WAR GREENWOOD, M.P., ATTACKS WAR OFFICE Canadian Supporter of Asquith Denounces His Niggardly Policy.

LONDON, March 18 .- Mr. Hamal Greenwood, M.P., figures largely in the public eye to-day. He presided last night at the Canada Club banquet, in pleasing anticipation of which anouncement was made of his intended marriage at the end of May at St. Margaret's, Westminster, which is the parish church of the house of commons, to Margery, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Spencer of Fownhopeourt, Herefordshire. The future bride is a well-known rider to the hounds. In the commons Wednesday night Mr Greenwood followed Joe Martin's example and joined the ranks of candid friends of the ministry. The Radical journals make no comment, but Union-ist journals describe his speech on the army estimates as a destructive attack and effective exposure of War Minister Haldane. Amid Unionist applause he told Mr. Haldane that the publication of the opinions of one of his salaried officers, Sir Ian Hamilton, was not in keeping with the best interests of the service. It was no compliment to the intellisence of Mr. Haldane's supporters that he should lean on a subordinate in his own department. The expert should be kept in his place. The reonsible minister of the crown, whater its department, should take the full burden of responsibility upon his wn shoulders.

Mr. Greenwood as a yeomanry officer, spoke caustically of the deficient supply of army horses in London. The ame horses are hired from the same contractors by various regiments, "What I want to know," he mockingly enguired, "is this: if there is war which regiment is going to have horses? 1 do not object to fight for my country. but as a cavalryman, I do object to walking out to exchange compliments with a well-horsed enemy." (Laughter and cheers.)

He urged that British officers should be given enough pay to live on even if it cost an extra million sterling. Mr. Greenwood's new attitude is all the more interesting because he his been recently named in various Canadian journals for sundry ministerial ositions here

His prom- ise is, "Greater things than these shall ye do." "Then on and up tho the road be steep, And the stones come thick and fast, there's room at the top for the man who tries, And victory comes at last." A Work That Counts. Perhaps no move that has been made in church work in recent years has the prospect of accomplishing more genuine and lasting good than the es- tablishing of an order of deaconesses. These young women are carefully se- lected for this work. Health, educa- tion, character, adaptability, general- fitness for the sphere are all carefully considered before acceptance. There follows a period of careful training in everything that opens the eye, gives skill to the hand and clevation to the mind. The training once completed the deaconess devotes herself, on the in- vitation of some congregation, to do ing the thousand and one things that a minister simply cannot do. Her spe- cial sphere is the women of the con- gregation. If her lot be cast in the ity, she looks up the girls who come as strangers. She visits them in their loggings and becomes as far as pos- sible their guide, their counsellor and christian friend. By so doing she pro- tects the guilleless and does her part to restrain the forward. strengthen the tempted and befriend the lonely. Who can overestimate the value of this department of her work? She finds her way to the homes of the poor and the sick and in this way be- comes the channel thru which the church gives out a discriminating and helpfue charity. In a very real sense in all local benevolence the deaconess becomes a congregation's eyes and right hand. Little wonder that her neat uniform is everywhere respected and her good work honored by all who appreciate the possible service to a kind, wise, trained woman whose on business it is to lend the helping hand of 'Christian sisterhood. There is an increasing demand on the part of churches for just such service as these	where untrained private individuals turn philanthropists. Slumming is of all fads the most contemptible when it is a fad. Charity loses nothing in spontaneity by being visely adminis- tered, as law loses nothing in majesty by being carried out by those trained therefor. Young women cannot do bet- ter, when choosing a career to give that of the deaconess their earnest consideration. A Startling Statement "I have supported myself for ten- years,' said Beatrice Forbes-Robert- son the other day and continuing she romarked, "I have never yet found a day's work as fatiguing as a reception." These be serious words. Surely ladke in high life, and ladies who would be fashionable will do well to consider them. Almiess excitement rather than hard work is the enemy of health and morals. Bridge and "high teas-these are some focs of growth in woman- hood and service and happiness. It is not what a woman does between seven and six that injures her. Rather she finds her bane between ten p. m. and four a. m. It is not procuring the necessities of life that deplete one's purse, but 'procuring the frills of a fashionable existence. It is not work that saps one's enterprise or cuts the nerve of his religious life, but misdi- rected social life and the pursuit of roth and parlor gimcracks. It is gai- tive and not duty that sets the pace that kills. Recent events in Montreal have, it is rumored, caused three Quebec bi- shops to issue a decree ordering their clergy into silence upon all political topics. As well might these digni- taries order a cessation of all conversa- tion, for has not conversation wrought a deal of injury to mankind'. In this day and generation the democracy de- mands that every intelligent citizen shall make his influence feit in behalf (wy, then, should the clergy be si- leuced'. WITH THE PIN SPILLERS

The Canadian Bowling Association's er. The race, however, is still tight, with Langmuir Paint, the third team, yet having a good chance for the championship. annual tournament, that starts April a at the Athenaeum Club, is going to be . . .

