There is no capacity or ability to meet that problem, and it is what every single family faces as it goes through the cycle. There is no margin left to meet those crises. One suggestion was that we do a fundamental revision of the way in which we provide income support, to give it the flexibility to meet those crises, to create a sense of a family trust so we can provide that support to our children and their families to meet those particular problems.

It may mean that finally the day has come when we recognize that while the family is changing, and we have all these two-income families, many of them are not working because they want to but because they have to. The government loves to cite statistics about employment creation, but the fact of the matter is that much of that employment is at the minimum wage.

There is the phenomenon called the working poor in this country. There are hundreds of thousands who are in that circumstance, which again suggests to me that we have to break through a lot of the old shibboleths and the old conventional wisdom and say that maybe it is time for a proper kind of guaranteed income in this country that will provide an income base for children and families so that every time they make an extra income it is not going to be taxed away. We need some chance to move ourselves forward in our society.

That is what I think the member for Oshawa was trying to tell us this morning. I think it is about time that we expand our ideas beyond the existing paradigms and traps we have found ourselves in. He is not asking members of parliament to stand up on their feet and try to defend or apologize for what is but to try and think of what should be. Where do we go from here? That is the importance of this debate.

Perhaps I might just talk about an issue that has not been raised today. We have been concentrating, and I think rightly, on the problem of poverty of children in Canada. Let us stop for a moment, pause, think about the problem of poverty of children outside Canada and how we are contributing to a substantial decrease in the standard of living of children in the Third World.

I am not going to take a long time. I know we are Debating poverty in Canada, but for a moment I would like to draw the members' attention to a report that was prepared by UNICEF last year called The State of the World's Children.

It is an important document. I think every member should read it because it states that as a consequence of policies that we accede to as a government and as a country, we contribute to a more serious reduction of nutrition among the world's children; we contribute to a reduction in the standard of education; we contribute to a reduction in the standard of health. What we are doing is putting the squeeze on Mexico, Venezuela and all these countries to pay their bills. They are paying them by cutting back on their schools, on their sewage systems, on the nutrition they provide their children.

The industrial nations of the world this year alone will be net receivers of $50 billion from Third World countries. In Canada alone we will receive a net of $1.7 billion. It exceeds our foreign aid budget. We are going to be taking back more money than we put out, and the consequence is that we are contributing for the first time since the end of the Second World War to the net decline in the state and condition of the world's children. We are contributing to it as Canadians.

When you ask those questions as we are studying the problem of what to do with the debt before the external affairs committee, we have the bankers coming to us and saying: "We have no choice. We have our shareholders to meet." They are running up the reserves with tax write-offs. They say that that is okay, that it is okay for them to protect their shareholders.

Who is protecting these kids out there? Who is looking after their interests? I know they do not vote in Canada. They do not have a constituency. By God, it is an awful commentary on the way we conduct our public business when we are prepared to tolerate that condition year after year and not raise a voice to say there is something wrong with us, when we allow that to happen.

I would like to add to the commitment and concern that was raised by the hon. member from Oshawa this morning and say that I think there is a broader constituency and a broader set of issues that we have to be addressing when we talk about poverty among children. I do not think it is sufficient for Canadians simply to attack the poverty of our own children, as deep, as serious and as tragic as that may be, and leave our responsibility to the rest of the world alone.

We cannot be an island unto ourselves, because we will not be allowed to survive in those circumstances.

The question is: How do we begin to approach this issue? We have heard recommendations for a conference. I think it is a useful idea to bring all the people from the different sectors together to begin to examine it. I think it is useful to talk about how we can begin to get the involvement of others, but I now simply want to address the responsibilities of this House.

I remind hon. members that we have a responsibility too. I remind the House of the words of George Wald who is a Nobel laureate. When he received the Nobel prize several years ago he said that while he was very pleased to accept this prize "there is not much that I can do that is going to affect my life from now on. I am who I am. I have become what I am by other people's helping so there is not an awful lot I am going to do to either help me or my generation". He said: "But I want to offer this advice: There is one simple test that I want to pass on to politicians around the world, and that is, when you ask yourself about a policy, ask yourself how it will affect children, their lives and the kind of state that they live in?"

I want to ask members of the House about how we have considered the new increase in taxes will affect children. Has the Minister of Finance really asked whether the GST, in its application in terms of the reduced standard of living of families in Canada, really helps children? Will it help them to buy their books? Will it help them to go to school? Will it help them to get the kind of music lessons that my colleague from St. Boniface has talked about? Will that tax help children? Will it really help in aiding their education? Will it help people to get out of poverty?

Let me ask how the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act will help children. Will the changes enable their mothers or fathers to get training to get into the workforce?

From the answers we heard in committee, it is going to be more difficult. There are going to be more of them on the street unless you believe in the harsh discipline of the market-place. It is not going to add substantially more investment in those areas. Will the kind of debates that we have been having over the last few days about the Federal Business Development Bank and the wide range of government programs for business help children? The answer is no.

It seems to me that we have a clear priority. My colleague, the member from St. Boniface, can talk about it more eloquently than I can because he has the facts and figures. We have to invest in people, our children. That should be the fundamental responsibility and that should be the test that we begin to apply to all our government programs.

I suggest to the hon. parliamentary secretary that rather than simply tinkering with the system, rather than looking at how you might provide another half a million dollars for a grant, to go ahead with initiatives. We have in front of us the priority of child care. Why are we waiting? It has been a year. Why is it not brought in, incorporating the incredible number of recommendations that were made by all those who appeared before the committee over a year and a half ago?

The government should not take the time to deal with the Minister of Finance's problems. Do it now. At the same time the government should look at the kind of income security program that would give sufficient base for working poor families and single parent families to meet their needs. It is not sufficient and you know it is not. I ask the parliamentary secretary to speak to her minister, so he might advise the cabinet to bring in that kind of fundamental revision of the way in which we deliver income and security. If so, you are going to get a response from this side of the House.

In conclusion, I say that we can do something important to respond to the member for Oshawa. Every time there is a bill or legislation, every time there is an initiative we must ask ourselves the simple question: How will it affect our children.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, a brief comment and perhaps a couple of questions to my hon. colleague across the way. The annual $40 billion deficit of the government since 1984 has been reduced to approximately $28, $29 or $30 billion per year. That is a remarkable on behalf of the Minister of Finance and the government.

The people who watch our debates in the House of Commons know the cold hard facts are that we have to pay for our social programs. We have to pay to help the people that need the money the most. There are only two ways we can do it. We have implemented both of them. One is taxation and the other is by cutting the administration of the government, which is not always popular.

I have three questions for my hon. colleague. He can answer a yes or no to the first two and I will give him the open floor for the last one. We want to see how he will balance the budget if he ever gets to be minister of finance, God forbid.

The first question concerns the GST.

Mr. Lee: What about children?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): We are speaking about children. We are talking about the services because the money must come from the federal government to enhance the programs that we have.

Every Canadian has the responsibility of ensuring that we look after our children. We take that seriously on our side. Assuming that the GST goes through, if there was a new government, would my hon. colleague, as he did with the free trade agreement, tear it up? Will they wipe out GST? Let the Official Opposition party tell Canadians what they stand for today. Let them say what their option is. Will they tear up—

An Hon. Member: What are you going to do?

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): We have said what we are going to do. We want to have fair taxation for the people.

Will my hon. colleague do what his leader has said in the past? Will he tear up the free trade agreement with the United States that was signed on January 1, 1989? Yes or no?

Third, with the reform that we have brought in with unemployment insurance, will you, as a minister responsible in a new government in perhaps the year 2050 or later, change what we have brought in? Yes or no?

Finally, how does he propose as the official opposition party to balance the budget so that we can continue to pay old age pensions, family allowances, so that we can continue to subsidize welfare, and unemployment insurance cheques so that all Canadians can have a decent way of living?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I thank the member for his question dealing with children in Canada. The fact that he was totally off target does not mean to say he does not deserve an answer. I will try to give him one.

Let us talk about what we should be doing with the economy of this country. Let us talk about the several hundred million dollars given away by increasing the capital gains tax.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Just answer the first two questions.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Does the member want to know the answer or not? Do you want to know how you are going to pay in order to deal with children? You are going to stop giveaways like the huge rip-off in the capital gains tax. That is how you start doing it.

You begin by not giving special privileges to your friends as this government has been doing over the last four or five years. You start doing something about the high interest rates which add several billion dollars to the deficit every year.

It is about time this Parliament started taking control of interest rates and started having a minister of finance that paid attention to that high interest rate rather than simply letting it become part and parcel of the life of this country. That is how you start doing it.

You start dealing with the whole question of tax reform. The fact of the matter is that large corporations in this country today only contribute 11 per cent of the total revenue of the federal government of Canada. It seems to me that that hon. member might ask himself whether that is a fair contribution by the major businesses of this country who get all the benefits from this government.

Maybe he should start asking the same questions of the Minister of Finance as he has asked of me. He wants to know about unemployment insurance. Yes, I would totally rescind those because the kind of legislation brought in by the Minister of Employment and Immigration makes Margaret Thatcher looks like Mother Teresa by comparison. All it does is simply put the squeeze on the people least able to protect themselves. It does not provide incentive for training. It does not provide for the workforce and it discriminates against the poorer regions of this country. It is going to hit the fish workers, forestry workers and farm workers, the people who work in the resource areas of this country. These are the people who will be affected by your unemployment insurance changes and they are the people whose children are presently living in poverty.

• (1420)

If the member wants an honest answer, yes, there is a Liberal program for economic reform and it bears no comparison whatsoever to what your government has done.

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to say a few words in connection with this opposition motion calling upon the House to express concern for the Canadian children currently living in poverty—

An Hon. Member: Express?

Mr. Redway: Yes, to express concern. I thought that was the intent of the motion.

It goes without saying that each and every member of this House is concerned about child poverty. There is no question about that. I do not think, as I look around the opposition benches, that members would deny that they have concern for child poverty. I know throughout the government caucus everyone is concerned. Certainly I am. All of the ministers are and, certainly, I know all the members of this House are. I think it goes without saying as well that Canadians generally, and likely without exception, would agree with the content of this motion which expresses concern and a wish to do something with respect to the state of child poverty in this country.

I think it goes beyond that, because it is a question of concern about poverty itself, not only child poverty. I am sure the hon. member from Winnipeg would agree that there are many other people living in poverty in this country in spite of all of the efforts that have been made over many years to try to stamp out poverty. For example, it is estimated that some 450,000 senior citizens, mainly singles, continue to live in poverty in this country at the present time. As the hon. member knows, we have made a deliberate effort and there are many programs aimed at trying to stamp out poverty for senior citizens.

What can we do with respect to poverty for children? Some of the members in this debate have pointed out a number of the problems in relation to child poverty in this country. One in particular struck me because it was one that I had a good deal of concern about when I was a private member of this House. We see this strange and disturbing, almost obscene phenomenon of food banks and the growth of food banks.

Prior to 1979 there was no such phenomenon as food banks in Canada. Perhaps there had been in the "Dirty Thirties", but certainly not in my experience can I remember food banks in this country until the late 1970s.

Despite the fact that since then, particularly in the middle and late 1980s, we have seen the unemployment rate falling and the number of food banks increasing. That is a most concerning matter. I think it is high time that it was investigated.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that as a private member of Parliament I raised this issue many times in the House. I raised this issue before the standing committee of the House on national health and welfare and asked that committee to take the initiative and come to grips with this, investigate the problem and make some recommendations with respect to it.

Unfortunately, to date, that has not occurred. No party on the standing committee, for instance, has taken that initiative, which disturbs me greatly.

Having said all that, and I recognize that food banks are not the only phenomenon of child poverty in this country, I guess the question then is, what have we been doing about it, and what are we going to do about trying to deal with this question?

Other spokesmen for the government have pointed out a number of steps that the government has been taking to address the problem of child poverty. One of these steps is to address the problem of poverty altogether within the context of managing the economy in a way that puts people to work, trying to raise their income, and raise them above the poverty level.

My colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has pointed to things like the child tax credit and the income tax reductions of last year, matters that are in the proposed goods and services tax. Although I know the hon. member from Winnipeg and others are not happy with this, there are measures within that tax system regime that are aimed at trying to assist low income people.

I know the hon. members are well aware of those measures, such as the goods and services tax credit, and, of course, there is a credit with respect to a rebate for new housing. There are many exemptions of basic groceries, medical services, educational services, et cetera; which are aimed, of course, at trying to alleviate the impact of the goods and services tax on low and moderate income people. All of these things have been done within the context of trying to alleviate poverty, put people back to work and improve the standard of living in this country.

I have always felt that one of the essential ingredients in this whole equation, however, is the question of housing. The affordability and cost of housing in this country has added immeasurably, in my view, generally to poverty, whether it is poverty of the working, those who do not have any jobs at all, child poverty, or the poverty of senior citizens. All have been impacted by the rising cost of housing. The impact either on rents or on house prices all have had the effect of reducing the amount of disposable income that people have had in order to try to get themselves out of that poverty cycle.

I do not think it is any news to this House, but somehow or other it apparently is news to at least 75 per cent of Canadians that the federal government has for a long time—and it did not just start with the present government, it has gone on now for 40 years or more—has been involved in housing and has been trying to assist people one way or another to better house themselves. At the present time we have some 600,000 housing units that have been built by various governments over the years which are geared-to-income type of housing unit homes for people who otherwise would not be able to afford it.

It is distressing to me to realize and to learn that 70 per cent of Canadians do not believe that out of their federal taxes the government will pay anything to assist in helping people to be better housed across this country. Each year, as well, the government assists about an additional 45,000 households in this country with housing of one sort or another, whether it be the production of non-profit family housing or housing for the disabled, rural and native housing, urban housing for natives, or assistance under the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program. All of these things are in the works and have been in the works for some time.

The question must be considered in light of the fiscal situation of the government, and I know that all hon. members of this House, regardless of their partisanship, their feelings about what should or should not be done with respect to taxes and income, realize that the government has a problem here. So what can be done within the context of that problem to try to assist and create more housing for people who need it? We have been trying to address that problem by first taking a look at surplus federal government lands to see if there are some innovative ways to utilize them.

We have already announced a couple of projects in the metropolitan Toronto area, at Downsview and at Vaughan, hopefully to be able to help in that respect. We have also been trying to involve the private sector in this process as well to use the private sector in combination with publicly-owned housing to see if we can create more housing units at the same location, some of it private, but more of it public and more of it assisted housing.

We are also looking at the aspect of getting all levels of government, including the private sector, in a co-operative phase. We have set up some 10 tripartite committees of three levels of government across the country to see if we can all come together to try to address these problems as one force rather than going off in different directions. We all know that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): I am sorry to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Ms Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the minister's remarks were cut off by time limits.

The Social Planning and Research Council of British Columbia has found many on income assistance who must use part of their food money to pay for rent, and estimates are that about 60 to 70 per cent of the household income of poor families is spent on shelter. As the minister has acknowledged, this contributes greatly to child poverty.

Under the Co-op Housing Program which is the only separate federal program available directly from the federal government to municipalities, we have only about 100 units available this year in Vancouver. As the minister knows, the cost of housing is escalating and the amount of affordable housing is diminishing greatly. This is really contributing to the stress on families and to poverty generally. I know the minister gave his overview of government programs. Putting that aside, deal with this problem of the high cost of shelter for poor people?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the question from the hon. member, because that, in effect, is what I was trying to outline in the concluding portion of my remarks. These are some of the practical things I have been trying to do to expand, given the limitations on finances that we have, and in trying to use the resources that we have available in a better fashion.

The hon. member spoke of co-op housing. There was a discussion and agreement between the Co-operative Housing Foundation of Canada and the government some four years ago with respect to an experimental program with index-linked mortgages. That is the program that we have been applying over the last four years. It has another year to go under the agreed experimental program. One of the problems with that program was it anticipated that we could have a real interest rate of 4 per cent on ILM mortgages. But we have had a real interest rate of 5 per cent as opposed to 4 per cent. One of the ways to get that real interest rate down is to get more people investing in index-linked mortgages.

I have been going out to pension fund groups as a messenger on behalf of co-op housing and ILM mortgages to try to sell them on interest rate down to the 4 per cent level. For each 1 per cent of interest rate, the interest rate on an ILM mortgage drops, and we could increase the amount of co-op housing we produce by 20 per cent, and I have had some success.

As the hon. member knows, I was in Vancouver about two or three weeks ago and we opened a co-op housing project. This was in conjunction with the city of Vancouver which purchased the Killarney Gardens property comprising 227 units, an existing project which was about to be torn down and a condominium built in its place. In a co-operative effort with the city of Vancouver, the co-op housing movement and the federal government through the use of ILM mortgages, where we backed a $19 million ILM mortgage, we were able to save that property for co-operative housing. Those are the kinds of practical things we should be looking for and that we should be trying to do to assist in helping child poverty and in helping all poverty across this country.

I would like to have the opportunity to go on beyond the co-op housing example. There are many other things that we are trying to do in order to be innovative using the resources that we have available to expand the amount of housing for Canadians, whether it be for first-time home buyers or people spending vast sums of their income on housing who are not able to afford it, so that we can create more homes and put more people in them, still facing the realities of the existing federal fiscal situation.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me this afternoon to be able to participate in this debate, a debate that was started off this morning in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa. It struck me this morning that not only the motion but the hon. member's speech probably summed up his career in this House and the contribution he has made to conscience in this country and the thought that so many of us must have in addressing problems like this.

There is no place in Canada that sees and suffers from poverty like Newfoundland and Labrador. Like all members but I regret perhaps more than some that in my own constituency I see it every time that I am home. We all must through our efforts, not only in terms of legislation but in terms of our consciousness, move to ensure that poverty is eradicated in this country now and forever. I was particularly taken by the comments made this morning by my colleague, the member for Cape Breton—East Richmond. They reflect so much the perception and reality in Atlantic Canada.

The hon. member for Oshawa reminded us that if there is anything we lack in this country, it is an awareness of the situation. It is an awareness that poverty is everywhere, that poverty is so destructive and so insipid. It is an awareness that we can, each in our own little way, do something about it. It is coming from that awareness that I want to speak this afternoon in the few brief minutes that I have about the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Yesterday afternoon I had the privilege of meeting with 21 students from the Upper Gullies Elementary School in Conception Bay South in my constituency. They were a representative group of 70 Grade 6 students who came to me with their principal, Mrs. Peckham, and a teacher, Mrs. Wells, and asked me to come to the House of Commons and say that Canada has co-sponsored and endorsed through the United Nations the convention that deals with the rights of children and that Canada should be the first country to endorse that in its own legislature. I bring that message to you, Mr. Speaker. They gave me 70 letters. I have them here and I read them this morning. They talk primarily of two things, of ratification and of peace. Ratification is something that I will come back to.

Briefly the students see the lack of peace in this world as one of the greatest crises that children face. We know that children are the victims of political violence. We know that children are the victims of war. We know that children suffer most around the world as they are pawns and as they are left by the side as we carry on in our political differences and in the interests of some great principle that we seem to have. What these kids are saying to me and to all of us is summed up perhaps in a letter from Jennifer Anthony which says: "Why can't everyone just co-operate and work together? Why don't they just try it? The world would be a much better place if people would just try to work everything out without going to war".

I think all Canadians are proud of the role this country has played in the United Nations in having the UN endorse the convention. We co-sponsored it as everyone knows and I am sure that all members will agree that the letters they received from their constituents were encouraging that we move decisively, and we have done that. Now the question is for ratification. But I think it is important to recognize that the convention while we think of it as applying to others has some very important messages for Canada and for Canadians.

Article 6 for example gives recognition to the concept of survival and development. But that is just more than the essentials of life. That includes such things as growth monitoring, oral rehydration, breast feeding, immunization, disease control, and child spacing. Article 24 talks about health and nutrition; Article 26, on the right to benefit from social security; Article 27, on the right to an adequate standard of living including access to material assistance and support programs.

Clearly considering our role in the movement of this resolution through the UN gives us an extra responsibility in terms of ratification and also in terms of compliance. The convention is a very comprehensive and detailed instrument providing for a number of important rights for the child and quite specific obligations for states. Clearly the subject matter in this convention as it applies to Canada falls into provincial as well as shared jurisdiction. Clearly there must be a continued ongoing process of consultation with the provinces and the territories. I need not remind hon. members that the provinces have played a very substantial role in the development of our position on this and our co-sponsorship.

Ratification demands that this country have the legislation in place because once we have ratified it we have accepted it. This country, and I think all members would agree that our responsibility is to ensure that we do have the mechanisms in place, that we have the legislation and regulations in place so that compliance is not something that we cannot do. Compliance is something that we must be willing to do, and do in an active and constructive manner. The provinces again must be a substantial part of that contribution.

There will be a committee on the rights of the child put in place. It will provide constructive criticism in working with states to facilitate implementation and provisions of the convention. In a sense it will be a monitor.

As we all know, and as the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has indicated, poverty is not just a problem in Canada. Poverty is a tragedy in this country, particularly for our children, there is no question. I cannot help but comment as we see the atrocities in El Salvador, as we look at the violence around the world that leaves children parentless, that leaves children homeless, that leaves children without the basic sustenance of life, that leaves children hopeless. I look at the situation on the horn of Africa, particularly as it pertains to Eritrea where fighting on behalf of Ethiopia there are children carrying weapons. We see it every day in the Middle East. We see it every day around the world.

When I speak to people outside of this place I try to remind them that what happens outside of this country directly pertains to their lives inside of this country, that the welfare of people around the world matters in a material way to the way that we live today and in the future. I come back to the awareness problem. We must be aware of those needs, those concerns as we as a country play a leadership role not only in serving the needs of those around the world that need our help but also as a facilitator, as a mover toward peace, as a country that can lead this world into the future in a more sane and more humane way.

I am not normally prone to reading letters but there are three that I mentioned. One is very simple from Paul Martin:

> Please pass a law immediately about the law of the child, not to use money to make weapons but to get shelter and clothes.

There is also a poem from a lady by the name of Nancy Carter which is only four lines:

> Why do people fight when it only kills? Why do they kill when it only makes people sad? Why do people have war when it makes no sense? I pray each day no more war will come. God save us from the war.

If we can tell children around the world that they have a future, we in Canada will be able to tell our children as we move to their future that it, too, will be secure and that this country will lead the war in dealing with poverty and world security.

Mrs. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the member for his very eloquent remarks.

I would like to ask him if he is aware that the Member of Parliament for Mission—Coquitlam has sponsored a private members' bill to establish a children's bill of rights that is designed, as I understand it, to conform to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

I think it really relates to what he was saying and, having studied this question, I agree with him. It is important that Canada not only ratify the UN declaration but that we find a way of implementing it. It seems to me that this is one of the ways that we could.

I wonder, first, if he would consider supporting this private member's bill and perhaps even co-sponsoring it so that we could have it sponsored by people on all sides of the House. Then it would go forward as this motion has today in a non-partisan way so that there is consensus in working for the rights of children in Canada.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I confess not to being specifically aware of the private member's bill. It is my understanding that the government, as the minister mentioned this morning, supports the concept and is doing some work on it.

I would suggest, though, that because of the timing involved we should move and move quickly with any initiative like this. It is not an accident that the convention was signed this week. It commemorates 30 years of the declaration. As well, 10 years ago was the Year of the Child.

In terms of my co-sponsoring the bill, I have not yet seen it and no politician nor anybody else with any sense would agree to anything until seeing it. However, we recognize that there is some momentum there and a real consciousness. I am sure the hon. member got all sorts of letters supporting this process and Canada's involvement. I think that consciousness is something that we should build on.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the member for St. John's East for a very articulate statement of fact and support on behalf of the children of Canada. Really, it was a speech that I was anticipating. The only question that I have for the member is simply what are the numbers of children living in poverty in Canada. Does he have statistics for us?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a figure. Quite clearly, there have been numbers bandied about here today. Poverty is something that is more than money in the pocket. As I see it, poverty is lack of care, lack of shelter and lack of some sense of future. I see people every day who live on nothing, but who provide remarkably loving and secure homes for their children. These children have a future because they are taught that they have one.

The answer to the question may be that if there is one, it is too many. I think all of us, whether on this side of the House or on the other, work to make sure that there are none, because children in this country and children around the world have to be the future. We mark children from very early days. They are affected by their environment from the very beginning. The more secure that environment is, the more stable health care systems are and the more able children are to cope in the world, the better they are to be functional and to contribute to whatever country they live in.

If we have one child who is not getting that anywhere in the world, our work is not finished.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest) has just arrived, and since I was going to suggest waiting two minutes, I will yield the floor to the Minister.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): The Minister of State (Youth), on a point of order.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport and Deputy Leader of the government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who led the debate so eloquently today on the government side. And I may add, we do not often have a chance to be announced by a fellow member before rising in the House. I was going to suggest, considering the exceptional circumstances and the discussions that took place before today's debate, that the House support unanimously the motion before it today, Mr. Speaker.

I would also like to take advantage of this opportunity to say, on behalf of the government, that this decision was also made because the motion was presented by the leader of the New Democratic Party. We appreciated the passion and sincerity with which he presented his motion today in the House, and I suggest that in the spirit of parliamentary co-operation, as happens from time to time, we inform Canadians that the entire House, as represented by all Parties, unanimously supports this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): The House has heard the Minister's suggestion. Is there unanimous consent for this proposal?

Is the House agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the minister on behalf of our Leader and the New Democratic Party caucus. We appreciate the government's offer to have this motion passed by the House today and we also appreciate the non-partisan debate we have had by members of all three parties.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pronovost): It being three o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 81(17), the proceedings on the motion have expired. This House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m, pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 2.54 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that on Thursday during the discussion on business for the week a request was made that the Prime Minister report to the House on the results of his trip to Russia. I agreed to bring that to the Prime Minister's attention. He does very much wish to report to the House as soon as possible. As you can appreciate, he just returned yesterday and he does have his remarks together. They are being typed now.

What we would like to suggest—and there have been discussions among the parties in order to enable this to be done—is the following. I will put it forward in terms of an understanding rather than asking for a House order if I may.

The understanding would be that we go through Routine Proceedings. The first item of government business is a vote on the Ways and Means proceeding No. 8. I understand that there may be a wish to have a recorded division on that. It is also my understanding that there would be a 15-minute division bell agreed upon and that we would then revert to Statements by Ministers in order to allow the Prime Minister to report to the House at that time.

I think that if there is a general understanding in the House to proceed on that basis I would request that the House do so.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be as co-operative as possible. On the Ways and Means Motion we would just ask for a division rather than a recorded division.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, considering the importance of the Prime Minister's statement and the responses that we will hear from the opposition parties, the New Democratic Party is quite prepared to forgo a recorded division on the Ways and Means motion to allow the Prime Minister to speak at the earliest opportunity.

FINANCE

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the second report of the Standing Committee on Finance in relation to the technical paper on the goods and services tax.

I want to say that presenting this report has been a rather major effort. It was only made possible by some excellent work done by House of Commons staff in the committees branch who worked night and day, as well as those in the printing unit who worked overtime making it possible to have the material available.

The committee is recommending a reduction in the goods and services tax rate and a broadening of the base to make the tax more acceptable, hopefully, to Canadians.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, which has been certified correct by the clerk of petitions.

Actually, there is a long list of petitions, all from western Canadians who point out their concern with the government's intention to proceed with the goods and services tax. This is quite timely in light of the fact that the chairman of the finance committee has just tabled the report.

They point out at some length all the concerns they have regarding the tax and the fact that it is basically a very unfair tax. They request that the government come to its senses, go back to the drawing board and devise a tax that is at least fair to the people of Canada.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition on the same subject.

The petitioners who are from British Columbia reject the proposal for a goods and services tax. They ask for a reform of the tax system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

They want to ensure that there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure and cause the government to cease with the proposal that will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty on behalf of a number of constituents of my own and constituents of the Minister of National Defence to present a petition.

They call upon the government to reject the the goods and services tax proposal and to put in place a tax which would be more fair and less regressive for all Canadians.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX AND REQUEST FOR STRONGER FISHING REGULATIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present you with petitions sent to me by some of my constituents in Sackville, Port Elgin, Bayfield, Shediac, Grande Digue, Buctouche, Sainte Marie and all the communities in my riding which strongly object to the government's plan to impose a new 9 per cent tax. They say that this tax will be very unjust and a very heavy burden for families. This tax will be hidden and very unfair. The petitioners humbly ask Parliament to reject this new tax.

Mr. Speaker, I also have another petition, which is from residents of Saint Louis and concerns another subject, namely fishing. The signers of this petition ask the Government to extend its jurisdiction to the whole continental shelf so that the Canadian Government can control all the kinds of fishing that now go on there and so that the government can also regulate the fishery resources which are so vital for the Atlantic communities.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I too stand under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by many people in southwestern Ontario who are totally opposed to the goods and services tax proposed by the government. They call upon the government to withdraw this legislation.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I too rise to present a petition signed by many Canadians who are opposed to the goods and services tax. They join with many other Canadians who have expressed their opposition to this tax in so many ways including petitions.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and the honour this morning of presenting to the House of Commons six petitions signed by constituents in my riding. There are hundreds of signatures of people who are essentially opposed to the goods and services tax.

They outline in their petition that this is the thirty-first new tax or tax increase since 1984. They feel it will undermine low and middle income Canadians in our riding and indeed across the country, as well as bring harm to small business structures. They ask in the end, like this party, that the government reject the goods and services tax.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of petitions to present.

The first calls upon Parliament to reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax, to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations, and to ensure if and when there is broad public consensus on sales tax measures to replace the manufacturers' sales tax that this reform not be used as an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the second petition notes that the government has proposed to tax back old age security and family allowance benefits in part or in their entirety.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to abandon this proposed measure which singles out old age security and family allowance benefits as a tax source tied to the level of income.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 36 with a number of petitions. The first one is on the subject of the goods and services tax and signed by some 40 residents of Revelstoke, Castlegar, Trail, Rossland, Armstrong, and Kamloops, all within the Province of British Columbia.

The petitioners reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax and call upon Parliament to ensure if and when there is broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax that this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab such as they believe the current purpose of the government's GST to be.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I have four other petitions in a long list of petitions which I presented earlier on the subject of VIA Rail.

This time they are from the communities of Revelstoke, New Denver, Nakusp, Fokier, Galena Bay, Beaton, Nelson, Kamloops, Golden and Sicamous in British Columbia, and Calgary, Alberta.

Some 130 petitioners call upon the government to maintain The Canadian line of the VIA Rail system and to abandon plans for the sabotaging of rail passenger service across Canada.

RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present a petition signed by people from such diverse Ontario communities as Athens, Brockville, Chatham, Cornwall, Dundas, Frankfurt, Hamilton, Massey, Mildmay, North Bay, Prescott, Sault Ste Marie, St. Catharines, Stoney Creek, Sudbury, Temagami, Thunder Bay, Tilbury, Timmins, Toronto, Wallaceburg, Woodstock, as well as others from the provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Quebec.

The petitioners all believe passionately in the sanctity of life. They believe that all human life is precious and should be protected and nurtured from conception. They urge the government to pass legislation that will protect the lives of some 65,000 innocent victims annually.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36 I have the honour to present 4,413 petitions from people in Calgary northeast and southeast who would like the goods and services tax scrapped because of its inflationary nature and because it is going to create more government.

FORESTRY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by residents of Dome Creek in my riding and other communities in B.C.

They are urging the Government of Canada to renew immediately the forest resource agreement between the federal government and the province. I know they would agree with me that it is important we plant real trees so that we do not have to have the plastic ones we have in the House of Commons today.

ROUGE VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present a petition to the House of Commons today concerning an issue about which many members of Parliament have been concerned, that is, saving the Rouge Valley. The Rouge Valley is 5,000 acres of precious wilderness property in the northeast part of metro Toronto.

This is of particular importance this week because the metro Toronto council will have before it an agenda item on Wednesday to decide whether the Rouge Valley should be turned into a garbage dump. I would urge members of Parliament, as well as the hundreds of thousands of people across metro Toronto, to tell metro council that this is an unacceptable decision to make. It is outrageous.

This is a beautiful valley. It has endangered wildlife. It is a wilderness spot. It is a beautiful place for hundreds of children who visit each week. Mr. Speaker, I was so pleased that you visited the Rouge Valley just recently.

The petitioners are calling upon the Government of Canada to work with the province of Ontario. The province of Ontario owns about 80 per cent of the 5,000 acres. The petitioners want the Government of Canada to work with the government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to present a petition from a number of residents of Frontier, Saskatchewan who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the unborn child without distinction as to the stage of development.

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present this certified petition on behalf of the minister from Lisgar—Marquette.

It is signed by 52 petitioners who call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the pre-born child without distinction as to stage of development.

BILL 178

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition signed by 123 constituents and duly certified by the clerk of petitions.

The petitioners express their concern that Bill 178 of the province of Quebec restricts the right of freedom of expression and describes specific recommendations that the Government of Canada might take.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to rise in the House today to present several petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36.

• (1120)

The first petition I present is on behalf of the Council of Three Fires, Walpole Island First Nation in the riding of Kent. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to fulfil its responsibilities to hundreds of thousands of Canadians and Americans living along Lake St. Clair and stop the dredging of waters of Seaway Island and the dumping of potentially hazardous sediments into Lake St. Clair, pending the findings of a full and public environmental impact assessment to be ordered by the Minister of the Environment.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the second petition concerns the goods and services tax. The people of Kent County reject this proposal.

RIGHT TO LIFE

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is from the people of Kent who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the pre-born child without distinction as to stage of development.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, every weekend when I return to my riding of Parkdale—High Park I am swamped with more and more petitions from people living in Parkdale—High Park who request this Parliament to cancel the goods and services tax, to reject it outright.

We know the finance committee has recommended reducing the rate from 9 per cent to 7 per cent, but that is not what they want. They are calling on this government to reject the proposed goods and services tax outright.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present this petition, duly certified by the clerk of petitions and signed by many residents of the constituency of Lambton—Middlesex.

They are calling upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure today to present to the House a petition under Standing Order 36 containing 596 signatures from the city of Penticton in my riding.

The petitioners ask the government to reject the current proposal for the goods and services tax and ask that we ensure if and when there is a broad public consensus on a sales tax measure to replace the manufacturers' sales tax that this reform not be an opportunity for the government to impose a massive tax grab.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 136, 137, and 138.

[Text]

FIRST CLASS MAIL

Question No. 136—Mr. Taylor:

What percent of first-class mail is posted at each level of the rate structure for first class mail, and within each of these rate levels, what is the percentage by (a) volume (b) revenue generated of (i) individual to individual (ii) individual to corporate or business (iii) corporate or business to individual (iv) corporate or business to corporate or business mailings?

Mr. Benoît Tremblay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Canada Post Corporation does not collect such data on a regular basis. Rather, the market is defined based on different characteristics which relate each market segment to different types of competition. CPC then establishes its share in each market.

Broad indicators of the sectors generating CPC's revenues show that businesses, governments and other institutions contribute approximately 85 percent of the Corporation's total revenues. Almost half of this revenue is generated by Canada Post's largest 1,000 mailers.

ADVERTISING & PROMOTION CAMPAIGN

Question No. 137—Mr. Taylor:

What was the cost of Canada Post's recent advertising and promotion campaign and the corresponding change of logo and colours, broken down into (a) the total cost, including production, purchase and distribution of the mailing Canada Post sent to its employees, including the video, pin, magazine and any other items in that mailing (b) the total cost, for each province and territory, including production and distribution, of the Canada Post leaflet entitled "Better Mail Service: Turning a commitment into reality" (c) the cost per leaflet (d) the cost of redoing Canada Post's (i) letterhead (ii) new fleet (iii) mailboxes (iv) new employee wardrobe (v) postal outlets (vi) offices (vii) franchises (viii) sub-offices (ix) any other postal facilities with the new logo?

Mr. Benoît Tremblay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Due to the highly competitive nature of our business, costs related to Canada Post's recent advertising and promotion campaign and change of logo and colours are deemed as proprietary.

Over the next five years, the Corporation will proceed in an expeditious and cost-effective manner to converting to the new identity, using its own financial resources. As trucks, uniforms, mailboxes, signs and other corporate-owned articles are replaced, the newly-acquired items will bear the new identity.

In the case of the CPC vehicles, for instance, existing decals will be removed and new decals portraying the new look will be added on a schedule basis over several years and will be produced to the new standards.

LAWYERS—GRIEVANCES AND ARBITRATIONS

Question No. 138—Mr. Taylor:

For (a) January 1—June 30, 1980 (b) July 1—December 31 1980 (c) January 1—June 30, 1981 (d) July 1—December 31, 1981 (e) January 1—June 30, 1982 (f) July 1—December 31, 1982 (g) January 1—June 30, 1983 (h) July 1—December 31, 1983 (i) January 1—June 30, 1984 (j) July 1—December 31, 1984 (k) January 1—June 30, 1985 (l) July 1—December 31, 1985 (m) January 1—June 30, 1986 (n) July 1—December 31, 1986 (o) January 1—June 30, 1987 (p) July 1—December 31, 1987 (q) January 1—June 30, 1988 (r) July 1—December 31, 1988 (s) January 1—June 30, 1989, what was (i) the total amount spent on lawyers by Canada Post to deal with grievances and arbitrations (ii) the amount spent on lawyers from outside firms (iii) the number of technical objections filed during arbitration hearings by Canada Post (iv) the number of discharge cases referred to arbitration (v) the number of discharge cases relating to medical leave, sick leave or incapacitation referred to arbitration?

Mr. Benoît Tremblay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Canada Post Corporation's accounting systems are not structured in a manner that would allow it to address the Honourable Member's request.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON VISIT TO U.S.S.R.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to report to the House on my visit last week to the Soviet Union where I held extensive discussions with President Gorbachev and Prime Minister Ryzhkov. I also had very useful meetings with a number of important leaders, both government and party, in Kiev and Leningrad. The Secretary of State for External Affairs also held lengthy and constructive meetings with Mr. Shevardnadze.

I want to express my personal gratitude to the leadership and the people of the Soviet Union for the warmth and kindness they extended to all members of the Canadian delegation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: This was the first official visit to the Soviet Union by a Canadian Prime Minister in 18 years. In fact this is somewhat misleading because contact between our two nations has in recent years become quite sustained and productive. In 1983, when Mr. Gorbachev was responsible for agriculture, he made his first ever official visit to the west to Canada where he remained for some 10 days on an extensive national tour and of which he speaks with great affection and joy for the people that he met and the personal experiences that he enjoyed.

I visited Moscow less than six months after becoming Prime Minister in March 1985 for the funeral of former General Secretary Chernenko, during which I met with Mr. Gorbachev, then the new Soviet leader.

This high-level contact was followed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs' visit to the U.S.S.R. in April 1985 and Mr. Shevardnadze's return trip to Canada in 1986, and by periodic meetings between the two since, including in New York in September and in Moscow last week.

The minister responsible for the Wheat Board visited the Soviet Union in 1987 to promote the interests of Canadian grains and oilseed producers who have maintained huge sales to the Soviet Union over many years.

The Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture made an important visit to the Soviet Union earlier this year where he attended the third meeting of the Mixed Agricultural Commission since 1985. Former Agriculture Minister John Wise represented Canada at the 1985 and 1987 meetings.

The contacts between the Soviet Union and Canada on an ongoing basis were productive and, as I have indicated, sustained.

My visit to the Soviet Union came at a most critical juncture, at a time of powerful change in that country and of cascading reform throughout eastern Europe. As President Gorbachev said in our meeting: "Our times are changing so fast, are so dynamic that without good personal contacts among leaders it is impossible to build a good relationship". I fully subscribe to that view.

[Translation]

The discussions we had were both frank and very far-reaching. We talked about the economic and political changes now occurring in the Soviet Union and the great significance they have for that country's future.

President Gorbachev was acutely aware of the difficulties he faces in implementing perestroika and glasnost successfully. He is, above all, a realist.

But I was struck by his determination to succeed and by his confidence that success is possible. He considers the course that he has set for transforming the Soviet Union to be right and irreversible. I believe that he is correct.

I also believe, strongly, that it is in everyone's interests, including our own, that he succeed.

[English]

The changes that he is seeking to provoke within the Soviet Union are profound and pervasive. Perestroika is not simply about improving the economic performance of the Soviet Union, although that is both urgently wanted and very badly needed. An important new law dealing with economic reform is to be tabled by mid–December. I think Mr. Shevardnadze advised the Secretary of State for External Affairs that it would perhaps be on December 12.

Perestroika is about establishing a new political order based on greater individual freedom and responsibility and on more democratic institutions. Perestroika is about establishing a new political order based on greater individual freedom and responsibility and on more democratic institutions. It is about putting into place a whole new economic structure, based on a greater role for the market, on productivity growth, and on individual motivation and individual reward. It is about designing a new social system and instilling a new way of thinking into the Soviet consciousness based on fundamental attitudinal changes, on diminishing dependence on the state and on greater creativity of thought and independence of action by the individual. President Gorbachev told me that "The revolution we have embarked upon is above all a revolution of the mind, of people's mentality".

Resistance to change runs deep in the Soviet Union. In my judgment, there is no viable alternative to Mr. Gorbachev's plan or to Mr. Gorbachev himself. In politics, change often comes suddenly and with little warning. In public life, no one is indispensable. To the extent, however, that anyone is indispensable to the ongoing well–being of his own society, it is probably President Gorbachev because of the overwhelming extent to which the entire agenda of reform is identified personally with him, both at home and around the world.

Our discussions also covered in frank detail domestic developments in the Soviet Union that are of great interest to the Canadian people: human rights, religious freedoms, emigration, the rights of nationalities and the very nature of the Soviet federation. The Soviet Union has made very encouraging progress on all of these matters since Mr. Gorbachev came to office.

The fundamentals of the Soviet system are being questioned, often in publicly televised debates by newly–elected deputies and by ordinary citizens throughout the nation. Prominent dissidents and political prisoners have been released from detention and many have been allowed to leave the Soviet Union. For the first time, unofficial groups not connected with the Communist party are being tolerated and encouraged. Permission to emigrate from the Soviet Union, in particular by citizens of the Jewish faith, has increased greatly in recent years. so much so that there is, today, no backlog of family reunification cases between Canada and the Soviet Union.

A new emigration law is now being considered by the Supreme Soviet. Our hosts assured us that it is consistent with the standards on population movement established by the Conference on Security and Co–Operation in Europe. The Soviet authorities also intend to put into place more relaxed regulations on secrecy restrictions which, as we all know in this House, has been the root of many of the remaining "refusnik" cases. I had the opportunity in the Soviet Union to visit briefly with some Jewish refusniks who seek to emigrate to Canada and to Israel.

New regulations on emigration will soon be followed by a new law on religious rights, expected to be submitted to the Supreme Soviet in the near future. We were assured that it would provide the basis as well for a new relationship between church and state in the process of dealing with many of the concerns raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and by myself last week over the treatment of the Pentecostal Church and the Ukrainian Catholic and Ukrainian Orthodox Churches and of other religious groups in the Soviet Union.

[Translation]

It has become very clear that the question of nationalities and of ethnic minorities is fundamental to the nature of the Soviet Federation and, ultimately, fundamental to the future of the Soviet Union itself. Problems elsewhere, in other nations, pale in comparison with the tremendous challenge facing President Gorbachev in governing a country of such enormous diversity and profound divisions. We see evidence of those problems every day on television: in Armenia, in Georgia, in Moldavia and elsewhere. The strains in the fabric of the Soviet Federation are serious and no one appears to be more conscious of them than President Gorbachev himself. He indicated to me that he is determined to respond to those strains positively and with imagination before they degenerate further into greater instability.

[English]

His resolve to seek greater equity and fairness for nationalities and minorities is equalled by his determination that this new level of social and political justice be found within the federation, a federation that will allow the various republics greater autonomy, particularly in culture, language and the economy.

In our discussions with President Gorbachev and with Foreign Minister Shevardnadze, we also focused on today's often tumultuous international agenda. In the political declaration President Gorbachev and I signed in Moscow six days ago, which Foreign Minister Shevardnadze has subsequently characterized as a "milestone" and as "an intellectual breakthrough" for both nations, the Soviet Union recognized the benefits of change and endorsed the right of countries to make their own way in the world without outside interference by anybody.

The regional conflicts in Central America, southern Africa, Indochina, the Middle East and Afghanistan were covered quite comprehensively, particularly in extensive meetings between Mr. Shevardnadze and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

President Gorbachev and I discussed the rapidly evolving situation in eastern and central Europe very frankly. We reviewed these areas not only in terms of developments unfolding in that part of the world but, equally important, in terms of their impact upon the over-all relationship between East and West.

Change has come to eastern Europe rapidly, unevenly and unpredictably. Every day seems to bring more dramatic news and more unforgettable images: former Czech Prime Minister Alexander Dubcek making a triumphal speech before hundreds of thousands of people in Wenceslaus Square; breaches, at last, in the Berlin Wall as millions stream through to satisfy themselves first hand about western values and western institutions; non-communist political parties exercising power in Poland and the Prime Minister of Poland being received two days ago with warmth and encouragement by President Gorbachev in Moscow; the privatization of economic activity on a growing basis in Hungary; and exciting new freedoms of speech and protest and movement for peoples throughout the east which, for 40 years, has known little of freedom and less of its benefits. The pace of change has become torrential, overwhelming in some ways our capacity to assess the transformation that we are in the process of witnessing.

A revealing insight in this regard appeared yesterday, I thought, in The New York Times where Harvard professor Michael Sandel commented that "the most appropriate response now is not caution or boldness—we are beyond all that—but attentiveness and appreciation because, when history turns this fast, what we want from statesmen are not vain attempts to control events that have a momentum of their own, but that they be alive to the possibilities that these events will leave in their wake."

I think that is important advice from Professor Sandel, and it is advice that the government and the Parliament of Canada, I suspect, will follow.

[Translation]

The world is now clearly departing from a sterile period of East-West confrontation and embarking on one of immensely more fruitful relations, a course that ultimately promises genuine democracy in Eastern Europe, more liberalized trade and investment opportunities across that vast region, more predictable relations with the Soviet Union and profound reductions in the emphasis on defence in all capitals of the world. Eventually, as governments continue to emerge in Eastern Europe that have the freely given support of their people, European stability will be put on a durable basis.

But the transition period will have to be managed carefully. And, in fact, the people of Eastern Europe and the leadership of the U.S.S.R. are handling the changing situation very prudently.

In these swiftly changing circumstances, NATO retains its great importance because it is the locus for discussion of the Western response to political change in the East and for coordinating positions in the crucial conventional arms reduction discussions in Vienna and on the superpower negotiations on strategic weapons in Geneva.

• (1140)

[English]

Distinctions need to be made between intentions and military capacity. It should be remembered that the Soviet Union retains enormous conventional and strategic forces. Everyone's security objective is served by a balance in military capacity at progressively lower levels of arms. Both sides want lower levels of arms.

NATO is a political, as well as military, organization and is an indispensable part of the western diplomatic infrastructure. It was clear from my discussions with President Gorbachev that neither sides thinks it is time to abandon any alliances. In fact, President Gorbachev signalled very clearly that it would be imprudent to change alliances or institutions in a manner that could destabilize east-west relations, as eastern Europe goes through a period of such convulsive change.

I proposed to President Gorbachev that we seek to establish a closer relationship between himself and the leaders of the major industrialized western countries. In response to President Gorbachev's interest in integrating the Soviet economy over time more closely into the world trade and payment system, I told him I would propose to my G-7 colleagues that each year's chairman be mandated to discuss with him the ideas and strategies that emerge from the Economic Summit. This would provide him with a regular opportunity to obtain a first-hand report on the preoccupations and interests of the leaders of the principal western governments whose co-ordinated policy approaches have produced in recent years an era of remarkable economic growth and a series of initiatives that both intrigue and challenge President Gorbachev and about which he asked many questions and some of which he would seek to apply, given the new circumstances he chooses to develop in his own nation.

President Gorbachev warmly welcomed this proposal.

Agreement was also reached on developing a closer bilateral consultation process on a range of international issues of mutual concern.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and Mr. Shevardnadze, as well as their officials, will meet more frequently for that purpose.

In Moscow, I also raised with Mr. Gorbachev the Arctic arms control proposals he had set forth in his Murmansk speech several years ago.

I pointed out to him that Mr. Clark had responded to those proposals on several occasions but that we were quite prepared to discuss with the Soviets any refinements they might have to make to their original ideas.

I pointed out, as well, that I continued to believe that current ongoing arms control negotiations between the two superpowers and the two alliances had proven successful and were the best avenues for making progress on these issues.

He understands fully our position and agreed that further review of this issue should be pursued by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and Mr. Shevardnadze.

In terms of bilateral co-operation, last week's visit marked a watershed in our relations.

[English]

We signed 14 bilateral agreements—more than had been signed in the previous 20 years—on subjects ranging from international affairs to Arctic co-operation to the environment to military and cultural co-operation to investment protection. Foreign Minister Shevardnadze told Izvestia at the end of last week that the Soviets attach particular significance to the environment agreement because "Canada—was one of the first to place environmental protection on the international agenda and Canada has achieved remarkable success in this area."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Soviets strongly endorse plans for co-operation in the Arctic and our intention to work with the Soviet Union and other countries to ensure a reduction in environmental pollutants that threaten the Arctic ecosystem, above all those that imperil the food chain of the Arctic peoples.

In addition to the 14 agreements, we each undertook to expand government representation in each other's countries, as a result of which the Government of Canada will open a consulate general in Kiev in the Ukraine.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Soviets intend to open a new office in Toronto and discussions will start shortly on our respective plans for those offices. We hope to put our office into operation before long.

I might point out, Mr. Speaker, that the establishment of a new office in Kiev will, I think, go a long way in responding to an increasingly obvious need for Canada to be represented in the capital of the Ukraine.

Nearly one million Canadians trace their roots back to the Ukraine. Many of them still have family there. At present, 35 per cent of the visa applicants at our embassy in Moscow come from the Ukraine. With more relaxed travel restrictions in the Soviet Union, we can expect a substantial increase in human contacts between Canada and the Ukraine.

Moreover, an office of this dimension in Kiev will allow us to tap the commercial and trade potential of the Ukraine, a market of some 52 million people whose economic needs can be responded to by the transfer of Canadian technology, joint venture initiatives and direct equity participation, to say nothing of the transfer of skills, knowledge, and know-how in the area of agriculture where, as the leaders of the Ukraine have pointed out to us, the need and their need is greatest and Canadian expertise is acknowledged to be world class.

The Canadian private sector is also taking an unprecedented interest in the Soviet economy. The Canadian government has been strongly supportive of the private sector as it seeks new economic opportunities in the Soviet Union and new trade and investment niches for Canada.

Our two-way trade has for too long lacked diversification and dynamism and I was delighted to see the enthusiasm and resolve of Canadian business people in Moscow surveying new opportunities and anticipating new challenges, none more enthusiastically than distinguished businessmen like Frank Stronach , Albert Reichmann, representatives from Lavalin, and other leading firms from British Columbia to Newfoundland which was represented by Vic Young of Fishery Products International.

A broad commercial relationship with the Soviet Union will help us not only to diversify our exports, now largely dominated by grain sales, but also to provide the products and services and technology that will help to support the goals of perestroika by satisfying some of the rising expectations this policy has triggered among the Soviet people.

That is the greatest challenge, I believe, confronting Mr. Gorbachev today, the problem of the rising expectations generated by the enthusiasm with which his reforms were introduced and received by the people. A lot of progress is expected the next day and yesterday in the Soviet Union and he is incapable of delivering as rapidly as he would like on all of these expectations.

That is why it is so important for countries like Canada to come forward in tangible ways with trade missions that sign deals that create new wealth and new opportunities in order to provide him with the support.

I mention, parenthetically, Mr. Speaker, George Cohon, the chief executive officer of McDonald's who has been working to open the largest McDonald's in the world in the Soviet Union. He placed an ad in the Moscow newspapers for 500 people he wanted to have work in his new restaurant which the Soviet Union believes and hopes can expand to 15 or 20 across the country in short order. However, in the Soviet Union, he put an ad in the newspaper asking for 500 young men and women to seek employment. When we left he had had 14,000 applicants, and they were coming in at the rate of 1,000 a day. I told him that if it did not work out there, he might consider putting it in my riding.

This is the kind of enthusiasm with which the Soviet people are responding to Canadian business people. I think that this kind of attitude is a good, friendly, productive and a very creative one. This is a constructive and welcome response to the daring and innovative reforms being implemented by the Soviet leadership.

Last Wednesday, in Moscow, I attended with Prime Minister Ryzhkov the inauguration of an organization, the Canada–U.S.S.R. Business Council, that will do much to underpin our new political relationship and to bolster our bilateral commercial ties.

The council includes almost all of the principal Canadian firms with significant current or prospective commercial interests in the Soviet Union and is co–chaired by Albert Reichman, President of Olympia and York, and Alexei Malkevitch, head of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce.

The Canadian business delegation that was in the Soviet Union during my visit numbered about 240 people. A good number of them signed agreements for direct investment, joint ventures or equity participation arrangements.

These agreements, worth one billion dollars, plus, are an extremely important part of building a new relationship between Canada and the Soviet Union.

President Gorbachev made very clear that the U.S.S.R. was not looking for direct aid from the West.

What the Soviet Union wished to have with Canada was a cooperative, mutually beneficial, political, economic and technological relationship because of the many similarities between our two countries, and because of the experience we have in coping with many categories of problems that the U.S.S.R. is now dealing with in a serious way.

[English]

For our part, Mr. Speaker, we went to the Soviet Union with the objectives of establishing a broadly–based relationship of confidence with President Gorbachev and his colleagues, of seeking on behalf of all Canadians to respond constructively to the historic changes that the Soviet leader is seeking to make and of bringing about a new beginning in Soviet–Canadian relations.

I believe that we have achieved these objectives. I also hope that, together, we have made a contribution to the building of a more durable international peace, which is the most important legacy our generation can pass on to our children.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what is happening in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe today is the most important and cataclysmic change in human affairs since the last world war and indeed perhaps since the Soviet revolution itself.

Millions upon millions of Poles, Czechs, Hungarians, Russians, East Germans, Bulgarians, Latvians, Estonians, Ukrainians, Lithuanians are demanding freedom, demanding democracy, and they are getting it.

The urge for freedom is unpredictable and finally irresistible. Totalitarian regimes are falling at a staggering rate. They are being shunted aside in the sweep of history. The most remarkable feature about the drama surrounding us that we see every night on television is that so far this popular evolution is being done without violence.

Diplomats are becoming irrelevant, the pundits and experts are at a loss to explain what has happened. Very few of them predicted it. Foreign policy analysts, so used to seeing the world only in terms of the superpowers, have been confounded by what is happening. Leaders and the elites are being toppled. The people are rolling over them all. The tearing down of the Berlin Wall is only the most visible symbol of this demand for freedom.

What this government of ours has failed to grasp so far is that the urge for freedom is exploding; it is bursting out, not only in Berlin, but at almost every level in the East Bloc countries. Yet while the whole of Europe is alive with discussion, as Hungarians and Poles and Czechs are on the streets debating these issues and calling for freedom, we in this Parliament have had no discussion of what our approach should be to these massive, compulsive and unprecedented changes in the world.

The Prime Minister has signed an agreement which he claims will usher in a new era in Canadian–Soviet relations. Yet, it was this Prime Minister whose major foreign policy plank in the last election was to spend billions upon billions of dollars on building a fleet of nuclear powered submarines to protect us from the Soviets.

The Minister of Defence still claims that the White Paper on defence is government policy, and that the submarines were cancelled only for economic reasons.

The Prime Minister has made it clear both in the Soviet Union and here that the view of this government is that the cold war is not yet over. Which is it? Are we into a new relationship, or are we still in the cold war? We cannot have two policies on this issue.

Before his official visit, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) failed to consult Canadians. He did not ask the opinion of the Standing Comittee on External Affairs. He did not consult academics, former diplomats or non-governmental organizations. The government behaved much the same as it did regarding Canada's membership in the Organization of American States. But going off course is dangerous, Mr. Speaker. The government is changing the direction of this country's external policy without first consulting Canadians. And it is not just the absence of debate. The fact is, this government has failed to produce a single official document on external affairs policy since it was sworn in.

The Prime Minister would do well to follow Mr. Gorbachev's example by injecting a little glasnost, a little openness into its external affairs policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Since this is only the second speech of the Prime Minister of our country on foreign policy in the House of Commons in the last five years, he should not be surprised if Canadians are not at all sure what the policy of this government is with regard to the unprecedented changes taking place in eastern Europe.

What are the implications for NATO? What are the implications for Canada's position in this alliance? What direction do we want NATO to take? What are the implications for the movement toward 1992 and the so-called economic union of Europe? What about the possible reunification of the two Germanies? These are questions that need to be addressed. These are questions that need to be discussed in this Parliament, not in the Langevin Block, if they are ever discussed at all.

We are happy to see the Soviets' willingness to allow more autonomy in the Baltic States and the Ukraine, and we welcome the opening of the Canadian consulate in Kiev in the Ukraine. We hope that such a move will facilitate the reunification of families of Ukrainian descent in Canada. We hope also that our government policy will be to continue to encourage more autonomy within the Ukraine and the Baltic States.

Many of the agreements signed by the Prime Minister in Moscow were renewals of agreements signed by previous governments, including the 1984 Arctic Scientific Co-operation Agreement. The difference is that previous governments took a leadership role. Mr. Pearson's visit in 1955 as Secretary of State for External Affairs was the first time a major western political figure visited the Soviet Union since the great war.

• (1200)

A 1971 visit by Mr. Trudeau was followed by major cultural, academic and sports exchange agreements, as well as agreements on trade and scientific co-operation.

We welcome the creation of a Canada-U.S.S.R. Business Council and the desire to invest shown by business circles. Businessmen, however, are very realistic. Will they be able to make a profit and bring those profits back to Canada? Will the ruble remain a non-convertible currency? Will the Canadian government provide guarantees for Canadian investments in Soviet Union?

What we find very disturbing, however, is that the government did not offer economic assistance. Because there is a risk. If there is no economic progress, the reform process may abort, not only in the Soviet Union but also in Eastern Europe.

The joint statement by the two governments contains many generalities but no proposals, no initiatives, no studies or any indication of interest in developing Canadian perspectives on arms limitation. Joint approaches to Arctic security shone by their absence. There was no response to Mr. Gorbachev's proposal regarding a peace zone in the Arctic.

In fact, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) insisted on reminding Canadians that Soviet submarines had navigated in Canadian waters, instead of stressing a statement by Mr. Edward Shevardnadze that Soviet submarines would respect Canadian sovereignty in the North.

[English]

These are issues that should have been addressed. There are more. The Prime Minister should have put forward serious proposals in several areas. First, Arctic security. In February, 1988, I called for the creation of a new international regime in the Arctic, in particular the promotion of arms control alternatives. This government has refused to consider any such initiative.

The second area is Arctic sovereignty. We need a joint declaration with the Soviet Union in which they explicitly recognize our sovereignty over Canadian-claimed Arctic waters. The Soviet foreign minister's statement on Soviet submarines hinted at their willingness to support such a declaration.

The third area is Arctic environment. We are pleased to see that Canada will be hosting an Arctic environment conference next year. We are concerned that we do not have in this a clearly developed and co-ordinated policy approach to Arctic issues. Therefore, I call on the government to implement a recent recommendation that an ambassador for circumpolar affairs be named to co-ordinate Canada's Arctic policy.

We need to increase Canada's diplomatic presence in eastern Europe. We have no diplomatic presence in eastern Germany or in Bulgaria at the moment. We should, particularly now in eastern Germany.

Every effort should be made to involve Canadians more frequently and systematically in government policy discussions on important international issues with significant ramifications for them. The government needs to be more open, and that openness should begin right here in the Parliament of Canada where we have had no foreign policy debates. None of the recent initiatives of this government have been taken to the Standing Committee on External Affairs.

Another area is economic assistance to eastern Europe. Most western leaders have recognized the critical importance of a successful reform process in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe. They have given generously of their funds to help Poland and Hungary, and it will be forthcoming, no doubt, for other eastern European states undergoing economic and political reform. An unfortunate exception has been Canada, where a paltry $42 million was offered to Poland and Hungary while other countries were offering hundreds of millions of dollars. Why are we Canadians satisfied to give, as Lech Walesa put it, "a beautiful tie to a corpse"?

When I had the honour with my colleague from Parkdale—High Park to meet Lech Walesa in Toronto, Mr. Walesa said to us that it was important that Canada invest in eastern Europe and in Poland because we had to give the people of Poland—and he was speaking for them at this instance—a clear message of hope. We have to give some sign that Canadians have confidence in the future of the democratic movement in Poland, that there are signs of Canadian enterprise, visible signs of Canadian business, because they want to see their economies reconstructed on the basis of democracy. But time runs out and they need an urgent Canadian and western response to their problems. We must show them that as Canadians we are willing to participate with the Polish, Hungarian, Soviet and East German peoples in their reconstruction and we have to do it in a concrete way.

We did not anticipate or require that the Prime Minister's visit would solve or even address all of the major problems of the world. However, what does stand out in his public declaration so far, including his statement this morning, is that in the hours of discussions and visits not one word was spoken about the events in the world's most populace nation, the other communist superpower, the People's Republic of China. Surely this was a public opportunity for the Prime Minister to elicit support from the Soviets for the movement towards democracy in China.

I would hope that the Prime Minister impressed upon President Gorbachev that the movement toward greater freedom and democracy is not reversible. There can be no return to totalitarian methods either in the Soviet Union or in eastern Europe. I do hope that when he sees President Bush this week he will also impress upon him that the convulsions and transformations in the world demand that the United States encourage economic development and reform in the eastern bloc countries.

Both President Gorbachev and President Bush must understand that when they meet at Malta it must not be merely a replay of Yalta. It is not their world to divide again as they wish. Europeans are determining their own future. People in every part of the globe are demanding a reversal of the arms race and a commitment toward co-operation and peace. I believe that as in the move toward democracy in eastern Europe, the demands of the people will not be denied.

These are tremendously exciting changes occurring in the world. As a middle power with immense goodwill and respect around the globe, Canada has a single opportunity to push for even more freedom, more democracy and more peace throughout the globe. I urge our government not to let us miss that opportunity. We should be leaders in this movement and not merely followers as we have been to date.

All the men, women and children alive on the face of the globe today have spent their entire lives living in the shadow of the threat of war and the spectre of the arms race. We have poverty and suffering because for generations we have spent trillions of dollars on armaments instead of on promoting freedom. We have spent countless decades fighting one another rather than working together. There is no guarantee that this fantastic push for freedom will succeed. But Canadians expect our government to do absolutely everything possible to encourage it and to join in the movement in a very constructive way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I begin by thanking the Prime Minister for making this report to the House on his historic visit. It is something we would like to see more often.

I think the comments of the Leader of the Official Opposition about the need to involve Parliament more in making foreign policy in Canada is a suggestion that the Prime Minister should listen to, not only with respect to foreign policy but also with respect to other areas as well. There has been a trailing away, if you like, in prime ministerial interest in the House of Commons and we hope that this is the beginning of a new interest in the Chamber.

I would like also to say in the same vein that many of us were distressed at the way in which the decision to join the Organization of American States was arrived at without consultation with the external affairs committee of this House, or with the non-governmental organizations, churches and other groups that have an interest in Central and Latin America.

We hope that with respect to east-west relations, the Prime Minister will take Parliament into its confidence and involve the whole of the Canadian people through Parliament and other organizations in the making of foreign policy. If he did, and if he had done that earlier, I think he would have found that there was a lot of support for the kinds of things that the Prime Minister himself now seems to be considering. In that sense I think the Prime Minister is not only playing catch-up in terms of international relations with other countries but also playing catch-up with the Canadian people who have been ready for a more enlightened approach to east-west relations for some time now.

As was said this morning in a newspaper column regarding the visit, better late than never, and we are happy that the Prime Minister has now grasped what is going on in the world and particularly what is going on in the Soviet Union.

I want to compliment him on elements of the statement. What I have in mind is the relative lack of gloating in the statement, of ideological gloating. I believe it very important for those of us in the west not to be seen to be gloating over what has happened in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. This was a point made not so long ago by none other than Zbigniew Brezcinski and many others. I say this because I have noticed in speeches made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs a certain amount of what I would call unwarranted ideological gloating.

I think it is important that in this new east-west relationship that the west retain a certain amount of humility. We should keep in mind that our system, whatever its merits, has also been responsible for incredible poverty within our own midst and in the Third World, thanks to a relationship in which wealth is still being transferred in a net way from the poorest countries to the wealthiest countries. We must remember that we too have severe environmental problems and that our society is besieged with meaninglessness and drugs and many of the other things with which other societies are also plagued. We ought to remain humble, if you like, in our approach while, at the same time, welcoming what is going on in other parts of the world.

I also welcome the Prime Minister's proposal with respect to developing a relationship between Mr. Gorbachev and the G–7 group. I think anything which increases personal contact between Mr. Gorbachev and the leaders of the western countries is a good thing and I hope that the Prime Minister can be instrumental in setting up more of those kinds of contacts.

I welcome the fact that when the Prime Minister was there he brought up the issue of the Ukrainian Catholic Church which is of great concern to many people in my riding, in Winnipeg, and in the country in general. I hope that the new consulate which is being set up in Kiev will be instrumental in bringing new opportunities for Canadians of Ukrainian origin to visit the Ukraine, to do business in the Ukraine, and vice versa, and that the new law upcoming in the Soviet Union with respect to relationships between church and state will see a legalization of the Ukrainian Catholic Church, something which many people have hoped for for a long time.

With respect to the Murmansk proposal, I notice in the statement that the Prime Minister says, with respect to the proposal of Mr. Gorbachev for a zone of peace in the Arctic: "Mr. Clark responded to these proposals on several occasions, but the Canadian government is quite prepared to discuss any refinements the Soviet might have to make to their original ideas".

Many people who have paid attention to the Murmansk proposal and to the period thereafter are not aware that this government has made any response except to make what constitutes no response at all.

We do not just want to know what the refinements are that the Soviets might have to their own ideas, we want to know what the Canadian ideas are with respect to peace in the Arctic. We do not have that yet. The statement says that progress on these issues is best left to negotiations between the two superpowers. This is the Yalta mentality that we are trying to overcome, that the world is trying to overcome with respect to seeking international peace and stability.

It is a profound mistake on the part of the government to leave matters pertaining to the Arctic to the context of superpower negotiations or inter–alliance negotiations because there are many things that Canada has a unique responsibility to concern itself with given our unique geo–political situation between the superpowers in the Arctic. This is something that the government does not yet seem to have appreciated in its full measure. So what are the government's views?

I hope that perhaps today we might hear from the government as to what the Prime Minister thinks of many of the good suggestions that have been made in recent years and, most recently, at a conference sponsored by the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament on peace and security in the Arctic. There is the whole question of naval arms control and the proliferation of submarine–launched cruise missiles. There was not a mention of it in the statement by the Prime Minister. This area of growing proliferation of nuclear weapons is of increasing concern.

The Prime Minister and the government still seem locked into the view that the only things that are significant in terms of arms control are happening in Europe. What is happening in the Arctic and what is happening in the northern Pacific are things that ought to concern the Canadian government every bit as much as what is happening in Europe.

What is the response of the government to the proposal that there be an Arctic open skies policy? What is the response of the government to the suggestion that we seek—and this is a suggestion that has been made not only by the Soviet Union, but by various Canadian groups and political parties—a demilitarized zone in the Arctic or a nuclear free zone in the Arctic? Has the government got an argument why this would be a bad thing or why this is not something that the Canadian government could be showing some initiative on?

There is the proposal for an Arctic ambassador, or a circumpolar ambassador, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition called it, someone who would concern him or herself directly with Arctic matters. As well, there is the proposal for a conference on security and co–operation in the Arctic, similar to the Conference on Security and Co–operation in Europe.

I noticed in one of the press reports of the Prime Minister's visit that the language "common search for security" was used in a statement put out by the Prime Minister and Mr. Gorbachev. What is needed now is a bridge from the language of "common search for security" to the language of "common security". It is the concept of common security, which goes back to the Palme Commission report in 1982, that we find the conceptual framework that I think is most appropriate to Canada's situation in the Arctic, sitting as we do between the two superpowers. I would recommend a reading of that document and many others which have followed it, to the Prime Minister.

As I said before, we have a unique responsibility, being between the superpowers, to pursue a common security regime in the Arctic. It is not enough to leave it up to the superpowers, because it is in the context of the relationship between the superpowers that the greatest threat to our sovereignty comes. I think our sovereignty in the Arctic is not any more respected by the United States, perhaps even less so, than is by the Soviet Union. If we are concerned about sovereignty in the Arctic, we have to also be concerned about what the United States might be doing in our north and not just the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister has made much of the fact that Mr. Gorbachev indicated to him that he would like to see the alliances continue. That may well be the case. That may well may be the view of Mr. Gorbachev. We know it is the view of the Prime Minister. I am sure that Mr. Gorbachev also believes, as we do, that there are a range of issues outside the NATO–Warsaw Pact negotiations with which Canada and the U.S.S.R. should be concerning themselves. Those are the issues which pertain to the Arctic.

As we have said many times before, it is in this context that we urge the Prime Minister and the government to seek a replacement for our relationship with the United States now constituted in NORAD which would give us more independence and more ability to respond to initiatives that are made by the Soviet Union with respect to peace and security in the Arctic.

Within the context of NATO, it seems to me that the Prime Minister should have said something this morning about his statement that the White Paper is outdated. We asked the question of the Minister of National Defence in the House the other day when the Prime Minister was away. Now is the opportunity for the Prime Minister to say what he meant when he said that the White Paper was outdated. What is going to be the follow-up of the government to that fact, a fact which I might say was perceived by many long before the Prime Minister said it was so. But the fact of the matter is the Prime Minister has said the White Paper is outdated. What will happen now? What will be the process for reviewing Canadian defence and security policy in the follow-up to the Prime Minister's statement?

The Prime Minister is going to Brussels soon. I would recommend to him, on behalf of our party, that in view of the changing world circumstances, in view of the outdatedness of the White Paper, that a couple of things be done now.

We recommend that the Prime Minister commit himself and his government to trying to eliminate the first use policy of nuclear weapons within NATO; that the Prime Minister and his government commit itself to putting at least a moratorium on Canada's participation in the FOFA strategy of NATO, the one which has caused so much trouble for Canadians, and in particular, the Innu people in Labrador; and that the Prime Minister indicate to Canadians that Canada will put an end to cruise testing in Canada and take a different position than it did with respect to the modernization of nuclear weapons in Europe.

Finally, we recommend that Canada should seek, within the context of the mutual balance force reduction negotiations to bring Canadian troops home from Europe, something which I see the Prime Minister has already talked about. Certainly if that can be done in the context of negotiated reductions, that is the way to do it.

If NATO is to become an agent of the transition to a new relationship between east and western Europe, as many believe it can now become, given the changes in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, then I think Canada should become vigorously involved in that change.

We are looking at an entirely new situation in Europe. We are looking at a Europe which is no longer post-war Europe, not only in economic and political terms but also psychologically. I had an opportunity to be there recently and it is clear that there is an entirely new collective self-consciousness in Europe. This is something that I do not think has been fully appreciated in Canada. It means that the United States will have less influence in Europe, not more.

It means there will be an opening for real Canadian participation of the kind that we have not seen before in shaping the future of Europe. Whether it turns out to be still an east-west relationship with a common security arrangement or whether it turns out to be a larger western Europe with the border between east and west pushed further east, or whether it turns out to be Mr. Gorbachev's common European home from the Atlantic to the Urals, whatever the case may be, it will be an entirely new Europe. The opportunity exists now for Canada to be involved in that in a way that we previously have not. Too often up until now we have simply taken the American view, whatever that happens to be, in NATO.

In the larger context, still, we would like to see Canada be much more active and principled in pushing for a comprehensive ban on all testing of all nuclear weapons and on all chemical weapons. We live in a different world in which many of the things for which there have been arguably reasons for pursuing, various courses of action have disappeared. It seems to me that the Canadian government must now take a different and bolder course.

I notice that the Prime Minister used a quote in which boldness was downplayed and attentiveness and appreciation were regarded positively. I think that is a good quote. I think there are many cases in foreign policy where attentiveness and appreciation is an appropriate first course of action. But there does come a time when boldness is required. Boldness is required in the international scene on the whole question of nuclear arms control. Boldness is also required when the Prime Minister goes to see Mr. Bush in the days ahead, to tell Mr. Bush that it is about time that the United States of America showed the same tolerance in its backyard as the Soviets are now showing in eastern Europe, and to tell Mr. Bush to change American policy in El Salvador and Central America. That seems to be an opportunity for the Prime Minister to be bold and appropriate, all at the same time.

With respect to what is happening in eastern Europe, I think the time has come for bold action to make sure that the democratic experiments which are happening in eastern Europe now succeed. This is our time to show that the west was not simply crying crocodile tears for the last 40 years, that our statements about the suffering and the oppression of people in Poland and East Germany, Hungary and Czechoslovakia were not just strategic statements but that they were sincere statements. When the time comes for us to put our money where our mouth is, we must show that we will put our money where our mouth is, that there will be Canadian action on eastern Europe to make sure that those new governments succeed. That is not something that the Canadian government has done so far to the satisfaction of anyone. I might add, in that respect, that what is important in all of this is that the principle of additionality be respected, i.e. that whatever aid that we may give to eastern Europe not come at the expense of the traditional aid that we have given to Third World countries. There is a very real danger that the south will be left out of this new era in the north vis-à-vis east-west relations.

Finally, because I realize that my time has run out, I think again where boldness is required is on the question of the environment. The time has come to be bold on the environment. I think it is on the environment that finally the differences between east and west, between the Soviet Union and the U.S., and between Canada and the U.S.S.R., will be trivialized in what will come to be the need for planetary solidarity, not alliances, NATO and the Warsaw Pact, but planetary solidarity.

In order to survive and in order for there to be a truly human future, all these differences will have to be trivialized. It is in our common concern about the environment that we get glimpses of what we ought to really mean when we talk about security. What is security, after all, if you cannot breathe the air, drink the water or grow food? The navies, the armies and the air forces of the world are paltry in comparison to the danger which the environmental crisis provides and I hope that soon we will see real boldness and not just attentiveness on the part of the Prime Minister to the environmental crisis.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended by 61 minutes beginning at one o'clock p.m.

Speaker's Ruling

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ADVANCE PAYMENTS FOR CROPS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-36, an act to amend the Advance payments for Crops Act and the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: I have certain motions which I must rule on.

[Translation]

There are eleven motions in amendment standing on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-36, An Act to amend the Advance Payments Acts.

SPEAKER'S RULING—MOTIONS IN AMENDMENT

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9 and 11, in the name of the hon. member for Mackenzie, cause the Chair considerable procedural difficulty. These motions are attempting to remove the notion of the producer organization paying interest on money that is attributable to advance payments. It would appear that one of the principles of this present bill is to change the law related to the payment of interest. As hon. members are aware, it is not within our established practices to permit amendments that are contrary to the principle of a bill as agreed to by the House of Commons at second reading.

Consequently, in accordance with Beauchesne's fifth Edition, subsection 1 of CITATION 773, I must rule Motions Nos. 1, 2, 8, 9 and 11 out of order.

[Translation]

Motion numbered 5 standing in the name of the Hon. the Minister of agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski)is in a situation that is basically similar to those motions I have just ruled upon. However, motion numbered 5 is rendered acceptable by the fact that it is accompagnied by a recommandation of Her Excellency, the Governor General. Thus, motion numbered 5 will be debated and voted on separately.

[English]

Motion No. 6, standing in the name of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, is attempting to amend the original act. Hon. members know that it is not procedurally acceptable to amend sections of the original act that are not included in an amending bill. Therefore, in accordance with Beauchesne, paragraph 8(b), citation 773, I must rule this motion out of order.

Motions Nos. 7 and 10 are in order and will be debated together, with a vote on Motion No. 7 applying to Motion No. 10.

• (1230)

I shall now put motion numbered 5 to the House.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I obtained a copy of your decision. I think that Motions Nos. 3 and 4 standing in the names of the Hon. Member for MacKenzie (Mr. Althouse) and the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) respectively are also, in the opinion of the Chair, out of order, for lack of the royal recommendation. So, since you did not say so, I thought that you did not intend to allow debate on Motions Nos. 3 and 4.

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry for the mistake. The Hon. Member is right. Therefore I want to add to the decision.

[English]

Motions Nos. 3 and 4, standing in the name of the hon. members for Mackenzie and Algoma respectively, are identical to Motion No. 5 and will not be selected as, without the royal recommendation, they would be out of order.

[Translation]

I thank the Hon. Member.

[English]

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you would perhaps consider the argument that Motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5, rather than requiring the Royal Recommendation in this particular piece of legislation, are simply correcting this legislation to make it the same as Section 9 of the existing act which has the effect, as I read it, of telling producer organizations that have made such advances that the government will stand behind them for any overages exceeding 2 per cent which, I believe, is another way of saying the same thing as do the proposed motions that are before us. I think that the royal recommendation is perhaps unnecessary because there was a section in the existing legislation, namely,

Section 9, which does the same thing, in my view, and is, I think, in part the reason that the Minister of Agriculture proposed Motion No. 6 because that section of the act becomes unnecessary if the change to 2 per cent, which is proposed in Motions Nos. 3, 4 and 5, is acted upon.

I understand the usual argument that we cannot reduce the amounts of money but, in this case, the act had already effectively, I believe, reduced that amount of liability to 2 per cent in Section 9 of the existing legislation. So while I am quite prepared to debate the motion under the name of the Minister of Agriculture, I would just simply point out that it seems to me that Section 9 of the existing legislation had already limited the amount of liability that the producer organizations would have had to 2 per cent. The said motions, therefore, are simply trying for consistency in the legislation rather than a reduction of any liability the government may have.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie raises an interesting procedural matter. I should make it very clear to him, to other hon. members and to the public that I understand exactly the point which the hon. member is making and he has made it well.

However, the Chair, as I am sure hon. members will know, is bound by the procedural rules and, as the hon. member for Mackenzie has generously stated, Motion No. 5 in the name of the Minister of Agriculture will deal with the same issue. I think that under the circumstances it would not be appropriate for the Chair to change the ruling. However, I understand the point and I thank the hon. member for raising it.

Mr. Masse (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-36 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out line 21 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"to 2 per cent of the producer's liability".

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, before we start debate on this clause, I would like to indicate to members of the House that it was understood by all members of the House that the Minister of Agriculture would be here in the House for this debate. Unfortunately, the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries from New Zealand is visiting and the Minister is hosting him at the present time but intends to be in the House after Question Period and available to take part in this debate. I just wanted to assure members that he will be here to do that. I am sure they all realize that duties makes these things impossible at certain times.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that your colleagues will not object to the fact that you have made reference to the absence of a minister in debate.

Mr. Cardiff: It depends on how you want to put it, Mr. Speaker.

We believe that with this amendment we are changing and improving the bill. The Advance Payments for Crops Act has always been a shared risk program with the producer organizations and historically producer organizations have been responsible for 10 per cent of each advance that has been defaulted to a total of 2 per cent of the total amount advanced.

This amendment will leave producer organizations responsible for only 2 per cent of any advance defaulted, and that is covering both the principal and interest.

Proposed changes to the Bank Act alter reserve requirements for banks and this will make federal guaranteed loans less expensive. In order to be in a position for producer organizations to take full advantage of this provision the guaranteed level will be increased to 98 per cent. The reduced risk to producer organizations from the lower liability limit will allow producers to reduce administration costs.

Smaller producer organizations that do not have financial ability to assume the risk of granting high value advances will now be able to participate on the same basis as the larger and more financially strong producer organizations. This will be particularly important to the horticulture sector where the producer organizations tend to be small and newly formed organizations dealing in specialty crops such as forage seed are also small. We believe that this amendment would greatly increase the benefits to producers.

For producer organizations that withhold an amount of the advance to cover their liability, this amendment will increase significantly the amount of cash received by the individual producers.

I would just like to share with the House the names of some of the organizations that this legislation change will help. They include the B.C. Okanagan Fruit Producers' and Shippers Association, the Interior Vegetable Marketing Agency, Vancouver Island Produce Limited, the Alberta Beekeepers' Association, the Alberta Fresh Vegetable Marketing Board, the Peace River Seed Co-op Limited, the Saskatchewan Beekeepers' Association, the Saskatchewan Vegetable Growers' Association, the Keystone Vegetable Producers, the Manitoba Corn Growers' Association, the St. Lawrence Valley Fruit Growers, Blue Water Storage Limited, Georgian Triangle Apples, the Ontario Beekeepers' Association, Temiskaming Grain Growers, the Association des jardiniers maraichers, the Co-op Federee de Quebec, the Valley Grain Pool, the New Brunswick Fruit Growers Association, the New Brunswick Potato Agency, the Nova Scotia Potato Marketing Board, the Nova Scotia Fruit Growers Association, the Nova Scotia Grain Marketing Board, the P.E.I. Vegetable Growers' Co-Operative Association and the P.E.I. Grain Growers' Co-operative.

As you can see, this change will improve the operation and viability of many of these producers of crops that are not as large as some of our producers of major commodities of grain and corn but it also assists the producers of those commodities greatly and gives those people much less exposure to the sponsoring organization and allows for a greater amount of advance to be made to individual producers. Going to 2 per cent from 10 per cent and withholding 10 per cent for default of the principal makes quite a difference, but when you reduce that to 2 per cent it is considerable and that is a great benefit to the producer. I know we can count on all members of the House to support this amendment.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak at report stage of Bill C-36. I must say this has been one of most cobbled up bills I have ever seen the government introduce. I recall that originally it introduced this bill under Bill C-32 in which it forgot to provide for the loan guarantee to cover the interest owing to producers under the act. When the government brought the bill back under its present numbering, Bill C-36, it had corrected that mistake but obviously did not make provision for raising the loan guarantee from 90 per cent to 98 per cent so we have before us today a new royal recommendation because it is increasing the obligation of the Government of Canada. We have that amendment before the House and again, under Motion No. 6, we have the government trying to further amend the bill and that, of course, has been ruled out of order by yourself so we really have a cobbling together of a lot of amendments which were not foreseen in the original bill.

We could put it down to the usual screw-ups in which the government is involved, but in this case I think it just boils down to the fact that the government has not thought through what it is doing. Obviously this whole legislation came out of the government's cost-cutting exercise in which it was chopping everything in sight to the extent of some $500 million. This bill, we are told, will save the government some $54 million but it is going to cost the producers a lot more than that. It will cost some producers in this country their farms, their livelihood, their whole situation in Canadian agriculture.

We are not talking about just $27 million of interest available to farmers. We are probably talking about $400 or $500 million worth of cash flow. This provides farmers with cash flow where the interest is paid by the government, so there is no question about the lending institutions providing that to cash flow, especially at market time. We are, however, talking about the losses of hundreds of millions of dollars in the price of commodities because this legislation has the impact of reducing the value of commodities.

For instance, the Ontario Corn Growers' Association estimates that the value to Ontario corn producers is on the ratio of 15 to 1. In other words, if the government provides $1 million worth of loan guarantee or interest free loans, the benefit to producers in being able to market that corn in the winter or spring months actually turns a benefit some 15 times over.

So if there is a million dollars worth of interest-free loan money provided under the crop advance payment system, that results in $15 million worth of benefit. That is just from one little sector, the corn sector.

If we look at fruit and vegetables, if we look at soybeans, if we look at the honey producers and the major advantages to the major crops of wheat and barley in the west, then you are talking about hundreds of millions of dollars in improved price of crops.

We are extremely disappointed that the government refused to hear from farm groups right across the country which wanted to come before the agriculture committee. We are sure that they will have their hearing before the Senate Committee. The number of farm groups that are opposing this bill is outlined very clearly in an urgent message that was sent to the Prime Minister on October 2 from some 19 or 20 farm organizations including the soybean producers, la Fédération des producteurs agricoles du Québec, the Western Canadian Wheat Growers' Association, the Keystone Agriculture Producers, the United Grain Growers, the Flax Council of Canada, the Corn Producers, the Western Canadian Pulse Growers and a whole list of other farm groups.

It has been an incredible mix-up all the way along for these producers. The government effectively is killing the program by charging interest. Most groups, like the corn producers, estimate that the amount of saving for those with good credit ratings probably amounts to nothing. So who is going to put themselves through all the red tape of this program if they can borrow the money at 1 or 2 per cent above prime on a regular basis?

This amendment provides some improvement to the legislation. It means that a corn producer who was getting $30,000 before and had to put up security of $3,000, 10 percent, will have to put up security of only $600 under this amendment. So it improves the bill. I wonder why the government did not put it in the original bill. Clearly, this amendment is a minor improvement to a bill that in general destroys the whole advance payment program because the farmer has to pay the interest. The losses are not only in cash flow at cropping time, the losses, in fact, occur to the value of the crop. The value of crops will be reduced because many producers will have to sell immediately.

We think that the disadvantages to these producer groups are very seriously affected and we wonder why the government is unilaterally cutting programs. We have entered into a free trade deal with the United States. The government said that over the seven years it would negotiate a reduction in subsidies on an equal, equitable and balanced basis. Here we have a major program that provides $400 million or $500 million in assistance to farmers that is being chopped unilaterally. The Americans are not chopping their similar program. Here we have a government destroying a program that, if it were to be reduced at some stage, surely should have been reduced in a negotiation under the subsidy code program that is provided for in the free trade deal in order to have the Americans scale down their support programs.

It is not only in the prairie grain advance payments or the crops advance payments program that the government is unilaterally chopping programs, it is chopping a whole raft of programs, some $500 million dollars this year. If you count the Western Grain Stabilization payments not being made, if you count the special grains program payments not being made this year, you are looking at $2.5 billion in the budget and in the estimates that are cut from previous years.

What the government is doing, essentially, is kind of a scorched earth program, reducing and destroying programs. It does not come right out and say it in this program but that is the end result of this bill. This amendment that is being proposed today will help in some ways, but the over all program is going to be drastically cut because farmers now have to pay the interest on these advance payments whereas in the past they have not had to pay it. Therefore, there was no question about them getting the support. Under this program there is a big question whether they will be able to qualify for this support because they will have to be personally responsible for repaying that loan.

This amendment will help, but the over all program is being destroyed by this bill.

• (1250)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak for a few moments on Motion No. 5, the change to the percentage required by the producer groups.

The resentment on this particular change in the advance payments by the government would have been much less if the government did not seem to be deliberately moving in a direction which is being felt negatively in rural Canada. The government has deliberately made a decision to abandon some traditional support programs without replacing them with effective alternatives.

This particular bill just happens to be one of the dozens of attacks that rural Canada is feeling from the government and from the situation in which the government has placed rural Canada in the last few years. The elimination of interest-free cash advances is just one of the items upon which the government is moving that is being felt by the rural communities particularly, and in this case the farmers.

The program was in place for a specific purpose and in the case of the Wheat Board grains it was there to allow the orderly marketing of those grains and to assist in the movement of the grain from the farm through the system. In the case of the other alternate crops, the cash advances were an attempt on the part of the farm groups, with the assistance of the government, to take advantage of the best possible price when putting the product on the market. It worked particularly well in the second case.

But now we are asking the farmer to pay interest on this advance loan and in the process of doing that we have almost eliminated that second reason for the advance payments being in place. Whether they become responsible for 2 per cent or not does not make much difference because many farmers are telling me right now that there is no way that they can pay the prime rate plus 2 per cent or prime rate plus 1 per cent, or whatever the government ends up charging for these particular loans. They cannot afford to get a 10 per cent loan in the hope that maybe the price of corn or soybeans, or whatever product they are putting on the market, is going to go up by that amount or by a great amount.

If you are getting $6 for your canola right now and you borrow so that you do not have to ship it and it only goes up to $6.50, you are going to be losing money on getting a loan.

As I said before, the government is just adding this to a number of other methods that it is using to attack rural Canada. It has done it by the quota-breaking in the free trade agreement whereby it has allowed more of the products to be imported into Canada, consequently pushing down the price of the product and the ability of the farmer to compete.

Second, the government has put in place a reduction of the industrial milk prices, again an attack on the farmer and his ability to survive.

We have had the commercialization of the Farm Credit Corporation. It does not matter whether you leave 2 per cent liability for the producer in this particular case if you are eliminating the total reason for having the loan at all. So the commercialization of the Farm Credit Corporation is also an attack on rural Canada and the farm group.

The GATT is being used by the United States to attack the development of trade in farm products. There is a great concern out there that by putting the free trade agreement in place we gave the United States another method of attacking the trade in farm products with the United States.

There is a great concern out there as well that the GATT negotiations are going in the wrong direction, that our government is giving in to the definition of subsidies which is going to further harm the production of farm products in Canada.

We have a continuing situation of high interest rates in Canada and those high interest rates are harming the farm community considerably.

The crop insurance program is supposedly being reformed but what is actually happening is that the federal government is withdrawing from crop insurance and is going to make, over a period of time, the farmer himself, the producer himself, responsible for crop insurance, another attack on rural Canada and the farm community.

Over the last four years we have had a number of what the government likes to call user-pay changes in the inspection of meats, grains and other products where the cost of inspection has gone onto the farmer, indirectly in some cases, but in many cases directly, so that the farmer is picking up a larger portion of the cost of getting those products on the market.

In the last few days we had the White Paper presented by the Minister of Agriculture. This White Paper calls into question the very basis of the support programs which have been put in place over the years to make sure that we have orderly marketing and that the farmers can survive in particular parts of the agricultural industry.

We have other attacks which are indirect but are just as badly felt. We have the closing of 1,500 rural post offices. Many farmers are now finding themselves driving many more miles, sometimes 30, 40 or even 50 miles to pick up their mail.

We have the shutting down of VIA Rail, also an attack on the farmers of rural Canada. We have an increase in freight rates and we have a definite bias in regional development toward industrialization and against development of farm products and farm processing.

We have, finally, but maybe not least, an attack on the survival of farms because of the goods and services tax. The goods and services tax is going to increase input costs by 9 per cent and that 9 per cent is quite often the margin of profitability in producing a particular crop.

We have all of these attacks, so it does not make much difference whether or not you leave the producers' liability at 2 per cent. If you do all these other things, you are attacking the survival of the farmer and the survival of the farm community.

• (1300)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak very briefly on this amendment. As members of the House can see, the amendment put forward by the Minister of Agriculture is virtually the same as amendments put forward by the member for Algoma and myself. I want to explain to the farm organizations, which noted that there was a discrepancy between the two acts that this bill amends and a certain amount of discrimination, why there is still a 2 per cent form of discrimination against certain commodity groups and certain users of the Advance Payments for Crops Act.

On our part, it is not because we did not think that they should be treated equally. In fact, we think that the Advance Payments for Crops Act should have the same coverage against liabilities as the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act. For your information, Mr. Speaker, the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, which is the elder of the two, sets out that the Government of Canada will back the lender, in this case the Canadian Wheat Board, to 100 per cent of its losses. But under the Advance Payments for Crops Act the Government of Canada will stand behind the producer organizations for 90 per cent of the losses.

The reason we had introduced amendments to make it 2 per cent was that we read Section 9 of the existing act, which now seems to limit that loss to 2 per cent due to an amendment in 1985. Because we had no way as an opposition, or as it turns out did the government, of opening up Section 9 of the existing act because it was not in these particular amendments proposed in Bill C–36, our only option was to propose a limit down to 2 per cent, a liability of 2 per cent, because that is what is now in existence in Section 9, and we thought we would make it at least consistent throughout the piece.

What we would have preferred would have been the same treatment in the Advance Payments for Crops Act as exists in the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act; that is, government being responsible for 100 per cent of the liabilities on those advances not paid back. Because of the legislative constrictions in being unable to open up Section 9 which would have still been there if we had been able to get the number down to zero, we proposed this. The government apparently copied our amendment, hoping for unanimous consent, and I presume it will probably get it. But that explains to all those organizations that wrote in to point out the discrepancy between the treatment of their groups, made up of producers of commodities other than wheat and barley in the western Wheat Board region as opposed to those producers who are getting loans in the Wheat Board district under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act.

There will still be some discrimination, it will be reduced to the 2 per cent, only because of Section 9 in the existing legislation which does not permit that to go any lower.

We have had discussions across the floor. Because of the absence of the minister which was alluded to by the Parliamentary Secretary and because there had been agreement by all parties to discuss this bill today on the understanding that the minister would be in attendance, our understanding now is that the minister can be back from his meetings at three o'clock. Since all sides of the House, according to my discussions, have indicated they want to hear the minister at report stage, I think you will find unanimous consent to call it two o'clock and we can continue after Question Period with the minister before us.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, the representative for the NDP, has indicated the direction in which we have discussed, that we might call it two o'clock and continue with the report stage Motions Nos. 7 and 10 at three o'clock when the minister is here. We understand why the minister has to be away but I think it is necessary because of the importance of this bill that we do have the minister here to speak on it. So I think that we would agree to this proposal that we call it two o'clock and continue with the report stage of Bill C-36 at 3 p.m. after Question Period.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, we also would agree to that proposal. I want to indicate that we are prepared to discuss Motions Nos. 7 and 10 if the other parties wish but we would be willing to call it two o'clock now if that is what everyone wants to do. We would give consent to to do that.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Robitaille): Is the House agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think we should make this very clear. There seems to be a provision to postpone continuing the debate on Amendment No. 5, moved by the Minister of Agriculture, until around three o'clock this afternoon, after question period, and then we would deal with Motions 7 and 10, which have been grouped together for debate.

The idea is to allow the Minister of Agriculture to be here for the debate on these two motions, and we agree with this proposal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Robitaille): I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

The House took recess at 1.07 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

LOCAL IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, November 24, I had the honour to attend the opening of the Bayview Memorial Hospital in Advocate, Nova Scotia, a village far removed from the mainstream of Nova Scotian activity.

This beautiful new hospital is the result of a massive fund raising effort which saw $350,000 raised by this tiny community of 800 people. Most people predicted that it just could not be done, but they did not realize the determination and perseverance of the residents, especially that of Mr. Victor Corbin, the fund raising chairman.

Despite economic disappointments the community of Advocate and in fact the entire Parrsboro Shore have fought for their hospitals, fought for their schools, fought for their wharfs, and fought for their communities in a way which reflects their rich heritage of overcoming hardships related to the forests and the sea.

I take my hat off to these special people, and I pledge to support them in any way I can to protect and expand their wonderful communities.

1989 GREY CUP

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the long drought is over. After 23 dry years the Grey Cup has returned to Saskatchewan.

It is with pride, Rider pride, that I join my colleagues from Saskatchewan in exercising the bragging rights that go with the last second victory over Hamilton.

The Roughriders last night were infused with that indomitable prairie spirit. They displayed the determination, dedication, tenacity, and hard work that are characteristic of Saskatchewan people.

Congratulations go to the players, especially Roger Aldag, the veteran from Gull Lake, the coaches, management, and, most important of all, the fans from all over Saskatchewan and Canada who supported the Riders through thick and thin and who now have a much deserved source of Rider pride for years to come—a win in the 1989 Grey Cup, the most exciting Grey Cup game ever played.

CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the feature centrefold of the 1989 annual report of the Canadian Dairy Commission shows a pastoral scene of dairy cows grazing beneath a majestic mountainous backdrop.

The caption reads: "The Rockies provide a dramatic setting for this dairy farm in Agassiz, British Columbia". It is indeed a dramatic setting, one I think the residents of Agassiz would find truly astounding.

The government has made many incredible claims, but I did not know that moving mountains was one of of them. Effortlessly, the government has relocated the Rocky Mountains by moving them some 950 kilometres from the B.C.-Alberta border to the Fraser Valley in southwestern B.C.

How can you blame British Columbians for believing that this government does not understand western Canada when it cannot even get its geography straight?

Most governments are content with simply rewriting history, but this government has truly outdone itself by redrawing our geographical as well as our political landscape.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, recently it was learned that the National Capital Council would be charging fees for groups wishing to use its parks and parkways. While I understand that the NCC is trying to make up for the $5 million it had to cut from its annual budget, and while I favour fees as a means of maintaining these same parks and parkways, I strongly feel that exceptions to the rule must take place.

Every consideration should be given to local groups and charities so that they can continue to hold events and fund raisers which are essential to the quality of life in the National Capital Region.

Furthermore, I object to the manner in which the public became aware that the NCC had implemented a user fee program. Again, we see the secrecy and closed door decisions that seem to epitomise the National Capital Commission. While the decision to charge the fees was made secretly in September, unfortunately groups only recently learned of the new fees when they inquired about using the parks and parkways.

The NCC should be made to understand that decisions such as these should be reached in consultation with the public and, if and when a decision is finally reached, the NCC should make known the decision as soon as possible. Waiting two months before doing so is simply irresponsible.

The NCC's motto appears to be: "When the going gets tough, do it secretly and behind closed doors and try to implement the decision as quietly as possible".

1989 GREY CUP

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, they said THAT a bumblebee is incapable of flight. They also said that Saskatchewan could not support a professional football team. They said THAT Saskatchewan would likely never again win the Grey Cup.

Well they are all wrong. The Grey Cup is back in Saskatchewan and Regina after a tremendous team effort and the most exciting football game in North America.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, "Regina the Queen" continues to be green.

MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, last week the House learned that a Montreal firm distributed a yellow page directory which contained an advertisement that replaced the word "Italian" with the word "Mafia".

The Canadian Italian community, which is an integral and proud member of our Canadian family, does not merit that offensive and shameful slap for it undermines its place in Canada and its contributions to this country.

[Translation]

If it were some sort of joke played by some individual before the directory was published, we might sympathize with the regrets expressed by the company. But not to take exception to this directory, which will be found in millions of Canadian homes, will be as great an error as the one just made, if not greater.

[English]

This affront, which has dogged our community for far too long and which undermines our value of citizenship and multiculturalism, must not be tolerated whatsoever.

Only when there is a strong result to right this wrong will we see an eventual stop to this regrettable behaviour. Otherwise it will go on and on and on. In regard to this repugnant five letter word, the Canadian Italian community has just had about enough of it.

CHARITABLE DONATIONS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Emmerick Sashegyi. a constituent from Thunder Bay—Nipigon, recently brought to my attention his concerns about the impact of the government's changes to income tax policy on charitable donations in Canada. I want to share them with you, Mr. Speaker, because he puts it very succinctly: The newly introduced system of allowing only 17 per cent tax credit on the first $250 of donations and only 29 per cent on the balance of one's donation is "a blow below the belt" to all charitable organizations in Canada.

He carries on: "I have always been a willing donor to charitable causes" but because of this "government's relentless drive towards tightening the tax screws, I am being forced now to set priorities—this will inevitably disappoint some of the usual recipients of my cheques who will have to do without my financial support in future".

Surely the government will allow all Canadians who make charitable donations the opportunity of a proper tax credit. Why should these worth-while charities in Canada have to suffer because of the government's ruling on this matter?

RACISM

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, in the Journal de Montréal of November 25, journalist Serge Vleminckx comments on the deplorable incidents in university hockey this way: "Québecers victims of racism."

On Sunday, November 12, 1989, in a game involving the Patriotes of the Université du Québec à Trois-Rivières and Waterloo, Tony Crisp, son of Terry Crisp, coach of the Calgary Flames, insulted his opponents and showed disrespect for all Quebecers by a racist act in which he got down on his knees and elbows on the ice to imitate a frog leaping. He did this several times during the game. The Patriots were revolted by this act, but won the game 4-3.

Mr. Speaker, the least we can say is that it is unacceptable for leaders and referees of the Ontario university hockey league to encourage such a contemptuous attitude by their silence.

SEXUAL ABUSE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, last week a County Court judge in British Columbia gave a suspended sentence to a man who admitted to the sexual abuse of a three year old. The judge's reasoning was that the man was intoxicated at the time and the three year old victim was sexually aggressive.

One in four girls in this country will be sexually abused by the time they reach 18 years. As many as 40 per cent of victims are under the age of six. There can be no excuse for a judge to be so ignorant of the implications of sexual abuse that he would rule in this outrageous manner. More important, blaming the child victim for the actions of a man in a position of power over her is unconscionable.

I intend to call on the Canadian Judicial Council to conduct a full inquiry into this matter. I call on the government to take immediate steps to ensure that members of the judiciary are made aware of the horrific effects of child sexual abuse and ask that the Minister of Justice clearly advise Canadians that the government will not condone such ignorance on the reality of child sexual abuse on the bench.

FINANCE

Mr. Ken Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, as I travel around my riding of Macleod each week, in public meetings and in private conversations I hear one theme repeated time and again. And that is, if government does its share by cutting expenditures, we as Canadians will do our share to help pay down the deficit. All Canadians must share in this responsibility.

• (1410)

It is always easy for members opposite to jump on the bandwagon of the day to save some outdated program that is on the chopping block. But members of the Opposition should recognize that it is also their children who will bear these onerous future costs if we do not deal with today's deficit and the accumulated Liberal party inspired debt.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday the hon. Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was asked by my colleague, the member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, if he could give the House a list of how many strip clubs were financed by his department. The minister responded, and I quote:

> I would gladly tell the hon. member about one called the Hideout in Cornwall, Ontario, the constituency of Ed Lumley which in March of 1983, when Ed Lumley was the minister responsible for FBDB, became a strip joint.

The minister did not have the courtesy to inform my colleague in the House of all the facts. Two FBDB loans were granted to the Hideout, one in 1976 and the other in 1978. At both times the Hideout was a country and western club. It changed to a strip club in 1983.

The hon. Ed Lumley became responsible for the FBDB in 1982, which was after these loans were made. It is regretful that the current minister responsible for FBDB tries to portray an image of propriety but fails to present all the facts in this particular case and attempts to tarnish the reputation of a previous minister of the Crown.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has announced that it plans to shut down the McKernan postal outlet in the Maurice Pharmacy on December 1, one month before Christmas. This postal outlet has served my constituents for over 10 years.

The pharmacy changed ownership November 1 and Canada Post offered the new owner, Mr. Eugene Barabash, a post office franchise for the price of $40,000.

As you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Barabash has taken on considerable debt and cannot afford to take on more right now. He will be in a position to buy a franchise two years from now.

Canada Post is bullying him by threatening to sell the franchise to another business although there are no takers. Some 1,000 residents have signed letters and petitions protesting this malicious action by Canada Post.

I call upon Canada Post to renew the existing contract for a period of two years and not to improve service by shutting down a post office one month before Christmas, affecting thousands of residents of Edmonton Strathcona.

1989 GREY CUP

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, as the member for Hamilton Mountain I rise today in the House to congratulate the Saskatchewan Roughriders on their 43–40 victory of the Hamilton Tiger Cats.

The 1989 Grey Cup left Canadians on the edge of their seats until the last seconds of the game when the foot of Saskatchewan field goal kicker, Dave Ridgeway, secured the win for Saskatchewan with seven seconds on the clock.

It was football at its finest, and it was played in the true spirit of Canadian sportsmanship. Being from Hamilton my loyalty and support naturally lie with the Tiger Cats, yet the Saskatchewan Roughriders have not won a Grey Cut since 1966.

The people of Hamilton, in fact all people of Canada, congratulate the Roughriders on their 1989 Grey Cup victory.

AIR TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last, I had the pleasure of accompanying the Minister of Transport in Vancouver when he announced the awarding of contracts for the Canadian Automatic Air Traffic System better known as CAATS.

This project brings to Canada two very important commodities, investment dollars and high technology.

The lead contract of $380 million went to Hughes Aircraft of Canada Limited. Hughes will provide the technical foundation upon which the $660 million CAATS project will be built. The CAATS technology will be tailor-made for Canada. Emphasis will be placed on versatility of design and of use.

Judy Lindsay summed it up nicely in Saturday's Vancouver Sun when she wrote:

> We could have spent years trying to develop this expertise on our own: Technology transfer is a heck of a lot faster.

Hughes plans to develop this high technology and export it to the world from its base in western Canada. Hughes anticipates the creation of an initial 300 jobs. This should grow to 2,000 Canadian jobs by the mid-1990s as a result of expected international sales in the hundreds of millions of dollars.

Yet again this government is showing its commitment to western Canada. The development of high technology in the west helps to diversify and strengthen the regional and national economies.

This is another example of the government's commitment to foster foreign investment, international trade, and economic development.

1989 GREY CUP

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I want to join my colleagues in congratulating the Saskatchewan Roughriders on their tremendous win in the Grey Cup yesterday.

It is only the second time the history of the team that Saskatchewan has won the Grey Cup. The first time was back in 1966.

What I want to do today is congratulate most of all the fans in the province. The Roughriders are a community owned team, and the fans have supported the team for many, many long years without the reward of the Grey Cup.

I also want to congratulate the coach of the team, Mr. John Gregory, for the tremendous job he has done. I congratulate the quarterback, Mr. Kent Austin Ridgeway, for his field goal and all the players for a tremendous effort.

I can assure Your Honour that today there is tremendous Rider pride in every small town, city, village and farm in the Province of Saskatchewan for a cup that was well deserved and a cup that was well won.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

With Eastern Europe at a crossroads today in history Canadians must do everything we can to assist the reform movement, to assist the tens of millions of people pushing for freedom in a number of countries. In order to make that urge for freedom realistic we have to ensure that there is some opportunity for economic success.

Our government has promised only $42 million to Poland and Hungary, which pales by comparison with commitments made by other western nations to these countries.

Why has Canada so far failed to provide our proportionate share of aid to Poland and Hungary? Where are the serious offers of economic help and a commitment to serious investment in Poland, the Soviet Union, Hungary, East Germany, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia?

When, incidentally, will Canada have a diplomatic presence in East Germany and in Bulgaria?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Leader of the Opposition, referred this morning to our contribution to Poland, and he referred to an earlier comment by Mr. Walesa.

He forgot the comment that Mr. Walesa made at his press conference as he left Ottawa, saying that he was deeply impressed by the commitment of this government to the well-being of the people of Poland and that he was very, very grateful for the leadership and the strong support that the government and the people of Canada provided the people of Poland.

He said that but of course the facts just provided to the House by the Leader of the Opposition are, to understate the case, very incomplete.

In point of fact the $42 million is a one-year commitment which compares very favourably on a per capita basis with amounts now being considered by the Senate and the Congress of the United States.

Moreover, it does not take into consideration the fact that Canada is the fourth largest creditor of Poland, the debt being $2.6 billion, and in the process of rescheduling Canada will probably save over the next 18 months the people of Poland some hundreds of millions of dollars in hard currency. That is very appreciated by the Prime Minister of Poland and by Mr. Walesa and all others who believe that we have an obligation to provide this kind of assistance.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, most Canadians will remember what Lech Walesa said, that our efforts so far to Poland are like placing a beautiful tie on a corpse.

The government's White Paper on defence, still defended by the minister of defence, was misguided when it was introduced and is now completely out of date.

Will the Prime Minister acknowledge that the political declaration he signed in Moscow with President Gorbachev now represents a complete contradiction of the whole message behind the government's White Paper on defence?

When will he give a more up to date view of his government's policy both by way of a policy paper on defence and a policy paper on whatever is his current foreign policy?

• (1420)

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition would come back and refer to the statement of Mr. Walesa about the Canadian contributions "placing a tie on a corpse" which he made in the morning to a parliamentary committee and which in the afternoon at a press conference across the street he very substantially modified and corrected. He paid a great compliment to the government of the people of Canada for its generosity and he expressed profound gratitude. I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition continues to denigrate the efforts of the people of Canada to help the people of Poland.

With regard to the political declaration that was signed, I refer to a statement by Minister Shevardnadze in an interview that he granted Isvestia last Friday where he said and I quote:

> The political declaration signed by the leaders of our states is an intellectual and political breakthrough into the new, interdependent world which has left the obstructions of the "cold war" behind and is confidently looking into the future. A document of this calibre and significance could emerge only in conditions of perestroika in the Soviet Union and in fundamental changes in the surrounding world.

That is exactly the position of the Government of Canada. That is why we were able to conclude this historic document and that is why I count on my right hon. friend for further support as we try to proceed with confidence-building initiatives such as the open-skies conference that will be held in Canada on February 12 next, due to the insistence and the hard work of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think what Canadians recognize is that in appreciating what is happening in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, they are miles ahead of their government and they want their government to get up to date.

Perhaps the Prime Minister might be good enough to forward a copy of the declaration which he has recited to the Minister of National Defence so that he can have his colleague up to date on the current posture of his government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the political statement the Prime Minister signed with the Soviet Union, and earlier in his speech this morning, the Prime Minister did not say a word about security in the Arctic. He made no definite proposal about demilitarizing this region. In this morning's speech, the Prime Minister failed to make a serious proposal on behalf of this country, in response to a proposal for creating a peace zone made two years ago by President Gorbachev. After talking about co-operation in the Arctic with the Soviet Union, why was the Prime Minister unable to advance any new ideas for disarmament in the Arctic?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, here again, the Leader of the Opposition was not—and by the way, since he insists on raising these issues, I will read this quote from The Globe and Mail of November 14, which should put an end to further arguments. It says:

[English]

> Yesterday afternoon, however, after lunching with Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, Mr. Walesa said he was "taken aback by the courage" and substantial assistance Canada had offered. "The Prime Minister has given us a very strong political commitment".

When the Leader of the Opposition quotes, he should quote completely and not selectively.

[Translation]

His allegations were inaccurate. And it was just this morning, when I said that in Moscow, I also discussed with Mr. Gorbachev the proposals he had made in his speech in Murmansk several years ago, about arms control in the Arctic. I pointed out that Mr. Clark had responded to his proposals on several occasions, but that we were entirely prepared to discuss with the Soviets a number of refinements they might wish to add to their original proposals. I also told Mr. Gorbachev that I continued to think that the present permanent talks on arms control between the two superpowers and the two alliances had been productive and would remain the best way to make any progress in this area. This completely rebutes the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition. We are talking about a situation where the Canadian government, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has reacted firmly and quickly, and as a result—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Not at all!

Mr. Mulroney: He says: "Not at all". Mr. Gorbachev instructed Mr. Shevardnadze, in our presence, to start discussions with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, an event that the Leader of the Opposition should welcome today with enthusiasm, instead of denigrating Canada's efforts.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance must have some idea today what Canadians felt like when they were hit with his goods and services tax proposal. He has been blindsided today by Blenkarn. I would like to ask him a question.

The House committee on finance has now brought in its recommendations.the Conservative majority is recommending that we reduce the tax on $1 million homes and increase the tax on $100,000 homes. Will the Minister of Finance tell us today whether he can support a 5 per cent tax on subsidized housing, low income housing and senior citizen housing, or is he prepared to clear up the chaos and confusion that has been created in this country as a result of this report and tell us that he is going to reject this proposal to impose a 5 per cent tax on every roof on every house and on every other residence in this country.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on any specific element of the finance committee majority proposals. They are, I think, a very useful piece of work in terms of looking at the broad range of things which can or cannot be done as far as the GST proposal is concerned. I am grateful to them for the range of recommendations that they have made and I think it is a productive part of the whole tax reform proposal.

What did disappoint me, quite frankly, was the total cop-out on the part of the Liberal minority report which was full of criticisms but had no alternatives, no productive suggestions as to how to move forward with the GST proposal.

What puzzles me is that in the last Parliament when they had finance critics that spoke out in a responsible way, they stated: "The Liberal Party acknowledges that the existing sales tax must be reformed. A broader based sales tax would stimulate economic growth. The Liberal Party is not opposed to the introduction of a new sales tax". Raymond Garneau said: "Proceeding immediately with the sales tax reform is important. We would manage to make our tax system more progressive and still maintain lower tax rates".

The current Whip of the House, I hasten to remind him, said: "A multi-stage type of sales tax sounds to me like an idea which the government should have proposed when it brought in fiscal reform. In addition to proposing it, it should have implemented it".

We are going to implement this tax. We are appreciative of those who are giving us positive proposals for reform, not the reactionary work that is being done by the Liberal party in its response to the sales tax system.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I think the minority report reflects the views of Canadians and sooner or later the Minister of Finance will recognize that or he will go the way of his predecessor in New Zealand and become the minister of police.

Mr. Speaker, Conservative Members sitting on the Finance Committee have recommended that the government impose a reduced goods and services tax on homes worth 1 million dollars and at the same time increase the tax on homes worth $100,000.

My question to the Minister of Finance is this: Will the Minister of Finance today advise Canadians that at least as far as proposing a tax on all homes, all residences in Canada is concerned, he is going to reject that? Or does he intend to support the Tory Members on the Finance Committee who want this tax to apply to all residences across the country?

[English]

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe there are some 86 separate recommendations by the Conservative majority on the finance committee. The hon. member is asking me to identify and comment specifically on one. I think that he understands the fact that the GST proposal is a proposal for a sales tax system. It is not just one tax or one rebate. It is a broad proposal to make the sales tax system fair, more effective and more productive in terms of creating new jobs.

I am not going to respond to a question on one specific proposal. I will review the whole of the finance committee report. Once that is done, I will make a specific response on the whole report.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister can at least respond to some basic mathematics. Will the minister confirm that the chairman of the finance committee is really starting a full-scale war on the first-time home buyer in this country by suggesting that there be an increase in taxes in comparison to the technical paper by $5,000 on a $100,000 home, by $8,000 on a $160,000 home, but a cut of $40,000 on a $1 million mansion. Will the Minister of Finance confirm that, and will he agree that the chairman of the finance committee is even more regressive, more conservative and more repugnant than the minister himself.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to my hon. friend that he should not tempt me in that way.

I have listened to the critics of both opposition parties. I appreciate the support that they are giving to the government's proposal on sales tax reform. I hope that support will continue as we move into the legislative process.

Mr. Nystrom: I have another question for the minister of evasion, Mr. Speaker. I will give him one more chance.

The chairman of the finance committee and the Conservative majority are saying that the number of dollars for the tax credit for low-income people in this country should be cut by one half, from $2.4 billion a year to $1.2 billion. Like the minister, the chairman does not want the index to be a credit for the poor.

Will the minister agree that in terms of treating the poor in this country, the chairman of the finance committee is even more mean-spirited, even more greedy than the minister himself by cutting back or suggesting we cut back on the tax credit for the poor by some 50 per cent, making the poor in this country even poorer and will he reject that recommendation as well?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should be reviewing the arithmetic on this. I have not gone through this carefully, but my understanding is that the logic behind this is as the rate has dropped from 9 per cent to 7 per cent so has the need to offset the impacts of sales tax reform in the hands of low-income Canadians so that there is a balance here. I believe that that is the rationale for what the Conservative majority in the finance committee proposed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the finance committee has also copped out in guaranteeing that the existing manufacturers' sales tax be passed on to the consumer.

I know the minister was not able to guarantee us that the existing MST would be passed on to the consumer. I want to know whether the minister will stand in his place and assure us that there will be some guarantee, some mechanism, that if he proceeds with this bill that the existing manufacturers' sales tax will indeed be passed on to the consumer. If he cannot do that, will he do the sensible thing and listen to 87 per cent of the people out there who say "no tax, no GST" and withdraw the proposition.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to what the polls have said. The polls are really reflecting a simple question: "Do you support a 9 per cent GST?" Obviously, if it is not put in any context, the answer to that question is as you would expect.

What if I put the question to Canadians: "Would you support a tax that is currently a hidden tax on exports? Would you support a tax which penalizes Canadian production, one that imposes one-third less tax on imports? Would you support a hidden tax that is deeply hidden in the manufacturing process? Would you support a tax that is complex, that requires 22,000 separate deals for the 75,000 taxpayers to make it work? Would you support a tax that is subject to a large amount of tax avoidance which is what the existing federal sales tax is?" I think we would get a very different response because the goods and services tax is designed to address each of those five separate problems with the existing system. That is why the majority members on the finance committee have supported a change to the goods and services tax. That is why this government is committed to proceeding with that proposal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister going back to his statement this morning on his visit to the Soviet Union.

I think the Prime Minister will agree that one of the most important ways in which this country and others can support the liberalization taking place in the Soviet Union is to have it become a member of a world trading community, particularly the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Can the Prime Minister tell us if during his discussions with Mr. Gorbachev he offered that Canada would support the involvement of the Soviet Union in the GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, either as an observer or as a full participant? Perhaps more important, when he visits the United States this week, will he press the United States administration to drop its present opposition to Soviet Union involvement in the GATT as a way of welcoming the Soviet Union as part of the world trading community?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, indeed, we put forward the view that the Soviet Union might be interested in observer status at the GATT as a step toward a greater degree of participation in the international economy.

We put forward the view that the outgoing chairman of the industrialized summit should meet every year with President Gorbachev to exchange views and policy prescriptions as to how this integration might best come about.

I am not aware of any hostility by the United States whatsoever to this suggestion. The general view, I believe, is quite supportive. It is certainly a matter that I will raise with President Bush as we explore all possible avenues that would liberalize and improve the relationships between the east and west, but in the process to provide some real tangible assistance from the west to the east as the Soviet Union proceeds with its program of historic reform.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, there may not be hostility, but there is opposition. The stated position of the United States has been to oppose the membership or involvement of the Soviet Union in the GATT. I simply ask the Prime Minister if he intends to press his colleague, the United States President to drop that opposition, as he said, as a gesture of the new kind of economic regime we are in.

The question I would like to pose to him is more directly related to the interests of Canada. As you know, the agricultural trade between our two countries is perhaps the most essential link between the two.

This year there has not been any indication of major Soviet grain purchases from this country, causing widespread speculation or inquietude among the grain farmers and the shipping industry. Did the Prime Minister discuss the ongoing relationship of Canada and the Soviet Union on the grain trade? Can he tell us whether the Soviet Union will be making an announcement of a major grain purchase from Canada this year? Did the Prime Minister discuss the necessity of having another long-term grain agreement signed and ratified with the Soviet Union after the present one expires in a year's time?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I had extensive discussions with President Gorbachev and Prime Minister Ryzhkov with respect to the agricultural situation generally and the desirability of maintaining the grain sales from Canada to the Soviet Union. We have agreed to work very closely on a process that, hopefully, will ensure that that continues.

They were very grateful for the visit of the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture. They asked us to consider some innovative thoughts as to how the Government of Canada and the Canadian agricultural producers could participate more actively in the process of expanding economic opportunities for us in the Soviet Union while at the same time bringing about beneficial results for Soviet Union consumers.

I suppose the best answer to my hon. friend is to tell him that the priority outside of East-West relations that was given by the Soviet Union and responded to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself was the field of agriculture and how this could be developed and expanded. I responded on behalf of the Government of Canada and on behalf of the agricultural producers of Canada with great enthusiasm. I gave them the assurance that we are going to work with them very closely to improve our market share.

ARCTIC POLICY

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister announced with great fanfare a new series of Arctic-related initiatives during his visit to the U.S.S.R. We all remember the last time a similar attempt was made by the Secretary of State back in 1985. Many of the initiatives announced then by the Secretary of State have either been stalled indefinitely or have never been implemented.

Will the Prime Minister assure this House that these latest initiatives will be fully implemented, and to that end will he accept the recommendation that my leader made this morning to appoint an ambassador of circumpolar affairs to co-ordinate Canada's arctic policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the references by the hon. member to undertakings that were given in 1985 have to do with actions that this government would take to establish Canada's sovereignty in the north, actions that we have taken, actions that had not been taken by previous Liberal governments United States that would guarantee our sovereignty with respect to the transit through northern waters of U.S. vessels. That also has been done. We have signed a number of agreements with the Soviet Union on which we look forward to acting.

In addition to that, the House may be interested in what I think is one of the significant developments of the discussions in Moscow. When the Prime Minister asked Mr. Gorbachev to be more forthcoming, to be more detailed in his suggestions in the Murmansk speech, which was a fairly general speech at the time, Mr. Gorbachev replied by indicating that he would want the matter to be under more regular review between myself as Canadian foreign minister and Mr. Shevardnadze.

We agreed to that immediately because we think that will provide us with the opportunity to make proposals and provide the Soviets with the opportunity to make proposals, and as well provide an occasion for them to be looked at on a very high level.

I have one last comment quickly in response to the question. To give credit where it is due with respect to the proposal for an ambassador I think that came from a the proposal for an ambassador I think that came from a recent conference sponsored by the Centre for Arms Control here in Ottawa. I have arranged for a meeting sometime in the next few weeks with the chairman of that centre, and I look forward to discussing the proposals of that conference, including the question of an ambassador who might be involved particularly in circumpolar affairs.

BALTIC STATES

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister and again pertains to his visit to the Soviet Union.

Canada has never recognized the annexation of the Baltic States by the Soviet Union. Prior to his visit with President Gorbachev, the Prime Minister indicated that the matter would be brought up in the normal course of his visit.

Did the Prime Minister raise the future of the Baltic States with the President of the Soviet Union, and did he receive any assurance that the Soviet Union will allow Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia to hold free elections without any outside interference from Moscow?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, during my meetings with Mr. Shevardnadze, I raised that question very directly. I indicated the position that successive Canadian governments have taken with regard to our refusal to accept the de jure status of the Baltic States in the Soviet Union.

I also made it clear that we were watching very closely, both governments were, Parliament was and Canadians of origin in the Baltic States, the attitude of the Soviet government toward developments in those regions, and that we would be particularly concerned if there were to be anything resembling a "crackdown" was the word I used. Mr. Shevardnadze replied categorically saying there would be no crackdown. I found it interesting that not only did he say that the foreign ministry was intending none but he was specific to say that the police were intending none, the army was intending none. I think that is a significant statement and a very helpful development in response to the issue being raised directly by Canada at those meetings in Moscow.

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the members' attention the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Eric Gullage, Minister responsible for the Newfoundland and Labrador Housing Corporation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I also wish to draw to the members' attention the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Collin J. Moyle, New Zealand Minister of Agriculture.

EL SALVADOR

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that one of the things all of us share about events happening in eastern Europe is that the Soviet Union has decided to allow people who live in its geographical backyard to determine their own futures, politically and economically.

The Prime Minister will be soon visiting President Bush of the United States. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would be prepared to say today to the House that he intends to suggest to Mr. Bush that it is about time the Americans took the same view toward their backyard in central America and stopped the military aid to El Salvador, to the people who are actually running that country, the military, so that peace could finally be negotiated and the violence come to an end in El Salvador.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that there is great concern in this House and across the country about the situation in El Salvador which is now, in effect, a civil war. It also goes without saying that Canada has to explore every avenue open to us, and there are better things that we can do than simply give advice to other countries as to what their policy would be doing.

I had the opportunity since coming back on the weekend to consult with my colleague, the Minister for External Relations, and senior officials of the department. We have begun close consultations with the OAS.

I will be in touch with the foreign ministers of both Venezuela and Costa Rica later today because they are involved in an effort right now to try to bring some resolution to the situation.

I intend to call in for a meeting, I hope this week, some of the Canadians who have been on the ground in El Salvador in recent days, some of whom the Government of Canada has helped to secure freedom so they could come back. We think that their advice will be valuable to us.

We intend also to make representations to a number of governments and organizations in the region, including obviously the Government of El Salvador, the Government of Cuba, and we intend to be speaking to representatives of the FMLN on a senior public servant level.

When the Prime Minister meets President Bush later this week, he is naturally going to draw attention to three elements that are of particular concern to Canada. One, the lives that are being lost. Second, the very grave threat to human rights in the region. Third, the grave threat that has now been created to the possibility of success of the peace plan, including the United Nations ONUCA activities. The Prime Minister will be raising that with President Bush, and we will be working with Americans and other members of the Organization of American States to try to bring peace to El Salvador.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government gives advice to all kinds of countries. The Canadian government has given advice for 40 years to the Soviet Union with respect to eastern Europe. Fortunately, it has now heeded that advice.

Why is there this exemption for the United States? Why is it that we cannot entertain the notion of giving advice to the United States of America, of stating the Canadian position on American aid to the military in El Salvador?

I ask this question of the Prime Minister, with all due respect to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who will not be meeting with Mr. Bush, what does he, the Prime Minister, intend to say about continuing military aid to El Salvador and the destruction that it involves?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I plan to tell the President of the United States what the Secretary of State for External Affairs very eloquently stated, which is exactly the position of the Government of Canada.

I will also draw to his attention a story in The Toronto Star for November 24, where it states "The Nicaraguan Envoy lauds Canadian Peace Efforts". The quote from the ambassador—

Mr. Tobin: We are talking about El Salvador.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, it deals with El Salvador.

"Canada has the will to be helpful in Central America and, most important, it has publicly stated that it sees a political solution and not a military solution".

Here is the Nicaraguan envoy lauding Canadian peace efforts. I know that my hon. friend will celebrate this good news and will want me to convey that to the President of the United States, which I will be happy to do.

FINANCE

Mr. Ken Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the chairman of the standing committee on finance. Today, the finance committee submitted its report supporting in principle a GST. While its recommendation to cut the proposed GST from 9 per cent to 7 per cent is encouraging and it is in the right direction, the people of Macleod want to know when the finance committee will start listening to Canadians on cutting government spending. In short—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may be trying to work a substantive question into a procedural one, but I do not think he has quite succeeded in doing so.

The hon. member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

ARMS REDUCTION

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Earlier in the day, the Prime Minister noted the need to distinguish between good intentions and military capacity in the face of foreign policy changes coming from the USSR.

The Soviet Union has already provided a positive response to three recommendations of the panel on Arctic arms control made before a public forum, the Canada–USSR conference on Arctic co-operation four weeks ago regarding security and sovereignty in the Arctic.

Will the Prime Minister make a commitment to this House that Canada too will give a similar response and that in the spirit of building, as he calls it, a new and durable peace Canada will push for the adoption of other panel recommendations that include the establishment of a central Arctic demilitarized zone and promotion of verification procedures to ensure superpower compliance in the area?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I indicated a few moments ago that I have asked my office to arrange a meeting between myself and the chairman of the agency which organized that panel. We intend to take a very careful look at all of its recommendations.

But let me make a point very clear. We believe that the world has found in the INF negotiations the great advantage, if we are serious about getting levels of arms down, of respecting and working within an alliance to alliance framework. That is also a view that has now been recognized by the Soviet Union, by Mr. Shevardnadze in our discussions, a view indeed reinforced by Mr. Gorbachev's observations to the Prime Minister that this would not be the time, this would be precisely the wrong time to undermine alliances.

Having those questions negotiated on an alliance to alliance basis obviously does not preclude them being discussed between countries that have a particular interest, as Canada and the Soviet Union do. That is why Canada responded quickly to the suggestion by Mr. Gorbachev that it would be useful to have very high level continuing meetings between Mr. Shevardnadze and myself to look at any proposals respecting the Arctic that might come from the Soviet side or that might come from the Canadian side, always on the understanding that any negotiations would occur on an alliance basis because that is the way that negotiations lead to real reduction in weapons.

[Translation]

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, I realize it is better late than never, but Canada has already demonstrated its ability to act without being prompted by its allies when it rejected the nuclear submarine option, as a number of experts have observed. Furthermore, the Prime Minister acknowledged that his government's policy on national defence and external affairs is no longer up to date and that a thorough reassessment is necessary. Will the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that in the course of this process, he will consult the committees of the House, the various groups concerned and the experts in the field, and could he indicate the timeframe within which this reassessment will take place?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made no statements of the kind my hon. friend mentioned in his preamble. He is assuming that a number of newspaper articles are a faithful reflection of my statements, while the opposite is true.

I clearly mentioned the position of the Canadian government and referred to the political statement signed by Mr. Gorbachev and myself. The 14 agreements indicate our intention, on behalf of all Canadians, to give bilateral relations between Canada and the Soviet Union a new start. However, the Minister has already said, and I have as well, that NATO solidarity is a component that is absolutely essential to the future of arms reduction talks, both in the conventional and strategic sphere. We have no intention of ignoring our alliances and neither does Mr. Gorbachev.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative majority GST report has suggested that a 5 per cent tax be levied on all housing sales in Canada. In Canada, five million resale homes are financed every year.

We have been told that the GST is a one-shot cost. Yet, over five million families annually will face higher mortgage costs. Every month higher payments will be their problem.

Will the minister commit today to reject this proposal of taxing resale housing which would leave Canada the only country in the western world with a tax on resale housing. In fact, will the minister agree this tax is so flawed that it should—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has put his question. The hon. minister.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated I am not going to comment piecemeal on specific recommendations of the report.

What I would say is that the cost of mortgage financing is related very much to the level of interest rates and the level of inflation. We have an inflationary problem in this country. We are dealing with it both through monetary policy and fiscal policy, and we must continue to deal with it in that way.

I do want to take the opportunity to point out that the whole of the economy has a role to play here in terms of demanding less from the economy either through price or through wage settlements, and it is only as we work together and get these inflationary pressures under a greater degree of control will we be able to able to bring down the cost of financing over-all, and particularly the cost of financing for homes.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative majority of the House of Commons Finance Committee has also recommended that we abolish the rebates on the construction of subsidized housing and rental units by non-profit organizations.

I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Housing. Is he prepared to stand up and assume his responsibilities as the Minister responsible for Housing and reject this particular proposal out of hand? Better still, is he prepared to assume his responsibilities in the housing sector and tell the Minister of Finance to scrap the tax because of the adverse reactions that this tax will have on the housing sector.

• (1500)

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance made it very clear today that we would not be commenting on specific proposals until we had a chance to analyse the entire report.

The biggest disappointment I had was the Liberal presentation which did not have one original idea as to what we should do with the tax. Not one. What a cop-out.

JUSTICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that in recent weeks serious questions have been raised with respect to the independence and integrity of the administration of justice and, in particular, the absolute requirement that there be no political interference in the operations of the RCMP.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister to take this opportunity to clarify to the House precisely what role was played by his former principal secretary, Bernard Roy, with respect to the RCMP investigation in the Michel Gravel corruption case? As well, could the Prime Minister clarify precisely the nature of representations made by his former principal secretary, Peter White, with respect to the Richard Grisé matter, particularly in view of the concerns raised about the letter that was apparently written on November 8 to the RCMP. What role was played by the principal secretaries of the Prime Minister in both of these very sensitive RCMP investigations?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, those matters have been answered in the House before. I want to quote for my hon. friend from the comments of Mr. Inkster at the committee when he said:

> The investigations, I am advised, have been carried out thoroughly and completely, all without any political interference.

He then goes on to say:

> I am advised, Mr. Kaplan, that we received no such call from Bernard Roy.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Michel Gravel was charged in 1986 and pleaded guilty in February, 1989 to 15 charges of corruption, I would like the Prime Minister to tell the people of Canada precisely how much money from the Conservative Party of Canada went to his legal fees—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has evidence of anything like that, he can make it by way of a charge, but not by way of a preamble.

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS ARISING FROM QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises from the member for Macleod attempting to rise to ask a question of the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance.

I would like to ask the Chair to advise the House why the hon. member was asked to return to his seat? It appears to us that his preamble certainly was no longer than any preambles we have heard on any number of occasions from experienced members on that side of the House; preambles which include, multiple questions, charges and innuendo. Here we have a member getting up to ask a single question and he is asked to return to his seat. We would like some clarification.

Mr. Speaker: First of all, I should say to the parliamentary secretary that since the member for Macleod attempted to ask his question, I have discussed the matter with him.

Second, I have suggested to him that with some judicious adjustments, the question might well be in order. The hon. member was not cut off because of the length of the preamble, which I must say to his very great credit, was very succinct and was short. It serves as an example to all of the members in this House.

The hon. member was cut off by the Chair because in asking a question to the chairperson of a committee, that question has to involve the procedures in the committee, either past, present or anticipated. I may have misheard the question. The fault may well lie with the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Speaker: Modesty forbids me from asking for a vote on this.

In any event, the intervention of the Chair was on that procedural ground. Rightly or wrongly, I did not see the question as moving to a procedural matter and I would hope that perhaps the hon. member could come back and—which I think no doubt is a very important question—rephrase it in such a way that the Chair would have no difficulty in accepting it.

I thank the hon. parliamentary secretary and I thank the hon. member for Macleod for his very great understanding. I apologize if there has been any embarrassment.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-36, an act to amend the Advanced Payments for Crops Act and the Prairie Grain Advanced Payments Act, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 5.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I had the floor when the House suspended and I do not wish to hold it unduly. I understand that we have a tacit agreement in the House, since the minister is now here, to move very quickly to a minister for the short period that he will be available to the House. I do not want to take away time from other members.

Perhaps we could get right to it, if that is the understanding, and begin by asking the minister to briefly justify the move to take away the interest free cash advances which have been part of the scene in western Canada since John Diefenbaker was Prime Minister. The rest of the country received them some time later but they have been a part of the agricultural scene for a very long time. They are also a fact of life in our competing countries, particularly in the United States, and we have great difficulty understanding the rationale for cancelling them.

A couple of years ago there was a move by the government, by regulation, to deem the loans received through the Cash Advance Act as a loan for tax purposes, rather than as income. That opened the ground work for a possible charge that people were taking advances, turning them into investments and using interest free money to gain income. That was not possible when the advance was considered to be income on the year it was taken. As long as advances were considered income as well, there was no abuse of the program because people only borrowed enough money to pay their bills and to keep current, because to do otherwise would have changed their tax position for that year.

I wonder if the minister would explain why they have made this change, in light of his own government causing the problem that his parliamentary secretary described as being one of the reasons for the change. We heard from witnesses that the amount saved, some $27 million, would very likely be offset by increased payments to the Agricultural Stabilization Act and other programs. In fact, the very day that the bill was reported back from committee, the government brought in the Supplementary Estimates, asking for another $25 million to augment the Agricultural Stabilization Act. This gives more credence to the argument that was made by producers of fruits and vegetables from across the country, but most particularly from groups in Quebec, Ontario and British Columbia.

I will stop with those two basic questions. Why is the government doing this? If it was having a problem, why did it not simply go back to deeming the advances to be income, as had been the case through the long period of practical use of the program?

Second, since the program does not seem to be really saving the government any money anyway, why did it bring it in? There seems to be an offsetting amount of agricultural stabilization money required because of the depressing effect that removal of this program will have on the markets.

• (1510)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speakėr, when reasoning, one would draw the conclusion that this is not going to have an impact on the financial well-being of the farmers because what he is suggesting is what we take away on the one hand will be given on the other. So I am not sure what his point is.

Mr. Althouse: You should have listened.

Mr. Mazankowski: I did listen very carefully and perhaps you might want to listen to your comments, or reread them, because they do not really make sense in that regard. When you are talking about the financial impact upon the producer, you are saying because—

Mr. Althouse: Once you depress the price, the price is depressed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, he said what we are taking away in terms of support for the interest-free cash advances the ASA which will in reality not have an over-all bearing on the producer.

I do not share that view and I want the hon. member to know even though he was trying to make a convincing argument I do not believe that rationale.

Mr. Althouse: Its not my argument, its the argument of the farmers who wrote in.

Mr. Mazankowski: Now the hon. member is blaming it on the farmers—

Mr. Althouse: But I believe it.

Mr. Mazankowski: And now he believes it. Well, okay. Now we know where he stands.

What we have here is a budgetary item. It was included in the budget on April 27 which was approved by this House. As a result of that, the legislation that flows from the approval of the budget has to be implemented.

At that time the Minister of Finance outlined the very serious financial situation that Canadians face, the large and growing public debt for which all of us has to bear some responsibility. I know that the members opposite would like to shift the burden and blame on to this particular government which inherited a $200 billion national debt, $200 billion in fiscal year 1984-1985. It has been growing ever since because of the tremendous cost in servicing the debt.

Lest there be any doubt as to how this debt was accumulated let me point out that I came to this House 21 years ago. The last time we had a balanced budget was, I believe, in 1969. There were successive Liberal governments in office at that particular time. We got into office in 1979 and tried to reverse that trend. The NDP and the Liberals kicked us out and since that time, from 1980 to 1984, the debt rose by about $100 billion. That is the legacy we have had to deal with, that is what we are trying to deal with.

We have been more than balancing the budget on government programs. That is for sure. We have a surplus. The hon. member would not understand that. After listening to his rationale for opposing this, I am not sure he would understand it.

As the Minister of Finance pointed out, the debt is accumulating at the rate of $80 million a day or half a billion dollars a week. All Canadians, including agricultural producers, who are taxpayers as well, view this with grave concern. We as members of a government and members of Parliament have to deal with this issue. Everyone is being asked to share in that particular burden.

The other reason that this proposal is being advanced at this time is the fact that the interest-free advances as they are presently in place have had the effect of distorting markets and subsequently have had the effect of lost sales. The impact of that has had the effect of scaling down or even closing oilseed processing facilities and it is to some extent having an impact upon our ability to be a reliable supplier of grains and oilseeds.

You know what happens when Canada's reputation as a reliable supplier of grain and oilseeds becomes tarnished. It takes many years to build up that image of reliability and anything that is done that tampers with that has a tremendous cost not only on markets today but markets in the future.

The result of this had the effect of holding back product for an unreasonable period of time and thereby the loss of sales and markets. As a matter of fact, the 1988-89 crop year was an example where farmers literally held canola off the market for the entire year. The result was lost sales, the closing down of canola processing plants and the scaling back of canola processing plants.

I have a letter—

An Hon. Member: Put it under the Wheat Board.

Mr. Mazankowski: I do not know what that has to do with the Wheat Board. Just because there are some organizations and producers that want the freedom to market their product in the way they desire, certainly the NDP should not take offence at that. In eastern Europe they are making great progress in developing their own freedoms and liberties. These guys would like to go back to the dark ages. That should be a lesson to them. The United Oil Seeds Products, for example, said in a letter to me on October 30, and I quote:

> It is our view that the interest-free advances have distorted markets by allowing farmers the financial strength to hold product off the market for unreasonable periods of time. The 1988-89 crop year was a good example where farmers held canola off the market for the entire year.

This particular canola processing plant has been closed down for eight months. Jobs have been lost, delivery opportunities have been lost for those farmers who want to deliver. These people across the way have the luxury of criticizing everything that we try to do that is constructive. They would rather play politics with this issue. By their stalling and filibustering on this particular bill, they have denied farmers the opportunity to take advantage of the facility of advance payments.

An Hon. Member: Why didn't you answer the question?

Mr. Mazankowski: The hon. member asked me why we are doing this and I am in the process of answering. I know that it disturbs him very much.

The Manitoba Wheat Pool wrote a similar letter to me in February, 1989. They said:

> The Advance Payments for Crops Act has been a major benefit to the producers in the past when the delivery system was taxed to the limit to allow marketable grains into commercial positions.
> The delivery opportunities have changed during the past few years and there are generally fairly high opening quotas on oilseeds and within a reasonably short time there has been space to accept deliveries into the system. The crushing industry in western Canada is in a position now to accommodate a sizeable delivery shortly following harvest. The original reasons to have advance payments for the oilseeds has, to some extent, disappeared.
> The ability of the producer to get some financing without delivering the product (even though there is space and opportunity to do so) is creating some difficulties for the crushing industry and for the export marketers. Producers, with an advance payment, are holding stocks at the farm hoping to achieve a higher price later in the year. As you may well appreciate, this is shorting both the crushing industry and the export market. In many cases, markets are being missed or lost, never to be recovered.

Those are the reasons. Quite clearly, only 2 per cent of all canola produced in western Canada was covered by an advance. This is too small an amount to substantiate the point. The producer organization is considering changing the marketing system to rectify this problem. The pools have since backed off. That is what I hear.

So, here we are again. The situation, since it has become an issue, is one of to and fro, but the fact of the matter still remains that there has been distortion and dislocation in the market-place. That, together with the fact that this was a budgetary item, is clearly a reason for this particular initiative to be advanced at this particular time.

I should say as well that the issue of safety nets, stabilization programs and the kinds of support systems we need to support agriculture is something that is going to be considered in a very comprehensive way during the course of the policy review. I would hope that things such as this could be considered at that particular time.

• (1520)

In the final analysis, the idea is to improve the mechanisms in our programs to ensure that producers have the opportunity to rely upon support systems and safety nets while at the same time reading the market signals and making their decisions on that basis; and making their decisions based upon the knowledge that they will have some shield of protection which is really the bottom line in advancing the policy review, particularly in the field of safety nets.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Althouse: My understanding was that we would handle this section like we do committee of the whole House, since the minister was unable to attend the committee stage, and that a series of questions would, therefore, be permitted.

Mr. Foster: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. I assume that we are on Motion No. 5. I would like to comment on it in light of the minister's remarks.

I was very interested in the Minister of Agriculture's comments in regard to Bill C-36. He talked about agriculture producers being very concerned about debt because the provisions of this bill provide very little financial support, especially at cropping time, and this is being taken away.

My concern is that support is not only being taken away, but the government is taking it away unilaterally. There was an understanding with our trading partners in the United States, with whom the government signed an agreement a year ago, that the support programs and subsidies outlined in that free trade agreement would be reduced and there would be a negotiated reduction.

Clearly, there has been no negotiating in that regard. This is just a straight removal of a major program which is of major benefit to Canadian producers. It provided some $27 million a year, which provided $300 million or $400 million in cash flow for those producers. They are very concerned about their own debt and how they will be able to cope with it with this program removed.

The minister quoted a couple of groups which he thought were supporting his position. If we look at the letter sent to the Prime Minister on October 2, we see that some 20 farm groups across the country are opposing the government's position. The government majority in the legislative committee on Bill C-36 refused to allow them all to make their presentations. Keystone Agricultural Producers, the United Grain Growers, the Flax Council of Canada, the Ontario Corn Producers, the Ontario Soybean Producers, the Manitoba Pulse Producers, oppose this proposed legislation by the government.

When the minister is quoting who supports it, he selectively forgets who is opposing it. He mentioned the canola producers in the prairies. I would just like, for his information, to quote a letter from Max Pond, President of the Manitoba Canola Producers, dated October 20, when this bill was being debated, in which he says: "We would like to encourage your continued support for the reinstatement of interest-free provisions on the cash advance program. Without reinstatement of the said provision, the program holds little benefit for Canadian farmers. With respect to oilseeds, the interest-free cash advance has contributed to orderly marketing".

This directly opposes what the minister said just a few minutes ago.

The letter goes on: "It contributes to orderly delivery by moving the pressure on producers to sell at harvest at a time when prices tend to turn downwards.

Further, one of our board members happens to be the person responsible for administering the Canola Cash Advance Program offered under the Prairie Canola Growers' Council. His calculations show that with the fee which must be charged to cover the cost of administering the program, the true cost of the advance would be prime plus at least 1 per cent to 2 per cent because the administration fee is a fixed amount no matter the size of the loan".

The shorter the period for which the loan is held and the smaller the amount borrowed, the higher the actual interest rate becomes, making it more economical for farmers under those circumstances to borrow directly from a lending institution. As a result, the cash advance will lose all usefulness.

Clearly, the Canola Producers from Manitoba and other areas are opposed to this, as are practically every other group.

One area that the minister has not dealt with, and I do not know whether he has really focused on it, is the importance of improving the value of the crop harvested. The Ontario Corn Producers have calculated that the cost-benefit ratio is 15 to one. For instance, in 1987-88 they estimate that for the cost of the program, a little over $1 million, the benefit to producers was some $16 million.

Obviously, this is a good program that the government should not be cutting out at this time and I would hope that the minister will still change his mind. It is a program that has great advantage to it. Our American friends have not indicated that they are going to do away with their similar program. Surely, if this is going to be negotiated away, it should not be at a time when net farm incomes are dropping anywhere from 20 to 38 per cent as they are in various parts of the country this year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have to bring to the attention of members, that some members have spoken already. We are on report stage. Each member has 10 minutes to speak. The hon. member for Algoma has spoken twice now. I can recognize the hon. member for Mission—Coquitlam and then we should go on to the next grouping of motions for all those who wish to speak. We will then put the question and then go into third reading. Every member will then be able to make a speech again.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, while it was not a House order, I understand that there was an understanding among House leaders that hon. members would be allowed to put questions similar to a committee of the whole process and that I would respond to them. I am certainly prepared to do that but I am at your beck and call, Sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I must have unanimous consent. If I have unanimous consent then I will go along with the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member, I would submit that these amendments will improve the orderly marketing of agriculture commodities in Canada. Farmers will still have the ability to have advance payments.

As a matter of fact, the amounts will be increased. They will be able to make those arrangements to carry crops from harvest time to delivery. In fact, the improvements with regard to this flexibility and the security would provide greater opportunity to merchandise their product in such a way that they could use this facility in a proper fashion.

I think it is important that the decisions are made on market signals and sound business principles rather than simply on the basis of managing a financial portfolio. They will still be able to use the provision to help smooth out the seasonal price fluctuations. They will still be able to use this facility for those farmers who want to prepay their fertilizer bills before the end of the year. They will still have the guarantee. The guarantee level is being increased to 98 per cent from 90 per cent, including the interest.

My sense is, quite frankly, that the system will be improved and there will be a built in discipline. Interest rates will be negotiated at anywhere from one to three percentage points below prime. Producers now want this facility to be used so that they can get on with the business of running their farms.

Let us talk about support for the agriculture industry. In 1984-85 this federal government committed $2.8 billion to Canadian agriculture. In 1985-86 it was $3 billion. In 1986-87 it was $4.4 billion. In 1987-88 it was $6 billion and in 1988-89 it was $4.5 billion, for a total of roughly $20.8 billion provided by the federal government to support agriculture; for drought, crop insurance, dairy subsidy, Canadian Wheat Board losses, advance payments and the agricultural stabilization program.

When we look at what has been done to the grain and oilseeds sector for that same period of time, 1984-85 to 1988–89, a total of $11.777 billion, almost $12 billion, was provided to the grain and oilseeds sector.

With regard to supporting agriculture, I just looked at the editorial page of the Ontario Farm Women's Network News Letter of June, 1989, where it was pointed out that it was rather unbelievable that the money spent by the provincial government of Ontario on agriculture was no more than 1.25 per cent of the total budget. Of the total budget, Mr. Speaker, 1.25 per cent. The hon. member will agree that agriculture is pretty important to the province of Ontario. It is, but it certainly is not a priority with that provincial government.

In the last year, 1987–88, the federal government poured $2.1 billion into the province of Saskatchewan. The Saskatchewan government put in $166 million. Federal government support was 93 per cent while Saskatchewan's was 7 per cent.

In 1987–88 the Manitoba government put in $72 million while the federal government put in almost $800 million. The ratio was 92 per cent federal, 8 per cent provincial.

Alberta put in $445 million while the federal government put in $1.3 billion for a ratio of 25 per cent versus 75 per cent in favour of the federal government.

Those are not small picayune figures. Here we are talking about a measure that is less than $20 million compared to billions and billions of dollars that we have poured into agriculture to support the family farm, the rural communities and everything associated with agriculture. It showed up in the 1988 realized net income which reached an all–time high in spite of all the difficulties.

Alberta, for example, exceeded $1 billion for the first time in history. Saskatchewan was the highest at over $1 billion since 1981. Quebec averaged over $900 million in realized net income between the period 1985 to 1988. Ontario achieved a realized net income in agriculture of $1.4 billion, the highest record ever achieved by the agricultural industry of Ontario.

To suggest that this government is drawing back and withholding support for agriculture is absolute nonsense because the facts and figures belie that. I will challenge anyone to argue with these figures because the facts are clearly there. We have supported agriculture in an unprecedented fashion and the farmers of Canada know it. But there comes a time when there has to be a little bit of pulling back, a little bit of belt–tightening and, like all other good citizens, we are asking the farmers to share in that process. Now what could be more fair than that?

What the farmers are asking today is for us to get on with the business of governing and get this piece of legislation passed so that they can get on and make the cash advances, hopefully before Christmas. The opposition have seized upon this opportunity to try to make political hay. They have not hurt us, they are only hurting themselves and the farmers of Canada. I would ask that they cease and desist and get on with the business of passing this legislation.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be very explicit in my question to the minister. Hopefully it can be answered with a simple yes or no. I have before me a letter from the B.C. Vegetable Marketing Commission. In that letter the commission says that the APFC program is very useful. However, the elimination of interest–free advance payments will more than likely render the entire program inadequate to meet the producers' requirements.

Can the minister advise the B.C. Vegetable Marketing Commission, which has expressed this grave concern, if he is planning to eliminate the interest–free advance payment plan which would be devastating to that industry?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can answer that question herself. It would be provided for in this legislation.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the farmers will be glad to know they are doing so well. I found it very difficult to believe that the Minister of Agriculture is suggesting that this advance payments program, if there is interest charged on it, can take the place of an interest–free program.

I am going to use canola as an example because it is something I know is a major crop in the minister's home area. In the canola industry right now there is enough canola in place, backed up, unpriced, to last well into January or February.

The farmers in my area and in the minister's area are delivering canola at the present price of $5. There is no guarantee that within the next three months there is going to be any increase in canola. Even if the advance had been in place, those farmers could not afford to pay the interest, prime plus one or two or whatever the government decides to put on that, over a period of time on the hope that maybe the price will go up enough in the next couple of months. Only if canola was under the Wheat Board, where the price would level off for the year, would it be possible to do that at that particular time. It cannot be done under this present system.

While we are talking about money, two years ago the government backed off of the two-price wheat system at the rate of $270 million a year, about one-tenth of what it costs to keep the advance payments interest free. Why is some of that money not being used? Why is a portion of that money not used to allow this, at least for this year?

We have legislation that is in place that could be used. The government is withholding that money now under legislation that is in place and could be used. I know the minister tries to blame the opposition for this not being through, but he does have the instrument by which the money could be sent out. Why not use some of this money and let it go?

If the minister wants to talk about changing the legislation, next year is a good enough time to do it. Pass it now but let them have their money when they need it under the circumstances which they have planned for.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member, I think that one of the reasons that the back-up in canola deliveries is as he described is the fact that this legislation has not been available and has not been able to be utilized by the producers. He said the legislation could be used. Yes, it could be used if the members opposite had got on with the business of allowing the bill to go through.

Mr. Hovdebo: Interest free right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I know they do not support the bill, but that is no reason to hold the farmers to ransom and to hijack the farmers. The fact of the matter is that this provision was passed when the budget was passed and it has to be implemented. The back-up is caused—and I know my hon. friend will take issue with this—I am sure, in large part by virtue of the fact that they saw fit, and it is their right to do so, to withhold passage of this legislation, to delay it. I think that is regrettable, particularly because after the budget had been passed, it became a fait accompli and it was going to become a fact of life.

• (1540)

They should not have misled farmers into believing that there would have been some deviation from that. Notice was served in April that this provision was going to be withdrawn. We had hoped that through the co-operation of members opposite we would be able to get this bill through, hopefully before the end of June, and if not the end of June at least by the end of September. They chose not to and so we have this kind of chaotic condition.

The hon. member never listens. He talked about the fact that farmers could not afford prime plus 1, 2 or 3 per cent. I said just the opposite. I said it would be prime less 1 to 3 per cent. That is what we are really talking about.

He wants to talk about canola being under the Canadian Wheat Board. That is another issue. It is an issue for another day. I know what the hon. member's position on that would be. I am not sure what the position of the producers is. It varies from area to area and from year to year.

I know that hon. members opposite are opposed to this legislation and they certainly have every right to oppose it, but I would plead with them to allow us to get on with the job so that the facility that is enshrined in here can be used and the farmers will be able to take advantage of it.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the minister a question. In view of the fact that he has said that the opposition parties have held up this bill, I think we should follow this through in sequence. The original bill was tabled, I believe, on June 26 or 27. The budget was brought in in late April. The bill had to be withdrawn, as he is well aware. This particular bill, Bill C-36, was re-introduced in the House on October 3 and that is when the debate commenced.

Mr. Robichaud: So it couldn't be passed in September, could it?

Mr. Ferguson: There is no way it could have been passed in September. As a matter of fact, five months after the budget he saw fit to introduce the bill in a form that they felt could be accepted by the House. Consequently, the delay was not caused by the opposition parties. We are within a period of less than two months and we are going to vote on final reading this afternoon. He certainly cannot suggest to us that it was held up in committee either because it went through committee very expeditiously in view of the content of the bill.

The soybean harvest in Ontario was well under way before the bill was even introduced on October 3. The corn harvest was well under way and the prices dropped because the bill was not there to even out the flow of grain to market. Soybean producers had to sell their crop in order to get cash in hand. Will the minister consider compensating those farmers for the loss they took when they had to harvest the beans at that low price? I think the price has recovered by about 40 cents a bushel since October 3.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I always enjoy the hon. member because he has had a lot of experience in this House. I would not want him to leave the impression that there has not been a willingness to negotiate and facilitate the passage of this bill. He will know and his Whip will know that we have made several attempts.

The reason there were delays is because there were some improvements made to the bill. There were several attempts made, all of which were aborted because the members opposite wanted to have a little fun with this thing. This bill could have been passed a month ago. It is not a complex bill, it is fairly straightforward. It was introduced on September 27, I am told. Had there been a willingness and a desire to assist the producers about whom he is now so concerned, I am sure his generosity would have prevailed and we would have been able to do something.

Unfortunately, we are at the stage now where it is too late to consider that. I hope that we can get this bill passed as quickly as possible. I hope that he will have some influence on his friends in the other place and that they will not foot drag so we can get this legislation in place. It is my sense that while a lot of producers would rather have interest free cash advances, they are now interested in getting this legislation in place so that they can use it to full advantage and it will be used to fuller advantage because of the flexibility and improvements that we have put in it.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, during his earlier comments the Minister of Agriculture made an excellent case for his use of this particular legislation as a means to keep farm prices down so that processing plants could remain open. He quoted a couple of processing operators who he indicated were in favour of the removal of the interest-free cash advances prior to it being done, which was proposed in the budget of last April.

Could he tell us, in the spirit of consultation which is supposed to be the spirit in which this government entered office, whether in fact he had any meetings in this regard with the farm organizations? Could he report what they told him? In the letters that we have received during the course of this legislation being before committee, we have not found any farm organization that has approved of doing away with the interest-free cash advance. We were only able to call three before us because of the time constraints imposed on us by the Conservative majority in the committee, but we did not hear from any groups that were in favour of the proposal.

Who did he consult with prior to the budget proposition and what farm groups, if any, were behind it? We know that the processors appear to like it because they are hoping it will keep farm prices down to the point where they can have a margin to stay in business and show a good profit processing. What farmers liked it?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member attempts to mislead again. He said that the only people whom I quoted or referred to were a couple of processors. I referred to one processor; it was United Oilseeds in Lloydminster, and that happens to be owned by the United Grain Growers which is a co-operative, I think. The other one was from the Manitoba Pool. That is a co-operative too, is it not?

Mr. Gustafson: As far as I know.

Mr. Mazankowski: Where does he get off with this nonsense of me listening only to the processors. I thought that the Manitoba Wheat Pool was a co-operative organization composed of farmers and I thought the United Grain Growers was a farmer co-operative organization. I am not sure how the hon. member gets off trying to suggest that all I am listening to are processors.

Mr. Althouse: You're making processor arguments, not farmer arguments.

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, now, Mr. Speaker, they are making processor arguments, not farmer arguments.

Mr. Althouse: The processing arm was the people you were listening to, right?

Mr. Mazankowski: Oh, I see.

Mr. Althouse: Well, read the letter again.

Mr. Mazankowski: I guess he is now suggesting that farmers, because they do not haul to canola crushers, are not interested in processors. Is that right? Is that what the hon. member is saying? Is that the new NDP farm policy?

Mr. Althouse: The question was: "What farmers?" It's lowering farm prices. You have admitted it's lowering farm prices.

Mr. Mazankowski: Okay, now we are getting into the second part of the question. I will respond to that.

The hon. member asked what farmers we consulted with before we brought this budgetary proposal down. When you bring down a budgetary proposal, you do not consult. I think that has been a tradition and part and parcel of our parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Althouse: That was not what you said when you came into power.

Mr. Mazankowski: The budget was presented; the budget has been ratified. This is legislation that is flowing from the budget.

The hon. member said there are no farmers who want to pay interest. I agree, that is probably correct. But I will tell you what farmers want. They want to see interest rates come down, they want to see the deficit come down and they want to see us tackle the national debt.

The hon. member opposite has been around here a long time but, boy, when it comes to exercising responsibility, they are here hollering in the House every day: "spend, spend, spend". Today we are at the stage where we cannot spend, spend, spend any more and even farmers are now being asked to bear a portion of the burden. That is what we are doing in a very modest way here. In addition, we hope that through this we may remove some of the distortions and dislocations that take place in the market-place.

What farmers are wanting and expecting of a government is sound and proper fiscal management to get the Canadian books of account into shape. That is what we are trying to do and we are asking everyone to co-operate and to assist in this process by sharing that burden. I am sure the hon. member would agree with that.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Minister of Agriculture. There is one concern which he can perhaps clear up just by being Deputy Prime Minister.

A lot of farm groups suggest, as did the letter I read this afternoon from the Manitoba Canola Producers and the letter which we received from the Ontario Corn Producers, that the interest rates well may be 2 per cent above prime. The minister has talked about them being 1 or 2 per cent below prime. I wonder if he could give the House a guarantee that the Department of Finance and the Department of Agriculture will ensure that the resulting loan guarantee will result in rates below prime by 1 or 2 per cent.

That clearly would be a significant step because it would provide to farmers using the program some significant advantage, using the power and the financial resources of the Government of Canada, whereas if it is 2 per cent above prime, if the person is in a reasonably good financial position he can probably borrow at the bank at that rate. He is certainly not going to have to put up $2 in security by way of crop in the bin in order to get $1 loan through a producer organization. If the minister could clarify that it would be very helpful.

He talked about the canola plant, I believe it was owned by the United Grain Growers in Saskatchewan, that was supporting the bill. In fact, the United Grain Growers were one of the organizations which wrote the Prime Minister an urgent letter in early October demanding that the government abandon the bill and let the funds which had already been approved by Parliament go forward. I would be very surprised if that canola plant was really that concerned.

I note as well that the minister's colleague and counterpart in the province of Manitoba, Mr. Findlay, wrote the minister a letter dated September 19 urging that the advance payment be provided to farmers, and stating that the cash flow problems currently felt by Manitoba producers could be alleviated by this bill.

The last point I want to put to the minister is the one made by Cliff Leach, the president of the Ontario Corn Producers, in a letter to the Minister of Grains and Oilseeds just after he spoke in the House on October 4 in which, besides refuting most of the points that the minister had made in the House when he intervened in the debate, he puts the question about which I think all members are concerned.

He said:

> Finally we must repeat our underlying criticism that Bill C-36 represents a reduction in federal support for Canadian farmers when no commitment has been made to reduce comparable assistance elsewhere—and specifically in U.S. Farm Bill loan provisions available to American farmers.

I think that is the concern of a lot of producers, not just the advance payments bill, Bill C-36, but the whole list of items—I believe there were six—that were in the budget on which action has been taken by the government that were listed as subsidies in the FTA.

The Americans have not made any reduction in their agricultural support programs whereas on the Canadian side we have about six, everything from reduction in crop insurance to doing away with the two-price wheat system, a significant number of which we have moved on. This one is quite important because the Americans have a loan program whereby they provide interest for farm stored wheat and major crops. We seem to be doing away with these unilaterally rather than negotiating them bilaterally under the subsidy code provisions of the FTA. Since this question was put by the president of the Ontario Corn Producers, I wonder if the Minister might respond to that question put in the letter to the Minister of Grains and Oilseeds.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the hon. member because it does provide me with an opportunity to correct an impression that I left with my friend in the NDP when I may have said 1 to 3 per cent below prime. That is not correct. It is probably 3 per cent below the current going rates.

For example, the Canadian Wheat Board does borrow at a rate below prime. We think that we will be able to get an almost similar rate although there may be some small charge for administration handling. I apologize and regret that very much. We are basically looking at 2 to 3 percentage points below the going rate of interest which would be roughly in the area of prime or slightly above.

The hon. member raises a point about what support programs from the agriculture industry are the best. It is obvious that our grain stabilization program and our crop insurance program and some of our agricultural stabilization programs have been insufficient to meet the tumultuous period of time we have just gone through. That is precisely why we are looking at a new crop insurance program. That is why we are looking at the issue of safety nets to see whether we can design safety nets that will be more permanent, more reliable and more predictable and that will be in place on a permanent basis rather than on the basis of having to design them on an ad hoc basis.

I think the farmers want to make their plans with some degree of confidence. They want to plant their crops knowing that they can make the decisions reading market signals, weather patterns and trends. At the same time they want to make sure there is some kind of safety net, some kind of shield that will be there so that they can make those kinds of decisions.

That is our ultimate goal and objective. That work is proceeding and we hope very much that during the course of the comprehensive agriculture review that we are currently undertaking we will be able to come up with some programs that will be more appropriately and more fittingly designed to meet the 1990s and the 21st century based upon some of the experiences that we have encountered over the last four or five years.

I do not think there is any secret in the fact that the last four or five years, in terms of drought conditions for example, were probably equal to or worse than the 1930s. I think it really speaks very well of the producers of this country who have been able to survive. I think it demonstrates a tremendous degree of resilience that they have been able to survive this very difficult period with, of course, the aid of governments.

Ad hoc programs are very difficult to design and very difficult to administer. Usually you end up not pleasing everybody. You end up with inequities from one region to the other, from one township to the other, from one county to the other. We are trying to overcome that if we possibly can.

We hope that in the course of the review we will be able to deal with this issue with everybody around the table trying to sort this out in order that we can come up with programs that will be properly cost-shared and will be fiscally sound but permanent, reliable and effective.

The hon. member says that this is part of the free trade agreement. I am not sure how long we are going to have to be around here to get off that kick. There is nothing in this that is being directed by the free trade agreement whatsoever. We are our own sovereign country. We do what we have to do to meet the challenges and the conditions of the agricultural community.

One would ask whether the $20.7 billion or $20.8 billion that we have poured into agriculture as a federal government over the last four or five years was dictated to by the free trade agreement or not.

I suppose the hon. member is now trying to say that if we reduce that by $100 he is going to blame it on the free trade agreement. We did it because we had to respond to a need. Farmers know that we have responded to the need. Farmers also know, if you really sit down and talk about it, that this government has been pretty generous to them.

The hon. member reads figures just as well as I do, so he will know that in 1988, in terms of realized net income, it was the best year that farmers ever had. I know that there are difficulties and there are areas that are hurting. I know that.

I serve a rural constituency just like the hon. members opposite, but figures do not lie. The fact of the matter is that there are pockets where the hurt is substantive, while there are other areas in which things are going a little better. That is not to say that everything is well.

I am not trying to paint a rosy picture for agriculture. What I am saying is that we are trying to deal with this with the limited resources we have available. We are trying to respond effectively and we are trying to respond with some degree of sincerity. The last thing that farmers want is a return to the 22 per cent, 23 per cent and 24 per cent interest rates that were the hallmark of the party and the government that member was a part of.

Mr. Milliken: You are not serious.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am serious. I will tell you—

Mr. Gauthier: And they are serious.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when it comes to difficulties on the farm 97 per cent of all the farmers who are in difficulty today are in difficulty because of the 23 per cent and 24 per cent interest rates which that government brought about and inflation that heads up to 15 per cent. The inflationary psychology was on a treadmill.

Mr. Milliken: Absolute nonsense.

Mr. Mazankowski: These guys say it is absolute nonsense. That goes to show you how much they know about farming. We are trying to avoid a repetition of the disasters inflicted upon the farm community by the Liberal government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to hear that the Minister of Agriculture and the Deputy Prime Minister are attempting to head off a disaster with high interest rates as we saw in the early 1980s. I note that we are now a full four percentage points above United States interest rates, something that even in those terrible days we did not achieve for very long.

Consistent with his arguments about attempting to keep down inflation, would he advise the House what his government's intention is with regard to the amendment for each of the two acts that are being dealt with and put forward by myself to limit the amount of loans to just $50,000 from the current $30,000?

That way they would go up from $30,000 to $50,000, as a means of combating this inflationary psychology. It would also be a means of limiting the amount of liability the Government of Canada will have basically to the banks in this country. Given the opportunity of turning a quarter of a million dollars of their own liability on to the Government of Canada, lending institutions will encourage some of their customers whose accounts are getting a bit shaky to go and take out the maximum cash advance for grain. That way, if they should happen to fall into bankruptcy or receivership, the government will be held responsible and not the bank.

