do virtually anything to get a smile and a pat on the back from the White House. Sellout after sellout, that is what this government has been doing to the Atlantic provinces.

In the last few weeks, the Prime Minister has been responding to questions, virtually every question in this area, with predictable nonsense about how terrible things were before he came into office. He has been five years in office. Five years of mismanagement of the fishery.

No matter how bad things were, previous governments never obliterated industries. Previous governments never penalized regions and previous governments never callously undermined jobs, livelihoods and incomes. Towns like Canso and Lockeport did not look forward to becoming ghost towns under previous governments.

Well, this government can now do what it does best. It can swill its own self-adulation—another community destroyed, another Canadian industry crushed and another prize for Uncle Sam.

The sellout started with the European fisheries, the Portuguese, the Spanish and the French, all permitted to make quotas which could not be met. They could not be met because they were too high. Then came the sellout to the Prime Minister's best friend, the icon of his existence, the United States.

First, the government sold out to the Americans on the fish-processing rules for salmon and herring, then on an export tax for fish, and now, with barely less than a whimper, which is so befitting, it is making a token gesture of opposition to American legislation banning Canadian lobster imports.

What happened to the promises of free trade? The Prime Minister and every single one of the Conservatives elected to office told Canadians from coast to coast that Canada would have unrestricted access to American markets. Free trade did not open up the American market, it shut it down. We have no access and that will translate into a loss of millions for Nova Scotia and for the Atlantic provinces. It will translate into the devastation and the end, again, of towns like Canso and Lockeport, one-industry towns where the fishery has been the mainstay of existence for over 100 years and more. But, nobody cares. Nobody cares on that side of the House.

Why has this government opted to pursue a policy which devastates the Atlantic fishery? Even without the American legislation, look at the record.

Look at the record of five years. Over the past five years this government has eliminated our fish processing rules and eliminated export tax on fish. It has issued licences to foreign countries and agreed with foreign allocations to catch squid and capelin, the food stock of codfish in the Atlantic. What has been the result? Plant closures. Where? Bas Caraquet, Tignish, Canso, North Sydney, Lockeport, Woods Harbour, Port Medway and Port Mouton. There are plants in receivership in Shippigan and Murray Harbour. How can these events help Canada? Plant closures, plants in receivership, the slaughtering of a national industry and the devastation of communities. They certainly will not help reduce the deficit.

Perhaps, tragically, this is the new economic plan of this government. Unemployment equals debt reduction. That is how ludicrous this government's actions are. It seems to equate decimation with good government and prosperity.

When will this insanity end? Right now there are thousands of Atlantic fishermen preparing to spend the bleakest Christmas that they can remember. There are fish plant workers in exactly the same situation. Men and women. Whole communities have no idea what awaits them or their children. It is the end of a way of life in small communities all over the four Atlantic provinces. It is the end of a particular lifestyle, a particular culture and one that is endemic and dear to the Canadian fabric.

While all this is happening, while the Prime Minister plans on having a Christmas dinner of lobster and salmon from where only George Bush can tell.

But it is not too late to correct this mistake. It is not too late to stop this heinous behaviour. The government is making a mistake but it could see the light. It could, but will it? The government must reserve fish for Canso so that the plant can stay open. The government must say no to the Europeans wishing to impose a quota three times as large as the quota suggested by NAFO. The government must implement programs to keep the plants open and help the communities that so desperately depend on the fishing industry while these programs are being established.

If there is to be any hope for the Atlantic fishing industry and the survival of these communities, the survival of a way of life, the government must impose restrictions on companies wishing to process fish elsewhere than the regions which most desperately need it. This is the knife of free trade to the heart of the Atlantic fishing industry.

In closing, I would like to say that all of us here feel we do have a special calling, that every one of us here in his or her heart knows and hopes that the work we do is in the best interests of the people we represent. Those of us who are so fortunate to be here have to take with our fortune a responsibility for those we represent and a responsibility to those Canadians nationwide, whether you are an Atlantic member, a western member, a northern member, an Ontario member. We have a responsibility to help those who are less fortunate and those who are suffering because of the economic policies of this government. Prior to this government being elected to office, the Atlantic fishery was surviving. Today, we have to help it survive and go on into the future.

Intervention may be a dirty word for the government, but as much as it dislikes it the time has come to intervene. Stand up. Show some backbone and represent Canadians for a change. Say no to George Bush. Say no to the French. Say no to the Spaniards. Say no to the Portuguese. They even respect you more. It is a damn sight surer that you will begin to get the respect you don't have in Atlantic Canada if you take a stand and stand up for the people in those small fishing communities in those four provinces clinging to the sea who have no where else but Ottawa to turn for help.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of emotion that I sat here tonight before I stood in my place to enter into this debate. I think just about everything that should be said has been said. Unfortunately, it has to be said over and over and over again. I was going to give a speech tonight that dealt with the economy of Atlantic Canada. I was going to talk about the impact of the fisheries on places like Halifax and Dartmouth. Perhaps I will slip into that at some time through my 10-minute speech, but as the night went on and I spoke and listened to some of my colleagues, I became a bit overwhelmed with the crisis that is at hand. Yes, indeed, there are 100,000 people in Atlantic Canada who depend on the fisheries for a livelihood. That is 100,000 people out of some 2.5 million people in all of Atlantic Canada.

• (0120)

What we have witnessed in the last year is a mismanagement of the fisheries and my colleagues have said it more eloquently than perhaps I can at this late hour, but because of mismanagement, because of a government that does not understand eastern Canada, we have seen a collapse in the fishery.

The hon. member from Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso is a good friend of mine and he had a terrible task last week when he knew that his fish plant in Canso was going to close. Not only would it throw 600 or 700 people out of work, it was going to shut down 400 years of tradition in Nova Scotia. Canso will come to symbolize the death of the maritime culture. A fishing village of perhaps 1,000 or 1,200 souls does not seem like a lot. Four hundred years of tradition is a lot.

Canso is one of dozens or perhaps over 100 small communities through Atlantic Canada that rely on the fishery, that very basic natural resource. I will not give a history lesson because I think we know it, but when this great land of ours was populated from the east coast to the west, the gateway was the east and the road to that gate was fish.

The Norse came to Newfoundland because of the fish and they settled there. The first European settlement in North America was in the great northern peninsula, at L'Anse aux Meadows, by the Norse. It was there because of the fish.

Those who are watching this debate may be wondering what all this talk is about the fish on the east coast, that it is just another industry. It is not just another industry, it is a way of life in Atlantic Canada. It is a special way of life in Atlantic Canada that is collapsing because of this government's negligence. It is collapsing because this government does not understand the special way of life of Atlantic Canadians.

I have had an opportunity over the last few years to travel in Atlantic Canada. This is a marvellous country that we live in. It is compassionate, it is diverse. But I guess my heart will always be in Atlantic Canada.

I grew up by the sea. I grew up in a small community called New Waterford on Cape Breton Island, a rugged community where people were drawn to its harbour because of the fish and settlers came because of the coal mines. They were tough men and women who settled there. In Louisbourg there are 300 or 400 years of history where people still fish today, even though with the mismanagement they do not know if they are going to be able to fish tomorrow. Go to New Brunswick, to Shediac, that very special community, or to St. Peter's, Prince Edward Island.

We are not just debating tonight some sterile debate about a few hundred or even a few thousand jobs. We are talking about the death of a culture.

I am sure some people said my colleague from Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte was exaggerating when he called it cultural genocide. It is economically based cultural genocide in Atlantic Canada. I come from a riding where we do not have a lot of fishermen but that does not mean the people who live in the riding of Dartmouth or my colleague's riding of Halifax do not have that affinity for the sea, and do not understand why the people have stayed there and why those communities in Atlantic Canada are great.

What we are witnessing, Mr. Speaker, and for all those who are still listening, is a sad, unfortunate, tragic decline, not just in the resource based industry—

An Hon. Member: Not by accident, by design.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): My hon. friend says by design. What we are witnessing is the slow letting of the blood of people of Atlantic Canada by this government's callous approach to the problems in the Atlantic fishery.

I know that my time is limited, Mr. Speaker, but what we are seeing here is a government policy of resettlement, of taking those people from Atlantic Canada, that special and unique place with those special and unique people, and driving them into central Ontario, and into Toronto. We have seen the government try this before and it has not worked, but this time it is hell bent to make sure that this resettlement policy will be the last resettlement policy for the fishing villages on the east coast of Canada.

I started off by saying I did not want to get into a lot of the debate that we have already heard, but I know that there are probably thousands of fishermen who are still watching their televisions tonight and they are looking toward me and they are looking toward every other member in this House to give them a ray of hope. They do not want to hear more sterile debate and more talk about how members opposite are going to increase welfare payments or talk about the UIC payments that they are going to get for those men and women and for those families. What they want is real hope. They want, from the members of this place, is an understanding of what it is they are trying to say.

Fishing is a hard life. Fishermen do not make great money, although the minister of fisheries was overheard saying, "Well, you know, some of these men make over $100,000". How callous and how uncaring and how stupid can you get? Anybody who travels to the east coast of Canada, who goes into these fishing villages like Cow Head in Newfoundland and sees the difficult life that these men and women endure, the danger that they endure, would know that those statements have no place in the debate on the future of the Atlantic fisheries.

I would hope that the efforts of my colleagues, that the efforts from the members from Atlantic Canada will have some effect on the government members who like to sit down on their hands. I do not know how some of those members can ever go back to Atlantic Canada. I have listened to some of the debate tonight and most of them I am sure got up and talked the best game they could knowing that their colleagues on their side of the House were not just doing away with an industry. They were doing away with a very special part of our Canadian culture.

I urge every Canadian who is watching tonight or who reads these debates not to allow this to be seen as just another piece of economic gibberish that goes on in this House, but that they understand it for what it is. This is an emergency debate on the very survival of our maritime culture.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing this debate to happen.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise here tonight and speak on this emergency motion put forward by my colleague for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso. I want to say that I believe the crisis that we are hearing about tonight and experiencing with the fishery in Atlantic Canada is just the tip of the iceberg.

I happen to believe this economic crisis that is happening in Atlantic Canada is about to go coast to coast and, I think, those of us in central Canada who think that we are immune are fooling ourselves because we are dealing with a government that has really passed on its responsibility to hold on to the fiscal levers of this country.

• (0130)

As I listened to the various speakers tonight, I reflected back to what we were doing at this time last year. We were debating the free trade bill. I pulled some notes together from the speeches of members of the government side who were trying to tell us that this free trade bill was going to be something great for the economy of this country. I pulled together some words from the various speakers on the government side and I tried to relate them to the fishery debate.

The bottom line, after going through some of the speeches, is that this government has really lost any ability to have the trust of the people of Canada. Government members told us last December that we were going to have secure access to the U.S. market. Last week, we heard about the directive from the president on lobster.

Last year in December they talked about new opportunities for Canadian exporters. For the first time in 13 years, we have month to month trade deficits. Benefits to Canadian consumers were mentioned. Right now every region in this country is feeling higher prices. This was the appropriate time for industry readjustment, they said. We are still waiting for the package for the fishery.

They said we would have effective adjustment policies to aid sectors needing assistance. Well, we know that did not happen. They said there was no threat to our relations with other trading partners. I have to believe that the reason we are allowing the Portuguese and the French to have unfettered access to this fish is because we are concerned about other penalties that we might receive from our trading partners.

They talked about prevention of the imposition of punitive U.S. trade laws. That is what the free trade was going to do for us. That has not happened.

There would be maintenance of the ability to establish public policy in the Canadian interest, one minister said. We have never acted so wimpish in years in our relationship with the United States as the way we are acting right now.

There would be protection of our social programs, they said, of our labour laws and our health and safety programs. The Minister of Employment and Immigration would shudder if she would go back and read Hansard from a year ago.

There would be the continuation of our political independence and policy freedom, another minister said, and the provision of stability and predictability in the investment climate environment. This economic environment we are in right now, symbolized by the suffering, symbolized by what is happening in the Atlantic fishery, is going to go coast to coast, because this government has given up its responsibility to take control.

They also said that there would be a high probability of net job creation. We know that is falling apart right before our very eyes. Yet it is an incredible thing that we were sitting here on the eve of Christmas. Last year, half the seats on the government side were full because they wanted to push their free trade bill through. Yet, here we are tonight while one of the regions of our nation is going through a rough time and there is one member of the government. I find it just incredible.

Another thing they said was that the free trade bill would give us a significant improvement in national income and standard of living. How could we sell that to the people of the Atlantic provinces?

I realize I have only a short time to speak tonight. Here we are one year later and all of those things that members on the opposite side said were going to happen because of this free trade deal have fallen apart.

This government cannot be trusted. I believe we are seeing further evidence of that right now, not just for the Atlantic but for every region of this country.

We have interest rates and a dollar that are so high right now that our economy is on the verge of a total flip. This crisis in the fishery is going to go coast to coast. Those of us from central Canada, or those of us who are from the west, had better wake up and think. We had better realize that we are not exempt, that we are going to go through the same suffering that is happening in Atlantic Canada. Unless we start rallying and getting behind the people of Atlantic Canada on this problem, it soon will be on our doorsteps. I believe it is time to press this government to come to its senses.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister must give a directive to the Governor of the Bank of Canada to give us a break on interest rates so we can get this economy moving again. Madam Speaker, I see no alternative.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I have sat here this evening and I have listened to some really interesting speeches. I have learned a great deal. I can hardly believe some of the speeches that I heard in this House from the other side. I could not believe the insensitivity and the lack of realization as to the intent and the import of the decision of this government in not recognizing a crisis, a crisis that has not just happened today or yesterday, but one which my colleagues have been talking about since 1985. How this government could have allowed the situation to reach this point is beyond my ken.

I would say of my colleagues on this side of the House that as they reviewed the situation, it reminded me of my having spoken to this issue in 1985–86, talking about fishermen and women, fisher people. Some of the people in central Canada and some of the journalists in my riding of Mount Royal wanted to know what I was doing talking about fisher people. What I was talking about was not as significant a crisis as the one I am talking about tonight.

When we listen to the concerned members of the Liberal party on this side of the House give the history and background of dramatic changes that have taken place in one of the most important basic and fundamental industries of this country, we realize that it is not something that just touches Atlantic Canada, Atlantic Canadians, it touches every Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: It is government's role to manage. This government has been absent from the field of management. I heard my colleagues talking about different kinds of fish and I do not pretend to know the industry, but they certainly talked about a variety of species that have not been caught, that are no being marketed, that are saleable in other parts of this world. Therefore, if they are saleable and edible in other parts of this world, they certainly can be marketed and sold here in Canada. Many people who live in Canada do not even know that we have these wonderful fish.

It is up to the government to have found the means to have marketed and the means to have taught or retrained fishermen if it meant fishing deeper, or using different kinds of equipment. That is what this government's role was. It was to manage. It was not to have me sit here and listen to the Minister for International Trade and the Secretary of State for External Affairs speak long before the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans spoke. Who is in charge and who is responsible? Who speaks out at the government table? It is absolutely unconscionable. He is put in third place if he is put in any place.

• (0140)

It really is a heartbreaking situation and I think that is what got to me the most. It is about men, women and children. There will be no Christmas for them this year, but what have we got for next year, and what have we got for the future? Some of them might even put out a Hanukkah bush if things would be different. But they can plan nothing for the future because what this government has done is literally close down cities and towns and villages.

I heard cultural genocide mentioned. That is a very harsh term, and we have seen what has happened in eastern Europe with real cultural genocide. But this is a genocide of a type. It is economic genocide, and it is cultural genocide when you have had a government that has been so insensitive that it has not found the mechanism to enable families to stay in family homes.

Just remember what happened when there was a disaster in Baie Comeau when Iron Ore closed down. The then minister, Flora MacDonald, had a whole program to look after one little town, the Prime Minister's badly managed ex-company. When the wheat problems occurred out west, we rushed to their aid because our Deputy Prime Minister and many of our senior ministers come from the west.

What happens with the numbers which have been alluded to, and I do not pretend to have the numbers in front of me, but I heard mentioned over 10,000 jobs, and you look at the numbers of people who live in Atlantic Canada and do a percentage calculation, taking into account the fall-out that comes with that, and you know you are dealing with a serious crisis and a government which has not given a d-a-m-n! It is a sheer disgrace.

I would say, having heard my colleagues, just how much backbone this government has, whether it is going to talk to the Americans, shoot over the bow of the boat, whether it is talking to the Portuguese, to the Spanish, to the French. There has to be a way in the international market-place as well as in internal waters to find answers that will allow for a decent livelihood.

We cut VIA Rail so there is no way they can get out; we cut unemployment insurance so they cannot count on a decent way of life there. You cut out the possibility for welfare because the base of those municipalities is the fishing industry. What do you expect these people to do? Do we want everybody to come live in Montreal and Toronto? This is ridiculous. I should add Halifax to that.

Ms. Clancy: Yes.

Mrs. Finestone: This is no way to consider a serious crisis, and I would sincerely hope that the ministers opposite, while they are so busy patting themselves on their backs would reread the debates of tonight. There were some marvellous suggestions made, concrete suggestions, good ideas that can answer some of the serious concerns and, hopefully, people in Atlantic Canada will be able to perhaps put their heads down and go to sleep and know that there are caring people here and even the hard-hearted, insensitive government people will give a commitment to read, to think, and more important, to act and act constructively now, so that next Christmas will be a good Christmas and this Christmas they do not have to have a headache.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, it's true that it's late, it's true that just about everything there is to say on this subject has already been said in the course of the evening. I want to start by congratulating, with warm friendliness, our colleague for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. LeBlanc) who put forward this matter for debate this evening.

[English]

When I came to this House 25 years ago or more, I came as a Canadian. I came as a Canadian with a notion that wherever you come from in this country, you care for those who come from another region. I come from Montreal, from the province of Quebec. But I believe that I have a sense of solidarity. We have to have a sense of solidarity with the people who, at the moment, suffer the most in one part of our country.

If we want to define what Canada is all about to the rest of the world, I think we could say it is a different kind of country, built by different kinds of people with different kinds of problems. One of our major responsibilities as Canadians is to immediately come to the rescue of some of our Canadian compatriots who are going through a very severe crisis.

I does not matter if you come from Montreal, it does not matter if you know nothing about fisheries, it does not matter if you know nothing about agriculture. You know that these two major industries must be viable. You know that these two major industries must continue to prosper, because if they do so, all of Canada will prosper. If they are in danger of disappearing, it is a great part of our country, it is a great part of our history, it is a great part of our past that may disappear.

This sense of solidarity we have to express from time to time. I have never seen a debate with so much passion, devotion as I have seen tonight. As Winston Churchill once said, when there is a real crisis, you feel it. You feel it in the nervousness and the sensitivity. I felt that tonight. That is why I did not mind waiting to say a few words even though it is very late. I wanted to show my solidarity and to tell the Secretary of State for External Affairs that it was very strange that a debate on fisheries was addressed first by the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I immediately caught when I saw him that he was probably ill at ease speaking before the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. That means he feels a sense of guilt for perhaps not having done more to help our compatriots in the Atlantic provinces.

It is not enough to say that I went to Europe and our trade is such that we must help them, we must not disturb our international trade, That is not the role of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He should go time after time to Europe to explain that in the long run, it is even in their own interests that the fishing industry is viable in Canada. If there is none for us today, then there will be none at all for them eventually.

In that sense you have to explain and negotiate very tightly, very intelligently with our allies and friends in Europe to convince them that it is their goddamn best interests. I do not know if that word is regular, but I get as upset as my colleagues because I feel what is going on is tremendously sad. Young families breaking—

[Translation]

—the discouragement, the despair, of people who are contributing to the development of this country, who are happy to belong to one of Canada's beautiful regions. I know the Maritimes. I've been there.

How can anyone remain indifferent in the face of a tragedy like this one? Do we want Canada to consist, as my colleagues often say, of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver? That's preposterous.

First of all we must show our solidarity with our colleagues from the Maritimes, with our fellow Canadians in the Atlantic provinces, because they are going through bitter days. It is the duty of everyone who is better off, of all luckier Canadians, to understand what is happening down there.

• (0150)

[English]

So, I have no hesitation in participating in the debate. I think the people from southern Ontario, when they lose their jobs, have multiple possibilities of finding other jobs immediately. This is not so with the people in the Atlantic provinces where whole families, villages and townships depend on this industry.

If it was an industry that should disappear, you would say, "Well, tough luck. Maybe it should disappear". But I do not believe it should disappear. I believe that if government takes its responsibility, if the government knows how to negotiate internationally first—that is the duty of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. After all, he asked for trouble, he spoke first tonight. He is taking part of the blame immediately by having offered to speak first.

I was expecting to learn more from the minister of fisheries. He does not need to tell us that we have obligations to our trading partners. I repeat, and will repeat and repeat again, his duty is to convince them that it is in their long-term interest that this industry remain viable in the Atlantic provinces.

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: What happens in a village when the main industry disappears? These young people represent for me, and always have, Canada's living strength, because you know, if all Canadians were city-dwellers this country would not have the same vitality, the same strength, the same renewal you have when the regions are prosperous. And God knows these people are sacrificing themselves in the Atlantic. We can't understand what it means to go out into danger, day after day! We don't have that experience in Montreal, we don't have it in Toronto. In some cities people probably have no idea what it means to be a fishermen, what risks they have to run.

And here I want to express my sympathy. There was an outpouring of sympathy in Montreal when that appalling tragedy occurred at the Université de Montréal, but I also want to sympathize, and I think it is right and proper that during this debate we should spare a thought, as a number of my colleagues have done, for the fishermen who have had difficulties, because that too is a sign of solidarity.

I could have attacked the government myself. I listened to all my colleagues. I support what they said. I say it is the duty of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to negotiate with real feeling, because it's not enough just to say it once. Often the Europeans like to tell us how to behave here at home, on the question of seals, for example. We might also go and tell them, make them understand, invite them to come and see this tragedy. Let them come! The Secretary of State for External Affairs has every opportunity in the world to display some imagination. Is he really so lacking in it? I wonder.

And to conclude, because you're signalling at me and you're quite right, I would like to make a special appeal to the Prime Minister of Canada. He has said to us in this House that when the people in the west experience difficulties the government knows how to shoulder its responsibilities. I recognize the importance of agriculture too. You can't talk to a Quebecker, a French Canadian, without finding, if you scratch, that he's from a farm family less than a generation or two ago, like me. I have cousins who are still farming today on the family land.

So I understand the agricultural system and I recognize its importance. And in this difficult world, we mustn't allow our agriculture to disappear, because then we would be at the mercy of others. And in international trade, we would have to pay whatever price those others felt like charging us. That's why we have to have viable agriculture in Canada, and the people in the big cities who don't understand that must be made to understand it.

But the same system applies in the case of the fisheries! If that industry disappears, we'll have to go elsewhere, when we have the fish right here. So in this holiday season I appeal directly to the Right Honourable Prime Minister, to do everything he said he would do, and more, because we cannot permit these tragedies, this despair we heard described this evening, this discouragement that must be seizing all those families. It is our duty, in the name of Canadian solidarity, to stand up, to use your patience a little, and to say that the government must intervene, and at once, not waiting for a day that may or may not dawn, but at once, as fast as it can.

[English]

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I have listened attentively tonight and I thank my last three colleagues who spoke who do not come from Atlantic Canada and who can understand probably better than the government what actually is the problem.

S.O. 52

My colleagues and I, to anybody who is just tuning in from the west, have been talking tonight on an emergency debate on the crisis that exists in the Atlantic fishery. I am sure anyone listening would see that there is a range of issues that relates to every one of us, every Atlantic MP who is touched by some part of the fishery. I know that the member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso was the one who was probably touched the hardest in the last week by the sudden announcement, and I will deal with that in a minute.

To the public, I will say that one has to remember that on the east coast, we have a divided fishery called the offshore and the inshore. Offshore is classified by vessels over 65 feet and inshore by vessels under 65 feet. It sounds oversimplistic to say, but this minister and the committee which are studying what to do with the problem were not even here tonight to hear the members from the Atlantic. I see the parliamentary secretary is restless over there, but there was no minister of employment. There was no Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I have sat here for six hours. I was the one who informed the House that we would go past 12 o'clock, and five times tonight I have sat here, in the interests of progress and in the interests of having this very important debate continued, without raising the point of order about who was not or who was in this House. I think at some point, a line has to be drawn. We are all tired, no more than me at two o'clock in the morning, but at some point, a line has to be drawn and that is my point of order.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): On the same point of order, I, too, have sat here in the holy company of the member opposite. But I think I have a right to tell Canadians what ministers are in charge of a committee that is deciding the future of Atlantic Canadians without being lectured by the member opposite and without telling the people that I have done something wrong. I have not done anything wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is quite late or very early in the morning for all of us. I can understand the hon. member's reaction and I can also feel for the parliamentary secretary who has been here all evening. This has been a long night. I think it has been a very productive night. Maybe we should continue in the same mood that we have been in all evening.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I would just like to refer to the point of order raised by the hon. parliamentary secretary. Maybe it is tough luck for him to be here alone for six hours. If he had some companionship from some minister, it would have been easier for him to listen to us all night because we have a hell of a lot more speakers. But that was not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It was not a point of order.

• (0200)

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, not only is there an offshore and an inshore problem, it is a problem for the many hundreds of communities across the Atlantic provinces and the people who have no work and no prospect of having work. It is a problem for the spinoffs in those communities; the boat builders, the other businesses, the grocery stores. All businesses in a given community are suffering the plight that the member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso has brought to the attention of this House tonight.

We have not had one new idea from the government. Three ministers spoke but I do not want to use my time discussing what they spoke about or, more important, what they did not speak about. They wanted to blame their officials. They do not say that they have been in power for five years and they are continuing in power but incorporate no new ideas in the fishery that should be growing instead of stagnant on the east coast.

We cannot even have any assistance for these plants because of the free trade agreement. The companies would say: "No assistance because our market in the U.S. would be threatened". This government has so tied the east coast into its free trade agreement on subsidies that our whole fishery will suffer over the long term in terms of money, jobs and the lack of confidence in the fishery on the east coast which the government continues to bring about with its policies.

Canso is one town, but Lockeport, Lunenburg and Louisbourg are three major centres of fishing in Nova Scotia. We are talking offshore. I will get to my own area where it is only fishing. Those were year round operations in 1977. What is this government going to do with its policy? What is the province of Nova Scotia going to do about allowing these towns to be totally cut off?

I know what happened in Lockeport. I have heard from the mayor and the people. I have followed it from the time it was closed. I advocated at that time that there be a community based allocation of fish, that the fish that had normally been landed there be left there and the community be allowed to handle the onshore plant and provide the work. If you do not give them fish, those communities have to die.

What do they get? What can the people in Canso and other areas where people have been laid off expect? They can expect a 10 week severance package and then unemployment. No other benefits. They are given three month's notice. It is inhuman that this government and the provincial government will allow anybody who has had a full, year-round job in those communities to be given three months' notice.

At least they have been given the notice. This Minister of Fisheries does not give three month's notice to the inshore communities that are cut off. He just tells them: "I am sorry, this week you have got your $25,000, then for the next six months there is nothing more". That is what happened at the end of June. That is what happened in all those communities in the Scotia—Fundy area south of Halifax.

The member for South Shore likes to say there are only draggers under 65 feet in South West Nova. There are some on the New Brunswick side, there are some on the South Shore. There are longliners over 45 feet and none of them have been working. They all appeared together, united, before the Haché committee to try to find a solution for the inshore. This minister tries to divide, tries to say there are only rich fishermen. He does not talk about the plant workers. He does not talk about the many people in the communities that are suffering. He just divides.

I said that there are solutions. They are pretty hard solutions perhaps, but this government has a chance to prove it. I think it should look at its groundfish management plan. In terms of the offshore, those boats that are no longer going to be fishing out of Canso and will be put aside should be allowed or encouraged to go for under-utilized species and have a by-catch. They should be given a community based enterprise allocation, as National Sea has had for the last five years. They should be encouraged to go for the under-utilized.

• (0205)

It is ironic to be discussing it now, but in 1977 the Government of Canada offered a subsidy to boats to go for northern cod. Imagine, northern cod, and we are all in trouble today with northern cod. The government offered a subsidy. Why can we not do that with under-utilized species? We heard the minister say that there are 355,000 tonnes of under-utilized species but there is no market. Why do we not offer that same type of incentive? Why do we not allow those offshore boats that are not going to be able to fish and those onshore communities that have no hope from this government to be given some hope.

Give them some fish. That is all they need. That is all the communities in southern Nova Scotia need. They need a groundfish management plan that this minister cannot seem to adapt to the needs of the east coast.

What have we seen this government allow? We have seen it allow National Sea to put up a company in New Hampshire, to put up a company in France and to bring into its fleet two freezer factory ships that could keep two plants like Lockeport and Canso going. But no, we have to tell those communities that have been year-round communities that they cannot fish. They cannot work because there are no fish.

I think there is a solution and I just gave you one, Madam Speaker. Split the fleet from the National Sea and the offshore companies. Let the National Sea and those companies go to an exchange and let the fish be auctioned off. Allow them the incentive to bring in the under-utilized species when there are no more quotas. Unless you do that you are going to find that the inshore communities throughout the Atlantic coast are going to be shut down because of lack of incentives by this government.

We cannot compete with the foreigners unless we get out there and fish for the same thing that foreigners are fishing within our 200-mile limit and outside our 200-mile limit.

I do not know any people who do not want to work. They do not want three months' notice. They do not want 10 weeks' severance pay. They do not want one week after another and then to be shut down for six months. These are people, these are Canadians. We have a resource that is the envy of the world.

I can only say to you, Madam Speaker, that I have never seen the devastation that I have seen this year in South West Nova. This year there are 50 per cent more people claiming unemployment insurance because the groundfish management plan has not been able to accommodate, because his biologists do not have, in my view and in the view of many fishermen, reliable statistics. There are 20 per cent less people buying in the local grocery stores. If the local grocery stores are suffering like that, you can imagine what the other businesses are doing.

Yet this Minister of Fisheries can stand in the House and say that there is no hardship. The crisis is here. It has been here for a year. There are people who are suffering. It is not a very nice Christmas time. I know, Madam Speaker, that you are indicating that my time is up but I was interrupted by the member and I should have about another minute.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have added that time on.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): You have added the time. I will just close by saying it is a sad thing to leave here this week without knowing what the committee plans. We have not had the groundfish advisory committee before us. I think they will be here this week. January 1 comes and we do not know what the minister's plans are. He has not even told the House tonight what is plans are. As the member from the NDP said, if the minister shook his head harder we might hear it. This minister certainly has not had any consideration tonight for the hardships that are being caused.

• (0210)

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Madam Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso for moving this motion. As the last speaker here in the House tonight, I also want to congratulate my colleagues, the members for Burin—St. George's, Bonavista-Trinity—Conception, Labrador and Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte for the very fine presentations they have given tonight.

I knew that the member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte was about to get very flamboyant and angry when I saw him repeat what an inshore fisherman had told him. I knew then his thoughts were that there were going to be in 1990 foreign ships just off his coast while the fishermen on the inshore look out and see the boat, and the fish plant worker who has been put out of work looks out and sees that 400-foot boat, and the offshore trawlerman, put ashore, looks out and sees that enormous factory freezer trawler from St. Malo, France, catching codfish along the shores of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and the coast of Quebec in 1990. I knew, as every single fishermen knew who is watching the debate tonight, as every single fish plant worker knew who is watching the debate tonight, that they were very angry.

We have to draw a line here as to what fishing takes place. We were not even talking about foreign overfishing because in order to have overfishing you would have to be fishing over what you are licensed to fish. No, this member was talking tonight about ships that are licensed by the Government of Canada to fish within 12 miles of our coastline in Atlantic Canada.

You heard about the disaster of the longliner, 64 feet 11 inches I believe, from Shelburne County that tragically sank off the coast of Newfoundland just a couple of days ago. When you think about a boat that is 64 feet long coming from Shelburne, Nova Scotia, 100 miles, 200 miles, 300 miles, 500 miles, 600 miles to the coast of Newfoundland to fish, you realize that the fishermen in a 30-foot boat, the fishermen in a 50-foot boat, the fishermen in a 65-foot boat, and the fishermen in an 18-foot boat, all fish in the same zone 12 miles from our coast as does that factory freezer trawler from France that the hon. member was referring to.

It is not foreign overfishing, it is foreign fishing that we are talking about today, licensed by the Government of Canada. The minister said that these were under-utilized species. What are they? There is a quota of 16,000 tonnes of redfish. They might think that because it is called redfish it belongs to the Soviet Union. Well, it doesn't, it is what you would call ocean perch. We process it in our fish plants.

• (0215)

There are 27, 000 tonnes of Greenland halibut. Maybe the government believes that that belongs to Greenland. Well, it does not. It is what we call turbot.

There is American plaice. Now that is something. Maybe they think that belongs to the United States but then plaice really means a European flatfish, so are really confused about that one.

There are twenty-five thousand tonnes of cod. Just think about it. Just imagine if the fish plant workers in Canso, Nova Scotia, in St. John's, Newfoundland, if the inshore fishermen all along our coastline in eastern Canada who cannot get a codfish or a flatfish or a redfish because that is the fish we process. Any fish plant in eastern Canada, what do they process? They process 50 per cent cod, about 30 per cent flatfish and about 20 per cent of something else—redfish, pollock, whatever the case is. It is a mix. Add them up—16, 25 and 27. That is 68,000 tonnes. There is an average of 10,000 tonnes per fish plant average by National Sea per year. That is six fish plants. Six National Sea fish plants can be operated with just the quota given inside our 200-mile zone, licensed by the Government of Canada. That is why we are so angry.

We cannot seem to get it through their heads. They mention under-utilized species. The only under-utilized species there would perhaps be grenadier. That is a fish now that is about this long. It is a scrawny fish with a lot of needles on it. It has an enormous blown up head like some of those ministers over there.

Mr. Tobin: It should be called the Mulroneyfish.

Mr. Baker: Perhaps I should mention the poor beagle shark. That is fished by the Faro Islands in a factory freezer trawler, I am ashamed to say, called The Bakker.

When we talk about foreign quotas inside Canada's 200-mile zone, we are not talking about under-utilized species. The only under-utilized species off the east coast of Canada today are the fish plant workers and the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

I will try to conclude. The government talks a lot about silver hake. Well, yes, the Soviet Union and Cuba at any moment in time during the summer, 80 miles east of Halifax, have about 50 factory freezer trawlers there catching silver hake. But they have a by-catch, a legal, licensed by-catch by Canada of 5 per cent cod. Well, 5 per cent of 100,000 tonnes is 5,000 tonnes of cod which they can take legally. They have a 3 per cent by-catch of haddock. That is 3,000 tonnes. They have a 2 per cent by-catch of pollock. That is 2,000 tones.

The Soviet Union in its quota for silver hake off Nova Scotia has enough by-catch to keep Canso operating for an entire year. That is what we are talking about.

There is one thing about those foreign licences that really irks us. It is this. At this time when it is so bad, when our fish plants are closing, there is the problem of the inshore fishermen to consider. You have seen on television what is happening to the inshore fishery. The fellow in the boat goes out day after day and he gets one fish in an entire cod trap. He goes out jigging the next day and he gets one more fish. The stories are told all along the coastline. There are two rules in Canada today—one for the foreigners and the other for Canadian fishermen. The Soviet Union, Cuba, the Faro Islands, East Germany, Japan, Norway and Poland all get licences within our 200-mile zone this year for 1990. They can go out and have a by-catch of cod of 5,000 tonnes, and if they get 10,000 tonnes they can keep it. If they get 4,000 tonnes of pollock they can keep it.