In the Printers' League there is very little change, the morning section find-in-both World teams, the Daily and Sunday, in order named, still battling for the top, while the Mail and Globe anchored in the second division are having just as nice an argument for the better position as the leading pair. In the evening section, MacLean Publishing Company, who looked good a week ago in second place, got bump-ed by the lowly Atwell-Flemings in two out of three games and now find themselves in third position, but still not out of the running, and with To-ronto Typesetting, now second place holders, will yet give Dunlop & Rese, the leaders, a breeze for the champion-ship.

annual tournament, that starts April p at the Athenaeum Club, is going to be the greatest ever held in the history of the organization, that is already as-sured. The transferring of the tourna-ment from Montreal to Toronto took the local trundlers so much by surprise that they began falling over themselves getting together their teams, for they realized that the time to organize was so short that unless they got busy in a hurry the experienced pin-smashers would be readily ploked up by some more enterprising hustler, and the re-sult has been that in one week Secre-tary Chestnut has a pile of entry blanks from more teams in Toronto than ever took part in any previous tournament. The organization work has only nice-hy started, and before the lists close on March 29 it is confidently predicted that there will be between 25 and 40 teams from this city alone. While the teams in Toronto are com-ous to the front is never before, the outside places are showing just as much enthusiasm, and in nearly every eity the number of entries will be doubled over any previous year. Hamilton will have between 10 and 15 teams, four coming from Fred Cooper's Brunswick Alleys and the balance from the Ham-iton Bowling and Athletic Club, man-aged by Walter P. Thompson and J. P. Smith. In the Eaton League the fight is hot in both sections. In No. J. Engineers are still in the lead, with Fifth Floor and Printers dangerously close, while in No. 3. Dept. A3, who are feading, have close company in Dept. E1, 2 and 3, and Winnipes Office, who are only a few games behind.

In the Apple League, Pippins got a stronger hold on first place by win-ning three straight games, while Rus-sets, in second place, lost one of their three, but still only two games each way behind, with the rest of the field drawing up closely in order. . . . London, the home of Joe West, the N. B. A. champion, will be represented by at least four teams, with Joe cap-taining one of them, and if they live up to their previous good record, will be one of the best fives in the tourna-

In the two-man leagues, the T.B.C.. Emmets and Eatons, the real excite-ment is now on, and all being well under way, a race worthy of the teams that represent them should be the re-result. A synopsis of the above will be given in next week's edition. · · · · · · · · · · · · ·

At the end of the third day of treatment the patient is in the same condi-tion as regards liquor as the day he or she took the first drink—no more appe-tite or craving than on that day. That means a whole lot to the future of any man or woman who now has a liquor-poisoned system always demanding MORE.

There are no bad after-effects, because there are NO HYPODERMIC IN-JECTIONS, no poisonous drugs, no substitutive stimulants or sedatives.

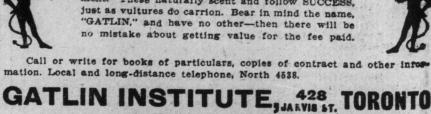

The Gatlin, treatment is the SENSIBLE WAY to stop drink. It restores the mind and body-restores the nervous system-does away with the evils wrought by alcoholic poison.

A legal contract is executed in writing that the cure as effected shall be entirely satisfactory to the patient in every particular, or the reasonable fee charged shall be refunded on leaving the institute.

A fourth case, a boy, on being shut up, ate all his clothes. With a parting aljusion to a lady who escaped into a dairy and ate twenty-nine unboiled eggs, 6 pounds of butter and 5 pounds of bread, and washing it down with three pints of milk and two bottles of wine before sleep overcame her, Dr. Fenvick passed on to "idiosyncrasy of diet."

Fenwick passed on to "idiosyncrasy of diet." "Many people," he said, "possess an ex-traordinary relish for common sait. This often has the curlous effect of increasing a person's weight. One young lady who devoured immense quantities of sait would increase as much as ten pound in weight in twenty-four hours, and was frequently unable to wear a dress which was quite loose for her on the previous day. If you can persuade these people not to take sait so much they get well; if not, they die of dropsy. THE STORY OF "ST. ELMO." For the benefit of those who have not read "St. Elmo" recently, every-body seems to have read this famous novel sometime during the forty years it has ranked as the "seventh best sel-ler") it may be stated that Willard Holcomb's stage version, which is the only one that ever received the sanc-tion of the authoress, Mrs Augusta J.

AN UNREHEARSED EVENT—Jupe-culotte does not invariably meet with favor, and, moreover, the curiosity of the crowd is apt to take active form. Hence, certain of its wearers have not found it conductive to form. Hence, certain of its wearers have not found it conductive to mental comfort, however satisfactory they may find the freedom it gives to the limbs. In Madrid the skirt has proved so unpopular that, at the request of Senor Canalejas, the governor has detailed fifty policemen to protect ladies wearing it in the streets. T'S STRANCE, but true. st g that the average man regards the policeman with an adverse regard. It is not only the one who has occasion to fear him who hates the officer of the law, but nearly every quiet and respectable man and woman can be heard at one time or another attacking waht they are pleased to term the brutality, the inefficiency, stupidity or corruptness of the policeman.