Can the minister tell us whether members on the government side will be supporting a more modest kind of approach to move from maximum loans of $30,000 up to only $50,000 instead of the $250,000 million that was originally in the bill?

In keeping with his espoused attempts at abating the inflation psychology, certainly it seems to me that one of the more inflationary things a government could do would be to move this ceiling on loans from $30,000 up to $250,000 all in one step.

We do not know from the witnesses we were able to call just how many loans hit the ceiling, but from the witnesses that we were able to hear it appeared that very few people actually applied for the maximum loan.

We were unable to get the Canadian Wheat Board or the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee to come because government members refused to allow us to hear from those witnesses. Therefore we do not know what proportion of the population using cash advances went to the maximum. We were told by the witnesses we heard that a very small percentage indeed took the maximum of $30,000.

I repeat my question to the minister: If he is so interested in abating the inflationary psychology, why is the government proposing to move from a maximum of $30,000 to a maximum of $250,000 for these loans?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I thought the hon. member's whole purpose of engaging in this debate was to point out the fact that farmers needed money to pay off their bills and to smooth out the markets of their commodities when prices were low. In that way they could take an advance based upon the market signals and on basic sound business principles.

Now I hear him saying that they do not need too much money; they just need about as much as he would prescribe. I do not share that same philosophical view.

I do not believe that farmers are irresponsible. I believe that farmers are good business managers. I think that they can best make the decision whether they should borrow $30,000, $60,000 or $100,000. I would leave it in the hands of the producer.

I have watched in my lifetime a dramatic change occur in the agricultural industry. As one born and raised on a farm, I have witnessed the transition from horsepower to mechanical power. If there is one thing that stands out in my mind about the agricultural industry in Canada it is its ability to adapt to change.

The reason we are successful in agriculture today and have been able to survive as one of the leading agricultural countries in the world is that our farmers have been able to adapt to change. When farmers adapt to change it means, at least to me, that they are sound business managers.

They are good business managers and they can make the best decisions. I would rather leave it in their hands so that they can diversify and use this for a multiple series of crops. They will make the decisions. We will provide the tools with which they can make those decisions, and I will rely upon their good sense and sound judgment.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the need for money by farmers right now.

The minister makes the point that the decision was passed in the budget, but that does not etch it in stone. It is not necessary for the government to take that position, continue with it, and run with it.

The government has changed its mind before on issues that have been in the budget and passed in the budget. I point to one particular example, that is, the deindexing of the seniors' pensions which was brought forward in The Budget Papers and was changed when the government shifted its position. This was not too long ago.

Why not pass this bill on to the Senate but use the old bill to get the money out to farmers now? Let it go to the Senate, and you will have your bill for next year which is a logical time to get it. I ask the minister: Why not use this approach, get the money out to farmers now on the old bill, and use the new bill next year?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we have been through that argument before. I have tried to lay out the reasons for the need to pass this bill at this particular time. It is a budgetary provision.

The member says that governments have changed their minds before. I am sure that opposition parties would have wished they had changed their minds.

• (1610)

I remember in the budget of 1979 when we were in government that we proposed a modest 18–cent a gallon increase in the price of gasoline. The NDP and the Liberals voted together to defeat that particular measure and the price of gasoline went up.

An Hon. Member: You raised it $1.

Mr. Mazankowski: Gasoline went up over $1 a gallon and we accumulated an additional burden of debt to the tune of about $100 billion plus during that period of time. The only reason we are accumulating it now is that we are paying the interest on your debt, which we cannot afford. That is what is wrong. We are still paying for the litany of mismanagement caused by that government and supported by that gang over there.

An Hon. Member: From $68 million to $200 billion.

Mr. Mazankowski: I know the hon. member for Prince Albert is genuine and sincere when he makes his plea. I am sorry to disappoint him. We have to move with this legislation at this particular time. I will go to the extent of telling his constituency that he fought a good and lofty fight in the process.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the genial Minister of Agriculture. It occurred to me that he is having great pressure from groups in Saskatchewan and across the prairies. Groups like the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee have been pointing out that a lot of crop this year is of low quality due to wet periods during harvesting. A lot of it cannot be delivered because of the demand for the lower quality wheats, barley and so on. That is a very important argument.

The other group in Saskatchewan is the Saskatchewan Municipal Association that has been doing studies which show a very deteriorating situation with regard to loss of farms, farm foreclosures, and debts that cannot be serviced. This was pointed out dramatically in the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Pool in which it said that at least $500 million will be required before spring planting next year. That has been reinforced by a letter from the premier of the province saying that additional funds would be required.

It seems to me the advance payment money would be one way to put funds into the hands of producers on an interim basis. I do understand that there has be some kind of emergency funding arrangement for this purpose.

Assuming that no permanent arrangement with regard to additional funding is made, I am wondering if the minister has considered responding to those requests from Garf Stevenson, President of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool or Premier Grant Devine as these advance payments would provide several hundred millions of dollars of cash flow at harvest time.

Mr. Mazankowski: I hope I understand the purport of the hon. member's question correctly. Is he saying that if we were to bring forth interest–free farm cash advances that that would satisfy the premier of the province of Saskatchewan and Mr. Stevenson, the president of the Wheat Pool? I sort of gathered that that is what he was trying to say. He may want to clarify that a little later.

He also said that farmers have grain of poor quality, and there is not much market demand for it at this particular time. That is all the more reason why this legislation should be moved forward quickly, because they will have the opportunity to take advantage of this instrument to take out advances and in the process improve their cash flow.

He also left the impression that this instrument was a tool to finance long–term debt. It was never intended to be that. It is intended to be a marketing tool, to use the facility of a cash advance, to improve your cash flow, and to arrange your marketing so that you can maximize your returns. That is what this issue is for.

It is not to finance long–term debt or intermediate term debt. It is a marketing tool. It is there to facilitate orderly marketing and to ensure that the producer gets the best market return possible. I regret the hon. member is leaving the impression that if this particular piece of legislation were to be withdrawn all would be well.

We know that there are still problems in western Canada and in other parts of Canada in the agricultural community. The premier of the province of Saskatchewan represents his farmers very well and makes representations to us on a regular basis when he considers there is a need. Of course, we will be responding to his request. We will be analysing and assessing the magnitude of the difficulties, whether they be drought or other conditions, as we have in the past.

I want to assure my hon. friend that our record speaks louder than words. In the process we will examine the extent. I know that last year about this time everyone was screaming and hollering about the need for drought payments.

We will not get statistics in from the crop insurance people until the end of January, February or March. It is very difficult to try to make guestimates of the extent of any losses because when you do you sometimes miss the mark.

Obviously, we will be monitoring the situation very closely and responding to the premier in some detail indicating how we intend to monitor the situation. We will seek his co-operation as he will ours. Once again, no one in the province of Saskatchewan speaks louder and clearer and with a more articulate voice than the premier of the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think everyone in the House is aware that this is not long-term financing of farm debt. It only exacerbates the situation if the government responds in a positive way to the Sask Pool and to the premier in providing assistance later this winter or early next spring.

This $400 million or $500 million worth of interest-free loans is not available, and that is why the whole situation is being exacerbated this fall. Clearly, we have heard the cries from the Canadian Wheat Board, from the municipal leaders, and from the pools. I suppose that if the minister continues to press this legislation through it only puts that much more pressure on him from the premier of Saskatchewan. He has already outlined that and of course we are very familiar with it from the 1986 provincial election when the demand came in at 6 a.m.

I just think that it does worsen the situation for these producers, especially at harvest time when we have not, apparently from what the Prime Minister said today, been able to conclude new shipments and agreements for the sale of wheat to Russia. The situation is aggravated by the loss of this provision.

The minister would agree that in the negotiations over the subsidy code there was a list of subsidies which was not subject to the countervail. Most producers, including farm producers, soybean producers and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, only three groups allowed to speak before the committee, could not understand why we were destroying this unilaterally when it would lend itself in the negotiation of a subsidy code with the United States to giving away certain support programs through agriculture well before negotiations had started to take place.

It is my understanding that they are not going to take place until 1991. I would say to the minister that removing this is a very unfortunate thing at this time. It is his decision and his difficulty, perhaps with his good friend the premier of Saskatchewan, because it will only exacerbate pressure for special interim payments at a much earlier time than might have been necessary because of the level and quality of crops in the prairies this summer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the hon. Minister of Agriculture have a reply?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I will reply because the hon. member made reference to the first special Canadian Grains Program and to a telephone call that occurred in the middle of the night. I want to say this to you and to other members of the House who may not have been here at that time: there was no one who was more disappointed about the federal government coming up with a special Canadian Grains Program than members of the Liberal party. It pulled the rug right from under them. They tried to distort the program by suggesting it was a loan. They wanted to know whether it was new money or old money or whether it was phoney money. It was hilarious to watch them.

Mr. Gustafson: Their old leader told them to sell their own grain. They were used to that.

Mr. Mazankowski: That's right. They were used to that because they did have a leader who told farmers what to do with their wheat.

This has nothing to do with the subsidy code. The hon. member keeps insisting that he has to drag the trade agreement into this issue. He has absolutely no basis upon which to make that statement at all. This has absolutely nothing to do with it whatsoever.

We have a gentleman across here who purports to speak for agriculture. He fails to realize that the agricultural community is very heavily reliant upon the export industry. Some 50 per cent of our agricultural market receipts are achieved through the export market. We are a world player in the export market. We have been caught in the crossfire of a price war between the European Community and the United States.

It was the Prime Minister of this country who brought the issue of agriculture to the top of the agenda in the GATT proceedings to deal with this debilitating situation that was destroying the export oriented industry of agriculture in Canada. What we see now is the attention of all agriculture producing nations directed toward dealing with the gradual reduction of trade distorting subsidies, which incidentally in world terms total somewhere between $250 billion and $275 billion.

Quite frankly, if we are going to be asked as a trading nation to pay our share of those dues, we cannot stay in that business. It is incumbent upon us to work together with other agriculture producing nations to bring about a gradual reduction of the trade distorting subsidies that have played havoc on a very important segment of the Canadian agricultural industry.

The hon. member speaks out of both sides of his mouth. The fact of the matter is we have to ensure that our export oriented industry and our domestic oriented industry are fairly treated. That is the kind of balance we are trying to achieve.

It is worthy to discuss this issue on an intellectually honest basis, but when he keeps throwing red herrings are being thrust across the floor, bringing the subsidy code into this particular issue, it does not speak well of the hon. member. He and I came to this House at the same time. We have enjoyed each other's company, but there are times when he lectures me and I have to lecture him. Today it is my turn to lecture him.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The next motions are Motions Nos. 7 and 10.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie) moved:

Motion No. 7

That Bill C–36 be amended in Clause 7 by striking out lines 33 and 34 at page 5 and substituting the following therefor:

"(a) not exceed the lesser of $50,000 if there is one shareholder, partner or member, as the case may be, and such amount as the Minister may determine;

(b) not exceed the lesser of $100,000 if there are two or more shareholders, partners or members, as the case may be, and such amount as the Minister may determine;

That Bill C–36 be amended in Clause 16 by striking out line 30 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall not exceed

(a) $50,000 if there is one shareholder, partner or member, as the case may be;

(b) $100,000 if there are two or more shareholders, partners or members, as the case may be;

(c) $150,000 if there are three shareholders, partners or members, as the case may be."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have proposed these amendments. They occur in two places, but I think it is suitable that we debate them both at the same time since we are amending two separate bills and the two different motions in effect put the same amendment to each part of the acts that we are amending.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Motions Nos. 7 and 10 are in order and will be debated together, with a vote on Motion No. 7 applying to Motion No. 10.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, my reason for putting this motion forward stems in part from what we heard in committee. We were only able to hear from three farm witnesses, but we found that from the experiences of those witnesses very few users of the cash advance system when it was interest–free ever took the maximum loan which under the old act was $30,000 in each case.

My colleagues and I in this party believe there is no need to send out signals that induce inflationary psychology. We think that the $30,000 has been in place for a number of years and, if there is to be an increase, we think $50,000 will be adequate for almost every user of the program at this date.

I submit that if $30,000 was adequate for virtually all of the users when $30,000 was available interest–free, surely virtually no one will ever ask for a loan above the $50,000 that we propose here. We think this is a consistent and responsible kind of motion to put. If the government were serious about its fight against inflationary psychology which it cites over and over again, it will be supportive of this motion. I heartily accept their approval and await their "yeas" when the vote is called.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I think our main concern with this bill is the removal of the interest support provided with it. We have outlined to the government the tremendous losses that will occur to the industry, not only in cash flow for producers but in income to farmers. If the experience of the corn producers is indicative of the entire industry, in many cases you get as high as 15 times effective cash cost benefit from the money invested. There is a big mistake being made there.

I do not know how the Minister of Agriculture can do anything but look at the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, see advance payments in that and similar advance payments interest–support programs in the U.S., and say it has nothing to do with the free trade deal. It will have nothing to do with the negotiations for the removal of subsidies because we will have removed our subsidy. We will have removed the cash advance program. So, if we are trying to negotiate a subsidy code with the Americans, and we have already removed it back in 1989 and the negotiation will probably take place in 1991, then they will say, "We are not interested in negotiating that because you have already taken it away from your farmers".

The two–price wheat, the support for the At and East rate, and at least a half dozen other things, were either removed in the removed by unilateral action of the government, such as the two–price wheat system was back in August, 1988. The farm groups are concerned about the loss of the support programs, such as advance payments, crop insurance, and At and East support program, but they cannot imagine that any government would be so naive as to give these things away except in the course of a negotiation. If support programs are going to be cut, there must be some way to do it without giving it away unilaterally before the negotiations even begin.

The NDP member has outlined a division of the support that the government has set down increasing the amount. We have no complaint about support. We think we should have larger support. The $250,000 is a very high limit. On the other hand, it is hard to know because legislation tends not to get amended and $50,000 might seem to be adequate at this time but may not be adequate in future years if higher prices prevail for crops such as corn and soybeans. We think the amendment proposed will cause a certain amount of restriction, perhaps not very great at this stage but it might at some time in the future. We do not like to see government programs limited but our main objection to the bill is the removal of the interest–free portion of the advance payments as is proposed by the government.

My colleague from Lambton—Middlesex has looked at the whole question of why the bill is not passed or why the bill has taken so long. I would like before we arrive at the time allocated by the House for the vote, to allow him to outline those provisions that seem to have taken place and why this bill has taken so long to get before the House.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member keeps referring to the Canada–U.S Free Trade Agreement and we are talking about a program that was an advance of $27 million to a very small number of producers. Not that many producers used the program. It is a budget cutting measure, as the minister pointed out earlier. I think everyone in this House agreement between Canada and the United States.

He also refers to At and East. This is an old program that needs to be looked at. If the hon. member has read it, he will realize that transportation issues are being addressed. It is time that they were addressed. There again, tying all this to the free trade agreement is not the case at all and not fair.

As far as the motion goes in respect to the limit, we have given a lot of thought and researched this area. We feel $250,000 is fair. We know it is difficult after a figure has been set to change it. Under the previous legislation the $30,000 limit did not allow many producers to access the program because of the multiple number of crops they grew. With this new limit it will allow the producers to put all of the crops they grow together and access the program to a greater extent.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, could the parliamentary secretary, who has just told us that not too many people were able to access the program when $30,000 was the limit, inform the House what proportion of the loans were at the $30,000 limit last year or the year before, or the year before that. Could he give us the data because we have not been able to get it to this point?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I am not able to provide that information but I know that some commodities access the total value of the product. I believe tobacco was one of the commodities in this country that used the advance to the full amount. We will see if we can provide that information for the hon. member but I do not have those figures today. We know there was a very small number of producers who did use the program. I do not have the figures with me as to the amount of utilization.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, it only stands to reason that if producers were not utilizing the program to the extent they normally would do so in the crop years 1987 and 1988, it is primarily because we had a very serious drought in both of those years, not only across the prairies, but also across Ontario where both the soybean and corn producers were hit extremely hard.

I just want to emphasize again the point I was speaking to a little earlier, when the government suggested that the opposition parties were holding up this bill. The bill received second reading, as I indicated earlier, on October 26. It was passed clause by clause in committee on November 8. Now, almost three weeks later, it is brought into the House where it will pass third reading this afternoon.

Clearly, after the government has delayed for five months after the budget was passed before bringing this legislation into the House, the government itself has to accept the responsibility for that five-month delay and then the three-week delay between the time it was passed and today when we have it in the House.

I think the point that has been missed today is the fact that this is just another step in dismantling the farm programs in Canada by this government that claims it is responding to market pressures. This afternoon, we heard quite a bit about those market pressures, "We are responding to market pressures". These are the same market pressures it said led to the demise of the two-price wheat system which served the producers of this country very well. I am sure the parliamentary secretary will realize it will cost him about $1 bushel in his next year's crop when that crop is harvested.

The same market pressures relate to the removal of oats from Canadian Wheat Board. Of course, we know that the producers in western Canada, the prairie pools and the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board are very upset about this move. We know they were not producer moves but moves and pressures brought about by some of the marketing institutions.

Harmonization of regulations was again because of market pressures. Now these same market pressures have led to the United States appealing to GATT on our ice cream and yogurt even though the United States does not allow ice cream into their country.

The market pressures are a result of the United States countervail against our pork. These have forced several small packing plants in Ontario to close this last summer. More recently, those same market pressures were the ones that caused the closing of the St. Lawrence Starch Company at Mississauga. The removal of the At and East again is due to market pressures.

I just want to ask this government when is it going to apply some market pressures and bring these pressures to bear that will support our programs and support our plants which are being forced into extinction? The government responds obviously to pressures, but only pressures of big business and United States interests.

I ask the government again today, as this debate on the crop cash advances winds down, to consider what it is doing as it dismantles these programs piece by piece, the very infrastructure that has served the producers of this nation so well for so many years.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises quite a number of issues. He stated that we are dismantling the market programs. I do not believe we are dismantling market programs at all. We have always been very forceful in indicating our support for the supply managed sector in this country. If there is any group of producers that wishes to collectively market its produce we will provide the enabling legislation. That has been very clear.

We have also said, and this is well known at GATT, that Article 11 of GATT has to be clarified and strengthened. That should be sending a strong signal. I believe we have the support of the Canadian Dairy Commission and the dairy farmers of Canada in the strengthening and clarifying of Article 11 of GATT. They know that that has to happen. But we are working together with the producers to do these things. That is where the success is going to come from, by working with the producers of these various crops.

The hon. member talked about oats being removed from the Canadian Wheat Board. It is my understanding that the Canadian Wheat Board did not market an awful lot of those oats.

He talked about the two-price wheat. Many of us in this country have forgotten why the two-price wheat system was brought in in the first place. It is my understanding that it was brought in for the protection of Canadian consumers because the price of wheat was much higher on the domestic market.

The hon. member mentioned St. Lawrence Starch. From newspaper articles, the company claims that the corn countervail was the reason that they were taking a look at their operation and the decisions they had made. None of us probably know the real reasons why St. Lawrence Starch is moving, but we could all speculate and this is not the place to speculate. We would certainly not want to do that.

We also, as a government, are supporting the pork and the red meat industries with assistance in countervail actions that have been brought forward by the United States. We will continue to stand behind the producers of our various commodities in any action that is taken. We are not going to stand back idly and see our producers hindered or tramped on by actions taken by the U.S.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Bonaventure—Iles-de-la-Madeleine on a very short question.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I will address my questions to the parliamentary secretary. We sometimes have problems across Canada with people understanding what happens with the west, central Canada and the maritimes.

I would like to ask the parliamentary secretary for figures in terms of farmers per capita on the amount of federal government subsidies that go to the west, to Ontario, to Quebec, and to the maritimes. If he could perhaps address that, it would clarify a lot of things for Canadians across this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The parliamentary secretary on a very short answer.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I realize that we are basically out of time. I do not have it broken down as to regions across Canada, but we could certainly provide that to the hon. member.

The minister earlier today, while we were discussing this bill, indicated the total payments that have gone out to all agriculture right across Canada. I am sure the hon. member will find it extremely interesting. A look at Hansard tomorrow would provide us with much of that information but we will get the hon. member a breakdown on those figures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to Order made Thursday, November 23, 1989, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of all the stages of the bill now before the House.

The question is on Motions Nos. 7 and 10. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motions Nos. 7 and 10 negatived.

Hon. Mary Collins (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that the Bill C-36, an act to amend the Advance Payments for Crops Act and the Prairie Grains Advance Payments Act, as reported (with an amendment) from a legislative committee be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

It being 5.17 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

NEEDS OF YOUTH

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing special initiatives, in consultation with Aboriginal peoples, to response to the serious employment, education and health needs of aboriginal youth.

He said: I think there is an interpreter when I start speaking Inuktitut, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation from Inuktitut]

I am pleased to have this opportunity today to speak to the concerns of aboriginal youth. I submitted this motion as a subject for debate out of a deep concern for both the present circumstances and future prospects of the young Inuit, Indian and Metis men and women in this country. I hope my remarks today will do justice to their concerns, their hopes and their dreams.

• (1720)

To the members of the Private Members' Business committee I would like to express my appreciation for having designated this motion a votable one. I am pleased that they view this issue as seriously as I do.

What does it mean to be young and aboriginal and living in Canada today? Last year, the annual report of the Canadian Human Rights Commission made newspaper headlines with this grim statement: "An Indian youngster in Canada has a better chance of being sent to prison than of completing university."

Many parliamentarians and Canadians were shocked at the time, and rightly so. But the alarming headlines disappeared after a day or so. How many of us bothered to wonder why the situation exists, or asked what could be done to help change the situation? Headlines come and go, but the problems faced by aboriginal youths remain.

I would like to quote from a letter I received from Mikkel Panaktalok, the secretary of the Tuktoyaktuk Youth Committee on the issue of law and prison.

> If we knew what the law meant, we would not break it because our community and families are much too important to us, to hurt them in any way. We also don't want to go to jail because we don't want to get sent away from our parents. Sometimes though we feel that the only way we can get help and counselling is to be sent away, because we don't know how to get this help in our community, because of the lack of education programs. We cannot make choices unless we have the information we need.
> In order to bring out a problem to get help, we get into trouble. Youth do not want to do this anymore. We never did want to do it intentionally.
> We think that the RCMP, health services and social services are only there only when you are in trouble. No one tells us about prevention programs. We need help in using these agencies. We want to work together, but these agencies isolate us. All they do is react instead of prevent.

[English]

What are some of the stark realities of being young, aboriginal and living in Canada today? Statistics tell us that a young aboriginal person has fewer economic and employment prospects than a non-aboriginal person. They tell us that the young aboriginal person will not achieve as high an education and will earn less income than a non-aboriginal youth.

The health of the young aboriginal person is poorer than the non-aboriginal youth. The aboriginal youth will live about 10 years less than his or her non-aboriginal counterpart and is more likely to die a violent death.

Study after study has documented the continuing social and economic discrepancies between aboriginal and non-aboriginal peoples in this country. Although there have been improvements over the past few years in life expectancy, housing, sanitation and post-secondary education the disparities remain unacceptable.

An article which appeared in the The Canadian Family Physician in July of 1988 assessed the health of the Indian and Inuit in Canada in the 1980s and the 1990s. It revealed that Indian infant morality rates are more than twice the Canadian rate. Inuit infant mortality rates are more than three times the Canadian rate.

There remains a 10-year discrepancy in the life expectancy between aboriginal people and non-aboriginal people in Canada.

[Translation from Inuktitut]

The rate of tuberculosis among aboriginal people is still 7 to 10 times higher than the national average. In some communities in the Northwest Territories, where epidemics have broken out in the past couple of years, the rates are over 100 per cent higher than the national rate.

Violent deaths are still a significant cause of mortality among aboriginal people. In 1933, 31 per cent of all Indian deaths and 34 per cent of all Inuit deaths were violent deaths. Of these violent deaths, suicide is the most important cause of death in young adults.

The aboriginal youth of Canada are killing themselves at a shocking rate. The statistics are horrifying and demand the attention of all of us.

The Inuit of the Northwest Territories are committing suicide at a rate four times the national average. More than half of the 172 suicide victims in the Northwest Territories since 1978 have been in the 15 to 24 age group, and the vast majority are males.

[English]

Between 1978 and 1988 the rate of suicide amongst Inuit in the Northwest Territories averaged 53.4 per 100,000. The suicide rate was 22.3 per 100,000 for Indians, and 20 per 100,000 for others.

The average Canadian suicide rate over the decade was about 14 per 100,000.

Factors contributing to the high rate of suicide among aboriginal youth include poverty, alcohol and drug abuse, erosion of traditional values and stress associated with cultural transition. The cultural turmoil in many aboriginal communities especially affects the young people and many feel they have no hope for the future.

Aboriginal youth must be able to see for themselves a positive future within their communities. They must be part of the decision-making in the development of solutions.

I would like to return again to the letter I received from the Tuktoyaktuk Youth Committee and what they would like to see happen in their community:

> We want to get something done for the youth in the community of Tuktoyaktuk. We need national, regional, and local youth programs. We need funding— If we had other communities to work with, we could see what they are doing, and have different exchange programs with other communities. We could break down trouble between different places and get new ideas. Sometimes other youth might be doing things that we would like to do.
> There is no place for the youth to go to. No drop-in centre, no place to hang out, nothing happening in the evenings for the youth in our community. There isn't enough recreational programs. Right now, the youth are getting into trouble because of not enough things to do. A drop-in centre would really benefit our community.
> We need to be given responsibility and be taught how to use this responsibility, and given the power to make decisions.
> There is not enough, if any, substance abuse or alcohol programs that are for youth in the community. We do not have anyone our age who is trained in this area. Unless we do, the message does not get through. We need our peers to teach us what happens. We need someone our own age that we can look up to. They are trying to use programs for adults, and these programs do not work for the youth.

Improving educational attainment levels is essential. Educational attainment levels among aboriginal people are still significantly lower than among non-aboriginal people. Grade 9 attainment for the general population is 80 per cent. For Indians living on urban reserves it is 66 per cent. For Indians living on rural reserves it is 51 per cent.

In the Northwest Territories, 63 per cent of aboriginal people have less than a grade 9 education. Only 2 per cent of aboriginal people in the Northwest Territories have attended university. School dropout and failure rates are still high. Less than half of the students enrolled in grate 10 in the Northwest Territories graduate. It is at this stage that most young people quit school because most of them are reluctant to leave their home communities to attend high school in one of the major centres.

While it is true that attainment levels have been increasing over recent years, there is still much more to be done. And what are the employment prospects of these young aboriginal students once they graduate? Not good.

I am concerned we may have an aboriginal youth employment crisis of major proportions very soon unless some priority attention is given to this issue.

[English]

The aboriginal population of the country is growing at a much faster rate than the non-aboriginal population. The 1989-1990 estimates of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs indicate that the Indian population has been growing at a rate three times as fast as the Canadian population as a whole. This rate does not even include the increase in the Indian population due to Bill C-31, passed a few years ago by Parliament, which has restored Indian status to thousands of Indian people who had lost this status under various discriminatory provisions of the Indian Act.

This growth rate has resulted in a population which is very young. Almost two thirds of the Indian population is under the age of 25, compared to less than one quarter of the Canadian population as a whole.

Internal documents of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs point out the serious employment consequences of this young and growing population. Between 1987 and 1997, 140,000 young aboriginal people will become eligible to join the labour force. According to the department, the problems this will create cannot be understated. Just to maintain employment rates at present low levels will require 8,000 plus new jobs annually. Most of the new jobs will be required in rural areas where opportunities to date have been very limited.

In the Northwest Territories, where I am from, the picture is similar. The population growth rate of the Territories aboriginal people is 3 per cent annually. Over half of the total population of the Northwest Territories, about 53 per cent, is under the age of 25. About 43 per cent of the NWT population is under the age of 20. In the Northwest Territories, there will be 600 potential entrants to the labour force every year for the next decade.

Current unemployment rates among aboriginal people range from 35 to 50 per cent. In remote communities, the rates are higher. In the Northwest Territories, most of the almost 30,000 Inuit, Dene and Métis live in small, widely scattered villages where the prospects for growth are limited. Unemployment rates in some of the communities reach 50 per cent and higher.

In the NWT, in the winter of 1989, the aboriginal unemployment rate was six times higher than the non-aboriginal rate. Unemployment was highest for young people aged 15 to 24.

Regionally, youth unemployment was 49 per cent in the Kitikmeot region, 34 per cent in the Baffin region, 31 per cent in the Keewatin, 28 per cent in the Inuvik region, and 20 per cent in the Fort Smith region.

The population boom in the aboriginal communities has outstripped the number of jobs being created. For example, in the Northwest Territories aboriginal communities, the working age population increased by 2,600 people between 1981 and 1986. Over the same period, employment in those communities grew by only 1,185.

The challenge of establishing conditions which will enable young people of these communities to have an economic future and lead productive lives is an enormous one.

I am encouraged, however, by the many signs that aboriginal youth are increasingly taking matters into their own hands. Last February the Aboriginal Youth of Canada held a conference here in Ottawa. The purpose of the conference was to bring together aboriginal youths from throughout Canada to provide a forum for discussions and opportunities for consensus on the course of action. The theme chosen for the conference was: "From the past, in the present, and for the future". The theme was chosen to reflect the reality that in order for aboriginal peoples to attain their goal of self-determination in the present, it is necessary to respect the traditional ways and have a clear vision of what people want to be in the future. The Aboriginal Youth Council of Canada would like to have another such conference in the new year, and I would encourage the government to support this request for funding.

In closing, I would like to express my wish that as many Members of Parliament as possible from all three parties speak to this motion. I have corresponded with many members already, inviting them to participate in this debate. The more these issues are discussed and the more people become aware of their importance, the better will be our understanding.

In conclusion, I will return to the comments of the Tuktoyaktuk youth committee which stated: "It is the hope of the youth of Tuktoyaktuk, that the concerns we have put down on paper, will be taken to heart by the politicians in Ottawa. We want to work together, to help the aboriginal youth of the north and south. The government in Ottawa has the final say that is very powerful—we hope the government in Ottawa will help us with our concerns, issues and problems." Imaginative efforts are needed to address the concerns of the aboriginal youth of Canada. I am sure that everyone will agree that it is in the national interest to ensure that the productive and creative potential of these young people is harnessed and not wasted.

Mrs. Dorothy Dobbie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the motion of the hon. member for Nunatsiaq. I cannot help but commend him for his concern and his care about the well-being of aboriginal peoples in Canada. His is a concern that is shared by this government and by me personally, and it is shared by a government which is striving to accomplish real progress and bringing new hope and dignity to native Canadians.

However, I must say that while the member himself is unquestionably sincere and a man of honourable motivation, it is unfortunate that the political party he represents is astonishingly hypocritical in its dealings with this matter over the past century.

Throughout most of the past century, successive Liberal governments have demonstrated a tremendous insensitivity to the needs of the aboriginal peoples, and I bring this up because it is relevant to the policies that we have to deal with today. Liberal policies have slammed the doors on the aspirations of natives. Liberal thinking relegated the first Canadians to an existence that was separate and apart from the mainstream of modern life.

Instead of educating the young and employing the vibrant, vital, adult population of the day, these policies created what was a destructive and soul-destroying system of welfare and hopelessness where identity and self-respect were stripped away, leaving behind a very sad and weakened shadow of the proud people who once held dominion over this land.

Since 1984, this government has been working to bring some order out of this chaos. We have had to return to the very fundamentals of the relationship between Canada and its aboriginal people, and we have done so in our continuing search for answers to address these wrongs.

First, there is the issue of land claims, many of them outstanding for over a century. Since taking office five years ago, this government has settled 40 specific claims and is working on 140 more. We have also achieved agreements in principle on two comprehensive claims, and are on the brink of signing a third. As well, we are negotiating six others and the groundwork has been laid for negotiations to get under way on several more. This issue is critical to the self-esteem of the native people, who gave way to the European invasion believing, because governments told them that this was so, that there would be a place for them that they could call home. Therefore, as quickly as we can, we are working to settle these claims and deliver on that promise.

Second, there is the issue of self-determination, what some call self-government. Quite simply, our effort toward self-government means that we are returning to the people their birthright, the birthright that is expected by all human beings, to make their own decisions over their own everyday lives, and this is necessary because the paternalistic attitudes of past governments gave Indian Affairs officials a most extraordinary and almost Orwellian control over the lives of Indian and Inuit people.

This big brotherism must now be reversed so that Indian and Inuit people are enabled to take their rightful place as equal participants in the affairs of this country, and that they do so having honed their skills through the experience that they have gained in running their own lives.

In the past, bands have been restricted as to what they may or may not decide without reference to the federal government through the Department of Indian Affairs. They have been unable to deal with such simple things as local problems like control of the dog population. They have had virtually no control over administration of funds used to provide basic services to a reserve. Direction over the welfare of their children was wrenched away from them, frequently as were the children themselves.

Certainly, the questions of schooling and access to health care were totally under the direction of government bureaucrats who often made decisions according to their own perceptions rather than in response to the actual needs of the people.

All these things are being reversed under the progressive policies of this government and the leadership of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. We are sensitive to the need to introduce these changes with great flexibility and with concern for the specific needs of each band, group or community. We know that what works for communities in the south in the highly populated areas will not always be appropriate and will not always apply to people in the more remote areas. Nevertheless, we also recognize that we must proceed at all levels without delay so that the degradation of the first citizens of this land is halted at once.

Our objectives are clear. We are fully committed to a full return of local decision making and power over local self direction to Indian and Inuit communities within the framework of the Constitution. This includes control over programs delivered by the federal government, and we have made great progress in these areas. For example, administrative control over funds provided for post-secondary education has been turned over to the Indian communities in Manitoba and in many other jurisdictions.

Many bands disperse social assistance on their own and run local municipal type services such as water, sewage and firefighting programs. More and more bands are running their own schools, employing educators and setting the curriculum according to community objectives and values. Bands are running housing projects, administering mortgage funding and planning community development programs. Bands own and manage construction companies, building schools, roads and other community facilities.

Out of these initiatives is growing a self confidence that will allow these native people to take full advantage of the new Canadian Economic Aboriginal Development Program introduced by this government in June. This is a program that over the next five years will see the injection of $874 million into the aboriginal community. This will help to establish a renewal of the entrepreneurial spirit that is so natural to a self motivated people.

This is a program that is designed to help develop an economic base that will allow aboriginal people to grow and to thrive in financial independence. I am proud to say that there are hundreds of successful, incipiently successful, and looking forward to being successful Indian entrepreneurs out there, proving once again that the initiative is available when the opportunity is offered.

This is good news for many, many reasons, but most important because it puts the lie to the stereotypes of the aboriginal people that so many people have. These stereotypes are being put to bed in 100 different ways right across this land. They are evident to me as I travel from place to place visiting aboriginal communities throughout Canada. What I see is a people who are struggling to take hold, to gain control, to provide their children with a new sense of tomorrow. I see successes everywhere I go because now people have what they lacked in the past. They finally have some hope.

Without doubt, there is much to be done and there are many new challenges before us as more and more young people drift into the cities looking for additional opportunities. This government will continue to respond flexibly and appropriately as the need arises.

Canadians at large and as individuals must also assume their own share of responsibility for easing aboriginal peoples over the adjustment period. I would suggest that we begin by learning about what the successes are of our native people and through that gain a new perspective and reflect a new respect for their ability to survive against tremendous odds. I can tell you that the more you know about the successes, the sooner that respect becomes admiration for those who have succeeded against those odds.

It is heartening also to see volunteer organizations such as the Canadian Council for Native Business springing up. It is a private sector organization led by key business leaders across Canada that encourages young native business entrepreneurs through a mentoring system to develop their business skills. In the final resolution, we will need many more such as these in order to complete the process of repairing the damage that past attitudes and policies have created.

I said already that much remains to be done. Daily we are learning new approaches through the collaborate process we have established with native leaders. In our five years of experience with the native question, we have not discovered a single magic solution, but we have developed a very strong sense that we are working toward the right goals, and we have many successes to bear that out.

Before European settlement of this land, the aboriginal people were self-reliant, self-governing, and they were totally self-resourceful. We have made some progress in restoring some of that responsibility. The task before us is to complete that process and that we complete it to the benefit of all Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member for Cape Breton—East Richmond on a point of order.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, in view of the subject matter which we are dealing with here and the urgency of it, I believe there is a five-hour debate. I am wondering if the Speaker could indicate to the House whether or not he has a list of those who wish to participate in debate because, Sir, I wish to add my name to those who wish to participate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the hon. member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake as the next speaker, the hon. member for Burlington, and the hon. member for Kenora—Rainy River on this first hour of the five-hour debate.

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in support of this motion put forward by the member for Nunatsiaq which states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing special initiatives, in consultation with Aboriginal peoples, to respond to the serious employment, education and health needs of Aboriginal youth.

The member has properly identified a key area of concern that requires immediate attention and a greater degree of priority in the government's planning activities. Young people of aboriginal origin face a tremendous challenge as they try to find their identity and their place in this large world of ours. Despite natural hurdles, as well as social and economic barriers, these young people must overcome obstacles put in their path by this federal government.

We must remember that Indian youth are growing up in a world much different than that which bred their elders. Indian youth are confused and frightened and unsure of their future. They live in a world ravaged by the frustrations of the generations that preceded them, and as they try to respond they receive conflicting messages about how to cope with those frustrations.

Like their elders, every time they witness progress being made on one front, they see a government betrayal on another. These are people who see their elders struggling to survive in a world that seems so much different from the world they see before them on the television signals coming into their homes. The messages they receive from the non-Indian world help to reinforce their feelings of mistrust and lack of confidence in their own ability to initiate change. Into this world of mistrust creeps abuse and victimization and sometimes violence. It is not a pleasant world, and it serves only to perpetuate poverty and despair.

Indian leaders across the country are addressing the problems facing Indian youth as best they can. As they look to the future, these leaders know their children must be armed with the knowledge of their history, their culture and their way of life, as well as the understanding that is necessary for achieving the social and economic goals they set for themselves. Indian leaders have identified, like the member from Nunatsiaq who has brought forward this motion today, that employment, education and health care for young people are the pillars on which their future will be built. Without opportunity, skills, patience, and a strong body, as well as mind, young Indian people will not have much of a future.

One thing I want to make clear in the developing of this motion before us today is the simple definition and interpretation of the word "aboriginal". I want to stress that, as the member who presents this motion represents in the strictest sense aboriginal people in Canada, and I support his motion in that regard. I also support the motion in the context that it applies to treaty people, those people who are the descendants of those who signed treaties with the Crown so that they could retain their inherent sovereignty and live as Indian people on their land forever. Treaty people include many of those who reside in my constituency and are equally concerned with the future of their children, and as such are working to improve and develop employment, education, and health care opportunities.

When we as parliamentarians are addressing this government with plans for programs or policies, and we are addressing the needs of aboriginal people, the government must understand that our plans are not meant to distract from the plans or programs of all the people who may be aboriginal in origin, but who may be addressing their own special needs differently. I say this for a couple of reasons, not the least of which is that the government tends in its public relations to regard all aboriginal people as the same, and as such reacts inappropriately with inappropriate legislation.

Chief Rolland Crowe of the Federation of Saskatchewan Indian Nations stated: "The actions and words of the present government are totally contradictory. On the one hand it says that Indians must retain and develop their cultural heritage and the political or social institutions; on the other hand the government has repackaged the termination policy as a devolution policy and thereby continues the Crown's apparent deliberate efforts to dilute and eventually eliminate the special status and rights of treaty Indian people!" This government obviously needs constant reminders that its responsibilities are to all aboriginal people, just as they are to all Canadians.

In that context, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention to the position on education that was developed by one of the bands in the riding that I represent, The Battlefords—Meadow Lake. The Little Pine Band believes that education holds the key to the future for their children and for their band which they regard as a nation distinct in its own right. As such, the band is working to an education for their young people that is holistic in nature and encompasses the total and complete preparation of the young for active participation as responsible and competent individuals in society as a whole. The education received must provide not only for mental and academic development but also for moral, spiritual and physical development as well.

Let me quote from one of Little Pine Band's education planning documents: "Education must recognize the distinctive attributes and values of the traditional Indian culture and must seek to develop in young people a knowledge of their cultural background and heritage as well as a pride in being recognized as an Indian in society, both now and in the future. It is important that young people be taught their special rights as guaranteed through the treaties. They must be helped to understand the spirit and intent of those treaties and to respect and honour their forefathers for their wisdom and foresight in negotiating the treaties which have granted the Indian bands status as distinct nations. People must not abuse their rights by expecting preferential treatment where it is not warranted and in such a way that their own sense of independence and responsibility is eroded. They must understand that these rights were intended to offer them opportunities to become functional, responsible and contributing citizens of their band and of Canadian society."

The Little Pine Band made these comments in a proposal to the Department of Indian Affairs last June. I supported those comments then and I continue to support them now. The department must be reminded of its responsibilities. I say that again, because often it reacts without thinking of those.

You will remember not too long ago when the department was doing what it should have done at the time, Mr. Speaker. A proposal was accepted that would see the construction of a school on Indian land that would prepare Indian youth for specific employment opportunities. That school, the All Nations Institute of Technology, was built on the Thunderchild Reserve, also an area within the boundaries of the Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency.

That school now sits empty and idle because the department forgot about its plan. Money for capital was easily found, but funds for operations disappeared. Money for the building alone will not educate or employ Indian people. The government must remember that Indian youth, to achieve the success they want to achieve, must be provided with the tools that are needed to build the bridges to that success. Those tools include, as the member pointed out, education, employment and health care.

Indian populations are growing and because a significant portion of that population is under the age of 20, it is imperative that further support systems be established to assist students to complete their studies. It is readily apparent by the high drop-out rates, particularly among Indian students in urban schools, that the system is not meeting their needs. A special effort must be made to get an Indian curriculum, Indian teachers, and Indian elders into the schools in the territories, on the reserves, and in the urban centres where Indian populations warrant.

Keeping Indian and aboriginal youth interested in their education is not only an important part of the school system, it is an important part of the development of our society. What use will a good education be to an Indian youth if there are no jobs that will utilize the acquired skills and knowledge? As long as attitudes against the creation of Indian job development programs and economic opportunities persist, there will be little commitment or motivation from Indian youth to follow through and achieve that which is so much desired.

I take this opportunity in concluding my remarks to ask the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs to immediately call together a meeting of Indian leaders, with the simple purpose of creating a special task force, a task force to be made up of Indian people who would have the duty to recommend initiatives that the federal government could take to respond to these serious employment, education, and health needs of Indian youth. If the minister would do this, it would address the concerns put forward by the motion today and, more important, provide us with specific direction and focus on one of this nation's most pressing social and human problems.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to talk about a topic of great concern, not only to the government, but to the people of Canada. While acknowledging the special needs of aboriginal youth, I would first like to applaud the many accomplishments of these young people in many fields.

Aboriginal youth have excelled in the arts, education and are increasingly making inroads in the private sector ventures. These achievements are particularly outstanding, considering the difficulties they often face in health, employment and education.

Given the importance of the aboriginal culture, both to the aboriginal people and the richness of the fabric of Canada, it is important that aboriginal youth are afforded every opportunity to support and to further their unique cultural heritage.

Each of us understands that the problems experienced by aboriginal youth are many. Every one of us appreciates that significant measures must be undertaken if we are to break the cycle of poverty in which too many of these young people find themselves trapped.

The future of any society rests with its young people. It is especially true for status Indians. Approximately 54 per cent of their population is under the age of 24, compared with 38 per cent of non-aboriginal Canadians.

The first nations of Canada are rightly anxious that these young people realize their full potential. Mr. Speaker, you will hear many members from this side of the House agree with that sentiment. You will hear us state that we are not at all satisfied with the state of affairs our aboriginal youth find themselves in. You will hear that while there have been improvements in many areas, this government remains deeply concerned about the conditions of aboriginal youth.

More specifically, we readily acknowledge that Canada has a long way to go before aboriginal people achieve the same standards of health, employment and education as other members of our society. But at the same time we are beginning to see positive developments and new opportunities that will significantly benefit aboriginal youth.

I would like to assure this House that the Minister of State for Youth and the Minister of Employment and Immigration remain dedicated to changing the conditions that have prevented aboriginal people from securing their rightful place in Canadian society. But we also acknowledge that a major reason behind the failure of past government efforts to improve the conditions of aboriginal people lies in the basic approach taken. Too often the programs were initiated by social planners who thought they knew all the answers and they were wrong.

It is now evident that the aboriginal people of Canada should assume control of the matters that directly affect their lives. That is why the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs has worked as closely as possible with the diverse groups that make up the First Nations of Canada to promote aboriginal self-government. He is committed to a dramatic increase in local decision-making. He is determined to equip aboriginal governments with the increased powers within the framework of the Canadian constitution and he is ready to provide the aboriginal people with increased resources to achieve their objectives.

A key feature of self-determination lies in increasing employment opportunities for aboriginal people. There can be no doubt that we must work to improve the unemployment rate among aboriginal youth which is at 31.6 per cent, much higher than the national average of 11 per cent. We want aboriginal youth to take advantage of our shift in emphasis in employment and immigration, away from the passive income support programs and toward programs and services that will help people secure a stable niche in the labour market.

We want them in these programs because it is clear from all the statistics that aboriginal youth desperately need to be better equipped for the demanding requirements of a modern global economy.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, many training and employment initiatives undertaken by Employment and Immigration Canada have targeted aboriginal people as a top priority. Employment and Immigration Canada is committed to helping those who have difficulty entering or remaining in the work force. That is why the aboriginal peoples are one of the designated groups that receive special consideration in the programs we offer.

Projects have been launched under the Canadian Jobs Strategy all across the country to address the very real training concerns of our aboriginal peoples. For example, a life and work skills training project was recently launched in Vancouver, directed at unemployed native youth who have come into conflict with the law. This project, worth $331,538, was sponsored under our job entry program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy in co-operation with the Indian and Métis Society. It now employs 48 native people and is providing them with supervised work experience. The project provides alcohol and drug counselling and offers social orientation and anger control techniques for those who need it. This is the type of practical opportunity we are providing aboriginal peoples. By participating in these projects they receive important training that will allow them to enter the job market.

The life skills training they obtain in these programs is culturally based. Job placement assistance is provided and those needing further employment related training are directed to appropriate programs.

This is all part of our concentrated efforts under the Canadian Jobs Strategy to begin addressing the many inequities in the education and training that aboriginal peoples experience in Canada. In our concern, we have supported innovative efforts to meet the unique needs of aboriginal youth. In Regina and Winnipeg we have attempted to upgrade literacy among unemployed aboriginal street youth with our "Beat the Street" program. This is a unique undertaking that uses peer tutoring to reach street kids. Unemployed youth are often more receptive to the training offered by people who understand their situation, as the success of "Beat the Street" indicates. Participants in the program who have failed elsewhere have acquired the reading, the writing and the life and job skills they need to successfully enter the world of work.

Other examples of government efforts include the native internship program that has been successfully operated by the federal government since 1976. It is now being significantly expanded and operates under the Summer Challenge program offered by Employment and Immigration Canada. The native internship program creates summer employment and opportunities for aboriginal youth in the Employment and Immigration Canada offices throughout the country. It provides them not only with an income but training and work experience. This gives them the marketable skills that helps them successfully enter the job market. Since 1976 participation has increased from 65 to 586. Every effort is made in this program to provide employment in the federal service that supports the career and vocational aspirations of the aboriginal young people.

I know there is a lot of concern about the deplorable educational record of the aboriginal people in Canada. It is a problem that has bedevilled our government and many previous governments before us. All of our studies show that anyone, aboriginal or not, who drops out of high school severely restricts their economic and work prospects. Education clearly remains as the best way of avoiding unemployment. Yet we readily understand that the aboriginal youth drop-out rate is much, much higher than any comparable group. We are determined to help them develop to their full potential.

One of the ways we do this is through our work orientation workshops, or WOW. These provide early school leavers with guidance on their future participation in the labour market. The WOW program provides a combination of workshops and on-the-job training to both orient young students to the world of work and encourage them to continue their education. It helps them to appreciate the importance of seeking specific skills training based on their future employment ambitions.

These are all part of our over-all approach of assisting youth. The development of comprehensive pilot projects such as the Canada-New Brunswick Youth Strategy and the Canada-Newfoundland Youth Strategy addresses the unemployment problems of youth in these provinces, with aboriginal youth being one of the groups being targeted for assistance.

These strategies address the very real difficulties young people face as they attempt to enter the labour force. For example, a key feature of these strategies is that preventive stay-in-school emphasis. This includes counselling, co-operative education programs and employment projects that will give students a realistic understanding of the workplace and the long-term benefits education provides.

In New Brunswick special attention is placed on high risk students from aboriginal backgrounds who are potential drop-outs. The Youth Strategies co-ordinate the current federal and provincial programs and services for youth; strengthen existing federal programs and services—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The hon. member is winding up?

Mr. Kempling: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

As I have already mentioned, aboriginal youth receive a very high priority. Recently, for example, we provided $140,000 to the Union of New Brunswick Indians to accept the Maleseet and Micmac youth in taking advantage of the full range of assistance under the Canada-New Brunswick Youth Strategy.

We have also provided almost $100,000 to the New Brunswick Aboriginal Peoples Council to ensure that the off-reserve aboriginal youth can better participate in the Canada-New Brunswick Youth Strategy. Nevertheless, we are dedicated to a process of consultation, negotiation and co-operation. It is a process I am confident will lead us to a just resolution of the issues we face.

I would like to ensure the hon. member who put forward this resolution that we are firm in our commitment to provide aboriginal youth with job skills that will allow them to fully participate in the 21st century. Canada's ability to compete in the global markets of the future depends on the preparations we provide to today's young people. Our young people are our future.

• (1810)

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for Nunatsiaq for putting forward this private member's motion on aboriginal youth and for allowing me the opportunity to speak to this very important matter.

Initially, I was going to focus my remarks on education and economic development. However, I must address one other issue before addressing these topics. There have been some extremely disturbing stories recently involving teen suicides in the aboriginal communities in my riding.

We have often heard that the incidence of suicide in the native communities is higher than the national average. There is no question that this statement is an accurate one. But what is being done to lower the rate of teen suicide in the aboriginal communities is another situation. From what I have been told by the native leaders in my riding, there is not much being done. The Shibogama Tribal Council represents six native communities, located in an isolated area of northwestern Ontario. The six communities can only be reached by air. In the past two and a half years there have been 40 suicides in these communities which have a total population of less than 1,800.

The suicide rate in these communities is seven times higher than the national average. Native leaders in this Shibogama Tribal Council area are discouraged by the increase in suicides among their young people. They are most concerned with the increasing number of aboriginal youth who turn to suicide as a way of solving their problems.

The latest suicide occurred last week at Kingfisher Lake. A 16 year old boy ended his life. His death has left a void in the hearts of many residents of that community of 300. The parents of this young man are devastated. Losing one's child to suicide is a most difficult experience for parents. Many questions are left unanswered, which makes the acceptance of death all the more painful. The community of Kingfisher Lake has experienced four such suicides in the past two years. While its native leaders continue to work hard at building their community for future generations, they are seeing their young people torn apart by violence, poverty, drug and alcohol abuse.

Earlier this summer I travelled to many of the native communities in my riding. Upon arrival at Wapekeka Indian reserve, the chief and council greeted me at the dock with the news that a 17 year old boy had taken his life the night before. He had been receiving treatment in Kenora at a drug and alcohol abuse treatment centre. I was taken to visit the boy's mother and other members of his family. What I saw has left a profound mark on me. The mother, the grandmother, the brother and sister of this young man were completely shattered by the news of their loved one's suicide. The whole community was grieving with the family. When one member of the community loses his or her life in such a violent and unnecessary fashion, the spark goes out of the eyes of the other members of the community and only pain, sorrow and helplessness are left.

At a native mental health seminar in Thunder Bay last month, Dr. Harvey Armstrong, head of the Canadian Psychiatric Association's native mental health section, said native parents are developing feelings of hopelessness and inadequacy because many of the children are damaging their minds with alcohol and chemicals. At the Association of Iroquois and Allied Indians annual health conference in London, Ontario, earlier this month, native author and clergyman, Arthur Holmes, also related some disturbing statistics. He said 80 per cent of Indians die in either unexpected or violent ways.

Canadians would never accept these kinds of statistics in non-native communities. Cries for help would be listened to and acted upon. So, why do we have a different set of standards for the aboriginal communities? As legislators we must find solutions to the many problems and issues before us.

The 1986 report of the special Senate committee on youth dedicated a complete chapter to native youth and the problems they face. In a section on suicide, and drug and alcohol abuse, the committee said:

> We believe that drug and alcohol counselling and suicide prevention programs need to be designed and carried out by native people themselves.

The report goes on to say:

> The most successful programs seem to involve young people helping other young people and providing healthy alternatives for solving their problems.

I have been a witness to the success of crisis intervention programs in three of the native communities in my riding.

In 1980 the communities of Grassy Narrows, Whitedog and Whitefish Bay, faced with high unemployment and welfare, were confronted with a major crisis. The young native people were either in the care of the Children's Aid Society, under the supervision of the probation and after-care service or involved in substance abuse. The native leaders recognized the need for crisis intervention programs and they designed programs in their communities which are run by them and for them. With financial assistance from Health and Welfare's National Native Alcohol and Drug and Abuse Program, the the crisis intervention programs in these three communities have been a tremendous success.

Recent statistics from the Grassy Narrows, Whitedog and Whitefish Bay communities show an 80 per cent decrease in the rate of violent deaths, an 80 per cent decrease in the suicide rate, a 90 per cent decrease in young offenders and an 80 per cent decrease in solvent abuse. All of this, over a seven-year period. These are very encouraging statistics and testimony to the statement of the special Senate committee on youth which stated that prevention programs designed and carried out by native people are the most successful.

The communities of Grassy Narrows, Whitedog and Whitefish Bay have proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that they can turn things around in their respective communities with adequate financial and moral support.

While funding for the crisis intervention program in these three communities in my riding has continued to decrease substantially, the programs continue, but with great difficulty. Earlier this year, the crisis intervention programs almost became a target in the federal budget cuts.

The native leaders travelled to Ottawa with me and met with Health and Welfare officials and managed to salvage some of the funding. You see, Mr. Speaker, the crisis intervention programs at Grassy Narrows, Whitefish Bay and Whitedog, are not an actual program of the department. This program was designed by the native leaders for their people. Any other native community attempting to obtain funding for similar programs have been turned down. The department has not recognized this program as an "official program".

I honestly believe that funds should be immediately set aside which would allow every native community in this country to design and administer a crisis intervention program which best addresses the individual needs of each community. We would see declines in the rate of violent death, suicide and substance abuse in very short time. We have an opportunity to invest in the future of aboriginal youth in this country. It is recognized worldwide that our youth are the future. We can give aboriginal youth a future filled with hope and future built on hope.

Now is the time for the government to act. Now is the time for us to put our money where our mouth is. We must do so in order to prevent the suicide rate from climbing any further. The cultural and economic survival of the aboriginal people depend on it.

I realize I have very little time left, Mr. Speaker, so I will use it to touch briefly on the education of aboriginal youth. It is no secret that education programs in native communities fall below the provincial standards. For years, native leaders have attempted to design curriculum which is tailor-made to the needs of the respective communities.

As the Department of Indian Affairs prepares for the transfer of education programs to Indian control, it is essential that such a transfer take place with the full consultation of the aboriginal people. There is a great fear among the native leaders that once this transfer takes place the financial resources will not be there for curriculum development. This is why a full consultative process must be established. Curriculum development in native communities is tantamount to the future of these communities.

If the aboriginal youth receive a sound education with curriculum designed by their leaders for them, I believe we will see an increase in enrolment in the post-secondary institutions in this country. The difficulties many of the post-secondary native students have in completing their studies stems from an inadequate curriculum at the elementary and secondary levels. They are literally thrown into a system which is virtually foreign to them and they are not adequately prepared for it.

I would like to see the department provide the necessary resources to allow the native educators the opportunity to begin designing curriculum now, before the transfer of education programs take place. This way, once the transfer takes place, the communities would be ready to proceed with curriculum suited to their needs.

There are so many more issues concerning aboriginal youth which I could speak on. While I have yet to address the issue of economic development, let me say this much. There is no doubt in my mind that if the government were to provide the financial resources needed which would allow native leaders to design crisis intervention programs for the communities and curriculum for the schools based on their needs and cultural beliefs, we would see a dramatic increase in post-secondary and native graduates who would return to the communities and work for the betterment of their people.

I have seen what economic development can do for a community. People have jobs. They are happy and living life to the fullest. Economic development works in the single industry towns and it works in aboriginal communities.

In closing, I would again like to thank my hon. colleague for Nunatsiaq for putting forward this motion and I call on all members to support it in the interest of aboriginal youth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 93, the order is dropped to the bottom of the list in the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Thursday, November 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C–43, an act respecting abortion, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the three parties. According to the House order we were scheduled to finish off debate tonight at 10 o'clock but I understand that the Liberal party has 17 speakers who wish to address the issue tonight, the New Democratic Party has three speakers who would like to address the issue and we, ourselves, have six.

So, it is possible that we may have to go beyond 10 o'clock. You will find that there is an agreement among the three parties to not see the clock at 10 o'clock and we also have a further agreement not to have any dilatory motions or any other motions between now and that time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jean–Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to participate in this debate because this country has, at this time, no abortion legislation. It has not had any since January 28, 1988 when the Supreme Court of Canada struck down the existing legislation adopted by this House in 1969.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it took two years and meanwhile, as a result of this government's failure to act, the private lives of Canadian men and women were paraded through the media. We had some flagrant examples of this last summer. We have had two years of stormy, divisive and sometimes even troubling debate. The 1988 election campaign was a time when the abortion issue created some very difficult situations.

For many years I have had a chance to read and listen to the comments of my constituents in Ottawa—Vanier, and many of them support my position, which is that of a moderate. I have noticed that pro–choice people are not as extreme as people think. They do not necessarily favour abortion on demand. Nor do they consider abortion as an alternative to contraception. The less extreme proponents of pro–life accept or at least say they can accept abortion as a last resort in cases of incest, rape or when the mother's life is at risk.

If I had to indicate where I stand between the two, I think I would qualify as moderate pro–life. I am against abortion on demand, but I realize that in some situations, abortion may be necessary. Of course I would prefer to live in a society where the issue did not arise. However, reality is different, and as a legislator and a Member of this Parliament, I cannot look the other way and ignore the problem.

Bill C–43, the bill before the House today is, in my view, too permissive and unfair in its present form. The bill is ambiguous, to say the least. For instance, some people read the bill and say that in its present form it supports pro–life. Others read the same bill and say that, substantially, it is pro–choice. One doctor, on the basis of his personal values and religious beliefs, might be able to justify and promote abortion on demand. Another doctor, however, either from a different part of the country or even from the same town, might reject abortion on any grounds. In remote areas, where health services are limited, this could become a real nightmare.

In any case, Bill C–43 shifts the whole burden of responsibility to the doctor. The government and this Parliament are asking him to be clairvoyant and to predict the mother's moral, psychological, physical and mental health after the abortion.

Of 65,000 abortions done annually in Canada, nearly 50 per cent were sought by young women under 25. These statistics show that something is very wrong and that something must be done as soon as possible. The legislation before the House today does nothing to eliminate the reasons why women resort to abortion.

To be acceptable, a national policy should urge and enable the parties concerned to make a rational decision. To do so, we must create a secure environment. A good start would be counselling. Although this is certainly not the only answer, it could promote a dialogue and generate a positive attitude to pregnancy. A well structured family policy could also help secure the well being of the child to be born. What about the daycare we have been promised for two years and which has yet to materialize?

With Bill C–43, the government has, as I see it, tried to please everyone. It has shrugged off its responsibilities by shifting the burden of responsibility to the doctor. Mr. Speaker, is the doctor responsible for making a distinction between legal responsibility and moral values? I don't think so.

I think the potential interpretations of Bill C–43 are as numerous as our medical practitioners.

[English]

In a perfect world we would not need to have abortions. In this imperfect world, we have to address this issue. I believe, for one, that legislation controlling abortions is needed.

It took two years for this government to bring forward legislation to fill the legal vacuum created when the Supreme Court of Canada struck down the existing 1969 legislation because it breached the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. After two years of this Conservative Government, Bill C–43 is their best effort. It is far from perfect and it falls short of my personal position on the issue. It needs to be amended in committee.

Some members have told us that they reject this legislation in principle, and will vote in the negative at second reading. I can understand that position. But if the majority believes this bill is wrong in principle and should be defeated tomorrow, then we are faced with the status quo. That is, no abortion legislation. We all know that only the government can bring in enabling legislation and order its consideration by Parliament. Bill C–43, I repeat, is this government's best effort. If defeated, we are not likely to have another bill in this Parliament, thereby confirming the status quo, and that is abortion on demand.

On the other hand, if the majority accepts the principle of Bill C–43, then in my view it should go to committee for study of its clauses. Amendments will be possible to deal with the substance of the bill and redress, I would hope, its imperfections.

I dare say that those who vote against the bill at second reading, being the principle of the bill, will have some convincing to do in committee to substantively amend something to which they object in principle.

Once this bill is in committee it acquires a special status by virtue of it being the object of a free vote for most of us in this House. In committee it will be subjected to scrutiny by backbenchers—no members of the Cabinet will be present—freed from party lines and the discipline of the Whips. Whatever happens to the bill in committee will be the result of our own best efforts, not the government anymore.

As a legislator, I know the great difficulties members will face in coming up with a more acceptable bill. I hope we can meet this very difficult double challenge of respecting, on the one hand, the constitutional requirements as set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms with regard to the rights of the women, and also address the legislative demands, in my view, in matters of abortion.

I shall vote for this legislation at second reading and I pray the committee will succeed in amending it.

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, during my ten years as the Member of Parliament for Peterborough very few issues have been as emotional and morally frustrating or as unnerving as the issue of abortion. With regard to abortion we have been living in a permissive society since the Liberal government passed the abortion law in 1969.

The Conservative government, 20 years later, is now introducing Bill C–43 which will not offer one speck of hope to the more than 65,000 foetuses that are aborted annually. This might explain in part why the present Liberal leader is considering, according to the press, supporting Bill C–43.

Citing Section 251 of the Criminal Code as unconstitutional, the Supreme Court, in 1988, sent a clear message to Parliament to draft new legislation that would balance with the woman's constitutional rights the interest that society has shown in the foetus. Might I point out, Mr. Speaker, that Supreme Court Justice Wilson, in her comments following the Supreme Court hearings, said:

> The primary objective of the impugned legislation—

—speaking of the current legislation—

> —is the protection of the foetus. This is perfectly valid legislation as an objective. It has other ancillary objectives, such as the protection of the life and health of the pregnant woman and the maintenance of proper medical standards.
> The value to be placed on the foetus as potential life is directly related to the stage of its development during gestation.

Finally, from Supreme Court Justices McIntyre and Laforest:

> Historically, there has always been a clear recognition of a public interest in the protection of the unborn and there is no evidence or indication of general acceptance of the concept of abortion at will in our society.

It is my contention that Bill C–43, which is packaged in pro–life terminology, is legislation which calls for nothing less than abortion on demand as a legal right. Bill C–43, I regret to say, puts society's permissive call for personal comfort and gain ahead of society's call for respect of human life at every stage of its development. I consider Bill C–43 to be morally repugnant. It mirrors a time in history when blacks were slaves and society held a higher regard for their own personal comfort and gain than they did for the rights of slaves held in bondage and not considered to have any rights whatever.

Today's legislation needs to reflect a society that supports life at all stages of development and which will enable children to be raised with dignity. In the drafting of the bill I had hoped for a closer adherence to the direction of the Supreme Court in the Morgentaler decision, that the interests of both the woman and the foetus could be considered. The legislation before us manages to dance around this requirement and does absolutely nothing in reality to protect the foetus.

The bill states that abortion is illegal at all stages of pregnancy and then it goes on to say, except for all circumstances of health. By allowing a woman to have an abortion on mental, physical and psychological health grounds the government is giving women carte blanche rights to have an abortion for any reason they so wish by simply convincing a medical practitioner that the reason warrants such action.

Very few people in my riding support abortion for socio–economic reasons. Under Bill C–43, or under the former bill by the Liberals in 1969, it can be easily shown that strain on the mother results in serious psychological impact on her health and consequently she can be granted an abortion for psychological reasons.

With Bill C–43 in place all that is needed to have an abortion is a pregnant mother, Dr. Morgentaler and a free–standing abortion clinic. These three ingredients are now available in Ontario and Quebec and will continue as they are with the blessing of this Parliament and the provincial governments of both Ontario and Quebec. Nowhere in Bill C–43 do we offer any protection whatever for the rights of the foetus, only for the mother's rights to have an abortion.

Only two short weeks ago, on November 16, the Supreme Court justices, in presenting their reasons for overturning the injunction against Chantal Daigle in August, refused to comment on foetal rights outside of the province of Quebec. The same court, however, in the Morgentaler decision gave the government an indication that foetal rights could be provided under new legislation. The government, in my view, has failed to take up this challenge with Bill C–43.

I must now indicate my unwillingness to support or to endorse Bill C–43. The only possible legislation that I could support would be that which makes abortion illegal at all stages of pregnancy except in the case where the life of the mother is seriously threatened.

Here is the reason why I do not feel we can move along by approving second reading and expect major substantial changes either in committee, in the House as a whole or at third reading. As it is mandatory for cabinet to vote for this bill with no options, it is obvious to me that any substantive changes such as I would require as a pro–life supporter will never come to pass. Therefore, I cannot and will not support this legislation at second reading, report stage or third reading. I feel that although it would be possible to enact a law which would protect all human life from the moment of conception to death, to attempt to do this within the realm of the legislation before us would require such a deviant move from the underlying principles of the bill that it would be virtually impossible.

The Minister of Justice is on record as saying that the government will not accept any amendments that further restrict a woman's access to abortion, according to The Toronto Star of November 25.

I spoke earlier about our permissive society that puts people's personal comfort and gain ahead of people's rights and needs. I would like to close with a short quote from the former president of the Catholic Conference of Catholic Bishops, Archbishop Hayes. He said:

> Abortion is the destruction of human life. The challenge is to change our society's attitudes toward life and to channel the energies and strong emotions involved in this debate toward correcting mentalities and situations that lead to abortion. We need to create a society that supports life and enables children to be raised with dignity; a society that puts other people's rights and needs ahead of personal comfort and gain; a society that respects human life at every stage of its development.

As a Member of Parliament, and as a man who just two weeks ago became a grandfather for the fourth time, I could not agree more. We must, therefore, defeat this bill, defeat it at second reading, and concentrate our efforts on a piece of legislation that will provide the unborn with significant rights as a human being. I remind this House of elected representatives that when last given an opportunity to vote on this issue more Members of Parliament from all sides of this House supported a pro-life position than any of the other options that were available to us at that time.

So it is important that we defeat the bill. With our free vote I would like to show the Canadian people that Parliament wants to offer more protection to the foetus and reduce abortions in Canada.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness, and indeed considerable anger, that I rise to address this House on the subject before us, namely, the recriminalization of abortion in Canada.

I have given a great deal of thought to what I would say on this sad day, both in response to Bill C-43, an act respecting abortion, and in response to speeches made by some of the spokespersons supporting this criminalization legislation.

Most have spoken with great sincerity. Some have spoken to rationalize their compromise of basic beliefs. Some have done so to retain positions of power, and the saddest part is that they should even have to make that choice.

Equally sad is that many women must often face bearing a child not of their choosing, but what is tragic is that they must, if this bill passes, make decisions with the threat of criminal sanction.

In addition, a woman must approach her doctor who also has the weight of criminal sanction to contend with, and the doctor must decide whether an abortion for her is legal. I contend that the choice is no longer one of whether or not abortion is the appropriate course of action for the woman, but whether or not, if an abortion is sought, it will be legal in her circumstance.

I have spent most of my working life advocating, in one way or another, for women; most often low income women. I have seen the great distress women have faced with unplanned and unexpected pregnancy. I have seen the results of incredibly difficult decisions. I have known women who died because abortion was not legally available and, in desperation, they had put themselves in the hands of back room butchers.

I have seen women who carried to term and delivered children that they allowed to be placed for adoption, in the hope that the child would have a better life, and then spent a lifetime of torment longing for that child. I have seen women who faced pregnancy from failed birth control, or the inability to afford birth control, left alone with the consequences.

I have seen women who have made a difficult choice, harassed and harangued by people who claim to care about them, not just outside clinics, but daily in the media. And along with all Canadians, I watched the tragedy this past summer of young women dragged through the courts, having every intimate detail of their lives dissected on the evening news.

[Translation]

To my sisters from Quebec, I would like to say that I am glad the Supreme Court has guaranteed our right to choose under the Quebec Charter. And it is a right we hope to preserve for all women in Canada.

[English]

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that the whole question of abortion has been elevated to the level of emotionalism that we have seen in the past few years by a concerted and a sustained effort, but the true underlying question before us is the question of power.

Throughout history women have been the subject of control by men. The dictionary definition of power is "a position of ascendancy over others". Throughout the history of religion and civilization women's place has been assigned by men based on their reproductive capacity.

Often women's position has been elevated. Women have been put on a pedestal, so to speak, to control their actions and participation in society. For example, women did not work outside the home because it was not their place. The fact that this only applied to women who came from well-to-do circumstances had nothing to do with society's attitude. Poor women, who have always worked, were not in the equation. Women, until 60 years ago, were not considered persons. Society has finally recognized how absurd this attitude was and few today would dare advocate turning back the clock. Twenty-five years ago women could not have access to birth control unless they were married. Men had access but not the societal responsibility for the outcome.

Today, in some jurisdictions, a woman still must have signed permission from her husband for a tubal ligation, but her husband is not required to seek her consent for a vasectomy.

Some of these practices have been codified in the past. Some are merely practices. But in either case, they are norms established by men for women. They are norms established by those who have always participated as partners in the process that leads to pregnancy but have never, to this very day, been required to participate in the consequences of pregnancy, much less be required to take responsibility for these consequences. Indeed, men are physiologically unable to face the same consequences as women.

Here we are today faced with yet another law, another criminal sanction, drafted, debated and passed, mostly by men who will never bear the consequences of their decision.

Throughout the discussion in this House, men have stood and passed judgment on women and their ability to make thoughtful, responsible choices regarding reproductive rights. They have demeaned women. They have cast them again on a false pedestal saying: "We know what is best for you and we will decide what is good for you". In other words, they are saying: "We will continue to exercise power over you".

One of my colleagues, earlier in the debate, said: "One would wonder if this type of bill, based on this concept of women, would be before this House if this House were made up of 255 women and 40 men instead of its present make-up of 255 men and 40 women".

The Minister responsible for the Status of Women stated in this House:

> The last time I spoke in this place on the issue before us, I began by saying that I speak on behalf of those women who have been faced with bearing a child not of their choosing. Once again, I rise on behalf of those women.

She went on to say:

> Since I first uttered those words we have no law in this country regarding abortion. In the view of many women including myself the absence of legislation appeared to respect what I believe, that the judgment of women faced with a difficult decision and their capacity to make a better decision than anyone in this chamber on their behalf was respected in that environment.

I concur with the minister's statements. I find it impossible, however, to believe her later remarks that to provide a framework for women in the world as it is, and not as we would like it to be, the solution is to support this motion to re-criminalize abortion.

If women in the past had been prepared to live the world as it was and failed to struggle for the world as we would like it to be, we would still not be persons, we would not have the vote and some of us would not be Cabinet ministers.

The criminal sanction is dressed up differently than past laws. Its greatest distinction is that it is purported to please no one. I suspect that it will possibly secretly please those who would maintain power over women.

This criminal sanction says to women: You are not capable of making your own moral decision. You must attend your doctor on the basis of a medical decision. Your doctor will make the final choice. If that choice is deemed wrong, your doctor will have to prove to the satisfaction of the courts that the procedure was legal. In so proving the legality of his or her decision it is you and every detail of your personal life that will be examined.

The Minister of Justice and Attorney General, when he introduced the bill, said:

> The proposed new abortion law is understandable, it is workable and it is fair.

I suggest it is not understandable. It is not understandable to me why this government feels compelled to re-criminalize abortion. I suggest it is not workable. It is not workable because it is vague and creates the requirement to establish a whole new set of jurisprudence and risks withdrawal of doctors from performing abortions, especially if some are charged under this law. It is not fair. It is not fair to present a law that completely takes the final choice out of the hands of the woman and places it in the hands of her doctor while the threat of criminal law looms overhead. As well, this legislation to re-criminalize abortion is unacceptable for Canadian women.

One of the special things about this House is the respect members accord each other. We address each other as honourable, knowing that we try to acquit ourselves with dignity, honour and integrity. I plead with the hon. members in this House to accord the women of Canada the same respect, knowing that they will acquit themselves with dignity, honour and integrity.

In this world, as women struggle to establish their rights and freedoms, I submit to all hon. members the words of J.S. Woodsworth: "What we desire for ourselves, we wish for all".

Ms. Nicole Roy-Arcelin (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, after listening very carefully to Hon. Members whose speeches reflected widely divergent opinions; after reading Bill C-43, an Act respecting abortion, a subject that has been extremely controversial for many years; after long discussions with many of my constituents in Ahuntsic, people whose opinions are varied and diverse; after a thorough study of the impact on abortion of our society and the moral, ethical, social, economic and demographic aspects of this issue, one which compels Canadians to examine their democratic conscience as well as their moral values; and after consulting experts on the subject such as physicians, legislators, lawyers, priests and ministers, Catholics, those of the Orthodox faith, Protestants and atheists, today, Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to give my opinion of this bill, and be as objective as I can.

First of all, I would like to say that as a Member of Parliament, a woman and former nurse, in other words, someone with a respect for life, I will vote in favour of this bill which provides a judicious and clear response to all the concerns and questions I may have had since the debate started in the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, my support for Bill C-43 is not just a matter of subjective emotion and deep-seated feeling, it is a reasoned and rational decision.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, coming as it does after the Supreme Court's judgment in the Morgentaler case in January 1988, is intended to fill a legal vacuum, in response to demands by Canada's modern, pluralistic society. Since our society is not monolithic, its members holding various beliefs and views, it was imperative that this legislation should strike a balance between women's constitutional rights and society's interest in protecting the foetus. This means, Mr. Speaker, that these two fundamental rights are entirely compatible: the right of the woman to control her own body and her own destiny, and that of the foetus which, although unfortunately, it has yet to be recognized by the Supreme Court, is nevertheless a moral value that no normal society would be able to reject indefinitely.

Mr. Speaker, at a time when legislators, human rights activists and even the United Nations are talking about children's rights, minority rights and women is rights, a perverse selfishness that stifles all feelings of compassion and generosity leads us to ignore the rights of the foetus which is, at whatever stage of its development—embryology and the latest scientific techniques such as ultrasound prove it—a being in essence, in other words, a human being that is genetically alive. To talk about the rights of this fragile and voiceless being is, according to some people, tantamount to preaching in the wilderness and having opinions that are reactionary and outdated.

If, as these modernists claim, morality changes as new scientific discoveries are made, then I say those who speak for the unborn are pioneers, working towards a future where the rights of all will be respected, including the rights of the foetus. What future is there for a society that is unmoved by its own voluntary extinction and does not fight for its survival? What future is there for a country that, if it does not pass laws on such an essential issue, is doomed to a geometrical decline in its birth rate? The primary objective of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to reconcile two fundamental rights that are complementary and equal.

The second objective of this legislation is to provide fair and reasonable access to abortion, while preventing abuse and charlatanism. We know that many women, especially young women, left to themselves, accept willingly or are forced into some abortion practices that endanger their own physical and psychological health. For all the reasons that have already been given, abortion must not be a form of birth control. It is therefore our duty as a responsible government to protect the life and health of the women in our country. This bill does so by removing several administrative obstacles, such as therapeutic abortion committees. These took a long time to make a final decision and thus prevented women from fully exercising their right to a legal abortion, thereby infringing on their physical and psychological health.

But, as I see it, Mr. Speaker, what is most important and what convinced me that this bill is positive and fair is the doctor's involvement in this big decision. For me, this is not paternalistic; the doctor will not tell the woman in an authoritarian way what choice or decision to make. Whatever decision she makes, she will always need to call on a doctor to perform an abortion and thus abortion is first and foremost a medical procedure. Who, Mr. Speaker, is in a better position than the doctor, with his scientific knowledge, professional ethics and practice, to make a definite decision that will take into account the woman's health, the foetus' rights and society's responsibilities?

Furthermore, the doctor who performs an abortion as prescribed by law for medical reasons related to physical, mental and psychological health is, according to the generally recognized standards of his profession, responsible for monitoring the woman after her abortion. He is inevitably involved and takes part in this process, like it or not. The bill simply confirms his deep involvement in providing an abortion. He is not acting as a moral adviser but as a qualified professional trained to make such a dicision. This decision is not unilateral but is made together with the women, for health reasons and with full respect for her freedom.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, some groups stubbornly criticize the criminalization of abortion. The Government has no alternative, since placing abortion in the Criminal Code was the only way for Parliament to regulate abortion nationally.

If abortion is performed in the legal framework, in accordance with legislation that is in the interest of our civilized society and defends the rithts of both the foetus and the women, I do not see how one could deliberately go against such a piece of legislation, because it is a reasonable compromise among all the opposition tendencies in our society. Bill C-43 is based on consensus, unity, not division, reconciling basic differences and eliminating unyielding opposition. It is a bill which, like our country, is built on compromise and dialogue. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I support it with all my heart and all my mind.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, life is precious. Some five days ago I found I had reason to believe this more and more as just three hours ago I left the hospital with a health problem.

I wanted to take part in this debate because during the 15 years since I was first elected to Parliament in 1974 there have been only a handful of issues which have touched the very soul of this nation, issues which have required that we look inside ourselves and make decisions which affect not only us but which will affect all of our fellow citizens for generations to come. I would list in this category capital punishment, the Constitution, the free trade bill, and now abortion.

• (1900)

Abortion has been discussed for many years not only in this nation but around the world. There are a few things I would like to make clear at the outset. I speak today not only as the representative of the people of the Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold riding; I also speak as a grandfather, a father, a son and a brother. I speak as a friend to all those people who have entrusted to me the duty to speak on their behalf. Like other members in this House I too have searched very deeply into my own soul.

I have sought advice from friends and scholars, from people whom I respect a great deal, from people who are in favour of abortion and from people who are opposed. After having digested all of this information I have decided the course of action which I will follow.

Abortion is no more and no less than the taking of human life. This bill fortifies the idea that there can be in this country abortion on demand. I base my thoughts on logic. You see, life must begin sometime. There are those who argue that life begins at the moment of conception. Some will say after 12 weeks and others will say after 20 weeks. The legal definition is that life begins at the moment that you come out of the womb and from that moment on you have the protection of the law. As for me, I believe that life begins at the moment of conception for if I do not believe that, then life must begin at some arbitrary point. I say "arbitrary" because you can take any time, from one week of gestation to 12 weeks to 30 weeks, but you must always go back and say that life begins sometime.

If life does not begin at conception, then why can we not legislate that life begins one hour after you come out of the womb? In that way if someone were to be born with a deformity or illness then we could destroy this non-human and our consciences would be clear. Why do we not say that you are not legally a person until you are one-year old for greater certainty that there would not be any problems with the child? To me, Mr. Speaker, life begins at conception. To take any step back from that is not logical.

If life begins at conception, as I believe, it follows that this person, or entity that is becoming a person, must enjoy the same rights as I, who have been born. I believe that the foetus has inalienable rights, in particular the right to be born we all have and the right to security of the person.

[English]

To say that the foetus is not a human until a certain time is to condemn ourselves and future generations to arbitrary decisions as to when we are or are not human. Let me explain.

It was not so very long ago, approximately half a century ago, that one madman declared that there were certain races which were superior to others. Then so decreeing he sought to have a final solution for a whole race of people: the Jews.

But he did not stop with the Jews. He went on from there to clean the streets of what he called cripples, homosexuals and the mentally handicapped, people that he and his henchmen determined undesirable. Their solution was simple. It was to kill these people. To hide their heinous crimes they burnt them in the hopes that the bones and ashes would never be found. As I contemplate these clinics and hospitals in which we abort our young, whether it be at four or thirty weeks, I see the remains thrown out like so much garbage. I am moved to wonder: could not one of these or some of these have helped our society to become a better place?

They say we should abort because a child would be born into circumstances where they would not be wanted, where they would be subject to physical punishment, where indeed they would be emotionally scarred. I am not unaware of this. I know that children who are not wanted are born into this world, that they are not cared for, and that they are abused. Even with this in mind I know full well that there are people who have survived these circumstances and risen above them. Should they not have a chance, just as you and I have?

Is there anyone here who had a perfect childhood? Is there anyone who did not have his cuts and bruises and emotional scars and yet we go on as best we can? Abortion is wrong. Abortion is morally wrong. I believe that we were put on this earth because we have a destiny to fulfil. Our destiny, I believe, is to live good lives as best we can and try to help our fellow man, not destroy him.

Women often resort to abortion because they cannot see any other way. There are other ways. We should help them during pregnancy. We should give them the choice to keep or to give their child to couples who want to adopt. We the government should be helping them, not hindering them.

If you asked me where there are any circumstances under which an abortion could be performed, I would say to you yes. I believe that an abortion can be performed when the physical life of the mother is in danger. That means that you will or you want to save the life of the mother. You do not will or want the death of a child. The child's death is incidental to the good that you want to accomplish.

There are those who say: "Well, can't the mother make a choice on her own"? Once again, I am hard pressed to answer. But would you grant the mother the right to kill a child if she no longer wanted the child and the child was three, four, or five years old? The child belongs to her and although the child is outside her, does she not still care for it? Is the child still not her responsibility?

In this debate, Mr. Speaker, you will hear many voices raised in the defence of the rights of women. What we have here are really two conflicting rights: the rights of women and the rights of the unborn. I have tried to straddle the fence. I have tried to find a compromise, but there are some things in life, my colleagues, for which there is no compromise. An abortion is one of them.

I respect those who in this debate will speak about the rights of women. I surely have no quarrel with them, but I have chosen to speak for the unborn because to my way of thinking you cannot satisfy both. I know full well in taking this decision that it will not be politically popular. It is a sans dire that it is women who vote. There are no votes among the unborn.

But this decision is not a political one, nor do I say it is a political one for you, my colleagues. It is not made to garner votes or to try to appease one side or the other. This decision is made because I believe it is the right decision.

In the final analysis whichever way we decide collectively, the fact is I must still live with myself. I would ask you, my colleagues, before you cast your votes to reflect on another issue which is at the other end of the life spectrum. It is a nice sounding name. It is called euthanasia.

If we decide today to kill at the beginning of the life spectrum, I wonder how far we are away from deciding to kill at the other end. In Norway they used to have what they called passive euthanasia, passive mercy killing. Now they have, shall I use the word progressed or regressed to the point where they are using active euthanasia.

Will the day come when we will decide that someone who reaches 100 years should be killed even though he or she is healthy? How long will it be before we lower that age until it is 80 or 70 or 60, all under the guise that this planet cannot support so many people? And, how long will it be before we look at our mentally, emotionally and physically handicapped and say, no, only the strong will survive in our society, you must be sacrificed? I suggest to you that these things will occur in the lifetime of many of the members who are in this House now.

There are those who shy away from the word "murder", but I do not. The word "murder" is defined as an action causing the destruction of human life which is regarded as morally wicked, whether legal or not. Further down it says, it is a terrible slaughter and a destruction of life.

Is there anyone in this House, is there anyone in Canada who will deny that abortion is the destruction of life? Is there anyone in Canada who will deny that the taking of an innocent life is wrong? I base my stand on the fact that life does begin at the moment of conception and life is so precious that it must be defended all the way through the life process.

If we deny the rights of the unborn today we will be denying the rights of all Canadian citizens in one way or another tomorrow. I will have no part of this action. I will vote against Bill C–43 and everything that is in it.

To those of you in this House who say that history will be your judge, I leave you to history. My judge has been around a little bit longer.

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, it is with heartfelt concern that I rise today to join in the debate on abortion.

At this point in the debate it might seem that every point of view has been covered and that we need not hear more, but I believe it is important for each member to be heard on this issue so that our constituents might know that whatever decision we have come to we have not come to it lightly and that we have taken into consideration all the various points of view presented to us in the last few months.

I believe that life begins at conception. This is one of the biggest problems that I have with Bill C–43. Certainly it implies that life begins at conception since it purports to provide some protection to the foetus from the moment of conception until birth. However, there is precious little protection there, and there is no explicit statement that the life in the foetus is a life like any other life including that of its mother.

This means that the fundamental test, the health of the mother, is not balanced by the other fundamental test, the health of the foetus, when the doctor and mother are making their decisions. This is the core of the abortion debate. It is a debate about rights, the rights of mothers, fathers and unborn children. On the one hand, there are those who believe that the mother has the right to self–determination, to make choices that concern her own body and her future. On the other hand, there are those who believe that the unborn child has a right to life and that this right must be protected.

Any bill that would receive my support must recognize explicitly this right of the unborn child. I believe the rights of women and all Canadians to control their own bodies and to shape their own future must be secured. However, just as my rights are limited by the fundamental rights of others, I also believe that a woman's rights over her own body are limited by her unborn child's fundamental right to life. This balancing of rights takes place every day in our society to prevent chaos, to protect life, and to defend the democratic nature of this nation. I believe it must also take place in the case of abortion.

As far as choice is concerned, I believe that choices must be made before conception, not after. For this reason, despite grave misgivings, I am willing to consider abortion in cases of rape or incest as I do not believe that a woman should be forced to carry a child that she has been forced to conceive.

I also believe that abortion can be considered where a mother's life is in real danger. These are examples of the difficult decisions that must be made when rights are balanced for I fully concede that the foetus is never a guilty party.

There are many things about this bill that bother me, not the least of these is the fact that we appear to be approaching the problem from the wrong direction. One of the most serious factors contributing to abortion is what might be called the crisis pregnancy. It can happen at any socio-economic level in society, as we are all well aware. The crisis is defined by each individual woman's own situation.

This bill treats abortion solely in criminal terms, but what we need is much broader access to programs which focus care on people in need and which make raising and having children a primary aim of our society.

There are many programs which could reduce the apparent demand for abortions. I am thinking of some simple things such as better access to psychological counselling and birth control education, of tax laws that do not discriminate against parents who wish to stay home and raise their children, of laws which do not make it difficult for single mothers to get an education and child support; simple things like the need to reverse the trend which discourages adoption by mature couples in favour of encouraging young women to keep children that they are not ready to cope with.

One of my main reasons for getting into politics was a desire to make things simpler. I am well aware that this bill, Bill C-43, appears to be simple and straightforward. I am very concerned that it is just a simple band-aid on a very complicated social illness and that we are doing almost nothing to solve the basic problem which to my view is that society has begun to accept abortion as a quick fix, not recognizing that the very decision to have an abortion is a fundamental symptom of many problems.

I do not delight in the polarization of this debate. I am well aware that those on both ends of the spectrum present their views in terms of love, care and compassion. I understand fully that no right thinking person takes a decision in favour of abortion lightly.

I will not be one of those to condemn those who have made or who may make decisions with which I disagree. Whether this battle is won or lost, I believe we must continue to speak for and promote the development of resources which can help people grow toward healthy, life giving relationships wherein responsibility for birth control and parenting is shared by both parents. We must encourage schools and employers to support women who are pregnant, not to expel or discriminate against them. We must continue to speak out against and deal with family violence so that children may be raised in safety. We must develop more efficient and fairer means of distributing support for child care. We must continue to support the development of preventive or crisis counselling in the areas of sexuality, pregnancy and family planning. Finally, governments including this government must encourage adoption as an alternative to abortion.

One of my hon. colleagues from the other side indicated a few minutes ago that 60 years ago women were not persons, and today they are. I am very distressed that many of those same persons who received their rights 60 years ago are now denying the rights of the foetus.

This debate is about abortion and how to deal with it in a pluralistic society. In the last few days we have heard many well-intentioned arguments on both sides of the question. I return to my first point: we cannot discuss abortion unless we first acknowledge clearly that life begins at conception and then develop a clear, rational approach to the balancing of rights, an approach which recognizes the foetus as a fully human entity, doing so with compassion and a full understanding of the difficulties that each person faces. I do not support this bill. I cannot imagine supporting it, even in an amended form.

• (1920)

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to start by saying that this last year of my life has probably been one of the most exciting. I cannot believe, quite frankly, that I am here tonight in the Parliament of Canada. I feel it is the greatest honour of all to serve for your country. At the same time I want to say that the last 24 hours has been very tough for me. I am not a doctor. I am not a lawyer and I feel humbled in addressing this issue.

I have listened for the last year and a half to people on all sides of this issue. I have met them in my constituency office. I have met people in my office on the Hill. I noticed one thing that all parties have in common. All the people I met with were approachable and caring; they had integrity and they were passionate about their views.

That makes the dilemma even more difficult. I realize it is a dilemma that most politicians from all parties are facing, because many of us are finding that our personal beliefs are in conflict with the majority of our constituents, at least as many of our constituents perceive our responsibility to be.

I personally refer to this issue as the Thomas More dilemma. Few of us, and certainly not I, would pretend to have the learning or courage of Thomas More, but I believe after listening and watching people in this Chamber for the last year that they also have and stress the value of morality, honour and integrity.

Today, when we are struggling with an issue like this, that kind of integrity, that kind of trust, is so important. In fact, I think that trust is the central issue in this debate. It is the trust that our constituents have with each one of us. I take that thought with me as I approach this issue of abortion because we have a choice between acting as a representative of our constituents and voting as we perceive the majority would wish us to vote. In my constituency a majority would wish me to vote in favour of this bill or abortion in whatever limited form it would be allowed.

The other option is that we can act as a delegate of the voters and vote for what we consider to be right. If I were to take the first course, then I would apparently gain the trust of the majority and certainly lose the trust of a significant minority who are against abortion, and I use the word apparently advisedly because I do not think anyone would ever trust me if I really gave in and gave up on deeply held convictions, especially one like this.

I want to speak personally for a moment about my convictions because I believe that human life begins at the moment of conception. This is not a religious conviction; all the medical evidence supports this belief. However I am not a member of the pro-life movement. I question their emotive use of the term.

Who, after all, is in favour of death? My belief is a quiet personal belief. It is important that we have strongly worded legislation to protect the unborn. At the same time we must have the political will to put in infrastructure to support women facing the prospect of an unwanted pregnancy. We must discuss this issue with genuine empathy for the plight of pregnant women. They are often lonely, afraid, deserted, poor and particularly stigmatized, so we must be innovative in our solutions to make it easier for women to continue with their pregnancies.

In listening to this debate for the last few days, I do acknowledge the hon. member from British Columbia when she said it was mostly men who were speaking on this issue. I have to refer to two of my colleagues who are women who spoke on this issue last Thursday, my colleague from Western Arctic made the following statement:

> My position is one for life. I choose life. I do not belong to the pro-life movement, but I belong to a people who believe that life is sacred and always have under the harshest of circumstances.
> I also believe in people who are willing to take the unwanted; I believe in the people who adopt. I am an adopted child. I celebrate my mother and I am the oldest of 15 children. I celebrate my mother because she brought 15 of us into this world, under the harshest of circumstances, with great poverty and difficulty.

She went on to say:

> I cannot take the chance of having this legislation pass. I will vote against it. But I can tell you once more, that for my people, children are important, people are important, and life is the most valuable gift you are given.

My colleague, the member from Northumberland made a similar statement. She said:

> Because I believe in and try to live in the spiritual, sacred, mystery side of my, in my intellectual weakness I submit to the view that it is probable that the sacredness of life begins at conception. Therefore, I cannot accept abortion at any stage of life from conception onward.

She went on to talk about companion legislation.

What am I going to do? For me the choice is clear. I shall vote against this bill. I may have to answer to the voters as long as I am in politics, but I have to answer to my own conscience for the rest of my life. I let my belief in this issue be known through the last year and a half. For me, governance is to look after the disadvantaged and for me there is nothing more disadvantaged than an unborn child and, in my opinion, this bill does not pass the test.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, no subject is more troubling for any reflective person than abortion. No other issue since I arrived here in 1979 has evoked more letters, phone calls and personal visits from concerned constituents and non-constituents on both sides of the issue. It cuts right to the heart of what human beings, religions of all kinds, pluralism, the proper scope of our criminal law and representative democracy are all about.

In the case of members of the present governing party and the Official Opposition, at least our whips will not tell us how our respective party hierarchies want us to vote. If it is true, as indicated, that the Prime Minister intends to force his cabinet colleagues to vote en bloc for Bill C-43, I trust that the right hon. gentleman will allow them to vote their consciences on various amendments which will be proposed both in committee and at the report and third reading stages of the bill.

Let me say now what I find to be positive and what I find to be unacceptable about Bill C-43. First, the more positive. The bill says that Parliament has sufficient respect for unborn children from conception in that it orders that no such child can be aborted unless a medical doctor "is of the opinion that the abortion were not induced, the health or life of the female person would be likely to be threatened".

Second, the bill requires that henceforth for legal abortions in Canada only medical doctors can perform them. One of the consequences of the Supreme Court of Canada's decision in Morgentaler is that in terms of federal legislative sanctions, at least, a person performing an abortion need not currently even be a trained medical doctor.

Third, I personally share the presumed view of the drafters of this bill, that the person charged with inducing an illegal abortion should be a doctor, not the woman. I wonder, though, how doctors across Canada can reconcile performing abortions because, a husband or a boyfriend demands that one be performed, with the Hippocratic Oath taken I gather, by every practising physician across Canada. One part of that oath says, and I quote: "I will not give to a woman an instrument to produce abortion".

Fourth, the doctor's opinion that a continuation of the pregnancy would threaten the health of the pregnant person must accord to "generally accepted standards of the medical profession", not his or her own notions about the matter.

Fifth, I believe as a lawyer that this bill is constitutionally unassailable under the Charter of Rights.

What is illegitimate about the bill? First, it can be said to be pro-life in form; it is clearly strongly pro-choice in substance. Second, and closely related, in terms of the world's realities, it appears to me to pay only lip service to the all important issue of balancing the interests, assuming that they can conflict, of perspective mothers and this Parliament's interest in protecting unborn children. I say this as someone who has worked professionally with the provisions of the Criminal Code for many years both as Crown counsel and defence counsel, and who worries that the member for York Centre has probably characterized very well what will result, in practice, across Canada. The member reportedly said at a press conference, after the bill was introduced, and I quote:

> —what has been attempted here is really nothing more than to provide a fraudulent cover for abortion. What is being said is, "Ladies play our game, go to the right doctors, give the doctors the right story, and you'll have nothing to worry about".

Mr. Kaplan went on:

> That, to my mind, is not the honourable kind of solution that should be brought forward considering all the various interests and all the various rights that are at stake here.

In other words, there are, unfortunately, probably enough medical doctors practising across Canada today who take a less than literal interpretation of their Hippocratic Oath and who favour abortion on demand, that abortions on demand, legalized by the Morgentaler case, will in most communities continue unabated.

Will a single one of the 60,000 unborn girls or boys who now perish each year in the present legal vacuum, survive if this bill becomes law in its present form? Canadians generally, and my constituents in particular, as I understand their views, want a major reduction in the number of abortions being performed across Canada. That at least was the major conclusion I drew from approximately 5,000 questionnaires received from constituents in the spring of 1988. Fully 2,865 or 60 per cent of my constituents, indicated that they wanted "drastically reduced" the number of abortions. Approximately 2,000 or 40 per cent, indicated in effect that they wanted abortion "made more fully accessible".

May I pay particular tribute to the speech made in this House by the member for Ottawa South which voiced many of my own concerns and views. For example, his quote from Mario Cuomo about the need for society to assume that the right to life does not end at the moment of birth. Proper housing, education and nutrition for all children must be the priority of all of us who profess to be pro-life. Also, that of the member for Welland who spoke earlier tonight.

My 10 minutes is going fast. Let me urge all members of this House who are on the pro-life side of the spectrum not to vote against this bill on second reading. If enough of us private MPs do so in this Chamber, the government's bill, flawed as it is from a pro-life point of view, will die and the status quo, that is, abortion on demand will continue across Canada in all likelihood until the next election and possibly beyond.

The only Canadians who will benefit from that possibility would be the 25 per cent to 35 per cent in all 10 provinces who, opinion polls suggest, favour abortion on demand at all stages of all pregnancies.

In closing, I would urge all colleagues to consider carefully and to vote to send C-43 into a legislative committee where, hopefully, the government majority there will recognize the bill, as is, is more pro-choice than a substantive majority of both Canadians and MP's favour. If enough carefully drawn amendments are accepted, C-43 could be moved significantly closer to the government stated objective of balance in the interests of society, the protection of unborn children and the interests of some mothers in not continuing a pregnancy in defined situations.

Finally, if such amendments are not accepted, and I put this to my friends on all sides of the House who are pro-life, the majority of us in this House who believe that human life is sacred could then vote against the bill on third reading.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak strongly against Bill C-43, an act to recriminalize abortion. I was reluctant to even participate in this debate because I am so angry that it is occurring at all. I, along with my New Democrat colleagues, opposed this bill on its introduction because abortion is a private matter, not for doctors or judges to decide, but for the woman who must live with the outcome of the decision for the rest of her life.

This is not a matter for criminal law. This is not a matter for the 255 male members or 40 female members of this House to decide. It is a matter for the woman involved.

This whole debate and the bill which is at the centre of it is based on a false assumption. That assumption is that controls are necessary, that women are unable or incapable of making this painful decision without some sort of state control. I utterly reject this assumption. Women have always, through time, and in different cultures, made these painful life and death decisions.

There is another assumption implicit in this debate and it is that this debate will somehow bring some resolution to this dilemma which confronts us. This, too, is a false assumption. I doubt that there is a legislative resolution to this question. In a pluralistic society, how can we legislate the solution to abortion?

The question of abortion is a moral question. We all bring our own life's experience, differing religious beliefs and philosophies when considering such a question. We as legislators, acting in a pluralistic society, know there is no legislative resolution to this issue. No law will end abortion. In this instance, I mean political in the crassest sense. It is, as my colleague for Victoria pointed out in last week's debate, a bill designed not to respect women or their decisions, nor in that false polarity, fuelled by this debate, is it a bill to protect life. It is, to be blunt, a bill to protect politicians.

Some speakers in this debate have characterized this bill as a compromise. At the beginning of this debate I rejected that idea. But now I have come to agree. It is a compromise. But once again I mean that in the crassest sense. It is meant for many in this House to compromise their principles. So in this bill we do have a political compromise flowing from political expediency.

For the record I should state that that last sentence was spoken with contempt. I will now turn from speaking about the debate to the broader discussion of the issue.

The issue of abortion challenges us at the very core of our being. Abortion is a statement of failure. At the individual level, this could mean failure of partners accepting responsibility in expressing their sexuality, or failure in contraception, or failure in a relationship.

At the societal level, abortion is also a statement of failure. It is our society, despite rivers of rhetoric, saying that we do not welcome children, we do not treasure children. In the society we live in today, that message is loud and clear. It is stated in child poverty, which our leader so eloquently addressed in his last statement before this House. It is stated in the lack of resources given to child care. It is stated in overcrowded classrooms and the lack of housing where children are welcomed. There are few enough housing units where children are accepted, even fewer where space for children and those who care for them are included in the planning. These are the reasons I say abortion is a statement of failure. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, women have always recognized this.

For women, this issue is not abstract—it is very real. It is a women's issue. It is women's bodies and women's lives being controlled by this legislation, not men's. Women are the ones who ultimately decide this life and death issue. They have done so since time began and in all cultures. They have done so alone, in fear and secretly, often protecting the men in their lives from the enormity of their decision because they were aware that men have little ability to handle life and death decisions unless these decisions are depersonalized such as during war. They will do so no matter what this House does. I suspect that much of the anger surrounding this issue is based in recognition of this fact because ultimately this issue is about power. Women exercising their power of choice challenges that unstated premise on which our society is based, that men know best, that they are morally superior. If you doubt that assertion, just consider the continuing debate surrounding the ordination of women. I can understand that this challenge is very threatening, especially to those who are reluctant to share power with women. If women cannot be controlled, what will become of us?

Women are not morally deficient. I respect women's rights to choose. As a woman I feel betrayed by this bill. I feel betrayed by some of the formerly pro-choice women of this House. This issue is too important to flip-flop on. I implore all of the formerly pro-choice members of this House to reject political expediency and instead stand in pro-choice solidarity against this bill. Canada has signed the United Nation's Convention on the Elimination of all Forms of Discrimination Against Women. Paragraph 4 of the Convention calls for signatories such as Canada, to:

> Repeal all national penal provisions which constitute discrimination against women.

This bill before us discriminates against women. It does not control men's sexuality and reproduction; it controls women's sexuality and reproduction. It does not limit men's right to choose whether or not to have children; it limits women's right to choose whether or not to bear a child.

As critic for the New Democratic Party on international development, I am appalled that Canada says one thing abroad and practises another at home. I have become very angry at the arguments used and abused in this House to justify this bill. Some members whom one once would have called pro-choice are saying now that they will support this bill because it proposes a national standard for abortion, a national standard for access. This is utterly outrageous. This bill does not prevent the harassment of women outside clinics. It does not create community health centres where abortions can be performed. It does not prevent restrictive laws such as the one we are currently seeing in Nova Scotia, nor will it lead to abortion services being made available in Prince Edward Island. The only national standard it sets is one of fear of being charged under the Criminal Code. This bill does not meet international standards and it does not promote a national standard. All it does is hurt women. I would have hoped that some formerly pro-choice cabinet ministers would have at least had the integrity to admit that.

In conclusion, I want to say that this is the issue that made me a New Democrat. It is only my party which has had the courage to tackle this issue and determine a party policy. This policy was achieved not without pain. Only the New Democrats gave the issue the priority to work through that pain and come to a position on the issue. Our detractors use this as evidence that we do not individually struggle with this issue, that we blindly and unthinkingly follow party policy. Our party speakers during this debate have made it clear that this is patent nonsense. Each one of us have brought our own life's experience, our religious beliefs and philosophies and come to a common conclusion. We, as New Democrats, respect women. We believe that abortion is a private matter for a woman and her conscience. We are confident that each woman is capable of making the right choice.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to speak on Bill C–43, which deals with a matter that has caused a great deal of controversy and debate from coast to coast in this nation.

When we choose to enter public life, all politicians know that at times they will be faced with tough decisions. The subject of abortion is, without a doubt, one of these occasions. For example, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources even considered quitting politics rather than support a liberal new abortion bill. This vividly illustrates the agonizing nature of reaching a decision on what is very clearly a moral, ethical and personal matter.

I have never been one to shy away from making my views public on difficult policy matters, and the same is true for the abortion issue. I have made my personal position crystal clear ever since I was elected to the House of Commons 17 years ago. I am against abortion on demand. However, I feel the life of the mother is all important and should be given top priority.

I also feel that an abortion should be made available in cases of rape and incest. When I say rape, I mean especially the rape of a minor. Not allowing abortions in these instances is tantamount to condoning these atrocious acts.

At present, we have no abortion legislation in place. This has put the federal government in a no–win situation. An abortion can now be performed at the end of the ninth month, and this is frightening. I believe at least 70 per cent of the people in Canada agree that an abortion should be available under certain circumstances. In all probability, under the circumstances I mentioned earlier.

It is my feeling that the legislation presently before this House presents a reasonable solution to the complex matter of abortion. While I am somewhat concerned that the legislation involves an amendment to the Criminal Code, I realize this is the only way the federal government can ensure a national approach to the issue of access to abortion. Under the proposed legislation, any woman seeking an abortion will have to consult a medical practitioner. If the medical practitioner feels the pregnancy would threaten the life or health of the woman, then an abortion can be performed.

Pro–life supporters have stated that the legislation is not strong enough. However, they should note that with the new legislation, a woman or her doctor can receive a maximum penalty of up to two years in jail if they breach the provisions of the law.

At this point, I would like to stress that the legislation does not provide for abortion on demand. The medical practitioner is required to determine, in accordance with generally accepted standards of the medical profession, whether there are health reasons to justify an abortion. According to these standards, abortions are rarely conducted after the foetus becomes viable, unless there are compelling foetal or maternal complications.

A sad reality is that at present a woman may feel that no alternative to an abortion exists due to her economic or social situation. It is imperative that we do whatever we can to help these individuals avoid the problem in the first place and to provide all the possible alternatives to abortion in cases where unplanned pregnancies have occurred. For this reason, I was heartened by the measures which the Minister of National Health and Welfare has planned to put in place to reduce the number of unwanted pregnancies in this country. These include increased research into family planning, including contraception, continued funding of planned parenthood and measures to encourage more pregnant women to consider adoption in place of abortion.

It is my sincere hope that these measures will enable us to deal with the startling facts of teenage abortion which have recently come to my attention. In a recent issue of one of the Ottawa newspapers, for example, it stated that of the 800 girls aged 15 to 19 who became pregnant in Ottawa–Carleton in 1987, 62 per cent had abortions. Across Ontario, in the same year, 46.9 per cent of the estimated 12,800 pregnant girls in that age group had abortions. Clearly, this is an unacceptable situation.

In preparing the legislation before us, the justice minister had to keep in mind the issue of the Charter of Rights. If the government presented legislation that was too restrictive, then the Supreme Court could strike it down as it did in the Morgentaler decision. In this decision, Chief Justice Dickson wrote:

> Forcing a woman by threat of criminal sanction to carry a foetus to term is a profound interference with a woman's body and thus an infringement of the security of the person.

I am confident that Bill C–43 has responded to these concerns.

As the justice minister stated in this House, we are not asking the people of Canada to change their opinion on what they think is right. Each and every Canadian is entitled to his or her own value judgment on this very moral issue. We are merely asking Canadians to respect the views of others and to respect this new law.

Canadians will never be unanimous about what abortion laws should be passed, but it is clear that some federal legislation must be passed. If the bill is defeated, we will be right back to square one with abortions available right up to the ninth month. Clearly, this is unacceptable to the majority of Canadians.

This is a tough decision, but governments are elected to make tough decisions. The federal government has never backed away from its responsibilities and has acted to bring in a bill that strikes a moderate and balanced approach to the very sensitive abortion issue. For this reason, Bill C–43 should receive the support of this House.

I am hoping, and I think a great many other members share that hope that certain amendments may be tabled before committee and at report stage. It would then be more acceptable to some of those who have misgivings about it in its present state.

I might point out that down through the years, since I have been a member of Parliament, I have had many delegations coming to my office, primarily in Ottawa but also in my constituency office, and I will concede that the great majority of those were groups of pro–life people who were worried about the previous legislation even before it was struck down.

It is rather unusual that, in the last number of months, I had requests from members of the pro–choice group which is the first time I had ever had that in all my years here. I know we have a very difficult situation before us and I can assure you that a great many of us are worried considerably about it. As I stated, I have made my position clear not just in the last few months but down through the years since I have had the privilege of being a member of Parliament.

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and privilege to contribute to the deliberations of the House of Commons this evening on this very emotional topic. I have listened to many of the speeches during this debate and have read those that I did not hear.

Before I begin my remarks, it is important to remember that we are speaking tonight on second reading debate. If the bill passes second reading, otherwise known as approval in principle, it will go to committee for discussion and attempts at amendment. I cannot support it. I will now explain why.

On November 7 this year, the hon. member for New Westminster—Burnaby urged us to "speak to our mothers; speak to our sisters; speak to our daughters; speak to our wives". I have done so. I have gone further. I have spoken to my constituents. I have spoken to Canadians all across the country. My mother, my wife, my daughter, the majority of women on my riding executive, the overwhelming majority of people, both female and male with whom I have spoken and the vast majority of those who have written to me, have said no to abortion on demand. The question is not whether we should have restrictions but, rather, the nature of the restrictions that we should have.

Of course, there are some of the opposite view. In today's mail I received a letter from a constituent. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, I quote:

> No man has the right to tell me to carry what amounts to little more than a parasite in my body. A foetus lives off the woman carrying it. This so-called human life can cause diabetes, high blood pressure, let alone discomfort, nausea and pain.

I cannot and will not subscribe to this view of the unborn being akin to a tapeworm. If this person's own mother thought as she does, perhaps she would not be alive today to write to me.

I am opposed to this bill. I believe it should be defeated tomorrow on the vote for second reading and the issue sent back for further consideration by this government. Why? This bill is the spawn of the entirely unsavoury union of hypocrisy and cowardice. With origins such as this, it must be condemned to the dustbin. Let us examine the bill.

It says, "Every person who induces an abortion". What does that mean? What is so objectionable? After all, there is no law prohibiting appendectomies or tonsillectomies. Why a law to prevent abortion? Is it not just a medical procedure like any other? Well, logic would suggest that we look to the bill for definition of what we are talking about. There is no definition. This is cowardice, this failure to deal squarely with the fundamental issue of abortion. If there is no definition, how can we possibly know what the bill is pretending to outlaw? In the absence of a definition, look to the dictionary. The shorter Oxford English Dictionary, based on historical principles, third edition, being the abridged version of the massive Oxford English Dictionary, says about abortion that it is "the procuring of premature delivery so as to destroy offspring". Offspring is defined by the dictionary as "a person's child or children". That is what abortion is. The destruction of human life, nothing less.

This bill pretends to ban the procuring of premature delivery for the purpose of destroying one's child. Does it really do so? Here begins the hypocrisy. The destruction of a human being is permitted if the medical practitioner, and that is any medical practitioner, and only one, such as Dr. Morgentaler, is of the opinion that: "The health or life of the female person would be likely to be threatened". "Likely to be threatened". Not "will be threatened". Just a mere possibility. It is totally subjective and completely open-ended.

It is interesting to note that notwithstanding the fact that the word "abortion" is not defined in the legislation, the word "health" is defined. Surely, this is further hypocrisy. This wide-open definition with virtually no restrictions is really nothing more than abortion on demand under the guise of what some misguided individuals believe is an implicit recognition of the humanity of the foetus.

The Supreme Court of Canada unanimously in the Daigle case has told us and all Canadians that the foetus has absolutely no rights in Canadian law whatsoever. You only get rights once you are born alive. But it went further. It said that if Canadians wish the foetus to have rights, then these rights must be explicitly, not implicitly, spelled out in legislation by the House of Commons.

I was speaking of hypocrisy. I will mention two situations only, due to time constraints, and let you be the judge as to whether there is hypocrisy or not.

First, on May 2, 1980, a member of this House of Commons proposed a private member's bill concerning an act to amend the Criminal Code, Bill C-293. It proposed that the procuring of a miscarriage, as abortion was then known, would be permissible only if the continuation of the pregnancy would be likely to actually, physically or mentally, endanger the life of the pregnant woman. This same member now supports Bill C-43, the abortion-on-demand bill. Who is this member? It is the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the member for Wellington—Grey—Dufferin—Simcoe.

Second, the Prime Minister has said he personally opposes abortion, but he will not say why. I know why. It is because he knows that abortion is the destruction of human life. If this is not why, then I challenge him to refute me tomorrow in his speech and tell us all why he personally opposes abortion.

He has said this about life:

> It is wrong to take life. I can think of no circumstances except self-defence to justify it—I will resist with all my strength, all of my life, any action that would diminish that reality and would lessen value.

Those are noble words, applicable in his mind to convicted murderers but apparently not to unborn human beings. This is a man who promised a free vote and yet has forced his ministers to choose between loyalty and conscience only to have them demonstrate apparently that loyalty overrides conscience. This is a man who is so weak of will on this issue, indistinguishable in principle from the issue of life he so vigorously defended in the capital punishment debate, that he follows rather than leads. Not only does he not have the courage of his convictions, but he insists that his ministers abandon theirs.

This bill, being a concoction of one part hypocrisy and one part cowardice, is a drink designed to be distasteful to all. It cannot in my view be amended without direct explicit recognition of the humanity of the unborn child, something which the rules of this House will not in my opinion permit by way of amendment.

It must be rejected with the admonition to the government to return with legislation which does three things: explicitly establishes the humanity of the unborn human being, protects the unborn human being from conception and is coupled with companion legislation which, as my colleague the hon. member for Northumberland has said, supports pregnant women and their children and deals with the underlying causes of abortion in this country.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that it is very difficult to add anything of real substance to this debate on the second reading of Bill C-43 respecting abortion in Canada.

I had the honour to precede you very briefly in the chair, Mr. Speaker, at your request. I was very grateful that I had that opportunity because it enabled me to listen to speeches from members on all sides of the House. In the short span of time that I sat in the chair, I heard a defence of what might be called the pro-life stand and a staunch defence of what might be called the pro-choice stand.

While I have my own views on abortion and the need for a law with respect to abortion, I want to say very clearly and add to the record that I think all of us have to respect those who support either view. There is no right inherent in any of us to condemn those who approach the abortion issue from a pro-life standpoint or from a pro-choice standpoint. It is only with an understanding of all the views that pertain to the issue of abortion in Canada that we can come to any national reconciliation on the issue.

In that respect, I want to point out that I understand that there is no compromising on the issue of abortion. I understand that many regard it as the killing of an unborn child, while others regard the act of abortion as saving and protecting the woman whose rights must be honoured. It is difficult to compromise on those two positions.

What we have to do is achieve some kind of balance of rights because we are, after all, legislators. We are here to legislate in the interests of all the people of Canada. To the extent that we can effectively legislate and create some reconciliation among all Canadians on the issue, that is our challenge. Our challenge is not, in my opinion, to stand here and provide support for our own particular view, or to represent any particular point of view, but rather to achieve some kind of resolution of this problem.

In that connection, let me say very quickly that I believe there has to be a law on abortion. I think that that is in the interest of all Canadians. I respect the rights of women. I understand the difficulties faced by pregnant women who want their pregnancy terminated. But I think at this point in our history it is in the interest of all Canadians to have a law on abortion.

There may come a time in the future when we will not need a law on abortion, when we have the social instruments that will preclude unwanted pregnancies or take care of unwanted pregnancies when they do occur so that we can avoid this issue of abortion. But in the meantime we have to recognize the void that exists in the law of Canada. If we can possibly remedy and fill that void, then that is or obligation. That is why I want to spend my time reviewing the law.

We had for many years in Canada complete prohibition against abortion. It was contrary to the Criminal Code. Then we allowed, by virtue of Criminal Code provisions, abortions to be performed under certain circumstances.

We cannot neglect and avoid the fact that this House of Commons, this Parliament of Canada, with the consent and concurrence of the provinces, enacted a Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We gave to the courts of Canada and to the Supreme Court of Canada the right to interpret that Charter, and the Supreme Court did so. It exercised the mandate to determine what the rights were under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It said that the existing abortion law, the law restricting abortion, providing for hospital committees to approve abortions, was not valid.

We have to recognize that that was the right of the Supreme Court of Canada to make that decision. We have to answer the question, what are we going to do about it to give it the exercise of that right in the Charter.

I have heard members say that we cannot approve the law as enacted by Bill C–43, that it does not go far enough, that it does not protect the foetus, that it does not recognize that life begins at conception, or any of the positions taken by people who espouse a pro–life point of view. But you have to recognize what the Parliament of Canada is permitted to do under the law. Very few of those members who take that position referred to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and recognize that we must amend the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms if we are to provide rights to the unborn. It is a constitutional issue.

The member from Scarborough talked about a law that defined the rights of a foetus. We cannot enact that law in Parliament. It has to be by way of amendment to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We can only do what the law permits the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada to do, that is to enact a law that does not violate the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. If I had the opportunity to enact a law, I would do so.

I presented Bill C–203 to the House of Commons in the first session of the thirty–fourth Parliament. It indicates, I believe, the strongest law that can be enacted with respect to abortion, but I do not think that the government and many lawyers will accept the fact that that law would pass the test of the Supreme Court of Canada.

My point is simply this. In Bill C–43 now before the House of Commons we have been presented with a law that restricts abortion in Canada. It may not restrict abortion to the extent that many members want, but I cannot accept that as a reason to vote against the bill. I can understand that those who espouse a pro–choice position will vote against that bill. They believe that a woman should have a right to an abortion if that is her decision with respect to a particular pregnancy. I understand that they would vote against the bill, but I do not understand a person who is interested in protecting life voting against Bill C–43 at second reading. I do not understand that position. If this bill is defeated in this House of Commons, there will be in Canada no law on abortion and no real possibility of enacting a law. Is that the position that members want?

Ms. Black: Yes!

Mr. Crosby: I have said very clearly that I believe that Canadians want and require a law on abortion. It is not an overwhelming majority but it is the consensus of opinion in Canada.

Why do I think that? Because I do not think most Canadians desire and want what is happening in Halifax, Nova Scotia at the Morgentaler clinic. I do not think that Canadians want abortion reduced to the level of walking in off the street and having it over and done with and forget about the consequences.

I believe that Canadians want consideration. They want the sanctity of life protected by a law. Whether or not this should mean that women will be denied abortions in reasonable circumstances is another matter. I believe that at this stage in our history the law while restrictive must conform to the Supreme Court of Canada decision. We really do not have that choice without a constitutional amendment.

My purpose is simply to remind members of the state of the law, to recognize what the House of Commons, the Parliament of Canada, can do and cannot do with respect to abortion.

I believe Bill C–43 represents a measure that the Parliament of Canada can take, not a measure that will satisfy those who believe that life begins at conception and under no or very, very extremely limited circumstances can a pregnancy be terminated. I recognize their position, but it is not one that we can implement in this House of Commons today.

The expression comes to mind like half a loaf is better than none at all. I know it is considered to be unsatisfactory. I think the fact that the bill is opposed by both pro–life advocates and pro–choice advocates indicates that it does effect some kind of balancing of rights. I think all we can do at this stage of our history is balance rights.

We can and we will have the opportunity to add amendments to the bill. I think that abortion should be performed in an accredited hospital. I do not think it should be left to the parties to decide where an abortion can be performed.

As far as the bill having no real effect, that is not true. It would be very unwise for a medical practitioner in Canada if this bill is enacted to perform an abortion without having objective criteria to adjudicate whether or not health was affected. I think a medical practitioner would be very unwise to not have a second opinion on an abortion. I say that to the people who advocate that pro-choice view. That is something that they should consider. It is possible for a woman to be prosecuted under this provision. I do not think that we should hide behind the fact that a woman may not be prosecuted because under the existing law pregnant women were specifically mentioned and they are not under this bill.

I think we should look at this provision realistically. It does restrict abortion. Do not make any mistake about that. There is not a doctor in Canada who will rush in and perform an abortion just on his own say so that the health of the mother is in jeopardy. They will get second opinions. They will go through processes. It is going to take time and effort to get an abortion. Those people who regard the provisions as meaningless are mistaken in my opinion.

I am not supporting in any way, shape or form the pro-choice group. I want to point that out. The bill does restrict abortion. It restricts it in a way that is valid under the Supreme Court of Canada decision. It is all the Parliament of Canada can do at this stage in history. I would urge members to support the bill and propose amendments at the committee stage.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate this evening on the crucial matter of abortion facing not only this Parliament but, indeed, this country. It is, of course, an extremely delicate and complex subject matter which has aroused and will continue to arouse the passions of Canadians from coast to coast and lead them to explore this most fundamental dilemma.

In any discussion on abortion several parameters need to be drawn. First, most Canadians would acknowledge that this issue is not an easy one, for such fundamental questions of life and death strike at the very foundation of our society.

Second, the issue is a multi-faceted one which involves the social, moral, philosophical and religious forces of the day, as well as pits the rights and the choice of individual women against the collective rights of a society and, indeed, the rights of the unborn.

Thus, because the equation is a multi-dimensional one, the challenge becomes one of distinguishing the order of importance among the competing variables. Which is the most important variable? Which is of paramount priority?

Third, there are few issues like abortion which create the polarized extremes which seem to colour this particular debate. Consequently, the traditional Canadian way of compromise or building bridges between these two polarized shores is made extremely difficult, if not nearly impossible.

Under these three parameters any discussion will prove difficult and challenging to say the least. But, at the same time, it requires an extra investment on our part as a Parliament and as a society to ensure that our response to the issue rises in honesty and in clarity to the occasion.

I had the opportunity during the previous Parliament, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, back in July of 1988 to voice my thoughts on the question of abortion. Therefore, I will try not to repeat the arguments that I made some years ago, but yet, in the 10 minutes allotted to me this evening, I will take the opportunity to specifically focus on the government's proposed abortion legislation and thereby share with my constituents and my colleagues my views and feelings about the quality of the current legislative response to this emotional issue.

In the last Parliament when we were asked to choose among a multitude of motions I supported the one motion which was considered to be the pro-life option. I did so with conviction and deep belief and without any regrets or apologies. I did express, however, my deep reservations with three specific exceptions which I simply was not prepared to overlook, namely, where an abortion was performed in a case where the life of the mother was seriously endangered; where the pregnancy was the result of rape; and where the pregnancy was the result of incest.

I was not able under those three conditions to carry through with simply the one view that the pro-life option was not prepared to take into consideration the sense of compassion and fairness. That was my position then and that remains my position today.

Consequently, I am not pleased with the proposed legislative response by this government today. I believe the bill is a poor, inadequate attempt at addressing and accounting for the many delicate issues that define the abortion discussion and the abortion debate. I, therefore, will not and cannot support this bill at second reading under any circumstances.

Let me illustrate briefly why I will vote against this legislative measure. First, for me, this proposed law as written is paramount to abortion on demand. The proposed law would make it very easy and very open-ended for the vast majority of women in Canada to obtain and secure an abortion. It is open-ended for any health reason which is loosely defined as including physical, mental and/or psychological factors. It is open-ended for any medical practitioner to approve the abortion. It is open-ended for ending a pregnancy at any stage of a woman's pregnancy. Really, is there a major difference between this bad law and no law at all?

Second, there is absolutely no reference, no effort in defining the rights of the foetus, the rights of the unborn. There is no attempt to define at what stage in the pregnancy that right, that life becomes paramount.

What about the past Supreme Court decision which requested and indeed challenged Parliament and parliamentarians to toil with this issue in order to provide guidance and leadership to both the country and our courts? Was this not to be a central premise in this current debate? Do we think that as a Parliament by avoiding the issue it will go away by itself? I do not believe it will. I believe with a deep sense of commitment that the majority of Canadians feel the same way. They would have in fact greater respect for us and this place as an institution if they believed and sensed that we really toiled over this emotional dilemma.

Third, with regard to women who do not wish to continue with their pregnancies, how does this proposed legislative package help to offer an alternative other than abortion? Where is the incentive, the resources and the support to encourage the birth alternative? Does an unwanted, unwarranted pregnancy have to mean an unwanted baby? Clearly, it should not and does not. Therefore if we wish, as a government, as a Parliament, to encourage women that they can and should give life to their unborn without having to jeopardize their own lives, then we must commit to effective counselling, for instance, to rebuild a woman's self-esteem and self confidence. We must provide nurturing and homes for women whose families may not be willing to accept an unwanted pregnancy.

We must provide medical assistance to meet those sudden physical and medical needs that may legitimately arise. We must provide career and educational programs to allow those women to resume their career or academic studies. We must provide necessary financial assistance for the expenses inherent in that pregnancy. This bill, however, does not even begin to discuss any kind or any type of support mechanism whatsoever. It is bankrupt of any commitment or compassion toward those women in severe difficulty.

Fourth, why is there no discussion, no reform of our adoption procedures as a possible answer and option to the unwanted child as an answer and a bridge of understanding to the growing number of childless Canadian couples who would dearly love to experience the special gift of parenthood? Why is the bill silent on these concerns when couples presently cannot find children to adopt in this country? If you are the chosen and fortunate few, then the process takes years, not months and clearly not weeks.

Alternatively, if these couples look for parenthood opportunities abroad, they will not only find a flourishing expensive business, but a very complicated bureaucratic process be it overseas or be it in this country.

Are we to have no answers at all? Unfortunately, Bill C-43 is silent on many issues. Yes, these questions are difficult. Yes, these questions are challenging. But, by the same token, it is far too easy for us as a Parliament and for the government to hide from them. That is precisely what this bill does. It runs away from making the necessary difficult decisions. Instead, it attempts to please superficially the two ends of the current debate.

For the pro-life element, this bill in the very first sentence of the very first paragraph makes abortion an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment.

Yet, in the very next breath, at the very end of that first line in the first paragraph for the pro-choice element the bill basically says: "Don't you worry, because if you get approval of any medical practitioner on any health reason, then abortion is legitimate and not an offence." I cannot, and I refuse, to support that type of cheap rationale.

Moreover, I cannot accept the challenge or the arguments of those who say: "Well, I don't like the bill at all, but I will support it at second reading. Let it get into committee and then we have a chance of amending the bill to our liking". That kind of rationale has two faults. First, it fails to recognize that Bill C-43 is bad legislation, that it is a fatally flawed document that does not merit that compromise. It is, for me, far better to make a strong unequivocal statement that Parliament and Canadians deserve better, that the government ought to bring back a proposed piece of legislation that is more worthy, more responsible to the challenges that confront us as a Parliament.

Second, the government has made it abundantly clear that it will not tolerate any loosening of the woman's free choice to choose. When this overriding point of view is complemented with the parliamentary committee process that does not permit amendments outside the purview of the bill, then what is the point of this charade at second reading? Is it to prove to the government that it was able to get the bill to second reading? Is it to delay the ultimate showdown to third reading? If it is, how better off are we going to be as a country if, after a lengthy process at committee stage, the amendments for either the pro-choice or pro-life elements are refused and the resulting shift in votes assures defeat at third reading? How would we have advanced the cause for a mature and rational law which would govern abortion and which would define the rights of the unborn?

In conclusion, both the issue and Canadians deserve better. Let us involve Canadians in a process where, in the end, the process will yield positive results, tangible results, and not a process that risks producing a stalemate which would only further aggravate and frustrate the respective passions intensively felt on this issue.

I will vote against this bill at second reading. I truly hope a majority of my colleagues will be joining me.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, as I stand here I wonder why it is that I am standing here speaking on a bill that concerns women. When I watched in the last Parliament the last debate on the abortion issue, what I saw was a number of middle-aged men once again trying to tell women how they should arrange their lives. At that time, as I sat in my home in the comfort of my living-room watching the television, I wondered why it was that a male-dominated Parliament should be once again trying to control or continue to control a significant part of Canada's population.

When is the male population that I am a part of going to realize that women are capable of managing their own affairs without interference from us, the men of Canada? Life, death and all of the terms and times in between are of concern to me. But when I look at Bill C-43, it does nothing to accomplish what must be accomplished and what already has been accomplished by the Supreme Court of Canada in its recent decisions. It struck down the criminalization of abortion in Canada. In the period of time since then, women have once again proven to all in the world, and particularly all in Canada, that they are very capable of arranging and controlling their lives. There has not been a massive increase in abortions within Canada. There has not been what so many of those against choice for women have said will happen. I repeat that women have proven once again that they are very capable of managing their own lives.

In trying to grapple with the very issue that is before us and has been brought once again before Parliament, even though it was already dealt with through Bill C-43, I had to look for help from those who would be affected by the legislation. One of the people I looked to was one of my constituents who wrote to me. I would like to read to you today what she said to me: "I am one of your pro-choice constituents and I am also definitely one of your pro-life constituents. No dichotomy exists in being pro-life and pro-choice. I have two children and support any woman's right to bear children. However, I also support any woman's right not to bear children. Women will always have the final say on abortion. No legislature or Supreme Court justice can change that, all they can do is make it illegal or difficult to obtain. All that politicians or members of the judiciary can do is force women, mainly poor women, to suffer the indignities of hurdling barriers designed solely to harass them. Access to reproductive health care for a woman should not depend on geography or a bank account."

If we analyze what this constituent has been telling me and I pass on to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the people of Canada that it appears that what is in fact going to happen through Bill C–43, and through any legislation that criminalizes the termination of an unwanted pregnancy, will force more and more people, more and more women, poor women, into the back streets for their abortions, with the problems that we have seen so often in those areas.

I deeply respect and value all life on our fragile planet, but denying women access to safe therapeutic abortions will not in any way enhance our communities' respect for human life. Desperate women will seek illegal abortions at the hands of back street abortionists, or use methods themselves which endanger their own lives.

Under Italy's harsh anti–abortion laws, repealed in 1978, estimates placed the annual number of illegal abortions as high as 800,000 per year with 2,000 women dying annually of complications.

Limiting access to abortion will not reduce the number of abortions in Canada, but will cause a significant increase in maternal mortality and injury. This surely constitutes disregard and not respect for human life.

I must also point out that we on this side of the House have never advocated abortion as an alternative to contraception. The decision to have an abortion is an agonizing one for any woman, yet it is ultimately her own choice determined by the dictates of her own conscience and in consultation with her physician. It cannot be a choice determined by the legislators.

I certainly acknowledge the complexities and sensitivity of this issue. I also recognize the importance of reducing the number of abortions in Canada. This can be accomplished by improving the availability of contraceptive information and materials, ensuring better sex education programs, and providing increased funding for birth control research and family planning programs. This position was taken as long ago as 1971 by the Canadian Medical Association and supported by many other well respected organizations and individuals in Canada, including the United Church of Canada.

In supporting childbirth by choice, I am supporting the principle of freedom of choice in planning one's family. This principle was recognized by the International Conference on Population and Development and sponsored by the United Nations Fund for Population Activities. I fully support this principle that they have enunciated, and believe that it is a responsibility of government to provide alternatives to abortion, such as counselling, prenatal care, child care and adoption assistance. Funding these types of services, rather than restricting access to abortion, will do more to help decrease the number of abortions than will a return to criminalization.

I cannot support this bill because of that.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it is both my pleasure and duty to participate in this most important debate on abortion, and I welcome the opportunity to do so tonight. It is a subject which has provoked incredibly intense feelings on both sides, and has tortured the heart and soul of millions of people across this country. The argument has been one in which emotion has often transcended reason.

That having been said, it is incumbent upon us as members of Parliament to deal with this most sensitive of issues. We must fulfill our responsibilities as legislators. We must provide leadership and direction, and we must formulate a law which is moral and just.

During the year which has passed since I was elected to represent the riding of Egmont, I have received hundreds of letters and visits from constituents on this issue of abortion. It has been a great comfort to me that the vast majority of those who took the time and trouble to write and speak to me share my views on this matter.

I consider the question of abortion to be one of public as well as private morality. It is a question which involves the sanctity of human life and the civil rights of all human beings. It is a question the answer to which provides a measure of our country as a civilized country.

In introducing Bill C–43, the government took the simplest course available to it, other than doing nothing. It declared that abortion is a matter between a woman and her doctor, but with penalties for abuses of the law. Symbolically, it makes abortion illegal. Effectively, it provides abortion on demand. There is no protection for the unborn child.

Who is responsible for the protection of life in our society? Upon whom does the onus lie to protect all members of that society? Who, if not the state? I consider this bill an abdication of that responsibility. The youngest, the most innocent, the most defenceless members of our society have been abandoned. Our laws are a reflection of our morality. How sad it is today that we are being asked to support legislation which legitimizes the killing of the unborn. A law which permits the killing of human beings is uncivilized and thus unacceptable.

The Minister of Health and Welfare in his remarks to the House said: "We have been elected by Canadians to choose the course which best balances the rights of everyone concerned."

I contend that every one concerned has not been considered in this bill. One group has been omitted, left unprotected. The unborn have been left to the mercy of their mothers and their doctors. They have been given the authority to pronounce the death sentence on unborn children. It is an appalling situation.

• (2040)

My colleague from Leeds—Grenville, in one of the coherent and reasoned speeches of this debate, referred to that kind of situation as an extension of our throw-away society. When something is inconvenient, get rid of it. He asked, is it moral for the strong to destroy the weak? Remember that two people go into a Morgentaler clinic but only one comes out.

Our society generally embraces and upholds the sacredness of life. We resist the threat to life posed by the world's nuclear capabilities. We resist the threat to life generated by racial strife and by poverty. We in this country have resisted capital punishment. I believe that we have developed a consistent life ethic in our nation. We pride ourselves in that. We consider ourselves the most civilized of societies.

Any society that calls itself civilized will have as its highest value the preservation of human life. It logically follows that legislators in such a society will have as their highest priority laws which serve to protect that human life from its beginning to its end.

Medical technology has proven beyond any doubt that life begins at conception. Where else could it begin? Given this fact, I cannot accept that from the moment of conception until some optional time during the pregnancy, we are prepared to give a woman and her doctor the legal right to arbitrarily terminate that life. We cannot say that terminating a life is okay up to a point, but from that point onward it is a criminal offence. I contend that there is a serious flaw in the logic of this process, a flaw which is embedded in Bill C–43. It also makes one wonder what the future holds for the aged, and for the physically and mentally handicapped.

An American writer, Shelley Douglas, raised an interesting point. She states: "We have been so busy arguing over the right to choose that we have lost sight of whether the choice itself is a good choice for people to have to make". Much of the discussion now is not on whether abortion is right or wrong, but rather on the woman's right to choose. Abortion is now cast as a struggle of power, domination and control. Mercy and compassion are disappearing. The idea of abortion as a moral failure is lost on many people. For some, abortion has become a convenience, an acceptable form of birth control.

This debate has illustrated the dilemma in which we find ourselves. The rights of women are being pitted against the lives of the unborn. Let us look at some figures. Each year in Canada approximately 65,000 unborn children are killed. In the United States since the Wade vs. Roe decision in 1973, over 20 million Americans have lost their lives without ever having seen the light of day. No atrocity of history can match these figures.

The violence which is abortion is a violence against the unborn and a violence against women. The very heart of this position is an understanding that women, men and children, including the unborn are equal.

American psychologist, Sidney Callahan states: "It is my personal conviction that all human beings are of equal intrinsic moral worth; that no human being is morally inferior to another". This is also a basic tenet of our liberal democratic society.

From this moral premise it follows that those persons in a society endowed with power, ability and goods have moral obligations to protect and aid those who are in need, those who are vulnerable, and those who are dependent upon others.

The unborn child, being a dependent human being, relies on others in the human community. These others have a moral obligation to its protection and nurture. The woman who alone has the power to sustain life in her womb has a corresponding obligation to protect and nurture it. Our most fundamental right is the right to life, the right not to be killed. This intrinsic right to life is more basic than the right to self-determination or liberty. In fact, it is the right upon which all others depend.

This, I believe to be the bottom line in this entire debate. Abortions which serve social ends or are used for contraception or family planning negate the basic principle of the moral equality of all human beings. Therefore, if the basic issue of this debate is reduced to the mother's right to choose versus the child's right to life, there is no question, absolutely no question, the unborn child's right to life must prevail.

While being unequivocally opposed to abortion, I realize that being just anti-abortion does not make one fully pro-life. A new abortion law which would give full protection to the unborn should not stand by itself. It must be supported by policies and programs which would address the social and economic conditions that contribute to abortion.

In a full pro-life program, a thorough presentation of abortion alternatives must be presented. Abortion procedures, adoption procedures and incentives must be reconstructed to better serve the infant, the mother and the receiving family. The stigma of putting a child up for adoption and of being adopted must be removed. Job security, financial support, counselling programs, nutritional programs, crisis pregnancy centers, and especially day care must be made available. Equal opportunity and pay for women must be enforced. Maternity and paternity leave to care for sick children must be implemented.

In conjunction with these programs, we must attack the problem of abortion at its roots before the pregnancy starts. We must educate, we must develop a healthy understanding of our sexuality, and of our sexual behaviour and its physical, emotional and spiritual consequences. Therefore, our various levels of government, our private sector, our various churches and church groups must come together to address the problem of unplanned pregnancies and unwanted children.

Abortion is an incredibly poor response to the beginning of a new life.

Pro-life then is a package deal. We cannot talk about protecting the unborn in an isolated fashion.

As American pro-life writer, Melissa Simmons Tulin states: "We must be willing to take our platitudes off our placards and put our ideology into action."

There are those among us who would argue that we must legalize abortion at least until all these previously mentioned programs are in place. To do that would be to ensure that the programs would never be developed, and we would never reach the kind of world for which we strive.

In fact, American experience would indicate that we should expect a regression in this area. In the U.S. there has been an attrition of programs to support human needs and this has been blamed directly on the availability of abortion.

Canada is the kinder and gentler nation of which President George Bush spoke after his election campaign. We must not compromise these qualities of which Mr. Bush was so envious. We must not allow life to become cheap and expendable. But we must build barriers to abortion and at the same time create alternatives that women's, men's and children's lives become more joyful and more meaningful.

In conclusion, I believe that life begins at conception. I believe that the foetus is a living human being. The right of a woman to have an abortion can only be made law by denying the unborn child the right to exist, by allowing the murder of another human being. Bill C-43 would legalize the taking of another human being's life. I cannot support this legislation, and I intend to vote against it at every stage.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to stand in the House and exercise democracy. Yet, when I stand to to speak on this particular Bill C–43, I am disheartened.

Our country has been without a law for almost two years and the party in power brings in a law which does not satisfy any side. It does not say anything. It is all a bunch of hogwash.

The one question that is very important, the one question that we Canadians must ask ourselves is a fundamental one. When does life begin? We are sure that life begins at birth, so there is no question about that. Does life begin before birth? The one question that we can also ask is, will you kill a child five minutes before birth? Will you have an abortion two days before birth? Will you have an abortion a week before birth? I have to find one Canadian who will say, yes, you can have an abortion one week before birth. By that time the child is fully developed, ready to sustain itself. Therefore, we clearly come to an agreement that life begins somewhere before birth. And yet you go to the medical profession and ask: When does life begin? Some doctors say it begins at 12 weeks; others say at 8, others say at 16, others say at 18. They are not clear. They are presenting a grey area. Therefore, my belief is to take it right back to basics and believe that life starts at conception. I cannot and will not support a bill which does not realize that life begins at conception. Therefore, when life begins at conception, the rights of the unborn, the rights of the foetus, should be protected.

We have in this country a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and yet that Charter of Rights does not protect the unborn. We should make sure, we have to work hard and we have to strive to ensure, that the life of the unborn is protected from the beginning.

Canada needs a law, not this particular piece of legislation that the government wants to bring in. I cannot support it, I will not support it and I join many of my colleagues who feel the same. This particular bill, in my eyes, and in the view of many Canadians is a complete failure. Canada needs a law that will protect the unborn. We have to protect the unborn from the day of conception.

The other question that arises in protecting the unborn, how can you tell a 14 or a 16 year old girl who got into trouble that she has to have that child? She goes home and says to her mother and her father: 'Mother, father, I have made a mistake." Or "I am pregnant." Then the father panics and says that she has to have an abortion. We have to reach out and educate Canadians. We have to reach out and educate every single Canadian that life is precious. If the father or the mother is to say to the young girl who got into trouble that they do not want her and she has to leave, then we have a moral responsibility as Canadians to protect and support that individual through her pregnancy and after her pregnancy.

In my riding there is a place where young mothers who want to keep their children and whose parents will not allow them to stay at home can and do go in order to go through their pregnancy and bring the child into the world.

In our country, there is a backlog of up to five years in some places for people who want to adopt children. There is also, I believe, a certain age limit over which people cannot adopt any children. Yet, many Canadians travel outside Canada to places such as Mexico, Brazil, and South Asia in order to adopt children. If we were to bring in a law that protects the unborn and if the pregnancy was to be fulfilled, if the young mother does not want to have the child, and that child was to be given up for adoption, then we will make a family that cannot bear children happy. They will be very glad to look after that child.

We have also to provide education for our youth, education that says to young people: If you make the mistake, we will provide for you. However, this is what you do so you do not make mistakes. We have to bring in legislation that protects and encourages our young people not to fall into that particular trap of unwanted pregnancies. Further, the government, in my view, has to bring in legislation that will provide and care for a young individual or a mother who wants to go through a pregnancy after conception.

In closing, I find it very difficult to support this bill. I cannot see how on one side the Prime Minister says it is going to be a free vote while the Cabinet is forced to vote one way. That clearly sends a message to the members on the other side that since the Cabinet is voting that way, if you do not toe the line, you will not be looked upon favourably.

Do we have a double standard on this? Do we not let individuals have a free vote on a very important moral issue? I find that a little disturbing. Democracy is not allowed to take its full course when a member is told that this is what he or she has to do on an issue which is very, very important. The Canadian people cannot tolerate such an action. It is like putting a gun to the member's head and saying: "You vote this way".

I cannot support it. I will not support it. I believe life starts at conception. I encourage colleagues in this House not to support this particular bill.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C–43, whose purpose is to provide for legislation respecting abortion.

Since my speaking time is limited, I will not go into the details of this issue. As you know, Mr. Speaker, abortion is a very complex matter. People are divided in their opinions and we have a long way to go before a consensus is reached. On one side, we have those who say that abortion should be available on demand, while on the other side, people would like to see access to abortion restricted altogether. Where is the happy medium?

The abortion issue has created one of the most difficult dilemmas Canadians and Members of Parliament have had to face in recent years.

Like other Members, I received a large number of letters and telephone calls from my constituents and many other Canadians, all of whom expressed their views, firmly believing that their particular position was the best.

I would like to thank all these people for having shared their thoughts and views with me on this very delicate matter. Many of these people, Mr. Speaker, informed me that they wanted to see this dilemma resolved once and for all. Canadians expect their elected representatives to use the means at their disposal to fill the existing legal vacuum with respect to abortion.

Many believe that abortion should not be available on demand, but at the same time, they feel that access should not be eliminated entirely. I am sure my hon. colleagues have received similar comments.

As far as dealing with the abortion issue is concerned, the government has a wide variety of legal and political options at its disposal.

The government has been slow to table a bill on abortion, and I find this attitude deplorable. In fact, the former Minister of Justice promised he would table a bill as soon as possible, and this was some time ago.

Be that as it may, we must now deal with the issue before the House, Bill C–43.

[English]

This is a very sensitive question and certainly a moral dilemma. Personally, my view of abortion has evolved over the years. It has not remained static. I believe that in examining the bill on abortion it is important not to make a decision based on our own personal views alone. One must be prepared to sacrifice personal opinions and biases for the common good. To do otherwise would lead to a very selfish society, to say the least.

There is no doubt that the government has been remiss in not introducing companion legislation that would eradicate or reduce greatly the need for abortions.

The priority of this government and any successive governments should be to eliminate the need for abortions other than in life–threatening situations. To do this, the government must take action and not just talk about it. This government has been in office since 1984 and has yet to deliver on its promise for child care. What kind of message is that to Canadians? We need more education for all Canadians, especially young Canadians, to ensure that they become responsible citizens.

Society, through government, must offer an opportunity for women to handle unwanted pregnancies. We tend to blame the mother for the decision to have an abortion. But society must accept the blame because of its attitude toward these mothers. Society must accept the blame because of its negative attitude toward unwanted pregnancies. Society must accept the blame because of its failure to deal with the many social and economic problems faced by many women with unwanted pregnancies.

Bill C–43, according to the Minister of Justice, was supposed to be a compromise. Unfortunately, I have difficulty in reaching the same conclusions as the hon. minister. There is no doubt an abortion law is needed. However, the law must be a good one. If the bill is obviously poor and if it is found to be completely unsatisfactory then the Member of Parliament is duty bound to deny it his support.

After reviewing this bill, C–43, it is obvious that it is abortion on demand. It is not a compromise but just a disguised bill that favours abortion on demand. A proper compromise could have limited abortions where the life of the mother, incest or rape is involved.

Another compromise could have been to decriminalize abortions. Neither of these compromises were attempted. Definitions of terms, such as the health of the mother, have not been sufficiently explained. The question of rights of the foetus has not been addressed either. This law will not resolve the current debate but only muddy the issue and prolong anguish and uncertainty that now exist on the question. As such, I must state that I will not be supporting Bill C–43.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Bill C–43 in my view is a fraudulent and dishonest piece of legislation. On the one hand, the Government of Canada, through the Minister of Justice, is prohibiting abortion by criminalizing abortion in the Criminal Code of Canada. In effect, it is telling Canadians that abortion is legal. On the other hand, however, it has defined the situations under which an abortion would be available in such a broad fashion as to result in abortion on demand.

Before addressing some particular provisions in Bill C–43, I would like to comment very briefly on the process that we are going through with respect to this particular piece of legislation. As you know, Canada has been without an abortion law since January 28, 1988 when the Supreme Court of Canada struck down the Criminal Code provisions dealing with abortion. For almost two years the government has failed to live up to its responsibility to provide the necessary leadership in order to ensure that abortion in Canada is regulated. There was an attempt to sense the will of the House of Commons when the government tried by way of resolution to get a clear consensus in the House and, of course, that particular process failed. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice on a number of occasions have indicated that legislation would be introduced and that the legislation would recognize the pluralistic nature of Canadian society.

The Prime Minister also promised that there would be a free vote in the House of Commons. Well, let me say that there will not be a free vote. This particular piece of legislation is rigged. It is rigged in order to ensure passage of the bill. If we were dealing with a free vote situation, then the Prime Minister would not be instructing his cabinet ministers to support the legislation. The Minister of Justice would not be indicating to members of the House that the government would not be accepting amendments to this legislation.

If it were a true free vote situation, then all members of Parliament would be permitted to vote according to his or her own conscience. Well, they are not permitted to do so. Conservative back–benchers are told that they have a free vote on the matter but Conservative cabinet ministers are forced into supporting the position of the government. Having said that, it is clear that tomorrow this House will be called upon to decide whether or not this legislation should proceed further, whether or not this legislation should be considered by a legislative committee. In my view, it is essential that the bill pass tomorrow, that the bill be referred to a legislative committee because if this House does not support passage of Bill C–43 at second reading stage, regardless of how one might feel about this particular legislation, that will be the end of the matter as far as the House of Commons is concerned. In effect, the so–called pro–choice people will have scored a significant victory in that there will be no legislation and the status quo will continue. We will continue to have no law in Canada. There will be abortion on demand.

However, if the bill is referred to committee there is an opportunity to amend the bill in order to ensure that the innocent unborn will be afforded the protection that they deserve.

I have spoken on many occasions over the past five years on the issue of abortion. My views are well known. I have introduced a number of private member's bills, the latest of which was introduced last September. I have spoken outside the House on many occasions. I would like to make it absolutely clear that I am opposed to abortion. I believe that abortion is morally wrong, that it is the destruction of human life, that human life begins at the moment of conception and that it ought to be protected from the moment of conception to natural birth.

We as legislators, we as parliamentarians have no right to distinguish between human life after birth, regardless of how miserable a life may be after the moment of birth. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms says that every Canadian is entitled to the right to life. The right to life is the only absolute right that we as Canadians enjoy. We do not have capital punishment in Canada. Under no circumstances does the state or any individual have the right to take another life.

Every other right, whether it is the right to free speech or the right to freedom of assembly, or the right to the security of the person, those rights have to be balanced against other rights. The right to free speech is limited by the laws of slander. For example, the right of assembly is limited by municipal ordinance, and every other right that one can think of, those enunciated under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and other rights under common law are subject and limited. The right to life is unlimited in Canada after birth. This government has not dealt with the crucial issue of foetal rights, when life begins.

Just last week the Supreme Court of Canada in the Daigle case confirmed that there is no recognition in Canada of foetal rights. It is incumbent upon this Parliament and the Government of Canada to indicate in a very explicit way that life begins before birth, that life begins at the moment of conception.

Bill C-43 is unenforceable. As I indicated, it is a fraudulent piece of legislation. There is absolutely no explicit recognition of foetal rights although one can argue that there is an implicit recognition of foetal rights. Why else would you have a piece of criminal legislation dealing with abortion?

In its present form, the bill is totally unenforceable; the question of abortion is rendered a medical decision if the health of the mother, and health is defined as being physical, mental or psychological, is deemed to be endangered. To use the words in the legislation itself: "if the health or life of the female person would be likely to be threatened" then an abortion can be performed.

The bill indicates that a medical practitioner must form the opinion, it does not indicate that the doctor who forms the opinion must perform the abortion. In effect, you can have one doctor forming the opinion and another doctor performing the abortion. As I indicated, health is defined in such a broad way as to result in abortion on demand, and that is totally unacceptable.

I and I know other members intend to move amendments at committee to afford protection to the innocent unborn, but in order to do that and in order to have the opportunity to produce truly pro-life legislation, this bill must pass the second reading hurdle, and that happens tomorrow. Regardless of how bad this legislation is, in order to have that opportunity and avoid the situation where we will have absolutely no law at all, I urge my colleagues to support the bill. If the pro-life amendments are not accepted then we can defeat the bill at third reading stage.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I could have waited and then gone ahead and voted on Bill C-43, but I felt that voting without giving any explanation would be taking the easy way out.

During the last election campaign, I was approached on several occasions by both pro-life and pro-choice group, and at the time, I announced that I supported pro-life.

I think the Bill as tabled by the government is an intellectual fraud which, on the face of it, would seem to satisfy both parties, pro-life and pro-choice. That is not the case, however. This evening, we are talking about a basic right, a right to life. To me, the issue is not women's rights or human rights but simply the right of a child from the time of conception, a child that has no other demands but to be born and one day serve its fellow citizens. The way the bill was tabled, the impression was given that Cabinet of course had to support it, and the rest of the House was free to deal with the bill as it pleased. However, Mr. Speaker, that is not the case, because the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) already indicated in the House that there would be no amendments to this bill. And if there are no amendments, I can hardly support legislation that provides no remedies at all Mr. Speaker.

I think a fundamental principle, a moral issue and a matter of conscience are at stake here, and as I explained to many of my constituents, just because the polls or the majority of Canadians are pro-choice, I still don't think that I, as a Member of the House of Commons, elected by the people of the riding of Hull—Aylmer, should vote the way the majority votes. I think that a lot more is involved, Mr. Speaker. It is a matter of conscience. I respect people who take a different view, but tomorrow, if there is a vote, I will have to vote against the bill, Mr.

Speaker, because I cannot accept it in its present form, nor an I accept any of the amendments that may be tabled.

[English]

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I stand today to oppose Bill C–43 and make a commitment that tomorrow I will not support that bill.

I believe that our society is a very compassionate society, and as a compassionate society we have to protect children. We have to protect those who are weaker than others, and in this case in particular we have to protect those unborn children. I believe that this bill has a very negative effect on compassion in this society.

I also believe that pregnant mothers suffer a great deal when we talk about abortion. The effects on those mothers who have had an abortion are very great and very dramatic.

Senator Hubert Humphrey of the United States stated that the test of a civilized society is how that society treats those in the dawn of life, in the margins of life and in the twilight of life. If we stop and consider it, abortion is a devastating set–back to our civilization.

When I stop and think about what a friend said to me a while back, it really is an issue of human compassion. I was the sixth of several children in my family and had this bill C–43 been in effect 40 years ago I may not be here today. In fact, that is very true. It is very true that Bill C–43 will allow abortions to go almost at hand on the demand of a pregnant woman and with the agreement of the doctor.

Statistics show that from 1970 to 1989, there has been a tremendous increase in the rate of abortion. In 1970, 11,000 abortions occurred. The upswing to 1989 has shown that 63,000 abortions have occurred to date. Eight–eight per cent of those occur before the thirteenth week of pregnancy, while only .4 per cent after the twentieth week.

Those who are having most abortions are unmarried women. They account for 78 per cent of abortions. Twenty per cent of abortion recipients have had prior abortions. Fifty–seven per cent of the women were childless. Abortions among those from age 15 to 19 was 21 per cent; 20 to 24 years of age, 31 per cent; 25 to 29 years, 22 per cent, which illustrates that a majority of abortions were in the younger age groups.

I believe that life begins at conception. Eighty–eight per cent of abortions are done on or before the thirteenth week which means that over 56,000 abortions were conducted when it was possible that some of these characteristics were in that foetus.

Some 18 days after conception heartbeat begins; at 30 days, foundation to the brain begins; at 43 days, brain waves start. At six weeks, the nervous system and muscles start working; at seven weeks, internal organs are present; at eight weeks, lines of hands develop; at eight and a half weeks, the child squints, fingertips close to the touch; at ten weeks, thyroid and adrenalin glands work; at twelve weeks, the child kicks, turns, curls, fans his toes, inhales, exhales, swallows and drinks fluids.

Certainly if we consider these actions we realize that this foetus at a very young age is a human being doing many of the human functions. I believe it is a crime that this bill considers the destruction of young children. Vince Collin, MD, on February 13, 1984 suggested that the human foetus experiences pain as early as 13 weeks. Foetal pain could be experienced simply by the mother moving. The child in the womb responds in a certain way by kicking or some other movement. By the eleventh week the foetus develops sensitivity to touch; the hands and the feet first move when they are touched.

As an educator I experienced many times that pregnant women when exposed to music and other stimuli during their pregnancy would increase the ability of that child to learn at later stages of life. Many things can be done to develop human qualities and human characteristics before the child is born. Therefore, we must perceive that this young being is human at very early stages and abortion certainly ignores this.

Let us consider the 10 most common ways women have responded to abortion. Studies conclude that 100 per cent of the women surveyed showed that they grieve when or after an abortion occurred. Some 92 per cent illustrated depression, 92 per cent illustrated anger and guilt. Fear that others would find out was illustrated in 89 per cent. Surprise emotion was illustrated by 85 per cent, and a lower sense of dignity was illustrated by 73 per cent. When we stop and think about that we realize that the woman who has had an abortion is certainly suffering from the effects of that abortion at later times as well.

Health is one of the reasons this bill gives in trying to justify abortions. It seems to me that 63,000 Canadian women, mostly between the ages of 15 and 29, are not at health risks, therefore statistics would illustrate that the reason for health and abortion does not seem to go together.

The proposed legislation bans abortion except when recommended by doctors for reasons of physical or mental health of patients. Will this reduce abortions? No, it will not. If 63,000 abortions are necessary, there would be a serious epidemic among those women. Unmarried women have a great percentage of those abortions carried out. Are unmarried women at more of a health risk than married women? I do not think so.

In 1987 a study in England and Wales showed that abortions in 1968 and 1986 revealed that only .005 per cent were actually for mothers in danger of losing lives. If we apply that figure to today's number of abortions needed for women in danger of losing their life, we would find that only three out of the 63,000 require protection of life. Therefore, it seems to me that that issue is not an important one either.

If statistics and history show that mental and physical danger are not real claims to reason for abortion, should the law protect the unborn? I believe it should. This law should enhance the right to life of children. The bill should provide an environment where women may have children and have alternatives to abortion. This bill does not fill those needs. This bill does not protect the right of the unborn or help mothers who are pregnant. I feel that this law is not a good one. It is one that I cannot support.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I consider the speech I am making tonight to be the most important intervention I have made in my 11 years in this House. What we are talking about is truly a matter of life and death.

I had the opportunity to speak in the debate on capital punishment and I spoke against the state taking the lives of criminals, because I believe that the state should be consistent. That is, the state cannot say: "Thou shalt not kill, but I can". If I vote to save the lives of criminals, how much more important is it that I vote to protect the life of the unborn child?

Having been born and reared on a farm many miles from a city, I came early to an understanding of the value of life, for generally children on farms were cherished. They were essential to the long-term viability of the health of the family and of the productivity of the land.

Even the lives of animals on farms were important. Human babies were cherished and, indeed, the wealth of the family was judged more by the size of the family than by the bank account, which was usually non-existent anyway. Times were tough, but generally our parents and grandparents had their priorities straight. Had it not been so, this country would not have grown, matured and prospered to the affluent state we have today.

It is true that our parents and grandparents did not have the knowledge and the easy access to birth control methods and means that we have today, or perhaps many of us would not be here and we would have had even more immigration. It is also true that there were more sacrifices demanded of our forebears, but are they or we any the worse for that? I think not.

Early on in our lives we were taught to cherish life, to love life, and to live it to the fullest, but living life to the fullest then meant to be productive, to share with others who were less fortunate, to contribute to the community's growth and development, to look after the weak, and to care for friends and neighbours.

Since the 1960s we have witnessed the explosion of knowledge, the growth of urban development, the flights to new frontiers, the era of medical transplants, and many other advances in science and technology which instead of making us more human, more caring, more secure and more loving too often tend to be in the opposite direction. In general, we seem to have become more ambitious, more grasping, more selfish, more uncaring. We are now surrounded by a very different environment that makes it more difficult for us to recognize day after day the importance of certain values.

Let us look at the question facing us today. Should we allow abortions in this country, or should we not? On the one side, we have those who want women to have the right to have an abortion, period.

Those people are usually in favour of abortion for various reasons, but most of these reasons are the following: first, freedom of choice. They believe that women should have the right to decide when they want to be pregnant. They also believe that women should have the right to decide how many children they want to have. Many of them believe that by keeping control over their family they will have a better chance to pursue their education or their career. All of that is quite fine, but the question is: When does that control begin? Second is to preserve the mother's health and third is to protect the mental state of some women who would not be able to deal with pregnancy.

On the other hand there are those opposed to abortion. These people believe that abortion is actually an act by which the life of a human being is taken. They believe that abortion is in fact the killing of a baby, that it is criminal, and that it should be not allowed.

For my part I can tell you I strongly believe that a foetus is a living human being from the very moment the ovum and the sperm are united. At that moment the die is cast, the characteristics of the individual are irrevocably determined, and as such it has the right to life.

I want to make it clear that I agree with most of the concerns and aspirations of today's women. I am not saying that their aspirations are wrong. I totally support them, but I am saying I am opposed to the fact that abortion could be a means toward those ends.

I believe that there are positive solutions we must use or find. I believe that abortion is wrong. I believe that abortion is the killing of an unborn child. It is our duty as parliamentarians to help bring about the necessary changes to make this country a place where families and mothers will feel confident and happy to give birth. It is our duty as parliamentarians to concentrate on solutions that will help those changes happen.

We have to be serious. No longer can we make empty promises. No longer can we make more equivocation. We must act. We are a caring nation. We always have been. We will make sure that women will have equal opportunity, equal rights, and equal pay for work of equal value.

If we are a caring nation we will make sure that women will have adequate maternity benefits and adequate incentives and safeguards to allow for both motherhood and career. We will make sure to address the problems facing single mothers, especially those living in poverty. We will make sure to address the problems facing the children of our country, our most important natural resource. I believe that if we find solutions to these problems we will find the solution to abortion and the solution to many other social problems that no legislation can or will solve completely.

I want to tell you that I am for life and I believe there are other ways to solve the problems of women than killing the unborn. As far as I am concerned, it is very clear and simple. I am opposed to abortion, and I will vote against this bill because I believe that it is virtually abortion on demand.

This legislation is another example of a government afraid to take a stance. This is another example of a government taking both sides of the issue. This is another example of a lack of leadership. This is another example of smoke and mirrors politics.

It is time for this government to cease the systematic destruction of our social programs. It is time for this government to address the serious problem facing the country rather than try to abolish symptoms. It is time for this government to say no to the killing of the unborn and to say yes to life.

It is time for this government to examine its collective conscience and have the courage to change its mindless flight to discredited theories of the past and to create the kinds of social programs that will address these problems and make it unnecessary for the killing of the unborn. It is time for compassion, enlightenment and innovation. It is time to say no to the killing of the unborn and to say yes to life.

It is time for all of us to put our priorities in order and to make number one the priority of the development of systems that will make it possible for women to bear children and still maintain a place in the workplace. I will vote against this bill. I was not elected to be an accessory to the destruction of human life.

• (2135)

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I, too, follow the theme developed by many of the members who have spoken on this issue in the House in the last few weeks. We have been thinking about the seriousness of the issue in front of us and the number of hours we have all put in in our constituency offices and in Parliament. We have been thinking about the problems at hand and about what our colleagues have said before us and what people will say after us, and about how the public is judging the importance of this debate. I know that in the Liberal caucus it has been a subject of many hours of discussion because of the diverse views and each one of us approaches this from our own perspective in a very serious manner.

It is with a combination of sadness and determination that I must oppose this particular piece of legislation. I am opposing it because I think that there is no place in the Criminal Code for this particular amendment. The issue at hand for me is whether or not having an abortion is a criminal activity. The essence of the government's decision and the legislation it has put in front of the House of Commons is that abortion should be treated as a criminal activity and therefore those people involved with it, particularly doctors, should be subject to criminal examination under the criminal law.

I for one find that this is a most difficult situation, one in which there is much private agony for a woman. Whether she is on her own or discusses this with friends or others, I cannot think of any situation more difficult for someone to go through and I think it is wrong to combine that with a piece of legislation which says that on top of dealing with this very difficult moral situation, you also must deal with the law which makes this a crime.

For that reason I have decided to vote against this particular piece of legislation. I wish the government to understand that the use of the criminal law is no way to deal with one of the most serious issues on a personal level, and therefore on a societal level, that we have in front of us.

Although the government has presented itself as being very brave in the presentation of this legislation, saying that in fact it has shown great management, that it has shown itself to be a leader on both a moral and legally difficult question, in fact it has walked away from some of the most important questions facing us.

Those questions deal, first, with the health system. Because most of our health system is administered provincially, we have questions of definition of health and questions of definition of access to be determined not by the federal government but in the provincial system. For women the question becomes not only what is the national law, but in fact what is the legislation in each province.

There are already regions in this country where women do not have access to medical help in situations such as this. This will only be making it more difficult because not only do you have the moral question but you have the legal parameters which make many people afraid of getting involved with these situations.

Second, the administration of the criminal law generally speaking falls to the provincial government. The definition of what action should be taken and the definition of who should be prosecuted will end up falling in the Attorney General's office. Thus the two most important components of this piece of legislation, the definition of health which follows from the administration of health and the definition of an illegal activity, in fact fall within the parameters of the provincial governments.

For those reasons, instead of presenting us with a most progressive approach to a difficult problem, the government has in fact walked away from it entirely. It disappoints me greatly that we are going to be left with a criminal definition and no other suggestions.

Also, though the Minister of Health has intervened very briefly in this debate to indicate there will be new family legislation, I join my many colleagues to say that one of the sad things in this country is that once people are born into it, in many circumstances, whether we are talking about reserves in northern Manitoba or low income families in downtown Winnipeg or elsewhere in this country, the plight of children weighs heavily upon all of us.

Although the Canadian government supports this universal declaration on the rights of children that is being discussed in the United Nations, in reality when it comes to showing Canadians that their children will be looked after, that there will be nourishment, that there will be education, that there will be appropriate laws, that there will be supports for them, the Canadian government is totally absent.

• (2140)

In all particular efforts, whether we are talking about dealing with family law or family support systems for children the Criminal Code, this government has walked away from its responsibilities. In that respect the particular proposal to criminalize abortion should be rejected and the House of Commons should give every indication to the women of this country that as they make these difficult decisions, those are decisions that they make themselves, those are not decisions that we are going to impose upon them, that we respect their freedom and we respect their independence.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on this bill because this piece of legislation upsets me. I would much rather have spoken on a bill that talked about life, the right to life, this ultimate right which precedes all others. This bill deals with existence and non-existence, and for those like me who believe that life begins at conception, this bill is a matter of life and death.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, every one of us pursues freedom, all freedoms, freedom of expression, freedom to choose what we please, freedom to live our life as we see fit. But this pursuit of freedom should never lead us to refuse life and to make a judgement against life. I believe that if we took such a course, we would be mistaken.

The bill which the government has presented to us is an abdication of its responsibility to govern, to give Canadians direction, some clear indication, and I believe it also has a responsibility to protect life. As it is now written, this bill is an open door to abortion, it is abortion on demand, birth control via abortion. For me, this approach is completely unacceptable. I also find it unacceptable for this government to present us with such a vague and open bill that it will lead both supporters of the right to abortion and supporters of the right to life to vote against it for completely opposite reasons. Should that happen, which seems quite likely, we would find ourselves with no law to protect and guarantee the foetus' right to life.

When he presented this bill to the House, the Minister of Justice told us that it was a compromise—the only compromise which the government could put forward. I would have hoped that if there had to be compromise, the government would have compromised on the side of life. I am very disappointed with this option which the government has chosen and also with the way it has chosen to proceed.

Very briefly, I can say I have no problem when people talk about protecting life, since in cases where the mother's life would have been at risk, no one would have denied the mother the same right to life.