• (0220)

When a Nova Scotian or a Newfoundlander catches one fish above his by-catch he is arrested and brought into court. In the foreigners' licence it says you can keep what you catch. The Government of Canada this year has embarked on a new program to allow our longliners, 65 feet long, to fish tuna. You can get $20,000 for an average bluefin tuna in the Japanese market. A fisherman can sometimes make $6,000 or $7,000 just selling a few bluefin tuna. It is a pretty valuable fish.

This year the Government of Canada told our fishermen that in the name of going into these areas that we are not into that it is going to give us a quota. It gave a quota to 12 boats for 175 tonnes of bluefin tuna, but it gave the Japanese fleet 180 tonnes by-catch of bluefin tuna in the same area. That is the Virgin Rocks. The Japanese get a higher quota than Canadians do on the bluefin tuna around the Virgin Rocks.

In 1990, this year, we are angry that the Government of Canada has agreed starting January 1 to increase the quotas to foreigners for what it calls the under-developed species of capelin and squid. If you were going to go out in the ocean and catch a codfish as the Shelburne County longliners do, they go out with hook and line. What do they put on the hook? They put squid, capelin, a piece of mackerel or a piece of herring on the hook. Squid or mackerel is the main fish of the codfish. Here we are, and the Government of Canada is wondering why. It has a study on its desk that shows that the size of a codfish has gone down over 50 per cent in Nova Scotia. It has gone down 40 per cent in Newfoundland. Yet the government says that there is no proof that by giving to the foreigners 150,000 tonnes of feedstock that it is affecting us.

I will tell you how it is affecting our fishery. A man, a fisherman, whether a man or a woman today, cannot get a capelin licence unless they have a certain size of boat. They are not allowed by law past this year to move outside their own bay, while the foreigners get 38,000 tonnes in 1990. They can go wherever they want along the coastline of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, P.E.I., New Brunswick and Quebec. How much do we get? We get 800 tonnes of that 38,000 tonnes quota for capelin off the east coast of Canada.

That is why we are so angry today. We are saying to the Government of Canada that when Canadians look at all those big trawlers they say: "How come National Sea ties up their trawlers in Canso? Why don't they go outside the 200-mile zone where the Europeans are and catch all the fish they want like the Europeans do?" That is a logical question, isn't it, Madam Speaker? What is the answer to that question? The answer is that Canada has agreed not to go outside the 200-mile zone. They cannot go out there and catch what they want. They have to abide by quotas. The United States can catch what it wants because it does not belong to NAFO. The Europeans can catch what they want because they do not agree with NAFO's quotas. We have to tie up our offshore fleet. We are boxed in and we cannot move.

• (0225)

The government wonders why people are so angry. We licence the Soviet Union. Why cannot the National Sea trawlers go off the Soviet Union and fish? They are not allowed. We licensed this year 15 factory-freezer trawlers for Japan. Why can't National Sea trawlers go off Japan? They are not allowed. They would be blown out of the water by that country.

We are the only country in the world today that restricts our own fishermen and allows every foreign nation that wants to come in here and get a piece of the action. In this year 1989 300,000 tonnes of fish were caught by foreign nations. Three years ago the United States threw out the Soviet Union and the Cubans from the Alaska coast. That ended it off the U.S. coast.

The EEC has a little exchange program. You will see countries going off each other's coast. Off the African coasts if you are willing to spend a lot of money in Africa in a certain country you can go there. If you want to build an institute you can go there and fish for a year.

Canada says we will give what the minister announced tonight as our underdeveloped or excess species to foreign countries. He says it is because we have to.

The writing is on the wall for this government. It must do the logical thing. First and foremost, when our inshore fishermen have no fish, when our fish plants cannot operate, the government of Canada must do one thing and one thing alone first. That is to stand up for Canadians and kick out the foreigners.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, I know anything I say will be a letdown after the great speakers who have spoken all evening. I watched the debate from my office. I heard every speaker from all three parties. I want to congratulate all the speakers who took part in tonight's debate.

We are not looking at just an Atlantic region problem. We are looking at a national crisis. That is why I am pleased that the hon. member moved this motion to draw the matter not only to the country's attention but also to the world's attention because this crisis is caused by countries around the world.

I will not take very much time because I know the parliamentary secretary was complaining earlier that he wants to go home. It is sad that he is not supported by any minister on his side. It is sad that one member is supporting the whole government side. It is even sadder that there is no spokesman here, no observer from the NDP, the so-called party of the disadvantaged.

In my riding and near my riding I have plants such as Stelco, Molson's, a chocolate factory, Inglis and I used to have General Electric. What I want to highlight is even if all of these factories closed tomorrow and laid off all the workers, it would not create the same crisis as the crisis which exists in the Atlantic fisheries because the workers from my riding in Toronto could drive one hour to Oshawa and be working at General Motors. They could be driving one hour in the other direction to Ford and be working there. They could drive another hour north and be working for de Havilland. Even though I could have six plant closings in one day, it would not hurt as much as this crisis is hurting the fishermen.

The reason I came here tonight is to show that two million people in Toronto are hurting today along with the fishermen in Canso by these plant closures. On behalf of my 92,000 constituents of Parkdale—High Park, we throw our support behind the people who are affected. We are hurting along with these people.

To close, I want to congratulate you, Madam Speaker, for being so patient and hearing all the speakers. I wish to thank the staff. Most of all I want to thank the mover of the motion and members of all three parties who spoke.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, with your indulgence I simply want to point out to the Chair that despite all the sincerely held strong views and legitimate concerns this side of the House appreciates that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans made provision for all of us to speak who wanted to speak by staying here beyond twelve o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 52(12), I am satisfied that the debate has now been concluded. I therefore declare the motion carried.

[Translation]

The House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock this morning, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 2.32 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, December 19, 1989

The House met at 11 a.m.

Prayers

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ORDER IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

TABLING OF APPOINTMENTS AND REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

* * *

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the government responses to several petitions.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

THE ECONOMY

STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, today I am pleased to announce important changes to the goods and services tax that will be incorporated in the final legislation to be placed before Parliament.

The key change is that the 9 per cent tax rate, originally proposed in the technical paper, will be reduced to 7 per cent. The changes meet a number of objectives. They ensure that the economic benefits from the GST will be achieved quickly and smoothly. They maintain our commitment to protect lower and modest income Canadians. They address concerns that the GST is too complex and they achieve a reduction in the rate, in part by spending reductions that improve the efficiency of government.

Since the release of the technical paper the House of Commons finance committee has been most helpful in providing Canadians across the country with a forum for discussion and suggestions. At this time I would like to thank the members of the committee and its chairman, the hon. member for Mississauga South, for the very important work that they have done.

My colleagues in the government and I have listened carefully to the views of Canadians.

[Translation]

We have heard broad support for the need to replace the existent harmful manufacturers' sales tax and recognition that the GST, once implemented, will help to produce a more efficient, expanding Canadian economy. Canada is the only industrial country that still has a manufacturers' tax; 48 other countries have adopted sales taxes similar to the GST.

[English]

While there was broad agreement on the need for a change, a major concern about the GST was that the rate was too high and the initial impact on prices posed too great a risk of an ongoing inflationary response.

I have said all along that the rate could only be lowered with difficult trade-offs and that the careful balance of the GST package would have to be maintained. This we have done. The lower rate has been made possible by new spending restraint measures and tax changes.

By reducing the rate we are making it easier for the economy to adjust more smoothly to the introduction of the GST. I will come back to the rate reduction and other changes in a few moments.

The need to replace the existing manufacturers' sales tax with the GST is critical to the government's plan to build a stronger economy in an increasingly competitive world. We set out that plan in November of 1984. We have followed it since then and will continue to do so.

From the beginning our goal has been sustained economic growth, not for its own sake but as the best way of meeting the aspirations of this and future generations of Canadians in all regions of the country. The Canada we are building for the 1990s and the next century must be able to meet a modern society's demands for a higher standard of living and for better protection of the environment, advanced health care, adequate social security and enlightened education. Only if we have a strong and competitive economy will we be able to create the jobs, provide the services and offer the opportunities and freedoms that we have and want our children to have.

• (1110)

We are achieving the basic objectives of our plan by acting in two ways. First, by sustained action to eliminate the deficit and reverse the growth of the public debt.

[Translation]

And second, by putting in place coherent, fundamental changes to thè economy in order to free private initiative and to get the government out of doing things it does not do well. Initiatives such as the Canada–U.S Free Trade Agreement, privatization of Crown corporations, deregulation of the energy and transportation sectors, pension reform and reform of the income tax system and the new labour market development strategy are creating the basis for durable growth and productive jobs in the years ahead.

[English]

The GST is vital to both parts of this plan. It will provide the more stable and predictable source of revenues needed for sound fiscal planning and, through the growth it stimulates, will help reduce the deficit. It will remove the tax from our exports. It will put Canadian products on an equal footing with foreign competition, both at home and in world markets. In this way it will increase the competitiveness and efficiency of the economy. It will help create jobs.

I realize that implementing our economic plan has required adjustments, sometimes difficult adjustments, for many Canadians. Living through a period of far-reaching changes in the way the economy works is not always easy. Our efforts since 1984 to reduce the deficit have been necessary to make up for previous undisciplined spending, and that imposes an additional burden.

Because Canadians have been asked to do more in resolving this national problem they have every right to expect their government to manage with the greatest possible restraint. Indeed, the government bears a high responsibility to search out and eliminate wasteful spending, improve its efficiency and ensure the best value for the taxpayers' dollar. We have acted consistently to meet that responsibility.

For example, last Friday my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, announced further restraint measures and initiatives to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of government. This is clear evidence of our ongoing commitment to good management and expenditure restraint.

While we all have been asked to make sacrifices, I am convinced the payoff is more than worth it. Our policies to encourage the private sector and reduce the deficit have already helped to produce one of the longest periods of growth in the post-war period. Over the past five years Canadians have benefited from economic growth second only to Japan among the leading industrial countries of the world. And this prosperity can and will continue as our economic initiatives take hold and pay larger dividends.

But today we are at an important juncture in our management of the economy. The overall slowing in economic activity that I forecast in the April budget is beginning to appear. This development is necessary to contain inflationary pressures and is normal for an economy that has been operating at close to capacity in recent years. Early in the new year I will bring down a budget which will provide a full economic and fiscal report.

There are a number of developments in the economy that we will be watching very closely and assessing carefully. In response to slower growth, there is some evidence that inflationary pressures may be abating, but product and labour markets remain tight. The future course of cost increases, and age settlements in particular, will be important in determining how quickly we make further progress against inflation.

Although interest rates have remained high through 1989, the current year's deficit is still on track at $30.5 billion. But inflationary pressures, and the high interest rates necessary to reduce them, are putting pressure on the deficit outlook for next year. This will require further expenditure reductions. Canadians understand how important it is that we get the deficit down. It is wrong to mortgage our children's future to subsidize our own standard of living.

Consistent with our medium-term plan, we have been pursuing two key fiscal objectives, to reduce government spending and to keep the deficit on a downward course and ultimately eliminate it.

Since coming to office we have reduced the deficit by almost $8 billion, from $38.3 billion to $30.5 billion this year. In 1984-85 our spending on all government programs and services was $16 billion more than revenues. This year, as a result of tight management of spending and increased revenues, government spending is $9 billion less than revenues.

The fiscal plan that I tabled in April shows that the deficit will be cut in half within four years. With that progress, 1993-94 will be the last year the government will have to borrow additional funds in financial markets. Thereafter, we will be able to begin buying back treasury bills and bonds.

We are committed to ongoing deficit reduction. To do so will require two things: continuing action to control expenditures and to eliminate waste and inefficiency;, and a stable and reliable tax system that is more supportive of economic growth.

Our record on spending is good. Since we took office in 1984-85 spending on all government programs through 1989-90 has grown by only 3.6 per cent per year, less than the rate of inflation. And relative to the size of the economy, expenditures on programs and services have declined from 19.5 per cent in 1984-85 to 16.1 per cent this year. If we had not restrained spending to this extent program expenditures would be $22 billion higher than they are.

[Translation]

The goods and services tax will put the government's deficit reduction strategy on a stronger foundation. It will replace a tax which has become an increasingly unreliable source of revenues and an impediment to sound fiscal planning.

The GST will lead to a stronger economy. It will put domestic products on a level playing field both at home and abroad. It will encourage investment. It will make our industries more competitive. It will lead to $9 billion more in economic output, equivalent to $350 a year for each and every Canadian. These gains will be shared by all regions of Canada.

[English]

The refundable GST credit, a payment which will be made by cheque four times a year, will improve the fairness of the tax system.

It is now three and a half years since we initiated an extensive and thorough process leading toward reform of the federal sales tax system, and two and a half years since we introduced the concept of the goods and services tax in a White Paper.

• (1120)

The GST proposal that we brought forward in the technical paper in August was a carefully balanced, fiscally responsible package of measures. In the discussion of this proposal many argued that the tax base should be broadened. Many also argued that they should be exempt. While there were different points of view of the tax base, a consensus did emerge that the rate should be lowered.

In response to this debate, and to the valuable report of the House finance committee, I am proposing a number of important changes that will ensure the GST provides the same economic benefits but with considerably less inflationary risk in the transition.

The key change is a reduction in the rate from 9 per cent to 7 per cent. We have done this in a way that will cut the one-time impact of the cost of living almost in half. Reducing this impact from 2.25 per cent to just under 1.25 per cent will greatly reduce the risk of an ongoing inflationary response. This will help provide a better climate for low inflation, lower interest rates, lower deficits and stronger economic growth in the years ahead. In this way, sound economic, fiscal, taxation and monetary policies will work more effectively together for the benefit of all Canadians.

But at 7 per cent the GST will raise almost $6 billion less each year than it would at 9 per cent. I told Canadians that there would be no free ride to a lower rate. I said we would not reduce the rate at the expense of the deficit, and we will not. I also said we would not sacrifice the fundamental balance in equity among the various measures within the package, and specifically that we would honour the commitment to protect those with lower and modest incomes.

[Translation]

We have taken to heart the message that Canadians have given us about the importance of relying on spending restraint to reduce the deficit. And we have heard, loud and clear, the message that the operations of government itself should be the first priority for belt-tightening. The expenditure restraint actions announced last week by the President of the Treasury Board demonstrate our continuing commitment to greater efficiency in the management of government operations and services.

[English]

These measures, when fully implemented, will contribute $700 million annually to help support a lower rate.

I emphasized a moment ago that the overall balance of the GST package had been maintained. In an important respect, these expenditure measures improve the balance by ensuring that the government itself shares directly in the effort.

A number of changes have been made to the income tax elements of the package to reflect the lower GST rate. The lower rate will allow us to reduce the GST credit while maintaining our commitment to protect lower and modest-income Canadians. As before, families with incomes up to $30,000 will pay less tax under the GST than under the existing system. Some 8.7 million Canadian families and individuals will receive cheques. Three-quarters of families headed by seniors or single parents will have more after-tax income.

With the GST rate reduction and a lower sales tax burden on middle-income Canadians, the reduction of the 26 per cent tax rate is no longer required. Even without this reduction middle-income taxpayers will pay less than under the proposal in the technical paper.

Lowering the GST rate with no offsetting measures would have provided the greatest absolute benefit to high-income taxpayers. In order to help get the GST rate down and maintain the balance of the package, the existing high-income surtax will be extended to basic federal tax in excess of $12,500 and increased by 2 percentage points. These changes mean that high-income taxpayers will face about the same total tax burden under the 7 per cent rate as under the proposals of the technical paper.

Business will also contribute to a lower rate. The large corporations tax will be increased and the annual fee which would have been paid to small businesses for administering the GST will be eliminated. However, to help small business make the transition to the new regime, a one-time credit of up to $1,000 will be provided.

In light of the tough choices that had to be made in reducing the GST, it would not have been appropriate to sustain the loss of $700 million in federal tax revenues from sales and excise taxes on alcohol, tobacco and motive fuels that would otherwise have occurred. Adjustments will be made in the structure of these taxes to maintain revenues at current levels. As a result, prices of these products to consumers should not increase.

As proposed in the technical paper, the GST will apply only to new homes. The GST housing rebate, adjusted to reflect the lower rate, will continue to ensure that the government's commitment to housing affordability is met.

These measures, taken together, maintain the balance of the GST package. The tax base for the GST remains essentially the same as in the technical paper. Some modest changes to the base as well as other technical improvements in the operation of the tax are described in the technical notes in the paper that I am tabling today.

Before closing I want to touch briefly on two other closely related issues that have been the focus of much discussion. The small business community has expressed concerns that dealing with the GST would impose heavy compliance burdens. We provided streamlined accounting methods to help small business. We provided tax incentives to invest in cash register equipment to help deal with the GST, including the announcement yesterday that the existing federal sales tax on such equipment is being removed.

The government will work with the small business community to explore further means of streamlining the operation of the tax.

[Translation]

We will also be working with the provinces on aspects of administration of our sales tax systems. In this regard, I am encouraged by the spirit of co-operation that emerged from my meeting this month with provincial finance ministers. In this work we will be mindful of the fact that Canadians have left no doubt that they want needless duplication in government eliminated, whether it be at the federal, provincial or municipal level.

In this and all other areas, the federal government will be continuing the effort to improve its efficiency and its stewardship of taxpayer dollars.

This commitment will be carried forward as a vital part of our broader plan of fiscal and economic action—action against the deficit and towards a dynamic, growing and job-creating economy.

• (1130)

[English]

None of this will be easy. It will require more tough choices of the kind that I have described today. But we must make those choices, as a government and as a nation, if we are to ensure the kind of future that we want for ourselves and for our children. That is why we intend to implement the GST as scheduled on January 1, 1991.

The bill incorporating the changes announced today will be introduced at the first opportunity in the new year.

Implementing the GST is the right thing to do. We have had two and a half years of discussion on the government's White Paper. We have had four months of debate on the technical proposal. We have listened carefully to this debate.

Today, we are responding with a balanced package that meets the major concerns that have been expressed. Now it's time to move ahead, so let's get on with the job.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, under this government, for the first time in 50 years we have people lined up at food banks at Christmas time. Does the Minister of Finance expect that these people will be grateful to him for his new tax?

Senior citizens pensions are under attack by this government. Does the Minister of Finance expect that the senior citizens of this country are going to be grateful for his new tax?

The Minister of Finance has imposed a new administrative fee on student loans. Does he expect students to be grateful for his new tax?

We are suffering one of the coldest Decembers in Canadian history and this government, for the first time in our history, is putting a tax on home heating fuel. Does the Minister of Finance expect families that can barely afford to pay their heating bills to be grateful to him for this tax?

We have more than a million small business people working hard all year and as a result of the government's economic policies they are having the worst Christmas sales in history. Does he expect small business in Canada to be grateful for this new tax?

We have people in Atlantic Canada reeling from the collapse of their fishery and they are going to be crushed by this proposal today. Does this minister expect people in the Atlantic and, indeed, in northern Canada to be grateful for this new tax?

The man who just spoke today looks like the Minister of Finance, sounds like the Minister of Finance, acts like the Minister of Finance, but can this be the same man who was Minister of Finance during the election campaign? Because that Minister of Finance swore up and down the country during the election that he would not bring in a goods and services tax unless he had provincial co-operation. That Minister of Finance swore up and down across the country during the election that any goods and services tax he brought in would be revenue neutral. That Minister of Finance swore up and down the country that any goods and services tax he brought in would not be inflationary. That Minister of Finance swore up and down the country that the goods and services tax he brought in would not be invisible.

That same Minister of Finance promised Canadians that when he brought in a goods and services tax, he would remove the 3 per cent temporary surtax on their incomes. Not only was it not removed, there is another two points on it today. He promised middle-income Canadians that when he brought in a goods and services tax he would lower their basic income tax rate. That Minister of Finance promised business people that when he brought in a goods and services tax, it would be simple to understand, simple to administer. That Minister of Finance said that we were the only country in the world with a manufacturers' sales tax. He has now made us as Canadians the only country in the world with two separate sets of retail sales taxes, one at the federal and one at the provincial level.

None of the promises that minister made about this tax have been kept so that this performance, once again this morning is a disgrace. The minister is a disgrace, and the government he represents is a disgrace.

There are things that I would like to say to the Prime Minister. He was here for his minister, but he does not deign to listen to the Leader of the Opposition. Nor does he deign to listen to the leader of the New Democratic Party, because of his presidential style. We are talking about taxes and the Prime Minister is not here to listen to the response of the opposition.

This is the minister who presided over one budget leak. This is the minister who tried to cover up a second budget leak. This is the minister who called the manufacturers' sales tax a silent killer of jobs and yet raised that sales tax four times from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, to 11 per cent, to 12 per cent, to 13.5 per cent.

This is the Minister of Finance who told the people of Canada in 1984 that he would not raise taxes one single cent. Since he has become minister, he has raised taxes 31 separate times and this is number 32 this morning.

This Minister of Finance said during the election that while we were making election promises on this side of the House, his were not promises, they were commitments, and that he had the money in the bank to pay for every one of those commitments. Then he went ahead and broke those spending commitments; promise after promise broken right, centre, left, up and down.

This Minister of Finance has allowed the spread in Canadian and American interest rates to reach the highest spread in Canadian history.

This Minister of Finance now has the gall to stand up in this House of Commons and tell Canadians, "Trust me." I would not trust this Minister of Finance to tell me the time of day because this minister has been deceitful. This minister has been fraudulent in his treatment of the Canadian people, and now we know that he is not only deceitful, he is weak.

The minister had cloudy language drafted by his bureaucrats, suggesting that the economy was in the beginning of a slow-down. We are now on the verge of a recession. The minister virtually admitted that this morning. Yet this man is still proceeding with a goods and services tax on everything that moves, on virtually everything that is sold in this country. I do not know what kind of a world he is living in. What he should be saying and what he is really saying, when you really get down to it is: "Well, Canadians, if we are going to have a recession, let's have a real recession and I am going to introduce it to you right now this morning."

After months of hearing Canadians tell him that his new sales tax was a disaster, witnesses from across the country listening to the committee under the chairmanship of the member for Mississauga South telling him and Parliament that the tax would be inflationary, regressive, invisible, sneaky, unfair; that it would hurt the poor, particularly the more remote regions of Canada. This minister has now become the Rhett Butler of Canadian politics. His answer to all his so-called consultation is, "Quite frankly, I don't give a damn."

If the minister thinks that his 7 per cent solution will convince Canadians to accept his new tax he has another think coming. What we have just listened to is the latest act in the continuing charade. Nine per cent was supposed to be the absolute minimum, so said the minister. Now he has lowered the rate by 2 per cent. He should have lowered this tax by 9 per cent, scrapped it, and began all over again.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is the same minister who increased the manufacturers' tax four times: from 9 to 10 per cent, from 10 to 11 per cent, from 11 to 12 per cent and finally to 13.5 per cent. Do you want Canadians to believe this minister who promised this morning to reduce the goods and services tax from 9 to 7 per cent? Eventually, it is quite clear that he will pursue the same policy and increase this tax later, to 9 per cent, 10 per cent, 11 per cent, 12 per cent and finally 13 per cent. It will be much easier to do because this tax will not be visible. Canadian consumers will not be able to figure out how much tax they are paying. Do you expect people to believe the minister and to trust him? Never, never, Mr. Speaker, because he has not acted in a way that deserves our trust!

• (1140)

Mr. Speaker, despite the juggling this morning, this tax is still invisible, the provinces are still not co-operating in it, it is still an administrative nightmare, it is still complicated, it is still regressive, it is still unfair, and the minister tried this morning to fool Canadians by pretending to give them a Christmas present.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, this is no Christmas present. It is not a present at all. Every Canadian is going to wake up on Christmas morning with a lump of coal in his stocking and on that lump is going to be 7 per cent.

After all these promises, this minister still has not told us whether food in grocery stores will be taxed or whether it will be exempt. In the speech, the minister tried to pretend that he was taking additional money from wealthy Canadians and large corporations. What is he really doing today? Let us look at the numbers, his numbers.

He takes $200 million from large corporations and multinationals, but he takes $600 million from Canadian small business. He takes $200 million from wealthy Canadians, but he takes $700 million from middle income Canadians, and he takes $1.2 billion from Canadians living in poverty. That is what he has done this morning.

He takes $1.1 billion from old age pensioners and families receiving family allowances. He takes $400 million from Canadians struggling to buy a house. He calls that fair. He calls that sound economic policy. I say it is a sham and Canadians are not going to be fooled.

The fraudulent aspect of this little exercise this morning is that he hopes the headlines will say that he reduced the tax from 9 per cent to 7 per cent. What happened is that all the revenue he sacrificed in that move he has restored by matched tax increases. In other words, on this morning's exercise, he is revenue neutral. There has been no reduction in tax. I want to say that to Canadians. It has been transferred to the middle class, to the poor regions, to the pensioners, and to the families with family allowances. It has been an absolutely fraudulent exercise.

The exercise this morning on the part of the minister is yet his latest confession that he has lost control of the economy, that his deficit is out of control despite all his rhetoric. This is the minister who has doubled the total public debt of this country, that is, the cumulative public debt since Confederation. He has doubled it in five years from $170 billion to $350 billion, despite the highest tax increases in the last four or five years in Canadian history—31 times. In constant dollars, the average Canadian family is now undergoing a burden of 30 per cent more tax from all sources than that family paid when this minister assumed office.

He is now at the stage, of course, where he faces a tax revolt. He did not have the courage to come out straight and tell Canadians he is going to tax them where they can see it, where they have to pay it on their income tax form. What he has done now is hope, by an invisible, sneaky tax which the storekeeper will not be able to calculate and put on his sales counter, that Canadians will not know what the score is. I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that he will get away with this sneaky, hidden, clandestine tax.

If he had paid any attention to the universal testimony, to the almost unanimous testimony of Canadians across the country, he would have done the sensible thing this morning. He would have scrapped this tax; he would have started all over; and had the Prime Minister been sitting here this morning, I would have said scrap the minister as well.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Finance has shown Canadians, if they did not know it before, is that Tory times are tough times and Tory times are taxing times.

Last year at this time we were debating the free trade deal and that was Canada's Christmas present. We have seen what has happened since we got that present, with the lay-offs on the east coast and on the west coast. This Christmas, the minister proposes to give us a real gift, he proposes to take a tax of 9 per cent on all the goods and services, the only country to have a tax on those kinds of services, that kind of consumption tax, and reduce it to 7 per cent.

Canadians will not be fooled. Canadians will not be fooled that this is a gift. The minister comes out and says: "It is tough times, but I have got to hit you with this 9 per cent tax". It is kind of like a two by four. Then he comes back, a week before Christmas and says: "It is okay, it is just going to be a 7 per cent tax". That is just a baseball bat. Canadians know that getting hit over the head with a baseball bat instead of a two by four sure is not going to be any better.

Canadians have to remember that the principle of this tax remains the same. It undermines the basic fairness of a tax system that is progressive and that takes from those people according to their incomes. This tax hits everyone on every purchase and every service. It is not a discretionary tax. You do not have a choice of buying food. You do not have a choice of buying your children clothes. You do not have a choice about many of the services. Whether you are a person on old age income, whether you are a family trying to simply get by, you do not have a choice about whether you buy those things. Therefore, the principle remains the same. The principle is, take the most from those who have the least because those are also the same people in our society who have the least resources to complain. These are the people who are struggling from day to day just to make a living, the middle income worker and the lower income worker.

What this government should be proposing is a system of fair taxation. I do not think that Canadians generally are opposed to paying taxes. They see that we have a medicare system that benefits everyone that is fair and just. Canadians accept that we have to pay taxes for that. What Canadians do object to is the unfair tax system.

While the minister will say in his proposal today that he is attempting to increase the corporation tax, catch a few of those large corporations, some 70,000 profit-making corporations that are not paying any tax. I am sure the minister is going to say: "Look at my proposal, we are going to catch some of those". Under the minister's proposal today they are going to reach 3,700 of those 70,000 corporations. That is not fair tax reform.

What this government should be doing is scrapping this tax and constructing a fair tax system and an equitable tax system.

Today the minister is trying to say to the Canadian people: "I am putting a little tinsel on the tree for you". But people who got the tinsel were those who might make, say, $100,000 on the stock market. They do not have to worry. They are not going to be taxed at source. People involved in borrowing money for mergers and take-overs do not have worry, they got the tinsel. They do not have to worry about this tax.

The people who have to worry are the people in Newfoundland whose communities are being shut down, the prairie farmers who are going broke every day, the Inglis plant worker, and the workers in all of those plants that are shutting down. There is almost a plant closing a week in Toronto.

Clearly, there are going to be more children in food bank line-ups and Canada will be a poorer and less equitable society with this tax.

The minister spoke about the inflation rate. We should all be very happy that the inflation rate is going to be half of what it would have been with a GST at 9 per cent. Let us look for a moment at the government's record on projections, because we want to see just how much we can trust what the government has told us will happen.

Canadians will remember that free trade was going to be very good for all of us, and we have had a year of that. We were going to get all those lower prices. Remember those lower prices that we were all going to get which were going to be of great benefit to consumers?

• (1150)

I remember during the election the Tory candidate in my riding saying that it will mean $300 a year, a free television for every Canadian. Canadians are not getting their free television out of free trade. Canadians are just getting their pink slips from this government.

This government proposes to assist small business. What has this government done for small business? First of all the high interest rates are killing small business, farmers, and fishers. Now they are going to be faced with the larger administrative task of having to collect this tax. Is the government going to help them out? Well, one time they say, but the small business administration fee? Gone! So much for help for small business.

The minister said this morning that because of the 7 per cent tax, the inflation increase may be cut from 2.25 per cent. First of all, that is based on the assumption that everyone agrees that in fact the inflationary effect would have been 2.25 per cent. Many economists projected it as much higher. That still leaves us with an increase in the inflation rate of 1.2 per cent, which I believe the minister said this morning would eventually lead to a healthy economy and reduced interest rates.

Surely Canadians are not going to buy this. We have been told that we have to keep the interest rate high because of inflation. Inflation is going up but the minister is saying the interest rate is going to go down. Well, the minister had better speak to Mr. Crow and tell him about his theory on the economy and the inflation rate. It certainly does not gibe with what is happening with Canadians.

This government told us that the manufacturers' sales tax was an unfair and silent killer of jobs. In the finance committee when I asked how many jobs this silent killer had destroyed, and how many jobs they projected would be lost with each increase of this unfair tax, it seems it was such a silent killer that we did not know how many jobs it might have cost.

I believe all parties agreed that the manufacturers' sales tax had certainly a very unfair element. What did the government do with this unfair tax, this silent killer of jobs? They took it from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, to 11 per cent, to 12 per cent, to 13.5 per cent. Canadians had better think about what is going to happen to this tax that the minister is presenting as fair and equitable if an unfair, unjust tax gets raised 5 per cent. What is going to happen to what the government sees as a fair tax is that in two years that tax is going to be 12 per cent.

My hon. colleague across the way said: "What about the alternatives?" Well, I would recommend to the hon. member that he read the New Democratic's minority report on alternatives to the goods and services tax. I would like to commend my colleagues for the work that they have done on this. We do provide real alternatives. Unlike our friends the Liberals who just say they do not like it, we have proposed some real alternatives. Not only have we proposed alternatives, we have costed out those alternatives and I will just mention a few.

Reform the personal income tax system to restore the objective of progressive taxation; broaden the base of corporate income tax; impose a green tax, an excise tax, to discourage production and use of environmentally hazardous goods; introduce a tax on transfers of wealth. Unlike the government that increases an unfair tax, we also recommend as one of our alternatives to roll back the manufacturers' sales tax to 9 per cent, at least until there has been real tax reform.

Canadians should also remember what has happened under this government's "tax reform". Middle and lower income people are paying some 60 per cent more tax than they paid in 1984. But fortunately for some groups in our society, wealthy families got the tinsel again. They pay 6.4 per cent less. Those are not my figures. They come from the National Council on Welfare. Since 1984, it has cost poor families 60 per cent more but wealthy families have paid 6.4 per cent less.

[Translation]

The proposed cuts to the tax credit for low-income families will only aggravate their already precarious situation.

The Canadian Council on Welfare study shows that the situation of poor families is worsening. In all provinces and territories, people working at the minimum wage live below the poverty line. Children of poor families are lining up at soup kitchens in every city in the land.

Just as with the trade agreement, people will not see the so-called benefits of this regressive tax. The trade agreement has been in effect for a year and people are still waiting for bargains in supermarkets and department stores. They will wait a lot longer for the savings from this tax!

[English]

What has happened in this last year? It is important to remind Canadians what has happened in the last year to make Canada a better and fairer place. We have had cuts to VIA Rail, cutbacks on regional development, disaster in the Atlantic with the fisheries, no forestry agreements signed to preserve our environment under the forestry. We have had, under the bilateral panel, decisions against fish processing in our own country.

If you go through the list what we see here is not the greening of Canada, but the beginning of the end of Canada. Prairie farms are in debt and we cannot process our fishing. This government has stated that it is concerned about the environment. What do they do? It cuts energy conservation offices across this country and the energy conservation budget.

This government says it is concerned with equity and fairness. What do we do? Workers want regional equity on their pay. It is fair that they get paid the same on the east coast and on the west coast. It is fair that hospital workers, some 80 per cent of them women, get paid the same as other workers in the hospital. We believe in pay equity. How does this government deal with that aspect of fairness? It sends them back to work, and does not settle on those issues.

That is what this year has brought under this government. Now we are promised that for 1991 we will be given yet another tax, a tax on all of the ordinary goods and services that we buy. That tax will affect the regions disproportionately to other parts of Canada. In the north, for example, there are higher transportation costs, higher heating costs, generally utilities costs are higher, and clothing costs are higher. In other rural regions of this country, they will equally be as effected.

The New Democratic Party is unequivocally opposed to this regressive, harmful, destructive tax that is going to hurt middle income Canadians, lower income Canadians, small business, farmers in this country, everyone from one end of this country to the other.

We call on the minister to implement real tax reform. We call on the minister not to spend some $9 million to try to convince Canadians that this tax is a good thing. Forget it! I have been in every province and territory across this country talking to people about this tax and they will not be convinced, even by a slick advertising campaign, that this is good for them.

This tax is not a Christmas present. This Minister of Finance is sure no Santa Claus. Canadians will not be fooled by a few changes, what appear to be a few measures to make us feel better. Canadians are hurting from this government's economic mismanagement. This is another example. Canadians know it. Canadians are going to be sure to tell Tories that, and so will the New Democratic Party.

* * *

• (1200)

[Translation]

CANADIAN GROUP OF THE INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

TABLING OF REPORT

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian Group of the Inter-Parliamentary Union.

The report covers the inter-parliamentary symposium on women's participation in the decision-making process in political and parliamentary life.

I simply would like to comment, Mr. Speaker, that the question whether politics is still a man's world was generally answered in the affirmative: Yes, men have a monopoly on power. The response to that was: Politics is everybody's concern.

In my lifetime, I hope to see as many women as men here in this House, Madam Speaker.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

COMMITTEES

LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—TABLING OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the second report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

[English]

The report recommends 14 ways in which both efficiency and fairness can be improved within the existing refugee claimants' backlog clearance program established by the minister. Action must be taken immediately, however, to speed up the process. At the existing rate of progress, the committee estimates it will take over six years to finish all the hearings.

[Translation]

We have made several recommendations for fair and effective improvements in the existing program, in order to speed up clearance of the refugee claimants' backlog.

Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 109, the committee also asks the government to respond within 120 days. However, considering the urgent aspect of these problems, the committee would ask that the government's response be given as soon as possible.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and indeed the privilege pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present to this House 13 petitions, certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. They contain the signatures of 1,276 Canadians who reside in the communities of Hamilton, Ancaster, Burlington, Stony Creek, Grimsby, Binbrook, Dunnville, Beamsville, Freelton, Brantford, Paris, Caledonia, Cambridge, Carlisle, Cayuga, Camden, Lynden, Puslinch, Oakville, Toronto, Willowdale, North York, Mount Hope, Kitchener, Guelph, Greensville, Milton, Waterford, Winona, Sudbury, Belleville, Trenton, Waterdown, and others. The petitions call upon this government to totally reject this cruel, hidden, inflationary 7 per cent solution, called the goods and services tax.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I wish to present three petitions which reject the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas.

Your petitioners, who are residents of the isolated community of Lebel-sur-Quévillon in Abitibi, are concerned about the recommendations in this as yet unfinished report.

Madam Speaker, the task force's final report does not contain a single reference to the James Bay and Northern Quebec Cree-Naskapi Agreement or to the final report published in October 1989 on regional disparities among isolated communities, carried out by the Government of Quebec.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. The first one is signed by a large number of people from the Mont Nebo, Victoire, Canwood area of my riding. The petitioners are opposed to the goods and services tax of this government.

The petitioners call on the government to reform the tax system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, to reject the current proposal for the goods and services tax, to ensure that if and when there is a broad public consensus on the sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax, that this reform is not an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab and cause the government to cease with the proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

I support the petition and I thank the people in Mont Nebo who collected the names.

I have a second petition which also opposes the goods and services tax at 9 or 7 per cent. It calls for the rejection of the tax and is signed by a number of people from the Ottawa area, here in the Nation's Capital.

EXTRADITION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Madam Speaker, under Standing Order 36 I have the honour to present three petitions on three completely different subjects. All have been certified by the Clerk.

The first petition, signed by approximately 1,500 residents of southeast Edmonton, calls for the reform of Canada's extradition laws. It refers specifically to Charles Ng and other well known persons who have sought refuge in Canada to avoid prosecution and/or punishment in the United States. Those signing the petition want our laws changed so that such people could be returned from Canada at any time "after their apprehension in Canada".

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): I have a petition signed by approximately 160 Canadian leaders from across Canada. Many of them have origin in Vietnam, and recite some of the many human rights abuses in Vietnam, including religious oppression, forced labour, lack of freedom of speech in the press and call on the Government of Canada to put real pressure on the Vietnamese government all the areas specified in the petition.

RCMP DRESS CODE

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by approximately 45 Edmontonians relating to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police dress uniform. Those signing do not want the uniform to be changed, and I quote, "by any concessions to religious or ethnic minorities".

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to deposit in the House these ongoing petitions that have been coming in in the interests of the National Arts Centre of Canada. They come from people across this land who are concerned that the centre fulfil its unique mandate as a showcase and an exhibition place for Canadian talent and for Canadian artists in the field of theatre, dance and opera. They hope that the problems around the National Arts Centre will be settled and that they get to work and promote the wonderful talent that we have here in Canada.

For your interest, Madam Speaker, these hundreds and hundreds and hundreds of petitions are added to those I have already tabled.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): I also have the honour to present in the name of the Golden Age Association members who had a coalition meeting of seniors who have serious concerns about the clawback which this government has put into the bill on new taxes that is before this House.

These petitioners state, among other things, that whereas this proposed tax to tax back old age security and family allowance benefits in part or in their entirety depends on a recipient's income, this tax would undermine the the principle of universality of Canadian social programs, and would not be indexed and therefore has no inflation protection. This tax discriminates against recipients of OAS and family allowance benefits by making them bear an unfair burden of tax, irrespective of geographic location or other factors.

They are very concerned that the threshold is not $50,000 of real income, for it may include thousands of dollars of imaginary income as the government requires the inclusion of 25 per cent of grossed up dividends on Canadian investment income to be included.

• (1210)

Madam Speaker, I speak on behalf of hundreds and hundreds of senior citizens who have the right to be heard in this House and whom I represent in the wonderful riding of Mount Royal.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do realize what the hon. member is saying. The hon. member also knows that presenting a petition is not the time to enter into debate.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I did not think reading what they had written and what One Voice has indicated as a serious concern was debate and if so, I regret that. I will just table these hundreds of petitions in their interest.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I also have on hand serious concerns expressed by hundreds of petitioners who are very concerned about the goods and services tax. Madam Speaker, as you and I both know, the minister spoke to that tax this morning.

I will not add to what the petitioners have said except to speak in their name about their serious concern about higher inflation, higher interest rates, higher unemployment and the fact that they consider this, the thirty-second tax increase an unconscionable tax grab. Thank you very much on behalf of the petitioners of Mount Royal.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Madam Speaker, I will make this short. I have in my hand the signatures of 5,600 people from Windsor who are already being hurt by this government's economic policies as they watch jobs and businesses cross the tunnel and cross the bridge to Detroit. They agree with my leader that this GST is the final blow that will mean more jobs lost and more business lost to small business people in Windsor. They want that tax stopped.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition that has been signed and certified. It contains 1,109 names of people in my riding, for a total of 9,117 from the riding of Calgary Northeast.

These petitioners are opposed to the goods and services tax. They believe that this tax is regressive. It is on the back of the consumer and it is inflationary. They pray and call upon the government to withdraw it. I support those petitioners.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, as part of the same campaign to make the government aware of public opinion in this country and prevent a 700 per cent increase in a sales tax Canadians refuse to accept, I would like to table a dozen petitions from my riding, from Canadian men and women who are absolutely shocked by a government that lacks the integrity to govern this country as it should be governed and wants to impose a tax on Canadians that will be a hidden tax, a tax that will be regressive, that will increase inflation and unemployment to unacceptable levels. These people earnestly call on Parliament to abolish this tax outright and make the government stop pretending to Canadians that reducing the tax from 9 per cent to 7 per cent is a nice Christmas present. This is false!

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to table petitions in the House today bearing the names of 292 residents primarily of northwestern Ontario, residents of Beardmore, Pickle Lake, Kakabeka Falls, the Thunder Bay area, as well as Milton, Richmond Hill, Midland, Hamilton and Scarborough, Dorion, Ontario, R and R Engine Rebuilding, Upsala, Ontario, Ram Realty, Dale's Service Centre, Galaxy Lanes, and the Upsala General Store.

These petitioners totally reject any regressive consumption tax whether it is 9, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2 or 1 per cent. They want zip.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Madam Speaker, I have a number of petitions that conform to Standing Order 36. The people in my riding are against the new tax the Conservative government wishes to introduce today.

[English]

A number of these petitioners come from my riding and are opposed to the goods and services tax that the government is planning on introducing. These people come from various parts of my riding, such as Dalhousie, Val-d'Amour, St. Castin, Kedgwick, Campbellton,and Charlo, which makes up practically the whole riding, as well as a number of places that I have not mentioned. I call upon the government to listen to these petitioners and withdraw this goods and services tax.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege to rise this morning pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of people who are opposed to the—well, politely—the GST.

Some hon. members: Go ahead and say it.

An hon. member: Canadians want to hear it.

Mr. Fisher: No, that is fine. We will leave it at that for this time.

They point out the government's lack of regard for bringing in a sales tax which is judged according to people's ability to pay. They point out that it has not addressed the unfair way the government has applied the present taxation system we have which at least is progressive, whereas the general sales tax is a very regressive tax.

They point out that if we are going to have a sales tax, let us have one that does address people's ability to pay. It does not make any difference to them whether it is 7 per cent, 9 per cent, 5 per cent or 11 per cent, they do not want to have anything to do with the GST.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, the attached petition is certified correct as to form and content.

This petition is signed by 70 residents who state that the Minister of Finance's proposed goods and services tax is an unfair form of taxation because of its lack of regard for the taxpayers' ability to pay. They say that the government has not addressed the unfair taxation system currently in place which permits wealthy Canadians and corporations to pay little or no federal tax while forcing lower and middle income taxpayers to pay more of the national tax burden.

They are calling for the abolition of this tax proposal and that the government not proceed with the goods and services tax.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to stand in the House today and present petitions with the names of over 3,000 individuals from my riding of Dartmouth and the communities of the city of Dartmouth and the communities of Cherry Brook, Preston and Eastern Passage, as well as surrounding communities who petition this House and this government to drop its regressive goods and services tax proposal which we have heard about today in the House.

The petitioners find it unpalatable that a government would, without consultation, have the thirty-second attack on their wallets. Even with the news here today about 7 per cent instead of 9 per cent, they equally are loud in crying out that this is an unfair tax and they humbly ask the government and this Parliament to drop these measures.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure today to rise pursuant to Standing Order 36. I think it is appropriate today that this petition be put before the House. It is from 624 residents of the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt.

It shows that the people in the larger communities such as Penticton as well as those in smaller communities such as Keremeos, Coste and Okanagan Falls and the medium sized communities in my riding of Osoyoos and Oliver are against and strictly opposed to a goods and services tax in any form.

They state in the petition that the government has not addressed the unfair taxation system currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal tax while forcing lower and middle income taxpayers to bear more of the national tax burden.

They ask and call upon the government to cease with this proposal which will shift the tax burden onto ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise today to present petitions from 129 constituents of my riding of Willowdale.

All of these petitioners are deploring the government's goods and services tax. The government has stated that this tax is good medicine for Canadians. Not one of my constituents has come forward and said, "Peterson, support this tax because it is good for us". Just the contrary.

I am very pleased to present this petition to the House of Commons, along with the thousands of others already presented.

• (1220)

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Madam Speaker, I have the privilege to present pursuant to Section 36 a number of petitions. One petition has over 60 pages of signatures plus another 40 pages of signatures that became unattached from the petition and therefore are not properly filed. These are from people in my riding of Surrey North who say that the proposed goods and service tax is an unfair tax and should be withdrawn. They request that the Minister of Finance stop proposing a shift in the tax burden to ordinary Canadians and come in with real tax reform.

I have a petition from residents of Surrey North requesting that the government abandon its plans to scrap VIA Rail and to provide additional financing for the upgrading of VIA Rail equipment sufficient to carry on a proper rail transportation service.

Madam Speaker, I have another final petition from the residents in my riding concerning their views on abortion.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of residents of the city of Toronto who, like so many hundreds of thousands of other Canadians, are objecting to the proposed goods and services tax. It is clear that their objection is not based only on the high level of the tax which was mitigated by the minister's announcement today, but by the fact that it is a hidden tax, by the fact that it bears unfairly on ordinary, low and middle-income Canadians, by the fact that it can make the economic conditions that Canada is facing now even worse. I am very pleased to put this petition forward on behalf of my constituents and others from the city.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I am proud to present a petition on behalf of what now is over 4,000 people from the Kamloops constituency. This petition comes from residents of Blue River, Avola, Vavenby, Birch Island, Middle Fork, Clearwater, Barrier, Heffley Creek, Pinantan Lake, Darfield, McClure, Chase, Monte Creek, Monte Lake, Pritchard, Westwold, Savona, Logan Lake, Vinsulla and Kamloops.

I present them all today as an indication of the outrage that people of the Kamloops constituency feel regarding the government's intention to proceed now with this goods and services tax. They were hoping that the government would not proceed and would tell the people at Christmas that it decided to listen to them and back off. They are asking the Parliament of Canada to do whatever we can as members of the opposition to bring the government to its senses, to back off on this tax which is brutal, cruel, regressive. They encourage the government to go back to the drawing board and introduce tax reform that is real tax reform where everyone actually pays their fair share.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, what I have to present this morning is approximately 2,000 signatures from Essex—Windsor from the following communities: Windsor, Essex, Ruthven, La Salle, Woodslee, Maidstone, Belle River, Cottam, Stoney Point, Amherstburg, Tecumseh and a great many rural parts of the constituency.

This petition as with those of my colleagues suggests that this announcement this morning by the Minister of Finance is a snivelling attempt to retreat which is simply unacceptable. These petitions suggest that this goods and services tax, because of its unfairness, because of the way in which it will hurt our economy, has to be rejected and eliminated.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I am pleased to present a petition signed by a number of residents of Ottawa who are extremely displeased with the government's proposal to introduce a GST or a goods and services tax which should really be called the grief and suffering tax.

These Canadian citizens are objecting to this tax at 9 per cent, 7 per cent or any other per cent because it is higher that the present tax which is 0 per cent.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, as we had confirmed for us this morning—in the words of the famous breakfast cereal ad—"Mikey likes it". But the people of Canada do not.

I have here another 3,247 signatures of Canadians, each of whom petition the government to reject the proposal for a goods and services tax, to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, to ensure that if and when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax that this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab, and to cause the government to cease with the proposal which will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of real tax reform.

These Canadians, most of whom live in Edmonton, live as well in the Alberta communities of Spruce Grove, Tofield, Red Deer, Delburne, Innisfail, Lacombe, Sylvan Lake, Sherwood Park, Hinton—lots of them from Hinton—Grande Cache, Stony Plain, Vermilion, Rycroft, Sundry, Whitecourt, Calgary, Jasper, Drayton Valley, Warburg, Buck Lake, Okotoks, St. Albert, Barrhead, Rocky Rapids, Evansburg, Lodgepole, Leduc, Redcliff, Wainwright, Winterburn, Morinville, Devon, Didsbury—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A point of order, the hon. member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I hesitate to bring it to the attention of the Speaker, but I think that it is not only proper but required within the rules for somebody to indicate the places from which signatures have come.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the hon. member, who has been here for quite awhile, knows that when presenting a petition the hon. member should make a short summary of what the petition is about. I do not think we should go into a geography course with each and every petition.

On a point of order, the hon. member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, it would have been possible for me to present each of these collections individually noting a short list in each instance and achieving the same end but, in fact, what I am attempting to do here is save the time of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Kitchener.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour of presenting a petition containing some 7,000 signatures from right across Canada. This, if added to a similar petition that I put earlier containing the signatures of some 195,000 Canadians from across Canada, brings to a total of 202,000 people who are calling upon Parliament to enact legislation that would truly and effectively protect the life of the unborn child from conception.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I am pleased today to rise under Standing Order 36 and present a petition signed by many concerned Canadians who object to the proposed goods and services tax.

They say that it will cause serious and unfair hardship to lower and middle income Canadians, that it will cause higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment.

They pray and call upon this Parliament to reject this goods and services tax.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, this certainly seems to be the day for petitions against the goods and services tax and I would certainly also like to submit my 160-odd petitions with almost 12,000 names. The problem is that I have already done so.

My second instalment is not yet ready. It seems that the Clerk of Petitions must be somewhat bogged down in the process.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I would like to present to the House today, on a slightly different topic, petitions signed by 240 residents from the communities of Enderby, Sicamous, Malakwa, Salmon Arm, Sorrento, Grindrod and Canoe in the constituency of Okanagan—Shuswap. These petitions have been signed with regard to the government's program or proposed cuts to the VIA Rail services. I might also add that these communities surround an area on the trackage of our national railway system. These petitions have been signed and are in regard to the government's proposed cuts to VIA Rail services.

• (1230)

I might also add that these communities surround an area of trackage on our national railway system at Craigellachie, which is the spot where the last spike was driven. They are particularly concerned about the loss of VIA Rail services in our communities as a result of the proposed cuts and are asking the government to reconsider the proposed cuts to VIA Rail.

FOREST RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions I would like to table in the House today pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The first one is signed by residents, primarily of Prince George, B.C. and of Dawson Creek, B. C., who express their concern and their support. They call upon Parliament to renew immediately the Forest Resource Development Agreement between the Government of Canada and the province of British Columbia.

I know they would join with me in urging the government to put as much effort into our forests as it does into taxing Canadians.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, my second petition relates to the goods and services tax. It is signed by residents of the central interior of British Columbia.

They call upon Parliament to reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax and what the minister spoke about this morning and to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations and we can be sure to turn off the clock on these Tory tax times.

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition to this House signed by well over 3,000 of my constituents. They signed it at the Caledonia Fair and at the Norfolk County Fair.

They call on this government to reject outright the goods and services tax. These petitioners do not care if it is a 9 per cent tax or a 7 per cent tax. They want this House to reject this tax openly.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise today like other members on both sides of the House to present once again a petition with respect to the GST.

Canadians are certainly outraged at the tax this government is forcing through. They call on the government to address the unfair tax system currently in place which permits wealthy individuals and corporations to pay little or no federal sales tax while it forces lower and middle income taxpayers to bear more than the national tax burden.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I have a second petition with respect to the removal of oats from the Canadian Wheat Board.

Farmers in Saskatchewan are concerned about the future of orderly marketing in the country. They call upon the government to replace oats under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to give oats and barley the same protection that wheat presently enjoys under the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition from some friends in northern Ontario, in particular Thunder Bay, who join with many thousands of people from my riding in Sault Ste. Marie to say to the government: "Scrap the GST."

A recent informal poll in northern Ontario shows that 100 per cent of the people in northern Ontario are against this tax. The government is not listening on GST or anything.

We ask the government to scrap the tax immediately.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I have here petitions from small business people, from workers in my riding, and from people who feel very strongly the outrage many people have spoken of today at the 9 per cent goods and services tax. I am sure it is something which they will feel when they find out that it has now been reduced to 7 per cent. It is still not serving the interests of our communities.

The petitions have been certified under Standing Order 36. I would table them for consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Madam Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 36, I wish to table two petitions signed by 740 residents of the riding of Hull—Aylmer who object to any kind of goods and services tax. This morning I thought the government had understood but I was wrong. So I still want to table these petitions, if you have no objection, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Della Noce: We understand! We are listening!

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

REJECTION OF PETITIONS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise briefly on a point of order concerning petitions. I had submitted a series of petitions to the Clerk of Petitions which have been rejected because, and I quote, "The prayer is making requests of the federal government, not of Parliament. The Royal Commission is a creature of the government, not of Parliament".

In reviewing the wording of the petition it starts with the normal prayer, "Wherefore the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to declare a moratorium in its announced service cuts to VIA Rail—", and it goes on from there.

I would request that you, Madam Speaker, undertake to review this particular petition and its wording in concert with the Clerk of Petitions to see whether in fact the intent of the rules are met by the wording of the petition, although there may be the odd word that is inappropriately used. I would ask for reconsideration on this matter .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I can assure the hon. member that we will have a second look at the petition and come back to the hon. member as soon as possible.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last week I brought to the attention of the parliamentary secretary that a question on the Order Paper under my name was already over 45 days old. At that time the parliamentary secretary had undertaken to verify it and to ensure that I would be receiving a prompt rely.

Perhaps he could now give his indication as to when this question will be replied to.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I did check into the hon. member's question. We are working on it and we will do our very best to get it answered before the House rises for Christmas.

I must tell him, though, that because of the amount of information requested it is taking a fair amount of time to assemble it all. We will certainly do our best to get it here as quickly as we can.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Friday, December 15, consideration of Bill C–28, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal–Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post–Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, The Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motions Nos. 4, 6 and 7.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, yesterday when we were discussing the time allocation motion on Bill C–28 I tried to educate my friends opposite about the negative effects this bill would have on Canadians.

Yesterday I referred to what would happen with two senior citizens, one who spent all his life and the other who saved all his life. One had a fairly healthy retirement income because he scrounged and planned well. The other one had one heck of a time. I showed yesterday, and I hope the members opposite had time to reflect on what I said, how regressive and how poorly founded in fact this particular piece of legislation is.

Mr. Boudria: And they didn't understand.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Perhaps a few of them did. I hope a few of them got some phone calls yesterday after my speech to say, "Hey, you had better review your position on that particular piece of legislation."

Since the government had its way yesterday, which it usually does when it has a majority, it pushed through some legislation under time allocation so that the Canadian public would not hear the true debate they want to take place in this House about this regressive act. I am back on my feet today to speak specifically on the report stage and on some amendments that have been put. I believe they are Motion Nos. 4, 6 and 7.

• (1240)

Motion No. 4 was put by one of my colleagues. That would be my colleague from Ottawa South who sits next to me and who has many times risen to his feet in this debate to stand up for the senior citizens of Canada who will be assaulted by this particular piece of legislation.

Yesterday, I started to tell my story about what would happen with two individuals who chose two different routes in life but started off with the same incomes. Today I want to expand upon that a little, because I am afraid that yesterday only those senior citizens who are going to be affected now are going to be concerned about this bill.

I mentioned that on May 9, I believe it was, the Leader of the Opposition got up. He had reviewed the government's leaked budget papers. He had seen something referred to as CPI minus 3. CPI minus 3 seems like an innocuous few letters and a number that does not quite mean very much. CPI minus 3 means an awful lot and should mean an awful lot to those working Canadians who are currently planning their retirement.

What CPI minus 3 means is that there will not be full indexing of the measures in Bill C-28. That is what it means. It means that it will be indexed to the inflation rate minus 3 per cent.

On May 9, the Leader of the Opposition asked the Minister of Finance: "What exactly does this mean? What does this mean to Canadians who are planning their retirement income now?"

I spoke about those senior citizens who will have clawed back and scratched back and gouged back some of their pension income that they expected to receive. Now I will talk about some of those other Canadians who are 35, 45, or 55 years of age and have to be concerned about this particular piece of legislation. They should be concerned because of the CPI minus 3.

I am going to go back and quote a question from the Leader of the Opposition to the Minister of Finance on May 9, as reported at page 1492 of Hansard. Referring to the Minister of Finance he asked:

> I want to use his formula which he cutely calls CPI minus 3. Using his formula, will the minister confirm that 55-year old Canadians whose incomes are currently $25,000 a year as a result of inflation will have their old age pensions taxed back at age 80?

That is a pretty serious flaw in this legislation. Nobody would ever expect that their government would be so cruel and callous to intentionally do that to them.

The answer from the Minister of Finance was all huff and puffery. He knew that the Leader of the Opposition had found out what he was trying to do. This provision, CPI minus 3, means that by the time people currently making $25,000 a year or is looking at a pension income of $25,000 a year at age 55 turns 80, they will have all of their old age security taxed back. The government plays a cute game. They use $50,000 like it is the end of the world, that if somebody makes $50,000 a year, they are wealthy, they are rich.

Yesterday, I and other members from this side blew apart that particular falsehood. If there is anybody out there still saying that $50,000 seems like a lot and is 55, then he should think about an income of $25,000. Anybody who looks at an actuarial table could tell us that Canadians are living longer. The average life span for males is something like 77 and for females it is 79, and it increases every year. We can reasonably expect, if one is 55 today, it is not far-fetched to talk about living well past the age of 80.

As a matter of fact, I read a recent article in a news magazine. It was an American article which talked about the growth of centenarians, those in our society who are over 100 years of age. This is the fastest growing age group in North America. By the year 2025, it was estimated in the article, there will be 1.6 million North Americans over the age of 100.

When people sit back and say "well, this bill is not going to affect me; I am 55 and 80 is a long way off", they should just think about trying to plan their retirement knowing that at age 80, when they are not capable of working or are in their retirement years by choice, the pension income they had come to expect has been taxed back because of the actions of this government in this Bill C-28 in December 1989. The negative effects of this bill will ripple through the next 40 or 50 years, if the bill is not changed, is passed and any other Conservative government tries to keep the bill as law.

There was another thing the Leader of the Opposition asked that day. He put forth a second hypothetical scenario. Just so we know that we are not only dealing with 55-year-olds, 65-year-olds and 75-year olds, he asked the minister whether he would confirm that 45-year old Canadians whose incomes were $18,000 would as a result of the same formula have their old age pension taxed back at age 80. That is the fact. Taking into account the average rate of inflation over the last number of years, by the time somebody who makes $18,000 and is 45 years of age reaches 80 years of age, $18,000 will be the threshold.

I cannot think of another bill I have seen in this place that has had such a far-reaching impact on the future. The government does what it always does: It tries to hide the effects. It never comes forward and says: "Listen, we are going to end universality. We are going to try to get out of the old age pension system. We are going to tax everything back".

The government tries to put it in legalese language, to hide it with 57 or 58 other changes in the Income Tax Act and other related acts, and to hope that people on this side of the House will not do their homework and find out what is its true agenda. The people on this side of the House have done their homework. We know what is the government's true agenda. That is why we are vigorously opposing this particular piece of legislation.

Motions were put forward by my colleague from Ottawa South. The effect of Motion No. 4 would be to strike out in clause 48, lines 1 to 40, at page 46. In effect what this motion would do is destroy the clawback, the main intent of this bill and of this government's devious acts against those trying to plan their retirement income, not just those of today but those who will be retired in the future.

I am a realist. Unless my comments and the comments of the seniors and other concerned Canadians around the country have had an effect, I know the government will push forward with this piece of legislation to pull back what Canadians have a right to expect from their government. That is why I rise today to support Motion No. 4 on behalf of my colleagues, on behalf of seniors, on behalf of working people in my riding, and on behalf of all other Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Madam Speaker, I would like to contribute to this debate on the report of the parliamentary committee which is involved in clause-by-clause consideration of Bill C-28, to remind my colleagues and especially the people watching, that this clawback measure is basically a progressive one. I am astonished that our friends opposite are trying to protect the rich. Essentially, this measure is aimed at the people who are best able to bear it and at making them help us put the country's finances back on track, while leaving the principle of universality intact.

The Canadian Council on Social Development said last year that the advantage of the clawback was that it was possible to achieve a saving while enhancing the progressive aspect of social programs and leaving the controversial principle of universality untouched. Most proponents of universality feel that benefits should be distributed progressively. The higher your income, the less you should receive and vice versa. The clawback does not jeopardize universality. Seniors and parents will continue to get their old age pension cheques and family allowances whatever their income, but the clawback reduces the net value for high-income beneficiaries.

• (1250)

I think that is very important. In practice, for those listening to us, it means people whose gross income is over $70,000.

I recently had the opportunity to visit seniors in my riding. I talked to them and was not afraid—we are accused of not being open. I am not afraid to talk about this clawback. When I questioned people, no one I spoke to was affected by this measure.

So I say, Let us stop this witch hunt, let us stop frightening seniors again. We are asking the most fortunate in our society to help us reach our goal of restoring our public finances, which we are striving for courageously.

I wanted to make this clarification, Madam Speaker, to help those following this debate see both sides and realize that we are not attacking universality of social programs, but asking the rich, from high-income individuals, to do more for the good of the public treasury.

[English]

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, I, too, rise to support the amendment brought forward by my colleague from Ottawa South.

Like so many other Canadians I am outraged that this government has unilaterally decided to send our tradition of universality of social programs down the slippery slope. I am speaking specifically of the clawback of which this Conservative government is so proud.

The arguments put forward for the clawback are superficially convincing. On the surface they appear to be rational, economically sound and even workable. However, much like the Communist system, the demise of which we have all been watching with great interest over the past month, in practice this theory, too, is unworkable because it is overlooks the element of the individual.

We are seeing today the demise of a system which appears on the surface to be grounded in principles of social equity and social justice. However, this system overlooks the human factor. Human beings are not complacent. They are ambitious and they have initiative. Totalitarianism overlooks these factors and subsequently is now beginning to collapse world-wide.

Thus we should learn from the examples around us and endeavour to make our own system more human, more open and more compassionate. Here in Canada the government uses similar non-human reasoning to justify the implementation of the clawback. They say the rich do not need it, why waste the money? Upper income pensioners and upper income parents should not receive social benefits, it is argued.

This is a strong persuasive argument on which the government bases its new policy. Let us analyse this argument to see how erroneous it actually is. The government claims that the clawback will only hit affluent families, but the truth of the matter is very different. The truth of the matter is that a family with two children and one income in excess of $50,000 will pay back all its family allowances as a result of this policy. Such a family can hardly be called affluent by the rational person, but by this government it would be.

To complicate this scenario, what if this particular family lives in Toronto or Vancouver where the cost of living is astronomical? This family would still have to repay all of its family allowance.

Clearly, the threshold set by the government is too low. Even if we were to accept the argument, what would be a fair threshold, $60,000, $70,000, $100,000? The answer is simply none. There is no fair threshold because each family's specific circumstance is different. This government has shown that it is incapable of understanding the unique circumstances of any Canadian family.

Certainly, there will be those families which do not need the added benefits but the number of such families is marginal at best. In trying to create one standard which binds all families in a certain income category this government is running the danger of catching hundreds, if not thousands of others, in the same net who are deserving and in need of the benefits.

We find ourselves in a dilemma. Should we eliminate universality, save a few dollars and deprive many families of their deserved and needed benefits? Or should we be realistic and allow some families who do not particularly need the benefits to collect those benefits and ensure that all those families who need the benefits will receive them? Should we just tax back those benefits in the normal way rather than clawing them back in a way which is contrary to all the traditions of Canada and Canadian social programs? The answer for any reasonable and compassionate person is that we do not support the clawback.

I do not understand why this government is obsessed with destruction and devastation. It seems that at every turn the government wants to dismantle viable national institutions, our history, our infrastructure, the kinds of things that have made us unique on the world stage as Canadians, the kinds of things that every member in this House in his or her secret soul is proud of, even our Minister of Finance, all in the name of deficit reduction. My colleague from Winnipeg St. James in a previous debate talked about canonizing the deficit reduction.

Well, it is canonized all right. It is canonized at the expense of individual Canadians.

The government is slashing social spending, dismantling VIA Rail, butchering UIC and now clawing back the benefits which families and seniors so desperately need.

What of old age pensions? Once again, members of the Conservative Party is going after our senior citizens. They tried it once before when they tried to deindex old age pensions and they were stopped in their tracks. The seniors of Canada would not have it then and they will not have it now. It is not bad enough that many seniors are unable to enjoy a decent standard of living as if that, in itself, was not one of the greatest black marks on the escutcheon of our country, this government is proposing to claw back old age pensions and run the danger of further impoverishing Canadian seniors.

Let us take the case of an elderly woman who lives off the interest from the proceeds of the sale of her family home. The interest may be enough to live comfortably. Yet because she is capital rich her old age pension will be clawed back, above and beyond the income tax she is paying on her interest income. We run the same danger with old age pensions as we run with family allowance benefits. That is, how can this government propose to create a scheme whereby only the few who truly do not need the benefits are exempt, again, without catching in the same net many others who need the benefits. It simply cannot be done.

Worse yet, worst of all is the abandonment of the traditional principles of universality which are based on the respect of the dignity of every individual Canadian. This abandonment will lead to a greater disparity between rich and poor. It will define lines of the needy and the not needy. It will ghettoize those families and seniors who receive the benefits particularly in the case of seniors, to the point where they will suffer even more because their pride will not allow them to seek such social programs as the guaranteed income supplement to help them get through. Why? Because if everyone does not get it, then as far as they are concerned it is a stigma to take it.

If we can do that to people who have spent their whole lives building this country, then we are not the heirs to the tradition of Canada that I hoped we were.

This brings me once again to the human factor of which I spoke earlier. Canadians are proud people, and rightly so. Canadians are also generous and tolerant. It is for this reason that we have believed in universal programs such as medicare.

We do not deny medical care benefits to someone who earns above a certain income. We do not deny these benefits because we believe that medical benefits should be available to everyone and there should not be a price placed upon an individual's health. The same principle applies uncategorically to family allowance and old age pension. There can be no price placed on the struggles of a family nor can there be any price placed on the dignity of our senior citizens, most of whom, if not all of whom, have contributed to this program.

• (1300)

In closing, universality is not, contrary to the opinion of this government, a dirty word. It is a proud word, it is a good word and, over and above all that, it is a Canadian word. Universality involves concepts of tolerance, fairness, equity and dignity. I have trouble understanding why this government finds such qualities so repugnant. I have trouble understanding why this government wants to tear down our values, our system and the things that we hold dear.

The time has come for this government to reassess its values. Canadians are tired of seeing the pillars of social equity being ripped down by a government obsessed with big business and international jet-setting.

I plead with the government to abandon its relentless attacks on seniors and families. If this government so enjoys crippling people, might I suggest it start directing its energy at foreign corporations and foreign fishing fleets and leave Canadian institutions, Canadian traditions and Canadian values alone.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, perhaps I should lead off with the consultation paper of the present government from January of 1985 on child and elderly benefits, but I will save that for tomorrow. I am sure that hon. members will be very interested in that.

I should also make mention of the 125 government amendments to Bill C–28. Might I also quickly add that all these amendments have been ruled out of order. I suggest that all of these amendments will be tabled.

One has to ask why have the amendments been set aside. Someone has to suggest that the bill must be significantly flawed and, obviously, that the amendments are also flawed. If you put one piece of flawed legislation with 125 flawed amendments, obviously what you are going to come up with is a flawed bill.

In questioning the Minister of Finance about the amendments, he suggests, "No problem. These amendments are primarily technical in nature. These are going to be handled through the technical bill that we are putting into the House some time in the new year. But there are a couple of elements that are more pressing than that and they will be introduced through new legislation at an earlier date". I suggest that there is something dreadfully wrong with this piece of legislation.

I guess our track record is better. We have introduced nine amendments, six of which were at least accepted as being debatable, and for that we are grateful and very pleased. As to the 125 government amendments, are they consequential or inconsequential, we are not sure. That remains to be seen. We are certainly taking a serious look at them.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party, we support the amendment of my hon. friend from Ottawa South which suggests that the entire clawback provision be removed. We, too, introduced that kind of amendment and therefore, we have no difficulty in supporting it.

Nevertheless, reality sets in and we know that this majority government will ram this legislation through as it has done through first reading, second reading, committee stage and now at report stage and probably tomorrow—well, we know for sure tomorrow it will be all over. So this is the way the Tories have conducted themselves and we have to accept reality even though we do not like it. We understand what they are up to.

For your heart of hearts, we are providing you some honourable, noteworthy options which will win you favour with families and senior citizens across this country. This is favour that this government so sorely needs, especially taking into consideration the legislation put forth this morning in the GST. The government needs to win some favour with Canadians, and particularly with seniors and families.

Amendment No. 6 would mitigate against the clawback provision. It would raise the threshold to $75,000 so fewer people would be affected now and even more important, fewer people would be affected in the future.

Amendment No. 7 is indexed to the Consumer Price Index. It is indexed to inflation. It is a splendid idea and not indexing seniors' pensions is what caused the government so many problems back in 1985. Surely it does not want to revisit that scene once again.

There is the sham of deficit reduction, the $300,000 or $500,000, whichever figure you want to believe. If you index it, you will still realize a certain amount of this figure. Yet you will indicate to all Canadians, not just seniors and young families, that you truly mean what you say, that for the most part universality will almost be preserved, is almost a sacred trust and at the very least please accept that.

In the budget papers of April 27, 1989, regarding the repayment of social transfers, the Minister of Finance said: "The level of threshold will be reviewed periodically and adjusted as appropriate." It begs the question: Is this going to be the same monitoring process that was in place for the free trade agreement? If so, we do not need that kind of monitoring process. Do away with it because there is none.

I understand the government now has hired an outside consultant to monitor the effects of the free trade agreement. We do not want to wait one year for the monitoring to start. Let us start monitoring immediately so we will save the government money, time, effort and the need to make further unpopular arbitrary decisions. Accept at least one of these amendments. It is the honourable option for the government to make its point yet realize some money while maintaining some semblance of credibility on this whole issue.

I see there are seven government members here. I would ask each of you to get out there and talk to 20–some of your fellow members and tell them of the good news, the good amendments that the New Democrats have brought forward. Tell them to support one of the amendments.