It is hard to see whence comes this general opposition to this man by those who have armed him and pay him to protect their lives and property unless it arise out of sympathy for those with whom in their interest he is compelled to deal. This attitude is not unusual. The busy housewife does not regard with favor the cloths with which she keeps her kitchen clean and in the same way the busy citizen does not seem to love the officer who preserves his peace.

UGH. UPON WHICH

Then, too, the police must come in constant restraining touch with the general body of citizenry. When there is a fire he bars their way and insists upon a detour. It is true that this is done to ensure the safety of the citizen, but this is not the feature which is borne in upon his mind when he finds his way blocked by a uniformed arm and is told to go another way. When there are ructions on hand, it is this same uniformed arm which hustles the pedestrian along and will not let him stop to see the fun. The hustled on sees this, interference with the chance to gratify his curiosity, but does not often ponder that should he have been allowed to stand he would, with others like him, have formed excellent cover for the few rowdy spirits who are the active part of a riot and who would be a joke for the police were they not so protected by the gaping loiterer.

For whatever reason it may be, this general hostility to the police exists and it is a shame to the citizen that it is so. The police are not angels, either of accuracy or virtue, but taking them by and large, they are efficient, good natured, hard worked and far from overpaid. Those who know the policeman best do not share this dislike, but cherish a very warm regard for a body of true. strong, good natured and kindly men who perform unpleasant, but very necessary duties, with genwith eral diligence and good humor.

The average man becomes as used to the policeman in the streets as he is to the telegraph poles, so that he notices neither as a general thing. Should he collide with the pole he will curse it or ruefully rub his bruised anatomy according to his temper and temperament and it is the same with his attitude regarding the policeman. If the light be not shining at the top of the pole and the citizen steps into a puddle in the darkness, he is not pleased with the system represented by the pole and abuses it or the light, when the policeman is not promptly on the spot he makes remarks about the absentee which are far from complimentary.

Almost any other man is a human being to his fellow citizens but perhaps it is the uniform and the number which have done so much to detract from this sympathetic understanding of the constable and his work. Other men are considered as men, even while engaged at their daily tasks, but few, indeed, who do not have a near neighbor who is a member of the force ever consider a policeman as a man with a family, who eats, drinks and is as merry as often as he can find the time, and who, like the rest of us, to-morrow must die. Kindness is a common characteristic of big men and policemen are big men. Neither are they any exception to this rule and the number of their deeds of kindness and helpfulness are legion. They are not all written either, in the book of duties, but are for the most part done at the promptings of the hearts beneath the tunics. There are many and many among the poor who can tell of kindnesses done and unrecorded by the policemen who on their daily rounds have seen where there was real need of help and have seen that he'p was given. Often it has been given out of the policeman's own none too bulging purse and many and many a time has it taken the form of kindly words of cheer or direction out of difficulty.

But there is one whom the policeman can always help if only given the opper unity and this is the little child, lost and terribly frightened.

Too often he is not aware that the youngster has lost his bearings and is so badly scared that he cannot give the slightest help toward his own relief. This strangely enough is generally the fault of the parents of the child who have, for want of a sane reason for frightening the child into obedience (for there is no sane reason for frightening a child at all.) told him that the policeman will get him if he does not refrain from this or that forbidden practice. Then the child is lost one day and had he gone directly to the first policeman before he was too scared to remember anything, he could have given name and address which would have saved his tears and his mother's. But no. The policeman is his bugaboo who has been used to scare him from chasing the neighbor's cat or stealing the family preserves. He will not go and have given name and address which would have saved his tears and his mother's. But no. The policeman is his bugaboo who has been used to scare him from chasing the neighbor's cat or stealing the family preserves. He will not go and when the policeman, drawn by his outcry or by some citizen too busy to handle the matter himself, to the assistance of the poor frightened little tot, the presence of the uniform adds the last touch to reduce the child to a state of dumb and gasping terror.

Take this from me, the policeman's beat is no primrose path of ever-recurring pleasure. There are bumps, lumps, stones, barbed wire and all manner of untoward obstructions on it from day to day or night to night. It is hard work and lonely work, and as has been previously mentioned, it is not remunerated by any princely stipend. Wherefore it behooves those whose guardian and protector he is to help the policeman all he can by friendly word and an attitude of friendliness which shall make itself felt at all times in the shape of support in the performance of his duty at any and all times.