I also have a problem with the various stages at which the bill will be considered. It is now being considered on second reading and will then go to committee. If I had any hope that the bill might be reported back with significant amendments, I would be inclined to support the bill on second reading. However, I am afraid the bill might come back from committee without amendments. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) raised these doubts in my mind when he said the government could not accept any amendments and that the bill had to go ahead as tabled.

So you see the kind of dilemma I am facing. If I vote for the bill on second reading, the government may think it can go ahead and consider my vote as positive support for the bill. It may choose to go ahead without any amendments, and finally, the bill might not survive third reading, which brings us back to square one, and we would still have no legislation.

So I think it is unacceptable that we have no laws to protect this life, to give this right,—I should not say give, because it is not ours to give—to protect and secure the foetus' right to life.

[English]

In conclusion, I want to make very clear that I support the protection of life. I think the government should have come up with a bill that would have given this protection to the foetus and I will vote accordingly so that life is afforded all the protection we can give it.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, everyone finds that they are in a unique position, a most difficult position in this debate. I rise as a member of the New Democratic Party and also as an ex-principal of a Catholic school for some 26 years. To suggest other than what I am about to suggest, I believe I would be labelled as a hypocrite. I am proud to be a member of my party, and I am also proud of my stance.

I would like to quote Father Bob Ogle who, on November 18, 1980, delivered a speech on abortion. He stated, as reported at page 4826 of Hansard:

> The human rights which I support are, first, the right to be born; second, the right to adequate food, housing, medical care, and education; third, the right to live in, at least, frugal comfort within one's cultural tradition; fourth, freedom of conscience, worship expression, political participation and peaceful dissent; fifth, equal treatment in public, job markets, and courts, regardless of sex, age, ethnic origin, marital status, religious of political beliefs, social and economic status; sixth, the right to social assistance when age or other circumstances make self-support inadequate; and seventh, the right to die with dignity.

I am proud to espouse those same principles.

People asked me just one year ago how I could become a New Democrat and have an anti-abortionist stance. I am proud of both of my decisions. Over the past month I have undergone the most poignant, gut-wrenching, if you will, period of my life. I know that our party has a pro-choice stance but I believe that our party has the most pro-life philosophies and policies of any party available to the Canadian public.

I am going to digress, no doubt, from the context of my speech. I am going to thank my women colleagues in the New Democratic Party for empathizing with me at a most difficult time in my life. I have become very sensitive to what they believe in and I believe that they have shown empathy to me. Through this all, they have taught me a great deal. Once we have become sensitized to one another, the issue has not become any easier. In fact, it has become much more difficult. They have told me that we must continue to dialogue and we have continued to dialogue.

My party stands for choice. It was clear and it is clear that I have not agreed with the position. We, nevertheless, stand together against this legislation for different reasons. But even in this variance in opinion we agree that the proposed legislation is nothing more than a sham, a feeble attempt at a compromise.

It is proffered that if you do not vote for this, you are not getting anything in its stead; this is the best you can expect. I believe that oftentimes in politics, compromise is important but on this issue I do not believe the compromise is acceptable.

In isolation the abortion issue cannot be addressed. In this legislation there is no mention of the rights of the foetus. There is no accompanying legislation, no mention of social spending, no mention of assistance in areas of obvious need, counselling, infrastructure, support systems, adoption; nothing to address the obvious significant demand for abortion. We must reduce this demand but we can only do it through legislation that helps, not hinders the poor, the homeless, the uncared for and the unloved.

We can be occupied with deficits but not preoccupied with them. We must be concerned with GST's and clawbacks, but not overly concerned. We must be concerned with foreign aid, but not overly concerned when our own suffer each and every day. We should not persecute those who make their choice, although different from ours, because it is not an acceptable way to act. We should not accuse others of being chauvinist or feminist because of the choices they have made. We must not pretend to not understand or appreciate the opposing viewpoints when we truly do understand and appreciate.

These are the letters that I have received in one week, I think because of my station in life prior to my position as a member of Parliament. I would like to say that I have read them all. It does not make the decision any easier. I will say that I am a little disappointed in some of my friends at home because some long-term associates greeted me with "Dear Mr. Butland, My future political decisions will be based on your vote". There were no P.S.'s saying "Hi Steve, how are you doing?", nothing personalized at all. They were generic letters from people that I knew and know and am very friendly with on a regular basis. I hope that they will not be affronted by what I have said but that we can continue to dialogue as well.

I have literally thousands of generic letters. I received one letter that touched me to the very core and I would like to read just a few excerpts because I think this woman has put it more succinctly and more poignantly than any of the other thousands of letters I have received.

It reads: "I would like to address the issue of abortion and would appreciate your reading this letter. I was an unwanted child born into an alcoholic home. I was severely abused; physically, sexually, emotionally and psychologically. I now carry the scars of this abuse. If abortion had been legal then I am sure I would not be writing this letter today. I have been in therapy for 13 years, have contemplated suicide many times and have had two emotional breakdowns. I wake up with the pain in the morning and I go to bed with it at night. My point to you, Sir, is not that I should not have been born but, instead, that I had every right to be born and every right to walk this planet for the last number of years. My only mistake all those years was believing I did not have a right to the air that I breathe."

It really does get more and more poignant as it continues and I think that it is appropriate that I stop now.

I will be opposing this legislation because it does not take a stand on either side of an issue which demands a very definite stand.

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening in this House to debate one of the most important issues facing our nation, Bill C–43, an act respecting abortion. I feel I must rise this evening and speak in this debate in order to put my opinions forward as unequivocally as possible. Tonight in this Chamber we are debating abortion but, more important, we are debating life.

The bill proposed by the Conservative government was presented as a bill that attempted to strike a compromise between the right of the woman to personal freedom, to personal choice, to personal privacy and, of course, the community's and the nation's interest in protecting the right to life of the unborn child.

Obviously the government thought that this bill represented a balanced approach. Well, it is not a balanced approach to the issue of life. Hon. members, everything I believe, everything that I hold dear, my social and cultural make-up, my personal beliefs as a human being, tells me that abortion is wrong. I feel within myself, passionately, that abortion is against the natural order. It negates the essence of our being.

This bill does absolutely nothing to protect the life of the unborn child. It does not in any way answer the fundamental question, the question of life. It does not address the value and the dignity of human existence. This bill's definitions are unbelievably vague. The bill states that abortion is prohibited unless the mother's health is endangered, but how does the government define health? The definition is so broad and so vague that we are basically speaking about abortion on demand.

Who is this government trying to fool? This government, I believe, really needs to do some soul searching from within, it needs to look within itself and take a serious stand on this extremely important issue. I think this government has failed drastically with this bill. I particularly do not think that abortion on demand is the answer to building a caring, compassionate and humanitarian society, a responsible society.

There is no question in my mind that personal freedom, personal liberty, is one of the most fundamental characteristics of our state, of our nation. However, I must also say that the personal freedom of one individual should take into consideration the impact, the effects it has on other lives and one must always focus on the essence of human rights and human dignity. Nor does personal freedom give you a licence to destroy other life. Thus, tonight we have to debate the right of the mother versus the right of the unborn.

Tonight I am going to speak on behalf of those who cannot speak for themselves, the unborn children of our nation. As members of Parliament, we are all here today simply because our parents decided to allow us to live. Quite frankly, with all due respect to my mother, I do not think she had the right to decide whether I should continue to live or not.

All of the hon. members in this House I am sure are happy to be alive. If we can make this statement consciously and responsibly, then I do not understand how any of us can accept giving the responsibility and the right to anyone to decide on who will live and who will not. Abortion is a human issue that affects all of us. We never think of leaving an abandoned child to die. We take great pain in seeing children in poor countries dying of malnutrition and starvation. Our hearts go out to them. Why then do we allow ourselves and why do we allow thousands of babies born alive in late term abortions to die? How can we allow millions more to be destroyed in the womb and still do nothing about it?

I firmly and passionately believe that we owe the same responsibility to these unfortunates as we do to all other human beings. We certainly have the right and the obligation to initiate laws and to establish laws to protect all human life. We have it in our power to re-establish the value of human life and respect due to it.

We often hear this so-called right to choose argument. While often cited, I believe it is irrelevant to the issue. The issue is not the right of the mother to control her own body, but whether she has the right to decide the future of another human being who shares her body. The innocent baby is certainly denied the right to choose. No one has the right to take the life of another person at will. Not the doctor, not the mother. Absolutely no one.

If there is a cause to be concerned about the health of the mother, then as a society we must make all possible efforts to save, not just one life, but both.

We must remember that pregnancy is not an illness. It is a natural state, a beautiful gift of life that unfortunately many people are not able to experience. We must build a nation that welcomes childbirth rather than promote abortions.

As Parliamentarians, I think we must devote our attention toward building the type of socio-economic infrastructure that will give the unborn child a better chance to live. Today, with the introduction of this bill we have taken a serious step backwards. We should concentrate our energies on better education, more accessible social services such as day care, counselling, adequate housing for the disadvantaged, a social safety net that will mean that women of this nation, by giving birth to a child are not signing their names on the poverty role of our nation. Unfortunately, in this country this is the reality. More attention should be placed on the identification of causes of abortion so that our social and economic structure can better address the needs of our people.

As a Member of Parliament, I have always believed that one of my important duties and obligations was to represent those Canadians who, through no fault of their own, could not help themselves, the disadvantaged. The unborn child is certainly disadvantaged. He cannot express his views. He cannot manifest his emotions or his feelings. He is helpless and weak. I cannot accept the law that will allow the continuous destruction of human life. We must help people at the most vulnerable point of their lives. We must have faith and endure to protect human life. Canadians must realize that caring for the unborn child is the cornerstone and the beginning of a caring nation, caring for our future and caring for our people.

I am sure that the residents of York North agree that all measures must be taken by this government to make sure that the life of the unborn child is protected. I will vote against this bill because it does not show any consideration for the life of the unborn child.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The debate on the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-43 is adjourned to the next sitting of the House, pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, 1989.

Pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, 1989 this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m.

The House resumed from Monday, November 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis that Bill C–43, an act respecting abortion, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I too stand here today to speak on Bill C–43, an act respecting abortion. I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate on this bill. I do not assume to be any different from any of the other legislators in this House, in the approach used in reaching a conclusion on this very complex issue. I must give thanks to the hundreds of my Nepean constituents who have corresponded with me over the past few months, expressing their opinion on abortion. They have been most helpful. In the absence of the bill, those correspondents addressed abortion generally. Now that Bill C–43 is before us, a different set of opinions is coming forward.

Every one of us entering this abortion debate brings a different idea of the meaning of life and the purpose of our existence. This debate has nothing to do with what I personally think about this issue. This debate, being held in the House of Commons, must centre around the legislation which we, as legislators, must implement.

Like most married women, I am a mother, a mother of five and a grandmother of two. I never had to make a decision as to whether or not they were wanted children. They were all automatically wanted children. That obviously places me very much on the side of life. Interestingly enough, I have discovered that no one likes abortion, regardless of which side of the issue they fall into.

Our role as legislators is to find a way to deal with this issue so that the constitutional rights of women are balanced with the rights of the foetus. The question then becomes, does Bill C–43 achieve this? The government has an obligation to present legislation that delineates purpose and direction. Bill C–43 does not give us a compromise, it does not give us a solution. I believe that this bill is intellectually disgraceful and constitutionally dishonest. In my estimation, the bill neither addresses the rights of the foetus nor the rights of the woman. As the Citizens for Public Justice stated: "To introduce a pro–life amendment to the Criminal Code without social policy changes will not adequately protect human life."

"To give women legal rights to abortion without social policy changes means that many woman have few effective choices, other than abortion". We as a society need legislation and we need regulation. However, it saddens me that this bill will come under the Criminal Code. It saddened me to hear a member of this House say a few days ago: "Women who abort must be punished". I say that women must be supported, not punished, when her behaviour is contrary to what that person feels is right.

The issue at hand is how do you protect the unborn and how do you protect the mother? I believe we are attacking this issue from the wrong direction.

Let us address the whys and the wherefores of abortion. There is absolutely no support system in place, a system that would ensure counselling at the outset, moral support, financial support, assurances that adoption procedures are available. Fifty per cent of abortions are performed on young women under 25 years of age. Why are we not looking at ways to help women avoid unwanted pregnancies and to cope with these pregnancies when they occur? Why are we not dealing with women caught in the poverty trap? Why are we not addressing housing? Why are we not addressing the victims of rape and incest?

I would like to suggest that if we address the social aspect of pregnancies and subsequent abortions, that the present 60,000 annual abortions would most likely be reduced by two-thirds.

Health regulation is predominantly within provincial jurisdiction. Although it has been argued that the federal government should use the spending power under the Canada Health Act to enforce equality of access and funding, it would appear the federal government feels that it is impossible to address access and funding in criminal legislation.

I note that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources comments that Bill C-43 is: "The best the government could do. The best the House could do. The best that society could do on this issue at this time". I believe that Bill C-43 is second best.

We are presently living in a country that allows abortion on demand. I cannot support that approach either, but neither can I support legislation criminalizing women. It is unacceptable to create abortion legislation without creating legislation that assures adequate resources to both women and children. Women and the unborn deserve better than Bill C-43.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I am pleased to participate in this debate on Bill C-43. Like many of my colleagues, I can say that it is one of the most difficult questions that I as a member of Parliament have had to deal with in the 10 years I have been here.

I rise today to make a plea to colleagues, notwithstanding the powerful conviction they may have about this issue, notwithstanding the passion they may feel on this issue to at least allow the process of a substantive debate in Canada on the question of abortion to proceed. I respect the views of all those who have spoken because I know this is a difficult question. It is one that goes right to the heart of notion of conscience, individual conscience of a member of Parliament.

Personally I have some difficulty, notwithstanding my personal feelings on a abortion, with the notion that perhaps a majority of members, with the best of intentions, with the most pristine notions in mind, may put an end to a long overdue substantive discussion on abortion by defeating Bill C-43 at this stage without giving this Parliament, and through Parliament the people of Canada, an opportunity to engage in a debate on this question by way of committee.

In the 10 years that I have been in Parliament the number of times this issue has come up, it has come up primarily as a consequence of somebody who can be described as either pro-choice or pro-life making a 60-second statement before Question Period. There can be no rebuttal, no debate, no exchange of views, and no real attempt in that process to understand each other or even to persuade, but rather it is an opportunity to put a particular position on the record. That is what has happened for 10 years. In doing that, members have either put their own personal point of view on the record, or as some have said, they believe that they are representing the point of view of the majority of their constituents.

However, we have not had in this place a real discussion, an opportunity to hear witnesses representing every point of view, or to call upon the best legal minds in Canada and to try to consider and understand what the legal implications are of this bill vis-à-vis the Supreme Court decisions that have already been made or what other propositions might be.

Personally, this bill is not the route that I would have preferred. I would have preferred something different. I would like an opportunity through the committee process to see whether or not that something different—and I can tell you that it is the gestational approach—might have an opportunity to find support before a legislative committee of this Parliament.

Notwithstanding my own point of view, it seems to me for members to say today that because the bill does not represent what I want, whatever that point of view might be, I am going to vote against the bill, I am going to end the debate, I am going to stop the discussion, I am going to walk away from this issue and leave it to some future Parliament, some more brilliant, enlightened collection of men and women to deal with, is not acceptable. In my mind, that is simply not an acceptable process.

I respect those who think differently. But I ask those who feel differently to consider what is being contemplated. What is being contemplated is to continue in and outside this place and across this country a sterile debate, a total conflict between two extreme points of view, with no possibility of any substantial discussion, meaningful discussion, communication, listening, understanding; putting yourself in somebody else's shoes, whether you decided they fit or not is not important, at least take a moment to put yourself in them and try to build for Canada on this very difficulty moral question some consensus.

It is quite possible at the end of a legislative process that Parliament and members will be as unhappy as many of them are today about this bill. It is quite possible at the end of a legislative process that I personally will vote against this bill.

Recently, I was a member of a standing committee that used its wisdom to reject a government measure. I refer to the Standing Committee on Transport which rejected the government's decision on VIA Rail. It asked for a moratorium, and said more work needs to be done. Therefore, if I understand the notion of the legislative process and the spirit of parliamentary reform, and have any faith in the process, certainly on a matter of conscience, I believe that it is possible for a legislative committee to act in a totally non-partisan manner, to give this bill its best consideration, to explore in every sense of the word what this bill represents and to possibly propose amendments, some that might find favour in this House.

My difficulty is that if we stop the process because the bill we want is not before us, and defeat the bill at this stage, there is no doubt in my mind that there will not be another bill, and perhaps some people desire that, before this Parliament for many, many years to come.

I am being non-partisan, but certainly the party opposite, and the Minister of Justice, is not going to bring in another bill. Whether we appreciate his effort or not, whether we applaud it or not, this is the minister's best effort. It is not the bill that I would have drafted but I did not have the job. If we at least do not take it to the legislative process, I can tell you this government will not bring in another bill. Let me go farther. I speak for myself only. That would not surprise me, nor would I particularly blame them. I believe if there were—thankfully for the people of Canada—an election next week and a new administration sworn in, it is questionable whether that new administration, if this bill were defeated at this stage and did not even make the legislative process, would bring in a new piece of legislation.

At the end of the day none of us can predict if we will have a piece of legislation that the House can support. I cannot say, nor can any member, based on going through the legislative process, when, presumably, amendments are made or suggested, that the bill that goes into the legislative process will bear any resemblance to the one that comes out. None of us can predict at the end of the day what a legislative committee will do. What anyone who has been here for any period of time can predict is, if we kill the bill at this stage, no matter what one's individual point of view, or the point of view of his or her constituents, there will be no other legislation.

I think that the Minister of Justice will be in a powerful position and, indeed, the government and the Prime Minister will be in a powerful position to say that we gave it our best judgment, we sought what we thought was the most reasonable consensus, whether or not it is a reasonable consensus, whether or not it is deemed to be good judgment. The House of Commons has taken a decision not even to take it to committee, not even to debate the matter further, rejected it out of hand, and not exercised the process available to us. We at this stage believe we have no other obligation, we have discharged our duties. We have put a proposal before Parliament. Parliament has refused not to approve or disapprove it, but even consider it.

I submit to members that that is a fundamental responsibility of parliamentarians. That is why we fight here with great passion, especially members of the opposition and members on the back-benches on the government side, for the independence or growing independence or increased independence of committees. We claim it is absolutely vital to our work that we have an opportunity to consider government bills with a measure of independence; that we have an opportunity at the end of the day to make up our own minds and to make objective recommendations back to Parliament. We claim that we must have the opportunity, if we want, in committee to practically rewrite government legislation, or dramatically alter it, if the word Parliament is to mean something, and if the role of the individual member beyond that of supporting a party chief is to mean something. If the role of elected representatives beyond being a member of their caucus is to mean something, there has to be beyond the glare, the glitter and the glamour of Question Period, some place for us to exercise our best judgment, and to give us the opportunity, notwithstanding party stripes or caucuses, to persuade each other and to find out if, on occasion, notwithstanding ideological differences, there is common ground.

If we at this stage defeat this bill we have turned our back on all of that. We have said that we only believe in the legislative process and the role of a member of Parliament independent of the leadership and independent of his caucus only when it is convenient.

If this bill is sent on to the legislative committee it is going to be a very difficult process for all those who participate. It is going to be by extension a very tough process for all those who observe or participate indirectly, or have to deal with the recommendations of a committee. But that is our job.

I am not pleading for the bill. I am not pleading that this bill be passed or accepted today as it currently stands, but I do make a plea for colleagues to take a chance on launching us beyond a sterile debate in which we get as different as day and night, black and white, conflicting views on this question hurled across the floor by members in 60 seconds, and a sterile debate from which there is no resolution. We may not find a resolution this time but at least let us not walk away from the opportunity to have as members on behalf of Canadians an opportunity for a full debate.

My plea today is for members to take advantage of the process that we have for ordinary members. I am one. I have no special privileges or titles. I am not an officer of this place. It will enable members to have an opportunity to participate in an important debate, and to give back to this House a recommendation, which may be this one or it may be dramatically different, that represents the best judgment of members when they have gathered, when they are conscientious and want to do good work on behalf of the people of Canada.

I hope this bill is supported when it comes up next for a vote.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I do understand that there are a couple of members who have been caught by the weather coming in from the airport and are having difficulties getting here. We did want to make sure that they would have an opportunity to speak.

Perhaps the House could agree to adjourn to the call of the Chair until we can send signals to the Speaker that these members have arrived. We can still proceed with the House order and have the Prime Minister speak at eleven o'clock without having to worry about quorum calls.

Mr. Gauthier: I would like to agree with that disposition, although I do not think we should adjourn. I think we should suspend the sitting which would be easier in procedural terms.

I understand we have a speaker who is presently in a taxi, but the streets are quite slippery, it is raining outside and he is having difficulty getting here. As soon as he arrives, I would appreciate if the House would reconvene and we continue with the debate.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion put by the parliamentary secretary, supported by the hon. member for Ottawa–Vanier, and I take it supported by the New Democratic Party is that we suspend until I receive a message to resume debate.

Is it the wish of the House to suspend the sitting to the call of the bell?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 10.30 a.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 11.05 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, the sitting was suspended for some minutes due to inclement weather and the difficulties some members were having in reaching the House. The debate is now resuming.

I recognize the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this has been a difficult debate for all hon. members, but it has been edifying for those who value the institution of Parliament. I respect the integrity of all those who preceded me. Their arguments have been principled and, I thought, persuasive.

There can be few questions on which views are as strongly or as deeply held. Some believe there should be no impediment to abortion. Others believe abortion should be severely restricted. Both of these positions have been advanced in this debate, sometimes passionately, but always with the clear, true ring of personal sincerity and conviction.

As individuals, my cabinet colleagues and I feel no less intensely than other Hon. Members about these questions. Indeed, some ministers, speaking in this debate in support of the bill, have properly taken the occasion to state their own personal conscientious views on the subject of abortion. Ministers, however, have an added responsibility.

In a situtation such as we now face, we must provide leadership. We must achieve a solution that is philosophically sound, constitutionally correct, politically acceptable and administratively practicable; that is, a solution which can be understood and implemented. Our duty is to act for the common good.

[English]

The government accepts its responsibility. On this matter we ask all members of Parliament to share in that responsibility.

[Editor's Note: Disturbance in gallery.]

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to say that I do not seek to change anyone's personal conscientious views on abortion. With regard to some people, it is unlikely that anyone would ever succeed. What is important, what is absolutely indispensable, is that all members of the House have the right to rise in their places and to speak for or against this resolution and to be listened to carefully, and with respect by all other members at all times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is what explains the simple magnificence of Parliament. That is what election to the House of Commons brings. We are called upon as best we can, products that we are of our own environments, to come together to resolve great national issues. We do it based on respect for one another, respect for one another's deeply held religious and moral views, and we do it always by listening carefully to one another and respecting one another's opinions.

What we heard a few moments ago is the antithesis of Parliament, and parliamentary democracy must resist that. That is why this House of Commons must always be supreme.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I do not seek to change anyone's personal conscientious views on abortion. Rather I ask that you consider joining me in exercising leadership, in achieving balance, in finding a workable legislative solution to this problem in the national interest.

Almost two years have passed since the Supreme Court of Canada struck down Section 251 of the Criminal Code. All three majority judgments of the court concurred that the abortion law was a violation of the guarantee of security of the person and the principles of fundamental justice in Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Section 251 of the Criminal Code had been the law of the land on abortion for 19 years. If hon. members think that the question is difficult today, and it is, they should spare a thought or two for our predecessors of 20 years ago in this House, some of whom are still with us, who had to legislate for the first time the conditions under which abortion would be legal in this country.

Nobody speaks with more authority on the subject than the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who was Minister of Justice in 1969. It is he who brought in the law that we are seeking to replace today. Twenty years ago, near the close of a long and emotional debate, he appealed to the House in these words:

> I realize full well that this matter goes right to the essence of life, goes right to the bone. There is not going to be any consensus on this issue in the House or in the country. We have not reached a consensus.

He went on to say:

> We have only reached what I might call an accommodation.

That was the position of the Leader of the Official Opposition, 20 years ago. He was quite right.

On November 8, when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition spoke in this debate, he used words almost identical to those he had used in 1969, and I quote from page 5728 of Hansard:

> Speaking frankly, we will never reach a consensus on this issue in the House of Commons or in the country. We can reach only an accommodation at best.

[English]

I think the Leader of the Opposition was right again. He was right 20 years ago, and he was right again this autumn. Parliament must again find what he accurately described as an accommodation. Canada requires that this be done, and it must be done now.

There is no denying at all that Canadian society has changed a great deal since 1969. Our law, our Constitution and many of our attitudes to social and moral questions have changed. Many of them changed for the better.

The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms expresses many of the values Canadians cherish as individuals and as a nation. The courts review the compatibility of our laws with the Charter in the light of changing times and circumstances.

In light of the Charter and in light of the times, the considerations that the Supreme Court of Canada tried to balance in the decision on abortion are very relevant. I think they should be repeated briefly today.

First, there is the right of a woman to security of her person. Second, there is the right of a woman to obtain medical services without limits that adversely affect her health. Third, there is the interest of society in protecting the health of the woman; and, of course, the interest of society in protecting the foetus.

[Translation]

In the bill that is now before the House, the government has sought to achieve a balance among those very valid considerations. We and our legal advisers have studied the Supreme Court judgments with the greatest care and respect. And we have drafted a law which we firmly believe is constitutional. We have tried to achieve a balance among the views held in Parliament and in public opinion. Most important, we have tried to fill the legal void created by the Supreme Court decision in January 1988.

Various interest groups, some with extreme views, as we saw this morning, others with much more moderate views, have rushed into that void.

Some provincial governments, in exercising their own constitutional responsibility for health, have tried to fill the void themselves by legislative or administrative action. And pregnant women and putative fathers have fought out their personal differences in the courts and the media, in a manner that at times brought both concern and sadness to the nation. We cannot allow such scenes to be repeated.

[English]

It is the proper role of government to restore certainty to this important social issue. It is our duty as legislators to assume our responsibilities to reconcile the often conflicting principles at play, to fill the legal void and to put an end to the vagaries of using particular cases to settle judicial rules.

It is now our duty as legislators to convey to the court the view of Parliament so that judges will know before they rule on individual cases how the members of this elected House of Commons feel collectively.

What does this mean in a country like ours with our vastly different ethnic and religious backgrounds, and disparate regional and local views? Ours is a society that values tolerance because it is the key to our integrity as a nation. Tolerance requires sensitivity to diverse interests and beliefs. Tolerance accepts that a balance must be struck in our national life.

The challenge that the government faces is to achieve a new law on abortion that balances divergent and sometimes even incompatible views, interests, beliefs and, in some cases, customs. I now appeal to hon. members in the spirit of tolerance to accept this law, to pass this law in the interests of all Canadians.

This bill is not long or complex. Its provisions have been explained cogently and I think fully by the Minister of Justice.

Let me say a brief word about the philosophical basis of the bill. It comes back again to the very important and vital question of balance. Life is deserving of protection throughout the pregnancy, but a woman has full constitutional rights to security of the person. Failure to respect her rights would make any law unconstitutional.

That much is clear from the decision of the Supreme Court.

I suppose that opinion is more polarized in this House of Commons on this issue than it is in the country, and that is, I think, very understandable. As candidates for Parliament, most of us have been pressed to take a stand on one side or the other of the issue, not as it really is, not in all of its sensitivity and its complexity, but as it has been defined by the various protagonists, "pro-choice" or " pro-life". All of us know how simplistic and unfair these labels are, and how inadequate they are in expressing the complexity of the issues involved and the factors which weigh upon the private conscience and the public duty of a Member of Parliament.

Let me, however, address all of those colleagues, a large majority I suspect for whom this bill does not represent the ideal.

Let me speak first to those hon. members who would describe themselves or be described as on the "pro-life" side of the debate. We have heard and understood your fundamental conscientious opposition to what is sometimes referred to as a gestational approach. We have tried to accommodate, to use the felicitous term of the Leader of the Opposition, your concern.

This bill makes no distinction as to life at any stage of development. The protection for life throughout the pregnancy is that of a qualified medical opinion on grounds of health according to the accepted standards of the medical profession. This provision and these standards are not perfunctory and the leaders of the medical profession have made it very clear that they do not regard these principles as such.

Still, this is not the very restricted access to abortion that some would have preferred. It is, nonetheless, an approach offering consistent protection throughout the pregnancy. We have gone as far in this direction as constitutional constraints permit.

Let me speak briefly to those hon. members who would describe themselves as on the "pro-choice" side of the debate. This bill declares that abortion is a health matter to be decided between a woman and her doctor on grounds of physical, mental or psychological health.

The law will be in the Criminal Code because, as the Minister of Justice has pointed out, the Criminal Code is the only tool by which the federal government can develop directly a framework within which abortion can be provided.

Suggestions that Parliament could use the Canada Health Act to regulate abortion are in the view of every one of our legal advisers highly dubious in a constitutional sense. The Canada Health Act cannot provide abortion or other medical services. It provides only for a financial penalty against those provinces that fail to observe the four fundamental conditions for the application of medicare.

So I ask those who are concerned about protecting the rights and the dignity and the health of women to consider the importance of this bill in providing leadership to those provincial governments which have jurisdiction for the delivery of health services and which, in some cases, would seek to deliver services in a manner inconsistent with the collective views of the members of this House.

I draw to your attention recent comments of Mr. Justice Allan Linden, the distinguished chairman of the Law Reform Commission of Canada, as reported on November 7. "Recriminalizing abortion," Mr. Justice Linden said, "was needed to ensure that various provinces did not enact Draconian laws to restrict access to the procedure."

"What always concerned me," he said, "was the prospect of provincial intrusions. By making abortion a therapeutic procedure covered by the Criminal Code, the provinces will find it much more difficult to jump in with their own legislation and evade their obligations under the Canada Health Act to pay for medical services—"

I think Mr. Justice Linden makes an extremely valid and important point. Nobody sought to recriminalize the question of abortion for the pleasure of doing it. It was brought under the purview of the Criminal Code because of legal imperatives in terms of application nationally.

Moreover, this bill does not treat women as criminals for seeking a therapeutic abortion. On the contrary, this bill provides penalties only for those who induce an abortion illegally, that is, anyone other than a qualified practitioner.

This bill does not provide for abortion on demand. It does require a medical opinion in addition to the decision of the woman, on health grounds. I think this is a logical consequence of treating abortion as a health matter, as it should be.

Regarding the availability of abortions to women who need them, this bill, by providing a national framework, sends the provinces a signal that should clarify their approach and assist them in the provision of abortion as a medical service. This can only improve access and it is the most immediately effective way for the federal government to do so within our constitutional authority.

Mr. Speaker, this bill represents our best effort to legislate an acceptable solution to the problem Canada has faced since the Supreme Court decision of January 1988.

[English]

If this bill does not succeed, it is hard to see what other bill could win the approval of the House and survive a challenge before the courts. It is highly unlikely that we could return to the issue with any prospect of success before another general election is held.

There are disappointed members on either side of the issue who may be tempted to vote against it. Some might prefer to wait until the chances are better for a stronger pro-life bill. Others might believe that the absence of any federal law on abortion favours the pro-choice viewpoint.

I disagree with both of these perspectives, because the imperatives at issue preclude any one-sided outcome to this debate. The outcome clearly must balance the rights of women to security of the person and the interest of society in protecting the foetus.

The absence of a federal law on abortion as we saw last summer satisfies only one of these imperatives and as such is unacceptable to the majority of Canadians.

[Translation]

The message most of us have been getting from Canadians with increasing insistence since last summer is that Parliament must act. The designation of abortion as a medical act is, alone, a reason of the utmost significance, impelling us to act. It would be unconscionable and intolerable to fail to restrict those who are unqualified, and who are not health professionals, from terminating a pregnancy.

[English]

We are urged to act on this matter in different ways, but there is no doubt whatsoever that people expect us to end the current unacceptable situation. They want us to accept our responsibility and bring in a new abortion law.

• (1130)

[Editor's Note: Disturbance in gallery.]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could assist the House. As hon. members know, there has been a disturbance; not a difficult matter, but a disturbance. Objects have been thrown into the Chamber. We have cleared the gallery. I just want to advise all hon. members that I have also sent word up that in a moment or two, now that the difficulty is over, we will allow, of course, the public back into the gallery.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, earlier, in an effort to reflect the status of this matter as a question of conscience, I referred to a free vote in this House, a series of options to resolve the legislative dilemma resulting from the Supreme Court's decision in Morgentaler. Each of these options failed in turn to muster a majority, leaving us no better off than when we began.

Further delay is unacceptable. Parliament must act and it must act now.

We in this House cannot solve the moral dilemma of the problem of abortion; nor can we substitute our judgment for the judgment of those many Canadian women who must weigh health and family considerations in reaching their decisions. They have my genuine consideration and deep respect.

And while all decisions in politics have moral implications and each of us tries to bring an informed conscience to the exercise of our public duty, no one in this House has been appointed an arbiter of anyone else's personal morality.

Many of us have been brought up to believe, and do believe, that abortion under almost any circumstances is morally wrong. But what we are called upon to do, as elected representatives of the people, is to determine under what circumstances the state should characterize abortion not as a sin, but as a crime. This power is one that lawmakers should always exercise with the utmost care and restraint.

The bill before us is philosophically sound; it is constitutionally valid; it is workable; it achieves balance and is fair. It is credible and just and will therefore be respected.

[Translation]

My colleagues and I are also convinced that this bill comes closer than any practical alternative to reflecting the position of the clear majority of Canadians who reject extremes and favour a moderate and balanced solution.

[English]

This new bill permits the most complex personal, moral and medical decisions to be made by a woman in privacy and dignity, free of coercion or undue sanctions by the state. In that spirit, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to all hon. members to support this bill. Let us together provide the leadership that Canadians expect of us today and need of us in the decades to come.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if members could give the Chair a moment's attention. We have had, as I said a moment ago, an interruption in the Chamber. I want to make it very clear that in view of what happened—and I hasten to assure all members and the public that there has been no harm done—it was necessary to clear the gallery for security purposes. The gallery was cleared quietly and those members of the public who were in the gallery co-operated completely with our security officials. Shortly after the Prime Minister resumed his speech some members of the public, of course, came back in, as I had ordered that they be allowed to do.

I do want all hon members to understand that on your behalf I have to take into consideration security matters. I hasten to advise all hon. members and the public that no harm was done. As soon as the precautions that are necessary had been taken, the public was re-admitted to the gallery and some members of the public did come back in before the Right Hon. Prime Minister finished his speech.

Again, we are mindful of our great traditions. It took us many centuries to be able to debate and to speak freely without interruption. Again, I hasten to add that there has been no harm done. I thank all hon. members for their co-operation and forbearance. I think hon. members would want to join with me in thanking our security officials for their quiet but efficient, courteous and effective treatment of the situation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, 1989, the question on the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-43 is deemed to have been put and a recorded division thereon deferred until 1 p.m. later today.

[English]

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, 1989, the sitting is suspended until 1 o'clock p.m.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 11.43 a.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 1 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being 1 p.m., pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, 1989—

[Translation]

The House will now proceed with the deferred recorded division on the motion for second reading reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-43, An Act respecting abortion.

[English]

Call in the members.

• (1320)

And the bells having ceased to ring:

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members, I think that considering this afternoon's subject, it is probably appropriate for the Chair to explain the exact procedure for the division. It will be the same as for an ordinary government bill. To be more specific, first the yeas—

[English]

—for the government, followed by the Official Opposition, followed by the New Democratic Party, followed by the Independent member.

For the nays, it will start with Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, the New Democratic Party, the Independent member and then to the government members.

[Translation]

I would ask hon. members to pay attention.

[English]

If there is any doubt, I ask that hon. members to consult immediately with their House Leader. If there needs to be further explanation I will give it, but I take it that members understand the voting procedure. I shall go slowly and I do not think we should have any difficulty.

I repeat, on the yeas we will start on the government side. We will go to the Official Opposition, then to the New Democratic Party and then to the Independent member.

On the nays, we should go first of all to the Official Opposition, then to the New Democratic Party, then to the Independent member and then to the government side.

The hon. member for Kamloops on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very short point of order to seek clarification. Members of the House are about to decide whether or not to give second reading to Bill C–43. I have heard many of my colleagues say in debate that while they oppose the principle of the bill, they wish to have the abortion bill studied by a House committee and for this reason they will vote in favour of the bill today.

It is my understanding that a vote in favour of this bill will commit the House to the exact principles of Bill C–43, that once we have adopted this bill the committee will be constrained to making it either a bill—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Kamloops will understand that the Speaker is put in a position of some difficulty. The hon. member had given me notice that he might raise this question.

[Translation]

However, there is a problem for the Chair. There is clearly a problem, since a discussion about the bill at this stage, of course, becomes a discussion about the subject of the bill.

[English]

It is not appropriate to get into a discussion now, even on the basis of a point of order, that tends to be, however subtlely, a furtherance of the debate that has taken place for a number of days.

[Translation]

The subject of this bill is a very difficult one for all members and probably for most people in this country. That is why the Chair must remain very firm about the rules of procedure.

• (1340)

The House divided on the motion of Mr. Lewis, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to order made Thursday, November 23, 1989, the sitting is suspended until three o'clock this afternoon.

The sitting was suspended at 1.42 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 3 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

SEXUAL ABUSE

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, blaming the victim in Canada has reached a new level of insanity. In British Columbia, a County Court judge gave a suspended sentence to an adult male convicted of sexually assaulting a three-year old girl. Why? Because, according to the judge, the child was "sexually aggressive".

All Canadians join in revulsion at this perversion of our system of justice. If a three-year old child can be blamed, what hope do adult females have for justice and the protection of the law? While women have always been dubbed the seductresses in cases of rape, this incident brings the inequality of the sexes beyond the ridiculous.

All decent Canadians demand a judicial council inquiry into this matter immediately. For far too many years far too many judges in this country have failed to make the distinction between victim and offender in cases of sexual assault.

Now it appears that we must also fight to prove that children, in addition to women, do not want to be assaulted and do not ask to be raped.

ABORTION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, perhaps no professional group has as much at stake at the outcome of the abortion issue as do nurses across our land. They must deal with the issue of abortion directly and take part in an act most find abhorrent and repugnant.

I received during the past week petitions with the names of 4,417 nurses in Ontario alone who are Nurses for Life. Their specific request is for a conscience clause for nurses, assuring that they have the legal right to refuse to participate in abortions.

While such a clause would fall under the purview of the provincial government, the presentation of so many petitions from Nurses for Life at this most important time should not be ignored. It is a signal that there are some in the field of medicine who support life and abhor the idea of aiding and abetting the taking of an innocent life.

FOREST MANAGEMENT

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec Government's policies on forestry are similar to those that are sapping the Third World of its resources. It is imperative that those policies be thoroughly revised, with public input to reflect the interest of the public.

That was the position taken by Monsignor Gérard Drainville, Bishop of Amos, in Abitibi, at the Quebec forum on sustainable development. The forum is a high level meeting, organized with the co-operation of the Government of Québec, to determine ways of reconciling economic interests with the imperatives of maintaining nature's balance.

He said, quite frankly, that because of clear cutting by the paper companies, people in many small towns and villages were being increasingly deprived of the benefits of their own forest resources.

NUCLEAR WASTE

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw to the attention of the government that a nuclear waste disposal site is being planned for the State of Michigan in the U.S. All three potential sites on the short list are in close proximity to and would drain into Lake Superior, the St. Clair River, or Lake Erie.

The United States Government which licenses nuclear power stations within the United States has turned the responsibility for disposal over to the various states as part of its deregulation process. As a result of this deregulation, seven mid-western states have grouped together to establish one site for the seven states. Michigan has been selected as the host state for the first 20 years.

A citizen of St. Clair County, Michigan, wrote to me to ask for help to stop this potential hazard to the world's largest supply of fresh water and our food chain. Fifteen nuclear reactors located across those seven states will use this disposal site. Of the six commercial radioactive waste dumps to date now in existence in the United States, he points out that four are already leaking.

I call on the government and the Minister of the Environment to contact the authorities responsible for this irresponsible environmentally disastrous planning and to ask them to stop the development of these new sites that will threaten millions of people on both sides of our border in the Great Lakes basin.

AUTISM WEEK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House the fact that the first week of December, December 3 to December 9, is Autism Week in Canada.

Autism was only relatively recently recognized as a separate disorder. Anyone who has seen the recent hit movie The Rain Man might be left with the impression that autism is in some ways amusing. However, this would be false.

Autism is a serious and lifelong developmental disability. Canadians and their families who are affected by autism suffer heart-breaking difficulties.

People with autism suffer an inability to form social relationships and have severe communication and behaviour problems, but they can be helped to learn to relate to others and to communicate in many ways. Those with autism need our greater understanding and more assistance.

During Autism Week I ask my colleagues in the House of Commons to wear the autism lapel buttons that we have been provided with, to participate in local events, and to read the brochures that we have all received. Our greater awareness and involvement can only help.

LABOUR AND MANAGEMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, in our fast changing and restructuring economy a number of major companies and unions in my riding of Sarnia—Lambton have embarked upon an innovative and pragmatic approach to labour-management relations. It is one which promotes constructive and co-operative partnerships and is entitled "In Search of a Better Way".

Locally, this approach seeks to improve communications among labour and management, to improve the working relationship and quality of policy dialogue and in the end to improve organizational performance through employee involvement. It is not confrontational or short lived. Rather, it is part of an ongoing effort in which labour and management can now discuss actual principles and beliefs, not simply problems.

For example, their initial two-day session centred on defining common goals and common ground. Future efforts will likely focus on safety and the environment.

In the words of a local labour representative: "there is no limit to what we can achieve in the chemical valley if we are working together".

I commend this serious effort to develop an innovative and constructive response to all the members of this House and hope that this initiative in Sarnia—Lambton can be a useful model for company-union dialogue throughout the country.

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, this government is causing hundreds of families in Atlantic Canada and across this country undue stress. Federal ship crew workers have been on a legal strike for over two weeks. They have been without a contract for two years. They can barely make ends meet on the wages they earn now.

Worse still, the 90 ship crew workers on Prince Edward Island earn less than their counterparts on the west coast. Why does a level one steward on the east coast make $3,000 a year less than a level one steward on the west coast?

These workers provide fisheries surveillance and maintain a safe, ice-free link to the mainland for my province. The government must make a decent offer to these workers now and restore their vital service.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, American farm policies and Conservative trade policies have claimed yet another Canadian victim. Next March St. Lawrence Starch Company will close the manufacturing end of its corn milling plant in Mississauga, shifting production to Decatur, Illinois, the home of A. E. Staley Company. Canada will become a distribution depot.

The 1985 U.S. farm bill dropped the U.S. loan rate for corn, and the U.S. promptly flooded Canadian markets with cheap corn. Corn producers countervailed to subsidize imports to reduce injury to themselves, but the corn processors did not exercise their right under Canadian trade law to put in a similar countervail. They decided instead to process in the U.S. market and use the new access to Canada guaranteed by the Conservatives in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, just as we argued would happen during the debate on free trade.

Once again, Canadian farmers and Canadian workers will be worse off because of this government and this policy.

ABORTION

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put my views about abortion on record. I believe that life begins at conception.

I have three unique children, Michael, Holly and Alison. I believe that they were unique from conception. I do not believe they were simply a part of their mother until some time near or after birth, at which time they suddenly turned into the individuals they are now. I believe that their growth and development as individuals began at conception.

I am me now as I stand here. I know that. I believe I was me five months after birth. I believe I was me five months before birth. I believe that I was an individual from conception. I do not believe I was someone else or something else and then turned into me at birth.

To me, all unborn children are unique individuals just like Michael, Holly and Alison, and all unborn should be protected only unless the life or the health of the mother is at stake.

I voted for Bill C-43 on second reading, but it is my hope that at committee stage amendments will be made to reinforce this principle already stated and that recognition and protection can be given to all unborn children.

Although the bill does not do all I would wish, defeating the bill at this stage would not help the unborn either.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the Prime Minister and the Department of External Affairs following the Prime Minister's highly successful trip to the Soviet Union.

In particular, I commend the concept of including in the entourage some 200 Canadian business people, allowing them to establish many business contacts and opening new doors.

Lest Canadians think that only large corporations participated, I would like to point out that the entourage included several companies from western Canada and, I am very proud to say, one company from the Cariboo—Chilcotin. Artec Equipment, an asphalt recycling company based in Williams Lake, participated in the trip. It found it valuable. It expects immediate business results. It expects over the long term a good possibility of a joint venture.

I commend the Prime Minister for providing the leadership and Canadian industry for accepting the challenge.

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, the strike by the Public Service Alliance affecting Coast Guard employees has left 40 unionized ship crew workers in Prescott, a town in my riding, facing what could become a very bleak Christmas. The local Coast Guard ships remain at port, and the navigational buoys which are normally picked up at this time are likely to become frozen in shortly making recovery impossible.

Since these people have been without a contract for two years, would it not make sense for Treasury Board to try again to meet with the union personnel to show good will in bringing about an end to this strike which is starting to have adverse effects in the town of Prescott and the surrounding area?

ADVANCE PAYMENTS FOR CROPS ACT

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, farmers across Canada who have used and want more money for advance payments for their grain would be denied this privilege if the NDP and Liberals had their way.

True to form, the opposition voted against Bill C-36 last night. Opposition members believe that either no payment or $30,000 interest-free is better than $250,000 charged at a nominal rate. They are wrong. Farmers need a cash flow. Farming is big business.

Opposition hold up of this bill has caused untold harm to many farmers. Farmers are proud Canadians. They do not want your hand-outs. They want fair consideration, and this government is delivering just that.

CANADA POST

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, yesterday one of my constituents told me that the lock on his super mailbox had been frozen for a week, and it was not the first time this fall.

According to spokespersons for the Orléans post office, about 200 residents had already complained about the same problem with their mail.

[English]

Supermailboxes, are they the kind of second-class service that Canada Post is offering to all citizens establishing themselves in new residential developments? Is this the quality foreseen by Canada Post privatization?

Whether you are an older or a new suburban resident you should be entitled to first-rate service when it comes to mail delivery. Seeing that Canada Post cannot comply with this fact, I firmly support the recommendation made by the government appointed federal postal review committee to scrap all supermailboxes and provide home delivery to every household instead.

HEART DISEASE

Mr. Ken Monteith (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I want to commend you and the House of Commons Health Services Branch for the heartbeat check program that was conducted last week for members of Parliament and staff of the House of Commons.

Heart disease remains the number one killer of Canadians. Hospitalization for treatment of coronary disease is expensive and time consuming. Awareness programs, such as the one undertaken last week, are important tools in combating this killer.

We should all take the time to practise preventive medicine. We should take time to assess our lifestyles, eating habits, and exercise regimes.

The heartbeat check program of last week was simple and fast, yet it gave us an excellent analysis of where improvements in our lives could be made.

Mr. Speaker, please extend my appreciation to the House of Commons employees who conducted this excellent program.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the government has called an agricultural conference on its Green Paper Growing Together because it says that it wants to consult with producers about the future of agriculture in this country. In the past this government has demonstrated that it has no intention of listening to the views of producers, particularly to those who happen to disagree with the government's position.

This was made very clear with respect to the removal of oats from the Canadian Wheat Board. They were removed despite the opposition of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and others. A Decima poll taken at the time indicated that well over two-thirds of producers in western Canada were opposed to this move as well.

With respect to its new discussion paper the government's idea of consultation is a conference in Ottawa dominated by bureaucrats. The number of actual real farmers in attendance will be a distinct minority.

If the government were truly interested in consultation, it would provide an opportunity for producers throughout the country to participate. Instead of honest consultation, the government is only interested in ramming its right wing agenda down Canadian's throats.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, many of us have just completed our first anniversary as members of this House. During that time we have been impressed with the access to these chambers afforded to Canadians. We would like to thank you for protecting that right. I would like to thank you for improving the access to the building and the facilities by the handicapped.

We are also impressed with the competence and dedication of the staff of the House of Commons. We saw two very good examples today—the speed and dignity with which the security forces restored dignity to the gallery and, perhaps not as dramatic, how under difficult driving conditions our buses even continued running safely.

Throughout the building, Mr. Speaker, your staff supports us in all of our efforts. I would like to congratulate you on the quality of recruitment and through you commend them all for their professionalism and dedication to this House and to the country.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. We now have two forms of the Conservative goods and services tax, tweedledum and tweedledummer.

Canadians know that both Conservative proposals are attempts, to use the words of the chairman of the committee, to gouge them for more than $10 billion in new taxes. Canadians certainly do not believe that this government will not try to raise that tax, no matter what rate at which it is originally brought in.

The Prime Minister and his Conservative cohorts love to talk about other countries that brought in a goods and services tax. Let us look at some of those other countries.

Austria brought in a tax at 8 per cent and raised it to 20 per cent. Denmark brought in a tax at 10 per cent and raised it to 22 per cent. France brought in a tax at 13 per cent and raised it to 18 per cent. West Germany brought in a tax at 10 per cent and raised it to 14 per cent. Great Britain brought in a tax at 10 per cent and raised it to 15 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question for the Prime Minister of Canada is this: Do Canadians seriously expect that this new tax, if brought in and approved in whatever form, will not lead to an ever increasing gouging of the taxpayers of Canada just as has already occurred in so many other countries?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that on this side of the House we were interested in the description of our policy as tweedledum and tweedledummer. I heard somebody outside describe the Liberal position on tax reform as tweedledummest.

In fact the Leader of the Opposition had a financial spokesman here, a tax expert seated next to him, as well as the present Whip, and other members of the Liberal party who strongly recommended the course of action that has generally been pursued by the government.

The Liberal party said for some years that the manufacturers' sales tax was very harmful to the interests of the country and that a goods and services tax would be beneficial to producers, to consumers and to economic growth in the regions of the nation. This is exactly what we have done.

We have brought in a goods and services tax which met not only the philosophy but the general objectives set out by the House and endorsed by the Liberal party. Now that it is in the process of being introduced, the Liberal party typically changes its mind and says that it will not support this progressive action.

The question is not to ask the government whether we will proceed with this, because we will. The question to ask members of the Liberal opposition again is: If they oppose this as they do, what do they stand for in terms of substantial sales tax reform? Or, do they want to stick Canada with the old manufacturers' sales tax?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister in his usual fashion is historically inaccurate and despite the fact that he maligns the current manufacturer's sales tax, he raised that tax on four separate occasions from 9 to 10 to 11 to 12 to 13.5 per cent.

The alternative of the Liberal Party is set forth clearly in the minority report.

Mr. Mulroney: What is it? Tell us what it is.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The alternative is to scrap the tax—

Mr. Mulroney: And?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and scrap the minister.

In the world's greatest trading nation, the United States, there is no goods and services tax. In Japan, another trade giant, the taxpayers are in a revolt against a 3 per cent tax rather 9 per cent. In Switzerland, perhaps the most successful small economy in the world, there is no goods and services tax. In Australia, one of the world's most successful export economies, medium-sized, there is no goods and services tax.

Why does the Canadian Prime Minister keep insisting that Canadians need to have a goods and services tax in order to compete successfully around the world when the two greatest trading nations of the world do not have such a tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can be quite selective with what he wants. The fact is that there are 48 countries in the world today that have a goods and services tax.

I want to draw to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition that in the 1940s the Rowell-Sirois report decided that there should be a change in the manufacturers' sales tax. In 1956, the Carter committee said that there should be a change in the manufacturers' sales tax. In 1966, the Carter royal commission made the same comment. In 1977, the commodity tax review group report and, just before he took office, in the 1980s the Goodman report, a report of the federal sales tax review committee, also recommended a change in the federal sales tax.

Each of these major independent groups made recommendations to the Liberal governments of the day in each of those years. The Liberal government did nothing during this period of time. I read the so-called minority report. It was not a report of recommendations or alternatives. There were no alternatives whatsoever. It was totally vapid in its response to a series of reports that said something should be done about the federal sales tax.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have read the reports the minister has cited. All those reports recommended to a government that if a government chose to have a goods and services tax or a value-added tax that the tax be visible, and this is not visible; insisted that the tax be in co-operation with the provinces, and this has no co-operation with the provinces; insisted that it be revenue-neutral and non-inflationary. The Minister of Finance has not met any of the criteria of the reports of the last 40 years.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what makes the Prime Minister think that the provincial Premiers are wrong, that the arts community is wrong, that farm groups are wrong, that teachers' organizations are wrong, that senior citizens' groups are wrong, that labour unions are wrong, that representatives of small businesses are wrong, that spokespersons for the churches are wrong and that only the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and the Conservative Party are right in this country?

Mr. Duhamel: Ninety per cent!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand the comment made by the Hon. Member for Saint-Boniface. As far as the question put by the Leader of the Opposition is concerned, he knows perfectly well that wide—ranging tax changes are always a major challenge for any government. There is always tremendous resistance to tax changes of this kind. He knows that perfectly well. But when we analyses for instance, the report from the Liberal minority on the committee, there are no constructive or positive recommendations. The Leader of the Opposition has just said that his party's policy boils down to this: Keep the old tax and ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But that is what it boils down to. We on this side realize there are changes that are not popular but that are necessary. We want to make constructive and positive changes in the economy of this country, to make it more competitive in the future. We are prepared to do things that are not popular, aware that the national interest demands leadership, and we are providing that leadership.

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Housing). Yesterday, the Finance Committee submitted its report on the GST, which will have a dramatic and negative effect on housing. And flagrantly contradicting statements he made previously, the Minister of Finance has refused to say whether he will reject all these proposals. And now, to get to my question: First of all, was the minister consulted by the Chairman of the Finance Committee? If so, what was his reaction? Second, can the minister give the House the assurance that he will fight to the bitter end to ensure these proposals are rejected by Cabinet?

[English]

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is well aware, all the committees of the House proceed independently in accordance with normal procedure and in accordance with parliamentary reform which was introduced in this House in the last term by the Prime Minister.

The committee obviously heard a lot of evidence across the country, came to its own conclusions, wrote its own report. That report is now before the government. The government is studying that report and there will be a response in due course.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, the goods and services tax is a stupid, inept and incompetent tax. How this minister can accept it in general, and how this minister can refuse to defend the interests of those to whom he is supposed to give shelter is beyond the belief of any Canadian.

Since his appointment, the minister has given us a number of trial balloons, none of which have been lived up to. He has presided over the decimation of the housing—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): If these recommendations are accepted in whole or in part, will the minister announce his resignation?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, all members of this House at one time or another, have condemned the existing federal sales tax. The federal sales tax generates, as we all know, some $18 billion of revenue for the government.

Realistically, if the federal sales tax is going to be scrapped there has to be a realistic alternative. We have not heard that from the opposition as yet. I am still waiting and I am still looking at the situation. I am certainly willing to hear from the hon. member with his viable alternatives at any time.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance.

The Minister of Finance is aware that a number of Conservative back-benchers have been dumping on the chairman of the finance committee and indeed one of the members of the Conservative majority has also been dumping on his proposals.

I want to know whether the Minister of Finance will join the rest of the country and say no to the 7 per cent solution by taxing resale housing and whether in a rare moment of candour and frankness in this House he can acknowledge that as Minister of Finance, instead of following the chairman of the finance committee, he is going to impose an 8 per cent GST?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I might respond on behalf of the chairman of the finance committee, I know that he does appreciate the support of the New Democratic Party for the positions that he has set out in the report. I am sure he would want me to convey those thanks to you on his behalf.

The finance committee has done some good work. Unfortunately, the minority reports have not done credit to the whole process of consultation and involvement of many people in the private sector who came before the finance committee.

I hear mumblings from the House leader of the New Democrat—the Liberal Party. It is the same thing, I guess.

Mr. Gauthier: Michael, watch your mouth!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): At least the New Democratic Party had some alternatives. The alternatives I totally disagree with, but at least they had the courage of their own convictions and came out with some recommendations as to what the changes might be. The Liberal Party had nothing to say. All they said was go back to the drawing board that we have been working on as a country for 50 years now and come up with something. Well, we have come up with something, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, once again the minister has not answered the question. I want to know whether or not he can confirm that he is about to propose an 8 per cent GST to the country.

I also want to know whether or not he agrees with and can confirm figures that were compiled in the Department of Finance that even with the tax credit for low-income people, a family earning $20,000 with two children will pay 10 times as much through the GST as through the income tax system in order to raise $18.5 billion. Does he agree with this? Does he confirm those figures? If he does, why does he not withdraw the GST and introduce more progressive and fair ways to raise the money for the Government of Canada? Why does he not do that?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, with the proposal that we have brought forward in the technical paper, we have demonstrated a major shift in the progressivity of sales tax in this country.

When we came to office in 1984 there was no refundable sales tax credit at all. The result was that people in low-income brackets paid two or three percentage points more of their income in sales tax than those people in middle and upper-income brackets.

With the GST proposal, including the GST credit, which is a refundable rebate to low-income people, those people in low-income brackets will pay two percentage points less of their income in sales tax than those in upper-income brackets.

That is a major step forward in the progressivity of changing the whole nature of sales tax in this country. That is why the new sales tax system that we are proposing is far fairer than the old system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I notice the minister getting a very timid response from his own back-benchers, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: I am glad that they all agree with me. They will need all the help they can get to sell this proposition to the Canadian people since only 7 per cent of the people support it.

I wonder why the Minister of Finance does not start at the top and eliminate the deduction for meals and entertainment for the business community, which costs the Canadian taxpayers about $1 billion a year.

Can he explain to the House why he allows his buddy, Conrad Black, to deduct his champagne and caviar dinners while a truck driver will have to pay the GST on a bologna sandwich at a truck stop? Why does he not eliminate that deduction, make Conrad Black pay and give a break to the ordinary people in this country?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, first let me thank my hon. colleague for giving the cue to my friends on this side of the House. Possibly the next time he could lead the support from his own back benches. I would appreciate that.

The hon. member asks a valid question about the balance between sales tax and income tax and how progressive the two-tax system should be. I believe, and this government believes, that there should be a sales tax, partly for fiscal reasons because of the amount of money that that tax does raise, as my colleague has said $18 billion, but partly to get an appropriate balance between savings and investment on the one hand and consumption on the other.

The Leader of the Opposition said that the United States does not have a sales tax. One of the problems that it is suffering from is that its savings and investments are on the low side, and with a consumption tax and change in its income tax that could improve its savings and investment, which is very healthy for for an economy. That is why we believe that there should be a sales tax system in this country.

FISHERIES

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Last week the United States Congress passed an amendment to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Act which restricts the size of lobster sold to the U.S. Congress passed the legislation, contrary to the undertaking given by the President to the Prime Minister last September that discussions would be carried out before this legislation became effective. No discussions have taken place between the two countries. The President now has 10 days to sign this legislation.

Will the Prime Minister, when he meets with President Bush, impress upon the President that this legislation is harsh, unfair and is not very good for friendly relations between Canada and the U.S?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend raises a very important question and I thank the member for it. It is of course my intention, having raised it in Maine, to deal with it again in Washington tomorrow.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister will do more than deal with it tomorrow because this is what we did in September. I hope the Prime Minister will ask the President to veto this offensive legislation. It restricts the $130 million lobster industry on the east coast that started this week.

Will the Prime Minister ask President Bush to veto this legislation and have discussions?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has already asked President Bush to veto this offensive legislation. If the President does not veto the legislation, then we will be taking the matter to a panel under the FTA and to the GATT as well. I have no doubt that the Prime Minister will add his weight to our representations tomorrow.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the right hon. Prime Minister. On the same subject matter, the Prime Minister said in the House on October 6:

> The full weight and influence of the Canadian Government, provincial governments and Members of Parliament —will be brought to bear on the U.S. Congress and the U.S. administration, in an attempt to settle this very serious problem, in the interests of our fishermen in Eastern Canada.

I want to ask the right hon. Prime Minister what assurances he will give today to lobster fishermen in eastern Canada. What assurances will he give them that their livelihoods will not be put in jeopardy by the restrictive trade practices as a result of this amendment by Senator George Mitchell in Maine?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already given the member's colleague from South West Nova the assurance that I will raise it again tomorrow with the President of the United States.

The Minister for International Trade has been dealing on this matter with Ambassador Hills. Ambassador Burney has met on a number of occasions most recently with Senator Mitchell, a fact which can be confirmed by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition who was recently in Washington. I would be interested to know his views on whether he raised the question of lobsters with Senator Mitchell while he was there. I can assure you that if the Leader of the Opposition did not raise that in defence of the lobster producers, the Government of Canada has, and we will continue to fight for those producers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the right hon. Prime Minister. The issue is not the Leader of the Opposition. The issue is the leadership coming from the right hon. Prime Minister with regard to lobster fishermen in eastern Canada. That is the issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, presently in South West Nova and all throughout Atlantic Canada this legislation is causing great uncertainty among our lobster fishermen. It will drop the price for Canadian lobster fishermen and their sales, and it will restrict traditional markets of Canadian lobster fishermen into the United States.

Will the Prime Minister clearly and unequivocally undertake to ask specifically for a veto of this legislation to protect our lobster fishermen in eastern Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I do not know why my distinguished friend is getting so exercised. The answer had already been given by the Minister for International Trade.

The Minister for International Trade, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I, as Prime Minister, have dealt with this at the highest levels of the American government. We view it as a most serious matter. It has been raised and pursued very vigorously as well, as I said, by Ambassador Burney and his colleagues in Washington. I will be visiting with President Bush tomorrow. I will deal as effectively as I can with the matter tomorrow and I will be happy to report to my hon. friend as quickly as I can.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. The recent Moscow visit of the Prime Minister produced a joint Canada-USSR declaration. It states that both signatories will undertake the following: "The renunciation of war as a means of national policy, respect for the rights of peoples to determine their own destinies on the basis of freedom of choice" and to " protect the environment, keeping in mind that the threat of an ecological catastrophe is next in its implication only to the threat of nuclear war itself".

In that light, will the Prime Minister help bury the cold war next week when he is at Brussels by cancelling Canada's bid for the tactical training centre at Goose Bay?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the member had asked that question earlier. He also has continually tried to convince Canadians that this government, particularly the Department of National Defence, has had no interest in bringing about understanding and peace in this world. Nothing could be further from the truth.

We have taken actions in the Department of National Defence. The Prime Minister in his trip to Moscow signed an agreement with the government of the Soviet Union. The reason this department was involved some two months ago in discussions with the Soviet military is that of confidence-building, reaching understandings with one another and being able to bring a climate of peace and security in the world. We will continue to do that.

At the same time, we should continue to have prudence. We should continue to work through the two alliances, NATO and the Warsaw Pact, to reduce the presence of arms in this world.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is also for the Canadian Minister of National Defence. Surely he is aware that Poland's Minister of National Defence has been engaging in confidence-building measures very closely related to this point in that he has issued restrictions on low level flying, on supersonic flying, on firing and bombing exercises. Also the Soviet Air Force MIG-23 battalion has been withdrawn from the Baltic coast. This is according to Jane's Defence Weekly.

Will the minister consider responding to these confidence-building measures and peace moves by the Warsaw bloc and to the Canadian women's groups, native groups, church and other groups which today presented his office with a block from the Berlin wall, which is part of the same relaxation in the east? Will he do that by restricting the low level flights and other training over Goose Bay and Nitassinan instead of increasing them from 7,000 to 40,000 according to the outdated NATO plan?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member puts forward a suggestion that would mean that Canada would act unilaterally as a member of NATO.

Mr. Heap: Poland did it.

Mr. McKnight: The member says Poland did it. Poland has also done some other things I do not think Canadians would like to see this government or any other government do in this country. I would like the member to try to understand regardless of the half truths that were put forward by a group this morning that he associated himself with, including the Canadian Council of Churches.

The aggressive nature that they state in low-level training is not accurate. It is defensive training. It is training that all air forces throughout both the Warsaw Pact and the NATO Alliance continue to do and we will continue to do. Hopefully, through negotiations, both the Warsaw Pact and the NATO Alliance will be able to reduce the need for that low level flying. Until that time comes we, as members of NATO, will continue to take part.

FINANCE

Mr. Ken Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to direct my procedural question to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance, specifically relating to future proceedings of the committee. As you know, the honourable chairman reported on behalf of the committee and that report in principle supported the goods and services tax. The people of Macleod would like to know when the finance committee will start listening to Canadians about cutting government spending. In short, when is this finance committee, the committee as a whole, going to do something other than recommend taxes?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: This answer is going to require great calm.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the member may know, in the committee report filed yesterday, that the first recommendation of the committee is to conduct public hearings and an inquiry into government expense. After some consultation, we will be calling a meeting next week of the committee to determine how we should proceed. I am going to suggest to the committee that the Hon. Member from Ontario be the chairman of a subcommittee of the finance committee in this inquiry.

A number of briefs were presented in the last hearings on the goods and services tax detailing certain claims and I think it is important that the committee really follow those up to make a recommendation to the House.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, we know that the Minister of Finance speaks no evil, sees no evil and hears no evil with respect to his 9 per cent tax. So, let me ask a question of the minister responsible for housing who is supposed to represent home owners, home buyers, home providers, builders and others. How can the minister sit and watch while both the Minister of Finance and the chairman of the finance committee inflict such pain and hardship on Canadians who either own, rent or want to buy a home? Will this Minister categorically reject both GST proposals on housing?

• (1550)

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, the government is currently considering the report that was filed yesterday by the finance committee and will be taking it into consideration.

I think the hon. member should bear in mind that the present proposal for the GST includes a rebate in connection with new housing. That rebate has some characteristics to it which promote affordability in housing, one of them being that the rebate is not available for anyone who is not a Canadian resident, and a second one being that the rebate is not available except in the case of a principal residence. In effect, it provides an implicit land speculation tax to it. I think the hon. member should bear those factors in mind when considering affordability in housing.

Mr. Fontana: The Minister will know that that rebate is not worth the paper it is written on. He knows that full well.

A tax on housing is not a tax on consumption. It is a tax on a dream, on savings, on a basic essential of life and that is shelter. Both proposals will push the price of a home out of the reach of most Canadians. How does the government plan to redress this inequality? What will this minister do for the people who want to buy a home?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is well aware, there is a federal sales tax at the moment on new housing and on the existing housing it is included in that price. The impact of that tax is calculated to be some 4 per cent at the present time. The impact of the proposal of the finance department with the rebate has the total impact of a marginal increase in taxes with respect to housing.

It is indicated that housing prices would likely not increase generally by perhaps more than a figure that was less than 1 per cent.

FISHERIES

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade who will be meeting his counterpart, the U.S. trade representative, on Thursday in Washington, hopefully not to capitulate on Atlantic lobsters, as his government has done on west coast salmon and herring.

The government has accepted the decision of the binational panel which permits up to 20 per cent of west coast salmon and herring to be sold over the side to the United States, contrary to its previous insistence that landing requirements were necessary for the conservation and management of Canadian fish stocks. Yet the Americans are still not satisfied. They want more.

Will the trade minister assure this House that they will not get more? Will he commit to Canadians today, prior to his meeting, that Canada will not sell out Canadian fish processing jobs once again? Will he undertake that no more than 20 per cent of salmon and herring will be allowed to be sold over the side to the United States—

Mr. Speaker: I think the minister has the question.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have the thrust of the question. There is a meeting between Mrs. Hills and myself on Thursday in Ottawa, not in Washington.

One of the issues that will be discussed is the B.C. salmon and herring situation. We announced that we are accepting the report. The report of the panel found that Canada's landing regulations were in truth and in essence conservation and management regulations, and that they were in order with the suggestion that from 10 to 20 per cent of any particular species of fish might not need to be landed to make the information obtained satisfactory and valid. So landing regulations have been found to be valid.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands–Canso): Is the Minister for International Trade changing his government's interpretation of this panel ruling to suit the Americans on the eve of his meeting with the U.S. trade representative? Is that what the minister is telling this House? Is this how the dispute settlement panel under the free trade agreement is supposed to operate? Does it mean when Canada and the United States disagree on the interpretation of a panel ruling that Canada meekly accepts the American interpretation?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, apparently I am not speaking too clearly today, having just come from the dentist. I don't know where the greatest pain was, in the dentist's office or here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Our interpretation of the panel report has not changed and will not change on Thursday, and we are prepared to implement the panel report. We will implement the panel report as we have said we will do.

FORESTRY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of forests. The expiry of forest agreements between the federal government and a number of provinces is wreaking havoc across the country.

The New Brunswick forestry workers have lost their jobs. In Manitoba, emergency funding to plant six million rotting seedlings had to be approved this summer, all of this because of the failure of the minister to sign new agreements.

Will the minister announce, today, federal funds for a 10–year billion dollar agreement with British Columbia?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I won't be able to announce today a 10–year billion dollar agreement with British Columbia, but I can tell the hon. member and my friend that the new B.C. minister of forestry is in the city today. We have begun negotiations with the provinces. The member knows that particular agreement does not expire until the end of this fiscal year, which is the end of March.

I will also be able to tell the House in the very near future of the signing of a number of agreements with provinces that had expired earlier. Also, I want to tell the hon. member that I am not aware of any lay–off in the silviculture industry in the maritime provinces or anywhere else as a result of our negligence.

Mr. Gardiner: Mr. Speaker, the fact that the forestry minister from British Columbia is in town today is a perfect reason that the minister should announce a new agreement today.

In order to build on the work that was done by the first forest agreement in B.C., can the minister tell this House that he will guarantee that funds for a new forest agreement will help replant the backlog NSR lands in British Columbia by the year 2000?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, what I can tell my hon. friend is that the people who would probably be best qualified to build on the foundation of the first FRDA agreement would be the architects of that agreement. We are beginning to build on that. in our negotiations and he will be very pleasantly surprised when it is all done.

EL SALVADOR

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. While the situation in east Europe has improved dramatically, Canadians have watched with horror the last two weeks increased violence in El Salvador.

Many hundreds of Canadians have visited Central America in recent years, not as tourists but out of concern for the political socio-economic plight of the region's majority population. They want a strong, independent Canadian voice in the region. They want the Canadian government to assure safety and justice in El Salvador to Canadian and other civilian volunteers.

Is this government committed to designating a permanent Canadian professional diplomat on the ground in San Salvador to guarantee these assurances?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have two Canadian representatives in San Salvador now. They will be staying in San Salvador for the duration of the conflict there which we hope will not endure long.

I had the opportunity earlier today, which I very much appreciated, to speak to the hon. member and other members of the House from all parties who are interested in trying to find a constructive way in which Canada can help bring peace to El Salvador. As she knows, I have been in touch with the foreign minister of Venezuela. We are in touch diplomatically with the Governments of Cuba, of Nicaragua and of other countries in Central America.

The Prime Minister and I will be meeting tomorrow with President Bush and Secretary Baker and will be discussing the question there. I will also be calling in various Canadians from church groups and others, including some who have recently been helped by the Government of Canada to leave El Salvador, to get their views on Thursday as to other actions which Canada might constructively take.

• (1600)

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I was asking if we would consider a permanent representative on the ground in El Salvador.

On Thursday, November 23, the El Salvadoran government enacted a penal code amendment, an anti-terrorist law which puts at risk all volunteers of any nationality, including the well-know American non-violent activist, Jennifer Cassolo who is currently detained under suspicious charges.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs assure us today in this House that he will inform the El Salvadoran government that this legislation is undemocratic and ask for its withdrawal? Also, will he press President Bush to convey the same message concerning this in his meeting tomorrow?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member, on reconsideration, would understand that whatever we might think of laws in other countries, laws passed in those countries are theirs to decide and theirs to choose, just as laws passed in this country are ours to decide and ours to choose.

We are very much concerned about the law that has been passed. We are concerned about the implications it holds for Canadians. We are particularly concerned about the case of Jennifer Cassolo which the member has raised. Jennifer Cassolo has helped a number of Canadians, including parliamentarians, when they visited El Salvador.

It is the general view of church groups, parliamentarians and others to whom I have spoken, that it would be most surprising were she guilty of the charges that have been laid against her. I will be communicating that view directly to authorities in El Salvador with an eye to trying to ensure that for as long as she is in custody, she is as safe as can be and to try to have her out of custody as quickly as possible.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, who I am sure is aware that the resolve to reduce acid rain in both Canada and the United States is weakening. The U.S. government has filed evidence with the U.S. Court of Appeal which claims that it is entirely speculative that a cut in U.S. emissions would reduce acid rain damage in Canada.

Here at home, Quebec Hydro is encouraging thousands of its industrial customers to switch from electricity to oil, meaning that Quebec will not meet its commitment to reduce acid rain emissions to 600,000 tonnes by next January.

Will the minister intervene and request that Quebec Hydro implement some of the billions of dollars in energy efficiency and conservation measures contained in its own March 1989 report, rather than blow the cap on acid rain, both in Canada and perhaps in our relations with the United States?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, my Department is indeed disturbed by the decision made recently by Hydro-Quebec, because we have reason to believe that this decision may compromise the objectives set by the government of Quebec in the agreement that was signed. We believe the timing was very poor, considering that we are now negotiating an agreement with the Americans that would enable us to meet the objectives we have in mind. However, on the basis of our discussions with the Quebec Department of the Environment, we have reason to hope that radical action will be taken by this department, vis-à-vis Hydro-Quebec, to reduce the sulfur content of heavy oil used in Quebec so that our objectives can nevertheless be met. We are monitoring the situation very closely, and we realize that intervention by the federal government may be necessary.

POINTS OF ORDER

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I rise to bring to the attention of members in this House an unusual presence today in the House of Commons. I rise as Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport to bring to the attention of members of the House of Commons the presence of people that Canadians know well but do not often have the opportunity to visit within this forum.

If you will be patient with me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to introduce and bring to your attention the presence of Mr. Gordie and Colleen Howe—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: —Mr. Ed and Norma Shack—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: Lorne "Gump" and Doreen Worsley.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: And finally, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Maurice «Rocket» Richard and Mrs. Richard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): As the co-critic for Fitness and Amateur Sports and a spokesperson for the Liberal party, it gives me great pleasure to see some of my former colleagues who I used to meet in hockey arenas, in our arena today, the House of Commons. We wish them a hearty welcome and it is a pleasure to see them among us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): On behalf of our party, I would also like to welcome our guests to the gallery. Some of them go back almost as long as we do. It is too bad some of them are not members of the cabinet. Then we might have more money for sports in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I too would like to address our visitors in the gallery and advise them that this whole procedure was completely out of order but seems to have met with the universal consent of the House.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE—STATEMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise on another point of order totally unconnected with the last one. On Wednesday night last during the Adjournment Debate, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport was responding to a submission of mine in respect of the transportation of dangerous goods and emergency preparedness on the west coast.

The point I had been making included the fact that the government had failed to provide any enforcement of its regulations in respect of the carriage and shipment of dangerous goods on passenger ferries on the coast. In the course of his answer, the parliamentary secretary said and it is reported at the bottom of page 6065 of Hansard for the day, that the Auditor General has noted in his report that "we do investigate and conduct inspections on ferries when some specific concern exists and random inspections are also conducted".

This has been the first opportunity I have had to raise this point. I have checked not only with the Auditor General's report but with the Auditor General's office itself.

The Auditor General's office said that at best, someone is mixing up words. I do not suggest for a second that the parliamentary secretary himself was intentionally misleading the House, but rather that he had been wrongly briefed and as a result, the House was misled. He was in fact quoting from a different section of the report dealing with quite a different matter.

In respect of dangerous cargoes, the Auditor General's report says on page 474, Section 22.34:

> An example of a potentially hazardous situation is the illegal transportation of dangerous goods on passenger ferries. Ferry operators rely on declarations by transporters that dangerous goods are not among those being shipped on passenger ferries. The Ship Safety Branch does not have a program to monitor or inspect such shipments.

On the next page, in Section 22.48 on page 476 the report goes on to say:

> Although the Western Region each year does approximately 100 inspections of shipments of dangerous goods, it has no procedure for selecting a certain proportion of such shipments for random inspection, and it does no random inspection of ferries in the Region.

Inadvertently I am sure, the parliamentary secretary has incorrectly quoted the Auditor General on a very critical issue, one which has recently, over this last weekend, been resolved in part by the ferry union and the B.C. Ferry Corporation reaching agreement. We still have not had assurances from Transport Canada and from the parliamentary secretary that in fact the government is providing inspections to ensure that the regulations are being met and the travelling public protected.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for bringing to our attention the statements that I made in the House this past Wednesday evening in the Adjournment Debate. I believe it focuses around paragraph 22.14 of the Auditor General's report which states that the examinations of ships' safety focused on the planning process used by the Coast Guard to allocate scarce resources to its regular activity and its mandatory and discretionary inspections, and I want to underline the word "discretionary".

Discretionary inspections, by their very nature, are conducted when specific concerns exist. The Auditor General further states, later on in his report, at paragraph 22.47, that in the maritime regions, the ships' safety branch reports that it inspects approximately 2 per cent of the containers used in the transportation of dangerous goods, and the region monitors the movement of dangerous goods in its area and uses the information to determine which containers to inspect; that is to say, discretionary inspection or inspections on the basis of specific concerns.

I want to say that there was no intent, on this member's part, to mislead the hon. member, and I want to apologize in this House for making statements that could be attributed as coming specifically out of the Auditor General's report. I want to thank the hon. member for bringing it to our attention.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, when I made by maiden speech in this House in 1979, the then Speaker, Speaker Jerome, ruled me out of order because I recognized one of my students from my riding in the gallery. I have respected that ruling ever since.

Since I have returned to this House, there have been two occasions when the rule has been disregarded, once when a choir was recognized in the visitors' gallery and today. Visitors should be recognized, I agree with you, Mr. Speaker, but today visitors were recognized in the Speaker's gallery. If we want to recognize these visitors, maybe it is time that we looked at changing the rules of who can and who cannot be recognized in the gallery.

We are getting more and more very important visitors coming, sitting in the Speaker's gallery, or the visitors' gallery, and I think we should have a clear understanding of who should be recognized and who should not, so that we do not get into these embarrassing situations as we did today.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I think we could help the Chair determine how we should proceed in the future.

I think the hon. member did well to make this point, since I always understood, and this rule has always worked well in the past, that the Speaker is informed of the presence of visitors in the gallery and decides to recognize them on our behalf, at the appropriate time. It is rather embarrrassing for the other political parties when an important visitor is recognized by one political party and this leads to what we have seen today, namely that members of other parties feel obliged or rather are delighted to rise in the House, and this merely prolongs the proceedings.

Of course, we join in the applause, but I think the Chair should consider what was said by the Hon. Member from Toronto and advise all Members including cabinet ministers, that this rule should be inflexible and apply to everyone. It is up to the Chair to recognize the distinguished visitors we would like to recognize. However, we can inform the speaker or draw his attention to the various important visitors we can expect.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, with your leave, and especially to come to the defence of the Chair, I feel obliged to explain to my opposition friends that I was not personally informed of the fact that the people whose presence I mentioned a few minutes ago in our gallery would, in fact, be visiting the House. Like most members here in the House, when these people entered the gallery, I was surprised to see them, and I decided to take the initiative of rising on a point of order, after Question Period, to draw the attention of the House to their presence.

What I wish to say to hon. members, through you, Mr. Speaker, is that the Chair was not involved at all in this initiative taken by the Deputy House Leader. I want it to be quite clear that this decision, which I made personally, was well beyond any control the Chair might have.

So I want to make it quite clear to all members of this House that the person chairing the proceedings of this House today was not involved at all in the decision I made to draw the attention of the House to the presence of our visitors.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I think we should also realize that from time to time, there may be situations when members of this House may decide to draw attention to the presence of distinguished citizens who may be in our galleries unannounced, and that from time to time we should offer some leeway to those who take this kind of initiative. I believe that is the case today.

So as far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, and in concluding, I would like to say that if you decide to give me a reprimand because I drew the attention of the House to the presence of Messrs. Howe, Shack, Worsely and Maurice "Rocket" Richard in our gallery today, I accept that reprimand with great pleasure.

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I will not let this go by that easily. I think the hon. minister totally misrepresented what we are trying to do. I did not blame the Speaker and that was not our intention. We said it is a custom be informed, and the minister is trying to sidetrack the debate. Of course the Speaker is not going to blame the minister today, and I know the minister would like to say he was blamed for recognizing great people that we all want to applaud. That is not the point.

The point raised by my esteemed colleague from Toronto is that it has always been our practice, in order not to have this kind of debate, for Mr. Speaker to recognize visitors. hon. minister, the next time such an occasion arises, he can take a pen, and if he needs one I can lend him mine any time, to send a little distinguished note to Mr. Speaker saying, "Mr. Speaker, I see in the gallery distinguished people who should be recognized." Then Mr. Speaker will do so.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I think you have to be very careful here. I too along with all members of the House appreciated the minister so gallantly rising and pointing out some very distinguished guests. We all felt that was an appropriate act.

However, if this becomes any kind of open season, we all have distinguished guests to which we might draw attention. I observe, Mr. Speaker, that you have been very liberal in your efforts in the last while to recognize the people in our gallery, recognizing that that time comes out of Question Period, which is the only time we have to hold the government accountable. That can be problematic. On the other hand, I am sure others have noticed that you use the occasion from time to time to defuse the House when it perhaps becomes a little too rambunctious, by focusing our attention on esteemed guests in the gallery.

I think it is important that we all have a clear understanding that it is the Speaker who recognizes guests on our behalf, because if we turn this into an open season situation, we will all be up on points of order at the end of Question Period pointing out various guests. I think that my hon. friend knows the rules and regulations and I simply would ask him, and not only his colleagues but all of us, to recognize the time honoured tradition that it is the Speaker who recognizes guests in the gallery on behalf of us all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: This may be the appropriate time for some comments by the Chair. I want to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis and the minister for their comments, especially the hon. member for Saint-Denis, since he is an expert on the rules of the House of Commons and one of our veteran members. I listened carefully to the comments made by the hon. member, wise as always.

I believe the comments made by the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park were particularly apt.

[English]

Let me just point out to hon. members that after the House joined together in a happy demonstration of felicity and welcome to the distinguished visitors in the gallery, I pointed out that the entire procedure was, of course, highly out of order. I might have likened the situation to a hockey game, but I resisted that temptation. I can only say to the hon. member for Parkdale—High Park that under the circumstances I could not put all hon. members on both sides of the House in the penalty box.

• (1620)

But we have a procedure which I think ought to be followed, that is, that first of all there are some guidelines with regard to whom we recognize. The proper procedure is that at some time well in advance of the moment when the guests are expected notice is given to the Speaker.

I am always in the hands of hon. members. If the House wants, by consent, to change that on some special occasion, of course the House can do so. I think the consent that we saw this afternoon was one that sort of crept around the chamber and nobody, under the circumstances, wished to be other than gracious. I understand that.

The difficulty we have, though, is: as the hon. member for Kamloops pointed out, all hon. members have people of great distinction living in their ridings. After all, without the support of these people of great distinction, hon. members would not be here. There is a natural tendency and natural temptation to want to recognize these people. Sometimes the distinction they have as great Canadians has a great deal to do with how close they live to the hon. member back in the riding. But that is not a matter for me to concern myself with as long as the suggestion for recognition meets the guidelines. The guidelines are very clear and hon. members have them.

I would say to the hon. minister that I think there was some complicity on both sides of the House with the hon. minister's very generous use of a moment or two after Question Period. I want to assure the hon. minister that I am not taking any of these remarks as any kind of an attack on the Chair. I just want to advise hon. members and the public, of course, that I do not think this was quite the individual initiative that the minister may have indicated to the House it was, because an hon. member from this side of the House had come to me and said: "When are we going to recognize these special guests?"

This is one of those rare moments when the House expressed its unanimous wish to do something, but I think I should say that it is a rare moment and, unless I am advised differently by the House, I am going to stick to the rules and recognitions will not be made unless I have notice and unless they fit the guidelines.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I heard the comments of the parliamentary secretary on the point that I raised, and I am quite happy to accept his statement of apology. On that basis I would gladly withdraw my point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member. In response, I think the hon. member for Victoria made it very clear that he appreciated the point being raised, and he was very courteous in his reply. In the best traditions of this place I thank the hon. member.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my delight to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 36, on behalf of a number of people from British Columbia who point out their concern for the government's goods and services tax.

While pointing out most of the shortcomings of the tax, the petitioners simply ask the government to reconsider proceeding, to go back to the drawing board and to start all over again.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on a second item, again pursuant to Standing Order 36 and certified correct by the clerk of petitions, I wish to present a petition from 72 western Canadians who point out the need for the government to reconsider its decision on VIA Rail cut-backs and actually upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 with three petitions, two of them with a total of 101 signatures, asking the government not to make any cuts on VIA Rail and to wait until a new transportation policy can be brought into effect.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a third petition on a totally unrelated matter from many persons in my constituency from the cities of Brantford, Paris, Ontario and so on who are completely opposed to abortion.

BILL 178

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my duty and obligation to present three separate groups of petitions to the House today, all of which have been certified correct as to form and content by the clerk.

First, some 37 signatories from my riding of Sarnia—Lambton call upon the Parliament of Canada to urge the Governor in Council to exercise his constitutional power of disallowance with respect to Bill 178 of the province of Quebec which they believe contravenes the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the second petition which contains approximately 200 signatures calls upon Parliament to amend the Young Offenders Act to better protect the interests of society from violent offenders, no matter the age of the offender.

VIOLENT CRIMES

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Finally, Mr. Speaker, I have received some 4,400 signatures from residents of Sarnia, Clearwater, Brights Grove, Point Edward, Corunna, Courtright and other communities throughout Ontario who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass legislation which establishes mandatory minimum sentences for all violent crimes that would apply uniformly to all regions of Canada.

RCMP DRESS CODE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour as a member of Parliament to present several petitions from constituents in the lower mainland, but also from Vancouver Island. The list comprises several hundred names and their petition reads as follows:

The undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to preserve the distinctive heritage and tradition of the RCMP by retaining uniformity of dress code with all the recognizable colour and trappings that have such great historical value for this country.

The pride and esprit de corps should not be jeopardized by any concession to religious or ethnic minorities which result in changes to this truly great police force and its proud traditions and uniform.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition of several pages on an entirely different subject which reads as follows:

The undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the unborn without distinction as to stage of development.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present to the House 10 petitions certified correct by the clerk of petitions.

They contain the signatures of hundreds of constituents in my riding of Hamilton West and surrounding ridings. They call on this Parliament to reject the proposed 9 per cent goods and services tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition with some 51 names from Kincardine, Ontario, calling on the Parliament of Canada to restore VIA Rail service, to maintain it at its present level, to upgrade the rail service with new equipment, and to give VIA Rail sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

• (1630)

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, for I do not know how many times I have done this now, but I am presenting again today a large number of petitions from people in my riding and adjacent ridings who are totally opposed to the proposed goods and services tax.

They are extremely worried about the effects this tax will have on inflation and on the cost of living. They humbly beg this Conservative government to withdraw its proposal.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure today to present a petition from 1,320 residents of Osoyoos and district in the riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt with respect to a proposed storage site for PCBs at the port of entry of Osoyoos in the province of British Columbia. They say that this is inappropriate for an area such as Osoyoos which depends on agriculture and tourism for its economic survival.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the environment of the Okanagan is not jeopardized by the potential for contamination by PCBs from such a storage site and ask the government to reconsider and reverse the decision by Public Works Canada to store PCBs at the port of entry in Osoyoos, British Columbia.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege today to present to this House four petitions, all of which deal with the subject of the proposed goods and services tax.

No doubt it will come as no surprise that the citizens of my riding who have signed these petitions humbly pray that Parliament scrap the tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my duty and honour to present this petition signed by 41 petitioners. It has been certified by the clerk of petitions.

The petitioners say that the railway passenger service carried on by VIA Rail is an essential means of transportation for many Canadians and has been part of the basic Canadian infrastructure for over 100 years and that these cuts in subsidy to VIA Rail will result in serious reduction in railway passenger service.

Therefore the undersigned call upon Parliament to maintain VIA Rail, Canada's present national network; to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment; and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present two petitions. The first one is with respect to VIA Rail.

I have a petition with 32 names on it of Canadians who are concerned with the direction the government is taking with respect to VIA Rail.

They call upon the government to maintain VIA Rail's present national network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment, and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have another petition which has been presented to me by a number of producers in Saskatchewan who are concerned about the direction this government is taking with respect to agriculture in this country.

Specifically they are concerned about oats being removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, and they call upon this government to reinstate oats under the Wheat Board Act and to give barley the same protection that wheat has now.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present another petition on behalf of my Cardigan constituents, particularly from the Souris area.

The petitioners pray that this government will bring forth legislation that will protect the foetus.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have three sets of petitions to table this afternoon. The petitions have all been certified correct as to form and content by the clerk of petitions.

I would like to table a petition signed by approximately 97 residents of Toronto, Sault Ste. Marie and Beardmore, one from Scotland and two from New York City, who are concerned about the decisions of the government with regard to VIA Rail.

They point out that these reductions in budget and service will lead to the disappearance of one-third of Canada's national railway system, if not more. They call upon Parliament to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

NATIONAL MARINE POLICY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table in the House today petitions bearing the names of approximately 16,000 Canadians who work in and around the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Seaway system.

They point out in this petition that the federal government has failed to establish a national marine policy and that that in itself has contributed to the reflagging of Canadian ships and offered Canadian shipping companies a loophole whereby they do not pay taxes.

The petitioners point out that this reflagging has cost Canadians thousands of jobs, both directly and indirectly, on board ships and in the related shore-side and ship building industries, and that this has a dramatic impact on the communities as well as the federal Treasury.

The petitioners call on Parliament to endorse the concept of a Canadian international shipping registry, also known as a second registry, for Canadian ships operating in international trade outside Canada as detailed in the discussion paper prepared by Transport Canada dated September 1988.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I also have a number of petitions with regard to the goods and services tax signed by citizens in my community who object to the proposed tax, whether it is 9, 8, 7, 6, or 5 per cent.

Some 71 customers of Wheeler's Lumber have petitioned me, as well as 26 from G. K. Sandwich Take-Out and 26 from McMillan Grocery. I would like to table those.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 151 and 157.

[Text]

CELEBRATIONS IN 1992

Question No. 151—Mr. Gardiner:

Has the government planned celebrations in 1992 for the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of Confederation and, if so, in this regard, has the government (a) issued contracts to plan or help organize the events and, if so (i) what number (ii) for what amounts (b) set a budget and, if so, for what amount (c) assigned duties to departmental staff and, if so, by department, to what number of them (d) prepared a list of themes or possible events and, if so, what are they (e) prepared a study of funding provided to projects in the 1967 Centennial year and, if so, what is its title?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): No, see footnote.

A national conference, entitled "Towards 1992", which was held in Ottawa from October 10 to 12, brought together some 400 representatives from all sectors of Canadian society including the private sector. The objective was to determine how best to co-ordinate efforts in commemorating a number of significant anniversaries being marked across the country, in 1992, including the 125th anniversary of Canadian Confederation.

DUNDEE RESORT

Question No. 157—Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso):

Has the Dundee Resort been sold by Enterprise Cape Breton Corporation and, if so (a) to whom (b) for what amount (c) what conditions were attached to the sale (d) who were the alternative bidders?

Hon. Elmer MacIntosh MacKay (Minister of Public Works and Minister for the purposes of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Act): In August 1987, the Cape Breton Development Corporation called proposals for the possible sale and future development of Dundee Resort. The Corporation received (5) requests for information and (3) proposals for development, from 1) Dundee Development Limited; 2) South Mountain Arm of Gold Community Association; and 3) Odyssey Cape Breton Limited. The Odyssey Cape Breton Limited concept was selected as the most promising project for consideration.

Dundee Resort has not yet been sold. Dundee's Board of Directors and ECBC's Board of Directors have approved the sale of Dundee Resort subject to satisfactory completion of negotiations with Odyssey Cape Breton Limited.

[English]

Mr. Cooper: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE LATE JIM JEPSON

Mr. Speaker: It is my unhappy duty to announce to the House that our friend and colleague the former member from London East, Jim Jepson, died in London an hour ago. There will be tributes on Monday. I know that hon. members would want to have the weekend to consider the announcement and make the appropriate remarks, as is the custom in this place.

FORESTRY

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House in a non-answer to a question I raised with the Minister of State for Forests about job losses because of the lack of signed forest agreements, the minister said he was not aware of any problems. The minister had only to consult his own department's information to see that 43 silvicultural workers in New Brunswick have lost their jobs because of the lack of a forest agreement.

In British Columbia, the staff of Forestry Canada are approaching members of our caucus expressing concern about their jobs because of the confusion caused by the government's lack of action. Worse is that the trained staff in Forestry Canada have the skills that are needed in a renewed forest agreement. We cannot lose them.

The minister is obviously not aware of the concern in the forest community about these unsigned agreements. He should sign them now.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on November 18, I visited the community of Mistissini, where I observed the deplorable condition of 141 homes built according to the standards of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development when the former Liberal government was in power.

Today, these homes are very unsanitary and have been condemned by the Department of Health. Nevertheless, these government-built slums, with no electricity, water or plumbing, still house nine families because other accommodation is lacking.

On many occasions Chief Henry Mianscum has demanded that these outdated, unhealthy, dangerous shacks be replaced.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat again that our Government must correct the errors of this department; otherwise, that community would be entitled to CIDA programs in the same way as the Third World.

VETERANS

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, in 1990 the Army, Navy and Air Force veterans in Canada will commemorate their 150th anniversary. It is the oldest veterans' organization in the country. The group's earliest members fought in the war of 1812.

Throughout its long history, the members of ANAF served their country with distinction. In recognition of its proud tradition, the ANAF last year asked Canada Post to issue a commemorative stamp in 1990. Just last month, the veterans learned, to their shock, that Canada Post had refused the request for a commemorative stamp. This is an insult to our veterans who sacrificed so much for our country. Surely they deserve more than the cursory rejection they received from Canada Post in light of the contribution they have made to ensure our freedom.

I urge the government to reconsider this offensive snub to Canada's oldest veterans organization. I strongly urge the government to issue a stamp commemorating the 150th anniversary of ANAF.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, as the process of reform continues in eastern Europe, parliamentarians must remain aware of difficulties in other areas of the world, particularly the continuing problem of family reunification for Ethiopian Jews. Although some 17,000 Ethiopian Jews were airlifted to Israel in 1984–85, 12,000 to 15,000 are still separated from their families in Ethiopia.

The United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights of which Ethiopia is a co–signatory, obliges nations to permit and assist in the reunification of families separated by migration. Given the Canadian people's generous assistance in aiding Ethiopia and the current downsizing of Soviet aid, Canada is in a strong position to exercise leadership on this vital human rights issue. Almost 1,500 Ethiopian Jewish children remain separated from their families, an injustice entering its fifth year.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to place this issue high on the agenda in our relations with Ethiopia.

EXPULSION OF HAITIAN CITIZENS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint–Michel): Mr. Speaker, since nine Haitians who were to be deported yesterday did not go to Mirabel (Airport) and it is becoming increasingly obvious that the reign of terror continues in Haiti under President Avril, I ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Conservative government to go back on their decision concerning the moratorium and to stop all planned expulsions immediately.

I make this request for all those poor people who fear persecution in Haiti, in particular, for Gertrude Nazaire and her daughter Minerve and for Lucienne Oscar, her husband and two children, who made representations at my riding office in Montreal.

I do not understand why the minister does not use her discretionary powers and take humanitarian action, as requested by the Montreal Rights and Freedoms League, among others.

What game is the Conservative Party playing with the Montreal Haitian community?

Last week, the Conservative ministers from Montreal undertook to ask their immigration colleague to change her position. However, the minister's secretary told the press that they made no such request. This hypocrisy is unacceptable. The inhuman deportations must stop right now.

BOWATER MERSEY PAPER COMPANY

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, this week marks the sixtieth anniversary of the Bowater Mersey Paper Company Ltd. Established by Isaac Walton Killam in 1929, Bowater Mersey has become the economic backbone of Queens County, Nova Scotia employing some 800 people directly and another 2,100 indirectly.

Under the leadership of general manager Harold Dobson and his predecessors, Bowater Mersey is a model of corporate commitment to the community and a company that values its employees and sees their interests as important as those of the company.

This year Bowater Mersey is completing a $150 million modernization that will not only improve the efficiency of the plant but enable it to meet the highest environmental standards, ensuring that Bowater Mersey will continue to be internationally competitive for years to come.

Congratulations to the Bowater Mersey Paper Company and all associated with it.

MONTREAL SOUTHWEST COMMITTEE ON ECONOMIC RECOVERY AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, last week, the Montreal southwest committee on economic recovery and employment released a major report on the economic and social development of our region.

The report's main recommendations are to create a community development corporation that would co-ordinate the activities of all parties and to invest $200 million, part of which would be new money, over a three-year period.

In Montreal, the southwest region has a very high unemployment and welfare rate. Forty per cent of the population lives below the poverty line.

The government has chosen to ignore the many instances of plants closing down.

[English]

The situation in Montreal southwest is serious. The committee's report is very well done. It should be acted upon immediately.

The government should now show that it means business and indicate right away that it intends to give these recommendations its unqualified support. People are tired of waiting.

RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, it is symbolic and sad that there are currently reports of sexual abuse of children from each end of our country. From Vancouver we heard that a judge has incredibly commented that a three year old girl shares responsibility in a sexual abuse case against a 33 year old man. In St. John's, Newfoundland it was just announced that Mount Cashel orphanage will be closed. We all know why.

I call on the Solicitor General and the Attorney General to do all in their power to protect children from sexual abuse through strong legislation and strong law enforcement. I call on all Canadians to protect children in any way possible and report any sexual abuse to authorities.

Today's children and youth have many hurdles and challenges that we adults have placed in their way. They do not need this one and every effort must be made to eradicate sexual abuse of children from Canada.

POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the federal government claims to support sustainable development. The Prime Minister signs declarations abroad to this end. The Minister of the Environment bravely promises action. But when it comes to the crunch, as with the closing of the B.C. fisheries because of pollution, we hear a different story.

The Minister of Fisheries says the government is not prepared to prosecute pulp and paper companies discharging toxins into coastal waters. He uses the pathetic excuse that the minute quantities of toxins contained in the effluents are difficult to measure, even though the accumulation in fish can be measured. His logic defies logic.

Should we expect more from this government which has an abysmal record in prosecuting polluters? It gives the Department of the Environment less than 1 per cent of the federal budget and does not ratify the law of the sea. Either this government does not mean what it says or it does not understand what sustainable development means.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, most Canadians were delighted last June when this House passed legislation providing that the pensions of widows and veterans would continue to be received until their death.

Prior to this bill, if a widow who had been receiving a pension as a result of her husband's death was to remarry, she would lose that pension. All parties supported this bill that was to provide up to a total of $28 million annually in pensions to approximately 4,500 widows and widowers. Unfortunately, to date, of those eligible only 700 have applied. The reality is that there has not been much of an effort to locate these people.

The Minister of Veterans Affairs says that they simply do not have the budget to extensively advertise this legislative change.

If this government has the funds to take out full-page ads in every major newspaper across the country promoting the Conservative position on the GST bill before it is even tabled in the House, then surely it can increase the Veterans Affairs budget to allow for a similar ad to be placed to reach these worth while Canadians.

SITUATION IN ROMANIA

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, today we heard the news that the well-known Romanian gymnast, Nadia Comaneci, had to flee her country because she prefers to live in freedom outside her native country instead of under the repressive regime of Nicolae Ceausescu. I think it is sad that even those who are privileged under the system are no longer satisfied with their life in Romania.

Not long ago, I met a number of my constituents who reminded me of the suffering of the Romanian people: severe economic hardship as a result of misguided economic policies, a total lack of freedom and human rights, and repression of national and religious minorities. Canadians hope they will soon see the following changes in Romania: free elections, respect for human rights and a complete renewal of the government, leading to the return of genuine democracy.

I appreciate the fact that the Secretary of State for External Affairs issued a press release on November 24, condemning the treatment of Mr. Mazilu by the Romanian authorities, and that Canada's ambassador to the United Nations raised the same issue that day. I strongly urge the government to renew its efforts to help improve the situation in Romania.

FOOD ADDITIVES

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, young athletes would be horrified if their parents suggested that they take anabolic steroids. Yet parents may be giving their children daily fixes of a far more harmful hormone. Vitamin D, routinely added to milk, baby food and breakfast cereal has been found to be one of the most potent steroid hormones available, and a very toxic food additive.

Scientists at Simon Fraser University say people should be avoiding it unless there is a clear medical reason for its use. Vitamin D has been found to increase aging in vital organs such as arteries, kidneys and bones leading to cardiovascular disease and osteoporosis. The vitamin may also increase the body's retention of toxic metals such as lead, cadmium and aluminum, a suspected culprit in Alzheimer's disease.

Federal regulations require its addition to milk, margarine and infant formula and may be responsible for unintentional infant poisonings. The Minister of National Health and Welfare should undertake a detailed study of the health risks of vitamin D in the interests of Canadians who because of government regulation may be exposing themselves to excessive levels of consumption.

HEALTH

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the World Health Organization has designated December 1 as World AIDS Day. The Ontario provincial government is commemorating the day by giving substantial financial support to four clinics for AIDS victims and to the University of Toronto for research. The federal government should commemorate AIDS Day by acting on the recommendations of the report on AIDS commissioned by the Minister of Health last June and released recently.

The report calls on the government to establish a new agency to oversee an increased fight against AIDS; to establish appropriate mechanisms for surveillance, prevention and control; as well, to address and eliminate high risk behaviour; and to help develop a vaccine for prevention as well as treatment modalities to control the disease and to ensure that the human rights of those affected are respected and their families and care givers receive adequate support.

I urge the government to accelerate the development of a national strategy on HIV infection and AIDS and make a commitment now to spend more time and money combating this most serious global disease.

TRIBUTE TO MR. JAMES F. COOKE

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise hon. members that Mr. James Cooke, Deputy Principal Clerk in the Journals Branch is retiring today after 35 years of combined service to the Government of Canada and to the House of Commons.

Mr. Cooke began his career at the House in 1963 in the Index and Reference Branch and from there moved on to the Journals Branch where he has served in the position of Deputy Principal Clerk since 1975. I am sure the House will want to join with me in wishing him all the very best in his retirement and our very great thanks for his years of service to all of us.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In his absence I will put it to the Deputy Prime Minister. All the senior citizen groups in this country and an overwhelming number of the social service agencies, including the government's own National Advisory Council on Welfare, stated that the Conservative proposal to claw back seniors' pensions and family allowances is an attack on the universality of our social programs. It is also an attack so far as our pensioners are concerned on what they consider to be a right of citizenship in this country.

Yesterday, the Conservative members on the parliamentary committee set up to study that clawback rammed through a vote to hear only four witnesses on this tremendously important income tax change. The Minister of Finance will not even appear personally before the committee to give it an explanation. I cannot remember in my parliamentary career where an income tax change of this importance has been done by stifling the witnesses in this country who want to appear before the committee.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us why the government is afraid to let senior citizens appear before the parliamentary committee to give their views on this grossly unfair change to the income tax, the clawback of senior citizens' pensions?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Leader of the Opposition that it was with great pleasure that I appeared in front of the committee and answered all the questions that were put to me during that period.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One hour.

Mr. Loiselle: The hon. member must be aware that this government has been faced over the last year with a major problem, which is largely of his making, and that no part of government spending can be left out.

As far as the Old Age Security benefits are concerned, I would like to state that during the pre-budget consultation representatives of various groups came to us, a member of One Voice for example, and said: " We agree with the economic council that people with over $50,000 of income should have their OAS taxed back". These benefits are, of course, important. Universality has been protected. Every Canadian entitled to it will receive his or her cheque. They were taxed before and they will continue to be so that the lower income people are well protected.

[Translation]

M. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance should have appeared personally before the committee. The Minister of State excused himself after one hour, in order to listen to the Prime Minister's speech on abortion. That is all very well. But he should appear again before the committee, this time with his Minister of Finance, and allow witnesses across the country to testify before the commitee. That is the problem.

[English]

I will again direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Just as with the goods and services tax, the Minister of Finance maintains that on this issue of the clawback of the senior citizens' pensions, he is right and everybody else in the country is wrong.

I will say to the Deputy Prime Minister, a man who appreciates Parliament, I guess the Conservatives are coming to a point where democracy is becoming a bit of a nuisance to them and they want to cut off some of this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why will the government not at least put into the legislation a guarantee that the clawback on senior citizens' pensions will be indexed against inflation. Given the government's track record, given the personal record of the Minister of Finance, why should senior citizens, or anyone else, trust the minister? Why should anyone trust his word that he will review the situation in a few years. If the government is serious, put that indexation clause in the legislation.

Mr. Loiselle: I was in the position to indicate to the committee yesterday—and I would remind the right hon. Leader of the Opposition that it is for the committee to set its agenda, and not for me—that this government will stand on its record.

Look at the various programs we have set and reviewed every year in a positive manner. We have said repeatedly that for the old age security benefits, we would do the same every year.

SENIOR CITIZENS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my next question is directed to the Minister of State (Seniors). I wonder why the Minister is getting a cabinet minister's salary and has such a large staff, considering the circumstances. If the minister is supposed to represent Canada's seniors, why has she failed to defend their cause in Cabinet? Since all senior citizens' groups in this country are opposed to the pension clawback for seniors, why didn't the minister insist on letting these groups appear before the parliamentary committee? She is supposed to speak for our seniors but they have no voice before the comittee. I suggest that the minister immediately ask the Deputy Prime Minister or the Prime Minister to intervene so that her Tory colleagues will let Canada's senior citizens' groups express their views before the committee.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that it is up to the committee to decide how it intends to proceed. However, I can give this House and Canada's seniors the assurance that I am the Minister who defends their interests in Cabinet. Whenever a government project, initiative or program is proposed, we make sure that the rights and benefits of Canada's seniors are protected. We have maintained the universality of our programs. We intend to improve our social programs, and what we are now asking 4 per cent of Canada's seniors to do is to help us reduce the deficit so that we will have the flexibility we need to improve our social programs.

RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice who I believe is in the Chamber. It involves the remarks made by a county court judge in British Columbia that a three-year old girl, herself sexually assaulted, was sexually aggressive.

Has the minister used his specific power under Section 63 of the Judges Act to require the Judicial Council of Canada to commence an inquiry immediately into this horrific situation?

• (1430)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the case in question. I have to tell my hon. friend that the case is presently under appeal. Until the appeal period is over and all court actions are finished, I think it would be inappropriate to take any action or to comment on it in this place.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, all Canadians stand appalled at this situation. If the minister has not and will not use his Section 63 authority, can he tell this House what is being done to ensure that attitudes such as this do not continue to be voiced in Canadian courts?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, any comment that I might make in response to that could be taken as affecting the case in question. While I sympathize with the point of view of my hon. friend in a general way, I point out to her that it is a matter of public record that a complaint is being made to the Canadian Judicial Council. I am sure if that is the case and it follows through, the council will address itself to the complaint received.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who is no doubt aware of the existence of Conservative Party documents which outline a strategy of linking government contracts, grants or policies to corporate donations.

In at least the case of the Royal Bank in 1987, the targeted hit was made by the PC Canada Fund chairman, David Angus, a close friend of the Prime Minister. He succeeded in a $40,000 hit when an earlier bagman had failed.

Since political favours for cash leads to the corruption of democratic institutions, will the Deputy Prime Minister take steps to amend Canada's election laws to ensure that such activity is made illegal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think that what is important is that issues of this matter be properly conducted in accordance with the Elections Act.

I think the hon. member is referring to an internal document or memo that has never really been put in place. It is the substance of a story that goes back to November 19 and November 20, 1986. It is interesting to note that Broadcast News Toronto indicated that it did not want any further use of the story because it was outdated and is really old news that is being rehashed.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Perhaps the Minister of Justice can clarify this for those corporations which may have felt that they were put under a similar kind of pressure to that of the Royal Bank.

Will the minister tell Canadians, Canadian businesses and members of this Chamber whether the soliciting of donations from donors by reminding them of government business they have received is illegal or is in his view just improper?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, what is important is that under the Elections Act there is full public disclosure of contributions received, whether from individuals, corporations or unions. As long as this is conducted in compliance with the provisions of that act, that is the most important element. If the hon member has any evidence to the effect that there is a violation of that act, then he should take appropriate action.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about here is signals between government and big business. Canadians are skeptical about the benefits of the donation connection between big business and the Tories.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister really expect Canadians to believe that there is no connection between the $660 million aviation radar contract awarded to Hughes Aircraft Company and the wink-wink, nudge-nudge, you-know-what-I-mean promise of Hughes to locate in the ridings of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Science and Technology or—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Chair has been patient, but the hon. member is straying into an area where he ought not to be. The minister may want to respond. I certainly will not call upon him to do that if he does not want to.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member talks about signals. If he has any evidence of signals, let him take the appropriate action.

If the hon. member wants to open up the bidding process, let him do that. There is an appropriate place for that to be done in committee or he can raise it specifically on the floor of the House of Commons.

My understanding is that the procedures were closely followed. If he has something against a contract being awarded to British Columbia, Alberta and western Canada, Ontario and other parts of the country, but specifically a good portion of it going to his home province and to the province of Alberta, let him say so and not hide behind that sort of silhouette of purity that he sometimes suggests but does not always purvey.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it the practice of the government to provide to any political party and specifically to the PC Canada fund lists of government contracts awarded and, if so, will he make these lists available to all members of this House?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to a story which was discredited three or four years ago. I am sure that even when he was not in the House he was probably aware of that. This is a story that has been rehashed and the memo that the hon. member refers to has never been adopted.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I note the Deputy Prime Minister did not answer my question. I asked if he would make the lists available, not whether the story was discredited. I will go on with a supplementary question.

The government has established a commission to study the means by which political parties are funded. Will the Deputy Prime Minister instruct his bagmen to appear before this commission and reveal their practices and their lists?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that there was one positive element in that particular question, the fact that there is a commission that was established to study the elections procedure, the fund-raising activities. This issue has been debated in the House and outside the House. I hope if the hon. member wants to make reference to the commission about who should appear or who should not appear, he can make that representation directly to the commission.

JUSTICE

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Last week the Deputy Prime Minister and the Solicitor General, both in response to questions in this House, refused to release the contents of the November 7 Peter White letter relative to the RCMP conduct of the Richard Grisé affair. This morning those contents were leaked by RCMP sources through the press. That leak process, after refusal to release it here, is contemptuous to the members of this House and demands to be called such.

Will the Prime Minister, now that the contents of the letter are on the street, immediately release the contents of the letter from his office and put an end to the speculation about the letter's purpose?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing new in what I saw this morning, except that some information seems to have appeared in the press. The situation has not changed since last week, which means we still have a case before the courts in connection with the document that was discussed last week. I believe it was the RCMP's decision not to release it. It was not the government's. This document is part of an RCMP investigation on the situation. And since the case is already before the courts, I think it would be inappropriate for us to release it. If it ever is released, the RCMP will decide to do so, not the government.

[English]

Mr. Lee: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. I have to remind him that RCMP sources are quoted in the article of this morning.

The public has real concern over possible politicization of the RCMP by this government and there are many public questions which are going unanswered. Now, as if to confirm the suspicion that there really does exist a political faction inside the RCMP, we have this perfectly timed leak this morning to take the pressure off the government.

When will the Solicitor General take action to locate this suspected political connection and stop the erosion of public confidence in the RCMP, and what will those steps be?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the best way to stop, as the hon. member said, the erosion of confidence in the RCMP would be to stop asking questions and levelling accusations or making allegations against the RCMP.

I will repeat, as I have said many times, that we must respect the work being done by the RCMP in the course of its investigation. I believe the RCMP Commissioner has already answered all these questions and will appear before the Justice Committee as soon as he is back from Interpol, within the next few days.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the work of the legislative committee on the clawback bill. I must say I was surprised at the comments that I heard earlier from the government benches. Surely Canadians who are concerned about the cuts in VIA Rail should be happy to know that there is still a railroad running in Canada. It is called the legislative committee on Bill C–28.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister on this important issue of government policy is this: the government in Bill C–28 is doing one of two things, it is either ending universality or it is introducing a discriminatory tax based on age and family size. Now, which is it?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to give the hon. member information that I did not have when I last rose in this House. The committee apparently has asked the clerk to invite some of the groups which asked to be heard. Therefore, that should at least—

Some Hon. Members: Only four.

Mr. Loiselle: Well, a little while ago it was none.

I would also like to remind the hon. member that this measure was introduced in the budget some months ago and has been debated and discussed on many occasions. It was also discussed in this House in the debate on the budget. It will be discussed again in committee and will come back to the House.

Therefore, I remind the hon. member that the threat to our social programs, and this one in particular which is extremely important to our seniors, does not come from any measure that we take on this side, but from the growing deficit and from the debt we inherited. We should be concerned that next year we will be paying interest in the range of $40 billion. This is something that has to be tackled and no program of this government can escape scrutiny. So this is my answer.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that the minister sounds like he wants to invite more groups to the committee but the record will show that he did not answer the question.

Since the pension and family allowance clawback constitutes the most sweeping change in Canada's social policy in 20 years, is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to inform the House that the Minister of Finance will appear before the Committee to answer questions about this tax which discriminates against seniors and families?

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, this is not a discriminatory tax. A number of seniors receive additional benefits, and in line with our general program review, these measures must apply to all programs.

I think we should also remember that, for instance, when the system is fully operational, only 50,000 people on high incomes will have to pay back all part of their benefits; 74,000 will pay a part: in all, 130,000 seniors out of three million will be partially affected by these measures.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister.

During last year's federal election, the Prime Minister met in Edmonton with the Lubicon Band Chief, Bernard Ominayak, ostensibly to get negotiations back on track after 50 years of on–again but mostly off–again attempts to reach a settlement.

In January, the government presented its formal offer, which even Premier Getty tells us is "deficient", declaring the Lubicons could take it or leave it, and any consideration of compensation would have to go to court.

With the Lubicon people shutting down Crown–owned oil and gas operations on their traditional lands and with federal officials meeting on this matter with Alberta officials in Calgary tomorrow and Friday, will the government direct its officials to make clear, and announce, the government's willingness now to resume negotiations with the Lubicon on all aspects of their claim, including a compensation package?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, ever since we made this offer last January, we have been prepared to go back to the table to discuss the fair and comprehensive offer that was made to the Lubicons. Unfortunately, the Lubicons have been refusing to come back to the table.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Will the minister not agree that what he calls a fair offer is a pastiche of things that the band might do. It in no way comes close to dealing with the question of compensation. In fact, government negotiators ruled out compensation in their September 8 letter: "On the question of compensation, we invite the band to pursue this claim in the Canadian courts". Will he agree that in fact he is willing to negotiate nothing? Agreeing to that, will he now announce that the government has changed its policy and will negotiate?

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, the government has not changed its policy but is prepared to negotiate, has been prepared to go back to the table and is still prepared to go back to the table. It has directed the negotiators to meet with the provincial—

An Hon. Member: Listen to the Lubicon.

Mr. Cadieux: Perhaps I can be permitted to answer, since a valid question has been put.

We have directed our negotiators to speak with the provincial negotiators because the Lubicons have voiced concerns to the provincial negotiators about our offer, but not to us. We are analysing those concerns. We are prepared to go back to the table and discuss those concerns and address them in an offer that is comparable to any other claim settlement that has been made in Canada since.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

On November 21, Quebec farmers demonstrated on Parliament Hill, and after talking to farmers from Abitibi, I want our joint programs, marketing boards and quotas to be protected 100 per cent.

My question is as follows: Could the Minister confirm in the House today that Quebec farmers will not be ignored or abandoned by his department, more specifically in connection with GATT Article 11, and that the Quebec government will have its say in the talks?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to assure the hon. member that neither the farmers of Quebec nor the farmers of Canada will be forgotten by the government at any time, whether it is in the MTN negotiations or otherwise.

With respect to those negotiations, I made it clear to the Cairns Group when I was in Bangkok last week dealing with a comprehensive agriculture proposal what Canada's position is in the matter of supply-management boards. I noted there that the techniques for achieving trade liberalization have to take full account of the outcome on the rule side, and that on the rule side we will be looking for a new GATT Article 11 that will be more effective and clearer. The existing GATT rules under Article 11 permit import restrictions and support effective domestic production control programs. We have those in our supply management programs now. We want to see that continued.

I explained to them that we did not think the new GATT Article 11 would be subject to tariffication with reference to those new rules and how they worked. In other words, the Mazankowski-Blais position was put clearly to the Cairns Group and put clearly to the world on behalf of the Quebec farmers.

HEALTH

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last week in the native community of Kingfisher Lake, located in northwestern Ontario, a 16-year-old boy took his life. This is the fourth suicide in that community of 300 in the past two years.

There have been 40 suicides in six communities in the Shibogama Tribal Council area in the past two and a half years. The suicide rate in native communities located in northwestern Ontario is seven times the national average.

My question to the minister is this: Will the minister request immediately a judicial inquiry into the increasing suicides in northwestern Ontario with a view to finding solutions to this very disturbing crisis in the native communities?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the hon. gentleman raising this very serious question. The whole issue of suicide, particularly suicide among Canada's native peoples, is of particular concern to me.

The department is commissioning studies to be done on issues related to suicide to get a better understanding of the reasons for it, particularly among young Canadians. Additionally, we have programs in place that are designed to help with native problems on reserves and to try to deal particularly with problems related to alcoholism and drug abuse.

The success in cutting the suicide rates in a number of instances has been quite good. For example, I had the privilege recently of visiting one reserve in western Canada, outside of Edmonton, where there was a significant improvement in terms of reduction of the suicide rate. We will continue to do everything we can to be helpful in terms of assisting in that.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. The minister did not listen to my question. Obviously he and the government are not listening. It has been two and a half years since we brought this particular situation to the attention of this government. There have been 40 suicides in these small areas of northwestern Ontario, with a population of only 1,800. It is time that we act and not just listen.

My supplementary question relates to the 21 aboriginal communities in my riding in which there are only three mental health workers. That is what I am talking about when I talk about the fact that there is nothing being done. There are only three mental health workers in a large geographic area to try to discuss those matters of interest to the people of those communities.

I would ask the minister if he would look into holding a full departmental review of social services available to Canada's aboriginal peoples and assure this House that such a review will include the full and meaningful participation of aboriginal peoples.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the provision of medical services to Canada's aboriginal peoples is constantly under review in our department. Discussions constantly take place with the native peoples themselves because we recognize the fact that to be successful, the provision of services has to be responsive to the needs and to the concerns of the people who are most affected.

Any input the hon. gentleman wants to make in terms of suggestions I would be glad to receive from him. But I can tell him that the department puts a high priority on the improvement of services in native communities, it puts a high priority on consultations with native groups and certainly we are taking whatever measures that we can to try to ensure that the problem of suicide among Canada's native peoples is dealt with. The rate is too high in Canada and it certainly is a concern to us. There has been success, as I indicated to him earlier, in some communities in dealing with that, and we want to do everything that we can to be helpful.

Oral Questions

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Bill C–22, which was passed in the last Parliament, made changes to Canada's drug patent legislation. Most of the opposition to the bill was, and still is, focused on the bill's effect on industry research and on consumer prices.

Can the parliamentary secretary explain to the House what the impact of Bill C–22 has been to date on pharmaceutical research and development and on drug prices in Canada?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, you will follow this answer with great interest as will members of the House because in fact the cost of drugs has dropped some 1.7 per cent, saving our senior citizens some $60 million.

The second aspect is that research and development is up to $164.5 million which is a sales to R and D ratio of 6 point some as compared to 4 point some. The only regrettable thing is that the tactics of the opposition parties delayed this for many months and cost people hundreds of millions of dollars and hundreds of jobs.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, who will be aware that when this House moved to the concept of legislative committees, it did so in order to free up the standing committees to pursue general policy matters and not to provide a quick process for legislation.

What happened in the Bill C–28 committee yesterday is similar to what happened in the Bill C–13 committee on Nordion and the Bill C–15 committee on plant breeders' rights, the government using its majority to move things through very quickly without public hearings.

My question is to the Deputy Prime Minister, who knows full well that this House only operates on co–operation. Will he now instruct the Conservative members on the Bill C–28 committee to reopen the question of hearing more witnesses, to allow for at least 20 witnesses who have asked to appear to talk about the clawback provisions?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in past days, and I think from that party, there have been false accusations about me and other cabinet ministers interfering with the committee process. Far be it from me to ever undertake to that, Sir.

I would only tell the hon. member that he has been around here long enough to know how the committee process operates. The committee is in charge of its own destiny.

He suggested that the plant breeders' rights bill was rammed through. It seems to me that it has been before the House of Commons and committee more or less continuously since September. I do not know. If that is ramming something through, then he will have to give me a better example.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, with regard to Bill C–28, we have heard only four witnesses. The government has tabled 125 amendments to an 85–page bill, providing just a few hours of consideration of the knowledge of Canadian people. I, personally, in the transport committee had to have the government whip's assistant removed from the committee as she was trying to instruct the members of the transport committee on the Conservative side how to vote, so do not tell me there is no interference.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister kindly suggest then to the government members that it is appropriate to hold full public hearings here in Ottawa so all those people who represent seniors groups, teachers—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I would think that is an appropriate issue to raise at the steering committee level. I invite the hon. member to do that.

Just to correct a previous answer, plant breeders' rights has been before the committee since June 27. I made a slight error, I said September. The member used that as an example of this government ramming through legislation. I ask him to reconsider that charge.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I remind the minister that over 600 children are still out of school on the Six Nations Reserve.

Results of the independent air assessment done on the schools show airborne asbestos in four of the 10 schools. While this asbestos is said to be presently at safe levels, it was recommended that the air be monitored every three months.

Why should these parents be forced to send their children to schools that have asbestos particles in the air? Why should five, six and seven-year-old children be learning in fear? What kind of learning environment is the minister providing for these children?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, this issue has been ongoing for a while. Following certain questions in the House by my hon. colleague, there have been some meetings and discussions with the band council and chief of Six Nations on a number of occasions. A proposal was made by myself to the chief and council. That proposal was presented to council, accepted by council. We have acted upon that proposal since. I am informed that as of Wednesday, November 29, 47 out of 48 classrooms on the reserve are open, that 60 per cent of the students are attending, and that as of Monday there will be other classrooms prepared to receive the other children.

Mr. Speller: Mr. Speaker, I do not know where the minister gets his figures because we have been told in the riding by the parents themselves that clearly not even half of the students are back in school.

On a supplementary question, the parents of the Six Nations have repeatedly asked the minister to remove the asbestos. The minister has repeatedly said no, because he does not think it poses a health risk.

How can the minister make such a decision when there are no legal guidelines in Canada for acceptable levels in Canadian schools?

Given that the levels found in several of these schools are higher than acceptable levels in the United States, and given that it is going to cost the minister as much money to monitor the air as it would to remove the asbestos, will the minister agree that this asbestos must be removed now?

Mr. Cadieux: As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, there were some discussions with the chief and council. A proposal was made and was accepted by the council and the chief.

We have acted upon the recommendations. We had three experts there with respect to the asbestos, and the asbestos that was removable has been removed. The other has been encapsulated and all the experts agree that it is safe.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. John Lamb of the Canadian Centre for Arms and Disarmament has said that the Prime Minister's trip to the Soviet Union, in terms of defence and disarmament, was: "a missed opportunity and a washout". He suggested that Canada should have put forward an initiative leading to a multilateral approach to disarmament in the Arctic.

I want to know why Canada, of all countries, missed the opportunity to put forward an initiative leading to a regime which would see demilitarization of the Arctic, a zone which is so important to all Canadians.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the reason Mr. Lamb might have made that statement is that he was not there. He does not know what happened during the visit by the Prime Minister to the Soviet Union.

But there were some people who were there who have been heard from. Mr. Gorbachev has been heard from. He said that he found the discussions to be particularly helpful. He thought it was an important step forward, that there was an agreement that the foreign minister of the Soviet Union and I would meet to discuss actions we might take in the Arctic.

The foreign minister of the Soviet Union has been heard from. Mr. Shevardnadze described the visit of the Prime Minister to the Soviet Union as being a very important step forward in the relations between Canada and the Soviet Union, and also important in terms of the possibility of making progress on our joint concerns and interests in the Arctic.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, there may have been progress, but in terms of demilitarization there is no response to the initiative offered by the President of the Soviet Union in his Murmansk speech some time ago. Canada should have gone prepared to advise other NATO countries such as Norway and Denmark which would be quite prepared to take part in a multilateral approach to demilitarization of the Arctic.

I want to ask again: Why is Canada not ready to offer an initiative which Canada of all countries is in the best position to take?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member is dead wrong. The Murmansk proposal was made by Mr. Gorbachev in 1987. I responded to it in the fall of 1987. We then wrote the Soviet Union asking for specific proposals that they might make. We received none.

When Mr. Gorbachev and the Prime Minister of Canada met in Moscow a week ago, the Prime Minister of Canada said: "We are interested in the Murmansk proposal. What specifically are you proposing? Is there anything you want us to follow up?" Mr. Gorbachev said then: "We think it would be very valuable for Mr. Shevardnadze and the Canadian foreign minister to meet to pursue issues that Canada might propose or that the Soviet Union might propose". That is substantial progress by any fair judgment.

Members of the Liberal party should recognize that this trip has allowed Canada to make very substantial steps forward including in terms of establishing progress and agreed regimes in the Arctic. Instead of seeking every occasion to make narrow, partisan attacks, they should recognize a national accomplishment.

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. We have a strike in progress by the government ships' crews, fishery patrol boats and the Coast Guard, and a threatened strike by the hospital services employees.

The two main issues are pay equity with regard to women in the hospital services and regional pay disparity in the other issues.

Will the government now give the House a commitment that it will live up to court decisions against it as far as pay equity is concerned, a commitment to regional pay equality, and a commitment that it will return to the bargaining table to negotiate the other outstanding issues?

We want an answer now on pay equity and regional disparities.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer first the question dealing with regional rates of pay. I can assure my hon. colleague that even before the ships' crews group began its strike, the government had put on the table a proposal to reach regional pay equality between the east coast and the west coast, so that is on the table.

I am happy to tell my colleague that in that case we resumed negotiations this morning by mutual consent and hopefully we can resolve the other issues that are outstanding.

In terms of the hospital services group, I would like first of all to correct my colleague's claim that this is a women's group. It is a group that is roughly 50–50, and there is no discrimination in that group on the basis of sex.

We had in that case a consent order issued by the Human Rights Tribunal on July 15, 1987, and all three phases of that consent order have been fulfilled.

The issue here is that even after meeting this question of pay equity in the group, the group is asking for an increase of 49.2 per cent. I must say that we take some exception to that. We feel that it is not quite in keeping with what other public servants in this country at all levels of government have been receiving in terms of compensation over the last few years, so there is a lot of discussion to be had on that one.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, since we are not sitting tomorrow and Friday I would like to ask the government House leader the standard question about government business he intends to call over the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, since the House, by order, will not be sitting tomorrow or Friday I will indicate the business for the week of December 4.

On Monday, December 4, we will call Bill C-34, the Canadian Centre for Management Development bill, for second reading. In the afternoon we would hope to be able to proceed through report stage of Bill C-13, known as the Nordion bill.

On Tuesday, December 5, we will call Bill C-13, the Nordion bill, for third reading. In the afternoon on Tuesday, December 5, we would call Bill C-15, the plant breeders' rights bill, at report stage.

Wednesday, December 6, will be the last allotted day for the supply period ending December 19 and there will be votes on that supply bill.

On Thursday, December 7, the intention is to continue with Bill C-15.

That is all for the present time.

POINTS OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I have been around the House for only a year now, but I understand when a minister of the Crown responds to a question by reading from a document that the minister tables the document.

I understand the Minister of State for International Trade read from a document today in answer to a question from one of my colleagues from the NDP. I am just wondering when he will be tabling that document.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, all ministers normally bring into the House briefing notes to which they refer from time to time in answering questions. I am sure that that was the case with the hon. minister in question.

Mr. Speller: The Minister of State for International Trade quoted from a document, and I ask that the minister table the document in the House.

• (1510)

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, it might be helpful to note that the point being made by the hon. member is supported in fact at citation 327 on page 115 of Beauchesne's. Subsection 1 of that citation states:

> A Minister of the Crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a despatch or other state paper not before the House, unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table. This restraint is similar to the rule of evidence in courts of law, which prevent counsel from citing documents which have not been produced in evidence. The principle is so reasonable that it has not been contested; and when the objection has been made in time, it has been generally acquiesced in.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would at times gladly have all of Beauchesne's applied in all instances. I think it would spruce up Question Period considerably if it were. My hon. friend used the words "despatch or state paper", and neither of those were used in this instance.

MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a different point of order. I think you would find agreement for the Minister of Justice and House leader to put a motion to the House of Commons.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was prepared to do this under motions, but I am prepared to do it now on behalf of the House.

Mr. Speaker, you will remember that on November 22, 1989, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, the member for Duvernay, raised a question of privilege.

As a result of the discussions which flowed from the question of privilege raised by the member for Duvernay there has been agreement among members that the following motion will be jointly moved and seconded by the members from Duvernay, York West, and Kootenay West—Revelstoke:

> That this House, following the publication of the Montreal Yellow Pages (July '89 to July '90 edition) by Tele Direct Inc., a subsidiary of Bell Canada, wherein on page 453, an advertisement for College Platon contains the word "Mafia" in place of the appropriate term, "Italian", strongly condemns this act, which offends the integrity of the Canadian/Italian community and undermines the viability of our national multiculturalism policy; and the House urges Tele Direct Inc., to immediately recall the publication in question and directs the Speaker to communicate this resolution to the president of Tele Direct Inc.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion of the hon. Minister of Justice.

FIRE SAFETY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise on a point of order an issue with the Chair very briefly.

Your Honour will know that a little earlier today fire bells rang in the Centre Block of the Parliament Buildings. I would like to alert the Chair, and perhaps hon. members, to the fact that I believe it is about time we started to take fire precautions a little bit more seriously. Fire doors in the Centre Block were actually jammed open with wooden wedges, and the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier and I were busy removing them so as to close the fire doors.

In fact we are making considerable investment in terms of protecting this Chamber and this building by constructing these fire doors, under the authority of Your Honour I believe, and some of the work is actually still going on. I do feel that it should be incumbent on all of us and on the staff of the House of Commons to ensure that we take all appropriate precautions and never leave such fire doors open and, obviously and more important, quickly vacate the building using fire doors rather than elevators, which was in fact being done at the time when the fire bells were ringing. In fact there was actually a line-up of people standing at the doors of elevators when no one should even have been using an elevator.

The point I am making is that perhaps better instructions should be going out to all people, including members of Parliament, in order to ensure that the safety of members and indeed of all individuals in this House is better protected in the future.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened with care to the representation of the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

I can assure hon. members that I take the intervention seriously. I will attend to any steps that have to be taken to rectify the situation that has been brought to our attention.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): moved for leave to introduce Bill C-279, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act and the Parliament of Canada Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the hon. member shall have leave to introduce the bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Elections Act to require the government to call a by-election within a stated time from the issue of the Speaker's warrant when a vacancy occurs in this chamber.

The purpose of the bill is to ensure that the by-election is held promptly—I believe 80 days is provided from the date of issue of the warrant—so that the government cannot sit around as it has done for the last six months and do nothing while the people of Chambly are deprived of representation in the House.

The purpose of the bill is to ensure that we do not wait six months from the time the warrant is addressed to the Chief Electoral Officer and the government gets around to announcing a date for an election. In fact it requires the election to be held within a specified time as well so that we do not have an election two or three years off as is permitted under the existing legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

FISHERIES

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from more than 800 fixed gear fishermen on the southwest coast of Newfoundland.

The prayer of their petition is that the Government of Canada takes the necessary steps to restrict auto trawl fishing vessels not based in 3PN and 4RD from entering into the 3PN and 4RD winter fishery until such time as the cod stock has recovered to the extent as to allow fixed gear fishermen a reasonable level of landings so as to provide a reasonable standard of living for their families.

The fixed gear fishermen have always been the backbone of the fishing industry in Newfoundland. Their livelihoods are being threatened by vessels not based in 3PN and 4RD. I have the pleasure to present this petition.

• (1520)

I ask the minister to respond to the prayer of the petition so ably put down by the fishermen in Cape Anguille, Codroy, Cape Ray, Red Rocks, Port aux Basques, Margaree, Fox Roost, Burnt Island, Isle aux Morts, Rose Blanche, Diamond Cove, Harbour Le Cou, Petites, and three other communities: St. Fintan's, McKay's and Jeffrey's, all of whom would like to have the prayer of their petition heard.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, I have a separate petition on a totally different issue. Some 2,600 people from various parts of Newfoundland and elsewhere in Canada have forwarded this petition to me to be tabled in the House.

Their prayer is that Parliament be called upon to formulate and legislate a law to protect life from conception, a law which seeks to save the life of both mother and child.

I am sure those signatories will watch with interest the progress of the abortion bill through committee in the next few days. I table this petition as well.

BILL 178

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions to present.

The first one that I would like to present contains the signatures of 145 people. It calls on the Governor General in Council to fully enforce the Charter of Rights and Freedoms by the exercise of its constitutional power of disallowance with respect to Bill 178 of the province of Quebec.

These petitions have been signed by residents in my riding, along with people in other regions of the province of Nova Scotia, including such areas as New Glasgow, Pictou County, and the surrounding area.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the next petition I have is on the issue of the Young Offenders Act. It contains 1,242 signatures calling on the Government of Canada to revise the laws dealing with young offenders, specifically relating to age, sentencing, housing and rehabilitation of these young criminals.

This petition was organized by the Nova Scotia chapter of the group Citizens United for Safety and Justice which gathered signatures from people all across the province of Nova Scotia.

I thank this organization for its hard work and dedication.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the third and final petition I have is getting near the end of the petitions that have come in from across Canada which now total over 97,714 signatures. Unlike my colleague on the opposite side of the House, I do not intend to read the names of all the cities, villages, hamlets, townships, counties and regions from which these 97,714 signatures have come.

However, I would like to point out that this petition contains an additional 100 signatures and calls on the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws to allow the Minister of Justice to order the extradition of fugitives, either immediately or after they have been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system.

As I said, these 100 signatures bring the total to 97,714.

OPPOSITION TO GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table some 25 petitions signed by constituents in Ottawa—Vanier who want to let this Government know that they are firmly opposed to the Conservative Government's proposal to inflict a new goods and services tax on Canadian taxpayers. We know that this same Government has increased the present sales tax on manufactured products by some 50 per cent, from 9 per cent in 1984 to 13.5 per cent today, and that this tax proposed by the Conservative Government will be unfair to small and medium-sized businesses; that Canadians will be faced with a sales tax hidden in the selling price and that it will apply to nearly all the goods and services they buy; that the tax, applied across the board to goods and services, will cause serious hardship for families on low and moderate incomes; that it is a regressive tax and that it absolutely must be rejected by the Canadian Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to table in this House petitions against the GST, which means the goods and services tax should be renamed "the grief and suffering tax".

This petition is signed by 2,604 residents of the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. These citizens are opposed to the tax in general and in addition they are opposed to the fact that figure skating lessons and other such educational services will be taxed because of the lust for receiving funds from the constituents of Canada of the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present four certified petitions in this House on behalf of the constituents of Lambton—Middlesex from the towns of Strathroy, Oil City, Oil Springs, Petrolia, Wyoming Forest and Watford.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have more petitions from the residents of Parkdale—High Park objecting to the government's proposed 9 per cent goods and services tax.

Their arguments are that this GST will be an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians and will hit them not only with higher taxes but with higher inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment. They humbly pray and call upon this Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax.

Pursuant to Standing Order 36, the enclosed petition is deemed correct as to form and content.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to table two groups of petitions pursuant to Standing Order 36. The first group is the balance of petitions which I have received with respect to the National Arts Centre orchestra.

I am pleased to note that that strike has now been settled. I hope that the board will agree to the conditions and the terms so that I will no longer have to table further petitions in the interest of the National Arts Centre orchestra here in the capital city. It is with much pleasure that I deposit, in the name of 100 people, their concerns with respect to the National Arts Centre and its orchestra.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have a series of petitions, signed in proper form, announcing once again the petitioners' serious concern that this government is not listening to Canadians with respect to the 9 per cent goods and services tax which will come on top of the provincial tax.

They call on the government to go back to the drawing board and restructure a tax that will be fair and equitable for all Canadians and will remove the regressivity one finds in this tax.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of petitions on two subjects to present.

The first two are from my own constituency of Saskatoon—Humboldt and the third is from the consistency of the minister of defence.

They call upon the government to reject the current proposed goods and services tax, to reform the tax system so that it does not fall so heavily on ordinary Canadians, and to put through a tax system which is not regressive but is real tax reform.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition which is signed by a group of citizens from Toronto who call upon Parliament to maintain VIA Rail Canada's present national rhetoric, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment, and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate to passenger service.

• (1530)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have two groups of petitions to table today. The first one has been signed by 35 residents of the metropolitan Toronto area, from Markham, Stoufville, Richmond Hill, et cetera.

The petition is from people who support our rail passenger service called VIA Rail. They call upon Parliament to maintain VIA Rail, Canada's present national network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have another group of petitions from citizens in my riding who vehemently object to the manufacturers' sales tax. They do not want a 9 per cent, 8 per cent, 7 per cent, 6 per cent, 5 per cent, or any per cent goods and services tax.

I have petitions signed by 25 visitors to Franchie's Confectionery, 25 visitors to Walsh Variety, 25 visitors to Accents and the Whitefish general store in Nolalu.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today under Standing Order 36 regarding a petition against cuts to VIA Rail. It has been approved by the clerk of petitions.

The 27 petitioners call upon the government to maintain VIA Rail, Canada's present national network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate on passenger service in Canada.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. The first one is with respect to VIA Rail. It is signed by a number of Canadians, 35 to be exact, who are concerned over the loss of VIA Rail in this country. They are concerned over the fact that VIA Rail cuts are going to cause problems and difficulties for Canadians. They ask the government to reconsider the cuts to VIA Rail.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is with respect to agriculture in this country. I have a petition signed by a number of producers from Saskatchewan who are concerned over the removal of oats from the Canadian Wheat Board. They call on this government to reinstate oats under the Canadian Wheat Board Act and to give it and barley the same protection that wheat presently now enjoys.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure today to present petitions from various places in Canada.

The first petition is in respect of the cut-backs to the CBC. The petitioners, in particular from my riding and from various parts of the interior of the province of British Columbia, 150 to be exact, are somewhat concerned that the government understand that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation plays a vital role in allowing Canadians from all of the vast regions of our country to share experiences. It is crucial to the maintenance of a truly distinctive Canadian society.

They petition the government to restore sufficient funds to the CBC parliamentary allocation to allow the corporation to fulfil its historic mandate, and to maintain a distinctive and dynamic public broadcasting system in Canada.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, in addition, I have a petition signed by people from the province of British Columbia in respect of the old age security clawback. These petitioners request Parliament to reject the government's policy to initiate an inequitable and unjust clawback of Old Age Security benefits. They point out that this clawback is a direct threat to the principle of universality which is the core of Canada's social system.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of people from throughout Canada but mostly from Ontario, who petition Parliament to maintain VIA Rail, Canada's national rail network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

RCMP DRESS CODE

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present petitions containing some 11,000 signatures. These people are mainly from Alberta, but also from B.C. and Saskatchewan as well.

These petitioners see a distinct danger in future wholesale changes to dress and tradition by allowing turbans and ceremonial daggers to become part of the RCMP uniform. They suspect that other religious or ethnic minorities will then argue for equal rights to incorporate minor or major aberrations resulting in the eventual loss of a distinctive, recognizable and proud tradition.

These petitioners, Your Honour, some 11,000 of them, are humbly praying and calling upon Parliament to preserve the distinctive heritage and tradition of the RCMP by retaining the uniformity of dress code which the RCMP so proudly holds up now.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege today to present petitions from my riding of Northumberland which have been duly certified as required. They represent the concerns of many of my constituents with regard to the proposed goods and services tax.

I have spoken personally to many in my riding who represent amateur sports and recreation interests, music and dance, teachers' interests, professional groups' interests, small business groups, seniors and disadvantaged on low and fixed incomes, farmers and ordinary citizens. They ask and appeal that this government repeal any proposed goods and services tax.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to rise today to present two petitions on different subjects. The first points out that since 1984 the government has introduced at least 31 new taxes or tax increases. The latest proposal for a goods and services tax will cause serious and unfair hardship to low and middle-income Canadians and place an onerous burden on small businesses. The effects will be higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment for Canadians.

The petitioners therefore call upon Parliament to reject the goods and services tax. This petition is signed by over 200 residents, in addition to the petitions I have already tabled.

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the second petition comes from a group of petitioners who point out that a pregnant woman has the right to determine the best medical treatment for herself or the foetus she is carrying; that no woman should be penalized for making a decision which she believes furthers her physical and mental health, the health of her children and the health of her family as a whole.

The petitioners urge the government to ensure women equal access to reproductive health care under the Canada Health Act in a way that would be consistent with the equality provisions contained in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Therefore, they oppose any recriminalization of abortion.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I too, as well as my colleagues, stand pursuant to Standing Order 36, with several petitions concerning the goods and services tax. Many people from Essex and Kent counties have signed these petitions objecting to the inflationary costs and the difficulties that they will have when this tax is enforced.

They ask the government to withdraw the tax, and submit that the tax is not good for Canadians.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present petitions from my riding, Cape Breton Highlands—Canso, containing the names and addresses of over 2,200 concerned citizens who express their profound opposition to the proposed goods and services tax.

The citizens have signed the petitions in local business places, such as service stations, retail and manufacturing outlets in places like Mabou, Margaree, Middle River, Cheticamp, Louisdale and Guysborough. They call upon the government to withdraw this unfair tax which will cause serious and undue hardship to low and middle-income Canadians and will impose an onerous burden of administration on small businesses throughout my riding.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty in accordance with Standing Order 36 to present a petition from about 100 residents of many towns in Ontario who are concerned with the government's intention of reducing the VIA Rail service. They point out that it is essential to many small towns and to many elderly people and people of low income.

Therefore, they ask this Parliament to reject any proposed reduction or elimination of VIA Rail services, to modernize the existing equipment so that VIA Rail can provide a world-class service to Canadians and to implement a high-speed passenger train service between Montreal and Windsor.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition, also from several hundred residents of Canada, mostly from Ontario, who are concerned about the goods and services tax. The petitioners point out how unfair it is, particularly to low-income people.

• (1540)

Therefore they call on Parliament to reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax, to cancel the tax breaks for rich individuals and corporations, to apply the present tax on goods manufactured in Canada equally to imported manufactured goods, and to reduce the need for a sales tax by reducing the bank interest rate and by increasing employment in useful work.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from residents of Canada who are concerned about the low-level flight training in Goose Bay, Labrador. The petitioners point out that it is driving the aboriginal people out of their homes and driving the local hunting game out of their territories. They ask Parliament to join with the Assembly of First Nations in opposing low-level flight training anywhere in Canada, but especially near Indian reserves, and to oppose the establishment of NATO operations in Canada at places like Goose Bay, to redirect the funding for that to the improvement of the life of Canada's aboriginal people enabling them to regain control of their lands and also to promote sustainable development for all Canadians.

RCMP DRESS CODE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, today I have the honour and privilege to present to this House, pursuant to Standing Order 36, three very large petitions containing the names of over 16,779 concerned citizens from British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

These petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to preserve the distinctive heritage and tradition of the RCMP by retaining the uniformity of the dress code with all the recognizable colour and trappings that have such great historical value to this country. The pride and esprit de corps should not be jeopardized by any concessions to religious or ethnic minorities which result in changes to this truly great police force and its proud traditions and uniforms.

These petitions have all been duly certified according to content and form. The the total number of petitioners whose petitions I have presented in this House is well over 120,000 names.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, Question No. 159 will be answered today.

[Text]

MINISTERS—TRIPS

Question No. 159—Mr. Rodriguez:

Since November 21, 1988, has any Minister of the Crown travelled at public expense and, if so, were the costs assumed by government departments and, if so (a) for each Minister (b) for each member of any accompanying staff (i) on what dates did the travel occur (ii) what was the purpose of the trip (iii) what were the total costs associated with the trip (iv) what percentage of those costs represented the cost of air fare or the use of government aircraft?

Hon. Robert R. de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): 1. As the President of the Treasury Board stated in the House on October 24, 1989, the present practice of reporting Ministerial travel expenses was established by a Cabinet decision in 1963 and has been followed by every successive government.

2. The travel expenditures for each Minister is reported in Public Accounts for each fiscal year.

3. Under new guidelines, announced by the President of the Treasury Board in the House of Commons on October 24, the Comptroller General of Canada will make available on a regular basis:

a) Travel expenses of each Minister;

b) The number of times that each Minister used the government aircraft;

c) The date, the itinerary, and the names of all passengers on each trip in a government aircraft;

d) The reason for the use of the government aircraft;

e) The cost of the use of the government aircraft.

The Comptroller General has been directed by the President of the Treasury Board to establish this new reporting system as soon as possible.

4. Regarding the use of government aircraft during the period from November 1988 to August 1989, 220 trips* were made totalling 1,413.2 hours of flight.

*Figures include Prime Minister, all Ministers, Governor General, and visiting Foreign Heads of State.

[English]

M. Cooper: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question as enumerated by the parliamentary secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma) moved:

That this House condemns the government for its insensitivity to the tremendous difficulties being faced by Canada's farmers and other rural Canadians which are the direct result of the government's failure to respond adequately to the pressing and specific needs of Canadian farmers in financial, trade, marketing and other areas, which are creating a dangerous level of anger and frustration, as was seen in the recent massive demonstration by thousands of farmers on Parliament Hill; and further, that the government be condemned for not supporting producer-controlled marketing agencies and boards.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this motion before the House today because it was exactly a week ago yesterday that we saw the largest farm protest rally on Parliament Hill in a decade.

The motion tries to express the feelings of those thousands and thousands of farmers from Ontario and Quebec who are extremely concerned with where the government is going with its trade policies, with its income support policies and with its farm programs.

We only have to look at the press clippings from last Wednesday, exactly a week ago, to see the incredible concern that is expressed. I look at a clipping from The Toronto Star which reads, "Quit harming agriculture Tories told". It shows a picture of effigies of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister which were subsequently burned on the lawns of Parliament. It points out the views of the president of the Quebec farmers, the UPA group, who stated that the government is bargaining away farm support schemes and subsidies in international trade.

The article goes on to state, "Farmers say the government is adopting an American view at General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade talks by calling for the removal of agricultural market controls." It goes on to state, "As a kite depicting an American eagle clutching a pig hovered over his head," the Deputy Prime Minister spoke.

That protest rally is just the tip of the iceberg. Farm groups across the country feel betrayed, especially in light of the policies which the government has adopted in the past year.

You will recall that during the free trade debate the Prime Minister was interviewed by The Wall Street Journal on April 3, 1987. He said, "U.S. trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada, period".

He went on to say in that same interview, "You can't have a free trade arrangement and expect the traditional laws of countervail to apply".

Those words spoken by the Prime Minister were echoed as well by the Minister for International Trade in July of 1987 when he spoke at the St. John's Board of Trade meeting. He said, "Unless we get out from under the threat of countervail and other U.S. trade remedy laws and unless there is an effective dispute settlement resolution to bind the Americans to their commitments, a free trade agreement with the United States would not be a good deal for Canada".

That is the kind of commitment which farmers felt had been made on their behalf. Of course, no such commitment was made. We only have to look at the Canadian pork producers who have had imposed since early September a countervail of 3.6 cents a pound, or eight cents a kilo, on pork coming from Canada.

The distressing part is that it was not imposed because of some pre-existing law, it was imposed because the Americans changed the law after they signed the free trade deal, after they implemented the legislation for the free trade deal. They immediately passed an amendment to their countervail law which enabled them to launch a countervail duty case against pork, as had been done with hogs for the past year and a half.

Surely everybody, even the people on this side of the House, thought that when we signed the free trade deal, we were in a free trade area and that there was going to be some good will, an understanding that there would be less adversarial kind of activity. Yet Congress passed legislation to extend the countervail duty law.

I think people were concerned that the government did not appeal it. It did not go to the GATT when those amendments to the countervail duty law were passed over a year ago. So we have a situation now where beyond the countervail duty which applies to pork, which has been in place since about 1985, we have a new countervail on hogs. However, we expect that within the next year, in March sometime, there will be a review of the subsidy levels in Canada. The tripartite hog stabilization program has been singled out, and countervail duty on pork which is 3.6 cents a pound now may well become 11 cents or 12 cents a pound later. We had a situation where the pork processing plants in this country said, "Look, if we are going to have a retroactive countervail imposed on us of that magnitude, we are going to stop sending pork to the United States". The Canadian Pork Council had to take the initiative of imposing a $2 per hog levy for every hog marketed in this country, whether it is consumed in Canada, or whether it is consumed in Japan or other importing countries from Canada.

In effect, the only way that we are going to get access to the U.S. market that the Prime Minister promised he would deliver—for the 25 per cent or so of Canadian hogs that go to the United States—is to impose a levy of $2 on every hog sold in the country. That is what it costs under the FTA, or the CUSTA, which is the new name. I think the government was just so embarrassed by having something called an FTA, a free trade agreement, that it changed it to Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement. Obviously, if pork producers in this country have to buy access by paying $2 for every hog marketed, it does not sound very free to them. That is one of the tremendous concerns which has been expressed by the UPA, by the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and by the representatives from New Brunswick who were here a week ago yesterday.

Just as important was the concern expressed by the UPA and the OFA in regard to the situation of the dairy industry. A year ago last January the Minister of Agriculture said that there was no problem with the tariff being reduced under the free trade deal for processed agriculture products, such as yoghurt and ice-cream, because he was going to put them over on to the import control list. I think most farmers in the country believed that there was some security in what he was doing, but in fact there was none.

It is obvious now and it was pretty obvious at the time that there was no agreement with the Americans to accept that kind of an import control on yoghurt and ice cream. Immediately those import controls were imposed in late December of last year the United States Government demanded a GATT panel. That panel reviewed the situation and struck down the placing of import controls on yoghurt and ice-cream, as well as a half dozen other novelty dairy products.

This is perhaps the most damaging part of the whole free trade fiasco, as I would call it. The government has not accepted the decision by the GATT panel, but I am sure if the Deputy Prime Minister wanted to be totally honest he would admit that within a week the government will accept it but perhaps not implement it for a year. That decision states that import controls under Article 11 of the GATT can only be applied to raw, unprocessed agriculture commodities such as milk. That decision, to me, means that if the kind of import controls we are talking about can be placed on milk, they can be placed on 2 per cent milk, on chocolate milk and perhaps even buttermilk, something that can be drunk, but not on something like yoghurt, ice-cream, cheese, butter or skim milk powder which are processed products.

That is the kind of thing that drives the OFA, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, the UPA—every supply management producer in this country—wild. Because if it applies only to yoghurt and ice-cream, then it applies to all these other commodities. In the dairy industry we are talking about 60 per cent of our production, that is all the industrially produced processed milk.

Clearly, the government deceived Canadian farmers when it said that their supply management systems were protected. The minister says we want to negotiate a better description of Article 11, and I am sure that he does. I do not know of any Canadian who is interested in supply management in the agriculture industry who does not. But I think we should look back at those negotiations because it was not as if this decision by the GATT panel came out of the air in September. It was a deliberate decision by the United States. This comes back to the whole question of whether there is any goodwill in the free trade deal. I maintain there is not any. You have to look across the whole range of products, but as far as I can see there has been no great outpouring of such in agriculture or in other commodities for trade.

The Government of Canada through the Department of Agriculture negotiated all summer trying to get the Americans to accept a larger quota. I think our quota was set at something like 340 tonnes or so. The government offered to go to around to 1,000 or 1,500, but the Americans were not buying. Clearly, that is not going to be a decision that will be easily overturned.

I have a copy of a speech that was given just today by the Ontario Minister of Agriculture and Food who was speaking to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture. He has just returned from meetings with the United States minister of agriculture, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary for Trade. In his speech to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture in Toronto today he said that according to Ambassador Hills every internal domestic program has to be on the table. They object to any system that restricts a market, and at present they see U.S. farmers as having no opportunity to put their milk into Ontario.

He went on to say that the Americans are determined to aggressively access our market. The Milk Industry Foundation is particularly unabashed in stating that they want our market.

Clearly, from the negotiations that went on last summer, the United States is absolutely determined that it will have full access to the Canadian market. Clearly, no provision was made for this in the free trade deal, and the results will be devastating for our supply management. What applies to the dairy industry could well apply to the poultry industry as well.

Those are two of the major concerns which the 10,000 or 12,000 farmers from across Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick were expressing to members of Parliament and to the government a week ago yesterday.

• (1600)

Another great concern is that we are part of two trading groups negotiating at the GATT. One is our Canada–U.S. CUSTA free trade group. Unfortunately, as I have already said, they do not agree with our position. They want to have full access. They want to get rid of our supply–management system. They have always been open about that, but it was up to our government in negotiating the CUSTA agreement to ensure that.

The second group of which we are a part is the Cairns group. Clearly from the statements made by the Australians and some others in the Cairns Group they likewise are opposed to our position. How strong can our position be? I will not say that there are no supporting countries, because I hope some of the Scandinavian and some of the European countries will support us in the GATT to strengthen our position with regard to Article 11, and hopefully to recover what has been lost in the GATT panel decision.

We have to be especially concerned when the two trading groups that we are going to the GATT with, the Americans and the Cairns Group, are opposed to our position. One sometimes wonders whether the position that the minister puts here in the House of Commons is exactly the position that he is putting in the Cairns Group, or that the Minister for International Trade or our negotiators are putting.

An article in the October 27 edition of The Globe and Mail quoted a federal agricultural trade official who stated, when talking about the GATT negotiations, that the division in the agricultural community over supply–management has caused Canadian negotiators to adopt a Jekyll and Hyde approach at the multilateral trade negotiations.

As the Australians say, we speak with a forked tongue on these issues. When officials in the Department of Agriculture are saying that, we tend to become nervous. We like what the minister is saying here, that he wants to maintain supply management, but we are concerned with the position he has been put in, not only by the free trade deal which did not secure the import control side, but because of the removal of the tariffs our whole food processing industry is putting great pressure on our supply management system as well.

Those are two very important issues that the thousands and thousands of farmers on the lawns of Parliament were concerned with.

The third issue which is very important is the fact that the government is making dramatic cut–backs in its farm support programs. The minister talks about the billions and billions of dollars, but what the farmers are concerned about is the $500 million that he cut back last spring. There is no western grain stabilization payment. There is no special grains program.

Clearly, the government did not make adequate provision in the free trade deal for marketing boards. They are in the greatest jeopardy they have ever felt. Pork producers are being saddled with a $2 fee just to buy access to the U.S. market. Our support programs are being unilaterally dismantled, while some time during the next five or six years we supposedly will be negotiating a subsidy code. Our Durum wheat producers are being threatened with a countervail.

Never in my memory has the viability of Canadian agriculture been so threatened as it has been this past year by the government's actions and lack of action.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank our critic on agriculture for leading off this debate with some very insightful comments on Canadian farming.

I was wondering if I could ask him a question dealing with some particular problems in the west. As he knows full well, because of his research and his consultations throughout the Canadian agricultural community, there has been a tremendous amount of debt created by the current policies of this government.

The Minister of Agriculture is very fond of coming to us and telling us how much more money he is spending each year in the west. He never tells us the number of farmers who are going broke and increasing debt load.

For example, there has been a 48 per cent increase in foreclosures in Manitoba in the last seven months. That comes before the tough season, the November to May season when farmers really get into a lot of difficulty. There are 108 foreclosures that have been initiated in the last few weeks in Manitoba alone. This sort of activity is what makes the Manitoba farmer so insecure under the present regime.

We have a minister responsible for the Wheat Board in our province and a Minister of Agriculture from the west. They seem to have walked away from the problems in our region and do not respond to the farmers when they are going through this debt crisis. It is anticipated that this is just the beginning and that Manitoba is headed for a very, very trying year.

I wonder if our critic could respond and comment as to whether or not there is any hope under the present policy. Is there any hope under the new policy given to us by the Minister of Agriculture a few weeks ago and can we expect the farmers to receive any more help? I am not very optimistic, and I was wondering if he is.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. It is impossible to say what the government is going to do. It is capable of doing anything, as I outlined in my earlier remarks. Clearly the direction seems to be, if you read the document "Freedom to Grow" or "Growing Together" or freedom to go, as some people call it, that the whole mood is toward reducing government expenditures.

If you look at the budget of the Minister of Finance last spring, the only comment with regard to the Farm Credit Corporation was to remove the commodity-based mortgage which did provide some concessional funding.

The agriculture committee of the House of Commons did a major report in the spring of 1988. It put forward a number of innovative and worth-while suggestions about directions we might take to improve the farm debt situation. In the Speech from the Throne, in the budget, in the Minister's statement, there was no mention or specific proposal with regard to how the government might provide new and innovative arrangements.

Many other programs were cut, and there were about seven or eight in the budget. For example, the advance payment which we fought very hard to save provided farmers with very worth-while cash flow assistance, perhaps only for three or four months, or in some cases for six months or a year, but it provided interest-free cash advances which were very important. That is going to cause very great pressure this winter. I do not think the farm debt crisis is over. The report of the Saskatchewan Association of Rural Municipalities states that the number of farms that have been taken over by municipalities or are being attached by municipalities is growing at an alarming rate.

Garth Stevenson, president of the Saskatchewan Pool, states that farmers are going to require assistance in the magnitude of $500 million before cropping time next spring. Clearly there is financial assistance needed. It is being cut back unilaterally, even though our American counterparts are continuing their new farm bill. All reports say that it is going to be as generous and supportive as the 1985 farm bill. Yet, we are cutting back many programs on a unilateral basis.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Algoma for bringing forth this motion. While I do not agree with it, it does provide an opportunity to outline some of the things this government has done for agriculture, the tremendous record of support that this government has had with respect to agriculture and also to outline some of the things that we propose to do in the future, a new vision and some new directions.

I am disappointed that the hon. member did not propose anything new. It is basically the same old litany of gloom and doom and a repetition of what we have heard before. He ignores in his comments the reality of trade laws, the reality of GATT rules, the reality of what the free trade agreement really is and that trade remedies apply equally to all participating countries.

We get the impression that the Liberals are still fighting the last election. They attempt to strike fear and anxiety into the hearts and minds of the producers. Every problem that arises with respect to agriculture is blamed on the free trade agreement. That reminds me of the statement that was made by the former finance critic, the hon. member for Etobicoke North, I believe, when he said something to the effect that every sparrow that falls is going to be blamed on the Canada–U.S. trade agreement.

The hon. member also said that we are part of two negotiating groups, the Canada–U.S. negotiating group and the Cairns Group. I do not know where he got that nonsense. We are part of the Cairns Group and we certainly support many of the objectives of the Cairns Group because it does provide us with an opportunity to deal with the debilitating situation that has affected our export–oriented agriculture industry. But we have carved out our own position and that was clearly outlined in a comment made by the Australian trade minister, Mr. Duffy, when he told local journalists that Canada's insistence on maintaining protection for its dairy industry could be a problem in reaching a final consensus.

As we heard from the Minister for International Trade today, Canada has staked out a very clear position with respect to Article 11, with respect to supply–management systems and the fact that we intend to pursue this issue in an attempt to clarify and strengthen Article 11, something which the hon. members opposite forbid us to do. They have suggested not touching Article 11 because we are going to tamper with it. Now they are saying that we have to do something about it. That has always been our position, to clarify and strengthen, because we foresaw some of the difficulties that came down with respect to the ice cream and yoghurt decision.

The motion condemns the government for its insensitivity to the difficulties facing Canada's farmers. I will be the first one to acknowledge that there are problems in the agriculture industry. There always have been problems in the agriculture industry and there probably always will be in some area or another. I will acknowledge the difficulties that the grain and oilseed sector has gone through with depressed prices as a result of the trade war between the United States and the European community with its common agricultural policy, the United States with its Export Enhancement Program, and of course Canada was caught in the cross–fire. We saw incomes drop from an average of $2.4 billion in market receipts in that period 1981–84 to a low of $475 million in 1987, which is a drop of about 75 per cent.

It was for that reason that the Prime Minister provided the leadership in bringing this issue before the GATT. We could not withstand this debilitating exercise that was destroying our farmers and also placing a very heavy burden on the federal treasury. It was because of the Prime Minister's leadership that we were able to raise the agriculture issue to the top of the agenda at the GATT proceedings. That is really, in the final analysis, the only long–term solution to this very serious problem.

We have to recognize that 50 per cent of our agriculture receipts come from the export market. We must restore order in the international market–place if our industry is going to survive. That is very fundamental and very basic, and hon. members opposite tend to forget that.

In this particular case, because of the debilitating impact that the trade war had upon the grains and oilseeds sector, we did respond. We responded in an unprecedented fashion. I will get into that a little later.

We also had a drought situation that was as serious or perhaps more serious, and statistics will bear me out on this, as it was during the dirty thirties in terms of precipitation and in terms of the extent of heat. Over the last four–year period, as recorded at our stations in Swift Current and in Lethbridge, precipitation was less and the intensity of the heat was greater. We have also had other disasters. In other areas we have had floods. In other areas we have had grasshoppers. You name it, and they have been afflicted with it. On each and every one of these occasions this government has responded.

With respect to the drought in 1988–1989, a $850 million program was initiated with some sharing from the provinces. Most of the cheques have been mailed out. Some are still in the process of being mailed out. There are still some appeals left to be settled. It is very difficult to design these programs to ensure that there is fairness and equity right across the board. I challenge hon. members opposite to consider that. We tried to devise a program in consultation with the agriculture community with representatives of the various farm organizations, and it is not as easy as one would like. There are always areas of unfairness and discrimination and inequities. That is why we want to try to bring about substantive change to our crop insurance programs and our safety net programs so that we can better deal in a more fair and equitable manner with these.

In 1984 and 1985 there was $200 million provided for drought. In 1988, $100 million for drought.

The hon. member across the way mentioned the Special Canadian Grains Program, $2.1 billion was paid out in lieu of the trade war to try to meet that gap, that deficiency between what we considered to be a fair market value, as compared to what the producers received in the grains and oilseeds sector, $2.1 billion. In addition to that, some $300 million in losses were covered in the Canadian Wheat Board account.

Under the Western Grain Stabilization program, some $4 billion was paid out over 1985—1989, and the vast majority of that money was provided for by the federal government. There were record payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Program. With respect to crop insurance, about $200 million annually is paid by the federal government. The Crop Re-insurance program has cost the federal government something in the order of $700 million over the last three or four years.

In addition, there were special Farm Credit Corporation programs such as moratoriums, shared risk mortgages, and other initiatives and innovative programs to reduce interest rates. During this period of time in the last four or five years we have had some of the lowest rates we have had in five years.

We injected $600 million of new equity into the Farm Credit Program. In other words, we transferred debt into equity. We came forth with a rural transition program. We established Farm Debt Review Boards. I must say this has been a very successful initiative, because for something in the order of 77 to 80 per cent of the people who came before the Farm Debt Review Boards, while there have been difficulties in this particular area, there have been satisfactory arrangements made to provide ways and means where they may stay on the farm and maintain farming as a lifestyle. There have been over 10,000 applications under this program; some $360 million has been provided. Basically, through practical common sense, we have been able to bring the creditors and the farmer together in such a way that they have been able to sort out their difficulties.

Farm credit arrears have been reduced by about 50 per cent. Fuel price relief was provided at $200 million per year. Under the Western Grain Transportation Act, freight rate relief was provided. We provided a stabilization program for red meats and additional livestock feed assistance for the Atlantic region was provided.

We provided help for the tobacco farmers. Some $62 million has been committed for that program. We provided help for the apple growers, a $6 million stabilization fund, and initiated a countervail against the cheap imports coming in from the United States. We provided help for the grape growers in terms of their adjustment, a $128 million program. We provided help for the sour cherry industry, again another countervail action by Canada.