Government members told us in committee that we have to wrap this up before Christmas because it is a Christmas present. Here is a real opportunity to make seniors and families happy across this country. I urge the government to seize this opportunity.

We New Democrats have faith. We believe that one of our amendments will be accepted by the government, because it is the only honourable thing to do and we would be surprised and disappointed if the government did not support one of these amendments.

We all accept that it is very difficult for us to get the government to define what universality is. It keeps saying that if we give with one hand and take with the other, it is still universality. We reject that out of hand and we suggest that if it is affecting 4 per cent in 1991, it may affect 8 per cent in 2001 and 25 per cent in later years and so on.

When does universality cease to be universality? We say that universality is at an end today or tomorrow. It is at an end. It is a watershed of social policy that this country has become accustomed to and deserves. It is a right for all Canadians to enjoy.

If the government would save just a little bit of face at this Christmas time of the year and accept one of the amendments, you can buy the better of two worlds. Although not acceptable totally, at least it would buy you some credibility in your stated belief that universality and social programs are a sacred trust. We do not trust you and Canadians do not trust you. Here is a very small opportunity to save some face.

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment to the clawback to the two great social programs that Canada has introduced. These two social programs, the family allowance and the old age security, are the envy of many nations of this world.

• (1310)

I would like to begin my remarks today by looking at the fiscal context in which these changes are being introduced. After all, the government has told Canadians that its primary problem is the deficit. Let us look at that.

The deficit in the five years this government has been in power has more than doubled. In spite of its Draconian cutting of programs and including cuts to these programs, the deficit this year is going to be even $1.6 billion higher than last year. This is on top of the most monumental tax increases that we have already seen which has amounted to 32 separate tax increases in five years. Now what have they meant to ordinary Canadians?

Five years ago, income taxes paid in Canada were about $29 billion. This year, they are $80 billion, up 72 per cent in five years. What does this mean to an ordinary family? Well, in 1984, a family with two wage earners and two children with a combined family income of about $45,000 paid a fair share, and some could argue too much, income tax. But in the five years since 1984, that family's tax burden has increased by fully $2,800. When you add on to it the tax that was introduced in this House this morning, the goods and services tax, the increase to a $45,000 per year two-child family will be about $3,300.

Now, let us look at families at the poverty line. In five years, the taxes paid by families at the poverty level in Canada have increased fully 60 per cent. At the same time, the taxes paid by the rich in Canada have gone up only 8 per cent. If the problem were simply getting revenue, where should the government have gone for that revenue, to low and middle income families or to poverty level families in Canada? They went to the people who could afford it.

This is why we see today that fully 25 per cent of all Canadian children are living below the poverty level. This is a national disgrace for a country that has such wealth, even though our relative standard of living is declining vis-a-vis all our major trading partners.

Let us also look at some of the other reasons that we must reject the concept embodied in this Tory bill. The threshold at which the Tories claw back pensions and family allowances is $50,000, but that is not indexed. If inflation remains at the same rate as today, in about 10 years' time, fully one million Canadian families will have their pensions and old age security clawed back from them.

This government is saying: "You are the ones who are going to suffer". Inflation is not the fault of these taxpayers. It is the fault of these government policies. So why should the Tories impose the burden on Canadians who do not have it within their means to control the inflation rate?

This is a discriminatory tax on one-income against two-income families. Under these provisions, if you have two wage earners in a family who are earning $49,000 each, there is no clawback. There is no clawback on an income of almost $100,000. However, if you are a single-income family earning $50,000, the clawback starts and it is fully complete when your income hits the $70,000 to $75,000 level. Is that fairness?

This is not a government which is prepared to even recognize that because of its Draconian tax policies and its high interest rate policies Canadian families now have to have more than one wage earner in order to just survive.

The government told us in the 1987 budget that when the new sales tax is introduced, the personal and corporate income surtaxes will be removed. We have just been told today, oh, no, the 3 per cent surtax on all incomes will stay in place. Not only that, it has increased to 5 per cent. This is another broken promise by a government that is not prepared to honour its election commitments.

We know now that it was prepared to do anything it could, prior to the election, to get elected, including holding off the introduction of its dreaded goods and services tax. The government did not have the guts to introduce it before the election. It waited until afterwards. Now the government is clawing back pensions and family allowances. Did the government tell us it was going to do that before the election? Absolutely not.

Why do you think Canadians become cynical? They become cynical when they are lied to, when they are cajoled and when they are treated in such an unfair and an inequitable way.

Let me conclude my remarks by saying that this bill has to be defeated because it is, in effect, a discriminatory tax on seniors. The government is saying to you: "If you are a senior citizen, then we will treat you differently from all other taxpayers. We are going to tax back a portion of your income. We are going to tax all of it back, and the reason we are doing that is simply because you are a senior citizen".

What does this say to Canadians who are saving for their future? These senior citizens can say: "I could have spent all my money and enjoyed my life. I need not have put aside money in order to provide for my security in old age. I could have spent it. I could have lived the good life, rather than being frugal and providing for my retirement. But, because I was frugal, my savings are going to mean that I am subject to this complete clawback. I am being jeopardized and discriminated against, because I acted in a responsible way. I paid my taxes as I went along. I contributed to this pension".

These people never in their lives would have believed that they were going to be taxed back simply because they were senior citizens and simply because they no longer had the ability to go out and take an active part in the workforce.

Tories will tell you that they have increased the limit that you can contribute to pensions and to retirement savings plans. Bravo, but that only applies if you are an active member of the workforce, if you have the income and can go out and do it. Seniors cannot go back into the workforce to recoup the money that is being taxed back from them. This is why it is such an inequitable type of tax.

The Tories had alternatives in coping with the so-called deficit. They have chosen to do it on the backs of the impoverished, the low-income and the middle-income families. Canadians do not accept this, they never will. The government will find out at the next election how Canadians feel about these policies.

• (1320)

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-28 which is clawing back seniors' pensions. In my riding, there are over 20,000 senior citizens, and when I was campaigning in the last election, many seniors still had a memory of the attempt by the government to deindex their pensions in the Minister of Finance's first budget of 1984.

There was a fear, and I must tell you that that fear was not prompted. They still had a lingering memory about that attempt to deindex pensions. One of the things that we forget about senior citizens is that it is not that they do not want to pay their fair share, it is not that they do not want to continue to contribute to the fabric of this nation, but they are at a time in their lives when they feel that they have made a great contribution and they feel that they should be given a sense of security. When the government comes along and starts clawing back when there was absolutely no mention of this intent before the last election, they become very suspicious. They become nervous. Some actually become almost terrorized, their feeling is so intense.

One of the things we overlook in this House is that very few people actually understand our tax system today. I know when I talk to the senior citizens in my riding, they say that they do not understand it any more. We have a tax system in this country that is so complicated, laid out in a document that has close to 15,000 or 16,000 pages, that even the best tax lawyers in the country will admit they cannot figure it out any more. If the best tax lawyers in the country are having a difficult time with it, how does this give a sense of security or a sense of trust to seniors?

Then we come along with a new system and we put out a memo saying that the $50,000 threshold at which individuals begin paying back their FA and their OAS benefits is only partially indexed to increases in inflation above 3 per cent, and this deindexing of the $50,000 threshold means that within 10 years, close to one million families will start losing their family allowances and old age pensions.

We know what this is all about because we spend time going over it and figuring it out. But, quite frankly, even after that I still have a difficult time understanding it. I think it is about time that we in this Chamber start to realize that our system is so complicated that it is acting as a disincentive, it is acting almost like a morale buster. When the morale of our community breaks down, it has a ripple effect. That is the problem we have with this government. It is breaking down the morale, it is breaking down the will of the country.

Seniors are a very effective communications force in this nation. We remember in 1984, when the seniors heard that their pensions were being indexed, from out of nowhere they were able to change the legislation of this government.

If the morale of senior citizens is not good, it affects the sons and daughters and those sons and daughters are entrepreneurs. They are teachers who, in turn, communicate to others. The whole spirit of this country can be affected.

I for one know of that communications ability of seniors and the effect they can have in a community because in my community, quite frankly, they got me elected. Their good word and positive attitude can affect a lot of things. When the government targets seniors by clawing back pensions I think it is really being penny wise and pound foolish. The government is taking on the spirit of this country because senior citizens are the cornerstone of the spirit of this country.

We have heard many times in the last couple of weeks and months from the Minister of Finance saying: "Well, you are quick to criticize but what ideas do you have over there?" There are many of us who are working on ideas to try to come up with a more fair, more simple, more efficient and workable tax system and there is a group of us in my riding of Broadview—Greenwood. We have been working on this project called the single tax for many months. I stress that it is not our party policy at this time but it is an idea that we are discussing which will, hopefully, advance the debate in a constructive and a creative way.

I have talked to hundreds of seniors in my riding and they like this system because it is more simple, it is more fair. It is efficient. It will give the Government of Canada revenue neutrality. We do not need a goods and services tax with this system. We can phase out the manufacturers' sales tax over three and a half years. I can tell you that we used Statistics Canada models to run our numbers through on this. It will work.

I sent this package to the Minister of Finance. Of course, he has incredible resources. He has a Department of Finance with over 3,000 public servants who could take a look at this system, and I am prepared to accept his constructive criticism about the flaws in the position that I am putting forward. He should at least take a look at it and he should try to come back with what he thinks is wrong with it.

I have tested this in the market-place. We are getting good response. Many of my colleagues are finding the same thing. My point is that we have to start turning people on again in this country so that they are more enthusiastic about what they are doing. I am afraid that if we do not get excited about this country again in the next few months, we are going to slide into a recession. No one in this country wants that and we are not over here trying to criticize just for the sake of criticism, but it is our duty to criticize when a community like the senior citizens of Canada are being confronted by the Minister of Finance and his officials by a clawback system. These are people who have worked all their lives in anticipation of their pensions. I mean, it is so small minded. I cannot understand it.

I am not saying that we should not pay attention to deficit or debt. We must. But there are better ways. It is incumbent upon all of us to take a look at the fact that we have been held captive by this 15,000 or 16,000 pages of "bureaucratese" for the last 20 years, and I think it is time that the people of Canada get a better deal. I can think of no better constituency than the senior citizens of Canada to begin the process of going back to basic comprehensive tax reform.

• (1330)

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-28, legislation that has been very ably led on our side of the House by my colleague, the member for Sault Ste. Marie. Frankly, he has done a better job than the government.

As you know, at least a couple of his amendments were accepted by Your Honour, whereas 125 or 128 amendments proposed to this legislation at this particular stage were actually ruled out of order. I think a good deal of credit goes to my colleague for Sault Ste. Marie for the very competent work he has done and shame on the government for its incompetence in handling this legislation.

What is Bill C-28? Bill C-28 is an omnibus bill dealing with a number of matters. Today we are dealing with legislation on the clawback, as it has been referred to, but this legislation also does a number of other things. It has amendments to the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act respecting education and health. We have made comments on that. It deals with the Old Age Security Act, public utilities income tax transfer and the Income Tax Act as well as a host of others.

Our discussion at this stage of the bill, the report stage, where amendments are being presented by members in the House, is an important stage of debate. It is made more so because the closure party, the Conservative party, through a number of time allocation and closure measures that we spoke about yesterday gives rise to the headlines in the paper. Our very capable House leader, the member for Kamloops, talked about jackboot tactics. That is the way seniors are being treated in this country under Bill C-28.

I think it is a credit to the member for Sault Ste. Marie and our House leader that they have drawn the attention of Canadians to this legislation. It has been a bill run through the House by this government amidst grief and suffering taxes and a host of other items in the hope that it can get by with what is being called—and something that I can support—a wholesale and fundamental shift in the way that we will be dealing in the future with the questions of universality and social services.

I want to comment briefly on the question of universality. It is easy for the Prime Minister to get out and talk about how the opposition wants to help out the bank managers and wealthy Canadians, and to ask why we do not support his proposal on clawing back pensions from seniors.

Why? Why the defence of universality? The defence of universality goes around the reason why in this country we have built the kind of society that we have—hopefully, a sharing society and one where the benefits of all are not challenged by a few. What I mean by that is the reverse of universality is that the few, then, are not eligible. What does that mean? It goes back to the old days—before my time in this House, certainly—of means tests and other methods.

If we are trying to help all Canadians in society through broad tax measures and transfers of income, what we are talking about is having people line up for social assistance, for a means test or for any other kind of benefit. We are all going to be members of the United Way from now on because seniors are going to have to go to the United Way to get any kind of help, despite the time that they have spent building this country and getting us to the point where we have the resources and we have rights in this House, even though they are trampled on occasionally and, indeed, all too often now by the government. I would like to quote from a brief that was submitted to the legislative committee on Bill C-28 regarding the question of universality and the clawback as it has been referred to. I think it is an excellent summary of the debate that members on this side have been presenting to the government. It is my hope that in doing this some of the government members, in particular those members who I am sure have seniors in their riding, will pay attention and will vote on our side for some of the amendments that we are dealing with now.

Let me quote from the organization called One Voice, the Canadian seniors network. It was to the legislative committee on Bill C–28. The group was unable to appear because the government, of course, restricted the number of witnesses that could attend in order to try and get the bill through. I quote:

> At a threshold of $50,000 the clawback has been put forward as a tax on the wealthy.
>
> This has been accepted by most people because it has always been a pillar of Canadian taxation, that wealthy people should pay proportionately more in our progressive system. Fair enough. However, the threshold of $50,000 is only partially indexed. Over the years, that threshold will diminish until most average–income Canadians will be losing their benefits. Estimates show that partial indexation will reduce the threshold to $30,000 in less than 20 years. It is also possible to foresee, once we have accepted the principle of the clawback, that a future federal budget, perhaps in March or April of next year, might arbitrarily lower the threshold to $40,000 or $30,000. At $30,000 the clawback is not a tax on the wealthy but a tax on all those in the middle and upper income categories. In fact, the government could have introduced the clawback at $30,000 at any level. But it chose not to. Why?

I think this is the answer to the debate about universality. The brief continues:

> Because the clawback would then be seen not as a tax on the wealthy,–

This argument was presented by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance and a legion. There is not a legion of Tories here today, that is for sure. They do not want to hear the truth. The brief goes on:

> –but for what it really is–recovery of benefits from part of the population.
>
> This is an attack on the universality of Canada's social programs.

I would challenge the Conservative members of this House to put that description in their householder in the new year. I challenge them to run that description of this legislation. If the Conservative members ask their constituents and seniors in their riding to use the mailbacks to comment on Bill C–28 and the amendments that we have presented, you know very well what those constituents and those seniors will be doing to those Conservatives when the next election comes around. When is the jackboot going to hit the mark from the Conservatives, the jackboot that the Tories are laying on the seniors of this country.

This is to go into effect for tax year 1990. When Canadians are filing their tax returns in 1991—is that not a familiar sounding year—they will find other things happening. GST, grief and suffering tax, gouge and screw tax, whatever you call it, seniors are going to be hit with this legislation which is an attack on the universality of social programs in Canada and an attack on average Canadians who are prepared to pay their fair share. I call on the government members to join with the opposition, support these amendments and defeat this regressive bill.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, I regret very much the measure that is before the House now. Of course, I am rising with all members of the opposition to urge the government to think again about a change in our tax laws which hit so much at the fundamentals of what we understand Canada to be about. I am glad that the debate is taking place at a time when we are starting to see other news, news that I want to talk about in a moment. I hope this news is giving government members something to think about, whether the direction in which the Conservatives are leading Canada is really a direction in which they want to support the government. There are a number of government supporters in the House and I am glad to see them here. I hope that they will be considering these things as Christmas approaches, as news comes out more and more about the developing inequalities in Canadian society and about the power that we have in this House of Commons, as individual members representing the ridings and the regions of Canada, to stand up and do something about it.

• (1340)

When I was first elected, and in the two or three elections that followed, one of the most common questions that constituents would ask during election campaigns is no longer being asked. But in 1968, 1972, 1974 and 1978 one of the most common questions that you always got as you went around campaigning was, "What is the difference really between the Liberal and the Conservative parties anyway? What is the difference between what the two parties stand for in terms of leadership of the country?" That is not a question that Canadians ask at election time any more. They now have seen whatever it was that the Conservatives said in 1984 in order to get elected, whatever kind of make–believe Liberals—as one of our Senators put it in describing them—they appeared to be and seen the government demonstrate since coming to office a very different way of looking at Canada and of looking at how this country should be led.

The Conservatives believe in the trickle-down theory of economic benefit. They believe, and the Minister of Finance once said as much, "We need more rich people in Canada". The theory was that if we, as a society, could use the powers of government, use the taxation system to make the rich richer, to assist them in achieving their economic goals in society, that that would trickle down and it would eventually be good for the rest of Canadian society.

Liberals do not look at the country that way. We are happy to see people who are rich getting richer. We are happy to see ordinary Canadians achieving success and becoming better off because it means that they are making a contribution to the economy. But we, on this side of the House, recognize that just watching rich people get richer does nothing in itself to assure that ordinary Canadians, that poorer Canadians are going to become better off as a result.

When we look at some other countries in the world where there are very rich people, the theory that making the rich get richer is going to assure a trickle-down benefit to ordinary people in the society, we have a demonstration that that is not true. More and more we see in our country as we look around that although the rich may be getting richer, and more and more fortunes are being acquired and accumulated in Canada by economic effort that is beneficial to the economy and even creates jobs to a certain point, it is not a substitute for programs that look at the ordinary Canadian; that look at the poor; that look at regions of this country—which are becoming more and more desperate in spite of over-all national statistics to which the government points with pride—and that show that there is a missing ingredient, something missing in this government's planning that is moving us in a direction in which I think Canadians do not want to be led and in which I do not think Canadians will want to follow this government.

We have one illustration before us in the example of the clawback. I want to take some time to develop why we find the clawback so objectionable. But I cannot let this time of year pass without talking about the plight of children in Canadian society. We learned last week that there are more food banks in the city of Toronto now than there are McDonald's hamburger restaurants across our fair city. This is an appalling piece of information for Canadians to absorb, for Torontonians to absorb: the idea that as we have seen our society becoming more prosperous as more businesses are becoming successful, even as there are more people in the city of Toronto working every month than there were in the last month, that because of the approach of this government which is being accompanied month by month by month with a greater and greater situation of poverty in the city of Toronto and in the country of Canada.

We have a social contract in this country that is being violated by this government. It is a social contract that better off Canadians understand very well. The contract is that we contribute, we work, we pay our taxes, we enjoy whatever benefits we earn in the Canadian society. We do so in the full belief, which is no longer true, but which has been true and which should be true that we as a society are caring for each other. When I take out my kids to celebrate a birthday and take all of our friends along to enjoy ourselves, the system which we have supported in the past is looking after the less fortunate in the society. It is hard for us to be responsible for the welfare of people in other countries far away from ours where we see so much suffering. It is not hard for us to be responsible for the welfare of our fellow Canadians. Far from setting an example in Canada of a caring society, we are being led by this government, with prosperity all around us, further and further away from that essential element of being Canadian which has made it such a wonderful country to live in, where we could enjoy our successes and our prosperity in those parts of society where we have earned it and where we have it, knowing that no one will be suffering, no Canadian children will be going to bed hungry at night when my own children are at birthday parties.

This is a very serious violation of the fundamental element of Canadianism. I urge members of the government party to consider this when they are voting on this cruel clawback measure to which I now want to turn my attention in the remaining few minutes that I have.

When I first started paying income tax, there was a little line on the form that said, "3 per cent old age security tax". I and millions of Canadians paid it. We understood by paying it that we when we became senior citizens—and I am a long way from it yet, but it is significant—we would receive an old age pension. The most fraudulent feature of the presentation the government has made is its insistence that that commitment is being honoured even under the amendment that is being proposed today. Government members stand there with straight faces and tell Canadians, who contributed for years and years to their own old age security pension, that they have nothing to complain about and that they are still going to get it.

I hope there is no one in the country who believes this because Canadians will not be getting that pension. As we who are still far from retirement get closer and closer to it, the proportion of the old age pension to which we have contributed and which was part of that fundamental, social contract of Canada, is being clawed back by a tax system which is probably unconstitutional and which, although it does not violate a specific contract that we had when we paid that 3 per cent, does violate the spirit of universality, which is one of the essential components of being Canadian.

For those whose income is between $25,000 and $50,000, a greater and greater proportion of the money received every year as the old age pension will be clawed back at double tax rates so that when you reach $50,000, the whole of that old age pension that the government says you are still getting is going to be completely reimbursable to the Government of Canada.

A $50,000 a year retiree is certainly not a pauper, neither is a $25,000 a year retiree, but that is not the point. The point is that this payment was part of the commitment made to working Canadians while they were contributing to the tax. I used to work in the field of pension taxation and pension law. I know that there are hundreds of pension plans across this country which are specifically reduced by the amount of the old age pension that the retiree is going to receive.

• (1350)

Under most of these plans, unless they are revised, and I do not think they will be, this insidious clawback provision will not alter the amount payable to the retiree so that, for purposes of the private plan to which you contributed, your pension will be reduced as if you were getting an old age pension, but when you make out your tax return every year and when you send it in you will find that you are getting less than you agreed to receive when you contracted your particular retirement plan as one of the negotiated conditions of your employment.

It is a fraud to tell Canadians that they are getting the old age pension and to have their plans set up on that basis when they are clawed back eventually to the level of zero.

I see that the 10 minutes I have has expired, but I want to add one other idea. With inflation, which is almost guaranteed even at very low levels year after year after year, that $25,000 cut-in and that $50,000 threshold get closer and closer and closer to the poverty level of an individual. What this means is that while this year you can look at a $25,000 a year retiree or a $50,000 a year retiree as being better off, that will not be the case when people my age are ready to retire and when all the other people who have sent us here to Parliament on their behalf will retire.

I urge government members to think about what we are doing in the opposition to resist this insidious, un-Canadian amendment to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, on a point of order, I know we are scheduled to adjourn at 1.53 this afternoon. Given that that only leaves approximately a minute or two perhaps we could, by unanimous consent, see the clock at 1.53 p.m. so that the next speaker could deliver her full remarks in one shot as opposed to having her speech interrupted after a minute or two.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think this would be a very helpful suggestion. I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.53 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[Translation]

FREE TRADE

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement with the United States enables Canadian industry to compete with the Americans. The gradual elimination of customs tariffs on Canadian goods exported to the United States has made it possible for one business in my riding to break into the U.S. market and thus become established on the international market.

Henri Fontaine Limitée in Magog, a well-known family business, has just signed a major contract worth $1.5 million with California to manufacture 200 wall-mounted valves made of stainless steel, to be used in waste water treatment.

Its competitors, Mr. Speaker, were major U.S. companies well known in the field. This is indeed a feather in the cap of Fontaine Limitée which is celebrating its 25th anniversary this year.

For these two reasons I offer my sincere congratulations to the firm's president and its employees.

* * *

[English]

EXPOSITION CENTRE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, as part of the cruel and unusual punishment inflicted upon the residents of the national capital area the government has announced the closure of the production facility of the Canadian Government Exposition Centre. This decision will result in the layoff of some 50 workers just a few days before Christmas.

Perhaps even more serious, if anything could be more serious and more devastating than learning that you are losing your job just a few days before Christmas, this decision made by the government does not make any sense using the government's own criteria.

At a time when we are incurring a trade deficit in this country, the Canadian Government Exposition Centre is very much needed. This kind of facility prepares exhibits and displays for the Government of Canada when travelling throughout this country and the whole world. Indeed, if we did not have a Canadian Government Exposition Centre this would probably be the most opportune time to create one in order to increase trade opportunities for our country.

Shame on the government.

S. O. 31

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance this morning said that the government is responding to small business concerns over the GST. How wrong he is. Small business had been offered a $600-a-year fee to collect the GST. That has been taken away. Small business had been promised that it would be consulted to find further ways of streamlining the tax. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business has called the streamlining "easily the most complex part of the GST proposals".

Small business exemptions on new cash register equipment will total only 20 per cent of the cost. In my own riding of Surrey North I am receiving letters from small businesses protesting the added expense of the GST.

In addition, they point out that the required paperwork will also reveal to everyone both the costs and profits of any small business. No wonder small business has completely rejected the GST. No wonder John Bulloch of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business calls the GST "a triumph of greed and politics over reason and sound tax planning".

* * *

SALVATION ARMY

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to volunteer agencies which serve the less fortunate in our country at this time of year. There are church groups, service clubs, scouts, girl guides and many other organizations that attempt to bring the spirit of Christmas to those in need.

I pay special tribute to the Salvation Army which will be providing shelter, clothing, food hampers and Christmas dinners for over 80,000 people across Canada alone. As a physician I note the tremendous efforts of the Salvation Army and its officers to fight chemical dependency involving not only hard drugs but also alcohol and tobacco which are causing severe health and social problems today. Emotional, material and spiritual support provided to the poor is doing much to combat problems of child poverty.

I appeal to all Canadians to share our abundance with the army and to reach out to someone in need at this time of year when poverty is darker, hunger is deeper and loneliness is greater. Let us do our part to assist in bringing the true spirit of love, joy, peace and goodwill to our fellow men at this special Christmas season.

* * *

FORESTRY

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Government of Canada and the province of New Brunswick signed a five year $91 million co-operation agreement on forestry development. The federal government will be contributing $50 million, the provincial government $41 million.

This agreement has been eagerly anticipated by New Brunswick's forestry sector and will make a significant contribution to the economy of the province as well as ensuring that the resource is wisely managed and protected for future generations.

I commend the federal and provincial governments for concluding an agreement that is so vital to the well-being of New Brunswick.

* * *

CORRECTIONAL SERVICES OF CANADA

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, Canada risks losing the services of the John Howard Society. The John Howard Society is concerned about new security conditions imposed on it by the Correctional Services of Canada. Correctional Services has imposed additional security conditions on voluntary organizations which provide prison visitation programs, operate halfway houses and conduct community assessment, parole supervision and other corrections programs.

The autonomy of private agencies is threatened and the privacy of individual employees is endangered. The new rules remove the right of independent agencies to determine whether employees are trustworthy and reliable in maintaining the confidentiality of information. The John Howard Society says that these new provisions are unnecessary in light of the organization's past success in ensuring security and confidentiality.

As a result of the changes, the society will become nothing more than an underpaid arm of government, void of local accountability and autonomy. After more than 30 years of providing parole supervision, Canada risks losing the services of the John Howard Society. I ask that the government rethink this policy in light of the contribution made by this organization to all of the country.

* * *

CBC NEWSWORLD

Mr. Denis Pronovost (St. Maurice): Mr. Speaker, at last TV viewers in some parts of the province of Quebec will receive the signal of CBC Newsworld. This is great news for national unity. In these difficult times for our country, I urge every member of Parliament to support my proposal to open CBC Newsworld to all regions of Quebec. In my view it is unacceptable that my constituents be blacked out by TV cable companies from a national service.

Yesterday, a French-speaking TV critic, Daniel Rioux, from le Journal de Montréal stated that CBC Newsworld will help Quebecers to better understand the reality of other Canadians.

I also want to remind this House that the CRTC rejects such a national service in French. It is about time that members of Parliament express themselves on this very important topic.

* * *

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, today's announcement of a 7 per cent goods and services tax by the Minister of Finance will have a devastating effect on the more than 100,000 Canadians employed directly and indirectly in the horsebreeding and racing industry. These jobs will be decimated when the goods and services tax is implemented.

According to the chairman of the Ontario Racing Commission, higher costs and lower profits resulting from the GST would drive what remained of Canada's lucrative horse racing business to the United States.

In my riding of Hillsborough, the Charlottetown Driving Park paid approximately $813,000 in provincial taxes last year. If the GST is levied on the horse breeding and racing industry, whether at 7 per cent or 9 per cent, the industry will not be able to absorb this additional cost. The loss of jobs and eventually the demise of the industry will be the result.

The government has not listened to the industry officials. Today the minister tried yet another smokescreen, the elimination of the existing .8 per cent federal agricultural levy on pari mutuel betting. Removing this levy while still implementing the GST will in no way lessen the damage suffered by the industry.

I strongly urge this government to withdraw the GST and go back to the drawing board.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, on November 6, some 43 days ago, the duly elected members of this House passed the unemployment insurance bill, Bill C-21, a bill which would strengthen the ability of the UI program to act as an effective economic safety net, allow for more skills training and help Canadian workers better adjust to change.

Since that time, however, a group of non-elected Liberal senators have once again got caught up in another attempt to thwart the efforts of this government, look for loopholes in the rules and intentionally delay the legislation and demonstrate their political muscle.

Yet, where do the interests of the unemployed in Canada's poorer regions fit in? A distant second, it would seem. For these individuals the extra four week requirement could prove to be devastating, especially in light of the combination of other problems which they face.

• (1410)

I call upon all Liberal members opposite to urge their Senate colleagues to get on with it, to pass this much needed legislation and start putting the needs of Canadians in our poorer regions before this unnecessary self-interest and political showmanship.

* * *

POVERTY

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have put a cheerful face on my statement in keeping with this joyful season. But, as members of Parliament head home to feast, I ask them to consider images of starving children in the Third World and developing countries lining up to receive life-saving food that Canada has sent. And we feel satisfied with our generosity.

Consider that close to one million Canadian children live in poverty. In this season of giving Canadians give to the hundreds of food banks across Canada to help these kids have a decent meal during the holidays. And we feel satisfied with our generosity.

I ask hon. members in this House to consider the other 364 days a year that these one million Canadian kids go to school and play while hungry. We cannot be satisfied with our generosity while one child is hungry and living in poverty. Consider this Christmas, as we give thanks for our good fortune, ways in which we can work together in this House toward eradicating poverty in 1990.

* * *

[Translation]

BILL C-21—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada asked in the House that the Senate pass Bill C-21 on unemployment insurance reform as quickly as possible, and he condemned the obstructionist tactics of the Liberal senators who have a majority in the other place.

This bill will make it possible to allocate $800 million to manpower training programs. It increases the number of weeks of employment required to be eligible for benefits and also reduces the number of benefit weeks. The CNTU approves provisions that increase maternity benefits and benefits for workers aged 65 and over.

Mr. Speaker, once again, the uncalled for obstruction by certain Liberal senators in the other place is totally unacceptable.

* * *

[English]

ROMANIA

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, daily we hear of dramatic changes in central and east European countries which bring new freedom, hope for justice and peace to the region. However, Romania remains intransigent in its Fascist repression of its people under the leadership of the dictator, President Ceausescu. We are all alarmed at the present news of the violence in Timisoara, Romania, reminiscent, in fact, of the Tiananmen Square massacre in China earlier this year.

In Canada we have watched the increased persecution of the two million Hungarian minority in Romania and its protestant leader, the Reverend Laszlo Tokes. We wrote letters. We have watched Romanian masses being subjected to cold, hunger and misery, only to reward a dictator's blind, inhumane obsessions to pay off foreign debt.

Despite this, we have continued to trade with Romania. In recognition of Romania as a country where there is no freedom of expression, religion, association, and assembly, where the government massacres its own people, where we know there is no human rights commitment, Canada must act. Canada must press Gorbachev to intervene with compassion in the situation in Romania. We must reassess our trade with Romania. We must guarantee that Romania abides by the non-proliferation provisions of our Candu reactor trade contract. We must commit to bold action, not just the use of words.

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, last October, after six months of thorough debate and coast-to-coast public hearings, this House passed Bill C-21 which will inaugurate significant improvements to Canada's UI system.

Atlantic Canadians need the additional access to employment and training opportunities which Bill C-21 will bring into effect. Atlantic Canadians approve of tightening up the system so there are less abuses of it. Atlantic Canadians need the benefit of variable entrance requirements.

I am really appalled at the utter contempt which the Liberal party, through its use of the other place, shows for democracy in this country. I say to the Leader of the Opposition, end the hypocrisy that purports to show an interest in unemployed Canadians while in fact doing them in. Let democracy prevail. End the MacEachen blackmail.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the issue of the MX Rail Garrison Program.

On November 29 the American air force announced its finalized plans for modernization of its nuclear missile force in North Dakota. Four trains, each armed with two MX missiles, will be stationed in Grand Forks. Each MX missile has 10 accurate, independently targeted and extremely powerful warheads.

The trains allow for mobility of the MX in times of crisis, making them less targetable than standard ICBMs and creating uncertainty for the so-called enemy. They have a destabilizing effect and represent a serious escalation in the arms race.

The stationing of MX-equipped rail cars so close to the Canadian border, not only in North Dakota but at several other American bases, should be protested by the Canadian government. It represents an unwelcome addition to the already considerable nuclear arsenal. There are presently 1,500 warheads in North Dakota alone, only miles from Canadian territory.

I urge the government to speak out against this inappropriate escalation of the arms race and, failing removal of the MX rail cars, to seek a guarantee that these trains will never move in the direction of Canada.

* * *

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my disappointment with the behaviour and activities of the minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Union representatives and management personnel are in the midst of negotiating a collective agreement.

The minister has intervened by placing on the table the possible closure of the Lingan colliery which employs 1,200 persons. He has threatened that if a collective agreement is not signed for a duration of four years this particular mine will close, affecting that community not only in the short term but, indeed, in the long term.

I would have hoped that the minister responsible would have wanted to facilitate the collective bargaining process. In that regard I ask him to call upon the Minister of Labour to appoint Bill Kelly, former Deputy Minister of Labour, as the mediator in this particular settlement in order to have this matter resolved before we break for Christmas. I urge the minister to do this forthwith.

QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance confirmed to us today that the goods and services tax he is preparing for us is in flagrant contradiction with all the election promises made by the Conservatives during the last election campaign. We know today that all the Conservatives' election promises were completely false.

The Minister said during the election campaign that the tax would be revenue-neutral, that it would be brought in with the co-operation of the provinces, that it would be visible and the amount would appear on sales slips, that it would be easy to administer, that it would not be inflationary, that income tax rates for individuals would go down regardless of the rate set for the GST. Finally, Mr. Speaker, he said that the surtax on middle incomes would be abolished.

If the Minister really wants to reduce the deficit, if the Minister of Finance really wants to control the deficit, why does he not apply the GST to all the lies the Conservatives told in the last election campaign? Then our deficit would disappear overnight.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: There's no question there. Put a question. What a farce.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear a question from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Mulroney: Just insults.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I did hear a lot of needless abuse. If we are going to have a debate on something like the GST, let's have a debate. We do not need this needless abuse.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Clancy: That's our line.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I heard the Leader of the Opposition talk about visibility. He wants a visible tax. But the only alternative that I hear from the Liberal Party is to go back to the manufacturers' sales tax which is an absolutely invisible tax. No one in the country knows what it is, what it is on or how much it is.

Some hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): So much for the Liberal alternatives to this tax.

The second thing he talks about is revenue neutrality. What is his option there? Revenue neutrality I think in his terms would mean scrapping the goods and services tax—

• (1420)

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —credit for low-income Canadians. I hear that the Liberal party wants to scrap the goods and services tax—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —credit for low-income Canadians. This is a very interesting revelation. We have been waiting for four months now to get the alternatives of the Liberal Party. Now they want to hit the low income Canadians. Well this government is not going to do that. This government is going to bring in the goods and services tax with a generous goods and services tax credit.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance says he does not have to take this abuse. I say to him that the Canadian taxpayer does not want to take this abuse either.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was counselling his minister not to reply.

I am not surprised. The Prime Minister finds democracy in Parliament a big nuisance and he did not listen—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would want to put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, small businesses in this country have opposed this sales tax right from the outset. For daring to stand up to the Minister of Finance the small business community received another kick in the teeth this morning. In order to teach the small business community a lesson, the minister gave them a $600 million kick in the teeth by taking away the fee that they were supposed to receive for administering his tax.