Even the thieves, loafers and others whose names are naturally against the policeman by reason of their ways of life, will often tell you of kindness and consideration received at the hands of the police while many a wife owes the presence of her somewhat tipsy hubby to the helping hand of the 'oop.'' Even when he does not turn up until the next morning after a night in the cells both he and his wife have to thank the policeman that he was not frozen in an alley or robbed of his roll, but was escorted to the station where both life and cash were safely preserved.

Remember this, too, when tucked away in and listening to the rain pattering or storming on the window-pane, the policeman is patiently p'odding away thru weather which would wreck the temper of the angels. He is there rain or shine. He is there when he feels right up to the mark, and he is there when he feels far from fit. And because he is there you are safe to sleep the sound sleep of the taxpayer.

The kindly offices of the policeman are well nigh without number. The appreciation which is usually drawn from the average man would not be gracious thanks for the kindly offices of a tight boot. But the policeman goes right on doing the best he can for you, even while you are calling him names which the discipline of the force will not let him openly resent, or even answer. If you are called names you may go out and take a fall out of your enemy. The policeman, tho, perhaps, better able, is not so fortunate as to be allowed to do this.

Anyone who has come into daily contact with the policeman wil! tell you that he is, on the whole, a mighty good fellow who has helped hundreds where he has hurt one, and that that one usually deserved far more than he got. Give the blue coat an even break and you will find that he is just what you are and what your neighbor is, an average, decent sort of chap, who is doing his best to do the best he can and to be no further from the best there is than he can below.

Behind him came his harem of half a score wives

Fights were the order of the day, for the male sea-elephants were not and round about him on the shore the other members of the great herd only quarrelsome, but covetous. So it happened that frequently one invaded waddled toward the edge of the rocks. With many a puff and splash they plunged into the sea and soon were the ternitory of the other with the fell intent of ousting him and usurping his place in the household. The battles were fierce, strenuous and long-pro-tracted, and caused grievous damage to both combatants. Over his nose the sea-elephant wore a hood, like an

the sea-elephant wore a nood, like an abbreviated elephant's trunk, and this he inflated when he went into the fight, thereby assuming an aspect of weird and appalling fierceness. The combatants gnashed at each other whole heartedly. whole heartedly with their powerful jaws, roaring the while like infuriated lions. Round about the field of fight were ranged the females, smaller than heir lords, hoodless and apparently indifferent as to how the struggle term-inated. They struck no blow, interferred not at all in the fight-merely waited the issue. And then as one of the combatants shuffled off, defeated and grievously wounded, they contentedly added themselves to the household of their new lord and master.

Then the young sea-elephants were born, miniature reproductions of their parents. Then Morunga had much ado to keep his household together. For his many wives persisted in most unma-ternal fashion in attempting to forsake their offspring. So the lord of the harem had most assiduously to guard the approaches of the sea fight-ing back deserting mothers to their ables. So for three weeks they so-ourned on the rocks and a long time must have seemed to the mother ea-elephants, who were forced to fast sea-elephants, who were forced to fast during all this time. CASUAL COMMENT.

There was so little news in the local paper I happened to be reading that I was glad to be interested in some light airy gossip reported from the St. Lawrence Market. The dealer in eggs is explaining to the lady who is investigating as to the current value of hen-fruit that they have come down in price from 40c. to 30c., and, the lady, having, like the late Mrs. John Gilpin, "a frugal mind," responds that she can get them at an adjoining stall for 28c. The story is charmingly told in the bright crisp style of Anthony Hope's "Dolly Lialogues." Of course, it is natural that now the weather is getting so much milder eggs should throw off the yolk of high prices.

At first glance the action of a bunch of Kansas farmers seems a little silly. A negro postman had been appointed to deliver their letters. They kickedobjected to brunettes-wanted a blonde postman. So they pulled down their mail boxes and refused to receive letters from the brunette. Of course, they may have been merely registering their protest against what they regarded as "black-mail."

Hartley Smith of New York stands over six feet in his stockings. Most other people only stand over two in theirs-but that's no part of this story. Hartley is going to marry a little lady who stands just two inches more than four feet. The report of this happy arrangement does not mention whether the lady was wearing her hose when measured, but, in any case, it looks as the Hartley will have to shed those stockings when he wishes to kiss his wife good night.

If The Star proposes to continue printing such horrible news items as the following paragraph, there will shortly be a howl for a press censor. I hardly like to reproduce it, but I think public attention should be drawn to the matter. I therefore give it with-out alteration, except that I have accented the part of it that has aroused my indignation.

horrible details public. How does The Star know that this sort of thing might not fall into the hands of some young girl.

be published four lines of verse, and competition is invited for CASH PRIZES for the fifth, completing line. Each effort must be WRITTEN ON or GUMMED TO the coupon from the paper on which the verse to be completed appears, and with each entry 10 (ten) cents must be enclosed. The whole of the entrance money will be divided amongst the senders of the three best last lines in the proportion of:

For the best last line 50 per cent. For the second best last line 30 per

For the third hest last line 20 me cent.