We helped the onion sector, again another countervail action by Canada. We provided assistance to the potato industry, again another countervail action against cheap imports coming into the country. We provided help for the corn producers, again through the actions of a countervail. We are providing help for the pork producers, both in terms of fighting a countervail action and in terms of providing food relief in the form of pork products to Poland.

There have been agri-food subagreements signed with literally every province. There may be one or two that are still in the final stages of negotiation, but basically there have been programs in place and programs renewed.

The federal-provincial soil conservation programs have been signed with most of the provinces. There may be one or two that are still remaining. When that is completed, that will constitute a $150 million joint shared program.

We provided assistance to the honey producers. We provided assistance to the white bean producers. We have helped the dairy producers in their price adjustments. We are defending their interests at the GATT. We established a long-term five-year dairy policy, something that the Liberals never thought of, never dreamed of. They left the dairy farmers hanging in thin air from year to year. Again, we established a dairy task force to help deal with all the problems that exist with regard to trade negotiations and pricing, et cetera.

We defended the beef producers against subsidized imports from the European Community. Again, with respect to the poultry industry, we are establishing a task force so that they can take full advantage in exploiting the market opportunities and adjusting their production patterns to ensure that that industry can grow.

There have been industries that have gone through painful adjustments such as the tobacco industry, the grape industry, the honey industry and the Canola producing industry.

However, Mr. Speaker, this so-called insensitive government provided unprecedented support for agriculture since it has been in office. If you look at the Public Accounts of Canada you will find that very clear between the years 1984–85 and 1987–88. In the 1984–85 fiscal year, $3,224.8 million; 1985–86, $3,210.1 million; 1986–87, $4,501.9 million; 1987–88, $6,124.4 million; 1988–89, $4.6 billion, a total of $21,700 million, well in excess of $4 billion a year, compared to about $2 billion under the previous administration.

If we look at the grain and oilseeds industry, we find that in the period 1981–84 the federal government of the day provided about $350 million in support. In that period, 1984–85 to 1988–89, some $11.7 billion, almost $12 billion, has been provided, or an average of $2.3 billion per year, as compared to $350 million per year under the Liberals.

That is what this insensitive government has done. This insensitive government has provided major increases in net farm income. Under the Liberals, net farm income averaged $3.7 billion annually between the period 1981–84. Under our government, farm income reached $5.2 billion in 1988 on the basis of preliminary statistics. That average between 1985 and 1988 is $4.5 billion. That is a 25 per cent increase over the period 1981 and 1984 when the Liberals were in office.

Under the Liberals, the agriculture industry was stagnant. It was depressed. It was despondent. There was human misery. The industry was troubled, but no one listened, no one cared. Farm bankruptcies, to answer my hon. friend from Winnipeg, achieved an all-time high in 1984 of 551 bankruptcies.

Mr. Walker: The year you took over.

Mr. Mazankowski: Yes, that is the mess we took over then, as we took over the mess of debt that we inherited from the Liberal party as well.

Farm bankruptcies have been reduced by some 50 per cent. Projected bankruptcies are at a level of 240 this year, still too high.

However, Mr. Speaker, the 551 bankruptcies were simply the tip of the iceberg because there were many other farmers who voluntarily left the farm or were foreclosed. It does not tell the whole story about the human misery that that government and party inflicted upon the farmers: 23 per cent and 24 per cent interest rates; 13 per cent and 14 per cent inflation; land values soared, and when they dropped there was a problem. Money was easy to get, and 97 per cent of the people who found themselves in financial difficulty traced their problems right back to that period.

It is the same thing that the Liberals did when the leader of their party said: "Why should I sell your wheat?". Well, we provided leadership to the Canadian Wheat Board. Wheat sales increased from 17 per cent to 22 per cent. It is slipping somewhat because of the drought situation, but nonetheless we demonstrated that we were interested in selling farmers' wheat.

In the livestock industry, receipts have been up by about 10 per cent. Exports are up from $620 million in 1981 to $1 billion in 1988. It is interesting to note that while these people across the way badmouth the Americans, 95 per cent of our exports of cattle go to the United States, and 93 per cent of our fresh and frozen beef and veal exports go to the United States of America. We have taken our agriculture trade balance from $2.8 billion in 1985 to $4 billion in 1988.

There are many more opportunities. The bilateral trade agreement provides many opportunities in Ontario, western Canada and in Quebec. I will quote a couple of headlines: "Fruitbelt Reaps FTA Profit". We know as well that in terms of the vegetable industry, there is an expectation that the demand for vegetables shipped to the United States will increase by some 80 per cent.

The Ontario wine producers: "Woo Upscale New York Citizens. Roll over Bordeaux and California, the Niagara region of Ontario is breaking into the New York wine market". This clearly establishes that they can compete with the best in the world.

Here is another headline from the Calgary Herald. "Huge U.S. Market Offers Big Gains". In an article from the World of Beef in September, a Bank of Montreal senior economist says: "The FTA is the best assurance we can get against sideswiped protectionism". It goes on to say that the market-driven economies of most industrialized countries position Canada very well in terms of taking advantage of new trading opportunities. Food processing investment is up by 15 per cent over the previous year. With the GST, that situation will improve further still.

The hon. member for Algoma quoted the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Ontario. I was interested in noting as well, as reported in the Globe and Mail of November 27, 1989, this minister stated: "Canadian farmers are going to have to realize that farming is a business, so we are going to have to be flexible, we are going to have to adapt to the globalization, the liberalization of trade".

I think that is a very important observation because it is the reality of the situation. The world is changing out there. New trading patterns are developing and political revolutions are ongoing.

The European Community, for example, has increased its yield in grain and oilseeds by 100 per cent since the 1950s and the 1960s, at which time it was the largest importer of grain. Today it is the third largest exporter.

It is also interesting to note that Japan has become Canada's top grain buyer. The United States has become our most important customer for agricultural products including grain. In 1986 our exports of grain and oilseeds to the United States was $388 million versus $514 million. In terms of tonnes, 1,175,000 tonnes in 1986; 1,733,600 tonnes in 1988. There are markets of which we must take advantage.

This is why it is incumbent upon us to review our agricultural policies and programs. We have put our agricultural programs and policies to the supreme test with the turbulent years we have just gone through. It is important and it is wise to evaluate them.

We see the changing political landscape, particularly in the eastern European countries. We see changing trading patterns. We see changing demands and consumer habits. We see the enhancement of further technology. We a see new emphasis on food safety and on environmental considerations. It is only natural that we have to evaluate our programs.

We do so with the approach of offering hope and optimism for the future and eager to tackle the challenges of change. One thing is a constant about agriculture: change has been constant from day one. We have been successful as an agricultural community because we have been able to adapt to change.

If we are to maintain our leadership and our leading edge in the agriculture communities of the world, we must adapt to change. We must be more responsive to consumer needs. We must be more market oriented. We must take advantage of the changing trade environment. We must take advantage of the changing political scene. It is for these reasons that we must seek to devise the best programs and policies in consultation with the agriculture community, with consumers and with everyone in the food chain to engage in the most comprehensive review that has ever been embarked upon by this government.

This initiative speaks to the future, not to the past. It speaks to opportunity and success, not to failure. It is about building confidence. It is about providing the appropriate tools. It is about leadership. It is about vision and it is about new direction. It is about talking about our strengths. It is about taking stock of what we have and what we need. It is about building for the future and building an agricultural industry that is sound, that is viable, that is durable.

I invite all hon. members to assist in that challenge because to cry gloom and doom without offering anything positive or constructive is not the way farmers will respond to the reality of the situation. Farmers will tackle the challenge and will turn that challenge into an opportunity. That is what we are talking about here. Let us not turn the clock back; let us turn it ahead. We give you the opportunity to participate in that process.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, I have some comments I want to make at this point. First of all I would like to put into correct context a statement he attributed to a former Prime Minister.

"Why should I sell your wheat?", is not the whole statement that was made. He said: "Why should I sell your wheat? You already have two government agencies selling your wheat for you. I couldn't sell it if I wanted to. I do not have the jurisdiction to do that."

The jurisdiction was with the Canadian Wheat Board and the other government marketing agencies.

I must also take the minister to task a bit because he indicated that farm income was up. Does that farm income include, for example, the off-farm income that is so essential to the effective operation of a farm today when the farmer himself and probably his wife have to go out and take a job?

I would also like to draw to his attention that it was in the last quarter of 1984 that grain prices dropped dramatically. Consequently it was under his administration. Certainly there should have been some compensation to producers when this happened.

I would also like to point out that there were droughts in 1985, 1987 and 1988 in many areas of Canada. As a result of those droughts as much as anything, a lot of farmers find themselves in difficult financial situations.

I had a phone call from one farmer from Saskatchewan just last week. The minister talks about the great policies of the government. I want to just to draw to the attention of the House one of those policies. Under this policy—and I believe it must have been a commodity based loan—a farmer had taken out a mortgage a few years ago. He has made 65 consecutive monthly payments on that mortgage and never missed one. Now his principal is actually more than it was at the start.

That is the kind of program we have had from this government and that is why that program was discontinued last summer.

A neighbour came to me in frustration last winter because it was suggested to him by the Farm Credit Corporation that he should take out a commodity based loan. By running all the figures through his computer, going back to 1972, using monthly records of prices of grain, corn, wheat and soybeans, and forecasting to the year 2008, he found it simply would not work. This is the type of program we have seen.

I am very disappointed. I have asked on a couple of occasions for a directive from the Farm Credit Corporation to the government in order that we could have a look at it. I was assured by the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation back in late September or early October that I would get it, but I have not received it.

When I look at page 5 of the corporate plan, I read: "The acquisition of properties is expected to increase over the next three years". It goes on: "The inventory of real properties will increase dramatically over the short term". Still further I read: "Collections, recovery actions, debt review actions, debt review process, property management and marketing will continue to exceed the available staff".

This is not quite the same glowing picture that we heard about just a few minutes ago. In fact there were more properties on hand at the time the annual report was tabled than there were actual loans made last year. If the 702 staff members of the Farm Credit Corporation each made two loans a year, it would have been the total that was actually made under the Farm Credit Corporation.

There are actually more properties on hand, and I am very disturbed that this sort of thing would happen. When we look at the Farm Credit Corporation Act, Section 11(1)(e) states that it is intended that concessions and moratoriums or rewriting of mortgages, compositions, schemes, and arrangements can be made under the objects and powers of the act. It states that the corporation may do these various things. Consequently, that is the responsibility of the government in power when we come through three years of drought and difficult times and particularly the low prices that occurred shortly after it came to office. I am sure it must have been the steady hand of the previous Minister of Agriculture, the tiller of the agricultural sector, that kept things up where they were. Immediately this government came to power, look what happened. Everything started to fall apart.

There are also some other things that I am very concerned about. We talk about the restructured cases that come through the Farm Debt Review Board's reports. I think there are some 2,000. How many of these cases have actually been restructured? What is the average land base by province left owned by the farmer in these cases? Are they actually viable units, or have farmers been stripped of their land base and of their assets? Can they make a living on these farms?

We estimate that perhaps as many as 15 per cent or 20 per cent of cases are not getting restructured type concessions. We believe that the land base being left to these people is very, very small. What we have is the Farm Credit Corporation recycling these concessions back into its own corporation.

Another thing that concerns me very deeply is the fact that about 17 per cent of the Farm Credit Corporation accounts in Ontario are in arrears. Of greater significance is the province of Saskatchewan where about 47 per cent of the cases are in serious arrears.

I would call on the government today to take positive steps, to look at the hardships being created across this nation, and to step in with even more funding at the present time to make the agricultural industry an economic industry with a standard of living commensurate with that of the rest of society, rather than having to face the hardships that are being forced on the people today.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member made representations more than asked questions, but I will comment on the reference that he made to the Farm Credit Corporation properties on hand.

This is a direct result of the Farm Credit Corporation sitting down with the farmer and working out an arrangement where he could stay on the land and re-establish himself. He is taking issue with that, and I suppose by taking issue with it he is suggesting that we should unload this property at fire sale prices and kick the farmers off the land. Maybe that is the policy of the Liberal party. It is certainly not our policy.

We have tried with the help of the Farm Debt Review Board to work with farmers to provide extreme latitude and accommodation through the farm debt review process, properly funded. I think the losses that the Farm Credit Corporation has endured as a result of the high interest rate policy of the former government of which he was a member was something in the order of $1.3 billion. That is what happens when you let interest rates go to 23 and 24 per cent and let inflation go to 13 and 14 per cent.

What really strikes me rather funny is that they would want us to do the same thing again. We know that there are inflationary problems in this country. We are trying to deal with that as best we can, in a balanced way. When I hear the representations across the way, if we followed their advice we would end up in the same situation as we did in the 1981–82 period when we saw those soaring interest rates.

The reason the Farm Credit Corporation has land and inventory is that it worked out lease arrangements and other arrangements with the producers who have found themselves in difficulty. There has been an attempt to keep them there, to accommodate them, and to work with them during this very difficult period.

Mr. Laporte: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister made quite a few comments with respect to how much his government has done for agriculture. Despite that, there is no doubt that there is a lot of concern in rural Canada over the future of agriculture.

I would like to ask the minister a question with respect to transportation. As the minister will know, there is about to be or will be soon some rationalization on rail lines. That is a nice word for saying abandonment.

Some studies have been done with respect to rail abandonments. Certainly in my own riding there is a rail line known as the Central Butte branch line subdivision which was studied by the senior grain transportation committee. The result of that study recommended not to have it abandoned nor to have it retained. The committee indicated that it was a marginal line and perhaps, if it had more goods carried on that line, it would become more viable.

As the minister will be aware there are some major irrigation projects taking place on the South Saskatchewan River near Riverhurst, which presumably is going to increase production in that area. There are some farmers, as the minister indicated, who are taking the initiative. They are attempting to take the opportunity to create some more wealth and jobs in that area. They want to create an alfalfa plant. They have looked at investors, conducted studies and produced reports. However one of their concerns is the future of the rail line in that area. If the rail line is gone then the alfalfa plant is going to be no good. Their concern is the future of that line.

These people have gone to a lot of work. There are two spokespersons for them: Gordon Kent who is an agricultural engineer and Art Heshey who is a consultant for Heshey Management. As spokespeople for the Riverhurst Water Users Association they are prepared to spend their own money to come to Ottawa to put their case before the minister. If the minister will find some time to meet with them, whether it be a half hour or an hour sometime before Christmas or at any other time, they would certainly be glad to meet him.

These farmers in Saskatchewan are trying to take agriculture in a new direction. If the minister will have time to hear them, I would certainly assist his office in helping to arrange this appointment and this meeting. Perhaps the minister could find the time in the near future.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the issue of branch lines is one that has always been very sensitive and has involved a lot of emotion.

At the same time because of the way the freight rate structure is applied now, because of the fact that many of the branch lines are the most expensive lines to operate in terms of cost benefit, and because the costs of those lines under the new freight rate formula apply to the total system for which all farmers end up having to pay, we endeavour to try to find the most efficient transportation system available for that purpose.

As a result we have used off-line elevator systems where you build a new elevator facility and the grain is trucked. That has reduced the costs rather substantially. There are short line operations, one of which is operating in the province of Alberta and has reduced line operating costs.

I am not totally familiar with the subdivision the hon. member refers to. It is called the Central Butte subdivision. I certainly would be pleased to make representations to the Minister of Transport. As he knows, this falls within the domain of the Minister of Transport. I would be pleased to make representations to him and also attempt to see whether we could arrange a suitable time for his people to meet with him. I think if he were to meet with the Minister of Transport it would probably be very useful. I would try to arrange that.

If I cannot arrange it I would be pleased to meet with him. Perhaps his office wants to contact my office. Hopefully, we could arrange a suitable time and place for that to occur. It may not even be necessary for them to come to Ottawa. Perhaps I could meet them in western Canada, but the hon. member is certainly free to contact my office. I would be glad to accommodate in any way I can.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, despite the programs and the statements made by the minister with respect to agriculture in this country, I think it is very fair to say that it is clearly in serious difficulty.

To see that one need only look at figures from Statistics Canada. The number of farms in Canada is now well below 300,000, down significantly from even 10 years ago. Average sales for a Canadian farm in 1986 were some $71,000 while expenses were some $60,000. Over the past three years that $11,000 gap has in fact narrowed.

It is not surprising that the number of days worked off the farm continues to increase all the time from 148 in 1960 to 173 in 1985. The fact that there are fewer farmers with less money to spend means more pressure is placed on businesses and services in rural communities, which in turn results in a rural infrastructure that indeed is very fragile.

What is this government doing to reverse this unfortunate trend? When it comes to rhetoric the government is very good. In fact, it should receive an A-plus. The tragic fact is that that is all there is: rhetoric.

While the Progressive Conservatives espouse viable family farms, in practice they are promoting huge, corporate and industrial farms.

• (1650)

This lack of concern for the family farm is clear when one looks at some of the policies and programs the government has implemented.

The removal of oats from the Canadian Wheat Board proved to western Canadians that although the government may claim to consult with interested groups, it simply does not. The government said that it did extensive consultation with Canadians before removing oats. When asked in the House the Minister of Agriculture had the nerve to state that he had consulted with such groups as the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission, various hog marketing boards, and various cattlemen's associations. These groups obviously had nothing to do with the production of oats. They did have one thing in common; they happened to agree with the government's position on the oats issue.

What the minister failed to say was that the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, and the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool all opposed the government's removal of oats. As well a Decima poll, which is the same company that does polling for the Conservative party, concluded that two-thirds of farmers in western Canada wanted oats to remain under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and three-quarters of farmers felt that they simply had not been consulted by the PC government.

Another group that was consulted, a group that the minister and others of his government are not apt to mention when discussing issues such as this one, was the international grain companies: Cargill, Continental and Elders. While the government sought no advice from the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, the advisory committee or others directly involved with the farm issue and actually growing oats in this country, it saw fit to consult with international grain traders. These companies have about as much concern for the future of family farms as does Burger King for the continued success of McDonald's.

A second program is the cash advance program. The idea behind the cash advance program was to help the family farmer receive an interest-free advance on his crop before he had an opportunity to take it to market. The government not only added an interest component to this program but increased the maximum amount that could be borrowed to $250,000.

Speaking on behalf of grain farmers from western Canada, one must either have an extremely good crop or have an awfully large farm in order to be able to borrow the $250,000 allowed under this program. The only advantage under this new program is to the very large farming operations.

I would ask this government to provide a list of those groups that have traditionally participated in this program and that support this change. Perhaps it consulted its traditional list, which includes the Canola growers, the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission, the Hog Marketing Boards and the Cattlemen's Association.

Another program that has been put on the block is the At and East program. This is a program that impacts directly on the maritimes. At and East is a program that encourages grain and flour to be exported from the ports of Halifax and St. John. If that program is cut, it is certain that the grain facilities at St. John will close and very much jeopardize those grain facilities at Halifax. It will also put an increased pressure on Dover Flour Mills, the only flour mill in the maritimes.

The loss of the program which subsidizes grain and flour movement to those ports will be a major blow to both these communities. In Halifax, the city will lose annual income of some $16 million and several hundred employees will be laid off or have their hours drastically cut. These would include, train crews, longshoremen, stevedores and maintenance workers. It is something which Halifax can ill afford.

I am informed by Dover Mills that it will be completely and effectively moved from the private flour export market and will simply have to rely on government groups like CIDA for its export markets. Since the cost of transporting the flour will increase, and since these agencies are on a fixed budget, they will actually purchase less flour, which will hurt not only Dover Flour Mills but other mills throughout the country which produce this flour.

The port of St. John will lose some $8.5 million that presently flows into its economy and hundreds of workers will be affected. This is all because the government refused to listen to the Atlantic Transportation Committee which some four years ago proposed a new format for the At and East program that would save the government at least half the cost of that program.

This government, the government that consults with Canadians to promote a better Canadian society, refused to even consider the proposal put forth by the Atlantic Transportation Committee. Instead it simply cut the program.

It is the same government that refused to listen to the advisory committee of the Canadian Wheat Board, to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, and to the Canadian Federation of Agriculture when considering whether or not to remove oats from the Canadian Wheat Board.

Instead it chose to consult with groups such as the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission. It is the same government that has cut this program. I wonder if it consulted with the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission when it was deciding what to do with the At and East program, because it certainly paid no attention to the Atlantic Transportation Committee.

These are crucial times for agriculture in this country. The free trade agreement and the GATT talks now being carried on are both very critical to the future of agriculture. On these talks depend the future of orderly marketing and supply management. The very foundation of agriculture in this country depends on the outcome of these talks.

Of concern to myself and of concern to many Canadian producers are the mixed signals this government is sending with respect to this crucial area. The government indicated before the election that free trade would mean greater prosperity for all Canadians including farmers. That has turned out not to be the case; certainly not yet. The opposite appears to be the case, especially for small producers.

Before the election I recall a medium-sized hog producer telling me that he was going to vote for free trade because that was his guarantee into the U.S. market. He believed that by voting for the PCs they would create a level playing field allowing him to market more easily his hogs in the U.S. There may have been a level playing field created, but I have not seen it. If there is one it certainly is a level playing field that is decidedly tipped toward the United States and decidedly tipped toward the large hog producer.

The countervail duty that has been slapped on hogs has meant that the future of that particular hog producer in my riding is in real jeopardy. One thing that I have learned since being elected is that many of the problems facing Canadians in my riding of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre also face Canadians throughout this country.

I was recently in Prince Edward Island talking to farmers in that beautiful province. The most successful farmers are often the small mixed farmers who grow a combination of those famous P.E.I. potatoes, some hay and some grain and who raise some livestock.

While I was in P.E.I. I was told that a number of mixed farmers are simply going to stop producing hogs because it simply did not pay. The reality in P.E.I. or Saskatchewan is that the only way one can successfully raise hogs is to have a large operation because the margin of profit per hog is so small it only pays when producing them in large numbers. This is not the promise the Tories made to those people before the last election.

What of supply management? We have a system in this country that allows for a viable industry in dairy products, eggs, chickens, turkeys and broiler hatching eggs. This system ensures that Canadians control the market in these areas and ensures that fair competition continues to exist. The GATT talks that are now taking place may well force some compromise, and some altering of position in the area of supply management may be required. Certainly industries such as the dairy industry have recognized this fact and have put forth proposals in order to help their industry survive in a global market.

I am certain that there is much concern among Canadian diary producers. Certainly they have put a lot of effort into developing and bringing forth proposals. Nonetheless when they look at how much the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board and the Atlantic Transportation Committee were ignored when they offered their expert advice in their particular area, what are the chances that the dairy commission is going to have any influence on the government's position on supply management? That is, of course, unless it happens to concur with its thinking.

There is certainly room to manoeuvre in these talks. Agricultural economists make it very clear that we do not have to turn to unbridled capitalism, that it is quite possible to have an effective and efficient trading of agricultural commodities while at the same time allowing individual governments to develop programs which will allow them to maintain viable, profitable and productive family farming units. The question is whether or not this government desires to reach that very worth-while objective.

• (1700)

The history of this government would indicate that concern over healthy, viable family farms and a viable rural economy is simply not part of this, its consideration. The government recently released its green paper on agriculture entitled Growing Together. It is a document that is filled with platitudes on the future of agriculture in this country. If there is one thing that Canadians have learned from the government over the past five years, it is not to trust and not too put too much faith in PC promises.

I do not want to be mistaken with respect to this document. It is welcomed because it provides Canadians with a vehicle by which to discuss the future of agriculture in this country. A proper, full and effective dialogue would allow input from all sectors of the country that have an interest in agriculture, with the final result being new policy directions which represent the views, the desires and the needs of all Canadian producers, not just the large corporate conglomerates but all Canadians, from the potato farmer in Prince Edward Island to the apple grower in British Columbia.

I want to believe that the PCs are serious with this consultative process. I want to believe that they have the genuine interests of all Canadian producers at heart. I want to believe it but I am, unfortunately, simply skeptical. I am skeptical because when I look at the past record of this government, I see that that simply has not been the case.

Before I close, I want to focus on one more subject, policies for agriculture, we must remember that it is only part of the over-all world economy.

Today the rural infrastructure of this country is in tatters, whether it be in Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Saskatchewan or British Columbia. The economic base of many communities is disappearing. Small businesses are closing their doors and services are simply being lost. The result is that seniors are leaving, not because they want to but rather because they are forced to. At the same time, young families are reluctant to move into these smaller centres, not only because of the scarce employment but also because of the fact that there is a lack of not only amenities but essential services as well.

Here again, the government must accept responsibility for the programs that exist in this area. There are many programs that are being cut and there are many problems that are being created.

The removal of VIA Rail takes away a necessary lifeline to many communities. What is even more disheartening is that this government is about to embark on a wholesale removal of track from large areas of this country. We all know that once the railway is gone, the death-knell is rung for many of these communities. While this may prove to be of benefit to Canadian Pacific, it certainly will not be of benefit to large areas of rural Canada.

As well, this government has a blind determination to eliminate hundreds of postal offices in this country, thereby putting a greater strain on rural communities. These are not just closures of post offices that have 50 and 75 boxes, the government is closing post offices in large communities of 2,000 to 3,000 people. This means that people in those communities, which are of a relatively stable size, are not going to be able to receive the same mail service that millions of other Canadians simply take for granted.

In closing, I would like to say that a vital and a vibrant rural Canada provides this country with a dimension that we simply cannot afford to lose. It is possible to have healthy family farms operating in a strong rural environment. It is possible if this government has the commitment. We in the New Democratic Party are willing to work toward that end. But the question is, is the Conservative Party? Looking at its past record, I would say that it is not. Our challenge in this party is to try to teach an old dog a new trick, and that trick would be one of compassion, concern and commitment to viable family farms in this country.

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon. I must say, however, that I am a little disappointed in the direction that the debate has taken because, quite frankly, the rhetoric flies in the face of the record.

The Minister of Agriculture has stated quite clearly in his earlier presentation the significance of the amount of funding that has been given by this government to agriculture and I am not going to take time at this point to review the significant increases in support to farmers put forward by this government in comparison with that put forward by previous administrations.

I think the government is very clear also in stating that the family farm is the essence of agriculture in Canada. Ninety-nine per cent of all the farms in this country are owned by farm families. Ninety-six per cent of the total production of agriculture in this country comes from family farms.

I think it is very significant that our support includes things like the dairy support policy, tripartite stabilization, all the various agricultural stabilization programs, drought support, crop insurance, and on we go through the great array of programs for Canadian agriculture, and each one of them put in place for the expressed reason of supporting family farms in Canada.

Looking at programs for the future, the document that the minister put forward just a week ago entitled Growing Together again is an indication of the significance of farm families to the future of this industry and the importance that the government places on those people. It clearly indicates the level of consultation that will go on in the future as we look for improvements in our agricultural policies.

I want to very briefly look at the direction of agricultural policy, particularly relating to trade. I think it is safe to say that this motion is brought forward today really to cover the disorganization which occurs in the opposition parties.

I would invite anyone to look closely at the presentations made by opposition speakers today, and look for positive alternatives that are being put forward in those presentations. I am sure that observers will find very few. It will be a continual carping and complaining about what is going on in the industry of agriculture today, but I can almost be assured that there will be very few positive alternatives put forward.

I think it is important to look at some of the accusations that are being made and see what the other side of the story is from what we may be hearing in the House today from various other people. The minister has stated that trade accounts for about 50 per cent of agricultural revenues. Clearly, this is very significant to our farmers and to the over-all economy of Canada.

We want to liberalize trade but we also want to protect important features in our agricultural system. One of those important features, of course, is supply management. Our critics will say that we have not supported supply management with enough vigour in recent discussions with the United States and particularly in international negotiations under GATT. I think the evidence flies in the face of the comments that are being made here today.

I would like to review a few of the statements put forward by spokespeople for the agricultural industry and in particular leaders of the various supply management sectors. I refer first of all to a press release put out by the dairy farmers of Canada in which there are statements by John Killoran, the president of the Dairy Farmers of Canada, who states, referring to the GATT panel ruling:

> "The ruling clearly illustrates the inability of the current GATT wording to safeguard effective supply management programs."

When the Minister of Agriculture formed the dairy task force, Mr. Killoran stated that they welcomed the opportunity to be involved in consultations with the Minister of Agriculture as well as officials of External Affairs regarding the strategy the Canadian Government should pursue in future negotiations.

Clearly the leaders of the supply management sector are involved in the discussions, they are meeting regularly with the Canadian negotiators and it is obvious from their press release that they are pleased with that involvement and that level of consultation.

In a report of October 27 in The Globe and Mail, Nelson Coyle, a spokesman for the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency, refers to their opportunities to talk with Michael Gifford and he states that he is pleased with the stance of Michael Gifford, the Canadian agricultural negotiator, when they did not endorse various parts of the U.S. trade initiatives and their position at GATT. Again, the area which Canada did not endorse was the area which restricted imports, and of course, that is so important to protecting our supply management systems here in Canada.

A third reference relates to an open letter by Mr. Bill Mitchell, assistant director for the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, who comments on the ice cream and yoghurt situation:

> There is nothing fair about the U.S. move and the Canadian government has taken a strong stand against it.

Those are entirely different comments from the ones we have heard from the opposition critics today. It is clear that the government is very much in support of organized marketing in this country where it has become so much a part of the Canadian industry.

Today in the House the Minister for International Trade commented on the position that was reached and recently taken in Bangkok, again in favour of supply management in the particular sectors where it applies.

I would like to refer again to a spokesman from Australia, a person who is outside Canada, outside whatever internal arguments and discussions that may be going on here relating to various trade initiatives. The article said that the Canadian delegation found itself under some criticism when the Australian trade minister, Michael Duffy, told local journalists that Canada's insistence on maintaining protection for its dairy industry could be a problem in reaching a final consensus.

Those are hardly the words that we are hearing here today, but out of that meeting, there was an agreement. Canada did sustain its arguments and the Cairns Group goes on in their leadership in trying to bring a truce in the international trade wars. Canada has maintained its position in support of supply management.

This is the sort of leadership that this government has been maintaining over the last many months and years. It is the sort of leadership that we will continue to put forward in the future. I think the evidence that I have produced here today from independent people not involved in the political razzmatazz that goes on in this House clearly shows the support of this government.

Mr. Gaby Larrivée (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Algoma, a motion that is very negative about agriculture in this country.

In his preamble, the hon. member mentioned the farmers, mostly from Quebec and Ontario, who visited Ottawa last week, but he failed to mention the reasons behind their visit. If he had bothered to listen, he would have realized that our farmers came to ask us to protect their vested interests. Although the situation is not ideal, they know perfectly well they are protected by all kinds of measures put in place by the government, and they came to see us to make sure these measures would not be jeopardized by the current negotiations.

I will try to give en overview of the situation, and I think we will see it is not as dramatic and certainly more positive than the motion presented by the hon. member for Algoma would have us believe.

It is true that Canadian agriculture and the agri-food business generally have reached a turning point in their history. We will probably have to make some bold and innovative changes to be able to respond to new needs in the industry in the 90's and the 21st century.

First of all, I think I should explain the context in which such changes are being initiated. During the past five years we went through a period that in some ways was worse than the Depression. As a result of high interest rates at the beginning of this decade and poorly designed financing programs, we had many major problems which only now are beginning to subside.

The economy does of course have an impact, but to answer the Opposition's motion condemning this government, I think we should look at things in their proper perspective. Today, we are still suffering the consequences of the lack of foresight and economic vision that was typical of the beginning of this decade.

Mr. Speaker, our colleagues opposite are trying to play their role as the Opposition in this House, but perhaps they should first examine their own consciences.

We have to go back to the 70's and the then spiralling price of land to get to the root of the financing problems that ensued. People who bought land when prices reached all-time highs put themselves in a very vulnerable situation.

We received a legacy of loans with low collaterals and hign interest rates and land values that were going down. Low prices for farm products, the result of a number of complex economic factors, have led to major arrears in debt payments by farmers, to foreclosures, bankruptcies and a crisis of confidence in the industry.

Obviously, the droughts we experienced and the merciless trade war between the Americans and the European Economic Community have added to the many difficulties we already had.

That being said, we are pleased to note that the number of bankruptcies has declined since 1985, from 353 to 220 in 1988. This trend has continued in the first eight months of 1989 in Canada with another 2 per cent average decrease compared to the same period in 1988. The worst is over and we are at last beginning to see signs of improvement.

Not only is farm debt going down, but so is the amount of overdue debt. Moreover, interest charges are expected to account for 13 per cent of total operating expenses in 1989, which is 19 per cent less than in 1981 and hardly more than they were in the 1970s. Although interest rates have increased over the last year, it must be borne in mind that they only add slightly less than 2 per cent to farmers' operating costs.

The average farm family income is now nearly at the same level as that of other Canadian families. Family farms are all in all in pretty good shape at the end of the 1980s. In 1987, the average Canadian farmer had an 80 per cent equity, worth a sizable $373,000, in his farm. Average income, including off-farm earnings, was around $36,000. Furthermore, new farmers are waiting to take over and young people are still going into farming.

Before overcoming these difficulties, we learned some important lessons. We must now act on the basis of past experience and we are already well on the way. We must adjust to change if we want to remain competitive in a constantly changing, increasingly global market. That is why our government has adopted long-term planning. We are now reviewing all of our agricultural policies and programs to make them more effective and to adapt them to the issues facing us.

Obviously, farm finances are a key element in building a more competitive agri-food industry and they are therefore an important part of the review. Nevertheless, farm finances must not be limited to credit issues alone. They also involve the management and financing of agricultural enterprises, which are part of the larger farm income protection system.

Given the wrong ideas concerning the vitality of this industry, it is not surprising that opinions are so divided on setting a long-term financial policy for this sector. For example, are subsidized interest rates the solution to most farmers' financial problems or on the contrary, as some groups claim, are they not rather an incentive to excessive debt?

We know that extending credit in itself is not enough. As we look to the future, our goal must be to meet financial needs as we help farmers manage risks and avoid major financial problems.

Mr. Speaker, we do not claim to have solved all problems. The situation remains difficult in some sectors, particularly grains and oil seeds, as well as pork production. Some family farms still have trouble paying off their debt.

Nevertheless, the Government has made remarkable efforts in the past five years to rectify the situation. I can assure all hon. members of this House that this government will continue to give farmers all the help required for their farms to remain profitable and prosperous, even in the context of the objectives of responsible financial management it has set itself.

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating to me that I must conclude. We must deal with all these issues and more to help farmers prepare properly for the 1990s. As you can see, the present government cannot be blamed for farmers' problems. On the contrary, we are convinced that considerable efforts have been made to correct the situation and mechanisms are in place so that we can adjust rapidly to the new challenges presented by the globalization of markets, which has already begun.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member. If the House would allow the Chair to make a proposal for the remainder of the debate, the Chair intends to recognize the member for Okanagan—Shuswap for five minutes and then the Official Opposition would get to close the debate. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the latitude, given the limited time available for the remaining members to make some comments.

I would like to reflect upon the previous speaker's comments regarding the government initiatives in agriculture. We on this side tend to think of them as being a lack of initiatives.

Certainly this concept of trying to create a level playing field is just simply unworkable in the light of the reality of Canadian agriculture. The fact is that we suffer significant disadvantages in Canada as a result of our shorter growing season, our lower levels of production because of the economy of scale, our greater transportation costs, our higher construction costs and, of course, higher energy costs because of our competitors to the south. So it is impossible to create this level playing field as the members on the government side seem wont to do. In fact, we feel that maintaining a viable agricultural industry in Canada is going to require some considerable and continued government input.

As a matter of fact, I would remind the House that the Macdonald Commission, when it tabled its extensive report, recommended that agriculture be excluded from the free trade agreement that we have now signed and in which we are involved. Although the commission recommended against it, this government has gone into a free trade agreement in agricultural commodities and the U.S. has won major concessions such as the reduction of the powers of the Wheat Board, the removal of transportation subsidies, and the eventual phase-out of agricultural tariffs. If that is not a capitulation to U.S. demands, I do not know what is. As a result of this, the whole concept of supply management and marketing boards and the stability that those boards give the agricultural industry in Canada is in fact severely jeopardized.

As a matter of fact, Article 703 of the free trade agreement that we have now signed, talks about market access for agriculture and states that in order to facilitate trade in agricultural goods, the parties, meaning Canada and the United States, shall work together to improve access to each other's market through the elimination and reduction of import barriers. That means those kinds of price structuring systems such as the marketing boards and the supply management boards that have come to be the stability of the industry. When they are gone, it is going to be very, very difficult for agriculturalists right across Canada to compete.

When referring to the free trade agreement, the American Farm Bureau concluded that once tariffs were removed, American grains, bakery goods, poultry, eggs and milk products would gain greater access to the Canadian market and undermine the power of marketing boards. In Western Perspectives an article written in April of 1988, there was actually a comment by the minister, and the minister himself had identified significant losses in jobs in British Columbia agriculture as a result of the implementation of that free trade agreement, as much as admitting that agriculture is going to take it on the chin as a result of the FTA.

The Okanagan and Shuswap area in British Columbia, with an agricultural industry that is concentrated in soft fruits, becomes virtually a region of sacrifice under this free trade agreement. It is going to be very, very difficult for those farmers to compete once those tariff structures come down.

I have talked with farmers in the Okanagan, grape growers who over the last year have torn out their vines. I have asked them what they are going to do with their land, what they are going to plant on that land. Their response is: "I am going to try to sell the land because no matter what I plant I am not going to be able to make it. It is as simple as that."

We are talking about the demise of an industry. It is beyond me to listen to the rhetoric that this government is giving from the other side of the House on how vibrant our agricultural industry is. Good heavens, if it was so vibrant, why did we have 7,000 farmers on the front lawn of the House of Commons here last week demanding some action by this minister because of the very, very deep concern that they have about the future of the agricultural industry in Canada?

I speak for the farmers throughout the Okanagan, throughout British Columbia, but more so for the farmers from the west coast to the east coast. We have a serious problem in terms of the future of our agricultural industry in Canada. We cannot compete on the concept of a level playing field simply because of the inequities in the geographic and climatic factors that face agriculture in this land. We have to recognize that and we have to protect it.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the hon. member for Algoma and the hon. member for Lambton—Middlesex, who today presented this motion of censure in the House, a motion that reads as follows:

That this House condemn the government for its insensitivity to the tremendous difficulties being faced by Canada's farmers and other rural Canadians—

Mr. Speaker, I believe Canadian agriculture is in a precarious state. On November 21, here on Parliament Hill, we saw one of the biggest demonstrations of discontent in the agricultural sector in the past ten years. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the only farmers' protest that may have been bigger than the one on November 21 was in 1973–74, when milk producers were demanding better ways of adjusting to the new supply management system, a system that today, those same farmers want to protect.

What is behind these demonstrations? Mr. Speaker, farmers are demonstrating because they are worried about the positions that are being taken, and the ones that are not being taken, by the present government at the GATT talks now being held. As you know, GATT Article 11 is threatened by positions being taken by many countries, including the Cairns Group and the United States. These countries want to weaken or repeal altogether the GATT measures that allow us here in Canada to have supply management systems.

Mr. Speaker, in recent months we saw that the United States had every intention of preventing us, and even appealed to GATT to prevent Canada from imposing quantitative restrictions on imports of ice cream and yogurt. Ironically, Mr. Speaker, the United States, thanks to a special GATT article, is exempt from the same measures it would impose on us. In other words, the United States wants to be able to export its yogurt and ice cream to Canada, while being able to invoke measures that would prevent exports of yogurt and ice cream from Canada to the United States. Of course, Canada does not, at this very moment, intend to export yogurt and ice cream to the United States, but the fact remains that there is a double standard here.

The consultation document provided by the Minister of Agriculture has also disturbed many farmers in Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. This document challenges our transport system, marketing and many support programs in Canada's agricultural industry. In fact, we could even say that, to a certain extent, this report threatens the very existence of our supply management systems.

The case of crop advance payments is another example of the careless attitude of this Conservative government towards Canada's farming community. Crop insurance reductions are yet another example. And, finally so is farm credit. We all know that the Farm Credit Corporation's current interest rate stands at about 13 per cent, which is nearly 9 per cent over and above the inflation rate in this country. I think we can safely say it has to be the highest rate ever in the history of the FCC, if we take into account the real interest rate.

Mr. Larrivée: It peaked at over 20 per cent in the past!

Mr. Boudria: I see some members across the aisle who do not agree with me. I would urge them to take a closer look at the file and, like me, they will realize I am telling the truth.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a table released by Statistics Canada which indicates, among other things, that in 1977 the prime rate and the Consumer Price Index were 8.5 and 7.9 per cent respectively, which means that the actual loan rate was then less than 1 per cent.

Referring to 1982— I see that a member opposite is talking about 1982 when the prime rate stood at 15 per cent and the CPI at 10.8 per cent. The real rate of interest therefore was 5 per cent. Now, in the fall of 1989, the CPI is under 5 per cent and, as I pointed out earlier, the prime rate is 13.5 per cent. We can see that the real interest rate right now is very high, I would even say it is undoubtedly the highest we have had in the past 10 years, notwithstanding the fact that we are neither in an economic recession nor in particularly trying times in terms of the over-all economy. I strongly urge, therefore, the Tory Members opposite to pressure the Minister of Finance into greatly reducing this interest rate.

How time flies, Mr. Speaker! There are a great many other issues I wish I could bring to the attention of my hon. colleagues. To conclude, I should like to emphasize the fact that the Tory government, in its last budget, inflicted some severe cuts on the Canadian farm industry. Here are a few examples of these cuts: advance payments for grain and crops: $54 million; dairy product export program: $12 million; Canadian Dairy Commission: $10 million; crop insurance: $200 million; grain and flour movement: $60 million; railway track rehabilitation: $48 million; farm product loan program: $15 million. Alltogether, Mr. Speaker, $399 million were cut from the farm budget during 1989. It goes without saying that the farmers who came to demonstrate in front of Parliament these past few days had every reason to do so. They gave us a warning. The farmers promised in front of the media and the Canadian people that if things did not change, they intended to return and that they would be 30,000, 40,000, or even 50,000 to demonstrate on Parliament Hill, and not only 7,000, 8,000 or 10,000. I know that Canadian farmers are quite able to do so. But this is not the issue. The real issue is: Should farmers have to use such methods to get their fair share of the pie? The answer is no.

• (1740)

The Tory Government opposite should know by now that the Canadian people want our farm industry to get assistance. We want to maintain our farm industry alive and healthy. A country which loses its farm industry will eventually lose control over its economy.

[English]

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, these are serious times for rural Canada and our farmers. The insensitivity of this government to the plight of the agricultural industry is unforgivable.

To listen to this government and the part-time Minister of Agriculture here tonight, you would think that nothing was done for agriculture before this government came along. You would think that there had never been co-operation between the provinces and the federal government, or our trading partners for that matter. You would think the current programs that have built an agricultural industry that is envied the world over just happened by chance, not as an answer to problems in the agricultural sector.

The programs developed in the past by a Liberal government and, yes, by the minister's predecessor, may not have been perfect. But in a country in a northern hemisphere producing 60 per cent of its food further north than in any other nation in the world, we became the envy of other nations. We have become one of the most efficient, productive, quality-conscious agriculture producers anywhere in the world. Leaders from all across the world have indicated this to us.

Now we have a Green Paper Growing Together. The government is saying that former policies are wrong, that the Hon. John Wise was wrong and that farm income support programs must be changed, supply management reformed and farmers, in four words in that document, "are on their own". Quite frankly we have heard throughout the agricultural community, and everyone knows, that the former Minister of Agriculture, John Wise, resigned because he knew about the policies this government was going to bring in and that they would adversely affect the farmers for whom he worked so hard.

The part-time Minister of Agriculture, without ever consulting the agricultural sector, has come out with his salvation for agriculture. The report is full of rhetorical phrases like "global trade liberalization, self-reliance and self-sufficiency". Farmers who have had time to study the document have called it patronizing and insulting. They are telling farmers that from now on they are on their own. Comforting, do you not think?

The minister is now saying that he is the Messiah, that his predecessors, farm organizations and farmers do not understand the needs of agriculture, only he does.

As loudly demonstrated last week by thousands of farmers on Parliament Hill, the agricultural sector is asking why this government is throwing Canadian agriculture to the wolves. They asked: "Why are you abandoning us?"

The minister has admitted in Growing Together his willingness to abandon product lines or a sector of agriculture no longer in demand in the market. What does this mean? What happens if the market for a certain product declines this year and a decision from on high is made not to encourage or support this sector?

As most people realize, you just do not turn the agricultural sector and production on and off like a tap. Once you lose production it takes time to re-establish production. It takes time to re-establish these production lines and, if you need it in the future, you lose your historical market figures and your future markets. More important, you are now dependent on someone else to produce that product. This becomes a serious problem if you depend on another country for your food production. Is this where we are heading? I say to you, this is where we are heading under this government and its policies on agriculture and trade.

More emphasis is to be put on marketing, yet Canagrex was established precisely for this purpose. This government killed this agricultural export program. Frankly, this government and this minister simply reject any suggestions from anyone simply as a matter of course. They do not listen to or care about what Canadian farmers are saying. Instead, it pushes ahead blindly, cutting up programs that have made our industry strong and made our industry the envy of the world over.

Let us look briefly at what the government has done and what it is planning to do to our agricultural industry. The record has been a long line of broken promises. Before the election the agriculture and trade ministers indicated that the free trade agreement would not adversely affect agriculture, that by putting ice cream and yoghurt on the import control list there would not be any repercussions, the industry would be protected.

Now we see the reality. Now we are being harassed by the United States over these commodities. A GATT panel has ruled that the restrictions limiting the quantity of ice cream and yoghurt allowed into Canada do not conform with Canada's GATT obligations. Quite frankly, this minister should have known that. He should not have gone across this country and told Canadian farmers that their industry would be protected.

The tobacco industry, an industry of prime importance in my riding, has also been destroyed by this government. During the election campaign the Minister of Agriculture said that Ottawa wanted to send a strong message to the tobacco industry that it will support tobacco producers in their time of adjustment. Well, shortly after the election was over this government cut back on programs to support tobacco farmers moving into other sectors. Quite a promise. The government cut them back by $6 million.

The government continued its attack on the agricultural community through this budget. The Ontario Federation of Agriculture estimated that the budget will cost Canadian farmers $120 million more in fuel and gasoline taxes this fiscal year. Some farm organizations estimate the budget will cost an individual farmer up to $2,000. Even the government's own officials have said that each farmer will be paying between $700 and $1,000 more. No other sector was so hard hit in this budget, no other sector was asked to give up so much.

Cutting the interest free payments in the Advance Payments for Crops Act will cost farmers an extra $27 million. In relative terms of the whole over-all budget this is not a great amount, a small amount for the value it was worth to Canadian farmers to allow a Canadian commodity group to market their products in such a way as to get a fair return for their work.

The government will also be cutting back $200 million in the crop insurance program, saying it is rebalancing the cost. Producers suggested a one-third tripartite funding proposal which was rejected. Without an equitable funding mechanism such as this, crop insurance premium costs will remain too expensive for many growers, especially in the poorer provinces, meaning a continuation of low participation percentages among producers of many farm commodities. Without a high participation percentage the economic and political need for ad hoc disaster relief programs will continue just as it has in the past.

The dairy industry was attacked once more. The budget eliminated $7 million from the special dairy export program and $7 million is to be cut for the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Agriculture is also unfairly treated by the GST. The Minister of Finance's technical paper on the new federal sales tax says sales of farmland will generally be subject to the normal GST rules. Sales or leases of farmland will be taxable. In other words, if one farmer sells a quarter section to another, it will be subject to the 9 per cent tax. Apparently, even land leased by a son from his father will be taxed. That is criminal.

I will conclude by saying that this government's programs with regard to agriculture, its promises during the election campaign to protect agriculture from the free trade agreement and from American harassment, and its budget cuts have all been devastating to our agricultural sector and our rural communities throughout Canada.

This side of the House will not stand for this. Let me make myself clear that in the next election the Canadian people will tell this government that they reject its agricultural policies and that there will not be one single Conservative member from rural Canada on that side of the House.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We agreed earlier that the last half hour would be given to the Official Opposition. I realize the parliamentary secretary was not here at the time, so I might suggest, with the co-operation of the hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre, that he leave a few minutes before six o'clock to the hon. parliamentary secretary. Would that be agreeable?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member from Winnipeg North Centre on debate.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to use this opportunity in addressing the House to again raise questions about the future of agriculture and the future of farming in western Canada.

First of all, I would like to thank my own party, and particularly the speaker before me, for helping Parliament realize the importance of this issue. As many of the members here today on the last day of this short week have listened, they have come to understand that the reality is that Canadians are gradually beginning to realize just how fragile the agriculture economy is.

I would like to use this occasion to put what is going on in western Canada in some political and historical context. One of the reasons why western Canada has been known as the country of political protest is that one political party after another has failed to respond to the needs of western Canadian farmers. The rise of the CCF and the rise of the Social Credit Party can both be attributed in part to the failure of the central government to respond to the needs of western Canadians.

Perhaps one of the most dramatic changes in western Canadian history was the rise of the Conservatives under John Diefenbaker. He symbolized the need of western Canadians to have a greater say in the government. That tradition has been going on since the late 1950s and in fact helped propel the current government into power.

What you see taking place in western Canada right now, gradually, but nevertheless in a very real form, is the rise of the Reform Party. Just as before, people have to consider what the state is right now of the western Canadian farmer that contributes to the rise of yet another party in western Canada. The reality is the failure of the central government, the failure of Ottawa, to respond to the needs of the western farmer.

This is a particularly bitter experience for western Canadian farmers because they thought they finally had a group of people who understood their needs. Instead, what they have right now is a minister who earlier this afternoon stood up and defended the fact that they had not been able to do anything for the farmer, saying: "What else can you expect? It is so expensive. There are too many international rules. There is a regime out there that we are not able to compete with". He is not able to say anything positive. He is only able to say: "We have done everything we can".

Well, that is not acceptable for the western Canadian farmer because we are putting at risk people who have staked their whole lives, their careers, their families, their communities on the success of their annual operations. We cannot stand by and simply say: "Well, we tried hard, but there is nothing we can do about it".

Our party, to its credit, has continually asked the House to increase activities on behalf of the Canadian farmer, particularly the western Canadian farmer. We have made proposals on financing farms, we have made proposals on GATT, we have made proposals under the free trade agreement. We have been the party of ideas. We have been the party that—

Mr. Cardiff: Oh come on.

Mr. Walker: You do not want to recognize it, because you had to listen to your minister and you are embarrassed. I do not blame you. Nevertheless, the reality is the Canadian farmer is not being served by this government.

In rural Canada right now there is an added complexity on which this government is very silent, and that is the future of the very communities that are there to serve the farmer. Communities as big as Winnipeg or as tiny as Carmen or some other small communities in the Interlake area of Manitoba are all at risk, in part because of the failure of the family farm to be maintained and to be assisted by the federal government whether in marketing, finance, research or whatever.

This reality causes a tremendous anxiety among young people. At one time we used to boast that our biggest export was grain. Right now, as members on this side realize, the biggest export out of western Canada is young people. In fact, the Saskatchewan government has a clock ticking which shows how many people leave every hour. You can imagine what it does to a province to talk not about how it is contributing to the Gross National Product every hour but how it is losing people by the hour.

Similarly in Winnipeg our population has changed very significantly in the last 15 years because people do not see a future there, in part because of the decline of the agricultural sector.

Several people have come forward and asked the government to respond to what they call this frontier cancer; several associations and several small towns. It is interesting to note that even though the Minister of Agriculture stands up and talks about his own department, he never really addresses the question of what they are doing in the job creation branch of the Department of Employment.

What are they doing in the department of the Secretary of State to help small associations? What are they doing across the board to make sure that people realize that there is a life for them in small towns in Canada; that there is a communication system for them; that the road system, through federal-provincial agreements, will be maintained; that their education system will be maintained; that there is distance education for example? All these things are lacking in the approach of the federal government.

I suppose that one could argue that the Minister of Agriculture does not have the strength, as Deputy Prime Minister, to convince his colleagues, but I think there are other ministers who from time to time come out of the west who visit these communities and they should be able to reflect the interests of westerners in the national process.

I think that perhaps Parliament should take the opportunity to take a non-partisan approach to the problems of western farmers, that we should not be satisfied with Opposition Day debates, with unresponsive legislation, with a committee system that does not respond to their needs and international negotiating teams that do not quite understand what is going on in western Canada.

I think this is an opportunity for us to come together in an all-party sense, to join in and support resolutions such as this which, for once, says: "All right, we are making mistakes, we aren't doing enough, we've got to show some symbolic support".

Too often the western Canadian farmer picks up a newspaper and finds out the opposition is howling and the government is unresponsive. They become so cynical about this process that they turn around and go for yet another political party because they think that Parliament, as it is now structured, cannot respond. Why do you think that the concept of an elected Senate is so popular in the west? They want an elected Senate because they do not feel that the House of Commons can respond to them.

We are a land of producers, not just of people, and the Canadian system punishes producers because they do not have the support in the House of Commons. It is time that those people in the more populous areas turn to the west and understand, as consumers, that it is to the interest of everyone in this country to ensure the success of the western Canadian farmer. We cannot turn around and say that that is enough.

In keeping with the good will of the House I will do as you asked and stop early to allow the opposition to say a few words. I am sure we will hear everything they have to say in the next 30 seconds.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the House would agree to give two or three minutes to the hon. member.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, to the last speaker, we are the government, that is the opposition.

I am prompted to rise by the remarks of the hon. member from Haldimand—Norfolk. Every time he rises in this House he condemns our federal Minister of Agriculture, a man who has devoted most of his time to that portfolio. If he had been in the House earlier today and listened to what that hon. gentleman had said—

Mr. Speller: I was in the House.

Mr. Cardiff: You should have listened when you were sitting there. Then you would know what this party and this government has done for agriculture in this country. Take heart and listen to it because it is something that is very, very good for all of us.

You talk about our Green Paper. What are we doing? Almost every day there are articles in the newspapers. Here is one which states: "Fed report welcome". You condemn that action as well.

There is another which states: "Canadian chicken and egg spokesmen are upbeat about Agriculture Minister Don Mazankowski's report on the future of agriculture".

"I find the paper to be extremely encouraging," said Ontario Chicken Board general manager Bill Doyle.

"You can agree with the basic thrust," said Canadian Egg Marketing Agency general manager Gerry Gartner.

I have all kinds of other ones in here.

Mr. Walker: Come on.

Mr. Cardiff: Okay, listen. I listened to you, you can listen to me.

Mr. Walker: I made sense.

Mr. Cardiff: This is from The Ottawa Citizen:

> Canadian producers would be wise to fret less about GATT and heed the wise advice of Agriculture Minister Don Mazankowski. Marketing boards should worry less about their own quotas and costs, he said, and more about their customers.

Another article in the paper quotes Roger Cram, general manager of the Canadian Chicken Marketing Agency in Ottawa. He said: "We reiterate our support for Mr. Mazankowski's initiative and will actively co-operate in any discussion that will lead—"

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

With good will we offered the parliamentary secretary an opportunity to speak, and I think it would be fair for him to make his comments. However, if we need press clippings we can send for them in the mail. If he has one very final and quick remark we would be happy to hear from him.

Mr. Cardiff: In any event, we have talked about consultation. This minister has provided consultation with commodity groups and the provincial ministers of agriculture from across this country.

There is a policy conference to be held December 11 and 12, and the hon. member is invited to take part. Rather than sit back and complain and criticize, why not take part and grow together? The minister has offered an invitation to the people of this country to take part in forming the direction and policies of agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, I see that it is six o'clock. Thank you very much.

PRIVILEGE

GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege to bring to the Speaker's attention a matter which I consider to be a serious contempt of Parliament. On Thursday last, November 30, the Governor in Council appointed John Bassett as the new chairman of the Security Intelligence Review Committee and also appointed Stewart McInnes as a member of that committee. In making those two appointments, the government failed to comply with a direct command of Parliament, in contempt of the authority of Parliament.

Section 34(1) of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act provides as follows:

> There is hereby established a committee, to be known as the Security Intelligence Review Committee, consisting of a Chairman and not less than two and not more than four other members, all of whom shall be appointed by the Governor in Council from among members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who are not members of the Senate or the House of Commons, after consultation by the Prime Minister of Canada with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons and the leader in the House of Commons of each party having at least twelve members in that House.

There was no consultation with the then Leader of the New Democratic Party, the member for Oshawa, and he was of course leader in the House of Commons of a party having at least 12 members in that House. The appointment, I submit was in direct contravention of Section 34 on the facts and evidence I have, a summary of which I will submit to you.

The only communication was a letter from the Prime Minister to the hon. member for Oshawa dated November 28, 1989. I will read the full letter because it will not take very long and I want to make sure that it is fully in the record. It reads:

> Dear Ed,
> I am writing concerning the composition of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, whose members' terms expire on November 29, 1989. As you know, section 34(1) of the Act provides that SIRC members shall be appointed by the Governor in Council "after consultation by the Prime Minister of Canada with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons of each party having at least twelve seats in that House".
> The current Chairman of the Committee, the Honourable Ronald Atkey, has indicated that he wishes to leave the Committee at the end of the current term. I would propose, therefore, to recommend the appointment of Mr. John White Hughes Bassett, Q.C. as Chairman. He is an outstanding Canadian citizen with distinguished military service and a long career of public service to Canada. I would also propose to recommend the Honourable Stewart D. McInnes as member, replacing the Honourable Frank McGee, who is also retiring. Both Messrs. Bassett and McInnis would be appointed for a three–year term. I would propose to recommend the reappointment of existing members, the Honourable Jean–Jacques Blais, the Honourable Saul Cherniack and the Honourable Paule Gauthier, each for a further term of two years.

And I underline the following, Mr. Speaker:

> I would like to know your views on these proposed appointments as I would propose to announce them shortly.
> Yours sincerely,
> Brian

There was no other communication with Mr. Broadbent's office other than the delivery of this letter to his office at 3.15 in the afternoon of Tuesday, November 28. Of course, as was well known to the government and to the Prime Minister's office, he had left for Winnipeg for the NDP convention. The timing of the debate on Bill C–43 was set with that in mind. The government and, as I say, the Prime Minister's Office were well aware of that.

The letter states at the end, and I repeat:

> I would like to know your views on these proposed appointments as I would propose to announce them shortly.

There was no deadline put for a reply and quite properly the office of the member for Oshawa assumed that this would be dealt with on his return from Winnipeg. There was no effort made by the Prime Minister's Office to contact Mr. Broadbent by phone, no effort made to contact Mr. Broadbent in Winnipeg, and certainly there were no views provided by Mr. Broadbent, the member for Oshawa, in respect of the appointment before the appointment was made.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has put the situation very clearly. I also want to thank the hon. member for the fact that he has stuck strictly to the facts which are necessary for me to consider the matter on the basis of the letter and the alleged lack of response.

The hon. member has pointed out that this would seem to be, at least on the surface, inconsistent with the requirement of the act itself. It is a matter I will look at. I have heard the hon. member's point. It has been put very succinctly and I appreciate him for it. Does the hon. member have something further?

Mr. Brewin: If I may, very succinctly, Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize the relationship of Section 34 to Parliament. This is not a mere breach of the act.

The CSIS Act provided Section 34 in order that Parliament indirectly, through the leaders, could be consulted in this very sensitive appointment. I would add this element. This is not a mere breach of a section of the act by the government that may happen from time to time, but given the structure of SIRC established to oversee CSIS, established by Parliament after consultation with the committees, I say there is a very special relationship, and I would like the Speaker to take that into account.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the hon. member that the Speaker is very aware of the section, having had a lot to do with the section being there some years ago.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks, if I may, to assist Your Honour in coming to a decision as to whether or not there has been a prima facie breach of privilege.

The first submission I would have is that a privilege has to be pertinent to a particular member and surely, if there is any privilege here, it would be the hon. member for Oshawa who would be the aggrieved member. One cannot have a New Democratic Party or an Official Opposition privilege. One can only have a privilege pertinent to a particular member's privileges. Members can be aggrieved, I admit, in certain circumstances. I have not seen too many but have had lots of suggestions. Surely it has to be the hon. member for Oshawa who raises this point of privilege, if in fact there is one.

Second, the question here is: Was there any consultation? The letter is very clear. It was sent to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. A similar letter was sent to the Leader of the Liberal Party. I have a copy of that, too. The hon. member has read into the record parts of the letter, but the hon. member does not seem to place any emphasis on the fact that it states: "I would like to know your views on these proposed appointments as I would propose to announce them shortly". I point out that this was set up to include members from all political parties in order that there would be a balance there. There is no question that that has been met because there are members from other parties there. My hon. friend seems to claim that there was no consultation.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there is no question of privilege pertinent to the hon. member who has raised it because it does not contemplate consulting with the hon. member for Victoria. It contemplates consulting with the leader of his party. That is the person who would have a privilege if in fact there was one.

I suggest that the Prime Minister has made it very clear when he states: "I would like to know your views on these proposed appointments as I would propose to announce them shortly". I also would suggest that theirs is the only party that feels aggrieved by this. I do not know if the Official Opposition is going to become engaged in this debate or not. We have the proof that the letter was received in Mr. Broadbent's office at 3.15 on the day it was sent. I do not know whether my hon. friend is claiming that Mr. Broadbent did not try to get back to the Prime Minister or not, but clearly the Prime Minister asked for comments, did not get any, and made the announcement.

I suggest that the government and the Prime Minister especially have complied with the law. I suggest if my friend has any difficulty with it he can claim that the appointment is invalid because it does not meet the law, but he would have to argue that in another court or in another forum.

I suggest that there is absolutely no breach of the hon. member's privileges. I suggest that the government has acted in accordance with the act and that Your Honour should find there is no prima facie case of privilege.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding what the Minister of Justice has just said, I think there is in this case a breach of privilege and the hon. member for Victoria was quite correct in raising it.

I want to say at the outset that I do not think it is our place as members of this House, on this question of privilege, to comment on the appointment per se. It is to comment on whether or not the process has been followed as required by the act. I want to make clear that my comments are directed only to that aim.

The hon. member for Victoria quoted quite correctly Section 34 of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. The act clearly requires that there be consultation with the Leader of the Opposition.

I want to say that the Minister of Justice has referred to the letter that was sent by the Prime Minister to the Leader of the Opposition. I understand he will now table those letters since he quoted from one of them in the course of his remarks. The letter that was sent to the Leader of the Opposition, although I do not have a copy, I understand was delivered at 3.30 on November 28 to his office and the appointment was made on November 30.

I was not in the House when this act was passed. However, a letter notifying of an intended appointment less than 48 hours before it is made can hardly be termed in my view consultation. It is certainly not within the spirit of the act, and I think the Minister of Justice is well aware of that. He is arguing from a position of weakness in this case trying to defend what in my view is the indefensible.

I could perhaps refer him to another act. There are two other instances of this which, in light of the minister's comments, I think I should draw to the attention of the House. On April 18 of this year in Question Period, in response to a question posed by me, the Deputy Prime Minister discussing the appointment of a commission to look into the electoral law gave the following answer. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, indeed, we have been waiting for the report of the Chief Electoral Officer to look at some of the recommendations that he has brought forth. I have discussed some of the proposed terms of reference with him. We are in the process of defining those terms of reference, and I would hope that we will be in a position to discuss this with members opposite in the very near future.

That was the answer he gave. We heard the week before last that a commission had been appointed by the government to look into the electoral laws of Canada. There was no consultation with us as to the terms of reference or as to the members of the commission. The Leader of the Opposition was not consulted. I understand the Leader of the New Democratic Party was not consulted. Our deputy leader was not consulted, and I as electoral critic on our side was not consulted.

This is a strange way to indicate in an answer that you are going to have discussions. But there were in fact no such discussions in spite of repeated requests on my part by letter for information.

In another act, the International Centre for Human Rights and Democratic Development Act, Section 7(1) provides for a board of directors of the centre, consisting of a chairman of the board, the president of the centre, and 11 other directors.

Subsection 7(2) provides that all appointments made pursuant to this section shall be made after consultation by the minister with the Leader of the Opposition and with the leader of every other recognized party in the House of Commons.

I know from rumours in the press that there may soon be an appointment of a board and a chairman to this body. Again, there has been no consultation to date with the Leader of the Opposition. There may have been with the other party; I do not know, but there has not been any with the Leader of the Opposition.

Again I hope that when consultation is undertaken, it is not this 48-hour notice by letter kind of thing. I would have expected the Prime Minister to place a telephone call to the Leader of the Opposition and to say: "I would like to discuss the matter".

Mr. McDermid: Couldn't find him.

Mr. Milliken: The Leader of the Opposition was here last week. It is a well-known fact. The hon. Minister of State for Privatization is well aware of that fact. He was here in the House asking questions last week. A call could easily have been made and some discussion carried on. With respect, I think that is what is meant by consultation. If the Prime Minister chooses to do his consultation by letter, he has to give a reasonable time. In my submission 48 hours is totally unreasonable.

• (1120)

The question of whether or not the breach of privilege has been raised by the appropriate member, I submit, is not an argument that is relevant to the issue. Whether I raise it on behalf of the Leader of the Opposition, or the hon. member for Victoria raises it on behalf of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, is beside the point.

The fact is that breaches have occurred of the privileges of certain members of this House and, because the consultation was not there, the privileges of all members have been breached by this government and I suggest that Your Honour should so rule.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, when I heard the Hon. Member for Victoria and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands who rose on a question of privilege, I thought it was rather odd. Unfortunately, I had no advance notice, so that I do not have the act with me. I understand that the act obliges the Prime Minister to consult, and according to the documents that were read and tabled, the Prime Minister has duly consulted.

I realize that all this was happening on what may seem relatively short notice. However, I still think it is distinctly odd that the two Members in question rose on behalf of their respective leaders, since although there is no evidence to that effect, the letters may have, and probably did follow conversations among the party leaders. I think if we could be logical and stop acting like outraged maiden aunts, it is quite likely that the former leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) discussed this appointment when he himself was discussing his future with the Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: He did not!

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Perhaps we can stop acting like those maiden aunts and consider that not only the letter but probably also the intent of the act was observed, unless we hear otherwise from the persons directly concerned.

On this point, I agree wholeheartedly with the Minister of Justice. If there is a question of privilege, it should be raised by the leaders of the two opposition parties, who should also let us know whether these letters came after previous private conversations.

[English]

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the point made by the government House leader that a question of privilege was not raised by the member of the House whose privileges have allegedly been offended.

I want to suggest that it is not necessary for a question of privilege to be raised by someone who feels personally harmed by the alleged breach of privilege. After all, citation 16 of Beauchesne's states:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

It quite often happens that members raise questions of privilege and the argument is accepted without any suggestion being made that the person raising the point of privilege has in some way been offended or harmed by the alleged breach.

An example I want to bring forward is the question of privilege raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition several months ago regarding the advertisements placed in newspapers by the government which conveyed the idea that this House had made a decision on the proposed goods and services tax when nothing of the sort had taken place.

Yes, there are occasions when a question of privilege is raised because of something that has happened or not happened with respect to the member of Parliament raising the point. In general I submit that this does not have to be done and, if the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Victoria is otherwise valid, the fact that he raised it rather than the member for Oshawa does not undermine his case at all.

Second, I want to say something about the point raised by the Conservative member who has just spoken. As far as I am aware, there were no conversations between the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister with respect to the appointments of members of the Security and Intelligence Review Committee. If he knows differently I would like him to tell the House, but I think that I am in a better position to inform the House on this score than the hon. member.

Where I see a problem is with the form of "consultation" in that the letter in question did not state clearly by which point in time a response had to be given. The letter, as I understand it, spoke only of getting back to the Prime Minister "shortly".

What is that supposed to mean? Is it supposed to mean a response in 24 hours, 48 hours, a week, two weeks, 10 minutes? What is it supposed to mean?

If the Prime Minister felt that he had to get a response within a certain point in time and if the Prime Minister intended to have meaningful consultation, that should have been clearly stated in the letter.

The heckling from the government side shows that they obviously think they have a weak case. They would not be prattling in this way if they thought they had a sound case. They obviously feel very ill at ease. I think they realize that the problem here is the way the government is ignoring not just the words but the spirit or intention of the law calling for consultation.

It may be that in a superficial technical way the sending of the letter with respect to the seeking of views on the appointment of the Security and Intelligence Review Committee may deal with or respond to what the act says.

I think we also have to look at its spirit, its intention. If the government really wanted to obey the law, it would have sent its letter in time to allow sufficient checking, reflection, and conversation, if necessary.

Furthermore, with respect to another aspect of this raised by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, a letter from the Prime Minister inviting views on the appointment to the new International Human Rights Institute should have gone out well before now. This has not been done. The government House leader has been unable to give an explanation for this.

Mr. Lewis: I was not asked.

Mr. Speaker: I think that it is appropriate to confine the remarks to the point which the hon. member for Victoria has raised. It is a specific point. It is very clear. There may be other matters of discussion between the leader of the Official Opposition and the Minister of Justice, but that surely should be brought up at another time in another context.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I want to conclude my remarks by making a correction in one thing I just said.

I think it is true that the hon. government House leader did not have a chance to respond to the point I was repeating that had been raised originally by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, and to be fair I have to recognize that.

I want to sum up and conclude by saying that it is not necessary in this case for the point to be raised by the former Leader of the New Democratic Party. It is sufficient that it be raised in the way it was done by the member for Victoria.

Second, the real concern which underlies and supports the merits of the question of privilege is the lack of adherence not just to the superficial wording but to the spirit and intent of the legislation in question calling for consultation.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Minister of Justice have any further remarks?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, during the commentary earlier it was suggested that I table a copy of the letter from the Prime Minister to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the letter in which it was stated that "I would like to know your views on these proposed appointments as I would propose to announce them shortly". I am naturally prepared to table a copy of that letter.

For the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why, if the Leader of the New Democratic Party had any views, he did not get back to the Prime Minister and still has not got back to him.

Mr. Milliken: Because he was in Winnipeg.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that he was in Winnipeg.

• (1130)

I would like very much when you render your judgment on this matter if you would spell out for the House whether or not this question of privilege should in fact have been raised by the hon. member for Oshawa. While I do not like to do it when he is not here, he is the hon. member who did not reply to the Prime Minister's letter.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member for Victoria quickly because I have the point.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two quick points. First, on the issue of whether I would be entitled to raise this, the government house leader has addressed that point as if he were dealing with the matter of a breach of the privileges of the member from Oshawa.

It is not a question of a breach of the particular privileges of the member for Oshawa that has been raised, but rather a question of contempt of Parliament and of the authority of Parliament. I submit that any member of Parliament can raise that question.

Second, and more particularly, the extent to which the member for Oshawa was given a particular role, he was given it in his capacity as leader in the House of Commons of our party. I am the spokesperson for our party on the issue of CSIS and in that capacity I raise it.

Third, on the question of conversations, I wish to repeat that the hon. member for Oshawa said to me personally that he received no personal communication, did not discuss this matter with the Prime Minister or anyone from his office. They did not have his views on the issue of Mr. Bassett. He was not aware that the Prime Minister had that in mind.

I would assume that the member for Lotbinière as well as the government House leader would accept my assurances on that point, at least for purposes of making a decision on the prima facie case. You do not have to make a final finding of fact on that but you have my assurances and the government has not offered any challenge to my statement in that respect. There is no evidence raised by the government House leader that there were in fact any consultations or communication other than the deliverance of a letter to his office after he left for Winnipeg and having heard nothing further from the government.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard sufficient. The hon. member for Kamloops is rising; he may have something additional that I should hear.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I do have a very short intervention. We want to get on to the business of the House but this, of course, is an important matter.

As the other interveners have indicated, consultation is required on the legislation. I thought it would be useful just to remind ourselves what consultation means. Referring to the Collins' English Dictionary, it defines "consultation" as a process where you confer with someone. "Confer" means that you must hold or take part in a conference together.

Obviously, as has been made clear, the Leader of the New Democratic Party at that time did not enter into consultation. He did not reply. In other words, what the Prime Minister did was notify the Leader of the New Democratic Party of his intentions, which is fine, and as the legislation is very explicit, it would require then a dialogue between two people.

This dialogue has not taken place and as the hon. members speaking before me made aptly clear, 48 hours is hardly an adequate time to arrange an interchange on such an important matter. I simply want to make that intervention.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Very briefly, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I do not challenge the right of the hon. member for Victoria to raise a question of privilege, and I think the Leader of the Official Opposition was absolutely right. But as Speaker of this august assembly, you have a duty to consider the letter, not the intent of the law, unless the letter is not clear. In this case, the letter of the law is very clear. The documents tabled raise the question whether there was any consultation. Perhaps there was not enough time to your taste, but the fact is that the letter of the law was respected.

If the intent of the law was not respected, in that case Mr. Speaker, we must hear it from those directly concerned and not from persons speaking on their behalf. As for the letter of the law, documents were tabled to the effect that Section 34 of the act was observed. That's it. Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: Again, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Lotbinière for his comments.

[English]

I have listened carefully to the discussions and I will consider the matter. I want to indicate that I see the distinction between privilege and contempt of the House and I will also accept the request of the hon. Minister of Justice to try to define if I can more particularly the question of what member, under certain circumstances, can raise a question of privilege.

I will consider the point and I shall return to the House. Again, in summary, this discussion has come about because the Prime Minister apparently sent letters to both the Leader of the Official Opposition and the then Leader of the New Democratic Party asking for views. For whatever reason, no views were sent back and the appointment was made several days later. That is the fact pattern. There is a statute that requires consultation. There has been some argument about what that means, but that is the issue I must decide.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 and certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions from a number of petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia. These petitioners point out a whole variety of reasons why they are opposed to the government's goods and services tax and are calling upon the Parliament of Canada to encourage the government to not proceed with the goods and services tax but in fact go back to the drawing board and attempt an effort at real tax reform.

VIA RAIL

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege today to present petitions on behalf of Canadian citizens who are very concerned about the government proceeding with the cutting of VIA Rail services in this country. The constituents in my riding of Northumberland are particularly concerned because there are 400 to 500 trips out of my riding every day, mainly into Toronto, and on January 16 they will be left with only one possible trip into Toronto of a duration of four hours, which is totally inadequate for any of their purposes for going to Toronto.

They petition and ask this government to put a moratorium on the proposed cuts to VIA Rail.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition on behalf of a number of producers from Saskatchewan. These are farmers from Melville, Waldron, Yorkton, Neudorf, Kamsack, the town of Grayson, Langenburg, Melville, Kenora, Preeceville, Grayson, Unity Norquay, Duff and Esterhazy. These farmers are concerned about the fact that this government has removed oats from the Canadian Wheat Board and they call upon this government to amend the Wheat Board Act to give oats and barley the same protection as wheat presently has under the Wheat Board so that this government cannot again unilaterally remove oats and further deteriorate the effectiveness of the Canadian Wheat Board.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty today to present another petition on the goods and services tax proposed by this government.

Mr. Speaker, I remind the House that hundreds and thousands of people, in my riding and elsewhere, have signed these petitions to tell this government in no uncertain terms that they object to this unusual, exceptional form of taxation, which will hit Canadians with a new 9 per cent tax on all goods and services. These people maintain that this tax will be hidden in the selling price; that it will apply to practically everything Canadians buy; that imposing this new tax across the board on goods and services will cause serious, unfair hardships for Canadians on low and moderate incomes; that this tax will be a costly burden for small businesses. All these Canadians strongly oppose this new goods and services tax, which they say is an unprecedented assault on Canadians' pocketbooks and will not only force them to pay higher taxes but will bring them higher inflation, interest rates and unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, for these reasons, these people humbly ask Parliament to reject this new tax on goods and services.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty on behalf of citizens of Saskatchewan, from my home community of Domremy and surrounding communities as well as other places in Saskatchewan to call upon the government to reject the current proposal for a goods and services tax, to reform the tax system so that it is an effective tax and does not penalize the ordinary Canadian.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition to this House from hundreds of people from southwestern Ontario who are calling on this government to rescind its action on cut-backs to VIA. They see it as an essential and necessary service, important to to this country and especially to southwestern Ontario.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present another petition on behalf of hundreds of people from southwestern Ontario asking this government to scuttle its proposed goods and services tax. As they describe it, it surely will be a gouging and screwing tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition duly complete and attested to as to content and form. The petition is another expression of alarm at this government's attempt to close rural Canada by closing down a good part of VIA Rail service. The petition comes from citizens in and around the London part of the province.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition signed by residents of Ontario who call upon Parliament to urge the Government of Canada not to cancel in whole or in part rail passenger services in Canada. They argue that the elimination of these routes will cost thousands of jobs in Canada. They argue that the rail mode is the safest and most environmentally friendly mode of travel and that rural communities which exclusively rely on rail passenger service will be denied adequate transportation facilities.

This petition is certified correct as to form and content in accordance with Standing Order 36.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition signed by Canadians who are objecting to the government's 9 per cent GST. The Council of Canadians are picketing the constituency office of the Minister of Finance and they, together with other Canadians, have signed this petition asking this Parliament to urge the government to scrap the GST.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I, too, stand here this morning to present petitions. The first petition is with regard to the goods and services tax and it is signed by members of the Ottawa and Nepean communities. Mostly it is signed by members beyond my community and riding: Manotick, Kars, North Gower, Richmond and Kemptville. These people are from the small towns and rural part of Canada. They are most concerned about the goods and services tax that is going to affect them very very seriously on just about everything that they will be buying.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to rescind the proposal to implement this goods and services tax in Canada.

VIA RAIL

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I have petitions signed by 95 petitioners from the city of London, Ontario. These petitioners are most concerned that the Government of Canada has decided to eliminate many of the VIA Rail routes. Rail service does not have disproportionate subsidies in comparison to highway and airport infrastructure subsidies. Yet this appears to be the reason that the Government of Canada wishes to cut back on rail service.

These petitioners also humbly pray and call upon Parliament not to cancel in full or in part the rail services in Canada.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of a number of citizens in Carleton—Gloucester and the province of Ontario.

The petition is against the proposed goods and services tax. Your petitioners are radically opposed to the proposed tax on consumption. They are willing to pay their fair share of income tax but, Mr. Speaker, I believe this tax will be harmful to consumption and Canadian productivity.

[English]

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is indeed my pleasure and privilege to present on behalf of petitioners from the Vernon and Armstrong area of British Columbia a petition in which they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will protect the life of the pre-born child without distinction as to the stage of development.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many constituents from the Pembroke, Chalk River and Petawawa area who oppose the 9 per cent goods and services tax. They look at the #31 increases in taxes that have already taken place under this government and they are saying that enough is enough.

Mr. Speaker, I also have another one here signed by many people from places like Eganville, Kormak, Palmer Rapids, Renfrew, Cobden and Golden Lake. You would have no trouble getting these petitions out, Mr. Speaker, because requests are coming into my office for them regularly every day. There is a great demand for them because the people of Canada on these petitions wish to express their feelings to the Government of Canada that they are absolutely opposed to this 9 per cent goods and services tax. After 31 tax increases to date by this government, they are saying to this government, enough is enough. These petitions are coming from small communities and large communities alike from all over Canada. I think it is something to which the government has to pay serious attention.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition from 100 of my constituents from Deep Bight, North West Brook, all of the southwest Durham, Sunnyside and Goobies. These constituents are very concerned. As Newfoundlanders they have the highest rate of income tax in the country, a provincial sales tax that is now 12 per cent and they are looking at another 9 per cent on top of that. They are looking at the dubious distinction of living in the only country in the world that will have a provincial and a federal sales tax, and are looking at all the other tax increases they have had to endure during the last four-plus years.

I think we can all agree that they have a problem. They do humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject this goods and services tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa—Centre): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 36, it is my privilege to table in the House a petition on behalf of Canadians who are vigorously opposed to the government's proposed goods and services tax, because your petitioners believe the proposed legislation will encourage inflation. It is a regressive measure, and people on middle and low incomes will be particularly affected.

[English]

VIA RAIL

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I also have another petition on behalf of Canadians who are also opposed to the cuts in VIA Rail as it pertains to jobs and the effect on the environment.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition with 11 pages of names from people who live in communities like Prince Albert, Shell Brook, Weyakwin, Denare Beach, Creighton and Flin Flon, Manitoba. These people are opposed to the goods and services tax. It is described as the grab and steal tax in that part of the country. They are particularly concerned with the effects on northern communities where the GST will have an even greater impact than it does on the rest of Canada. They are calling on Parliament to reject this tax and instead to introduce a fair tax system.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I would like to present this petition on behalf of 129 constituents of Kenora—Rainy River. They ask the government to consider in further debating the abortion bill that the sanctity of human life should commence at conception. They believe that faith in our future can only be guaranteed by our willingness to respect life from the pre-born to the aged.

I present this on behalf of the people of Kenora—Rainy River to enhance the debate on this very important issue.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to present pursuant to Standing Order 36 a petition from people in my riding who are opposed to the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which would allow the government to withdraw its contribution of some $2.9 billion to the unemployment insurance fund. Instead, they ask that the government look at the regional disparities in this country, put in place meaningful reforms and form a labour force development strategy instead of cutting programs which would not be of any benefit to the unemployed at all.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. It is signed by residents of London, Ontario concerning an issue that just will not go away. We have heard some petitions about it today, and that is the cuts to VIA Rail.

These petitioners fervently pray and ask Parliament to ensure that it not cancel, in whole or in part, rail passenger service in Canada. Of course, this petition reflects the views, not only of the petitioners in this petition, but many hundreds of thousands of Canadians.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the President of the Privy Council) moved that Bill C–34, an act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to introduce Bill C–34, legislation for the establishment of the Canadian Centre for Management Development.

This bill embodies those principles stated by the Prime Minister in the announcement of the centre on April 14, 1988, and reflects the government's desire to build upon the tradition of excellence in management that characterizes the Canadian public service.

The centre's mission will be to strengthen the management capacity of the public sector, particularly the senior levels, with a view to improving the quality of government and to enhancing service to the people of Canada.

In accomplishing its mission the centre will co–operate fully with Canada's best in the public, private and academic sectors with a view to complementing, not competing with existing institutions. The centre will strive to become a national centre of excellence in public sector management, teaching and research while reflecting the strong traditions of the Canadian public service.

The objects of the centre, as stated in Bill C–34, focus on these issues critical to ensuring our public sector managers have the capabilities required to manage effectively today and in the future. These objects are: encouraging pride and excellence in the management of the public service and fostering among public service managers a sense of the purposes, values and traditions of the public service; helping to ensure that managers in the public service have the analytical, creative, advisory, administrative and other managerial skills and knowledge necessary to develop policy, and respond to change and manage government programs and services efficiently and effectively.

Other objects are: attracting through its programs and studies persons of high calibre to the public service and supporting their growth and development as public service sector managers committed to the service of Canada; formulating and providing training, orientation and development programs for managers in the public sector and particularly for senior managers in the public service; studying and conducting research into the theory and practice of the public sector management; encouraging a greater awareness in Canada of issues related to public sector management and the role and functions of government; and involving a broad range of individuals and institutions in the centre's pursuit of excellence in the public administration.

The independence necessary for an institution of this kind is assured in the legislation by the establishment of the centre as a departmental corporation under the direction of a board of governors. The board will be comprised of outstanding representatives from inside and outside the public service with the Clerk of the Privy Council and the Secretary to the Cabinet as chairmen of the board.

It is envisioned that the Canadian Centre for Management Development will be a place where highly motivated senior managers will come together to create and exchange knowledge and to learn from each other from top–flight academics and from the most effective practitioners working in the public and private sectors. As befits a first–class educational institution, the management centre will have the authority to consult widely and develop programs and publish the results of its research and case development activity.

The centre's headquarters will be in the historic De La Salle Academy in downtown Ottawa with a second residential facility in Touraine, Quebec. As a truly national centre it will also offer its courses in existing federal facilities across Canada.

In the current environment of rapid technological change, globalization and fiscal restraint, it is critical that our public sector managers have the capabilities to adapt quickly to these changes while continuing to effectively manage public programs and services. The Centre for Management Development will be a key factor in ensuring that this takes place.

As many members are aware, under Order in Council and Treasury Board authorities granted in the summer of 1988, the management centre has been producing teaching cases, conducting research into important public service management issues and developing and delivering effective programming to numerous senior level groups including federal executives, Governor in Council appointees and Members of Parliament.

While the centre's activities to date have been impressive, there is a need in the longer term to enact legislation which will set out specific objectives against which the centre can be held accountable. There is a need as well for the management centre to be provided with the required intellectual independence as conferred by Bill C-34.

Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this opportunity to introduce legislation which will have an important impact not only on the public sector but also on the quality of service provided to the people of Canada.

• (1200)

The Canadian public service has a long and distinguished tradition of dedicated and highly qualified service. Bill C-34 reflects the government's continued recognition and support of this tradition. I am confident that all members of this House recognize the need for a skilled public service and trust, therefore, that they will be able to support this most important legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-34, an act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certains acts in consequence thereof. I am particularly pleased because the proposed legislation embodies a plan that has been on my mind ever since I first entered federal politics in 1972. First I want to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West for her kindness in letting me make the speech on second reading. Being the official public service critic, she would normally have made the speech today, but she felt that I would appreciate this opportunity, and I must say that I appreciate this kindness on her part.

Mr. Speaker, in 1974, two years after I was first elected as the federal member for Ottawa—Vanier, I demonstrated my interest in a national administration school. I felt there was a need, and I have been reading the speeches that I made over the years. I quote:

"— to provide the public service with a staff that on the basis of its experience, knowledge and skills is able to take on management duties after a democratic recruitment process, resulting in an harmonious marriage of knowledge and experience".

At the time, the plan was that this school or institution would also be open to university graduates who wanted a career in the public service. After many hours of reflection and after consulting the various groups concerned, including unions, private citizens and retired public servants, I made this project the subject of an initial motion under Private Members' Business, tabled in the House on May 6, 1977. On October 31 that same year, I had the privilege of introducing Bill C-304, an act to establish a National Administration School in the National Capital Region, as well as a new motion on the same subject.

In January 1981, I decided to table another motion which was debated in the House. The purpose of this motion was to consider the feasibility of evaluating public service employee training and development programs in order to prepare a comprehensive policy in this respect.

Finally, in 1987 a motion was put on the order paper in my name, followed the year after by a government bill, Bill C-46. The House will recall that Bill C-46 was considered by the House of Commons, passed and subsequently considered by the Senate on second reading. However because of the election in November 1988, the bill died on the order paper, and that is why the government is trying a second time to pass the legislation required to establish this centre.

Mr. Speaker, for me, the bill before the House today represents the culmination of many years of hard work to ensure the development and growth of a public service of which Canada can be proud. Others before me were also aware of the importance of establishing an institution that would provide for more effective management within the federal public service.

A number of commissions have examined this question. The Gordon Commission was asked to examine the administrative structure responsible for personnel; in 1954, the Heeney Commission was appointed to examine relations between the Public Service Commission and Treasury Board. In 1962, the Glassco Commission said it had to conclude that training and development had not, in general, received anything like appropriate attention in the public service.

During the past decade, Mr. Speaker, we had the Lambert report, the Royal Commission of Inquiry on Financial Management and Accountability, and the d'Avignon Commission, a committee that examined the merit principle and its application and dealt with accountability, effectiveness and efficiency in the federal public service.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C–34, an Act to establish the Canadian Centre for Management Development and to amend certain acts in consequence thereof, is merely a logical step, in line with previous attempts to improve the federal public service. The pressures on public servants are reflected in budget cut–backs, contracting out and reductions in government personnel, all of which have made it essential to improve management training and development and support management research and case studies.

Like the private sector, the public sector is going through rapid technological change to which it must learn to adjust.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the centre is to help federal public service managers and executives to acquire the skills they need to manage public programs effectively. Furthermore, it will expand their practical management skills and help them find solutions to current problems. We must help them develop motivation, principles, respect for tradition and a sense of responsibility. We must develop excellence by making Canadians aware of the problems of public administration and persuade various groups, including the private sector, to help improve management in the public sector.

We agree wholeheartedly with the objects of the centre which are to encourage pride and excellence in the management of the public service and to foster among public service managers a sense of the purposes, values and traditions of the public service. Mr. Speaker, these definitions are contained in Section 4 of the bill, and I would urge Hon. Members to read this section, which lists the objects of the centre. Mr. Speaker, I also agree with the centre's object to encourage managers to hone their skills and update their techniques.

I think it would be appropriate to raise some of the points discussed in the course of previous debates, and since this is the second time the House will examine the principle of the bill, I think it would be interesting for hon. members, since we do not often have a chance to read comments and suggestions made by the senators, who, as I said earlier, had an opportunity to consider Bill C–48— This means we will have an opportunity to benefit from the expertise of the other place, as we say here, in its consideration of a bill that is somewhat similar to Bill C–34.

I may add that a number of questions will be raised in committee about the new administrative structure of the centre. Mr. Speaker, there has been a rather important change, and I was advised of this change by the Deputy Prime Minister in a letter dated July 19. In the third paragraph of his letter, the Minister says the bill retains the characteristics of the previous Bill C–148 but gives the centre the status of a public institution instead of a department. Hon. members will recall that Bill C–34 did the opposite. The minister went on to say that as a public institution, the centre will be administered by a board of directors consisting of directors of private corporations, senior members of the Canadian academic community and general administrators of federal departments.

Mr. Speaker, in committee we will ask about these changes. If they were made to guarantee the institution's independence in managing the intellectual aspects of its business, I think we would like to have this confirmed by the Deputy Prime Minister when the bill is examined in committee. Otherwise, I would like to know why the structure was changed.

Mr. Speaker, regarding accountability to Parliament, the bill contains a proposal that says that within four months after the end of each fiscal year, the centre shall submit a report to the minister responsible and that the report shall be tabled in the House. In committee I will ask about the centre's accountability in this respect. Will

Hon. Members have a chance in committee to examine the centre's work and its administration?

Mr. Speaker, we are also concerned about the mechanisms for consultation and involvement of Canadian universities in programs and courses. As you know, for many years here in the National Capital Region and elsewhere, the Public Service of Canada has negotiated course programs with certain universities. I am thinking of specific programs at the University of Ottawa in my riding and at Carleton University in Ottawa. I think that these programs benefited public servants, and perhaps the implication for all these previous programs of co-operation between Canadian universities and federal officials should be studied in committee.

There is the whole issue of equal access to the Centre's programs for all Canadians, with special emphasis on women, native people and the handicapped to ensure that they have an equal opportunity to take these courses and obtain scholarships to pursue their education.

My friend and colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall), has several questions which she will raise at the appropriate time. Mr. Speaker, we are taking this opportunity on second reading to strengthen the bill because we are convinced that the time is ripe and that the Canadian Centre for Management Development will meet Canadians' expectations by strengthening the federal government's managerial abilities. Definitely, better management will give us better performance and all Canadians will benefit from it.

[English]

As far back as 1974, I first proposed in a speech the establishment of a national administrative school for public servants. The Public Service of Canada has undergone tremendous change since then, and I would like to cite a few figures for the record to make the point I am about to state.

From 1965 to 1975 the number of employees in the Public Service of Canada had gone from 140,000 to 273,000, and programs had been adopted by Parliament, it is true. It is also true, Mr. Speaker, that we had gone through a social and health revolution in this country of some sort. Pensions were improved, the Canada Pension Plan came in, a whole lot of administrative challenges were to be met and the Public Service of Canada increased accordingly.

The Parliament of Canada, indeed this House, had endorsed these programs and expected an efficient public service to put into place these programs which the people of Canada wanted. Nevertheless, the fast growth of the public service combined with important organizational changes at management and staffing levels was followed by the inevitable restraint program of the late 1970s.

Staff reductions and cut-backs had a serious effect on careers in the public service. It also taxed the capacity of adaptation of public servants and it certainly raised justifiable fears. Management theories and practices had to change quickly to adjust to those new circumstances.

History has a tendency to repeat itself. Whereas we had appreciable growth in 1965 to 1975, I looked at the figures for the 1975 to 1985 period and found some growth. In 1975, there were 222,325 public servants, and in 1985 there were 223,173. That is little growth, an increase of less than 848.

I must tell the House that there were also some big changes. Canada Post came into being in 1981. That in itself took 60,000 jobs from the public service. These figures must be read in context. In 1981, when the Crown corporation of Canada Post was created, these public servants were taken out of the global figures of the public service. Therefore, there must be some adjustments made in interpreting these figures.

In 1985, we all know that the present Conservative government announced a 15,000 cut-back in the Public Service of Canada. Figures available today indicate that there were 224,026 public servants in 1984. Today, there are 214,253 public servants as of June, 1989, for a decrease of 9,773.

The effect of staff reductions, staff freezes, privatization, contracting out, a whole lot of new ways of administering the public affairs of this country, create difficult problems for career public servants, for those on whom this government, this Parliament, rely to do many things in terms of delivering the programs which we adopt.

There is a phenomenon called plateauing. I want to address that because I think it is pertinent to these discussions. In this new centre, studies must be undertaken to address the difficult problems faced by public servants, the morale problems, the plateauing problem and others which may come to affect directly the efficiency of our public service.

The plateauing of careers has a serious impact on public servants who suffer tremendously from it. In a book entitled The Plateauing Trap which Judith Batwick published in 1986, she explains the phenomenon. As I understand it, there are two types of plateauing.

There is a structural plateauing. This refers to those whose careers are at a standstill because no further promotion is possible because of staff compressions or cut-backs. These people are cut off from promotions through no fault of their own. They are structurally unable to pursue promotions and greater careers.

The other type of plateauing is what is called the content plateauing. This refers to people who have been possibly long in the job who are looking for challenges. Most of them are bored because the work that they are doing offers no new challenge and they cannot find any stimuli in their professional careers.

This certainly addresses what we call professionals in the public service, those who have either a degree or who do specific work in a field such as medicine, veterinary science, engineering or research and development in terms of chemistry and physics. They find themselves doing monotonous jobs and experiencing no stimuli, no chance of doing something a little more demanding and challenging because there have been some compressions. The institution itself is unable to cope with the morale problems that these people experience.

That is why the centre will address not only the training and development of the public service but will address also some of the difficult problems public servants face when Parliaments and governments reduce or compress the public service and try to get from fewer people more efficiency and more effective programs for the same price.

In creating this new centre, I understand the idea is to integrate those programs presently offered in Touraine, Quebec, with programs at a new campus to be set up at De la Salle Academy on Sussex Drive in my riding. In passing, I must say that I am very proud that it is to be in my riding of Ottawa—Vanier, in the school that I attended when I was a kid, namely, De la Salle Academy. The intention is to put a campus there which will dispense services not only to the National Capital Region, but to western Canada and to Atlantic Canada. There will be programs available to people residing in those areas, responding to the regional concerns that people have in training and development.

There will be an orientation program for all those appointed to managerial positions in the public service which will be available to them within six months of their appointment. These management skills will be centred around crisis management,

This country of ours, this federation, has particular problems in administration. Federal-provincial relations, dealing with vested interest groups, small and medium sized business management techniques are all things which we must address.

Contrary to some remarks made in the other place, I do not think we should be competing with universities. I think we must rather expand the management training programs of the public service toward problem solving in the management of the federal Public Service of Canada.

We might see this through small seminars, symposia directed specifically to problems of our federation. I am thinking mostly of the federal-provincial problems arising within a decentralized state like ours.

The regional problems must be addressed and how do we address these problems? By co-ordinating with such established authorities as possibly the Conference Board of Canada and others which could give us advice and be important to the development of good managerial programs.

Language issues and how to improve and how to manage them within established government policies is something particular to the federal government. This is something which this House endorses. This is something on which last year, by adopting a new law, we asked public servants to show expertise, to show understanding, and tell us how to better administer this program, a will of this Parliament, but a job that must be done within the Public Service of Canada. How do we address it?

The private sector does not have that same challenge in dealing with regional requirements and official languages. The country has two official languages. Therefore, we must address those problems on a managerial basis.

As I said before, the Centre for Management Studies will also do research in new management techniques in the public sector, to deal with the morale of our troops in the public service, if I might use that word, and the productivity and the efficiency of the public servants and their careers. They are entitled to want to make a career of serving Canada.

God knows we have had an efficient and very effective public service. We are very proud when we speak about the quality of public servants in Canada. From my experience, when I have spoken to foreigners who have come here to look at how we manage this country, they are always very impressed with the quality of public service that we have established.

There is also a need to give opportunities to senior managers and, I would say, those who want to bring forth new ideas and encourage diversity and initiatives that are stimulating to others. There will be a publishing centre in this new Canadian Centre for Management Studies. It will be an experience for public servants who will find themselves encouraged to present papers on their experience allowing, therefore, public service managers to get critical recognition in the field of public administration, not only by their peers, but maybe and more important, by the private sector which sometimes does not understand the challenges and difficulties faced by public administrators.

It is with pride and, I admit, with some sense of accomplishment that I thank the government for picking up on this idea, which has been with us for some time, to give the public servants of Canada access to a centre of excellence where, I would hope, we will develop these new techniques and new methods of public administration.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on access to the Canadian Centre for Management Development, access for all Canadians, not an elite club for friends of the system but a real Canadian management centre where representatives of all groups and regions of this country will be found, which will include women, native people and the physically disabled so they can benefit from the experience.

Mr. Speaker, this Canadian Centre for Management Development must not become a centre for the Establishment. This country's Constitution states that English and French are the two official languages of Canada. Equal opportunity for training grants will have to be ensured so that all can have access to this high-quality training.

The centre will have to present programs of study, courses and symposiums in both official languages. I am hopeful, Mr. Speaker, that the centre will take this duty seriously.

Mr. Speaker, I do not need to go over the proportional representation of various groups within the Public Service. We all know the record. We know that women are under-represented. We know that we have a long way to go to represent native people and the disabled fairly. We know that employment equity is a challenge for us and, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that we will come back to it in committee when we give the bill clause-by-clause consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I can only agree with the setting up of a Canadian Centre for Management Development. I think that it is a good idea, the time is right, as I was saying, and I call on my colleagues in the House to support this bill, as I will.

• (1230)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-34 which passed in almost exactly the same form in August 1988 as Bill C-148. We support the basic principles of the bill, but we have a few concerns about the process which we will be questioning when the bill comes before the legislative committee.

It is basically a sound idea, and we should give the member for Ottawa—Vanier a considerable amount of credit for the thinking behind this because he presented his original bill in 1977 which I believe suggested this kind of an institution.

The parliamentary secretary misled the public somewhat in his presentation of the bill because he indicated or seemed to indicate that this was a marginal start for an institution that is already a full-blown institution and has been in place for a considerable time already. It has within the PMO five people responsible to Mr. Manion plus approximately another 100 people who operate as part of the Crown corporation that is to be established as the Centre for Management Development. As an educator I recognize the need for training and the need for research, so we will support this particular approach.

It is very interesting, as was pointed out by the member for Ottawa—Vanier, that the history of the need for such an institution as this has been pointed to for many years. In 1962 the Glassco commission recommended a very specific statement: "Let managers manage". It suggested that there was a need to move away from the flat system that had developed in the federal civil service at that time.

In 1975 the then Auditor General warned in his report that parliamentarians had lost financial control of government expenditures. I can list a number of other items which could be registered as recognition of the need for management studies and a Centre for Management Development: the Lambert commission of 1979, the establishment of the PMS system under the government of the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the 1980 value for money auditing which was a direct result of the need to be accountable for the kind of management that was going on.

In 1983 the Auditor General listed a number of constraints in the structure of government which were against good management in government and pointed out that there was a need for better recognition and better movement of managers through the system.

The Nielsen task force on government cut-backs makes this particular approach a bit suspect because we know that the aim of that task force was to a great extent the reduction of the civil service. That particular task force report suggested that some kind of a management structure be put into place.

Things have changed over the years. The complexity of government has increased and the need for understanding, study and research has increased along with that complexity.

It is kind of interesting to recognize that this particular management centre, as it is called, is being established pretty much against the basic philosophy of the Conservative Party because it has said on a number of occasions, and even stated categorically on occasion, that it does not believe in the setting up of Crown corporations to do these kinds of things that the private sector should have the opportunity to do.

The U.S. model has been to allow the private sector to do it. In the United States republic managed education is conducted almost entirely by the private sector. The United States has set up a number of elaborate and up to date institutions, of which the most widely known and probably world recognized is Harvard's Kennedy School of Government. Other countries have also over a period established the same kind of schools, mostly related to the governments themselves, that is under government control, as this particular bill suggests we are to do in Canada.

We have in Canada a large number of universities which have in place schools with public management programs that could contribute a considerable amount. They could in many cases provide the kind of training research outlined as an objective in this particular bill.

One of the questions which the committee should look into is why we are setting up extensive programs in certain areas when we could—and the bill gives the centre this alternative—contract a considerable amount of the program from universities which already have programs in place, thereby increasing the quality of those programs and also increasing the breadth of them.

There is no suggestion in the bill of the cost of this institution. As I pointed out, there are already 100 or so members listed under the Canadian Centre for Management Development. The principle has been in place since about June 1988. A considerable number of courses are in place that have been quite well and widely accepted. In fact they have received a certain amount of raves as far as their quality.

The bill does not state the direction which this centre will take or the size to which it will grow. I think it is something which the committee looking at it should delve into considerably more.

It would be very interesting to know what the cost of this institute has been to date because it grew from April 1988 when it was first announced to a fairly full-blown institution within the government right now, without, I point out, legislative authority to do so.

I guess that is probably an indication of the direction this government has taken in dealing with a number of its development projects. It proceeded without the legislative authority to do so and established the organization the same way as it did a couple of the departments which were set up before the government had the legislative authority to proceed.

We need to know—and these are the kinds of things which we should be asking within the committee—what the costs have been to date, how far the plans have been developed, and exactly what the plans are. Will those plans be available to the committee for study, since we have had a fairly large group in place working on it? Does Section 16 mean it can be done entirely by contract? Can all of the programs be developed by contract? Will that be a major portion of the expenditures?

Mr. Jim Armstrong, vice-principal of the Centre for Management Development, states in an article in Dialogue that we are building an institution and that it has in place a board of directors which I suppose will be authorized by this bill when it is passed. The board of directors includes leaders from universities, business and public service. It would be interesting to know how the board of directors is being paid since there is no legislative authority to do so as yet.

Although we will support this in principle, we want to look very closely at it. We do have a number of concerns, some of which I would like to go over at this time.

One of our concerns is that since we have not had the opportunity of having Mr. Manion or Mr. Armstrong or any of the officers before us, there seems to be no opportunity for the non-management level of the public service to make a contribution or have input into what happens with and what becomes part of this institution.

There seems to be a very great opportunity for elitism to develop if this kind of institution is made an integral part of getting into the service and of promotion within the service. Those things should be looked at and discussed as well. There is no doubt that there is a possibility that it will lead to differing treatment between management and the rank and file in the civil service.

I think that as parliamentarians we should look very closely at the possibility of input from public service employees and the professional institute; groups that should have specific and definite interests in the kind of institution which is used and in the process of promotion, although I know this is not necessarily the basic reason for the institute to be in place.

We must also have some concern about the curriculum, the kind of programs that are developed, because of the possibility of it being used as an elitism approach but also because of the possibility of proselytizing particular points of view. I think there is a danger in any school or institution of it being used to proselytize a particular point of view and make it the reason for the operation of that particular institution. I would hope that that is something we do not have to worry about, but it does have to be a concern.

Mind control by research institutions is not unknown in government and is used in parts of the world with which we would not want to be compared in any way.

There has been very little public recognition of the need for this institution, and we consequently know very little about public acceptance of this institution. Perhaps it would be worth while to have before the committee not only members of the public service but also members of the general public, of universities, academics, as well as people who might want to get into the public service.

Another concern I have is that when the Deputy Prime Minister made the announcement shortly after the Prime Minister made his announcement in April 1988, he said that he made the key role of this institution a matter of getting rid of bureaucracy. Mr. Jack Manion, when he was interviewed and discussed the matter, listed a number of concepts which he said we are dealing with and with which we want the manager level of the civil service to be able to deal.

It is very interesting to look at that list of concepts. They are decentralization, deregulation, deburdening and debureaucratization. The concern here is that all these are part of a right wing agenda to make the government less effective in the economy of the country and in the control and regulation of that economy.

We in Canada have used Crown corporations, which surprisingly this is, and regulation to a great extent to allow our economy to operate successfully in our particular economic climate. If we are putting in place a government institution which is dealing with this part of government law and structure, we are putting the concepts of a political decision into the process of management rather than allowing the managers to be administrators of organizations already in place that have been accepted by the people.

That is why, although as an educator I have a great deal of respect for the quality of public institutions and the quality of publicly regulated institutions, I am concerned that it might be possible to direct an institution such as this one in such a way that it would be detrimental to the development of the public service itself and to the direction that the country would go.

As much as I would be unlikely to say so, there is a certain amount of comfort in the idea that there is going to be a board of directors which will include academics as well as the private sector.

I have only a couple more remarks to make, Mr. Speaker. I have a continuing concern about a necessity that inputs into the total structure which determines the kind of research that is going to be carried out so that the direction this institution is going to go will not be entirely in the hands of the government of the day. As the member for Ottawa—Vanier suggested, by remaining a Crown corporation within the government we need to look at the accountability of this institution to this Parliament when we have the bill before us at committee.

To a great extent the discussion that has taken place from April 1988 until now has been internal discussion within the civil service, not even within this Parliament. There is a great need to expand this discussion to the public generally and to use it to develop a kind of institution that becomes open to the public much more than has happened in the year or so in which it has been in place.

Our party will support in principle the development of this institution. We have some concerns at which we will want to look while we are in committee.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise on this bill and to follow my colleague, the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier, who has been working on this subject for a long time. I also want to mention that I am following another colleague in this House who for nearly two decades represented Ottawa West and public service employees in this region, sometimes in office, sometimes out of office—the hon. Lloyd Francis, former Speaker of the House of Commons.

As critic for public service employment on this side of the House I examined the bill that provides for the legal mandate and the framework for the Canadian Centre for Management Development on the basis of my view of the role and importance of the Public Service in Canada in the building of the nation.

That is not usually the way people think of public bureaucracies. They are not generally regarded as nation builders. Next to politicians they are among the most maligned of species. They are the easy target of every taxpayer who thinks taxes are too high, the brunt of every politician who comes to Ottawa to clean up government. Many consider them malingerers, leeches on the public purse just putting in minimal hours with minimum effort until they can collect a fat pension.

These are not the public service employees I have known all my life—friends, neighbours and family who have worked for the people of Canada with pride, with commitment to the future of their country and with dedication to the concept of service to the public.

This is a young country, barely 122 years old. It is still a vast territory, largely unpopulated, with 80 per cent of its people concentrated in a narrow band along the border with the United States, a thin ribbon between Windsor and Quebec City so insignificant as hardly to be noticeable on the map. The country is still struggling with its identity, its sense of nationhood, and its place in the world.

It is a nation that has been created against all odds of climate and geography by a vision of piecing together and binding in common purpose a diversity of communities and a diversity of people.

Canada was and is not a natural nation but very much a creation of public policy. Its continued development as a nation has depended on a delicate and changing balance between the roles of the public and private sector and an understanding that has pervaded our 122 years of the role of government, the role of public policy, in building the nation. That is one of the reasons this country developed a public service that has been recognized internationally for its excellence, its professionalism, and its impartiality.

There is nothing we do in the House or that the thousands of members who have preceded us in this House have done to set the direction for the future of society. None of that could have been accomplished without the support and commitment of the millions who have formed throughout those generations the Public Service of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that I have to intervene. The hon. member will have 14 minutes left in her speech plus 10 minutes for questions and comments when the debate resumes after 3 p.m.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

The House took recess at 1 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADERSHIP

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I stand today to offer my party's as well as my personal congratulations to the member for Yukon, the new leader-elect of the federal New Democratic Party.

This weekend every Canadian had reason to smile. For the first time in Canada's history a federal political party elected a woman as its leader. What this says about Canada is that the mores of the past and the walls of gender disparity are being chipped away.

I might also add that the hon. member is in very good company. All her opponents put up great fights, and all of them deserve hearty congratulations.

The hon. member is now receiving mountains of advice from the pundits and the gurus of the media and elsewhere. My hope is that in the midst of all this she manages to take a well-deserved break to prepare for the battles to come. Congratulations!

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Alberta Medical Association has added its name to the list of those calling for a moratorium on the Alberta-Pacific pulp mill project in northern Alberta.

The AMA, which speaks for 4,000 physicians, is concerned about the effect of pollution from the project on the health of the area's residents. A spokesperson for the AMA stated that not enough is known about the effects of the organochlorines which will be discharged as industry effluent into the Athabasca River.

The AMA is criticizing the Alberta government for acting irresponsibly, favouring economic growth and development at the expense of the environment and, ultimately, the health of Albertans.

The federal Department of Indian and Northern Affairs has stated that it supports a moratorium on development of these mills as demanded by the native bands who live in the area.

I ask the Minister of the Environment to immediately impose a moratorium on the Alberta-Pacific project until an assurance is given by the company that it will comply with the new federal regulations governing effluent from these pulp mills.

THE WORLD DOWNHILL SKI CUP

Mr. Charles deBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, over the past few days the riding of Montmorency—Orléans has been the site of a major international downhill ski competition for the championship in which the best skiers of the world took part, including a half dozen Canadians.

Rushing down the Montmorency slope, the White Circus champions were able to appreciate the quality of Mont Sainte-Anne Park facilities. The outstanding tourism promotion by management was highlighted last Friday during the great annual reception of Quebec's tourist industry.

I congratulate the organizers of this competition, especially Messrs. Raymond Dupont and Pierre Bourgeault of Sports internationaux du Québec as well as Mont Sainte-Anne Park Director Claude Beaudoin for the tremendous work they have done with the financial support of several groups, including our government.

In conclusion, I invite Canadian skiers to discover the 50 downhill ski slopes and the 214 kilometres of cross-country ski trails which make Mont Sainte-Anne the most beautiful ski centre in Canada.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian economy is alive and well. That was the message in a report released by the Organization for Economic Development and Co-operation.

In its review of the Canadian economy the European-based think tank praised our government for its initiatives on the Canada-U.S. trade deal, monetary restraint and the goods and services tax.

The report goes on to state that Canada's recent growth has been impressive in terms of creating growth and employment. The Canadian economy has been second only to Japan in terms of growth over the past 18 months and has created more jobs over the past two years than any of the other 24 OECD countries.

Though not always politically popular, the world agrees that this government is taking the tough measures necessary to ensure Canada's future economic well-being. This government should be commended for its leadership in attempting to bring continued prosperity to this country.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, despite its claim of being for sustainable development and a clean environment, the Government of Alberta is promoting the overcutting of forests and polluting of rivers. Despite the rhetoric here in Ottawa about sustainable development, Canada's environment minister is silent about the proposed devastation of Alberta's heritage.

It is up to a committed scientist, Dr. Jack Vallentyne, Canadian Chairman of the International Joint Commission's Great Lakes Science Advisory Board, to say that not only should the proposed mill on the Athabasca River be scrapped but a moratorium be imposed on the construction of bleached-kraft pulp mills until more is known about the effects of toxic chemicals found in mill waste water.

If Canada's environment minister wants to live up to his own words, he should urge the Alberta government to scrap the proposed $1.3 billion pulp mill on the Athabasca River. It is an abuse of precious natural resources, and it is not sustainable development.

FISCAL COMPENSATION GRANTED TO ISOLATED AND NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I just came back from northern Quebec where I held meetings with the economic spokesmen for the municipalities of Matagami, Joutel and Lebel-sur-Quévillon to talk about the Report of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas. Task Force Chairman René Brunelle attended every meeting. The residents of these communities were not consulted before the report was handed to the Minister of Finance last October 27. Should the Canadian government endorse the recommendations of this report which has raised great concerns in these communities, the situation can only get worse.

Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Matagami, Joutel, Lebel-sur-Quévillon, Chapais and Chibougamau are in the best position in Québec to define the tax benefits granted for northern isolation. Are the Government of Canada and the Minister of Finance aware of the fact that Canada's economy needs these courageous and permanent northern residents?

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADERSHIP

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. member for Yukon on her election as leader at the New Democratic Party leadership convention held in Winnipeg this past weekend.

This election is of particular note both to the New Democratic Party and to all Canadians as the hon. member is the first woman in history to become the leader of a Canadian national political party.

It is with regret that we must say goodbye to the hon. member for Oshawa as Leader of the NDP, but I am pleased to welcome the hon. member for Yukon in her new capacity as party leader. So, Mr. Speaker, I pay tribute to both the past and the present Leaders of the New Democratic Party and thank them for their personal contributions to the democratic process.

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, talks between the PSAC and Treasury Board broke down again last Saturday. This means that over 2,000 Coast Guard workers are still on strike. Included in this group are federal ships crews who provide fisheries patrols for the lobster industry and others who provide ice-breaking services to ports in Atlantic Canada.

The Port of Summerside enjoys the busiest part of its season in the fall and winter months because of potato shipments after the fall harvest. The Chamber of Commerce is quite concerned that a prolonged strike would allow a harbour freeze-up which could result in foreign market loss as well as a further decrease in economic activity. This, in addition to the problems that have already occurred, is something that Summerside can ill afford.

The most contentious issue in this strike is the wage disparity between workers on the east coast and workers on the west coast. It is a flagrant case of discrimination when our east coast workers earn up to $2,500 less for doing the same job.

The government should go back to the bargaining table and negotiate a fair collective agreement to resolve this wage disparity problem, bring this strike to an end, and keep our ports open. It should not be sitting back waiting until it becomes a real crisis situation and then using this as an excuse for introducing back-to-work legislation.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as residents in northern Alberta communities are well aware, the task force on northern benefits has released a report recommending the boundary for the northern tax benefit be changed from the 55th parallel to the 57th parallel and 30 degrees.

The proposed change will exclude thousands of Canadians who live in northern and remote areas from a northern tax benefit. This recommendation will remove approximately $16 million from the northern Alberta economy. The boundary change will pit one community benefiting from the tax break against another community barred from it.

I have proposed an alternative to the task force recommendations. I suggest a scaled-down benefit of one-half for communities north of the 55th parallel and south of the 57th and 30 degrees. I urge the Minister of Finance to accept this proposal.

DANGEROUS GOODS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, Canadian people were surprised to find out last Friday that the Balmet Corporation in Saint-Jean-sur-Richelieu had shipped hazardous waste from Montreal harbour to Brazil and that a second shipment is expected to leave for France in the next few days. We know that these dangerous goods have caused poisoning in about 20 children as well as contamination of many lands and homes in the Saint-Jean region. As in the case of the PCB shipments which sailed around the world last summer, this government would seem unable to keep hazardous waste produced in Canada from becoming a threat to the environment.

• (1410)

[English]

This government keeps promising to make the environment a priority but when it comes to taking real action to ensure a clean environment, nothing is done. Immediate action should be taken to stop the second shipment of Balmet Corporation expected to leave for France in the next few days. We need concrete action now.

NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, since the days of Edward Cornwallis in 1749 Nova Scotia has had many distinguished Lieutenant-Governors.

It has never been an uncommon practice for friends of the government of the day to be appointed to the prestigious vice-regal office. However, as party politics developed during the 19th century, so also did the practice that those who left the partisan wars to represent the Crown at Government House took on with the office a posture and practice of non-partisanship. So the tradition has remained, and rightly so.

Thus the decision recently announced by former Lieutenant Governor Alan Abraham to return to partisan politics as Liberal Party organizer for Halifax is regrettable. It is a decision frowned upon, I am sure, by members on all sides of this House. I urge Mr. Abraham who served with such distinction in the office not to demean the office but to reconsider his decision.

I also call upon the leaders of the Liberal Party of Canada and of Nova Scotia to join me in this request.

ETHIOPIA

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 Canada and the world witnessed the most devastating of famines ever in Ethiopia. Over a million people perished during that particular famine.

Ethiopia is now facing another severe drought and, again, more than one million people are at risk, particularly in the northern areas of Tigray and Eritrea where the government has expelled relief workers as a result of armed conflict with opposition forces.

Canada must work at ensuring that emergency food aid reaches these people. We ask that the Canadian government use our representative at the UN to influence other governments, including those of the Soviet Union and Israel, to pressure the Ethiopian government to set up safe transportation corridors to facilitate the transport of emergency aid.

We would also like to see our own diplomatic resources in Ethiopia work out an agreement between the government and opposition forces to form these corridors of tranquillity for international relief organizations.

SENATE REFORM

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago at the federal-provincial First Ministers' Conference I was surprised to hear the Prime Minister and the premiers discussing reform of the Senate. In his new-found forum with the premiers, the Prime Minister has found himself a new title as chairman of the board. In this extra-parliamentary forum only one of the 11 parties is elected to represent the federal interest. So I was shocked to hear the 10 non-federal premiers speaking of undertaking to reform the Senate.

The Senate is a federal institution and not a provincial one. Our premiers are elected to look after provincial institutions and not federal. They have absolutely no business or mandate pre-setting an agenda for reform of our Parliament. If a premier wants to reform a senate, let him create his own in his own province.

This Parliament must be made aware of the dangers in letting provincial politicians pre-set the agenda and attitudes for federal reforms.

In the meantime, I call upon the Prime Minister to place Senate reform on the agenda of this Parliament, this House and the other place, and abandon his predisposition for carrying out reforms in his private club of 11 and stealing from the jurisdiction of this Parliament and from members on both sides of the House.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, one week from today the National Agri-food Policy Conference begins in Ottawa. This conference will provide the first public forum for all partners in Canada's food production and marketing areas to discuss policies and programs.

Agriculture's share of the domestic product is between 2.5 per cent and 3 per cent and employs 4 per cent of the labour force. That proportion rises almost 15 per cent when related machinery, processing, food retailing and service industries are included.

The perception that large scale agri-business is taking over family farms is not a reality according to Statistics Canada figures. Most farm businesses are family oriented. Less than 1 per cent of farms are operated by non-family corporations.

Working closely with provincial agriculture ministers, farm organizations, commodity and consumer groups is an essential part of developing a comprehensive national framework for agri-food policies. This conference is an opportunity for each facet of agriculture to have input into the decisions affecting their industry as we meet the changing markets and challenging opportunities of the 1990s.

JUSTICE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to draw to the attention of the House, and in particular to the Minister of Justice, a very serious injustice being done to a young native student who is a law student here at the University of Ottawa.

Mr. Rock Matte had applied for funding under the Department of Justice's Native Program, but was turned down because he did not have a favourable recommendation from the Law Preparation Course for native students in Saskatoon. The problem is that that course is offered in English and Mr. Matte speaks French.

Mr. Matte is saying now: "I am praying a lot and eating little". The minister's representative in the Department of Justice said: "It is unfortunate that the turn of events were just not in Rock's favour. He is in a rough and tough spot". Indeed, he is.

I appeal to the minister to reconsider this matter and to recognize that the Canadian Human Rights Commission has pointed out that our treatment of natives is a national scandal and that a young native person in Canada today has a better chance of going to prison than of going to university.

I call upon the Minister of Justice to look into this matter seriously and to provide the funding that this young native law student so badly needs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for someone representing the government, the acting prime minister of Canada, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister.

In the last few days thousands of Canadians have lost their jobs to the United States. How does the acting prime minister explain that Gerber Baby Foods is closing its Canadian operation, and that from now on all Gerber baby foods for Canadian families will be produced in Michigan? How does he explain that Burlington Carpets has just closed its entire Canadian operation, and from now on all Burlington carpets for Canadian homes will be produced in North Carolina? How does he explain that the Whirlpool Corporation has closed its Canadian operations, and from now on all Whirlpool appliances for Canadian homes and apartments will be produced in Ohio? How does he explain that in the last week some of the largest and best known American multinationals no longer have a single employee in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that all of us in this House are in agreement that it is unfortunate these people are losing their jobs at a time like this.

We have to realize that we have a dynamic economy. There are jobs that are being created every day and there are jobs that are being lost every day. It is important for us to realize that, first, the bottom line is that there have been a considerable number of new jobs created over the course of the past five years and that will continue on into the future.

Second, my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, has a number of programs in place to assist those people in order to help them find new opportunities, new jobs to continue on from where they are now, to support the type of programs that these companies have put in place to assist these people to move from one job to the next.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I could suggest to the Minister of Finance what the dynamics are. They are the dynamics we predicted in the last federal election. When there is rationalization of North American business, what is going to be done and is being done now is at the expense of Canadian workers in favour of American plants. That is what has happened.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Pittsburgh Paints and Glass is putting Canadians out of work.

The Ford Company is closing its V-8 engine manufacturing plant, from now on all V-8 engines will be produced in Michigan.

General Electric is closing its specialized equipment plant in Montreal, in the Saint-Denis riding, so that Canadians will have to buy their supplies in the United States.

General Motors is transferring its van production facilities from Canada to the United States.

Can the Minister of Finance tell us why, every time choices have to be made between saving American and Canadian jobs, multinational firms protect American workers? And now Ford, General Electric, Burlington Carpets, General Motors, Whirlpool and Gerber Baby Foods have decided in favour of the United States at the expense of Canadian workers.

• (1420)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as his former finance critic has said: "Every sparrow that falls from a tree will be blamed on the free trade agreement".

He mentioned the Ford engine plant. Let me quote from The Financial Post of December 1 which states: "The plant is old, CAW President Bob White said, and we were able to work together to give it a longer life than we had expected". Bob White did not blame it on the free trade agreement, and he feels about the free trade agreement the same as the Leader of the Opposition does.

The Leader of the Opposition talked about General Motors. On the same day that General Motors mentioned that in a couple of years "perhaps" its Scarborough plant will no longer be producing vans, Freightliner, a truck manufacturer, said it was starting up a Greenfield plant in southern Ontario. It has an existing facility in North Carolina. Contrary to the predictions of the opposition, it is not going to expand that plant. It is opening up a Greenfield plant in southern Ontario employing some 1,200 new people.

The economy is in a dynamic phase. New investments are coming in. Yes, there are mergers occurring and other things happening. That is what happens in a dynamic economy. It is because we have adapted to a dynamic economy that we have had the tremendous economic performance for which the OECD praised Canada just yesterday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has yielded to the Minister of Industry. I want to tell him what the dynamics are. The fact is that when choices are made that have to be made between saving Canadian and American jobs multinational firms sacrifice Canadian jobs every time because they know that for the first time in history they are dealing with a government that has not got the guts to stand up to the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Industry: Where is that adjustment program to help the thousands of Canadians who have lost their jobs because of the trade deal? Where is that adjustment program to help the thousands of Canadian workers who have lost their employment because this government has sold out to the United States? Where is that massive program of adjustment and retraining that the Prime Minister promised the day after he signed the trade deal, that adjustment program in favour of Canadian workers who would lose their jobs because of the trade deal? Where is that adjustment program?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition should again be a little more careful with the facts. He neglected to acknowledge, for example, that General Motors Diesel is phasing out its Illinois plant and moving it to London, Ontario.

He neglected to mention that because of the drop off in car sales Chrysler is laying off 4,000 employees in the United States—none of their Canadian employees are being laid off. This reduction in work force is occurring in the United States.

Perhaps the hon. Leader of the Opposition should listen to his colleague, the member for LaSalle—Émard, who said on February 14, 1989, as reported in The Toronto Star: "It makes no sense for us as a party to blame the free trade agreement for every piece of economic upheaval that occurs". He should listen to that advice and heed it.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. He talks about the facts. It is a fact that the work that is going to be transferred from the Ford Motor Company engine plant No. 2 in Windsor is going to be transferred to the United States. When he talks about a dynamic phase, it is a phasing out of Canadian jobs from this country to the United States.

I want to ask the minister this. Will he make a commitment right now to get the Ford Motor Company to place in Windsor some of the new production of engines and components it is working on so that at the end of 1990 the 900 jobs will be preserved and the benefit of this will continue to be there for the Windsor and Canadian economies? Will he make the commitment today, right now?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, when Ford opened its new engine plants it indicated that the V-8 plant which was old and obsolete would be phased out some time in the future. The union leaders, Bob White and the union local president, Frank McAnally, said: "Quite frankly, we've been pushing the company to make the announcement for the past few months". They have expected it for a few months. It is part of the national evolution of things.

The fact is any reasonable person looking at how Canada has fared vis-à-vis the United States in this current downturn in the automobile industry will recognize, as the Americans surely do and the auto workers do, that in fact we fare very well and that Canadian automobile workers are more productive than those in the United States. Therefore we have not suffered the lay-offs. In fact, we are getting new investment in Canada which they are not getting in the United States.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The president of the Canadian Automobile Workers also said that he wanted to see new production placed in that plant by the end of 1990.

Is the minister going to make a commitment today to get that new production there to preserve those jobs or is he and the Conservative government simply telling the workers in Windsor and across Canada that they don't give a damn? That is not good enough.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member used the word "preserving". We are interested in making sure that Canada can compete in the next century. We are interested in making sure that Canada still remains the best place in North America for manufacturing jobs.

He talks about the free trade agreement. Perhaps he did not see in today's paper the comments by Ted Newell, president of Dupont Canada, who stated that the $28 million expansion of its chemical plant in Maitland is evidence that free trade is working and that more jobs will be generated at Dupont plants across Ontario over the next two years. That is happening in all kinds of industry.

It is good news, so it does not get the front page feature that some of these plant closings get, but it is happening everywhere. The fact of the matter is there are more Canadian jobs being won as a result of the free trade agreement than are being lost.

FISHERIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Fisheries. We have learned that immunity from prosecution has been granted to certain large corporations and individuals by the minister and his department. There is an important principle involved here. Canadians expect fisheries officers and the minister to enforce the laws that are passed by this Parliament.

We know now that that is not the case. Let me quote from a November 15, 1989 federal document from the head of habitat management which states: "The habitat destruction that has taken place has been ignored to a significant degree. We have determined that DFO friendly corporations or parties with provincial permits will enjoy relative immunity from the Fisheries Act while the small guy gets prosecuted".

Will the minister tell this House why he is allowing certain friends of the government to break the law and remain immune from charges?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member use the phrase "immunity from prosecution". He knows, as do all those who work in co-operation with officials of my department, that no one is immune from prosecution under the Fisheries Act of offences in regard to environmental pollution, water quality or degradation of the habitat.

The member also knows because he and his party and all hon. members, I believe, support the policy for fish habitat management which I introduced three years ago in this House. That policy reads in part as follows: "The department prefers to prevent damage to habitat and avoid losses to the fisheries resource rather than to take court action against offenders after the fact. However, when voluntary compliance fails to produce the desired objective and the Fisheries Act is contravened and the habitat supporting fisheries resources are altered, destroyed or degraded, enforcement officers of the department will carry out effective enforcement action."

Mr. Speaker, I can provide the hon. member with a long list of cases as to instances where this has happened.

• (1430)

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Fisheries is about to learn that what we are talking about here is somewhat more serious than he took the first question.

We have learned that some large corporations are being granted immunity from prosecution for serious violations of the Fisheries Act.

Let me quote again from the minister's own departmental documents: "Despite obvious and very significant violations legitimate cases are in jeopardy or have been stifled". The example, one of many used in the document, is: "Alcan and their contractors, without any approvals, largely destroyed a salmon stream at Kemano". That is in British Columbia. They largely destroyed a salmon stream. One would think that is the sort of thing about which the Minister of Fisheries would be interested.

Is the minister suggesting to this House that the stifling of what his officials describe as very significant violations is acceptable? If he does not, is he planning to speak to the Solicitor General or to the head of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to see whether the commercial crime squad of the RCMP or perhaps the head of the RCM Police himself, might want to look into the the minister's department because I suggest that there is, at the very least, criminal activity going on in the Department of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Speaker: That is not an acceptable allegation to make in Question Period, and as a consequence I am going to move on to the next speaker.

FORESTRY

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, Abitibi Price shocked the people of Newfoundland by announcing the closure of a portion of its pulp and paper mill in Grand Falls, putting 250 people out of work inside the mill, and hundreds of people out of work permanently outside the mill, the loggers in central Newfoundland. But the company says it is going to build a new pulp and paper mill in Alabama.

Will the Minister of Forestry look into this matter and find out whether or not the company, in announcing the closure of a portion of its plant, has violated the terms and conditions of millions of dollars it has received from this government over the past three or four years, or is this just another benefit of free trade—take all you can get from the Canadian Government and invest the profits in Alabama?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I anticipated the question because I share with my hon. friend the concern of the untimely announcement of a partial closure of an important facility in an area where other economic prospects are more limited than they would be in other parts of the country.

The decision by Abitibi Price is a commercial decision. It is made in line with the necessary rationalization adjustments that have to be made from time to time in accordance with a number of criteria, including international market conditions, the availability of adequate quantities and qualities of fibre, labour markets and those kinds of things.

The fact is that the particular line that has been closed which will reduce the workforce in this particular mill by roughly one-third was built in 1926 and is hardly state of the art, which is required in today's changing international market-places.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, in a public statement made Friday, the company said: "The future viability of pulp and paper mills in Canada rests on their ability to compete in the offshore market".

The company has become the offshore competition. It is building a new pulp and paper mill in the United Kingdom and in Venezuela using the wood from the rain forests of the Amazon, whereas in this country under this government it is closing down operations.

I want to ask the minister, will he now demand a meeting with the board of directors—it should not be too difficult with the number of prominent Conservatives on the board—and say to them: "Look, you have built a world class company here on the backs of Canadian workers and now you are going to sell them down the river, the Amazon River".

Is the government going to stand idly by and watch every pulp and paper company close in this country? You will be beaten to a pulp in the next election if you do.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, reference was made earlier, at least peripherally, to this particular closure being related to the free trade deal. The company did not announce the building of a new mill in Alabama.

It is another one of these instances where the sparrows are falling out of the sky, except in this particular instance it would almost sound like a whole flock of thunderbirds has crashed. But that is not the case.

The fact is that the Canadian pulp and paper industry, just like every other major industry in this country, does have to be very sensitive to the conditions in the market-places of the world. While my friend and his supporters may think that we can build a wall around our country and ignore the dynamic changes, we have to be competitive and we have to build the very best in facilities in those areas where we have our natural strength and that is obviously what this company is intending to do.

EMPLOYMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week, General Electric announced that it was closing its Montreal plant and that 200 jobs, mostly held by women, would be lost. This company has been making a range of electric lights in Montreal for 30 years, and now most of this production will be transferred to Fairfield, Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, what will the government do to prevent this transfer of jobs and why did the government hide these consequences of free trade with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if there is any area under this government that is going to do well under free trade, it is Quebec and the region of Montreal.

We are seeing an expansion of jobs in Montreal as we are in other parts of Quebec where the unemployment rate has been improving considerably. The business people there are going to be taking advantage of free trade to continue to build new jobs in Quebec.

In addition, with the labour force strategy, whereby we are going to be in a position to train people better for these new jobs, we are going to see a lot more economic development in Montreal.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not up to date on the figures. Every week, there is another plant closure in Montreal. Last week it was General Electric with 200 jobs lost. The week before it was Canadian Steel Foundries with 250 jobs lost. Since the beginning of this year, we have had over 80 notices of lay-offs in Montreal involving approximately 7,000 lost jobs, and most were solid full-time jobs.

What is the government going to do about this serious situation? The people of Montreal want action, not rhetoric.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, the people of Montreal recognize that there is a dynamic economy in Montreal right now that is getting better and with free trade it will continue to get better.

If the hon. member would check the numbers on unemployment, he would see, as I do, that the changes in Montreal are very positive ones.

FISHERIES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to pursue with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans a very serious issue. Reading from a departmental document, it states: "We have determined that the Department of Fisheries and Oceans with friendly corporations will enjoy relative immunity from the Fisheries Act". This is in addition to the years of immunity we have given those mills that have been fortunate to have a continuous discharge and can negotiate and promise while they continue to pollute.

My question to the minister is very straightforward. Was the minister aware that this policy of immunity to certain corporations was policy in his department?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am not only unaware of that, I categorically reject any such insinuation.

In fact, the document to which the hon. member is referring was prepared by a lower level official in my department, widely copied, but not advanced through the system. I did not learn about it until Friday afternoon. While these are the opinions of one official responsible for one region in British Columbia reporting to his area director, the director general, the deputy minister, and the assistant deputy minister, they do not reflect the policy of this government or this department.

• (1440)

In fact, in the period 1986 to 1988, we have laid well over 100 charges with 47 successful prosecutions for offences under the Fisheries Act and fines up to $35,000. It is absolutely improper to suggest any irregularity or unfairness in prosecution and the application of the Fisheries Act.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this is most serious in terms of what the minister is telling us because, again, it is very clear that the minister has to accept responsibility for practices of his department. For example, when the document goes on and states: "Alcan and their contractors, without any approval, largely destroyed a salmon stream at Kemano due to our special relationship with Alcan."

It also states: "Due to authorization and unworkable enforcement arrangements, near total immunity has been given to Yukon placer miners to harmfully alter and pollute Yukon streams. Even when the miners cannot meet extremely lax standards no enforcement has taken place in 1988 or 1989, despite numerous violations."

Considering that these are factual statements, that there have been numerous lax standards applied and no enforcement in terms of where that law has been broken, will the minister do the appropriate thing and offer his resignation?

Mr. Siddon: Absolutely not, Mr. Speaker. I have already pointed out that it is the policy of the department to seek remedies to environmental offences. But when there is clear evidence of intent, on the recommendation of the Department of Justice, my officials and the Department of Justice and those of the Department of the Environment bring appropriate charges.

It is absolutely improper, in fact it is probably one person within the department who has frustrations with the system and technical and legal constraints, to draw these conclusions.

FISCAL COMPENSATION GRANTED TO ISOLATED AND NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

The task force on fiscal compensation for isolated and northern areas tabled its report on October 27. Its recommendations are unacceptable for workers in northern Quebec and northern Canada. It is in Canada's interest to help workers in the north and near north, not only the developing countries.

My question is this: Can the Minister confirm in the House that at the meeting of provincial finance ministers in Ottawa this week, fiscal compensation for isolated and northern communities and a permanent tax policy for the near north will be on the agenda? Yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say to the hon. member that the matter will be discussed. I have been having some discussions already with one or two of my colleagues who have indicated an interest to have some discussion on this.

I would like to remind my friend that this commission task force worked for 18 months to produce these proposals at the request of the Government of Canada because of the great inequities that were in this tax system between people who lived in the same part of the country but happened to live a few miles farther away than others and therefore got the benefit whereas others did not. These are difficulties that we asked the task force to address.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Say yes or no to your member. Give him a decent answer!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am sure that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would be quite pleased to—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Give your member a clear answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Well, Mr. Speaker, it is very hard to respond to a question in face of the bluster from the other side of the House.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the conflict of interest code.

As the minister is no doubt aware, Mr. Robert Jarvis, a former Conservative Member of Parliament and the chairman of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the past five years, has lobbied on behalf of a private developer to the Ontario Minister of Housing.

Can the Acting Prime Minister justify, in any way, the activities of the Tory-appointed boss of Canada's national housing agency, when he is also lobbying the Ontario Minister of Housing for the benefit of a private developer to obtain money for housing which is partially funded by the federal government?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the first public report of this appeared in the paper today. We are currently looking into the matter, trying to ascertain all of the facts that are involved in the situation. As soon as we do, we will certainly advise the hon. member.

Mr. Fontana: Mr. Speaker, let me see if I can be a little helpful to the minister. It is quite clear on this issue in Sections 4(d), 7(a), 7(b), and 7(f) of the code. I quote: "Public office holders shall not step out of their official roles to assist private entities or persons in their dealings with the government where this would result in preferential treatment to any person."

What action will this government take to address what most Canadians would call a conflict of interest, and will this government re-evaluate the position of this chairman of Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member is a fair member, as are all members of this House, and will want to make sure that all of the facts are known and that everyone has an opportunity to fully set out those facts. I know that he would want to wait until all the facts are in before he draws any conclusions from the situation himself. Certainly that is my position and that of the government.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this government's blatant disregard for the Speaker's recent ruling is indicated by the announcement that on December 27 this year Revenue Canada intends to start mailing application forms for the credits on the proposed goods and services tax.

My question for the Acting Prime Minister is the following: Why is the Minister of National Revenue sending Canadians application forms for the proposed goods and services tax credit when no legislation on this has been presented to Parliament, let alone approved?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would listen to the Auditor General's last report, for example, he stated quite categorically that it was the duty of this government, as it is indeed of any other government, that when there is proposed legislation the government begins to prepare for the legislation to come forward and be implemented. This is why the government is moving ahead, consistent with parliamentary precedents, and within the rules and regulations of Treasury Board.

I hear Liberal members saying that we are arrogant. Well, of course, when I say that we are abiding by parliamentary precedents, we are looking at some of the former Liberal precedents that have been set out, such as the hired 4,000 employees prior to the legislation even being tabled. So we are just following what the Auditor General has said and what the rights and obligations of this government are.

I will let you know one other thing, Mr. Speaker, that if we did not prepare for a smooth launch we would be doing a disservice to Canadians and we would then be irresponsible.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General has more influence with the government than the Speaker does.

• (1450)

[Translation]

Since the Minister of National Revenue takes Parliament's approval for granted, although no bill has yet been tabled in this House, he is obviously admitting to us that his proposed schedule for implementing the GST is totally unrealistic.

[English]

My question is for the Minister of Finance. Has he asked for advice from the Department of Revenue on the lead time required for the implementation of the GST? If not, why not?

Is it not true that his department has been told by Revenue Canada that the GST should not be put in place on January 1, 1991 because of administrative difficulties?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the obvious answer to that question is, yes, we have had considerable discussion between the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue. The implementation date of January 1, 1991 has been agreed upon between the two.

That is the proposal being put before the House of Commons, and that is the proposal which I believe can be met. It does require, as my colleague has said, a degree of information, a degree of planning, a degree of working with Canadian taxpayers to ensure that we have a smooth launch of this proposed legislation.

FISHERIES

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the Minister of Fisheries.

He just told this House that decisions on prosecutions are made by the Department of Justice. I would like to quote from a departmental document regarding the Swift River case where it states: "The Department of Justice says we should charge the Minister of Forests, the officer issuing the cash sale as well as the loggers. The director general of fisheries has ruled that we will not charge the Minister of Forests, so the Department of Justice will not charge the logger. Consequently, we are locked in the embarrassing situation and immunity has been extended to those responsible for the violation."

I would like the minister to explain this situation.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to explain the detail of any particular situation today.

I have asked the deputy minister of fisheries to inquire into these opinions of one lower level official in the Department of Fisheries—

Mr. Fulton: The head of Habitat.

Mr. Siddon: He is not the head of Habitat, he is a head of the Fraser River unit.

I would like to determine the extent to which these allegations are based on fact before I draw any conclusions about the very serious, and if not factual, improper allegations that have been made.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote again from the document which states that "Alcan and their contractors, without any approval, largely destroyed a salmon stream at Kemano. Due to our special relationship with Alcan, it has been determined that the violation will probably not be prosecuted".

What is this special relationship that provides for immunity from prosecution? Is it political? Is it financial? What is the nature of this special relationship?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would note the two words, "probably not," showing that there is no specific component to that allegation in terms of actions that may or may not have been taken. There is no special relationship with Alcan. As you and members of this House know there is an agreement between this government, the government of the province and Alcan with respect to the Nechako River and reservoir which has already produced great dividends to the natives of the Cheslatta Band and will produce a number of other benefits to all the people of British Columbia.

FINANCE

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The OECD report notes the efforts by the Bank of Canada to reduce inflation through high interest rates has been appropriate.

As indicated, however, this course of action may lead to a corresponding increase in unemployment levels. Given the fact that a high interest policy traditionally hits harder in the regions of this country which are less able to adjust to economic slowdowns, my question for the Minister of Finance is this: Given that these measures are implemented primarily to cool the over-heated economy of central Canada, what assurances can the minister give to the people of Atlantic Canada that the government is prepared to act to offset the negative impact of this policy in the regions of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a report that has been put out by one of the premier international organizations in the world that looks into the performance of economies and government policies.

I want to quote briefly: "In summary, recent Canadian performance with respect to the output growth and employment creation has been impressive and has brought the economy back to full capacity utilization". It goes on to say that "given the importance of preventing a re-acceleration of inflation, the policy action of the Bank of Canada was appropriate".

It is important to realize that wage and price pressures have been developing in all parts of the country. As an example, in the member's own province, the inflation rate, excluding food and energy, has gone from 4.5 per cent to 5.6 per cent over the course of this year. So we do have pressures in all provinces of the country, both in inflation and in wage settlements.

What we have to do is to continue this policy, because if we do not get inflation under control it will be the weaker parts of the country that will suffer the most.

Having said that, we are still very much committed to the operations of organizations like ACOA, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, to provide for some offset to the impact of higher interest rates in order to support regional development in these parts of the country.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance some questions relating to the response he just made dealing with high interest rates. As the minister knows, in the last two years Canadian exports have lost close to $18 billion worth of sales because of the rise of the dollar which is directly related to the interest rate charges by the bank. The current account deficit with the United States has gone from a surplus of $3.4 billion to a deficit of $2.3 billion. That hurts the resource industries of the very regions about which the member just spoke.

I want to ask the minister specifically, if the high interest rate policy forcing up the dollar is destroying the export markets of this country, is he going to sit down with the Governor of the Bank of Canada and ask him to start bringing down the interest rates and the exchange rate so Canadians can start trading again?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have expected a question like this from the Liberal Party of Canada which simply does not understand the operations of the economy. It is precisely a question like that which demonstrates that the hon. member does not understand what this international organization has been saying about policy in Canada.

We have had broad support and encouragement from this organization, from the International Monetary Fund and from other international observers that if we do not get inflation under control, interest rates will end up being an awful lot higher than they are today.

That is precisely what happened in the 1970s when the Liberal Party was in power and ignored the problem of inflation. The Liberals swept the problem under the carpet. We saw inflation going from about 5.5 per cent in 1976 to 13 per cent in 1981 and interest rates going to 20 or 21 per cent. That led to the worst recession we have had in years in this country.

We on this side of the House are not going to ignore the lessons of the past. We are going to deal with these problems as they occur and avoid the mess that the Liberals got us into in 1981.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): This lecture on inflation comes from a minister of finance who is bringing in a tax that is going to force the inflation rate up to 7 per cent. He has no business telling us how to deal with inflation when he is going to bring in a tax that is going to drive Canadian prices out of sight.

I want to ask the minister when is he going to stop listening to international organizations and start listening to Canadians? For example, the furniture makers say that this year alone imports from the United States are up 29 per cent while exports are down 3 per cent.

When is he going to listen to the foundry association which says that it has lost 1,500 jobs in the last eight months alone? It says that it cannot take the trade deal and an 85-cent dollar at the same time. When is he going to start listening to Canadians who are losing their jobs, their incomes, their livelihoods? When will he start listening to what really makes sense?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listen to people who are in business and who tell me these things. I say to them right back that we are at a position now, as this report from the OECD has said, where we are at full capacity. We have seen the effects of this in price inflation, in wage inflation, and we are seeing it in monetary aggregates. The bank loans are growing at 12 per cent per annum and have been for some time now.

These are all signs that this country's economy must slow down some. If it does not slow down, if we do not see a control of inflation, we are going to get back to the 13 per cent inflation rate we had back in 1981. If the hon. member wants to get back to that—

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Cancel your tax.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —why does he not start standing up and saying that he supports the policies of the 1970s and early 1980s of the Liberal Party of Canada that got this country into the worst mess we have seen in 50 years?

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will know that a few days ago we had to accept the unhappy news of the passing of one of our former colleagues and by arrangement with all parties tributes will be paid.

THE LATE JAMES KENNETH JEPSON

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute on behalf of the friends and colleagues of Jim Jepson who was the member of Parliament for London East. He was my friend and my colleague, as he was a friend and colleague of almost everyone who served in the former Parliament.

There were few members of that Parliament who made a more vivid impression than the member for London East. His buoyant good humour, his great one liners, his love of attention, his pride—he did not hide it being a successful businessman—his happy warrior approach to defending God, country and family, his belief that each individual was sacred, were familiar to all those who knew him.

For those of you who did not know him, you may have thought those beliefs might have been just politically convenient. That was not the case. Jim Jepson did not inherit these beliefs from comfortable middle-class London, Ontario. In fact he represented a riding which was as much working class as middle class. It has many new Canadians. It is now represented by the Liberal Premier of Ontario.

He did not inherit the beliefs either. He was, 20 years ago, a skeptic and an agnostic about all things spiritual. When he would see an evangelical preacher on TV, he used to say to his dear wife Bev in his own inimitable way: "I think the elevator doesn't always go to the top two floors for those people". But he became converted and he became a very strong defender of his faith and of his country.

Jim, as all of us know, preferred to learn not from books. Although, by the way, he read five psalms every day and a chapter from the book of Proverbs, he liked to learn from people because he loved people. Although I do not think he probably ever read Dostoevsky, he believed with Dostoevsky that a person cannot live without worshipping something. He said to me one day that if you do not worship God, you must worship something else.

Just two weeks ago we were talking about that something else: ideologies, groups, leaders who received sort of divine honours in their time but were later rejected. The object of his worship was of course God. Jim really did follow the Gospels.

This brings me to the point I wanted to make in this House. It is often said that a member of Parliament, when he retires or when he passes away, loved Parliament. Well, I want to share with this House a little secret. Jim achingly missed this place. He loved it because he was gregarious. He loved it—I do not apologize for this—because he was competitive. He loved the competition here. He loved it too because he believed that in this most imperfect of places there was potential for helping Canada to be renewed politically and spiritually.

I believe this is why thousands were at his funeral on Saturday. Our hearts are with him and his family as he is interred today. I believe that all who knew him will treasure his example and his memory.

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I wish to convey our heartfelt sorrow and sense of loss to Mr. Jepson's family: Bev, his wife and Jane, Craig, and Susan, his children.

Jim Jepson was a proud Canadian. He loved his country and its people passionately. As a member of Parliament between 1984 and 1988 he passionately spoke of this country, its values and its potential. He was a man with deeply held convictions and for that he was respected by members on both sides of the House. He was a man of honesty, integrity and principles, and that is why he fought for the things that he believed in. He believed in the family, in high moral standards and in people.

Just to give an example of the kind of man he was, in a speech that he gave on November 25 he said:

> All that is required for evil to triumph is for good men and women to do nothing.

He was always an optimist and optimistic about this country. That is why we pay tribute to a former parliamentarian. Canada has lost a good son, and London a fine citizen.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, God has taken from us one of his most favourite and faithful children with Jim Jepson's passing. He was a man who lived his faith. Those of us who had the good fortune to work with Jim were saddened when we heard the news of his passing. In many ways he contributed much to this place.

Although we disagreed on many items, he was always a man who was willing to sit down, have a cup of coffee and discuss our differences and explain at some length the position that he took on various issues and reasons for them.

He was a very humble man in many respects. He appreciated that we all held different views and yet respected those views. I say he was a very decent man, a very friendly man. One of the first people I encountered after the last election was Jim Jepson, as he walked around introducing himself to various people, looking forward to establishing strong and close working relationships with members from all sides of the House.

We express our deepest sympathy to his wife Bev and his children. We will miss Jim Jepson deeply and for a long time.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as has been mentioned Jim Jepson was elected in 1984. I remember prior to his election speaking to him about his candidacy. One of his concerns was how this place would affect his family. I think for a lot of us those are the kinds of questions we privately ponder as we look at public life.

• (1510)

Jim as has been mentioned here was gregarious. Possibly he is enjoying the scene right now as we are speaking about him, not in a partisan way but in the friendly way that he greeted people and met with them so easily.

He was concerned about the public purse and public issues well beyond the ones that he profiled in this House. He had very strong moral views, as has been mentioned. He was convinced that the nation had prosperity and stability if it relied on the roots on which it had been established, primarily in the concepts that were incorporated in our coat of arms. It is from Psalm 72:

> He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth.

We will miss his smile and we will miss his friendship. I as an individual will miss the fact that I think he was the only one who was not daunted by anyone who might have certain positions around here. He would pop in at any time no matter who was in the office and drive the staff around the bend because he had to talk to me. That was the kind of person he was, no airs and I appreciated that.

I remember we would go by this place when the buildings of Parliament Hill would be darkened and the flag would be lit up late at night, and he would express what many of us believe. He once said: "Jake, I still do not know how I got here". He was probably expressing that view for a lot of us. And then he would say: "Every time I see that flag on the Peace Tower I still get goose bumps, and I still get goose bumps from the fact that I have been asked to serve here".

Lastly, in respect to Jim, Jim has finished his race and he probably is best reflected in this House by what the writer to the Hebrews said in Chapter 11, in the modern transliteration which says: "And we have a crowd of witnesses who stand here in the grandstands cheering us on". Jim would cheer us on today, to love righteousness, to respect God's word, and to follow the precepts that are written in the cabinet room on the wall: "Love justice, you who are the rulers of the earth".

On behalf of all of us I am sure we want to convey to Bev, to Jane, to Susan, to Craig, and to his former constituents our sorrow and our thanks for his life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Jim Jepson was one of the most popular members of this House of Commons. He was liked by all of us on this side of the House. We appreciated his forthrightness and his candour. He was a fine gentleman. He had a radiant and buoyant personality that lit up a room.

I used to tease him about his being a born again Christian, with the convictions that that meant, the fact that he was not afraid to stand up or express his views, either his theological views or his political views. I must say I was closer to his religion than I was to his politics, but in any event he was a man who demanded and received instant respect.

I want to add the condolences of our party. Jim Jepson was an exemplary member of Parliament, a man who always wanted to get here and when he got here served well. When he lost, he took it with distinction and understanding that in a democracy that is the price one pays for public office.

I saw him once or twice after the election. His defeat had not phased him a bit. I want to say to his wife, Beverly, and his family, and to the constituents that he represented, that he was a fine member of Parliament, a credit to this House, a credit to the city of London, the constituency he represented. He is the type of person we need to elect to this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I want to join other members in the House in saying a word of commendation about Jim Jepson.

Jim and I were put together rather early in his political career because of the seating arrangement in the House. I was sitting in the second row of our caucus over here, and he was sitting in the seat right across the aisle from me in the second Conservative row. As a result we became very good friends. We used to sit here and discuss how Question Period should and should not be run, and so on.

I join others who have talked about his deep commitment to his faith. There was no question that Jim Jepson was one of the finest when it came to keeping his religious faith. He was a good father and a good husband. He always talked very lovingly of his wife, Bev. They obviously had a very good relationship together. I can also recall being in Washington with him as one of the delegation to the prayer breakfast meeting there. I was shocked the other night when I saw on the television that he had passed away at the age of 47.

I want to join with our colleague from London East who has spoken very well today and others in this House to convey my personal sympathy to Bev, to the members of the family and to his dear mother.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, Jim Jepson and I sat on the justice committee and on a number of other committees together. I suppose we probably had our differences of opinion from time to time on a number of issues.

I want to join with my colleagues in the House in paying tribute to Jim. While we did have some very fundamental differences of opinion on issues, he was always a fair and honest man who treated people with dignity and respect.

I want to join in extending condolences to his wife, Bev and to their children. I had the privilege of meeting them as well at a skiing holiday at Sunshine Village when Jim Jepson and Alex Kindy joined me on a couple of runs.

I was shocked and saddened, as were all members of this House who worked with Jim. Again, to his wife and family our deep condolences and respect.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to take but a minute of the House to add my words of condolences to Beverly Jepson. As some members may know, I was a pretty good friend of Jim Jepson. He once told me of his daughter who had been very ill at one time, and how he considered it a miracle that she had come back to life from the state where most experts were considering that she would not live.

Similarly when I heard that he had become gravely ill I sent a message to Beverly hoping that that same kind of miracle would happen again but this time of course to save Jim Jepson's own life.

I was very much an admirer of his religious convictions. I did not share his views on every topic, but I did share his view very profoundly on one topic. Most members will recognize that as being the topic of abortion. As a matter of fact, when I took the somewhat controversial position I do have, I suppose, I thanked two members of the House for their support and assistance. One of them was the member for York South—Weston and the other one whom I thanked publicly at that time was the then member for London East, Jim Jepson.

I want his family to know how much I appreciated having Jim Jepson around the House of Commons and how much we will all miss him in the future.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask hon. members to rise for one minute.

PRIVILEGE

GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, earlier this morning a question of privilege was raised by the hon. member for Victoria with respect to the appointment of the CSIS committee.

I have now had an opportunity to obtain further information on the matter. I thought it might be helpful if I were to point out briefly what had happened at a previous time when these appointments were made. I did not have that information available to me at the time.

The act that was quoted this morning contemplates receiving names from the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party as to appointments to the committee. On October 2, 1984 the Prime Minister wrote to the Leader of the Opposition and to Mr. Broadbent and sought their views with respect to possible candidates for appointment to a certain committee. I will read it if I may and then table the letter:

> Mr. Broadbent,
> I am ready to seek your views with respect to possible candidates for appointment to the Security Intelligence Review Committee established by the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act. As you know, Section 34(1) of the act provides for the establishment of the SIRC whose members shall be appointed by the Governor in Council after consultation with the Prime Minister of Canada, with the Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, and the Leader in the House of Commons of each party having at least 12 seats in the House.

The members of the review committee are to be selected from among members of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada who are not members of the Senate or House of Commons. A list of Privy Council members effective June 30, 1984 is attached for ease of reference.

I would like the review committee to be constituted in the near future and also I would like to receive your suggestions as soon as possible. I am also writing along these lines to Mr. Turner.

It is our understanding that there were no further discussions between the date of that letter and November 29, 1984. On November 29, 1984 the Prime Minister wrote to Mr. Broadbent:

As you will recall, I wrote on October 2, 1984, requesting your views regarding possible candidates for appointment to the Security Review Committee. I understand that you have suggested Mr. Saul Cherniak. I am pleased to accept this suggestion and wish to inform you that the planned members of the review committee will be, in addition to Mr. Cherniak, Mr. Ronald Atkey, Chairman; Frank McGee, Jean-Jacques Blais, and Mlle. P. Gauthier.

I expect the committee will be constituted on November 30, 1984.

I thank you for your co-operation in this matter.

The announcement was then made the next day.

I think that my hon. friend has inadvertently misunderstood the reasons for the section in the act, that is to make sure that when nominations come forward from the opposition parties they are in fact satisfactory to the opposition party and that it is not by way of a veto that the constitution process goes through but by way of confirming that the name of that person is satisfactory.

This time both Mr. Jean-Jacques Blais and Mr. Cherniak were reappointed and therefore the Prime Minister wrote the letter that was referred to and tabled earlier, in which he had the closing paragraph:

I would like to know your views on these proposed appointments as I would propose to announce them shortly.

I submit that the section is there because this is a very important committee. When it was originally constituted representation was wanted from all three parties. It is by way of confirmation in the name of the party in question, not by way of veto that the clause is there.

I submit that the letter was written and it was received in ample time to find out if the hon. Leader of the NDP and the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition were in agreement with the names of the former appointees going forward. I am prepared to table the two letters that I have now referred to.

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the following comments on the question of privilege. First of all, I am not aware of the details of what happened in 1984. I was not here or a party to them. I will seek further information on that and, if I have anything to add to what the minister said, I will so advise Your Honour of these you before you make your ruling.

However, I would certainly say that whatever happened in practice in 1984 does not provide you with any assistance as to the legal requirements of the act and in particular on the question of consultation.

The act says that the appointments must be made "in consultation with" the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the Leader of the Official Opposition. There may or may not have been any reply back in 1984. There was no consultation in 1989. There was no communication, either implied or direct, from Mr. Broadbent's office of his views on this appointment. Therefore, the point that I made this morning seems to me unaffected by the additional information provided by the minister.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's intervention, but I think he has misunderstood the point of the remarks that I made this morning and the remarks that the hon. member for Victoria made.

We were not arguing that the opposition has a right of veto of the appointment to be made by the government in this matter. The act does not provide for the consent of the Leader of the Opposition and the leader of the third party in the House of Commons. It provides for consultation only. It does not say consent. If it said consent, I would suggest that we have a veto. The minister spoke of a veto and I am not suggesting that, nor did I this morning.

The minister may have misunderstood me. I did not suggest that we in fact had a veto. What I suggested was that the government had an obligation to consult. What I suggest in the strongest possible terms is that sending a letter less than 48 hours before you make the appointment and inviting comments is not consultation. It is not a reasonable time if a letter is to be the chosen method of the government.

The Minister of Justice is a lawyer, as you are, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour knows the rules of the law of contract in terms of making contracts. If the offerer chooses the method of communication he is stuck with that method and he has to give a reasonable time for a reply. The minister knows that a reasonable time for a reply to an offer in contract made on the telephone will be a shorter time than the time required if the offerer chooses to write by letter.

I suggest that the analogy is one that could properly be adopted in dealing with this question of consultation. The requirement here was for consultation with the opposition. The letter was sent at 3.30 on the afternoon of the 28th and on the morning of the 30th the announcement was made that this gentleman had been appointed to the position. I say that is too soon. There was not sufficient time.

The Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party had fair reason to expect the courtesy of a reasonable time to furnish their opinion to the government. I suggest that reasonable time was not given, and that was the thrust of my remarks. The failure to give that time amounted to a contempt of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I think there was extensive argument this morning.

The Minister of Justice came into the House and has given further information for my consideration. I have heard from both the hon. member for Victoria on behalf of the New Democratic Party and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands on behalf of the Official Opposition in reply.

I will, of course, consider the matter further and report back to the House.

ADVERTISING

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to draw to the attention of the Chair an advertisement that I received this morning which I think is clearly in violation of House rules and does affect the privileges of members of Parliament.

This particular ad calls for people throughout the House of Commons to purchase Christmas wreaths and to make cheques payable to a private company. Unfortunately, the ad is placed on an individual member's personal stationery. The office phone number that is published is the phone number of that particular member. Very much, Mr. Speaker, I think it is an abuse of the system in that it does use House of Commons stationery and House of Commons phones and I think deserves to be examined. I am quite happy to forward to the Speaker a copy of this particular ad.

Mr. Speaker: I of course will accept the ad. I suggest, though, before I close off this matter—I know that the Parliamentary Secretary would be most prepared to do this—he might discuss with the other side whether any comment is requested or is necessary and perhaps I could be given some indication of those discussions at least by tomorrow.

There is no need to pursue the matter now. I do not know who the member is and it may be that the parliamentary secretary could discuss it with the other side. I will hear further discussion later.

NORDION AND THERATRONICS DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: There are four motions in amendment in the name of the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke set down on the Notice Paper for the report stage of Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited. I have doubts with regard to the admissibility of Motion No. 1. The intent of the hon. member is to have Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics pay a royalty to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited based on profits exceeding $10,000 each calendar year. The percentage of royalty would be increased as profits increased.

As I understand the bill, the principle is to authorize the divestiture by the government of these two companies. The argument can be made that the hon. member is introducing a new concept but it can be equally argued that he is setting out a term or a condition must be met in the sale. This, for example, is what is being done in subclause (1) of Clause 4.

I will therefore give the hon. member the benefit of the doubt and allow Motion No. 1. It will be debated and voted on separately.

[Translation]

Motions Nos. 2, 3 and 4 are in order. They will be grouped together for debate and the vote on motion No. 2 will also apply to Motions Nos. 3 and 4. I will now open debate on Motion No. 1.

[English]

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke) moved:

Motion No. 1

That Bill C-13 be amended by adding immediately after line 19 at page 2 the following new clause:

"5. There shall be paid to the Crown corporation Atomic Energy of Canada Limited by Nordion and Theratronics an annual royalty on any profits of these corporations that exceed the sum of ten thousand dollars during any calendar year, and Nordion and Theratronics shall pay the Crown corporation an annual royalty as follows:

(a) on annual profits in excess of ten thousand dollars and up to one million dollars, three per cent;

(b) on the excess above one million dollars up to five million dollars, five per cent;

(c) on the excess above five million dollars up to ten million dollars, six per cent; and

(d) on the excess above ten million dollars, a proportional increase of one per cent for each additional five million dollars."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your comments and your fairness.

I want to say at the outset that Bill C-13 which deals with the Nordion and Theratronics divestiture authorization act is a short piece of legislation that authorizes the Canadian Development Investment Corporation to sell any or all of the shares of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited. The provisions of the bill are probably similar to those of other statutes authorizing the sale or privatization of Crown-owned corporations such as the 1988 legislation regarding Eldorado Nuclear Limited, for example.

The reason for Motion No. 1 is that both these companies had been developing within Atomic Energy of Canada's structure since 1952 up until they became Crown corporations just a short time ago and then handed over to the Canadian Development Investment Corporation for sale. For a while prior to 1952 they were part of Eldorado Mining and Refining, so it is fair to say that 45 years of research and development have gone into what we have in these two Crown corporations today.

Nordion really has done a tremendous job in the field of nuclear medicine for the treatment of cancer. Nordion produces isotope products and also deals with industrial irradiation. The isotope products can be found in radio-pharmaceuticals for medical diagnosis and therapy. Isotopes in bulk are used by other companies for radio-pharmaceutical production and, of course, industrial irradiation, cobalt 60 sources for industrial research purposes and irradiators are used to sterilize medical and consumer products.

This type of research has gone a long way, and these two companies are very important in the scheme of things. What can be more important today as we look around us than the years and the public funds that have gone into companies that deal to a very large degree with the treatment of cancer at a time when the public is donating money for research? The country has spent 45 years putting money into Atomic Energy of Canada and Eldorado Mining and Refining Corporation to bring this research in this field to where it is today.

Today, we are selling cobalt therapy units all around the world and are competing very well. Canada produces something like 80 per cent of the world's supply of radioisotopes. I think that is a tremendous accomplishment.

I feel very strongly that Motion No. 1 is an absolute necessity because the government has been telling Atomic Energy of Canada Limited since the finance minister's budget back in 1985 to either make money and pay your way or we are going to close you down. After all this tremendously productive work in the field of medicine has been done, it is a very cruel way to go.

These two companies are finally profitable. Nordion has been profitable for a long time. Theratronics has done very well. It is in the profit area now and it was making a profit before Theratronics became a Crown corporation. That was proven in the committee stage hearing of this bill.

How can we tell Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which has spent all those years since 1952 supporting this kind of research for both these Crown corporations, that we are going to sell them off and say good day and then turn around and tell the company to finance itself or else?

The reason for my amendment becomes very clear. Why should a royalty not be paid back to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited since over the years the taxpayers' money has gone into this research and brought these two companies to where they are today? That is why I have provided in this amendment that on annual profits in excess of $10,000 and up to $1 million, a 3 per cent royalty would be paid to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and on the excess above $1 million up to $5 million, the companies would pay 5 per cent of their profit to AECL. On the excess above $5 million up to $10 million, there would be a 6 per cent levy for royalties to the parent company. On the excess above $10 million, there would be a proportional increase of 1 per cent for each additional $5 million.

This is a very, very small part of the companies' profits, and if a Crown corporation such as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is going to continue doing this kind of research, build out of that parent company very healthy financial corporations of their own and go out and be privatized by government legislation, then surely there is something owing to the people of Canada back through Atomic Energy of Canada Limited so that that research and development can continue.

Who would ever deny that royalties from a profit–making company that makes the cobalt therapy treatment units and related cancer equipment and medical radioisotopes for the treatment of cancer and other refined purposes in the medical field should not be paid to a parent company instead of setting these companies up and having them make profits on the things that have actually been done by research money produced by the people of Canada over a period of 45 years?

If the parent company is going to continue its operations, how can it do it without help from those profit–making parts of the company? How can you say to AECL: "Now, you guys pay your bills but we are going to take all your profits away from you"? That is not the way to go.

Here is a tremendous success story in the field of medicine which has unfolded over the years. It has been a tremendous success. I believe the first cobalt therapy unit was first tested in the Royal Victoria Hospital in London, Ontario. Today they are in hospitals all around the world.

My strong feeling on this is that not only should there be a flow of money back into Atomic Energy of Canada Limited today from these companies, but certainly from any other companies that have been given public funds over the years to become successful operations and to contribute to the treatment of very serious diseases. Surely this Canada of ours deserves something back in return.

This is nothing new. You have royalties on books, on publications and on companies. There is absolutely no reason why this motion cannot be accepted.