The minister told hardworking, decent, independent Canadian business people that they would receive an administrative fee for administering the nightmare that this tax is going to bring. Today he broke that promise.

What explanation is he going to give to the million small business people in this country for having once again broken his word, or does he think that the changes he announced this morning will relieve small business of that administrative nightmare?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, first of all let me make it quite clear that if the Leader of the Opposition had spent some time trying to understand this tax he would know that it is not an administrative nightmare. There have been a number of proposals that have been specifically brought in to the GST proposal, including two forms of streamlined accounting. If others are brought to our attention that are workable, we will allow those to be used as well.

We have also provided the small business community a relief from sales tax on the purchase of new equipment that they might need for compliance with the sales tax, that is point of sale equipment as well as inventory control equipment. That will drop the cost of that by about 20 per cent, which is not insignificant.

The final point I have to make is that the small business community, particularly led by the Chamber of Commerce, has been one of the loudest proponents of a lower sales tax rate. That is what we have brought in as a result of my proposal this morning. The drop from 9 per cent to 7 per cent is a major step forward in meeting the concerns of the small business community.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago the Minister of Finance recognized the administrative difficulty that small business would have by allowing them a fee to administer the tax. Every small business representative who appeared before the committee chaired by the member for Mississauga South told the committee, and through the committee told Parliament, that the tax would be an administrative nightmare: two sets of taxes, one federal, one provincial, two sets of books. Absolutely impossible for the average small business person to administer.

This morning the minister admitted for the first time that there was a slowdown in the economy. He said that the economy was slowing down. Yet at this dangerous time the minister insists on proceeding with this inflationary tax. At a dangerous time for the economy he is imposing a new goods and services tax upon Canadians.

How can the minister justify proceeding with this tax at this time at the of the Canadian economy? Does he not believe that his responsibility to the people of Canada is to prevent a recession and not to create a recession?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): First, Mr. Speaker, let me correct something, as I usually have to do in response to the hon. member's questions. People do not have to keep two sets of books. They can calculate the goods and services tax off the same sets of books off of which they are calculating their income tax today. So there are no new sets of books.

I see that the hon. Leader of the Opposition is now nodding his head in agreement.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not. I am not.

Mr. Duhamel: You're having hallucinations.

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, today we saw the finance minister swallow himself whole. Canadians are not going to swallow this GST at 7 per cent any more than they were going to swallow it at 9 per cent.

My question is for the Minister of Finance. Why in the world would Canadians believe this Minister of Finance that this tax is going to stay at 7 per cent any longer than it stayed at 9 per cent where he swore it was going stay?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is really an astounding statement. We are seeing more and more of the policy of the Liberal opposition coming out.

First they want to take away the goods and services tax credit from low income people. Now the hon. member is criticizing me for bringing the rate down from 9 per cent to 7 per cent. Can we have more of this Liberal fiscal policy proposal? I would love to hear it.

Some hon. members: More, more.

[Translation]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, for months we have heard the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance tell us that the GST rate would be 9 per cent, that there would be no change or alteration. Now my question is very simple, Mr. Speaker: Why should Canadians take the Prime Minister's word? I ask the Prime Minister that. The Minister of Finance refused today to guarantee that the rate would stay at 7 per cent as long as his government was in power. The question is simple: Is the Prime Minister prepared to promise that the GST rate will stay at 7 per cent as long as he is in power in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are being criticised now for listening to Canadians. Would the hon. member tell me what the purpose of consultations are?

I have said right from the start that if we are going to see a lower rate than 9 per cent there would have to be some trade-offs, difficult trade-offs. I have asked Canadians for their views on what those trade-offs should be. I have actually gone to meetings and probed people, pushed them, saying: "Tell me where you think the trade-offs should come". It is based on that consultation that we have come up with this particular proposal.

Now the hon. member is saying: "Will you give me a guarantee?" I cannot give the hon. member a guarantee because there might be a day that a Liberal party might be in government and then there would be absolutely no control on that rate because, with their free-spending habits that we have seen year after year after year in the past, tax rates are bound to go up.

The best assurance that Canadians can have that this rate will stay down is a government that controls spending. We have controlled spending. We have kept spending at a rate of 3.6 per cent on average for the last five years and we are committed to doing that in the future.

In response to the babbling of the Leader of the Opposition, when he was in his last year as Minister of Finance, government spending rose 29 per cent.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. This morning the Minister of Finance continued his strategy of tax trickery. We are supposed to believe that 7 per cent is better than 9 per cent, although we were assured not long ago that 9 per cent could not be changed no matter what.

After a catalogue of phrases and excuses about the GST, the end result is the same. Nothing has changed; not from two weeks ago, not from two years ago. This government is still going to tax food. This government is still going to tax children's clothing. It is still going to tax the services of all Canadians. Middle and lower income Canadians who get hit the hardest by this are still going to be hurt the most.

• (1430)

Nothing has changed despite the good phrases. Canadians will not be fooled. The principle remains the same. This is a regressive tax, a tax that takes the most from those who have the least.

The Prime Minister and Minister of Finance have said that they are going to listen to Canadians. Canadians want the tax dropped, not the rate. When is this Prime Minister really going to listen to Canadians, throw out the tax, throw out this Minister of Finance and get a new minister who is willing to bring in real tax reforms?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there were a lot of things the hon. member has said which were quite wrong. I just want to identify one which I think is very important that she not mislead Canadians on, and that is the fact that this tax is a regressive tax. This is not a regressive tax.

When we came into office, low income Canadians were paying two or three percentage points more of their income in sales tax. Then we brought in the refundable sales tax credit to offset the impact of sales tax. We have increased that three times, ending with the goods and services tax credit proposal. The combination of the goods and services tax plus the credit, which is an integral part of that tax, means that low income Canadians will now be spending two or three percentage points less of their income than people in upper income brackets. Therefore, from a regressive tax we have made this into a progressive tax, and that should not be forgotten by the leader of the NDP.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, that certainly restores our faith and belief in Santa Claus.

Canadians are not going to be fooled. The National Council on Welfare recently stated that since 1984 poorer people are paying 60 per cent more taxes since this government came into power, but Santa Claus did visit the rich because they are paying 6.7 per cent less tax than when this government came into power.

This tax continues to punish those people who are raising their families, buying clothing, but it does let stock market wheeler-dealers get away with their profits tax-free.

Will the Prime Minister admit that this tax is grossly unfair to Canada's poor and that they are paying 1.5 times more tax today than they were when this government was first elected? Cutting the tax credit and not indexing it certainly is simply going to mean that the poor are going to be poorer.

Will the Prime Minister admit that they are really worse off today than they were in 1984?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the member's attention to pages 33, 34 and 35 of the book that I put out this morning with my statement. In most income brackets it demonstrates that Canadians will be better off after the GST combined with the goods and services tax credit relative to the 9 per cent rate. That clearly states that the hon. member is wrong in the statements that she makes about the regressive nature of a sales tax.

The other point that I want to draw the hon. member's attention to is when she talks about the shifting burden of taxation. We in this government have removed more loopholes which have been of benefit to upper income Canadians than any government has done in years and years and years. We have removed all those loopholes that were brought in by the Liberal party over their time in government.

The result is that the combination of the removal of the loopholes plus the changes in the income tax system that we brought about in 1987-88 has resulted in a shift so that people in upper income tax brackets are paying more income tax as a per cent of the whole than they were before income tax reform.

* * *

[Translation]

THE ECONOMY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I will change the subject, since it is hard to get an answer from the minister.

Small businesses are being crushed under the burden of high interest rates. Retail sales are down. All economic indicators point towards a recession. This government is attacking small businesses, the most vulnerable sector of our economy, a sector that is now suffering under the negative impact of the free trade agreement.

Considering the precarious state of our economy today, how does the government expect small businesses to survive when the GST is introduced?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time that I can recall in my ten years in the House that the NDP has said anything positive about the small business community.

Members of the NDP have continually gone after the small business community. They have continually rejected the proposals that we have brought in to help the small business community. They have continually rejected things such as the $500,000 capital gains proposal that we brought in to support the small business community. Now we have a change of tune for some short-term political reasons.

What I want to say to the hon. member is that there is no disagreement among all the people who have reviewed the goods and services tax proposal that the long-term benefits for the economy are positive for the small business community, the medium sized business community, and the large business community.

The question that had been raised was what was going to happen in the transition from the existing sales tax to the new tax. By dropping the rate from 9 per cent to 7 per cent, we have addressed those concerns about transition and addressed them in a very forthright way.

* * *

ATLANTIC FISHERY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last night during our emergency debate on the fishery, the member for St. John's West promised that he would resign if no help was forthcoming for the Atlantic fishery.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: It is a great idea. With the devastating news this morning that European community fisheries ministers have set a 60,000 metric tonne cod quota for themselves off the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador, a quota four times higher than that recommended by Canada, I would expect that the member for St. John's West should start packing his desk right now.

Will the Prime Minister now finally admit that his policy of appeasement in the face of confrontation over our fishery has failed utterly? Will he agree to extend unilaterally our fisheries jurisdiction to the nose and tail of the Grand Banks and to use whatever means are necessary to enforce that jurisdiction and to put an end to the piracy of the fishery off Canada's east coast?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. members: Resign, resign!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. members: Goodbye, John.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, news of my resignation is indeed premature.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The government has introduced programs described yesterday in connection with the fishery and will be introducing others.

With reference to the hon. member's main question, which is a very serious one, we can only say with respect to the European community's decision of yesterday that we are extremely disappointed. The decision they made was a considerable improvement over their decisions in previous years.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I remind the House that they assigned themselves quotas of 132,290 tonnes of fish in 1989, whereas they are at least reducing that to 56,250 tonnes this year.

Mr. Tobin: It is 60,000 tonnes.

Mr. Crosbie: Nevertheless, that is in excess of the 15,377 tonnes they were assigned by NAFO, by three times. It is regrettable, but we never indicated in the House that we would have complete success this year. We intend to continue with our campaign because we believe that with time and with pressure the European community, led by Commissioner Marin who is trying to make an improvement here, will come to see that it must observe the NAFO quotas and do it in short order.

• (1440)

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, just so the House understands the absolute anger and frustration that anybody who knows anything about the east coast fishery is feeling upon hearing that answer, the European community has set a quota for itself of 60,000 metric tons when it was assigned by Canada and by NAFO only 15,000 metric tons.

It has done so in the face of Canada reducing its own quota over the last two years by 100,000 tonnes, and it has done so at a time when the European community has reduced quotas along its own coastal waters for conservation efforts but has come to Canada to pillage our resource.

My question is for the Prime Minister. I want to tell the Prime Minister that the reason we are consistently abused is this government and that this Prime Minister is regarded as an international wimp in the world community.

Some hon. members: Sit down, sit down!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister.

Mr. Tobin: I have not finished the question.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, needless to say, the intemperateness of the question indicates that the hon. gentleman is not seriously concerned about the problem. He is only concerned about trying to score political points.

Mr. Tobin: I am dammed concerned. I am fed up.

Mr. Speaker: It is not very often the Speaker would make a comment on an exchange, but the debate last night showed very clearly that members on both sides of this House are very deeply concerned about it. I do not think we are advancing Question Period by getting into that debate. The hon. member.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The EEC announced today that it is going to take tens of thousands of tonnes of northern cod when NAFO allocated them a zero quota.

Amid all of the misery of plants closing in eastern Canada, along comes this incredible example of the mixed up priorities of this government in dealing with the EEC.

I want to ask a question of the minister of fisheries. Will cabinet now cancel a remission order registered three weeks ago giving France back $500,000 for its fishing vessel licence fees in 1987? Is this how the government is going to get rid of foreigners overfishing—kill them with kindness?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who called my office knows the answer to that question.

The answer is that this government eliminated the French Metropolitan fleet from fishing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence in 1987 and this government saved 17,000 metric tonnes of codfish for our own fishermen. Therefore, we sent a reduced invoice to France because we could not charge them fishing licence fees for fish it never caught because they were caught by Canadians.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, you know that in 1987 France overfished its quota on the east coast of Canada by five times. This government is behaving like a bunch of masochists, paying France a half a million dollars to kick us in the derrière.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question, please.

[English]

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, when France has now announced that it is going to take northern cod outside the 200-mile zone, why is this country giving to France inside our 200-mile zone a quota of northern cod for 1990 to keep the fish plants going in St. Malo, France? Why candy for the EEC and a lump of coal for Canada? Pourquoi, le Père Noel, envers La France, et "Miser" Grinch au Canada?

Mr. Mulroney: That's a ten.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot match the hon. member in bilingual talent.

I want to tell the House, however, that in connection with this problem and the way in which the European community is approaching it, Ambassador Beesley on our behalf called in today the chargé d'affaires of the European community to express the objections of the government to these decisions by the European community.

The Prime Minister is in the process of sending a telegram to President Mitterrand of France who is the chairman of the European community at the present time. The Prime Minister will be continuing his active involvement in this issue by taking the matter up with President Delors at the top of the agenda when President Delors of the European community visits Canada this year.

The government deplores this action taken by the European community which although some improvement over last year with respect to the northern cod is adding salt to our wounds and adding insult to injury with respect to the need for conservation of the northern cod.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Last night when he, the Minister for International Trade and the Secretary of State for External Affairs got up and talked about their success in negotiating and discussing with the European Common Market, they knew that that same community had already decided to have a quota four times what Canada was asking. Why did they deliberately mislead the people of Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ but we did not know what the EC commission and council adopted and announced today.

I must say I find it unacceptable, in fact offensive, that the elected members of the European council would endorse quotas of northern cod just outside our 200-mile limit in the amount of 32,000 metric tonnes when we are having difficulty finding enough fish to go around for our Canadian fish plant workers and fishermen.

This contradicts all principles of international stewardship toward the resources of our oceans, and Canada will register its offence at this action in the strongest possible way.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, the minister claims that he was unaware of the European decision. I spoke before him and I spoke before the Minister for International Trade and I mentioned that in the House. If he is not aware of what is happening in Europe, how can he pretend to represent the people of Atlantic Canada?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, we were aware of a report by the EC scientific council to the council of the European community which suggested a significant lowering of European quotas, in fact compliance with six quotas in the NAFO managed stocks.

• (1450)

In fact the council overruled those recommendations and increased the unilateral quotas totally contrary to long-standing agreements reached at the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization that quotas, for example, of northern cod should be zero; not one codfish, not one pound of fish more than zero.

I repeat that we find the 32,000 metric tonne quota far in excess of anything that is practically justifiable. It is offensive.

* * *

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

One year after the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement accelerated tariff reductions on furniture production items from the United States, an 86-cent dollar, and high interest rates are causing large furniture manufacturers to wind down operations and to move south. Several large manufacturing firms have already set up plants in the southern United States.

This Friday, Goldcrest Furniture in my riding of Eglington—Lawrence is closing its doors and putting 120 skilled labourers, production employees, out of work and sealing the fate of a further 120 others.

Where does the minister suggest that these and other workers seek employment as the Canadian furniture industry is slowly but surely killed by her government's policies?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that my riding is right next to the hon. member's. The people on this side of the House are always concerned when there are lay-offs, as there are from time to time in any economy, and particularly in a booming economy where there are new jobs coming along every day.

I would point out to him that in his riding as well as in mine there is full employment.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, since we are talking about geography, my riding is the one that has middle class and working class as well as an industrial base. It is not Forest Hill like hers.

It is the government's policy that is killing jobs. There are 26,000 employers from the furniture industry that are already operating at a dollar level that is eight cents above its competitive level. Government policies are responsible for a 29 per cent increase in U.S. furniture exports to Canada over this year, resulting in a 54.5 per cent decrease in trade surplus in U.S. furniture items.

How can this minister stand idly by when her government's policies are destroying employment opportunities in Canada and transferring them down south?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, clearly the hon. member does not know his own riding any better than he knows mine. Let me point out to him that in the city from which we come, as in other parts of Canada, there are individuals who are experiencing temporary economic difficulties.

My department and this government are there to help them. I would point out to him that the people in his riding, in my riding, and in our city are one heck of a lot better off today than they were in 1983.

* * *

[Translation]

SHIPYARDS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. Quebec shipyard workers heard yesterday that in addition to the Conservative government's new tax on goods and services, they are going to lose their jobs, because according to our information and what was said yesterday in the Quebec National Assembly, in 1992 there will be no more shipyards in Quebec.

Will the Minister respond to an appeal by Quebecers to guarantee the future of our shipyards, and will he from now on award a substantial number of contracts to Quebec?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the federal government is well aware of the situation at MIL. Indeed, I have met with Minister Tremblay, the Minister of Industry and Commerce, as well as Robert Tessier, the president of MIL.

MIL has work in its yards until 1992. There is an overcapacity of shipbuilding in Canada against the kinds of order that we see coming down. We have a policy in place that the Government of Canada will co-operate with any industrial led efforts at consolidation. We have closed yards in Ontario and Quebec under that policy.

We are ready to co-operate with the Government of Quebec which is the owner of this yard in terms of meeting the challenges that lie ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, will the minister give Quebecers the assurance today that after 1992, there will still be shipyards in Quebec so that these workers can at least cherish that hope during the Christmas holidays?

[English]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, certainly I can assure the hon. member, as I assured Minister Tremblay and assured Mr. Tessier, that the Government of Canada is ready to co-operate with the owners of MIL, the Government of Quebec and the management of the yard to manage this situation.

There is nothing that I can do immediately or within a short-term agenda to change the situation. There is an overcapacity of shipbuilding capability in this country, but we were certainly committed to working with the Government of Quebec to ensure the workers and of MIL have their interests attended to.

* * *

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, my question is for his parliamentary secretary.

It has come to my attention that there had been another oil spill on the west coast south of Vancouver near Cherry Point. This oil is moving up toward Boundary Bay which is in my riding. It is home to 100,000 migratory birds at this time of year, as well as extensive shell fishing and herring fishing in that area.

How is this being monitored? What is it that the Canadian government is doing to protect the wildlife in Canadian waters if it does indeed enter into the Canadian waters?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon two or perhaps at some times three oil slicks of essentially a relatively small size were detected near Cherry Point and Birch Point.

As a result both Canadian Coast Guard and American Coast Guard officials went into operation to monitor the source of the slicks and to follow their passage.

The joint Canadian-American action plan was put in place as a result of a request from Environment Canada. Canadian Wildlife Services helicopters monitored the slick's shift in the afternoon and this morning.

I was advised as of an hour and a half ago and as a result of recent overflights that the oil slicks are no longer detectable. Nevertheless Canadian and American officials are monitoring and patrolling the beaches as a precautionary measure.

* * *

ROMANIA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I am sure all members of the House share a concern about events in Romania yesterday. I wonder if the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs is prepared to tell the House what message was communicated to the Romanian Ambassador yesterday and what message might be subsequently communicated to the Government of Romania today, given the additional information that we have, and just what the government intends to do over the long run with respect to the deteriorating situation of Romania.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, all members of the House are very deeply concerned about the reports coming out of Romania, both those specifically with regard to Reverend Laszlo Tokes and also with the evident repression of the citizens of Romania by their authorities. I have issued today a statement condemning that action by the authorities in Romania.

One of the difficulties of course is that it is hard for us to get details out of that closed country which has become even more closed, including to the extent that when Canadian diplomats were sent to register our approval the foreign ministry officials in Romania refused to receive them.

That is an unacceptable breach of diplomatic practice as the repression of the people of Romania by their government is unacceptable. I think it raises questions as to how we can maintain constructive relations with a country that acts in such utter disregard of diplomatic practice and of the rights of its own people.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that when the minister said "register our approval" he meant "disapproval".

I wonder: what is the situation in the Canadian Embassy and what is the situation of Canadians in Romania? Are we adequately staffed there? What does the government intend to do over the next few days to make sure that we get the kind of information that we need and that the government is able to take the steps it ought to take in this case?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for correcting the record.

I believe we are adequately staffed in Romania, although we keep that under constant review. I have asked for a report on the situation and safety of Canadians there.

• (1500)

I do not yet have that. We are seeking information about the extent and nature of the repression in that country, not only from authorities and our own officers in Romania, but also from those in neighbouring countries and other organizations which might be able to break through the curtain of repression that seems to have become even stronger in that country. Naturally, as events develop, I will keep the House advised, if it is in session, or otherwise will communicate with the foreign policy spokesmen of the other parties in the House.

* * *

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in order to introduce its goods and services tax, last week the government announced a series of cuts affecting the Public Service, the national museums, libraries, research and development and the tourism industry in the national capital region. To add insult to injury, the Prime Minister called Canada's capital, "Fat City". The Prime Minister should come with me to see Ottawa's food banks, Ottawa's homeless and Ottawa's poor.

Will the Prime Minister stand up in this House and apologize?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not stand up and apologize, but I will stand up and correct the record that my hon. friend has just given to the House.

On December 9, 1989, I was asked the following question by a journalist: "Would you agree with the thesis that it is much easier to sell Canadians if they see Fat City, Ottawa, sort of belt-tightening a little bit?" The statement came from a journalist and not from me.

In my answer I acknowledged his use of the word. But I also acknowledged in the course of that dialogue that I thought that all parts of the country could and should do more.

I did not utter a pejorative word about Ottawa or about the National Capital Region. I think that it is clearly a very prosperous and very innovative part of our nation. This government has had to take some initiatives, here and across the country, that have impacted negatively on certain aspects of institutions in the region, and I regret it deeply.

I wish that we had more money to do more things, but I think the people in the National Capital Region, who are principally responsible for the efficient functioning of the federal government I think they realize, perhaps more than most, the extent to which it is important to bring about sanity in the finances of Canada. They have made a contribution to that, as we all have, which I readily acknowledge, and I can assure my hon. friend that the statement made by the journalist is not one that I or any member of my government shares.

* * *

ACID RAIN

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment, my question is for the parliamentary secretary. Recently, there have been discouraging signs from Washington that the Bush administration is wavering on its commitment made earlier this year to reducing acid rain. Can the parliamentary secretary indicate what steps the department's officials are taking to impress upon the American government that the environmental problems associated with acid rain are only too real?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first, I would indicate on behalf of the Government of Canada that we firmly believe that there is ample evidence of the trans-boundary effect of acid rain, which is the case before the U.S. Court of Appeal. Of course, the government of Ontario is one of the petitioners in that case.

Nevertheless, the position which the United States government is taking in this particular court case certainly demonstrates a need for acid rain legislation being passed by the U.S. Congress. Furthermore, it reaffirms a need for a bilateral accord between Canada and the United States. With regard to the latter, Canadian officials have already met twice with their American counterparts in preparation for setting the basis for the talks, which will hopefully lead to the development of a bilateral accord. There is a third meeting planned for the month of January.

In closing, I would note that Ambassador Burney, in a recent issue of The Globe and Mail, stated, referring to the year 1990, "I am hopeful this is the year we will conclude an acid rain accord with the United States". We share that hope, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

Mr. Speaker: On Friday, November 3, the hon. member from York Centre sought to obtain the unanimous consent of the House in order to raise a question of privilege at the outset of the sitting without having submitted written notice.

[Translation]

The substance of the question had to do with what the hon. member for York Centre characterized as the deliberate interference by an official of the Federal Business Development Bank with the delivery of documents which the Bank had agreed to provide. He indicated that he wanted these documents in order to turn them over to the RCMP. In anticipation of their receipt, he had arranged a meeting with RCMP people in his office on the Thursday afternoon. As it happened, the documents were not turned over to the hon. member for this meeting.

[English]

The hon. member from Glengarry—Prescott-Russell supported the question of privilege and explained that the material requested from the bank was in the public domaine, as these documents had already been given to The Montreal Gazette. He went on to state that the failure of the bank to deliver the documents in the time previously arranged prevented the hon. member from York Centre from turning them over to the RCMP. Both members asserted that the decision to withhold the documents by an Ottawa official of the bank interfered with the rights and obligations of that member to fulfil his responsibilities as a member of Parliament.

[Translation]

At the same time, however, the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell explained that the Federal Business Development Bank subsequently agreed to release the documents.

It would therefore appear that the question of privilege relates to a delay in the delivery of documents to the hon. member for York Centre which prevented him from keeping his appointment with the RCMP as originally planned. While the member may have been inconvenienced, it is difficult for the Chair to be convinced that this constitutes a question of privilege.

[English]

While there was a delay, it does not seem to be clear that the hon. member was hindered in the performance of his duties. Inconvenienced perhaps, but not interfered with.

I might also add that even though it was claimed that the documents were in the public domaine, it appears to me that, in fact, these documents remained the property of the bank. If by virtue of an internal decision or mix-up, and I do not want to suggest motives, the documents were not delivered when the member from York Centre had expected them, it seems to me that it is a matter to be resolved between the member and the bank.

As it happens, the bank has agreed to release the documents and that agreement was evidently made before this question of privilege was raised here. The matter, therefore, would appear to be resolved.

I thank the hon. member for bringing the matter to the attention of the House.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of report stage of Bill C-28, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related Act, as reported (without amendment) from a Legislative Committee; and on Motions Nos. 4, 6 and 7.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The hon. member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak to Motion No. 4 and Motion No. 7, on Bill C-28, but do sincerely regret that we are under a time allocation threat in this House. It is one that is used constantly and I think shows disrespect for the democratic process that would reflect our ability to speak to this issue in the name of all of our constituents.

This debate really symbolizes the Conservative party's true agenda. The issues we are discussing include the clawbacks of seniors pensions and family allowance. They are fundamentally an erosion of the universality principle that has always guided the social programs in this country.

The Conservative agenda appears aimed at cutting and reducing that caring aspect of government while saying that it is "in the national interest".

• (1510)

Well, I do not think that we agree. This is where we part company because we believe in a far more balanced approach and a much more fiscally responsible approach, always respecting a more compassionate tradition upon which our country was founded.

Throughout Canada's history, with all the change that has been wrought over its 120 years, there has always remained this one deeply held fundamental principle. That conviction has been a cornerstone of our national life and has not changed for many decades. It is our tradition of universal access to social programs, whether they be our medicare programs, our unemployment insurance programs, family allowance, Old Age Security and where needed, guaranteed income supplements, veterans allowances, et cetera. It was Canada's way of being fair and tolerant as a society.

Yet in 1984 that tradition had begun to unravel. It is this unravelling that I would like to talk about today. Since coming into office the Conservatives have time after time, year after year, continued a slow and very deceptive but always real plan to dismantle the safety net of social programs that most of us believe were part of the fabric of this country.

It used to be everyone's right as a Canadian to have equal access to social programs. That is no longer true. That contract has been broken. Universality is such a simple idea, really. It is so easy to understand. It is the expression of a belief that over a lifetime every Canadian contributes to the building and flourishing of this society in their own way, and to the best of their ability, and that no one should be shut out from the benefits of the country that they have helped to build. That is universality.

In most instances its benefits are taxable in the hands of the receiver based on income levels. That is a fair and universal approach. The member thinks that is what they have done but it is not so.

We must remember that universality survived governments of both political parties, survived recessions and, indeed, grew out of the depression. Yet this spirit and tradition of a government looking out for the health and welfare of every Canadian, no matter where they live, no matter what their means, has come to a sudden end with this government since 1984.

Universality has become little more than words on a paper, words offered to Canadians on the one hand, then quickly erased with the other. How familiar we are with the Prime Minister standing before a crowd and declaring to all the country that our social programs were a sacred trust. Yes, there were days when this government's smooth rhetoric tricked Canadians into believing it shared this caring approach to social programs.

But it seems to have been a mask behind which has lain the real truth. Time after time this government has used fast talk and colourful packaging to hide from Canadians the true facts of the slow and determined dismantling of universal access to social programs and, in particular, the old age security for which these people have already paid. They started paying in 1952 and to this day they have been paying. But this government does not care to acknowledge this.

If it was a private sector pension plan, this government would not have allowed this kind of action for one second, but because it is the public sector it feels it can just go about doing this without consulting the public and to the detriment of everyone in this country.

In five long years of opposition we have been devoting endless energy trying to stop this government's slow piece by piece erosion of social benefits.

It was early in their mandate that the unravelling really took place. I go back to December 21, 1984, just weeks after the Conservatives took office, when the finance minister first proposed the de-indexing of old age pensions. We know what happened. We know what Madam Solange Denis said and we knew that Pinocchio's nose was getting longer and longer.

Liberals began to battle with this government because they could not seem to understand why we were so committed to universality. It is because Canadians believed in fairness and in equality.

Some hon. members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Belsher: Be nice.

Mrs. Finestone: I am sorry. If the shoe fits, you have to wear it even if it is uncomfortable. Canadians believe in fairness and equality. Canadians believe that all individuals, no matter what their social status, deserve equitable treatment. I want members opposite to listen because when you segregate services only to the very needy then those services meant only for the poor become very poor services. If you do not have a vested interest then you do not take care. That is the great concern we have.

I would like to talk about the clawback from our pensioners of Old Age Security benefits from certain income groups and family allowance benefits from families, both where their incomes are over $50,000 a year. On top of choosing this arbitrary figure as a cut-off, the government will not allow this figure to grow with inflation. It is allowing for only partial inflation protection of 3 per cent.

Once again we see the two faces of this government with the introduction of the clawback at a time when the spectre of the elections have hardly faded so dimly that we cannot recall the Prime Minister with his arm lovingly placed around his mother and saying, "Dear Mom" in Summerside, P.E.I., "as long as I am Prime Minister of Canada social benefits, especially those for the elderly, will be improved not diminished by our government". You wondered why I said Pinocchio before. It is another reminder of when we had the attempt to deindex old age security, that sacred trust to which I just referred.

The reality is that the 1989 budget did cut the Old Age Security benefits through this clawback and cut family allowances and cut health care funding. Today, the practical implications are that anyone receiving $50,000 a year in net retirement income will have their pension benefits clawed back into the government's treasury. It is the same for family allowances.

There is an additional piece of trickery for 70 per cent of seniors whose net income is based not only on pensions and interest but dividends as well. For if you collect dividends the amount of these dividends are grossed up by 25 per cent.

Len Shiffrin said it far better perhaps than I am going to when he pointed out in The Ottawa Citizen of May 4,—I think we have to focus part of the fight in this area—that the moneys received from your Canadian investment income is grossed up by 25 per cent in calculating net income. Then this is offset by the dividend tax credit in the final tax calculation. The clawback, however, is based on the inflated net income figure. Therefore, the threshold is not based on real income, it could include thousands of dollars imaginary income grossed up by 25 per cent on Canadian investment income.

What about tomorrow? Within 10 years nearly one million more Canadian families will lose all or part of their family allowances and old age pensions because of this government's action. The threshold will change. It will only rise in future years if the annual inflation exceeds 3 per cent. That means eight years from now the taxed back threshold will have fallen to equivalent of $40,000 today.

It is true that $50,000 income threshold for the beginning of its clawback affects relatively few seniors and sounds like an awful lot of money but it is about 13 per cent of old age security recipients who file income tax forms with only 3.5 per cent of those paying back all of the pension.

At first glance it seems reasonable. Indeed, it might seem like easy street to many people—according to Hugh Winsor— approximately a half a million seniors who live below the poverty line. I would say to them, do not think that it is such an easy street.

It is true the $76,000 where the clawback tops out is beyond the expectations of most Canadians, but the sneakiness and the potential unfairness enters in the way that the Prime Minister and Minister of Finance have chosen to treat that over time. It is very sneaky, it is inflationary. We can see that most people who are young and in their early forties today will be losing their pension, their Old Age Security, and so the whole principle of universality is being thrown out the back door. We use bureaucrats to send out the cheques. We say: "We will give it to you," and then we use bureaucrats to see that we collect it back. It makes absolutely no sense. If the government wanted to cut universality it should have said so.

• (1520)

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Madam Speaker, I rise today to join in this debate on the issue of Old Age Security tax back and family allowance. I am surprised that we would be debating this particular issue considering that the members to the left in this House have generally been concerned about the fact that higher income Canadians are not paying their share.

We are trying to come up with a proposal to make it possible for Canadians to pay their share in a very appropriate fashion. Yes, it will be universal. It will be universal in that every Old Age Security recipient who receives the cheque who is of high income will pay it back in one form or another. So, it is very universal and very appropriate.

What are we talking about? During the free trade debate many months ago the opposition and others instilled fear in Canadians about how they were going to lose all their benefits because of free trade. The most vulnerable people in our society were attacked by those in opposition. Now we see another very similar attack. I have received calls from constituents in my riding, from people who are receiving old age security who would not be affected by this particular measure for quite some period of time.

I thought I would follow through on some of the misrepresentations that some of my constituents have received on this issue by people opposed to this Old Age Security tax back. Basically, if you take the average Canadian who only receives Old Age Security and Canada Pension—I would point out that there are many seniors in my riding who only receive those two particular items—it means that they have an income of $11,000 a year. That is a very low income and certainly not one that many can get by on. I should know because I have family who basically functions on that kind of an income. They addressed the concern with me about the tax back of Old Age Security because they had been led to believe, wrongfully, that they were going to be immediately affected. So, I worked out for them, based on a 3 per cent inflation factor which seems to be the concern that some of the opposition members have, how they would be affected.

After ten years they would be making only $14,790. That means they are still a long way short of $50,000. In fact, my mother who is 71 would have to live another 52 years in order to be caught by this tax based on a 3 per cent inflation factor. I truly hope she lives that long. I truly hope that at age 123 she is there to see that she has finally arrived at that $50,000 threshold.

The Minister of Finance has clearly said that we would review these programs on a regular basis and adjust them appropriately. The problem that is going to bother her is when she gets to be 123 and discovers that she has hit that $50,000 threshold that the threshold has been moved upwards. It is interesting that none of the opposition members bother to mention that in their particular representation.

I thought, if my mother has to live another 52 years to be 123 maybe I ought to look at somebody who has a pension, someone who has more than just the Old Age Security. So I took the average salary in my riding. I am fortunate to have a riding that has a good average income and very buoyant economic times. I say a lot of that is a very direct result of good government policy. But the average income in my riding is about $39,000. So I took the attitude of many of the left wing opposition members down the way here that they should have a pension. The average pension that a $39,000 wage earner in my riding could expect from the average employer in my riding would be about $17,000 a year.

Here they are at age 65. They retire, having earned $39,000 a year, with a $17,000 pension. On top of that, of course, they make $11,000 in Canada Pension and Old Age Security. There they have it.

How long does it take for them to hit the $50,000 threshold? I thought you would like to know that that 65-year old would only have to live to be 102 in order to hit the threshold. Of course at age 102 when they discover they finally make $50,000, lo and behold, the finance minister as he had promised, has reviewed the program, has amended the thresholds upward. And they still do not get caught by this terrible tax back that this group down the way are talking about. It is terrible.

Let us make the assumption that that poorer individual who retired on a $17,000 pension had an indexed pension because, of course, not many do. I thought maybe we would make the assumption that they have been successful in getting themselves an indexed pension. It would still take 19 years before they got to that $50,000 threshold. Again, they would discover that the good old Minister of Finance of the day, still being a Conservative, would have naturally made the adjustments in the threshold level and they would not have been affected at all. The fear that the opposition members are putting in senior citizens is very unacceptable.

Let us make the assumption that that poor individual finally makes $50,000. The member who spoke previously talked about this poor senior who has grossed up dividend income. I presume that person probably lives in Rockcliffe or Forest Hill in Toronto. I mean $40,000 in dividend income. The stocks that I have—and I am not a very good investor—only yield me about 2 per cent dividend income. So that $40,000 dividend income that she is speaking of means I have to have $800,000 sitting someplace in investments. Poor little old Canadian me. I really need a lot of help.