The line sent in should show some degree of wit, either in the way of a play upon words, or otherwise. Just merely continuing the story of the verse and rhyming are not necessar-ily sufficient to win the prize. Orig-inality and humor are the most likely winners. Fill in your last line, and mail the coupon with a 10 (ten) cent stamp, address-to Limerick Editor.

in "Raffles," and Mrs. Leslie Carter was at the Royal Alexandra with "Two Women." I suppose it is bound to be one of the disadvantages that the system of "star" touring must always suffer under, that the play which the "star" selects is chosen are a vehicle for the display of his or her own individual qualities rather than as a unified study of human possibilities. The two plays I have mentioned were, as plays, somewhat crippled ty having to conform to this necessity, and so, altho, in both cases, the "star" was brilliant, the supporting characters had not been catered for by the dramatist so as to have any opportunities worth VAUDEVILLE. Modern plays seem largely to have this root idea, and modern plays-ti possibly may be for that reason, do not last. In the scheme of Life, in the ordinary relations of neighboring men and women, it is very seldom that one man or one woman takes the spot-light thru all the Acts of their little comedy or tragedy, and to try and show Life as if anyone did, is not, i take it, exactly holding the mirror up to Nature.

There are two qualities possessed by Kyrle Bellew which are as quietly in-sistent now as they were when I first aw him in London many years ago. Jeanette, the wife, dies. Mrs Carter

Ex-pression by quict accentuation, rather than by boisterous declamation, carries with it, and enforces, a point; and the receptive among the audience are grateful not to have to listen to pas-sion torn to rags. In like manner Mrs. Carter makes her points. Only in one dramatic-almost tragic- mo-ment, and there the exigencies of bat-ting emotions made this obviously ment, and there the exigencies of bat-tling emotions made this obviously natural, did she appear to raise her voice above the well-bred modulation of a woman accustomed to the atmos-phere and usages of the drawin-room-and the occasion, the tense moment of a woman elighted, surely warranted this and made it true. It was the only possible convincing note. So, having cinsidered, slightly, the artistic methods of these two, and. I trust, without boring you, we may now weigh the plays they appeared in. place. The novel extends over a period of 15 years and ranges in locales from Tennessee and Georgia to New York and Italy. Mr. Holcomb's play begins and ends in the shadow of Lookout Mountain with scenes at "La Bocago," the home of the Murrays, where the heroine finds refuge; and at the par-sonage of the Rev. Mr. Hammond. There are three exterior scenes and the the opportunties for setting the stage with the picturesque reproductions of nature as she luxurlates in Dixieland have been fully improved by the scenic artist, while the one interior setting is an elaborate production of an artis-tic Southern home of the period of "be-foh' the wah." The one break in the continuity of the story is an interval of five years, which is supposed to elapse between the first act—which is practically a pro-lage—and the second: after that the action is swift and almost continuous. What has happened in the interval is explained by Shadrach—an old negro servant, who is the only new character introduced by Mr. Holcomb and serves to enliven several scenes with legiti-mate comedy as well as knifting up the mate comedy as well as knitting up the story from a dramatic standpoint. The curtain rises on Aaron Hunt's blacksmith shop near Chattanorga, but this peaceful pastoral scene, with the clanging anvil mingling with the morn-ing song of the birds, is disturbed by an angry "gentleman" seeking satis-faction according to the code duello. Edna Earl, the little granddaughter of the blacksmith, comes on the scene in time to witness a duel in which St. Elmo Murray kills Murray Hammond, son of the venerable minister. It transpires afterwards that the young aristocrat had ample justification for this act, altho it makes a cynical misanthrope of him, while the girl regards him as a murderer who is saved from punishment only because of his wealth punishment only because of his wearth and social position. Nevertheless, from sheer womanly sympathy, she saves St. Elmo from the sheriff who seeks to arrest him, but she believes that the death of her beloved grandfather shortly afterwards is her punish-ment for lying to shield a rurderer. Such is the situation when St. Elmo's