I can only say that we are asking the people of Canada to pull out their pocketbooks and donate to cancer campaigns across this country to support research and development and then the government is turning around and selling off two profitable Crown corporations that have developed equipment for the treatment of cancer and medical radioisotopes for the treatment of cancer. We are going to say to the companies that buy them: "They are all yours. Now go ahead and make a profit".

The markets are already there in the world. In fact, there is going to be a tremendous increase in the profits of Nordion in the immediate years ahead. These companies are going to make great profits on it. We have set them up with public funds, they are going to pay a price for that company, but nothing beyond that. They have the research done up to date and from now on, I hope, they will do that themselves in a very effective way. We are all looking for that kind of leadership.

But there has got to be something left for those scientists and researchers in the parent Crown corporation Atomic Energy of Canada Limited so that they can go ahead and produce some more dynamic discoveries for the treatment of this horrible disease cancer that is taking so many loved ones away from our society today.

I ask the House to support this amendment very strongly. I hope the government will consider it. It is not asking for a great deal of the profits. They are very small percentages. Certainly the government has had a team trying to put a financial plan together for Atomic Energy of Canada for about the last four months or more. What would be better than to give AECL an income from what it and the Canadian taxpayers have produced over the years?

I would hope that the government would look at this amendment very seriously. It is one that has been tossed around among the science community for a long time. I think that its principle does a lot to really support the argument.

I believe my time is about up. I thank you for your patience, and I would ask the House and the government to give very serious consideration to this very important amendment which I am sure will be very well received, not only by the science community of this country, but also by those who are extremely interested in seeing continued the kind of top level, top drawer research and development that has been done and as a result has produced these two very fine Crown corporations.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on the motion of the hon. member for Renfrew.

Clearly, the two Crown corporations, Nordion and Theratronics, are not well known to Canadians, although the parent company, Atomic Energy of Canada, is very well known and has given us some of the most outstanding research this country has ever produced. The development of the Candu reactor is the most well known portion of it, although the issue of nuclear energy is sometimes controversial.

The kind of work that is done by these two Crown corporations, Nordion and Theratronics, which really were spawned by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, is not controversial. There is no controversy with regard to the tremendous research and value they have given to medical treatment in this country with the cobalt bomb, the radioisotopes that are used in medical treatment and so on.

It is of interest that such a large number of establishments have been built around the world by Nordion, processing plants for sterilization of equipment and so on. I am told that there have been 145 radiation processing plants established in the world, 90 of which were built by Nordion and 75 of which Nordion sells cobalt to.

Clearly these companies are very important to Canada. Nordion sells some $90 million worth of sterilization systems a year and Theratronics some $40 million of cobalt therapy machines. Between them, they employ over 700 people.

I think there are two issues at stake here. One is the importance of AECL as an ongoing entity to our country. Clearly, with the greenhouse effect we are going to need more and more nuclear energy in this country to generate electricity. We are expecting a report in the next week or two which will probably catalogue that some eight new nuclear generating plants will have to be built in Ontario during the next 10 or 12 years or less. AECL should be able to have the benefits of these two Crown corporations which it has developed.

The hon. member for Renfrew has put forward, I believe, a very ingenious way in which these companies could be privatized. Some of the millions of dollars that have gone into the research and development could flow back to AECL for the ongoing research which it is doing in nuclear energy and waste management systems for the country. This ongoing problem will require a great deal more research and development in the years ahead.

It does not seem to make sense to sell off all the money-making portions of Crown corporations in a privatization activity. The hon. member has put forward in Motion No. 1 a procedure for royalties to flow back to the Crown corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, which will give to the Crown some return on the tremendous amount of investment that has taken place to pay tribute to the genius of those researchers who have developed this outstanding research and medical technology.

I support the hon. member for Renfrew. I think he has hit upon a very useful way in which the medical profession and medical services units around the world using radioisotopes and sterilization equipment will be able to make those funds available to the parent Crown corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada.

We not only have an ongoing need for Atomic Energy of Canada for developing nuclear energy in our country but also for the disposal of nuclear waste and all that complicated research which will take place. It does not make sense that we just sell off all the money-making portions of a company like AECL and leave the less profitable portions.

Clearly Nordion and Theratronics have been the money-makers and have been successful. The idea the hon. member put forward that we try to retain the ownership in Canada is a good idea. The cobalt bomb for the treatment of cancer is synonymous with Canada and Canadian technology and medical research. That idea is one worth considering as well when we move on to those other motions farther down the page with regard to Bill C-13.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that on the other side of the House we will get support for these several amendments which I think will strengthen the bill and will serve our country well. It will serve AECL well and will give back to the country some of the investment which the taxpayers have put in to this Crown corporation which has developed modern, new, advanced medical technology. Thus, we will be paying back to the Crown some of the funds which have gone into the establishment of this important and worth-while technology.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to stand here in the House today to speak on the amendments put forward by my colleague, the member for Pembroke with regard to Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited.

I know my colleagues have already mentioned the history of both Nordion and Theratronics but I would like to mention it as well. They have been part of a Crown corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, for a good number of years.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited was formed in 1952. The history of these two companies began in the early post-war years and they were connected at that time to Eldorado Mining. In the late 1970s, a reorganization of AECL led to the commercial products division being reformed as the Radio Chemical Company and Medical Products Company. In 1987 both companies were profit-making and in 1988 ownership was transferred to the control of CDIC which, of course, is the Canadian Development Investment Corporation.

Now we have Bill C-13, which is to authorize privatization of these two companies. This is what concerns me. Theratronics is essentially a manufacturing company and Nordion is a high-tech company dealing largely with nuclear materials and, therefore, Canadian control is highly desirable. They are a leading international supplier of nuclear-based products, serving the world's health care industry. The industrial radiation division produces over half of the world's cobalt 60 radiation processing equipment.

Mr. Speaker, you may be wondering why I am briefly giving you this background information on these two companies, but I wish to reaffirm the importance to Canada and to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited of these two companies located in the nearby riding of Lanark—Carleton in the city of Kanata.

Nowhere can I find out the real reason why these companies are being privatized, although it does give reasons as to why they wish to privatize these two profit-making—and I have to stress profit-making—companies. It does give the reason that they will be better able to compete on the international market and will, therefore, make more profit than they are already making, but I guess this is where I have the difficulty with it.

The companies will obviously then be making profit for a private industry rather than for Canada and Canada has invested millions of dollars into these two companies and into AECL. I guess I am bothered about why we should be bothered to sell them in the first place.

Are we really hanging AECL out to dry on this one? It relies to a certain degree on the profits coming from these companies to subsist or to aid AECL in its operations because it is a research and development company.

How is it going to be put up for sale? It is said that it will be put out to the public tender process and it will be fair and square. Will these be invited bids or will they be selective? I think there are too many questions that beg answers.

Who is going to sit on the board? Is there a possible conflict? Who are these people? Is there going to be public accountability? These companies were formed with money from the Canadian taxpayers, millions and millions of dollars.

I know the minister responsible for privatization has said that it will provide these companies with the impetus for growth and development and the freedom to pursue new market opportunities. Those are wonderful words. Does this mean that just because a government appears to be committed to privatization, it must move in that direction come hell or high water, without any regard to who it is going to hurt?

I am a partner in a family business that has been fairly successful over the years. We always sell the losers and keep the winners, we do not sell the winners and keep the losers. This is what is being done here, the government is selling the winners, for goodness sake. I think the losers will be the Canadian people and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, as per the amendment proposed by my colleague, should share in the profits of these companies. It needs to share in order to allow it to continue.

• (1600)

I look at other Crown corporations that are slowly being sold off. I think of de Havilland and, of course, the DASH-8 aircraft and of how fortunate an American company was to receive this Canadian company that was finally making profits. Look at the profit-making part of VIA Rail which is causing people in Amtrak to wring their hands with glee. I wonder whose buddies are going to benefit from these two companies.

Twenty-five per cent of Nordion cannot be out-of-country owned and I think that is a wise move, but what assurance do we have that that same thing will hold true with regard to Theratronics? We are saying that it will be held by the employees. What guarantee do we have that this will always take place?

I support the amendments of my colleague from Pembroke. I hope that the government side of this House will see merit in what he is trying to do. I think we have a responsibility as parliamentarians to ensure Canadians that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has a share in the profit-making of these companies and we have a responsibility to ensure that Theratronics remains a Canadian-owned company.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to say a few very brief words on Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited. I want, in particular, to pay tribute to my distinguished colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke who has fought very hard in the interests of Canadians, both at the legislative committee and now by proposing these very thoughtful amendments which he is bringing forward in relation to this bill.

The minister across the way, who is sitting very patiently listening to the opposition's contributions to this debate, says that this bill is in the interests of Nordion and Theratronics. Assuming this is accurate, why then did the minister and his colleagues want this bill to be in and out of committee so quickly? What did they have to hide? Why was the committee not given the opportunity to listen to witnesses, experts who wanted to testify?

My colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke tells me that he wanted people like representatives of the Canadian Cancer Society and others to be able to come to the committee and make a contribution, to explain their views, how they felt about the divestiture. Did they feel that the bill was adequate? Did they feel that the minister should have provided better assurances such as the ones mentioned now in Motion No. 1? What did the Tory majority do? They did what they are known to do best. They rammed the bill through with no witnesses.

The member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke is quite justly upset about this. I am glad and thankful that our member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke is standing up for Canadians on issues like this.

What does the government want to do? It wants to divest itself of these two Crown corporations which are profit-making. My colleague from Nepean has spoken very eloquently about how this government has its priorities all messed up, how it wants to sell those things that are running well and keep those things that are not, which, even using Tory definitions of how to do things—heaven forbid that anyone should ever use those—does not work.

What are the Tories going to do afterwards? We have AECL, of course, which is the parent company, and now they are removing the paying component. What is going to happen to AECL afterwards? I ask that question and I want the minister to stand in this House and express very clearly and in a tangible way in legislation the long-term survival of AECL. That is what my colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke is concerned with. That is why he wants this amendment passed and that is why he wants a number of other amendments passed. That is why some of us on this side of the House are standing up in the interests of the taxpayers of Canada, of the residents of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, who work at AECL, and several others involved with these industries in Kanata and elsewhere.

I know that the minister is in a rush to get this bill through. He may have committed himself to the Prime Minister or the House Leader, or to whomever, that he did not need much House time and this would go smoothly. I am sorry to disappoint him. Well, on second thoughts, I am not really that sorry, but I do want to tell the minister that he is just not going to get it quite that quickly.

I am not known to make long speeches—

Some Hon. Members: No, never.

Mr. Boudria: —and I would not want to take the time of the House, but if I have to I could be convinced that it is necessary to speak on all of these amendments and to encourage colleagues to do so. Perhaps the minister across the way could save a lot of the time of the House and he could encourage his colleagues to vote in favour of good, worthwhile, thoughtful amendments such as the ones proposed by my distinguished colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

Mr. McDermid: Can we get a second opinion?

Mr. Boudria: A member across the way asks if we can get a second opinion. Well, we have had four opinions in a row here from this side of the House on this amendment, but this is not sufficient for the member across the way, so I will have to encourage my colleagues to provide more constructive opinions in favour of this amendment. Perhaps if 15 or 20 colleagues spoke in favour of this amendment, all of us seconding the very worth while proposition of my colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke, members across the way would consider that to be sufficient opinion.

We have only had four speakers so far speaking in favour of that amendment. The member across the way has invited us to get more opinions to further confirm the fact that this amendment is worthwhile and we are not going to disappoint him. I promise that we are going to have a number of other colleagues provide meaningful and equally constructive comment in favour of the amendment that has been offered to us as Motion No. 1 by my distinguished colleague, the hon. member from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

I would not want to take too much time of the House because I know so many other members want to speak in favour of Motion No. 1 to amend Bill C-13, but I thought that it was absolutely necessary to express to the minister across the way that we on this side of the House do not think much of the strategy of allowing this bill to go to committee for one or two meetings and then to refuse the opportunity to hear any witnesses, save and except two I think, and to pretend that this is a sufficient amount of debate before the Government of Canada divests itself of these paying propositions which are subsidiaries of AECL.

We do not think this is adequate. We think the bill should at least be amended. Preferably, it should go back to committee. Witnesses should be listened to and allowed to provide the contribution that they would have gladly made had we given them the opportunity to do so. But the government was in a rush to get this bill back in to the House at report stage and third reading thinking that perhaps after a few moments of discussion in the House the bill would be completed. Well, it may take a little longer than that.

The next time the government brings the bill forward it should consider allowing a proper number of witnesses to express their views. As a matter of fact, I invite the minister to stand in his place right now and refer the bill back to the committee and have the witnesses make the contributions that they would have made. If he does not want to do that, I guess some of us will have to speak on behalf of the witnesses who could not appear. As much as we hate to do so, we will have to work ourselves up to making that contribution. We hope that it does not take too, too long, perhaps just a bit longer, but things need to be restated and my colleagues and I intend to do so.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Ottawa West, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Southwest Nova—Fisheries; the hon. member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception—Canadian Armed Forces; the hon. member for Kenora—Rainy River—VIA Rail.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NORDION AND THERATRONICS DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-13, an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, today's debate has been a fine example of the schizophrenia of this government when it comes to the role and the responsibility of government.

We started this morning with debate on a bill, the stated purpose of which is to build excellence and pride in the public sector. To do that we are prepared to set up a national centre for management development with a budget of $11.7 million a year while we are closing down the Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, or at least telling that centre it has no more public role to play, and we are quite prepared to turn over the concerns for the health and safety of Canadians in the workplace to a corporation that can turn a profit, or at least pay its own way.

This bill takes some of the finest examples of excellence, pride, productivity and innovation in the public sector and wants to sell them. We want to sell these things without gaining for Canadians any return on the investment they have made for over 47 years in the success of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and the various corporations that have been part of its structure, part of its excellent research history and part of its development of products that are serving the health needs, not only of Canadians but of people around the world.

The last annual report of NSERC identified that one of the most significant things that Canadians have to do for the good of the economy and for the long term prosperity of the country is to seek out those areas in which, by natural attributes of the nation, we have the opportunity to innovate, to create products that not only meet the needs of the world in areas such as the environment, biotechnology, cold regions living and cold regions research but also to create new economic opportunities for Canada.

I cannot think of another area of endeavour that more closely meets that description than the whole area of radiation technology. We have excelled in this area for decades. We have excelled in the development of new products. We have met a crucial human need around the world with our research and with our products in the area of atomic energy. Now we want to divest ourselves of a superb foundation we have built and with which we can create new technologies and new products and continue prospering.

Not only that, but we want to get rid of companies that Canadians working for their government—albeit perhaps somewhat indirectly but working with public funds—have built to a state where they are in fact very attractive to the private sector, companies that, for a number of years now have been funding further research, the development of further technology and products at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. We want to get rid of something that is doing well, making a profit and assisting us in further establishing a strong, economic niche which, when I hear the dogma from the other side of the House, is what we want to do, we want to invest in those things which are going to let our economy prosper.

What is the sense of getting rid of two companies that are doing exactly that? How are we supporting research and development and laying a strong foundation for further technology, further products and further export markets by divesting ourselves of companies that are producing the revenue to continue that research? At the same time this government has cut the budget of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited by $100 million it is divesting Atomic Energy Canada Limited of being able to fund, with the companies it has developed, its own ongoing research without further draws on the public purse.

If there is ever a place for public policy it is in the area of the development of nuclear technology and nuclear products. As a member of the environment committee I am constantly faced, at hearings we have every week, with the damage the garbage we have dumped into the environment, sometimes decades ago, is now doing to the world that we live in. I am faced with the need to go back and start undoing the damage we have done.

Nuclear technology is one of those newer technologies which we know produces a dangerous by-product from which we do not yet know quite how to protect the world. It is an area in which the need for public policy and public control is very evident. We simply cannot go ahead and produce harmful by-products as we have done in the past only to have them surface in the future for our children and our grandchildren to take care of.

As Canadians we have invested in this and we are now at a point where we are profiting from our investment and reinvesting that profit into the future of our country. It seems to me that a good conservative approach to this, in fact, would be to keep reinvesting those dollars rather than getting rid of something that is producing benefit for all of us and will continue to produce and benefit rather than allow someone else to profit from the risks we have taken and from the dollars we have invested.

I do want to speak for a moment on the process of the bill. This is the third time in a couple of months that I have seen successful attempts by government members to thwart the democratic process, to cut off debate, to cut off a thorough and careful examination of the public interest in matters. This happened with Bill C-16 on which we were hardly into committee when the government members of the committee were moving to limit debate to a matter of only hours on something as important as the establishment of a $3 trillion project, the Canadian space program.

On Bill C-21, a multi-billion dollar program, debate was limited, and now again on Bill C-13 we have the immediate chop. The people who have some expertise, some knowledge, some insight to contribute to our debate on public issues, are not able to come forward. We are not willing, as a House, or certainly as a government, to profit from that expertise and that knowledge.

Just the two matters that have been in the House today show the contradictory nature of this government's approach. The government talks about excellence and pride and innovation in the public sector and then immediately that happens slaps in the face people who have been responsible for that innovation and that excellence, saying, "We are selling off what you have created. We will no longer allow your current work to profit from what you created; and to see your investment reinvested in the future of this country."

Well that is foolish. That is short-sighted and it is wrong. I hope the members on the other side of the House will take the amendments proposed by my hon. colleague seriously and look at how in fact those amendments will be to the benefit of Canada and the benefit of research and development technology in this country and not simply dismiss them out of hand.

• (1620)

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was not going to participate in this debate but I came into the House this afternoon and read the amendment we are now discussing in the name of the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke.

I thought that surely the government is agreeing to this amendment. Then I was informed that it was not and I thought this must be a simple error on the part of the Minister of State for Privatization. Because the amendment seems such a sensible one I could not imagine that the minister would disagree with it. The question of the sale of these companies is one that I would have thought the minister would regard as self-evident. He has decided, in his wisdom, to sell the companies. We may have a disagreement, perhaps an ideological one, on this side of the House with that.

But even accepting that it was a sensible decision to sell, the Minister of State for Privatization is a businessman. I assumed that he was an experienced businessman who would have some considerable knowledge of the stock markets and the way they work in Canada. In fact I think it has been suggested that he was a tycoon, Mr. Speaker. I do not know. In any event, he knows that when you are going to sell stocks you wait until a propitious moment. You wait until your company is at its greatest value, when, in the eyes of the investing public, it will have the greatest worth because it is then that the investing public will pay the highest possible price for the shares.

Here we have two companies that the minister wants to sell on the market immediately. He is in a great rush. He wants to get this bill quickly through Parliament so that he can proceed with this public offering. Yet there is some evidence that these companies are now profitable and they are going to become much more profitable in the years ahead.

Surely if the minister had the best interests of Canadians at stake he would wait until the companies had achieved some considerable degree of profitability and then launch them out in a public offering so that he would maximize the dollar return for the Canadian owners of this company, all of us as Canadians. Surely he would want to sell these companies at a moment in their existence when they would fetch the highest possible dollar return on the investment.

Yet that does not appear to be the minister's attitude. He says, "I really don't care about how much I get for these companies, I want them sold now". I am amazed to hear that kind of argument from the minister because he is the one who is always harping in this House about the deficit.

To hear him complain as we have day after day, month after month, literally whining in this House about how dreadful the deficit is and how it has to be brought down, and for him to now want to sell one of our assets for less than it might fetch in another year when it could do more good in reducing the deficit, is absolutely astounding for me. Yet that seems to be the attitude of the minister. The Minister of Finance bleats and whines day after day in this House that he never gets any suggestions from the Opposition on how to reduce the deficit. Well, I will give him one right now, free. Hang on to these companies and sell them when they are worth more. Sell them when the value has gone up in the eyes of the investing public, I say to the Minister of State for Privatization. I hope he will convey the message to the Minister of Finance. He is the one who is always whining that we do not make any suggestions on how to lower the deficit. Yet here I am making a suggestion. Why does he not come running down here and say he agrees with me and accept to either postpone the sale or accept this amendment which provides for a return for the taxpayers of Canada?

We have heard from the previous speakers in this debate on this side of the House about how much money the government has invested in these corporations over the years. That money has come from the public Treasury of Canada. These companies are owned by us as taxpayers of Canada. Surely if we have an obligation as Members of Parliament, and I suggest that the obligation is even higher for the ministers of the Crown, to account for the public moneys of Canada and the way they are spent, surely we should be using our very best efforts to get the highest possible return on the investment for Canadians.

Surely one of the ways to do that is to accept this amendment which will provide that on this very significant investment Canadians have made in these companies there will be return in the years to come of moneys that they have put in by way of these royalty payments on the developed patents and so on that these companies have worked out.

Surely that is a reasonable approach to this. I do not understand the minister's reluctance. Does he think it is going to lower the value of the shares, and if so, by how much? Apparently he will not produce any evidence of this. He did not want to have it discussed in committee. The committee hearings were cut short.

I have read some of the transcript. I have it right here on my desk. There was a motion moved in early October by the Conservative members on the committee that the whole matter be reported to the House by October 26. I have it right here at page 21 of the proceedings of the committee on October 19. If the minister was not there, he had somebody there on his behalf. He knows what went on in the committee. He knows that what I am saying is correct. The discussion was cut short so that these embarrassing facts, these possible explanations, could not come to light.

Surely if they had come to light and the Canadian public became aware that by holding on to the shares of these companies for another year, or by agreeing to an amendment such as the one that we are discussing today, the Canadian public would get a greater return on the sale of these assets, the public would have agreed with us that this amendment is entirely suitable and entirely proper.

I say to the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, reconsider your decision, Mr. Minister, to reject this amendment. Look at it in a more favourable light. This is doing something for the people of Canada who put their dollars into these corporations over the years. This is getting the money back on these dollars that are being forgone by the immediate sale. If that money can be recovered in this way, surely it is a reasonable way for us as the House of Commons to deal with this bill and say, look, the people of Canada deserve better than a quick fire sale of these corporations. Surely they deserve to get something for the substantial investment that they have put in and that will be coming back over the next few years in sales of the products that these companies manufacture, increase and improve.

That is the evidence we have before us. On the limited evidence that we have that would seem to be the view of the people who are running these corporations. Surely the Minister of State for Privatization has an obligation to speak for these companies, not just to speak for the potential investors who want to snap these shares up at bargain prices, but that seems to be his aim.

This government has rushed headlong into this privatization nonsense. It has sold off assets that belong to the Canadian taxpayers, sold them to a select few of those taxpayers at fire sale prices, I suggest. We should discontinue this practice at once. These companies have significant assets. These companies have invested a great deal of money in developing certain patents and procedures that can be marketed. Surely Canadians should get a return on those developments, those patents and those procedures.

The royalty scheme that is suggested in the amendment by my distinguished colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke deserves the consideration of the minister instead of this apparent rejection, disinterest and lack of concern. Surely the minister has an obligation to the people of Canada to speak up and support this amendment, and I invite him to do so.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke for his effort to introduce an amendment to this House on a subject that is very dear to my heart. As someone who has been involved in research and development, as well as someone who worked in the private sector for a number of years, I know too well the importance of research and development for our country and for the well-being of our economy.

The amendment put before the House is nothing more than an assurance that the government and Canadians can rely on. Asking an ambassador or someone who is interested in purchasing a company, or a group of people who are planning to purchase a company, to pay a part of the profit to Atomic Energy so that it can be used in research and development is not asking a lot. If anything this money could be put to a proper use. It will be put to proper use by Atomic Energy, a corporation that has over the past decades done a tremendous amount of work in the area of research and development in the advancement of technology in Canada.

I have looked over the four different amendments and to me they make a lot of sense. I would say: why not? Normally when people sell an item it is because they are not satisfied with it. It is a white elephant, an item that is not generating any kind of revenue. They sell something because it is not serving the purpose.

My God, we have two world-class corporations about which every Canadian can be proud—those on the local scene and those on the international scene. We are planning to put them on the market so that we can sell them and so that we can get the funds.

I would say that if the government had been up front and indicated that all of the revenues from the sale of these corporations would go toward research and development, probably I would not have stood up in order to speak on this issue. But in the absence of any kind of assurances that the proceeds from the sale of these two corporations, if and when they are sold, will go toward research and development, I find it alarming for a great many reasons.

First, the Prime Minister himself day after day at every possible opportunity has spoken on the issue of research and development. I have a lot of admiration for everything that he has said so far on this issue. He has spoken on the issue of education. He has spoken on the importance of Canada being competitive in the international market. I appreciate that very much. But now I have seen the government proceeding with the sale of two of the finest corporations owned by Canadians without giving any kind of assurances that the proceeds will go toward research and development. It is quite alarming.

I would suggest to the minister and to the government that it is not too late. We still have some time. I would suggest that the government take these recommendations to heart, look at them, and if for whatever reason it finds out that the sale is not going to be beneficial, then we will talk about it at a later stage. In my view it is time for us to make this issue as important as it should be.

We have to elevate the issue of research and development to the point where it deserves to be. We have to tackle it with a little more aggressiveness than we have been doing in the past.

In my view this is nothing but the beginning. I would say putting Crown corporations on the table and putting them on the market to sell is a decision that this government has proceeded with, and I am not going to argue the pros or cons of it. But the subject before us deals with a matter of great importance. It needs the attention and the concern of members on all sides of the House.

Without going further into the debate, I know the minister is listening and I have a lot of respect for him. I know he understands the issue too well to let it go by without any serious consideration. I hope that the government will look at the amendments of the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke and act upon them.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like first to thank the House for this opportunity to speak on Bill C-13 and the amendments to it presented by my learned colleague from Renfrew.

First, I think it would be important to talk about the theory and the importance of the Tory ideology as it relates to the selling off of Crown corporations before we get involved in the bill itself. I think it would be important for the people of Canada to understand what we are doing here today as members of Parliament.

It is not so much the fact that we are selling off Crown corporations which is very difficult to stomach; it is the fact that we spend millions and millions of dollars of taxpayers' money to improve on a particular area that is deficient in our country, for example, research and development related to atomic energy. We get involved in that particular process at the taxpayers' expense. Once we get to a certain point in its evolution and its history, this particular government has decided that it is time to give it back to private enterprise. In itself that is not so bad. The situation that is really intolerable is the way it has been done.

First, lengthy debate did not take place before it happened. In reality there has been no debate at all. If the people of Canada knew just what is being given away and what is being put out there on the block and the fact that there is not going to be a lot of benefit to Canadians once it is sold, then I think there would be a large outcry by Canadians as it relates to that issue.

What really makes me nervous about this whole particular ideology is that there are other Crown corporations out there that have not been sold yet which the minister would love to get his hands on to give back to private enterprise. An example of this would be Canada Post. It will not happen just yet since it has not started to create enough of a profit.

That is a perfect example of an issue that in this particular term of this particular government could become a bit of a national debate in the sense that once it becomes a profitable corporation it would be much easier to sell. Therefore, when that takes place, we will be looking at the same type of philosophy that we are seeing now. It is simply this—there is no debate. It is being pushed through as quickly as possible so that Canadians will not realize what is happening. They have so much on their plate now.

We have the GST that is keeping everybody busy. We have the abortion bill about which everybody is in an uproar. Everybody is in such a disturbing state as it relates to the direction this particular government is taking that these lesser areas of emphasis, these smaller areas of change, may not be as visible and can go through without extensive debate. That in itself is a shame for a country that considers itself to be by far one of the most democratic countries in the world.

If the minister responsible for this bill was assured that this is the direction Canadians want to take, then why should there not be a debate? Why should this not be an issue for people to stand up and toss around their own ideas on, whether it be on the socialist side, the Liberal side, or the Conservative side?

Let us take a look at another area of major concern as it relates to this bill. I refer to the number of dollars that were pumped into these particular companies. The people of Canada felt that it was a responsible situation for past governments to get involved in. Now they are going to lose that feeling for that particular company because it is going to be put back in the private sector.

That is not so bad if there is a rationale behind it, but the minister and the government are bullying their way through the privatization of many Crown corporations, and we have no understanding as to why. The rationale behind this particular privatization is simply this: these companies will be more competitive in the international market.

I ask this simple question through you, Mr. Speaker, of the minister: If there are problems with marketing on the international scene, why not give that company the opportunity to allow for that change to take place? Therefore we would resolve that situation. Instead of selling off a very competitive company that is paying dividends to the taxpayers of Canada, after so many years of we taxpayers paying into it, here was a perfect opportunity for us to get some money back for a change, but once it becomes profitable this government wants to give it away. I have difficulty understanding the rationale for that.

What is really scary about all this is when we consider what may happen when CN becomes profitable. That should not be too long once it starts selling off everything and once it becomes a little bit more profitable. That may not be in this mandate, but it could be in a few mandates down the road. Maybe it will even make it in the next three or four years and this particular government will have the opportunity to give it away.

If we take a look at the number of dollars the taxpayers pumped into CN and the roadbeds that go with it, we see that we are talking about billions and billions of dollars. You will never get that back if you sell that company. But, then, does that matter to this particular government?

It is not so much the fact that we sell something that bothers us. It is how it is done and why it is done. That is the issue here. That is what we are debating here. My hon. colleague has put some amendments forward. They are good amendments because they protect the investment of the taxpayers of this country who have invested dearly in these companies.

I would like to ask the minister to stand up in his place and give us his rationale as to why we do not give the taxpayers of Canada some incentive to continue to buy these shares once these companies go on the open market, knowing that the taxpayers of Canada will receive some return.

Who is to say that the people who buy these shares will be Canadians? Who is to say it will not be some foreign investors who come in and buy the shares of this particular company? What will happen is that we will have companies operating in Canada that are owned in part by foreigners.

It is important for Canadians to understand that it is not so bad that a foreigner might buy a few shares of particular Crown corporations. What is drastically disgusting—and I think members opposite should look at this very seriously—is that more and more of the companies in this country are not owned by Canadians but by multinationals or subsidiaries of those multinationals. I think that is something of major importance in this debate. It is something we should look at seriously.

If the minister were serious in enhancing the debate on the privatization of Crown corporations in a more equitable and fulfilling manner for the members in this House, he would allow the committee to review and to ask to hear from a lot more witnesses than have been asked to come forward. They have their own feelings and ideas as to what the intent of these particular Crown corporations have been and will be in the future. They should decide whether we want to sell them off, as my colleague has said, for bargain basement prices or for nothing which is even worse. If that is the case and if it is acceptable to Canadians, we will agree with the government that that is the way to go.

In reality we know that Canadians do not want that. That is why the government is trying to ram this through. It is inappropriate. That is why the government wants this debate to be so short. I suggest we will continue on with this because it is a very important topic to Canadians.

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I too am delighted to take part in the debate on Bill C–13 this afternoon. I have had an opportunity to review the bill. I note at the very beginning that it is an act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited.

"Divestiture" is an interesting word. It could simply have said sale or sell out or give away. But, no, the government has to go to the dictionary and come up with a $64 word for a 64–cent idea. They are going to divest themselves of two companies. Who is "they"? It is the people of Canada who ultimately are divesting themselves of these two corporations. We know that the government has a fix on divesting itself, in effect a fix on divestiture.

In order to feed the habit it continues to bring bills before this House concerning more corporations that it believes should be sold to private enterprise, forgetting of course that Canadians have a history of being sold out to foreign ownership. In the short time that I have to discuss Bill C–13 I would like to concentrate on and in effect restrict my remarks to the aspects of non–resident ownership.

I would like to talk first about Nordion International Inc. Nordion International is responsible for the production and marketing of radiating isotopes used for medical and industrial purposes. How many of us know that? It happens to be one of the world leaders in this field. Here we are selling or about to sell—

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to clarify something.

Are we discussing and debating all the amendments now or just the first amendment of my colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke? We seem to be getting way off base here as to the topic.

I understand that what we should be debating now is the first amendment, Motion No. 1 put forward by my colleague from Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. We seem to be debating the philosophy of privatization. We seem to be debating ownership, and so on and so forth. I think the amendment we are debating now concerns royalties payable to AECL as I understand it.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on this point of order as well.

Of course my colleague was referring to exactly the point that the minister raised himself in his point of order. The minister, in his point of order, asked why we were discussing privatization in general, the philosophy of privatization, and so on. Very specifically, Motion No. 1 refers to that philosophy of privatization and offers a formula in which this privatization could offer a better return to the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I think the hon. member who has been in this chamber now for a while realizes what Motion No. 1 is. I know he is going to get to it. The hon. member on debate.

Mr. Wappel: Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely delighted that the minister was listening.

Mr. McDermid: This minister is always listening.

Mr. Wappel: We need a minister who will listen to members of this House once in a while and to the views of Canadians, other than the views that he thinks are the only views.

You are absolutely right, Mr. Speaker. I am going to be dealing with Motion No. 1.

Why in heaven's name would we be concerned about royalties if we were not concerned about ownership? One of the ways in which the hon. member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke has decided to try to help this minister to protect Canadians and protect their investments is in fact by way of Motion No. 1. His suggestion is a very reasonable one. It is that we have royalties.

What is wrong with that? Why is that some sort of an improper suggestion? I have not heard the minister come back and explain to us why it is inappropriate for the people of Canada to expect that once they have paid money into a corporation and helped it to become strong and competitive that we the Canadian people should not expect a little bit of return for our money. No, we are going to go ahead and sell this corporation. We have heard it from other members, it is to be sold at bargain basement prices. For goodness sake, if we are going to do that, if we are going to hand it out on a silver platter, surely the least that we could suggest to ourselves is: "Why do we not get some royalties"?

We know that when an inventor sells an invention it is almost de rigueur to request royalties in addition to a sale. We have built this corporation into a world-wide leader. When I say "we", I mean Canadians. We are all Canadians on both sides of the chamber. What we simply ask is a little return on our investment. The Conservatives should understand that philosophy. It is called business, return on investment. You do not sell a profitable corporation at bargain basement prices, first. If you do, at the very least let us get some royalties from it.

Let us examine the motion. The motion calls for royalties if any of the profits of either corporation exceed the sum of $10,000 in any calendar year.

First, what is the operative word? The operative word is "profit". Obviously if we do not have any profit in the corporation, we are not going to get any royalties. Surely we have enough faith in these corporations, since we are selling them and since we are going to be trying, we hope, to get the best price for them, that they are going to produce a profit. If they do produce a profit, why should we not get royalties? Ten thousand dollars is as good a figure as any other that we can pick. It seems to me that this is an eminently reasonable amendment proposed by my colleague, the member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. I do not see any reason why we should not support it.

But, no, the government wants to railroad, ramrod, push through, in any way it can a bill for which there is no hurry. What is the problem? Let us relax. Let us take our time. Let us make sure that what we are going to do is the appropriate thing to do. There is absolutely no reason to do it. Do we have five or six buyers waiting there with cheques in hand, but only if the company is sold tomorrow, not the next day or in January or in March? Of course we do not. There is no reason why we cannot wait or, if we are going to sell, get the best price possible.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands made another reasonable suggestion. He said: "Let's wait, let's wait a year". If you are intent on selling, let us wait until there is further and better corporate profits. Then we will get a better price and still get royalties.

I suggest that there are very few people in this country who would think that the idea of selling a Crown corporation, a profitable and world renowned corporation, and getting from that sale something more than some excess baggage cash to throw into this huge miasma of swamp land that we call the debt, not to have any effect but to get a yearly royalty in perpetuity or for as long as we can, is perfectly reasonable.

But, no. This government does not want to have anything to do with any reasonable suggestions. However, when we make a reasonable suggestion, when we put forward an amendment, what is the first thing that happens? It is immediately opposed. On the other hand, members of the government are constantly calling on us in these history lessons in every debate that we get involved in: "What would you do? Make a suggestion. Give us an idea". Then when we do, it is pooh-poohed.

I am afraid that what we should do is consider these amendments. Instead of browbeating, instead of heckling, instead of discussing the matter in an offhand and flippant manner, we should say that these are Canadian corporations and we will try to keep them Canadian. We will say that we will make sure that when we sell them we will get the best price possible, and even after we sell them we will get royalties. There is nothing wrong with that.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I hesitated to rise because I fully thought that the minister had stirred himself. I had heard some utterings a few minutes ago and I was fully expecting him to give the House some of his wisdom.

Mr. McDermid: We want to hear all the arguments first.

Mr. Simmons: There is a pleasant change, Mr. Speaker. The minister now wants to hear some arguments.

We have given him several arguments already. Of course the one that was so eloquently put by the gentleman from Scarborough West and the others who preceded him was the argument that the Canadian people who over the years have made possible the successful enterprises of Nordion and Theratronics initially through AECL, the same people who funded the research and who provided, if you like, the seed money are the ones who ought to be the benefactors. That is the burden of the resolution put down in Motion No. 1 by my friend for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke who sits here now beside me.

He has put down a number of good motions, including Motion No. 1 which gives an idea to the government as to how it can handle this situation and handle it to the benefit of the Canadian people. It is by ensuring that through a royalty process, an eminently sensible proposal I say to the minister, some funds will find their way back to AECL and de facto to the Canadian people to whose benefit they will be.

I wish that we had more time, but it will run out today in about four minutes. We have a number of other speakers and a number of other ideas. Let us be clear on what it is we are doing here.

Mr. Thatcher: Filibustering.

Mr. Simmons: The member for Lethbridge is not only with us; he is awake. While we have his undivided attention and the attention of other members opposite, let me say why it is we are standing here one after the other and talking about this issue. We are doing in the House of Commons what the Tory majority prevented us from doing in committee. We are going to continue to do it until somebody over there gets the message.

The message is fairly simple. It is that if you are going to privatize—and we are not now at this stage discussing the principle of the bill—if you and your majority are going to have your way on that particular issue, at the very least do it in a way that is palatable and rebounds to the benefit of the Canadian people.

We have had a number of proposals. My friend for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke and I represented this caucus in the committee. We had a number of proposals as to how this bill could be improved. As you know, Mr. Speaker, none is so deaf as he who will not hear. In that committee we had only two hours to address an issue that has raised health and safety concerns among Canadians from coast to coast.

They wrote us, phoned us, faxed us and said: "Can we appear before the committee?" The Canadian Cancer Society would dearly have liked to appear. A number of other eminent experts in the fields that relate to these bills would have liked to appear before the committee, but they were cut off at the knees. They were not given an opportunity. Only the president of Theratronics, the president of Nordion and the two union heads—only four people—were called to appear before the committee.

My friend from Renfrew and I put down a number of suggestions as to others who could be called. We had the permission to have them called. They were enthusiastic and willing to be called. Our colleagues in the NDP as well put down suggestions as to a number of organizations and individuals who and which ought to have been called before this committee, and far whom permission they had also been obtained.

What did the Tory majority do? Blindly it came in and applied a vote after only two hours and after hearing only four witnesses. We would hear nothing about the concern of Canadians, about health issues, issues relating to food irradiation, issues related to nuclear medicine. If that is the expanded process that the Prime Minister talked about in—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the hon. member.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

LEADERSHIP CAMPAIGNS

DISCLOSURE OF FUNDS

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): moved:

Private Members' Business

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider establishing spending limits and strict rules of disclosure listing all campaign contributions by source and amount for all Canadian political party leadership races.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we tried to put this resolution forward as far back as April 4, 1989, which is the date of the resolution. I must say that it is only a matter of coincidence that the resolution is now being debated, just after the NDP leadership contest.

However, it is probably instructive and supports the resolution to say that the NDP is probably the only political party in Canada that really has clearly defined rules with respect to campaign donations and disclosure of donations for leadership contests. In fact, these rules are set up and modelled after the Canada Elections Act.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, please accept my apologies to the hon. member who was speaking. I do regret that I have to interrupt my hon. friend and I hope that he will accept my apology.

I rise to designate tomorrow as an allotted day officially.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): The rules that we set up for the NDP leadership contest with respect to maximum spending limits, campaign donations, maximum donations are modelled along the lines of the Canada Elections Act.

The reason that the New Democratic Party sets up these rules is so that leadership contests can be conducted on a fair and equal basis between party members who are contesting for leadership, but also so that the people of Canada who are electing probably the most important offices in the House of Commons can have absolute certainty and absolute assurance that these offices are not purchased by people seeking political favours and seeking the right to influence leaders, but people who are governed by the same kind of strict rules that apply to the election of all members under the Canada Elections Act.

We feel that the rules that we have adopted and the rules that apply to Members of Parliament should also apply to members seeking the leadership of their parties. Others would say that political parties are groups that are independent of the House of Commons and that we have absolutely no right to interfere in their operations. As I say, the people who are selected as leaders of these parties will be sitting in the House of Commons leading their parties and also will have the opportunity at some time in the future to lead governments in this country. We should be absolutely clear and certain, and we should make sure that the people of Canada are absolutely clear and certain that their leaders have not been purchased as a result of people who are able to make large donations, influencing the outcome of leadership conventions.

I recall a national convention a few years back that attracted a lot of play in the media and on television. A lot of stories circulated around that convention about derelicts being purchased off the streets and given convention credentials. You may remember these stories, Mr. Speaker. As a result those derelicts who were not even members of the Conservative Party—I was not going to mention the party—ended up going to the convention with credentials and supporting a particular leader, and they will be available for the next convention to come.

If we have clear and well defined instructions laid down under the Canada Elections Act to restrict the amount of money that is spent by leadership candidates and to require disclosure as to who makes those donations, and also have limits on individual donations, then Canadians can be certain that their leadership is not purchased, but that it is won by democratic means within the existing political parties.

Therefore, I hope that all Members of the House of Commons will support this private member's motion and would back it to the hilt.

As a result of the disclosure requirements at the NDP convention in Winnipeg last week, there was a limit established for our leadership candidates of $150,000. Only one of the leadership candidates spent more than half of that sum. I think the maximum sum spent was $80,000. Most of the front-runners in that leadership campaign spent $30,000 to $40,000, a third of the limit. This is money that they expended in travelling back and forth across Canada to speak to hundreds of constituents and at public meetings across Canada and dealing with the media across Canada, in addition to all the expenses they had in the convention itself.

I have seen other examples of conventions. I will mention one in British Columbia so no one in this House will take offence. The convention in British Columbia was held in a facility owned by a close friend of the front-running leadership candidate. During the convention, that close friend of the front-running leadership candidate also paid the full campaign expenses of the candidates as they dropped off the ballot in order to assure that their votes would go to the front-runner and assure his leadership. That person became the premier of the province without even holding an elected seat in the legislature of British Columbia. His name was Bill Vander Zalm. He is still the premier but he is elected now.

The people of British Columbia got the idea as a result of that convention that the premiership of the province was up for sale and could be purchased by the candidate who had the wealthiest friends, and that is precisely what happened. That kind of thing should not be permitted to happen in Canada. This Parliament should be concerned that we have rules governing the election of leaders in political parties and that those rules are as strictly enforced as are the rules for all members under the Canada Elections Act so that we can be assured as well that the leadership of political parties is not up for sale and is conducted on a free, democratic and fair basis. Basically, all we are asking Parliament to do in this resolution is to make sure that leaderships are free and democratic within the major political parties in Canada.

I was reading the newspapers recently and saw that one candidate for the Liberal leadership was talking about raising $1 million in order to finance her leadership campaign. I will not mention her name, of course. She is not here today, but she was talking about raising $1 million to conduct a leadership campaign.

As I said, the person who spent the most in the NDP leadership campaign spent $80,000 out of a total expenditure limit of $150,000. She used that money to travel across Canada. She used that money to have her campaign workers make phone calls to all of the membership. She used that money to present herself and rent halls at public meetings. She used that money to buy all the necessary signs and trappings of a leadership campaign when it finally gets into the convention, and she only spent $80,000. What is a million dollars going to do? What is a million dollars going to buy that only required $80,000 in the case I just mentioned?

All we are asking is that that money be disclosed as to its source and that money be disclosed as to who donated it and what it was paid out for. We would not like to see money in leadership campaigns used as it has been in the past, to pay derelicts to come off the street and vote for people who may ultimately be the Prime Minister of Canada, or to pay members of youth groups to suddenly become members of a political party and end up on the floor of the convention voting for leaders.

We want to see this process be as fair, honest, and as straight up as possible. We want to see the people of Canada feel that their leaders have been elected democratically and not purchased by people who have big money and as a result those leaders are beholden to the highest bidders, to the highest donors. That is the reason for this motion. All members recognize that there are deficiencies in the Elections Act and in the expenditure provisions under the Elections Act. It does not cover that period prior to a nomination being obtained when a large amount of money can change hands and there is no real control over how that money changes hands in order to secure nominations.

The same is true of the way money changes hands at leadership conventions in order to purchase the votes of people who will vote at that convention. We want to make sure that it is as honest, as open and as up–front as possible. I hope that all members will support this very well advised private member's motion.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I of course rise to support the motion that has been proposed by my hon. friend from Comox—Alberni.

I know that he has laboured long in getting this motion before the House. I wish, frankly, that he had spent a little more time. One of the disappointments in having motions presented is that there is no concrete proposal on which we can vote. While I am happy to support this motion, it will not do anything. I wish he had worked and produced a private member's bill that we could send on to a committee. I know that my friends on the other side of the House would be glad to support such a motion because I know they have had difficulties with leadership conventions in the past where they have run into spending controls.

I wanted to talk about those briefly in proffering my support to the hon. member.

In 1983, as I recall, the Progressive Conservative Party had a leadership campaign and they announced certain disclosure rules in advance of that campaign. In fact, on July 16, 1975 it had certain rules for that particular campaign and they had the candidates all declare what it was they had spent. During the 1983 campaign, it has said there were no disclosure guidelines or spending restrictions, but certainly the press was able to give some estimates of the amount of money that was spent by each of the candidates during the course of the campaign.

It appears that they ranged from about $350,000 to about $750,000 which gives some indication of the profligacy shown by the hon. members opposite which, of course, has continued since they took office.

It amused me to see that the members opposite spent a lot of money making up songs. I was looking back to some old clippings in 1983. Perhaps some hon. members would like to hear some of them. The Prime Minister was alleged to have shelled out $3,000 for an original tune that was called Brian's Song. They used to sing this at the convention. I don't know the tune because I wasn't at that convention, I'm sorry to say. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you could sing it for us.

The song had words in it as follows:

> We will win together, together we will win.
>
> With Brian as our leader, our future will begin.
> We will win with Mulroney, with Mulroney we will win.
> We will win together—

I suggest hon. members opposite take a look at their position in the polls today and see if that song is still true. I suggest it is not.

Let's look at some of the others. Mr. Clark also had a song. We don't know how much this one cost, but it was:

> Clark for Canada, Canada for Joe.
> Clark for Canada, we're behind him, don't you know—

Well, they weren't. Then we had another one. Mr. Crosbie had a song:

> Come on John, come on John, come on John —
> Oh clap with me, I'll clap with you and we will win together—

They didn't all win together on that one either, Mr. Speaker, and it doesn't say how much that one cost.

The Minister of Finance had one by a group called The Travellers which sang a song called Join the Movement to Mike. Well, that one didn't work either. He should try that one now with the GST. Perhaps he would get more support.

On a more serious note, I think that the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Comox—Alberni is sensible, but I have one difficulty with it in respect of what the New Democratic Party proposes. As we all know, it has just been through a leadership convention. It was one of the most lack-lustre leadership conventions I think we have ever had for a political party in this country. I know they are all excited today, because after all the voting did take place just two days ago. The fact remains that until Friday evening no one was paying the remotest bit of attention to what was proposed to go on in Winnipeg. Part of the reason for that is the New Democratic Party was doing its best to make it appear that it was spending less than any of the other parties.

We have heard figures bandied about here this afternoon by the hon. member for Comox—Alberni. The NDP was busy trying to downplay its leadership convention. I can understand why it would. When you are a national party you really have to spend. We know that is why the limits would have to be higher for our party than for the New Democratic Party.

The member for Comox—Alberni suggested that somehow people joined the Liberal or Conservative party in order to vote for the leader. I am sure that is true. I am sure they joined in droves. The hon. member knows that. He knows that we will probably have twice as many delegates as they had in Winnipeg at our Calgary convention next June. I think he is aware that we will have a large number of youth delegates, unlike the New Democratic Party which had less than 100 youth delegates at its convention. There are millions of young people in Canada who were unrepresented, as such, at that convention.

He also knows that there were less than 100 delegates from Quebec, which is Canada's second largest province by far. They just were not there. The imbalances on a regional basis, the imbalances in terms of our population in general and demographics were marked at the New Democratic Party convention. I suggest, that when you are a western rump, you do not need to spend a lot of money running for the leadership. Your travel is restricted to a smaller area, you do not have to generate a national campaign. The hon. member for Comox—Alberni knows that to run for the leadership of the Liberal Party—and I will concede also for the Progressive Conservative Party—a national campaign is what is required.

Ms. Black: You only have one from B.C.

Mr. Milliken: The hon. member says we only have one from B.C.. But look at the quality of the person we have from B.C., and he happens to be the leader of the party.

Hon. members know that running a national campaign is a costly process. What I think the hon. member must do if he presents a bill on this subject at a future date, and I certainly hope he will, is recognize that the limit has to be realistic, not from the point of view of the New Democratic Party, but from the point of view of a national party in Canada. If he comes up with a figure that a national party can regard as reasonable and that the Canadian public would regard as reasonable from that perspective, he would come up with a bill that we would be happy to support and that we would find helpful.

I congratulate the New Democratic Party members for filing their donations. I think that is important. If we go back to the Conservative experience, it is that they are not making public the dollar amounts that have been put into these conventions. We know the difficulty it has led to.

We have all heard the allegations that have been made about the private dinner parties and the money that has come in from various sources. I asked a question of the Deputy Prime Minister just the other day about revealing the lists of persons who had received federal government contracts. It appears that there may be a list of this kind at the PC fund headquarters.

I invited the Deputy Prime Minister to tell the House, to take us into his confidence and let us know if in fact such a list is prepared and if it is sent over to PC fund headquarters in Ottawa or Toronto or wherever it happens to be. I do not know where it is. He declined to answer my question. He waffled, and we all know how he can waffle. The Deputy Prime Minister is a master at the art. He would not answer my question.

I asked a supplementary question. I said: "Would the Deputy Prime Minister instruct his bagmen to go to the commission that he has appointed and tell them all"? He would not answer that either. He suggested if I had ideas that I go to the commission and tell them what I thought they should hear. Well, I am happy to do that. I know the Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni would go with me to the commission. Perhaps we could make a joint presentation and ask the commission to investigate the sources of Tory fund raising for leadership purposes, among others.

Certainly it would be interesting to know who was on the list of donors who paid for the Prime Minister's leadership bid. He will not tell us about it. He would not even tell his friends in the Conservative Party about it. I do not know why he would not. All the other party candidates for that leadership campaign apparently revealed some of the information they had but the Prime Minister would not. I think had he done so, he would have allayed a lot of suspicion that I know the hon. member for Comox—Alberni feels and expressed in his speech. It would have allayed the suspicion we had in asking questions of the Deputy Prime Minister in this House the other day.

It is important that we bear in mind there is a commission established to look into these matters. I am hoping that the commission will make some firm recommendations to this House. In the meantime, if the hon. member who has proposed the motion would bring forward a bill, I would be happy to look at it and if it is satisfactory, support the bill. Certainly, the principles he has enunciated today would be helpful.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the motion of my colleague, the member for Comox—Alberni, proposes that the government should consider establishing spending limits and rules of disclosure listing all campaign contributions by source and amount for all Canadian political party leadership races.

Hon. members may recall that the government in its Speech from the Throne on April 3, 1989 announced its intention to appoint a commission of inquiry to make recommendations for needed changes and reforms to the electoral laws. On November 15, 1989 the Prime Minister in fact announced the establishment of such a commission of inquiry to be chaired by Mr. Pierre Lortie. Hon. members will be pleased to note that the terms of reference of the commission extend beyond the principles and process that should govern the election of members of the House of Commons to the question of financing of political parties.

The commission will be examining the means by which political parties should be funded, as well as the provision of funds to political parties from any source, the limits of such funding and the uses to which such funds ought to be or ought not to be put.

It is clear, therefore, that the government agrees that the whole area of the financing of political parties should be examined and that the government should consider whether it is appropriate to modify existing rules and to introduce new regulations, as well as any other changes which may be appropriate.

The matter of the laws concerning election of members of the House of Commons and the rules regulating political parties and candidates is, of course, of fundamental concern to members of this House and to the Canadian public.

The importance that the government places on this subject is reflected in the government's decision to establish the commission of inquiry. Referring the matter of electoral reform and party financing to a commission of inquiry is both appropriate and consistent with past practice. In fact, the blueprint for federal election expenses legislation was the 1966 report of the Committee on Election Expenses, better known as the Barbeau committee.

The chief electoral officer in his annual report tabled April 17, 1989 stated: "I believe that the conduct of a study of the type undertaken by the Barbeau committee would be very useful now in charting future courses of action and that such a study would be best conducted before major amendments are considered to the election expenses provision of our legislation".

The government is committed to changes being made to Canada's electoral laws, to make improvements to those laws, to maintain the integrity of our political system and to make voting easier and more accessible to Canadians. The commission which has been established will be reviewing the existing system and suggesting improvements which can be made.

I thank the hon. member for his interest in this area and I close by indicating that the government looks forward to receiving the recommendations of the Lortie commission.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is agreement on this motion, is there not? Does the House agree with the motion? I do not see any disagreement.

Is there a contribution that the hon. member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell would like to make?

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak in favour of the motion that has been proposed to us today by our colleague from Comox—Alberni.

It is, of course, an opportune time in a way to be discussing this issue, a rather academic one if you happen to be a New Democrat and you are speaking with regard to your own party. However, that is more coincidental than anything else because we all recognize of course that the member had this motion on the floor of the House as early as April 4, 1989.

We know that there has been a royal commission set up to look at the whole issue of electoral contributions in Canada. The party to which I belong is also in the process of getting organized for a future leadership campaign to take place during the second last week-end of June 1990.

We know of course that leadership campaigns are very costly. When some people start talking to me about running a national leadership campaign for $80,000, and when I look at the travel expenditures of individual MPs in the Public Accounts listed at the end of the year a number of whom have airline ticket expenditures which exceed $80,000, then I begin to ask myself just how logical is it for any one candidate to pretend that he or she could travel the whole country and not spend any more than $80,000 when for only one Member of Parliament, travelling with no staff or anything during a year that is the amount that one spends?

Obviously a leadership campaign that lasts half a year, assuming that the candidate was going no further than he or she normally goes during a regular off year, if I can put it that way, a year in which there is not a leadership campaign, well half of that amount would be spent anyway just on travelling. Obviously it costs a lot more than $80,000 if you happen to be a member of a national party with seats ranging from Newfoundland to Vancouver Quadra. It is indeed a very expensive proposition.

That being said, I am in favour of looking at this issue in the way that our colleague has suggested. I find it ironic for instance and perhaps sad to see that the laws at the present time are set up in such a way that contributions made to individual candidates for the leadership are not always fully disclosed. We all know of course that a party mechanism can be set up in order to ask various candidates to provide that information at the present time. Will it in fact happen remains to be seen in any political party. One has to remember that if funds are given to a political party, there is no way of knowing how much money actual riding associations collect at the present time.

For instance, if I or any other member is holding a fund raiser for our own constituency association of our political party, and we do that right now, sending the money to the central party for the purposes of receipting and then those funds going back to a riding association, which is the proper way of receiving those contributions, there is no way that the average person can find out which riding association benefited from these funds.

In my previous incarnation as a legislator in the Ontario legislature, the electoral laws in the province of Ontario provided .that each riding association had to make an annual declaration of funds that it received. When I was a provincial member it was easy for any citizen to find out what contributions my association had received during the year. Now that I am a federal member, there is no structure other than asking the riding association if it will volunteer that information, which we do of course in my association. There is no obligation to do that at the present time.

It would be a good idea for us to look at the implications of setting up systems like those so that we know how much not only leadership candidates are getting, but how much riding associations have in the bank, each constituency association of each party in Canada. I think that that should be public information. Right now it is not.

I think we should be able to find out that information in order to modernize the electoral financing laws that we have now. I suspect that most, hopefully all, of us are in a position where there is nothing that we want to hide and that being the case I hope we look at all of those issues, including the one of disclosure of campaign contributions for political party leadership races, amounts in the bank, amounts collected, amounts and sources of contributions held by constituency associations, in addition to the disclosure which we already have in terms of political parties.

Finally, it is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that at the present time constituency associations, or at least candidates' official agents during an election year are forced to disclose the funds that they generate or collect for the purposes of an election. But if it is outside of an election year the only information that is made available is to that political party for which the constituency association funds were destined.

In other words, we have a rather unusual situation right now in which we are being very careful, and appropriately so, during election years in terms of the amount of disclosure that is asked, but outside of election years the laws as I suggest need to be improved as well.

[Translation]

So I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, to support this initiative of our colleague from Comox—Alberni and I would hope that the House and maybe even the commission which has already been established to look into election campaign contributions will deal not only with the suggestion which the Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni has made to us but also with the suggesiton I made in the debate this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I had not originally intended to take part in the debate but I think after hearing a point that my colleague from Comox—Alberni made earlier in his initial presentation, I wanted the opportunity to rise briefly to embellish what I think is a very critical argument in support of my colleague's motion here today in the House.

We did have some humorous moments earlier as our friend from Kingston and the Islands related some rather humorous songs that have been purchased at great expense according to the other side in terms of leadership campaigns and I was just going to say to the member that he can rest assured that we will be researching the history of his party, the Liberal Party, to assure ourselves that there are probably also some rather interesting little anecdotes and songs that were presented in the Liberals, leadership contest.

I want to call this the "kingmaker" factor, or the "queenmaker" factor. There does seem to be in some leadership contests a critical need for a full disclosure of political contributions to those leadership campaigns. I want to go back to the point that my colleague had made earlier in his presentation when he discussed the leadership campaign of the Social Credit Party in 1986 in British Columbia.

To refresh everyone's memory, at that time then Premier Bill Bennett had stepped down from the leadership while he was still premier and had opened up the opportunity for a leadership contest for the party which essentially was paramount to the premiership of the province.

During that time there was a number of very influential business persons in British Columbia who got together and formed what was called the "Golden Twenty" club, a very influential corporate elite of B.C., getting together to basically hold court, and to call before them the corporate elite of British Columbia all the leadership hopefuls of the Social Credit Party to listen to their presentations as to why they should be anointed with not only the leadership of the party but the premiership of the province of British Columbia. Those 20 individuals, essentially, held the power in determining the outcome of that leadership convention that was held later on that year. Those 20 very influential individuals basically made the decision for the people of British Columbia, if you can believe it, as to who would be their next premier and which horse they would financially back in that leadership contest.

The concept of democracy, I suggest, went right out the window with that. The premier was anointed. The premier of British Columbia was anointed clearly by that inner sanctum of corporate elite. I suggest that this situation that happened in B.C. a few years ago would never have happened and could never have happened if the regulations had been entrenched in legislation that would force political parties to make public the corporation donations, financial donations, to the various leadership campaigns. There is simply no reason, no rationale, and certainly no argument in terms of democratic process, that this be allowed to take place.

Going back again, it was very clear that the premiership of the province of British Columbia was up for sale during 1986 and was clearly influenced by a very small handful of very influential, very powerful individuals who made the decision as to which horse they would back financially. I do not think that that is in the interests of any province and certainly not in the interests of Canada as a whole, or, in fact, any democracy when that kind of activity takes place. I think the legislation that is proposed through the motion would avert that kind of situation from happening in the future and that is why I am going to be supporting this motion today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe there is unanimous consent to approve the motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

SITTING SUSPENDED

I believe we will have to suspend the sitting until six o'clock because I do not see all the members in here for the late show. Therefore, I suspend the sitting until six o'clock.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 5.38 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.55 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38(1) deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, on November 30, the U.S. Congress passed amendments to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration Act that impose restrictions on the size of lobsters that can be sold in the United States. Specifically, no lobsters smaller than the designated U.S. body size of 8.1 centimetres will be allowed for sale. They call this conservation in the States.

We in Canada have had a size limit for lobsters for years. As long as I can remember, there has been a one pound lobster. In Canada there are seasons. It is only open for six months in South West Nova.

There are no limits on traps, no limits on entry in the United States, or on who can catch lobster. We in Canada have had a good conservation policy that has worked well. There have been plenty of one pound lobsters.

If and when President Bush signs this legislation into law, about 10 per cent of Nova Scotia's $130 million live lobster business may be seriously harmed. As Ron Bulmer, president of the Fisheries Council of Canada put it: "If you can't send $30 million worth of live lobster into the United States, where are you going to find a home for it"?

I first raised this issue in the House on October 18. I asked the hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans what specific actions his government had in mind to prevent these regulations from coming into effect. We know now that whatever actions the government did undertake were of no avail.

Last week, on the eve of his trip to Washington to visit President Bush, I raised this issue with the Prime Minister. I asked him then to assure the House that he would ask the President to veto the new legislation.

Neither the minister nor the Prime Minister have seen fit to let us know exactly what impact Canadian protests are having on the Americans. At least the only clear evidence is that Congress passed the law anyway.

Since the Prime Minister has clearly failed to use his friendship with the President to any positive advantage on this issue, I think we deserve to know precisely when the government will take more concrete action, specifically through the free trade agreement, to eliminate this offensive, trade restricting law.

Canadians are especially interested to know the government's plan in light of the recent free trade panel decision on our salmon and herring conservation program on the west coast. If that program were a restrictive trade practice then surely the dispute settlement panel would look upon the new lobster size regulations the same way.

This government has failed the fishery, both on the west coast and on the east coast. The Minister of Fisheries has been failing it as far as groundfish management and is now doing it in the very lucrative fishery of the lobster. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans did say that he felt the new regulations "would violate the principle of the free trade agreement". If he is being sincere, and if the government is serious about making sure that the free trade agreement is applied equitably, then we want to see action to back up these words.

It is a weak defence to say that we must wait and see what the President does before taking action since we know that the lobster regulations were attached as a rider to a large piece of legislation which the President cannot veto without throwing out the whole law. So it is unlikely that the President will do anything. Yet we have seen no action nor protest whatever from this government as to the lobster regulations in the States that were in that bill. We must be moving more quickly for a quick reference to the dispute settlement panel because the livelihood of some 6,700 Nova Scotia lobstermen and more from other Atlantic provinces is in jeopardy. If left unchallenged, the new regulations would seriously affect and continue to drive down lobster prices.

If there is anything we need in the Atlantic fishery, it is price stability. Fish prices have been fluctuating wildly this fall. The price of cod on the Portland auction, for example, fell from $1 a pound to 40 cents a pound in the space of one week in October, and that was our cod being caught off the Georges Bank by American fishermen, not Canadian fishermen.

If only as a bid to maintain price stability, we should work strongly to roll back these new regulations, not only for price stability, but because this is offensive legislation. It violates the free trade agreement. It shows that a senator from Maine was able to bring in, without any compassion at all a piece of legislation that will affect the lobster industry, in southern Nova Scotia and all of Nova Scotia without the Prime Minister knowing, having been assured by the President on Labour Day weekend that he would be told that there would be discussions. There have been no discussions with officials.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is another example of the Minister of Fisheries' lack of attention to the east coast. It is another example of how the free trade agreement is affecting one small area in the fishery. I do not want to talk about farm stabilization boards or anything like that at this time.

You will have to admit that this legislation in the United States is offensive, Mr. Speaker. The government opposite has done nothing to oppose it. We are going to be faced with a lowering of prices that will be very hard to take.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): I am tempted, Mr. Speaker, I am tempted. As a result of Canada's acceptance of the GATT panel decision on processing requirements for Pacific salmon and herring, it became apparent that there was a need for measures which would ensure the conservation and management concerns. Following acceptance of the GATT panel decision and extensive consultations with the province of British Columbia and the fishing industry, Canada announced a proposed landing system which would ensure that essential conservation and management concerns are met and the fishery remains viable into the future.

The United States expressed concern over the scope of the new landing regime and we undertook to discuss the new measures with it prior to implementation. During discussions with the United States, we explained the operation of our proposed landing system and that our view was that the system was GATT and FTA consistent.

The United States disagreed with our analysis and claimed that our landing requirement was trade-restrictive. Following further consultations, both parties agreed to submit the dispute to a free trade agreement chapter 18 panel.

The panel proceedings occurred during the summer months and its final report was received on October 16. The panel upheld Canada's sovereign right to conserve and manage the salmon and herring stocks on the west coast. The panel agreed that Canada could establish a landing requirement for salmon and herring but that the present requirements suffered from "overbreadth" in that it applied to 100 per cent of the stocks. However, the panel provided some useful suggestions for maintaining a landing requirement but permitting 10 to 20 per cent of certain fisheries to be exported at sea without compromising our conservation and management goals.

The situation respecting east coast lobsters is very different from that on the west coast where Canada implemented measures to ensure that conservation and management concerns were not compromised. The lobster measure passed by the United States Congress is a trade restriction inconsistent with either the GATT or the FTA which has been disguised as a conservation measure.

The United States has been advised that we will proceed to a dispute settlement panel under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement or under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade if Canadian lobster are restricted from the United States market.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my address this evening pertains to a question I asked the Minister of National Defence on September 29. The question essentially was with respect to the socioeconomic and the military impact studies that were done in relation to the announced closing of Canadian Forces Base Summerside.

The minister's response was limited by time. The Speaker had to move on, away from Question Period. I thought that I would like to examine some of the factors that were involved, looking at the military impact first. I want you to bear in mind, Sir, that it is not my purpose this evening to do anything with respect to the decision, other than to look at the impact study that I believe should have been done and some of the factors that certainly come to my mind with respect to this decision.

To begin with, looking at the military impact, I would remind the House that in Summerside, there are essentially a couple of main functions, one of which is 413 Search and Rescue Squadron consisting of three Buffalo helicopters and three Labrador aircraft.

• (1805)

Also there are two squadrons, MR-880 Squadron which essentially is a tracker or reconnaissance squadron, and 420 Air Reserve Squadron. The Air Reserve Squadron in fact is twin with the MRR Squadron and consists of air reservists who fly on their own time to contribute to the defence of the country.

Looking at the decision itself, the impact on the expenditure for the military was almost minuscule. It was one-half of 1 per cent. One wonders really what savings were achieved through that. I understand the difficulty of trying to match infrastructure and national defence with the present size of the force. There is a problem there.

Specifically I am zeroing in on the military impact in Summerside. These tracker aircraft were designed for operation strictly at sea. They were aircraft that flew off an aircraft carrier so that the whole construction of the aircraft is such that they are well suited to do operations at sea.

Their air frame itself, I am told, will be good until the year 2015. What we were looking at was the decision to re-engine them. The decision was made that they would not be re-engined. Therefore there will be no tracker. What we have lost is a capability gap. This is a capability gap of a medium range patrol aircraft in Canada that is organized, manned, controlled and run by the military.

The impact of that was such that a comment was made by the commander of the maritime air group, the change of command, on August 11, 1989. He said that he needed 48 to 60 medium range patrol aircraft to give Canada the ability to patrol its coastal waters. In his view he said that the medium range patrol aircraft was of the highest priority today in the maritime air group.

I would like to talk about this loss of capability added to the relocation of the search and rescue squadron 413 from Summerside to Greenwood. It is a fact that Summerside is strategically located, and I am making reference now to the Cross report of 1982 which was done as a result of a serious search and rescue incident off the east coast of Newfoundland, in Gabriela in 1976, and another serious and tragic incident off Prince Rupert on Christmas Day, 1979.

DND did a study and the Cross report among many other things indicated that Summerside was the most optimum location for search and rescue in the search and rescue region on the Atlantic coast. I am now talking about an area that is about two million square miles. The strategic location for a search and rescue squadron on which lives are dependent is a very important aspect.

Members who have been close to this in the House are very familiar with the study that was done by Major Gary Naylor and Lieutenant-Colonel Hopping. Major Naylor worked for me directly as a major when I was chief of staff of operations in maritime command. I can certainly attest to his professionalism and his total expertise in search and rescue. Therefore, if Major Naylor indicates that there is a problem and the location in Greenwood is not as optimum or as many lives would not be saved as would be if this were in Summerside, surely it is a serious military impact. I believe this should have been brought forth more to the Canadian public.

As far as the socioeconomic impact is concerned, I do not have to remind this House that we are looking at 1,300 jobs on the base, around 1,300 jobs in the community. The community size is 8,000 people. I am told by the experts in the business that this has the impact of 100,000 jobs in the metropolitan Toronto area. Were that to happen, I can assure you that there would be many members on both sides of this House asking for a military impact study, a socioeconomic impact study and every other kind of an impact study which has not yet been fully disclosed to the House.

I am going to close by mentioning the wind up of the Minister of National Defence in response to my question. I know the Minister of National Defence, probably because he ran out of time, did not mean what he said and would have liked to have added to it if he had not run out of time.

• (1810)

In reference to the devastating socioeconomic impact on the Summerside area, the minister said that we did not identify replacement opportunities or replacement economic activity and that. This is not the responsibility of the Department of National Defence. Well, no question, this may not be the responsibility of the Department of National Defence. But I believe it is very safe to say that it is the responsibility of the government to find something to replace that tremendous gap that is going to be there in 1991, 1992 or 1993, whenever that base is closed.

I believe the Canadian public, certainly the people of Summerside, the people of Atlantic Canada, the people on both sides of the House and everybody else needs to know what the impact of this is going to be.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, while no specific study was undertaken on the impact of the reductions and closures, a costing methodology was used to determine the projected savings of the base reduction and closure. This methodology examined such items as the impact of the reduction or closure of bases in the past on operational support, personnel and major equipment and facilities. In addition, experience gained through Cadin-Pinetree closures made it possible to keep any likely impact to a minimum.

To this end, DND and Employment and Immigration Canada are co-operating closely and, as the hon. member knows, local committees have been established to provide assistance to affected employees.

The hon. member should also be aware, and I am sure he is, that DND is co-operating fully with other agencies of the federal and provincial governments in their endeavours to identify suitable re-use for any facilities on bases to be closed or any surplus facilities on bases being reduced.

With regard to specific studies on the impact on military effectiveness as a result of closures or reductions, I am surprised that the hon. member would ask such a question. Indeed, the hon. member had a long and distinguished naval career and I am certain that he knows that every decision taken by the Department of National Defence is based on this very essential consideration.

For some time, Canada has maintained military installations in excess of the requirement of the current size of the Canadian Forces. The aim, therefore, is to achieve more efficient use of resources through the reduction or elimination of sites which no longer fill an operational need. I would add that this will not reduce our military effectiveness.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to again get involved in the question that I asked of the Minister of Transport on Monday, November 21, as it relates to VIA Rail and, more specifically, the elimination of the VIA Rail passenger route called The Canadian.

On that particular day, the question I raised was basically a question as it related to the figures I had been given by the VIA people in Winnipeg. Those particular figures that I suggested to the minister showed some very interesting and puzzling scenarios for the people of northwestern Ontario and, more important, for the people who ride on The Canadian.

Again I would like to relate those numbers to the government opposite and to the people of Canada to show that there seems to be some difficulty in the rationale put forward by the government which is, as the Prime Minister has said: "Use it or lose it".

I explained to the minister on that particular day that eight months is not a short period of time. The minister at the time said: "Well, if you want to put two weeks together or a month together, anybody can play with numbers". Eight months is a long period of time on a particular VIA run which, in essence, shows whether someone is using a particular route or not.

• (1815)

Just for the record, I would like to state the figures. The over-all ridership on The Canadian for that period of time was 93 per cent which is in all estimates pretty well full capacity. It has also been told to us by the people in VIA that it is considered that by 1993 they will be over capacity and will have to do something about that particular run and in essence put on more cars.

The Montreal to Vancouver train carried over 34,800 passengers, a load factor of 98.8 per cent. Travelling from the west to Montreal, the Vancouver train carried over 33,000 passengers, with a load factor of 98 per cent. In northwestern Ontario, the Toronto to Sudbury train which connects with the Montreal train carried over 8,580 passengers which is 85 per cent capacity while the Sudbury to Toronto train carried over 8,890 passengers which is 93.3 per cent capacity.

The reason I raised the question in the House of Commons was because of the scenario that the government has put forward on numerous occasions, that the reason these particular runs were eliminated was that nobody was riding them. As an ex-railroader I had a little difficulty with that particular scenario because I happen to know a lot about trains just in common practice. I went and did a little checking and found out from people who I know in the industry that lo and behold, this particular run is the most efficient run in all of Canada.

I was a little bit at a loss for words to understand what the scenario was. Then I found out something very interesting that happened during the cuts to VIA. Under the revamped network, VIA trains will travel on CN tracks 96 per cent of the time and on Canadian Pacific routes 4 per cent of the time in comparison to the 77 per cent and 23 per cent under the previous arrangements.

There has been a switch to running on CP tracks which happen to be the ones that are the majority of the track that The Canadian runs on in the southern routes to the northern CN route which also has a lack of people riding on these trains for one particular reason. It is not that people do not want to. It is just that in the northern route, fewer people live there. It makes me wonder what the scenario really is.

There are two reasons obviously. One is that if fewer people use the 50 per cent that is left, then they can justify getting rid of it and the other factor is that if they take a look at the amount of money that is paid to CN as far as rental of track per year, and if they took that away, CN would be in the hole. It would not be making a profit so there are two reasons why Mr. Lawless decided that this would be the best scenario for VIA.

I brought this matter up today because I wanted to give the government the opportunity to explain to me and Canadians, and particularly the people in northwestern Ontario, what its rationale really was for eliminating this very important piece of trackage. The figures show that there is no necessity.

There has been no environmental impact study. Again, I brought that up at a meeting of the environment committee and I asked environment officials if they could tell me exactly what the level of CO2 emissions would be once that roughly one million passengers would be using vehicles when the cuts went into effect. Basically they said: "We don't know that number," whereas the minister stood in his place in this House and said that the environmental impact would be negligible. If you do not know what the upper limit is as far as CO2 emissions are concerned, how can you say that 1 million cars more is negligible? In essence, the people in the Ministry of the Environment told me that that is an unknown factor, therefore, we cannot really tell you that answer.

I think that the government opposite has pulled a fast one on the Canadian people and has not shown the impact on the environment that this will have. Therefore, I think it is important that the government take a look at this particular route that I am talking about today which is The Canadian because it did not even look at options to improve the run. For example, in the summer, it is so full you cannot get on.

I suggest that if you want to eliminate the subsidy on a route like that, put more cars on in the summer when the tourism season is at its peak instead of just cutting the route completely and throwing hundreds of people out of a job, as well as affecting the tourism trade in an area of northern Ontario which I know for a fact foreigners come to on a regular basis by train because of its beauty and the magnitude of that particular geographical area.

• (1820)

In conclusion, I ask the parliamentary secretary to explain to me and to northwestern Ontarians and people who had The Canadian and no longer have it, what the rationale really is behind this particular cut-back to VIA and to what we call The Canadian.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Kenora—Rainy River for again raising this very important subject not only to his area, but also to people across the prairie provinces as well.

I might say to the hon. member that the decision to discontinue the passenger service provided by the western transcontinental train, or better known as The Canadian, was taken because the country cannot continue to provide the large subsidies required to operate the total service of VIA Rail and so there had to be cuts made within the VIA Rail system.

In 1988, The Canadian service carried approximately 545,000 passengers and had a load factor of some 70 per cent. The cost for this service exceeded revenues by $109 million. That was in 1988. The subsidy for each passenger who travelled on The Canadian was $199. Between January and October of this year The Canadian carried 466,000 passengers, an increase of 16 per cent over the ridership for the same period of the year before. The load factor for the first 10 months of this year was increased to 83.5 per cent.

It is true that during the summer months demands for space on these trains has exceeded supply, which the hon. member alluded to in his previous remarks. This is not a new situation. It has occurred in varying degrees for a number of years. However, it is not economically feasible to spend millions of dollars for passenger cars which are only used during the summer.

Even with the increased level of ridership, the service will require a subsidy in excess of $100 million for 1989. On the basis of this financial reality, the government stands by its decision to discontinue The Canadian. While the service over the route followed by The Canadian between Toronto and Vancouver via Thunder Bay and Calgary will be discontinued, transcontinental service will continue to be provided as stated in the October 4, 1989 announcement. The government has decided that a tri-weekly service will operate between Toronto and Vancouver via Sioux Lookout and Edmonton.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

The House adjourned at 6.23 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 11 a.m.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

REPORT OF DELEGATE ON THIRTY-FIFTH COMMONWEALTH PARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present, in both official languages, the report of the parliamentary delegation which participated in the thirty-fifth Commonwealth Parliamentary Conference in Barbados, October 6 to October 15, 1989.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of government bills.

POINT OF ORDER

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize the important issue that we are going to be discussing today on the motion of the Official Opposition.

Some time back I wrote a letter on behalf of my caucus to the Government House Leader indicating that if there was a need to introduce legislation to continue the variable entrance rates for the Unemployment Insurance Act, we would be prepared to do that expeditiously, and we would pass it with virtually no debate.

The point of my intervention is that I think we all appreciate the importance of the opposition day motion and I wonder if we could not save time and get on with other business by simply agreeing unanimously, if the need arises, to pass this legislation with no debate before the Christmas recess. It would allow us to get on with other business.

Just to ensure that my colleagues in the Official Opposition do not misinterpret what I am saying, I recognize this is their opposition day. We would be prepared to give up one of our opposition days to them on some other issue.

I wonder if we could perhaps seek unanimous consent to see if we could agree to introduce this necessary legislation without going through and spending a whole day debating its merits.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this new approach from the New Democratic Party. Obviously it was brought on by the election of a new leader, with an open approach where there is not going to be any more stalling of the past, where there will be no votes for leave to introduce bills or for first reading, where there will be very little debate and examination.

I am not sure from which position my hon. friend speaks because as of last night we learned there was quite a bit of deal making at the NDP convention. I am not sure, but one should check the tape to see if one is still the House Leader or the Whip in that particular case.

Despite the fact that this is such a generous offer, I have a little trouble handling it this early in the morning. What we will do is wait for the piece of legislation we sent to the Senate, one which was overwhelmingly supported by this House, and I know my hon. friends would have supported it had it not been for one or two adjustments. That was sent to the Senate some time ago.

We expect that the folks in the other place will want to deal with that expeditiously so that there will not be any unnecessary anxiety in the minds of people who are unfortunate enough to find themselves unemployed at this time of year.

We anticipate as it is such a good piece of legislation that it should come back virtually unamended because, after all, we the elected representatives sent this piece of legislation there. I expect we will get this piece of legislation back very soon. Despite the fact that I will accept the offer to give up an opposition day—we will try to use it expeditiously on government legislation—I do not really see any need at the present time to accept my hon. friend's offer.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments. First, one can hardly give up something one does not have. The two opposition days, today and tomorrow, happen to be days for the Official Opposition, not the third party in this House. I remind the government that it cannot start negotiating on the floor of the House something that it does not have.

• (1110)

Second, with respect to the overwhelming support of Bill C-21, I remind the minister that on both occasions they had to invoke closure to get the bill through the House. That is hardly what I call overwhelming support. It was a Tory promotion, a Tory—supported bill. It was not supported by the opposition nor by the Official Opposition. The minister's memory is getting shorter as he gets a little older. Indeed, closure on these matters is repugnant to Canadians and we will make that message clear in today's debate.

The point of today's debate is to get this government to understand that there are Canadians who will suffer because of this government's lack of trying to answer a very serious situation in this country where those who may be on the unemployment insurance program will not get the benefits of that program next year because of this government's failure to come to grips with legislation that is required urgently.

Mr. Riis: I regret that my hon. colleague did not see fit to accept my recommendation but perhaps that will be possible on another day. I want to echo the words of the opposition Whip that Bill C-21 is not a bill that this House unanimously adopted by any stretch of the imagination. Any piece of legislation that would adversely affect over one million Canadians financially is something that we, on this side of the House, certainly want nothing to do with. In an effort to co-operate and to get on with some good legislation eventually, we thought we would make this offer today. I appreciate that the government House leader will at least give it some thought in the future.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON FISCAL COMPENSATIONS GRANDED TO ISOLATED AND NOTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, today, in accordance with Standing Order 36, I wish to table a petition signed by men and women from Lebel-sur-Quévillon, directed against the task force on tax benefits for isolated and northern areas which has recommended that deductions for travel by northern workers for medical reasons should be phased out a year from now and that eligibility for tax benefits for isolated and northern communities should be restricted to areas north of the 51st parallel, 51:05oN.

Madam Speaker, the people of Lebel-sur-Quévillon reject the recommendations of the task force which failed to consider that according to the Government of Quebec, the north in Quebec, starts at the 49th parallel.

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICE TAX

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, today I have the honour and the privilege of tabling another petition against the goods and services tax.

[English]

Madam Speaker, the people here join the many thousands of other Canadians in protesting strongly this government's intention to impose a hidden 9 per cent sales tax on goods and services starting in January, 1991. The Canadians who signed this petition maintain that to have hidden taxes applying virtually to everything is a new imposition on Canadians. They strongly oppose this tax as an unprecedented tax grab from the pockets of Canadians that not only will result in higher taxes for those who can least afford it, that is those on low and middle incomes, but will produce higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment in this country, things we hardly need today.

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Pursuant to Standing Order 36 it is my duty and honour to present this petition which has been certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions.

It contains signatures of constituents in my riding of Cochrane—Superior, more specifically the town of Kapuskasing. They call on Parliament to reject the proposed 9 per cent goods and services tax as it will cause unfair hardship to low and middle-income Canadians, namely those of northern Ontario and northern Canada.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): I have the pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 signed by several hundred members of my riding concerning VIA Rail. The bulk of these petitioners are old age pensioners who are concerned about the reduction in rail service, including such very prominent people as Mrs. Len Shepherd, the wife of the former MLA.

They petition this government to not only stop the destruction of VIA Rail, but call upon the government to increase support for VIA Rail, to upgrade VIA Rail service and to guarantee the support necessary for a vital passenger rail service in this country.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 and certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions that points out a whole variety of reasons why the petitioners from British Columbia are opposed to the government's goods and services tax. They ask that Parliament encourage the government to step down from proceeding with this tax and to introduce a taxation system that would have a minimum corporate tax and ask that wealthy Canadians and corporations pay their fair share.

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, I, too, want to present another in a series of petitions from Burin—St. George's on the issue of the goods and services tax.

The good people from the communities of Doyles, South Branch, Codroy, St. Andrew's, Searston and Tompkin's believe that 31 tax increases by this government are enough. People of Millville, Parker's Cove, Stephenville Crossing, Port aux Basques, St. Vincent's, Robinson's, Highlands, St. David's, Grand Bruit, and Burnt Island, believe that this government which has already increased the manufactures' sales tax from 9 per cent to 13.5 per cent has done enough damage already.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the people in Milltown, Rose Blanche, Jeffrey's, Hermitage, Sandyville, St. Alban's and Burnt Island believe that this being a hidden tax is not the way to go, given the undertaking of the Minister of Finance.

I have great pleasure in presenting the petitions. I appeal to the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs to listen to what tens of thousands of Canadians are saying to him in petitions and to get behind this move to cancel this terrible tax.

ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to present to the House of Commons today a petition that is entitled "Help Save the Rouge". The petitioners are from Scarborough, Aurora, Toronto, Ajax and Markham. The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to work with the province of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as a provincial park.

They have joined with the Hon. David Crombie, who is the commissioner on the royal commission on the Future of the Toronto Waterfront, who has recommended that this be a park, the mayor of Scarborough, and the federal Minister of the Environment who has committed $10 million to save the valley. They are calling upon this government to work with the Ontario government to save the valley as a park.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition duly authorized under Standing Order 36. My petition is signed by people all the way from Saskatoon to St. Catharines; Welland, Ontario; Prince Albert, Saskatchewan; and Moose Jaw; Saskatchewan, who are pointing out that there will be millions of Canadians excluded from unemployment insurance claims if Bill C-21 goes forward.

They decry the fact that the government did not make any mention of these proposed changes during the past election and are calling on the government to adopt the recommendations of the Thirty-Third Parliament, Second Session, which much more adequately addresses the concerns of unemployed people.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, today I have the honour and privilege to present another petition signed by hundreds of residents of Hamilton Mountain.

These petitioners have spoken out overwhelmingly against the government's proposed 9 per cent goods and service tax. They believe the tax is unfair, that it places an unnecessary additional burden on low and middle-income Canadians. These petitioners humbly pray and call upon this House to reject the 9 per cent goods and service tax proposal.

AIR INDIA FLIGHT 181

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition that is a substantial one. I have a great number of signatures on this petition. It was collected by constituents in my riding of Kingston and the Islands who were concerned about the bombing of Air India Flight 181 and the fact that no inquiry has been held into the cause of that incident.

• (1120)

The petitioners call upon Parliament to urge the Government of Canada to immediately take steps to establish a public inquiry into the bombing of this Air-India flight to ensure that all the facts surrounding this very unfortunate incident in our aviation history are looked into at the earliest possible time.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty to rise today to file a petition with respect to the removal of oats from the Canadian Wheat Board.

This is a petition signed by a number of petitioners from Saskatchewan. They are concerned that the government removed oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board without proper consultation with either the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee or the major farm organizations in western Canada. They are concerned about the future of farm marketing boards and orderly marketing generally.

They call upon this government to replace oats under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to give oats and barley the same protection under the Canadian Wheat Board that wheat presently has.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Any more petitions?

Some Hon. Members: No.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

POINT OF ORDER

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I believe Your Honour is about to call Orders of the Day.

I want to raise a point of order because I think we in the opposition have a legitimate objection to voice today concerning the procedure that has been adopted by the government.

On Wednesday last when we were sitting, the government announced the order of business for today as being, as I recall it, the continuation of report stage and third reading of Bill C-19 followed by report stage and third reading of Bill C-15, the plant breeders' rights legislation.

Yesterday at five o'clock, the Minister of Justice came into the House. In fact it was shortly after five o'clock. He designated today as an opposition day. I recognize, as do all hon. members, that the government has the right to decide the order of business, but if we are to conduct the business of this House in anything like an orderly way I fail to understand why the government would even presume to make a change of this magnitude in the order of business to force an opposition day by surprise on us at five o'clock the previous day.

Members know that we have to give notice of our motion, and we managed to do that by six o'clock as required by the rules, but I submit that this is a totally unprecedented and improper way to deal with the business of this House.

If the government expects co-operation from the opposition in orderly debate as they have been getting—bills have been sailing through this place it seems to me—I do not understand why it would take this step. I recognize the right is there but I want to express, on behalf of the opposition, our complete abhorrence of this procedure that has been followed.

Had I known last night when the minister stood up and made the announcement that there had been no discussions about that possibility in advance of it, I would have been on my feet and objected. I was in the House at the time but I had no idea—I only assumed that there had been negotiations. I understand there have been none. That was a completely irresponsible act on the part of the government that, in my view, was uncalled for. I know the minister would apologize if he were here. I hope he will have his parliamentary assistant apologize for really an unprecedented and improper use of the rules of this House.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, I do want to make a couple of comments in response to this particular point of order.

First of all, I would like to say to the hon. member that I am not happy that we were required, on such short notice, to make today an allotted day. There are a number of circumstances that have been occurring. There were discussions going on between the three parties yesterday and a decision was made at the last moment that did not allow myself or my minister to touch base with the opposition parties.

I would also like to emphasize that the hon. member should know that there have been discussions going on in terms of a parliamentary schedule and calendar for over four days now. I think it is almost a week. We have been waiting for a detailed response. When we get that detailed response it makes it much easier for us, as a government, to lay out the agenda. It makes it much easier for the opposition, whether they be the Official Opposition or the third party, to plan their own lives and their schedules.

We are making every effort we possibly can to accommodate all the members of the House, to lay out a schedule that all of us would find acceptable and be able to live with. We are simply at this point waiting for a response and as soon as we have those responses then we can very likely avoid, except in very unusual circumstances, ending up in a situation where any member or any party is caught off guard by the legislative agenda for the next day or for the next hour.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I suppose the reply given by the parliamentary secretary will at least partially satisfy the hon. member who raised the point of order.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give urgent consideration to introducing in the immediate future a bill to extend the variable re-entry provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to assure full protection of workers in economically distressed regions;

That this House declare its willingness to pass such a measure in no more than one sitting; and

That, for greater certainty, this House declare that the passage of this motion does not constitute a vote of no-confidence in the government.

He said: Madam Speaker, let me explain the purpose of this rather complicated motion. I want to say immediately that there is a slight typographical error in the motion. In the fourth line where it says "extend the variable re-entry provisions", that should read "the variable entry provisions". But the principle of the motion is the same and I think most members understand that we mean variable entry provisions.

According to Section 6 of the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1971, individuals need 14 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. They need 14 weeks to qualify unless, of course, they are new entries into the workforce and then they need 20 weeks to qualify.

However, in 1977, the government of the day, a Liberal government at that time, introduced what is known as the variable entrance requirement whereby individuals would only need from 10 to 14 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits, depending on the rate of unemployment in their region. If they were living in a region which had very high unemployment, then they would only need 10 weeks to qualify for benefits. If they were living in a region with rather low unemployment, they would need 14 weeks. If the rate of unemployment was somewhere in between they would need 11, 12, or 13 weeks to qualify.

That was known as the variable entrance requirement and that was introduced in 1977 in a short one-page bill, but it was only introduced for the following year, 1978. It terminated at the end of the year.

From that year on, every year the government of the day re-introduced the variable entrance requirement for one year only, usually in the month of December, and it did it with a short one-paragraph or one-clause bill which extended this variable entrance requirement for the following year.

For one reason or another that I do not understand, neither the Liberal governments of Mr. Trudeau nor the Conservative governments of Mr. Clark or Mr. Mulroney made this a permanent thing. They simply extended it from year to year, always doing it in the month of December in a short one-page bill, and there was very little debate on that bill, usually lasting half a day.

The last time that this variable entrance requirement was extended was with Bill C-158, on September 29, 1988, just before the call of the last election. Bill C-158 extended the variable entrance requirement for all of 1989, this year, until January 6, 1990, when it expires. So the variable entrance requirement of 10 to 14 weeks will expire on January 6, 1990. That is where we stand with the variable entrance requirement.

This year, as all members know, the government introduced and passed in this House Bill C-21 which implemented very extensive changes to the unemployment insurance program. It introduced rather massive cuts to the benefits, made it more difficult to qualify, increased penalties for those who quit without just cause and terminated the government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund, which last year was $2.8 billion.

In other words, Bill C-21 brought about very extensive changes in the unemployment insurance program, including a change whereby to qualify for unemployment insurance, one would require 10 to 20 weeks. That provision in Bill C-21 which sets out the qualifying period as ranging from 10 to 20 weeks would replace the 14-weeks' qualification period which is found in Section 6 of the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1971 and would also replace the 10 to 14 week variable entrance requirement which we have had year by year since 1977.

Bill C-21 was passed in this House on the evening of November 6. Bill C-21 went to the Senate on November 7, but as hon. members know, Parliament did not sit from November 11 to November 19 for the Remembrance Day recess and immediately after that, the Senate started debate on the bill and sent it to its committee last week. Committee hearings have already started in the Senate.

The problem is this. As I said, Bill C-21 introduces rather extensive changes to the unemployment insurance program. There is a reduction of benefits of $1.5 billion, which money is allocated to other purposes. There is an increased cost to employers and employees. There is a shift to welfare systems because if workers do not qualify for unemployment insurance or their benefits are terminated sooner and they do not have work, then they have to rely on welfare, and welfare is taken care of by provinces and municipalities.

There is a loss to provinces due to the fact that moneys which went into provinces in the form of benefits will no longer go into those provinces to the same degree, and consequently the provinces do not know whether some of the developmental moneys will go to them to the same extent as the benefits did. In any case, Bill C–21 implements very extensive changes to the unemployment insurance system and I think the government would admit that itself. The government thinks those changes are good. We do not think they are very good.

Last year, there were 2.2 million claimants under the unemployment insurance program. That is a great number of Canadians. Some claims were for regular benefits and some were for the special benefits. The program last year was an $11–billion–plus program. The unemployment insurance program is the largest income–support program in Canada.

As I say, the bill went to the Senate on November 7. There was the recess for Remembrance Day of one week, and the Senate has started its hearings. I received information this morning that the Clerk of the Senate has already received 159 requests from groups and individuals asking to be heard on this bill, because they feel it impacts, in one way or another, on them and on the people they represent.

I also point out that in the House of Commons while we had committee hearings in the fall for four weeks and we heard as many groups as we could, we still turned down a large number of groups. We turned down, in fact, 127 individuals and groups, some for good reason but some simply because we did not have the time, due to the fact that we had to report the bill back by a fixed date.

The Senate is faced with a situation where it has had a very high number of requests to be heard on this bill by people who seriously want to give their views, and these people will have to be heard before December 22 when the Christmas recess starts. It is impossible for the Senate to dispose of Bill C–21 by that date. To have proper hearings, it would have to advertise and it would have to give groups time to prepare their briefs and so on. That is just the proper thing to do.

We are not talking about the Senate blocking the bill or unduly delaying the bill. We are talking about giving the Senate a reasonable amount of time to deal with those groups that want to be heard.

While we heard from a lot of trade unions, social groups, chambers of commerce and so on in the House of Commons committee, we did not hear from any provincial governments or provincial ministers, although some wanted to be heard. The Premier of New Brunswick wanted to be heard. Ministers from Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia wanted to be heard. We had to make a decision that we could not hear them.

We also did not hear from Mr. Forget who was the chairman of the royal commission established by the Conservative government in the last Parliament. He had spent more than a year studying the unemployment insurance program, but we did not hear from him. We did not hear from the Economic Council or from the Canadian Council for Labour Market Productivity or from other academics. We heard from a lot of grass–roots groups, but we did not hear from a lot of people who wanted to be heard and should have been heard.

If Bill C–21 is not passed by January 6, and if the government does not bring in the usual bill to extend the variable entrance requirement, then it means that the standard flat qualification period across the country will be 14 weeks. If that is the case, that goes against the government's own policy of having a minimum qualification period of 10 weeks. It means that everybody will require 14 weeks to qualify until Bill C–21 is passed or unless the government introduces the variable entrance requirement.

The way to overcome this, and I say this in good faith and with the hope that the government will listen to reason, is to bring in once again either a one–page bill to extend the variable entrance requirement like the government did in September 1988 through Bill C–158, or put to the House a resolution which is provided for in Bill C–158 simply to extend the variable entrance requirement for two or three months. That is just enough time to give the Senate time to have a reasonable amount of time for hearings on Bill C–21.

According to my reading of Bill C–158, it allows the government to introduce a resolution which is approved by the Governor in Council to extend the variable entrance requirement for a time that could be open to negotiation, whether it was for two, three or four months or whatever. I suggest to the government that is another way of doing this, either by a bill or by a resolution as provided for in Bill C–158.

We want to make clear that if the government did introduce such a bill to extend the variable entrance requirement, or if it introduced a resolution to extend it, we in this party would pass such a bill or resolution without any debate whatsoever. In the motion put to the House, we say we would pass it in less than one sitting. I give the commitment that we would not debate it at all. The motion or the resolution would be passed in a few minutes, as far as we are concerned.

We also say in this motion that we do not consider this motion to be a want of confidence motion. It is simply a plea to the government to do what it has done and what other governments have done year after year in the month of December, and that is to extend the variable entrance requirement.

7 I want to repeat that we are talking about the largest social income support program in Canada. It is a program that has ranged between $11 and $13 billion per year. This bill introduces massive changes to the program. The government thinks they are good changes, and we do not think they are. Some of them are good. Some of the provisions with respect to parental care and so on and benefits for senior citizens we approve of, but most of the bill we do not approve of, but that is beside the point. The point is that many Canadians are affected by this bill and they want to be heard. It is their democratic right to be heard.

I also point out to the government that it used closure at both second and third reading on this bill. At second reading, we only had one full day and two half days of debate. At third reading and report stage, we only had three and a half days of debate.

• (1140)

Another reason the government should consider introducing the variable entrance requirement or extending it for a period of time is that the government itself in Bill C–21 accepted that the minimum period for qualification should be 10 weeks, and I cannot understand why it would penalize people by allowing the 14–week minimum to apply for a month or two while Canadian groups are being heard on Bill C–21. If government members really believe that 10 weeks should be the minimum period for qualification in high unemployment regions, then they should introduce the variable entrance requirement bill.

Another reason why they should do this is that the day after we completed the debate and the vote on third reading on Bill C–21 in this House, the government produced its new program for new unemployment insurance regions. This means that when we were discussing and debating Bill C–21, we did not know what those new regions would be.

When the groups that appeared before the House of Commons committee made their points known, they did not know what those new regions would be. As a matter of fact, those new regions changed the impact of Bill C–21. This is a further reason why we should allow the Senate a reasonable period of time to hear views on the bill now that those many groups know the proposals for the new regions.

In conclusion, let me sum up by saying that by this motion we are asking the government simply to extend the variable entrance requirement as it has done every year since it has taken office, as Liberal governments before it did, as the Clark government did. We ask the government to extend the variable entrance requirement by a bill or by a motion but not necessarily for a year as in the past, but simply for a fixed period of time which is a reasonable period of time to complete the hearings on Bill C–21 in the Senate. I am sure that that extension can be negotiated in a reasonable way in good faith.

We are asking that the government extend the variable entrance requirement because it is totally unreasonable to ask the Senate to finish its debate on Bill C–21 before Christmas. It is unreasonable to ask that because 159 groups have asked to be heard. I am not saying that all those groups deserve to be heard but at least half of them will be reasonable.

I have the list of groups wishing to be heard here. I could go through the list. They are from all parts of the country. Some of them are associations of adoptive parents, some of them are consumer counselling groups, some of them are trade unions, some of them are business associations and so on. I am not saying that all the groups that have asked the Senate to be heard should be heard, but certainly a good number of them should.

We are asking that because these people want to be heard on a major matter. This is not a minor matter. This is a very important bill. As I said, it deals with a program that last years was worth $11 billion. In the bill, the government cuts back benefits by $1.5 billion and relocates those moneys. Last year, there were 2.2 million claimants under the unemployment insurance program. That is a lot of Canadians and these people have a right to be heard.

With respect to the regions and the provinces, the impact will be considerable. For example, in Newfoundland, according to the Canadian Labour Congress study—I know the government does not agree with it but even it agrees that there will be a loss of money in the form of benefits to Newfoundland—it estimates that the loss to Newfoundland would be $51 million in benefits; the loss to Prince Edward Island, $32 million; the loss to Nova Scotia, $29 million; the loss to New Brunswick, $148 million; and the loss to Quebec, $224 million.

The government will say that it intends to put back some of those moneys in the form of training and development but there is no assurance in the bill that those moneys will go back to the province that is losing them in the form of benefits. If there are people unemployed, for example, in Nova Scotia and their benefits are cut and the total loss to Nova Scotia in the form of benefits as a result of a more difficult qualification period and a shorter benefit period is $29 million, the province is concerned that that money is not going to be going to Nova Scotia with all that unemployment. It wants some assurance that the money is going to come back and that is why the provincial ministers wanted to appear. By the way, they have already applied to appear before the Senate committee. They want time to prepare themselves and so on.

There is good reason for the government to extend the variable entrance requirement for several months but not necessarily for the whole year. There is good reason to accept the fact that many groups that have not been heard should be heard on this bill, if they believe in democracy on that side of the House. There is good reason for the regions to be concerned that they will be short-changed as a result of Bill C-21.

I emphasize that what we are asking for today is not to be considered a vote of confidence. What we are asking for is a motion or a bill to extend the variable entrance requirement and we in this party make the commitment that we would not debate the measure at all. We would pass it immediately if the minister brought it in as has been done in previous years in the month of December.

As we approach the Christmas season, I appeal to the government to be sensible on this, to show some kindness and understanding and to accept the fact that both Houses of this Parliament need to debate and consider measures. We hope that it will bring in, as it has done in previous years, the variable entrance requirement measure to extend it for three or four months or whatever is reasonable in the circumstances. I hope before the day is over and after listening to the minister, she will agree to that.

I know she may say as the House leader said, "Well, let the Senate pass it in a few weeks". I hope that she would reconsider that because if the Senators do that, they are going to turn down many serious groups that want to be heard on the bill. As I say, let us just give them a few weeks to discuss this and have hearings on a bill of such importance.

Members opposite agree that this bill is of great importance. They think it is one of the major planks in their reform as they see it. If that is the case, if they have great confidence in their measure, then I suggest they should give ample time, not unreasonable time and not time to block the measure, but reasonable time to deal with this.

I plead with the minister to bring in a measure to extend the variable entrance requirement. It will not be a question of confidence in the government and we will pass it without any debate whatsoever.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): As the member for Kamloops mentioned earlier this morning, he wrote a letter to the government House leader. With the permission of the House, I would like to read bits of it. There is no use reading it all:

> For years all parties have cooperated to give swift passage to an annual bill which provides entrance requirements for UI, and enabled Canadians living in regions of high unemployment to receive benefits with a shorter eligibility period. C-21 was expected to obviate the need for such a bill this year.

He concludes by saying:

> I suggest it would be most prudent for the House to pass in the customary one-sitting fashion a bill to extend varying entrance requirements until such time as C-21 is proclaimed.

I would like to commend the Official Opposition for having brought this matter before the House today on its opposition day. I think it is worth repeating parts of that motion as well:

> That this House declare its willingness to pass such a measure in no more than one sitting; and
> That, for greater certainty, this House declare that the passage of this motion does not constitute a vote of non-confidence in the government.

From the point of view of the opposition, I cannot think of anything which would be more indicative of the desire of the Opposition to co-operate with the government in alleviating what is going to be a very severe situation for some people who become unemployed if the action which has taken place in previous years is not also taken this year.

• (1150)

I have no idea what the Senate will do with Bill C-21. I do not know if what the Senate does with Bill C-21 is the pertinent issue facing us today or over the next few weeks. The pertinent issue is that there are going to be people who need unemployment assistance, and unless we make the usual yearly accommodation for the varying rates, people are going to suffer. That is the issue.

The fact of the matter is, of course, that Bill C-21 is also an issue in this and I suspect that what really is occurring is that the government is using the fact that the bill is in the Senate and may or may not be held up as a weapon to force the Senate to come back quickly with the legislation so it can be in place by January 6. I think that is shameful, shameful but I guess understandable.

This is not all that much of a departure from the actions of the government over the last six or seven months since Bill C-21 was first introduced. Bill C-21 itself is a very severe measure and I think it can be interpreted in almost all respects as being a measure to punish those who become unemployed. There is no other way to see it, in spite of the fact that the government claims it is a new measure which will take Canada into the 21st Century.

In a previous speech I made in the House, I referred to it as being into the 20th century. I think that is far more applicable. We are not going from the 19th to the 20th Century, but probably more likely from the 20th back to the 19th. We certainly are not going into the 21st century with this legislation.

At every stage of the passage of Bill C-21 through the House, the government introduced closure. I do not know in this context if it is acceptable to use the word "lie" or not, but it gives the lie, I think, to the government's assurance that it had unanimous approval of the House when the bill went to the Senate. If I cannot use that word, at least it certainly casts into a great deal of doubt whether or not the bill going to the Senate had the unanimous approval of this House. It certainly was not overwhelming at all, it was overwhelming opposition, not only by the members of the opposition, but by the Canadian public expressing itself before the committee as the committee did its work across the country.

The fact that the government is doing what it is doing in relation to the non-extension of variable entrance requirements and the fact that I think it used closure—I think closure is also one of the things which ties in so closely with what the government is doing—is a very good example that indeed this is not a progressive measure at all, at least in so far as those who have become unemployed are concerned. It may be in so far as some yet to be explained, yet to become obvious agenda of the government. It may be beneficial in some sense but not in so far as the unemployed are concerned or even as the training which the government so frequently expressed as being one of the underlying reasons for it to do what it is doing is concerned.

What is really happening as far as Bill C-21 is concerned, as far as the non-approval of the varying entrance requirements is concerned, is that the government is indicating in no uncertain terms to the House and to the Canadian public where it stands.

Where the government stands is not at all on the side of the oppressed, but it is in fact becoming one of the major oppressors in the social fabric of Canada by using people who are in such an unfortunate situation as pawns in what is only a perceived argument between itself and the Senate.

Oppressed may possibly be a strong word, but let us look at the group of people who will be primarily affected by Bill C-21 and as well by the non-passage of the variable entrance requirements for people who become unemployed.

I have a list here of some of the jobs that are available. We keep hearing reference made to all these jobs that are available. If time permits, I will probably be making reference to those a little bit later, but for the time being, I would like to refer to some of the hourly rates that are available for some of the jobs that one would find if you went to the local unemployment insurance office: A delivery driver, $5 an hour; a landscape worker; $7 an hour; a seamstress, rather a highly skilled person, I would suggest, a mere $5.50 an hour; and floorwalkers, $5.25 an hour.

An Hon. Member: Did he say streetwalker?

Mr. Fisher: If we go into another region of Canada, we find that waiter/waitresses are making the princely sum of $4.50 an hour.

I think that was an uncalled for reference. Streetwalker, no, I think not. I doubt if too many members of the opposition have much of an idea of what a streetwalker would be making.

A fish plant worker—the list goes on and on and the rates go on and on. I would like to point out that those are an extremely disadvantaged group of people when we are talking about unemployment insurance which is precisely what we are talking about. These are people who are making those rates, the highest of which I see on my list is $8 an hour which in a year is somewhere around $16,500. For even a single person, that is below the poverty level in most regions of the country.

Even at that, if you become unemployed, that is not the rate you receive. If you were making $5 an hour when you were working and you become unemployed, the rate you now receive is $3 an hour because you receive only 60 per cent. Part of the rationale of the government bringing in Bill C-21 in the first place was because the system was being so severely abused. Can you imagine anyone quitting work intentionally, making $5 an hour so that they can subsequently earn $3? I think it shows how abusive, crass and uncaring, and, yes, how oppressing, Bill C-21 is.

Speaking of quitting, on that same job of $5 an hour, going to $3 an hour under ordinary circumstances, after a waiting period, of course, which will be increased by Bill C-21, if you quit voluntarily without just cause which, with all due respect to some changes in Bill C-21, is still going to be difficult enough to substantiate even in the most extreme cases of unsafe work places, racial and sexual discrimination and so on, the rate you would be receiving on unemployment insurance would be $2.50 an hour. It varies accordingly if you happen to be fortunate enough to make $6 an hour. At the 60 per cent rate, you would be earning $3.60, but if you quit for any of the justifiable reasons, then, of course, you do not receive a penalty after you have established that it was justifiable, you would receive the $3.60. But if you could not substantiate it, you would receive a mere $3 an hour. That is not a lot of money, and certainly not something that anyone is going to get wealthy on.

• (1200)

These are the people whom the government is holding to ransom with respect to the non-voluntary passage today, if you will. Certainly the New Democratic Party is willing, as is the Official Opposition having already stated so, to pass that legislation with no interference whatsoever. I suspect that if we were to do it in the usual manner, you may possibly miss it if you blinked. It could be accomplished that quickly.

Another disturbing aspect of what I have just finished describing is that most of these people are women. Many of them are single-parent mothers who, in addition to not making very much money and having a tremendously difficult time supporting their families on low rates of pay, are also working part-time jobs.

I know the government has reiterated many times that it has created more than a million jobs, but the fact of the matter is that statistics show that most of these people are still working part time. The way statistics operate, the way Statistics Canada does its reporting, one has to work the required number of hours a month to be able to qualify as a full-time worker.

Many of these people are working at two and perhaps three jobs and, believe it or not, the hours are cumulative in so far as the reporting of the numbers are concerned. Persons working at perhaps as many as three jobs would be classified as being full-time workers if they put in the required number which I believe is 28 hours per week. These are the people who are being held to ransom as a result of the non-voluntary, quick passage of the legislation which has gone through so expediently in previous years.

We have not really talked about another group of Canadian citizens who are going to be tremendously adversely affected should this not receive quick passage. I refer to the single- parent mothers and of course that implies there are children involved. I refer not only to single-parent mothers. Of course there are men who work at these low-paying jobs as well. Not being able to qualify for unemployment insurance in a reasonable length of time in an area with very high unemployment will severely affect even more children than it will people unemployed.

The number of people who will be unemployed is a rather interesting subject to talk about. Earlier on in history, not early in the history of Bill C-21 but about midway through, after the opposition parties had been trying for a long period of time to get the impact figures on the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, government numbers showed that somewhere around 30,000 would be totally excluded. Subsequent studies have shown that the numbers are much greater than that, ranging as high as 150,000. Probably a figure of 130,000 would be very close to the number of people excluded all together from receiving unemployment insurance, bearing in mind that the people we are talking about are very low-paid workers, part-time workers, mostly women.

Again I remind the House and Canadians that that is only the number of individuals who will not be receiving unemployment benefits. It does not—and I want to emphasize this—take into account the numbers of children who will be so adversely affected by these changes in Bill C-21 and by the non-passage of the variable entrance requirements rates.

I would remind the House that a week or a week and a half ago we had a New Democratic Party opposition day with reference to the plight of children, the tremendously dire conditions in which so many of these absolutely defenceless Canadian citizens find themselves through absolutely no fault of their own. I would suggest that their unemployed parents find themselves in that position for the most part, for the overwhelming part, through no fault of their own as well.

I would certainly commend the previous leader of our party for having spoken so eloquently on the subject of starvation among children in Canada and their plight. I think that is something we must remember when we talk about the issues before the House today.

I guess it becomes part of the social balance sheet. When the committee travelled across the country we heard representations from a large group of people. There is no question about that. When we were in northern Ontario reference began to be made by cities and municipalities which were speaking not only for themselves but for the provinces in which they were located. The city of Vancouver felt so strongly about the changes which were going to be occurring and the adverse effect which was going to be felt by it that the mayor of the city of Vancouver made the presentation on behalf of the city.

The imbalance in the social balance sheet is going to come about as a result of not implementing the variable rates for however long a period. I would not even want to put a time limit on it, for however long it requires for the democratic process to wend its way through the system it is going to be tremendously severe as are the changes to Bill C-21. We have these two things going along in an almost parallel fashion.

The government is going to have to one day wake up to the fact that it has made a tremendous mistake in judging the temperament of the Canadian people, in thinking that Canadian people would accept these changes to such a valuable social program.

I reiterate that the New Democratic Party is willing, as the member for Kamloops indicated, to pass this as speedily as possible so that the dire effects of not passing it do not necessarily have to come to pass. Certainly, if it does not happen, the government will have this down upon its head and will have to suffer the consequences.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, without question this is a very important motion that we are debating today, and I do welcome this opportunity. I thank the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce for raising this issue because it is an important one.

I remind the House that it passed Bill C-21, an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, last November 7. In so doing the House assured the full protection of all workers across Canada who found themselves in economically distressed regions or circumstances.

• (1210)

While I welcome the debate the motion is an unfortunate one. Year after year governments have extended the variable entry requirement each time for only one more year. In contrast, this government has presented Bill C–21 as a genuine response to regional variations. Bill C–21 not only provides for the variable entrance requirements but it does so on a permanent basis. In effect it provides all Canadians with fair access to income support in times of unemployment.

Yet, while this government has demonstrated leadership by introducing the Labour Force Development Strategy, our friends across the way are spinning their wheels in the mind set of a decade ago.

[Translation]

During the past five years, this government has taken measures that previous administrations had scrupulously avoided. The challenges of the 1990s demand genuine leadership, real solutions and at times, the ability to make difficult choices.

The government has shown that leadership, not only by making changes in the unemployment insurance program but also by setting up agreements for regional economic development, obtaining the free trade agreement and providing for prosperity and growth, a fact that did not escape the OECD. And on top of that, we have created jobs, real jobs, more than one million since 1984.

[English]

We have replaced the former make–work programs of the former government with concrete long–term strategies for job creation that spell greater opportunities for the development of our human resources and for individual achievement. Bill C–21 is part and parcel of this government's Labour Force Development Strategy which provides for an additional $775 million in new programming to meet the needs of the unemployed and to upgrade the skills of the labour force.

Bill C–21 calls for change, yes, but it does so in a balanced and fair manner, and it does so in particular by providing for a flexible variable entrance requirement.

Let me remind the House of the other ways that Bill C–21 will help Canadians. With the goal of developing our human resources, Bill C–21 significantly increases funding for training under section 26 and the new subsection 26(1) of the UI Act. In total $1 billion will be available from the UI account for income support and courses for UI recipients.

Bill C–21 allows UI recipients with viable business plans to capitalize their benefits to help defray business start–up costs. The spin–offs from such support go far beyond simply getting claimants off UI and on to their feet. Whole communities will benefit economically. In the experience of other countries which have this kind of provision, such entrepreneurship has created an additional job for each new business start–up.

As well, the bill allows UI recipients to receive their UI payments in a lump sum, another flexible way in which recipients can benefit. That will allow some of them who wish to move to areas with better job prospects to do so. The changes also provide older workers with expanded retraining and job–finding services.

The government was determined to bring the UI Act into line with the realities of today's work patterns which have changed and with the equity provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I remind hon. members that Bill C–21 provides for 15 weeks of maternity benefits during the period surrounding the birth of a child, but it also makes available 10 weeks of parental benefits for natural and adoptive parents, for either mother or father or shared between them.

Furthermore, Bill C–21 ensures that claimants have the flexibility to draw a combination of special benefits up to a maximum of 30 weeks. I would remind hon. members that until we introduced these changes or until these changes are passed it was not possible to be pregnant and also sick. We have made that much better for women who have need of special benefits. Indeed we are getting many phone calls now from women who are looking forward to the new benefits that they will receive, hopefully in January.

Finally this bill extends UI eligibility to those who work after they reach age 65, something else that will bring our unemployment insurance in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and will also benefit those who are leading active and vigorous lives in the workforce beyond age 65.

All these changes made Canada's unemployment insurance program more equitable, more flexible, and more relevant to evolving social and work patterns. At the same time it sets out to reduce disincentives to work, particularly in areas with strong economies and with low unemployment.

We have reached a time in Canada where we cannot afford to sacrifice a large part of the population, individual Canadians, to unemployment or to underemployment when that is not what those Canadians are seeking.

Canada is in the midst of one of the most exciting and challenging economic transitions in our history; the transition from a traditional resource-based economy to one where knowledge and skills and human resources play an increasingly central role. This transition not only confronts Canada but the entire industrialized world, and Canada has to be ready. Our competitive standing in that world will depend on how well we prepare ourselves over the next few years. It is especially important that we continue to adapt our labour market programs to the reality of a changing economy.

Canadians face a future where change is the only constant and where constant adaptation to new technologies, new market conditions and new skill requirements is imperative for the workers themselves to lead satisfying lives and for small businesses and for large companies, but most particularly of course for individual Canadians.

Bill C-21 is part of Canada's adaptation to change, as is the rest of the Labour Force Development Strategy which we announced in April. It works to develop and manage our human resources more effectively with the help of our private sector partners. All told for unemployed Canadians the strategy represents more support of activities like training and skill development that lead directly to jobs.

For Canadians who have jobs the strategy represents a chance to maintain and upgrade skills in response to changing demands. It encourages government's partners—labour, business and educators; we are not in this alone—to work together and build a workforce that is equipped for the future.

Because the co-operation of our partners is so important we tailored Bill C-21 as closely as possible to the labour market needs of Canadians. The contents of this bill, contrary to what hon. members opposite have insinuated, have been scrutinized from every conceivable angle. I would remind members that there were over 200 presentations to the committee when that legislative committee travelled across the country.

In designing the bill we considered as well the Macdonald Commission, the Forget inquiry, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and the de Grandpré advisory council. We listened to Canadians and parliamentarians and we did make several amendments, I would remind members, in consideration of their suggestions.

Currently I am consulting with business, labour, non-governmental organizations and community groups to design new training programs. I must say that that is a real breakthrough in terms of the co-operation and the partnerships that can be built to deal with the realities of the workplace. I would certainly say that we have given Canadians a more than fair chance to tell us what they think about the bill.

The government, as always, had to make some difficult decisions when this bill was drafted. In a country so diverse, I think it is accurate to say that compromise is almost always a part of the solution to our problems. We believe strongly that this bill reflects the demands that Canadians presented to us.

With respect to the entrance requirements that we are debating today, it brings the UI system into line with new economic situations such as, for example, the booming area around metropolitan Toronto. Certainly Bill C-21 allows the UI system to differentiate more fairly between regions that need lots of support and those that need less support.

I think it is quite unfair that neither the Senate nor the opposition recognizes that the solution to the present variable entrance problem already exists in Bill C-21. Instead of taking that solution to its logical conclusion they choose to ignore it.

Let me remind the House that it was always our intention to use UI changes to help free up the necessary resources to expand developmental programming. We think this is a good use of the fund. I should point out, although I hate to say it, that this is not a new idea. It has been done before. The objective of these modest changes that we are making was to encourage a greater commitment to the labour market.

I would remind members that the former government did exactly the same thing. At the time when the member for Winnipeg South Centre was the Minister of Employment and Immigration he signed a report called Unemployment Insurance in the 1980s which said that when the 10 to 14-week variable entrance requirement was introduced in 1978, 87 per cent of people affected in the Atlantic provinces found the two extra weeks needed to qualify and 40 per cent of those affected elsewhere found the up to six weeks they needed. When the entrance requirements for new entrants and re-entrants were raised to 20 weeks in 1979, there was an immediate sharp rise in the number of claimants applying with exactly 20 insurable weeks, especially in the Atlantic provinces.

As an example, the number of claims established in New Brunswick with exactly 20 insurable weeks virtually doubled between 1978 and 1980. Those additional work weeks in both years were secured in spite of continuing unemployment in the range of 8.4 per cent, somewhat higher than we have today.

Now that is a report on what happened when the variable entrance requirements were changed before. It is signed, as I said, by the neighbour of the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, the member for Winnipeg South Centre.

By expanding the active program assistance we are going much further and doing much more for people, because UI recipients will be in a better position to secure long-term and productive work.

Let me also remind the House that workers in areas of high unemployment often must fight tenaciously to preserve their places in the workforce. If Bill C-21 continues to be delayed until it is too late to make the necessary changes for the new year, some workers in Canada will find themselves facing difficult times, and that is not why I entered public service. We are thinking about the needs of unemployed Canadians.

Clearly the opposition and the Senate have the ability to permit the changes that we have proposed in Bill C-21. If they choose not to let the bill through, the consequences are evident. The government has provided the solution to the existing variable entrance rate which we believe has been an inadequate response to Canadians who find themselves out of work. We have modernized the entrance requirements to suit the current economic situation of our communities.

In addition, we are altering the UI program to allow those Canadians most in need to get training and other types of help so that they can find lasting, secure and satisfying jobs.

[Translation]

Bill C-21 arises from the demands that our country must meet in order to respond to new challenges on a more competitive world market. Thanks to this bill, the government has been able to provide a fair program that will ensure income security is maintained during periods of unemploymnent. We worked very hard, we put our solution before the House of Commons, and the House approved that solution.

[English]

The hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn was talking about what would happen to Canadians if we do not support the motion of the opposition today. However, what Canadians are waiting to see is whether its representatives follow the lead this government has provided to ensure that deserving Canadians receive what they are entitled to in the coming year.

Let me remind hon. members that this is not just the variable entrance requirements that are at risk if they do not proceed expeditiously in the other place. The benefits to expectant mothers, to fathers, to those over 65, and the expansion of the Community Futures Program which is there to help people in regions that have particular needs will not be expanded unless Bill C-21 goes through. The expansion of the program for social assistance recipients will not go through either, unless we have some sensitivity to all the reforms we have put into Bill C-21. I may remind hon. members of the withdrawal of the repeater provision for seasonal workers which will help many of the people in the regions of Canada through our new bill.

I have already pointed out that when this same approach was taken under the former government, whose members are sitting over there snickering at what we are trying to accomplish, the people did find work; they were better off.

I would hope that members would join me today in urging the other place to hasten the passage of Bill C-21 so Canadian workers will not only have their variable entrance requirements but can develop their skills for the 1990s and will be able to take advantage of all of the advantages that we have put into Bill C-21.

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I have some questions for the hon. minister. There is no doubt that the minister believes that the provisions in Bill C–21 are good ones. They are her proposals; it is her bill. She believes in them strongly and thinks that they will be good for the Canadian people, but she must recognize that many Canadians do not agree that all the measures in that bill are good. As a matter of fact, when the House of Commons committee sat throughout the country, 157 out of 202 groups opposed many of the measures in the bill and opposed the bill.

The minister must recognize that there are people who in good faith do not accept her point of view with respect to that bill. The minister must recognize as well that many believe that the bill will impact on them in a negative way. As I pointed out, there were 2.2 million claimants under the unemployment insurance system last year, and many of them believe that they will be impacted upon in a negative way as a result of this bill.

The minister must also accept that a lot of individuals, groups and experts were not heard by the House of Commons committee. We did our best in the committee. We heard many trade unions, many chambers of commerce and many social groups but, as I pointed out, we made a decision that we could not hear provincial government representatives. We heard very few academics and we did not hear the Economic Council, the Canadian Council for Labour Productivity, and so on. The minister must recognize that there are many people who would like to have their say on this bill who have not been heard. There are many people who feel it impacts in a negative way and many people who do not agree with it.

My first question is: Does the Minister not accept that those people who are concerned about the bill should have a right to be heard?

My second question is: What is wrong with a temporary extension to the variable entrance requirement? We are not suggesting in this party that the answer to unemployment insurance problems is a 10 to 14–week variable entrance requirement. As a matter of fact, I was a member of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in the last Parliament which passed a unanimous report with a Conservative majority. The chairman of the committee is the present Whip of the Conservative Party. We recommended that there be a flat 10 weeks, entrance requirement right across the country no matter what the rate of unemployment because we felt it was too difficult and unfair to have a variable entrance requirement. That was after a lot of study and many hearings before that committee.

All we are asking is that the government extend the variable entrance requirement for a reasonable period of time to allow those who want to be heard in the Senate to be heard. I am asking the minister: What is wrong with such a temporary extension?

I would not support that the Senate, the non–elected body, block this bill on a permanent basis, but I think they have a right and a duty to give reasonable attention to those who want to be heard.

• (1230)

Finally, the minister says there has been a lot of consultation on this bill. Does she not understand that consulting on a selective basis in her department or in her office with her officials is not the same as consulting publicly before a House of Commons or Senate committee where the proceedings are open to the public, the press and are reported? There is quite a difference between that kind of consultation in a public, open way and consultation in her office.

I ask her what is wrong with giving a right to be heard to those who ought to be heard and must be heard? What is wrong with a temporary extension of the variable entrance requirement? Can she not see the difference between public consultation and private consultation in her office or in her department?

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, I do not think this government has anything to learn from the opposition about the right of people to be heard. It is not a case of having consultations behind closed doors in my office. That is certainly not the way we have approached it. In fact, there is a series of public discussions and forums going on right across the country with labour and management even as we speak. They are being organized by the Canadian Labour and Management Productivity Centre in order to get a variety of opinions on the training programs and the skills development side. This is a real breakthrough. It is not something the opposition ever did when it was in government.

We have made a real point of ensuring that the voices of labour, business, and educators are heard and particularly groups such as the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women. We will be consulting with a number of people within the native and disabled communities who will also make their voices heard as we develop the training part of the program.

Let me say as well that I have no objection to the people in the Senate calling their witnesses and hearing people they believe would be helpful to them. Since the other place is not sitting this week they have some considerable time in which to do that in committee. I understand they will hear before they are finished—and I respect not only their right to do this but the responsibility they have to do this—a variety of points of view. In fact there are some people, as I have been told by some of our members in the other place, who can come to explain just how the benefits will work.

It is also important to point out to the 2.2 million claimants last year, some of whom are concerned that they will be impacted on negative ways, that the average usage of unemployment insurance was really well below the maximum number of weeks that people are allowed to utilize. Under the new bill in Newfoundland, for example, the maximum duration of benefits under Bill C–21 is 50 weeks in all three regions. That is exactly what it was before. The variable entrance requirement in the new bill is exactly what it was before. What we are going to see is some improvement in places like Atlantic Canada in terms of the flexibility that we are putting into the program and how it is going to be so much better for people.

I am sure when people come to the other place that they can call the witnesses of their choice. If they choose to hear provincial governments, academics or whomever, I am sure they will do that.

I am very proud of this bill. I am looking forward to hearing the kind of debate and the kind of people who do come forward to the committee.

When you talk about the 157 groups who are opposed to the bill, I know that they are all opposed to it for different reasons. Some support one part while the next person who comes in is against it. It is up to the government to make the decisions and the compromises, having heard those opinions from a wide range of Canadians.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, I think the minister inadvertently said a moment ago that the qualifying period for the three new regions in Newfoundland would be exactly the same as it is now. She also said that they can still draw for 50 weeks.

I am sure that the minister must have been looking at figures for a different province and not for the province of Newfoundland. If the minister would examine her notes concerning the three new regions in Newfoundland, she would find that the entrance requirement will vary considerably in metropolitan St. John's from what it is outside of metropolitan St. John's.

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, I am sorry if I confused the member. I will have to check the "blues". I thought I was talking about the maximum duration of benefits under Bill C–21, at least that was the reference that I was making, which continues to be very favourable to the people of Newfoundland.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, I rise today to support most strongly the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Notre–Dame–de–Grâce and seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. I rise to call on the government and in particular on the minister to prevent hardship in the high unemployment areas of Canada.

On January 6, if the unemployment insurance bill, Bill C–21, has not received Royal Assent, then, as we all know, the uniform entrance requirements will come into force on a nation–wide basis. In certain areas of this country this will add to and create a hardship. I refer most particularly to those areas in Atlantic Canada, in Cape Breton, in Newfoundland and in New Brunswick. Indeed, many of the areas of the Atlantic, already hard pressed by this government, will suffer untold exacerbation of difficulty.

There are two points to be considered. One is the usual parliamentary process involving the other place. The second is the fair treatment of Canadian workers while Parliament does its work in its normal course.

The people in my riding of Halifax will not suffer greatly in the short term if Bill C–21 is delayed without the introduction of the usual variable entrance requirement bill. Indeed, they will be better off in the short term than they will under Bill C–21.

As it stands right now, 13 weeks is the entrance requirement for Halifax. If the national standard kicks in without the VER, then 14 weeks will be the entrance requirement. Under Bill C-21, in the city of Halifax, 19 weeks will be the entrance requirement.

The minister stated that this bill was a fair bill and one that was accepted by the vast majority of Canadians as a compromise. I disagree with that. My major question is this. Why this unholy rush? Indeed, this bill has been characterized from the beginning, from its introduction, as one that required an unholy rush. If the government is in such a rush to pass this bill, then the average Canadian is going to think there must be something severely wrong—and the average Canadian would be right.

There was closure moved on this bill, a limiting of debate, as my hon. colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce has already noted. There was a limiting of the number of groups who could come before the parliamentary committee as it went across the country. Indeed, in the debate that was allowed—and I use the term "allowed" advisedly—in the House of Commons, we did not know about the changes in the regional areas and the changes that would again inflict more hardship on the people in the hard-pressed areas of Canada.

Since 1977, Liberal and Conservative governments have introduced a short bill in December of each year amending the entrance requirements for unemployment insurance. Indeed, it was done by this government last year on September 29, 1988. It was one of the indicators to the political pundits that an election was coming. It was so important that the timetable was moved up so that these variable entrance requirements could be brought in. Is it less important in 1989? Is it less important to the people of the economically depressed areas of this country that they have an opportunity to survive—and I use that word advisedly, too—the very hard winter that lies ahead of them?

The terms set in December of each year were a minimum of 10 weeks and a maximum of 14. Today Bill C-21 is in the other place, having passed, albeit reluctantly, third reading in the House of Commons. But it seems unlikely, if the usual parliamentary process takes its course, that the bill will be given Royal Assent before February. This is not a delaying tactic on the part of the members of Parliament in the other place—this is the usual parliamentary process.

Again I say to the government, what is wrong with the usual parliamentary process? Why does it need to be speeded up? What is the great rush? What is the benefit when thousands and thousands of Canadians are going to suffer if the government does not act in its normal fashion? God knows they suffer enough when the government is acting in its normal fashion.

The government has not moved any bill which would check the entrance requirements in the event that the other place does not ratify Bill C-21 before the variable entrance requirement of 1989 expires.

Mr. Robichaud: They want to penalize the families.

Ms. Clancy: That is right. My learned colleague from New Brunswick says they want to penalize families, and that is what is going to happen.

The terms of entrance would become the ones of 1977, a flat 14 week entrance requirement should the government not pass a VER bill and Bill C-21 is held up. The hold-up, however, and I reiterate this, is not one of some diabolical plot. It is merely the right and the duty—the constitutional duty—of duly appointed members of Parliament in the other place to hear as much as they possibly can from interested groups who have something to say, particularly when interested groups who had something to say were stifled through the parliamentary committee that travelled this past summer and fall across this country.

I had the dubious pleasure of sitting on that committee when it came to my riding of Halifax. I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that I heard something in that committee from a member on the government side that appalled me. I heard the president of the Acadian Federation of Nova Scotia talk about the fact that with this bill young Acadian Nova Scotians will no longer be able to stay in their home regions. They will no longer be able to stay in a home land that they had been driven out of once before and to which they had returned. I heard an hon. member, and I use the term loosely, say, "Well, I guess your choice is to move or starve". I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that the move or starve ultimatum does not sit well with Nova Scotians. It does not sit well with Atlantic Canadians, and it does not sit well with Canadians in general.

The hon. minister calls this motion unfortunate. Bill C–21 is unfortunate. It is unfortunate for fisheries workers. It is unfortunate for rural seasonal workers. It is unfortunate for the urban poor, and it sure is unfortunate for Canadian women. In fact, this bill is an institutionalized misfortune for our country.

The hon. minister says that we in Canada are going through an exciting transition. That must be a huge comfort to the people of Summerside. I am sure that it engenders great joy in Lunenburg and Lockeport where the fish plants are closing. Indeed, this transition is so exciting that it is a wonder that Atlantic Canadians are not dancing in the streets.

The minister tells us constantly, and we have been hearing it ever since the introduction of this unfortunate bill, about the training programs in Bill C–21, particularly the training programs as they affect women. This is another fiction that is being perpetrated upon the people of Canada.

I spoke last week to the operator of a medium–sized business in my riding of Halifax. I asked him about the training programs for women. He said, "Yes, it is going to be great. I can train my receptionist to work on the word processor and I can train my secretary to become a bookkeeper". I said, "Are you not going to be going outside and training new people so you can hire them and add to the number of employed?" "Oh, no, I don't have to do that", he said, "I can train in house and save myself a whole lot of money". That saving will be on the backs of the taxpayers of Canada, without assisting in any way the unemployment rate, particularly for women. It is great stuff.

The bill itself will make it more difficult, as we already know and as we have already heard, to qualify for unemployment insurance by increasing the qualification periods. We know it will cut off claimants sooner by shortening the benefit period. It will increase the penalty for those who voluntarily quit. Of course the whole voluntarily quit provision is a fascinating one

I spent four years in a previous life chairing the Unemployment Insurance Appeal Board in my riding of Halifax. I heard about some of the voluntary quits, the voluntary quits that had to do with everything from sexual harassment to absolutely untenable working conditions. Sure, the unemployment Insurance Act needs reform. It needs lots of reform. But the reform should go in favour of the workers of Canada and not against them.

It should not be a punch in the stomach or a belt in the jaw. It should be some form of support and some recognition by the government that the workers of Canada do suffer stoppages of employment from time to time. This is an insurance program

The injustice from the voluntary quits arises when someone quits a job for what he or she believes to be just cause, but just cause under this bill is something that will be increasingly difficult to prove.

I mentioned earlier that in my riding of Halifax if the VER does not go through, if the government does not bring in this bill as it has traditionally, and if Bill C–21 does not pass until after the other place has followed its duly appointed constitutional itinerary, then Halifax will not suffer all that badly. But it sure will suffer in the long run if Bill C–21 becomes law.

Halifax suffers from a disparity in incomes. Because of this disparity in incomes there is an almost false rate of unemployment. To be unemployed in Halifax is every bit as bad—sometimes worse—as it is to be unemployed in Cape Breton because you do not have the support systems and the family support that is traditional in Cape Breton Island and in the rural areas of Nova Scotia. All of the problems of urban alienation affect the poor and the unemployed in a city like Halifax.

The rate is skewed because of this disparity. We have an area that covers my city of Halifax, that of my learned colleague from Dartmouth and down the eastern shore of Nova Scotia where employment opportunities outside the fishery are rare. Of course we know what has happened to the fishery in Atlantic Canada. Consequently, there is a grinding poverty facing unemployed workers in the urban regions of Nova Scotia this winter. This government is not prepared to do anything to assist that while the Parliament of Canada goes through its normal process.

Why is the government not moving the VER bill this year? Is it an attempt to make the duly appointed members of the other place look like the villains? Is it an attempt to make it seem as though this bill was stalled there just to flex its muscles with a complete disregard for Canadians on UI? If this is the case, then a fraud is being perpetrated on the people of Canada because the other place is doing its duly constitutionally asked for job.

Is it to make it appear as though we in the opposition are stalling? Sure we would like to stall this bill. We would like to stop this bill. We would like to trash this bill. But unfortunately the numbers are against us. We do not want to see the non-elected members of Parliament use a power that the people of Canada do not want them to use. We do want to see them do their jobs.

One hundred and forty-seven groups oppose this bill. If only half of them have a good reason to be heard, then there is an obligation on the committee from the other place to hear them, particularly when the vast majority were unable to be heard by this House and its committee.

• (1250)

What is the solution? The government should not play with the constitutional mechanisms that are currently in place. This is a crucial bill which warrants the sombre and sober second thought that the upper chamber is there to provide.

However, while this is going on it is absolutely crucial that the hard-pressed regions of Canada and the people depending on unemployment insurance are protected by moving the usual variable entrance requirement bill which is available and ready to be moved and which both opposition parties, the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, have assured the government they will co-operate in passing.

I cannot imagine what is on the minds of our government masters by refusing to take this opportunity to ensure that Canadians are protected and that Canadians in Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, parts of Quebec, in the north and so on will not have to look toward January and February with fear and trepidation because they fear for their very survival due to the actions of their government.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, unless the regional entrance requirement is implemented, we will have regional tragedies, especially in the Atlantic region, among fishermen, steel workers, miners, and all the people working in fish processing plants. The winter will be very difficult for families in our region.

The federal government must not make the situation any worse. It is time to show compassion and understanding for regional disparities.

[English]

It is time for the government to show that it cares something for the hard-pressed people of Canada. It is time, after the disastrous actions of this government in its budget and in other actions taken in the spring and the summer, to say, "We understand what the people of the Atlantic in particular will go through this winter without the normal bill on the variable entrance requirement".

Here we have a cri de coeur which goes to the government and says, "For God's sake, do something for the people who deserve your protection".

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, I am sure the hon. member who just spoke, and spoke so well, understands that a solid unemployment insurance system is not only good for the workers who are unemployed but also extremely helpful to the communities in which they live when they are unemployed.

When an unemployed worker receives unemployment insurance he or she spends that money on groceries, on rent, on fuel for automobiles, on children's clothing and so on. The money is spent and it circulates in the community. During the great depression before 1940 when we did not have unemployment insurance and people were unemployed and did not have that money to spend, the recession, or the depression, the slow-down, snow-balled and galloped and the corner stores that used to sell to those people went bankrupt. The whole economy went further down the drain. That is prevented with a solid unemployment insurance system. Therefore the member probably knows and would admit that it is important not only for the individual unemployed but also for the community.

As a result of Bill C-21 unemployment insurance benefits will be reduced by $1.5 billion. The government is taking $1.5 billion away from regular benefits.

When you break that down, it means that her province, the province of Nova Scotia, will lose $29 million that would have gone into that province in unemployment insurance benefits. That money will not be going into the province. Perhaps the government might spend some of that money on training in the province, but there is no assurance of that.

We were not able to hear in the House of Commons committee provincial government representatives. We were not able to hear people who looked at the impact on the provinces from a macroeconomic point of view.

Does the hon. member not agree that it is reasonable now for the Senate to hear these people, especially since they have the new maps of the new regions, who can inform Parliament as to what the impacts will be from an economic point of view of withdrawing these moneys from provinces like Nova Scotia or New Brunswick? Can she not make the point that it is not we Liberals, senators or members of Parliament, who want to be heard, that it is the people from these regions who want to be heard to make their points with respect to these economic arguments?

Ms. Clancy: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce for his comments. Indeed, with respect to the first point concerning the injection into the economy of the unemployment insurance moneys, it is absolutely crucial to a province like Nova Scotia. In the rural areas of Nova Scotia, but also to a great degree in the urban areas as well, seasonal work is something with which we all live.

In my previous life when I practised law, I had a number of clients who did a little fishing, a little wood cutting, a little repair work for whoever was around. This took place as much within the environs of the city of Halifax as it did in the rural areas. It is a way of life and it is what happens.

Consequently, the impact of Bill C-21 and its changes on the provincial economies is going to be massive. I ask you all to think of a province the size of Nova Scotia with the difficulties that it is facing, with the cut-backs in the fishery, the closure of the fish plants and on and on, losing $29 million. I am not a mathematician but I am sure if we were to take that and change that figure on a per capita basis to what it would mean in the province of Quebec or the province of Ontario the numbers would be staggering. Believe me, as a Nova Scotian, they are staggering for us. It is absolutely crucial that the voices of the provincial and territorial governments be heard as to the impact of the changes that Bill C-21 is going to bring to their people.

In the province of Nova Scotia let us look at the fish plant closures. We have already talked a bit about the retraining the minister has promised so succinctly. Well, that is not going to do any good for the people of Lockeport who are losing their fish plant, or for the people of Louisbourgh who are losing theirs, because there are no other jobs. What are you going to train them for?

Again, we go back to the horrific statement that I heard at the committee—"move or starve". That is not right and it is not fair. It is not something that Nova Scotians or Canadians generally deserve to hear.

Indeed, all of the groups that have a vested interest, and there are many, have a right to have their ideas, their suggestions and their concerns heard in the fullest possible public debate setting. We did not hear them because of the truncated House of Commons agenda on the UI bill. The very least we can do is ensure that our citizens do not suffer while we allow the other place to do its job.

Mr. Funk: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the member for her excellent speech. I would like to point out to her that we cannot just look at this as an individual action taken by this government. There are several other actions which have been taken by this government that impact unfairly on those communities as well and which discriminate against a lot of them.

I want to make reference to northern communities where the goods and services tax proposal will have an unfair impact because the cost of many items are two or three times higher in those communities. They will be paying two or three times as much through the GST proposal.

As well, there is a recommendation that takes the northern tax benefit away from 2,000 or 3,000 communities in this country. Those are the same ones that will also be impacted upon this UI bill. I was just wondering if the member has examined the cumulative impact of these three measures when taken together.

Ms. Clancy: I will be very brief, as I know my time is short, Madam Speaker.

Without considering the hon. member's question to be anything but serious, as I know it was, I can only say that there comes a point for Atlantic Canadians, as I am sure there does for northern Canadians, where we look at the actions of this government, proposed and already taken, and we wonder if we are living in a bad dream.

I referred in earlier comments in this House on another matter to the juggernaut of the budget. Indeed, juggernaut is what it is. The possibility of the implementation of the goods and services tax in Atlantic Canada could well be the straw that breaks the camel's back. It could well be the coup de grâce to the Atlantic economy. This is why over 80 per cent of Atlantic Canadians continue to voice their opposition and, indeed—to this the government should pay heed—their rage that this should even be contemplated, given all the conglomerate attacks on Atlantic Canada by this government. As was said in a motion picture not long ago, "We're mad as hell and we're not going to take it any more".

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

VIA RAIL

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, as the economic conditions in Cape Breton continue to worsen, this government is doing its utmost to try to cut out the underpinnings of the economy which still exists. One of those prime underpinnings is VIA Rail.

VIA Rail is vitally important to the economy of Cape Breton. This government has manipulated with Canadian National to do away with VIA. Now CN is doing its best to try to get rid of the business it presently has in eastern Nova Scotia. Three-quarters of all the container traffic that once went between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, is now going between Halifax and St. John's. The piggyback trailers that once went across the Gulf are down by one-third. The rail shipments are down from SYSCO to central Canada.

This government, by allowing CN to play down and to do away with business is actually aiding and abetting the downgrading of the economy in Cape Breton. VIA Rail must be protected. That is the best way to assure that a rail line will continue to exist in Cape Breton.

This is more than just an emotional need. This is an economic need.

EL SALVADOR

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I commend the Minister of Employment and Immigration for Canada's fast and generous response to endangered people in El Salvador. Canadians have heard much about the civil war within San Salvador. Not only air force bombing of poor residential districts, but assassinations of clergy and trade unionists and arrests of church relief workers show the danger to many civilian non-combatants.

Many Canadians who have urged our government to take action to protect the innocent are very grateful for the response. Courageous and hard-working Canadian consular officers on the scene, backed by quick and humane decisions by the minister and senior officials, are saving lives and relieving much heartbreak.

Canadians can help in this emergency by offering to sponsor these refugees. A group of five can apply to sponsor one or more people for a year by telephoning either to the nearest Canada immigration centre for details or to one of the churches organizing sponsor groups.

The minister's action is not only humane and life-saving, but is a contribution toward the negotiated peace that was called for last month by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

AGENCE DE COOPÉRATION CULTURELLE ET TECHNIQUE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): It will be Mr. Jean-Louis Roy's responsibility to make the Agence de coopération culturelle et technique the linchpin of the francophonie. Mr. Roy is in fact the second Quebecer to be appointed since the ACCT was established at the end of the sixties.

His election was not easy, but the candidacy of the agency's new director was diligently promoted by ministers Lucien Bouchard and Monique Landry and by a number of Canadian ambassadors.

The agency is responsible for the preparations for Francophone summits and for follow-up activities.

Mr. Roy is the right man to implement changes in a restructured agency that will now have broader responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, this is a significant victory for Canadian and Quebec diplomacy. Bravo, Jean-Louis Roy from Saint-Georges de-Beauce!

ECONOMIC PROMOTION OF METROPOLITAN QUEBEC CITY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-East): Mr. Speaker, on June 30 1988, the Conservative caucus for the Quebec City area and its provincial counterpart recommended, based on the conclusions of a special task force, creating a company to promote the economy of the Quebec City metropolitan area.

The company was established on February 6, 1989. Recently, I was pleased to see that in the past nine months, the company has put in place a series of consultation mechanisms and has been actively promoting the industrial and technological development of the Quebec City area.

Today, the company is monitoring 30 or so projects, in various stages of development, which together are worth more than $150 million. It has also started to produce promotional material, including a list of manufacturing companies in the Quebec City metropolitan area, a reference and promotional tool intended to simplify contacts between members of the business world.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to belong to a community that is so economically sound, and I hope that our region will draw maximum benefits from these projects.

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Like Abitibi!

VIA RAIL

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Paul Stokaluk, a resident of Thunder Bay—Nipigon, recently travelled to Toronto with his wife. She required an extremely delicate eye operation. After the operation, Mrs. Stokaluk's doctor instructed her not to fly home because this form of travel would do further damage to her already sensitive eye. Following the doctor's advice, the Stokaluks returned to Thunder Bay on a sleeper car on VIA Rail. She was required to lie on her side all through the trip so as not to do further damage to this very sensitive area.

These concerned constituents called my office questioning what they would have done had Mrs. Stokaluk's operation been scheduled after January 15, 1990. That is the day when passenger rail service will no longer be available to the people in northern Ontario.

It is wrong to eliminate passenger train service in northern Ontario. It is unacceptable that this government eliminate a line which services over 300,000 residents of these communities. How else will the physically handicapped like Mrs. Stokaluk travel? How will the economically handicapped, those who cannot afford to fly and those who do not want to fly, travel throughout the north? It is wrong that these people and the 300,000 residents of Marathon, Terrace Bay, Schrieber, Nipigon, Red Rock, Thunder Bay, Ignace, Dryden, Kenora be denied passenger rail service after having it for over 104 years.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, this government is creating a double standard in environmental regulation that fails to protect the salmon resource of the Fraser River and endangers the health of the people of the northern interior of B.C.

In May 1989 an advisory was issued saying that the consumption of some fish near pulp mills in Prince George and other locations should be limited due to dioxin and furan poisoning. Further tests were to be done this fall but because of Environment Canada's bungling we must now wait until spring for the tests. Environment Canada is creating a double standard by continuing its work on the coast but planning to turn over testing in the interior of B.C. to the very pulp mills responsible for the pollution and the basket-case enforcement of the provincial government.

This government should accept its full responsibility for the Fraser River and take the necessary steps to guarantee its protection.

FORESTRY

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has done a lot of talking about the forestry agreements which expired in six provinces last March and about its intentions to renew them. Yet it has failed to replace them and this situation is creating many problems across the country. The delays brought about by the government's indecision in renewing those agreements have caused the loss of employment for 43 silviculture workers in New Brunswick.

[Translation]

Several times in the past, the Minister of State for Forestry promised us that new forestry development agreements would be signed with the provinces. Last August, the government of New Brunswick and the federal government agreed to renegotiate these agreements. We are now getting to the end of the year, and no agreements have been signed.

[English]

Industry and the provincial governments are ready to participate, as evidenced by the British Columbia government's commitment of $350 million toward a new agreement. Now the federal Minister of Forestry and his government must do their share. They must stop beating around the bush and they must renew the forestry agreements.

FISHERIES

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, striking crew workers have severely reduced the government's ability to effectively patrol our waters against illegal fishing. Since this strike began the fishermen in my riding have made numerous sightings of American vessels which have taken advantage of this situation by fishing in Canadian waters. Not only are they stealing Canadian fish stocks but the fish-dragging gear they use literally chews through the lobster traps set by our fishermen, causing them significant financial losses in both revenue and gear.

This situation cannot be allowed to continue. Canadian interests in the waters off Atlantic Canada must be effectively maintained. The fishermen of Atlantic Canada should not have to pay the price for the inflexibility of a few union bosses. I call upon the government to act with all possible speed in bringing about a resolution to this matter.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend the NDP destroyed Meech Lake. The leadership candidates, all members of this House, went back on their word and shamelessly withdrew their support for Meech Lake. Even the former leader gave way.

I thought the new leader of the NDP would stand firm, but she also withdrew her support from the Meech Lake Accord, to attract partisan support.

The Berlin Wall has come down. Countries are opening their borders. Throughout the world, people are trying to understand and open a dialogue. And now we see the NDP raising a wall of shame in this wonderful country of ours!

What the NDP did on the weekend against Quebec was shameful and degrading!

[English]

TOURISM

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, recent figures released by Canada Customs and Excise revealed that Canadians, as well as visitors to Canada, are increasingly choosing the Blue Water Bridge in my riding of Sarnia—Lambton as their point of departure and entry into Canada. Throughout and including the spring and summer of 1989 the total number of travellers reached 2.7 million, up 4.4 per cent from the previous year. By the end of October, the figures show that traffic on the Blue Water Bridge had jumped by more than 250,000 vehicles during the first 10 months of 1989. In all, almost 3.9 million cars and trucks crossed the international span, an increase of more than 260,000 as compared to 1988.

• (1410)

In a border community such as ours these traffic figures are particularly welcome from a tourism perspective. The tourism industry has been an integral part of the local economy and the community, including our local tourism operators, is striving to have more of these travellers stop and appreciate the many sites and attractions of Sarnia—Lambton.

I urge all members of the House, visitors to Canada, indeed all Canadians, to circle the Blue Water Bridge when travelling to and from Canada. I invite you all to come and see and appreciate our beautiful community of Sarnia—Lambton and what it has to offer.

CANADA POST

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, earlier today one of the standing committees of this House, the Standing Committee on Government Operations and Consumer and Corporate Affairs, had the pleasure of listening to a representative of Rural Dignity Canada, Ms. Cynthia Paterson, who described poignantly and quite eloquently the disruption inflicted on hundreds of small towns and villages across this great land by Canada Post.

The monolithic management of Canada Post and this government are executing the policy of closing rural post offices, come what may, all in the expectation of saving a few dollars, an expectation which, it turns out, is quite misleading.

On November 16, 1989 the Postal Services Review Committee, a committee appointed by the government, reported that Canada Post itself "acknowledged that savings from rural closures have not been material".

On behalf of Rural Dignity, and millions of Canadians living in rural areas, I ask the government of Canada and Canada Post to stop their unilateral dismantling of one of Canada's most valued rural institutions, the post office.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend, at its national convention in Winnipeg, the NDP put on a marvelous show. It was truly edifying to see the former leader break under the pressure of delegates and withdraw his support for the Meech Lake Accord. A sad end to a political career and a decision unworthy of a man who has always been known as a man of principle!

A deplorable beginning for the new leader, who throughout her campaign told Quebecers that she agreed with Meech Lake, that she respected the concept of a distinct society and Quebec's five demands, and who, under pressure from her supporters and to further her own ends, has now reneged on her commitment—

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Desjardins: —to Quebec and joined others in demanding a reopening of the Accord.

Mr. Speaker, after such a spectacular about face, the NDP has obviously cut itself off from Quebec. The socialist party will learn that Quebecers never forget. From now on, they know who they can count on, who are their real allies and who will defend and represent them here in the House.

CHRISTMAS TREE INDUSTRY

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is December and the festive season is upon us. Last night the Minister of Public Works, with his accustomed efficiency, lit the lights on the parliamentary Christmas tree in front of the Centre Block.

Inside, I must say the hallowed halls outside this Chamber don't look too bad, but they don't smell too good. In fact, they don't smell at all.

Why do I not sense the fragrance of a Lunenburg County spruce or balsam fir or even, heaven forbid, an Ontario pine? Do I sense that Parliament itself sets the regrettable example of using artificial Christmas trees? Is it possible they are not even Canadian?

The Christmas tree industry is a $70 million industry in this country and is worth some $30 million to the people of the South Shore. Is it possible that Canadian producers can export over three million trees to the United States but cannot persuade the Parliament of Canada to use them?

Real Christmas trees are biodegradable, environmentally friendly, beautiful to look at and wonderful to smell. Let this be the last year that Parliament is without the joy of real Christmas trees. Let's support our Christmas tree industry and make these buildings a real showcase for a beautiful, valuable and renewable Canadian resource.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, we want to alert all Canadians to the fact that the Conservative government is busily preparing for Christmas. The gift is Bill C–28 which spells the beginning of the end of universal senior's pensions and family allowances.

We want to alert 128,000 seniors and 14 per cent of Canadian families that as soon as the government can railroad this legislation through the committee and third reading that they will receive their cheques as usual, but they will have to return the money a few months later.

"No concern to me" say many Canadians. Not so. By the year 2000 it is estimated that 1 million seniors and 30 per cent of all Canadian families will be affected by the clawback provision.

This kind of Christmas gift is not wanted by any Canadians, so I would ask the government to rewrap Bill C–28 and present another package that Canadians will accept as a real gift.

What does the government have in its stocking for next Christmas? An attack on medicare?

LITERACY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, nearly 5 million Canadians have difficulty reading a sign or an instruction book. The Conference Board of Canada has recently reported that about one–third of Canadian companies have difficulty introducing new technology because some of their employees are functionally illiterate.

Last year our government introduced the National Literacy Strategy to help address these problems. The strategy focuses on remedial and preventive actions to help those with literacy problems and especially to promote literacy with children.

The year 1990 has been designated by the United Nations as International Literacy Year. This government is already doing its part to address the literacy challenge. While the cost of illiteracy to our country's economic future is enormous, the cost to the people involved is tragic.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a defender of Meech Lake, which I believe strengthens Canada, I was disappointed in the speech made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) in Toronto before a large and happy crowd of Canadian francophones from across this country who were celebrating Ontario's Bill 8, a major achievement by the Peterson government affirming the rights of the official language minority in this province.

I was there, and I saw how shocked and insulted people were by the minister's attack against Pierre Elliot Trudeau and the way he misrepresented that vision of Canada which had in fact furthered their cause tremendously.

One of Canada's fundamental characteristics is the existence of official language minority groups, both in and outside Quebec. Trudeau was aware of this and supported those groups. You don't beat Canada, Mr. Speaker, by rewriting its history.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board about the government's mishandling of the strike of 2,200 federal ships' crew workers and over 1,400 federal hospital workers.

For two years the government has been trying to find every possible legal loophole to avoid bargaining in good faith. First, it bungled declaring these workers essential to the safety and security of the Canadian public. Then it spent months trying to get the courts to block the legal right of these workers to strike. It went through conciliation without ever putting a serious offer on the table. Now it is so threatened by people exercising their legal rights, it has gone to the courts to stop picketing and wants to order these people back to work.

How does the minister justify risking the safety and security of Canadians with these ham-handed bullying tactics? Will he state here and now that the government will get back to the bargaining table with a good offer, a serious offer and get this thing settled properly?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the government has been negotiating throughout this unfortunate dispute in good faith. We negotiated throughout the months over the summer and throughout the months coming up to December. We have gone back to the table with the unions over the last few weeks in an effort of mediation. We have put a very serious offer on the table.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we have been negotiating up to the very last hour. I am still prepared to continue if we see that there is a possibility of reaching a reasonable settlement. We were discussing this issue up to close to midnight last night.

The negotiations are still open for any kind of reasonable offer to be put on the table. I can assure my hon. colleague opposite that the government has been very conscious of its responsibility in terms of being an employer. We have put a very substantial package on the table and we would like the union to respond with a reasonable counter offer so that we can move in terms of reaching a negotiated settlement.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the minister thinks it is the responsibility of the union to act as the government should act and settle the strike responsibly.

I want to remind members that just weeks ago in this House we were paying tribute to three Coast Guard workers who had lost their lives off the shore of Newfoundland. At that time, the Minister of Transport said of these people that their daily bravery is testimony to the finest and noblest aspects of the human character. We are talking here about workers who go out in 100-mile-per-hour winds and 40-foot waves to protect the lives of Canadians.

With our hospital service workers, we are talking about people who work every day with our disabled and ill veterans in the last days of their lives. They are working for as little as $16,000 to $18,000 a year.

This strike is costing $1 million a day in tied up shipping in the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes. Veterans and patients are being denied food—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. member to put her question.

Mrs. Catterall: Does the minister think that salaries as low as $16,000 to $18,000 are commensurate with the risks and responsibilities these people take? If not, will he immediately commit to putting a good offer on the table?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the first part of the question of the hon. member. I hope she realizes when she refers to what happened in Newfoundland a few weeks ago that this has nothing to do with the agreement we have with the union dealing with the whole question of safety and rescue operations on the St. Lawrence River or on the ocean. I hope the hon. member is not just trying to threaten people in that way. There is nothing true in the allegations that there is a problem of safety on the St. Lawrence River.

Moreover, dealing with the question of the closure of the St. Lawrence River last Friday, I did this because at the time I considered that I did not have guarantees about the safety on the river. We decided this morning, supported by the pilots, the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and others, that there was no danger in permitting the ships to move on the St. Lawrence River.

As far as I am concerned, it will continue to be done in the same way. I hope that the member will no longer try to threaten people with the safety question when there is no problem of safety on the St. Lawrence River right now.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, the minister is absolutely right about one thing. The unions have been exceptionally responsible in providing for essential safety and security. However, that does not alter the fact that we have oil-laden ships and chemical-laden ships at risk in the St. Lawrence Seaway and on the Great Lakes.

I want to return to the question of pay equity. This government talks about paying people fair wages for fair work. Yet we have two concrete examples that are at the root of this strike: ships' crew workers who are told that their lives on the east coast are worth $2,000 less than those on the west coast and hospital service workers who have been waiting two years since a decision of the Human Rights Commission for decent, equitable wages.

On November 8, this government appeared before the Human Rights Commission arguing that the Human Rights Commission had no jurisdiction—

Mr. Speaker: I must ask the hon. member to put her question.

Mrs. Catterall: Will the minister explain why the government has been fighting equal pay for the lowest paid workers in the federal Public Service? Will he explain why his own officials are arguing against pay equity before the Human Rights Commission?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I would like to give my hon. colleague the benefit of some information in terms of the negotiations. In terms of pay equity, in the ship crew negotiations we offered to establish immediately upon signing the agreement—if they wanted to in the next few days—pay equity between the east coast and the west coast.

In terms of the hospital services, we have already paid out $28 million to meet the Human Rights Commission decision and there is another $10 million on the way. In the case of hospital services right now we are facing demands for a pay increase of 14.3 per cent per year for the next three years. In the case of ships' crews the demand is 17.4 per cent per year for the next three years. That compares to the settlement that 155,000 public servants accepted for an annual increase of 4.1 per cent. We think that is not fair. It is discriminatory and we will just not tolerate it.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It concerns this government's plan to introduce back-to-work legislation in the matter of the ships' crews strike.

The federal government's attitude toward these employees is nothing short of obscene and contemptuous. It has steadfastly refused to put an offer on the table that would eliminate up front in year one of the contract the regional rates of pay where the east coast workers are paid up to $1,800 less than their counterparts on the west coast.

Will the minister order his negotiators to resume negotiations immediately and put an offer on the table that eliminates this discrimination up front in year one of the contract and cease and desist in using the Order Paper of this place as a replacement for the collective bargaining process?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe I just answered that question. The offer is on the table. I have offered the union to move immediately to wage parity between the east coast and the west coast upon the date of signing. That has been on the table for weeks.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same minister. This government talks a good game about pay equity, but right now it has a motion on the Order Paper which will legislate wage discrimination against east coast ship crews. It would cost the government less than $2.7 million to eliminate this discriminatory wage practice and remove the major obstacle to a resolution of this strike.

Why is this government so hell-bent on perpetuating a system of wage discrimination that allows ships' crews in my riding of Dartmouth to be paid $2,000 less than ships' crews in the Minister of Fisheries riding for doing exactly the same job. How can he possibly justify that?

Mr de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, for the third time, I will repeat for my hon. colleagues that we have offered the unions to meet the parity question between the east coast fishermen—

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Up front, year one?

Mr. de Cotret: Right now. If the contract were ratified in two days, we would immediately move to parity between the east and the west coast.

Ms. Clancy: Right now?

Mr. de Cotret: That is what I am saying. Yes, right now. The minute it is signed. That is on the table. The offer is there. We will have parity right now.

FISHERIES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Canadians are concerned about the double standard of providing immunity from prosecution to certain corporations, government agencies and individuals while charging the little guy.

In the November 15, 1989 federal document which I obtained from Fisheries and Oceans in Ottawa, serious charges are made and the minister is ultimately responsible. One of the matters raised involves Alcan and the destruction of a salmon stream in British Columbia.

As the minister must know, not only did Alcan destroy the streambed without approval, but it did so after it had been told directly and specifically by the minister's own department that it could not undertake such potentially harmful activities.

Does the minister not believe that charges should be taken against a large Canadian corporation that bulldozes the bed of a salmon stream?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the House, as I did yesterday, that there is no double standard in the application of the Fisheries Act, or in the pursuit of my overriding responsibility to ensure the sustenance, enhancement and maintenance of our fisheries resources. That will continue to be and always has been the policy of this minister and this department.

• (1430)

With regard to the specific matter referred to on a tributary of the Kemano river, it is my understanding that Alcan thought it was correcting a problem caused by an early winter storm and did perform activities outside the area of the approval it had been granted. It is a measure of the approach the department often takes to try to enhance, rebuild and restore these resources that an arrangement is being negotiated with Alcan to do full remedial restoration of this part of the stream bed. The solution to these problems is not always to put people in the slammer.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, it does not sound like the the minister is going to charge Alcan despite the fact his own officials directed Alcan not to undertake the work and Alcan did it anyway.

An Hon. Member: Shameful.

Mr. Fulton: With regard to the loss of fish habitat in the Swift River case in central British Columbia, I learned from the Department of Fisheries today that the Department of Justice lawyer suggested that the laying of charges be delayed because of the Cariboo by-election, and that charges have still not been laid. On the Mile 44 Nursery case, the director general of Pacific Fisheries would not approve laying charges against the B.C. government ministry of environment, because it is "political dynamite".

Will the minister request an RCMP investigation of those two specific cases, or does he have excuses for them too?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is extracting from certain very serious allegations contained within a document prepared by a field officer of the department, which document is being reviewed very, very thoroughly at my direction by the deputy minister and senior officials of the department.

I can assure the hon. member that no official within my department would have recommended any delay on any legal action which was recommended to us, and certainly would not have done so for any reasons relating to political considerations. I think it is most reprehensible that the hon. member would suggest otherwise.

Mr. Fulton: The fact of the matter is that Mr. Langer is the head of the habitat management unit for the Fraser River, northern B.C. and Yukon division. One would assume if someone in western Canada knows something about what is going on with habitat, it would be the head of habitat. That is who wrote the memorandum.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: We know that the discharge of toxic effluent from pulp mills is making fish, crab, prawns, shrimp and shellfish unsafe to eat. We know that the source of 40 per cent of the marine pollution in Canada is from pulp mills and that it endangers human health.

Since the minister knows that most of the pulp mills across Canada are violating federal law and regulations, will the minister show some courage on this issue and state today in this House that all corporate polluters that are presently in violation of any federal law, any federal statute, any federal regulation will be prosecuted and charged today and that he will so direct his officials to do so?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I want to point out for the benefit of the member and members of the House that the official who prepared this document is a field officer responsible for one district within British Columbia, not the head of habitat for British Columbia. His opinions certainly do not represent the official policy of the department. We seek remedial actions, we seek to enter into co-operative arrangements with industries, and where appropriate, where advised by our legal counsel in the Department of Justice, prosecution is pursued as appropriate.

SHIPPING

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Coast Guard strike has put navigation in the St. Lawrence at risk. Yesterday, a ship came close to a colliding near the Pierre Laporte bridge in Quebec City. Will the Minister negotiate in good faith, or is he going to wait until we have an ecological catastrophe? Will he act immediately to settle this dispute?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, whenever a member from that side of the House states something that is false, I try to set the record straight. The ship that left Quebec City yesterday from Montreal did not have a scratch, Mr. Speaker. It was merely a false manoeuvre, and the ship was duly escorted. The regulations were very clear. Once again, there was no connection with the ban announced between Quebec City and Les Escoumins. Permission was given yesterday. A pilot was on board. Once again, it was merely a matter of manoeuvring and had no connection with the strike by employees and crews on the ice breakers.

Mr. Gagliano: According to reports in the papers this morning, Mr. Speaker, it seems that yesterday, we could have had an ecological accident on our hands. If that had been the case, it would have been serious because of the current situation. The minister says "if". Why not settle this dispute, so that Canadians won't have to worry about the possibility of an ecological disaster?

As you know, because of the strike we are losing a million dollars a day, and this is only in Quebec! Is the minister going to wait until the Port of Montreal loses its competitive position before intervening, or will he instruct negotiators to settle this dispute quickly, so that Quebec's economy can continue to grow?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, negotiations continued informally for the better part of the evening yesterday. I think we should also bear in mind that there is a very wide gap, if we consider what we have been able to give other federal employees. On the whole, federal employees have settled for an annual increase of 4.1 per cent, while this particular group is asking for an annual increase of 17.4 per cent. I think you will agree it would be very difficult to bridge this difference. We are trying to negotiate. We are bargaining in good faith. We would like the union to come to the bargaining table with an offer that is reasonable, considering their colleagues in other parts of the Public Service, and reasonable in the eyes of the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that a 17.4 per cent annual increase for three years is a very significant increase and one that is very difficult for the government to accept. However, we are always prepared to negotiate. We are concerned about the safety of Canadians and we will do what is necessary to guarantee safe navigation on the St. Lawrence River.

TAXATION

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the clawback Of Old Age Security pensions. The government says the tax only applies to senior citizens with an annual income of $50,000. However, the tax will also apply to senior citizens who receive only $40,000 in dividends from Canadian companies. Furthermore, the minimum is not indexed to the rate of inflation. Could the minister explain this injustice?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that there is a thing called a dividend tax credit that is also a part of the tax form. When the clawback, the tax back, is calculated on the income before the tax credit, the tax credit does reimburse the individual for the effects of the reduction as a result of the gross up in the dividends.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the minister and maybe his department does not understand the gross up. Certainly the dividend tax credit has nothing to do with reimbursing the clawback, it is a reimbursement of taxes previously paid in the dividend process.