Let us give her the benefit of the doubt. Let's presume that I do it a little better. I am just one of these poor investors. I know all about preferred dividends. A really good sharp investor. The average Canadian senior knows all about preferred dividends. I am going to be able to invest my money at 8 or 9 per cent. I still have over $400,000 in equity sitting somewhere. Poor Canadian! This is who the NDP and the Liberals say ought to be taxed.

I am one of these poor Canadians with all this equity sitting around in a bank some place and I make $51,000. This terrible tragedy that they foisted on me because I was $1,000 over that threshold. Do you know how much tax that cost me, Madam Speaker? It cost $150 because I have over $400,000 in stocks or $800,000 in stocks. I cannot believe that my friends to the left are really telling me that low-income Canadians need this help.

You ought to carry that on a little further because I have talked about the poor Canadian who makes $51,000. Let us talk about the poor Canadian who makes $61,000. He makes $11,000 more than the threshold. There are a lot of seniors out there who are really poor and who have an awful time spending $61,000 a year. Yet here is someone making $61,000. In the third year of the program, not the first year and not the second year but in the third year he has to pay $1,650 out of the $4,000 that the government is sending him.

I know that the opposition does not like that idea but I have some great difficulty in believing that my friends here on the left are concerned about Canadians making $60,000 or $70,000. In fact a Canadian who has to pay back the entire old age security would have to make $77,000 a year. I appreciate the concern that the members to the left have on high-income Canadians. I have great difficulty in believing that they are at all serious in the belief that seniors who make $77,000 a year should get government assistance of any kind, let alone the Old Age Security.

Let us not talk about the senior because there is the portion of people who make $50,000 or more who have families. They get family allowance cheques all the time. There is another group that really needs help. I am impressed as all get out by the opposition members here. The people to the left are really quite concerned that they help low income Canadians with families.

• (1530)

These low income Canadians with families, just how much money do they make? It is really a very tremendous amount of money. Family allowance is about $32 a month per child.

I see that you are indicating that I have only one minute left, Madam Speaker. I could go on about how these people are trying to help these poor low-earning members of Parliament such as myself who has three children, and I should be eligible for family allowance. I appreciate that they think that I ought to get family allowance. But, you know, I do not mind at all if you tax it back from me. I am serious. I can say that I have had similar representations from every senior who qualifies for old age security in the high income bracket. I have not had one objection to the tax back of old age security, if they make more than $50,000 and if they live in my riding. Not one senior in my riding has complained about that. You people ought to get with it.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to stand today and debate the amendments, Motions Nos. 4, 6 and 7 on Bill C-28, which is an act to amend the Income Tax Act.

I woke up this morning and I was humming this little song, a little Christmas ditty, "Christmas is coming, the goose is getting fat". It occurred to me whose goose it was that was getting fat. Obviously, it was the goose of the members across the aisle because Tory times are taxing times and the goose on this side is not getting fat, it is getting more slender as we get more and more of this Tory legislation.

We have the UI bill. We have free trade. We have the GST. This morning, what happened? We had the Minister of Finance dropping the GST from 9 per cent to 7 per cent. Wow! What a Christmas present!

But we do not want to lose sight of what is in fact happening. We do not want to lose sight of the dastardly deeds of this government. Bill C-28, for instance, is one of these slippery, sneaky methods that this government uses to hit those least able to fight back—families and seniors. Shame, shame on the members of the government.

We have just seen an example in the last speech before the House and in some of the answers during Question Period by the Minister of Finance of the arrogance and contempt with which members of this government treat the people of Canada. They say they are listening, but they are not hearing. They have not heard a word that the people of Canada have said about the goods and services tax. They have not heard a word that the people have said about the unemployment insurance amendments. They have not heard a word that the people of Canada, particularly families and seniors, have said about these amendments to the Income Tax Act.

It is undoubted as we look at this, in spite of what the members across the way have said, that this is a direct attack on universality. It is not simply a little method of getting some money back through taxation of the rich. Universality, after all, is the means by which we can pay out to people without having them submit to a means test. We in this party want to continue to ensure that all Canadians, regardless of income, have available to them all programs such as old age security, Canada pension, unemployment insurance and medicare.

I think it is very interesting to look at the comments of the chairman of the finance committee. It is interesting because it is not the first time that this member has spoken up and laid before us through one of his foot-in-mouth comments what the true agenda of this government is. He has told us in a letter to a person from Alberta that this is simply the start of the dismantling of the universality of our social programs. We know that that is correct.

We can look at some of the others, but do not take my word for it. Let me just refer to a few others. A person from my riding in Penticton says that one of the things that a person counts on when planning for retirement is that no one will move the pension goal post, so to speak, at the time when that person has reached retirement age and is no longer able to revise his or her provisions for retirement. Universality of the OAP is one of those goal posts.

We can look to other organized groups such as the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation. They tell us that the Minister of Finance claims that the clawback proposal is not a breach of universality of the OAS program. He bases the claim on the continuance of monthly pension cheques to all qualified recipients, using a very narrow school boy logic type of approach. A few people might buy this claim, seniors do not. The fact of making payments under one act and then recovering them under a different act of Parliament does not change the basic truth. We see it as a transparent move to abandon universality by a circuitous route. There is no doubt about it. That in fact is what is happening.

The Federal Superannuates National Association states as follows, "In the case of pension plan arrangements particular to past and present employees of the Public Service of Canada, the Canadian Armed Forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the present arrangements in regard to integration of Canadian Pension Plan and Public Service plans were only agreed to by employees' representatives in light of an assurance by government that Old Age Security would be paid universally, without restriction. If there had been any indication that OAS would, under particular financial circumstances, be abated or denied, the integration of CPP benefits would, for certain, have been vastly different from the present arrangements. There is no doubt in our mind that government is under a moral obligation to maintain the status quo".

I had a telex, Madam Speaker, from the South Okanagan branch of the Federal Superannuates National Association in Penticton, British Columbia. They state, "Federal superannuates and their dependants object strongly to the budget proposal to introduce special tax on Old Age Security benefits. To target this particular source of income for extra taxation can only be seen as a flagrant repudiation of the doctrine of universality of these benefits". This is another group that has shown us that this is an attack on universality.

As the chairman of the finance committee well knows, the government is going to dismantle what all of us have fought for.

Let me go on, Madam Speaker. The Coalition of Quebec Seniors states, "As seniors we remember well the odious means test for health and social services and fear for its inevitable return if the clawback is enacted in law. We believe that the true reason for the clawback is to abandon the principle of universality and not to reduce the budget deficit".

In talking about the cut-backs, the Vanier Institute of the Family state, "Time and again the objectives of universal family allowances are mistakenly equated with the income security objectives of social assistance payments. It is wrong to suggest that family allowances are nothing more than welfare for the middle-class and the wealthy. Family allowances and family-related tax provisions are not welfare measures. They are, rather, mechanisms to ensure an equitable system of benefits and taxation that acknowledges that the capacity of parents to pay tax is less than the capacity of others at the same income level who do not have children to support. C-28, if and when enacted, does without doubt effectively terminate Canada's universal program of family allowances. If and when it is enacted, Canada will join the United States, which is the only other industrially advanced society that does not distribute some variety of family allowance to parents".

• (1540)

I would be remiss in any speech on old age security if I did not refer to One Voice and their thoughts on universality. Let me just quote one small section from their brief to the legislative committee on Bill C-28, a committee that allowed so few of the people of Canada to speak because of the Conservative majority. That is very, very shameful. The quote is this, "In fact, the government could have introduced the clawback at $30,000 but it chose not to do so. Why? Because the clawbacks would then be seen not as a tax of the wealthy but for what it really is, recovery of benefits from part of the population. This is an attack on the universality of Canada's social programs".

Every one of these groups recognizes this for what it is. It is for that reason that I stand today and support the motion of the loyal opposition, a motion that we have also put forward, which motion would delete the clawback provisions within this bill.

This bill is an attack on universality. It is an attack on families. It is an attack on seniors. We on this side of the House will not prescribe to the little song, "A spoonful of sugar makes the medicine go down," because we are choking on the bits of gruel that we are thrown on this side of the House. We will not stand for it any longer.

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Madam Speaker, until just a few moments ago I was under the impression, quite frankly, that the government was going to proceed as it has on so many other occasions in this session in jackboot fashion, simply to put forward and perpetuate its vision of what the country would be without giving any explanation, without giving us so much as a modicum of understanding of its agenda, its direction, its purposes and what benefits there would be to Canadians one and all, to what benefits there might exist to each and every one of us, for each and every one of us to be member citizens of this great state. I dare say "great state" still because at least we have a loyal opposition that tries to penetrate at the depths of whatever legislation is being promulgated despite the wishes of all Canadians in order that we might at least see the directions in which we are being led whether we approve or no.

I say that was only until a few moments ago, until finally we heard a member of the government side. I am not sure whether he was motivated by a desire to ensure that the truth do speak and speak out loudly and forcibly when he did say, and being singular and unique amongst all the members of his caucus, that the reason we are presenting this legislation is, to be brutally frank, to ensure that those who do not require assistance no longer have it, that we no longer operate on the premise that if there are benefits that accrue to individuals who become citizens, native born or naturalized in this country, that we are no longer entitled to those benefits if we do not pass at the very first instance a means test that is defined arbitrarily, whimsically, appropriately as the government says and periodically as its whim would apply as the occasion demands and as the necessities of economics dictate.

Would that the government had had the courage to say so at the very beginning so that all Canadians would have known that the agenda of this government, that the vision of this government for Canada would be predicated on a series of principles and directions that excluded Canadians from benefiting from their input in the development and promulgation of programs beneficial to this state.

So what have we? We had utter silence over the course of the last couple of days on this debate by members on the government side until this one member decided that the truth could no longer be withheld and that he had to join in the chorus of the member for Mississauga South who did say, and I think I quote him correctly, that universality is much too expensive a principle upon which Canadians can build a society of free and secure individuals. It is much too expensive, says he. He is in agreement, of course, with the Minister of Finance who says that we must clawback whatever benefits have accrued to citizens who have contributed by dent of their efforts, by their contributions in either a pension plan or, in this other case, through family involvement in nurturing a family environment that has been the steadfast base upon which our society has been built.

So what are Canadians to think? What are they to say when before this House the Minister of Finance, in response to penetrating questions that ask for a rationale, some sort of indication as to what reason there might be for us to tax discriminately, pejoratively and with great prejudice, Canadians on the basis of age or family affiliation? What is his response? In a very cavalier and arrogant fashion he says, "Why does the loyal opposition bother itself with the affairs of a mere 4 per cent of the Canadian population, a mere 4 per cent?"

I suppose that that kind of negative criticism by the Minister of Finance stands us in good stead. We are proud to be able to say that we have received accolades from the Minister of Finance for supporting all Canadians, be they small in number, be their numbers so minute in quantity that they need someone who truly represents democracy at its very essence. But that 4 per cent represents Canadians who have been the most productive, those who have gone through their life making sacrifices upon which this country has been built and upon which I dare say this government today still draws great benefit.

Yet the Minister of Finance and the chairman of the finance committee from Mississauga South, who is here today to listen to this debate will say, and without even a shamed-face smile, that the country can no longer afford to give benefit to those people who have deserved it by their responsibilities, by their contributions, by their efforts, by their enterprise and by the taxes that they have contributed to the revenues of this state.

One no longer knows whether to cry or to laugh. The arrogance, the gall of such a statement from the government side belies that in fact we are headed purposely towards an elitist society wherein those who are well-off are treated in a fashion that is favourable, to say the least, because they are seen to be, in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, those who are most likely to contribute greater investment and entrepreneurial resources to this country. The rest of us who do not fit into that category can look forward to facing bills and legislation such as Bill C-28 in which whatever benefits are accrued to us will be clawed back.

Why go through this charade? Why not be honest? Why not say you are no longer entitled to any benefits merely because you have contributed, merely because you pay taxes, merely because your entrepreneurial skills and your sacrifices generate great wealth upon which this society shall be based?

• (1550)

We can no longer tolerate a government that tells us one thing and does another, and thinks that it can get away with such pacts. We can no longer tolerate misleading directions—I hesitated for a moment because the word "lie" was going to utter forth from my lips and I did not want to commit an unparliamentary statement and attribute it to members opposite. But, quite frankly, the Canadian public is looking at this debate and saying, "Why have we been mislead? Why can we not have direct, straightforward debate? If we cannot afford something, say so at the very beginning. Tell us how we must pay for it. If this benefit is good, then it must be good for all of us."

Those who are less well off are no less reluctant to give equal benefits, similar benefits to those who are well off. Those who are well off enjoy that benefit because they are members of this society, not simply because they have the good fortune to have more resources, financial or otherwise, than perhaps others in Canadian society. If we establish a base of principle, that principle, that base applies to each and every one of us. There should be no discrimination, and definitely there should be no discrimination on the basis of age. Here we have the government trying to hide the fact that today those who are 65 will receive no benefits once they are at $60,000. We have seen today in Question Period the Minister of Finance refuse to give any kind of assurances or guarantees—not that they would be worth much, he has proven this much, or not that they would be worth anything at all—that that particular threshold would be reduced.

In fact, we know that this is nothing more than a Trojan horse to upset, overturn, and destroy the society we have worked so long to construct and build.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Madam Speaker, today I rise to speak on Motion No. 4 which seeks to delete the clawback provision of Bill C-28. Let me begin by explaining the difference between tax back and clawback. Tax back means that you remove a certain percentage of income from taxpayers. Clawback means you remove the whole thing.

Universality means that programs are applied to everyone equally. Clawback in this case means that for a certain segment of the population you are going to remove that program. You start off by clawing back family allowances to families where one income earner earns more than $50,000. What that says to me is that you are discriminating against families. Families, I have always believed, are the backbone of our country. We should be encouraging families, but we are not.

We are saying that if you are a one income family, that is, if one of the parents chooses to remain at home with the family but that one parent who works happens to make $51,000, at the end of three years that family will lose all family allowance benefits. This government should be encouraging families, not taking away something that they may need.

A family which earns $51,000 if they have two, three, or four children is not rich. They may not be that poor, but they certainly would need the encouragement of this government.

On the other hand, if you have a family where both parents work and the highest income is below $50,000, the one parent might make $48,000 and the other might make $40,000, they do not lose their family allowance benefits. They get it taxed back at the same rate as anyone else, but they do not lose the whole amount. Not only do they not lose their family allowance benefit, but they can claim child care expenses. But you cannot if you have a parent who stays at home. Does that encourage family life? Of course not. You are saying to the couple in this case who might make $85,000 or $88,000, "That's all right. You can keep part of your family allowance." But to the other family where there is an income of $51,000 you are saying, "No, you can't." That is unfair and that is discrimination. We all know how difficult it is to raise a family. I am totally opposed to this kind of legislation. Rather than attacking the families of our nation, we should be encouraging them in any way that we can.

One of the other provisions of Bill C–28 is that we claw back the old age pension for those who have an income higher than $50,000. At first sight it does not look too bad. But why are we discriminating against that one segment of the population? One of the members opposite was saying before that as members of Parliament we make more than $50,000 a year. That is fine. We make more than $50,000 a year, but if we go on the stock market and we make some money playing the stock market the government does not come in and tax it away at 100 per cent. All we are saying is, treat everyone equally. Do not discriminate on the basis of age. That is what is wrong with this measure.

I am going to read part of a letter that I received from a constituent. It is a letter dated December 4. It states:

> Dear Madam,
>
> In answer to a question of the Leader of the Opposition on November 29, 1989, (Hansard p.6372) the Minister of State (Seniors) said:
>
> > "We intend to improve our social programs and we are asking 4 per cent of Canada's seniors to help us reduce the deficit—"

This is his response:

> I thought that I hadn't heard right so I waited for Hansard. Now my eyes are confirming what my ears have heard. The Tories are asking the seniors to reduce the deficit! How Machiavellian and utterly despicable to now ask seniors who survived the Great Depression, who worked for $1.00 a day, who endured very patriotically two World Wars, to ask them to pay for the wasteful extravagance of this incompetent government! The seniors of this country have paid dearly in terms of money, blood and sweat for the right to a pension during the autumn of their lives. Taxing O.A.S. is fair game but the proposed clawback is immoral. Let the Government clawback the revenues of strip joints but leave the Seniors alone.
>
> Would it take the demonstrations that we have recently seen in the countries of eastern Europe to bring this government back to its senses?
>
> Yours truly,
> Andre Emery

I say to you, this is the feeling of many seniors across this country. They have not only earned the right to an old age pension, but most of them have also paid. If you can recall back a few years, there was a stipulation in the income tax return where they actually paid towards that old age security. They are not asking for special treatment, they are asking to have equal treatment.

What are we doing to the average family income in our country? We are imposing a GST. There will be no relief for these people. We are increasing the surtax and we are now clawing back family allowance benefits and old age pensions.

One of the members opposite said a little while ago, "Well, I do not need the family allowance". I would say to that member, by all means, do not accept it. The government will not keep sending it back to you if you do not want it.

Mr. Allmand: You do not have to apply for it.

Mrs. Marleau: That is right, you do not have to apply for it. Give it to some charity, they might appreciate it. But just because you do not want the family allowance does not mean that there are many families out there who do not really rely on that. That particular program is a very small amount of money that this government gives towards families, towards the children of our country.

Mr. Belsher: It costs a lot of money.

Mrs. Marleau: It may cost some money, but it is certainly worth while. By all means tax it back, but tax it back fairly, at whatever rate you tax everybody else.

• (1600)

If the members across the way were to make a windfall profit somewhere, by all means, tax it. But how would they feel if suddenly they had it all taken away?

How about if you get some kind of a pension because of a disability? How would you feel if suddenly the government came in and said: "Well, you make more than this amount of money, so because this is a special pension, we will take it all away from you. But it is okay to go and make money on the stock market. Sure, we will only take 30 per cent of that away. That is okay. But 100 per cent for that pension". That is what is wrong.

I ask the government to not only reconsider this very seriously but to add some incentives, something, some ray of light, so families can have a proper level of living and can have some hope in this country.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Employment; the hon. member for Ottawa West—Pay Equity; the hon. member for Edmonton East—Indian Affairs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-28, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, the Old Age Security Act, the Public Utilities Income Tax Transfer Act, the War Veterans Allowance Act and a related Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee, and Motions Nos. 4, 6 and 7.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, my first inclination, as is befitting what one would call an expression of mourning, would be to stand here for my 10 minutes in absolute silence. I would do that not out of respect for the other members of the House, but as a sincere gesture toward those people who are having their family allowances and their pensions clawed back.

I am not too sure where the best place is to start my remarks, but since we are talking about the clawback, maybe that would be the place to do it. I cannot imagine a more fitting term for this government to originate for what it is doing. There is an element of the scavenger. There is an element of the vicious claw. What a descriptive term. Claw back. Let us take away from those people the little money that we are giving them. What a descriptive term for a despicable government.

I experienced seven months of what this government did to the people with unemployment insurance and this clawback is is absolutely in character for the government. I do not know whether it is the result of lack of imagination or the result of too much imagination.

When dealing with cheaters on unemployment insurance, they are absolutely efficient in tracking down some poor person on unemployment insurance, some single mother with a couple of kids trying to put a little bit of food on her table or maybe shoelaces on the kids' shoes. They can track her down when she earns a penny more than she is allowed under the unemployment insurance regulations.

How do they do it? They do it with computers. They simply cross-match the reports of the employers with the computers that they have in the unemployment insurance commission office. They can find those people.

I think that what they are doing here is the result of lack of imagination. If nothing else, it certainly is sloth. It is inconceivable to me that in this technological age we live in, this government cannot tax people based on how much money they make in relation to how much they ought to be taxed under the Income Tax Act. It is terrible to even suggest that there are some people who are getting money from the government which they ought not to get, to suggest that it is impossible for the government to tax back, not claw back the amount of money in excess of what we as taxpayers ordinarily pay.

There are not very many taxpayers in this country who do not realize that you have to pay taxes. Something that we absolutely object to is this erosion, it is worse than erosion, of the universality which has become such a part of the fabric of Canadian society. It is far more than an erosion. It is a devastation. The words escape me right now but it is an absolutely horrendous thing that this slothful, mean-spirited government would bring in.

It suggests that indeed, as with everything else they seem to put their hands to, government members are incompetent, so incompetent that as we take part in this debate, we find ourselves under closure again. Wonder of wonders.

This is about the tenth or twelfth time since I came to Parliament, I was going to say a year ago, and it is true, that we have been under closure. We were under closure on free trade but that was only one or two instances. Since April when we came back and started Parliament in earnest, this is the tenth or twelfth time I have risen to speak under closure.

What an unimaginative group we have over there. What a mean-spirited, unimaginative group who seem not to be able to do anything constructive, who seem not to be able to come up with imaginative programs for the creation of jobs, for the creation of well-paying quality jobs so people can have some kind of a satisfaction with what they do within society rather than flipping hamburgers and going to work for welfare as they seem to have done so well and have bragged about in connection with some programs they have in my native province of Saskatchewan. Work for welfare, can you imagine anything so obscene? I suspect that "obscene" was the word I was trying to find earlier.

One of the best examples of the incompetence of this government is the bill itself. It was so flawed by their own admission that government members had to bring in 125 amendments to their own legislation, only to withdraw them.

I suppose if you look at flawed legislation and if you look at having to withdraw amendments you make to it, you would have to conclude that what you have there is a couple of negatives. I am sure the chairperson of the finance committee can tell me—the great mathematician that he is—that two negatives make a positive.

I fail to understand how something as broad as the bill originally was without the withdrawn 125 amendments can possibly, except perhaps in the eyes of the government opposite, add up to a positive. I suspect that it may possibly be that when you are talking mathematics, two negatives do make a positive. When you are talking in terms of social programs and social legislation, when you are talking in terms of pensions for our seniors, when you are talking in terms of family allowances, I suggest that these two wrongs certainly do not make a right. It is rather obvious that the exact opposite is true.

• (1610)

How can anyone say that these people, defenseless like most wage earners are, ought to have a certain amount of their rightful earnings taken away? One of the previous speakers pointed out and, it is entirely true, that Canadians have had their taxes deducted in the past for the right to receive old age assistance when they reach the age of retirement. This government is saying no.

I suppose they have lost their computers. I suspect they are not going to be taking into account how much those people contributed, how much they ought to receive as a result of those contributions. They have thrown the computers out and they are going to be clawing back from that old age security. That is, by any definition, theft.

How can this government possibly exonerate itself from taking back money from people who have paid into a program in order that they will receive some kind of benefits when they retire? I do not suppose the government thought of that. I will not just have made government members aware of that. It has been referred to before. Perhaps there will be one or two more amendments they would like to withdraw from the legislation, and I would suspect that the only one they have left to withdraw is the legislation itself. I would suggest that that is precisely the motion which this government ought to withdraw and it ought to withdraw it now.

This is one of the most horrendous things that has happened to the Canadian public, and to do it on the backs of people who have contributed as much as they have to this society and our children who will be contributing is unconscionable.

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be here in the House today to address this question that is particularly important to Canadian seniors and Canadian families. I want us to remember that we are not talking just about the clawback. We need to look at it in the economic and social context within which we are currently living.

[Translation]

You know very well that there is much less money for education, now. Transfers of funds have been cut not only for education, but also for health. Education is taxed, no matter what the government says, as are some health services. Therefore, when we speak of the famous "clawback" and of its impact on families, we must not consider it as a single occurence. It is there, and it is all the worse because there are other tax measures which impact in a negative way on families.

For instance, there is the goods and services tax. Now, hockey, ball games and other sports will be taxed. Parents pay much more tax than they did five years ago. There have been, I believe, 31 tax increases, and there will be 32, with the goods and services tax. And yet, we know that there is not enough room in day care centres for children, nowadays.

[English]

There is simply insufficient daycare space for children whose parents need to go out and work in order to earn a decent living and to provide them with the basic necessities of life. There is, as well, no tax fairness for those parents who choose to stay at home or are able to do so. That is an unfortunate reality.

The basic question that we have to ask ourselves is not only the one that I have raised already, that is, the clawback in itself being a repressive, regressive measure. I will not go through the numbers but it is also quite clear as to what will happen to well over one million Canadian families within the next decade. They will be caught within that net.

We have to ask that other question. If you look at the massive tax increases, the reduction of transfer payments and all of that within the total context of Canadian society, what message is this government sending to Canadian families? What message is it sending out about children, about our children's future?

It seems to me that we need to invest in families and in children. Clearly this clawback, in addition to many of the other regressive measures taken by government, is not going to contribute to that in any way, shape or form.

[Translation]

Let us now talk about seniors and the impact of the famous clawback on them.

[English]

I think that most of us would recognize that seniors have built this country and we owe them because of what they contributed to the nation. Seniors have invested in this country and they, rightfully so, expect a return on that investment. They have invested not only their talents and their labour, but they have also invested dollars because hon. members are not without knowing that there was, at one time in the not too distant past, a particular provision whereby people who were paying taxes at the time were paying for their senior years so that they could collect a reasonable return upon retirement. They expect a return on that dollar investment.

It is rather interesting, as some of my colleagues have mentioned, that if they had taken those dollars and invested them in a private company and 20, 30 or 40 years later that private company were to say: "Look, we are sorry, your investment is too high in terms of what we can afford", you and I both know what would happen. They would be pursuing that company in a court of law and they in fact would be remunerated appropriately.

The other thing that I think we need to point out is that the clawback and the deindexation are really the same. Government members lost the first round when they tried to deindex and so they are trying again and it looks very much as if they are going to be successful. Let us not kid ourselves. Let us not permit us to be sidetracked. Deindexation and clawback in the final analysis are basically the same issue. They remove what is rightfully that of others from them.

The partial deindexation, as has been mentioned on a number of occasions, is something that a lot of people have difficulty in understanding. Clearly, if it is in fact looked at in terms of $50,000 a year revenue, these seem like large numbers. Today the concept might be somewhat appealing because most people do not earn $50,000 a year, but let us project to the next decade. Let us remember that those people who may be wondering if this is a good idea because they have not had the time to study it as much as they might have will be the victims of this particular initiative of government within the next decade or so. In 10 years, in 15 years, they will be the clawed backs of this country.

The seniors in this country are frightened. I speak to seniors every single week. They do not know whether or not they will be able to continue to pay their bills, whether or not they will be able to continue to have the basic necessities of life, and they feel as if they have been cheated. I sympathize and empathize with them. I think it is a shame that this government should have created that sense of fear, that sense of fright, that sense of real deep concern among those who can very often less easily defend themselves.

Let us look at the kind of country that has been created which has in fact engendered this kind of fear. We have a government whose policies have pitted one region against another. We have seen that with the CF-18 contract about which Manitoba felt grieved and, therefore, felt badly toward Quebec, and I could cite a whole lot of other examples.

The government has pitted one group against another. Other people feel if seniors are earning $50,000 a year, they should in fact not be complaining if there is a clawback. That is what I mean by pitting one group against another rather than taking the time to explain the reality of what is going to happen.

This is a government that is pitting one individual against another. We now have people who are concerned about what their neighbours are doing, whether or not their neighbours will survive, who become jealous of certain tax conditions that some enjoy while they do not.

• (1620)

This is in fact a government that has created a nation in which we are starting increasingly to doubt each other, to be less caring, to be reaching out less than we have in the past.

Quite apart from this context, if you wish, this fear that I have been describing, we know that the government has doubled the debt, in spite of the fact that revenues have increased by well over 50 per cent over the last five years. I have mentioned the 30-plus tax increases. I have mentioned the reduction of the established programs funding that will impact upon health and education.

We also have hidden taxes. The government tries to make us believe, for example, that education is exempt and that health is exempt. Well, let us look at some of those.

[Translation]

Let us take books, for example. Books will be taxed. Take some services. For example, if you take non-credit courses, they will be taxed. And the tax will apply in many other situations.

[English]

This is a country in which there are 3.5 to 5 million poor. Among those are one million children. There are over 150 soup kitchens. The government has just chopped one half of VIA Rail and there are going to be 2,700-plus unemployed. The unemployment figures are really very misleading, because many Canadians do not know that there are Canadians who live on reservations who are not a part of those figures, and that the youth unemployment rate in Newfoundland is close to 25 per cent.

This is a government that has decimated the Atlantic fisheries and has frightened farmers throughout the whole nation. Let us remember, as I complete my remarks, that this is not just a clawback. This is, in fact, a clawback that is regressive and that is frightening, one which is concerning people. We need to look at it within the context of all of the other measures that have been taken and that has added to that fear.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise in my place in the House of Commons this afternoon on behalf of thousands of senior citizens in the great riding of Hamilton West.

For the record, the Conservative agenda could not be more clear. With a cruel, shocking, uncaring attitude, the government has intentionally embarked on a destructive course to dismantle the entire system of old age security in this country. It is an entitlement which Canadians long struggled for, a sacred trust—there are those words again, Mr. Speaker, a sacred trust—honoured by governments over the years.

You will notice that I used the word "entitlement". That is because the old age security is not some kind of a welfare handout, or a government payout, or, as the finance minister once called it, a benefit. It is an entitlement that seniors have paid into since 1952.

Yes, this government is clawing back. There is the image, clawing back, like some big bear, some big, ugly, hungry, wants-to-feed-his-stomach bear with a giant claw. Out it reaches to rip back, and, in essence, confiscating money that belongs to seniors.

Just a little earlier here in this Chamber this afternoon we had a member from Ontario rise in his place and say: "Hey, I haven't heard any complaints. I haven't had any calls on this proposed legislation". I invite that member to hold a town hall meeting in his riding, invite the senior citizens to come and have tea with him in the afternoon so that he can hear and be in tune to what the seniors in his riding are saying. If he does not, I will shortly be having a town hall meeting in my riding of Hamilton West. If he would like to come to my riding and hear directly from seniors, I invite him to that meeting.

Time allocation and closure, for what, the tenth or eleventh time since we began sitting in April. It is the government's way of saying let us get this unpopular measure through Parliament in a hurry because the less Canadians know the better. This government has chosen to ram Bill C-28 down our throats without full and honest discussion but, most important, without a popular mandate.

I remind those members opposite and to my right of the words uttered by their leader, the Prime Minister, on November 8 in Nova Scotia:

> As long as I am Prime Minister, social programs, especially those for the elderly, will be improved, not diminished.

Will this clawback receive full debate? No. Will Canadians across this great land be given the opportunity to consider, be given the right to have some say, some input into this clawback legislation? No. Does this government show any commitment to the social needs of this great country? No. The government has failed to understand. We can go even further and say that this government has chosen, if you can believe it, to tear down the social programs, the social obligations which have made Canada the envy of the world.

It is that principle of universality, that concept of social justice, the very idea that says no matter where you live, no matter what your religious belief, no matter what your income, whether you are rich or poor, no matter what your age, you as a Canadian are entitled to that common threshold of social programs to be found in Canada. There must be one fair Canada for all. This is not the view of the Conservative government, however. Universality is not a philosophy acceptable to a true blue Tory.

There is another image: blue, cold, harsh, unforgiving. To the old age pensioner who has worked hard to scrimp and save and sock away a little in investments for the so-called golden years, the government says: "Just gimme that back and you've got nothing to say about it". That is what they are saying. Closure, right?

Mr. Kempling: Bullshit.

Mr. Keyes: The hon. member for Burlington is using foul language to explain my point of view.

Mr. Kempling: You're sick.

Mr. Keyes: Have you been hearing this, Mr. Speaker? I think other members in the House have been hearing some of the remarks being made and I think it would be only honourable if that member apologized and withdrew those remarks.

In the end, this government then turns its back on the pensioner and says: "That will teach them for being thrifty, for being responsible, for investing in this country. Those old fools." That is what this government is saying.

This is not the Canada that I grew up in. Bill C-28 is a heartless, callous, cunning piece of legislation, sloppy in its creation, devious in its presentation, unacceptable to the parliamentary system, intolerable in its standards. Senior citizens beware. For all of you who are under 65 who have been counting on receiving old age security payments as part of your retirement income, the rules are about to change.

• (1630)

The government's own consultation paper on child and elderly benefits released in January 1985 had this to say about the idea of a surtax, another word for clawback, on old age pensions:

> A special surtax on old age security payments to return more of the benefit paid to upper income pensioners would seriously disrupt our retirement income system, both for current pensioners and those now planning for retirement, and would unduly penalize those most affected by reason of retirement income resulting from private savings in earlier years.

That is what the government paper had to say. What has changed? Is this a new dawn? The clawback takes money that rightfully belongs to Canada's seniors.

In summary, the Minister of Finance must withdraw the bill and for good measure throw in an apology to seniors.

Mr. Kempling: Bullshit. You're sick.

Mr. Keyes: You have been here too many years. You forget what kind of place this is.

Mr. Kempling: You're sick.

Mr. Keyes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During the course of my remarks on this important bill, a bill under closure on which we will be voting in exactly half an hour, I wanted to state my concerns. During the course of my remarks there were remarks made—

Some hon. members: Oh, come on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. If the hon. member has a point of order I wish he would come to it at this point.

Mr. Keyes: I was about to make it, Madam Speaker. The hon. member on the other side of the House made very callous and in fact rude, vulgar remarks heard by other colleagues on my side of the House. I would think it appropriate that he apologize.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has not heard the remarks to which the hon. member for Hamilton West is referring. I am sure that if any hon. member feels that he or she should apologize, he or she will do the honourable thing.

In the meantime we will resume debate with the hon. member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak on this bill, a bill that is going to put an end to universality in this country. This government has attempted to change the issue. It has been telling Canadians and telling us in the House today and for some period of time that it is simply taxing wealthy Canadians and that there is nothing wrong with that. Government members say that they are simply taking back what wealthy Canadians do not really need.

That is not the issue and that is not why we have been opposing this bill. In fact, as far as taxing wealthy Canadians or reducing the deficit is concerned, this bill brings in only something like $300 million to $500 million, which is relatively insignificant with respect to lowering the deficit.

We in the New Democratic Party believe in fair taxation and would certainly support real measures of reform that would bring about some real fair taxation.

The issue is universality. This issue is important because it attacks the very credibility of the government. In 1984 the Prime Minister talked about sacred trusts and approximately a year later he tried to deindex the old age pension. That was an assault on one of the most sacred trusts in this country. It was only because seniors rose up in huge numbers and opposed the measure that the government backed off. Now it is doing the same thing, except it is coming in from the back door.

The government promised before the last election that it would introduce an extensive child care program for this nation. The government made $25 billion worth of commitments that it said would be put in place after the election, but they have not been put in place. There is no child care program and most of the other $25 billion of commitments promised by this government have not been met.

Why should Canadians believe the government when it says: "Don't worry, we will take care of you"? What is going to happen down the road? In a few months or next year the government could reduce the figure for a clawback on the old age pension from $50,000 to perhaps $40,000. Or, if it is $40,000, why not $35,000?

The important fact is that we must maintain the universality of the program to guarantee that the programs will be there when Canadians need them.

The government wants to reduce the deficit. It says that it is important to have these changes made because it is spending too much money and it is having problems with the deficit. There are some very simple solutions. Three to five hundred million dollars is not a lot of money. One simple solution would be to put a fair tax on the $27 billion dollars corporations make in this country which are not taxed at all. Even in the United States under Ronald Reagan they introduced a minimum 10 per cent corporation tax.