In the third act the play rises to a pitch of almost spiritual emotion in which merely physical love is subor-dinated to the higher moral law, and the scene where Edna takes sanctuary in the church to save St. Elmo, no less than herself, is one of the most power-ful since "The Christian." The last act, while containing one of the best comedy scenes of the book, maintains this suspense until just two minutes before the final curtain, and while the ending is a happy one, it is both ingenious and unexpected. The tests begun , with commercial cars last fall in a few large cities will be continued in the spring, and it is believed will be more numerous. Much interest has been aroused by the earlier contests. The ball in aid of the local hospitals given at the Tomple Building by the Hebrew Ladies' Sewing Circle on Mon-day evening was one of the most fuccessful entertainments heid there this winter, and was attended by sev-eral hundred guests who enjoyed a delightful dance on the good floor to the music of a splendid orchestra. Fuel Only 10 Per Cent. In the operating cost of a truck, since gasoline and oil represent only 10 per cent., it is questioned if 10 per cent. should be a "leading factor in the determination of a winner in a truck contest." The other factors, representing 90 per cent., chould have their places. For example, makers have agreed that tire maintenance is one His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor a one or two-day run "does practically of Ontario entertained at dinner at nothing to give the buyer a real clue to the merits of one truck over another." A truck, for example, may be under-tired, that is, may not have large enough tires for its weight and load, but this fact can not be dis-covered in a short trial. So also the size of the wheel is an important factor, since there is a distinct difference in tire life on a forty-inch wheel as compared with a thirty-six-inch one. Tests, as hertofore conducted, do not take these facts into consideration. Commercial contests, says Motor Age, "should be carried on in the zone operation of the truck, and not from city to city, excepting when the test is looked upon in the form of a national demonstration. It is one thing Mrs. Geary was wearing a becoming Mr. L. K. Cameron, Mr. J. P. Downey, with the same load at the zone of city Mr. S. Geary was wearing a becoming Mr. F. R. Heakes, Mr. J. Joseph Smith. It is not to be expected that to-night I can clear up every objection and pre-sent all the facts, but if I have the health and strength, and you the patience and the inclination we will continue till everything will be perfectly clear to your mind and you will see that the church has been restored, but don't denounce be-fore you examine. Remember the text: "Behold ye despisers and wonder and perish; for I work a work in your day; a work which ye shall in no wise believe, tho a man declared it unto you." Joseph Smith was born December 23.

Joseph Smith was born December 23, 1805, in Sharon, Windsor County, State of Vermont. His parents were law-abiding citizens. When he was about fourteen Vermont. His parents were law-abiding citizens. When he was about fourteen years of age a great revival commenced in their neighborhood and several of the Smith family professed conversion. The mother, one sister and two brothers joined the Presbyterian church. Joseph was visibly affected but before he got the consent of his mind as to which of the churches to join the revivals came to a close and then to use an Irishism, "And thin the row began." It began in this way. While the ministers professed a lovely unity on the platform they were wire pulling for converts to their churches until there was considerable feel-ing and discussion. Joseph said to him-self, "Cam they all be right when they all differ?" and finally decided: "I will join none of them but I will search God's word and do the best I can walking in the light reflected from that word." While reading the epistolary address of James I, 5; he came across these words: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him." In his history, as he wrote it years afterwards, he declares that that passage of scripture loomed up before him as a golden, gilttering promise direct from God to man; that upon the earnest prayer on the part of humanity, divinity would make reply. here that every anget that ever fiven had been annihilated. There are no angets now! Angels Have Appeared Before. Now why should it be incredible that an angel should appear now? Angels propeared in the days of Adam, Encosh, Ab-raham, Jacob, Daniel, Zachariah, Joseph, Peter, Paul, John, and let me say that whenever God's true oburch was upon the earth and men and women were worthy of the vocation wherewith they were called angels appeared to them. But they would have no angels appear now be-cause the church has taken the place of place of Christianity and the creed has taken the place of the Bible, prestorait has taken the place of priesthood, and the world has said: "We will run our own aftairs. We do not want, nor do we need that heaven "Sould interfere." Tadies and genilemen, if ever there was a time in the history of the world that we need the divine interposition, the di-vine communication, it is now. If ever there was a time when the silence of asse should be broken and God should come out and perform the marvellous work and wonders that He promised to do, it is now. Joseph Smith testifies that on the 15th and his associate, Oliver Cowders, and ordzined them to the Aaronic priesthood, and that he came in the splitt and power of Elias and that the church was to be restored as found in the prophecy of Mal-cah. More of this vision later. Now to prove to you that John the Bortist was to come back to earth I sub-pone Jesus Christ and the aposiles as witneses. THE CONTEST.

The most popular and the most practical plan for Bible study, togethe th a prize Bible contest, is running in The Sunday World.

In short, the Sunday School Lesson must be read each week for 52 weeks. "Suggestive Questions," and the coupon should be cut out each week and signed, certifying that this has been done. Then any five of the questions that are indicated to be answered in writing must also be answered, and at the end of the term the coupons and written answers, duly signed with name and address, must be delivered to this office. The prizes will be awarded according to the number of coupons sent in, and the merits of the written answers. You can get all the help you want with the written answers. Go in to win one of the solid-gold medals. If you complete the course, you will get a beautifully engraved Diploma. In three colors, in any event. Get all you can to join you in this course of Bible study.

God Promised a Restoration. I promised to show you so far as I have time to-night, that according to the promises God would restore the church in the latter days in the hour of God's judgment just before the and of the world, that in its restoration it would come in the power and spirit that actu-ised it during the first century, bring-ing men and women back from the thral-dom of priestoraft, idolatry and supersti-tion into the sumy path of righteousness and peace. He was raised as a kind of adopted son and and by he saw two men having a lit fuss on the roadside. And the BL (Exodus 2: 11-12) says he looked t gave him instruction so that on the 6th. day of April, 1830, the Church of Jesus Christ was organized. There Are No Angels Now!