In any event, last week the Minister of State for Finance stated that it was not the government's policy to end universality. If that is so, how can the government justify its discriminatory tax, which is based not on the ability to pay, but based upon age and family size? A universal program that is subject to a 100 per cent tax back is a contradiction in terms.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance to admit now, to the Prime Minister's mother and to all the senior citizens across Canada, that Bill C–28 is the end of universality. Will he not come before the legislative committee on this bill to account for this policy?

• (1440)

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me draw to the attention of the hon. member a presentation that was made to me in February 1989 by One Voice, the Canadian seniors' network. In this document, on page 6, they said social benefits are given to every Canadian citizen as a right:" They can be taxed back from the rich because the rich should pay more taxes than the poor".

That is the principle that we have established in the budget of 1989, where we are saying that on the current fiscal conditions that we have today, we will make payments to all people over age 65 with respect to the Old Age Security. We cannot afford to continue to subsidize those people in upper–income brackets, which amounts to 4.3 per cent of senior citizens who are affected. Only 1.8 per cent of senior citizens are going to be subject to the full amount of the tax back. So there is a very logical reason for this and I am sure that the hon. member, if he reflects on that, will agree that that is the right way to do.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to a minister who can explain agricultural program cuts. Since European and American governments have not made any moves to cut farm programs until there is an agreement for an international phase–down of agricultural subsidies, can the minister tell us why Canada is cutting its support programs, like the two–price wheat program and the interest–free cash advance programs, before there is any international agreement, instead of using these programs as bargaining chips at the negotiating table?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised by my colleague's question. If there is a government which has defended Canadian farmers and doubled and tripled the efforts made to defend farmers, especially western grain growers, it is our government. But we have understood that farmers, in particular grain growers, also had to be defended internationally. That is exactly why our Minister for International Trade is making every effort to end the war between the U.S. and the EEC, so that our Canadian farmers, who have always behaved very well internationally, can take Canada's rightful share of the international market. That is exactly the position we have defended and will continue to defend, internationally and nationally.

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I understand the logic of helping farmers by cutting programs to them. Perhaps the minister can explain the logic of cuts to the agricultural research program that is ongoing at the Animal Research Centre here in Ottawa, where the funding was first cut and then frozen to the point where there is barely enough funds to feed the research animals let alone to do research. Can the government explain what has happened to its so-called commitment to agricultural research?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised to see a representative of the New Democratic Party tell us about logic after the way they treated the Meech Lake Accord last weekend. We have nothing to learn from the way you are behaving towards Canadians.

As for agriculture, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to invite my colleague to come and meet with over 1,400 representatives of Canadian agriculture who will be here in Ottawa to discuss all agricultural issues and to review our agricultural policies, which was never done in the past 20 years.

Mr. Boudria: Tell the truth!

Mr. Blais: We intend to do what no government did before us: consult Canadians on the future of agriculture. We invite all Canadians to come with us; all aspects of farming, from research to the environment, will be considered. I hope that my colleague will be able to attend this conference to facilitate the entry of agriculture into the 21st Century.

CAR SAFETY

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

On Thursday, December 7, the Minister will meet his provincial counterparts in Ottawa and it would seem that one of the subjects on the agenda will be the mandatory use of air bags in motor vehicles. Mr. Speaker, since the United States has a law that took effect on September 1, 1989, requiring manufacturers to equip motor vehicles with these air bags, and since the technology has evolved quite a bit recently, thus reducing the cost considerably, could the minister tell us his position and, if appropriate, whether he would be prepared to urge his colleague the Minister of Transport to pass such a law?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is greater concern about the use and effectiveness of restraints on occupants of motor vehicles. Although seat belts are effective in preventing death, the number of non-fatal injuries caused by motor vehicle accidents is starting to rise. We must look at the advantages and disadvantages of air bags and this item will be discussed this week at the Health Ministers' Conference.

CANADA POST

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq):

[Editor's Note: Member spoke in Inuktitut]

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. On November 2, Canada Post issued a press release delaying proposed increases in the northern air stage commercial parcel rates until January 31, 1990.

In this House the next day, ministers told us a working group would be set up to carry out consultations with northerners before the end of January. This working group has not even begun to work because the departments involved cannot agree on who will have the lead role or who will chair the group.

Can the minister assure the House and northerners in particular that this committee will be struck immediately in order to allow northerners to make constructive suggestions?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that there was a meeting of this committee last Friday, December 1, and it was decided that two representatives from Canada Post and Indian Affairs and Northern Development would start their tour of the north to talk to people in the north about the northern air stage problem, if you will, to see if in fact some accommodation cannot be worked out so that any subsidies by way of food to the north are done in a more efficient and fair way than at present.

Mr. Anawak: Mr. Speaker, there goes the government again. It will solve the problem before it asks the people of the north what they would like to see in terms of accommodating the needs of the north.

My supplementary is for the same minister. Because of the interdepartmental confusion and conflict that we have seen in the last month, because it was supposed to start a month ago, we have lost one whole month of the three months. I reiterate that one of those three months includes Christmas at which time nobody does really much of anything, especially in a bureaucracy. Will the minister take the just and fair step of extending the consultation period beyond January 31, 1990, so that northerners do not have to pay for the government's waste in its mismanagement of this issue?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I think the proper course of action would be to allow this group to visit the affected northern communities. They will do this before Christmas. It is Christmas Day, not Christmas month, and there are still some days left in this month in which this work can carry on. It is not until the end of January.

If, in fact, some accommodation cannot be worked out by that time, perhaps the hon. member's request can be considered at that time, but I think we should let that committee do its work.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, my question is for the acting Minister of the Environment.

As the minister is well aware, Hydro Quebec is planning the largest river diversion project in North America on the Great Whale River. But the federal government which boasts about its commitment to the environment is not even intending to apply its environmental guidelines to this massive project, nor intending to honour Section 22 of the James Bay and Northern Quebec Agreement.

Will the minister or acting minister explain why a letter was sent to the Minister of the Environment in the Quebec government which opts for a co-operative plan between the two governments and would exempt the federal government from holding an independent and public inquiry in which all parties, including the Cree, who would be most affected, could participate?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has indicated from the very beginning that the Grande Baleine project has a significance for the federal government in that it will impact on marine mammals, it will impact on the waters of the Hudson Bay and on migratory birds.

For that reason we have made it very clear that our obligations, under EARP will apply to the Grande Baleine project and we will see that our considerations are met, either as part of a joint undertaking with the province of Quebec or, if necessary, on our own.

We have also made it very clear to the government of Quebec that there must be public hearings and that the Inuit and the Cree must be a part of that process. In fact, the federal administrator has already met with the Inuit. We have made offers to meet with the Cree and we hope that the Cree will accept those undertakings in the very near future.

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, what the parliamentary secretary has to say certainly does not concur with the letter written to the Minister of Environment in Quebec which makes a suggestion of setting up a co-operative effort rather than a federal environmental assessment, which is what we would like the minister to commit to.

Why will the minister not commit to an environmental assessment and review process on the Great Whale River Project and assist all parties, particularly the native people who live in the area, with intervener funding so they may participate fully in the process? This is a massive project.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member and all members of the House will know, the judgment given in the Rafferty-Alameda decision made it very clear that wherever possible to avoid duplication the federal and provincial governments involved should work together in the undertaking of environmental assessments.

That is the proposal we have made to the province of Quebec, but we have made it in such a way that we will require and demand our requirements for information, our requirements that the Cree and Inuit should be part of that process must be met. In addition, we will see that the necessary funding will indeed be made available to assist the Inuit and Cree in that undertaking.

GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the acting Prime Minister. Last Thursday, the government appointed to head the Security Intelligence Review Committee, John Bassett, a man whose appointment the Prime Minister would clearly have known would be highly controversial, as it has proven to be.

The appointment was made without getting the views of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, as clearly required, in direct violation of the CSIS Act. Will the acting Prime Minister assure the House that the appointment will be rescinded and a proper consultation process put in place so that the credibility of this very sensitive and important committee will be protected?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think with respect to you, Sir, you are still looking into this matter under a question of privilege. With respect for your responsibility, I think it is inappropriate for me to discuss this matter before the House of Commons. I think I need your advice on this because I think it is inappropriate for me to answer that question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria. I will listen to the next question.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, we have just heard from a minister who hides behind the RCMP, now trying to hide behind the Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wants to argue this matter further, perhaps he could raise it on a point of order after Question Period. The hon. member for Algoma.

TRADE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Two weeks ago we saw the largest gathering of protesting farmers from Ontario and Quebec that this Hill has ever seen to protest the policies of this government.

The farmers rallied on the Hill because they were afraid the government would sell them out at the GATT negotiations this week in Geneva. In fact, yesterday the government did sell them out when it accepted the GATT panel decision on ice cream and yogurt.

Would the minister agree that this precedent could be applied to all processed dairy products and thus put in jeopardy 60 per cent, 20,000 farmers in the dairy industry and their supply management systems?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the demonstration the hon. gentleman referred to was, I know, a group of concerned farmers but I do not think it could be described as a titanic group in numbers. But we are well aware of the concerns of farmers and we have not sold them out. We have not even leased them out as the last government did.

With respect to the GATT panel report on ice cream and yogurt, we have not prevented that report being adopted at the GATT. We have pointed out, however, that we do not like the interpretation that was given by the GATT panel.

Mr. Wappel: Oh, you pointed that out.

Mr. Crosbie: You would not bother to point it out. You would not know enough about it to know which direction to point in.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We have also announced that we are re-extending the quotas for 1990. The quota levels for 1990 are set at 347 and 332 tonnes respectively, up slightly from last year, tied to domestic production of industrial milk. We have advised the GATT that we will consider the situation with respect to implementation once we see the results of the current Uruguay Round of negotiations.

Now what could protect Canadian farmers more than that? Certainly it protects them more than the vacuous bleatings of the hon. critic opposite.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that that answer is a very vacuous answer. I was very careful not to call the minister vacuous.

I wonder if the genial minister would admit that what the government agreed to yesterday at Geneva and the GATT was the worst possible precedent at the worst possible time, at a time when the government is trying to renegotiate Article 11 of the GATT to redefine and to protect our supply management and marketing board system.

Since we are part of the Cairns Group and a part of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, how does he expect to negotiate and protect the supply management and marketing board system when both of those trading groups that we belong to are opposing our position and want to get rid of supply management and marketing boards and destroy our whole dairy system?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has just wondered how I could do it. I wonder myself, it was such a fantastic performance. We are members of the Cairns Group and it accepts our position, although our position is not on all fours with the position of the rest of the members of the Cairns Group.

What could be a better job for Canada than that? We remain members of the Cairns Group. The Cairns Group exports 25 per cent of all the world's agricultural exports. That group needs us. We need it. We are not going to agree with the group about supply management boards and the need to retain Article 11(2)(c)(i) and have it strengthened. The group does not agree with us on that. Other countries do. We will see what comes out of this mix but if anything that we have seen so far is repeated, we are in very good shape.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey North on a single question please, followed by the hon. member for Carleton—Charlotte on a single question.

CANADA MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Housing concerning Robert Jarvis, the chairman of CMHC who wants to be known as just another lawyer when he calls the Ontario government on behalf of property developers who are seeking CMHC funds.

Could the minister tell this House whether Mr. Jarvis has filed with him or with the government a declaration of his business interests, and does that declaration contain a list of his clients for whom he has sought CMHC funding?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the provisions in the conflict of interest rules, I have been advised by the Assistant Deputy Registrar General, do not apply to Mr. Jarvis with respect to filing requirements. The requirements of the conflict of interest rules do apply to him, but there is no requirement for him to file under those rules and therefore the Assistant Deputy Registrar General has no authority over him at the present time.

There are other rules that CMHC itself has with respect to filing. In that instance, the initial set of rules that was put in place in 1984 did not require filing by Governor in Council appointees but Mr. Jarvis did file on a voluntary basis.

In addition to that, a new set of guidelines was put in place by CMHC in June or July of this year. At the present time filings are being made by members of the board of CMHC, but Mr. Jarvis has not as yet made his filings.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs.

The tariff on U.S. corn for eastern Canada imposes a burden on livestock producers. In short, it has a negative effect on their competitiveness.

Could the minister give us some assurance that this problem is fully understood by the government? In so doing, could he give us an indication as to how this problem will be addressed?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I directed the Canadian Import Trade Tribunal to carry out an investigation of the situation as it currently stands and to consult all interested parties. That is taking place now.

Once those consultations have taken place they will be reporting to me whether or not another full study should take place. I will report to the House at that time when I have those recommendations.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Allmand:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give urgent consideration to introducing in the immediate future a bill to extend the variable re-entry provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to assure full protection of workers in economically distressed regions;

That this House declare its willingness to pass such a measure in no more than one sitting; and

That, for greater certainty, this House declare that the passage of this motion does not constitute a vote of no confidence in the government.

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, need I remind you that I represent a region where workers and employers know the importance and significance of the variable qualifying period of 10 to 14 weeks.

I am pleased to have the opportunity today to remind this House that we do not need to renew an outdated provision which no longer meets Canadians' needs.

In many regions of Canada, each season means either work, UI benefits or frustration. From my social involvement before 1984, I know that Canadians want to work as long as society makes it possible for them to do so.

Mr. Speaker, our government announced last April that it intended to bring in a more permanent solution for the variable entrance requirements. Improve the employment opportunities for those who hold insecure jobs is what we want to do starting January 1, 1990.

On June 1, we tabled in the House a bill that confirmed our intention. The new benefit structure which we propose to implement will better reflect regional disparities.

We have changed a system that no longer meets current manpower needs into a system that is adapted to current and future needs as well. Over one million Canadians have trouble finding work. I repeat, we must break the vicious circle of employment, unemployment insurance, welfare.

The workers of this country want something else. We call it human dignity. Félix Leclerc said that the best way to kill a man was to pay him to do nothing. As a government, we believe workers will use the training tools we make available to them. We offer them a chance to train for jobs that are worth while. However, we are well aware of the problems involved in bringing about such changes. We know it is much harder to find jobs in Newfoundland where the unemployment rate is still around 14 per cent, than in Toronto, where it is around 4 per cent.

That is why it is absolutely necessary to make the unemployment insurance program do what it was intended to do. I would like to take this opportunity today to appeal to the good will of the members of the Senate. I urge them to approve this bill as soon as possible. In doing so, they will help provide for a better qualified and a far more productive workforce.

Madam Speaker, it would be unthinkable to delay implementation of the labour force strategy any longer. Our Canadian workers want to work. Our workers want measures that are dynamic and effective. They don't want to wait six, eight or 12 months. They want to go on working, and they want to remain in the labour force. And they certainly do not want to be part of the political strategies of those people who refuse to approve our legislation. And above all, they do not want to be caught in the old vicious circle: job, unemployment insurance, welfare. Madam Speaker, this bill has was examined thoroughly by a legislative committee that travelled across Canada.

On November 7 this year, I announced in the House a new configuration of economic regions that will become official as soon as the bill takes effect. This reform will make the system even better adapted to employment conditions in the region where the person applying for unemployment insurance is a resident. This government realizes that the economic situation has changed in many regions, a fact that the Liberals ignored for so many years. In regions where the unemployment rate is over 15 per cent, the qualifying period of 10 weeks will remain unchanged.

Madam Speaker, as part of the rhetoric that has been typical of this debate, it has been claimed, without giving any explanation, that Bill C–21 was spurious and unfair. But it is quite the opposite. Think about people aged 65 or over who want to go on working. They will be able to do so. Think as well about new parents to whom we propose offering higher special benefits. The combination of maternity, parental and health benefits will be extended from 15 to 30 weeks. These higher benefits will provide parents with a more generous income support plan while at the same time enabling them to reconcile their work objectives and their parental responsibilities. Again I say that this government seeks to make the unemployment insurance program more responsive to the needs of today's active parents.

The bill as amended provides 15 weeks of maternity benefits for the mother at time of birth; 10 weeks of parental benefits for natural or adoptive parents, mother or father, or equally shared by both; five weeks of additional parental benefits for adoptive or natural parents when the child is at least six months old when first brought home; 15 weeks of sickness benefits. This is our way of acknowledging the importance of the woman's role in an active society, just as we acknowledge the responsibilities shared by a couple.

Bill C–21 will come into force with the changes we are advocating. For instance, eligible people will be entitled to a maximum of 30 weeks of special benefits. That is what I call progressive measures.

Madam Speaker, these are only a few examples of benefits available under Bill C–21 which has now been before the Senate since early November, nearly a month.

• (1510)

The bill features a variable entrance requirement which takes regional disparities into account. I repeat that the bill was passed by the elected members of the government. Hon. members passed the bill in the House. The Senate still has three weeks to consider and report the bill before the House recesses for Christmas. Those who are delaying the bill are holding the unemployed as hostages.

Madam Speaker, again I say that I share the opposition's concerns over the variable eligibility requirements as a temporary solution. Therefore I intend to vote against the motion before the House because I believe we need to implement Bill C–21, a reform which shows full respect for the dignity of the worker and takes into account the prevailing conditions in the economic regions. I will vote against the motion because I hope that, prompted by their collective responsibility, the senators will make haste and send the bill back before we interrupt our work for Christmas.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that last year there were 2.2 million claimants under the unemployment insurance system. She should also know that as a result of Bill C–21, 155,000 Canadians who would have been claimants will totally lose their claims and 775,000 will have their claims reduced.

As a result of that sort of impact, already the clerk of the Senate committee has received 159 requests by groups to be heard on that bill. Let us say that even if only half those requests to be heard are legitimate, it still gives us about 75 legitimate groups that want to be heard.

Why is the minister opposed to groups of Canadians who feel impacted on Bill C–21 having the right to be heard? I am not talking about groups that were already heard by the House of Commons committee. I am talking about groups that were not heard at all by the House of Commons committee because we had a deadline to meet.

Why is the minister opposed to those groups being heard by the Senate committee and, if she is not opposed to that, why is she not willing to extend the variable entrance requirement for a month or two so that the law will remain the same while the Senate is dealing in a reasonable way with those Canadian groups that want to be heard?

It is not the Senate that wants to extend the time. It is not the Liberal Party. These are groups of Canadians who are being impacted by this bill and they want to make their views known to Parliament. The only means they have to do it is through the Senate committee because they were not heard in the House of Commons committee.

I ask the minister why she is opposed to that. Why is she opposed to the democratic right of Canadians to voice their views on a very serious change in their lives and their economy?

[Translation]

Mrs. Vézina: Madam Speaker, I would like first to point out to my hon. friend that we need no lessons in democracy.

Mr. Allmand: Yes, you do!

Mrs. Vézina: We have an advisory committee which met groups and had discussions with UI claimants. We have a structure which involves a House of Commons and a Senate. What I am re-emphasizing to the House is the need to enact as soon as possible the legislation now before us, Bill C-21. It gives me very much pleasure to point to the statistics of thousands of people, claimants who ask for the right to be heard. I will simply remind you of the reality of the calendar.

On January 1st, we must implement the program if it is to be efficient and serve its primary goal of helping workers who are willingly looking for a job, after having lost their jobs for whatever reason. It is urgent that we implement theses changes to ensure that the system's primary purpose be fulfilled, to achieve what this reform sets out to do which is training, in partnership with the private sector. I therefore remind the House of the need to approve the Bill as soon as possible. As I said, the House will adjourn in three weeks. And my hope is, as a Member of Parliament for an area that knows all about those 10 to 14-week entry requirements and unemployment rates, and what I want is that we show respect for workers who are looking for jobs. I want to give them renewed assurances, as a government member, that our safety net will be available, today and tomorrow, to the unemployed men and women who are looking for jobs, and I would like to recall that the methods introduced through Bill C-21 are an active, dynamic, and efficient way of developing a skilled, and on effective force for next year and the years to come.

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Madam Speaker, the minister knows that she introduced the new unemployment insurance regions the day after we completed the debate on Bill C-21 in this House. She waited until we had finished the debate and until we voted on it at third reading, and then she showed us the new regions.

All the groups that appeared before the House of Commons committee did not know what those new regions would be. Members of this House who debated the bill did not know what those new regions would be. Now we have to examine Bill C-21 in conjunction with those new regions.

Considering that, does the minister not understand that it is reasonable for people to discuss this bill in the light of the new regions that she presented to us the day after we voted on that bill in this House? Is it not reasonable that these groups should have the right to give their views on the joint impact of Bill C-21 and the new regions? I ask her this again because she did not give me a logical answer.

The minister said that she cannot learn anything about consultation from us. She is talking about private consultation in the department and in the office of the minister. We are talking about public consultation in committee, with the press present and the public participating in the consultations.

We are not talking about private consultation. We are talking about public consultation. Since the minister herself introduced the new regions after the debate was completed in this House, is it not reasonable to have some discussion in the Senate with groups on what the joint result will be of the new regions and the bill?

Again, would the minister not reconsider and along with the minister for employment extend the variable entrance requirement for at least a couple of months until the Senate reasonably hears those groups that have something worth while to say? Why is she opposed to that?

[Translation]

Mrs. Vézina: Madam Speaker, my colleague knows very well, since he has been in the House of Commons for quite a while—I have only been here for five years—and knows very well what "consultation" means. You have criticized us as a government enough since 1984 for consulting too much. What you are asking me to do today before implementing Bill C-21 is to consult some more, leading Canadians to believe that the redefinition of economic regions is the same as Bill C-21, even without Bill C-21. Madam Speaker, the economic regions had to be redefined. As I mentioned briefly, the government that preceded us neglected to review the economic reality of the regions, neglected to analyse the economic situation, to recognize regional disparities, and now we are asked to consult before accepting Bill C-21? The redefinition of economic regions was requested by members of this House, both in our party and in the one opposite, as we often say. We need both reforms, two complementary reforms, and we can continue to go ahead with Bill C-21, knowing very well that even without Bill C-21, the economic regions would have been redefined. And I must congratulate us for being forward-looking and taking account of the differences among client groups and labour markets. That reality had to be recognized, and again, I call on members of the Senate to respect the timetable. I ask them to respect the working people of Canada so that as of January 1, 1990, we can implement together these two reforms which recognize and respect the outlying regions, from which I come.

Mr. Arsenault: A question!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, the time for questions and comments is up. Resuming debate. The hon. member for South West Nova.

• (1520)

[English]

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I would point out to the minister, just on the last point she made about economic regions, that the southern end of Nova Scotia always had a sub-area up until last November when this government took away that sub-economic region. So let us not throw stones at each other.

This piece of legislation is about the worst piece of legislation—

Mr. Reid: Let's not throw stones? Do you see any boulders falling from the ceiling?

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): The member over there says: "Let's not throw stones". The minister just spoke and said that they were responsible for the great changes in the economic regions. They may have been responsible for the great changes in the economic regions, but they left an area that had had an economic region change up until last November without that stability of a new sub-economic region in Nova Scotia, and they made the people pay by putting in extra work weeks in order to claim.

Today we have a special motion before us. The member who just interrupted me comes from Newfoundland, so he would not understand the variable entrance requirement because the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is well above 15 per cent and is protected by this bill as it has been in the past.

The motion before the House is a motion to pass what has been passed every year since 1977 by both Liberal and Conservative governments. It has been passed in order to retain the variable entrance requirement and not go to a straight 14 weeks.

If this motion is not accepted today by the House and if it is not passed before January 6, two things will happen. This government can smile in self-satisfaction, but one of two things will happen. The bill will either pass without the proper consultation that it needs and should have in the Senate, or the variable entrance requirement will be done away with. In other words, everybody will need 14 weeks of insurable earnings in order to qualify starting January 6.

I made some inquiries at one of the local manpower offices in my riding and I found that last year, from January 3 to January 6, there were almost 500 applications from only one area, and I share that office with the member for South Shore. In that one area, those people would have to go from 11 weeks under the variable entrance requirements to 14 weeks, and because of the repeater provisions in the bill, they would need 20 weeks of insurable earnings in order to qualify in South West Nova.

This bill is such a callous way of taking funds from a given region and saying to that region that we are not any longer going to give you the funds that were normally there as income for Canadians, the income which was spent in those communities. As businesses are well aware, if you remove funds from a given area you are hurting not just the people and the families who are relying on receiving the benefits. You are hurting basic businesses in every village, in every town, across a given region.

The spin-off effect has to hurt, and it does not take long to realize it. You will soon find people, the young in particular, having to move away from areas that have always had a seasonal employment base and the greater part of Canada, whether in the north, the east, the west, central Canada or Quebec, has a seasonal employment base. Bill C–21 forgets seasonal variations and says we are going to do it uniformly across Canada. Treat the people in Toronto the same way as you will the people there.

Mr. Kempling: You haven't read the bill. Read the bill.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Of course I have read the bill. The parliamentary secretary to the minister of manpower can sit pompously back in his chair. He does not know the effect it will have on all Canadians because this bill definitely violates people.

I am the first one who would say and say publicly, whether in my riding or elsewhere, that there may be abuses of the unemployment insurance system and the government wants all Canadians to know that. However, I do know what this bill will do.

This bill reduces the number of weeks of benefits, according to the estimates of a local manpower office, by probably from 30 to 32 weeks of benefit for the 17 weeks of insurable earnings to 21 to 22 weeks. That is an almost 10–week reduction in benefits for 17 employable weeks. It does not take much for someone, particularly someone who has been involved with the unemployment insurance program, to realize the effect of that.

Claimants who go into one of the manpower offices in the first week of January normally need 17 weeks. That is what was needed last January in order to qualify. But, if the bill goes ahead without any further amendments, they will then receive for the 17 insurable weeks somewhere around 22 weeks of benefits. I figure that that brings us into approximately the first weeks of May. In my area, with the fishery and with the way the government has handled the fishery, we are not even sure there will be a fishery. At that time the people begin to look for work because the fish have been coming in and the people hope that there will be work.

So what do we have? We probably have people starting back to work any time after the middle of May to June. They work their overtime, they work their weeks and, if there were fish, they would work all year. They work part–time throughout the year when there are fish. This bill means that by the first week in May there will be no more benefits for those particular claimants in that area, so these people must find work.

I can sympathize with people in the government who would like to say: "Let them find work", but when you come from an area whose economy is based on farming, fishing, forestry and tourism, the full employment season is barely the full months of May, June, July, August and September.

These people work and they get their 17 to 20 weeks, because they may as well know now that they are probably going to need anywhere from 16 to 20 weeks and then they go back on to unemployment insurance in the fall. By February they will have received all their benefits.

Municipal leaders have been telling me that this bill is bad law and that it has not been analysed. They are going to be the ones who are going to be under pressure next year. It will not be the minister from Bay Street. It will not be the Minister of Employment and Immigration who can callously sit there and pompously tell members of the opposition that they do not know what they are talking about.

Let the minister come down to the unemployment insurance office in any one of the areas. Last year at this time, 700 to 800 people were looking for unemployment insurance benefits. Last week, I think the number was around 2,400 in one office. That tells me one of two things. First, there is no work, and that I have to accept because there have been no fish even though the offshore quotas will leave about 26 million pounds the inshore could have fished in this particular month. There are no fish and the people have not had the work they have normally had.

Second, the people know that if they get their claim in before Christmas they will perhaps have a longer benefit period in the new year and will be able to adjust to the harsh requirements this government is setting down without providing any alternative.

I was around when there was a Liberal government and it changed some of the unemployment insurance rules. At that time I opposed certain of these changes, but never have I seen changes which take approximately $50 million out of an economy like that of Nova Scotia without having at least a make–work program established by the government in order to provide work in an area for those people who need the additional weeks of work. Never have I seen that.

• (1530)

People used to laugh about make-work programs and say that they did not provide long-term jobs. But they did retrain people, they did show them that there were other jobs in the community that could be done and they did build certain things in the community. But the most important thing was that they allowed people to find the additional work weeks necessary to establish a claim at an unemployment office. As well, they gave income to the people in many communities who needed that income in order to remain there and be available for the seasonal work in those areas.

This minister has changed the direction of the unemployment insurance program. She has said, "We will retrain". She has not said the government will provide any work opportunities for the many people who will find themselves caught by the new changes in this act.

It hurts members opposite to hear this.

Mr. Reid: It hurts anybody to hear it.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): They will have to hear it eventually. There are 139 groups that want to appear before the Senate. I have never seen a change in any government policy and the spin-off effects it will have in the many regions, villages and towns across Canada be less scrutinized.

It is a piece of legislation geared strictly, in my opinion, to the free trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): They laugh. Our unemployment insurance system has at least provided a subsidized income to allow all Canadians to have a reasonable living. Until this government or a new government provides a new outlook on how we are going to have income maintenance across Canada, we need that program in various communities or people will, as a result of this legislation, have to leave their communities and their families and go into the downtown areas of Toronto, Mississauga and other places in Ontario.

They may have full employment in St. John's, Newfoundland, but there is not full employment in Halifax. Many people there are now beginning to suffer the economic consequences because not only is the fishery not bringing income into that area but the people in the surrounding areas are not going into Halifax and spending money.

The whole direction which has been followed since I came back to the House of Commons less than a year ago has been detrimental to the regions. We see it in the fishery. We see it in the unemployment insurance changes. Because business has said the program must carry itself, the Unemployment Insurance Act must be directed toward business. Even de Grandpré and Forget said there must be something within the economy to sustain the people in the long term. Retraining should be left for business. Retraining should be done by the IBMs and the GMs, not subsidized by the government for the GMs and the IBMs.

Madam Speaker, the other day I picked up a press release and saw that the minister had given $2 million out of the UI fund to a radio station, CBC, to provide a program for retraining senior Canadians aged 55 and up. Why does downtown Toronto need $2 million? Is there no awareness within the business community of Toronto that the older worker has to have assistance, has to be reintroduced to the workforce by the community, by those businesses?

That $2 million is coming from claimants in the east who will have reduced benefits and going to Toronto, the richest area in Canada. Business people are asking her to change the Unemployment Insurance Act and she cannot get them to submit, on a tax receipt, the assistance needed for CBC to carry that program.

That was okay. The worst part was that it was only for a designated area in Ontario, I think seven cities. It did not go across Canada to help other older workers getting back into the workforce. It only helped her area and those businesses in that area. This is a very limited area as far as I am concerned.

I have watched this government bring in a bill and impose closure on it after only one day of debate. If I recall correctly I did not speak on this bill at second reading. I think I spoke on the closure motion.

I do not think I have seen a study on what is going to replace the $50 million in Nova Scotia, but I do know that with the way the unemployment changes are going that has to be studied. I do not think our municipalities can create the weeks of work needed in order for people to make claims without some assistance from the federal government, if it is going to proceed at the rate it is going.

At the same time, I think Mr. Buchanan is right that there is going to be a great loss of income available within the area.

This motion is simple. It does two things. It allows the status quo to continue beyond January 6 until the bill is passed. If the motion is passed as it is, it will not have all the consequences that I have said it could. But it will also allow the 139 groups which want to make representations to point out the concerns that exist. I do not know why the government feels that the Senate is not entitled to look at this, to give it a sober second look. I am glad the Senate is there.

I know what the effect will be in my riding. I think I mentioned that well over $1,000 per claimant will not be received if this bill passes. There is no provision for make-work programs to enable them to earn the benefits within the community.

I repeat, this is one of the harshest pieces of legislation that I have seen in the 15 years that I have been involved in politics. I do not believe that the government has looked at the effects and consequences. We have the opportunity for the Senate to look at it and hear the 139 groups. I think it is only right that the variable entrance requirement be maintained rather than going to 14 weeks.

The member from St. John's has been here a short time. He perhaps does not know what it is going to be like for his people to have to have 14 weeks, come January 6, if this bill is not passed. Since 1977, for 12 years, we have consistently passed this little amendment that allows the variable entrance requirement to continue. That variable entrance requirement means that people in the hon. member's area may only need 10 or 11 weeks in order to qualify.

If our motion is rejected by the other side today, people will need 14 weeks to qualify. If they are repeaters, as a good many are in some areas like South West Nova, which means they have established the second claim, they will need 20 weeks, come January 7, in order to qualify. Given the economic conditions that have existed this year for fish plant workers, it will be a very hard task indeed to find that 20 weeks.

• (1540)

I beg the government to pass this. It did it last year, it did it for the four years or more that it has been in office.

Mr. Reid: Just pass the legislation.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): This is ransom. Why should the weakest people in Canada be denied the right to have fair scrutiny of Bill C-21 when the government has always passed the variable entrance requirement? It has been passed for six years.

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, I will be speaking later on this and I will address some of the points specifically, but a couple of remarks have perhaps raised my blood pressure a little so that I cannot let them pass right now.

First of all, the hon. member stands there, points to me and says that I know nothing about the variable entrance requirement because the unemployment rate in Newfoundland is too high. Let me tell you about the variable entrance requirement, Madam Speaker. Let me speak of the people of Bell Island where there is a horrendous unemployment rate. It is an island in the middle of Conception Bay with no land transportation. It has a 70 to 75 per cent unemployment rate. In my region when the unemployment rate drops .2 per cent, under the old laws they go from 10 weeks to 16 weeks, just like that. That is what happens if the other place does not pass this legislation, that is the sort of thing that hurts people.

It is the variable entrance requirements and moving on with this legislation that is going to help and protect people, that is going to give them options, not stone walls. The member stands there and tells us we do not know what it is like because the unemployment rate is too high. Well, it does not work that way.

The greatest effect of changing the regions has taken place in my constituency and I have supported it because it is a response to the eight or 10 groups that appeared before the committee in St. John's, Newfoundland in the fall. They said, "Change it, make it fairer". I have supported what the minister of state has done.

I do not normally get this excited. I try to keep very calm and to the point, but may I sum up my comments on the hon. member's speech. I will not use the words that the parliamentary secretary used about knowledge of the legislation and having read it. The repeater provision is eliminated under the new legislation. It is gone. There are no more penalties for living off fish and forestry and seasonal employment. It is gone. It is eliminated. It is not there any more. So it respects the fact that our people have to work sometimes two or three different times a year, sometimes in two or three different jobs.

Standing up here and going on about the repeater provision and the hurt it is doing people is a sort of scaremongering based on nothing. It hurts people more than anything else. This legislation provides options. This legislation says we can do something. The member says that we are saying, "Let them find work". We are saying to people, "We will help you find work". That is the difference between the new legislation and the old legislation which says to people, "Here it is and that's it".

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I do not think there was a question in that tirade of words of the hon. member.

Mr. Reid: No question. I don't want an answer.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I would just say to the member that he has two things wrong. If his variable entrance requirement goes from 10 to 16 right now—

Mr. Reid: Right now.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): —he does not realize that the repeater provisions are already in effect in his riding.

Mr. Reid: Can you explain that?

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): I cannot explain it because it is the hardest thing in the world to understand. I can do it by using as an example the southern end of Nova Scotia. Right now the variable entrance requirement is based on the unemployment rate in an economic region. For instance, because of that, 11 weeks are necessary under the variable entrance requirement. That is the VER. We are asking the government to give Canadians a chance, to allow this motion to go through so that we can continue the study on this disastrous bill.

The second thing that the hon. member does not seem to realize is that in an area like southern Nova Scotia we have repeaters in the same year, given the fact that that is what the repeater provision was in the past. With that repeater provision a repeater is penalized six weeks for being a repeater. I agree with the minister's aim to do away with the repeater, but the member does not realize that, if this bill passes, the claimant who needed 17 weeks to qualify last year will get 10 weeks less of benefits. It is the amount of benefits they will receive that is reduced. Look at it, it is the amount of benefits.

Maybe Bell Island will get something from heaven or this government, I do not know, strange things happen with this government and some people. But I am telling the hon. member that this is an economic take-away from communities of $1,000 per claimant. I figured it out to be about $1,000 per claimant and that comes to big numbers. I said that in debate and you could probably find it in the debate of June 21. I think it is well over $50 million that is taken out of the communities in Nova Scotia because of the reduction of the number of benefit weeks. Look at what the minister prepared.

The member may stand up and pontificate about how good this legislation is but I would like to hear how the people in his area have been affected in a year's time. If the unemployment rate in an area is over 15 per cent they are not even affected by the legislation, because it stays the same. So the member is comparing apples and oranges over there, but the effect of this legislation will be apparent to most Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy H. Arsenault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Madam Speaker, as the member for the riding of Restigouche—Chaleur, I want to point out that the unemployment rate is very high in my riding as well. I am astonished when I hear members on the government side saying they will not institute temporary measures, pending a decision by the other place on Bill C-21.

As a result of the proposed changes in the unemployment insurance program, the Atlantic provinces will lose $260 million in benefits, which breaks down as follows: $51 million in Newfoundland; $32 million in Prince Edward Island; $29 million in Nova Scotia and $148 million in New Brunswick. There is no guarantee that this money will be returned to and spent in those provinces.

[English]

I would like to congratulate the member for South West Nova for trying to explain to the government side what a little bit of compassion is in this House. I am not worried about theatrics. I am worried about the people who are on unemployment insurance who will not qualify come January because the government does not want to pass a temporary measure, a measure that has been passed continuously since 1977 by Liberal and Conservative governments.

The only thing we are asking today is that the government continue a tradition and pass a temporary measure while waiting for the decision of the other place on Bill C–21.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member for South West Nova that she look at the "blues" because I seem to recall she said that Bill C–21 mandates a uniform 14–week variable entry requirement across the country. That is what she said. That is what I heard her say.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): No.

Mr. Kempling: Check it out. The bulk of her remarks sounded like that old Abbott and Costello routine, "Who's on first, what's on second"? It was so disjointed it was very difficult to follow.

• (1550)

When I saw this motion I wondered how people could be so cynical as to put a motion like this before the House of Commons pertaining to a bill that was in the Senate. In effect, what they are asking us to do is to set aside what we have done through committee hearings and through debate in the House of Commons and bring in another bill to handle one portion of what we have done.

If you go back and look at Senate debates on this matter in 1988 you will see that Senator Frith agreed with the deputy leader of the government in the Senate that the variable entry rate should be made permanent and should be put into legislation. That is what Senator Frith agreed with. That is what we have done, we have put it into legislation and now they want to change that somehow.

Bill C–21 passed this House on the evening of November 6 and for almost a month the Senate did nothing about it. They fiddled and diddled, that is about the size of it. They issued a series of press releases: "Senate Liberals consider delaying jobless change", "Senate likely to give UIC bills rough ride, Liberal Frith hints", "Senate may stall unemployment bill says Senator Frith", "Battle over UI reforms threatens eligibility rules", Senate threats to stall UI bill could bring serious hardships". That is the sort of little PR game they played in the Senate, Madam Speaker.

They may be wise to listen to what The Guardian from Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, my favourite province, had to say. The headline reads: "Did the Grit Senators think this one through?" The article said: "It appears the Liberal–dominated Senate could be instrumental in assuring that a number of Islanders do not qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. Word from employment minister Barbara McDougall's office is that if the Senate delays approval of the bill amending the Unemployment Insurance Act beyond January 6, the variable entrance requirements provision, formerly passed annually by Parliament, will not apply, resulting in Islanders who do not have 14 weeks of work credits not being eligible for benefits. All it took was 10 weeks when that provision was passed each year but now it is contained in new legislation and can't be effective until the whole bill is passed".

It goes on to say that they should really look at this: "Liberal Senators may not like the bill. Nevertheless it is going to go into effect eventually and it is time to choose between speedy passage or depriving unemployed workers of insurance benefits because of a matter of a few weeks of work. Surely the choice is obvious".

Surely the choice is obvious, Madam Speaker. The Senate set up a special committee on November 9 and did nothing until last week when they had their first organization meeting. They have made a lot of noise about a certain number of groups who want to appear before them and present their positions.

The legislative committee of this House heard 200 groups when it travelled across the country. Those groups represented national, provincial, regional and local labour groups and unions. They heard national business groups, provincial business groups and local business groups representing both small and large business; legal clinics, anti–poverty clinics, UI action groups, family groups, youth groups, disabled human rights groups, churches, co–ops, regional governments, tribal councils, individuals, pensioners, adoptive parents and adult education. They heard women's trade groups, women's training and education organizations, women's centres, status of women groups and groups representing mothers. They heard steel workers, nurses, construction workers; federal, provincial and regional civil servants, forest workers, miners, teachers, farm workers, hospital workers, builders, and fisheries workers. They heard representatives from railways, the petroleum industry, hospitality and tourism, the paper industry, mining and transport machinists, the automotive industry, banking, aerospace and the garment industry. On the development side of it they heard from developmental organizations; native, regional and municipal. You have to ask yourself how much more you want to hear before you go on with more consideration of this legislation.

The backdrop to that is that from 1982 to 1988–89 the government has looked at the Macdonald commission which, from September 1982 to November 1985, travelled the country for 74 days. It went to 37 different communities and by the end of its work it heard from more than 2,500 groups. Three of its research studies are on UI alone and seven chapters in the report deal with unemployment insurance.

Then we had the Forget commission which travelled the country for 60 days. It went to 46 communities and by the end of the study had considered 1,500 submissions.

Then we had the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which, from December 1986 to March 1987, in Ottawa, heard 53 individuals representing 26 different organizations.

After that we had the de Grandpré report that did not hold public hearings but invited comment from all interested sectors. Over 160 briefs were considered.

You look at that and then you look at what the standing committee went through, the list I just read: labour, business, social, women, development and industrial workers from various sectors. How much more do we have to hear? How much more do we have to listen to on unemployment insurance? Surely there is a limit to what you can listen to.

The members opposite are using this as a ploy. They want us to say that we will set aside the legislation that we debated and was passed, legislation that is based upon all the studies that have been done by Macdonald, Forget, de Grandpré and committees of the House of Commons. They want us to push all that to one side and hear another 159 or so groups.

After Bill C–21 was referred to the Senate we heard first that they were going to travel across the country. Maybe they still are for all I know. It is their decision to do what they wish, but we heard that they were going to travel across the country. Then we heard another rumour that they were going to have televised hearings on this bill.

I think what really happened was that the Senate took a look at the legislation and said, "My God, if we don't pass this by the Christmas break, on January 7 this whole business is going to fall apart and a lot of unemployed people across the country are going to have to have 14 weeks of work before they can apply for unemployment benefits". Then, I suppose, they looked at a list and said, "Where is it going to affect"?

In Newfoundland it is going to affect the Avalon Peninsula, Fortune Bay, Gander, Corner Brook and Labrador. It is going to affect all of Prince Edward Island. In Nova Scotia it is going to affect Cape Breton, Cumberland, Guysborough, Halifax, Yarmouth and Kings. In New Brunswick it is going to affect Moncton, Saint John, Fredericton, Madawaska and Restigouche. In Quebec it is going to affect Trois Rivières, the Eastern Townships, Montreal, Gaspé, Quebec and northern Quebec. It is going to affect eastern Ontario, Belleville, Peterborough and other regions such as Georgian Bay, Sudbury, Sault Ste. Marie, northwest Ontario, Windsor and Sarnia.

We have put a bill in place. It handles the variable entry rate system very effectively. Any region that has unemployment in the 14 to 15 per cent range will still require just 10 weeks of work to qualify for unemployment benefits. That is in the bill and that is why the bill should be passed. There is no logical reason why senators should go through this little dialectic dance that they are going through in trying to convince people that this is some great horrendous thing.

• (1600)

The reality is that the Senate has not done its job. It did not start the thing properly and senators have been fiddling around with it ever since. They cannot make up their minds as to which way to go. They suddenly realize that they have a real problem on their hands. The newspapers in eastern Canada are beginning to editorialize on the weakness in the Senate because of this bill. So members of that place called for help. This motion was put together to try and help the senators, to try and not take the blame for this. We have done our work; they have to do theirs. But they want to shift it back to the House of Commons and say: "Set your legislation aside. Pass this special variable entrance rate that we are suggesting". The motion goes on to state: "this House declares that the passage of this motion does not constitute a vote of no-confidence in the government". What a lot of nonsense! Get on with the bill and pass it. That is what the Senate should be doing.

Aside from the variable entry rates, what are they doing? They are holding this up. They are saying to older workers: "We don't care about you. We don't care about the plans the government has for older workers to allow them to collect benefits past age 65". With respect to the special benefits for women who are pregnant and ill, that special 30 weeks that they can now get, they are saying: "Forget about that. We don't care about that. We'll pass that when we get around to it".

The member for South West Nova was talking about some of the communities in Nova Scotia that are going to be hard hit. The increase in Community Futures is tied up in Bill C-21. The repeater provision is in Bill C-21. It refers to those who are unemployed, then get some work and go back in the same year to try to collect benefits the second time. Under Bill C-21 the repeater provisions are waived. Much of the training that could be done under Bill C-21 is going to be held up because the funds will not be available. I just cannot believe that the Senate is that poorly informed.

In all the years that I have been in Parliament I have always sort of protected the Senate. I have listened to a lot of criticism over the years from people who said that the Senate of Canada is a useless thing, get rid of it, dump it, close it down, you can save a lot of money, and this sort of thing. I have always defended it. I have said: "I think the Senate has a useful place in our system". I still do. But when I see the games senators are playing with this sort of legislation—dirty little games are what they are playing—I am fast becoming a convert to the view that perhaps the best thing we could do is just to eliminate the Senate.

This is playing brinksmanship, a game they should not play. Most of those guys have not worked for so damn many years they do not know what work is all about. They are totally removed from the reality of the workplace today. They do not know what training is all about. They do not know what is required in the industrial world today. Every industrial group that we talked to across the country has said that our biggest problem is that we do not have enough trained workers to carry on our industrial operations. People come to us and say: "Can we not bring in more tool and die makers from South Africa and Europe"?

When the Berlin wall came down and the East Germans were flooding into West Germany, my phone was ringing off the hook. People were saying: "We can bring a lot of tool and die makers from East Germany because they are good craftsmen and we need them here in this country". We are saying: "Look, we can train a lot of these people ourselves".

If you talk to some of our small business people they will tell you that, first, they do not have the resources to train. Second, they do not have the personnel. They have orders to fill and they cannot afford to take someone off the floor to train them. They are looking to the government to train them. The government is looking for some assistance from them, and for quite a bit of assistance from large business to help us on the way.

Let me tell you, I see this as a cynical, back-handed way of dealing with legislation. If the Senate gets away with this, I want to tell you that there will be some really upset people across this country. In the Maritimes in particular the people will be very, very hard hit. It will rest right on the shoulders of Senator MacEachen and his cohorts in the Liberal-dominated Senate.

There are areas in western Canada and in the north that will be affected by this action of the Senate. I would suggest that they sit back and contemplate what they are doing, reflect on it and get down and pass this bill. They can give it a good look-over with experts and officials from the department who are available to go in and explain any sections of the bill that they are not familiar with. Having read Senator MacEeachen's speech I can tell you he did not read the bill. He did not know what it was all about. It was a disjointed effort on his part. His comments were a discredit to himself and to the Senate.

I hope that the Senate will reconsider the actions that are being contemplated and that senators will pass this bill before we rise for Christmas.

[Translation]

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Madam Speaker, I find it very hard to accept what was said by the hon. member who just finished his speech, and I am referring to his comment about treating Bill C-21 in a cynical, back-handed way.

What we are trying to do today is make the government understand that in January, we might have a situation where families might be in great difficulty. There might not be any money to pay the rent or heating bills or food bills.

When he says there is no reason for such measures, I think we should consider the normal parliamentary process. As soon as the House of Commons has finished consideration of the bill, it must be referred to the Senate for further consideration. We are told it is customary, that they have to do this. They have every right to do so, and if they do, it would take us practically up to February, although it might take longer.

This measure would at least have the effect of alleviating the immediate needs of families caught in a very difficult situation.

The hon. member also said the committee had heard witnesses and mentioned all these people representing chambers of commerce and local groups. However, one group was denied access to the committee. I attended hearings in Moncton, where two ministers of the province of New Brunswick would have liked to address their concerns to the committee. At the time, the committee decided against hearing them.

I wonder why the committee refused to listen to these people. When the Senate holds its hearings, perhaps these people could come and explain their position, so that we can find out how the bill will affect people in the various provinces. I think the Senate should have enough time to hear these witnesses.

Is the hon. member saying we should not listen to these people, that they should not be given a chance to speak?

[English]

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, when we had an organizational meeting of the legislative committee dealing with Bill C-21 we had requests from Liberal members of Parliament who wanted to appear as witnesses before the committee. We had other requests of a similar nature from some of the provinces.

The member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, the member from Saskatoon, myself and others sat down and agreed that we should not hear from politicians, that provincial ministers have direct access to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and on commissions. They have other ways of communicating. It is not a normal practice. I would like him to tell me of another legislative committee in this country that has had provincial ministers appear before it. That is not the normal way in which they communicate.

• (1610)

As far as the witnesses are concerned, when we had our organizational meeting the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce came before us and said: "We don't want to begin any hearings before September 4th", or perhaps it was the fifth, whatever it was, the first week of that month. That was his comment to us. We said: "Fine, that is all right".

He then said that we should have 16 witnesses a day and give them each 30 minutes. We agreed to that.

He then told us in which cities he thought we should have our hearings. We agreed with that, right across the country.

The member should go back and ask him, do not ask me. We went right along with everything that he said. In fact, I can tell you for sure that there were only two cities where we heard the full complement of witnesses. Those cities were Toronto and Vancouver. Even in Montreal, his own city, we did not hear the full complement of 16 witnesses.

We were going to go to the Northwest Territories and to the Yukon, but we did not have enough interest for us to go there, even though we agreed to defray expenses. We offered to have them come to Vancouver and nobody turned up.

As I said before, this matter was talked about and talked about and talked about from 1982 to 1988. Surely to God we have gone far enough with this thing and there is enough information out there. My files are two feet high. They contain articles and comments that have been made and briefs which have been received on Bill C-21.

If the Senate thinks it can hear more witnesses, let it be selective. There is no law which says that anyone who submits a brief has to appear before the committee. We had all sorts of briefs, I think over 300, submitted to the committee and many of them did not want to appear. They just wanted their briefs to be registered, and we did that. Each day we would append the briefs to our minutes.

However, I just cannot agree that the Senate is doing anything but playing games—and a very dangerous game—with some of the people in disadvantaged parts of this country. It should remember that.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary. It seems to have become a pattern for this government on very important issues that it has its members make insulting remarks to the residents of regions where hearings are held.

When the parliamentary secretary was with the legislative committee on Bill C-21 and the committee was in Prince Edward Island, he suggested that the reason there was such a high unemployment rate in Prince Edward Island was because the people were lazy. That is the kind of stuff we have been getting from these southern Ontarians who sit on these government committees as they go across the country. I want to ask the parliamentary secretary if he still holds to his insulting remark that the people of Prince Edward Island have such a high unemployment rate because they are lazy. Is that the position he is still taking?

Mr. Kempling: Madam Speaker, this is the danger in reading newspapers and not reading the truth. The hon. member would have a very difficult time finding those remarks attributed to me. I did not say them at all. I did not say anything like that.

All I said was that there are a lot of opportunities everywhere in the country and these people are not taking advantage of them. I did not say they were lazy. One of the reporters said to me: "Are you saying that the people in Prince Edward Island are lazy?". I said: "No, I did not say that at all. Those are your words, not mine". The member should perhaps read his newspapers a little more carefully or get a better source of information. That is not what I said at all.

What I did say was that there are a lot of opportunities. I read from a list of job vacancies in Prince Edward Island that employers could not find people to fill. We had witnesses before us from the tourism industry who said: "Our difficulty is that we train people down here, but after they work for 10 weeks they quit and go on unemployment". I never heard the term "10/42" until I got to Newfoundland where members of the Liberal caucus—and the member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce was there, we had lunch with him—made a bit of a joke about the 10/42 instead of the 6/49. I think that is the way they referred to it.

We never said anything like that at all. I just think the hon. member, as usual, does not have his facts straight.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I want to join in this debate. I have looked at the motion from the Official Opposition. For those who are watching this debate they now know that Bill C-21—

Mr. Nunziata: They just tuned out when you stood up.

Mr. Rodriguez: Folks do not tune out when I stand up. They can lower the volume but they will still hear me. More important, they can see me.

I think that the people who are watching this debate understand that Bill C-21, which was an amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, was pushed through all stages in this House by way of closure. In other words, the government had that legislation on a fast track. It is about the only train in this country that was on any kind of fast track. The government pushed it through. Now that it has cleared the House of Commons it is over in the Senate where it is supposed to get a sober second thought.

Neither I nor members of my party have ever invited the Senate to use any delaying tactics on any piece of legislation. Senators have a constitutional right to examine the legislation. I invite them to follow what is their constitutional right. They are doing that.

What we have here is a power play by the government. The power play is the threat that if January 1 comes and Bill C-21 is not law, and the changes have not been made to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the government is not going to introduce what it has become practice to do in the House for the last eight years or so. That is to say that a bill would be brought to the House. It would receive unanimous consent for all stages in jig time. It would extend the variable entrance requirement. The government has threatened this House and the other place that if this bill is not through the Senate that it will not introduce the variable entrance requirement bill. What we would have is 14 weeks required for unemployment insurance benefits right across the country.

It further goes on to say that if the bill is not passed, particularly since it is a Liberal-dominated Senate, the Liberals want southern Ontario to only have 14 weeks of work to qualify for benefits. People in areas like the Atlantic provinces and northern Ontario would have to work 14 weeks to get unemployment insurance benefits where in some areas they may only have to work 10 weeks.

I want to set that stage because this is a threat that the government has made. It is a power play. It is a power play between this Conservative government and the Liberal-dominated Senate. We have these two playing chicken. Who is caught in the middle? It is the ordinary unemployed, mostly poor people. That is who is caught in the middle. I think it is despicable on the part of this government to actually threaten that and be prepared to carry out the threat. But nothing surprises me any more from this gang over here.

• (1620)

It is our position that what the government ought to do is introduce the variable entrance requirement bill. If it wants to make it contingent on the bill being passed in the other place, the legislation being put in place or the variable entrance requirement legislation will die, I have no problem with that. We are prepared to support that. I say that to the parliamentary secretary.

It seems to me that it is very unfair and cruel to tamper with the lives of people by issuing these threats. It is not fair and I think members of the government should stop.

I am prepared to criticize the Liberals in this House as well, never mind the Liberals in the other House. The Liberals in this House have suddenly discovered how important unemployment insurance is. It was the Liberals with Bryce Mackasey as the minister who introduced a very progressive Unemployment Insurance Act in 1971.

I want to remind the House that at that time that act was based on a full unemployment rate of 4 per cent. The premiums charged to employers and employees guaranteed the payment of benefits to those who were unemployed up to a 4 per cent unemployment rate. Any unemployment beyond 4 per cent, the federal government picked up the cost out of general revenues.

It was not long after that that the economy started to slow down and the unemployment rate started to rise and 4 per cent became 6 per cent. Then it became a variable rate. We all remember the changes that were brought in in 1976 to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

First, the members of the government of the day created the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission. They changed the fixed entrance requirement of eight weeks to a variable requirement of 10 to 14. They changed the benefit structure. Claimants were now entitled to one week of initial benefits for each week of insured employment up to 25 weeks. If they were still unemployed, they could claim up to 13 weeks of labour force extended benefits.

In 1978 the Hon. Bud Cullen was the minister. He introduced sweeping changes in the fall of 1978 which went into effect in 1979. The claimants were now required to repay a portion of benefits received if their annual income exceeded an amount which was one and a half times their yearly maximum insurable earnings.

Second, the benefit rate was reduced to 60 per cent of the average weekly insurable earnings from 66-2/3 per cent. There were higher entrance requirements. Anyone who had not had 14 weeks of insurable earnings in the year preceding the qualifying period was required to have at least 20 weeks. A repeater now had to work the VER plus one week for each week of benefits received in excess of the VER requirement up to a maximum of six weeks.

The member from Gander, Newfoundland remembers the fight we had with Buddy Cullen and his bureaucrats. We remember the fight well.

What was a social contract between workers, their employers and the government the Liberals in this House began to dismantle to the great dismay of Bryce Mackasey who had been the originator and the introducer of the 1971 act. He was a very sad and bitter man. He commented constantly on the fact that every time they wanted to chip away at the social contract which we call the Unemployment Insurance Act they always pointed to cheaters and said that it encouraged malaise among the unemployed. They said that it took away incentives.

I want to point out all of this chipping away, particularly to the new Liberal members. My colleague from Gander, Newfoundland, and I went through these fights together. He fought with the New Democrats, and there were Tories too. God knows what their political machinations and motivations were. But we fought it and we lost.

What we see in Bill C-21 did not originate with Tories. This whole approach to chipping away the social programs of this country, whether it is unemployment insurance, deindexing old age pensions, family allowances or cut-backs to VIA, did not start with these Tories. It began with the Liberals.

Let us not kid ourselves. They are wolves in sheep's clothing. They cannot fancy it up and come in here pretending they are the great defenders of the unemployment insurance program. No. I was here. I have lived through it.

Along came this gang in 1984. In this gang in 1984 we had the Minister of Finance make an economic statement. He said: "Well, we have to do something about unemployment insurance. We have to cut it. We have to do something about unemployment insurance." He proceeded to cut it.

He suggested some changes, continuing in the same trend. He said that henceforth pension income would be considered earned income. He said that vacation pay will be used in calculating unemployment insurance benefits, and that severance pay will be included.

We have once more the unemployment insurance program, which is part of the social contract, moving toward means testing. From income replacement we now move to a means-tested program.

Having put that in place the government then hired at an expense of millions of dollars Mr. Claude Forget who studied unemployment insurance and came down with the Forget Commission Report. It was music to the Tories' ears, except they had a problem. They had a problem selling it in the country.

The Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Labour, Employment and Immigration made up of members from all sides of the House studied the Forget Commission Report and we passed 89 recommendations unanimously after looking at it. I would have called that report "back to the future" because what it sought to do was to re-establish the social contract, to return the UI program to its pristine position of 1971.

We recognized the growing need to include part-time workers in recognition of a growing trend. We made those recommendations unanimously.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): What happened to them?

Mr. Rodriguez: My friend asks what happened to them. They got put on the shelf.

Instead, after the 1988 election we have this Draconian proposal of Bill C-21 which completely removes the government from the unemployment insurance program. It removes the government from any responsibility from what was before a tripartite arrangement, a contract between the governors and the governed, the employers and the employees.

• (1630)

Now with Bill C-21, it has taken all the moves that the Liberals started in 1976 and 1978 and extended them to their logical conclusion. The government now has removed itself from any participation in the social programs.

What the government has done is the first step on the road to what it has called privatization. Since the Conservatives have taken this position of removing themselves from putting any money into the Unemployment Insurance Act, then they have no right to call the shots in the unemployment insurance program. Yet the deputy minister continues to be the commissioner of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. They still want to call the shots with somebody else's money because now it is only employers' and employees money in the pot.

What they have also done is to use the money in the social insurance program for things which are rightfully the responsibility of government, such as the so-called retraining programs. They are taking $1 billion out of the fund for retraining.

I have here a planning and environment assessment document entitled "Trends and Perspectives". It was put out August, 1988, by the Employment and Immigration Department. It lists the growth occupations. I want to quote from this document because these are the studies, and surely the department ought to take a look at the trends in growth occupations. They are outlined.

Here are the top 10 occupations contributing most to employment growth from 1986 to 1995. I will read them, starting with the first and most popular in the top 10: Sales persons; second, food serving occupations; third, bookkeepers; fourth, secretaries and stenographers; fifth, chefs and cooks; sixth, cashiers and tellers; seventh, janitors and cleaners; eighth, truck drivers; ninth, sales management occupations; and, tenth, barbers and hairdressers. These are the top 10 on the hit parade. This is a department's document looking ahead. These are the trends.

The script that goes with the document states: "By and large, low to medium-skill levels characterize these occupations, with most requiring little or no post-secondary education or training. The nature of these jobs could, however, change appreciably in the future with a higher proportion of 'mental' rather than 'manual' work being required. Virtually all the occupations listed opposite will require certain minimum standards of numeracy and literacy".

Then it talks about the quality of these new jobs. Here is the quality. It states: "While debate continues on this issue, it is worth noting that over 70 per cent of the new jobs, both full-time and part-time, created in Canada between 1983 and 1986 paid less than $20,000 annually, with over 30 per cent paying less than $10,000."

There is the trend. They are taking this money out of the unemployment insurance program to do what training? I just described what the top 10 jobs in this country will be up until 1995, and yet we are taking the money out of these jobs to train.

I heard the parliamentary secretary talk about how we need these machinists and all the rest. Madam Speaker, you do not send someone for a six-week course to become a machinist. It is all part of an apprenticeship program. In East Germany, West Germany, or European countries, it is an integrated program at polytechnical schools where people are trained for these particular trades. It does not happen overnight in six-week programs.

Why is the government doing this? Because now what we have is a system whereby the unemployment insurance fund will be used by the government for things that are rightfully its responsibility; relocating workers, labour adjustment programs, retraining programs and upgrading programs. All of that is coming out of the unemployment program. We do not have the money inside the program to improve the social insurance programs, for example, the kind of program we need for parental leave or the kind of program to enhance the benefits that claimants should get.

We know that the unemployment insurance program is not used. All the evidence points to the fact that it is not used by workers to just collect benefits. Take fishermen, for example, people in these kinds of seasonal employment. The government decides when you fish, how long you fish, where you fish and how much fish you can catch. These are not decisions made by fishermen. If you are going to determine all those things, you have to make sure you have a network of unemployment benefits so that people can live and keep their families with dignity. On the bottom line, that is what we are talking about. Are the unemployed in this country to be made welfare seekers, or are we going to provide the benefits so that they can live with some dignity and maintain their families in dignity in the community? That is what it is all about.

I want to conclude by saying that all of this chopping away and eating away at the program did not start with the Conservatives. I want to make that crystal clear. It began with the Liberals, the first neo-conservatives to move on this program. The Conservatives are just taking this to its logical conclusion. That is the scene we have.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Debate.

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Madam Speaker, I was going to ask the hon. gentleman a question, but after the remark he made about the Liberals at the end of his speech, I decided I would not ask him a question.

The parliamentary secretary and the minister made the point here in the Chamber today that they have heard from all of these organizations, the unions, business groups, anti-poverty organizations, churches, and so on. They wondered why should they have any more hearings, everyone has been heard from. The problem I have with this bill is that the very people affected by the legislation have not been heard from at all.

I have here a list of places in Newfoundland that are affected by the legislation. The hon. member for St. John's East is going to speak in a few moments. I will be very interested to hear what he has to say as it relates to his riding. For example, what do the people in Flat Rock think of this legislation? What do the people in Bear Cove, Blow Me Down, Broad Cove, Goose Cove, Frogmarsh, Lady Cove, Hibbs Cove, Kettle Cove or Nicky's Nose Cove think of the legislation? These are the people who are affected by the legislation.

I must admit that it is sometimes frustrating to sit in the Chamber and listen to the parliamentary secretary make the remark he made a few moments ago. He said: "There is lots of opportunity in a particular province. They just won't take advantage of it."

I have never ever met a person who wanted to be on unemployment insurance. You may think that there are people who would like to be on unemployment insurance but I have never met a person, not in all the years I have been here, not in all the cases I have handled before the judges, have I ever met one person who wanted to be on unemployment insurance. Why? Because, Madam Speaker, do you know how much they get? An average cheque in Canada today is $210 a week. The average cheque in my province of Newfoundland is $195 a week. You would have to be crazy. You belong in a mental institution if you wanted to sit at home and get just $195 a week and by law have to report your earnings beyond 25 per cent more than that.

There is a fallacy and misconception out there by people who say: "Look, somebody just wants to stay at home and they want to remain on unemployment insurance". There is no such person, unless the person perhaps has a physical or mental problem that means they just have to, but Canadians do not want to sit at home and make that kind of money.

What is wrong with the bill? I just said it is the people whom it affects. I took a map of Newfoundland out a few moments ago. I took the places in the new zones affected by the legislation. Do not forget that the new legislation says that if the unemployment rate is 15 per cent or less then you require more than 10 weeks to qualify. At this very moment, if the unemployment rate is less than 11.5 per cent in Newfoundland, you require more than 10 weeks to qualify. So that is quite a difference from 11.5 to 15 per cent. Now, all of a sudden, it becomes serious because under this legislation the government has redrawn lines. It drew a line around the hon. member's riding opposite. Then the government drew a line right up through Newfoundland almost following the railway track—we used to have a railway track, but the railway is gone. The expression used to be "which side of the track do you live on?" Now it is "which side of the line do you live on?"

Mr. Reid: In 1968 I think the railway went, didn't it?

Mr. Baker: The government has taken the cities, the metropolitan area that has supposedly lower unemployment than the other areas and defined that as an area. Then in the province of Newfoundland they have taken the fairly, relatively speaking, well-off areas like Gander, Grand Falls, Corner Brook and made them into a zone south of the railway, and what do you have? All of a sudden, if you live in Paradise, you would require more to qualify for unemployment insurance than if you lived in Gallow's Cove, for example. If you live in Petty Harbour, you are going to require more to qualify for unemployment insurance than if you live in Bay Bulls.

The hon. member for St. John's East made the point a moment ago when he said: "Look, my area of Newfoundland has been fluctuating between 10 and 16 weeks because the unemployment rate has dipped above and below 11.5 per cent on the entire Avalon Peninsula." If you took St. John's and drew a line around that, which has been done, the unemployment rate there is going to be much lower than 11.5 per cent. Under the new legislation, if it is 11.5 per cent people require 14 weeks. So, it is a sure bet that if you live in St. John's or around there, you are going to require much more than 14 weeks because the unemployment rate has to be less than 11.5 per cent. Therefore, his argument does not hold.

The entire Avalon Peninsula, by the hon. member's admission, was dipping below 11.5 per cent and that is why the requirement was 16 weeks this past year in certain months because the average is for 3 months in a row. Then the next month came along and it was up a little bit above 11.5 per cent. All of a sudden, that was averaged out for three months and his district was back to requiring 10 weeks. According to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, it was around 11.5 per cent and that is why he has had the problem in the entire Avalon Peninsula. With this new map a line is drawn around the city of St. John's. Do you really believe that the unemployment rate in St. John's is going to be higher than the unemployment rate in the Avalon Peninsula? That is ridiculous.

When you look at unemployment rates, you cannot take the Statistics Canada rates. The unemployment rate in the city of St. John's last month was 12.9 per cent, but that is not the adjusted rate used by the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

What is the government now doing with the rest of the province? Well, it has drawn a line that goes between Sunnyside and Swift Current. Come-by-Chance is in the middle. If you come from Come-by-Chance you don't know where you are. You could be either in 10 weeks or 13 weeks. The line is drawn somewhere down the middle. Then it goes up through Newfoundland and passes between Philips Head and Northern Arm. If you live in Philips Head, 10 weeks for sure. If you live in Northern Arm, I'll bet you they are going to need 13. What if you live along the road? There are seven houses on that road. You know yourself, Madam Speaker, that they are all going to change their postal address to Philips Head.

Mr. Reid: What an aspersion to make.

Mr. Baker: Why not?

Mr. Reid: People don't do that.

Mr. Baker: Now, here's where we have a problem. The hon. member now is going to learn something. This new bill would not be so bad if people lived where they worked. If you work where you live, you can draw some lines. But in Newfoundland if you work in the woods, you do not live in the woods. If you work on the CN boats, you do not live on the CN boats. Your mail does not come to the CN boat. If you work on a lake boat, your mail does not come to the lake boat. If you work in the woods in Labrador, your mail does not come to the woods in Labrador.

• (1650)

A standard work crew working this past year in Millertown, central Newfoundland, with the contractors got 13 weeks work. Suppose one man goes home to Flat Rock, another man goes home to Bonavista. The man in Flat Rock cannot collect his unemployment insurance, but the man in Bonavista can. If he is from Philips Head, as I just pointed out, or on the road between Philips Head and Northern Arm, what do you think he is going to do? He has worked in the woods next to a man who lives down the road. He does not qualify for unemployment insurance to feed his family, but the other man does. He would have to be crazy not to change his postal address. Of course he is going to change his postal address.

If you continue on along the line, Madam Speaker, you will see what the problems are that are being created. In a province like Newfoundland people do not normally live where they work. I do not know many people who live on the Funk Islands. I do not know many people who live 200 miles out in the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. Simmons: But they work out there.

Mr. Baker: They work out there. And when they come home they do not all live in the same place. They live in various places. This year in this part of the country when the lake boats were hiring and laying off, all of those 400 Newfoundlanders went home, and they went home to various places around Newfoundland and Labrador. That is why this bill cannot work in a province like Newfoundland.

When we had the present legislation of 11.5 per cent, if the unemployment rate dropped below that, you required more than 10 weeks. It never dropped below that in the high unemployment areas. But now we are into 15 per cent and there are all kinds of areas carved out by the government in which the unemployment rate is between 15 per cent and 11.5 per cent and so you get that great variance.

What side of the line do you live on? That is the question that is going to be asked in the high unemployment areas in this country with the passage of this new legislation. That is why I say that the legislation is very, very seriously flawed.

The other problem, and I will conclude with this point, is that it amazes me, as it would anybody, to realize that the House of Commons, made up of supposedly educated people with good research staff, and the House of Commons with its Library and all of the public servants in Canada, has not one single MP in this Chamber who knows exactly how the new bill is going to affect his province. Not one single MP. Why, Madam Speaker? Because they do not have the figures done up yet. That is what they claim.

Mr. Simmons: Deliberately so.

Mr. Baker: They do not have the figures done up. They claim that they do not know, that they are just compiling the figures now. If you ask: "How is it going to affect St. John's?" They say: "We are not sure, because we do not have the exact figures done up. We have to adjust them and so on. We do not know". If you ask: "How is it going to affect Gander? They reply: "Oh, we don't know that. That's in a different zone. We do not know that". If some member stands up in the House of Commons and says "I know how it is going to affect all areas of my province", then he knows more than the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

That is the other thing that is wrong with the legislation. If you were to say to an unemployed person: "Boy, we are going to change the rules on you in January, but we do not know how many weeks you are going to need to qualify for unemployment insurance". The fellow would say: "Why did you change the rules if you do not know what the new rules are"? You would change them if you did not understand what unemployment is all about. You would change them without knowing the results, if you believed that people were too lazy to work. You would change them if you really believed that people were living off the system on $200 a week. And, of course, you would change them if you wanted to do away with the unemployment insurance scheme altogether. You would change the law to something that you did not know you were changing it to.

As far as the motion itself is concerned, let me conclude by saying that no bill should have ever passed this Chamber without us knowing the effects of that legislation. No bill should have been passed in this Chamber.

Shame on the Government of Canada. Shame on it for changing the system and not being able to say what it has been changed to and how it affects that unemployed person, the poorest of the poor. Today in Newfoundland, 101,000 people are drawing unemployment insurance with the average cheque just below $200 a week and, in Canada, more people are drawing unemployment insurance than the government claims are unemployed. That is how serious the problem is.

I would suggest to the government that it simply pass the normal bill, extend the variable entrance requirement and then interview the people affected by this new legislation and see what they think.

Mr. Reid: As my hon. friend has indicated, I will have the opportunity to comment a little later. I cannot, as I could not with our friend from South West Nova, let what my friend from Gander—Grand Falls has just said pass by. While it sounds marvellous and looks terrific, if you look at where we are today and where this new legislation takes us, all that has been said to us is total puffery.

Mr. Allmand: You know better than the people in Newfoundland?

An Hon. Member: You should have been at the hearings.

Mr. Reid: First of all, I was at the hearings. I want to quote from some of the hearings about the Newfoundland and Labrador Federation of Labour, about the Fishermen's Union and about the Newfoundland Advisory Board on the Status of Women, which advised the committee to change the economic zones, to put metropolitan St. John's in its own economic zone. That is what we have done.

Who set up the variable entrance requirements? It was the crowd opposite. My friend opposite calls them unconstitutional because they are decided by where you live. Nothing has changed, so all that we have heard is craziness because it follows on from where we are today.

• (1700)

I do not like the fact that some of the people in my constituency will need extra time to qualify for unemployment insurance, but I am a damned sight happier that people in the areas around the city of St. John's, in Bell Island, in Colliers, in Avondale, in Cupid's and in Brigus now have the opportunity to qualify like the areas around them where the unemployment rate is high. We have always had to draw lines.

There have always been questions about Goobies, and where the line is and where the line is not. There have always been some areas that do better than others. I get the message but I cannot let it go by. "Unconstitutional", he says. I cannot believe it. He says it is a violation of our constitutional rights. They violated them.

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, to me it is unconstitutional to discriminate against somebody because of where they live.

We had lines drawn in Newfoundland on the basis of an unemployment rate that was relatively low. We have moved to a system where we are drawing lines based on 15 per cent unemployment. That is quite a difference. Not only that, but the hon. member is saying that we had lines drawn before in Newfoundland. Yes, we did, but it did not matter what side of the line we lived on.

Now it does, Madam Speaker, right throughout Newfoundland and Labrador, but much worse in the St. John's area than it was before. Why? Because there are 22 communities listed in with St. John's. Undoubtedly, it is going to require a great many weeks to qualify in that zone.

Then you have another line drawn in Newfoundland which separates the medium from the really bad off, and you have another line to deal with in Newfoundland. That is a lot worse than it was before. You could have redrawn the lines and kept it at 11.5 per cent. That is what the witnesses wanted.

The next thing the government is going to do is require more than 10 weeks if the unemployment rate is below perhaps 20 per cent. That is the next step for the Government of Canada; in other words, to do away with the unemployment insurance scheme totally.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Burin—St. George's.

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I have watched with great interest—

Mr. Reid: Is he on debate, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Simmons: No. I am allowed to ask questions too, if the member from St. John's East doesn't mind if we ask a question. I am glad to have his permission. We wouldn't want to do it without his permission.

The member for St. John's East and the member for Gander—Grand Falls focus very graphically on the two sides of the debate in Newfoundland. My friend for Gander—Grand Falls is saying that white is white and he is right, white is white.

The gentleman from St. John's East is saying that black is white. I want to say to him before I put my question that he should not dig his hole too deep because there are a lot of people who are going to hurt under this new legislation. He can put the best face on it he wants to. There are still a lot of people who are going to hurt. I will get to him later if he gets the courage to get up and speak in this debate.

I want to put a question to my colleague for Gander—Grand Falls and to congratulate him first of all on his very graphic description of that line. One is almost moved to poetry, to borrow from another poet: "Have you counted the cost, if your UI be lost, because you sleep to the south of the line?" I could go on, but the point I make is this: Has he put some figures on this either in terms of his own riding and/or all of Newfoundland?

Can he indicate to us or to the House what this is going to mean in terms of a misery index? How many people are going to hurt in round thousands? I know he does not have the figure at hand, but he probably has it in his head, because he has done a lot of work on this.

I ask the member for Gander—Grand Falls if he could educate the gentleman from St. John's East a bit. In the process could he tell us approximately how many people are going to be even more miserable if this legislation comes in, if this crowd has its will and inflicts its majority on this House and the people of Canada?

Mr. Baker: Madam Speaker, as hon. members from Newfoundland know, I do the appeals myself to the Appeal Board and to the Federal Court judge on all unemployment insurance appeals that go through that stage. Sometimes we have had hundreds of cases heard.

I can tell you from my dealings with the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Newfoundland: if the unemployment rate is determined by the Unemployment Insurance Commission as I think it will be, it means you take the unemployment rate, take three percentage points off of it, and seasonally adjust it.

The hon. gentleman is laughing a bit now but that is quite true. Statistics Canada would show you that in his riding the unemployment rate is far above 12 per cent. The Unemployment Insurance Commission, in judging the rate in those zones, is going to knock off quite a few percentage points from that.

We can only guess at what the effect of the legislation will be because we do not know for sure, but I can assure you of this: we had a problem in Newfoundland this year and the Government of Canada had to put up $5 million to try to solve part of the problem of people not getting enough work even to make their unemployment insurance on 10 weeks.

Under this legislation, the Government of Canada will have to put up millions, upon millions, upon millions, upon millions of dollars if it is going to have people qualify for their unemployment insurance in the coming winters.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Madam Speaker, I am about to make a mistake that a politician knows he should not make; that of course is to respond. I admit from the beginning that I will make that mistake.

This is the hon. member who told us before the unemployment insurance changes came down that Newfoundland would lose $250 million and that thousands and thousands would be thrown off the unemployment rolls.

This is the person who told us four weeks ago that there were 60 communities around St. John's which were going to be affected. Now it is down to 22. I am dying for St. John's to be taken off the list as well.

This is the gentleman who asks us to believe that UIC is going to take 3 per cent off, then go on an average and move back and forward until the third Tuesday in the month.

All I do is put that before the members of House and ask them if they would stake their futures on it.

If I may return to the matter at hand now that I have transgressed, as I am sure I will again, the point, if I am going to address the motion before the House, is whether or not we need to move another bill to go ahead with the variable entrance requirements.

This House has already passed a piece of legislation that takes care of that, not only for this year but in the future, making sure it is there, making sure that the regions of this country get the protection that they need, and and making sure that the people who depend on seasonal employment or live in high unemployment regions get that protection.

• (1710)

Because their friends in the other place will not move for petty political reasons, they want us to pass another piece of legislation.

This House has spoken. That legislation has been passed. It is up to their friends to ensure that the legislation gets the due attention it deserves, because it is the people of this country who are to be affected. It is the people who live in my constituency who are going to be hurt because they will not move on this piece of legislation.

It will mean that workers in Atlantic Canada will have to depend on 14 weeks. We all know we do not have that option. We all know there is a problem. That is why we have a variable entrance requirement. That is why this piece of legislation changes the system so that there is a variety of things that we can offer people. Instead of a stone wall, there are options. I will come back to the options.

Formerly unemployed workers could qualify after 10 weeks if they lived in areas of high unemployment. That has been permanently enshrined in Bill C–21, but now the stall will not assure that that happens.

Let us talk about the regional differences that others have discussed. In Toronto the unemployment rate is 3.6 per cent. The new program will demand that you have 20 weeks to qualify. That 3.6 per cent is almost full employment. There is movement in the economy. There is constant movement. Even in our economy there is movement. Things change, opportunities come and go, people have and create options.

In Corner Brook where the unemployment rate is roughly 16 or 16.2 per cent, one will only need 10 weeks to qualify, which indicates that we recognize people are affected in higher unemployment areas, and the program respects that.

We have seen the national unemployment rate in this country drop by more than 4 per cent. In Newfoundland and Labrador alone it has come down by 6.3 per cent. In many ways in this business we are the victims of our success. When we fiddle around with statistics, come and go with numbers so that the unemployment rate drops and drops, we become victims of our own progress. I suppose it is a nice problem to have because I agree fully with my hon. friend from Gander—Grand Falls that people want to work. People do not want to be on unemployment insurance. If there is any opportunity to work people will take that opportunity to work.

Since this government came to power jobs have increased in the Atlantic provinces by 106,000. There are 106,000 more of us working out there bringing in a wage, taking care of families and contributing to communities. That is progress. That is something we have seen as a response to government action in co-operation with provinces, the private sector and individuals in the society and in the economy. The government has pledged in the last budget over $2 billion to Atlantic Canadian initiatives alone.

We talk about the fishery and recognize that there is a problem in the fishery. But for the first time we have a government that is willing to address the problems in the fishery as a national economic issue, not some regional issue. For the first time we have a government that is willing to say there are some problems and it will set up—

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): The government is the problem in dealing with the fishery.

Mr. Reid: I know. We took all the fish. We took them. We got them.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): You gave it away.

Mr. Reid: I can answer that one. I have been there. We have a cabinet committee chaired by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, appointed by the Prime Minister and responsible for bringing together government's response on fishery. There is a senior committee of officials to advise that committee. Never before has a government exhibited its commitment to dealing with this problem as a national issue. Never before have we seen that.

I would like to go back if I may to unemployment insurance. I work on the basis of two premises when I deal with unemployment insurance. First, as my hon. friend has said, people would rather work than collect unemployment insurance. Second, the people who are in the unemployment insurance system react to that system in the best interests of themselves, their families, and their communities. There is remarkably little abuse.

Let us look at the statistics. People react to the unemployment insurance system the way some members of this House react to the tax system. They make decisions based on what is best for themselves and best for their families. That is only to be commended.

What are we saying to people if we do not move ahead with this legislation? To me this comes to the core. I am a Newfoundlander. I understand what unemployment insurance is in my province: $865 million next year. That is a substantial transfer of resources not only to individuals but into the province and that province's economy. Whether we like it or not, whether we pretend it is different, it is an income-supplement-program.

If we stay rock solid with this very narrow, very restrictive program, we are asking it to do something that it was not designed to do. It is designed as an insurance program, but we are asking it to do so much more. If we are going to stay there and simply tell people "that's it, you are going to take your money and that's all", it is all built on negatives. We are going to make no progress in this country. We have to evolve that system and develop that safety net.

What are we doing? We are saying to people that there are options. There are alternatives that we can use with a bit of money and a lot of ingenuity and a fair amount of co-operation. At the same time we have to protect the interests of people who need that protection. The people of my province need to know that. Because their opportunities for employment at this stage are limited they can draw on unemployment insurance, but we have to be able to say to those people that there are other things that we can do. I think that is particularly important.

One of those options is training. We hear a lot about training. What are you doing training someone in this community for a job that does not exist and never will exist? One of the biggest advantages to anybody seeking employment is that bit more education, training, exposure, or experience in a job. It is an investment for them. There is a feeling of accomplishment that brings confidence.

One only need talk to anybody in this business and they will tell you that that bit makes a difference every time. Not only will people have an extra opportunity if a job comes along, but they will also have an ability and a willingness to create jobs.

People may scoff at that, but I have seen it in my involvement with the youth strategy in Newfoundland and Labrador. A pilot project was designed to help kids who are having trouble getting from school to the workplace. By doing some programming with them we have broad consultation. We were told: "Give me the tools. I will create the opportunity".

The third factor is that if we have the technically capable workforce and we know where the jobs and the opportunities exist, we can bring them to us. That is another opportunity, but it is not limited strictly to training.

I can quote all sorts of figures from StatsCan. A million people say that their lack of training is holding them back. The CFIB is saying that 50 per cent of members cited shortage of qualified labour as the thing that hurts them. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association found that 36 per cent of its manufacturers in 1988 expressed difficulty in finding skilled trades people.

If we can help people get that bit of training, that bit of education, that is a step up, but I recognize that in my province it is not as easy as that. Until now we have been relatively limited in some of the opportunities that we have, but we created the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. We are just seeing the creation of the preservation of nearly 20,000 jobs in Newfoundland and Labrador alone. That has seen investment of about $600 million directly, not to mention what has accompanied it.

• (1720)

That is building opportunities with people who have ideas, with people who have the capacity and capability to go out and do it in co-operation with a variety of groups, including the provinces.

The training under this program will go from about 75,000 people who are being trained at this point, or 2.5 per cent of the people on unemployment, to 140,000 or about 5 per cent. What are some of the other things that, for some reason, get overlooked? For instance, I know my friend from Burin—St. George's is familiar with some very successful Community Futures projects in his constituency.

Need I mention any more than Port aux Basques, Stephenville or the Port au Port area? They have been very successful. I have a new one in my constituency that will take in a large number of communities, with diverse interests. The people of the community will be able to say to those who have ideas that there is a little money here. We have a knowledge capacity that we can pass on. We have the ability to get grants and loans from government. We have the ability to provide some travel money to bring people in or to go and find out what is going on. We are putting more money into Community Futures because what is clear is that government cannot just sit up in Ottawa and divine solutions. It has not worked. It has not worked for 100 years.

That is why ACOA is in the Atlantic provinces. That is why something like Community Futures is so successful, because it comes from the communities. It is an approach that they together can take. That is one of the things this bill will provide, more money for Community Futures, more money for older workers. There will be another $100 million under the Labour Force Development Strategy to provide a variety of adjustment assistance for older workers not only in retraining but in experience and on-the-job training, recognizing that there is a disproportionately larger number of older workers who are unemployed and do not have the opportunity to get back into a job.

As we see shifts in our economy in Newfoundland and Labrador I need not tell my friends opposite that we need to have that capacity. That is what we are addressing. The SARC program has been very successful in a number of areas in my constituency and I am sure in others. We are ensuring that we are going to see the investment of another $200 million specifically to help those who are on social assistance, about 60,000 a year.

One of the remarkable things is the success rate in the SARC program. It is over 50 per cent. What that means is that one half of the clients of these programs are employed or in further training three months after the program. Fifty per cent in some things does not sound a lot. It was pretty good for me when I was going to school. I was delighted to get 50 per cent. Fifty per cent for all of us here is a marvellous number to get in an election, but I would suggest that in a program like this that addresses the real problems of people and that gives them opportunities in co-operation with the provinces we have seen real progress at 50 per cent.

We have also provided $230 million of this training to help get unemployed people into the private sector. As a member said earlier, the business community in this country does not do its share. It does not do as much as it should be doing in terms of training. Some big companies do and, as usual, what you have is a very small number of companies doing a huge percentage of the training. We do not have the broad application. There must be more involvement. That is what this will do.

If we continue to say to people in the Atlantic provinces or in any other part of this country who need help that they must accept the program the way it is without any changes, people are going to say: "What's the point"?

What this government is doing in so many of its programs, but particularly in this one, is giving people choices. We are going to try different things in helping you to improve your situation. We must evolve a program like unemployment insurance. It must continue to move and to change because if we do not it will not serve any better those who need it. Quite clearly what we have here is a program that does make things better for people.

I am tempted to return to my sin of responding to my friend opposite. It is a trap and I am at the brink. I would just like to say a couple of things on the economic zones. The principle of variable entrance requirements came from our friends opposite. The principle that was based on residency came from my friends opposite. The principle that in areas of higher employment, there will not be the same benefits that are available to those people who live in areas of lower employment. You have got to draw the line somewhere.

Despite the condescending comments of one of my friends earlier, I have been around the precincts of this place for a long time, and I feel it sometimes. It has always been an argument that St. John's makes it worse for the Avalon Peninsula and St. John's in this case and only in this case makes it worse for the Avalon Peninsula.

My friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception will tell you that some of his constituents in areas of very serious problem were not getting the same break as other people in the province because of the city of St. John's. I do not want to say to the people in the city of St. John's and the few surrounding communities that are close by that it is too bad, that I am sorry but no, we are going to have to make it tougher for you. I do not want to have to do that. I do not want to have to do that in the case of equity.

We were talking about lines, about moving people around and about where they live. When you go below 11.5 per cent today you go from 10 weeks to qualify to 16 weeks, just like that. At least now you will know as you drop a percentage point there is a week. It is as simple as that and it is no different from what is there now except the swings are not as dramatic. The effect is not as devastating. It is more predictable. It is more reasonable. That is where some of the changes are.

For my friend opposite to stand up and go on about this track and that line is ludicrous. There have to be lines. I do not like there having to be lines, but if he would like St. John's to affect the whole of the province, maybe we can have one economic zone. I guess I would be happier; most of my constituents live in the city, but that would not be fair to the people of Bell Island. It would not be fair to the people of Avondale. It would not be fair to the people of Bacon Cove. We have to do things. We have to move. We have to be progressive to respond. That is what this legislation is all about.

The question before this House today is whether the other place will deal with a piece of legislation that the members of this House who were elected by the people of this country have passed, or do we have to piffle on another piece of legislation?

Mr. Simmons: Madam Speaker, I know the gentleman from St. John's East, as he alluded to, is a bit tender from the words of my good friend from Gander—Grand Falls. At the same time I am tempted to say that if Jimmy Bakker taught us anything, it is that you should not try to be an evangelist unless you have got something in the gut. I say to the gentleman from St. John's East that he preaches today a false doctrine. He does not believe a word he is saying. He is doing a great job of mouthing the party line on this one.

• (1730)

This is the brunt of my question to him. Can the hon. member stand there and categorically say that, knowing that his constituents are watching him, and in case a few miss this this afternoon, I will see that they know about it. Can he categorically say today that none of his constituents will be adversely affected by the new unemployment insurance legislation?

I put it to the hon. member that many of his constituents will be out of pocket many hundreds and thousands of dollars. He stands there and he characterizes it in very different terms. If you were to be carried away by his evangelical speech, you would get the feeling that Utopia arrives when this bill is passed finally by both Houses of Parliament.

We know the difference. I say to the hon. member that he is being less than candid with his constituents, if he leaves us with the impression that somehow everybody, without exception, in his own riding is going to be better off because of this bill. I put it to him that many of them are going to be worse off.

Just one further question, so I do not have to get up again. He does a marvellous job, an absolutely fantastic job of mouthing the rhetoric on the issue of training. I ask him to look at what this so-called training initiative has done to the Canadian Jobs Strategy in Newfoundland. It is robbing small communities of many tens of thousands of dollars they can no longer access, because every time they try and tailor an application to legitimate, justifiable training options within the parameters of their communities, they are told it is not good enough. The application is turned back and the net effect is that the Canadian Jobs Strategy, Canada Works, or whatever we called it over the years, that short-term job creation initiative is now having less positive impact on rural Newfoundland because of this farce about a training option.

I put it to the hon. member that in real terms, in terms of the bill that is otherwise before the other House of Parliament now and in terms of the motion here today, this training as it is with the Canadian Jobs Strategy is a complete ruse, it is a complete farce as it applies to rural Newfoundland.

I say to the hon. member that unwittingly or otherwise, he is aiding and abetting the very shut-down of rural Canada with this rhetoric. I appeal to him as a fellow Newfoundlander to come clean on this one. Either he is duping or he is being duped on this particular issue. Training, yes, but make the training realistic to the opportunities that are available.

My first question, in case he has forgotten it: Can he honestly say to his constituents that without exception, none of them will be adversely affected in terms of dollars in the pocket as a result of Bill C-21?

Mr. Reid: Madam Speaker, the answer to the first question is, no. I obviously cannot stand here, neither have I purported to stand here, and say that none of my constituents would be negatively affected. Some of my constituents will be negatively affected, and I am sorry for that.

I will tell you this: Most of my constituents, be it through the change in the economic region or be it through some of the new opportunities and options that we are putting before them, will be better off and will have the opportunity to make their lives and the lives of their families and communities better.

Second, on the question of training, the hon. member makes a point. It is recognized that in some areas of our province, the training components may not be as available under job development of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. It is a case that I have carried to the minister and it is something that I think the department is looking at. I say no more than that.

I will say that first of all, there is Section 25, which has been a huge benefit to most of us and to the people in our constituencies. As well, to call the training a farce is in itself a farce.

I look at the people that the Basilica of St. John the Baptist brought in when they decided to restore the building they are in, a beautiful historic building more than 100 years old, and I may say a program started by my predecessor, Mr. Jack Harris. They took people off the street. Do you know what they have done? They have trained them to be masons, not licensed masons who can go to Westminster Cathedral, but good enough that people around the province are asking them to come to give them advice.

There is a professor at Memorial University who has an ongoing program. She brings in one or two people. Some of those people are now in law school. People who were unemployed, who had no options, no opportunities are now in university taking science degrees. I see this kind of thing happening all the time.

On the last point, I will take criticism for what I say in this House but I will not take criticism for my motives and I will not sit here and have an hon. member tell me that I do not believe a word I say. That is an insult to me and an insult to this House.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak in favour of the motion now before this House.

[Translation]

The motion urges the government to do something very simple and quite reasonable, namely re-introduce in the House a bill aimed at extending for only a few weeks the 10-to-14-weeks' variable entrance requirements which now determine the number of insurable weeks of work the applicant must have to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. This extension would enable Bill C-21 to get the normal consideration, which a bill of the magnitude deserves. It would enable the Senate to weigh the implications of this bill which will affect thousands of working and unemployed Canadians. The Senate would feel free to call in witnesses who have not been given the opportunity to air their views on this bill, witnesses such as provinces, municipalities, independent experts, research organizations like the Economic Council of Canada, witnesses who might shed more light on the impact of Bill C-21 which was rammed through the House at every stage. We want to avoid the possibility that normal consideration of this piece of legislation might be curtailed or cut off as a result of an altogether specious provision.

[English]

The so-called variable entrance requirement provision of the unemployment insurance program was introduced in 1977 with the adoption of Bill C-27. It was meant to expire after 36 months and be replaced by a fixed 14 weeks unless extended by resolutions of Parliament.

Each year since 1979 Parliament has passed such a resolution extending the life of the VER by one more year. This government introduced this same resolution which has become a standard piece of legislation during each of its first four years of power. The exception is 1989 when instead we got Bill C-21.

Bill C-21, by altering the structure of the variable entrance requirements and the unemployment reference levels used to determine eligibility for UI in each of the UI regions across the country, makes a dramatic change to the workings of the unemployment insurance program in Canada.

In addition, the 48 UI economic regions used to determine eligibility will be replaced in January by 62 new regions and the boundaries will be substantially modified. These new regions were introduced to this House only after Bill C-21 had passed third reading.

The changes in the application of the UI program will occur simply as a result of the introduction of these regions and will touch virtually every member of this House. Yet we as members have been provided with very little information on how the introduction of these new regions will affect the unemployed. We do not even know what the unemployment rates will be that will apply to these new regions. We certainly do not know which unemployed individuals will be denied benefits as a result of the application of these new boundaries.

We do not have an independent economic analysis of the impact of the changes in the UI benefit rules on unemployed workers and on the labour market in general. Are the jobs out there for the workers who will need extra weeks to qualify? How will the new rules affect local labour markets? Will industry have a harder or easier time obtaining workers? Will there be an increase in migration from one region of the country to another as a result of this bill? In which direction? Will the bill encourage or discourage seasonal job patterns? How? What will be the consequences of the new financing arrangements which has the government withdraw from financially contributing to the UI program, on the properties of the program as an automatic fiscal stabilizer?

Another source of uncertainty has to do with the application of the UI benefits savings to the government package of training assistance for UI recipients. During the course of the bill's passage through the Commons, we were told by government members and the minister that new consultations were taking place with business and labour to determine how these funds would be allocated. We have not heard the results of these consultations.

How will these training funds be spent? Where will they be spent? When will the savings the government will realize by denying benefits to the unemployed show up in training expenditures and in whose pockets will they land?

The government has been vague on all these questions. These are all questions which require understanding by Canadians before approval is given to the kind of major changes to UI contemplated in Bill C-21.

If the government is so confident in its legislation, if the government really believes that its UI reform can stand the test of scrutiny, will it not permit the Senate to give this bill the sober second thought it deserves? Will it not vote in favour of this very reasonable motion and introduce the simple bill that will prolong the VER? We will co-operate. The NDP will co-operate.

We can pass this bill with no debate. We can demonstrate in this Chamber a rare display of Yuletide solidarity with the unemployed of this country.

Maybe the government is not so confident. Maybe it is not sure that this package is so solid. Maybe that is why it has rammed it through this House. Maybe that is why it used closure at every stage. Maybe that is why it will not let the Senate look at it.

Maybe the government, despite the parliamentary secretary's rhetoric, is really intimidated by Mr. MacEachen and his colleagues in the Senate. Maybe it is scared that if the Senate takes a close look at this legislation, it will expose the flaws in Bill C-21 and in the hollow arguments of the members opposite.

Maybe the other place and Canadians will see that for the few unemployed who will benefit by the elimination of the repeater provision, there are thousands who will be cut off completely by this legislation, that these thousands will get nothing from the government's training programs, that the Canadian economy will be that much more vulnerable to the vagaries of the next recession as a result of the passage of this bill.

Let us not play brinksmanship with the unemployed of this country. Let us permit the democratic process to run its course. I call upon the government to pass this motion and introduce forthwith the required bill which will prolong the VER for a few more weeks.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I have a question for my hon. colleague, though I know that time for debate is running out. My hon. colleague went on at some length and at the end of his speech, he indicated that the real reason that the government opposite seems not prepared to introduce a simple motion in the House to extend the VER until the legislation comes back is simply because this government does not want the legislation to be examined properly as it should be constitutionally in the other place.

The members opposite who will very shortly be coming in to vote on this motion I think are a bit cowardly in not allowing a full legislative process to take place. Would that be something that the hon. member would agree with?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret to interrupt the hon. member. Unfortunately we will not have the time to hear the answer of the hon. member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

[Translation]

It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the Business of Supply, pursuant to Standing Order 81(14).

Accordingly the question is on the motion of Mr. Allmand.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaking (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion which was negatived on the following division:

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

AUDITOR GENERAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am troubled by the proposal of the Auditor General to set up an anonymous tattle-tale hotline to encourage civil servants to tell tales about other civil servants to the Auditor General. I am particularly concerned that the Auditor General appears to be dismissing out of hand the view of Canada's privacy commissioner that the proposed hotline is dangerous and perhaps even illegal.

I believe that public servants have a right to know their accusers and I would urge the government not to approve funds which would sanctify, subsidize and institutionalize anonymous informants, certainly not before Parliament has had an opportunity for a thorough examination of the issue.

I do not accept on the face of it the suggestion that a tattle-tale hotline is somehow the same as a crime stoppers hotline. The Auditor General should understand that he is not dealing with organized crime syndicates, he is dealing with hard working Canadian public servants. We all want to save money in this country but not at the expense of Canadians' individual rights.

I do not think the Auditor General should feel free to ignore the advice of the privacy commissioner on civil liberties any more than the privacy commissioner would feel free to ignore accounting advice from the Auditor General.

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, the tariff on U.S. corn places an extra undue burden on Atlantic livestock producers. Atlantic Canadian farmers already struggling to be competitive must now pay more for feed because of higher transportation costs than those in any other area of Canada. On top of this, they must carry the extra burden of the tariff on corn. Again, farmers of other areas do not have to absorb such a tariff.

I call on the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs to give this issue top priority and work to remove this tariff which hurts all Atlantic livestock producers in a very real way.

HAITI

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Employment and Immigration is rescheduling deportation of Haitians who fear persecution from the oppressive government of General Namphy in Haiti. They have reason to fear persecution.

On October 4, thugs threatened the staff of Radio Soleil, Radio Cacique and Radio Haiti. On October 6, Vilme Eleazar of the Catholic Church Justice and Peace Commission was stabbed to death after demonstrating with 46 other commission members against the repressive government. On October 12, a land owner, four soldiers and an army second lieutenant shot and killed a peasant in a land dispute. On November 1, one labourer and one political opposition leader were arrested and beaten by police.

Recently two Quebec missionaries have been assassinated. Recently, in the Plaisance communal section, all public gatherings have been forbidden, even religious ones. Renaud Bernarden in Le Devoir calls this state terrorism and points out that candidates for highest office used force to block elections and are demanding that Duvalier supporters be allowed to run in violation of the constitution.

My question is why does the minister insist on sending back people to risk prison, torture and assassination in Haiti?

TOURISM

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, customs and excise officials have for years been conducting immigration pre-clearance on behalf of the Department of Employment and Immigration at the airport in Houlton, Maine, as a service to residents of the United States on their way to visit Canada. Many of the people who benefit from this service are American sportsmen who are coming to New Brunswick to hunt and fish in our forests and rivers. This industry accounts for approximately $9 million in revenue each year and provides jobs for some 7,000 guides.

The service was discontinued on October 31, 1989, based on the position of employment and immigration that there was no provision in legislation for this activity. However, the principle for permitting the pre-clearance of visitors to Canada on U.S. soil was established in 1974 in a treaty between Canada and the U.S.

I understand that External Affairs has explored the question of expanding this provision to include other locations. I urge the Minister of National Revenue to review this matter and work with his cabinet colleagues to reach a solution that will permit reinstatement of pre-clearance at Houlton, Maine.

TRANSPORTATION

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, some time in January this government is expected to deliver another blow to Atlantic Canada. This will come in the form of an 11 per cent increase in ferry rates for trucks.

The reason for this and other rate increases is the steady reduction in federal subsidies to Crown owned Marine Atlantic. However, in a province like Prince Edward Island, higher transportation costs mean higher priced consumer goods and less competitive exports.

Now that VIA Rail has been forced by this government to reduce its service, we are wondering if Marine Atlantic will be forced to do so as well. I call on the Minister of Transport to refuse this 11 per cent increase, to restore a fair and working subsidy to Marine Atlantic.

The people of Atlantic Canada have suffered too much at the hands of this government and it has to stop now.

DROUGHT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, despite what the television news was indicating during periods of the past summer, the drought in western Canada has not ended. In fact, the 1989 crop in my constituency of Brandon—Souris and in parts of eastern Saskatchewan was considerably worse than it was in 1988.

Due to the fact that drought and low prices have had an accumulative negative impact on farm incomes, many farmers are experiencing more serious financial circumstances than they ever have before. As the hon. Minister for Grains and Oilseeds has repeatedly indicated publicly that he would readily consider any provincial proposal for a jointly-funded drought relief program, I urge the provincial governments of Saskatchewan and Manitoba to make such an offer immediately. The financial need is real—even though it has not been televised—and governments must jointly respond.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, as we near the end of this session, there is some concern about the fate of the bill on unemployment insurance reform which is now before the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, any delay in passing Bill C-21 will deprive many unemployed workers of their unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to appeal to the Liberal majority in the Senate to stop its obstructionist tactics so that disadvantaged regions will not be penalized. Any delay in passing this bill will have serious consequences. Thousands of unemployed workers who have worked the requisite ten weeks will be unable to receive unemployment insurance benefits if the bill is not passed by the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, families and children will be in great difficulty because of the Senate's obstruction, and I would urge the Senate to show some maturity and common sense so that this bill can be expedited through Parliament.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House a very serious matter. The Armenian people living in Nagorno-Karabakh, which is an autonomous region under the control of the Azerbaijan, have been persecuted by the Azerbaijan government for some years now.

The situation was quieted for a short time when the region was placed under the administration and protection of Moscow. The Supreme Soviet on November 28 made the decision to pull its troops out of the region and as a result the killing of Armenians is starting again.

The Azerbaijani government has also put up a blockade which is seriously hampering efforts to rebuild the area after last year's earthquake.

In light of the Prime Minister's recent trip to the Soviet Union and the changes that are taking place in eastern Europe, I call on the Prime Minister to ask the Soviet Premier to give the protection and right to self-determination that the people of this region deserve.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY LEADERSHIP CONVENTION

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, the following is a list of adjectives which Canadians have used to describe the recent political leadership convention held in Winnipeg: Unbelievable, strange, different, unacceptable, conniving, backstabbing, open, scarey, marvelous, preposterous, stupid, wonderful and insane.

Should another political party consider a leadership convention, it should refer to the Acme leadership candidates tips:

1. Never wear a concealed 007 listening device.

2. Invite media whose objective is to further the party's cause.

3. Be on guard and constantly protect your back from other candidates.

4. Take up a foreign language for intimate discussions.

5. Send your mother and brother on a long vacation at your own expense.

6. Beware of labour leaders.

Do you copy, Mr. Speaker? Do you copy, Mr. Speaker? If you copy, Mr. Speaker, I'll sit down.

EL SALVADOR

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, many of the Salvadorans arrested in the raid that saw Karen Ridd of Winnipeg arrested and later released remain in detention. Their lives are in great danger because under the Arena government's state of siege, the military have the power to charge people with assault on the high command, to immediately prosecute them and to sentence them to execution.

When is the Canadian government going to speak out clearly and strongly against the crimes of the Salvadoran regime? When is the Prime Minister going to send a strong message to Mr. Bush that American military aid to the reprehensible Arena government is unacceptable and must stop?

The silence of the Canadian government stems either from naiveté or cowardice. I believe it to be the latter. If the Prime Minister remains silent on American aid to the Salvadoran military, then the Canadian government must share responsibility for the military's actions. If those courageous Salvadoran humanitarian workers are executed, the Canadian government, by its acquiescence to the official American view, must share the blame for their deaths. The government must speak out today.

Tributes

CONAIR AVIATION

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of members the growing success story that is Conair Aviation.

Late in November I had the pleasure of accompanying the Western Economic Diversification minister in Vancouver, where he announced a repayable loan to Conair in the amount of $539,451.

Conair of Abbotsford is a major forest fire-fighting company with some 400 employees. Conair is looking forward to growth in sales and in jobs as a result of the ingenuity and expertise in the business of aircraft rebuilds.

Conair has gained notoriety for having successfully completed over 50 rebuilds of Grumman tracker aircraft. Called Firecats, these fire bombers are gaining popularity in Australia and Europe. France presently has 16 and has plans for more.

Conair anticipates exports of 20 to 30 re-engined, turboprop Firecats at a price of some $3.5 million each. Significantly, each plane sustains 20 jobs a year. Four Firecats a year mean 80 jobs. With the help of the repayable contribution, Conair and its employees will be soaring to new heights.

TOY SAFETY

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, every year at this time, it is a "parents beware" crisis around Christmas shopping. The Canadian Toy Testing Council releases in early November its annual toy guide for a fee in which it rates toys according to design, function, durability and play value, but it is mute on the question of safety.

This non-profit consumer advocacy group evaluates 1,500 items each year for its annual toy report. Too many of these products are unsafe for our children and therefore should be removed from the shelves.

It is unacceptable that no consumer toy testing agency in Canada has a mandate to test for safety. This is dangerous and irresponsible. The government should be issuing regular bulletins to make parents aware of unsafe toys. More inspectors are needed. Tougher enforcement should be mandatory along with the better labelling of toys.

LEADER OF THE NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the election of the new Leader of the New Democratic Party is a tremendous personal achievement and I convey both sincere congratulations and best wishes to her, I am sure, from every corner of this House.

As the first woman to lead a national party, she will bring to Parliament qualities of heart and mind that will benefit this institution. Her personal accomplishment is truly historic and will not be forgotten. It is historic and I congratulate her personally for such a major achievement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, while there are real and sharp party differences, there is a community of interests and a dedication to the public welfare that tends to make this institution work.

The new leader has already demonstrated her skill and resolve in dealing in this Chamber with the great issues of public policy confronting Canada and I look forward to working with her in the years ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party and of course on behalf of all government members, I wish the Leader of the NDP every success in the performance of her new duties and offer her our assurances of sincere co-operation. As a colleague, I would like to say: Welcome!

[English]

The new Leader of the NDP will soon learn the challenges and the difficulties of national leadership, but obviously, one of her sources of joy will be a caucus of solidly united brothers and sisters.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1420)

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, this morning, Wednesday, was caucus and I could hear their caucus chorus of Solidarity Forever as far away as Meech Lake.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I am sure that all members of all parties were impressed with the very fine photo on page one of The Globe and Mail this morning showing the new leader with Shirley Carr, both wearing big smiles. There is no indication yet of what they were saying, and I can hardly wait until tonight to find out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The member should not be offended because much of what Shirley Carr says about me is unprintable too.

Whatever our differences may be in the future, I hope that the new leader keeps in mind that the hon. member for Yukon, whoever he or she is over the years, always has a special place in my heart.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Public life brings with it periods of difficulty and moments of great joy. I think that for Canada, for all Canadians, regardless of political persuasion, the hon member's election to the leadership of a great national party will be viewed as a joyful occasion, and I am pleased today, as Prime Minister of Canada, to underline the strength of character and the very impressive personal qualities of the member that made it possible.

[Translation]

On behalf of all Canadians, I wish to extend to the hon. member my sincere congratulations and best wishes for the future.

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice to the thousands of Canadians who are offering congratulations to the new Leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Yukon.

[Translation]

The victory she won so gallantly, Mr. Speaker, is an historic one. Our colleague can be proud of the fact that she is following in the footsteps of such eminent figures as J.S. Woodsworth, M.J. Coldwell, Tommy Douglas, David Lewis, and his eminent predecessor, the hon. member for Oshawa. On that important day, Mr. Speaker, we all noticed the almost continuous presence at her side of Stanley Knowles, Woodsworth's last colleague who did a symbolic laying-on of hands.

I can inform the new leader that her election changes the dynamics of her own party, of our country and, I hope, of the House of Commons. In fact, I think a number of candidates for the leadership of my own party will be following her performance very closely, since her victory may affect their campaigns!

[English]

On a personal level, I want to warn her, Mr. Speaker, that in the coming weeks and months she will be receiving a good deal of advice, some of it solicited, most of it not; advice as to how she should lead the NDP and where she should lead the party. My advice to her is to listen to all of it, but do not compromise your own integrity, do not comprise your own reputation. No two things can disappear faster than reputation and integrity, and with more devastating consequences.

I also want to offer my congratulations to the other NDP candidates in the race. The member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca made a convention speech which was a triumph. He did it his way, no holds barred, but he did it with wit and humour, panache and passion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I know, Your Honour, it is tough to lose a close race like that, but he has accepted the results with grace and equanimity.

The member for Essex—Windsor also delivered a very, very powerful speech. I found it full of direction and commitment.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I know it is not easy running for the leadership of a political party. I congratulate every one of the candidates, those who are members of this House and the one who was not—perhaps we might see him here some day—for running excellent races.

I want to say to them that despite the mediocre press they received through a good deal of the campaign, they need to have something to offer since all of the so-called NDP stars sat out the leadership race and became media commentators and pundits, except toward the end of the final day when some of them became platform dancers. Listening to some of the commentary, it was my view that the candidates themselves performed a lot better than the commentators.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has mentioned the challenges of leadership. Those challenges, I warn her, are unpredictable. We in this party all remember that in response to the initiatives of her predecessor, Erik Nielsen, then the member for Yukon, we had to sweep our caucus room for bugs; not that anything was confidential anyway.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to suggest to the new leader that she is going to have to go a step further. She is going to have to sweep them as they walk into the room.

I flew back with my colleagues from Winnipeg this morning, and we thought that we would buy her one of those airport metal detectors to put at the caucus door.

In any event, the convention certainly proved that the NDP is a modern party. It has entered the electronic age in a big way.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Yukon is going to accept her predecessor's suggestion which he made to me on several occasions, including on national television, that Canada would function better under a two-party system. Now, I want to tell her, and this is the time to say it to her, Mr. Speaker, that now is the time to talk about it. We are open to that idea. Whenever the NDP is ready to close up shop and join us, we can begin talks, as long as you leave your microphones at the door.

The new leader has said that she enjoys a challenge. Well, I cannot tell the hon. member for Yukon that we in this party wish her electoral success, quite the opposite. We do wish her success in meeting the tough challenge of following, in the initial days, in the footsteps of her very excellent predecessor, the hon. member for Oshawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope, as a member of the House of Commons, she continues his complete commitment to the House of Commons, to treating this place seriously. If she does, our party and our caucus looks forward to working with her and her party in a co-operative fashion.

Again, my congratulations, Mr. Speaker, to her on her victory, on her new and important role in this country as Leader of her party, as a very, very important Canadian citizen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Thank you, thank you very much for your words of congratulations!

[English]

I certainly look forward to working with the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Official Opposition. I would like to say to the Prime Minister that I am glad that members from the Yukon have a special place in his heart. I assure him that he will have a special line in my book.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: There are a lot of people in this House who can give me very good lessons on being a leader, but the most important lesson I have learned since I have been here is of the dignity with which all leaders in this House have acted. It is correct, I am sure, as we have learned from our own experiences, that at times there are some differences of opinion in caucuses which we as leaders have to work toward mending.

I do not think anyone from now on will say the NDP is not fun. People have asked about my style. Part of our strategy is that we are going to destroy some of those myths. I think we have begun to destroy that one. As the hon. Leader of the Opposition said, we have moved into the age of technology. I got my metal detector on Sunday morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to be here and it is a great honour to serve with all of you. As the Prime Minister said, we certainly have our partisan differences. They are not going to go away. Neither, I suspect, hon. Leader of the Opposition, are any of the parties going to go away.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: We are all here to serve the Canadian people. I, too, want to pay special tribute to the other candidates in this leadership campaign who acted with honour and who put themselves on the line. We all know what that means in politics. I want to give a special tribute to them. There are other leadership candidates in this room too, and they know what it has been like. I would really like to thank them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: Of course, I have had another good teacher in this House and that is the hon. gentleman—I hesitate to say—to my left. I am even going to break the rules, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Ed Broadbent has brought great honour to this House throughout his career, and not only to the New Democratic Party but to us all. He is a politician who is respected, who speaks his mind, who stands up for what he believes. And, in the end, I think that is what we all do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Ms. McLaughlin: And finally, I want to thank the Prime Minister!

[English]

I look forward to working with you. I am sure that this gracious moment will continue through the next—three quarters of an hour!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

VIA RAIL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Today dozens of mayors from all across Canada are in Ottawa as are many senior citizens and other outraged Canadians from Atlantic Canada and British Columbia. They are all here at their own expense. They are here to renew their call for a moratorium on the cuts to VIA Rail, cuts scheduled to be implemented on January 15.

On November 8 the all-party Standing Committee on Transport issued a report also calling for a moratorium on cuts to VIA Rail. Both inside and outside Parliament Canadians of every political stripe are asking this government to halt the slaughter of VIA Rail.

How can the Prime Minister expect to be taken seriously when he says that he believes in parliamentary committees, when he says that he believes in consulting the provinces and municipalities and when he says he believes in listening to senior citizens and the disabled while at the same time he refuses to listen to Canadians who say they want a quality passenger train service in Canada? Why is it that once again the Prime Minister believes that the Cabinet and he are right and all other Canadians are wrong?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly answered questions from the Leader of the Opposition and others about a moratorium.

Today, December 6, 1989, the situation has not changed substantially from what it was in October, as far as resources are concerned. In other words, our reasons for setting new reference levels were based on the ability of people to pay for services that are being used very little. And Mr. Speaker, the first people to benefit from a sensible and efficient approach by government to management are the general public.

I repeat what I said before. I have no intention of requesting or putting a moratorium on the decision concerning VIA Rail.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have heard that answer from the Minister of Transport before. The following question is directed to the Prime Minister, who has repeatedly told the House about his commitment to parliamentary reform. He has also said that he was personally very proud of the reform of parliamentary committees.

If he wants to be taken seriously, the Prime Minister should bear in mind that a standing committee of the House, with a majority of Conservative members, has asked the government to withdraw the budgetary cutbacks that are to take effect on January 15 at VIA Rail.

Why has the Prime Minister of Canada refused to take the advice of the standing committee? Will he not wait until an interim report by the Royal Commission of Inquiry on Transportation in Canada is published, to find out what the future holds for passenger rail transportation, before proceeding with the budgetary cutbacks planned by the Minister of Transport?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): The Leader of the Opposition mentioned the benefits of parliamentary reform, and rightly so, but it is not a one-way proposition. The freedom and independence granted parliamentary committees also means that when committes make recommendations, the minister has the right to either consider or not consider them, depending on the government's policies.

Mr. Speaker, we have repeatedly explained our position on paying for services that are not being used by the public.

Mr. Speaker, in the end, whatever the outcome may be, and contrary to what the party opposite did for 20 years, we have an obligation to consider the costs facing us, and when the government decides that those costs go beyond the financial resources available to us, we must take the kind of courageous decisions that this government has made, and that is why, while it has every respect for the advice of the parliamentary committee, the government has decided to stress the commitment to good management it made to Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to put the question again to the Prime Minister. On his many international trips surely he has seen what other countries are doing, in Europe and elsewhere, to improve high quality, high speed train service for people. This Prime Minister promised, on coming into office in 1984, to build a co-operative federalism. Not a single provincial government, not a single mayor of Canada's cities or towns approves of the Prime Minister's plans to destroy VIA Rail. From coast to coast Canadians are condemning the plan.

Will the Prime Minister agree, as I have on other occasions, to meet personally with the mayors from across Canada who are in Ottawa today? Does the Prime Minister not agree that these mayors represent an important and critical part of our democratic process and represent directly the communities that elected them and, on behalf of Canadians, have a right to put their case directly to the leader of our government, the Prime Minister of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly acknowledge the very important role played by the mayors in our national life. Indeed, I have had the occasion to meet with many of them on a regular and ongoing basis regarding the matters that they choose to raise.

My right hon. friend asks about comments made by other world leaders when we travel. The principal comment made by world leaders when we travel is the comment that came out of the OECD the day before yesterday: "Continue the work, Government of Canada, of getting your deficit under control because it is key to ongoing economic prosperity for Canada".

• (1440)

There is the key, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Pass that comment on directly to the mayors.

Mr. Mulroney: I pass it on to the mayors or to anybody else.

The Leader of the Opposition has spent his career since he came into this House as the captive of any interest group.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: He constantly puts forward every spending program. Never once has he given the slightest concern, in terms of the control of the deficit, to the massive deficit that began in Canada when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: You doubled it.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what we are dealing with. We are trying to clean up the mess left by the former Minister of Finance, the present Leader of the Liberal Party.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. The Minister knows that it costs $45 million to maintain VIA's nine remote routes. Forty-five million dollars would reinstate the chopped routes in Atlantic Canada. The Standing Committee on Transport, as well as the Liberal Party, has recommended that this money be approved separately by Parliament. This would allow for an additional $45 million in VIA's budget and allow for the reinstatement of the Atlantic Canada routes.

Will the Minister make this commitment to Atlantic Canadians?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish I could count like the Liberal Party does but I just cannot manage that.

Whichever way you look at it, Mr. Speaker, whether the $45 million are drawn from the VIA Rail budget or the government's supplementary estimates, they still add up to $45 million. We simply do not have those millions. We built a national network. We have kept an accessible network for which we can afford to pay.

That is not what my colleague is asking for. My colleague is urging us to do what the Liberal Party has always done: throw in money, more money, still more money!

You forgot to pay the bills and passed them on to us. That is what we are now trying to do.

[English]

Mr. Rideout: Mr. Speaker, it is not just the Liberal Party, the Transport Committee is also requesting that this be done.

In October I asked the minister if the VIA Rail cuts would adversely affect CN and CP and he responded: "Absolutely not". I have been advised by CN that the 25 per cent reduction in VIA service has resulted in one in four dispatchers in Moncton being declared surplus and they will lose their jobs effective March 1, 1990.

Given that we now know that the minister's previous assurance was false, has CN misled the minister or, if not, can he explain the discrepancy?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, decisions which are made are made for VIA Rail when we are dealing with VIA Rail and CN when we are dealing with CN. The people of CN can say what they want.

I tell my friend here today that we made a decision in light of the resources we had and in light of the fact that Canadians want us to control the spending of the government. This is exactly what we are doing.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has just returned from meetings in Brussels with other NATO leaders. The world has been watching the profound changes in eastern Europe, changes in which I think all of us applaud and take great joy and pleasure.

Can the Prime Minister tell us now, however, what he has proposed at those meetings as specific actions that Canada will take to take strong leadership in order to speed up this process of ending the cold war?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend rightly points to the centre of the most dramatic and most convulsive developments in the world today.

When the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I visited with President Bush, and when we were at NATO, we put forward a series of specific recommendations that we thought would be helpful in constituting the beginnings, at least, of a bridge between the Soviet Union and the western alliance and the industrialized nations.

They range from consideration for the idea put forward by President Mitterrand about an eastern European development bank, to membership in the IMF, to the requirement for the outgoing chairman of the industrialized summit to meet with President Gorbachev on a yearly basis, as well as a series of other initiatives.

We think that if all of these are taken together with other ideas that have been put forward by other leaders, there are the beginnings of the building of a solid bridge which will advance the causes that are being sought by my hon. friend and, I think, by all members of the House.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I think we all agree that there needs to be real action on the economic issues that confront eastern Europe and, indeed, the developing world. I want to pose again a specific question because while Canada's role indeed should be to build bridges, surely we can also take leadership.

LOW LEVEL FLIGHTS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister specifically, in an attempt to really demonstrate not just a commitment but action and that we believe the cold war is over, will the Prime Minister now agree to stop low-level flights in this country, to stop cruise missile testing over the north?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think, as I indicated to the House the other day, and as many members from all parties have indicated, we are entering a new and important era of relationships between east and west. We should be sensitive to all opportunities for change. We should not reject ideas out of hand simply because they have not been tried before or they have been tried and found wanting.

I agree with the openness of the approach suggested by my hon. friend. I draw to her attention the comments made to me and the Secretary of State for External Affairs by President Gorbachev. He said that the most imprudent thing that could be done at this time, given the enormity of the changes in eastern Europe, would be changes in the structures of the alliances because at this particular time any such changes could be destabilizing with regard to the efforts that he and others are trying to bring about.

So while I take good note of the comments made by my hon. friend, I point out that the progress we have made so far, and it has been remarkable in the last number of years, has been brought about in large measure because of the leadership of President Gorbachev on the one side, but the solidarity of NATO on the other. We propose to keep that.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Prime Minister is aware of the remarks by his former ambassador on disarmament who said that, in fact, we are following the United States on disarmament issues. I am suggesting we take the lead. I may be new at it but it seems to me that leadership means leading from the front and not the back.

[Translation]

This is a historic moment. Canada must assume her rightful role as world peace leader. Now is the time to come up with constructive and positive suggestions. Why would the government not take this opportunity to display leadership by proposing measures over which we have direct control?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to answer the question properly, I must quote from an interview given by the Foreign Minister, Mr. Shervardnadze, on November 23, where he said, according to the English translation:

[English]

"As the Soviet leader stressed,—"

[Translation]

That was the interview granted by Mr. Shevardnadze.

[English]

"—the Canadian Prime Minister's visit to the U.S.S.R. ranks among the events which help to change the world situation with a focus on a better future—The political declaration signed by the leaders of Canada and the U.S.S.R. is an intellectual and political breakthrough into the new interdependent world", and so on.

[Translation]

We have done two things as a government. First, we made a series of specific recommendations–seven, if I am not mistaken–for building bridges of friendship and realistic relations between the two blocs and, as Mr. Shevardnaze said so well, we have changed our attitude significantly. We will maintain this forward-looking position along with the positions which the hon. member will announce in this House.

TREASURY BOARD

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board who intends to put hospital service workers and ships crews back to work. These workers have been providing emergency services during the strike in spite of the government's tyranical action over the past two years to force them to accept pitiful salaries. How can the government justify this back-to-work legislation?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): As I was saying yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the informal negotiations which started several months ago are continuing. I said yesterday that if we could reach a negotiated settlement, I would favour this solution over a legislated settlement. I am still prepared, day or night, to meet the union leaders to try and reach a settlement of this type. But for the time being, we have reached a dead end and major issues are still on the table. We are faced in one case with demands for yearly increases of 17.4 per cent, and in the other, 14.3 per cent.

In this conflict the interest of medium term public safety and public health must be resolved. That is why we will introduce later today a bill to set up a process for reaching a settlement. Mr. Speaker, I can say that we will not legislate an agreement per so, but rather a means to achieve a settlement.

[English]

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, the workers have been providing emergency services. The Minister of Transport told the House yesterday that there is no problem with safety on the St. Lawrence River. Where was the minister's concern for safety last month when 1,700 lobster fishermen put out to sea? Is not the real reason for the sledgehammer of back-to-work legislation protecting the profits of the friends of government in the shipping business?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the real reason for the legislation is to break an impasse that does not seem to be able to be resolved through negotiations. I have said it before and I will say it again. I am willing to sit down at the table. Informal negotiations have been continuing throughout. The situation is at a point now where the two parties are so far apart, with demands of 17 and 14 per cent annual wage increases compared to 4.1 per cent for the rest of the 155,000 public servants, that we feel we have to move.

I would like to quote from a letter I received from Iris Craig, President of PIPS, who says: "The current and anticipated labour disruptions will undoubtedly have an egregious impact on the health and safety of government clients. Furthermore, any extended inoperation of federal government ships will jeopardize research activities in which significant time, energy and money has been invested. It will also jeopardize the Maritime economy of our country."

She is saying: "do something", and that is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question also is directed to the President of the Treasury Board and it is twofold. It was partly covered in his last answer.

If it is necessary to introduce legislation, is he still prepared to negotiate, even with the legislation introduced? And in view of his answer yesterday about pay equity when he said that if there was a settlement there would be pay equity, which has been a longstanding problem in these trades, how does he intend to implement pay equity where the contracts are staggered and overlapping?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, first, even with the legislation introduced, I would be willing to negotiate at any time. I will repeat that commitment. I am available and I will be willing to negotiate.

In terms of the other part of my hon. colleague's question with regard to pay equity between the east coast workers and the west coast workers, the offer on the table at the moment is that as of the date of signing of the new bargaining agreement the east coast workers would get exactly the same compensation as the west coast workers so they would have parity.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Yesterday he informed this House that wage parity was offered to the unions. What he did not say was that he would only agree to it if the unions dropped all the other issues.

Will he today, rather than introduce this legislation—legislation which indeed we will not support—continue to support this wage parity and at the same time return to the negotiating table and negotiate separately the outstanding issues that are there?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the premise of the question. I indicated yesterday and I indicated again today that wage parity was very much on the table and up-front on the day of signing. I would just like to assure my hon. colleague that there was never any question about this offer being conditional on dropping all of the demands.

We know very well that there are other issues that have to be resolved and this particular issue was agreed upon without a further condition that all other demands be dropped.

Mr. Proud: Mr. Speaker, I get a different story when talking to other people. We are now seeing the true value of the work being performed by these people. For instance, for every day that these ships' crews remain on strike it is costing the Great Lakes' economy approximately $2 million. Six million dollars will end this strike, that is three days of striking.

Again, rather than bringing in this legislation will the minister return to the table with the unions and settle this strike today, which can be done?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I have had informal conversations overnight, in the evening and again this morning, and as recently as roughly an hour before Question Period. I am still negotiating. I am there, I have said it repeatedly, and I will stay there. I am willing to discuss all and every remaining issue to try to get to a negotiated settlement.

AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. Almost 18,000 General Motors workers are now being laid off in addition to other plant shutdowns throughout Ontario, Quebec and other parts of Canada.

What action is this government taking to prevent more major job cuts in this industry as happened in the early 1980s? Does the government understand how urgent this crisis is becoming? Will the government act to do something serious?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, automobile sales, particularly by the big three North American manufacturers, are down considerably, some 13.8 per cent in November of this year compared to last year. As a result there is less production from the plants.

One of the things I think we can be particularly happy about in Canada is that as the auto industry has had to reduce its capacity, in reflecting this fact Canada has done very well. For example, Chrysler has laid off 4,000 in the U.S. and has not yet laid off people in Canada, although it probably will.

• (1500)

Since 1987 nine plants have closed in the United States. So far we have avoided that happening in Canada. We cannot avoid that forever, but so far we have shown that the Canadian auto industry is very competitive compared to the American auto industry. As this cyclical adjustment goes through the economy, we are fortunate in Canada that we have not borne the same brunt the Americans have.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in fact much of the reason for this cyclical downturn is the tremendously high interest rates in this country. Surely the government should be moving on this.

In 1987 the international trade committee of this House unanimously called for maximum political and diplomatic pressure on offshore producers so as to meet the same Canadian content levels that the U.S. owned companies have to meet.

Could the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell this House if the government has followed the recommendation to put this full diplomatic pressure on offshore producers, or has the government simply ignored the recommendation?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, just over the weekend in looking at Canada's economic performance the OECD commented with high praise for what Canada is doing in this regard. As I pointed out, we have had in the last five years a growth rate second only to Japan, and just marginally so. We have incomes that are much higher than they were five years ago. The rate of poverty is down.

Yes, at the moment there is a drop off in car sales, and there are certain indications of a slowdown in the economy. But none of the major North American manufacturers are blaming this on foreign imports or on unfair competition.

The hon. member knows full well the posture of this government in respect to international trade. We are active in the MTN in terms of lowering trade barriers. We will continue to be so in our belief that it is good for the economy of Canada and the world and that Canadians can compete.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware that the Government of Alberta has produced a paper that relates to the GST that is both mischievous and inaccurate.

I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if there is any evidence that he can find to indicate that the proposed GST would take more tax from the province of Alberta than the present manufacturers' sales tax? What does his research indicate with respect to the allegation that in fact the GST would be a tax grab of some $6 billion and is not revenue neutral?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have looked at that particular document. It is full of overblown rhetoric. I think it is something that people should review with a great deal of skepticism because of the nature of the particular report.

We do have figures which indicate that the amount of GST net of all the credits will be less than the amount of sales tax paid by people who are living in that province.

In addition, I can tell the hon. member that the low income credit is a very generous element of this over-all package. For the province of Alberta the credit will generate about $308 million and will be received by just short of 800,000 residents of the province of Alberta.

It is a balanced package. It is a package that is going to be favourable to the economy of Alberta. It is a fair package and will definitely be favourable to those people in the low and modest income brackets.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to test the minister on some of his own overblown rhetoric.

Yesterday, in answering a question in this House, he tried to tell us that the dividend tax credit was going to reimburse seniors for the clawback of old age pensions. The minister knows, or he should know if he understands his own tax system, that this is utter nonsense.

The minister knows that the clawback is going to apply to a senior who receives only $40,000 in Canadian dividends, in spite of what he says the minimum threshold is. He also knows that that threshold is not indexed for inflation.

Will the minister admit that he was wrong in his answer yesterday? Will he admit that he is wrong in proposing this policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have commented on a number of occasions as to the rationale of this policy. It always surprises me that we have members of the Liberal Party spending more time trying to defend the interests of 4 per cent of senior citizens rather than concerning themselves with the problems of many other people in the country who merit their attention far more than this.

Mr. Volpe: Are they not Canadians?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me also make the point that the design of the tax back on old age security and family allowances is based on putting different elements of income on the same pre-tax basis, that is, interest income, dividend income, pension income—all forms of income on a pre-tax basis—and then having done that apply the tax back based on that amount of money.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, the minister demonstrates that he does not understand the dividend gross up.

He also said yesterday, and he effectively reiterated it today, that we cannot afford to continue to subsidize seniors in upper income brackets. That is essentially what he has just said again.

This is the same minister who brought in a capital gains exemption, who is proposing massive increases in RRSP limits, who has lowered the top marginal tax bracket. What are all those things except subsidies for upper income people?

He uses this as the basis for ending universality. He is not even trying to protect seniors against inflation.

How does the minister justify to the seniors of Canada this two-faced, discriminatory policy?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, there are a large number of allegations in the preamble to that question. Let me just pick out one.

He is talking about the increase in the RRSP limits. The legislation that we are proposing to bring in is going to put people who save only through registered retirement plans and people who save only through registered retirement savings plans on the same basis. It is a very equitable piece of legislation. I am sure that the hon. member, when he sees it, will agree with it.

The other part of the legislation which the hon. member is ignoring when he makes that comment is that this legislation is going to shut down a large number of loopholes that have crept in over the years to allow a degree of retirement savings over and above the limitations that were intended to be. The net result of this is that the closing of the loopholes will pay for the equitable elements that will put all people who are saving for retirement on the same basis.

It is good legislation. It is equitable legislation. It is legislation which closes down loopholes.

COMPETITION ACT

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It is about the Imperial–Texaco deal.

He will know that the former director of the competition bureau took the rare step of referring this deal to the tribunal. The tribunal chairperson in her decision criticized the former director for being "highly presumptuous if not arrogant" in his handling of the Texaco deal.

Does the minister share the assessment of the chairperson of that tribunal? How do we as Canadians know that the same mishandling of those deals has not occurred in all the other cases which have not been referred to the tribunal?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Cal Goldman who took over as head of the competition bureau after the passage of the new Competition Act, after many abortive attempts by the previous government, did an exemplary job of handling that. I find it regrettable that the hon. member would stand up and slander his reputation in that manner.

In terms of the Imperial–Texaco decision, the head of the tribunal, Justice Reid, made certain recommendations. The current head of the competition bureau, Mr. Wetston, said he was looking at them and making accommodations. I understand they will be appearing, I think perhaps even tomorrow, with the restructured deal. I think we ought to let that process which is an excellent process that works well and has been working well continue to its conclusion.

• (1510)

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister, although I must say the first part of his answer was sufficiently kinky that it probably qualifies for FBDB funding.

I am quoting to him not my words but the words of the chairperson of the tribunal. If anybody is slanderous in his calumny terms it is her, not me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: Of course the truth is neither of us is being slanderous, only the minister.

The track record of this competition bureau in protecting Canadians, I think the minister will agree, has been somewhat less than brilliant. In short, it has been an unmitigated disaster. The former director whom he defends referred only six cases to the tribunal. Of course the whole process, as we can see, is completely flawed and is a farce.

I ask the minister: Does he not agree that the time has now come to take a new look at that act in the interest of protecting Canadians and ensuring that all such deals are automatically referred to the tribunal?

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member needs a new joke writer.

I find that a peculiar measure. He said that because only six cases have been referred to the tribunal this is axiomatic proof that the act is a failure and the public is not being protected. I do not understand that logic.

Mr. Simmons: What about air fares?

Mr. Andre: I think if the hon. member keeps his mouth shut and his ears open for a minute, he will appreciate how silly that argument is.

All the experts I have been reading from the business community, from the independent economic think–tanks and so on have acknowledged that the competition situation in Canada, the competition bureau under the new Competition Act, is a fantastic improvement over anything that preceded it, especially any of the abortive attempts of the previous government to update it. In fact, it gets rave notices from everybody except that hon. member apparently.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that the report of the Standing Committee on Transport raised serious questions and in fact repudiated almost nearly every so-called fact used by the Minister of Transport to justify the government's cuts to VIA Rail.

Given this undermining of the minister's credibility by the committee, will the Prime Minister impose a moratorium on the VIA Rail cuts until the royal commission which he has appointed has had an opportunity to review rail passenger services and to report to this House? Will he do that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will understand that I cannot and would not accept the comments in the preface to his remarks either about the information contained in the report or the minister.

In fact, I think on all sides of the House it is widely recognized that among a group of very competent ministers the Minister of Transport has a very special place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: It is easy to give things away and to maintain a series of subsidies. It is difficult to cut back and to provide leadership. You get few compliments and very little gratitude. We are doing this not because it is popular but because it is right, because it is right for Canada.

The OECD has pointed out that the efforts of the Government of Canada are on the right track and will be rewarded by ongoing prosperity. That is what we want for all the people of Canada.

Mr. Angus: My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is again for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He will know that this was not an opposition report. This was an all-party committee report, adopted by the committee, voted on by Conservatives, Liberals and New Democrats who called for a moratorium.

In that report they questioned whether in fact the environment would be harmed. They questioned whether or not there would be any savings. They questioned whether or not the per passenger subsidy would in fact drop.

Given these concerns, these question marks against the government's decision, will he now take his leadership role like he did when the government attempted to deindex seniors' pensions and announce a moratorium? We are not saying cancel the cuts but are asking for a moratorium until the royal commission has a chance to report, having properly reviewed the whole situation.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the committee chaired by the distinguished member for Annapolis Valley—Hants provided both an excellent report and some very interesting advice. The government considered the advice of the report very carefully.

But it is the government's responsibility, having considered the advice, to take decisions and to provide leadership. We have taken those decisions which we firmly believe to be in the national interest, acknowledging as we do that any cut-backs in subsidies impact negatively upon certain groups and cause pain and disappointment. We recognize that.

I hope my hon. friend in turn will recognize that our principal obligation is to restore a degree of sanity to the public finances of Canada. We are in the process of succeeding, having taken the deficit from almost $39 billion down to below $30 billion, and we are well on our way to doing better.

FISHERY

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The federal fish quota report of November 22, 1989 indicates that in excess of 26 million pounds of cod, haddock and pollock will be left unharvested by offshore fishermen in the Scotia Fundy area.

Will the minister finally make a concession to the inshore fishermen and transfer to them the unused excess quota that the offshore fishermen will not be using this year? Will he transfer it to inshore fishermen who have had such a dismal fishery in the last six months?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the specific report that the hon. member mentions. But I have made it clear to the offshore companies that there there will be no fish left in the water that are part of the enterprise allocations of the offshore companies, or they will be very hard pressed in the coming year of tight quotas to ask for those quotas to be reinstated.

At the same time I should point out that the good news report I did see today was to the effect that in the Scotia Fundy region fish landings were up this year to $336 million in value over last year for the first three quarters.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister is mixing lobster and scallops in terms of the amounts of fish. We have always had good lobster and scallop seasons until this year when the price went down.

I want to say to the minister that the boats in Gloucester, Boston and Chatham are having record seasons this fall—for example, 70,000 pounds of cod per trip from Georges—while the unharvested quota that the offshore fishermen cannot use in those waters is not being picked up by Canadians. When is the minister's groundfish plan going to help Canadian inshore fishermen instead of helping the Americans?

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that the Americans do not fish in Canadian waters north of the Georges Bank line.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: We take effective enforcement measures to ensure that is the case.

The hon. member knows full well that in the Scotia Fundy region in the first three quarters of this year over-all landings increased in the amount of $336 million compared with the previous year. That ought to be very good news to her constituents.

Mr. Speaker: A single question from the hon. member for Essex—Kent.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the presidents of Heinz, Hunt—Wesson and Campbells confirmed that the free trade deal jeopardizes our $15 billion agri-food business. They have stated that tens of thousands of jobs and millions of dollars of equipment are on the chopping block.

Will the minister stop this threat and kill the free trade deal before it destroys agriculture in this country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that the real problem facing the Canadian food processing sector is high input costs for basic produce and for packaging. It is not free trade.

It would be foolish for Canada to put our economy and our future at risk by closing down the free trade agreement.

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: There will be a single question from the hon. member for Churchill and a single question from the hon. member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve.

FISHERY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Fisheries. According to a report released by his department, groundfish landings in Atlantic Canada have decreased by 9.3 per cent this year. In addition to that there is talk of closure of plants by National Sea Products.

Will the minister, after having a special cabinet committee spend six months on this crisis, finally announce when he is going to do something about this and what direction the government is going to take? After six months with no action, it is time.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, but as was improperly reported in The Globe and Mail this morning, over-all fish landings in the Scotia Fundy region alone were up by $336 million, while the groundfish landings were down on average 9 per cent because of the decline in quotas that was necessary this year as a result of the groundfish management plan for 1989.

The groundfish management plan for 1990 will be released at the end of December, after the concluding consultations that I will hold with Atlantic provincial fisheries ministers next Thursday. Other appropriate measures about which he inquires will also be announced in the not too distant future.

RAILWAY TRANSPORT

Mr. Allan Koury (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I will repeat in the House the questions I put to the Minister of Transport in a letter dated September 11.

Will the Minister of Transport announce a moratorium on all decisions affecting the railway transportation industry, until such time as the royal commission of inquiry has tabled its recommendations and these have been evaluated by Parliament? Will the Minister of Transport send one or several representatives to the joint meeting on the railway industry, as he was invited to do last summer by Quebec Minister Daniel Johnson?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat for the benefit of the hon. member what I said today to the Leader of the Opposition and others, which is that the Department of Transport does not intend to put a moratorium on the cutbacks at VIA Rail. However, this morning I had a meeting with the Fédération des travailleurs du Québec. I think it was a very good meeting, and I can give Mr. Fernand Daoust the assurance that the Government of Canada will contribute $120,000 to this joint endeavour in Montreal, more specifically concerned with the future of railway transportation, always bearing in mind that the decision on VIA will remain as announced on October 4.

POINT OF ORDER

SITUATION CONCERNING LOBSTER

Ms. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, last week before the Prime Minister's meeting in Washington, he said in the House that he would raise the lobster issue again. Does the Prime Minister intend to make a speech or statement in the House on his meeting with the president in Washington about the lobster question?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has risen on a point of order under the rubric Statements by Ministers. It most definitely is a question. The minister may wish to respond, but he is not obligated to do so.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell my hon. friend that further to our exchange in the House the other day the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I raised this concern about lobsters directly with the President of the United States and the Secretary of State. We hope for an early answer.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES, PROCEDURE AND PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business has the honour to present its seventh report.

It is in accordance with the order of reference adopted by the House on Thursday, October 26 and deals with the subject of private members and the draw.

I am tabling the report, but I would also note that no movement for adoption of the report will be made at this time as obviously the House leaders will have to have conferences in regard to the matter.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES, PROCEDURES AND PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedures and Private Members' Business has the honour to present its eighth report. It is in accordance with its mandate under Standing Order 92(1).

The committee recommends that one item of Private Members' Business be designated as a votable item.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

On a point of order, the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, just before the vote commenced, our labour critic for the New Democratic Party met with representatives of the union and they were making it very clear that they are quite anxious to get back to the bargaining table.

I am wondering if it is necessary for us to proceed with this legislation with that positive spirit in mind.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I think that it would be good to remind hon. members, especially the one who just spoke, whom I hold in high regard, of course, that it is the second time in a few days that he has risen to comment after a vote and give further explanations.

I am absolutely sure that this is completely out of order and it is the second time that the hon. member, who has a lot of experience in this House, has done such a thing.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, to the point of order raised by my colleague and friend from the NDP, on behalf of the Liberal Party I simply want to say that we welcome the fact that they are now apprised of this issue.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions between the parties vis-à-vis Friday of this week, and I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent for me to move the following motion and for it to be adopted, without debate.

I move:

That on Friday, December 8, 1989, at 10 o'clock a.m., following Prayers, the House will hear a statement from the Secretary of State of Canada, followed by replies from spokespersons on the subject of International Human Rights Day and;

That the remainder of Friday, December 8, 1989, be according to Standing Orders governing Fridays, provided that any time taken for the statement and replies be added to the time allowed for Government Orders starting at two o'clock p.m. and the hour for Private Members' Business begin immediately thereafter.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I have the duty and the honour to present several petitions on the subject of VIA Rail closures, signed by 1,663 persons mainly resident in the constituency of Brant, who call upon the government to rescind the order to curtail VIA Rail services until after the report of the Commission on National Transportation.

They call upon the government to maintain, upgrade and increase passenger rail service in this country.

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON FISCAL INDEMNIFICATION OF ISOLATED AND NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am today tabling a petition signed by workers in Lebel-sur-Quévillon and their wives against the task force on fiscal compensation for isolated and northern areas, which recommends abolishing travel deductions for medical reasons for northern workers within a year and limiting fiscal compensation for isolated and northern areas to places north of 51°05'N latitude.

Madam Speaker, the people of Lebel-sur-Quévillon reject the recommendations of the task force on fiscal compensation for isolated and northern areas because this task force did not take into consideration that in 1989, for the Government of Quebec, the North begins at the 49th parallel and that on May 26, 1989, the Minister of Finance changed the rules after consulting only 250 groups.

[English]

VIA RAIL

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, at the same time as Transport 2000 in concert with Rural Dignity Canada is rallying in front of Parliament Hill concerning VIA Rail cuts, it is my honour pursuant to Standing Order 36 to table petitions on behalf of my constituents of Parkdale—High Park who also ask this government that no further cuts in VIA Rail be made.

They argue that this would reduce the ability of many Canadians to travel economically within Canada. Rail service is more environmentally sound. The Canadian railroad has bound this country together. It is our heritage. It was part of our Confederation, so they appeal strongly that this government not cut VIA Rail but expand the services with modern state of the art equipment.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, I have another petition from Canadians in Iqaluit. I am indeed very honoured to table this one, having spent a week in that part of Canada. They are dead set against the GST. They want it scrapped because even though the government may not put the tax on food, they have to pay for transportation on all the food that they get.

On their behalf, we can upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax. That is from a group of Canadians that I hope the government is listening to.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of the member for Lisgar—Marquette, signed by 30 petitioners, and another petition from my riding of Selkirk, signed by 40 petitioners who call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the preborn child without distinction as to stages of development.

Madam Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition from the Knights of Columbus No. 6150 in my riding of Selkirk, signed by 33 petitioners who call upon Parliament to enact legislation which protects human life from conception to natural death.

BILL 178

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Madam Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by 33 people from Oakbank, Dugald and Hazelridge, Manitoba, who call upon Parliament to pass a resolution of the House of Commons urging the Governor General in Council to give full force and effect to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by the exercise of its constitutional power of disallowance with respect to Bill 178 in the province of Quebec.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present 31 petitions bearing the signatures of 2,464 residents of the riding of Saint-Léonard and the Greater Montreal region. The 2,464 signatories call upon Parliament to reject the new goods and services tax which the government plans to levy as of January 1, 1991. They feel that the tax is regressive and unfair and that it will be an additional source of hardship for Canadian taxpayers.

Madam Speaker, your petitioners urge the government to listen to Canadians and to withdraw this tax forthwith.

[English]

BILL 178

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my duty and obligation to present this petition to the House today which has been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions.

The sum total of 70 signatories from my riding of Sarnia—Lambton call upon the Parliament of Canada to urge the Governor in Council to exercise its constitutional power of disallowance with respect to Bill 178 of the province of Quebec which they believe contravenes the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Madam Speaker, it is my honour to present to you pursuant to Standing Order 36 the attached petition requesting that the Parliament of Canada enact legislation that will define and protect the life of the unborn child.

• (1630)

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to do that, and that involves, of course, changing or attempting to change the Charter of Rights and Freedoms to protect the life of the unborn child, recognizing the life of the unborn. The petitioners urge us to do just that, so it is my privilege to present to you these petitions from Carleton-Charlotte.

VIA RAIL

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by my constituents. These people are opposed to cutbacks in VIA Rail. They indicate that several rural communities in Canada rely exclusively on rail passenger service and that the tourist industry in Canada relies on rail passenger service.

For these and other reasons, they would ask Parliament not to cancel, in whole or in part, rail passenger service in Canada.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present to this House, both certified under Standing Order 36. The first is to draw to the attention of this House the concerns that residents of 150 Mile House in British Columbia have over the tax craziness that this government has in bringing in a goods and services tax.

The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to reject, among other things, the current proposal for a goods and services tax and to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, as well, the government has gone so crazy that residents of Ontario are expressing their concerns about its approach and attitude toward VIA Rail cuts.

These petitioners call upon Parliament to maintain VIA Rail, Canada's national network, to upgrade it with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq):

[Editor's Note: Member spoke in Inuktitut.]

[English]

Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, it is my honour to present to you two petitions from two communities in my riding, one from Tuktoyaktuk in the westernmost part of my constituency one from and Copper Mine, Northwest Territories in the Central Arctic, objecting to the proposed goods and services tax.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the honour to present a petition signed by many people from my constituency, from Madawaska, Cross Lake, Petawawa, Pembroke, Cobden, Rankin and several other communities.

These people oppose the 9 per cent sales tax and they are asking the question, because the present manufacturer's sales tax has already gone from 9 per cent to 13.5 per cent, what guarantee do they have that this government is not going to increase the 9 per cent goods and services tax likewise. They are simply saying that after 31 increases in taxation by this government since it took power, enough is enough and they do not want this 9 per cent goods and services tax put on by this government.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 on this special day of the rally for rails to present a petition signed by a total of 684 Canadians, the overwhelming majority of whom live in Edmonton and, in fact, 45 of whom live in one apartment block in Edmonton.

These people are calling on the government to maintain VIA Rail, Canada's present national network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

We keep submitting these petitions in the hope that the government will listen to the overwhelming majority of Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche—Chaleur): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions concerning what my constituents and residents of other ridings consider a major issue.

Your petitioners are against the VIA Rail cutbacks. Given that the Government of Canada has opted for abandoning a number of VIA Rail routes and eliminating thousands of jobs and that railways are the safest and most environment-friendly means of transport, your petitioners humbly call upon the House of Commons to urge the government not to dismantle or reduce Canada's rail passenger services.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Madam Speaker, I was afraid I was so far up in the corner that I was not able to be seen by the Speaker. I am pleased to be recognized.

It is my privilege, under Standing Order 36, to present to the 10 petitions signed members of my riding from Osoyoos, Oliver, Okanagan Falls, Kaleden, Summerland and Naramata, with a total of 1,163 names.

These petitioners are all in opposition to the government's proposed goods and services tax. They state that it is an unfair form of taxation because of its lack of regard for the taxpayers' ability to pay and they ask the government to reject the current proposal for the goods and services tax. They also ask the government to cease with the proposal which will shift the tax burden onto ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Questions Nos. 135, 160, 166 and 168.

[Text]

PRIVATIZATION

Question No. 135—Mr. Taylor:

Is the government prepared (a) to provide the (i) titles (ii) authors (iii) dates of production (iv) content of any studies or other research undertaken by or on behalf of the government or Canada Post on the privatization of all or any part of the postal system or postal operations (b) to make these documents available to Members of Parliament?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): The Government is aware that the information that could be provided to the Honourable Member was in fact provided at the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations on November 2, 1989, and therefore believes that the Honourable Member's question has been satisfactorily addressed through that process.

STATISTICS ON SENIORS LIVING IN SCARBOROUGH WEST

*Question No. 160—Mr. Wappel:

Does the government keep records on Seniors living in the constituency of Scarborough West and, if so (a) what number of them are there (b) what is their average (i) age (ii) income (c) what percentage (i) are married (ii) are single (iii) own their own homes (iv) are renters?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Statistics Canada reports:

Information on seniors (persons aged 65 years and over) living in the Federal Electoral District of Scarborough West is available from the 1986 Census and is shown in the attached table.

SELECTED CHARACTERISTICS OF PERSONS AGED 65 YEARS AND OVER, SCARBOROUGH WEST, 1986

A) NUMBER
Total	11,190
Male	4,445
Female	6,750
B) AVERAGE AGE
Total	73.7 years
Male	72.6 years
Female	74.4 years
C) MARITAL STATUS	Number	Percent
Now married	5,650	50.5
Separated	250	2.2
Divorced	335	3.0
Widowed	4,110	36.7
Never married	855	7.6
D) AVERAGE INCOME, 1985[1]
Total	$13,986
Male	$17,933
Female	$11,154
E) PERSONS 65 YEARS AND OVER LIVING IN RENTED PREMISES[1]	Number	Percent
Total	3,390	33.8
Maintainer (responsible for payments)	2,650	26.4
Non-maintainer	740	7.4
F) PERSONS 65 YEARS AND OVER LIVING IN OWNED PREMISES[1]	Number	Percent
Total	6,630	66.2
Maintainer (responsible for payments)	3,980	39.7
Non-maintainer	2,650	26.4

1. The data on income and owner/renter status exclude residents of Scarborough West who live in institutions (such as home for the aged, chronic care facilities, etc.), and the data for average income are based only on those residents who reported earning at least some income in 1985 (over 0).

Note: The data are rounded to the nearest 5 in order to ensure confidentiality. Thus, the sub-totals do not always sum to the total.

LESTER B. PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 166—Mr. Keyes:

Is the government aware of construction at Lester B. Pearson International Airport for the creation of a new runway or runways and, if so, have public monies been spent thus far on that construction and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): No construction for new runways has been undertaken at Lester B. Pearson International Airport.

Any new runway construction will not be undertaken until after the Environmental Assessment and Review Panel process has been completed.

The only airfield construction works underway at Lester B. Pearson International Airport are to improve existing taxiway configuration.

ESTIMATED COST OF (A) TEARING DOWN A PORTION OF THE FEDERAL BUILDING IN WHITEHORSE AND REFURBISHING THE REMAINDER (B) TEARING DOWN THE ENTIRE FEDERAL BUILDING AND BUILDING A NEW STRUCTURE

*Question No. 168—Ms. McLaughlin:

Has the government estimated the cost of (a) tearing down a portion of the Federal Building in Whitehorse and refurbishing the remainder with new infrastructure (such as water and heating, among other things) (b) tearing down the entire Federal Building and building a new structure which would meet the needs of the federal government in the Yukon and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Elmer Mac Intosh MacKay (Minister of Public Works): The estimated cost to:

(a) tear down a portion of the Federal Building in Whitehorse and refurbish the remainder with new infrastructure is $24,699,000; and

(b) tear down the entire Federal Building and build a new structure was not considered a variable option since major amounts of leased space are not available. This option would require a program of phased construction over a prolonged period of time. This in turn would create significant tenant disruptions and discomfort.

Mr. Cooper: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before putting the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte, since today is the final allotted day for the supply period ending December 10, 1989, the House will go through the usual procedures to consider and dispose of the supply bill. In view of recent practices, do hon. members agree that the bill will be distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte) moved:

That this House condemn the government for its obstinate failure to respond to the continuing public demands of the Canadian people for the maintenance of high quality national passenger rail services.

He said: Madam Speaker, because the time for the opposition day has been shortened by the necessity of other events today, with the Speaker's consent, we hope to share time here in the opposition benches. I will not be using the full 20 minutes which is available to me. I will be sharing it with my colleague who is sitting next to me.

We have moved this motion today, taking advantage of an opposition day to put down this motion which condemns the government's failure to respond to the Canadian public and its view on VIA Rail for two reasons. One is that we as an opposition party do not intend to allow this issue to die within the walls of Parliament. More important, we want to take advantage of the opportunity of mayors from all across Canada being on Parliament Hill today again.

This is the third or fourth time in as many months that mayors from right across Canada, representing Canada's municipalities, have come to Ottawa to make their case, to continue to fight for VIA Rail. We wanted to show solidarity with those municipal politicians who have continued the fight, both at home and here in Ottawa.

• (1640)

On November 8, not members of the Liberal Party, not members of the New Democratic Party, but members of an all–party committee of the House of Commons, the Standing Committee on Transport, those members who are charged specifically with the responsibility to observe the Estimates of the transport department and the policies of the Minister of Transport and to comment on behalf of parliamentarians on those policies, brought in a report which was tabled in this House. The report called upon the Government of Canada to declare a moratorium on the cuts to VIA Rail which are scheduled to be implemented on January 15. That was on November 8, nearly a month ago.

On the day that that report was tabled, the Minister of Transport, who had it in his hands in the House of Commons, who had all of about 90 seconds to look at it, walked out of this Chamber behind those royal golden robes, out into the foyer of the House, and after 90 seconds of contemplation told the nation's media that he rejected the report.

We have in the House a Prime Minister who is proud to stand on his feet on many occasions and tell us that he takes great personal pride in the parliamentary reform that has occurred in this place. He takes great personal pride, and by implication one would assume, credit for the reform of committees in which all members increasingly express their own best judgment and not be subjected to the view of a party caucus on every given issue, but to really examine with their heart and soul, conscience and best judgment the important issues of the day and to pronounce themselves in the interests of Canadians, not in the interest of particular partisan advantage on any given day of the week. The Prime Minister does this, and he does so frequently.

On a major government initiative, a decision to cut VIA Rail's network by 50 per cent, to lay off 3,000 employees, to say to three million Canadians who rode the rails in 1988 that you cannot ride the rails in 1990, a standing committee of the House of Commons, having members from all three parties, and more important, having a majority of Conservative members, stated that that initiative is wrong. The committee has not thought it through carefully enough. It does not accept the environmental assessment. It does not believe the system can survive with these kinds of cuts. It does not believe that three million Canadians can find other adequate, affordable means of transportation. It does not accept that the environment will not be affected dramatically and negatively. It calls upon the government to declare a moratorium on those cuts.

Did we simply say to declare a moratorium and sit and twiddle our thumbs and wait for some great enlightenment to occur? No. The transport committee went on to say that since you, the Prime Minister of Canada, named a royal commission on transportation, since you, the Prime Minister, say you have confidence in the individuals you have named to this royal commission, since you, the Prime Minister, say we need to have a look at the total integration of Canada's transportation modes and we need a map for the future of transportation in this country, we need to chart a proper course, if you have confidence in these people, refer the question of VIA to them. Give it to the royal commission. Ask the commission to examine the question of rail passenger service and give us an interim report in one year.

In other words, let us turn not partisan minds, nor the vicious hand of the Minister of Finance to this question. Let us look at the long term. Let us examine Canada's position vis–a–vis the position of every other country in the industrialized world. Every other country in the industrialized world is in the business of building modern, efficient, high speed, high–tech, environmentally friendly, mass means of transportation; that is, high-speed trains.

The committee has said it cannot accept that Canada alone among all nations of the industrialized world, Canada alone has to run up the flag of defeat, Canada alone has to make this massive expression of self doubt and lack of confidence in our own ability to run an efficient rail passenger service in this country. The committee has said it cannot accept that.

The report was tabled a month ago. In that month, there has been no concrete, substantial response from the Minister of Transport, nothing from the Prime Minister, no consideration.

In that month, the issue of VIA Rail and the determination of those Canadians who believe in its future has not wavered. The government makes a terrible mistake if it assumes that the issue will go away. In that month, even greater numbers of coalitions of citizens groups have been formed. In that month, the mayors of the corridor cities have come together and formed an organization to fight for VIA Rail. In that month, the mayors of every single town in Atlantic Canada have coalesced to fight for the future of VIA Rail. Why, Madam Speaker? Because the stats speak for themselves. While the cut to the national network is 50 per cent, in Atlantic Canada, 91 per cent of the service will disappear, effective January 15. The best number for the whole region is a 57 per cent cut. Many of the routes are totally eliminated.

What we want the Government of Canada to understand is what the Prime Minister said he understood when he went to eastern Europe. The Prime Minister went to eastern Europe and he said, isn't it a wonderful thing, isn't it a great day in the history of the world and civilization and democracy when the voice of the people echoes so loudly that those who have the power in the governments of eastern Europe not only must listen but must act. This is the true test of democracy.

Is it not tragic and ironic that a Prime Minister would hail the voice of the people in eastern Europe, those who not only insist they be heard but that their voice be heeded, would come back to this country and not only turn a deaf ear on the mayors of every major municipality in Canada, turn a deaf ear on the premiers of every province of Canada, turn a deaf ear on a standing committee of the House of Commons that recommended a moratorium, but would turn a deaf ear on the concept of democracy, representative government? This is the Prime Minister who promised us renewed federalism, co-operative federalism and who now faces every single interested group in this country, crossing every single political stripe telling them that he has made a mistake but who refuses to listen.

The Prime Minister and his government are not merely being stubborn or stupid in their decision. The Prime Minister and his government are being arrogant. They are turning away from the future, turning away from our roots the ribbon of steel that built this country and they are turning away from the ribbon of steel that can expand this country going into the future. They are taking us backwards. In so doing, this Prime Minister has said that he shall rely in future upon the tyranny of a majority in Parliament and will no longer hear the voice of people. We cannot accept that, Canadians cannot accept that and we shall continue the fight for the future of VIA Rail and for the future of rail passenger service in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? I do understand that the hon. member wants to share the 20 minutes. I also thought that consequently, there would be a five minute question and comment period following each of the hon. members' speeches. Is that agreed?

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, with the consent of members and if there is consent and, of course, consent by Madam Speaker, we might hear from the second member and there would be a question and answer period at the end. I am certainly not going anywhere, if that would facilitate the opportunity for as many members as possible to speak in this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is quite prepared to go along with the hon. member's suggestion, even though there was one thing that seemed to stand in my mind. The questions or the comments would have to come after the last speaker's speech. Henceforth, I think there should be at this point a five-minute question period on the last speaker's intervention and then after the next speaker's intervention. I think everyone has understood what I meant to say.

• (1650)

I understand there is a question at this end. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, I have listened intently to the hon. member and we have heard some of his musings on this subject before, but I find it passing strange when he talks about the standing committee and its recommendations. Yes, a majority of the standing committee voted for the recommendation, but it was my understanding that it was not unanimous.

I also remember a while back when there was a standing committee of this House which on two different occasions recommended to the government that it find a ways and means of replacing the federal sales tax, better known as the manufacturers' tax. I find in this day and age that both opposition parties have seemingly forgotten that part of it as they seek to build fear into the Canadian public about what is happening regarding the GST.

More important, the member has talked about the mayors of the corridor and how united they are with regard to not wanting to see any cutbacks in the amount of service that VIA Rail now gives in their areas.

I would like to remind the hon. member just what is really happening in the corridor to make sure that people in Canada realize what the facts are in the plan that VIA had tendered and which has been recognized and given the okay by this government.

The Montreal to Quebec run is currently at 48 round trips a week. It is dropping to 21 trips a week. But also at the 48 trips a week, this past year ridership was at 39 per cent. From Montreal to Ottawa, it goes from 29 round trips occupancy.

We get the very same type of rationale on each of those runs. Does the hon. member not realize that there will not be as much frequency of the trains after January 15 but, nonetheless, the capacity for servicing those customers will still be there?

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, this is an absolutely amazing question coming from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport. The reason it is an amazing question coming from this gentleman whom I usually find well prepared is that it is the Minister of Transport himself, not the opposition, not the New Democratic Party, not those groups in Canada fighting for the retention of VIA Rail, who said—and I remember sitting in the theatre, and my hon. friend was there the day of the press conference—that three million people who rode the trains in 1988 and 1989 will be displaced in 1990–1991 because capacity was being removed. I believe that my hon. friend forgot that. That is the only explanation, because he is not a member who would want to mislead. I am sure of that. He forgot.

What the hon. member is now suggesting is that if you take away half the trains and you just stuff more people into the same number of trains, you will have the same capacity. However, the government has already admitted that three million people will not ride the trains who had in the past taken advantage of trains. It has suggested that they will be in cars, in trucks, in buses, and in airplanes and that is why the government did a so–called environmental assessment and told us, having done that, there is no problem with having all that additional carbon being burned. There is no problem with the additional congestion at airports. There is no problem with additional congestion on highways that are already blocked, as we would say in Newfoundland, to the rafters.

The question is profoundly surprising but gives me yet another opportunity to point out that this government has not done its homework and, whether by design or by accident, has now given us a phoney rationale for trying to sell these brutal, heartless cuts, especially cuts as they affect our youth, the handicapped and Canada's greatest citizens, our senior citizens, those who have already paid their dues.

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I want to thank my friend and colleague for allowing me part of his time in order to make my comments with respect to what this government is proposing to do with passenger rail service in this country.

My friend commented on the transport committee report, a committee of which he and I are both members and which in its wisdom brought in several recommendations that the government has chosen not to follow.

It is incidental, I guess, that this morning our party produced its report on our proposal and our alternative as to what Canadians can expect with a Liberal government and passenger rail service in our country. Part of the recommendation's dovetail was what my friend and colleague has already said, but let me just comment for a few moments, if I may, about the Liberal task force report on VIA Rail.

This summer there was a huge undertaking that this side of the House embarked on. We travelled across every section of this country with members of Parliament and with senators to talk to the people of Canada to get first-hand knowledge as to what they thought about this government's plan for passenger rail service in this country.

As a result of that trip and as a result of those excursions into areas that many of my friends from across have not had the opportunity to visit, we have been able to come up with some recommendations that we would like to put forward. One that seems to be predominant throughout all of the discussions is the one-year moratorium that my friend so ably discussed a few moments ago. What that means is just that, to stop everything in its tracks and let us do some studies and further assessments with respect to—

Mr. Belsher: Do you want to keep funding it?

Mr. Comuzzi: My friend keeps talking about letting the funding go on. If he would read the last annual report from VIA Rail and reports that came from the transport committee on the unions, he would find that by cutting out VIA Rail, the government in this next year is going to be spending more money in closing it down than it would be spending in operating and subsidizing it. The government would be spending more money by closing down VIA Rail, starting with this fiscal period, than it would be spending by operating VIA Rail as it is operating today.

There was a very shallow report brought in by this government on the environmental assessment, and that simply meant the impact of the closing down of passenger rail service on certain sections in this country and what would happen with the use of our highways and the use of our airways, the additional use of fuel. There was not a proper environmental study done according to the law of the land, and one of our recommendations was that that assessment be done.

We also said that VIA Rail required its own legislation, the VIA Rail act. That would allow VIA Rail to set its own rates, rely less on this House, and go out and do its business as a reliable and viable transportation mode in this country. It never had its own legislation, and that is our recommendation.

We also talked at some length about the negotiations that have been allowed to carry on between VIA Rail, which really has no teeth, and CN and CP. In particular, we discussed the elimination of costing order 6313, the moratorium on all non-itemized expenses charged by CN and CP to VIA Rail, an in-depth explanation, a question that I have asked several times in the transport committee, of the $142 million being charged to VIA by CNR and CPR and, in addition to that, the $107 million charged in the last annual statement by intergovernmental accounting against the expense structure of VIA Rail.

It was our considered opinion that these questions should be answered. This moratorium would allow those questions to be answered before any further action is taken on the passenger rail service in our country.

We also went into great discussion and had in depth study on analysing what new rolling stock would be needed. The financial statement states that in the last two years VIA Rail has purchased and paid for 72 new engines, as many engines as it needs to operate the passenger rail service in this country. What is needed is passenger rail cars. If I could plug my area, we make magnificent double decker passenger rail cars in Thunder Bay. They should be given consideration, along with other manufacturers in Canada, to provide good passenger rail cars for our passenger rail service in this country.

We do provide passenger rail service and we do finance those passenger rail cars for our friends in the United States, Amtrak. Certainly if we can do it for our friends in the United States we could do it for Canadians.