If we introduced a 10 per cent tax in this country it would bring in $2.7 billion. That would be enough not only to pay for this this program, the $300 to $500 million, but it would certainly help pay for a proper child care program.

If this government would impose fair taxes on all Canadians, certainly on those who are making over $100,000, it would go a long way to reducing the deficit and to providing some encouragement and some incentive for Canadians to want to try and to want to work. Unfortunately, the way it stands now, middle income Canadians and small business people who are trying to get ahead are paying an unfair share of taxes.

Through the bill before the House today the government wants to change the idea of universality. It is an insidious attack on the whole concept of universality that has been so long accepted by this Parliament and certainly by this country.

The government has imposed time allocation on this bill. It has been imposing time allocation and closure ever since the thirty-fourth Parliament convened. This government has imposed more time allocation and closure in one year than virtually all governments in the history of this country. This government says that it is considerate of the people, that it listens to the people, that it wants to consult with Canadians, but its actions are totally different from its words.

It muzzles Canadians. It muzzles members of Parliament who wanted to speak on behalf of their constituents. That is simply not fair, it is not just, and it is not right. This is not a government that listens. This is not a government that is caring. This is not a government that is compassionate.

The CCF and the NDP were the parties in this country that were responsible for much of the social legislation, the social system that existed in this country before the Tories took power. Our party fought for 50 years in this House and throughout this country for this type of program.

This government, the Progressive Conservative party, has dismantled much of it in five years. It is a tragedy. This government has undone many of the achievements the NDP has contributed to this country.

We have very recently elected a new leader of our party. I know that our leader and the rest of our party certainly have our work cut out for us just to put back in place or just to regain the achievements that we fought so hard and so long to gain for the people of Canada.

• (1640)

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I have one concern about this debate, and that is that the concentration on the clawback is detracting from other provisions in the bill that equally deserve our attention, changes which are damaging to small Canadian businesses.

We have no choice. This clawback is so outrageous, so offensive to fundamental values we have taken for granted for half a century that members have no alternative but to speak out strongly and loudly and for as long as they can on it. I regret that other important and damaging measures in this bill are not receiving the attention they deserve, but I think there is no option for members of the House except to address it, to attach to it the offensive term of clawback, and to continue attacking it.

I want to talk about the effect on the family allowance. The family allowance goes back over half a century. It was brought in by government in support of families, in recognition of the additional costs to families of raising children with a reasonable level of security. When it first came in it represented, for many families, 50 per cent of the family income. Since then it has shrunk and shrunk and shrunk and become less significant while many families with children become more dependent on the welfare system.

The partial deindexing of family allowances in the last session of Parliament was just the latest step in that process. The government claims that it is just taking the family allowance back from families that can afford it. We already do that through the tax system. We already do it by insisting that families declare this as income and that they pay tax on it. Of course if you are in a higher income bracket you automatically pay a higher rate of income tax on that income.

No income other than the allowance for children and the seniors' pension is charged tax at 100 per cent by the government. One can be a millionaire, make a windfall profit overnight, and still pay one's normal rate of tax. Nobody, no matter how rich, pays 100 per cent of tax except seniors on their old age security and families on their children's allowance.

It is hypocrisy to talk about supporting families. It is hypocrisy to talk about the importance of children when we know that over one million children in this country live in poverty. It is hypocrisy to talk about budgets for shelters for battered women. As I said to one of my colleagues over here when he had the temerity to speak on that, "Let's set up shelters for the men and leave the women in their homes with their children".

It is hypocrisy to talk about that and at the same time not to recognize that battering and assault do not happen only in poor families. It happens in well-off families. For many women the family allowance is the only income that they can call their own, that they can use as they choose, and that they can ensure is available to meet the needs of their children no matter what the family income.

I have a limited time left. I have to comment on the hypocrisy from the opposite benches about helping the poor. I do not see any help for the poor in this legislation. I just see taking away from people.

I have to comment on the poverty of elderly women. Some 72 per cent of the elderly poor in this country are women, and this extra bit of income while the spouse is still alive is often the difference between poverty for women when that spouse dies and the pension dies with him and a reasonable, if not comfortable, level of living.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Unfortunately I must interrupt the hon. member. It being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to Order made Monday, December 18, 1989, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the report stage of the bill now before the House.

Therefore the question is on Motion No. 4. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 76(8), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

Motions Nos. 6 and 7 will have to await the outcome of Motion No. 4.

The next question is on Motion No. 10.

Mr. Butland: Madam Speaker, I ask that Motion No. 10 be withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreed?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Motion No. 10 withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred divisions on Bill C-28.

The first vote is on Motion No. 1.

Call in the members.

The House divided on Motion No. 1, which was negatived on the following division:

Government Orders

(Division No. 159)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bellemare
Boudria
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Crawford
Dingwall
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gaffney
Gauthier
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Rideout
Robichaud
Samson
Speller
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Callbeck
Catterall
Comuzzi
de Jong
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harb
Hopkins
Hunter
Kaplan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacLaren
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Riis
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—92

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Corbett
Couture
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins

Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Domm

Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Horning
Hughes
James
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—138

Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Hudon
Jacques
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Vien
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I think that you would find agreement to apply the vote on Motion No. 1 to the deferred division on Motions Nos. 2 and 3, and when you call the vote on the other motions, I will have more to say. But for now, the two deferred divisions are on Motions Nos. 2 and 3. These are the votes that concern us, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: With the same vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): With the same vote, of course! The next vote is on Motion No. 2.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 18 by striking out lines 5 to 10 at page 24.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 160)

YEAS

Members

Allmand	Anawak
Angus	Arseneault
Assad	Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)	Bélair
Bellemare	Black
Boudria	Brewin
Butland	Callbeck
Campbell (South West Nova)	Catterall
Clancy	Comuzzi
Crawford	de Jong
Dingwall	Dionne
Duhamel	Ferguson
Finestone	Fisher
Flis	Fontana
Foster	Fulton
Gaffney	Gardiner
Gauthier	Gray (Windsor West)
Harb	Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hopkins	Hovdebo
Hunter	Jordan
Kaplan	Karpoff
Keyes	Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Kristiansen	Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)	Laporte
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)	Lee
MacAulay	MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLaren	MacLellan
MacWilliam	Maheu
Marchi	Marleau
McLaughlin	Mifflin
Milliken	Mitchell
Murphy	Nault
Nunziata	Nystrom
Parker	Peterson
Phinney	Pickard
Proud	Prud'homme
Rideout	Riis
Robichaud	Rompkey
Samson	Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Speller	Stewart
Stupich	Taylor
Tobin	Vanclief
Volpe	Walker
Whittaker	Wood
Young (Gloucester)	Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—90

NAYS

Members

Andre	Atkinson
Beatty	Belsher
Bernier	Bertrand
Bird	Bjornson
Blackburn (Jonquière)	Blais
Blenkarn	Bosley
Bouchard (Roberval)	Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Bourgault	Boyer
Brightwell	Browes
Cadieux	Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Cardiff	Casey
Chadwick	Champagne (Champlain)
Chartrand	Clark (Yellowhead)
Clark (Brandon—Souris)	Cole
Collins	Cook
Cooper	Corbeil
Corbett	Côté
Couture	Crosbie (St. John's West)
Darling	DeBlois
de Cotret	Della Noce
Desjardins	Domm
Dorin	Duplessis
Edwards	Epp
Fee	Ferland
Fontaine	Fretz
Friesen	Gérin
Gibeau	Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Greene	Grey (Beaver River)
Gustafson	Halliday
Harvey (Chicoutimi)	Hawkes
Hicks	Hockin
Hogue	Horning
Hudon	Hughes
Jacques	James
Jourdenais	Kempling
Koury	Landry
Langlois	Larrivée
Layton	Leblanc (Longueuil)
Lewis	Littlechild
Loiselle	Lopez
MacDonald (Rosedale)	MacDougall (Timiskaming)
MacKay	Malone
Marin	Martin (Lincoln)
Masse	McDermid
McDougall (St. Paul's)	McKnight
McLean	Merrithew
Monteith	Moore
Nicholson	Oberle
O'Kurley	Paproski
Plamondon	Plourde
Porter	Pronovost
Redway	Reid
Reimer	Ricard
Richardson	Robitaille
Roy-Arcelin	Schneider
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)	Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Shields	Siddon
Sobeski	Soetens
Sparrow	Stevenson
Tardif	Tétreault
Thacker	Thompson
Thorkelson	Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Tremblay (Lotbinière)	Turner (Halton—Peel)
Van de Walle	Vankoughnet
Venne	Vézina
Vien	Vincent
Weiner	White
Wilbee	Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)	Winegard
Worthy—139

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost. The next vote is on Motion No. 3.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie) moved:

Motion No. 3

That Bill C-28 be amended in Clause 47 by striking out line 1 at page 45 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) 0.05 percent of tax payable under Part 1 by".

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

Government Orders

(Division No. 161)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bellemare
Boudria
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Crawford
Dingwall
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gaffney
Gauthier
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Rideout
Robichaud
Samson
Speller
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)
Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Callbeck
Catterall
Comuzzi
de Jong
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harb
Hopkins
Hunter
Kaplan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacLaren
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Riis
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—92

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Corbett
Couture
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Horning
Hughes
James
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—138
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Hudon
Jacques
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Vien
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Ottawa South on a point of order.

Mr. Manley: Madam Speaker, for reasons given in debate, I would like to be shown as not voting on Motion No. 2.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member has been heard and notice has been taken. The Hon. Member for Beaver River.

Miss Grey: Madam Speaker, in the interests of saving time, I would like to have it on the record that for Motion No. 2, I am voting nay.

I would like to make it quite clear to members opposite that in this particular instance I will be voting with that side.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on Motion No. 4.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, in the interests of saving time, I would like to recommend that you seek unanimous consent to apply the vote just taken on Motion No. 1, with the exceptions on Motion No. 2 we just heard, to Motion No. 4 which I understand will also apply to Motions Nos. 6 and 7.

The House divided on Motion No. 4, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 162)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bellemare
Boudria
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Crawford
Dingwall
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gaffney
Gauthier
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Rideout
Robichaud
Samson
Speller
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)
Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Callbeck
Catterall
Comuzzi
de Jong
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harb
Hopkins
Hunter
Kaplan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacLaren
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Riis
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—92

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Corbett
Couture
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Horning
Hughes
James
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—138
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Hudon
Jacques
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Vien
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

• (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

This negative vote necessitates a vote on Motion No. 6 and a vote on Motion No. 6 would apply to Motion No. 7.

On a point of order the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I would think that you might find unanimous consent to apply the votes we have been applying also to Motions Nos. 6 and 7.

Also we will have the floor apply these votes to Nos. 6 and 7 which would then be negated, and the reverse to the report stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kamloops. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The next question is on Motion No. 6 which vote will also apply to Motion No. 7.

The House divided on Motion No. 6, which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 163)

YEAS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bellemare
Boudria
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Crawford
Dingwall
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gaffney
Gauthier
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Parker
Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Callbeck
Catterall
Comuzzi
de Jong
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harb
Hopkins
Hunter
Kaplan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacLaren
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Peterson
Phinney
Proud
Rideout
Robichaud
Samson
Speller
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)
Pickard
Prud'homme
Riis
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—92

NAYS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Corbett
Couture
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Horning
Hughes
James
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Hudon
Jacques
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle

Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—138
Venne
Vien
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost. I therefore declare Motion No. 7 lost.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 164)

YEAS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Corbett
Couture
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Horning
Hughes
James
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Hudon
Jacques
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Soetens
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—138
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Vien
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

NAYS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bellemare
Boudria
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Crawford
Dingwall
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gaffney
Gauthier
Grey (Beaver River)
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
McLaughlin
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Rideout
Robichaud
Samson
Speller
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)
Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Callbeck
Catterall
Comuzzi
de Jong
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harb
Hopkins
Hunter
Kaplan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacLaren
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
Mifflin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Riis
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—92

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

When shall the bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Government Orders

CROP INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, December 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C–48, an act to amend the Crop Insurance Act be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 45(5) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion of the Minister of Agriculture for the second reading of Bill C–48, an Act to amend the Crop Insurance Act. Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 165)

YEAS

Members

Andre
Beatty
Bernier
Bird
Blackburn (Jonquière)
Blenkarn
Bouchard (Roberval)
Bourgault
Brightwell
Cadieux
Cardiff
Chadwick
Chartrand
Clark (Brandon—Souris)
Collins
Cooper
Corbett
Couture
Darling
de Cotret
Desjardins
Dorin
Edwards
Fee
Fontaine
Friesen
Gibeau
Greene
Gustafson
Harvey (Chicoutimi)
Hicks
Hogue
Hudon
Jacques
Jourdenais
Koury
Langlois
Layton
Lewis
Loiselle
MacDonald (Rosedale)
MacKay
Marin
Masse
McDougall (St. Paul's)
McLean
Monteith
Nicholson
O'Kurley
Plamondon
Porter
Redway
Reimer
Richardson
Roy-Arcelin
Schneider
Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth)
Siddon
Soetens
Stevenson
Tétreault
Thompson
Tremblay (Québec-Est)
Turner (Halton—Peel)
Vankoughnet
Vézina
Vincent
White
Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia)
Wilson (Etobicoke Centre)
Worthy—140

Atkinson
Belsher
Bertrand
Bjornson
Blais
Bosley
Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Boyer
Browes
Campbell (Vancouver Centre)
Casey
Champagne (Champlain)
Clark (Yellowhead)
Cole
Cook
Corbeil
Côté
Crosbie (St. John's West)
DeBlois
Della Noce
Domm
Duplessis
Epp
Ferland
Fretz
Gérin
Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine)
Grey (Beaver River)
Halliday
Hawkes
Hockin
Horning
Hughes
James
Kempling
Landry
Larrivée
Leblanc (Longueuil)
Littlechild
Lopez
MacDougall (Timiskaming)
Malone
Martin (Lincoln)
McDermid
McKnight
Merrithew
Moore
Oberle
Paproski
Plourde
Pronovost
Reid
Ricard
Robitaille
St-Julien
Scott (Victoria—Haliburton)
Shields
Sobeski
Sparrow
Tardif
Thacker
Thorkelson
Tremblay (Lotbinière)
Van de Walle
Venne
Vien
Weiner
Wilbee
Winegard

NAYS

Members

Allmand
Angus
Assad
Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)
Bellemare
Boudria
Butland
Campbell (South West Nova)
Clancy
Crawford
Dingwall
Duhamel
Finestone
Flis
Foster
Gaffney
Gauthier
Harb
Hopkins
Hunter
Kaplan
Keyes
Kristiansen
Langdon (Essex—Windsor)
LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)
MacAulay
MacLaren
MacWilliam
Manley
Marleau
Milliken
Murphy
Nunziata
Parker
Phinney
Proud
Rideout
Robichaud
Samson
Speller
Stupich
Tobin
Volpe
Whittaker
Young (Gloucester)

Anawak
Arseneault
Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing)
Bélair
Black
Brewin
Callbeck
Catterall
Comuzzi
de Jong
Dionne
Ferguson
Fisher
Fontana
Fulton
Gardiner
Gray (Windsor West)
Harvey (Edmonton East)
Hovdebo
Jordan
Karpoff
Kilger (Stormont—Dundas)
Langan (Mission—Coquitlam)
Laporte
Lee
MacDonald (Dartmouth)
MacLellan
Maheu
Marchi
McLaughlin
Mitchell
Nault
Nystrom
Peterson
Pickard
Prud'homme
Riis
Rompkey
Skelly (Comox—Alberni)
Stewart
Taylor
Vanclief
Walker
Wood
Young (Beaches—Woodbine)—90

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

* * *

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, pursuant to the tabling of several Ways and Means motions earlier today by the Minister of Finance that relate to the goods and services tax, I would ask that an Order of the Day be designated for each.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I believe you will find there is unanimous consent to proceed with Bill C-31 at this point, and that we will deal with all stages, that the government will introduce four amendments to that bill and that it will pass on division.

Any time taken from the normal private members' hour to deal with Bill C-31 will be added to the regular time to make sure that private members' hour does have the full hour and that time would then be followed by the usual "late show".

I would also like to ask if the House would give their consent to allow us to release our Pages at this time, because I understand they have a much deserved Christmas party tonight and none of us would want them to be late for that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion made by the hon. parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall we all wish our Pages a nice night?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNOR GENERAL'S ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Right Hon. Joe Clark (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C-31, an act to amend the Governor General's Act be read the second time, and by unanimous consent, referred to a Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

On Clause 1—

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chairman, I move:

That Clause 1 of Bill C-31 be amended by striking out lines 9 and 10 on page 1 and substituting the following:

"Governor General for the 12 month period beginning on January 1, 1989 a salary of $83,800."

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Mr. Boudria: Madam Chairman, perhaps if we could get the attention of the House it would be a little easier to continue with the bill.

This amendment changes the amount of the bill and the Chair will have to enlighten me. Because we are increasing the amount as opposed to merely changing the retroactivity clause, does this amendment require a royal recommendation and, if so, does the Chair have that?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I think that, by rereading both the bill and the amendment proposed by the parliamentary secretary, the member will realize that no, it does not need the royal recommendation as we are talking about less money than was originally in the bill.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Chairman, I agree but perhaps for a slightly different reason.

I think in fact the retroactivity provision was to start on January 1, 1988 with a second clause to further add to that for 1989. What the new clause does, as I understand it, is put the amount including the multiplier effect together in order to give effect to the 1989 rate immediately, if my understanding is correct.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chairman, the purpose of the amendment to Clause 1 is to replace 1988 by 1989 and to replace $80,000 by $83,800 which is $80,000 for the annual salary in the original bill for 1988 plus the $3,800 for the 1989 indexation adjustment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

TheAssistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 1, as amended, carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

Clause agreed to.

• (1740)

On Clause 2—

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I have an amendment for Clause 2.

I move:

That Clause 2 of Bill C-31 be amended by striking out line 15 on page 1 and substituting the following:

"beginning on January 1, 1990 and for each"

There is no explanation necessary. It follows again that it is the 1990 effect.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 as amended carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 3—

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I move:

That Clause 3 of Bill C-31 be amended

(a) by striking out line 31 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"1, 1989 and ending on the day preceding the"

(b) by striking out line 36 on page 2 and substituting the following:

"beginning on January 1, 1989 and ending"

The purpose of this is, of course, to replace 1988 by 1989 for retroactive adjustment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3 as amended carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 4—

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I move:

That Clause 4 of Bill 31 be amended by striking out lines 4 to 7 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"4. This Act shall be deemed to have come into force on January 1, 1989."

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 as amended carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: On division.

Clause agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the Title carry?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that the bill, as amended, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When shall the bill be read a third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (for Mr. Mazankowski) moved that the bill be now read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Some hon. members: On division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 5.45 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

MINING

MINERAL MARKETING AGENCY

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of developing, in consultation with provincial and local governments, with industry and with labour unions, a co-operative mineral-marketing agency to further promote Canadian refined minerals in the world marketplace.

He said: Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak to my colleagues on a motion that asks the government to consider the advisability of developing, in consultation with provincial and local governments, with industry and with labour unions, a co-operative mineral-marketing agency to further promote Canadian refined minerals in the world marketplace.

Before I speak on the specific concept presented in this motion I would like to remind the House of the importance of the mineral industry in Canada. Canada's minerals and metals industry accounts for about 3 per cent of our gross domestic product and almost 20 per cent of total merchandise exports. The industry provides a livelihood, directly or indirectly, for hundreds of thousands of Canadians from Newfoundland to British Columbia. Some 120 communities in Canada depend largely on mining or mineral processing for their livelihood.

In 1988 the mineral industry continued to be one of the two most important primary industries supporting the Ontario economy. Approximately $50 million was spent on exploration in the Yukon and far northern British Columbia in 1988.

In British Columbia there were increases in the value of mineral production in 1988 because of new gold mines and increased prices for zinc, copper and coal. In Manitoba the exploration expenditure levels were maintained at 1987 levels at an estimated $50 million.

I would like to take a moment and remind the minister responsible for mines that the mineral development agreements that allowed for the completion of many worth-while projects are coming to an end in most of the provinces.

It is hoped that this government will look at little further than the immediate future and consider the possibility of renewing these agreements. These federal-provincial mineral development agreements are sub-agreements to the more general economic and regional development agreements.

In British Columbia alone the projects under the MDA represented a substantial part of all the scientific and geotechnical information made available to the mining industry and other interested users. They have had significant positive impact on the focus of exploration programs, the discovery of new mineral prospects and the development of cost effective and environmentally sound access routes to remote mine sites. As well, the program helped identify new markets for this province's underdeveloped industrial mineral sector.

My motion speaks of creating a co-operative mode of operation to help the sale of Canadian refined minerals. Let us look at what happens in other fields when the sale of natural resources is organized under a co-operative model.

One model of co-operative that has proven quite beneficial in the marketing and sale of resources lies in the agricultural sector. I think of Agropur, the co-operative that regroups milk producers in Quebec as a good organizational example.

Far from me, however, to propose the exact same model for the mineral sector. Mining is a high capital venture and workers, as well as governments, have many priorities to deal with before starting to invest in a new field.

• (1750)

However, it would be feasible to study the possibility of a co-operative system that would help promote further refining of our minerals by finding markets and pooling the production.

[Translation]

Co-operatives work very well in Quebec, in our forests, another of our natural resources. They go back to the forties, and were consolidated and rejuvenated in the sixties. They are beginning to accumulate resources, to diversify and to become involved in downstream lumber activities.

[English]

Other examples of co-operatives which have been successful are the plywood co-ops in the northwest and on the Pacific coast in the States.

As well, we might want to consider the possibility of helping workers to buy existing installations for the transformation of minerals. In Virginia, the Weirton Steel Corporation was bought by its workers at a cost of $386 million in January of 1984. That was accomplished after the parent company, National Steel, wanted to close down the shop. There are other examples as well.

I know of many single industry towns that face an uncertain future due to the possibility of mine closures. The workers and their families feel powerless facing a multinational corporation that deals in hard currencies with a specific goal in mind. By helping these workers to participate in a lengthening of the cycle of production, by letting them have a say and to take part in the same effort, we can only benefit from it in the future. By regrouping co-operatives such as these under an umbrella, we could achieve a more sustainable economic development for our natural resources.

We must increase the integration between sectors and promote greater research and development activities while increasing Canadian control if we are to build these forward and backward linkages from the resource base.

The Department of Industry, Science and Technology has not done enough to promote synergy and create links between the primary sector and the manufacturing sector. More efforts must be made in that department.

Under the Ontario Mining Act, the Ontario government has the power to require companies to increase further processing of ores in Canada but it has allowed a number of specific exemptions. Falconbridge still exports nickel-copper matte to its refinery in Norway while Inco ships nickel oxide sinter and nickel sulphide to its plant in Clydach, Wales, for processing.

Take the case of copper mining in British Columbia. This is a highly unstable industry in which multinational companies produce concentrates solely for export. No copper is currently smelted in B.C., though the development of a smelter and of manufacturing facilities for the production of copper wire could be established.

It is not hard to conceive that the earth does not possess an inexhaustible source of goods for humans to use and sometimes abuse, and that we all must work towards a sustainable form of economic development that would take into account the future generations. We do not want to leave behind only stumps where trees once grew, or gaping holes with all of the richness they once contained spent and gone. We must make intelligent use of these resources that are present in a finite amount.

By promoting value-added products we extend the cycle, and this is the kind of rationalization that would provide a much needed stability.

We deal in a global economy. Some of our weaknesses when faced with strong competition have been shown through failures in the free trade agreement to protect our markets.

Not only do we have to build a stronger industry in order to counteract the problems we face because of the free trade agreement, we also have to look beyond.

If we want to compete on a world-wide scale we must become more organized and pull together. A co-operative mineral-marketing agency would, I believe, help us find new markets for refined minerals and encourage the development of more refining plants, thus helping us achieve a more rational and cost-effective use of our mineral resources.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the chance to speak on M-73 this evening on this important matter. I would like first to spend some time reviewing the facts so that we can view this issue in perspective.

This is not to deny that there are important challenges ahead in expanding existing markets or developing new markets for Canada's minerals and metals, but simply to provide a reminder that Canadian minerals and metals producers have been operating in an export-oriented environment for some time.

The minerals and metals industry in Canada accounts for about 3 per cent of gross domestic product but almost 20 per cent of total merchandise exports. This indicates in a nutshell the special position of the industry. For while Canada is a world-class producer of many minerals, 15 per cent of the world's zinc, 21 per cent of the world's nickel, 23 per cent of the world's potash, 31 per cent of the world's uranium and 18 per cent of the world's titanium concentrates, to name just a few, our relatively small population generates a limited market for these commodities with which we are so richly endowed.

It is natural, then, that we should look beyond our borders to find customers for the output of our mines and our refineries and smelters. As a result, Canada exports a high proportion of its production of some minerals and metals—96 per cent of nickel production, 93 per cent of copper production, 87 per cent of zinc production and 90 per cent of potash production. These examples are from the high end of the scale, it is true, but a high degree of export orientation is present throughout the entire mining sector.

The fact that Canada exports significant amounts of its minerals should not be taken to imply that Canada does not take advantage of the rich resource endowment to generate economic activity and employment in the further processing of our mineral resources. As I have just suggested in referring to refineries and smelters, and as my colleague, Mr. Johnson, pointed out in the House last October during debate on another motion of the hon. member from Timmins—Chapleau, Canada has a strong processing sector and in the case of certain commodities, most notably gold, nickel, zinc, copper and aluminum, it is world class.

One hundred per cent of nickel ore produced in Canada is upgraded into nickel matte domestically. Furthermore, some two-thirds of this is refined in Canada. About 94 per cent of our gold production in 1987 and 75 per cent of silver concentrates were processed here in this country. More than 56 per cent of copper and of zinc concentrates received upgrading in Canada. We have an aluminum industry which relies entirely on imported bauxite and alumina for its feedstocks.

Here is a good example of further processing in Canada which has developed even without the stimulus of domestically available raw materials. So, it should not be thought that Canada exports the bulk of its minerals in the form of ores and concentrates.

The representatives of Canada's minerals and metals industry and this government recognize that if the sector is to continue to make a major contribution to Canada's economy and to economic development of our regions, we must be prepared to compete head to head in world markets with the world's most efficient minerals and metals producers. This is the motivating force behind the government's commitment to trade liberalization under the multilateral trade negotiations, MTN, to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and to tax reform.

The decade of the 1990s will be an acceleration of the dismantling of trade barriers of all types and Canada's minerals and metals industry has both the experience and the know-how to take advantage of the opportunities which will arise as a result.

Throughout the first half of the 1980s, Canada's minerals and metals industry was under intense pressure due to a combination of factors—high world capacity levels and inventory levels, a major slowdown in economic activity, and so on—which resulted in low commodity prices worldwide. This set of circumstances produced a large number of casualties throughout the world but Canada's mining sector weathered the storm very well. Recognizing that no long-term relief would be obtained through lobbying for protectionist measures, the industry set about improving its efficiency as the only sensible way to respond.

• (1800)

It embraced new technologies and made organizational changes which led to very significant productivity gains. Improvements of up to 50 per cent in five years were not unknown. The impressive performance helped the industry through the crisis period of the early to mid-1980s but also gave it the strength to face the future with confidence. As a result, the industry has a solid basis from which to consolidate its position in the markets it currently serves and to penetrate new markets.

I have given a brief review of some of the recent history and of how Canada's minerals and metals industry is structured in relation to the international economy. In order to increase its contribution to this economy, two factors are important. First, artificial barriers which create impediments to trade must be removed. Considerable progress has been made in this direction already, but more remains to be done.

Second, as in any market, it is difficult to win any customers from the competition. Difficult, I say, but not impossible. At a minimum, one needs a competitive product at a competitive price. The policies of this government foster both of these objectives. An efficient industry combined with a fair and simple tax regime allows Canada's minerals and metals producers to deliver their product on the world market at a competitive price.

A competitive product is also important, and I will now say a few words on this subject.

We all know that price is not the only factor involved in the success of a product. The product must also satisfy the user's wants and needs. Most people recognize this in the case of consumer goods, for example, running shoes, audio cassettes, or fast food, but it is also true in the case of products of Canada's minerals and metals industry. The industry produces products with varying characteristics of size, strength, durability, corrosion resistance, weight and so on. Often, one desirable characteristic must be traded off against the other.

The mineral and metal products which are transformed by a variety of manufacturing processes into a wide range of final goods must of course meet or surpass the requirements of manufacturers and, ultimately, of the final users. This is another area of competition where Canada's minerals and metals industry has worked hard. It has tailored its products to the needs of its customers, developing new and stronger alloys, more corrosion-resistant metals and so on. These products ultimately find their way into tennis racquets, automobile parts and a large number of other products. The benefits of these research efforts are thus spread more widely. This is an increasingly important area of competition and one where much remains to be done. I have no doubt, though, that Canada's producers will meet this challenge.

I have tried to establish the main features of Canada's minerals and metals industry. I believe that it is an industry which is very outward looking and indeed it must be so. It is also fully aware that for success it requires export markets.

My colleagues will expand further on these points as they relate to the motion before us.

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on Private Members' Business Motion No. 73 concerning the advisability of setting up a mineral marketing agency.

Canada ranks as a leading producer and exporter of minerals and metals in the world. It has achieved this distinguished honour in overall value terms which reflect both the high tonnages and wide diversity of mineral and metal products derived from our mines. Indeed, there are only a small number of minerals and metals that are not commercially produced in Canada.

A prominent characteristic of the mining and metallurgical industry is the global latitude and integration of this sector. Production from mining through to the final processing and marketing are a global phenomenon.

Large Canadian mining companies are truly multinational corporations. They have mining and metallurgical facilities in many parts of the world and marketing is undertaken from a corporate perspective rather than strictly home country interests. In other words, a Canadian firm might mine a mineral commodity in Canada, process it along with raw materials from other origins in another country, and market the entire output without regard to origin.

Equally significant is the fact that foreign firms have ownership interests in Canadian mining and metallurgical facilities. Earlier in our history these foreign enterprises were typically American or British. However, for several years Canada has attracted French, German and Italian companies, and more recently, Australian, Brazilian, Korean and Japanese firms. Like their Canadian partners and competitors, these companies also spread their loyalties across national boundaries. They are usually fiercely competitive and independent when it comes to corporate details relating to marketing.

Throughout its history, the Canadian industry has evolved and flourished on the strengths of exports. Certainly over the past few decades our industry has established a strong footing in the international marketplace. The larger companies in particular have created complex and sophisticated marketing organizations that are capable of identifying and taking advantage of market opportunities anywhere in the world. Some regularly trade and hedge commodities as an integral part of their business, and a few even maintain seats on the prestigious London Metal Exchange.

In countries where markets operate differently from those familiar to us in North America, such as the Soviet bloc, our companies often seek the advice and assistance of our federal and provincial governments. Such assistance may be in the form of information, arranging contracts with high-level officials, organizing mining missions and, in rare cases, even participating in the negotiating process.

Other government facilities such as the support of the Export Development Corporation in providing insurance, assistance with market studies under the auspices of federal-provincial mineral development agreements and demonstration projects such as the fertilizer mixing plant funded by the Canadian International Development Agency and donated to China have played an important role in fostering Canadian exports.

In view of the many minerals and metals produced by Canada, it should not come as a surprise that there are a multitude of very different marketing activities in place. Each corresponds to a particular case which may stem from the business ideology of individual players, the specific commodity under consideration, domestic and international practices that have a proven track record, the way in which each firm is organized, and market conditions at a particular point in time. Let me elaborate.

One of the most structured and successful co-operative marketing undertakings by a Canadian mine is Canpotex Limited. The company was incorporated in 1970. It is owned by all of the Saskatchewan potash producers, except one small company.

Under its charter, Canpotex was organized to buy, sell and deal in potash and associated and allied derivative products for export to all destinations other than Canada and the United States. The company is also engaged in the transportation of potash. It owns or leases 1,700 covered hopper cars, warehouses and docks. It ships products by chartered ships through its subsidiary Canpotex Shipping Services.

More recently Canpotex has initiated agronomic and development programs in overseas countries. In China, for example, it is engaged in organizing farmers' demonstration plots, holding harvest field days and broadcasting television and radio education programs highlighting the results of these activities.

Canpotex is by far the largest world supplier of potash to major markets in Asia, Latin America and Oceania. It is currently developing a substantial market in Europe. Canpotex is responsible for between 40 per cent and 45 per cent of Canadian potash exports that were valued at $1.365 billion in 1988.

• (1810)

Although many companies prefer to market their products independently, some join organizations which may have as an objective the global development of demand. Usually these organizations are international institutions or study groups. Membership may be limited to companies, as is the case for sulphur, nickel, cobalt, tungsten, gold and others, or it may comprise governments with industry advisers, such as the International Lead and Zinc Study Group. In nearly all cases, however, the companies contribute specified statistics and technical data, but rarely get involved in joint marketing activities. Indeed, they carefully maintain their independence and individualities when it comes to marketing strategies and sales activities. One of the more compelling reasons for their caution is the risk of running afoul of anti-trust and competition regulations. This concern is particularly true for any company that operates in the United States.

Industry structure is a prominent factor in the case of iron ore. In North America, the steel companies own or control all of the iron ore mines. Hence the first priority of these mines is to fill the raw material requirements of their owners. Only then are they in a position to market elsewhere. The quantity available to other markets can fluctuate widely over a period of one year, and from year to year, leaving little scope for co-operative marketing initiative. Certainly, it would not be a viable basis on which to build an ongoing marketing program.

Even when considering a single commodity there can be opposing regional views in Canada on marketing strategies. Western copper producers, for example, market concentrates while those in the east largely sell refined copper. The opportunities and problems in marketing copper by these two groups can be very different. An initiative taken by one group, such as the importation of concentrates to satisfy smelter requirements in the east, can be detrimental to the interests of other groups, especially in western Canada.

As my last example, you will recall the Canadian Steel Trade and Employment Congress. This organization was initiated through a conference in 1985 with company and union leadership and with support from universities and federal and provincial government departments. The congress takes an active role in lobbying governments which, depending on the circumstances, might be domestic or foreign. It recently published a document entitled: Steel Trade between the U.S.A. and Canada. Membership is now confined to company and union representatives. Two task forces have been formed, one on trade and the other on employment and adjustment. These are very good moves.

I hope that these examples have made clear that the marketing of minerals and metals by Canadian firms is a highly complex subject and takes many forms. As a general rule, Canadian companies regard marketing strictly as a private sector activity. Furthermore, there are so many variables, whether viewed in the context of the industry, a specific firm or by commodity, that one cannot accept easily the notion of a single marketing approach. Indeed, the facts seem to suggest quite the opposite.

If we perceive an opportunity or a problem in the marketing of Canadian minerals and metals, we would be prudent in analyzing all the circumstances of the specific issue and only subsequently consider options that might improve it. We would then be in a much stronger and better position to judge the merits of any alternative courses of action, if any.

I would like to thank the member once again for bringing this important issue to the attention of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Saint-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, this evening I would like to talk about the sale and international marketing of refined minerals. The Canadian mineral industry has become mainly a major producer, supplying foreign markets. In the case of certain minerals like asbestos and potash, over 90 per cent of Canadian production is exported. The percentage is over 75 per cent in the case of many other products.

In 1988, Canadian exports of minerals and metals were worth $34.8 billion. Canada is also a major importer of minerals and metals. The total value of imports in 1988 was $18.8 billion. Although some of the minerals imported are not produced commercially in this country, most are purchased as feed stock for Canadian refineries and then re-exported. Aluminum is a good example of imported minerals that are subsequently exported.