There Are No Angels Now! When I was relating these facts in a discussion up here in Hillisburg a few years ago during a debate with Rev. Mr. Kelley of the Baptist Church, I came to the place where an angel ordained Joseph Smith. I will tell you more about it later on in this discourse. The reverend gentle-man came before the audience and he said: "Ladies and gentlemen, we are asked to believe that an angel appeared to old Joe Smith. Why, ladies and gent-lemen, the idea is simply preposterous: it is bordering on blasphemy. There are no angels now." Well, if he told the truth, then Latter Day Saintism is a delusion and a snare. There is no doubt about that. But the first thing that caused me to think he was perambulating arcund the suburbs of veracity and econ-omising the truth was when he referred to Joseph Smith as "Old Joe Smith." You will remember that in 1320 Joseph Smith was only fifteen years old and so it was not quite fair to speak of him as Old Loe Smith. When I had my discussion raised as a kind of adopted solt and by and by he saw two men having a little fuss on the roadside. And the Bible (Exodus 2: 11-12) says he looked this way and then looked that way and when he saw there was no one watching him, he recognized that blood was thicker than water, for one of these men was his own brother and he hurried up and gave the Egyptian a solar plexus and killed him on the spot; then hid him in the sand. Now you cannot say he did it in passion. You cannot say I am slandering him be-cause he tells the story himself. You cannot say that it was not premeditated for he looked this way and that way be-fore he put his thought into action. Now when he had done his worst did he go to the man's widow and offer to provide for her? Did he say, "Don't fret, I will see your children are well educated." No, he skipped the country; he went off to another country and hired himself to a man to watch sheep and eventually married the man's daughter. He tells that one day he was watching the sheep when he looked towards a bush. He says it was all in a blaze and he walked over to it and the first thing someone said: "Moses, take off they shoes for the ground upon which thou standest is holy ground." Every Bible believer takes that down surely. Now here was a young man escaped after committing a crime "here is not a single sentence in all the Bible that says he was sorry for it. There is not a single sentence in all the Bible that says he were asked for-giveness for doing it. There is not a sentence in all the Bible to show that he ever offered a prayer until that time, but you believe an angel could appear in the woods, a great big light shine around and that an angel appeared to that man. "But," says one, "there is a difference between Moses and Joseph Smith." Yes, there is, but in whose favor does the difference lie? In the one case an angel appears to a man who had committed a murder and skipped the country and as to whom there is no evidence that he ever prayed. On the other hand we have a boy at-tending was only fifteen years old and so it was not quite fair to speak of him as Old Joe Smith. When I had my discussion with T. L. Wilkinson in 1838 he troited out the words "Old Joe Smith" so con-tinually that I thought I would teach him a lesson. In my next speech I had occasion to refer to John Wesley and I said "Old Jackie Wesley." He almost fainted and said: "That shows the bring-ing up you have had, sir." It seems perfectly respectable to say Old Joe Smith when Joseph was only fifteen years old, but when you stop to think you will see that R. C. was just right when he spoke of John Wesley as "Old Jackie Wesley, for in the "History of Methodism" by Danlels, we see that John Wesley lived to be a very old man and so could be spoken of or addressed as an old man, and his mother, when referring to John, always called him Jackie or Jack. So if I was only doing what his mumma did, I was not so bad after all: and besides I did it to teach the great debater a lesson. What's Recome of Them. Then?

First look to your shoulders. Contrive somehow to lighten their real or imagined load.

If you have acquired the bad habi of stooping and your will power is not strong enough to correct the habit, secure the artificial aid of self-made shoulder straps. They are made from a band of strong muslin. Place the band around the back of the neck, letting the loose ends hang down in front. Draw these ends under the arms in front, beneath the shoulders. Cross the ends at the back. Bring them front and tie them tightly, or if worn next the skin it will be more comfortable to fasten them with a pair of nursery pins. This can be made tighter or looser, according to whether, when you are dressing, you know that the day will be one of vigorous exercise.

It can speedily be adjusted, loosened for hard work, tightened if you are going for a walk or drive. It can be controlled by yourself as you are controlled by circumstances. These bands, usually about four inches wide, can be made of heavy muslin and stitched, or of heavy belting. The muslin ones, if not quite so strong, have the advantage of being easily and quickly laundered.