There is another consideration that we would want to study in some depth in our recommendations, that is, the high speed train in the corridor between Montreal and Toronto and between Toronto and Windsor. We say in our report that that is the area in our country which can least stand any lessening of modes of passenger transportation and we should start on that immediately.

We have also suggested that we look into something which has been looked at several times by both governments, that is, the rail bus which would be used to service remote lines.

The final recommendation that we make is with regard to the remote lines in this country. If my memory serves me correctly, $45 million a year is devoted to serving remote lines. In the answer to one of my questions to the minister and to Mr. Lawless we were told that the remote lines in this country, of which there are nine, were mandated and that they must be served.

I did some extensive law research into that particular question and found out that the remote lines were not mandated. It was suggested at one time when these remote areas in our country were not served by any other mode of transportation that they should be given passenger rail service.

I suggest that the government has not done its homework with respect to these remote lines because, as it stands now, eight of the nine remote lines are serviced by a Department of Transport airport, highways and adequate bus service, and are therefore no longer remote lines. Yet we continue to pay $45 million a year for servicing these areas.

All I am saying is that it is worth further study. Again we go back to the very first Liberal recommendation and the recommendation of the transport committee that we need that year of moratorium, of not doing anything, so that we are able to analyse these particular and very strong areas to come up with a plan to maintain passenger rail service in our country.

I can see that my time is getting short. Let me just mention that there is absolutely no wisdom or logic in the way that this government has decided to provide passenger rail service across northern Ontario. I will just leave that. It will be the subject of further discussion at a later date.

Sir John A. Macdonald, Canada's most famous Conservative, had a vision. He had a vision of this country united from sea to sea. When I talk about John A. Macdonald and the railways in this country, I am not talking about the lack of rail passenger service or an airline. What we are lacking is a concept and a vision of the transportation requirements of all Canadians, not just those Canadians living in highly populated areas who if they get train service or plane service on a less frequent basis will still not be jeopardized great deal.

I am talking about Canadians in areas of our country, in Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario and parts of the west, who when January 15 rolls around will not be able to travel on one very necessary mode of transportation. I am sure that John A. Macdonald did not intend that this country be operated without a viable network to maintain our unity and to maintain our economic basis. It is not fair to all Canadians, and it is not fair to Canada.

Mr. Belsher: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend talks about the vision of Sir John A. Macdonald and the uniting of this country. I would like to remind my hon. friend that when Sir John A. Macdonald had this vision we did not have a highway system from coast to coast. Airplanes had not even been invented yet. The only viable way for people to travel from one side of the country to another was to use the train. He is quite right in pointing that out.

The percentage of people making intercity trips in Sir John A.'s time was likely 90 per cent or more, whereas nowadays a very low percentage of people make such trips. Why does he not come up to the modern day and recognize the changes that have taken place in our country?

I was glad that he pointed out that there have been capital expenditures made for the new engines and so on, but he failed to point out that the government is continuing to spend money on capital improvement for the electrification of stainless steel cars. That is in the budget of VIA Rail for the coming months.

The opposition would like to make it sound like we have cut off all the funding to VIA Rail and nothing could be further from the truth. We are cutting down on the amount of funding that will be going to VIA Rail because we have a serious problem in our country. I wish the opposition would start to recognize it and try to help sell the idea that we have to get a handle on the overexpenditures of the Government of Canada. That is what this is all about.

Mr. Comuzzi: Madam Speaker, it is interesting that my friend would mention the absence of some transportation modes during the period that we are talking about. I spent a very interesting evening last Friday night at an institution in Thunder Bay called the Old Fort, which is a true replica of Canada as it was in the late 18th century.

It deals with the fur trading empires of the North West Company and the Hudson's Bay Company.

We went into great lengths and heard a very fine history about how people crossed our country at that time by canoe, portage and so on.

The reason I say that is that we have not changed in our spirit, we have not changed in our determination, and we have not changed in our thought. What these fur traders were doing, what we are trying to do today, and what the government is trying to break down is the effort to unify our country, to maintain the east-west structure of our country, and that requires a passenger rail service from coast to coast.

I think Mr. Macdonald did that some 100-odd years ago because he wanted to do away with the natural pull of the north-south influence. He was trying to create an east-west influence throughout our country to make the people in British Columbia as Canadian as the people in Newfoundland.

The government is trying to disintegrate that by disuniting this country, by taking away one of the fundamental modes of transportation that we as Canadians have come to expect as part of our heritage.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate today in the opposition motion which reads:

> That this House condemns the government for its obstinate failure to respond to the continuing public demands of the Canadian people for the maintenance of high quality national passenger rail services.

I want to say at the outset that this is not a new issue for New Democrats. We have been fighting this issue ever since VIA Rail was created.

• (1710)

In fact, I think it is safe to say that my good friend, the member for Regina—Lumsden, was fighting for rail passenger service even before it came away from CN and CP and into the hands of the Crown corporation.

We did not start fighting for it just this summer. We did not start just after the budget earlier this spring when the reference levels were announced. We did not start fighting for VIA Rail just when the government decided not to purchase the new rolling stock, the transcontinental passenger rolling stock a few years ago. Nor did we start fighting for VIA just when this government came into power, when it announced great things for VIA Rail, great studies, task forces, or what have you. We did not start fighting for VIA Rail just when the previous Liberal government decided to cut 20 per cent of the system.

We have been in the fight for a long time because we, as New Democrats, recognize that VIA Rail plays a number of extremely important roles in the economy and the life of this great nation. It is important to Canadians from all parts of the country who see it as their only real option for transportation into and out of their communities. We see it as an economic tool to allow people to live in those smaller communities and commute to the larger. Although I realize that VIA Rail is not designed as a commuter service, it does provide it in a number of sectors. We recognize it as the only safe means of travel that we have in this country, particularly for our elderly and infirm.

When I was in Cape Breton this fall I learned about the tens of thousands of people who go from Cape Breton to Halifax on the train in order to go to the hospital to receive medical care. The road is not an option for them.

New Democrats also see it as an important environmental and energy question. It is an environmental issue because we recognize that in spite of what the government is saying—and every knowledgeable person in this country knows that what the government is saying about the environmental impact is bunk—rail passenger service is one of the most environmentally friendly forms of moving people long distances. It is also the most energy efficient form of moving people long distances.

We also recognize the historical importance of rail passenger service. How many of us had parents who came to this land as immigrants, who arrived by boat in Halifax and were taken by train to Quebec, to southern Ontario, to northern Ontario, to Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia and then on to the territories? All of us have stories about how those people moved at least into the interior by rail.

We also recognize the importance of rail passenger service in terms of an east-west link, an opportunity to see this vast and magnificent land. We recognize the value to tourism. Six hundred million foreign dollars a year come into this country, not for VIA Rail tickets but spent by VIA Rail passengers who come from other lands. This is extremely crucial in Atlantic Canada, extremely crucial and growing so in British Columbia and Alberta.

We are not out to save our past. Let us face it; all of us on this side, in this corner, will be more than happy to get rid of that junk that VIA Rail calls trains. It is outmoded. It has been outmoded for the last 15 to 20 years if not longer.

My colleague, the member for Regina—Lumsden, was calling year after year for the government of the day to invest in new equipment; not to waste money repairing old junk but to invest in new equipment.

I think there were seven ministers of transport, Liberal and Conservative, who promised—it wasn't an election commitment or spending commitment; it was a promise—new passenger rail equipment, new coaches, new sleeping cars, new baggage cars: all of the tools needed to turn VIA Rail into a modern rail passenger service. Seven ministers of transport promised that in this House and on the hustings. Two different governments, Conservative and Liberal, promised legislation.

I listened with amazement to my neighbour, the member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon, as he read out this new report from the Liberal Party of what it would do for VIA Rail. I have heard it all before. In fact, if you turn to a report called The Last Straw, the report of the task force on rail passenger services of October 1981 of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, it is almost word for word.

There is a saying: "What goes around comes around". We have said it from this corner time and time again. When in opposition the Liberals and the Conservatives are great friends of VIA Rail, but wait until they get to the government side. When the Liberals were over there they cut 20 per cent of the system and the Tories got on the rails and went from one end of the country to the other condemning the action, condemning the fact that the decision was made by cabinet without public hearings.

What do they do when they get into power? The same thing. Lo and behold, who is travelling across the country now to save VIA Rail? It is the Liberals.

The reality is that when the committee report says that VIA Rail was designed to fail it is the product of the sorry past of the Liberals contributed to the current history of the Conservatives. If members of the Liberal Party had lived up to their promises to bring in legislation to create VIA Rail and instead of a dollar item in Estimates had given it a legislative mandate and invested the money the money that they promised they would invest in new equipment, the Tories would not be able to do what they are doing today. That is the reality of this issue.

Having said that, the Conservative Government of Canada today has no right whatsoever to do what it is doing to VIA Rail.

Mr. Belsher: We have every right.

Mr. Angus: The hon. member says that they have the right. They may have the legal right, but they do not have the moral right. That is why since June of this year, when I tabled the first petition in this House, we have had hundreds of thousands of Canadians writing their names on petitions and letters that have been tabled in this House, sent to the Prime Minister, sent to the Minister of Transport, and sent to the man who wears two hats, the president of VIA Rail and CN. These are Canadians who say VIA Rail is important to them.

Well over 300 municipalities from one end of this country to the other—not just cities, towns and villages that are served by VIA Rail but others as well—have called on the government to hold public hearings and to put a moratorium on the cuts. They have appeared before the transport committee. They have appeared in the streets, in Toronto, in Windsor, in Vancouver and on Cape Breton. They appeared outside today, representatives of communities from across this land.

They are saying that VIA Rail is important. They are saying that the seven million people who use VIA Rail are important, that the service they use is important and must be maintained not as a status quo item but as a starting point to build a system which will take us to the year 2000.

• (1720)

It is entirely possible every other industrialized country in the world is doing it. Look at the United States with Amtrak, look at Great Britain with Brit Rail, look at the French rail services, the Japanese, the Italian, the German and the Australian. All major countries are investing in rail passenger services because they see it as the way to go.

When the mayors from the corridor were here appearing before the transport committee I think they said it best. Talking about Windsor to Toronto, to Ottawa, to Montreal, to Quebec City, they said: "Imagine if instead of a business person going from downtown Toronto through the traffic, rushing to get to the airport so that he can wait in line for his ticket and then for security, and waiting because of flight delays, he could take a high speed electrified train from downtown Toronto, be in Ottawa in the same amount of time, or even less perhaps, but in a much more sane and less frustrated environment".

Other countries have invested in their future. We are turning ourselves back in time. We are cutting 50 per cent of the service. We are decimating Atlantic Canada. We are destroying the tourist trade in western Canada. We have eliminated, for all intents and purposes, a transcontinental system. Nobody can tell me that three times a week on the northern line is a transcontinental service, particularly if that train is going to be stopping at every flag stop on the way. They will never be able to keep up the schedule and ridership will decline even more.

Once again VIA Rail is designed to fail. Neither this government nor the last one believed in rail passenger services. They talk a good line. The Minister of Transport says that he is doing this to save VIA Rail. Give me a break. That is like cutting off your legs and two arms to save your body. There is not much left. Eventually you wither and die.

This government is doing something extremely wrong to this country. There is no question about it. In responding to a question I put to him today the Prime Minister rejected the transport committee report which only called for some time to allow the royal commission, which was appointed after the fact to study the broad issue of passenger transportation, to take a focused look at rail passenger services.

Keep VIA rolling, even with the junk, for the next period of time. Not necessarily a year like has been suggested, because I think it would take a little longer than that, but I would not want to tie them down. It makes sense to give them the time because seven million people cannot be wrong. They choose VIA Rail. They do not want to ride in their cars or somebody else's car. They do not want to ride the bus. They cannot afford or do not want to take the plane.

VIA Rail passenger service is a viable option for them. Yes, it is costing the Government of Canada and therefore taxpayers a significant sum of money. There is no question about that. We on this side have argued long and hard over the years that there are ways of reducing it. The main one was through the investment in new capital equipment to lower the operating costs.

Much of that $5 billion in the last few years has gone to keep that junk rolling. When the temperature in a car is about 95 degrees you have to stop the train so you can crawl underneath the car to turn the valve. That is the problem with the system we have. It was never given a change. It was never given legislation that would allow it to pay only avoidable costs to CN and CP instead of being held ransom by them for a number of years.

Canadians across this country are saying loudly and clearly that they want the government to maintain VIA Rail and to reinvest in VIA Rail. We on this side of the House agree. In closing I would like to move, seconded by the member for Regina—Lumsden:

> That immediately following the word "services" the following words be inserted:
> —in particular the continuance of service on the following routes at 1989 levels: Regional Services—Halifax–Yarmouth, Halifax–Port Hawkesbury, Halifax–Sydney, Halifax–Moncton–Saint John, Moncton–Campbellton, Moncton–Edmundston, Montreal–Sherbrooke, Quebec–Mont Joli, Toronto–Havelock, Toronto–North Bay, Cochrane–Kapuskasing, Kingston–Toronto, Victoria–Courtenay; Other Services—Montreal–Trois Rivieres–Quebec (North Shore), Montreal–Ottawa–Sudbury–Winnipeg–Calgary–Vancouver (The Canadian), Montreal–Toronto, Winnipeg–Capreol.

Mr. Keyes: Madam Speaker, I just cannot let a couple of comments made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, a fellow member of the transport committee go by, nor some comments made by the member opposite for Fraser Valley East.

First, the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan refers to the government when it was in opposition, screaming and crying about the way VIA Rail, the national passenger rail service in this country, should be. Those members did that when they were in opposition. Members of the Liberal Party of Canada, Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, are standing in their place collectively saying that we cannot cut national passenger rail service.

I must remind the member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan that this party, the Liberal Party, is made up of new, dedicated, hard working members of Parliament who had nothing to say or do with the previous policy of the previous administration. I want to emphasize that by bringing forward a report released today, a report of the federal Liberal task force on VIA Rail of which I was proud to be a part. In its conclusion it states:

> It is not enough to say that we support the VIA Rail system as it currently exists. We believe that VIA Rail has the potential to serve this country without being a continual drain on the resources of the government.

That may in part also answer some of the queries from the member opposite, the member for Fraser Valley East. It continues:

> However, this can only be achieved if we have the foresight to invest now in a capital expenditure program to modernize the entire VIA Rail system.

That is to have the vision, to have the foresight, to look ahead. The report goes on:

> It is also important to allow the management of VIA Rail the flexibility and responsibility to make business decisions concerning the future of the company. We do realize that this Crown corporation must function within a public policy framework, but, just as responsibility for political decisions must rest with the government, the responsibility for business decisions must rest with the management. Presumably the management was hired to do a job; the government should let them do it.
> The Liberal Party task force on VIA Rail went though the process of listening to Canadians. We have done our best to reflect the aspirations that people have concerning our national rail passenger service in this document.

Also, one point that touches a nerve is the situation on the environment. The government likes to talk about the environment and its environmental record, but it is only lip service.

• (1730)

By removing 51 per cent of the trains, taking them off the map of Canada, we are putting more strain and diverting passengers who used to use the train to buses and automobiles, those vehicles which supply this environment with that deadly product, carbon dioxide. Noted environmentalists, including Dr. David Suzuki have said that if for any reason we have to put additional CO2 into our atmosphere it is wrong. That is why we call for the moratorium. Let us just take one step back. Let us have a listen to the people, to the mayors, to the premiers and to the environmentalists. Because only a true environmental study in its full capacity, not something cooked up by the Department of Transport but by the Minister of the Environment—

Mr. Benjamin: What is the question?

Mr. Keyes: It is a comment—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I may have to stop the hon. member. I must say I have a difficult time seeing the relevancy of the hon. gentleman's comments in terms of the intervention just made by the hon. member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan. However, he still may want to comment.

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I have not heard revisionism like that since the recent events in the eastern bloc. The sins of the fathers are handed down to the sons. There are members of the hon. member's caucus who were around when those cuts were made and who are now front-benchers. One has to accept the reality that in opposition Liberals say one thing and in government they do the opposite.

Mr. Benjamin: You are stuck with it, buster. It's going to haunt you for years.

Mr. Dionne: Madam Speaker, if I could get the hon. member from the NDP to pipe down, I would make a few remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne: In 1981 we, as a government, made a mistake when we cut VIA Rail by 19 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will have to interrupt the hon. member. There was still some time left for questions and comments. Was the hon. member rising on debate?

Mr. Dionne: On debate, yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will have to recognize someone from the government side on debate. It was on questions or comments that I recognized the hon. member.

Is the hon. member for Restigouche—Chaleur rising on a question or a comment?

Mr. Arseneault: Yes, Madam Speaker. I just want to make a few quick comments.

It has been said in the House many times by government members that the government has no funds. If it had funds, we would probably have VIA Rail and there would be no problem. I wish to point out to government members, including the Minister of Transport, that in estimates made by the Minister of Finance, if the government took one percentage point off the interest rates, there would be a saving of $1.6 billion in one year.

In over four years the saving would be $10 billion. In so doing the government would have enough money to fund VIA Rail as it now exists and even invest in new rolling stock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would like to tell the hon. member that questions and comments following an intervention by an hon. member should relate directly to the intervention just made.

Mr. Keyes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to say that we are on the subject of VIA Rail and everything that the member referred to, environmental, financial or whatever, is directly related to the remarks of the hon. member.

With all due respect, Madam Speaker, I believe that any comments we have directed toward that hon. member all have to do with that collective pot we know as VIA Rail.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member can of course debate anything that may relate to VIA Rail, which is the subject of today's motion. Following an hon. member's speech, questions or comments should be related directly to the speech that has just been given in the House. It should not be debate by itself.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all due respect to the Chair, I think it is essential that we have guidance when you make a ruling such as this. Could you point out, Madam Speaker, if it is permissible, exactly what my hon. colleague said that was not relevant? I thought he was being very relevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the hon. member from Winnipeg does not at this time want to enter into debate with the Chair. I think that later we could look at Beauchesne's and those rules together.

The time for questions and comments is now over. I recognize on debate the hon. Minister of State for Transport.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to enter into this debate in the House. In listening to the remarks of members opposite in this last hour or so, one would think that we were cutting rail service completely in Canada, that there will be no trains left in Canada, that there will be no coast-to-coast service in this country. Nothing is further from the truth.

Yes, we have reduced the services on VIA Rail, and we have reduced them for reasons. They are reasons about which members across the way know. I think it is unfair to the public watching this debate to put forward comments that would make people think that there will be no future rail service in Canada. In fact, that is not true.

This government is committed to building a strong economy, encouraged by incentive and opportunity, an economy which is competitive with the world's trading nations. In order to fully achieve this goal we must create a solid base which will allow our economy to flourish in the coming years.

Measures which seek to control the deficit and reduce the national debt are an essential element of this foundation for the future, an element about which members opposite do not seem to have any concern whatsoever. Equally, measures which seek to establish a sound fiscal framework to sustain continued economic development are also essential to this purpose.

These objectives are reflected in this government's commitment to a sound transportation policy. Transportation is and always will be at the heart of our nation's economy. That is why we have undertaken to provide Canadians with a safe, effective and efficient transportation system. This commitment is the core around which our policy of economic regulatory reform was built.

With the advent of free trade the role played by the transportation system in our economic development has become increasingly vital. As we enter into the next decade and the next century, a cost effective transportation system is essential if Canada is to preserve and enhance its position in world trade. In order to meet this challenge we must make the best use of each mode of transportation: air, rail, marine, car, truck and bus.

Continued subsidization of a mode of transportation which costs more and more and is used less and less is not a sound investment in our future, particularly when that investment is being made with the Canadian taxpayers' money. That is exactly the situation we are facing with respect to our national rail passenger network.

VIA Rail subsidy rose to an unprecedented $641 million in 1988. This translates into an average subsidy of $100 per passenger. We are asking all Canadians to pay this subsidy, but only 3 per cent of the travelling public uses this mode of transportation. Canadians have demonstrated their preference for other modes of transportation. With a market share of 84 per cent, the automobile is clearly the mode of choice.

• (1740)

Contrary to all of the rhetoric which has been bandied about in recent months, VIA Rail's performance is worsening, not improving. While revenues did increase by 13 per cent, or $26 million in 1988, costs increased by 15 per cent, or $94 million, with the result that government subsidies to VIA increased by $68 million. As you can see, Madam Speaker, prompt action had to be taken to stop this drain on the public purse.

Reducing the subsidies to VIA Rail was a difficult decision to make. We had a system that was expensive, ineffective and inefficient.

Many other countries are making decisions concerning rail passenger services based on their unique demographic and economic realities. The government's decision is based on Canadian economic and demographic realities.

Our decision has to be considered in light of the fact that we have the second largest country in the world with one of the smallest populations. VIA service must be consistent with the realities of the density of the Quebec–Windsor corridor, and also the different needs of the Atlantic Canadian and western Canadian regions.

Contrary to the wording of the motion before us today, I believe that we have taken the action necessary to ensure the future of VIA as a national, affordable and sustainable rail passenger network.

Since making this announcement we have taken every possible opportunity to discuss with Canadians the importance of this decision. All Canadians are aware that we must reduce the burden of the debt. Canadians have been asked to tighten their belts, and VIA cannot be an exception.

This government has distinguished itself during the past four years through fiscal responsibility and judicious allocation of federal financial resources. When money is scarce, it is spent where it is most needed, where it is most likely to produce results.

I invite members opposite and, indeed, all Canadians, to look at the facts and to judge for themselves the validity of the fiscal realities under which we currently labour. If we had to make difficult decisions, it is that in 1984 we inherited a legacy of debt. This is a legacy which I personally do not want to pass on to my children or to their children.

The difficult choices that we have been forced to make have allowed us to reduce the deficit and to bring the rate of inflation down to a more acceptable level—not a 22 per cent interest rate and the 13, 14 and 15 per cent unemployment rates that we had when the opposition was in government.

Responsible fiscal management, combined with sound economic policies, have paved the road to a rate of economic growth which ranks among the highest in the industrialized world. As responsible Canadians we owe it to our children to leave them with every opportunity for development that we ourselves have enjoyed.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I would just like to respond to what the minister said about the debt that was inherited. The debt is much worse now than it was when this government came to power in 1984.

I also want to mention the fact that this government cannot absorb—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLellan: Come on! The fact is that this government just does not care. What it is doing is nickel and diming the Canadian public and letting the chances for true savings in spending go by the wayside because it may rock the boats of some of its elitist friends in big business.

So what does the government do? It picks on the people and the regions in this country which can least afford it. It allows a man like Mr. Lawless to take over as president of VIA Rail so that he can set up exactly what he wants to do and thereby create the case for CN to reduce its activity in the regions of this country. CN is now well on the way in Cape Breton, eastern Nova Scotia—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and to put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the business of supply pursuant to Standing Order 81(15).

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment lost.

The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, in the interests of saving time, I think you would find there is unanimous consent for the House to apply the vote taken on the amendment to this motion, but if the government insists in reverse, we would not mind that at all.

Miss Grey: Madam Speaker, I chose not to vote on the amendment, but I would like to register a yea vote on this main motion in the interests of saving time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Ottawa—Vanier. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The vote of the hon. member for Beaver River will be added to the yeas.

The House divided on the motion which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, immediately before proceeding to the rest of the votes that are normally taken at this point, I wish to advise the House that the business for tomorrow at 11 a.m. will be Bill C–49.

CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1989–90

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (B), 1989–90, laid upon the table Wednesday, December 6, 1989, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Carried on division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. de Cotret thereupon moved that Bill C–50, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990, be read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time.

Mr. de Cotret thereupon moved that Bill C–50, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Carried on division.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We would like to have the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The bill was distributed earlier in the day by consent.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the bill may have been distributed but we did not get it, and until we get it we are not ready to deal with this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Pages will be distributing copies of the bill immediately. It was done earlier, by unanimous consent. I thought the bill had been distributed to all hon. members.

• (1820)

I am advised that the bill has been distributed. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

The hon. member for Windsor West on a point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Madam Chairperson, I want to ask the President of the Treasury Board the customary question. I hope he can give us the assurance that this bill is in the usual form and does not depart therefrom.

Mr. de Cotret: The bill is the same as the bills for other Supplementary Estimates in previous years.

[Translation]

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Chairman, on a point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Saint–Denis, on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Chairman, the matter I am about to raise has been raised for many years in the House. When we get a bill of this kind which is always in English alphabetical order, members who, like me, like to be able to work in French, are always switching from page to page because there is no alphabetical order in French.

An Hon. Member: Right on, Marcel!

Mr. Prud'homme: I really wish that in future, and I don't intend to make an issue of it today and prevent consideration of this bill—after all, I think that I am a fairly reasonable person—I believe the Department of Justice, and I see the Minister of Justice who seems to agree, might be able to provide for the requisite accommodation in this bill so that—–I realize it is easier to go by alphabetical order in English. But for instance, if I am looking for "Affaires extérieures" I have to—–

[English]

If you would like, I may make that point in English, if you want me to. It is just to see if, once in a while, members are sensitive enough to understand what many members have to go through all the time.

[Translation]

So without getting into any kind of a debate today, Madam Chairman, I hope that as of today we could take a considered look at this problem and perhaps one of these days something will be done about a problem that was often raised in this House well before my time.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The point just raised by the hon. member for Saint-Denis has been raised previously in the House on many occasions. I agree that it would be appropriate if the minister responsible would pursue the matter and find out whether something can be done about responding to the request made by the hon. member for Saint-Denis and by other members as well. I am sure the minister would like to look into this as soon as possible.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the three House leaders with respect to the terrible tragedy that took place in Montreal yesterday.

There was a feeling among the House leaders that the House should comment on this particular tragedy. We have agreed that at 2.15 p.m., after the usual Statements by Members and immediately prior to Question Period commencing, a representative from each of the three Parties would be recognized in the House for a brief statement of condolence to the victims and their families, those who were injured, and those who witnessed the tragedy.

I do not think we need a House order to do that, but I did want to advise the House that this agreement had been reached among the parties.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we agree with this procedure. At 2.15, we will have an opportunity to express our sympathy for the relatives, friends and witnesses of this terrible incident, for the victims of a madman.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we were all shocked at the news yesterday of the terrible tragedy in Montreal. Our hearts went out to the victims and all of those who were part one way or another of the terrible incident.

We would certainly like to join with the House in making appropriate comments at 2.15 today.

POINT OF ORDER

SUPPLY DAY MOTIONS—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask the indulgence of the House. Before Routine Proceedings I have two rulings to make. The first is on a point of order raised by the hon. parliamentary secretary. I will be dealing immediately thereafter with the question of privilege or perhaps more properly a question of contempt raised by the hon. member for Victoria.

On Monday, October 30, 1989, the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader raised as a point of order several questions regarding the conduct of business on a supply day.

The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands and several others offered comments on these questions. I want to thank members for their contributions to this debate on an interesting procedural matter. I have considered the matter carefully and am now prepared to respond.

[Translation]

The first question asked by the parliamentary secretary was whether it was necessary for the government to designate a supply day before the opposition can give notice of a motion they want debated. The parliamentary Secretary maintained that it was a necessary precondition. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands suggested that in this specific case it was not necessary and that, in any case, it had been done in anticipation of Friday being a votable supply day.

[English]

According to our rules and practice, the purpose of notice is to give warning to the House of an item of business that might be raised for debate. The notice does not necessarily mean that the item will actually be debated or that it will be debated any time soon.

Speaker's Ruling

The Order Paper contains numerous items for which notice has been given but which have not yet been debated. The parliamentary secretary suggested that proceedings on supply days are different.

While I agree that certain aspects of supply have a character distinct from other proceedings, it seems to me that unless the rules on supply are explicit, the usual practices should be followed. This is the case with notice.

It is competent for any opposition member to file a motion that might be debated on a supply day. Normally what happens is that members file supply day motions at the latest possible moment after a day has been designated by the government, but this does not preclude the right to give notice of the supply motion well in advance of a supply day. Indeed this has happened.

In 1982 a supply day motion originally filed on February 11 remained on the Notice Paper for almost six weeks and through three supply days before being taken up on the final allotted day in the supply period ending late in March. While it may be unusual to have the supply day motion filed well in advance of a designated day, it is not prohibited by either our rules or our practice.

As his second point, the parliamentary secretary asked a question relating to the intent of Standing Order 81(12)(c), which gives the Speaker the power to select opposition motions on allotted days when notice has been given of more than one. He felt that the idea behind this Standing Order was to cover those situations where motions had been put on notice by both of the opposition parties, but that it was not the intention that one party could put down more than one notice or the same notice but in the name of another hon. member.

The recognition of two opposition parties is not explicitly contemplated in the Standing Orders. Speakers in the past have indicated that they have selected motions with a view to the proportional balance of the opposition parties in the House, but this does not necessarily address the entire issue of selection.

Other considerations might need to be taken into account, particularly in instances where there are several notices, some of which could be submitted by members of the same party. The date of the notice, the sponsor of the motion, the subject matter raised and whether the motion is votable or not can be weighed by the Speaker when making a final decision.

I would agree with the parliamentary secretary that the political parties are factored into any decision, but I would have to add that it is not the only criterion used nor is it necessarily the most important one and, as I have stated earlier, there is nothing in the Standing Orders which in any way limits the number of notices which may be given.

[Translation]

The third question of the parliamentary secretary has to do with the withdrawal of a notice of motion. The parliamentary secretary asks if it is in order "for any or all notices for such motions to be withdrawn without the consent of the House." The simple answer to this question is yes. As long as a motion has not been proposed to the House, as long as the House is not properly seized of the motion, then it is still only a notice and it remains possible for the sponsor to secure its withdrawal unilaterally. The sponsor of the notice of motion could even refuse to move it when the order is called and it would be dropped. Once it is in the possession of the House, however, the motion becomes the property of the House and it is the House which must then consent to the motion being withdrawn from further consideration or possible decision.

• (1110)

[English]

The authorities are clear on this. Beauchesne, Bourinot and May all confirm that members retain the right to withdraw notices of motions before they have been proposed to the House. See, for example, Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 398 on page 144 and Bourinot Fourth Edition, page 296 where one reads:

> A notice of motion may be withdrawn at any time by the member upon merely notifying the Clerk of the House of his desire so to do.

British practices are comparable to our own with respect to withdrawal of notice, and I would refer members to pages 353 and 377 of May's Twentieth Edition: "Notice withdrawals are usually done by a letter to the Clerk signed by the member concerned."

In the fourth issue raised by the parliamentary secretary I am asked to deal with the power of selection as set out in Standing Order 81(12)(c). In the 20 years that this rule has been part of our Standing Orders the Chair has only occasionally been obliged to select motions for debate on a supply day.

The task is perhaps not as daunting as the parliamentary secretary suggests. It is not so much impossible as unenviable. As I pointed out earlier, there are certain criteria which the Speaker uses in evaluating the supply day motion when more than one has been filed.

Speakers in the past have tried to announce to the House as soon as they are able what motion will be selected for the supply day, but this may not always be satisfactory given that notices can be filed up to the very last minute, that is, up to six o'clock in the evening prior to a supply day or five o'clock on a Friday thus leaving little time for members to prepare for a debate.

While the Speaker can be sympathetic to the pressures exerted on members who routinely have to come into the House with speeches on short notice, there is little that the Chair can do except to enforce the rules as they are written and as they have been applied for two decades since the rules of supply have been changed.

[Translation]

I hope that this explanation of the rules relating to opposition day motions and notice has been helpful to the parliamentary secretary and to the House and I thank the member for giving me the opportunity to clarify the matter.

PRIVILEGE

GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL APPOINTMENTS—SPEAKER'S RULING

Last Monday, on December 4, the hon. member for Victoria rose on a question of privilege to bring to the attention of the Chair and the House a matter which he asserted constituted a contempt of Parliament.

The matter related to the announced appointment of several members of the Security Intelligence Review Committee including the chairman of that committee. According to the hon. member the appointments were made in violation of the statutory requirement for consultation between the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and the leaders of all other recognized parties in the House.

Because the consultation was in the form of a letter written two days before the announcement was made, the hon. member for Victoria claims that the consultative process was not adequately followed and that the actions amount to a contempt of Parliament.

[Translation]

The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) claimed that there was no question of privilege. He argued that the consultative process was followed in that the Prime Minister solicited the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and also the Leader of the New Democratic Party. The Minister also indicated that the hon. member for Victoria ought not to be raising this issue since the statute refers only to consultation between the head of government and the opposition party leaders of the House. The Minister went further to suggest if the member for Victoria truly felt that appointments were invalid in law, that "he would have to argue that in another court or in another forum."

Other hon. members also contributed to the discussion of the question. Let me express my appreciation to all hon. members for their presentations on this issue.

[English]

In ruling let me begin by saying that a question of privilege must involve some restriction upon rights and immunities historically claimed by the House and enjoyed by all members collectively and individually in the performance of their duties. In my view the matter of the process to be followed by law in the appointment of certain officials does not infringe on any of those rights and cannot therefore constitute a question of privilege.

Does the complaint involve a contempt of Parliament? A contempt must in some measure at least suggest a disregard for the rightful authority and dignity of Parliament. The provisions of the law in this case make no explicit reference to Parliament.

Section 34(1) of the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act describes a process which is to be followed antecedent to the appointment of certain officials. The process involves, as I have already mentioned, certain specific individuals—the Prime Minister and the leaders of the recognized opposition parties of the House. Parliament is not directly implicated in this process and therefore I would be reluctant to agree that a question as to the adequate compliance with the provisions of the appointment process in the act could amount to a contempt of Parliament. While it may be a question for the courts to decide upon as to whether or not the law has been respected in this instance, it does not constitute a contempt of the House.

In summary, therefore, the issue raised is neither a question of privilege nor a contempt. It is rather a question of law, and consequently I cannot offer my opinion as to the merits of the case either as argued by the hon. member for Victoria or as rebutted by the Minister of Justice. The Chair is not in a position to decide upon questions of law. That is a matter best left to the courts.

I think I should add, in the interests of the hon. member for Victoria and others who are concerned about this and also in fairness to the government, that this ruling deals only with the question of privilege or contempt. It does not of course preclude questions being asked in this chamber with respect to the other factors surrounding the incidents which have been brought to the attention of the Chair.

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING AND REFERENCE OF APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of order in council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1), these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

PETITIONS

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a number of petitions today.

The first is signed by 25 residents of Thunder Bay and area who are concerned about the government's legislation dealing with unemployment insurance. It calls upon Parliament to reject these cuts in the unemployment insurance system, to propose more meaningful reforms and to concentrate on labour force development strategy combined with a full employment policy and effective regional development policy.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by 80 residents of the community of Atikokan who are upset that the committee appointed by the Government of Canada to review the northern tax allowance has not only refused to include them in the geographic area but has removed many other communities.

They call upon Parliament to declare the township of Atikokan and the surrounding area to be eligible for the northern residence deduction.

• (1120)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): I have two petitions, bearing a total of 259 names of residents from the communities of Hurkett, Dorion, Kaministiquia and Thunder Bay, primarily collected at the Family Diner in Victoriaville.

All these petitioners call upon Parliament to maintain the existing VIA network, to upgrade VIA equipment, and to guarantee VIA sufficient support to carry out its mandate to provide passenger service.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Finally, Madam Speaker, I have a petition bearing the names of 115 residents of Atikokan and 25 residents of Balmertown, in northwestern Ontario, members of Local 950 of the United Steelworkers of America, all of whom object to the government's proposal for the goods and services tax.

They call upon Parliament to cease with this proposal which they believe will shift the tax burden on to ordinary Canadians through a regressive consumption tax instead of through real tax reform.

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition duly signed by the clerk.

There are 40 signatures on this petition of people from Shearstown, Bay Roberts, Harbour Grace and Bryants Cove. They are concerned that the unemployment insurance system, which is very vital to their well-being and is providing income protection to them, will be changed significantly, to the point where it is going to affect them drastically. They are concerned about the promises that were made and are not being kept. They are terribly concerned about the $2.5 billion that is going to be taken away from them in the long run.

They are joined by my constituents from Old Shop, Blaketown, Upper Island Cove and other areas. They are calling on Parliament to reject Bill C-21 that is causing us so much grief in my constituency and to get on with some meaningful changes, particularly in the job development area.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, with the latest in what seems to be a never ending series of petitions on the subject of VIA Rail. These petitioners are particularly upset by the imminent closure of the Canadian line which is one of the best used and has one of the best cost recoveries of any section of the VIA network.

There are some 311 signatures on four separate petitions calling on Parliament to maintain VIA Rail's present national network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment, and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

The use of the line is evidenced by the large number of communities along the railway and by the many tourists who use that line and overuse it in the summertime from Golden, Sicamous, Kamloops, Revelstoke, Nakusp, Mica, Trail, Nelson, Ganges, Comox, Kelowna, Vancouver, Salmon Arm, Burnaby, Castlegar, Victoria, North Vancouver, Sparwood, Chetwynd, Whistler, Coquitlam, Vernon, Surrey, Calgary and Edmonton, Alberta, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and even two signatories from Sweden.

Mr. Gardiner All aboard!

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I am tabling a petition signed by some men and women of Lebel-sur-Quévillon. They reject the recommendations of the task force on tax benefits for northern and isolated areas because this task force did not consider that in 1989, the government of Quebec recognizes northern Quebec as beginning at the 49th parallel in Abitibi and that places like Lebel-sur-Quévillon, Joutel, Matagami and Chapais were not consulted on their isolation in northern Quebec before this report was tabled in the House of Commons on October 27.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have the duty and honour to present a petition approved as to form and signed by approximately 3,342 constituents.

Briefly put, the signatories believe as do I that the proposed goods and services tax would be "inflationary, regressive and would reduce the standard of living of Canadians generally".

They therefore call upon all members of Parliament to reject any such legislation put before this House.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House today, pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The first is signed by residents primarily of 100 Mile House, British Columbia, and also Lac La Hache.

The petitioners express concern about this tax crazy government and its plan to introduce a goods and services tax. They call upon Parliament to reform the taxation system so that there is an effective minimum tax on wealthy individuals and corporations and to pursue a number of other measures that will ensure we have a fairer tax system.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, the second petition, also certified correct under Standing Order 36, is with regard to VIA Rail and is signed by residents in the province of Ontario who express their concern about this government's cuts to VIA Rail.

They call upon Parliament to maintain VIA Rail, to upgrade it with new equipment, and to give VIA a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate.

I know they share my concern that probably the next step under this government will be to introduce legislation to create VIA Rail in HO scale, and that is not what we want in this country.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of western Canadians, pursuant to Standing Order 36 and certified correct by the clerk of petitions.

If I could summarize, the petitioners simply cannot believe that the government would actually impose a tax on diapers and coffins and everything in between. Virtually anything that moves is going to be taxed at 9 per cent.

The petitioners list a whole range of things which I will not take time to read, but there must be at least a dozen different reasons why they oppose the tax. They simply ask the government to reject the proposed goods and services tax, to reform our tax system with a minimum corporate tax, and to ensure that there is no taxation on essential goods such as haircuts, certain food products and the like.

The petition goes on for pages and pages.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition on another matter relating to the ongoing saga of thousands of Canadians speaking out every day against the government's decision to reduce passenger rail service in Canada.

The petitioners point out that we are virtually the only country in the world that is doing this. Because of the fact that passenger rail service is environmentally friendly in terms of a way to travel, most other countries are expanding, investing and modernizing their passenger rail, whereas this government in its traditional fashion is curtailing and eliminating this service in large parts of the country.

The petitioners are asking the government to come to its senses and do what every other western industrialized nation is doing, that is, expand and modernize passenger rail service.

[Translation]

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present today a petition signed by over 2,000 citizens who oppose the government's proposed tax, the goods and services tax.

The community is very disturbed, shocked and annoyed to see that for the fist time in history, there will be a federal tax on services. Instead of only some products, on which the manufacturers' tax has been increased, now all or nearly all products will be taxed. We have not yet seen the details of the proposal. Now services! In the community, merchants are seriously concerned, as are consumers. Moreover, the interest rater are real cause for concern.

[English]

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Madam Speaker, it is my honour today to present three petitions signed by many concerned Canadians who object to the proposed goods and services tax. They believe that this new tax will cause higher inflation, higher interest rates, and higher unemployment.

Therefore they call upon the government to reject this proposed goods and services tax.

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, today I have the privilege and duty to present petitions signed by a few hundred more residents of Hamilton Mountain who are against the proposed 9 per cent goods and service tax. The petitioners believe that it will place an unnecessary burden on the low and middle income Canadians.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon this House to reject the 9 per cent goods and service tax proposal.

• (1130)

BILL 178

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Madam Speaker, I have petitions this morning on three different topics. The first is a petition from some 35 people in my riding of Prince Edward—Hastings calling upon the government to pass a resolution of the House of Commons urging the Governor General In Council to give full force and effect to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by the exercising of its constitutional power of disallowance with respect to Bill 178 of the province of Quebec.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): I have a group of petitions again this morning, Madam Speaker, calling upon the government to reconsider its ludicrous cuts and alterations to VIA Rail passenger service in Canada.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): I also have some 35 petitions with the names of 2,000 people who are calling upon the government to reconsider and go back to the drawing board on the goods and services tax.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, I want to present a petition on behalf of a couple of hundred Canadians who again call upon Parliament to reject the proposed goods and services tax. They note in their petition the increase by over 50 per cent in the manufacturers' sale tax which this is supposed to replace and question that and other tax increases that Canadians have suffered in the last number of years. They are concerned about the imposition of the goods and services tax and the unfair hardship it will cause to low and middle-income Canadians.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, it is my privilege to stand this morning and present a petition, duly authorized by Standing Order 36, on behalf of 36 Canadians from such centres as Toronto, Etobicoke, and Waterloo, who are condemning the government for the $400 million cuts it is making to VIA Rail. They point out that this is going to result in a serious devaluation of passenger service in Canada and will result in layoffs of Canadian workers in the railway industry. They call upon the government to upgrade VIA Rail to the standard that the mandate given to VIA calls for rather than to take these drastic measures and cut services to people who desperately need them.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C–49, an Act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I rise in the House today to introduce the second reading of Bill C–49, an Act to provide for the resumption of certain government services.

Madam Speaker, hon. members are aware that ships' crews have now been on strike for three weeks and that hospital services employees went on strike last week.

Clearly, if we do not terminate the strike action taken by these two groups, the health and safety of Canadians will be threatened.

That is why the government has acted without delay to order these employees back to work.

[English]

Let me say as I stated yesterday in this House, even with the legislation introduced, I would be willing to negotiate. I will repeat that commitment. I am available and I will be willing to negotiate any time so that we can reach a mutually agreeable negotiated settlement.

Members of the House are aware of the inherent dangers and the increased risk to the safety and security of Canadians caused by these two strikes. Where the services provided by the employees are in the interest of safety and security of the public, it is particularly important that the parties negotiate seriously and responsibly to reach a settlement. Now this may require considerable skill. It certainly requires a willingness to compromise and, perhaps, most of all, perserverence. We owe nothing less to the Canadians we serve. It is the public who suffers the consequences of the denial of government services and many of those services are essential to health, safety and security. The government is not prepared to wait any longer.

Canadians must be able to count on the Coast Guard to rescue them. Canadians must be able to navigate safely in Canadian waters. Canadian veterans must be able to count on being given proper care.

I want to deal for a moment with some clear examples that show why we must act now. Let me point out to all hon. members the importance of safe navigation in the St. Lawrence Seaway. Traffic passing through the system include ships carrying grain, coal, iron ore and many other essential products. Many Canadian jobs are dependent on the reliable and safe operations of the Seaway. People who work in our refineries, in the aluminum industry, the Port of Montreal, all depend on the safe and secure passage of ships in the St. Lawrence.

The western Canadian grain farmers rely heavily on our normally dependable shipping system.

The early closure of the Seaway caused by this labour dispute affects Canadian jobs throughout Canada. We are very concerned also about the health and safety issues in the case of health service workers.

[Translation]

There are currently 726 veterans requiring care at Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue Hospital, one-third of whom are bedridden. Rideau Hospital has 131 veterans. In Saskatoon, 31 veterans are now in hospital, while another 29 have had to be sent home or transferred to other hospitals.

[English]

We cannot jeopardize the health of veterans, many of whom are disabled or chronic care patients. These people have served their country with honour and pride, in difficult times, and we must ensure their care is not put in jeopardy by this work stoppage.

With little prospect of a settlement through the normal collective bargaining process, it is becoming increasingly difficult for management to make sure that all essential services are being carried out. The government must therefore become the defender of the public interest. The bill before this House provides for an immediate return to work by all ships' crews and hospital services employees and for binding conciliations on the issues.

[Translation]

We can be proud of our record in the federal Public Service, when 95 per cent of the agreements have been settled without employees having to resort to strike action.

[English]

I wish to take a moment to outline the specific provisions of the legislation. As I indicated, the bill provides for an immediate return by ships' crews and hospital services employees. It also requires that the Public Service Alliance of Canada call a halt to the two strikes and inform striking employees that they are to resume their duties. If the law is ignored, employees who continue to strike will face fines of between $500 and $1000 a day. Union representatives who fail to comply could be fined between $10,000 and $50,000 a day and the union itself could be fined between $50,000 and $100,000 a day.

The government is not proposing to legislate a settlement. It is providing, with this legislation, a process for a fair and equitable resolution of these disputes.

• (1140)

Immediately following the passage of the legislation, the chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board will establish a binding conciliation board for each of the two groups. Each party will then nominate someone to represent their interests in the binding conciliation process. The two boards will have 90 days to resolve outstanding issues. Should a conciliation board fail to resolve the issues it will render a decision that will be binding on both parties.

The government could have imposed its own settlement but as you can see we are approaching the problem with a much more open mind. We will solve the critical issue in a manner that is as fair and equitable as possible.

[Translation]

Ships' crews and hospital services are the last two groups represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada in the current round of negotiations for a collective agreement. Last March, a temporary agreement was reached with the alliance for 27 groups covering 160,000 employees. Three groups rejected the agreement, which provided for a contract spread over 42 months and an annual wage increase of 4.1 per cent, a settlement I feel is reasonable and fair.

[English]

Madam Speaker, every effort has been made to reach a settlement with both of the groups that are still outstanding. For ship's crews workers in terms of pay equity, for example, we offered to establish, immediately upon signing, the agreement of pay equity between the east coast and the west coast.

In terms of meeting hospital services workers' demands vis-à-vis pay equity we have already acted. Even though this is not an issue in this dispute, some members have referred erroneously to it as an issue. I want to set the record straight. Retroactive pay adjustments totalling $28 million have already been paid out. We are in the process of paying another $10 million. We are living up to our obligations, no less.

All these responsible efforts at reaching settlements through the normal process have failed. However, at no point can the government let a clash of wills take precedence over the safety and security of the public. We must intervene and we are doing so in the fairest way possible by submitting both sides to the decision of an independent third party.

In conclusion, I want to reiterate the government's resolve to ensure the health, safety and security of Canadians, and equally the government's resolve to ensure that its employees are dealt with in a fair and equitable manner. We believe that this bill provides for both. I call upon all members of this House to co-operate in ensuring speedy passage of this legislation. It is legislation that is in the national interest. It is legislation that will allow the government to meet those two resolves; ensuring the safety, security and health of Canadians, and providing for a fair and equitable manner of resolving a conflict that now appears to be in a stalemate. I ask colleagues on the other side of the House to sit, discuss, debate this bill but I also ask them to give it speedy resolution. Thank you very much.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Madam Speaker, the fact that this bill is before us at all today is the result of the failure of the government to deal fairly with its employees, to act expeditiously and properly when it should have acted. It is the end of a sorry path of negligence, administrative bungling and mistakes on the part of the government. It is part of a pattern that we have been attacking in this House on debate on a number of issues.

We see here a failure of the government to act when it should have acted to protect the safety, health and security of Canadians through proper legal channels at the proper time.

We see a failure to bargain in good faith, the use at every step of every possible means of delaying the process of collective bargaining. We see a total lack of respect for the people who work for Canada, and particularly we see a determination that those at the lowest end of the salary scale, working for the people of Canada, are the ones who will bear the brunt of the government's arrogance and mismanagement.

We have seen this in a number of other pieces of legislation that we have spoken on in this House, whether it is the unemployment insurance bill or the clawback of Old Age Security, or the clawback of family allowances or tax reform. It is those who are most vulnerable who are hit by the policies of this government.

This legislation is attempting to put an end to two strikes that are going on. The ships' crew workers have been on strike since November 11. The hospital service workers have been on strike since November 30. Both groups have been without a contract for two years. Both groups are among the lowest paid groups in the Government of Canada.

One of the most fundamental freedoms in a free society is the right to work and the right to withhold work, to bargain for decent wages and decent working conditions and to organize with other workers to do that.

Canada is a signatory to a number of international conventions that legitimize those rights, that validate those rights, that intend to protect those rights as fundamental human rights regardless of where one lives in the world. It is a right that should only be abrogated for the most serious of reasons in the national interest.

I listened carefully to the minister's reply to my question yesterday when I asked what the justification was for this extreme measure. I listened carefully again today to the documentation on the serious nature of the situation that requires withdrawing the fundamental human right to strike, withdrawing services as a means of bargaining for more favourable and adequate compensation, more favourable working conditions and appropriate recompense for the work one does.

What I heard yesterday causes me a great deal of concern. The minister talked about the failure of negotiation, with only a passing mention of public safety and security.

I heard the minister say that the real reason for the legislation is to break an impasse that does not seem to be able to be resolved through negotiations. Throughout most of his answer, he spoke about the failure of negotiations and said very little about public safety and public security.

Again this morning I heard very little documentation of what is the severe risk to the national interest that demands the withdrawal of a fundamental right of workers in a free and democratic society.

The minister referred to a letter from the president of the Professional Institute of Public Servants of Canada in which he talked about the consequences of the disruption, the costs, the effects on research activities of the Government of Canada and on the maritime economy of our country, implying that the letter was written in support of back-to-work legislation. In fact, the president of the Professional Institute of the Public Service said: "I would urge you to encourage your officials to work toward an early resolution of the conflict and to ensure that they have appropriate mandates to successfully conclude these negotiations in the best interest of the party and the country as a whole". That letter is certainly not an endorsement of back-to-work legislation.

On the other hand, we had the Minister of Transport assuring the House only two days ago that it is not a question of safety, that the safety of the public is protected. We have the President of Treasury Board ensuring the House last week that all contingency plans have been put in place to protect the safety and security of the public.

If those two ministers were accurate in the assurances they were giving the House, I can only ask them what has changed since then. Where is the sudden risk to the safety and security of the country that both ministers assured us was well in hand and well under control?

I think it is important for the House to know about these people whom the government is legislating back to work, what they do and the value of that work to Canadian society. These people are among the lowest paid workers in the federal Public Service. Their beginning wages and even their average wages are below the poverty level in every province in this country. Some of them do the most dangerous and dirtiest work that needs to be done and yet work that is essential to Canadians who use our waterways, essential to people who use national defence medical facilities, essential to our veterans to get the care and the caring that they need in their old age.

Let me just give some examples. The ships' crew workers keep our harbours and our shipping lanes safe and operating. We know that in a country like ours these are in fact the vehicles of all our economic activity. These people put out to sea to rescue and safeguard the lives of others at great risk to their own lives. They dredge our harbours, they run our ferries, they leave their families sometimes for months at a time. They can spend three or four months at a time on a ship in the Arctic.

What is the effect of their not working? We saw it just 10 days ago when 1,700 lobster fishermen put out to sea in high waves and high winds in support of an $85 million industry for Canada. Those fishermen put out to sea without the normal search and rescue operations that safeguard their lives and safeguard their contributions to the economy of this country.

The cost of not having these people working is $2 million a day to ships that are trapped in the seaway system and in the Great Lakes system. We are seeing grain not being able to move out of the prairies and into the shipping system. Contracts are perhaps being abrogated. Grain is not meeting that important window of opportunity for shipping. We are seeing our inability to respond to environmental spills. We are seeing overfishing in Canada's fishing grounds because these ships' crews are not out there patrolling and protecting an important resource of Atlantic and Pacific Canada.

We see ships moving through the Great Lakes system and through the seaway system without adequate guide services, without adequate navigational aids and we see those ships carrying chemicals, crude and refined oil and we should realize that without the navigational aids provided by these ships' crews workers that passage is not as safe and not as secure as it should be.

One may wonder why the ships' crews workers are so adamant about getting a decent settlement this time. The last collective bargaining for their previous contract produced the conciliation board's report that recommended a settlement.

This government chose to ignore that settlement because it had these people designated as essential workers and it knew they could not go on strike. The government ignored that conciliation board report and imposed its own settlement.

I want to talk about the hospital services workers. These are the orderlies, the nursing assistants, cooks, cleaners, seamstresses, the people who provide all of the essential services in both National Defence hospitals and veterans homes. They provide the community health services to our veterans. They care for our veterans who are elderly or disabled, those whom time and injury have robbed of ability to care for themselves, or in many cases even to relate to the world on a day to day basis. They feed them, bathe them, clean their soiled linen.

The effects are less visible, but no less real than the scenes we have seen of the shipping lanes in the last few days. We have people in these institutions getting inadequate meals, lacking personal care, with not enough attention to their needs for cleanliness and just plain personal attention.

I repeat, both these groups are among the lowest paid workers. Both are seeing their ability to provide for their families whittled away as this contract drags on over two years. Inflation has eaten into their purchasing power. The government knows that the longer it delays the more taxes it gets to collect on these wages.

Lest you think I am exaggerating, let me say that these workers start at $16,000 to $18,000 a year. The average person is earning in the very low $20,000s. Government ministers sit in their fancy offices collecting a fat pay cheque and drafting laws to force these people back to work at those wages.

I said earlier that the reason we find ourselves in this position today is because of government bungling, government arrogance, government mismanagement over the last two years. If the government is concerned about the safety, security and health of Canadians, it has a perfectly legal tool to use to protect the safety and security of the public in case of a work stoppage. That tool is called "designating essential workers". Once the contract ends and the bargaining agent has said it is ready to get down to negotiating a new contract, all the government has to do is table a list of people that it thinks are essential workers. Those people are then prevented from going on strike.

Treasury Board failed to do that. It failed to do it because of what is called "administrative ineptitude" by the Public Service Staff Relations Board's negligence. It failed to do it because it arrogantly thought that it did not have to live under the laws passed by this Parliament.

The deadline for designating people came and went. Nine departments with essential services workers failed to get their lists in. Treasury Board failed to make sure that it was getting done. It thought it could just go after the fact, saying it made a mistake and needs these workers designated. It certainly wants to designate a lot of workers. Over 100 per cent of the ships' crews workers were to be designated and over 100 per cent of the hospital services workers were to be designated. They failed to do that.

• (1200)

Mr. Friesen: How do you designate over 100 per cent?

Mrs. Catterall: Ask Treasury Board how they can designate over 100 per cent. I am sure they will be happy to explain it to you.

They failed to do that and then they had the temerity to go to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and say, "Yes, we have not lived within the law but please let us do it anyway".

What they tried to prove, and this eventually went to the Federal Court, is that when the government passes a law that says Treasury Board shall, it does not really mean shall, it means might if you feel like it. I think the meaning of the word "shall" in legislation is pretty darn clear. That is Parliament saying, "This must be done".

The arrogance was such that through the Public Service Staff Relations Board, through the court process, they offered no justification as to why they had not been able to meet the deadline because there was no justification. Good management knows four years ahead of time or three years ahead of time when a contract ends. If it is responsible at all and it believes it has essential workers, it has that list ready to be tabled at any time and it keeps it updated.

It really is no wonder that the Public Service Staff Relations Board eventually said, and the court eventually agreed, that it is the government's own inefficiency, negligence and lack of foresight that has caused this problem and do not expect us to get you out of it.

Well, that was the first goof. But instead of just admitting it and getting on with the business of being a reasonable employer and getting into negotiations, the government went to the Public Service Staff Relations Board, then to the Federal Court, then it went back to the Public Service Staff Relations Board and was told yes, it had to obey the laws of Parliament, and it went back to the court to appeal that.

But it did not end there because in September when that decision finally came down from the Federal Court, a spokesman from Treasury Board, back then in September, when it had not even gone to conciliation, said, "We might have to bring in back-to-work legislation". Well, here we are in December and it is back-to-work legislation on the table.

That is a great attitude to take into conciliation and it is not much wonder the conciliation board, a couple of weeks later, had to say, "The parties are so far apart we cannot even make any recommendations". One of the parties was already before the conciliation saying, "Well we will bring in back-to-work legislation".

It did not stop there though. When the hospital services went on strike, the government immediately went to court to get injunctions to prevent them from exercising their legal rights to have picket lines. From east coast to west coast, in Saskatoon, in Whitehorse, in Halifax, in Victoria, in Montreal and in Ottawa, the government got injunctions to stop people from having picket lines.

Does the government really believe that people who go into our hospitals and go into our veterans' homes to clean, to cook, to care for and to sew are so dangerous that they cannot be allowed to hold a picket line outside, that these people earning $18,000 or $19,000 a year have to be prevented from even walking in front of their places of employment with pickets?

I guess the question we have to ask is if this is the government's only alternative. We see that it has already missed several alternatives. It had to act like a good employer and to get reasonable settlements with these employees.

To answer that question we have to ask, why are these groups on strike? What are their outrageous demands that this government is not prepared to meet? What outrageous things are they force them back to work?

First, we have ships' crews workers who really feel that when they risk their lives, it really should not matter if it is in eastern Canada or in western Canada. We have the ridiculous situation of a line that runs up through Canada virtually along the Manitoba border and up to Cambridge Bay. If you dock on the east side of the wharf at Cambridge Bay, you get paid $1,800 less if you are coast guard worker than if you dock on the west side of the same wharf at Cambridge Bay because then you are a west side coast guard worker. They want that pay inequity corrected.

The minister has said, "That is on the table. The day they sign the contract, we are prepared to correct it". Well, it has taken them a long time to get to that point.

What the minister did not mention is that there are all kinds of strings attached to that. He said that if you accept the rest of this package that you do not like, then you can have parity in salaries. So let us have a look at the rest of the package.

In July of 1987, just before this contract ended, there was already a wage disparity of up to 28 per cent between able seamen working for the Government of Canada and able seamen working in the private sector. That disparity has grown over the two years since the contract expired to well over 45 per cent. Remember, we are talking about wages here of $16,000, $18,000, and $20,000 a year.

The government says it does not want to give one group different treatment than it has given everybody else and they are going to have to be satisfied with the same percentage increase that the rest of federal public workers got. In fact, there is such solidarity within this group that the west coast workers have said: "We're prepared to accept less of a percentage increase to our salaries so that the workers in the eastern region can get the same salary as we get."

Frankly, I feel that when you are talking about the lowest paid workers in the public service of Canada, that is a good reason to sit back and ask ourselves, "For them, at the lowest levels, is what we have given the rest of the public service, including top level professionals, really adequate to reflect the value of the work they do?"

There is a solution though. If the minister insists on treating everybody the same, whether the situation is the same or not, there is a solution and the ships' crews workers have proposed it. It is called sea allowance. It is an accepted practice within the government. National Defence employees get a sea allowance every time they put out to sea. They get an extra amount per month just because they are out at sea.

The minister will say, as he has tried to say, that the difference is that DND employees do not make overtime. That is true, they do not, but they are also better paid.

If the government wanted to, it could settle this strike in a matter of hours. I have no doubt about that at all. The costs of meeting all the demands that are on the table are approximately $6 million. That $6 million just happens to be the value of the navigational aids that are at risk just in the Great Lakes and the seaway shipping lanes alone, if they are not brought in and replaced by winter navigational aids.

We know that the cost to shipping is $2 million a day and that again is in the Great Lakes alone. Valuable research is being held up. Disruption of commerce is the result. We are starting to see the value of the work these people do and we are still content to say they should be paid poverty level wages.

I want to deal with the hospital service workers. The reason they are on strike is that they have been waiting nearly a decade for pay equity, and it has been clear to the government that until that situation is solved, these workers are not going to be satisfied with accepting poverty level wages.

I have to give the House a bit of history on this. In 1981, this group of workers went to the Human Rights Commission arguing under the Human Rights Act which had been passed several years before that health service workers were paid less for doing exactly the same work as government general service workers and that the reason for this was that the hospital service workers were largely female and therefore there was a clear wage inequity that should be corrected.

The outcome of that in 1987 was that there was an interim consent order for $28 million to pay back these people for the inequity they had suffered. To demonstrate the scope of it, for one individual alone, that payment was $40,000 over the seven years during which they had been deprived because of inequitable pay scales.

• (1210)

This was just an interim settlement. Then two things were supposed to happen after that. One, their job classifications were supposed to be made comparable to those of the general service workers, and then the government was supposed to go back and adjust that $28 million payment to what it really should have been. That is the $10 million the minister is talking about.

Now, he did mention that the government is in the process of having that $10 million paid out to people. This is December, and it was August when the minister wrote to tell me that that was happening. I gather from comments today that it is still in the process, it has not happened.

The other thing that was supposed to happen is that the classifications were supposed to be changed so that from 1987 on, those workers would be treated the same and paid the same as the other workers doing the same kind of work. The government has a neat little trick here. It does not like to change classifications and it does not like to change pay scales. So what it does is say: "We will give you instead an equalization payment". That is such an abrogation of the whole concept of pay equity and equal pay for work of equal value.

The government says: "We are not prepared to give you the wage you are earning, nor do we recognize that in your classification and pay scale. We are prepared to give you a little token payment to bring you up to what your proper pay rate should be. You will go on getting this token payment, but you will never get the classification and the wage salary scale that you are entitled to".

If it seems that the hospital services workers are being a little tough on this, I ask the House to bear in mind that since they first started this action, since this inequity in pay first started getting their attention, many of them have seen their children grow from pre-schoolers to adolescents, deprived of an adequate income into their household that would have provided many of the things that the children and grandchildren of those of us in this House take for granted. It means quite simply that their children have done without because this pay equity issue has not been settled.

Again, it is not a minor matter. Their salaries were from 10 to 40 per cent behind those of people doing exactly the same work. A worker getting up on a ladder to clean the ceilings or the walls in the Rideau vets' home out on Smyth Road could be getting as much as 40 per cent less than a worker performing exactly the same work down at 240 Sparks Street. Now, that is not fair in anybody's books.

At the salaries these people are earning, the average adjustment should be $3,000 a year. At our salaries, and certainly at the salary of ministers, that might be an extra little bit of disposable income, an extra little holiday. But for these people, it is money that is needed for the essentials of life.

I cannot help but feel that there is deliberate manipulation here. The minister said in his answer to a question on this issue a few days ago that it is not really a female dominated group. That is true. The balance is shifting. It is evening out. I cannot help wondering if there is some attempt here to wait them out, and whether there is some deliberate manipulation to move that group toward a group that is 50–50 male–female and therefore no longer considered a pay equity issue.

The fact is the Human Rights Commission determined it is a pay equity issue. It has reaffirmed that decision and yet this government was back before the Human Rights Tribunal just on November 8, arguing that the Human Rights Tribunal had no jurisdiction in this matter. That is nonsense.

I want to close by saying that these workers in all cases have acted responsibly throughout this strike. The ships' crews workers have, in all cases, provided emergency rescue services any time the need existed. They have not once failed to meet the normal response time, to put down their pickets, to go out to sea to save lives or to prevent a disaster when that was needed. They missed once by three minutes. Sorry, they were once 33 minutes instead of 30 minutes because of high waves that were so bad that they eventually had to put back.

The hospital services workers offered to continue to provide emergency services in the veterans' homes and in the national defence hospitals but the government was not able to reach an agreement with them, I suspect because there was no inventive. They thought they could provide these services with the military and with volunteers. It just is not working, Madam Speaker.

I would like to quickly summarize the strike-breaking techniques that have been used and the attempts to try to get around the law that have delayed negotiations. Also, there were attempts to designate 100 per cent of each of these groups so they could not go on strike and could not use the ability to withdraw their services. The government has sought injunctions to prevent the picketing and now we have back-to-work legislation.

If these people are essential to the safety and security of the nation, as the minister contends with this legislation, then that should have been protected two years ago. It is not these workers who are responsible for the current situation. It is the Government of Canada and specifically the Treasury Board.

I think we are in a situation where it is more a question of winning and losing, and Treasury Board likes to win. That is fair if you have a fair situation, but it does not cost Treasury Board anything to sit back and wait. It does cost these people. It costs them wages, and at that level, you cannot afford to go without your full pay for very long.

That has been the pattern. First it was the clerical workers, again, the lowest paid, who were out on strike for months. The welfare program workers just settled. Then the ships' crews workers went out. It is always the lowest paid groups which seem to be the ones with which this government wants to take the hardest line.

At a time when most employers, particularly in the private sector and a lot in the public sector, are going more toward the idea of a co-operative management-labour relationship, of mutually resolving difficulties, going toward the idea of partnership as opposed to opponents, it seems this government wants to go the other way. It wants to force people to accept something that is not right and just.

It is particularly ironic when we see walls coming down all over the world in defence of freedom and democracy, in a growing move toward freedom and democracy and against state control, that we sit here in this Parliament today forcing people back to work.

It certainly is a strange turn of events, Madam Speaker, for a Prime Minister who came to Ottawa promising pink slips and running shoes to public servants to now be saying we cannot do without you, we need you back, we need you back so badly that we are prepared to pass a law to force you back to work.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Madam Speaker, you would think it would be a compliment to be called essential. You would think it would be gratifying to be needed. How gratifying it really is for most of us to feel that for someone with whom we have a degree of relationship, we are considered to be essential to the relationships.

• (1220)

Let us look at the two groups of employees of the government which are the subject of today's legislation. In the light of what I have just said about the feeling one would usually get when one is considered to be essential, you would think that they too would feel some kind of a glow of gratification from being so considered.

It seems, however, that in relation to the ships' crews and hospital services workers being designated essential by the government is the kiss of death. I, of course, have been speaking somewhat facetiously because I know very well how these people felt when the government designated these people or tried to designate them over the years.

In fact, ever since 1967 when the Public Service people were first given the ability to go on strike, there have always been many employees who have been designated essential. Of course, what that really meant was that their right to strike was taken away. When you were designated essential there really was no warm feeling of gratification because it was something to be avoided at all costs if at all possible because to be so designated meant that likely, over the long run any way, you would end up being much worse off than anyone who was not so designated. That is what has happened with the ships' crews and the hospital workers over the years.

In this round of negotiations, the government, for whatever reason and in whatever fashion, did not designate these two groups of people whom heretofore had always been designated as essential so to be. They found themselves, because of that situation, to be in a legal strike situation. As the course of time went on, they did exactly that and went on strike.

As I said: "essential to the government" means that you can negotiate with groups of people who are your employees but you do not really have to bargain seriously because you know that if you are not able to come to the kind of agreement with them which you think you would like to come to with them, they can force upon you whatever they want. They can use the force of the courts.

They can use the force of law and they can do that all in the name, as the minister has just very recently done, of protecting the public.

Being called essential by this government really means that you have been given the kiss of death. It means that you have never been able to strike. It means that you have had to take whatever minimum wage–benefit package the government thought it could get away with without recourse to being able to bargain freely as most other Canadians are able to do and in a way which is set out by the International Labour Organization to which the Canadian government is a signatory, and thereby make the kind of living for yourself and your family which you should justifiably be able to make.

Speaking of the International Labour Organization, I think it would be rather interesting to read, in its entirety, a citation that has come down from the International Labour Organization, because it speaks so directly to the situation we find ourselves in. A committee of the International Labour Organization had this to say in relation to postal workers, and the issues are the same. I quote:

> 95. The Committee feels however compelled to state that the cause is basically this: the postal workers were legally on strike and the Government, through special legislation, ordered them back to work after seven days of work stoppage.
> 96. The Government points out, rightly so, that the Committee has recognised in the past that there are circumstances where restrictions and even prohibitions of strikes are justifiable. However, the Committee hastens to say that these are exceptions to the general rule and that the right to strike is one of the legitimate and essential means through which workers and their organisations may defend their economic and social interests. [Digest of Decisions and Principles of the Freedom of Association Committee of the Governing Body of the ILO, third edition, paras. 362 and 363, and cases cited.]
> 97. It follows that these restrictions and even prohibitions of the right to strike can only be justified in a limited number of situations: civil servants and workers in essential services in the strict sense of the term, i.e. those services whose interruptions would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population—provided however these workers have access to adequate procedures, such as conciliation and arbitration, where the parties concerned can participate in all stages and in which the awards are binding on both parties and are fully and promptly implemented.

The "fully and promptly implemented" has some particular significance which I will get into shortly.

As a result of the government being heavy-handed and using the full force of its legislative power, we have two groups of people, the ships' crews and the hospital workers, who have become, quite literally, within the Public Service, the two lowest paid groups of employees of the Canadian government.

If we look at the history of these two disputes, there are two trains of activity which go on and, other than the fact that they have almost by accident become able to strike the specific situations because they do entirely different work, are not identical.

As far as the ships' crews are concerned, in the last round of negotiations for the ships' crews after having gone through the process of negotiation and after having gone through the process of conciliation and all the other things which are laid out by law and required of the parties, the conciliation board made a recommendation which, of course, was not binding. This recommendation awarded the ships' crews more benefits and higher rates of pay, in general, than the government wanted to pay and higher in percentage and so on than what had been arrived at in other general settlements of the Public Service. This was done for very good reasons. I have to repeat that they did that because they found themselves in the situation of being vulnerable, not many of them, with very little bargaining power, in addition to the fact that they are not even allowed to go on strike.

The conciliation board's decision was that these people should get a higher award than the rest of the settlements in the public service. The reason was quite simple; they were so far behind. In 1987, in the matter of the ships' crews, those working on the west coast were 28 per cent behind the general comparable wage in the public sector, and those on the east coast were 16 per cent behind. That was in 1987.

The government stated that it would not pay any attention to what the conciliation board had to say and refused to implement the suggestions of the board. Of course, as I have said, it did not have to because it was not binding. When the government did that to its employees, the employees admittedly and knowingly went on an illegal strike. They had no other recourse. As far as they were concerned, in this daily struggle which we as wage earners have, they had to draw to the attention of the government and the Canadian public that their situation was desperate because their wages were so far behind everyone else's.

They went on strike illegally. Summarily, within 24 hours the government had an injunction brought down against those people and they were forced back to work by the order of the courts. Even the judge who granted the government the injunctions said that the government's action was Draconian but he had no other choice than to order those people back to work, and they obeyed.

In this round of negotiations the government failed to designate these people as being essential. They have to do that within 20 days of receiving notice from the union of a desire to bargain. if the government does not do it, anyone who is not designated as essential by that time is simply not an essential service person and free to carry on the whole process of collective bargaining, including striking, as any other free Canadian is entitled to do.

I suspect that in most instances an employer finding itself in a situation such as this would have accepted reality for what it was, realized that it had made a mistake and continued to bargain, one would hope in good faith, to come to an agreeable settlement to both sides. That is not what this employer did. That is not what this government did. The government, having made a mistake, went to the courts to try to get its booboo overturned.

I do not know the levels of the courts; that is more for the lawyers in the House. In any event, the first level of the courts it went to, the government lost. As if that was not enough, still in an effort to try to designate these people as essential servants—and I think there is something important to point out here. Many of the civil servants are designated as essential. There are some areas of the public service where it is 60, 50 or 40 per cent. The minister's official told us yesterday that it may even go down to zero of those who are designated as being essential.

In the whole history of the hospital services group and numbers like 60 per cent, or 40, or maybe, zero. It has always been 100 per cent. Believe it or not, Madam Speaker, there have been instances where it has gone as high as 110 per cent. It really does escape me how one could do that, but I presume they may even include some of their supervisory staff, I do not know. Or maybe they spread themselves into some other department in order to make sure that these people are going to cause no embarrassment whatsoever.

The government lost at the first level of the court system. Not satisfied with taking its lumps, it still went to the second level in order to try to get this 100 per cent. Make no mistake about it, we are talking 100 per cent designation in the case of these two groups; 100 per cent designation in the case of these two defenceless groups for all intents and purposes.

If you do not believe they are defenceless, look at what is happening to them in this House today as a result of their perfectly legal action. We are ordering back to work a mere 3,900 people, of all the hundreds of thousands of civil servants. These are the poorest paid people in the civil service. There is no joy in the House of Commons today to be doing such a thing. I think it would be most appropriate to borrow the words of the judge in the case of the previous round of negotiations when he called the government's action Draconian.

In the case of the ships' crews there are not all that many outstanding issues. There are some misconceptions which ought to be clarified here as well. from the government side, in response to a question from this side, said that these employees were asking for 14 per cent, or something like that, a year over the next three years. Of course that is not the case. What they are asking for is something around 5 per cent, 4.8 per cent and 4.6 per cent over 42 months. As far as that is concerned, most of it has been settled anyway.

The one outstanding issue is that of sea duty. It is a very common thing in the maritime industry, something which the private sector certainly has. I am led to believe it is the one remaining outstanding issue which would bring a settlement about in the case of the ships' crews group within the public service, for a total cost of somewhere around $5.5 million. In the total government budget for wages, it is not a large amount of money.

The total amount of goods and services and value to everything from the buoys, which these people so efficiently distribute as a guidance for shipping throughout our waterways in the St. Lawrence, I understand that they are now quite probably being either destroyed, sunk or becoming loose and floating around causing danger to shipping themselves. Compared to the value of that in one day, the settlement of $5.5 million per year is certainly not a great deal of money.

It is my understanding that the issue of the sea duty will settle the strike. It is incomprehensible to me that we should be here in the House forcing a group of very valuable employees.

• (1240)

In some ways the circumstances surrounding the strike of the hospital services group is not all that much different in that the government has failed miserably. We must bear in mind that when we are talking about the court action it refers to this group as well. It refers to an innumerable number of people within the civil service whom they had not designated. It just turns out that these are the groups who, in modern parlance one could say found their one window where they were able to exercise their democratic rights.

Never in the past and certainly not in the future will these people ever be able to take this kind of action again. This is their one opportunity in their lifetime, unless the government changes its mind, smartens up and treats these people with the justice, dignity, and honour which they deserve. I am not saying, and I am sure the union is not saying, that there are not some who are essential. But to just heavy-handedly describe 100 per cent of these people as being essential defies all credibility.

The government also wished the hospital services group to be designated as essential and, as I have already pointed out, failed to do so. The hospital services group are the people who clean the government hospitals, handle the food in the veterans homes and the hospitals, are the certified nursing assistants and the registered nursing assistants. In short, they are the less well paid people within our society and, surprise of surprise, they are mostly women. Perhaps not so unsurprisingly, many of them are single mothers with families, as well as many older women who depend on their jobs for a livelihood. These people on average make somewhere in the neighbourhood of $20,000 a year. In most regions of the country $20,000 a year for a family of four, unless resident in a place populated by less than 30,000, is below the poverty level.

These are the kind of people we are dealing with and this is the condition they find themselves in as a result of the government's intransigence and unwillingness to treat them in a fair manner, and bargain with them in a justifiable way. These are not women in the workforce who earn a second income for the family. These are primary earners in the family and they depend entirely on this kind of work for their livelihoods.

Here we have the heavy hand of the government trying to designate these people as essential so they would not be able to strike. We now have them designated as having to return to work because they are so sorely needed by the hospitals and the veterans homes where they work. In the two general elections in 1984 and 1988, women were promised by this government that they were going to be front and centre as far as affirmative action was concerned. They were promised equal pay for work of equal value, that yes, it was part of the government's policy. The government was going to do the very best it could to make sure that any private sector company dealing with the government would be encouraged and hopefully, before too long, forced to comply with the equality principles of equal pay for work of equal value and all the things that go along with the niceties of human rights.

Not so. To repeat myself again, we find ourselves in this House trying to force these people back to work. It strikes me rather strange that the government would be able to consider this type of action, which can only be described as Draconian, as having any similarity to human rights and to equal pay for work of equal value. That is one of the major issues which we come across because just as surely as the government used its heavy hand to try to get these people to be considered essential service, we have a history of doing everything we can to prevent, in spite of an order by the Canadian Human Rights Commission in 1981, of not these people what they ought to be paid.

I will read what the Canadian Human Rights Commission actually said in their decision.

> The parties are agreed that the Health Services group, which is predominantly female, has received less wages than the general workers, a group predominantly male, for performance of work of equal value.

The Canadian Human Rights Commission in 1981, for all intents and purposes, said to the government: "Clean up your act. Pay these women in the HS group, for the most part women but some men among them as well, on an equal basis with the GS group". For almost seven years, from 1980, the government of this land did everything it could to avoid complying with that decision.

In July 1987, the government finally did what it should have done years previously, what it should have been forced to do previously, and paid the retroactive pay to these people. Since July 26, 1987, there have been no equalization adjustments until, wonder of wonders, November 1989. All of a sudden in November 1989, equalization payments started coming to these people again to make up for the payments they had not received since 1987.

Part of the decision of the Canadian Civil Rights Commission was that this kind of action had to be in consultation with the union, but without any consultation with the union on the conversion rates. Also, I think, not so strangely, the government has never put those equalization payments into wages. if the general services group was making $1 an hour and the health services group was making only 50 cents, the government in order to equalize it would give them the 50 cents but not as part of wages. Those equalization payments—and I do not wish to be trivial about the amount—were 13 per cent and let us forget about the $1 and the 50 cents part. The equalization payments are not a part of wages. The government refuses to put them into wages. Since 1980, even though these people have received retroactive pay, they are not a part of wages. Believe it or not, these people will not be receiving their pensions when they retire on the basis of what is justifiably a higher rate of pay, which it ought to be. The equalization payments do not form part of their earnings for the calculation of pensions. I cannot think of anything that is much more despicable than that.

• (1250)

Maybe we should not give them any pension at all. Would that be more despicable? Can one think of anything worse in relation to these people? I suppose the action we are taking right now is probably more despicable. One ought to be rather careful with one's choice of words, I suppose. It is certainly more despicable to be forcing these people back to work than not including the equalization payments in their wages. But to make such a comment as that is to trivialize a very serious matter.

The hospital services groups have other issues. They work 12 hour shifts, and because of an inability to come to some kind of agreement on the organization of shifts, these people often have to go back to work after only 8 hours of rest.

I am sorry I was not here for the President of the Treasury Board's entire introductory speech on the legislation. I suspect the government said that in order to be able to make sure the Canadian public was adequately protected as far as safety of navigation is concerned, or as far as health services in the veterans homes is concerned, it was essential to bring in this legislation.

The fact of the matter is, both the hospital services group and the ship's crews offered to provide the essential services.

If the government was so intent on designating 100 per cent of these employees as being essential, anything less than 100 per cent would probably not be acceptable. I think it ought to be pointed out that in the case of the ship's crews, the government has accepted the union's offer of supplying essential services. I do not have a list of all the essential services, all the emergencies the ship's crews have responded to since they went on strike. There have been innumerable cases where they have done that.

We will get to the hospital services group in a minute. Regarding the services that the ships' crews provided and the excellent behaviour they demonstrated, as well as the unions, I would like to point out that I was a striker a couple of times myself. In every instance we offered to provide essential services to the company and, as with the hospital services group, our employer turned it down. But that is not because we did not offer them.

As far as ship's crews are concerned there is absolutely no reason whatsoever for us to be here today arguing that these people ought to be forced back to work. I am more than pleased to be standing here arguing that they should not be. The group has behaved in an absolutely responsible manner. If one makes a comparison between the way the government has responded and the way these people have responded, there is no question that the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the ship's crews group have shown themselves to be absolutely trustworthy in so far as the Canadian public is concerned. They deserve a tremendous amount of credit for that.

We could have had a similar situation with the hospital services groups as well. There is a veteran's home in Saskatoon and many of the families of the residents in that home have contacted my office and indicated to me that they were particularly distressed that their family members would be moved. The fact that the government moved them indicates that it had very little intention of bargaining in a very serious manner.

I cannot tell you how disturbed these people are that their family members were moved out of that home. I do not understand the situation in that I do not have anyone who is living in a home such as that. I am told that when one has been a resident of a veterans' home for a considerable period of time, one develops a routine and a relationship with the people around one. This includes the people who are on strike at the present time.

The union's offer of essential services should have been accepted. Who, Madam Speaker, knows better than the people involved, what those absolutely essential services are? I am very confident that just as surely as the ships' crews behave responsibly in relation to their dispute with their employer, the hospital services people would have done as well. I think it is despicable that the government did not take the Public Service Alliance of Canada up on its offer and use the people which the union was willing to supply them with in order to get through what, of course, is a rough time for all concerned. It is despicable that we should find ourselves in this position

The legislation itself does have the usual Draconian elements. Initially being forced back to work, then the salve of trying to show that things are going to go smoothly, followed by conciliation, there is no imposed settlement in the agreement. Nonetheless, the hammer is still there. Can you imagine one of those single parent women out there fined "as little as" $500 a day. Do you know how much $500 a day is in relation to what they earn in a year? I suppose it may be 5 per cent. I think a 5 per cent per day fine is rather high for almost any activity that one could find oneself in.

Madam Speaker, I see my time is up. I can only reiterate that this legislation is unnecessary in both cases. This thing could have been settled amicably.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, noting the hour and knowing that all hon. members would want the fullest possible opportunity for debate on Bill C–49, pursuant to Standing Order 26(1) I would move:

> That the House continue to sit between one o'clock and two o'clock p.m. this day for the purpose of considering Bill C–49.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The hon. member for Carleton—Gloucester (Mr. Bellemare), on a point of order.

Mr. Bellemare: Madam Speaker, I am no expert on parliamentary procedure, but my NDP colleague cut short his speech because members on the other side of the House were shouting that he had gone over the time allowed. Just look at them, the two ministers from Montreal who seem to think it is great fun to shout down the hon. member, who wanted to speak until one o'clock. They cut him off. Madam Speaker, when a bill is introduced, does a party's first spokesperson have limited speaking time?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, order! To answer the question put by the hon. member for Carleton—Gloucester, the hon. member was allowed 40 minutes and I can assure the hon. member that when I signaled to the hon. member for Saskatoon—Dundurn that his 40 minutes had expired, there was still one minute left before one o'clock.

We are now on the motion.

[English]

Will those members who object to the motion please rise in their places.

And more than 15 members having risen.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 26(2), the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

Mr. François Gérin (Mégantic—Compton—Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, a week ago in New Hampshire, in the United States, a Canadian, Richard Bilodeau, was involved in a road accident which unfortunately left three people dead, including two New Hampshire policemen.

Since then, the U.S. Department of Justice has claimed, in writing besides, that the extradition treaty between Canada and the United States does not concern an individual who is accused of criminal negligence or manslaughter as a result of an automobile accident.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, presumably because of pressure on the New Hampshire police, and perhaps also on the judicial system, that a Canadian is treated very differently from an American, and certainly very differently from the way we here in Canada treat Americans who are involved in automobile accidents.

I ask the Minister of Justice of Canada and the Secretary of State for External Affairs to see to it that Richard Bilodeau, a Canadian citizen now held in an American prison, is treated fairly and with all the respect for his rights.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion which represents yet another blow to eastern Ontario. His department is closing its economic development district office in Ottawa. This will create a great inconvenience and a lack of regional service.

Regardless of the reason given by the minister, we realize that this office is being closed because the department's financial resources have been slashed. The resulting change in mandate is ridiculous and insensitive to communities in this part of the province of Ontario.

In the last year alone two major plants have closed in Renfrew. Plans to eliminate thriving VIA Rail passenger service from Ottawa through Arnprior, Renfrew, Pembroke, Petawawa, Chalk River and further up the valley have been introduced. The forest industry has been attacked, and the list goes on.

This part of the province of Ontario in the east should not suffer because this government bases its decisions under the guise of dollars and cents instead of plain common sense.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, over past months we have witnessed some remarkable developments throughout the East Bloc. One of the most stunning was the arrival of the freedom trains in West Germany loaded with jubilant East German refugees.

From the capital of Saskatchewan which was built by immigrants, many of them from Germany and eastern Europe, we in Regina realize that the only lasting solution to the problems in eastern Europe are to be found in real political reforms.

In the meantime we would like to do what we can to help those who have chosen a start to a new life in a free world. That is why I would like to take this opportunity to welcome those East Germans to Regina and Canada.

EAST TIMOR

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, December 7 marks the anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbour, a day which President Roosevelt predicted would be a day of infamy. He was right. It is a day of infamy, not only because of Pearl Harbour but also because of the Indonesian invasion of East Timor on December 7, 1975.

Sadly the Canadian government refuses to recognize just what the Indonesian occupation of East Timor has meant. It has meant the deaths of almost one-third of the East Timorese population; it means continued growth and systematic abusive human rights; and it means a society kept in isolation by the Indonesian government.

The Canadian government's record on East Timor is disgraceful. It has voted against United Nations resolutions calling for the right to self-determination for the people of East Timor. It has lobbied to have the issue removed from the UN Human Rights Commission agenda.

It is hardly coincidental that Canada is the third largest foreign investor in Indonesia and that the Canadian government seeks to expand its economic relations with that country.

We cannot change what has happened on December 7 in history, but we can make December 7, 1989 the day the Canadian government adopts the correct, humane policy on East Timor, the day it puts human rights ahead of greed.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that this weekend, December 10 to 12, a national agriculture conference will be held in Ottawa.

The theme of the conference is "Growing Together: a vision for the Canadian agri-food industry". Leaders of farm organizations, the federal and provincial governments and all the major interest groups will be able to exchange ideas on the big issues affecting the Canadian agri-food sector.

This conference is an important step in the development of a new national policy.

We must meet the challenges and take the opportunities for growth that will come our way in the 1990s and beyond.

"Growing Together: a vision for the Canadian agri-food industry" augurs well for productive discussions that will determine the future of Canadian farming. I invite all farmers in my riding to take part in this important conference.

MISSIONARY IN NEW FRANCE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, on December 1, I had the privilege of attending the launching of Missionnaires en Nouvelle-France, a new comic strip. The date coincides with the 350th anniversary of the arrival of Father Chaumonot in Canada, with the first Augustine and Ursuline nuns. The launching took place at the Ancienne-Lorette church in my riding, on the site of the Notre-Dame-de-Lorette Chapel built in 1674 by Father Chaumonot.

Pierre-Joseph-Marie Chaumonot, companion of the Canadian Martyrs, was ordained a priest and came to New France in 1639. For fifty years he worked among the Amerindians, mainly among the Hurons around the Great Lakes, on l'île d'Orléans and finally at Ancienne-Lorette. Missionnaires en Nouvelle-France, published by Anne Sigier, pays tribute to this historic figure, with an excellent text by Gilles Drolet of Ancienne-Lorette and Drawings of Paul Rioux, an excellent illustrator and cartoonist. I am reminded of our motto in Quebec: "Je me souviens".

EAST TIMOR

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, to corroborate the remarks of our colleague from Winnipeg—Transcona I would like to tell the House that today marks the anniversary of the illegal invasion of East Timor by Indonesian troops.

East Timor at that time had just become an independent colony of Portugal. An island inhabited by an indigenous population of 700,000 with a rich cultural tradition, it is also rich for its natural resources.

The resultant annexation of East Timor by Indonesia only came after the slaughter of 200,000 of its indigenous population and the imposition of policies which continue to destroy East Timor's cultural traditions.

The Canadian government is out of step with other western countries and the United Nations in not participating in actions against Indonesia. The reason appears to be the very high level of economic investment and trade that Canada has been developing with Indonesia. We would address East Timor human rights abuses at the peril of losing important trade and economic benefits.

Canada must develop coherent policies which link international human rights to aid trade and refugee determinations. The parliamentary subcommittee on international human rights must be given every support necessary to achieve this important objective in order that legitimate concerns for international human rights abuses may be addressed.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, in a decision on November 20 the National Energy Board denied four applications for export of Canadian gas into United States markets. No reasons have yet been given by the board for this decision.

Western gas producers are rightly concerned that the National Energy Board appears to be adopting an inappropriate level of involvement in a contracting process between willing buyers and willing sellers.

This decision is sending unfavourable signals to United States buyers of Canadian gas, casting a shadow of uncertainty over many contracts and negotiations currently in progress in the industry and generally creating the impression on instability in the Canadian gas supply.

There is an obvious need for clarification. National Energy Board decisions appear to be contrary to both the spirit and the letter of the free trade agreement in that they prejudice pricing arrangements and imply there is a minimum price for U.S. buyers which does not exist for Canadian buyers.

As a result the National Energy Board should be encouraged to release the reasons for its decisions as quickly as possible.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Glenda Simms on her appointment to the presidency of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women. This is an historically significant occasion and I am very proud to mark it here today.

Dr. Simms is a well-known activist and a moving speaker. She is the former president of the Congress of Black Women and involved with the National Organization of Immigrant and Visible Minority Women.

She has shown herself to be committed to working hard to break the oppression of women of all economic classes, races and sexual orientation. Her extensive involvement in a variety of issues of concern to women such as housing, employment equity, and native education, is impressive. It gives her a background of knowledge that will serve her well in dealing with the many areas of research undertaken by the council.

Her appointment will bring a valuable perspective, skills, experience, vision and vitality to the advisory council. The New Democratic Party wishes her well, as I am sure do all members of this House today.

EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated in the past, I am proud to represent the communities of north and east Preston and Cherrybrook, one of the largest native black communities in Canada. They have contributed greatly to the development of this area, the province of Nova Scotia and their country.

However, even after 200 years, their quest for equality is still a dream.

• (1410)

On September 21 I released a major survey entitled Education and Income in the Preston and Cherrybrook Area. The study's conclusions were startling. For instance, the income for young black males was fully 42 per cent less than that of their white counterparts.

I sent a copy of this report to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and requested that she initiate discussions on implementing real solutions to these long-standing and unacceptable problems. Despite my repeated requests to senior officials and to the minister herself, no action has yet been taken.

I therefore call upon the minister once again to urgently review this document and initiate the dialogue necessary so that 1989 will be the year we initiated an end to inequality and discrimination in Canada's black communities.

TRAGIC SITUATIONS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this opportunity to offer, on behalf of all residents of the riding of Outremont which I have the honour to represent in this House our sincere condolences to the families and friends who have suffered a tragic loss and are going through a time of great sorrow. What happened was unheard of in this country, and I am sure the memory will remain with members of the campus community for many years.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of this academic community, I would like to add that I and my colleagues in the House wish to offer our support after this unthinkable occurrence.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will allow me to observe a moment of silence, during the seconds I am allowed, to honour the memory of these young people, Canadian hopes that died in such terrible circumstances.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recall that later on this afternoon, the House will observe a minute of silence to meditate on this tragedy of which he spoke with such emotion. I am, of course, prepared to mark this occasion by observing a moment of silence to honour the memory of the victims.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the Taiwanese Canadian community in Canada have joined their voices in front of Parliament today to express their deep concern about the situation of Mr. Yi-Shih Leo, a Canadian of Taiwanese origin who is currently imprisoned in Taiwan.

Mr. Leo has been one of the leaders of the movement for democracy and justice in Taiwan and was harassed during an earlier visit to Taiwan in August of this year.

I would call upon the Secretary of State and appeal to the Secretary of State for External Affairs to voice Canada's concern about the treatment of Mr. Yi-Shih Leo. I would as well urge him to call upon the Taiwanese government to end its harassment of Canadian citizens who are seeking visas to visit Taiwan. Too often these visas are delayed or denied for no reason whatsoever.

We all call for full protection of human rights in Taiwan where there have been too many abuses of human rights. We join with the appeal of Mrs. Leo and the Taiwanese Canadian community in urging the Government of Canada to speak out most strongly for the release of this defender of human rights in Taiwan.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ECONOMIC REGIONS IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, this Tory Government once more missed the boat in its in depth revision of UI economic regions in New Brunswick. I had asked the Minister in charge to separate Moncton's urban area, with an 8.2 per cent unemployment rate, from the rural area where the rate is 19.4 per cent.

The new redistribution separates the Kent rural area from Moncton's urban area. But the Westmorland rural area, where unemployment is very high, is still part of Moncton. This perpetuates the existing injustice. Let the Government treat Moncton separately, as it does the majority of other urban centres like Trois-Rivières, Sherbrooke, Hull, Saskatoon and Regina.

[English]

I urge the government to correct this injustice to the people of rural Westmorland. These people also live in a high unemployment area, an area comparable to Kent County. It is grossly unfair to the people of rural Westmorland to be treated differently than the people of Kent County.

I call on the government to rectify this situation without further delay.

VIOLENCE IN MONTREAL

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in this House to deplore yesterday's tragic incident in Montreal's École polytechnique.

I rise today, Mr. Speaker, not because two of my children were in the building when the shooting took place, and I had to wait late through the night before I could know whether they were all right, but to condemn that violence, that sadistic slaughter of innocent students.

Mr. Speaker, I spent a terrible night waiting. But what must have been the anguish for the victims' parents!

When are we going as a government to do something to control violence? When are we going to force broadcasters to ban TV violence? When are we going to remove from store counters the toys that incite violence, especially at this time of year?

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my deepest sympathies to the aggrieved families and to offer my best wishes of prompt recovery to those students injured in that savage attack.

TRAGEDY IN MONTREAL

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, today, Canada is in mourning. All Canadians were horrified upon hearing the news of the senseless shooting that took the lives of 14 young women in Montreal yesterday.

Our hearts go out to the parents and friends of the victims of this terrible tragedy, and on behalf of the Canadian people and all members of this House, I wish to extend our sincere condolences.

We also sympathize with the suffering and shock of the young men and women who were wounded during this terrible incident, especially those who are now patients in hospitals in Montreal's metropolitan area.

On behalf of all members of this House, I have transmitted our condolences to Mr. Louis Courville, acting director general of the École Polytechnique of Montreal.

I have also asked that flags on the Parliament Buildings and on all federal buildings in Quebec be flown at half-staff.

Today we all share the same feelings of sadness and indignation, offer one of the most cruel criminal acts in our history. These killings are particularly barbaric because the gunman selected women as his victims.

[English]

Why this brutal slaughter? Why this vengeful act against innocent young women? Why such violence in a society that considers itself civilized and compassionate?

This senseless criminal act is a grim reminder of the vulnerability of our society, its imperfections and of the precariousness of life itself. It is indeed a national tragedy.

I speak for all Canadians, I believe, in expressing our deepest sympathy for the families, relatives and friends of these young people who lives have been so brutally ended just as they showed such splendid promise.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, united in sorrow and sympathy, Canadians mourn the death of 14 fellow Canadians, the flower of a generation, cruelly crushed in the springtime of their lives.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday 14 of our most promising young Quebecers lost their lives at the hands of a half-crazed individual. More than a dozen others were wounded, most of them seriously. This is the worst catastrophe we have known since the last war.

This tragedy is horrifying, not only because there were so many victims but also because they were young people, working very hard to acquire the skills that will shape tomorrow's society.

In addition to dedicating several years of their lives to their academic training, these young women were unique in having opted for a non-traditional profession. That in itself reflects their courage and their determination to participate fully in the development and emancipation of Quebec society.

Our thoughts, our prayers and our sincere condolences go out to the families of these students whose lives were so abruptly cut short. Try as we may, we can never fully fathom the suffering of parents who bestowed so much love and care on their children, only to have them leave this world through an accident of fate.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to express our feelings of profound sympathy with Inspector Laurent Leclair who, as the first person to arrive on the scene, found his own daughter among the victims. A terrible shock and a heart-wrenching example of the harsh realities with which the police is sometimes confronted.

This tragedy also demonstrated the dedication and effectiveness of our ambulance services, our police force and our medical teams whose professionalism was exemplary, in the circumstances.

• (1420)

[English]

On behalf of the right hon. Leader of the Official Opposition and the members of the Liberal caucus, I extend my deepest and heartfelt sympathy to the families of the victims of this horrible and senseless crime.

We also want those who witnessed this shocking event to know that our thoughts are with them as they attempt to deal with the pain and anguish of losing so many friends.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Leader of the Official Opposition and all my Liberal colleagues, I want to again extend our deepest, most sincere sympathy to the families and friends of the victims and assure them of our prayers.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, like most Canadians, it was with great horror that we learned of yesterday's tragedy at Ecole Polytechnique, University of Montreal.

[Translation]

Unlike other regions of the world where large cities are often the scene of this kind of horrifying drama, neither Canada nor Quebec has ever had such a killing.

Fourteen young women in the prime of life were savagely killed by a mad gunman; at least 13 others were injured, several of them seriously.

[English]

Those lost lives were our future; young minds who were attending school to acquire an education to work in their community, to share their abilities with their friends and families; young minds who wanted to contribute to Canada, and I guess young hearts that wanted to love. We will never know what gifts of joy or of laughter were extinguished by this act of horror.

Our hearts and our deepest feelings are with the families and with the friends of these young victims even though we know that this can be of little comfort to them.

We in this House grieve today as does every other Canadian. We will never be the same again.

[Translation]

On behalf of my colleagues in the NDP and all Canadians, I offer the families and friends of these young victims our sincerest condolences.

Mr. Speaker: I ask all hon. members to observe a minute of silence.

[Editor's Note: The House observed a minute of silence.]

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, I would like to address my question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Yesterday the Canadian dollar reached a nine-year high, 86.13 cents American. This is up from 71 cents just a few years ago in 1985. We are seeing the results in terms of jobs in our economy due to these very high exchange rates.

In the second quarter of this year, our trade surplus fell to $.5 billion from the previous quarter of $5.5 billion. We know that for every 1 cent increase in the value of the Canadian dollar, we lose $1.3 billion in export sales.

Just this morning Mr. James Taylor, the president of the Canadian Exporters Association, called on this government to change its policies and to get the Canadian dollar down to the neighbourhood of 80 cents.

This high exchange rate hurts Canadians in every part of our nation. When is the government going to reverse this disastrous course that it is on?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand my hon. friend when he says "reverse this disastrous course" that we are on.

There have been nearly 200,000 new jobs created so far this year. Some 85 per cent of them are full time, and some 59 per cent of them have gone to women. The economy continues to grow, although at a less impressive level than has been the case over the last three or four years.

The Governor of the Bank of Canada has stated very clearly why the interest rate policy is required to squeeze the inflation out of the economy. We cannot have a return to the situation that existed in the early 1980s when inflation skyrocketed and the economy went into a tailspin.

• (1430)

The day before yesterday the OECD pronounced judgment in respect of the policies of the Government of Canada. It believes that compared with all other important international economies, the Government of Canada and the Governor of the Bank of Canada are doing the right thing in following these kinds of economic policies.

I, too, look forward to lower interest rates. I believe that if we follow this kind of sensible policy, difficult though it may be on an interim basis, and get inflation under control, then lower interest rates will follow. With that will come greater growth and greater job creation, but in a non-inflationary context. That is what we are seeking to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister referred to the inflation rate. He forgot to say that the inflation rate in Canada is now almost the same as in the Unites States. However, the interest rate in Canada is some four percentage points higher than in the U.S.. It is 7.5 per cent higher than in Japanese and in Germany. Can he explain how Canadians can compete internationally wich such high interest rates, one of the highest in the world?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, my Hon. friend is referring to the interest rate in the United States. He could have referred the ones in Great-Britain, which are higher than ours, and the inflation rate there which is hovering 8.3 per cent. So much for another competitor. The situation is about the same in other major countries around the world.

Each country indeed has its own serious problem, and we also have serious problems in our Canadian economy. Our aim is to ensure that inflationary trends in the economy do not overcome economic growth and that six or eight months down the road we do not find ourselves with an inflation rate such as we had unfortunately when my friend was in government. And I know that he deeply regretted during his temporary exile from politics that his Government did not act with more speed and energy to control inflation, inflationary trends in this country, which we are now doing.

I therefore believe that basically my hon. friend is a knowledgeable businessman. He will know that this government and the Bank of Canada are implementing consistent policies which will lead to economic growth in a non-inflationary context.

[English]

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, what the right hon. Prime Minister does not mention is that if Canadians have to pay much higher interest rates in order to build the type of plant and manufacturing structure and economy that we need, that in itself is highly inflationary. He also did not mention that for every increase of 1 per cent in our interest rate, our deficit increases over $1.3 billion in the first year and $3 billion in the years thereafter.

A couple of days ago the Minister of Finance admitted that the economy was slowing down. He finally admitted it. He did not have to be a rocket scientist to do this, all he had to do was listen to the workers—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Peterson: My question is this, Mr. Speaker. Will he share with us and with the workers of Canadian Airlines, Gerber, Ford, General Electric, Indal, Inglis, and all the other workers who are losing their jobs what they intend to do about this disastrous course they are on?

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend speaks of jobs that are lost. In a dynamic economy such as ours, there is an enormous turnover in any given year in terms of plants closing and plants opening. That is the way it is in an internationally competitive world.

My friend says that the Minister of Finance finally admitted that the economy was slowing down. The Minister of Finance predicted that the economy would slow down when he brought in his budget. Part of the plan was to drive the inflation out of our system. We are trying to create a climate of non-inflationary economic growth. My friend asks how it can be done. A principal way that it can be done is to keep program and other government spending under reasonable control.

In the decade that preceded the swearing in of this government, program spending increased by some 12.0 per cent a year. Since this government has been in office it has been held to 3.5 per cent a year on average.

My hon. friend might give some advice to the Premier of Ontario whose spending has been rising at 10 per cent a year. That is not good for Ontario and it is not good for Canada.

TREASURY BOARD

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The Minister would have us believe that this bill, which would force ships' crews and hospital services employees back to work, is necessary to protect the public. However, the Minister and the Minister of Transport have admitted that the shipping dispute does not affect public safety. Will the Minister acknowledge that the problem is not caused by the fact that these employees are on strike but by the government's failure to designate these employees as essential and thus get results in these negotiations? What explanation does he have for this kind of incompetence?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want the Hon. Member for Ottawa West to listen carefully to what I have to say. Mr. Speaker, at this very moment, operations on the river are perfectly safe, but we do have 126 ships operating on the river and in the Seaway, and no one has any control over the weather or over ice conditions on the river.

Mr. Speaker, we have three weeks left before the St. Lawrence Seaway is closed. Millions of tons of Western wheat are now on the river and in the Seaway, and there is a risk that this wheat will be stuck on the river for the duration. If the hon. member doesn't agree we may have an emergency on hour hands, Mr. Speaker, I think that is totally irresponsible.

[English]

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, winter and freeze-up come every year. The minister's officials knew last year that they should have been declaring these workers essential.

The minister knows now that all it would take to settle this issue is a decent fair wage offer that would cost far less than the strike is costing every day.

Will the minister admit that his back-to-work legislation is just a sham to cover up the government's abysmal failure to respect the collective bargaining process and to reach a just and fair settlement which could be reached in hours?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, once again I call upon my colleague to understand that the St. Lawrence River and the St. Lawrence Seaway today face a safe circulation of ships on the Seaway. The hon. member states that one year ago we should have done something. I am asking members to do something today: support the legislation which is here.

Thousands of Canadian jobs depend upon the traffic of the St. Lawrence Seaway. I ask the Liberal and NDP Parties to be serious and to keep those jobs for Canadians.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious question for the Minister of Labour. Could the Minister of Labour tell this House how he could possibly justify bringing back-to-work legislation against the ships crews and the hospital services workers of the federal Public Service when both of the groups are more than willing to continue negotiation?

• (1440)

Both of the groups are more than willing to provide emergency service.

As the minister knows, only two days ago the striking ships crews workers provided emergency service and rescued a U.S. Coast Guard vessel. I think these workers have shown their good faith.

The hospital workers have also shown their good faith by offering to provide emergency services. That offer has been turned down by the Treasury Board. I include those hospital workers in my own riding in the Yukon. Obviously, the solution to these disputes is good faith bargaining. Why doesn't the government do this?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows I have mentioned time and time again in the House that at the time negotiations broke off, one group was asking for a wage increase of 17.4 per cent and the other group was asking for an increase of 14.3 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Over three years.

Mr. de Cotret: Given that 95 per cent of all public servants have settled for rates of increase in the range of 4.1 to 4.2 per cent, we felt this was a rather exorbitant demand to be placed on government at this time.

I would just like to underline for my hon. colleague what the bill does. The bill does two things. It attempts to ensure that the safety, security and health of Canadians is assured by back to work legislation. It also tends to assure that we deal with this situation with fairness and equity by going to a binding conciliation process, which is essentially a third-party process, which will bind both parties to the eventual conclusion of the current dispute. So, we are being fair and equitable, and we are preserving the safety, security and health of Canadians.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, what I understand from what the minister is saying is that fairness is just too darned expensive for this government and it does not have much of a commitment to it.

The Prime Minister has often bragged about his commitment to pay equity for Canadians. Yet in 1987, a Human Rights Tribunal told the federal government that it had to resolve the major pay equity problem which exists in its hospitals and in the hospital services. These problems still have not been resolved. The government refuses to negotiate with the union and now says that the Human Rights Tribunal had no jurisdiction.

If the Prime Minister truly supports the concept of pay equity, will he immediately direct the President of the Treasury Board to return to the bargaining table and renegotiate a true pay equity agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, following the decisions that were brought down over the years, we have already paid the hospital services group $28 million in retroactive pay to meet the pay equity standards to which this government is firmly committed. We are in the process of paying an extra $10 million to meet the second stage of the process. The third stage of the process is before the Canadian Human Rights Commission, and we believe all the provisions that have been handed down will fully be met. The Prime Minister's commitment to pay equity will be honoured in full with the measures that Treasury Board has already taken.

When we look at pay equity from the other point of view, pay parity if you like, in the ships crews dispute, I have mentioned to this House time and time again that I have put on the table a firm offer to have pay parity between the east coast and the west coast workers on date of signing of the collective agreement. That is already on the record.

Ms. McLaughlin: Mr. Speaker, in the New Democratic Party we only look at pay equity one way, and that is justice. It is justice based on the role of people, on regional justice from the east to the west for women and men.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Ms. McLaughlin: Madam Speaker, the International Labour Organization has already condemned this government's unjustified use of back-to-work legislation.

Does the government really want another black mark from the international community? How can the government justify statements to the effect that the public interest demands we put an end to this strike, when Treasury Board has turned down the union's offer to provide essential services?

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the government has conducted lengthy negotiations in order to reach a settlement with both groups. Again, I may point out that we are talking about two groups out of 29. The other 27 managed to negotiate with the government an agreement they felt was viable, and did so fairly and squarely. The demands of these two groups, however, go far beyond the levels we set for the government. We are prepared to negotiate. We have negotiated for the past months. We are prepared to negotiate at any time. I have said so in the House, and I say it again today: If the unions want to sit down at the bargaining table this afternoon, this evening, tonight or tomorrow, the government will be there to negotiate an agreement and to do so consistently and fairly, instead of having to consider binding conciliation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister and it pertains to his recent visit to the Soviet Union and to the NATO meeting.

On November 27, the Prime Minister stated this about Mr. Gorbachev in the House, and I quote from Hansard, page 6235:

> But I was struck by his determination to succeed and by his confidence that success is possible—
> I also believe, strongly, that it is in everyone's interests, including our own, that he succeed.

On November 5, in Brussels, he said, when referring to Mr. Gorbachev,"His economy is in such God-awful shape it would take the treasuries of everyone around the table to fix it and then some". Who is the Prime Minister fooling? The 240 business people that he took to the Soviet Union, encouraging them to invest in the Soviet Union economy, or the NATO leaders? Does he not realize that by undermining the leadership of President Gorbachev, he has just set back the termination of the Cold War for another 10 years?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it may be a surprise to the hon. member that the Soviet economy is in very difficult circumstances. That was not a surprise to the Canadian business people who were there looking for an opportunity to participate in the rejuvenation of that economy.

It is not a surprise to Mr. Gorbachev. During the conversations between the Prime Minister and Mr. Gorbachev in the Soviet Union, Mr. Gorbachev himself was brutally frank about the state of his economy and the extent of the challenge that he faces. Rather than trying to conceal the difficulty of that problem, we believe it is important to analyze directly, to be frank with the Soviets, to be frank with the world and to try to put together a series of actions that could help the Soviet Union achieve the kind of fundamental changes that the Soviets require.

Mr. Gorbachev knows that we think that they cannot achieve those changes without moving toward a price system, without becoming more competent in dealing with the market principles on which the world economy is based.

What the Prime Minister said in Brussels is what the Prime Minister said in Moscow. It is an accurate description of the state of the Soviet economy and an accurate beginning for the reform that is essential to that economy, and consequently to the progress of world peace.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, that is not what the Canadians are hearing. They are hearing the Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Flis: —say one thing at one meeting and the direct opposite at the other meeting.

Also on November 27, the Prime Minister told us in this House that with respect to grain trade, he responded on behalf of the Canadian agricultural producers "with great enthusiasm". With all due respect, Mr. Prime Minister, the Russian people cannot eat enthusiasm. They would rather have bread and butter on their tables.

When is the Prime Minister going to take the initiative and offer Mr. Gorbachev some tangible assistance to ensure that he can meet the population's expectations?

• (1450)

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, I confess to having a certain advantage over the hon. member in terms of what the Prime Minister said in Moscow and what he said in Brussels because I was at both meetings. The hon. member was not. The Prime Minister said in Brussels what he said in Moscow. He said what the Soviets themselves understand and, indeed, are asking the rest of the world to understand, that they have a mammoth economic problem that needs to be solved. There is an opportunity for those of us in the rest of the world, who are interested in the strength of the Soviet economy, to participate in restructuring that economy. We are prepared to meet that challenge.

The hon. member asks about specific proposals that Canada might put forward. The Prime Minister has already put forward several. One includes the encouragement of the chairman of the economic summit each year to consult regularly as a matter of course with the President of the Soviet Union. Another is the indication by Canada that we would be prepared to move toward observer status for the Soviet Union in the GATT so that the Soviets can become more fully integrated into the world market economy in which they ultimately have to compete. We have talked about relaxation of Comecon rules. We have talked about a range of other specific proposals.

The Prime Minister was also prepared to take part in a mission, which I think the hon. member was belittling, the mission by some 240 Canadian business persons, who are prepared to go over and apply their expertise and capital to help in practical ways to allow the Soviet Union to begin the kind of recovery that is essential.

HOUSING

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing.

On November 23, I asked the Minister of State for Finance whether his government was prepared to agree to have the rental part of the federal home renovation program apply at the very least to any Canadian municipality with a program that complements the federal one.

Two weeks later, I note that the government has still not acted and I ask the Minister whether his government is prepared to recognize the tremendous harm which this government decision is causing many Canadian municipalities, and whether he intends to accept my proposal.

[English]

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, about the same time the hon. member asked that question in the House I was attending a meeting of housing ministers of the provinces and myself dealing with the question of allocation of federal funds to the provinces in coming years.

At the same time I had the opportunity to meet the Quebec Minister of Housing, Mr. Picotte, and discuss with him the question which the hon. member has raised. It was agreed at that meeting that we would deal with it in the context of Quebec on the basis of tripartite discussions between the federal government representatives, provincial government representatives and municipal government representatives. A tripartite committee has been established in Quebec made up of federal-provincial representatives from the city of Montreal, the city of Verdun and the city of Quebec.

As I understand it they had their first meeting to deal with the subject last Friday and they will be meeting again soon.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for the remarks he just made to the House, which show the need to solve this problem, in particular for municipalities with a program that complements the federal one and which are more affected—I am thinking especially of Montreal. I wonder whether the minister knows that this arbitrary decision of the Conservative government is depriving Montreal of 95 per cent of the federal funds for home renovation.

Montreal now has 60,000 homes which need major renovations. Will the Minister do something to correct this unspeakable injustice to Montreal—yes or no? A committee is all very well, but a decision can only be made by the Minister and I ask him to act quickly.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I met with representatives of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to discuss the same issue. We will be having ongoing discussions and there will be the discussions taking place on a tripartite level in Quebec. Hopefully we will be able to come up with some answers that will be helpful for the city of Montreal, for cities right across this country and for all Canadians.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister or someone in cabinet who can speak for agriculture. They must know that Canada's farm debt is now more than $22 billion and that the Farm Credit Corporation and the banks are foreclosing on a record number of Canadian farms.

Will the Prime Minister or a representative of the government commit this government to bringing in specific legislation which would halt foreclosure action until such time as there is completed a full investigation of the farm financial crisis in Canada to ensure that we know specifically what impact the debt crisis is having not only on farm families, but on the entire farm-based western economy?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that the government is very aware of the farm debt crisis. We have worked with farmers on an individual basis through the debt review boards and various other activities and will continue to assist agriculture wherever possible in any way because we do recognize the difficult times they are facing. We look forward to working with them.

Mr. Taylor: Mr.Speaker, the member will know that two days ago Canadian food processors told farmers they had to lower their prices so that the processors could compete better under the free trade deal. Today, Quebec farmers said that they no longer trust the federal government to protect them and they called on the Quebec government to take control of the jurisdiction of agriculture.

Does every province in this wonderful country of ours have to take control of agriculture because this government cannot be trusted to protect the interests of the Canadian farm community?

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, this government has responded better to agricultural needs than any previous government in history. We have to recognize in the 1980s that because of the difficulties of the 1970s, agriculture has had a difficult time not only in this country but in may parts of the world.

This government has provided additional assistance to the producers, in the area of at least $4 billion a year, since we formed the government. I want to add that that is more than in the previous administration, when it was about $2 billion. We have responded and will continue to respond and work with agriculture and producers until we have a strong viable industry.

CUSTOMS AND EXCISE

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Customs and Excise officials have for years been conducting immigration and pre-clearance at U.S. airports on behalf of the Department of Employment and Immigration. This service was terminated on October 31, 1989.

In light of the fact that we have a 1974 treaty between Canada and the U.S. allowing this, that Section 115 of the Immigration Act allows the Governor in Council to make regulations, and in light of the fact that we have a free trade agreement that is trying to promote relations and the transfer of goods and services between the two nations, can the minister give us an indication as to how he can deal with this problem and hopefully resolve it for us?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member raises a very interesting question and I can assure him that I intend to consult with my appropriate cabinet colleagues, particularly the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

However, in the meantime I understand that customs service is not hampered because of the closure. Aircraft are now receiving free and prompt customs clearance at their destinations or at other airports along their flights. However, because of the hon. member's sincere interest in this matter, I will talk to my cabinet colleagues on this and get to him with an appropriate answer in the not too distant future.

SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week, the Minister of Finance told the House of Commons that the One Voice Seniors Network supported the government's clawback of old age pensions. Yesterday, One Voice said that the minister was twisting its words by saying, and I quote:

> Seniors were appalled yesterday to see their words twisted to support the government's controversial clawback legislation.

I would like to ask the acting prime minister, if you have one over there, will the government apologize to the seniors of Canada for the irresponsible way in which the Minister of Finance has distorted the words of Canadian seniors to try to justify this discriminatory tax?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member raised this because I want to point out to him very carefully what has been said by Jean Woodsworth who is the president of One Voice, the Canadian Seniors Network. One of the quotes that was mentioned yesterday is that, "social benefits are given to every Canadian citizen as a right. They can be taxed back from the rich because the rich should pay more taxes than the poor," and it goes on to say, "but to extend the social safety net to some and not to others makes it a charity, not a right".

In the pre-budget consultations which the Minister of Finance had with various interested groups, Mrs. Woodsworth was there, and I want to quote exactly what she said as part of the presentation that was made to the Minister of Finance. She said:

> —we agree with the Economic Council that people with over $50,000 of income should have their OAS taxed back.

Now, going on to quote what the National Council on Welfare said:

> —the advantage of the clawback is that it saves money, not by tampering with the contentious principle of universality, but rather by increasing the progressivity of social programs—the clawback does no damage to universality—

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that the acting prime minister raised that meeting because here is what the One Voice Seniors Network says about that meeting: "At that meeting he—" the minister—"specifically promised us he would not touch universal social programs". That, they say, was a real betrayal. "Now, he is taking our own words out of the context of our brief to make it look as though we agree with the clawback. Mr. Wilson has aggravated the anger and mistrust seniors are already feeling".

Is this government so desperate to find somebody who supports its tax measures that it has to go around twisting the words of senior citizens in Canada?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is the hon. member who is twisting the words of the Minister of Finance. It is very plain exactly what Mrs. Woodsworth, who was representing that group, said. She said it, and I will read it to you again. I will do so slowly:

> —we agree with the Economic Council that people with over $50,000 of income should have their OAS taxed back.

Yes, the minister said he would not tamper with universality. The National Council of Welfare says that in increasing the progressivity of social programs, the clawback does no damage to universality.

FISHERIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It has now been five weeks since the minister announced the special response program to assist fishermen and fish plant workers who suffered a disastrous season this year. Yet to date, during those five weeks, fewer than 50 per cent of the fishermen and fish plant workers throughout Atlantic Canada who have applied for assistance have been given any.

In my riding alone, some 459 of 912 families who have applied have been refused assistance under the minister's program.

Will the minister, in the few remaining days before Christmas, acknowledge that the program announced to date has been inadequate? Will the minister design new criteria to allow those fishermen and their families not to have to cancel Christmas this year?

It is not simply a matter of whether or not there will be gifts under the tree, it is a question of whether or not there will be turkey on the table.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the seriousness with which the member asks this question, I do, however, disagree with his premise because this program is especially designed for people with an attachment to the fishery. I have reviewed this very carefully in response to questions that have been asked before and people have already qualified under the extended criteria.

I want to point out one aspect that he may be missing and that is that in any community, where most people engaged in the fishery are unable to meet the criteria, a person who can demonstrate, within that community, a continuing legitimate attachment will be considered for eligibility. I should say that this approach we are taking has been accepted by people in the industry, both labour and management, and we are making accommodations for a range of needs within the industry.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, despite the words of the minister, despite the attempt to assure members of this House and through this House Canadians that this program is working, in my constituency alone, on the great northern peninsula, over 50 per cent of the fishing families affected have had essentially no income since May 15. The member for St. John's West, the minister from Newfoundland, knows that and the parliamentary secretary, who is from Newfoundland, knows that, and the minister knows it.

My question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who chairs a cabinet committee on what has been acknowledged by the government as a crisis in the fishery. Given that fishing families can expect no help from the Minister of Employment and Immigration, can expect nothing but a cancelled Christmas this year, a bitter pill for their Christmas dinner, will the minister intervene, on behalf of these families who are being told that they have nowhere to go whatsoever but to welfare and nothing to do but move to Toronto and take a minimum wage job? Will the minister help them now?

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, we have said all the way along that it is our view as a government that we want to help people who are affected by this very special problem.

Let me just quote, if I may, the Minister of Fisheries of Newfoundland who seems to disagree with the hon. member. The fisheries minister of Newfoundland, Walter Carter, said that the $5 million federal emergency response program for the fishery will be adequate to look after the fishermen who need assistance.

IMMIGRATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The minister is quoted in The Globe and Mail today as saying that she is satisfied with the new refugee system the way it is. I want to ask her, considering that out of 15,611 claimants, 5,603 have not started their claims, 2,985 are waiting for a full hearing and 2,301 are listed as adjourned, postponed or pending, can the minister tell this House why she has allowed a total new backlog of 10,889 to develop, two-thirds of the whole, and how she intends to overcome it?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly dispute the numbers that the hon. member is putting forward today. I think what is very important to know is that as of October 31, there have been 15,000 new claims.

The program was a little slower getting started than I had hoped in the beginning, as people were being trained. I think that the members of the refugee determination system have been very conscientious in how they have viewed these cases. However, we have seen some improvement in the last few months. We are watching it very closely to ensure that the system does work and that that catch-up on the new cases continues.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, since the figures are from the minister's own board of IRB, she had better look at them again because Canadians are asking why she is allowing a new build-up. They want to know whether she is putting forward a list of so-called safe countries to which refugees will be sent back without a full hearing and whether the United States is on the list of safe countries for refugees from El Salvador.

• (1510)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have said all the way along that the concept of the safe third country is in the legislation. It has not been proclaimed.

It was my hope certainly and continues to be my expectation that the system will work and that we will not move to a third safe country concept. I can certainly assure the hon. member and the country that if that is what is necessary, that is in the legislation for me to use at some future time should we need it.

BROADCASTING

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, a TV channel in Montreal showed a film where a commando entered a school and started firing at the students.

Last night, we had a similar scenario at the Montreal École Polytechnique, with disastrous results.

My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I would like to know whether in the near future, the Minister intends to table a bill dealing with violence on television, both in films and TV in programs, and will he do so as soon as possible?

An Hon. Member: Right on, Guy!

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in responding to the question by the hon. member for Laval, I would like to join the Prime Minister and the two opposition leaders who, earlier today, expressed their sympathy and extended their condolences to parents and friends of the victims of this senseless act.

The hon. member for Laval is no doubt aware that broadcasters are responsible for their programs, subject to CRTC supervision. We can only hope that in the light of what has happened, the broadcasters and the CRTC will take some kind of action.

The hon. member for Laval is also aware that the CRTC's autonomy in these matters precludes the Minister of Communications and the government from intervening with respect to program content.

However, I intend to inform the Minister of Communications of the hon. member's concerns which, I imagine, are shared by all members of this House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Gander—Grand Falls, a single question and it must be short.

FISHERIES

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, we are faced with the worst fish plant closures in the history of Canada and some companies have gone to East Bloc countries asking for a supply of fish to operate their fish plants.

Canadian fishermen are not allowed to fish within the 200-mile zone of the Soviet Union or Bulgaria or Cuba or Japan or Norway, but they have been guaranteed quotas this year inside Canada's 200-mile zone.

I want to ask the Government of Canada, will it now cancel all foreign fishing within Canada's 200-mile zone as the United States has done, as every other country in the world has done, so we don't have to go to the Soviet Union and say: "Please, Soviet Union, will you give us some fish to operate our fish plants?"

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have had a question. The position is, as the hon. gentleman well knows, that certain stocks in our 200-mile limit are straddling stocks like the hon. gentleman opposite. They try to straddle every issue that comes forward.

The hon. gentlemen will also know that under the Law of the Sea, both Canada and all other countries that have a continental shelf have no choice but to offer foreign countries access to Canadian stocks which are clearly surplus to our needs. For example, we had a TAC for silver hake this year, 135,000 tonnes. Canadian fishermen actually caught 100 tonnes despite special programs and grants and we had to offer the surplus to Russia and other countries. That happened with silver hake. It would also happen to the hon. gentleman's silver tongue.

Government Orders

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will ask the usual question, and pursuant to your instruction, I will make it very short.

I want to ask the government House leader to give us the statement of business he intends to call for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will resume debate on Bill C–49. Monday, December 11, we will deal with the report stage of Bill C–4 and Bill C–23.

In view of the seriousness of the situation on the St. Lawrence Seaway, the risk to the movement of grain, the risk to safety and the serious question of service to veterans, I wish, at this time, to give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the Order of the Day is called for resuming debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C–49 and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

POINT OF ORDER

ADVERTISING

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a point of order. I would like to quote from a recent issue of the Eastern Graphic of Montague, P.E.I. It reads:

> Cardigan Liberal MP Lawrence MacAulay is selling handcrafted Christmas wreaths to other MPs—

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. Excuse me. That matter is presently in front of the Speaker. I think it is appropriate that that is where it stays until I return to the House on it.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a question of the government House leader concerning legislation and to ask him, at this traditional opportunity on Thursday when the government intends to move forward with long overdue legislation respecting more effective gun control in Canada.

It was in 1986 that the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police pointed out that there was a world–wide surplus of automatic and semi–automatic weapons primarily designed for purposes of warfare now finding their way into the Canadian market–place.

It was in 1986 that the member for Don Valley East questioned the then minister who said that the legislation was coming soon. In 1987 we were told it was coming soon.

The minister said, in June of this year, he would be bringing forward this legislation on gun control in the near future. He has the unanimous agreement of the provincial attorneys general. How many more tragic deaths must there be, Mr. Speaker, before this minister moves forward on this—

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, at one o'clock I had the floor and it is my understanding, according to the rules, that I would continue to make my remarks at this time.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, we have a procedural difficulty here. It is true the minister had the floor at one minute to one o'clock. He proceeded then to put a motion to the House which was disposed of. The normal practice for anyone having the floor is to finish his speech by moving a motion. This member has finished his comments, he can move that motion and sit down.

The difficulty I have at this time, since the minister moved the motion at the beginning of his so–called speech, which we did not hear, is that I took it then that the minister had made his remarks, that he was ending them with a motion and that we would dispose of that motion. If it is to be otherwise, I would like to be informed.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, the House will know that the government has been making every effort to move this bill forward in order to deal with this serious situation. The minister was recognized immediately before Question Period. As the Minister of Veterans Affairs, he wished to bring to the attention of the House the difficulties that we have with the safety and service to veterans.

• (1520)

I appreciate that my hon. friend technically may be correct, as he often is. In this case there was an effort by the minister to see if the House would agree, under the circumstances, to sit through lunch.

There are often cases in this place where there can be agreement because of the tone and the seriousness of the subject that is being debated. One might ask—and I would ask at this time—if there might not be a disposition in the House to recognize the minister in view of the very important part that he will play in this debate and so that members opposite will know what is the position of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Members opposite may wish to respond and at the end of his remarks, question him in that 10-minute question period.

I would ask if there might not be unanimous consent for the minister to deliver his remarks.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rose on the point of order because I thought it was a good point of order to be taken up.

I do agree with the minister that the Minister of Veterans Affairs has a contribution to make to this debate. We would like to hear him. We are not obstructing his right to speak in the House. I just do not want it to be a precedent. I would like to see the House strictly adhere to rules so that we do have order in this place.

In this case we have no objection to the minister speaking at this time.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, this party would agree to the hon. minister speaking at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with pleasure that the Chair does recognize the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Madam Speaker, I wish to extend to both opposition parties my appreciation. I feel very strongly about what we are doing here today.

I do think I can make a contribution because it is my employees who are affected in this and, of course, what kind of impact this legislation will have on the people we serve, the veterans of Canada.

I thank very much the opposition parties for their co-operation in this regard.

I know full well that no one likes to go on strike. Such action is taken only as a last resort. I also know that no government likes to end a legal strike with back to work legislation. It, too, is a last resort and one that can only be employed when national interests, above those of the right of the employees concerned to withdraw their services, must prevail.

That, indeed, is the situation that has been reached in the Department of Veterans Affairs. The health and safety of our veteran clients is now threatened.

Before going further I should like to set the stage by saying a word or two about the department of which I have the honour to be minister because I believe this will give a contextual framework for what I have to say later.

I know from the letters I receive and from the discussions I have with members of all parties in the House that no department of the government has more dedicated employees than has Veterans Affairs Canada.

It is a department pointed to with pride by the Public Service of Canada for the quality of service it gives to those who serve Canada so valiantly in wartime. The department is a family and normally a very happy family dedicated to this purpose and the values of the department are clear to all.

Second only to the veterans we serve we place the highest importance on seeing our employees treated fairly. I think members of this House will understand, given what I have just said, my great regret that our members of the Hospital Services Group felt compelled to go on strike. I also regret that we, as a government, now feel compelled, with the co-operation of this House, to order them to go back to work. This will require putting in place a process that would, within a reasonable period of time, see an independent third party, first to assist and then to resolve if necessary, the differences that exist between the employees and the Treasury Board.

[Translation]

Within Veterans Affairs, Madam Speaker, we have one hospital and two veterans' homes. The hospital is at Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue in the west end of the island of Montréal. The homes are the Rideau Veterans Home, here in Ottawa, and Saskatoon Veterans Home.

I shall be concentrating what I have to say, Madam Speaker, on the situation at Ste. Anne's and Senneville. I shall be doing this because it is there that the situation is most grave and this in large part results from the fact that the patients there need much more intense care than in our two homes.

[English]

There are more than 726 patients in Ste. Anne's, veterans all, people who served their country well and deserve nothing but the best during the latter days of their lives. Of these 726 patients, about 250 are permanently bed-ridden. Another 400 are able to get by only with the help of a wheelchair and some of them are not capable of operating a wheelchair themselves. We have patients with Alzeihmer's disease and many with milder forms of dementia.

To visit Ste. Anne's is to see humanity enduring the travails of old age. Alert minds in wasted bodies and bodies that function while the mind has all but disappeared.

In Ste. Anne's hospital, more than half our staff belong to the hospital services HS group. There are procedures in the event of a strike, as the House will be aware, that allow designations of positions. And since it has been mentioned previously in debate, I do want to add my words to this particular issue. This requires people in such positions to continue to perform their duties if a strike is called in order to provide essential levels of service. In this case, of course, the essential service is to safeguard the health and security of our patients and to maintain their welfare. In Ste. Anne's and our veterans homes, we judged that approximately 90 per cent of our employees in the hospital services group were needed in the event of a strike if we were to run the hospital on normal lines of three shifts a day, seven days a week.

The department did receive an offer to provide essential services at Ste. Anne's from the Public Service Alliance of Canada. Of the 614 employees eligible to strike, the union was prepared to allow 45 to work, 8 per cent of the workers, not the 90 per cent which we judged to be necessary. Even by switching to a two-12 hour shifts a day system, such an offer fell far short of the most minimal requirements.

In addition, in making the offer, the union imposed two conditions which we found too difficult to swallow. One, was that we not contract out any services normally provided by the department. Second, that we not reassign non-striking staff to do the duties of staff who were on strike.

In responding to the offer from the union, the department indicated that while it was most gratifying that the union had been prepared to make an offer at all, the offer of 45 employees or 8 per cent of the staff fell well short of what was needed. Attached to it were conditions, of course, that were absolutely unacceptable to the department and to the hospital management. So the department literally had no option but to reject the offer.

I believe we should now inform the House how the Ste. Anne's has been operated during the strike. I think it is important, first of all, to recognize that the strain on our employees at the hospital did not begin when the strike started, but had begun some considerable time in advance. If you will, Madam Speaker, a war of nerves was in progress before the strike was called. I do not wish to belabour the point or go into any great detail because of my conviction that those who sought to disrupt the hospital's operation were and are a very small minority.

The House may wonder how a hospital with over 800 patients could possibly cope even for a day without the help of orderlies, those who prepare the food and those who keep the institution clean. I would like to tell you a bit about this.

Our doctors, our nurses and our other professional and support staff have been working 12-hour shifts. The nurses, in addition to their own work, have been doing the work normally undertaken by the higher levels of orderlies. The work of other members of the hospital services group has been covered in two different ways: first, by the normal group of volunteers who assist this hospital on a regular basis like many others across Canada. The number of volunteers has been augmented in the community. With the special efforts of members of the Royal Canadian Legion, the Korea Veterans Association and other local veterans groups, these people have been feeding patients, helping to shave them, generally caring for their personal needs and keeping up their morale. I wish to thank them publicly for their help to our veterans.

[English]

In addition, we at Veterans Affairs have moved considerable numbers of people from both our Charlottetown and our Ottawa head offices and from offices across Canada. Some of these managerial employees have worked as managers. Many more, along with colleagues from Ste. Anne's have found themselves doing unaccustomed work in preparing and serving food and keeping the hospital clean. All have been working very long hours. As one might expect, all are now getting very tired.

I should like to pay particular tribute—and I am sure the House would wish to join me in so doing—to those people who volunteer to do work that they are really unaccustomed to doing. I should like to pay special tribute to our staff at our institutions, to those who have come to join them from other parts of Veterans Affairs Canada, and to those wonderful people, the volunteers who have helped out in so many ways.

My heart is filled with pride at their dedication in serving our veteran patients. Indications that despite our best efforts the health and safety of our patients was coming into jeopardy were first detected a couple of days ago. Our concern became even greater on Tuesday as the drawn faces of our nurses, many of whom have family responsibilities to face after a 12–hour shift, were indicating fatigue and the potential breakdown of the system.

On Tuesday my deputy minister went to Ste. Anne's to form at first hand an impression of how much we could continue without endangering the lives of our patients. In the deputy minister's report to me after returning from Ste. Anne's where he had spoken with virtually all the staff on both ships, he informed me that in his judgment the situation at Ste. Anne's, despite the superb efforts of all those involved, was approaching crisis proportions.

He told me, based on the advice he had received, and the evidence of his own eyes, that were we not to act now the health, the safety and the security of our patients would be in danger.

I believe that I have shown why we cannot allow the situation at Ste. Anne de Bellevue to continue any longer. The members of the hospital services group in Veterans Affairs are still very valued members of our department. We need them back at work and will welcome them as members of the team.

[Translation]

As I said earlier, in my department, second only to the veterans we serve, we place the highest importance on our own people being treated fairly. I am quite sure that the arrangements proposed in this legislation, will allow an independent third party to help settle the dispute. Our staff can count on receiving fair treatment.

[English]

I would ask, Madam Speaker, that the House respond rapidly to pass this legislation so we may properly care for our veteran patients who did so much for us and who are now not able to look after themselves.

It is for this reason that I fully support the government's back to work legislation which is absolutely justified under the circumstances.

Mrs. Catterall: Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to see the minister finally addressing this issue. I wonder if he is aware that for two years we have been getting to this point. He has delivered a very fine tribute to the people who work for National Defence, in the veterans homes and in the hospitals. In fact he has delivered a very fine explanation of why this contract should have been settled months and months ago and of why the issue of pay equity should have been settled years ago.

I ask the minister: Does he think $16,000 a year is enough pay for the valuable work he just described, for the love, care and attention these people give to our veterans? Does he believe that they should have to wait an additional two years, after already waiting seven years for pay equity? Does he believe that this is a fair and just situation? Above all, where has he been for the last six months? What kind of message has he been sending to the President of the Treasury Board about the importance of this work and the need to settle this strike?

Mr. Merrithew: Madam Speaker, in response to the member for Ottawa West, I appreciate her concerns and her kind remarks about the concern I share for the veterans of Canada.

I might mention, though, that the President of the Treasury Board, in his remarks this morning and in answer to questions throughout this past week or so, has indicated time and time again that there have been months and months to negotiate. The two parties were a considerable distance apart. He has indicated publicly in Question Period here in the House and said again this morning: "I am available and I will be willing to negotiate any time that we can reach a mutually agreeable settlement". He has made that offer over and over again.

I am perfectly aware that there have been discussions going on with PSAC, the employees, members of the bargaining table, and the minister himself. While it is his responsibility to do the actual negotiations, I think he has been more than willing to sit down with them. I would put out the offer once again on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board that the place to resolve differences of opinion in bargaining is at the table. The only way to do this is to go back to the table.

Mrs. Catterall: But not in the House, not here.

Mr. Merrithew: We are willing and the minister mentioned that this morning: "I am available, and I will be willing to negotiate any time".

The minister did mention the issue of pay equity this morning and again in Question Period this afternoon. The Government of Canada is not running from that particular issue.

He mentioned this morning that an amount of $28 million had already been paid to deal with that particular issue. He said that there were other adjustments, and I quote exactly: "retroactive pay adjustments totalling $28 million have already been paid out". He continues: "We are in the process of paying another $10 million".

Second, today in Question Period he mentioned that they were now awaiting a ruling from the Human Rights Commission with regard to the third stage. It is not that the government has not dealt with that issue. The government has dealt with it and in fact has spent $28 million in redressing that grievance.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, the government has said that it favours pay equity. It is perfectly simple for the government to include that principle in the bill, to direct the conciliation boards, and, in the final analysis, to reach a decision which incorporates the principle of pay equity in the bill.

If the government intends its words to be accepted at face value by the people it is forcing back to work, why does it not do the just and proper thing and include this in the bill? It leaves the workers who are being forced back to work under this legislation bitter. They have been through a three-week strike. The minister makes nice sounds about how much he welcomes them back to work.

Could the minister say that he and the government will agree at the outset of the conciliation process that pay equity will be conceded? If so, why will the government not put it into the bill?

The minister portrays in eloquent terms the problems at Ste. Anne's and the aged and sick veterans about whose care we are all concerned. If the care of those veterans is in fact required now by those on strike, then it is a simple matter for the government to narrow this legislation to those workers. If there are other individual situations where it is absolutely essential for employees to go back to work, it is possible for the government to narrow the legislation.

Instead, the government presents a broad sweep putting all these workers back to work. They have not been declared essential by the government. They are entitled under the law of this country, under international convention, to free collective bargaining. Why will the government not give to these workers the rights that it asks the governments of eastern Europe to give to its workers?

Mr. Merrithew: In response to the question of the hon. member for Victoria, I might mention he was again asking about the principle of pay equity. I do not know how much clearer I can be as to the government's position.

The President of the Treasury Board has indicated publicly and in responses to questions in this House that he is prepared to deal with it. We have been dealing with it. We have not tried to escape from our responsibilities with regard to dealing with pay equity. He has done that. He is willing to do so again. We chose, personally, not to try to put any aspects of the points in dispute in the bill.

The bill does three things. It orders the workers to return to work immediately. It sets up, rather than tries to legislate, a settlement of the outstanding issues. I think the bill is very fair in that it sets up the process by which we can bring in binding conciliation in which to deal with the outstanding issues. They will go back to the table and try to deal with those outstanding issues, assuming that is a very fair way of trying to deal with the issues. It was not that we forced or legislated the solution to the problem. We just legislated the process by which those solutions might be achieved.

The second issue the hon. member mentioned was as to why we did not legislate back the essential workers. In my remarks I indicated that when we met with the bargaining unit concerned—and of course Treasury Board deals with bargaining units which in this case are the HSs from my department, the Department of National Defence and National Health and Welfare bargaining as a unit—we said that in order to run Ste. Anne's Hospital and our two nursing homes for veterans in an adequate fashion and without putting at risk the lives, health, safety and security of our veterans, obviously we had to have a very large percentage of the employees. We indicated very clearly that this figure would be in the vicinity of 90 per cent. They offered 8 per cent.

Obviously 8 per cent would not do. There is a difference of opinion there as to what they perceive as being essential and what the Government of Canada and my employees perceive to be essential around Ste. Anne de Bellevue Hospital. Obviously 8 per cent or 45 employees cannot run a hospital with 726 veterans, most of whom are bedridden or in wheelchairs. Obviously one could not do that.

There was not going to be a meeting of the minds on that particular issue. It was deemed impossible, especially because of the two conditions attached to that term "essential employees" and their offer of putting some of the employees back to work on an essential basis. There was no meeting of the minds. It was not doable so we dealt with the bargaining unit as Treasury Board normally does.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I join in the debate today with a great deal of trepidation because I never quite thought that I would have to participate in a debate in the House of Commons, a place for which I have a great deal of respect, on a piece of legislation that is a vivid example of the complete disdain and contempt of the men and women who work in the Public Service of Canada as this government has currently been showing.

This particular piece of legislation is nothing short of sledge hammer legislation forced upon members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada for the ship crews on the east and west coasts of Canada and along the St. Lawrence Seaway, as well as hospital workers right across this country.

This particular legislation really smells of the rot and deceit of this government in dealing with thousands and thousands of Canadians who are members of the Public Service. I firmly believe—and I know that a lot of people in the Public Service and a lot of unionists believe the same as I do—that it has been a very long time since staff relations or union management relations between the Public Service of Canada and the government of this country have ever been this bad.

This government has set about since 1984 systematically to dismantle the Public Service. It has set about to try to undercut the union movement, the trade union movement. The government set about to do it so that it could do things like privatize Canada Post.

Break the backs of the unions and then sell pieces of it off to your friends in private enterprise. Forget about the great jobs that the public servants have done since this country came into existence in 1867.

Over the last few weeks I watched the minister opposite responding to questions about ship crews on the east coast. I am going to try to keep my remarks to that because I know my colleagues on this side will be addressing the problems and the concerns of the hospital workers as they relate to this particular legislation.

I could not quite believe that the government was going to try their heavy-handed tactics on members of the ship crews. Since I have been elected I have seen, witnessed and heard from many people in the Public Service who are fed up with the treatment they have received from this government. I only have to think back to the hundreds of letters I received—and most members of this House have received them—from employees of a place like Canada Post, a Crown corporation.

We saw what happened in that Crown corporation. The government said: "Whoa, we had better get rid of this place. We are going to sell it off, but before we do that we have to get the union turned on itself". It set out on a pattern of forcing every single small issue, to get all of the postal stations and post offices across this country into the grievance procedure.

We get up in this House time after time after time and ask the minister responsible to respond to the real concerns that we hear about harassment at the post office, harassment of pregnant women at the post office, harassment of minority groups in that Crown corporation. We asked the minister over and over again to please tell us what kind of management instruction that Crown corporation was getting to be treating those men and women at Canada Post in such a callous and cruel manner.

Every time one asked a question of that particular minister he would get up, always have a little roll of his belly and a drop of his jaw, and he would laugh as he responded. I was hoping, and it is a terrible hope, that Canada Post was an isolated example. I thought perhaps it was just the insensitivity of top management at a Crown corporation. Maybe I am really stretching it to see this as almost a conspiracy from the top down.

Then we had the ship crews, 2,200 of them across Canada. I said earlier that they do a great job for this country. They ply the waters on the east coast, on the west coast and up the St. Lawrence Seaway. To listen to some of the rhetoric that has been falling out of the lips of some of the members opposite, they would have you believe that these are terrible individuals who are trying to destroy the economy of both coasts and of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Nothing could be further from the truth.

I just want to put it on the record so people know who these faceless men and women are when this type of nonsense comes from the government. These people have faces, they do a job, and they do a good job for the Public Service and for all Canadians.

I have here a newsletter which was to explain to people who were concerned about the lack of progress in the negotiations who the workers are. It says:

> We are the employees. We work on Canadian Coast Guard vessels on the east and west coasts and the Great Lakes, from large ice-breakers to buoy tenders, to Hovercraft and lifeboats, engaged in search and rescue operations. We work on armed fisheries vessels that ensure that proper monitoring of our fisheries resource is maintained both in policing the laws and in the research on improving and expanding the oceanographic resources that we all depend on. We work on Canadian Forces Auxiliary vessels in providing support for our naval vessels in the protection of our national sovereignty. We provide a service to our country in an honest and forthright manner.

That is who they are. Down in my neck of the woods on the east coast there are probably 1,500 of them. These are people you never hear of nor think of. But these are the individuals who for $18,000, $19,000 or $20,000 a year put themselves out on the high seas on the east coast. These are the very individuals who go out for $20,000 in five-storey swells when a vessel has put out a distress call. They do that for $20,000. It is not a pleasure cruise they are on. It is a tough job. It is a hard job and it is a job that they do and they feel proud of doing, and all they wanted was a decent wage for doing it. That is all that they asked for. They did not ask for anything special. They did not make any unreasonable demands. They were at the negotiating table for two years, two solid years.

It is nice that the President of the Treasury Board finally found out what these people do and that they are essential to the Public Service of Canada because for two years he and his negotiators did not negotiate in good faith with that union. For two years, they negotiated in bad faith.

I submit that they did that because they felt that when the time came and there was no agreement they would then designate those employees as essential and make sure they had to accept the contract from this government which does not want to negotiate in good faith with the trade unions and the Public Service. But they screwed up. When it came time to designate them as essential services, government members missed the deadline.

"My God, what do you do after missing the deadline? We have been negotiating for two years as if it were a joke, a lark, a useless exercise, but we missed the designation deadline. My goodness, we are going to have to really see what these people want, and what we are going to do with them. We do not have them under our control any more. This is a pretty bad situation", the government said.

They then wanted to start to negotiate but on the main issues. One of the main issues that these men and women and the ship crews wanted to have addressed was pay equity. My goodness, it is almost 1990. It is not 1890. Pay equity should be a fact of life and a piece of history. It should not be something that has to be debated on the floor of the House of Commons.

I have said it in this place before—and I hope I do not have to say it too many more times before it becomes obsolete and an issue that does not have to be addressed—for goodness sake, because I live on the east coast and I do a job that is the same as a job being done perhaps in the riding of the minister of fisheries, is that any reason at all to tell me that my labour is not worth the same as the labour for that particular job on the west coast or any other part of Canada?

This government talks all the time about pay equity. "We are in favour of equal pay for work of equal value". That is hollow rhetoric. Last year, during the federal election campaign, over 3,000 dockyard workers and others on the east coast were begging for wage parity. They said: "Tell me, in this day and age, how you can possibly discriminate against me because I live on the east coast? I am doing the same job as those good employees on the west coast, but you pay me less". It is a fundamental issue. It is fundamental to fairness in this country.

We legislate the laws and we set the tone of what is acceptable and what is not acceptable. For five years this government has said: "Pay equity is something we have to put in place. We are against wage discrimination". We are against discrimination, but it is okay by their definition of discrimination to discriminate against people who work on the east coast of this country and to pit them against their fellow workers and their brothers from the west coast. That is what this government does. Its actions speak a lot louder than its rhetoric when it comes to pay equity.

The union said: "Fine. We get, on average, $21,000 a year to risk our lives out on the icy Atlantic. Sometimes we have to stay away from our families for three months at a time for $21,000 a year. But if you are on the west coast, that is okay. You get $1,800 more for the same job, for the same hardship". It does not make any sense. The union said: "We are going to stand firm this time. Once and for all we are getting rid of that 27 years of wage inequity, that discriminatory practice, because, damn it, we are just as good as any other worker in this country doing the same job".

Time after time in this House and in committee, we asked the minister opposite about pay equity, and we asked him about regional rates of pay, and what you get are weasel words. This strike should have been settled. The contract should have been settled three months after those negotiations began, but the government says: "These people are being unreasonable". Well, I think that rhetoric from the government opposite is absolutely scandalous and it is unacceptable.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Let us look at these people, who risk their lives on the east coast and on the west coast to protect the Canadian fish stocks. They protect the stocks we have not given away to the foreign countries, and we have given most of them away. I am now even getting a rise out of the minister opposite. I guess he knows I am correct. They are out there doing fisheries patrols.

Is that a holiday? There are armed vessels on both coasts of this country trying to protect that valuable national resource. What do they want in return? They want fairness and recognition of their efforts by this government. They want to negotiate. God, we know that. They have tried for two years, but the government screwed up and did not get them designated. Then it had to find other means to have its way with these individuals. So what is done? The government comes in.

Many times in this House since the strike began three weeks ago, questions have been raised about safety, because we were concerned. There were 1,700 fishing boats. Lobster season was opening on the east coast. We said in this House: "We are concerned about the strike. We are concerned that there is a safety issue". We were repeatedly told in this House that there was no safety issue regarding this strike. Two days ago the Minister of Transport stood in his place and said: "They should all go to the same briefing meeting in the morning, then they would not get themselves into so much trouble". As reported in Hansard at page 6505 in response to a question from my hon. colleague for Ottawa West, the Minister of Transport stated:

> There is nothing true in the allegations that there is a problem of safety on the St. Lawrence River.

The next day we hear of strike-breaking legislation coming into this place. What does the government use as a reason for this legislation? Safety. There is supposed to be a big problem.

• (1600)

I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that if the government did not see a problem with 1,700 fishing boats on the east coast, the only reason I can see that it finds a problem now is that a few of its friends along the St. Lawrence Seaway, big businesses, are tweaking their Tory friends and saying: "Get rid of this strike now. We don't care what you have to do". The government has itself backed into a corner. It does not want to settle with these workers. What it is going to do is legislate them back to work; use a sledge-hammer approach to collective bargaining. The government should be ashamed of itself.

Let's look at what these workers want. For two years they have been without a contract. They said right off the bat that they wanted this $1,800 wage gap eliminated. That is in keeping with the policy of this government, a policy that it refuses to put into effect. Instead of getting $19,000 for that terribly difficult, dangerous job, they were going to get $1,800 more for that terribly difficult, dangerous job. That doesn't change the working conditions.

The other thing that these workers wanted was to see some shift differentials put in. My goodness, they go off for three months at a time. Treasury Board had great difficulty with the semantics of all this. They said that the workers were not really on a shift. They work from six to six or six to six, but that is not really a shift, that is a watch and as a watch they did not have anything to deal with that and they could not be given a watch differential because it is not in the guide book. The workers said: "Fine, we will get you out of that pickle".

On Department of National Defence vessels, the civilian employees get sea duty. They do not get paid very well either, $170 to $270 a month while they are at sea. That is not very much to ask, that is reasonable. They said: "We want sea duty. We do not want $500 a month, we want $177 a month". The government said it could not give them that. The workers said: "When we are away from our spouses and our families, we think it is reasonable to ask in the agreement to be allowed to call home, ship-to-shore, at the expense of the employer, the Government of Canada and make a five-minute call". The government said it could not possibly do that. Perhaps these workers will get homesick, perhaps they will find out what a terrible job it is and what a terrible employer they really have and they will want to go back to shore.

These are the types of things that these workers are looking for and this government says that they are unreasonable. The minister opposite stands up, and he would have you believe that these people are the scourge of the earth, that they are trying to milk the federal treasury for every single penny they can get. He loves to get up and, with his own mathematics, combine certain parts of a benefit package and certain parts of a wage package and come up with: "They want 17 per cent". I have talked to the unions and I believe what they are telling me because they are honest hard-working individuals. Their position has been misrepresented constantly by this government as this debate has gone on.

What do we do at this point? The government was very close to a settlement. It bungled it on the designations. Its bad faith bargaining was in full public view for all to see. We have another example of the lousy treatment that this federal government gives to members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada who do a job for each and every Canadian, and do a darn good job of it.

These workers wanted wage parity. The minister gets up in the House and, with a gleeful look on his face, in response to a question that I asked answered: "We have wage parity". We asked the minister to put it up front as a stand-alone issue. If you are going to say yes to wage parity, do not link it to any other outstanding issues in the contract.

What the government did basically was put wage parity up the other evening which, by the way, was supposed to be in a confidential meeting that the minister had with the union. He broke his confidence in the House the next day and then wonders why they have trouble listening and believing things that come out of this government. Then he smiles gleefully and says: "Well, we put it on the table. Wage parity is not an issue any more". It is an issue unless the government puts it up front and states that no matter what the resolution is on any of the other issues, it is going to give parity because it is right and it is the proper thing to do.

Now what they do is tie it up. They say: "We will give you wage parity", and tie it up in the straitjacket of other outstanding issues and push you in the direction of a long walk off a short pier. That is their idea of proper and fair collective bargaining. Well, it is not my idea and it is not the idea of most Canadians.

In conclusion, since my time is drawing to an end, but I could speak all day on this issue—

Mr. Crosby: Only if it makes sense.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): My hon. friend opposite says to make sense. I heard a great deal of good sense yesterday in the Halifax—Dartmouth area when the members of the labour union went over to see you in your office and spoke to you long distance. You should read the press reviews on that one.

I obviously have their hackles up on the other side.

In conclusion, I would pose the following questions. Why is this government now concerned at this late date with public safety when we know that the unions and the workers have provided proper safety measures? We have not had any emergency that has not been responded to within 33 minutes by that responsible union and workers. I ask the question, is $21,000 an unfair salary—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I really must interrupt the hon. member. I have been trying for quite a while to get his attention.

Questions and comments. The hon. member for Montmorency—Orléans.

[Translation]

Mr. DeBlois: Madam Speaker, I would have two comments and a question.

Opposition members seem to be giving the public the impression that they are the only ones who talk to the unions. We understand them, we like them, but we are the bad guys—we are anti-union.

I think it is important to remind the public listening to us and my colleagues in the House that we have dialogued. I received people from the Coast Guard at my riding office in Quebec City. I talked with them for an hour. I appreciate the work they do and in that regard, I accept the description of their difficult job given by my colleague from Dartmouth, who almost tore his clothes. Yes, the people working on the boats have a difficult job. They staged a responsible strike and I am very glad, in a way, that the strike helped us better understand how hard their work is.

The second remark, Madam Speaker, is that we must get it right. I was a journalist in Quebec City for 20 years. I covered emergency legislation and usually, when the government in Quebec passed back-to-work laws, it imposed working conditions. I remember very well the former Social Affairs Minister, Mr. Forget, saying that if workers had to be legislated back, they should be given less than the last management offer on the table; otherwise the workers would always be tempted to go to Parliament thinking that they had nothing to lose and everything to gain since they could never get less than the last management offer. I find the bill before us very humane; it leaves it up to a third party to determine working conditions.

The question I would like to ask the hon. member for Dartmouth, who was indignant because we were slow in paying workers on the east and west coasts the same, is this: Why did the Liberal Government tolerate eastern workers earning less than western workers for so long?

This is your legacy! How can you explain your tolerating for so long what we are now getting ready to correct?

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I am glad that the member entered into this very, very important debate. It is easy for members on the other side to reply to every problem or every question that is posed by saying that it was there when the Liberals were in power. The Conservatives are in power now, but if the Liberals were in power we would have been true to our word with the labour union movement on wage parity. If you do not believe me, look at the results from the last federal election, look at the places where those wage inequities were in place, and look at the stripe of the members that they elected. They were not on your side of the House very many times. Not very many times.

• (1610)

However, the member raises another very important issue. He talked about the fact that this is another strike and there is never quite enough to give and unions are always posturing. I pose a question generally. Is $21,000 a reasonable remuneration for the occupations that I have just described? How would individuals opposite feel if they worked in a plant and the people on the east side of the plant got paid one rate of pay and the people on the west side of the plant got paid a different rate of pay? It would do a lot for your morale, wouldn't it? It would do a lot to build your morale. Do you think that the federal government should destroy the collective bargaining process by introducing legislation like this when the two sides were lately, at least from what we hear from the front benches opposite, very close?

The outstanding issues are very small. They don't cost a lot of money. We hear that on the seaway the costs could be as much as $2 million a day while the strike goes on. In order to give them the $177 a month for sea duty, which I think is pretty reasonable, it would cost less than $6 million. The wage parity issue would cost less than $3 million to settle.

In conclusion, I decry this bill and I will do everything to stop it. My colleagues and I believe that it is time that this government gave our public servants the respect, recognition and remuneration they deserve and that this government should go back to the age-old principle of negotiating, not legislating collecting labour agreements with the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, could the hon. member for Dartmouth give to this House even one good reason that he has heard as to why the government supports higher wages on one coast than on the other? Is there one good reason they have come up with?

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): There is no good reason that wage discrimination should be allowed to be maintained. When the hon. minister opposite, the President of the Treasury Board, was at committee, I asked him about his position on wage parity. When I asked him about wage equity, he said to me that he agreed with the principle. He thought it was something that was very important but that we had to be careful. I said: "Why?" He said: "Because the settlements in the public sector will affect the private sector." I said: "First of all, even if that were true, it's still not reason enough to discriminate against a worker based on where they live."

I rose earlier in this House today on a standing order and talked about a problem in my area of discrimination against the largest native black community in Canada in the Preston area. That is in my area. Unfortunately in the private sector young black men make 42 per cent less on average than their non-black counterparts. Is that reason enough then for the government to say that anybody who is black or in a minority group in that area should get paid less because that is what the private sector gives them? That is utter nonsense. If that situation applies in dealing with minority groups in the private sector, it should equally apply in the Public Service of this country.

If you want to look specifically at the strikers, at the seamen and women on the east coast of Canada, they are getting paid about 32 per cent less than their private sector counterparts.

In conclusion, there is no good reason and it will be political folly for this government to introduce this piece of legislation.

Mr. Crosby: Madam Speaker, first let me make a very clear answer to the question asked by my colleague which the member for Dartmouth refused to answer. The President of the Treasury Board, in this House of Commons and elsewhere, has given to the ships' crews in east coast Canada wage parity with the ships' crews on the west coast. All they have to do is sign a collective agreement and they have parity, something that the Liberal government deprived them of for more than 20 years. That is the answer to that question.

Beyond that, to ensure some sanity in this debate, I wanted to give the member this instruction on the matter of when the government should enter into labour disputes to the extent of requiring back-to-work legislation. The test is this: "Unfortunately, however, there are times and situations when the spirit of compromise and the demonstration of good faith so necessary on the part of all concerned are found wanting. In such circumstances the federal government, as custodian of the economy and the protector of the public interest, must assume its responsibility." Those are the words of the Hon. Member for Papineau, the old riding of Saint-Michel, in this House on October 17, 1978. That is the test he provided. That is the test made by the Liberal Party. Will the member answer whether we are not following that test, his test?

Mr. MacDonald: I hope the Hon. Member for Halifax West still has the support of his researcher because he does not any longer have the support of his constituents.

The members opposite would like to pat themselves on the back. Let us just look at this, and again I am going to quote from one of their documents: "We have ships' crews with families that are living close to the poverty line. In fact, members with a spouse and two children make approximately $100 to $150 a month more than a similar family on social assistance." The hon. member opposite stands up, smiles, and pats himself on the back for legislating back-to-work and legislating probably a contract that will perpetuate that obscenity.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke—VIA Rail; the hon. member for Nepean—Arts and Culture; the hon. member for Prince Albert—Churchill River—The Environment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C-49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West.

Mrs. Catterall: Madam Speaker, the normal order of speaking this afternoon was disrupted by consent of the House. In fact, the Minister of Veterans Affairs spoke and we reversed our speaking order so that the minister could speak in lieu of my colleague from Dartmouth. My colleague from Dartmouth then took the minister's place. I think that requires that the normal speaking order now return to the Official Opposition except by consent of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is the Chair's understanding that there was consent earlier for the minister to speak, not as a reversal of the normal order. The understanding was that the fact that the minister had put a motion in front of the House at one minute to one would not be considered as the fact that he had already spoken. Henceforth, he was to take the normal turn. This was the understanding at the time. There was unanimous consent, both from the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for the Liberal Party and the Hon. Member for Vancouver East for the New Democratic Party.

Therefore, at this time I would recognize the Minister of Transport.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I appreciate your sense of fairness. I must say I regret having to rise in the House today on an urgent matter we have been asked to address.

Mr. Speaker, today is the 27th day of a strike by the bargaining unit for federal ships' crews, mainly crews of the ships of the Canadian Coast Guard. It is clear that this strike has a serious impact on many aspects of marine transport and threatens Canada's economy.

I would like to say a few words about the importance of this back-to-work legislation for maintaining marine transportation in Canada at a time when I believe we cannot afford to let it come to a stop.

• (1620)

Madam Speaker, the sectors most severely affected by the strike by federal ships' crews are the St. Lawrence Seaway, navigation on the St. Lawrence River downstream from Montreal, navigation to and from ports in Atlantic Canada including, of course, northeastern New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, and especially and above all, ship movements in all Canadian waters.

Madam Speaker, hon. members were advised of the fact that on December 1, because of concerns for navigation safety, I decided to stop navigation on the St. Lawrence River between Quebec City and Les Escoumins. On December 4, we assessed the situation further, and decided to allow ship movements and daytime navigation, provided there were two pilots on board.

Normally, coast guard ships maintain navigational aids on all shipping routes, doing so before and as ice conditions develop. Summer buoys must be replaced by special winter buoys, which are submerged by drifting ice. This year, because of the strike, 400 buoys are now out of service. The losses and damages involved represent millions of dollars. The fact is that resulting tonnage restrictions on the St. Lawrence River will probably have to be maintained until late spring, until all the heavy buoy anchors can be located and removed from shipping channels.

[English]

The St. Lawrence Seaway system is the world's foremost inland waterway and the foundation of the Canadian Inland Marine Transportation system. The provision of essential services, such as aids to navigation in ice-breaking, are key to the safety and effectiveness of the ocean link to and from the heartland of North America.

Faced with problems of delays in transportation, foreign confidence in Canada diminishes over time and buyers of our exports, particularly in the case of grain, will seek alternate, more reliable transportation systems or, worse yet, other suppliers entirely.

During 1988 the St. Lawrence Seaway carried over 20 million tonnes of bulk cargo such as iron ore and coal to and from ports in the Great Lakes system. Over 15 million tonnes of grain also were moved through the Seaway, and a further 4.5 million tonnes of general cargo were moved by this great waterway. The economic significance of such figures are enormous.

The seaway's yearly cargo throughput is in the order of 40 million tonnes. Sixty per cent of the seaway's traffic is shipped to or from overseas ports, chiefly in Europe, the Middle East and Africa.

I would like to say a few words about the effect that the recent record cold weather is having on the operation of the St. Lawrence Seaway. Operating conditions on the seaway are deteriorating as continued record cold weather is causing rapid build-up of ice through the system.

[Translation]

The canal on the South Shore, from Montreal to Lake Saint-Louis, which includes the Saint-Lambert and Côte-Sainte-Catherine locks, is completely covered with ice, which is getting steadily thicker as the cold weather continues. The canal is open to one-way traffic only, because of the thickness of the ice. Without icebreakers, navigation has become more difficult, and it may be necessary to close the section between Montreal and Lake Ontario earlier than usual.

[English]

As of midnight December 6, there were 51 ocean-going vessels in the Great Lakes system west of the St. Lambert Lock. Of these, 33 are still above the Welland Canal. There are an additional eight Canadian inland vessels per day requiring service. The average operating cost of these vessels varies from $5,000 to $25,000 per day and more, dependent upon the type of vessel.

Many of the vessels face long delays. These delays will be longer if ice-breaker support is not available. Some ocean vessels may even be trapped in the system for the winter if ice-breaker assistance is not provided.

Should a number of the 51 ocean-going vessels that are currently in the system be trapped, then the losses incurred will be huge. Early closure will also have a major impact on the viability of the Canadian inland fleet as they will be unable to meet all their commitments.

With the outlook for below normal temperatures to continue for the remainder of December, the announced clearance date of December 19 may not be achievable, and the dependability and reliability of the seaway as a transportation route will be jeopardized.

It is therefore critical that coast guard services be restored as soon as possible so that the seaway may be closed in an orderly fashion and all vessels can complete their transits.

In addition to the seaway, the St. Lawrence River ports have substantial impact on the local, regional and national economy. Traffic at Ports Canada facilities located on the St. Lawrence River generate over 16,500 jobs and $750 million in total income.

[Translation]

The 1988 daily average container traffic in the Port of Montreal was 15,000 tons, Madam Speaker, each ton worth $25 in revenue. The impact of the strike is estimated to be 50 per cent more per ton for containers transported by land. This figure is based on the estimated cost of shipping them by rail. All told, this could translate into daily losses amounting to $1.2 million.

On top of that the Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City grain elevators are losing orders. Grain sales have been slow this fall and now that the shipping season on the Great Lakes and in the St. Lawrence Seaway can come to an abrupt end practically overnight because of the extreme weather conditions, chances of catching up are very slim indeed.

Madam Speaker, the Canadian Wheat Board estimates that in excess of one million tons of export grains must be shipped from the St. Lawrence ports between now and January 1990. So far Trois-Rivières has lost three grain and one forest products shipments which had to be rerouted through another port. Ice jams on Lake Saint-Pierre are causing bottlenecks in the ports of Trois-Rivières and Quebec City. As a rule icebreakers could easily restore traffic to normal.

Madam Speaker, if shipping does not resume the City of Sept-Îles stands to lose 500,000 metric tons of cargo, mostly iron ore, shipped through the Great Lakes during the current shipping season.

Quite possibly Chicoutimi will have to do without the 50,000 metric tons of petroleum products that were to be shipped there. Madam Speaker, other vulnerable sectors include petroleum products, aluminum, titanium, lumber, grain and iron ore.

With respect to the petroleun industry, for example, the Lévis Ultramar refinery produces over 40 per cent of Quebec's total output. To maintain its operations the refinery must get a shipment of unprocessed petroleum every five days, and each shipment is estimated to be worth something like $11 million. Most of its products are usually loaded aboard ships bound for maritime terminals in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces.

• (1630)

[English]

Now, Madam Speaker, let us look at the problem of ships currently delayed and time lost. Today there are in excess of 70 ships experiencing delays in the St. Lawrence River below Montreal. In addition, there are 51 ocean-going vessels still to exit the St. Lawrence Seaway before its announced clearance date of December 19. This gives a total in excess of 120 ships affected or potentially affected if this strike is not immediately resolved.

At an estimated daily cost per ship of $5,000 to $25,000 per day or more, the losses in ship time alone are presently about $1 million per day and this figure could escalate to millions per day if all the ships are not able to exit the seaway.

Earlier we were talking about Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canada is feeling the brunt of the strike. For example, the port of Dalhousie in New Brunswick moved over 856,000 tonnes of commodities in 1988, all of it in support of Canada's international trade.

In the Miramichi region which includes ports of Newcastle, Chatham and Millbank, these facilities handled over 240,000 tonnes of commodities in 1988. Exports to international markets accounted for over 64 per cent of this traffic with an estimated value of these exports exceeding $121 million.