Madam Speaker, the motion before the House today concerns two issues: A co-operative mineral-marketing agency and promoting the marketing of refined minerals. I shall, if I may, concentrate on the latter.

Some minerals and metals are sold in various forms. Their form, in other words, the amount of processing that takes place before export, varies depending on the product. To a certain extent, the processing depends on the market or international marketing patterns.

A product like coal does not have to undergo any processing other than washing or enriching or both, which is usually done on the spot at most coal mining operations in the world. Potash, whether it comes from Saskatchewan or New Brunswick or any other source, is enriched and refined on the spot before being shipped for export. The situation varies where iron ore is concerned. In Australia and Brazil, the ore is so rich that it does not have to be processed into concentrate before it is sold or used in steel production. In Canada, the iron ore is low quality and must therefore be concentrated on the spot before shipping to Canadian and foreign markets.

The situation varies a great deal in the case of non-ferrous metals, and their commercial form depends on various factors: first, the product and the structure of the industry worldwide; second, the location of the mine in Canada; third, the type of ore and its metallurgical properties; fourth, the ore's by-products or co-products, including certain elements such as sulphur; and last but not least, the market.

Let us first look at the product and the structure of the industry worldwide. In the case of gold, whether it is obtained by placer mining or traditional extraction methods, the metal is recovered on the spot. The ultimate refining process takes place at the refinery of the Royal Canadian Mint.

Cooper is a different story. In Eastern Canada, the ore is concentrated, smelted and refined at Canadian facilities. In British Columbia, the ore is concentrated locally and then exported, mainly to Japan, where refineries have been built to process ore from various countries. In other words, if Canada wants to sell copper to Japan, it has to compete with other world suppliers. International competition imposes two pre-conditions: competitive prices and the South Korea are very efficient and are competitive internationally.

The second factor relates to the mines location. Some Canadian mines are in the far North of in areas far removed from Canadian smelters and refineries. When we have mines in these locations, it makes economic sense to concentrate the ore and ship it to a smelter that is readily accessible, instead of building one at the mine or nearby.

• (1820)

Madam Speaker, the third and fourth factors, namely the types of ore and its metallurgical properties, are self-explanatory. The fifth factor, namely the market, is very important in any discussion about marketing and processing minerals and metals. Everyone knows that Canada's minerals and metal production is largely exported to the United States. Canada's other major markets are Japan and the Common Market countries. What may not be as widely know is that the United States purchases a much larger share of fully processed products. Although there are a number of other factors, the fact remains that tariffs and tariff structures have had a major impact on the direction and structure of world trade in minerals and metals.

Madam speaker, generally speaking, the tariffs on imports imposed by our trading partners were structured in such a way as to establish and protect Canadian processing, semi-manufacturing and manufacturing industries.

Madam Speaker, a major initiative taken by the present governement was to negotiate and implement the Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The agreement's main objective was to create a free trade environment in which Canadian producers, whether they are involved in minerals or other industries, can compete on an equal footing with American producers, on a market reaching two million people. The agreement has eliminated trading policies whose objectives were biased. Government policies had had the effect of interfering with the free exchange of goods by our two countries.

Another measure taken by this government concerns the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations currently taking place in Geneva. In September, Canada tabled proposals aimed at reducing and eliminating as far as possible the tariff and non-tariff barriers that interfere with world trade.

Madam Speaker, throught these negotiations we are trying to establish better ways to access markets in the European Community, Japan and a host of other countries. Dismantling some of the main trading barriers will provide all the flexibility Canadian minerals and metals producers need to offer a wider range of products for exports and discourage them from building processing facilities in Canada to supply foreigh markets.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I would like to apply my comments on government policy and mineral exports to the first item raised in the motion, namely a co-operative mineral-marketing agency. It would be difficult for this kind of agency to alter trading policies that exist in Canada and elsewhere. Consequently, the agency would be hard pressed to change the form in which minerals and metals are exported from Canada, without a system of subsidies to compensate for the harmful impact of the trading policies of other countries. Canada would also have trouble adopting a subsidy plan. First of all, it would be a very expensive undertaking, and second, Mr. Speaker, such a plan would be a contradiction of the direction in which multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva are going at the present time.

[English]

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mrs. Speaker, I am afraid that I was too nice and too good today. I allowed my colleague to speak ahead of me and somehow lost my turn. But last is not least. It is nice to have the Conservatives owing me one for a change.

I want to say that when I read this motion I was not quite clear what exactly the member had in mind when he said that he wanted the government to consider the advisability of developing, in consultation with provincial and local governments, with industry and with labour unions, a co-operative mineral marketing agency to further promote—and I want to emphasize this part of it—"Canadian refined minerals in the world marketplace".

I was wondering whether the member was implying by this that our mineral exporting agencies that are privately owned in our mining sector do not promote its minerals properly. Is it that it is not selling its minerals? I do not understand this motion at all. I can tell you that I do understand the importance of the mining sector.

I was born in a mining town, a gold mining town, Kirkland Lake to be exact, in northern Ontario. As a child, I saw what happens when you run out of gold. The mine closes. You cannot do much about it when it is not there anymore.

When I married I moved to Sudbury, which is the nickel capital of the world. I have lived through all kinds of problems in that area. I can tell you that in the early 1980s we had a huge recession. We had a huge problem in Sudbury. There were mountainous stockpiles of minerals and the price of nickel on the world markets was extremely low. The demand was not there. You could not sell it internationally. I do not care how much you promoted it. The demand just was not there. I do not see how this kind of agency would have helped us in any way whatsoever in those years when there just was not any demand for the minerals. You can promote something all you want. If you do not have anybody who wants to buy it, what is the use?

I really would like to have at some point, if I could, further explanations as to what exactly is meant by "further promote Canadian refined minerals". I understand very much the heartache of the single industry town when its products no longer sell, when the mine is forced to close, when there are no other jobs to go to, when it becomes very devastating.

I think it is very important that the government play a very strong role in encouraging secondary manufacturing in those areas with the mineral products involved, not just secondary manufacturing but the whole service sector that is involved in the particular mineral that is being extracted. Also, as much as possible the exploration and development of new sites must be encouraged.

The hon. member to my left mentioned Falconbridge as a mine that exports the raw matte to Norway to have it refined. That is correct. They export it to Norway to have it refined. That is a long story. It stems back to the early years when Inco had the patent on processing and Falconbridge was not able to get access to it. They found out that Norway was the only country where they were allowed to get a patent. They bought an old refinery and started processing their ores there.

I would like Falconbridge to further process its ores in Canada but, on the other hand, I am a lot happier that they are developing new mines, new technologies, new environmental controls. There are a lot of jobs in that, far more so than in having just the refinery there. We know, of course, that Inco does its refining in Copper Cliff, in my riding, and that is fantastic. They are now expending large amounts of money to control pollution. Again, we certainly encourage that. This motion would not have helped Inco reach the point where it is now.

Demand has to be there and the prices have to be worth while.

It is all well and good to go down and get the mineral but if it costs you double what you can sell it for, after a while it does not work any more. You definitely do not want to keep bringing up minerals you cannot sell. That is of no use to anybody, so I do not agree with this motion. I do not see what use it would be to anyone to have a nationalized type of market-place. First of all, I do not believe in nationalizing industries because I do not think governments run things better than private enterprise. When the government gets its hands on something, we can usually be sure that if there was a profit to be made it is gone.

• (1830)

I am not at all in favour of this motion. Perhaps the member who has proposed the motion would at some point like to sit down with me and explain why he proposed it. I know that right now there are no stockpiles in Sudbury. I do not know about his area of Timmins. However I think they are doing very well. In my area they are doing just fine. They are hoping that the demand continues the way it has been and that the prices remain at a viable level.

On the other hand, they would certainly like to see the interest levels come down and they would like to see the value of the Canadian dollar come down. I met with the president of International Nickel a couple of weeks ago. He was telling me that for every one cent the Canadian dollar increases, it costs them $9 million in profits over a period of one year. I think they would really benefit from a loosening of the monetary policy. That would further enhance their product and cause even better returns on their investments.

I would suggest to the government that it seriously consider that and seriously consider listening to the finance committee's suggestion that the government do just that. It is a very strong point with me. I believe that that is far more important now than any marketing agency in a world-wide sense because metals are by and large sold across the world.

There is some hope as the developing countries are demanding some metals, and there is hope that it will continue into the nineties. For those areas with mines that have just closed down, I certainly would like to see some drastic measures in encouraging other developments in mining. That would certainly be the answer to their problems.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Madam Speaker, as the member for Richmond—Wolfe, I welcome this opportunity to rise in the House and speak to this motion which favours the development of a co-operative agency. The motion is of particular interest to me since I come from a mining area, asbestos, to be precise, and I have no doubts about the altruistic intentions behind the tabling of this motion. I think the hon. member is to be commended for initiating this debate, but I would like to explain my point of view which does not quite coincide with the hon. member's philosophy. I will present my arguments, Madam Speaker.

When Prime Minister Mulroney's government came to power in 1984, it made it clear that it was prepared to let market forces prevail. In fact, the most impressive measures taken to that end were the government's decision to cancel the National Energy Program and to privatize a number of Crown corporation. We all know what happened. Today, however, despite the success of these initiatives, we have before us a motion that, if I am not mistaken, would allow governments at all levels to exercise even greater influence on market forces.

If I understand the motion correctly, the underlying philosophy is that the government is in a better position than industry to market its products, that the government has failed to consult sufficiently with all parties concerned when it develops or implements policies and strategies aimed at promoting Canadian mineral exports, and finally, that the government does not do enough to encourage those exports.

I suggest we take a closer look at these assumptions, with which I must say I disagree. More than ten years ago, Madam Speaker, the government of all major western economies, after realizing that it was necessary to do so, adopted a non-interventionist approach to markets, letting market forces develop freely so that private industry could become more competitive. That is how business function in a western society. This approach enhances the efficiency and competitive edge of the economy while accelerating the accumulation of wealth. It has been so successful in most western countries that today, we are seeing and unprecedented development in modern socialist systems. In a number of socialist countries, the economic system, entirely based on governement intervention, has literally crumbled. This revolution is not due to people adopting some new philosophy. It is the result of competitive and economic pressures. These economies, directed by governments or government agencies, have been found to be inefficient and incapable of stimulating economic growth, so that the people they were supposed to help have finally demanded a change.

This change is evident in economic liberalization, with the government not intervening in markets.

Experience has shown that competitive initiative is the only true way to ensure sustained creation of wealth for all. Nevertheless, today, in spite of that development, we are faced with a debate on the following question: Is the government better suited than private industry to promote the sale of its own products? Note that this is not just any industry. This is not an emerging industry or a dying one which might appeal for government aid. No. We are talking about a well-established industry, Canada's mining industry, which is among the strongest in the world. We are being asked to give assistance to an industry unmatched anywhere in the world. That is paradoxical, Madam Speaker. It is even the world's largest mining industry, the most active on export markets, the technological leader. Is it credible to call for government help in such a situation, such a position of strength? Business people do not stop telling us that everything depends on globalization. I must say that our mining and metals industry went global a long time ago. It formed international partnerships and opened offices in many countries so that it could have outlets throughout the world and long-assured access to all these markets and sources.

How can the government do better than private entreprise which has established its own markets, distribution networks and contacts? I am not suggesting that the initiatives taken by the industry are always right, far from it. I am simply wondering how, at the moment, the governement could do better than our industry.

How could a Crown corporation do better? The government has sold some Crown corporations because it recognizes that the private sector is better equipped to take advantage of export opportunities. For example, a Crown corporation can find itself in a situation where it must make major investments for expansion purposes, to increase its profits and even to survive under the circumstances. Where would the funds come from if the government gave priority to its fight against the deficit? We would have to get funds to support this industry. A private company, on the other hand, could go to the money market and find quickly the needed capital to meet its objectives. Why call on a co-operative agency with the government interfering? Again, private industry can do just as well or even better under the circumstances.

This motion also seems based on the assumption that there is a homogeneous Canadian industry with the same objectives in the world marketplace. Nothing could be further from the truth, Madam Speaker. Canadian mineral producers are competing against each other as well as against foreign firms. All companies do not have the same objectives or strategies. The rivalry between them is indeed one of the best ways to make an industry competitive on the international marketplace.

• (1840)

In keeping with their development strategy, some companies have made huge investments the world over, and indeed they have reached the hallmark of excellence in certain fields. Quite frankly, Madam Speaker, I fail to see how Canadian industry would support such an initiative. As a matter of fact, industry would look upon this or any similar measure as a serious threat, and I am sure it would come out fighting mad. What I am trying to say, Madam Speaker, is that government mechanisms are ill-fitted to play the kind of role advocated in today's motion. Fully aware of that, the Conservative government wants to steer clear of the market and concentrate on governing the country. Of course one can wonder whether government does have a role in openly promoting mineral exports. The government has a role for sure, but its authority does not give it carte blanche to direct all activities.

Although the government does not have a role to play on the market itself, I agree it should create and maintain an economic or trade environment where supply and demand can operate freely to balance market pressures. We all know that no market is totally free, that such a concept is beyond reality in any case. Among other things, this brings to mind tariff barriers, customs duties, restrictions on monetary movements, regulations governing health and environmental issues. All these conditions are as many factors which condition markets and check interventions. This is where a government can intervene. In some cases the public interest prevails as, for instance, when it comes to protecting the environment. But in other cases the government tries to sway the pendulum our way. Then it is up to the government to urge other countries to create a more equitable economic environment, and that is the role which best suits the government. This is why it was so intent on signing the Free Trade Agreement with the United States: the objective was to do away with tariff barriers, harmonize standards and regulations, and of course ease the flow of goods and people.

I spoke of government measures which affect industry as a whole but, Madam Speaker, there are others which relate exclusively to the mining industry, and that happens to be the issue this evening. Asbestos for example—I know the subject for I come from an asbestos town—is said to be hazardous. When it became obvious that some countries had asbestos regulations based on faulty perceptions of the extent of danger involved, what did the Government of Canada do? It has paid attention to the industry's requests for assistance, conveyed its view on many occasions to other countries and international organizations, and supported financially the creation of an asbestos institute. The government, therefore, actively supports the creation of an international task force on mineral products including nickel and copper, as it is already supporting the existing lead-zinc group.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, the government makes every effort to enhance metal exports. By doing so, it assumes its own responsibility. It does not act as a substitute for the industry itself. Not only does the government do a lot for the industry, but he does so together with the interested parties. Although the government is involved in a variety of programs from year to year in the area of promotion, marketing and marketing support, we must recognize that the world mineral market is cyclical. For the past two years, for instance, the world market for most minerals and metals has been quite promising. Fully aware of the problems which the industry, miners and mining towns were facing, the government took action. From 1984 to 1986, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, in co-operation with the Canadian Mining Association, organized a series of regional lecture dealing with the need to face competition. In other words, Madam Speaker, I suggest the motion was moved in good faith. It is consistent with the vision of a political party such as the NDP, but I suggest also that it is ill-advised, in view of the framework of our economy, our political systems and our international trade markets.

[English]

Mr. Al Horning (Okanagan Centre): Madam Speaker, I very much appreciate the opportunity given to me today to respond to a motion brought forward by the member for Timmins—Chapleau in regard to a co-operative mineral marketing agency to promote Canadian refined minerals in the world market-place.

To reiterate the comments made by my colleagues, Canada is a world leader in the mineral industry. It is also the largest importer of minerals and metals, of which a significant portion is purchased as feedstock for Canadian refineries and then re-exported.

In view of the fact that Canada has a relatively small population and generates a limited market for its commodities, it is only natural that Canada should export a high proportion of its production of some minerals and metals. I should mention that the bulk of Canada's minerals and metals exports go to the United States and Japan. It should not be thought, however, that Canada exports the bulk of its minerals in the form of ores and concentrates because nickel ore, gold, silver, copper and zinc concentrates receive further processing in Canada.

Import tariffs have been structured to establish and protect—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I apologize but I must interrupt the hon. member.

[Translation]

The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), this item is dropped from the Order Paper.

[English]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-12, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38(1) is deemed to have been moved.

EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Madam Speaker, on December 4, I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration what she would do to prevent the transfer of 200 General Electric jobs from Montreal to Fairfield, Connecticut.

I pointed out that Canadian General Electric had announced the closing of its Montreal plant which had been manufacturing various types of light bulbs in Montreal for 30 years and that the company had now decided to close that plant as part of its rationalization program. As you know, Madam Speaker, General Electric is an American company with its head office in the United States but with plants all over the world including Canada.

During the election campaign of 1988 we tried to alert Canadians to this consequence of the free trade agreement. We said that with the free trade agreement American companies in difficult times would rationalize their operations by closing Canadian plants and transferring the production to their plants in the United States.

As a matter of fact, the Economic Council studied the free trade agreement in 1988 and published its report on it, a report called Venturing Forth. It said that it clearly indicates that without improvements in Canadian manufacturing productivity, increased U.S. competition could result in a net decline of output and employment in 17 of the 36 industries studied, virtually all of them in manufacturing. Some firms will have to merge, others will have to close. The electrical products industry would account for 40 per cent of all the job losses in manufacturing. The output of electrical products is projected to fall by 15 per cent and employment by 8 per cent.

The Economic Council of Canada said that as a result of free trade, the electrical products industry would be hit the hardest, and here we have General Electric closing in Montreal within half a year after the agreement goes into force.

• (1850)

Each time that we ask the government to do something about job losses in industries like General Electric and the others that have closed down in Montreal, the government simply ignores the question and boasts about its great record in job creation. Well, when we look at that record, it is not as good out there in the real world as the government pretends in this House, and those people who are suffering from unemployment and layoffs know that.

Look at some of the reports that have been published. I have here from 1988 a Statistics Canada report saying that 63 per cent of the jobs created in the first half of 1988 were low paying clerical and sales positions and that the majority of them were in Ontario and Quebec. The same thing is true with respect to the quality of jobs. A great majority of those jobs are either temporary, part-time, or at minimum wage or without unionization, with the result that many people who have those jobs cannot really support a family and start a home.

When the government talks about its great employment record, it always compares it to the worst year of the recession. It always points to what happened under the Liberals in 1981 and 1982. Those were the worst years of the recession and it was common not only to the Liberal government in Canada but to governments throughout the western world.

I would like to point out to the House that when you look at the Liberal record over a period of time, you will find that our record was way ahead of that of the Conservatives. For example, in the period of Liberal government from 1965 to 1980, the average rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent over 15 years. Here we have a government that came in in 1984 following the recession when the upturn was in place, and the best it has been able to achieve is 7.3 per cent which was in September.

Since September the rate has gone up again to 7.4 per cent in October and up to 7.6 per cent in November. The Minister of Finance himself has predicted an increase in the unemployment rate to 8.5 per cent in 1990 and other think-tanks such as the Conference Board of Canada have predicted a 9 per cent unemployment rate.

We want the government to take these job losses and these plant closings seriously, and so do the workers who are losing their jobs. It does not do these workers any good to remind them of the fact that in a general way jobs have been created in different parts of Canada. What do the workers at General Electric want to know? What do the workers in other plants want to know? I have the list of the plant closings in Montreal: Gillette, 590 jobs; Weston Foods, 360 jobs; Simpsons, 1,000 jobs; VIA Rail, et cetera, et cetera; the list goes on.

Those individuals want to know what is the government going to do to help them get similar types of jobs. They do not want to hear over and over from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Employment and Immigration what a wonderful job they have done in bringing the rate of unemployment down to 7.3 per cent, now up to 7.6 per cent.

I hope tonight that the parliamentary secretary, responding on behalf of the minister, will tell us what programs, what policies the government has to help those people who have lost their jobs to free trade, who have lost their jobs to rationalization, to structural changes. Those are real people and they want real answers to their questions.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration I want to respond in greater detail to the question of December 4 put by the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

Let me say at the outset that the General Electric plant that he is talking about produced bulbs for projectors. The plant was quite old. Technology has changed. People are using VCRs today, and they made the decision they did to move the balance of that reduced production to the United States.

The metropolitan area of Montreal with its diversified activities and infrastructure is a major force not only in the Quebec economy but for Canada as a whole. There has been a significant improvement in the over-all employment situation over the past five years, especially compared to the experience during the 1980-1984 period.

In the four years up to August 1984 employment in Montreal declined and the unemployment rate rose. In marked contrast there were 148,000 more people employed in Montreal in November 1989 than had been in November 1984 shortly after this government took office.

Despite vigorous growth in the labour force there were some 46,000 fewer unemployed and the unemployment rate at 8 per cent is 3.7 percentage points lower than five years ago. In the last year alone employment is up by 16,000, unemployment is down by 13,000 and the unemployment rate has dropped almost one full percentage point to 8 per cent.

The Montreal labour market is dynamic with many firms opening and expanding, more than offsetting the cases of lay-offs or closures that the hon. member cites. While there were lay-offs announced in November, there were also positive developments. These included the announcement of construction of a $250 million waste treatment plant in east Montreal, the discussion of construction of a $225 million office complex, and the expansion of a refinery in east Montreal at a cost of $200 million. This follows upon earlier announcements such as the $2.3 billion contract obtained by Bombardier with the Aerospatial of France.

Since 1985 joint action by various levels of government on the economic situation in Montreal includes two major initiatives on the part of the federal government: in 1985, the creation of the ministerial committee on the development of the Montreal region to advise the government on how to consolidate Montreal's role as a centre for development; in 1986, the creation of the committee for economic recovery and revitalization of employment in east end Montreal.

There have also been concrete initiatives by the federal government, especially Employment and Immigration Canada, to help Montreal. For example, in 1988-1989 Employment and Immigration Canada invested $87 million in the city of Montreal through programs under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. A total of 29,500 people participated in the activities of the Canadian Jobs Strategy in Montreal.

Since the beginning of this year, Employment and Immigration Canada has completed its 26 agreements under the Industrial Adjustment Service at a cost of $130,542. A further 46 new agreements have been signed this year with a commitment of $438,085 in funding by Employment and Immigration Canada.

The Industrial Adjustment Service agreements also involve spending by the province and the private sector so that the total expenditures in the Montreal area under the completion of new agreements is expected to exceed $1.8 million.

In 1988–1989, in the hon. member's riding of Notre–Dame–de–Grâce, nearly $2.4 million was committed and a estimated 550 new clients were served under the Canadian Jobs Strategy and development of UI programs. This assistance with training and other human resources development was in addition to the substantial amount of income support available through the unemployment insurance program.

PAY EQUITY

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, in October of this year I posed a question in the House to the President of the Treasury Board, asking what the minister was doing to correct the deplorable situation of hospital services workers who were badly underpaid for the work they were doing, compared to comparable groups that were largely male dominated groups.

The pay and equity problem of these federal hospital services workers got some much needed attention when the government brought in Bill C–49 to force its lowest paid striking workers back to work and into binding conciliation.

I am here to give the matter more attention, and I do not plan to stop. This female dominated group had been waiting for nine years to settle its pay equity dispute, a dispute that led them in near desperation to the Human Rights Commission tribunal, which ruled overwhelmingly in their favour in 1987. The tribunal stated that these workers are undervalued and underpaid compared to a male–dominated group in the Public Service doing exactly the same work.

• (1900)

Although retroactive equalization payments of $28 million were paid out in 1988, these were only interim payments. Two years later the group is waiting for an additional adjustment of $10 million for retroactive pay from 1987 to the present and, above all, for a salary that recognizes the value of work rather than a token equalization payment. These workers are paid on average $3,000 per year less than they should be and at a salary of $16,000, $17,000 or $18,000, $3,000 is a significant amount.

Delay after delay by the government has discouraged these workers. The government was even back before the Human Rights Tribunal just in November of this year trying to argue that the tribunal had no further jurisdiction in this case. The tribunal took only ten minutes to dismiss this argument. However, with the female population of the group slowly diminishing, the government seems to be waiting until the group is no longer female–dominated so it can complain that there is no discrimination. Is this what this government considers a fair way deal with pay discrimination among its employees?

Women in the Public Service have been hearing a lot of empty promises from this government over the last five years. The wage gap between male and female Public Service employees grew in 1988 to nearly $10,000, $440 more than it had been the previous year. A female Public Service employee makes only 74 cents for every dollar a man earns, down by .8 per cent in two years.

When I raised this issue in the House the Prime Minister pointed to the appointments of women to boards and commissions, a valuable step forward but still a handful of tokens while women in general in Canadian society grow poorer and poorer. Families headed by women are four times more likely to be poor than families headed by men. Seventy–two per cent of the elderly poor are women. Four out of every 10 families headed by women are poor compared to only one out of 10 headed by a male. The end result of that is that over one million children live below the poverty line in Canada, that is one out of every six children.

The government, as the largest employer in Canada, should be in the vanguard of reversing the growing feminization of poverty. It claims women are doing better but the facts do not bear this out. Eighty per cent of women in the Public Service are still in the pink collar ghettos of administrative support workers. Professional women in the Public Service are exactly where they were in the early 1970s. The government will say it is involved in the joint union/management study for pay equity. I would like to refer to what the Human Rights Commission had to say about the joint union/management study and pay equity in the Public Service.

It said that administrative delay and bureaucratic infighting remain more the hallmark of the program than any genuine move toward pay equity. It further said that complaints are being held in abeyance, one on behalf of approximately 50,000 employees in the clerical and regulatory group—that is that pink collar ghetto again—and another on behalf of approximately 1,500 members of the nursing group. That is nearly one-quarter of federal Public Service employees who have been before the Human Rights Commission on pay equity complaints.

The commission's report goes on to say that it cannot be ignored, that four years have come and gone and there is still a considerable way to go before there is an adequate program for dealing with sex-based inequities, let alone eliminating them. Progress has in fact been excruciatingly slow. If the federal Public Service cannot handle pay equity, what are its chances elsewhere?

Still referring to the report, the slowness of the process not only creates a bad impression, it casts a shadow on the sincerity of the commitment to the whole concept. We can see nothing to be gained by dragging out the process. Either the government means business on equal pay or it does not.

• (1905)

Government must realize that complaints to the Human Rights Commission are not the best way to deal with mass pay discrimination such as exists in the Public Service. The government must take the initiative where pay and equity exists. It must act as a model employer and initiate action, not wait to react. To date, it has not set much of an example for other employers. It must realize that women are an invaluable and essential part of the labour force who deserve to be paid fair and decent wages. If this government does not mean business on pay equity, it is clearly not ready to move out of the dark ages and into the reality of today's labour market.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the hon. member for Ottawa West recently asked this government whether or not it meant business on equal pay. I want to assure my hon. colleague that not only do we mean business, but that significant progress has been made.

The "hospital services" group has been the focus of much attention with respect to this government's commitment to equal pay. Retroactive pay adjustments totalling $28 million for the period September, 1980 to July, 1987 have already been implemented. All positions at level 1 and those of seamstresses and community health representatives were re-evaluated using the classification standard for the male comparator group, "general services". Further retroactive wage increases were implemented in July, 1989 for those positions which were found to warrant a higher level.

In addition, the "hospital services" classification standard was revised to mirror the "general services" classification standard. New rates of pay for the revised classifications have been set for the period July to December, 1987 and another set of equal wage adjustments for the period July, 1987 and ongoing is currently being issued to employees.

All this represents significant work to remedy the disparity between these two groups and significant expenditure. The current equal wage adjustments are estimated to be approximately $12 million.

It is true that not all employees in the "hospital services" group received additional equal pay adjustments. When employees do not earn less wages than their male counterparts, they do not get additional adjustments. The collective agreement process for the "hospital services" group is not yet finalized. Once it is, all employees will receive some increases to their rates of pay as they presently are.

In addition, the Human Rights Tribunal, which sat November 8 to the 17, 1989 to review the implementation of the consent order, will reconvene January 22, 1990. The tribunal is examining whether the employers' actions have removed all systemic discrimination from which the group might have suffered by being mainly female. I believe that the priority which this government has asked that the case be given has been respected.

In closing, I want to reiterate the government's commitment to equal pay for work of equal value and to assure you that it will be achieved. While at times the achievement of service-wide pay equity between male dominated and female dominated groups may appear slow, we are ensuring that our approach is sound, that all parties are given a chance to participate and that our collective bargaining structure is respected. In an organization as large and as diversified as the federal Public Service, this can be complex but it is possible.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, on December 1, all Petro-Canada wells on traditional Lubicon lands in northwest Alberta were stilled. They have remained dormant since. Petro-Canada and its partner, Norcen Energy Resources, voluntarily undertook to comply with the request of the Lubicon people that they halt their activities on Lubicon land as of December 1. The Lubicon people made this request which in the face of non-compliance would have become an order on December 1, as a means of bringing pressure to bear on the federal government. It is one more tactic adopted by the band in their decades old attempt to force the federal government to negotiate a fair settlement to their outstanding claims. Two days before the shut-down took effect, that is on November 29, I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development the following question: > —will the government direct its officials to make clear, and announce, the government's willingness now to resume negotiations with the Lubicon on all aspects of their claim, including a compensation package?

• (1910)

The minister, in his response, neatly side-stepped the question of negotiation of compensation, saying instead:

> —ever since we made this offer last January, we have been prepared to go back to the table to discuss the fair and comprehensive offer that was made to the Lubicons.

What he did not say was that the offer made last January specifically ruled out any negotiation of compensation for the Lubicon people. That offer included a series of disparate suggestions for various forms of assistance for which the band might apply, for guarantees of some funding into which the federal government might enter, for promises that some current federal initiatives might be reviewed in the hope that they could be made more generous in the band's interests, and for the establishment of certain trust moneys in an endowment fund for the band.

It clearly and categorically ruled out any negotiated compensation for the years of forgone federal treaty payments lost by the band because it was missed by the federal government's Treaty Eight negotiators, and for the billions of dollars in mineral wealth sucked out of the ground beneath the Lubicon's feet while they have spent the last 50 years trying patiently and reasonably to reach some fair conclusion to their claims.

Let us make no mistake, we are talking about a great deal of money here. Total forgone treaty benefits have been calculated, in a fashion approved of by the federal government's own investigator, Mr. E. David Fulton, at up to $170 million. In an affidavit filed on behalf of the Alberta government on June 30, 1983, it was estimated that: "The negative monetary impact to Alberta", and I interpolate here, of an injunction against oil and gas exploration in the 4,000 square miles of traditional Lubicon lands, "could amount to roughly $450 to $500 million annually". Another calculation has set the value of oil and gas production from traditional Lubicon lands over the last 10 years at about $5 billion.

It is useful, it is reasonable, to keep such figures in mind while we consider that the entire compensation package sought by the Lubicon people is simply that which they have been denied in consequence of sloppy work by the government's original Treaty Eight negotiators; $170 million, about a third of one year's production according to the 1983 Alberta Government affidavit. But the government has made a very generous offer of $45 million, some will protest. They will say, obviously in rejecting this generous offer and demanding an unconscionable $170 million, that the Lubicon people are just being greedy and vexatious. Are they?

Perhaps we can judge the matter better by comparing the Lubicon's position to the settlements actually achieved in consequence of recent negotiations. Let us consider just two, both of which are outstanding treaty land entitlement settlements, additions to existing treaty settlements for existing bands with existing community infrastructure.

In the case of the Sturgeon Lake Band, the "new adherents" to the band covered by this settlement reached earlier this year, accounted for an average of almost $180,000 each in compensation and about 477 acres per person of land with sub-surface rights. Applied to the 500 plus Lubicon people, those numbers would result in a compensation package worth almost $90 million and a land entitlement of 373 square miles. In fact, the Lubicon people are asking for less than a quarter of that amount of land, about 80 square miles, and a little less than twice that much money, about $170 million. Hardly greedy, hardly vexatious, hardly out of line at all.

Or take the example, also from this year, of the Whitefish Lake Band. The 117 acres of land accorded each of its "new adherents", along with the more than $400,000 per person compensation package, would work out to 91.4 square miles for the 500-plus Lubicons and a compensation package of more than $200 million. In both instances more than the Lubicon are asking for.

A similar prorating of the comprehensive settlement negotiated with the Inuit of the central and western Arctic earlier this year would give the Lubicon a meagre $17 million in compensation but a whopping 409 square miles of reserve land. And a similar prorating of the comprehensive settlement achieved last year with the Yukon Indians would grant the Lubicon Band $18.7 million in compensation and a gigantic 1,250 square miles of land.

• (1915)

So, it is clear that the proposals of the Lubicon people are reasonable and eminently suitable for the negotiation of a fair settlement. But the House need not take my word alone for this.

Alberta Premier, Don Getty, not a man known for the reckless indulgence of the wants and wishes of the less powerful and wealthy in our society, has himself labelled the government's offer, "deficient in the area of providing economic stability for the future". Even he acknowledges that, "if you don't also build into your planning the ability to have businesses, farms, that type of thing—that will allow you to get economic development out into the future, you are going to merely have a pocket of dependency."

That, in fact, hits the very nub of the great problem with the government's current offer of last January. It is sufficient to create an economy of perpetual dependence, an economy of welfare payments, modest employment, mostly on job training programs designed to qualify people for UI payments, an economy of privation and despair, but it is not sufficient to allow the Lubicon people to create an economy of self-sufficiency, an economy in which their own productive efforts will prove sufficient to allow them to fend for themselves and retain and enhance their own unique society.

Is it any wonder then that the Lubicon people are willing to fight for a decent settlement? Is it any wonder that they are prepared to close off fossil fuel production on their lands? Is it any wonder that they are willing to blockade roads? Is it any wonder that they are willing to enlist the aid of sympathizers around the globe?

The federal government is fighting for a few million dollars. The Lubicon people are fighting for their very lives and the lives of their people for all time to come. All that is required for them to secure their future is a bit of generosity and good will, a bit of fairness and a sense of justice on this government's part. So far, to the shame of all Canadians, it seems, that has been too much to ask.

And so again I ask the parliamentary secretary, will the government direct its officials to make clear and announce the government's willingness now to resume negotiations with the Lubicon on all aspects of their claim including a compensation package, or will its heart remain as hard as that of the Bible's Pharaoh, a truly beknighted gentleman whom, increasingly, the government comes to resemble.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, that is quite an act to follow.

The member from Edmonton East has said that the Lubicon Lake band has, by threat, forced the shutting down of oil production, I use his words, "on their traditional lands." The fact is that 18 wells have been shut in. They are not in the 95 square miles the band has selected as its reserve. As to traditional lands, they are also the traditional lands of other native communities. In fact, I am informed most of the wells are near the trap lines registered to members of the Woodland Cree band. There will be perhaps 100 families living on the Lubicon reserve. They are the twenty-ninth largest band in the province and they will have the sixth largest reserve.

Not only will they have $35 million to build a community—that alone would employ a considerable number of their people—but they will also have $10 million dollars as seed capital to create band businesses. They will have 79 square miles of oil and gas rights. Moreover, they will have ongoing access to all federal and provincial programs.

We will respect their right to sue for the remainder of the $170 million they are demanding in compensation. This is hardly the take-it-or-leave-it offer the member suggests. It would give them a modern community and a real economic opportunity. This would leave them the right to prove their claim for more, as others must prove their claims.

Instead, it would appear that the chief and his advisors have declared themselves above the law in the mistaken belief that by doing so someone will offer them $170 million. Behind that unfortunate leadership there is a real social and economic need which must be addressed, if the band will allow it.

For that reason our negotiators are working with the province to make refinements in the areas where the province feels it can provide support. Our offer to the Lubicon is fair and comprehensive. We are still ready, as we have been for 11 months, to meet with the band should the leaders sincerely wish to negotiate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 7.20 p.m.