Major users of these ports include the New Brunswick Power Corporation, Stone Consolidated, Repap Enterprises, Acadia Forest Products, Northwood Pulp and Timber and the major oil companies, all of which depend upon support from Coast Guard icebreakers. Should ice conditions prohibit vessel arrivals for Repap Enterprise at Newcastle, the mill will find itself in a very difficult situation, as it depends on the regular supply of clay slurry to keep the mill in production. Any long-term disruption in the arrival of Repap vessels will likely result in mill shutdowns affecting approximately 700 to 800 mill employees.

I think that the impact of not having icebreakers for public port operation in northeastern New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island area could be devastating, particularly in the economic sense, vis-a-vis the lost wages for farmers and shippers involved in the potato industry and future losses in export due to the unreliable supply.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I think I have shown the dramatic impact of the present situation on the operation of the St. Lawrence Seaway, which is essential to the movement of grain from the Prairies. I mentioned the serious repercussions on the St. Lawrence, which is a sort of transportation pipeline to our industrial heartland. I also drew attention to the negative impact for Canadians in other regions of the country. Financial losses are increasing daily. This is really a national problem which must be solved with great urgency.

Madam Speaker, I would like to present the following motion to the House:

[English]

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment for the purpose of continuing second reading consideration of Bill C-49.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Would all members opposed to the motion please rise.

And more than 15 members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Since fifteen or more members have risen, the motion is deemed to have been withdrawn, pursuant to Standing Order 26(2).

Motion withdrawn.

[English]

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I just want to put one question to the Minister of Transport.

The government and the minister want Canadians to believe that Canadians generally and, in particular, certain sectors would be at a disadvantage because of the delay in the passage of this legislation. The blunt reality is that the government has had this issue for 22 months.

It should be noted in this House that when this kind of legislation has come before the House, as the member for Ottawa West has pointed out repeatedly over the last number of days, while it is true that opposition parties have voted against it, very seldom has there been a decision by the Opposition not to facilitate in every way possible the passage of the legislation; that is, the requirement for votes at every stage to the point where the government has been forced to use closure.

Fundamentally, the difference this time is that in our hearts and when we consult our conscience the Opposition knows that there has not been an honest attempt at collective bargaining on the government side. It simply has not been there for nearly two years. That is not the job of the Minister of Transport, it is the job of the President of the Treasury Board.

It is ironic, seeing that this government is led by the Prime Minister who made his reputation as a dynamic labour lawyer, that the legislation provides for two conciliation boards but, in both cases, the chairmen were picked by the government with no consultation with the unions involved.

There is a fundamental issue here. It is possible that some people will be inconvenienced and will be hurt, but it has to be said and it has to be clear that that is not the fault of health services workers who want equal pay for work of equal value. That is not the fault of people who work on ships at sea for 28 days at a time serving their nation, the second largest marine nation in the world. It is not the fault of those employees. It is the fault of a government that never intended to negotiate honestly, never intended to resolve this issue equitably and which now wants to pretend that these workers have to bear the burden of the inconvenience that may be out there for Canadians so it can use a hammer to solve this dispute. That has to be said clearly.

The other issue I want to make clear is one I want the minister to answer. The minister has talked about ships in the St. Lawrence Seaway and ships in the Great Lakes. We all understand that. We are all aware of the reality of the Canadian climate. But I want him to make clear that the reality is that the vast majority, if not all—and I have just had this confirmed—of Canadian vessels involved in hauling Canadian goods, whether it be wheat, grain or whatever, are ice-hardened vessels. They are quite capable, all of them, in the time remaining in the season given the likely timing of the government's bill, of moving out of that system.

What the minister is really doing today is making a plea—and it is understandable from his portfolio's point of view—that the foreign vessels not ice-hardened, that are not built for Canadian conditions and Canadian winters, get a chance to get out. Is that not what is really happening when we are being told by the Minister of Transport or the government that Canadian farmers or Canadian producers may be hurt? That is a fallacy because Canadian boats and Canadian traffic because of ice-hardened capabilities can move out of that St. Lawrence Seaway system.

If the government wants the strike resolved it can do it in a matter of hours. Bargain honestly and bargain fairly. Would the minister not agree?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Madam Speaker, I think the member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte would try to find any kind of excuse not to support the bill. It is up to him, but I would like to repeat what I said.

• (1640)

He said it is fallacious. I believe it is also fallacious to try to explain that three week's from the closure of the St. Lawrence Seaway we have 121 ships in the system with no possibility of determining exactly what the icing conditions will be. We have no possibility of knowing what the weather conditions will be within the next two or three weeks.

I face, as the Minister of Transport, the fact that a few of those ships could be stalled in the system all winter and what that represents in terms of consequences. I think everybody in this House has to keep in mind that we have two or three weeks. As the Minister of Transport I just have to ask the House to give me the possibility of using the ice-breakers in a way that we can, for example, free the ice-jam that we have under the bridge of Trois Rivière at the present time.

I have heard in this House so many times people talking about the environment. I said we have 121 ships in the system. When those ships are cruising or sitting in the water, there is the danger that that could create an environmental disaster. And now we have an icey St. Lawrence River. We have problems of icing in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, in the St. John River in New Brunswick, and it could be worse and worse tomorrow and the day after. And I am asking if that is a fallacious argument? I just ask the House to consider the fact which is in front of me. We have the reality. We do not have the time. We do not have weeks and weeks and weeks. We have days. The day after we had a disaster those same members would say that the minister did not take his responsibility, that he did not try to free the St. Lawrence River.

I do what I have to do. I tell Canadians that it is very serious when the Opposition does not understand. The President of Treasury Board explained this morning how 95 per cent of those people have already accepted working conditions but the demand is for 17.4 per cent when we have given 4 per cent to the others. Between that reality and the economic reality of Canada, with the ice conditions in the St. Lawrence Seaway and the weather conditions we could face, my choice is very quick. I need the legislation to keep jobs for Canadians in that sector and to keep the economy of this country healthy.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, I have a couple of points I would like to put to the minister. First, the government has repeated time and time again the overly simplistic suggestion that the union here is asking for 17 per cent when in fact it is asking for 17 per cent over 42 months. The two sides are not too far apart on money. There is a possibility of getting a settlement. The government did not have to wait until the dead of winter, it had two years to negotiate this. It could have got something settled.

The workers here have been out on strike for three and a half weeks. By the time this legislation is through, if the government persists in using closure to get it through, it will still be the end of next week before it is through. They have been out on strike for four and a half weeks. The government will be sending back to work employees who have been out on strike for an extended period of time. It is going to be doing so without giving them a single point of win for their effort. It is going to therefore end up with some very bitter, unhappy employees.

The government has said over and over again in this House that it is ready to concede pay equity, that it is ready to concede regional equity. I urge the government to consider including in this back-to-work bill, if it persists with this legislation, an agreement and understanding that the conciliation boards are to proceed from that principle, that the government acknowledges that the settlement must include pay equity and must include regional equity in this country.

Third, underlying this bill there is a very serious issue of principle and public policy. This country, through various governments, is committed to free collective bargaining. We stand in this House and in other places and applaud the Poles when they go out on the streets and win free collective bargaining. Free collective bargaining is an important principle and it is important public policy. There is no excuse possible, by the government simply raising a few individual cases, to force all of these workers to give up this fundamental democratic right. I urge the government to reconsider this iniquitous bill.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A short answer from the Minister.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Madam Speaker, yes, very briefly.

[English]

I do not have any time to answer the question. The member said that we will face very bitter, unhappy people. But I am looking after 26 million very unhappy Canadians. I agree with the principles that the member put forward.

But there is another principle in terms of the free collective bargaining. When we jeopardize the economy and thousands of Canadian jobs, the government has to take responsibility. That is what we do. My friend is from Victoria and we are different in terms of the way we manage things. They do not face the same ultimatums we have here. We know that the ice is getting thicker and thicker and we have to face that reality. We do not have two or three weeks. We have days. That is why I ask my friend to support the bill, to give us the possibility of bringing people to the table and find an agreement. That is what we want.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The hon. member from Halifax.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Madam Speaker, I am desolate that the hon. minister is leaving. I wish he might wait to hear one comment. Is he aware that, indeed, two Russian ships have cleared the Seaway today, because of their ice-hardened abilities, just like the Canadian ships that he claims are tied up and making the populous unhappy and uncomfortable?

Indeed, the Canadian ships have the ice-hardened capacity as well and will manage to get out of the Seaway in these conditions this week or next week. So the time that he considers so crucial to the economy of this country is, perhaps, not as crucial as the hon. minister has led us to believe. The Russians did it. I would imagine that Canadian ships and Canadian seamen can do the same thing.

But that is typical of this government. Across this country people are confused, dumbfounded and bewildered. They are puzzled at the treatment they get. They got promises from the government during the election campaign of 1988 that are broken one by one by one, ten by ten by ten, fifty by fifty by fifty—promises to keep VIA Rail, promises not to tamper with UI and promises of national day care. And what do we get? Instead of VIA Rail, instead of a national dream, we receive a national nightmare. Instead of a just and equitable UI program, we receive a mangled and bloodied program that helps few. Instead of a national day care system, the government was kind enough to offer us a new 9 per cent goods and services tax. And what are Canadians supposed to believe from these people?

Today's events with ships' crews and hospital service workers are just another case in point of how this government has perfected the art of speaking out of both sides of its mouth.

Here we have a situation whereby the government has and is demonstrating absolutely no regard for civil liberties and individual rights. And surprising as it is, this noble government has turned its back on the great crucible of human rights. This is the government which has spoken out so often against the human rights abuses in other nations and which condemned the Government of China for its actions last June. This is the government which less than a year ago applauded its leader when he said our Constitution is not worth the paper it is written on because the notwithstanding clause does not fully protect individual rights.

This government, so clearly committed to human rights, was found to have discriminated against hospital service staff. The Human Rights Tribunal ruled that this human rights conscious government had to re-evaluate all hospital service worker positions and revise their classification. Isn't it surprising that this government would profess to be committed to one thing and then act in a completely different manner? But this is the sad truth. Even after the Human Rights Commission told the government that it was wrong, that it was violating fundamental individual rights, the government went on to frustrate and impede other efforts of ships crews and hospital service workers to attain pay equity.

• (1650)

In 1988, the Treasury Board missed the deadline for submitting to the Public Service Staff Relations Board lists of personnel to be designated essential during the round of bargaining after contracts ended on December 31, 1987. Nine departments failed to meet the deadline for submitting lists of their own essential personnel.

Mr. Crosbie: How many?

Ms. Clancy: Nine. Nine, John. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine.

Twice since, however, the Federal Court has held that this mistake could not be overlooked, that the government had acted erroneously. Your government. The Minister from St. John's government.

What does this say about Canada's government? I guess it doesn't say a whole lot. In fact, I often wonder how much difficulty the hon. members on the other side of the House have looking at themselves in the mirror every morning, some more than others probably.

The issue before us is the striking ships crews and the striking hospital service workers. Let us wipe the slate clean. Let's forget the broken promises, the ineptitude, the lack of commitment and the eternal word twisting. What we have before us is an opportunity for the government to put its money where its mouth is.

Here we have a government which claims so sanctimoniously to be committed to human rights. Let us see if it is prepared to back up its words with action. The hon. Minister of Transport who scuttled out of here a few minutes ago said that he does not want to hold up the ships.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Ms. Clancy: Is there anything wrong with "scuttle"? It is a word in Nova Scotia that means move quickly. You probably don't know that in your part of the country.

Anyway, the hon. minister who left here a few minutes ago talked about the fact that we should not hold up the ships. We already mentioned to the hon. minister about the Russian ships that cleared the Seaway today and the fact that Canadian ships have the ability to clear the Seaway for the rest of this week and next week as well.

We are with the minister. We want the ships to move. What is the answer? The answer is to settle the strike, give the workers what they deserve. I guess that is too simplistic for the government. In fact, I am issuing a challenge to this government. As difficult as it will be and as much as it will place pressure on this government, I am challenging this government to be consistent. I am challenging this government to honour its word and to respect democratic individual rights.

I am very aware that I am asking this government to do something that it finds very difficult. Five years of habit is intensely hard to break but let's see if we can inject some integrity back into political words. It would be of benefit to all of us.

The government claims to be committed to democratic principle and individual rights. Then let it withdraw its motion for back to work legislation. The right to strike is a fundamental, democratic right. It is a form of peaceful dissent which must not be tampered with through government force or government coercion. In fact, the right to strike is such a fundamental right that many other rights are directly hinged to it.

Why is this government going through this charade with the PSAC employees? Again, the hon. Minister of Transport mentioned that the strike had been going on for 27 days. These ships crews workers on the east coast have gone through 27 years of wage disparity—27 years! Where is the fairness? Where is the justice in that? I see that none of the members on the other side of the House can even look up. In other words, they are certainly ashamed, and they should be.

In other words, no one here on this side of the House disagrees with the concept of pay equity. The government knows that legally, ethically and morally it has no leg to stand on. The bottom line is that pay inequity is a concept only accepted by dinosaurs, dodo birds and Tories. In other words, no one here in this country with the exception of this government accepts notions of pay inequity as an acceptable standard.

In the Atlantic provinces such employment opportunities, as provided by the Bedford Institute of Oceanography and search and rescue among others, constitute an integral part of the economic and societal life of my city and my province. For 27 years persons within such professions have had to suffer pay inequities with their counterparts in the rest of the country.

Further, to attempt to redress the 27 years of inequality, they have sought the commencement of sea pay, a concept which may be foreign to some central Canadians. It is obviously foreign to the government. But to those who make their living on the high seas, to those who go down to the sea in ships, it is a concept which is absolutely just.

What is most ironic is that this government seems to be holding up negotiations on the issue of sea pay because it will cost some $2 million annually. We heard the minister speaking previously about the amount of money that it is costing us to hold up the ships in the Great Lakes. We already know, by the way, that most of the ships could get moving.

This is the same government that is paralyzing negotiations with ships crews at a cost to taxpayers of $2 million a day. This government is either short on sense, God forbid, or long on money, which it certainly would not claim to be, because it would be clear that ending this injustice would pay for itself in three short days.

In Atlantic Canada we have learned what we have to put up with to keep a special way of life. Canadians across the country always look at the easterners as people who will make do with little. Maybe we can put up with a lot and make do with a little, but one value which has remained overwhelmingly consistent is that an honest day's work deserves an honest day's pay. It does not cost any less for easterners to feed their families, house their families, or clothe their families. But the government does not see it this way. For some unexplained reason this government seems to think that it is just to underpay Atlantic Canadians.

This is just another example of the recurrent contradictions inherent in this government, for certain cabinet ministers are not forced to accept wage differentials according to geography, and neither are MPs. Why, then, Madam Speaker, should ships' crews accept wage differentials?

Different standards are unacceptable in a country that alleges to believe in justice and equality. Forcing workers back to work and forcing workers to accept standards which are entirely inconsistent with the values of this country will create moral problems and an innate distrust of government for years to come.

I believe that we must also pay tribute to those in search and rescue who have never failed throughout this strike to respond to emergencies. In every case, the response time has remained under the statutory limits of 30 minutes. It is not a bad record for strikers.

Here I must note that in Kingston, Ontario, today, this government locked out those workers who were keeping themselves on alert for just such an emergency situation. It is great to know that people care. The right to strike must be respected. The right of the workers must be respected. The fact that workers in the east, particularly in the Atlantic provinces, deserve the same treatment as others, should not even be a subject for question.

The need to address 27 years of inequity should not be ignored by a democratic government. In Canada as we move into the 1990s, the concepts of equality should be written in stone. They should not be open to this kind of question. Sadly, however, very little in the way of truth and justice appears to be written in stone for this government.

In closing, let us make no mistake that Haligonians and Atlantic Canadians, ships crews in the east, hospital workers in the east are not pleading. We are not beseeching and we are not begging. We are demanding justice and we are demanding it today.

Madam Speaker, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-49, an Act to provide for the resumption of certain government services be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months' hence.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is five o'clock. I have put the motion to the House.

At this time, I must advise the House that I have received a written notice from the hon. member for Essex—Windsor that he is unable to move his motion during the hour of Private Members' Business on Friday, December 8, 1989.

[Translation]

Since it was not possible to switch positions on the order of precedence, in accordance with Standing Order 94, I order the clerks to move this item to the bottom of the precidence list.

[English]

The hour for Private Members' Business will thus be cancelled and pursuant to Standing Order 94, the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

THE ENVIRONMENT

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT ASSESSMENT

The house resumed from Tuesday, October 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wenman:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider introducing legislation to fully protect the Canadian environment through the institution of mandatory environmental impact assessment procedures which would allow for assessments, prior to the construction of installations, public or private, of projects which may prove to be potentially damaging to the environment.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, first of all I would like to take this opportunity to address a few words to the mover of the motion, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. I would like to bring to the attention of the members of the House that this member had the foresight to introduce a private member's bill almost a decade ago which was entitled Bill C-458. The objective of that bill was to legislate a federal environmental assessment process. His proposed environmental impact assessment act was the first initiative to make environmental assessment mandatory for all federal proposals.

Many of the concepts contained in his bill were very advanced. For example, his definition of the term "undertaking" would have expanded the scope of environmental assessment to include policies as well as projects. This broader scope for environmental assessment has only gained a wider audience in the last couple of years.

As we all know, the hon. member's motion has come at a very opportune time. He has given us a chance to consider the whole issue of environmental assessment on the very eve of the government's introduction of its own bill to reform the federal environmental assessment process. The act, and its regulations, will contain many of the features the hon. member foresaw as being necessary back in January 1979.

All members of this House and the public at large recognize that environmental issues can no longer be ignored. Twenty years ago, few of us would have predicted that the environment would become the critical issue of the latter part of the 1980s and the 1990s, as indeed it is now and will be, I think, into the next century.

Acceptance of sound environmental management is an issue which cuts across ideological lines, national boundaries and generation gaps. All anyone need do is watch the evening news. One is likely, on any given night, to see a story involving some element of environmental degradation.

On occasion, we hear reference to the attack on the earth's protective ozone layer, or perhaps there is a story on the dangers of global warming, or there is the continuing saga, which we hope will soon be addressed, of the impact of acid rain on Canada and other parts of North America. There is the question of chemicals and to what extent they are governing our day-to-day lives. There is the fact that a thousand new-made substances are appearing annually. There is the question of the six million hectares of land that become desert in each and every year. There is the issue of the world's exploding population and the question of how it will support itself in the future.

For the first time in our history, human activities are undermining the stability of the ecosystem on a global scale. The impact is worldwide. No one anywhere can or will be able to escape.

The impact is economic. It threatens our very way of life; it threatens our ability to sustain ourselves. The impacts are intergenerational. We are very, very conscious of the fact that the futures of our children and our grandchildren are very, very much at stake.

Does this mean, however, that there can be no growth due to the dangers which exist? The answer is, I believe, and I think this is a view shared by many members of this House, is that that is not the case.

In 1987, after four years of deliberation, the Brundtland commission reported and provided us with a guideline which has been adopted more and more throughout the world. That guideline's term, of course, is sustainable development. In using that term, the commission meant, "meeting the needs of present generation without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs".

In other words, the Brundtland commission was talking about the fact that we could no longer afford to live off the earth's capital. We could not longer afford to destroy and deplete our resources. We must anticipate, and by anticipating prevent environmental degradation. We must ensure that environmental considerations are a part of the decision-making in the first instance rather than an afterthought as has unfortunately been the case for so many decades.

This government is committed to the concept of sustainable development. We recognize environmental assessment is a critical tool in achieving that sustainable development. We are committed to providing the Canadian people with a comprehensive environmental assessment process which will be applied to all federal activities and which will ensure that environmental considerations are at the very heart of federal government decision-making.

The environmental assessment act which will soon be before this House and its regulations will give the federal environmental assessment process a statutory base which, in my opinion, it desperately needs. It will mean that environmental assessment will be mandatory for all activities within the decision-making authority of federal institutions. It will more clearly define the roles and responsibilities of all federal departments and agencies. It will begin to develop a systematic meshing of federal environmental assessment procedures with environmental procedures of other federal agencies and jurisdictions. It will also ensure, and I think this is of utmost importance, that Canadian activities abroad are environmentally sound.

In closing, I would like to thank the hon. member for Fraser Valley West for proposing this motion which has given all members of this House a chance to consider and to speak on the very important issue of the establishment of an environmental assessment process that is predictable, fair, open and accountable.

I wish, however, to propose a simple but in my opinion a necessary amendment to this important motion that will Valley West when he spoke to this House when introducing the motion. At that time he emphasized the fact that the federal government can only bind itself in the areas of federal jurisdiction.

I am proposing that his observation as expressed then be incorporated explicitly into the motion. Consequently, I move, seconded by the member for Selkirk:

> That the motion be amended by adding immediately after the word "projects" the following:
> "falling within federal jurisdiction".

I look forward to supporting both the amendment and the motion as amended.

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Madam Speaker, it is with great interest and concern that I rise today in the House to speak to Motion No. 458, calling for environmental impact assessments for all major development within federal jurisdiction. I strongly support this motion which has been introduced by my colleague from Fraser Valley West.

As a member of Parliament from Manitoba, this motion is of great interest to me because of recent environmental issues within my province. It is of great importance because it calls for the environmental assessment of all projects, both public and private. At the present time, environmental assessment regulations consist of environmental assessments and review process guidelines which only federal projects are required to follow.

The need for speedy action was reinforced on April 10, 1989, when the Federal Court halted all activity on the Rafferty–Alameda dam project because the process had not been followed. As a result of this decision, there is now a question in the minds of many about the correct administrative procedure for the environmental assessment of a federal proposal. In order to understand the need for the reform of the federal assessment and review process, it is important to look briefly at its history.

In June 1987, cabinet directed the environment minister to release a green paper to stimulate discussion on possible improvements, to undertake public consultations and to make recommendations for reform. From November 1987 to March 1988, public consultations on improving the EARP were held in each province and territory.

On October 20, 1988, the environment minister announced that the federal environmental assessment and review process would be legislated and strengthened.

• (1710)

Every federal undertaking and every undertaking on federal lands will be subjected to a thorough environmental impact study. This was announced following year–long nation–wide consultations with environmental and other public interest groups, industry, academics, provincial and territorial governments.

Although they are excellent and much needed measures, they do not go far enough. A case in point which affected Manitoba was Saskatchewan's Rafferty–Alameda dam project.

Prior to April 1989, the uncertain EARP guidelines contributed to a situation with the Rafferty–Alameda dam project. From 1984 to 1988, planning for the project proceeded according to provincial, not federal, guidelines. The Federal Court suspended work because it concluded that all federal environmental matters had not been adequately addressed by the provincial assessment process.

There is a need for a federal environmental assessment act. It should clearly state who is responsible for what and how the federal and provincial governments can work together.

After the Federal Court's decision, public meetings were held to review the results of a project evaluation prepared early in the year by Environment Canada. An independent consultant, Vern Millard, chaired the meetings. As a result of Mr. Millard's report, the environment minister announced that the project may proceed but, only—and I say but only—if strict environmental conditions were obeyed.

In reconsidering the application of the Saskatchewan Water Corporation to construct the dams, the federal government adopted the position that Manitoba's water uses should be determined and therefore there should be mitigation for adverse environmental impacts. The minister said that while the dams will help reduce an annual average of $640,000 in flood damage in Manitoba, the Manitoba government has expressed concerns that groundwater pumping may be required to augment water supplies in the project reservoirs. Minimum water flows received by Manitoba will continue to be governed by existing international agreements administered by the International Joint Commission.

On the water quality issue, the minister said that Manitoba, together with North Dakota, will have a direct say in the establishment of a proposed multi–jurisdictional water quality monitoring committee. In January 1988, an agreement was reached by Canadian, American, provincial and state government officials that requires parties to negotiate water quality objectives for the Souris River water as it exits Saskatchewan, flows into North Dakota and later re–enters Canada in Manitoba. These quality objectives, to be established within 19 months, well before the reservoirs are filled, will establish numerical values for certain parameters in order to protect present and foreseeable water uses in the Souris River water basin.

The objectives can be reached through such measures as adjustment of release rates, mixing water from Alameda and Rafferty reservoirs, and using the high–level rather than low–level outlets. The compliance will be strictly monitored. Also, Manitoba will have the opportunity to participate fully in the establishment of water quality objectives and monitoring programs.

As a representative from Manitoba, I applaud the private member's motion which calls for the reform of the federal environmental assessment review process. It is imperative, as the motion states, that a compulsory environmental impact assessment legislation be instituted to fully protect the Canadian environment through the institution of a mandatory environmental impact assessment procedures which would allow for assessments prior to the construction of installations, public or private of projects which may prove to be potentially damaging to the environment.

At the present time, the citizens of Winnipeg are facing an environmental issue which has a potential effect on their drinking water. A proposed gold mine and other recreational developments at Shoal Lake in Ontario, a primary source of drinking water for the city of Winnipeg, have created fear that these activities may have an adverse effect on the city's drinking water.

Under the present environmental assessment and review process, the processed gold mine, being primarily an issue between two provinces, may not have to undergo a mandatory federal government environmental assessment review process.

However, there have been negotiations between Manitoba, Ontario and Ottawa to ensure that this situation be dealt with properly. This resulted in a statement by the federal Minister of the Environment in June that a full environmental assessment of the proposed Shoal Lake gold mine will be conducted before any licence is issued. I think it is important to note that these negotiations were voluntary on the part of the provinces.

I urge the government to establish more clearly defined ways to mesh the procedure of the EARP guidelines with the procedures of other agencies and jurisdictions so that all participants in the reform process will know the rules in advance. Then the federal departments and provincial governments, industry and environmental groups will know both their rights and their responsibilities. The goal of this motion is to clarify the current uncertainty among all levels of government so that in future, duplications can be minimized. Both time and taxpayers money will be saved.

In conclusion, the key element in any environmental assessment process is the opportunity for governmental and public participation early in the planning of a major development. We will improve the management of Manitoba's environment and Canada's environment by bringing forward legislation which requires an environmental assessment of all federal policies and projects. Finally, we will enhance the government's strength and credibility when all sectors of society know that they may actively participate in the assessment of proposals that may adversely affect their environment.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed pleased to speak in support of this motion introduced by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West and seconded by the hon. member for Davenport, providing that the government should consider introducing legislation to fully protect the Canadian environment through the institution of mandatory environment impact assessment procedures which would allow for assessments prior to the installations, public or private, of projects which may prove to be potentially damaging to the environment.

Before addressing the motion specifically, I would like to speak on a broader level about the need to protect the environment. The state of the environment, especially the rate at which it changes, is of fundamental importance to a nation's long–term well–being. Canadians have benefited greatly from Canada's vast natural resources. Forests, fisheries, agriculture, fur–bearing animals and minerals have been the backbone of Canada's economic development.

But the desire for continuous improvements in the economic standard of living has not, until recently, been accompanied by a sufficient awareness of some serious adverse environmental effects of economic development. As prominent environmentalist, David Suzuki, points out, economic growth has become an end in itself, "a mindless goal that is sought by every country in the world and the very measure of progress". We must reverse this insane idea that growth is of vital necessity if we really want to preserve something for future generations, to meet their needs, the essence of sustainable development.

It is this irrational and self-destructive use of economic growth as the overriding criterion of national well-being that is the number one obstacle which prevents us from being able to successfully address our environmental problems today. But there are other obstacles.

One is a societal mindset that remains trapped in sectoral and disciplinary boundaries. For example, myopic economists still leave environmental concerns to ecologists, and energy producers develop new energy sources for others to clean up.

Another obstacle which prevents us from being able to develop a coherent and effective strategic plan to protect our environment is the institutional rigidity of our political system. Decisions are made too often for short-term political gain rather than for long-term environmental benefit.

Finally, we are trying to clean up and protect the environment with ad hoc, linear methods that are ineffective given the cumulative, synergistic nature of the problem. We deal with the effects rather than causes, with symptomatic treatment rather than definitive cures or prevention.

• (1720)

Because environmental impact assessment procedures are a preventive tool, they are an essential element in an effective environmental strategy. This is why I support this motion.

Canada is a democratic federation operating in a mixed economy. Hence, management and control of resources, their uses and their by-products, is dispersed between the different levels of government and the private sector. One of the federal government's responsibilities in this area is to establish national standards for adoption and enforcement by the provincial governments.

Environmental impact assessment has existed at the federal level since the 1970s. The environment assessment and review process has been revised since, but it is still not adequate.

Instead of specific legislation, we have an administrative policy which the government, any government, can change at will. There are no safeguards or opportunities for real public scrutiny. Its legal status remains uncertain and less clear than if it were in the form of a statute passed by this Parliament. Decisions can be ignored and there exists no recourse mechanism to prevent this. Jurisdictional disorder and dispute between the federal and provincial levels of government continue to persist.

In light of these problems with the environmental assessment and review process and given the importance of the environment, the government must introduce legislation to fully protect our environment and this includes instituting mandatory environmental impact assessment procedures. Compulsory environmental impact assessments will insure that all levels of government will be informed of all factors which affect a project or a product and will clarify the current jurisdictional dispute among different levels of government and will minimize duplication and save time and effort.

Future legislation on environmental impact assessments must cast a wide net and capture all undertakings that have any federal aspect or element. Exemptions for projects that have a very minor federal component or where provisions exist to avoid duplication of assessment can then be built into this statute.

Also, studies should be conducted which examine the effect on the biophysical environment, not only of projects or products, but also of policies and programs. Also, assessments must review cultural, social and economic impacts of the projects and policies as well.

I would like to give one example of recent events which occurred as a result of nebulous nature of the current environmental review process. The federal government issued a licence for the Rafferty-Alameda Dam project in Saskatchewan without following its own procedure for assessing the plan which includes two major dams and reservoirs on the Souris River. To speed construction, federal authorities relied on the assessments of the Saskatchewan government.

The Canadian Wildlife Federation challenged the federal government's decision to issue a licence without a proper assessment of the potential impact on wildlife and water in the Souris River. The Federal Court of Canada quashed the licence and ordered a federal environment impact review.

The government then took another shortcut and held quick public hearings instead of a full scale review. The preliminary evaluation indicated potential worsening of water quality and quantity as the river enters Manitoba, with negative impact on certain plants and birds in this province. The report noted that there was a lack of information about these issues and called for an assessment of the impact on water quality and monitoring plans for birds and wildlife.

The Manitoba provincial government wanted a full environmental impact review, but the moderator of the hearings on the preliminary reports said that previous studies were enough and a full federal environmental assessment was not necessary. The federal environment minister agreed, and a new licence was issued, accompanied by 22 conditions, such that Saskatchewan must replace habitat and monitor water quality.

The federal government's failure to have a full assessment before issuing the licence shows that this government is ready and willing to abandon its commitment to the environment whenever it is politically or economically expedient for it to do so. This is scandalous. This is why we need legislation making environmental assessments compulsory. The confusion over the Rafferty–Alameda dam project was a case of a bad process leading to bad policy in programs.

Clearly, there is a need for more consistent and straightforward federal government legislation in this area. The Minister of the Environment has noted that he shares the view that there is a need for a statutory requirement to conduct an environmental assessment of all proposals falling within the area of federal responsibility.

Land, water and air are matters not confined within provincial or even federal boundaries. They are international. We have an obligation to preserve our lands, our wilderness, our water and the air we breathe. Canadians must develop a new mindset, a new attitude. It is no longer a question of who is right, the demands of short–term profits and political gains, or the future of our planet. It is now time to act.

I hope the government will put its words into deeds and support this motion. Allow me, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of constituents of Winnipeg North, and on behalf of all Canadians, to conclude with a quotation from the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development:

> Most of today's decision makers will be dead before the planet suffers the full consequences of acid rain, global warming, ozone depletion, widespread desertification and species loss. Most of today's young voters will be alive.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian with a strong interest in environmental matters, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to rise today to express my views on Motion No. 485 as amended, which was presented to this House by my esteemed colleague from Fraser Valley West.

This motion calls for legislation to fully protect the Canadian environment through the institution of mandatory environmental impact assessment procedures. Before commenting further on the substance of this motion, I think it is appropriate that I commend my colleague for Fraser Valley West for his long–time commitment to the matter at hand.

His interest began, I believe, back in 1979 when he presented a private members' bill in this House. He is to be congratulated for his patience and diligence on this issue. In a time of instant environmentalists, it is always a pleasure to see an individual who has demonstrated an interest in the environment long before it became the fashionable thing to do.

Returning to the matter before us, the purpose of Motion No. 485, as amended, is to establish a statutory process to assess the environmental impact of development before the development occurs rather than after the damage begins.

For many years, economic and engineering studies have accompanied any major new proposal, and with the increasing importance of environmental issues, an environmental review is now becoming part of the process. Unfortunately, the existing process of the federal environmental assessment and review process, or EARP, as it is known in its short form, is flawed. Current EARP guidelines are uncertain because they are basically an administrative policy and as such can be changed by future governments through an order in council.

As well, the ad hoc nature of the current regime makes its legal status somewhat uncertain. This uncertainty led to the recent problems with the Rafferty dam project which has been referred to earlier in debate. A statutory process as called for in the motion before us would eliminate the problems of the current system. The environment minister is fully aware of this fact and has made public his intention to introduce legislation to reform the federal EARP. I look forward to this legislation and sincerely hope that it will adequately address the problem I have described.

• (1730)

While on the topic of the proposed legislation, I would like to make a few comments on a story that appeared in the December 1, 1989 edition of The Ottawa Citizen. This article, which was based on leaked documents, made the claim that the environment minister, and I quote:

> —appeared to be narrowing the scope of new environmental assessment legislation so that fewer projects will come under review. While this may or may not be true, it is important to understand that the cabinet has not yet begun consideration of the bill and therefore it is quite premature and inappropriate to comment on the substance of the legislation. When the legislation is tabled in this House there will be ample time given to all members to debate its content.
> In the meantime members with an interest in this legislation have the opportunity to make their own views known through debate on the motion before us.

As my colleague from Fraser Valley West stated in opening the debate on this motion, "the government will examine the content of this debate and choose from the ideas of members of this House. The final draft of this legislation has not been prepared and therefore this is the perfect opportunity to bring forward positive suggestions".

A goal of the motion before us is to clarify the current disorder that exists in EARP. It would minimize duplication and would save a great deal of time and effort.

I have had the honour of serving this House for 17 years, and I can assure Your Honour that it is always a pleasure to see proposals that would eliminate bureaucratic red tape and efficiency. For this reason alone the motion before us is a very positive one.

At this point I would like to explain why I personally support the need for a statutory process of environmental assessment. As you all know, I have dedicated a great deal of my time and energy to the fight against acid rain. Most recently I had the honour of serving as the chairman of the special committee on acid rain in the last Parliament.

One of the great difficulties of this fight was that we were engaged in after the fact prevention. If a system of before the fact prevention had been in place in the past, we could have possibly avoided a great deal of the acid rain problem. For this reason I support the implementation of a statutory environmental assessment process. Such a process offers the kind of preventive measure we vitally need in this country to avoid future environmental problems.

Now I would like to turn to a matter which has created much discussion and concern in Canada and yes, indeed, around the world, this being the issue of sustainable development. Ever since the report of the World Commission on Environment and Development which is most often referred to as the Brundtland commission, there has been an enormous amount of rhetoric on this issue. However the problem is that the rhetoric has far outdistanced any substantive action on this very important matter.

I must admit that this government is not guiltless in this regard. I am certain that while a great many Canadians have heard discussion about sustainable development, a large proportion are unsure of what it really is; perhaps even some in this House. For this reason I think it is important to read into the record a quote from the Brundtland commission report:

> Sustainable development is development that meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs.

The report stated that there was:

> —the possibility for a new era of economic growth, one that must be based on policies that sustain and expand the environmental resource base.

I sincerely hope that this is true. However this hope for the future is based on the condition that we now take decisive political action that would enable us to begin managing our resources in a manner which ensures both sustainable human progress and, more important, human survival.

This condition illustrates the importance of debate on the motion before us. Motion 485 provides members on all sides of this House with the opportunity to play a role in bringing about the decisive political action referred to by the Brundtland commission.

By standing up in this House and voting in favour of this motion, we will be sending a clear message to the people of Canada, and indeed the world, that we are committed to taking the actions necessary to make sustainable development a reality. While some may say that it is merely a symbolic vote in light of the fact that the environment minister has already stated his intention to present legislation before this House, we as politicians are fully aware of the importance of such symbolic measures.

When legislation as requested in this motion is presented to this House, certainly I will gladly stand in my place and discuss its substance. In the meantime, I look forward to the opportunity to lend my support to Motion No. 485 as amended. I ask that all members join me in seeing that this motion is passed.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Madam Speaker, I too am pleased to rise in support of this motion and in particular the amendment that was made by the hon. member. I have some comments I would like to make given the introduction of this motion. Some of the members have talked about rhetoric. Of course we have heard a great deal of that from the government in terms of the environment and environmental assessment in particular.

In question today is a motion that if passed will certainly give direction to the government to legislate an environmental assessment review process. It would be made mandatory and would allow the review of projects under federal jurisdiction; in a sense going through those projects to see that they are environmentally sound, socially sound and economically sound.

While I support the motion there are some areas in it that I think could be strengthened. We will certainly see, if and when the minister introduces the legislation, if it is included. I am referring in particular to questions about the independence of an environmental assessment review process, about the kind of criteria that an EARP, a review process would have to consider, especially when we have to take into question ecosystems that go beyond one particular river or one particular stream.

The case of the massive expansion of pulp mills in northern Alberta is a perfect example of impact going beyond one particular area and having tremendous negative impact across northern Alberta and indeed into the territories.

As well, I am concerned about the need to ensure and in fact to guarantee that there is funding to intervener groups, native groups, environmental groups, trade unionists and chambers of commerce, so that they have an opportunity to participate and prepare the necessary studies. When all groups have such an opportunity, we know and we can be assured that we will get a better project and that industry or government departments initiating projects will know clearly what are those guidelines and how to proceed.

All too often government departments and industry think that inviting the neighbours over for some coffee and doughnuts is an adequate environmental assessment review. I reject that. I think the reason we have adequate assessment procedures is so that all questions can be considered fairly and adequately and so that the right input can be provided to the various government departments which will be dealing with the particular project.

• (1740)

Frankly I was particularly concerned by the comments from the member for Parry Sound—Muskoka. I appreciate his support for the motion, but we should take into account the time that this government has had, this born again government now concerned about the environment, to consider environmental assessment. We now hear that a final draft of the environmental assessment legislation has yet to be prepared. Cabinet has not even considered it.

The evidence is clear in our forestry committee. When we asked the minister of forests what will the impact be of this environment minister's new legislation on assessment and perhaps on pulp mills in Alberta, he remained silent.

Now we know the reason. It is that this government has not even yet considered draft legislation to present to the House for environment assessment. Members opposite talk about rhetoric. That is all we have been getting. We have not been getting the kind of action we require in the House to deal with the environmental assessment we need.

A perfect example of the need for a legislated environmental assessment process now—and I challenge the government and the minister to introduce that legislation before the Christmas break so that we can look at it—is in fact the farce perpetrated on Canada by the Minister of the Environment on the Rafferty Dam project.

There were news reports the other day on this most important project indicating that when the minister was making the decision on allowing the project finally to go ahead there was no letter, no records, no Governor in Council decision.

What did they do? Did they have coffee up in the Parliamentary Restaurant and make a decision to let the dam go ahead?

We have been getting the same kinds of decisions on the environment from this Minister, and it is not good enough. There is a clear an example in northern Alberta where we have that joke of a government in Edmonton, that joke of an environment minister, that joke of a forest minister. The forest minister in Alberta who is raping and pillaging the forests of Alberta writes and says that Alberta has the highest forestry standards in the country. I think he should be our Saturday Night Live because that is where those kind of comments should be for the joke line we get out of it.

What do we get from the federal government? What do we get? We get deals, back room deals with the environment minister in Alberta, to try and make sure that they could weave through some kind of environmental assessment review process. There is the participation of the federal minister and no participation whatsoever from the forestry department in Alberta.

Do you think the Minister of the Environment even thought about that when he sat down with the minister of the environment from Alberta? Probably not. Are the officials of the minister of forest in this House appearing at those hearings? No.

Yet, what roles does this House and this government have in Alberta? Madam Speaker, you will know that we have debated many times in this House Forest Resource Development Agreements. As you would also know there is a Canada–Alberta Forest Resource Development Agreement, funds from which have been used to try to develop ongoing industry in Alberta now. There is a particular role there for more direct involvement from this federal government. We have not seen it. We should certainly try to see it in the future.

The amendment proposed which we will be supporting suggests that it would be in only federally regulated areas. We will support that. The government has made the effort to to tax the heck out of us on the GST. It has made the effort to try to get provinces involved in that tax grab. Certainly this government can make the same or better effort when it comes to environmental assessment legislation. It has to call on the provincial environment ministers across this country to work together to come up with a joint environmental assessment review process so that we do not have the joke that is going on in Alberta right now. I would like to conclude with one particular proposal. It has been enunciated once before by the member for Saanich—Gulf Islands. In fact, this legislation is not even in draft form yet and is not yet at the Cabinet level. Maybe the minister is listening right now. He might consider one particular idea, that of an environmental gazette.

We have, as you know, Madam Speaker, the Canada Gazette, an official publication of the Government of Canada. We have the Business Opportunities bulletin where businesses can see the kind of government tenders and what have you that they can bid on. We have the Regulatory Agenda issued annually so that people in various areas have an indication of where the Government of Canada is going to make some regulatory changes.

We have in this House the Order Paper that gives us notice of what kind of business we are going to be dealing with. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that we need as part of this environmental assessment review process an environmental gazette that will review those projects that an EARP process will have to review, whether it is putting a bridge over a creek and the problems that could be caused by silt and run–off, there was a problem like that in my riding, or whether it is going to be a project such as the massive pulp mill projects that we now have in northern Alberta. This gazette would give us clear and advance notice of these projects, outlining outlying which departments are involved and what kind of information and documents are available so that we all at least have an opportunity to see what kind of work is being done.

I hope that legislative drafters take this idea into consideration as the legislation does makes its way toward cabinet.

In conclusion, it is clear to all members of this House how important the question of the environment has become. Any good corporate citizen will ensure that their projects are submitted to the most extensive review necessary and possible. It is in that way that those captains of industry or the guy who owns the little trucking firm knows and understands the rules. That is what a legislative assessment review process will do.

I urge the government, in light of the possibility that this motion will pass, to move faster than it is moving now. It scares me that this bill is sitting in the department somewhere. Let us get on with it and introduce the legislation now so we can have some adequate environmental assessment review process in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion, as amended?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see that most hon. members who are scheduled to participate in the adjournment debate are present.

Would it be agreeable to the House that the chair would call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38(1) deemed to have been moved.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Madam Speaker, on October 6 of this year I posed a question to the Minister of Transport with particular reference to the impending closures since the government's VIA Rail announcements.

• (1750)

It announced the impending closure of The Canadian line of VIA Rail, particularly between Kamloops, British Columbia, and Calgary, Alberta.

If you look at the government's own statistics on the usage of that railway, at least those that we in the opposition have access to, it clearly shows that The Canadian line, although it is not broken down in which portions of the line, at least that information has not been made readily available to us, in virtually all statistical breakdowns has a higher rate of cost recovery of passenger usage and with all other yardsticks is a higher performer and a better economic performer with a higher degree of use than virtually any other segment of the VIA Rail system, system excluding those lines within the Golden Horseshoe and the Montreal–Ottawa–Toronto corridor.

In spite of this the government saw fit to classify for special designation the VIA Rail line from Jasper through to Prince George to Prince Rupert, even though on all of the various categories of passenger and economic performance it is a worse performer than The Canadian line that runs through southern Alberta and southern British Columbia.

We do not want to deny the citizens of the north three–day–a–week service or basic essential service in terms of passenger rail. If the government's argument is economic as it suggests that it is, we think it ought to have paid a little more attention to the actual economic yardsticks which government and VIA Rail statistics show to be the case. The southern line, The Canadian line, is less of a drain on the budget and on the economy than the northern line which has been kept in operation on a three–day–a–week basis while there is to be no service other than the Rocky Mountaineer during the two or three key tourist summer months.

Often people in government think, whether it is this government or another government, that simply because an area is in the north the communities there must be remote. In this case, especially on The Canadian line between the cities of Kamloops and Calgary, there are no airports between those two points. Avalanches and road closures cut automobile and bus traffic more often along that corridor than in any other area of Canada.

In terms of remoteness, you have to travel 200 kilometres or more to get to an airport from the city of Revelstoke, for instance, and from the village of Golden. With regard to accessibility to bus transportation, those communities in the north are even more remote. Therefore we asked the Minister of Transport to send representatives to two meetings that were held, one in Golden in November and another earlier on December 4 in Revelstoke.

Because of transportation problems, the government representatives were not able to get to the first meeting. Hopefully the government learned something about remoteness in that exercise. It tried and failed and it is not even the middle of winter yet.

I understand that the representatives did get there on December 4, earlier this week. I trust that the information that was marshalled by a number of communities and businesses with a vital interest not only in the economic spin-off of passenger rail service to that area, which is becoming increasingly dependent upon tourism, will cause the government to recognize in those mountain passes the kind of difficulty there is without alternative methods of transportation.

Since the time that the government made its decision, of course, the transport committee of the House made its recommendation and asked for a moratorium on the decisions of the government. I would submit that the communities of Golden, Revelstoke, Field and others in that Kamloops-Calgary corridor are perfect examples of why we need such a moratorium, at least in specific cases, and hopefully on a broader scale.

I am sure there are other areas of the country where the decision also needs review. Once we remove the passenger rail system from the trackage which is heavily utilized by CP, or in some cases CN freight services, it is going to be very difficult to again get access to those lines once they have worked out other schedules.

I know the parliamentary secretary will appreciate this because he travelled with me when the MacDonald tunnel opened last summer. At a time when we have a 15 kilometre tunnel which speeds up and allows for increased passage of freight with much greater efficiency at a much lower cost, and frees a second line for passenger or non-freight use, the government has decided to eliminate the passenger rail system through one of the most attractive areas of Canada in terms of tourism, not only in summer when the Rocky Mountaineer will provide minimal service, but during winter.

The government has its own statistics. I know from personal experience, and I suspect the parliamentary secretary and the minister have heard as well, that that rail line is over-utilized in much of the summer and close-to-summer months.

My colleague from Kootenay East and I spent some time travelling the rails there this past autumn far outside the regular tourist season. We had to sleep in the dome car, where you are not supposed to be overnight, because the train was full. People apply months in advance to get on those trains and are told that is full and they cannot get space. It is a heavily utilized line. It has one of the best cost recoveries of any section of the entire system, excluding the Golden Horseshoe.

With the arguments it has been given by businesses and communities in that area, I ask the government to at least proclaim a moratorium on that and other similar areas and allow a review to take place before the door is shut forever.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the hon. member opposite, the member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke, who has asked us about VIA service as it relates to truly isolated communities. I know the communities of which he speaks and have travelled through them on many occasions when I have been traversing on the Trans-Canada Highway.

The government's decision about a national affordable, sustainable system of VIA services strikes a balance between the transportation needs of Canada and the government's fiscal realities. The hon. member opposite makes out as if with every decision that is made there is great finality and that it is the end of the world. That is not the case in this situation.

Nonetheless, he does raise a very valuable point about the fact that he would like to see these communities considered under the same aspects as to the remote areas of the country.

VIA will continue to provide service to truly isolated communities that have no alternative means of transportation. The minister also indicated that he will be reviewing the transportation needs of these truly isolated communities along the remote routes to determine whether more cost-effective means of access could be introduced.

Most of the communities in question are located along the eight remote routes which VIA continues to operate. The remainder will be serviced through the Winnipeg-Capreol portion of the restructured western transcontinental service. The truly isolated communities in each case are identified as those points where VIA now makes scheduled stops which do not have any regular commercial air services and do not have all-weather highway access to the national transportation system.

The hon. member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke has put forward the concept that the communities of Revelstoke, Golden and Field should also be taken into consideration as isolated communities because they have no air service and because their highway connections are periodically interrupted during severe winter conditions. All three of these communities are located on the Trans-Canada Highway, as I have mentioned earlier. I can assure the hon. member that Canada has many communities which would welcome a road access as good as that enjoyed by the three communities that he has just mentioned, even with the inconvenience of severe winter conditions.

ARTS AND CULTURE

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Madam Speaker, my rising the Minister of Culture and Communications on the management practices of the National Arts Centre.

The minister's response to me, as reported in Hansard at page 5474, stated that the NAC was an "Ottawa issue", was and is completely unacceptable to me. The NAC is a national institution created by Parliament and maintained by Parliament.

A few months back, I requested the minister to hold a public enquiry into the management practices of the NAC. The reason I did this was precipitated by a series of events or skirmishes, call them what you wish. There were labour problems, firings, some still before the Labour Board; a malaise unprecedented before in the institution's 20-year history; a shifting of funds from NAC programming into the untested field of high definition television; the music director's non-renewal of contract, and an orchestra that was out on strike. The NAC has not had an increase in its budget for seven years. This concerned me greatly. I question this government's commitment to culture or the arts in Canada. As another example I can cite the $140 million cut to the CBC.

Federal funding of the NAC has not kept pace with inflation. The chairman of that board is quoted in the local press as saying; "The NAC is in a perilous position financially". Yet, when I reviewed the minutes of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture during the budget review, the chairman did not appear to defend the centre and relay this critical information on to the communications and culture committee. At the same committee hearing, the Director General was unable to produce budget figures when asked to do so by the committee.

If there is insufficient funding of the NAC, and I do believe that there is, the board chairman and the Director General should be making Parliament aware of this insufficiency.

To quote Maureen Forrester: "To fail to do so is a breach of the board's moral responsibility".

The NAC of late has suffered a drastic erosion of trust on all sides. The orchestra strike has ended, but let us not hide our heads in the sand and assume that all problems have been resolved.

The Minister of Communications has responded by letter to my request for a public inquiry. His response was that the management of the NAC is within the purview of the board and so Parliament should not intervene. However, does the minister not realize that the responsibility of the board falls under the purview of this Parliament and this government should be making definite enquiries?

As parliamentarians, we have a responsibility to Canadians to ensure that this national institution is given the care, the scrutiny and in-depth analysis that Canadians have been asking for. If this organization is financially starved, then we as legislators have a responsibility to address this issue. The Minister of Communications said:

"Money is no substitute for good public policy". So, where is the good public policy if there is no money?

I ask that the minister and the government pledge both financial and policy support for the National Arts Centre and do this for all Canadians. This is not an Ottawa institution, it is a national institution.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to respond to some of the concerns raised by the hon. member from Nepean with respect to the National Arts centre.

• (1805)

I know the hon. member joins with me in celebrating the end of the strike by the Arts Centre Orchestra. The collective agreement which has been ratified by both the orchestra players and the management ensures that the orchestra will continue to be a mainstay of cultural programming at the Centre.

This three-year agreement will bring the salaries of the orchestra in line with those paid to members of the Toronto and the Montreal symphonies. The size of the orchestra has also been confirmed and new lines of communication have been established between the orchestra and management.

I think this marks the beginning of a very artistically productive period for the orchestra and augurs well for the more harmonious relationship between the orchestra and management. I would like at this time to congratulate the Minister of Labour and his officials who played a very key role in resolving the dispute to the satisfaction of both parties.

As you know, the Government of Canada has been very supportive of the National Arts Centre since it first opened its doors in 1969. In this the twentieth anniversary of the Arts Centre, the Board of Trustees and its staff published a booklet entitled The Third Decade and Beyond which examines the policy direction and the programming options which the Centre could consider in the next decade. It is most encouraging to see this kind of planning taking place and I congratulate those connected with the Centre on their enthusiasm and foresight.

This booklet, The Third Decade and Beyond will ensure that the Centre will continue to enhance its reputation as one of Canada's premier cultural institutions and will, above all, contribute to the state of arts across Canada as a catalyst for co-production and as a showcase and collaborator for performance from Canadian companies which are the pride of many Canadian cities which all Canadians should be able to enjoy.

Of course, quality of this calibre is not inexpensive and the Government of Canada has recognized this. Last year, the federal government contributed $18 million to the total budget of $34 million allocated for the operation of the National Arts Centre.

The National Arts Centre is one of Canada's most distinguished cultural institutions. I am confident that adequate funding from federal, provincial and municipal levels of government combined with the all important, aggressive private sector fund-raising program will ensure that the National Arts Centre will continue to enjoy the resources necessary to bring the highest level of performing arts excellence to the people of Canada.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Madam Speaker, the issue that I am raising today is one which I first raised in Question Period on November 9, and has to do with the spill of radioactive mine waste at the Collins Bay uranium mine run by Cameco at Wollaston Lake, Saskatchewan.

This, I believe, had the potential, and still does, to be one of the major environmental stories of the year but thus far has not had the kind of publicity because it unfortunately happened when the Berlin Wall was coming down and while the premiers' conference was on. I walked out of Question Period that day to find one camera and two reporters in the lobby of the House which is most unusual. I think that is one of the reasons why Canadians, in general, don't know as much about this issue as they will and as they should.

I might add that in Saskatchewan it has been a major issue. There all the media have covered it. Government officials and others are taking it very seriously. That is not to say it is not being taken seriously here.

I would like to run through some of the chronology of what has happened since November 9 on this story. On November 11, I flew there, toured the mine site, the site of the spill with the chief, town officials, and the local MLA. We had, I think, a very informative trip. Certainly we were shown everything we wanted to see. But what we saw was appalling. As a farmer, I am no technical expert, but I would not let a farm dug-out or septic tank system run the way they let that run.

The alarm system was referred to by AECB as being out of action for 15 hours during the spill. In fact, it had been disconnected since 1985. I found out since then that AECB officials have inspected that site at least 25 or 30 times and never noted the fact that this very critical alarm system was not working. They have also approved the same design using the same system for new pits right in Collins Bay and this system was approved. The same regulators are looking at the Cigar Lake mine very close by.

• (1810)

On November 14 the Indian people of northern Saskatchewan accompanied by myself and the MLA, with senior officials of the Department of Indian Affairs, Health and Welfare Canada, Environment Canada, Atomic Energy Control Board and the Saskatchewan Minister of the Environment and his officials had a meeting. It was a very productive meeting. But again there was new information that we received. Namely, two things: One, if they had been mining in the Rabbit Lake pit at the time that the spill occurred the toxic levels would have been five times as high as they were now. We would have had a very serious environmental catastrophe if the spill had occurred while they were mining. Fortunately, there was no mining going on at the time.

We also found that what was discharged was 440,000 gallons of untreated mine waste. In fact, it contained a level of radium 226 at 5 to 8 becquerels. That is very technical language but the discharge limit is one becquerel. So what was discharged into that bay, 440,000 gallons worth, is in fact serious even in and of itself because there are spawning areas for both whitefish and jackfish in the area.

On November 15 the Prince Albert District Chiefs and the Wollaston Lake Band held a press conference in Prince Albert calling for a formal public, independent, comprehensive, inquiry into the spill. On November 15 there was a press conference held here in Ottawa where representatives of the Canadian Labour Congress, Indigenous Survival International, Mennonite Central Committee, Greenpeace and Cultural Survival Canada joined in supporting the call for an inquiry. Having examined the evidence, they joined the call for an inquiry.

On November 24 Chief Ed Benoanie formally presented his call for a public inquiry to the Minister of Energy. He also had a conversation with the Minister of the Environment and outlined his case to them why it is critical not only from the standpoint of what happened specifically with the spill and the environmental consequences and so on, but the whole interaction and the inter-relationship between the Indian people of the north and this industry and other industries that operate in their lands.

This afternoon I attended my first Atomic Energy Control Board meeting. Attending there as well were representatives from the community of Port Hope because a Cameco application for increasing their discharge limits was on the table. I heard there that an incident occurred in 1983 at Port Hope where there was a fire in the facility and that many people evacuated the town. It was a disaster nearly averted again. It came to light at that time that there was no emergency procedure in place at Port Hope for evacuating the town and there was no equipment in the town to deal with the potential crisis. What appalled me and makes me quite sceptical about these regulators is that it does not exist today either. There is no emergency plan in Port Hope. They are still working on one six years later. There is very little reason for confidence in the regulators.

I would like to again stress that there needs to be a comprehensive inquiry. In an article in the Saskatoon Star Phoenix on November 24 it stated that staff levels were too low to prevent spills from the Atomic Energy Control Board.

We cannot have the regulators investigating themselves. I know that their investigations about Cameco's operations are under way and charges might be laid. But somebody has to look at these regulators. This is a regulatory meltdown and it has to be looked at in an independent way. It has to be comprehensive and include everything that they regulate, as well as the interaction between the native people of the north and this industry. It also has to be public because in this era of glasnost at a time when there is tremendous concern about our environment and the long-term consequences of what we do, the public will not be satisfied if this is not a fully public inquiry where everybody knows what is going on.

My specific question today in that regard is the following. When we met with the minister he said he would make a judgment on whether there should be an inquiry or not once he had the results of his internal investigation. I was wondering if the parliamentary secretary would be in a position today to tell us when that internal inquiry might be done so we could hear from the minister if in fact we will get our public inquiry.

• (1815)

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Madam Speaker, on November 7, 1989 at 12.45 p.m. a mine water spill was discovered near the Collins Bay mine located at Rabbit Lake, Saskatchewan.

This open pit mine, which is owned and operated by Cameco, has been shut down for approximately three months due, in part, to the depressed nature of the uranium market. This temporary mine closure led to the lay-off of 96 mine workers earlier this year. In order to prevent the pit from flooding, water which naturally seeps into the pit is routinely pumped along a pipeline from the mine site to the mill, which is several kilometres away. A valve housing the pipeline cracked and allowed 2,000 cubic metres of mine water to spill out into an overflow catchment, then into Collins Creek, and finally into Wollaston Lake.

Because the mine had been shut down, the spill water was essentially rain water which had seeped into the pit. Extensive sampling of water in Collins Creek has shown that the radium, nickel and arsenic levels are extremely low and meet Saskatchewan surface water quality objectives. At the outflow of Collins Bay into Wollaston Lake, the level of these contaminants is below detection levels. Hence, the present data clearly indicates that the spill did not endanger the drinking water or the fisheries that exist in Wollaston Lake.

The minister has indicated that he wants answers as to why the spill occurred, and wants the whole question fully aired and fully investigated. He has also indicated that he will be following the AECB investigation with considerable interest and wishes to be kept fully informed of new developments as they occur.

The Atomic Energy Control Board, which is the independent federal regulatory agency responsible for health, safety and environmental issues related to the nuclear industry, is continuing its investigation into this incident. The spill was discovered from an aircraft chartered by AECB during a routine inspection of the site and also observed independently by Chief Benoanie of the Hatchet Lake Band. The AECB inspector investigated the spill immediately upon landing and remained on the site to complete a full investigation. The results of the ongoing investigation have been submitted to the board.

While the preliminary stages of the investigation are under way, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources wrote on November 22 to Chief Benoanie of the Hatchet Lake Band at Wollaston Lake and assured him that the spill had created little environmental damage and that he would be kept fully informed of any new developments.

On November 24, the minister met with Chief Benoanie and the hon. member from Prince Albert—Churchill to discuss the issue. He assured both of them that the AECB will keep all interested parties informed about developments as they occur.

As you are aware, Madam Speaker, yesterday, December 6, the Atomic Energy Control Board recommended to the Attorney General of Canada that they consider laying charges against Cameco regarding alleged violations of the Atomic Energy Control Act. This new phase of the investigation will involve the prosecuting counsel for the Attorney General of Canada's office. The office has the responsibility to make the final decision on the specific charge to be laid against the company. The first meeting to view the legal implications of the case will be held later this month.

Today the Saskatchewan government announced that it is taking a separate but similar action. It has referred the investigation to the Saskatchewan Justice to determine if sufficient evidence exists to lay charges under the Saskatchewan Environmental Management and Protection Act.

We expect that the investigation and the question of legal charges will be cleared up some time early in the new year. It is at that time that we will have the necessary information to make decisions about appropriate follow-up actions to this incident.

STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, it gives me very great honour to note on behalf of all members of this House that Sunday marks the forty-first anniversary of the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

When the universal declaration was adopted without a dissenting voice by the young United Nations organization on December 10, 1948, it immediately established itself as the fundamental expression of the highest hopes and ideals of the human spirit. It remains so to this day.

For most of these 41 years, however, the anniversary of the declaration has served more as a reminder of how far human action has fallen short of its principles than of their attainment. If this year is different, it is because today we have reason to believe and hope that the balance is, at long last, beginning to change.

In recent weeks we have witnessed extraordinary events. In Brazil and in Uruguay there were held the first free elections in years. In Namibia and in South Africa developments which, while they have far yet to go, cannot be ignored. India, the world's largest democracy, went to the polls and again reaffirmed the triumph of freely-elected representative government.

[Translation]

What can we say, Mr. Speaker, about the events in eastern Europe?

It would be pointless to try to describe in a few words the images and feelings which come to us every day from Warsaw, Budapest, Sophia, Berlin, Prague and other cities and which have so much immediate personal significance for so many Canadians.

[English]

What will not fail, what is undeniable, is the need for freedom and the need for dignity, the need for those equal and inalienable rights of all members of the human family which lie at the heart of the universal declaration itself. They have proven stronger and more enduring than either the instruments of repression or the blandishments of states and institutions which have so long denied these rights.

No less important is the vision and compassion with which this great journey is beginning. In Leipzig, on November 9, the same night that the Berlin wall finally opened, the crowds answered the call of New Forum by the tens of thousands as they had on previous nights. They assembled not only to renew the call for change, they also met to observe and remember the events of 41 years earlier, November 9, 1938—Kristalnacht, Crystal Night—and what happens when a society forgets that human rights are inseparable, that they must belong to all or eventually they will belong to none.

• (1010)

[Translation]

Disrespect and contempt for human rights can only lead to acts of barbarism, as the Declaration itself reminds us. It is very encouraging for the future that the new societies in eastern Europe are arising from a recognition of this.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, none of us can forget that full respect for human rights remains one of the major challenges of civilization.

[English]

Millions of people in the world live under regimes which continue to deny their citizens the rights and freedoms most Canadians take for granted.

Countless countries around the world still practice torture. Thousands die annually at the hands of death squads. Thousands more simply disappear. And if this is a year which we will remember by the end of the Berlin wall, it is also a year we will remember by what happened in Tiananmen Square.

It is so important therefore that we observe December 10, Human Rights Day, not only for the progress that has been achieved this remarkable year, but also for the distance we must yet travel.

[Translation]

I hope that as Canadians, we will use that day to think seriously about these basic principles of freedom and justice and to ask ourselves what each of us can do to promote them.

[English]

Many Canadians have made and continue to make exemplary and inspiring contributions to the fight for human rights around the world. But I would ask that we think about the work yet to be done to secure those rights here in our own country as well.

[Translation]

Our Constitution, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, our laws and democratic institutions all show a deep national commitment to the principles of equality and justice.

Nevertheless, prejudice and discrimination still exist in many parts of our society. Whether they are based on colour, race, religion, language or any other difference between Canadians, they are an affront to the dignity and freedom of every one of us.

[English]

With this so important anniversary clearly in mind, I therefore call upon Canadians to share in accepting the responsibilities of citizenship as readily as we accept its privileges, and that we join together to eliminate discrimination and prejudice which continue to deny equal rights to many in our society.

Canada has long stood as a symbol of freedom and liberty to many of the world's peoples. By working to ensure the full participation of all Canadians in the life of our fortunate country, we will continue to do honour to that tradition and to that obligation. No less, we will confirm the inherent dignity, the equal and inalienable rights which must be the common inheritance of every Canadian, as instead they must be of all mankind.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too am honoured on behalf of members of the Official Opposition to recognize the occasion of the forty-first anniversary of the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights. This declaration entitles everyone to equal treatment without distinction based on race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status. Canada, of course, fully endorses this and has, in fact, used this declaration as a basis for our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as brought in by this party in the early 1980s.

It is unfortunate though that Canada has not played a more substantive role in promoting these goals internationally. We have the ability and the international credibility among the world community to encourage human rights developments, but Canada's approach has been inconsistent. Wherever we go to attend meetings, Canada is the first country to say, as the Prime Minister leaves, that we are in favour of human rights and that we will raise human rights issues.

When we went to the Commonwealth, the government said it was going to raise human rights concerns. When it came back, it said nothing. When this government joined the Organization of American States, it said that one of its priorities was human rights, but it came back and said nothing.

We could be playing a major role in the struggle in El Salvador. If we are going to be using the Organization of American States properly, this is an opportunity for us to state what the protection of human rights really means in a troubled country. We have been silent on that issue. We have not used the Organization of American States. We have not used our own goodwill in a troubled part of the world. I use this as an example only because it is the most current example of the problems that we face in trying to persuade the government to use Canada's goodwill in international forums to promote the human rights that we value so dearly.

Why have we not raised our objections to this and other issues? What about the disturbing increase in human rights violations in Guatemala or in East Timor? What do we hear these days from our government about China, or about the events in Ethiopia? The government waits far too long and allows Canada's great record to fall behind as events unfold.

The 1987 report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade entitled For Whose Benefit? states:

> Canada's performance on international human rights to date has been criticized as episodic and primarily reactive.

This government has obviously chosen not to pay attention to this observation. I would like to ask why we are not more consistently outspoken against human rights abuses, when members of this House, including members of all parties, feel very strongly about this.

This human rights declaration is not just a statement. By being a signatory, Canada has accepted to demonstrate a commitment to human rights around the world and at home.

We do not want to try to impose our beliefs, our values and our institutions on other countries, but Canada has an obligation to assist other nations in recognising the value of a free and democratic society where individual rights and freedoms are fully respected and protected.

Clearly, that is what people want; and, clearly, it is not what we are hearing enough about from this government. We are witnessing this almost daily with the dramatic changes taking place in the eastern bloc. As we watch changes take place both within the Soviet Union and in eastern European countries the silence of our government on human rights issues has been one that most Canadians cannot understand or accept. Canada can and should be confident in stating our views to other nations when it comes to human rights abuses.

I would also like to say that this party joined with the other two parties of the House in forming a new subcommittee of the Human Rights Committee on international human rights. As participants on this committee we plan to set out a research agenda and bring in witnesses from the various interest groups around this country who want to hear Canada speak out more consistently on human rights. Through the work of this subcommittee we hope that the government will begin to understand the tradition that this House has held in areas of human rights and begin to speak out on our behalf. We look forward to working with other members of the House to present this case to the government.

Unfortunately, our own government and this country cannot claim total innocence in the violation of human rights. Our own Canadian Human Rights Commission clearly pointed out our negligence when dealing with people facing poverty, homelessness, undernourishment, child and spouse abuse, racial discrimination and, of course, the tragic situation facing our native people.

As a member of Parliament from Manitoba, I can tell you that issue is uppermost in the minds of people from my province, as the aboriginal commission on the state of the justice community in dealing with native rights has come to an end. We await the report. We do hope the government will respond as quickly as possible.

• (1020)

It is also incomprehensible as to why this government has not acted more rapidly in developing a children's bill of rights within this country, and why Canada has not yet signed the UN declaration against torture, and why Canada has chosen not to ensure automatic refugee status to those escaping repressive regimes.

This Universal Declaration of Human Rights has tried to provide a guideline for all nations to respect the rights of all persons. We truly support the objective of this declaration. But to support it is not enough. It is only through the actions of our government that we can ensure equal treatment for all people.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have been delegated by my party on behalf of my leader to join with hon. members on all sides in the observation of the forty-first anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

It is particularly noteworthy that I should do so when my party has given substance to the dream that men and women equally should aspire to equal political participation. In Canada, on this day, we are encouraged to express the broader hope foreseen in the UN declaration and that in this country every citizen, regardless of colour, race, language, religion and disability will some day see a similar confirmation of full citizenship and participation in all walks of Canadian life.

Beyond our borders there are other signs that provide hope of progress toward the achievement of the ideal supported with such unanimous idealism 41 years ago. Television screens have provided dramatic images of the changes in East Germany, Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria which mirror the near-revolutionary impact of glasnost and perestroika in the Soviet Union itself.

Yes, we are encouraged by elections in Brazil, Uruguay, India and Namibia and by mildly encouraging signs in southern Africa. Surely, the tenuous basis of our optimism was severely tested by the bloody massacre in Tiananmen Square.

As we look elsewhere can we say that religious conflict and intolerance, torture by governments and the disappearance of dissidents, genocidal nationalistic conflicts, denials of basic human rights and justice, exploitation of the poor and suppression of democracy have in any fundamental way diminished?

Are we gaining a greater recognition as we in the developed nations continue to foul the earth and greedily consume most of its resources and impose escalating debt on the Third World, that we ourselves are negating all hope that three-quarters of the world's population will indeed ever be able to live lives in environments that can sustain them or where humans rights and freedom have any real value or relevance?

For Canadians, do we see a strengthening or diminishing by our government of Canada's traditions in defence of freedom and the pursuit of peace? In NATO are we the leaders for disarmament or are we the mere echoes for our U.S. allies? In Central America are we voices for a different way? Have we lost our resolve in southern Africa?

Here at home where the events of yesterday dramatize the inhumanity of human kind, have we made real progress in terms of the kind of understanding between the sexes that we had hoped to achieve and which was symbolized by my leader's victory?

Is it possible to argue that Canada acts in a way consistent with the dream enunciated in the universal declaration when we have 1.1 million children living in poverty, when more and more Canadians go to food banks in order to eat, when so many are without homes in which to live, and when there is increasing disparity between rich and poor? One asks whether one can say that we are making progress even in our own country for producing those conditions which are necessary to achieve the ideals of the universal declaration.

In that context, it would be useful for our government to recognize whether, in fact, it is now acting in terms of those higher ideals, or whether this new pursuit of the ends of greed really are or ever can be consistent with the universal declaration. Can we have a nation in which there are people who hunger for jobs and hunger for food and at the same time expect there to be inter-racial understanding? Can we have a nation in which the imperatives are those of wealth and still have the hope that our aboriginal peoples will have control over their own lives? Is it possible to engender conflict among people worried about their future and truly seek to have understanding among those of different cultures and who live in different regions of the country?

Here at home we have enough to be concerned about, but unless we are able to transfer our ideals in terms of understanding and accepting the differences within our own borders and having as our highest imperative that to ensure all people have equal opportunity, economically and elsewhere within our own borders, one has to ask whether there is any hope for us to provide leadership in ensuring that those ideals that we talk about today will in fact be the basis for our future on this earth.

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MOTION THAT DEBATE BE NOT FURTHER ADJOURNED

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I move:

> That debate on the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-49 and on any amendments proposed thereto shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

GUN CONTROL

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the horrible tragedy which took place on Wednesday in Montreal confirms that it is still too easy to acquire powerful and lethal firearms. If we are genuinely serious in wanting to stop this sort of crime, then we must take definite steps to better control the availability of these deadly weapons. Each time we tighten our gun-control laws there is a reduction in gun-related crime.

In the circumstances, I want to recommend the following that, one, there should be a mandatory two-week waiting period before any firearms' acquisition certificate is issued. Two, the FAC should be required to purchase ammunition as well as weapons. Three, we should require any applicant for an FAC to obtain the signature of two guarantors from the community who would support the application. Four, the FAC should be renewable every two years rather than every five years; and five, the government should designate the STRUM semi-automatic rifle as a restricted weapon.

Stricter gun laws are not the entire answer but they will help reduce this type of crime.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. J.W. Bud Bird (Fredericton—York—Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of the needs of our environment for cleaner and safer ways to produce energy both here at home and around the world. Canadians are also becoming increasingly aware that nuclear energy and technology is an essential element in any policy to meet the world's future energy requirements, particularly Canada's nuclear power technology which ranks as the best in the world, both in terms of design and proven performance.

Therefore, I want to commend our government on the support which has been provided to Canadian nuclear energy development and to encourage further continued investment which will be required to advance our nuclear technology, particularly toward the construction of the prototype CANDU III reactor, hopefully to be located in New Brunswick.

The Candu III concept appears to offer new design horizons in performance, cost and safety, for clean nuclear power generation on a scale to help solve the growing world need for electricity in an environmentally effective way.

I am convinced that the time is rapidly approaching when Canadian world leadership in nuclear energy technology will prove to be a critical and compelling factor in helping to solve the earth's intensifying environmental dilemma, particularly with regard to atmospheric pollution and global warming. We must continue to provide that leadership.

HOUSING

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, housing in Canada is in a crisis, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, where rental vacancy rates are only .5 per cent. Yet, this government now refuses to pay its share of the cost of the Toronto Seniors Central Housing Registry which helps seniors find what little affordable housing there is available.

In June, 1987, the registry was officially opened by the Ontario government and by David Crombie, representing the federal government, who gave a commitment for joint funding.

In October, 1988, at the height of the federal election, CMHC conferred upon the registry a national housing award for innovation in seniors housing. However, once the election was over it reneged on its promise to provide funding. The registry is now on the verge of closure.

I call upon this government and the Minister of Housing to meet with Metropolitan Toronto representatives, including Councillor Roger Hollander to resolve the funding impasse. This needed service for seniors cannot be arbitrarily abandoned by a heartless government.

ISOLATED COMMUNITY STATUS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Mayor Jacques Bérubé, speaking on behalf of the people of Chapais, has written to the Minister of Finance of Canada, urging him to let the town keep its status of isolated post. The loss of these tax benefits will inevitably and tragically contribute to the exodus of workers to the south.

Chapais has no government services as such. Its residents must travel long distances by car to obtain special services or specialized care which are mostly available in Chicoutimi, 378 kilometres away or Quebec City, 524 kilometres away.

The Quebec government has set the southernmost boundary of Quebec's northern region at the 49th parallel.

Mr. Speaker, life in the north is harsh, isolated and expensive. We have very little compared to the south, and we are producers rather than consumers.

HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in commemorating human rights day our government earlier in the day indicated a desire to match deeds with our words on the subject of human rights.

The new Government of India with a new Prime Minister disposed to respecting religious freedoms in the Punjab and elsewhere in the Indian subcontinent gives us such an opportunity. V. P. Singh, the Prime Minister of the world's largest democracy, has taken steps to heal political wounds emanating from religious persecutions.

Thousands have died since the attack on the Golden Temple in 1984. Police brutality evidenced by the so-called encounter killings, systematic rape of defenceless women in the Punjab, political persecutions, arrests, and torture in jails must come to an end. Our government should exert moral pressure to enhance V. P. Singh's initiatives and also provide tangible evidence of support by establishing a permanent diplomatic presence in the Punjab.

CANADIAN POLISH CONGRESS

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, the Council of Canadian Polish Congress is holding important deliberations in Ottawa today and this weekend.

The council consists of division presidents and presidents of central organizations and has an important voice in the affairs of the Canadian Polish Congress.

Poles have thrived in Canada and we have contributed our own distinctive colour to the multicultural quilt of Canadian society. The 400,000 Canadians of Polish origin have also kept a special place in their hearts for Poland, as all Canadians witnessed during Mr. Walesa's recent visit to Canada.

It is my deepest hope that as eastern Europe is alive with joy and hope and great expectations, we recognize Poland as a key part of that bright new future.

May the friendship between Canada and Poland continue to develop and promote opportunities for Canadian business to channel our expertise and assist Poland on its courageous course toward a market-oriented economy.

Again, congratulations to the Canadian Polish Congress.

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, at least one in ten is beaten by the man she lives with; one woman in four is sexually assaulted or abused; a woman is raped in Canada every 17 minutes. For women, violence and the threat of violence is an everyday occurrence. Both as children and as adults women are sexually abused and assaulted in their homes and in their communities. They are the victims of crime in the streets. They are subject to harassment in their places of work. They are degraded through violent pornography that perpetuates lies about women.

The horrifying massacre of 14 young women in Montreal was an extreme manifestation of violence against women. I know that we all grieve together. Members of this House must concern themselves seriously with the sexist and violent attitudes in our society, with the structures that enable everyday violence and such extreme violence to occur.

As Members of Parliament we have a responsibility to change our society so that women may be full and equal participants.

FORESTRY

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it was with great pleasure that I learned the government of Canada has concluded negotiations with the province of New Brunswick and is now in a position to sign a new federal-provincial forestry agreement.

The forestry sector is the largest single industry in New Brunswick employing over 38,000 people both directly and indirectly. It accounts for 47 per cent of the province's total exports. This $91 million agreement will provide the essential funding to ensure and enhance the future management of this vital resource.

The Minister of Forestry has remained steadfast in his strong commitment to forestry in New Brunswick throughout this long and involved negotiation process. I know I speak for all my colleagues, particularly the Member for Fundy—Royal and the Member for Fredericton—York—Sunbury who happens to chair the forestry subcommittee when I say how pleased I am to see that this agreement has finally been concluded.

VIETNAM

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, today in the Centre Block of the House of Commons over 100 people from the Vietnamese Canadian community are meeting to form the original chapter in Canada of the International Committee for a Free Vietnam.

Canada now has more than 120,000 people from Vietnam who have emigrated as a result of the difficulties in that country. This international committee has members not only from the Vietnamese community but also from all parties in the House of Commons and the Senate. This Parliament is showing its support of the struggle they have with the government in Vietnam.

There are several things we think the government can do on behalf of the Vietnamese people. It can help pressure the Vietnamese government for new respect for freedom of religion for the people; new respect for the cultural traditions and the fundamental rights and freedoms of the Vietnamese people. We should request the immediate release of all political prisoners, all public servants and military personnel of the former regime and all religious ministers presently detained in re-education camps. It can help allow religious and charitable organizations to carry out relief activities directly within Vietnam in the areas of health and food assistance. It can help develop respect within that country for freedom of information for both domestic and foreign news media.

I also call upon the government to work more diligently in helping families with family reunification problems throughout the refugee camps in Asia.

FIREARMS CONTROL

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, no one could remain unmoved by the tragic events in Montreal. Fourteen young women, in the flower of their youth, killed by a maniac with a semi-automatic weapon.

Why are weapons of this kind allowed in Canada? Why do we let people own such dangerous and destructive weapons? For recreational purposes? That doesn't make sense. Protecting the public and public safety should be our prime concern. A mother doesn't let her children play with knives. She knows something might happen. She acts preventively.

I therefore urge my fellow members and my government to take action to ban the possession of such weapons in Canada.

PEARSON AIRPORT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, residents adjacent to Pearson Airport are going to be abused once again. News reports suggest that the sonic boom created by the Concorde jet is about to contribute to the noise and emission pollution adjacent to Pearson Airport on a weekly basis.

Residents of the area have already been complaining of the lack of citizen participation in the environmental assessment of the runway extension program. They should have their own representative on the Environmental Assessment panel to ensure that the concerns of area residents are addressed properly. They should also have the right to a full environmental impact study on the introduction of any new, large-scale aircraft into Pearson Airport. Specifically, there should be a full environmental impact study conducted on the proposed Concorde service before permission to use Pearson is granted by the Government of Canada.

We, on this side of the House, call on the government to initiate such a study now.

POLISH CANADIAN CONGRESS

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Gan Dobre, Mr. Speaker! I have the privilege of welcoming to Ottawa and especially to this place members of the many Polish Canadian organizations that make up the Polish Canadian Congress, the official body representing the interests of Polish Canadians here and abroad.

They are in Ottawa today for their annual general meeting at which they will discuss, among many other things, their future co-operation with the Canada-Poland Business Council which has recently been incorporated to facilitate Canadian and Polish economic co-operation. A good working relationship between the two working groups will speed up the economic recovery of eastern Europe.

While the recent changes to the political environment in Poland and the Eastern Bloc have astonished, even amazed the world, there is simply no time to waste, no time for us to stand back, watch and wait.

I encourage this government, all organizations, and all individuals who can contribute in any way to begin now. We must ensure that these economically fragile countries survive the sudden change from totalitarianism to democracy and take their rightful place among first world nations.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the strike, which has closed the St. Lawrence Seaway, again reminds western Canadians where the NDP really stands.

The NDP does not hesitate to support the demands of big labour while prairie farmers are struggling to get by. The NDP members stand in this place pretending to support prairie agriculture while, at the very same time, they filibuster and delay much needed back to work legislation.

Some one million tonnes of grain bound for export is being held up thereby tarnishing Canada's reputation abroad and hurting our producers here at home. Where is the outcry of indignation from Saskatchewan NDP members? There is none and there will be none. Their silence exposes the hypocrisy of the NDP who pay lip-service to prairie farmers while dancing to the tune of their real masters, the big eastern labour bosses.

TRAGEDY IN MONTREAL

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I was incredulous and astonished when I heard the news of the carnage at the École Polytechnique. I am deeply saddened by this senseless act.

Mr. Speaker, it is hard to imagine that anyone whould commit such a crime. It is hard not to lose one's faith in mankind. This outrage should make all Canadians stop and think about the kind of society we have today. We are too easily inclined to tolerate various forms of violence in our society.

The families of these young women need to know that we support them in their grief, because these families will now have to live with the loss of a daughter, a sister, a granddaughter, a niece or a friend.

We can only hope that the personal faith of the persons who have been affected by these events, the support of their friends and relatives and the solidarity shown by millions of Canadians will give them some comfort at this time of suffering, and in the months and years to come.

I want to join all members of this House in extending my condolences to all those who mourn their loss today.

NATIONAL HIGHWAY SAFETY WEEK

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask all Canadians to help improve highway safety, especially during national highway safety week.

The week's theme is: "Courtesy is——". We should realize how important attitudes are when driving, since they have a direct impact on the safety of road users, including ourselves and our passengers.

Eighty-five per cent of highway accidents are due to human error, speeding, neglecting to yield and reckless driving.

If drivers were courteous and acted responsibly, most collisions could probably be avoided.

I invite you all to support the efforts of the Canada Safety Council during national highway safety week.

You can help make our highways safer.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, we are all in mourning after the tragedy in Montreal but Canadian women bear a double burden, the burden of sorrow and the burden of terror.

Wednesday night's catastrophe was just the extreme of the continuum of violence against women that Canadians face every day.

Will the Prime Minister respond to the overwhelming atmosphere in this country and agree to the appointment of a joint House and Senate committee to seek solutions to the all-pervasive problem of violence against women in Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all of us are searching our hearts for a way in which we can deal with the tragedy that has befallen the young women this week, and particularly their families.

In terms of what our government's role must be, it must continue to be to try to reduce violence within our society through a number of ways. First, as the hon. member knows, a year ago we introduced the largest addition of funding for family violence which is a very fundamental factor in many of these cases. Over the coming months there will be more options developed in terms of how we deal with this issue with which we are all trying to come to grips.

Let me say as well that it is much broader than this, and I want to use an example. This morning on Canada AM some of the journalists covering this very tragic event did so with great sensitivity. They then went on to review a movie which was supposed to be a comedy which deals with the violence between husbands and wives. It is so pervasive to try and accept that this is a normal part of our society, and our government intends to play its role in dealing with this issue.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, intending to play a role is fine but concrete action would be better.

[Translation]

My question is again directed to the Prime Minister.

Yesterday, a number of representatives of various women's groups got in touch with me, from various parts of Canada, to talk about the events in Montreal.

Does the Prime Minister intend to consult with these groups immediately, in order to take advantage of their expertise and help wipe out violence against women?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I went to the University of Montreal, at the École Polytechnique, where I met a number of students, both men and women, as well as members of the board, to offer the sincere condolences of all members of this House.

I also spoke to some of the women students about the nature of the problem just raised by the hon. member.

Today's questions concern one of the most serious problems in our society. We are using any number of means to try to wipe out violence, while in many other ways we are encouraging violence. Increasingly, this violence is directed against family members but especially against women, in a society that calls itself civilized.

This is a matter of grave concern for me personally and for the members of this government, and also, I am sure, for all hon. members.

We will act on all the suggestions that have been made, and I want to thank the hon. member for her comments. We intend, as a government and as a people, to deal with a situation that is having such a disastrous effect on the status of women and on social justice in this country.

• (1130)

[English]

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I hope that soon we will hear the concrete plans of this government to act in this area.

Given that the most recent budget saw drastic cuts to the Secretary of State women's program, will the Prime Minister give an undertaking today to restore funding at the very least to those programs that deal with violence against women and accepted a 15 per cent cut.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons there were some changes in the women's program was so that it could be directed particularly at groups with special needs, such as doubly disadvantaged women, the disabled who are more subject to violence than some other groups, to immigrant and visible minority women's groups. In this way the focus is on those where the needs are greatest. Among those issues that will be taken into account by the Secretary of State are those that deal with violence.

GUN CONTROL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): My question is for the Minister of Justice. People say that tough gun control legislation does not deter the professional criminal. The Montreal tragedy reminds us of the undeniable fact of crime in Canada and that most murders by firearms are not committed by professional criminals. Since we brought forward tough gun control legislation in 1978, firearm related crime has declined. I want therefore to ask the minister if he is prepared now to bring forward even tougher gun control legislation?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have been consulting for some time with the interest groups, the police officers' associations throughout the summer. My officials have been dealing with the interest groups on both sides of this issue in an effort to bring forward a package of amendments which will eliminate the further importation into Canada of automatic weapons, that is, weapons that are designed and manufactured and assembled to fire in the automatic mode.

Second, there is a package of what might be called housekeeping amendments. I can assure my hon. friend that within those amendments there are provisions to both eliminate administrative irritants and toughen gun control legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: Just to get back to specifics, I would like to ask whether the Minister is prepared to impose a compulsory waiting period when an application is made for a firearms acquisition certificate, and whether he is prepared to require that each application include third-party character references.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think there is in fact a delay time between the application for the firearms acquisitions—

Mr. Kaplan: Same day service.

Mr. Lewis: A delay in order to allow the officials to review the application and to do the checks that they want. However, my friend makes an interesting point. We are interested in improving legislation.

This law has been in place for 10 years and I think, by and large, it is working. But it can always be improved. That is the attitude we are taking. I think that this is the kind of thing that can be explored in debate. When we get to committee with the bill it is something that can be looked at there.

PETRO-CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It deals with published reports which indicate the government is prepared to now sell Petro-Canada completely.

Petro-Canada is a crucial public instrument to work for energy security, to work for environmentally safe energy development. The Prime Minister himself said in 1985: "It is Conservative policy to maintain Petro-Canada."

Will the Prime Minister keep his promise to maintain Petro-Canada, or is this yet one more broken promise to the Canadian people?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision on Petro-Canada yet. If a decision is made by Cabinet it will be announced in the usual manner.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the minister has outlined to the Toronto Star a complete plan for the privatization of Petro-Canada.

Of course, as we have learned in this House, this is simply a kite being flown but I suspect it is in fact a plan being set out.

[Translation]

I have a question for the Minister of State responsible for privatization. The minister says that Canadian control in the oil sector is growing rapidly. Doesn't he know that his own government's statistics indicate Canadian control is now 3 to 5 per cent less than it was in 1985, when it was 43 per cent? Why is the minister prepared to reduce Canadian control even further in the oil industry?

[English]

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the minister is not, in fact, reducing Canadian control of the oil industry.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in the past we have heard from this government that it did not plan to sell Air Canada. We heard that it planned to support VIA Rail. Now we hear it saying, "Of course, there is no plan to sell Petro-Canada," when in fact, the minister has outlined details to the newspaper saying that these are the ways in which it will be done. Clearly a kite is being flown in this case.

I ask the Prime Minister, why won't the Conservatives take no for an answer? Why won't they realize that the "no" which was given to the previous Conservative government is a no which deserves to be maintained for the future of this country and for the future of all of us in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in reports of the speech that the hon. gentleman made to his convention. I didn't see it but it was reported to me. He spoke very glowingly of the dramatic and dynamic changes taken within the economies of eastern Europe.

One of the principal actions that they are taking in eastern Europe is the privatization of all kinds of industries to get the state off their back.

STATUS OF WOMEN

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent—Cartierville): My question is directed to the Prime Minister. We all know that a senseless killing occurred this week. A particularly disturbing aspect of this tragedy is that the killer singled out women as his victims. This fact has heiglitned the growing fear women have of going out at night.

I would like to know when—and no pretty speeches please!—the government intends to do something about the increase in violent acts against 52 per cent of our population.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, because this has been such an active file for us over the last three years we have taken some action and will be continuing more.

There is $40 million going toward the building of shelters, toward education, toward developing more options. This is a problem for all of society and not just for government, and this government has taken the lead in helping to protect women.

You may recall as well that in our last session we did introduce a bill having to do with pornography which I think is another contributing factor and the kind of thing on which we want to continue to take action.

[Translation]

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, we were all deeply moved by the tragedy in Montreal. I would like the Prime Minister to answer the following question.

Our urban centres are fast becoming centres of aggression and violence against individuals, and especially against women. My question is as follows: Will the government start taking the problem of urban violence seriously and acknowledge that this problem has grown beyond the ability of municipal and provincial authorities to control it, and will it agree to get actively involved? The money may be there, but how much has been spent?

[English]

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, our actions to date have been very specific. There has never been a program that has pulled together all the kinds of initiatives that have been pulled together by this government. I think that has demonstrated the commitment of the Prime Minister and of this government. It is not a case of starting at the beginning. We are in the process of some very important initiatives that have to do with dealing with violence in our society, particularly in urban areas, and those initiatives will continue.

THE ECONOMY

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Prime Minister announced that our economy was in serious trouble. Today, we have seen a further increase in our unemployment rate. More than one million Canadians are out of work. According to some experts like Nesbitt Thompson, Montreal Trust, the Conference Board of Canada and even the Alberta Treasury, we are now either in a recession or on the brink of one. What new measures does the government have in mind to deal with this new situation?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member is misinterpreting what the Right Hon. Prime Minister said yesterday. He did acknowledge that we have a high level of interest rates, but that is in response to an economy that has been operating at a very high capacity, beyond its capacity to produce without inflationary pressures and we are seeing inflationary pressures. They are very clear.

I think it is important to realize that an economy cannot keep operating at those high levels the same way as an individual cannot run four-minute miles around a marathon course. What we are trying to do is manage some easing in the rate of growth in the economy so that we can get a reduction in interest rates. We all agree that lower interest rates are going to be helpful to this economy, but they can only happen when we are assured that the level of inflation has subsided.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer the question. He is giving the same answers that he has given to this House since 1984, because he obviously does not realize that we face a new economic situation in Canada. It is not a question of our economy running a marathon. This government with its high interest rates and its high dollar is putting the brakes to an economy that is already stalled. These policies are driving jobs out of Canada. In the month of November alone, Canada lost 45,000 high paying jobs in the goods producing and manufacturing sectors.

When is the minister going to get off this high interest rates- high dollar policy? When is he going to recognize Canada's new economic realities?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite aware of the job creation capacity of this economy and the success that we have had in the period since we came into office in 1984. That has continued through and is still there this year.

Mr. Peterson: Forty-five thousand jobs lost in manufacturing alone. That is in the last month.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The hon. member can use selective statistics to prove any case that he wants. The bottom line is that we have had a very successful economy over the course of the last five years and we are determined to keep that going over the years into the future. But there are signals of problems on the inflation front with which we must deal.

The hon. member shakes his head, because he forgets that in 1976 we had an inflation rate of 5.5 per cent that the government of the day swept under the carpet, ignored and within four or five years, we had inflation running at 13 percent and the high interest rates that were needed at that time to deal with that inflation problem.

Surely we have to understand how we can avoid those problems now and avoid the disaster that we ran into in 1981-1982. This is exactly what we are trying to do as a government.

Oral Questions

GUN CONTROL

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, over three years ago the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police unanimously passed a resolution noting that there is presently a world-wide surplus of automatic and semi-automatic weapons, primarily designed for purposes of warfare, now finding their way into the Canadian marketplace.

Over three years ago, the then Conservative Minister of Justice promised to act soon to bring forward legislation to deal with this serious problem.

I want to ask the Minister of Justice today, as all Canadians are asking, how much longer must we wait before this Conservative government finally acts, not to ban all semi-automatic weapons as the Liberal Party has proposed, but to ensure that we finally have in this country, much tougher, more effective gun control legislation? Specifically, will the minister agree to table a bill on this important subject before the House rises at Christmas?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in the House, we have been consulting with the chiefs of police organization, the firearms protection officers from Canada, the Wildlife Federation, the Shooters Association, in an effort to come up with not only tougher firearms control legislation but firearms control legislation that works better for both the user and the enforcement officers.

I am not going to say yes, I am going to rush it in today, because it is not exactly where I want it in terms of being finalized. But I can say to my hon. friend, that it is very close to being finalized. When it is properly there, we will bring it into the House.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, we have been waiting three years for this legislation. It is long overdue.

I have an ad for a Mini-14 rifle which speaks of the rifle as one that: "speaks with real authority", and it talks about the possibility of having a 30-shot clip with the rifle, a 30-shot clip, Mr. Speaker.

• (1150)

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a supplementary question. Would he be prepared to table amendments here in the House to restrict the number of bullets that semi-automatic weapons can contain? Would the Minister be prepared, for example, to introduce a waiting period between the time a weapon is acquired and the time a permit is issued to the new owner? Would the Minister be prepared, for example, to finally proclaim the Criminal Code provisions which require firearms courses but have never been proclaimed since 1978?

When will this Conservative government finally act by bringing in new stricter weapons control legislation?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is not something we started yesterday. It is something that was started in March, on my initiative, on the automatic weapon banning and looking at the FAC certificate fees and a series of amendments.

This law has been around for 10 years. Obviously any law that has been around for 10 years can be improved. We all realize that. We are moving to take out the irritants and to increase protection for the public.

My friend makes a good suggestion, a suggestion that I think is well worth looking at in committee where members from all sides can bring in experts, many of whom have been before my officials already, where we can try to improve it further. I welcome his participation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The minister is aware that approximately 100 Canadian leaders of Vietnam origin are here today and, in fact, most of them are in the gallery, from as far west as Vancouver to Quebec City, for the founding of the international branch of the International Committee for a Free Vietnam.

The minister will know, too, that untold numbers of priests, religious leaders, teachers, poets, trade union leaders, former businessmen, public servants, and soldiers are in custody in so-called re-education camps in Vietnam.

Will he tell the House what his government is currently doing on the eve of International Human Rights Day to push for greater human rights within Vietnam? Perhaps he would, in addressing that point and also recognizing the question of International Human Rights Day tomorrow, advise members of the House what he knows about the recent initiative in the Middle East with respect to the peace process?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, let me on behalf of other members of the House express our great satisfaction to the presence in the gallery of Canadian leaders of origin in Vietnam. Many of us have had the privilege of working with them now for more than a decade since actions were taken by a government I then had the honour to lead with respect to the boat people.

There is movement and change in Indo-China, but not as fast as in other parts of the world. We are urging that change move forward quickly with specific reference to the question of human rights abuses in Vietnam. We draw them to the attention of authorities in Vietnam regularly. The ambassador based in Bangkok is in that country regularly, and on each visit raises those issues.

I dispatched a special task force to the region earlier this spring. Those questions were raised then. Last year there were concerns about the fate of two Bhuddist monks. A Canadian intervention, among others, helped I believe to preserve the lives of those two individuals and we naturally will continue in that spirit.

With respect to the second question, Canada is very encouraged by the acceptance of U.S.A. Secretary Baker's five points by both Egypt and Israel. That is a most welcome and significant step toward eventual negotiation among the partners directly involved. That itself is a necessary step for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement. On behalf of the Government of Canada I would encourage all the parties to show maximum flexibility so that prospects for dialogue would not be encumbered by assumptions or by preconditions.

FISHERIES

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the government knows that any fish plant closures on the east coast of Canada, that could be announced as early as today, are only the tip of the iceberg because this government has yet to announce its quota cuts. It is going to announce them in about two weeks for eastern Canada and that is going to affect the fishing industry.

This is the only government in the world that permits foreign boats to fish within its 200-mile zone.

I want to ask the government if it will rescind an agreement made recently for NAFO managed fish stocks and cancel the U.S.S.R. cod quota in 3NO, half of which is inside of our 200-mile zone? Will it cancel their massive red fish quota, 10,000 tonnes in 3L which is within the northern cod stock area? Will the government cancel all those foreign allocations?

The government may think this is the spirit of glasnost but Canadian fishermen think this government deserves a punch in the nose.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, he must have been up all night practising that one.

With respect to the question of quotas, the hon. gentleman gave it all away in this question when he said NAFO managed stocks. That is the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization, which manages the stocks in 3NO. I know that only the hon. gentleman and I know what 3NO is. It is a zone off the east coast of Canada which NAFO manages, not Canada.

With respect to quotas within the 200-mile limit, the only quotas that foreign countries receive are stocks surplus to Canada's needs, which under the Law of the Sea agreement we have to offer to other countries if our own fishermen and businessmen will not use them, as I explained yesterday in connection with the silver hake.

Many other countries also permit foreign countries to fish within their 200-mile zones. All over the globe foreign countries are fishing in the 200-mile zones of coastal states as they are permitted to do under the Law of the Sea or other agreements all over the world. If that were not the case we would not have foreign fishing fleets at all. The hon. gentleman is completely wet as usual.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, did you ever think we would see the day when our fish companies would be going to the Soviet Union, as they did two weeks ago, hat in hand, asking the Soviet Union, as the last resort, for fish to be brought to Canadian fish plants so that we could keep our fish plants open.

I want to ask the Government of Canada, which is a 20 per cent shareholder of National Sea Products Limited, to confirm that neither the Government of Canada nor the governments of Nova Scotia or Newfoundland can lift a finger and give any assistance at all to these fish companies about to fold, all because of the free trade agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, a week ago—

Mr. Duhamel: You think it's funny, do you?

Mr. Crosbie: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman, does he want to bawl out a bit louder or am I allowed to answer?

A week ago the hon. member blamed the decision by Abitibi Price to shut down a 63-year old paper machine at Grand Falls on the free trade agreement. Today he is blaming these other results on the free trade agreement. He has got free trade agreement-itis.

The hon. member mentioned glasnost. If he is not careful he is going to have a "perestroke"!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands–Canso): How do you follow that, Mr. Speaker?

My question is for the Prime Minister. Last night a news report aired throughout Atlantic Canada predicted imminent plant closings which could mean a loss of as many as 2,500 jobs in fishing communities in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland.

What steps will the Prime Minister and his government announce today to protect the jobs of those fish processing workers?

• (1200)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we all know that we have a very serious situation off the east coast of Canada with reference to the total allowable catches and the situation with the northern cod.

Last February, I think it was, our marine biologists who advise the government stunned us by advising that the total allowable catch for northern cod, which they had recommended could be 295,000 tonnes in 1988, should be reduced to 125,000 tonnes in 1989.

We could not accept that advice because it would have devastated the whole offshore eastern Canada fishing industry, so we set the TAC at 235,000 tonnes and appointed Mr. Leslie Harris and a distinguished group to review this whole situation.

Undoubtedly it appears that the total allowable catch which will be decided upon by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the government by the end of December or early January will have to be reduced again. In light of that, the offshore companies have to make decisions which I think they are going to announce some time in the next short-term future.

When they do that we will announce our response. Our response will be based on helping the people involved who may lose their jobs, the fishermen or trawlermen involved. We will be ready to announce programs to help look after the people involved. It is tragic, but we cannot do anything about the total allowable catch. However we will act to respond to the results.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the residents of these fishing communities have been on the edge for weeks. They know there is a crisis.

Why does the government refuse to take this crisis seriously? Why will the minister not take immediate steps to prevent the closure of these plants?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, why does the hon. gentleman not get together with his colleagues? There is a fisheries critic for Nova Scotia in the opposition. There is one for P.E.I., there is one for New Brunswick, and there is one for the fisheries generally. Why don't they get their act together?

Only two days ago the member for South West Nova was up demanding that we transfer to inshore fishermen quotas from the offshore. It is the offshore fishermen and fish plants that are going to be affected which the hon. gentleman is now up protesting about.

Why does he not speak to the member for South West Nova and decide what it is they want to do? Is it the offshore fishermen they want to protect or the inshore fishermen or none of them? Perhaps they are just trying to score political points.

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

On July 5, two fishing vessels were seized by the U.S. coast guard in Canadian waters south of the Alaska boundary allegedly for fishing in U.S. waters, but they have not been charged for fishing in U.S. waters. The Canadian fishermen using sophisticated Loran equipment and witnesses assure that the ships were operating south of the A–B line in Canadian waters.

It was only when the Department of External Affairs advised those fishermen to surrender that they surrendered to the U.S. authorities and were taken to Ketchikan, Alaska, and only when they were offered assistance by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Those fishermen have been asking for assistance for the last six months. They go to a hearing in Alaska on December 19. They have deposits at risk, boats at risk, and their homes at risk. They do not have the money to hire lawyers. When is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to provide the assistance that he promised and that the surrender of those boats was based upon?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member describes part of the situation as he knows. He is correct in saying that the matter comes before authorities in Alaska on December 19. We are looking to see what kind of help the Government of Canada might be able to provide in the circumstances. I can assure him that I am actively following the case personally myself.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the last several years Canadian fishermen have been harassed in that area by the U.S. coast guard on a number of occasions by having U.S. coast guard ships run at them at high speeds and circle them at high speeds. The wash has damaged their equipment and their boats and put crews at risk.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs call upon the Minister of National Defence and the minister responsible for the coast guard to make sure that Canadian fishermen fishing in Canadian waters are protected from acts of violence and piracy by the U.S. coast guard?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, in a sense that would be a very easy question to answer if the issue were only acts of violence and piracy. Of course the answer is very straightforward and of course we protect Canadian fishermen against that kind of difficulty.

As the hon. member knows, the situation is considerably more complex there because of a difficult boundary dispute. As the hon. member also knows, the resolution of that dispute one way or the other has very significant implications for the Canadian fishery.

I know that in a calmer atmosphere than in Question Period in the House of Commons, the hon. member would want us to take account of all of the aspects of this very difficult problem between Canada and the United States, one that impacts directly upon people engaged in the fishing industry on both sides of the line. We are trying to approach it in that constructive way, and we will continue to do that.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Agriculture pertains to the seaway strike which is harming Canada's grain exports.

Yesterday, an NDP member asked: "Does every province in this wonderful country of ours have to take control of agriculture because this government cannot be trusted to protect the interests of the Canadian farm community?"

Which side of the NDP policy coin will the minister choose to follow? Will it be heads, the side which at three o'clock yesterday purported to make a plea for the farm community, or will it be tails, the side which at exactly the same time is delaying and filibustering back to work legislation which would reopen the seaway and enable the movement of Canadian grain exports to continue?

Will it be heads or tails, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it will be heads or tails, but I can assure the hon. member that it will be in the public interest and particularly the interest of the farmers. That is the position that this government will take, as it always has in the past.

I find it passing strange with over 1,334,000 tonnes of grain ready for movement through the seaway system in store in Thunder Bay and, as the Minister of Transport pointed out yesterday, there are 51 ocean going vessels in the Great Lakes system west of the St. Lambert lock and of these 33 are still above the Welland Canal. There are an additional eight Canadian inland vessels per day, and the average operating cost of these vessels varies from $5,000 to $25,000 per day in demurrage costs.

I urge the NDP and the Liberals to put the public interest ahead of their own partisan interests and get on with the job of passing this legislation in the interest of the farmers.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I have learned that Les Boiseries de l'Outaouais, which is located in my riding and, remember, was given by the Prime Minister barely a year ago as an example of a company that could meet the challenges of free trade, went bankrupt recently, putting many out of work. This company had asked the Federal Business Development Bank for financial assistance to help it continue its activities, but was refused.

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for regional development at all costs. Are the loans given recently by the Federal Business Development Bank for companies featuring nude dancers rather than companies like Les Boiseries de l'Outaouais, for which the Prime Minister called me a hypocrite last year—

I would like to know whether the Minister can tell me if the Federal Business Development Bank again made a mistake.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the question of making loans to nightclubs and whatnot which feature nude dancers, the policy is very clear. I have stated it repeatedly in the House to repeated questions. I do not know what that has to do with the particular company the hon. member talked about.

As the hon. member knows we live in a dynamic economy. There are new firms being created and some firms going out of existence. Every year, according to Statistics Canada, four million people change jobs in this country.

• (1210)

If the hon. member wants to bring the details of the company in question to me, I will ask the FBDB about the nature of its dealings with it to see in fact if it has been treated fairly, which I am quite confident it has.

[Translation]

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister or the Prime Minister explain to me how come, for companies like Les Boiseries de l'Outaouais providing skilled jobs, the loan was refused, while the present policies of this same government give more support to companies that could surely be self-sufficient?

[English]

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I am told by the FBDB that approximately 20 per cent of the businesses that contact it actually apply for a loan and about 80 per cent to 85 per cent of those which apply in fact receive a loan.

The hon. member is asking me why the company in question is part of the 15 per cent which did not receive a loan. Give me the details; I will look into it and reply to him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will close Question Period with one question from the member for Winnipeg—St. James and one question from a member of the New Democratic Party.

THE ENVIRONMENT

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment.

As he well knows Alberta Pacific has proposed a major pulp mill for northern Alberta. People living in that area, as well as environmentalists, are scared stiff by that project because of the damage it would cause to the environment of northern Alberta, Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories, as well as the harm it would bring to the way of life of natives living in that region.

The minister also knows that other similar projects have been proposed for that region of Canada over the last couple of years.

Will the minister commit the government today, right now, to a full and comprehensive federal environmental impact assessment of that major pulp mill in northern Alberta?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the member raises this question today.

This government is very proud to have concluded the first agreement with a province through which the federal government is allowed to participate in a joint evaluation of the environmental impact of such a project.

This was done in Alberta last July and that is why we now have a very important ongoing review process to assess the impact of the Alberta Pacific pulp mill. This government will do the same thing each time there are federal areas of responsibility affected by a project.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday we learned that both Canadian and Saskatchewan regulatory agencies have recommended to their Attorneys General that charges be laid against Camico as a result of the spill of 440,000 gallons of contaminated mine water into Wallis-ton Lake on November 7.

In light of the fact that AECB inspected the site at least 25 or 30 times since the alarm system which would have prevented the spill was disconnected, and since I also learned yesterday that six years after a serious incident occurred at Camico's Port Hope facility AECB still allows that facility to operate without an emergency community response system being in place, I would ask the minister: When are we going to start investigating the role of the regulators themselves in all this? Surely they have blown the right to investigate themselves.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the Rabbit Lake spill the hon. member knows that the investigation by AECB is continuing. AECB is looking at the recommendations respecting the review that has taken place. These are being examined in respect of alleged violations.

It is the responsibility of the prosecuting counsel for the Attorney General's office to make a final decision in respect to any other actions that might be taken. Until those actions have been taken and made public I cannot give any further information.

POINT OF ORDER

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—COMMENTS OF MINISTER IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, in Question Period yesterday the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs read from a document and quoted words that were attributed to Mrs. Woodsworth of the One Voice Seniors Network and also to the National Council on Welfare.

I had occasion to inquire from One Voice whether it was aware that a transcript was being taken of its remarks in its pre-budget meeting with the Minister of Finance. It acknowledged that although note takers were present, it was not aware of nor had it received a copy of a transcript such as the document the minister seemed to be reading from appeared to be.

I have asked the Clerk as well whether the document was tabled by the minister voluntarily. I therefore would like to ask that the minister table the document from which he was reading in yesterday's Question Period.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I was not quoting from a document yesterday. I was quoting from one-page notes that I had in front of me. I do not know what the hon. member is talking about.

Notes were taken at meetings, advice was given. I relayed the advice that was given to the minister to the House yesterday. There is no document concerned. It was a consultation.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I want the minister to be aware that when he quoted in the House yesterday he was quoting verbatim comments made in pre-budget discussions with various individuals.

I guess at that time a lot of us felt concern that the assumption presumably would be that many of these pre-budget discussions were not public meetings and presumably the contents of those meetings would be kept in the strictest of confidence.

The minister yesterday decided to breach that and read from notes or a document of some kind, as he said, the precise words of a certain individual. I think that is the point the hon. member is making. This is a very serious breach of confidentiality.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Speaker, I find the minister's comments surprising. This is what he said yesterday at page 6615 of Hansard:

> It is very plain exactly what Mrs. Woodsworth, who was representing hat group, said. She said it, and I will read it to you again. I will do so slowly:

That is what he said, and then he read some words. Clearly he had some document from which he was reading. He said he was reading from it. I think it is only clear that he should table that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has heard the comments of the hon. member for Ottawa South, the hon. member for Kamloops and the hon. minister. The Chair must take the minister's word.

AIR TRANSPORT

TABLING OF DRYDEN REPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the the interim report of the commission of inquiry into the Air Ontario crash at Dryden, Ontario.

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING AND REFERENCE OF APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table, in both official languages, a number of Order in Council appointments which were made by the government.

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1) these are deemed referred to the appropriate standing committees, a list of which is attached.

PETITIONS

CANADA POST CORPORATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 of the House of Commons. This petition is signed by 374 residents of the community of Vars, Ontario in my riding.

These people are objecting to the fact that Canada Post announced in October that it intended to shut down the post office in Vars, Ontario.

The petitioners have all asked that the Government of Canada and Canada Post rescind this decision and keep the post office at Vars open.

I whole-heartedly support this petition.

OPPOSITION TO TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION ON FISCAL INDEMNIFICATION OF ISOLATED AND NORTHERN AREAS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, today it is my privilege to table, in accordance with Standing Order 36, a petition that rejects the recommendations of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas. Your petitioners, who represent the isolated communities of Joutel and Matagami, are concerned that the report's recommendations will cause many workers to leave these isolated communities. They believe that the Government of Canada has refused to adjust its policies to the needs of their daily lives. Life in the North is hard because of the isolation and the high cost of living.

People in Joutel and Matagami have very few possessions, compared to people further south. They are producers rather than consumers.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of my constituents in accordance with Standing Order 36, objecting to the senseless and heartless proposed 9 per cent GST as it will relate to ordinary citizens carrying on with their ordinary lives.

I am pleased to present this petition on behalf of my constituents.

MUNICIPAL INFRASTRUCTURE

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present this petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 as the co-chair of the national task force on municipal infrastructure. These petitioners are all from the province of Alberta.

The petitioners are asking the Government of Canada to recognize that the current infrastructure crisis is now a national problem requiring the combined efforts of federal, provincial and municipal governments.

They ask the government to support the efforts of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities to have all levels of government working together on infrastructure to ensure a sound economy, a healthy environment and public health and safety for Canadians.

EGG MARKETING

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have several petitions to table today. First is one from the egg producers of Middlesex County who are asking the government to reject any proposals involving tariffication, any increased minimum import provisions or any increased access to an already well balanced Canadian market.

Middlesex County egg producers humbly pray that Parliament take action in this regard.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from the people of Lambton County who call upon Parliament to enact legislation which will effectively protect the life of the pre-born child.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I also have a whole series of petitions from people throughout southwestern Ontario who are objecting to the proposed goods and services tax being brought forward by this government.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from western Canada who point out their concerns regarding the goods and services tax and mainly the fact that it is an unfair form of taxation because of its lack of regard for the taxpayers' ability to pay.

The petitioners are simply calling on the government to cease with this proposal which will tax diapers and coffins, taxing Canadians from the cradle to the grave.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36. I have a petition that is signed by 51 of my constituents from Baie Verte, Brownsdale, Sibley's Cove, New Melbourne and Clarke's Beach.

These constituents are very concerned about what they consider to be the most unpopular government initiative in their lifetimes, that is the goods and services tax.

Their concern is that they are overtaxed. They are overburdened. Changes in the unemployment insurance system, Bill C-21, is going to affect them. They are concerned about all the cut-backs that we have witnessed in the last budget in Atlantic Canada, and they are asking Parliament to reject the goods and services tax.

VIA RAIL

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present. One is a petition signed by 38 people from Espanola and McKerrow, Ontario and another by a group from Victoria and Brentwood Bay,

British Columbia, calling on the government to upgrade Canada's present national railway network, to upgrade VIA Rail with new equipment and to give VIA Rail a sufficient budget to maintain its national mandate for passenger service.

I have a second petition signed by residents of such points on the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway as Chemainus, Victoria, Ladysmith, Nanaimo, Nanoose Bay, Parksville, Qualicum Beach and points north.

They are calling upon the government. The undersigned strongly recommend that the decision to cut passenger rail service in Canada be reconsidered immediately. In their opinion the statistics used to support these cuts are distorted and erroneous. In many cases it has been the deliberate policy of both the railway and the government over a long period to discourage the use of passenger services by means of inconvenient scheduling and disgracefully maintained facilities.

They are particularly concerned that the service on Vancouver Island by the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway be maintained and upgraded. Even with the present ridiculous schedule, the line is heavily used by both residents and tourists and passengers are being turned away. The potential exists for a profitable operation of this island railway.

It is addressed to the Hon. Prime Minister so I will have to deliver it to him directly.

PROPOSED GOODS AND SERVICES TAX

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36, I have petitions on three different topics to present to the House.

First, I have a petition which is part of a larger petition from my riding of Northumberland, signed by constituents from all areas of my riding, from all walks of life. They represent people who are very concerned about the proposed goods and services tax.

They ask that the government withdraw from any consideration of the proposed goods and services tax.

RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, second, I have a petition signed by hundreds of people from my riding, again from all areas of the riding, who petition the members of this House to formulate and legislate a law to protect life from conception, a law which seeks to save the lives of both mother and child.

BILL 178

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, third, I have a petition signed by people from my constituency who believe that Bill 178 in the province of Quebec discriminates against the minority English language interests in that province. They call upon this government to do what it can to speak out against Bill 178 and withdraw it.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, submitted by people from Melville, Gerald, Cupar, Raymore and Perdue in the province of Saskatchewan who decry the government having taken oats out of the control of the Canadian Wheat Board.

They point out that orderly marketing is such an integral part of the agricultural industry in Canada it is essential that products such as oats be under a marketing board. They are asking that oats once again be put back under the control of the Wheat Board through the Wheat Board Act.

ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present to the House of Commons today a petition from a number of constituents of Scarborough Centre and also from other parts of Scarborough. This is in relation to the Rouge Valley.

The Rouge Valley is 5,000 hectares of wilderness area in metro Toronto. It has a herd of white tail deer in metro Toronto, if you can believe that, Mr. Speaker. It is true. White tail deer are roaming in the wild and we want to keep it that way.

The Save the Rouge Valley Organization is a group of thousands of volunteers whose representatives were in Ottawa this week, Jim Robb, Glen de Baeremaeker, Ron Moeser, and met with about 50 members of Parliament from all sides of the House to explain to them the importance of saving the Rouge Valley because of its tremendous wildlife wilderness setting. We want to keep it that way.

The royal commissioner for the future of the Toronto waterfront recognizes that this valley needs to be saved. The Ontario Government owns about 80 per cent of this land.

The petitioners are calling upon the Government of Canada to work with the Government of Ontario to make the Rouge River Valley system a provincial park or a Canadian heritage park.

GOVERNMENT SERVICES RESUMPTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. de Cotret that Bill C–49, an act to provide for the resumption of certain government services, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Ms. Clancy (p. 6637)

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker,. I rise to oppose second reading of Bill C–49. As I see it, the bill is flawed in principle and will be disastrous in terms of public policy. The background to this bill is that we have had not only a bungled set of negotiations but now we have a bungled bill.

I start by acknowledging the difficulty and complexity of bargaining in the federal Public Service. This is a big country. There are very significant and difficult problems, for Treasury Board, the union and the employees in trying to reach a good, sound and effective collective agreement. The bargaining comes as part of the process of general bargaining in this very large Public Service.

We have particular anomalies that need to be dealt with. To fine–tune the system to deal with these anomalies is difficult.

Having acknowledged that, I want to say that this whole dispute seems to be a series of mis–cues, mistakes and errors on the part of Treasury Board in how it has handled this. We have the initial problem of the long delay in even reaching serious stages of collective bargaining and we do not have a collective agreement yet.

We have the problem of bungling the issue of essential services. There have been a number of opportunities throughout this dispute to reach a collective agreement. The employees were effectively forced out on strike in order to negotiate demands, some of which were already agreed to by the government.

We have the government publicly distorting the claims of the union in the dispute. After three and a half weeks—it will be four and a half weeks by the time this legislation is driven through the House by the government—after a difficult strike leading to risks to the general public and a series of problems which the government now trots out in justification of this legislation, we have a bill that is going to force the workers back to work, bitter, unhappy and divided and which does not come close to resolving the issues in a proper and fair way.

Back to work legislation is always difficult. Let us go back to first principles. We live in what we like to think is a free society. One of the principles in a free society is the concept of free collective bargaining. That is simply the freedom to work under conditions and terms that one has voluntarily agreed to with one's employer, rather than work under terms imposed by law. The freedom of collective bargaining is the freedom to reach that agreement together with one's fellow employees, joining to provide a stronger voice at the bargaining table for reaching the terms and conditions.

That is a right which has been fought for politically over the years. It has been fought for industrially over the years and has been at least on the surface well established in Canada. Canada has agreed internationally to this. It is a term of covenant of the International Labour Organization.

We have seen the enthusiasm with which all Canadians have greeted the struggle in eastern Europe to achieve collective bargaining. In fact, it strikes us on this side of the House that there is a tinge of hypocrisy on the government's enthusiasm for free collective bargaining in eastern Europe and its decision to impose this kind of legislation in this dispute.

Underlying the principle of freedom in this area is the common good sense of the policy of free collective bargaining. If people voluntarily reach an agreement on their terms and conditions, they will find that the regime in which they work is happier. People will be more productive, their lives will be fuller and we will have a better society. We should be tinkering with that freedom only with the greatest delicacy and care. Legislation to force workers to work under terms and conditions imposed should be done so only with the greatest care and delicacy.

What do we have here? First, I am informed that we have a dispute which covers three issues. These are the issues of wages, regional equity and pay equity as between men and women in sectors of the Public Service.

I come from Victoria, British Columbia. I know I speak for the members for Saanich—Gulf Islands and Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca who share with me the pleasant task of representing the greater Victoria area in this House.

There are many employees from this area who are involved in this strike and who are pushing hard for justice in their collective agreement. They have sacrificed in the last three and a half weeks to make the point that they want, need and deserve justice at the bargaining table.

One of the very vivid issues in our area is the fact that the ships' crews who work for the federal government have significant pay differences from those who have similar jobs in other sections of the federal service and the provincial public service, for example the B.C. ferries. If we want to keep the employees who have given many years of service to the coast guard and to other areas involved in this strike, we must come up with a solution that recognizes those disparities. Equally, we must address, in trying to solve the issues of this dispute, the issues of regional unfairness and pay equity.

We come now to a bill which forces the employees back to work. First, the government trots out a series of individual problems such as the freeze-up in the St. Lawrence, the Ste. Anne's Hospital in the province of Quebec, other cases that would call upon the public to say: "Yes, this strike must be over". I say to that two things: First, if there are special cases in which the public interest in having services resume is so dominant, then let the bill be confined to those specific cases. Let us not have legislation which sweeps into the back to work order those whose work in that way cannot be described as essential to the public interest, although we all agree that the work done by all of these workers is vital to the public interest. What is equally vital to the public interest however is the principle of free collective bargaining and of the practical importance of reaching an agreement that the employees are happy with and willing to accept. That is the first point.

The second point is if the government wants a back to work order that will work and encourage productivity in the workplace, it is essential that the employees understand that they have won from this strike. They have won a number of important principles.

The government has stood in the House during this debate and acknowledged that it is prepared to agree to regional pay equity and it is prepared to agree to pay equity between genders in the Public Service, particularly on the hospital side. But the government has refused to include those provisions within the terms of this legislation.

If there is a back to work order emerging from this legislation, the government should make it absolutely clear within the terms of the legislation that the conciliation boards must proceed to a decision which is based on those two principles. We should have a term in this legislation which directs the conciliation board to take into account the gap between jobs in the Public Service in this component and comparable jobs in the public and private sectors.

• (1240)

This is a difficult bill. The government should not have proceeded with it in the first place. It is one that we are going to oppose with every fibre we can in this House at second reading, acceptance in principle. It is a bill that we are going to oppose on a clause-by-clause basis. We call on the government to listen to the position taken by its employees.

The government has in this collective bargaining dispute a weapon which is not available to other employers. It is bad enough for a government to bring in back to work legislation which has the broad axe of this legislation, but the government has a double responsibility in this case because the government is the employer. The government is using its legislative strength to hammer its will upon the employees in this case. That is wrong, that is unconscionable. That is being opposed by the New Democratic Party in this House and we are proud to stand on the side of the employees in this strike.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-49 and to support the motion presented this morning by the Leader of the Government in the House of Commons. Mr. Speaker, the strike by Canadian Coast Guard employees is now in its 27th day, at a time of the year when weather conditions are extremely harsh, especially this year because of the early onset of winter. Traffic on the Great Lakes, the Seaway and the St. Lawrence River must be made safe for crews, for the men and women working on ships going up and down the St. Lawrence River, and it must also be safe for our ferries and for crews and passengers on the ferries that ply between the two shores of the St. Lawrence every day of the week. We also must ensure that cargo transported by ships on the St. Lawrence is handled safely.

As I said ealier, navigation on the St. Lawrence is usually difficult at this time of the year, but it is even more so this year because the weather has rapidly deteriorated and the onset of winter is much earlier than usual. Conditions have become even worse because of the work stoppage by employees of Canada's Coast Guard.

I would like to mention very quickly the services provided by ferries on the St. Lawrence River. From Montreal to Matane, ferries ply daily between the two shores of the St. Lawrence. These ferries are used by many passengers, by travellers and trucks carrying shipments of food and other essential products to communities on both shores of the St. Lawrence, and these ferries must operate under the best and safest possible conditions.

I would also like to mention the Magdalen Islands which depend on shipping for their essential needs such as food, fuel and other items residents need on a daily basis. There again, both cargo and passengers must be transported safely. The crews on the ship that links the Magdalen Islands to the mainland must also work under safe conditions.

Can we run the risk of having serious accidents on the St. Lawrence during the strike, accidents that will endanger the lives of crews and passengers and may cause all kinds of spills in the St. Lawrence?

Dangers occur regularly. At all times of the year, every possible safety precaution must be taken regularly, the more so at this time of year when it is absolutely essential that all Coast Guard services be provided for the sake of the safety of the users, the cargoes and the people working there.

Mr. Speaker, the users are entitled to safe conditions, employees have a right to safe conditions and that is why it is important to act as soon as possible.

I would like to take a few minutes of the House's time to talk about the extremely negative impact of this work stoppage by the Coast Guard employees on the economy of the main cities in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, the economy of the region of Havre St-Pierre, Sept-Iles, Port-Cartier and Baie-Comeau in the riding of Charlevoix depends on shipping and marine traffic. From Havre St-Pierre, Mr. Speaker, we regularly send shipments of titanium ore to Sorel. From Sept-Iles, Pointe-Noire and Port-Cartier, large amounts of iron ore are loaded onto ships that go up the St. Lawrence and take the Seaway to Great Lakes ports to deliver their cargo. On the return trip, these ships bring grain from the Great Lakes ports to the ports of Sorel, Trois-Rivières, Quebec City, Baie-Comeau and Port-Cartier on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. Speaker, the present work stoppage by Coast Guard employees is costing the economy of the North Shore, Quebec and Canada millions of dollars.

From information I have this morning, I know that the Quebec-Cartier mining company of Port-Cartier is in danger of losing tens of millions of dollars because ships are waiting at Port-Cartier to go up the St. Lawrence with their cargo of iron ore for Great Lakes ports in the United States and Canada.

In addition, ships carrying raw materials to the Quebec-Cartier mining company plants are also being held up and this poses a particular problem, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that if the materials which are use to make ore pellets do not get to Port-Cartier the stocks will be depleted and, in the short run, this might force lay-offs in the industry.

A company operates grain elevators in Port-Cartier. We had managed to open up a large market in Europe and especially in Russia. But now two ships are anchored off Port-Cartier waiting to take on grain shipments which are stranded on the Great Lakes because they cannot get through the seaway and sail safely down the St. Lawrence River.

Here again the situation is harmful to the company and its employees, and that as well may lead to more lay-offs in the near future.

Sept-Îles' Iron Ore mining company is another such case. Ships are waiting to leave for the Great Lakes with their iron ore cargo. We have a similar scenario with respect to Pointe-Noire's Wabush Mines. Hundreds of employees will soon be without a job because their work depends on free-flowing maritime traffic on the St. Lawrence River and through the seaway. The local economy is reeling, Mr. Speaker, and here again what we need is immediate government intervention to order Coast Guard staff back to work.

I should like to comment briefly on the work stoppage in DND hospitals.

Mr. Speaker, on several occasions I visited a friend of mine who spent a number of years in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue's veterans hospital. You have to visit one of these hospitals to realize to what extent the people who are there as patients for extended care need the full support of the staff and employees who work there.

Last night I drove by the DND hospital, the veterans hospital in Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue, and I noticed there was a picket line manned by employees on strike. Of course, I immediately pictured in my mind the residents and patients of that hospital who need care. I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that we can tolerate this precarious situation much longer and the government must intervene as soon as possible.

• (1250)

Therefore, we must act immediately. We must pass Bill C-49. We must order Coast Guard and National Defence hospital employees to go back to work and allow the bargaining process to continue. Negotiations have been pursued assiduously and continuously. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) has made reasonable offers in line with agreements reached with other bargaining units. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the bargaining process must be resumed as soon as possible and that Coast Guard and hospital employees must go back to work for the greater safety of the Canadian public.

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I see it as my duty to speak to Bill C-49 and say that I disagree with the federal government's proposal.

This bill forces two groups of employees in the Public Service to return to work immediately. The two groups in question are ships' crews and hospital service employees.

The latter group represents 2,600 employees, including nurses, orderlies, therapists and support staff, including cooks, stockroom workers, cleaners and laundry workers.

I may add that most of the employees are women. The Federal Court of Appeal said last September that a strike by these employees would be legal.

The President of the Treasury Board said that the strikers were a threat to the safety of Canadians and that he was prepared to negotiate an agreement at any time.

According to the Minister, 95 per cent of collective bargaining agreements in the Public Service were negotiated without strikes. A fair and reasonable offer was made to both groups— 4.1 per cent—according to the President of the Treasury Board. He wants a quick solution.

The penalties, said the Minister, would be from $500 to $1,000 per day per striker. Mr. Speaker, many of these strikers earn less than $20,000 annually. Can you imagine what a fine of $1,000 a day does to someone who earns $20,000 annually? From $10,000 to $50,000 per day in fines for the union president, and from $50,000 to $100,000 per day for the union. A fair and reasonable offer! Four point one!

The government is in a hurry. It wants to pass legislation that will bring the most vulnerable and weakest employees in the Public Service to their knees.

The ships' crews have been on strike for three weeks. Hospital services employees have been on strike for one week. These employees have been working without a collective agreement for two years.

What was the government doing all that time? It was playing hardball. It was using all kinds of delaying tactics so that finally, at the last minute, it could swoop down and crush the unions.

The ship's crews earn an average of $20,000 annually, Mr. Speaker. They risk their lives to save lives. They say this group made unreasonable demands. Is it unreasonable for a seaman on the Atlantic Coast to claim the same salary as his counterpart on the Pacific Coast? Those on the Pacific Coast didn't think it was unreasonable, since they not only accepted parity, they were even prepared to take less to help their counterparts on the Atlantic Coast to earn the same salary they do. The ships' crews are asking to be treated the same way as naval seamen in National Defence. They work for the same employer. They are asking for a sea duty allowance.

I would like to quote from a Canadian press News Wire report datelined October 16, 1989 Ottawa.

[English]

MPs paid tribute Monday to four men believed to have drowned off the Newfoundland coast during the weekend.

Three Canadian Coast Guard members and a diver they were attempting to rescue were presumed dead after they were swept away by heavy seas Sunday just north of St. John's.

It brings to four the number of coast guard personnel lost while making rescue this year.

Transport Minister Benoit Bouchard called the losses a tragedy.

Bouchard said the coast guard members will be remembered as heroes, both personally and as representatives of the thousands of Canadians who endanger their lives to save others.

Their daily bravery is testimony to the finest and noblest aspects of the human character.

Search and rescue is a dangerous and sometimes deadly occupation, yet these men and women risk their lives on an ongoing basis in order to save others from injury and death.

I add to that: They get $12 an hour. What they are asking for is a 6 per cent raise which amounts to 72 cents per hour.

[Translation]

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) stated yesterday morning the commercial shipping stoppage on the Great Lakes was costing $2 million a day. He stated earlier the legislation was put forward in the interest of the safety and security of Canadians. I would like to know what is meant exactly by safety and security of Canadians, when we know that crew members on the picket lines are still responding to emergencies, within the same response time as they did before the strike.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) stated the other day in this House that safety was not a factor. Federal ships' crews are getting 28 per cent less on average than those in the private sector. Hospital services employees are among the lowest paid workers in Canada. Their pay scale starts at $16,000 or $18,000 a year. Their yearly wages average $20,000. Those wages are at a the poverty-line level. Most of those employees, as we all know, are women and it is my guess that most of them have families. It has come to my attention that those employees are paid as much as 40 per cent less than those doing exactly the same work for the same employer in the Public Service. I am citing one of those places as being 240 Sparks street. I ask the Minister how come a male employee earns 40 per cent more than a female employee doing the same work? Where is the sense of equality?

I would have another quote, Mr. Speaker. I have here—

[English]

It is a press release of November 29, 1989:

Hospital Workers Offer to Provide Essential Services

Ottawa—Public Service Alliance of Canada members in the Hospital Services (HS) group are in a legal strike position as of today.

That is November 29:

And, according to PSAC Vice-President, Jim MacEwen, the union has contacted the government departments affected with an offer to provide essential services. "We have not as yet received the response as to whether or not they are willing to agree with the conditions and level of service outlined in our offer", says MacEwen.

"We didn't seek this strike but we have an employer who stonewalled us during two years of negotiations, has refused to comply with a finding of the Canadian Human Rights Commission with respect to pay equity and has so exasperated the patience and goodwill of our members that they see no alternative but to take this type of action.

"We never go on strike happily but in this instance, it is even more difficult because of the people involved. They include the elderly and former combatants. The relationship our members have with these people can only be described as a loving and caring one. We are very unhappy that the employer is forcing us to take action that will, in all honesty, cause these people some distress.

McEwen says it is the union's concern for these people that led to the 'essential services offer'. It is true that a vulnerable segment of our community is going to be affected by this strike but it is also a vulnerable segment of our society that has to take strike action—a predominantly female group making the lowest wages in the federal public service.

• (1300)

[Translation]

I am asking the President of the Treasury Board: Does he have no sense of justice in terms of equal pay in the Public Service? How come women are not entitled to the same rights as their male counterparts in the eyes of this Tory Government? One hundred per cent of hospital services' employees, janitors, maintenance and cleaning staff, do not endanger public safety when they strike. For what reason did the President of the Treasury Board not establish earlier who should be designated as performing an essential service? Those people have been without a collective agreement for two years. Your employees have been waiting for two years for equal pay.

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I am not particularly enthusiastic as I rise to speak in this debate which will end with the House of Commons adoption of special legislation to put a stop to the legal strike of a number of Coast Guard employees who work on ships and others who staff veterans hospitals. I am all the more sincere when I say that, Mr. Speaker, because in my riding office I had the pleasure to greet a delegation of men and women who work aboard ships.

In the Quebec City region we have 210 people who work on ships to provide safety and maintenance services. More often than not they work under trying conditions. One thing I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, is that my meeting with these workers proved to be a very enriching personal experience. I must admit I had no idea how hard these people work, often in difficult conditions, far from their families and at the employer's call on a few hours' notice. In that respect I would suggest that their strike has made the public at large more aware of the low-profile yet very effective work done by these employees. I take this opportunity to pay homage to these people who, for the first time in 21 years, exercised their right to go on strike.

Even so, Mr. Speaker, regardless of the admiration and respect one may have towards Coast Guard workers, their right to strike is not absolute. We have to keep in mind that there are many rights in life, and we know full well that health and safety rights are also extremely important.

After 27 striking days, at a time when many people, including the workers themselves, are beginning to wonder about safety conditions on the St. Lawrence River—and I am thinking of the Quebec City region where an oil carrier supplies the Ultramar refinery which provides petroleum products to a large market in the province—we cannot ignore the right to safety, the right to a standard of living. Mr. Speaker, I am taken aback by the somewhat irresponsible approach of my colleagues opposite. We would be first to bear the blame if, after some time when these people have publicly aired their reasonable and legitimate grievances— I have in mind pay parity between east and west coast workers, a normal demand. We are going to correct this unfairness which the Liberal governements before us accepted. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) promised that as soon as the contract is signed, Coast Guard employees on the east and west coasts would be paid the same. This was not done by the Liberal governements, but we are doing it the first time the collective agreement is being renegotiated. I and my colleagues on this side of the House are proud of it.

Even though we defend workers' rights, which I do with conviction, we must agree that we have reached an impasse. The workers are now asking for a salary increase of about 49 per cent over 36 months. Labour does not challenge these figures. Furthermore, the President of the Treasury Board exceeded the limits he set for 95 per cent (of the Public Service) and which were accepted in bargaining with the Public Service Alliance. I would say he made an exception to correct the pay inequity by offering 24.5 per cent over 46 months. We do not have to be experts to realize that we face a big gap between the management offers and union demands. That is why at some point we must draw the line. The cold weather is now upon us and large amount of grain and ore are blocked in the river, on the Great Lakes or in Canada's waterways. If we do nothing, again, we would be irresponsible.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, let me draw upon my past experience. This will surely mean something to you as a former journalist. For about ten years, I was parliamentary correspondent for the TVA television network at the Quebec legislature. On four occasions, I covered negotiations with public and parapublic sector employees—some 300,000 people. On a few occasions, the Government of Quebec, whether it was Liberal or Parti Québécois, had the Quebec National Assembly pass special legislation. So I think I have some experience, a certain expertise with respect to special legislation.

[English]

Mr. Fisher: They don't use scabs!

[Translation]

Mr. DeBlois: I think it is fair to say, and certainly this will be of interest to my friend from the New Democratic Party that in the area of special legislation there are pieces of legislation that are much harsher than this one. The bill now before us, Mr. Speaker, is not shotgun legislation because it does not set the terms and conditions of the contract.

In Quebec city, I remember very well the former Minister of Social Affairs, Mr. Claude Forget, whom many of us here know, and who indeed formely chaired the Commission on Unemployment Insurance. I should say to my NDP friend that Mr. Forget had a principle with which I do not agree, and that principle was that where government employees forced the government or the National Assembly or Parliament to legislate, they should be penalized. And Mr. Forget's contention was that special legislation should give them less benefits than provided for in the government's last offer. Here is how that logic goes: If Parliament stepped in too often, Parliament would be trivialized. Parliament should step in as seldom as possible in labour conflicts. And therefore it could be argued that where government employees knew that they could always use Parliament, they could be tempted to use Parliament repeatedly and never accept government offers knowing that they had nothing to lose because Parliament would legislate anyway. But if they knew that Parliament would give them less generous terms than those last offered, then they would think twice before forcing the government to legislate. Mr. Speaker, this is not the approach used here. Bill C-49 is no shotgun legislation, it does not set the terms and conditions of the contract. It does not say: You are forcing Parliament to legislate, then you will get less than the last government offer. This was done in some parliaments. I covered that.

• (1310)

I was there, Mr. Speaker. But that is not what is happening here. The government has not slammed the door on negotiations. The President of the Treasury Board even admitted that the conciliation board, which will include a representative of the union, might well give more—-I will be careful, Mr. Speaker, but the conciliation board, which has 90 days to hear both parties, might decide to give more than the final offers made by the President of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot tolerate our colleagues opposite telling us that we are crushing the workers and that we are anti-union. When I go back to my riding this weekend, I will have no hesitation in telling my constituents the following: "Listen, there are a number of rights involved. You are right to demand better working conditions. I agree, your salaries are not very high. You are perfectly right. We are making strides towards employment equity, but at the same time, we have to consider safety conditions on the river and pollution, and there is also a considerable economic factor."

Mr. Speaker, there are ship owners, and they are not criminals, who operate ships and pay $50,000 and $25,000 a day in docking fees and who are being penalized. We also have to consider possible claims for damages and, at the present time, there are a number of buoys on the St. Lawrence River, since that is the area I know best, which are out of service.

I don't want to get to involved, but I would also like to say that patients also have rights. I am thinking of Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue Hospital, the veterans institution, and I think that between the right to health and safety and the legitimate right of workers to strike, we must get our priorities straight, Mr. Speaker, and when there is a conflict between the two, I have no hesitation in saying that patients come first.

The elderly patients who are listening at Sainte-Anne-de-Bellevue, some of whom may not be getting all the services they would normally get, can count on my support.

Once again, I know this is a heart rending situation because those Coast Guard workers are my friends, but in an emergency situation, when a third party is responsible for determining working conditions, we must act responsibly, Mr. Speaker.

Again, I deeply regret that our friends opposite give in to partisanship, which reminds me that the Hon. Member for York-East said recently that the role of the Opposition is to oppose to any bill introduced by the Government and that according to British tradition, the Opposition must oppose! —Somehow I regret that! I would expect that Hon. members on the other side would be sensitive not only to the workers rights but also to the quality of life, the environment and finally, Mr. Speaker, I would say the economy of the country.

It is easy to talk about the jobs that are lost. Some jobs, Mr. Speaker, are actually linked to sea-going shipping and if they are lost, our friends from the NDP will be the first to blame the Free Trade Agreement. Free Trade has nothing to do with that, Mr. Speaker.

There comes a time in life when one has to make difficult decisions and I am not ashamed to say that what I am doing here is not against labour but in the national interest, Mr. Speaker. And I think that national interest requires right now that we—

[English]

Mr. Fisher: Whose side are you on?

[Translation]

Mr. DeBlois: —but, Mr. Speaker, my friend from the NDP— I cannot believe it! You actually care about the common good?

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude with this. Firstly, I think that the common good we have been elected to look after in this House must prevail over individual and business interests. Once again, I believe that, by asking, with this bill, a third party to clear the ground and make a decision for all practical purposes, this government is respecting the rights of these workers while recognizing that, given the emergency, by agreeing to go back to work the employees will allow ships to move again in this difficult period and carry their cargo to destination. Secondly, we must give veterans and the most vulnerable members of our society the quality of service they deserve.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I will vote for this bill on second reading and I hope that my colleagues in this House will think it over and cooperate with us so that life can go on in this great country of ours where transportation is such a vital part of the economy.

[English]

Mr. Robert E. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I think this is an unfortunate bill. It is regrettable that we have at this time to be dealing with the bill in the House. I totally reject what the previous speaker said with respect to this bill.

I think the government had an opportunity over the past two years to negotiate with the hospital employees and with the ships' crews to reach a conclusion to this collective agreement that would be fair for all concerned, would be fair for people throughout the country and would avoid even the perception of an emergency taking place now—something which many people reject—which would motivate this bill and force us to deal with it at this time.

The real problem is that over the last two years the government has been motivated by its own ideological inability to deal in good faith with its employees. I share the opinion of another speaker in this House who spoke on this legislation yesterday who indicated that nowhere is the government's ideological problem in terms of dealing with trade unions more evident than in its relations with its employees in the postal system. That single corporation has five times as many grievances against it as compared to any corporation of a similar size operating in Canada. The type of labour relations that take place at the Post Office is provocative and destructive of employee-management relations. That type of destructive and provocative labour relations is characteristic of this government and characteristic of its agencies.

What we are dealing with here is not a problem of negotiating between an employer and an employee, the problem is that the employer is ideologically motivated and ideologically hampered, being the reason that we have difficulty with the negotiations between the Government of Canada and its employees.

I was not surprised to see in the explanations contained in the last annual report of the post office that a tremendous amount of money—millions of dollars—had been spent by the Post Office in hiring scabs, for preparing and training them to break the strike at the Post Office and to provoke the employees of the Post Office. That action precipitated a great deal of violence on the picket line and many people were seriously injured. This left a residuum of bitterness that will govern employee relations between the Government of Canada and the postal workers for a long time to come. One cannot argue that that same type of bitterness has not overflowed into other wage disputes that this government has had with its employees. This particular strike is no example.

I do not have one of the components in my riding that will be affected by this dispute, the hospital employees' component, but I certainly do have the ships' crew component which is front and centre and very evident in my riding. We have Coast Guard establishments up and down the west coast of Vancouver Island. We have lifeboat crews at Bamfield and Tofino which put out to sea every day in rough conditions to protect the lives of mariners and to protect vessels and their cargoes, as well as the people who use the west coast of Vancouver Island in what has been traditionally called the graveyard of the Pacific. These men and women in the Coast Guard risk their lives virtually every day in the service of Canadians and in the service of the maritime industries that serve Canada.

We also have the ships' crews aboard naval tugs, Coast Guard vessels, research vessels and other Coast Guard ships that service buoys and light stations and other Department of Transport facilities up and down the coast. Yet in spite of the critical work that these ships' crews do up and down the coast of British Columbia and throughout my riding, this government does not seem to have attached as much importance to them as it should have over the last two years when it should have been bargaining in good faith with those employees with a view to reaching a settlement with them. As I said before, it appears that the ideological problems that this government has with trade unions is probably the main barrier that prevented it from reaching an agreement with those employees.

When I look at what ships' crews earn in the federal service on the west coast of Canada it is clear to me that the employees have a very solid case for improvement in their wages and working conditions. For example, a seaman in the federal service makes $11.68 on the west coast, while B.C. ferry employees in the same position make $16.49 an hour and those in a similar position with the Stena Line, a privately-owned line operating on the west coast, make $15.53 an hour. Thus private-sector crews make 33 per cent more than those in the federal service. Those in the provincial public sector working for the B.C. Ferry Authority make 41 per cent more than the crews working in the federal Public Service—and that is after the results of this settlement have been included in the wage rates.

So there is no question that the employees of the federal government working for the Coast Guard, on research vessels, on naval tugs and other fisheries ships in the federal Public Service definitely have a case for improving their wage rates and for bringing them in line with the wages being earned by other people doing similar jobs but under less dangerous conditions on the west coast. The ships' crews for the federal service are not even asking for parity. They are asking simply for a reasonable wage rate.

Look at the fact that the average wage of the hospital employees is $18,000 and the average wage of the ships' crews is $23,000, and the fact that many of these employees are sole supporters of their families in many parts of the country. Even though they are working hard, even though they are risking their lives, and even though they are dedicated to the Public Service of this country, they are still living at or below the poverty line, depending on what region of the country they live in. That situation should be redressed. The government should have seen the necessity to redress that situation and should have negotiated in good faith and with commitment to those employees to the point that a collective agreement could have been reached long before now and that those situations which are totally unacceptable should have been redressed long before now.

We are very proud of the workers in the Coast Guard on the west coast in my riding. They do terrific work on behalf of the people of Canada. Even during this strike, working on a voluntary basis, Coast Guard workers have taken lifeboats out and have rescued people on the west coast of Canada. They have made it a policy during this strike that they will defend the life, health and safety of persons, but not necessarily of property. They have gone out in stormy and difficult conditions. They have rescued people on a volunteer basis at personal or union expense during the period of this strike. They have said that they will never let the people of Canada down. They will provide those emergency services. They will be available to the people of Canada when they are needed during the strike even though they are on strike.

It is the government that has let the people of this country down and that has delayed a collective agreement for so long. The reason for this—and I cannot repeat this too often—is an ideological problem that the government has of negotiating in good faith with its employees. Why else would these crews be paid so much less than their counterparts in the public service in the provinces and those in the private sector? Why would they be paid so much less than those people when their jobs are so much more critical and so much more important because of the involvement of risk to life, health and safety?

It is the government that is at fault for this problem. I suspect that the government has delayed this issue so long because it knows that in the end it has the power to come into the House of Commons to hold legislation of this type like an axe over the heads of the workers. It knows that it can undermine the process of collective bargaining by having this axe.

It is interesting to note that the minister responsible for the Treasury Board is the minister not only negotiating with the employees but the one who has brought this legislation into the House of Commons. On the one hand he knows that he has the axe that he can use to cut off negotiations, forcing those people back to work under whatever conditions he chooses because he has the majority in the House. On the other hand he seems to believe that he is capable of negotiating in good faith. That just is not happening.

After long protracted negotiations during this strike there were people in my constituency who actually suffered physically as a result of violence on the picketline. An employer recommended that employees who are not part of this bargaining unit—and in fact who are not even citizens of Canada but Americans working on testing American weapons at a Canadian naval facility—use their cars or trucks to bump their way through the picketline. As a result a picketer in my constituency was injured and hospitalized with broken vertebrae as a result of violence on this picketline, violence said to be recommended by an employer. Even today charges have not been laid against that American citizen who committed the act.

Serious problems have resulted as a consequence of the frustration experienced by the employees who were trying to negotiate with the government in good faith, but who saw no good faith coming from the other side of the negotiating table.

There is a serious problem here, a problem of regional equity, a problem of gender equity and other problems that have to be dealt with. In this country in this day and age these problems should not really be part of negotiations. It should be taken without it being said that people who do the same work, whether on the west coast of Canada, the Arctic coast of Canada or on the east coast of Canada should be paid at precisely the same rate, given that their jobs are precisely the same and fall within the same classifications. A lot of the things we are discussing should have been dealt with years ago in the collective agreements of these people.

It is interesting that the only time the national government recognizes that there might be an emergency is when the St. Lawrence freezes up. When the St. Lawrence freezes up and no matter happens on the St. Lawrence River seems to become a national emergency. Then we legislate everybody back to work on both coasts because this government seems to view a very small part of Canada as the most important part and the rest seems to be forgotten in its deliberations. That is a serious problem which is certainly evident in this case. Conservative after Conservative has stood up and indicated that the problem of the imminent freezing of the St. Lawrence Seaway system and the lakes is the problem and the reason we have to legislate these people back to work.

You know what the weather conditions are in this country. You know when the freeze-up comes. You should have felt compelled to negotiate and to achieve a settlement in anticipation of that change in weather this winter. Instead you sat on your duffs. You knew at the very end of it that you could rely on coming into this House to force those workers back to work using the scanty argument you are using at this point.

• (1330)

I feel that there is a need for a type of bargaining between the federal government and its employees that takes the political impediments of the government in power away from the bargaining system. There should be some impartial bargaining process so that the same minister who might bring legislation into this House cutting bargaining or the process off and forcing a settlement on these people would not be the same minister who is also negotiating. There should be some separation to avoid a conflict of interest, and we do not see it in this case.

We have seen this system operate to the detriment of our employees in the past, and I use as an example the maritime employees, the longshoremen who work in the ports throughout Canada. As a result of strikes which have been terminated through legislation in this place, those longshoremen now make less than their counterparts in the United States, and their pensions have not been dealt with adequately because the settlements that were imposed on them by the House of Commons have fallen far behind settlements that were freely and collectively negotiated elsewhere on this continent. As a result, our longshoremen are being paid much less and the pensions they enjoy are much lower than maritime employees elsewhere on the continent. This is due directly to the fact that this government always feels it has the power to terminate a bargaining process by bringing it into the House of Commons, by imposing a settlement, and by undermining the collective agreement process with employees within its jurisdiction.

I intend to vote against this legislation. I hope that legislation, and take those two days to negotiate in good faith, because it cannot be done with this legislation hanging over the heads of the parties to the collective agreement. If the government withdraws this legislation or accepts the resolution that it will be dealt with six months hence, it could then use the interregnum as an opportunity to negotiate with its employees in good faith with a view to reaching a collective agreement.

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, at first glance this appears to be a question of back to work legislation and in reality of course it is. But it also raises a number of important questions that I think need to be examined. I can understand, as can most Canadians, implementing back to work legislation perhaps when the security of the country or people are in great danger and, as well, when the workers have been unreasonable.

Let us look at the facts and whether or not in this particular instance the workers have been unreasonable. We are talking about men and women who have not been treated fairly and who are not being treated fairly even now. I believe that this particular legislation shows the government's inability to understand the fundamentals of pay equity, that is equal pay for work of equal value.

I suspect that all members will know that the human rights commission ruled that the hospital services group is under–valued and under–paid. It is true that the classification system was changed but only equalization payments were made, proper adjustments were not made.

With respect to the ships' crews group, we are talking about wages, hours of work, sea duty allowance. Wage parity on the east and west coasts is possibly the most contentious issue, and it is a question of fairness. The whole designation process, the missed dates, is another source of contention and one that is considered reasonably unfair.

What we are talking about is dangerous work. As my colleague mentioned, we are also talking about conflict of interest: the same minister negotiating and bringing in back to work legislation. We are talking about workers who have been without a contract for approximately two years.

Let us look at some of the facts of this particular situation. In the case of the hospital services groups, we are talking about elderly patients who are now dependent upon volunteers for feeding, cleaning and all normal services. Meals have deteriorated and cleanliness is suffering. As an example, soiled bed linens are being shoved into laundry chutes. We are talking about people being frightened, being frustrated, and being angry.

What about the effects of the ships' crews group? Routine search and rescue has been cut, although the crews go out on any emergency. There have been many such indications, and I shall not repeat them. There is $6 million worth of summer navigational aids in the Great Lakes seaway system alone that are at risk because they are out in the freezing waters. Winter navigation aids have not been placed and this is tying up shipping at a cost that has been mentioned of $2 million a day which is roughly equal to three days of strike losses.

The same situation affects all harbours. The response to environmental disasters such as oil and chemical spills would be virtually impossible if they were to occur. There is no supervision of the fishing grounds, leaving foreign boats free to illegally overfish Canadian waters and research vessels of Fisheries and Oceans and Environment Canada cannot function.

These are serious consequences and while many individuals would like to try to blame the workers for those effects, I think it is really quite unfair, particularly recalling some of the points that I have made with respect to the conditions surrounding this situation, for example, waiting for a couple of years for a contract, not being given pay equity, or certainly minimal advances being made, and low wages, if one compares them to the national average. It is in fact very insensitive.

Let's look at some of the broader questions. What are the underlying issues here? Why these problems? Again I say that it is too easy to blame the workers. We have to ask ourselves what are the fundamental underlying principles that propel government to do what it wants to do.

There are at least two. One is a question of fairness and the other one is a question of trust. How can one trust and how can one feel that one is being treated fairly when you realize that you are among the lowest paid groups? In some particular groups, the majority are women. How can you feel comfortable with government when you know that you are being paid badly and when you are, in fact, part of a group that has been discriminated against over many years?

It is quite clear that people generally no longer trust the government and that is no news to members opposite. If they look at some of the most recent newspaper reports and the polls that they will see that this is true. They do not believe that this government has been fair, is being fair, or can be fair. If you look at the record, you can see why this is so.

This is the government that propelled us into a trade deal with the United States when, at one time, their leader had said that there would be no free trade with the United States. He even ridiculed members of his party who were forthright enough to say that they thought it was a wise move on their part. This is the same government whose leader indicated that Air Canada was not for sale. What's happened? It has now gone.

This is the same government whose leader, or at least one minister and probably more, indicated that there would be no unemployment insurance changes. Of course, we know what has happened there.

This is the government that really attempted to persuade Canadians that rather than destroying the rail system, it would invest in the system. You will recall some of the statements made by prominent members of government before they came into power that they would invest rather than destroy. What has happened now? Half the system has been closed down. Over 2,700 people will suffer. Some of those people have been calling constituency offices throughout the country. What a Christmas present for the 2,700 plus people, and their spouses and children.

This is the government that said it would maintain the transfer payments to the provinces for health and education. What has happened? In 1986, they were reduced by 2 per cent and in the last budget by another 1 per cent. There will be $24 billion less given to provinces for health and education over eight or nine fiscal years because of the decisions made after the government said that it would maintain that formula.

Why the malaise? Let us talk about some of those 31 tax increases during the last five years. We are talking about a goods and services tax which is to be imposed and well over 80 per cent of Canadians are saying it is vicious, unnecessary and insensitive. This is a government that has doubled the debt in five years. Yet, it likes to tell us that it is being fair with Canadians, that it knows how to manage the country and the economy. This is the government that failed in 1985 to reduce benefits to seniors. It came back with the clawback and, of course, have been able to get the seniors finally. How can anyone trust this government? It tries one way and fails, then comes back and gets you another way. This is a government that imposed cutbacks to organizations who are advocates for women and advocates for native groups.

Part of the platform of this government was that its leader was a great conciliator and negotiator. There is tension everywhere in this country. If the leader is a great conciliator and negotiator, let him come forward and put an end to this particular dispute. Let him come forward and negotiate in good faith.

The truth of the matter is that this government's policies have pitted one region against another, one group against another and one person against another. I do not believe there has ever been in the whole history of the nation so much malaise, discomfort and tension. I hope that the government returns to the bargaining table and negotiates in good faith. I hope that it considers the workers, the situations under which they work, and clearly the fact that they have been without a contract for a long, long time.

[Translation]

As I have just said, Mr. Speaker, that issue is, of course, very important to all Canadians, and it affects in a very special way this back-to-work legislation.

Other issues are also extremely important. I for one believe that sometimes the government has to act when the security of our country, of some individuals, or of some groups is seriously jeapordized, or when the workers are not being reasonable. But is it the case here?

These men and women have not been treated fairly, and are not being treated fairly even as we speak.

But one thing is sure, we now see that the government does not really understand the very serious concerns of these workers, for example, pay equity. There has been some changes, some progress, has been made but there is still a lot to be done to settle that very sensitive issue.

What are the basic principles and the main issues underlying this bill? Why are we having those problems? There are at least two fundamental reasons: fairness and trust. When you have a badly-paid job in a predominantly female group, how can you trust anyone? How can you feel you are being treated fairly by this government?

Sad but true, the majority of Canadians do not think the government is being fair to them! If we look at what the government has done in the last five years, how can we blame them. We were told their leader, even before he was elected as leader, had made fun of his colleagues who questioned him when he said there would be no free trade agreement with the United States. After he became Prime Minister, he said that Air Canada was not for sale, and we all know that it was sold. We also heard during the election campaign, not only from the Prime Minister but from other ministers as well, that no changes would be made to the unemployment insurance program. What did we see after the election? Before they became the government, the Conservatives had proposed investments to encourage VIA Rail, so that we would have a national system across the country that would allow all Canadians to travel. Again, what did we see after the election? They cut our passenger service by half. That will affect more than 2,700 jobs just before Christmas. What a nice present for all husbands and wives, for their children, for the whole family, for their relatives!

This same government indicated that it really wanted to keep the formula with respect to transfer payments to the provinces for health and education. Well, it kept the formula, but forgot to tell us that it was going to make some cuts. The Conservatives cut the transfer payments by 2 per cent in 1986 and by 1 per cent again this year, in the last Budget. That means that provinces lost $24 million for health and education. This same government raised taxes more than 30 times since it has been in office and is ready to hit us with a proposed goods and services tax, to which a vast majority of Canadians are opposed. This government will have more than doubled the debt in five years of running this country. This is a government that tried to reduce senior citizens' benefits, and when it failed it came round the back door with its famous clawback provision. This is a government that cut funding, support to women and native groups and many others.

You are aware the Prime Minister views himself as a great negotiator, an individual who can build bridges—but everyone knows that night here in Canada tensions are everywhere. This is a government that succeeded through its initiatives to pit one region against the other and one group against another, that made one person feel very unconfortable towards another. It is time to go back to the negotiating table. It is a time to negotiate in good faith. I would like to suggest to the government it should do so immediately.

[English]

For the sake of those workers, and for the sake of Canadians generally, let us get back to the bargaining table. Let us not use a law to bludgeon the workers. Let us sit down, as equals, as men and women, as Canadians, who care about this great country, who care about what we do and take pride in our work, and talk honestly, fairly and reach a settlement.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I rise somewhat reluctantly in support of this bill because I believe that it is a most unfortunate and regrettable circumstance that makes necessary the legislation that exists in Bill C–49.

I believe that one of the most fundamental rights in a democratic society is the right to free collective bargaining. Indeed, on behalf of the individual, one of the most fundamental rights is the right to withdraw one's labour, providing all contractual agreements have been met, if one is unsatisfied with the circumstances in which one finds oneself and, indeed, in accordance with the free collective bargaining process. Of course, that is what this legislation does. This legislation necessitates the disruption of the free collective bargaining process.

However, I must point out at the same time the reason why I am prepared to support this legislation is because the government of the day, the Government of Canada, has a responsibility to see to the interests and the needs of all Canadians, and has a responsibility to see to the safety of Canadians where that safety is imperilled.

It is one of those unfortunate circumstances which happen from time to time, where principles come in conflict, one with the other, and the responsibility of government is not to be effusive with its rhetoric so much as to respond to its responsibilities by doing that which the national need compels.

Indeed, the same responsibility exists, to some extent, for the leadership of collective bargaining associations, the leadership of unions. It is obviously their responsibility to seek the best terms possible for their members. It is also their responsibility to see to the interests of their members by achieving contracts that will give them the best possible deal under the circumstances and to take that deal back to the members and indicate, in a fair and honest way, that that is the best that can be achieved under the circumstances, and not to needlessly put people in a position where they are either forced into or seemingly forced into going on strike or find themselves remaining on strike beyond the point that makes sense or beyond the point that is in their interest.

I know it is a very contentious issue that brought about this strike situation. I note that in my own province of Nova Scotia, there is a very strong divergence of opinion on the issues among those who are members of the bargaining unit and who voted—and I noted that it was only a very narrow vote—in the locals to which I refer by which the decision was taken.

In the final analysis, the government must see to its responsibility. It must see to the public interest, and in this case the public interest involves public safety. Canadians must be able to count on the Coast Guard to rescue them when their lives are in peril at sea. Canadians at sea and those aboard the vessels of other nations must know that the navigation aids that are there to prevent tragedies and accidents at sea are, in fact, the ones that are supposed to be there.

With respect to the other part of this strike, Canadian veterans must be able to count on being given proper care in hospitals. Canadians have a right to expect this and want them to have it.

Others can speak of the St. Lawrence Seaway, hospitals in Quebec, or the situation on the west coast. Quite frankly, my main concern is that a week ago Monday the lobster season opened in southern Nova Scotia. Twenty-five hundred lobster fishermen are going to sea every day. I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is not a very pleasant experience to go to sea in December. It is very cold, the sea can be high, the winds are high. So far the catches have not been too bad and we are very encouraged by that. The prices are not as high as we would like. The days at sea are very, very difficult. This year winter came early to Nova Scotia, just as it would seem to have come early to Ottawa. It is very hazardous to go to sea in inhospitable circumstances.

On the other hand, people must make a living. Lobster fishermen must take advantage of the limited opportunities that exist for them to pursue their activities. In southern Nova Scotia, our season opens on the last Monday in November and closes at the end of May. However, it is only a very limited period that the lobster harvest is at its best, and it is during those first two or three weeks in the season that every individual is anxious to get out and attend his pots and hope that this harvest will provide the base for the year to come to support the family.

Unfortunately, those hazards mean that lives are in peril every single day. Without the availability of the Coast Guard to answer the call, the risk is even greater. I know that the members of the Coast Guard who provide those near-shore coastal services, with those small vessels out of places like Port La Tour and Clarke's Harbour are particularly concerned because what they are faced with is in conflict with what they know they should be doing. Either way, on either side of this issue, they are good solid members of their organization. They wish to stand with their colleagues in their organization. Indeed they wish reasonable salaries and working conditions. I personally feel that those people are very much underpaid. I would like to see the government continue to increase those salaries and bring them up to levels where they should be so that people do not find themselves in the situation where they have to go on strike.

What we are dealing with, in terms of those people in the Coast Guard, are people who are at the lower end of the scale, notwithstanding the fact that they face very hazardous jobs in very hazardous circumstances on a daily basis. At the same time, those people do not feel comfortable staying at home while friends and neighbours are at sea and their lives may well be imperilled. Many of these men are themselves former fishermen. They know what it is like to be out at sea at difficult times of the year and they want to go back to work.

It might surprise members opposite to know that as a member of Parliament from an area that is very directly affected by this, I have had phone calls from members of the bargaining units who are in fact out on strike saying: "Please can't you get the government to legislate us back to work so that we can have an end to this situation and we will not be forced to come to grips with this unpleasant conflict situation in which we find ourselves".

What are the issues at stake here? Fundamentally, it seems to me, there are two issues which have been the source of controversy in this labour dispute. One has to do with equal rates of pay on the east and west coasts. I must say that as maritimers, and particularly as Nova Scotians, for many years it has grated on us knowing that people on the west coast are paid higher rates of pay for doing precisely the same jobs which our people are doing and indeed often not under as hazardous climatic circumstances.

Nevertheless, I think it is important to note that the breakthrough came in breaking down this villainous principle that had been with us for a long time. I have heard members opposite speak of this. It surprises me that the previous member who spoke, the member from St. Boniface, made reference to it. He seems to have forgotten that this principle of unequal rates of pay was one that became a standard practice through the auspices of the former Liberal government, a government which presumably he would have supported.

I think it is important for this House to recognize that the breaking down of this villainous principle occurred during the past two or three years by the actions of this government. I want to remind all members that it was the former member of Parliament for Halifax, who is no longer in this place, who fought on behalf of the members of that bargaining unit in Halifax and got a break in that principle. We have seen a gradual change begin in the last contract with a one-third amelioration of that principle that started to break the ice, as it were, for what is now on the table. That in fact is an offer that eradicates once and for all this principle.

I do not know why members opposite still get up and speak of this differential because in fact, as per the offer that is on the table right now, this government has finally caught up to the fact that work should be at the same pay on one side of this country as the other. I commend the minister for bringing it here as I commend the former minister and member for Halifax for making it happen in the first place.

The other issue, of course, is whether there is a fair offer on the table. There is no question that the Coast Guard workers, particularly those along the shore, deserve and should have higher salaries and higher wage rates than they have. But the government has a variety of responsibilities. It has a responsibility to all its employees. It has a responsibility to see that where there are people being paid salaries below what they should be, that it raises them as quickly as it can, but the salaries must be fair to all people within the public service.

Therefore I think it is important to note that the offer that has been rejected at this point is an average 5.23 per cent offer, whereas other members of the public service have only received an average rate of 4.2 per cent.

Mr. Mills: Fifty cents an hour. It can be ended for 50 cents an hour.

Mr. McCreath: I might say, as a Member of Parliament, that I would be quite happy to receive a 5.23 per cent increase. However, percentages are not the beginning and the end of these things, because if the rate is low the percentage naturally should be higher.

It is important for the government to gradually move in the direction of bringing these salaries up. As for the circumstances now, it is important to recognize that the offer that is available at this time is a higher percentage offer than has been received by other members of the public service. Under this bill those people will not only receive that equality, not only receive those increases but, at the same time, will have an opportunity before arbitration to make their case. If it is a just one, quite possibly they will get an even better settlement.

Therefore, I think the bottom line is that the offer which the government has made is fair. The legislation, while regrettable in the sense that it does interfere with free collective bargaining is in the public interest and therefore the government is acting responsibly and properly to introduce this legislation. It will provide an opportunity for this dangerous situation to come to an end, for the people to get back to work. I know they want to get back to work and indeed for this House to get on with the important business of the nation.

Therefore, I would urge all members to support this bill at this stage and subsequent readings.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to take part in this important debate on the Government Services Resumption Act.

The use of back to work legislation at this time raises some very important questions about the government's role as an employer and as a proponent of pay equity.

I would like to register my deep concerns that the government is imposing the back to work legislation on the employees of the hospital service group and ship crew workers. Historically back to work legislation has been used 20 times over the past 40 years: 10 times to end strikes in the ports and shipping sectors, 5 times to keep the railway operating, twice to get grain handlers back to work, twice to resume postal services, and once to provide for the continuation of air traffic control services.

The majority of these actions were taken when disputes involved strikes, negotiation deadlocks and a definite and immediate danger to the well-being of the Canadian public.

Is there such a national emergency facing us today? The answer to that question is no. We have the workers themselves to thank for that. We should commend these workers for their dedication and commitment in light of the circumstances. The ships workers, for example, have responded to each and every emergency call that has occurred in the past four weeks.

The hospital workers, on the other hand, have also offered to leave the picket lines should an emergency situation arise in National Defence hospitals or veterans homes.

These people are not holding the safety or health of Canadians for ransom. They are simply using the only means available to them to arrive at fair and decent contract settlements.