Wear this until your muscles have been trained to obey your will to stand straight. Then discard them. They are valuable, especially for children, in whom the will is slight, or is applied to lesser things. It is a slow process. Don't erpect to bring drooping shoulders to

And now the powers that be in the world of fashion, including the famous Poiret, are all combining to send forth the decree that the correct coiffure for the coming season is to be of the close and small shape shown in these sketches, with never a curl to break its beautiful contours, though several different arrangements are suggested and accounted permissi-ble, so that it may be made really

But, granted the necessary features and fascination, this almost daringly demure arrangement can be most attractive, though, for the vast majority, there can be recommended, in preference, either of these companion coiffures where the hair shows a suggestion of waving and rarting, and is further finished with an encircling band and bow of spotted ribbon (this, for daytime wear) or deftly entwined straps of jewelled galon, to be bound closely about the head, while a pendant of barbarically beautiful design falls almost onto the forehead, and cabochon pearls and corals and turquoise or dull gold beads hang in festooned ave been led to support the policy of the Government relative to immense natural timber reserves in order that the timber supply may be perpetuated. This agitation has turned the attention of the people toward trees in general, and has aroused in owners of large estates a keen interest in the individual tree. Both fruit and shade trees are valued now as never before. The fact has become generally known that by the skilful methods of the competent tree surgeon it is possible to give a new lease of life to trees which apparently had reached their limit of ex-

Of the many braches embraced in this work, the cement filling forms by far the largest and most important, part. The practise of filling cavities with cement has long been in use, but when carried out along the usual lines it only served to add to the original trouble. The method of sealing up the decayed section simply increased the decay. Many examples may be seen where the bark at the side of the cavity was covered by the cement, no regard having been paid to drainage or the subsequent healing of the wound. As the cement did not adhere to the wood, and the sway-ing of the tree by the wind often enlarged the crack between the wood and the filling, water pene-trated behind the cement, and decay went on even more rapidly than before. The first step in the preparing of a cavity for cement consists in the thorough removal of all diseased or decayed tissue, no matter how large a wound it may leave. The fresh surface must then be sterilized with an antiseptic solution and then coated with coal tar. It is imperative that a sterilized solution be used, as otherwise the parasite producing the decay may not be entirely destroyed, and rot may continue after the cement has been filled in. One pound of copper sulphate to four gallons of water is the best wash for this purpose, and is easily prepared.

It must be noted here that the cells forming the heartwood in most of our trees do not serve in carrying sap to the crown or top. The flow of water and earthy constituents from the feeding roots to the crown takes place through the sap wood, or living layers of the tree, and the bark.

The tree grows in girth by the deposit of a thin layer of new wood between the wood and bark. There are three layers in this coat, the middle one being composed of thin forming tissues known as the cambium. The inner side of this layer forms new wood, the outer new bark. It is this new layer and the layers of the four or five previous years which is known as the sapwood, and forms the active section of the trunk and branches. The cells of these inner rings are grad-ually covered by the yearly deposit of new growth, and from living sapwood become heart-wood, which is dead, and serves merely as a strong framework for the living parts of the tree and as storehouses for excess material. This is the reason why hollow trees may often be found in a flour-ishing condition when the heart-Reinforced isning condition when the heart wood may have entirely disap-peared However, a landscape tree in this condition, deprived of the shelter of its fellows, is in grave danger, for ahigh wind^{*} or heavy snowfall may find it an easy vic-experience, derived from long prac-tise, to bear upon the treatment of each case.

In the case of exceptionally large cavities the opening is covered by large strips of zinc. The cement is then forced down into every crevice and allowed to set, after which the zinc is removed and a coat of fine finishing cement put on and painted the color of the bark. By this method the tree surgeon is enabled to build out trees where fully half the wood may have been destroyed by lightning or from

The former method of placing an iron band around a tree to prevent splitting often caused death, or at least deformity, for as the trunk or branch grew in circumference the stricture of the band cut off the flow of sap, depriving the top of nourishment. The improved method consists in placing bolts directly of the Cocoanut Trees, watched the Men at work in the Villages. One day he saw a Car-penter sawing Logs with a Saw which he had made out of a Sword.

The Monkey was Interested in the Saw-for Monkeys are Always Interested in Everything. At night when the Carpenter was Asleep, the Monkey went to his Hut and Stole the Saw. The next morning he climbed a Tree with his Prize, and seating himself on a Limb, began to saw it, as he had seen the Man saw the Log. But he got on the Wrong side of the Saw. When he had sawed the Limb half way in Two, it broke, and despite his nimbleness, he Fell into the River Below, which was filled with Crocodiles. The Moral of this Fable is: "Keep on the right side of the Saw."

You may draw that moral, or a number of others from the fable. It is worth thinking about, whatever moral you draw from it. As: you advance in years, and in experience, which the years bring with them, you look back on your earlier days and discover with disgust that you have made many mistakes. It is the wise man who profits by the mistakes of others, if he can. It is much less costly and annoying than profiting by his own.

If you read and study you can avert much trouble; you can avert far more if you OB-SERVE. Look at the young men whom you meet, or whom you watch as you go about

It has been said that the gambler does not seek his victims; that he never compels anybody to gamble; that he merely furnishes the opportunity and his prey comes of its own accord.

MARCH 19, 1911.

As well defend the snake which lies in wait at the mouth of a prairie dog burrow. The snake knows that the prairie dog must sconer or later come out of his lair. The gambler knows that the average human being must sooner or later gamble.

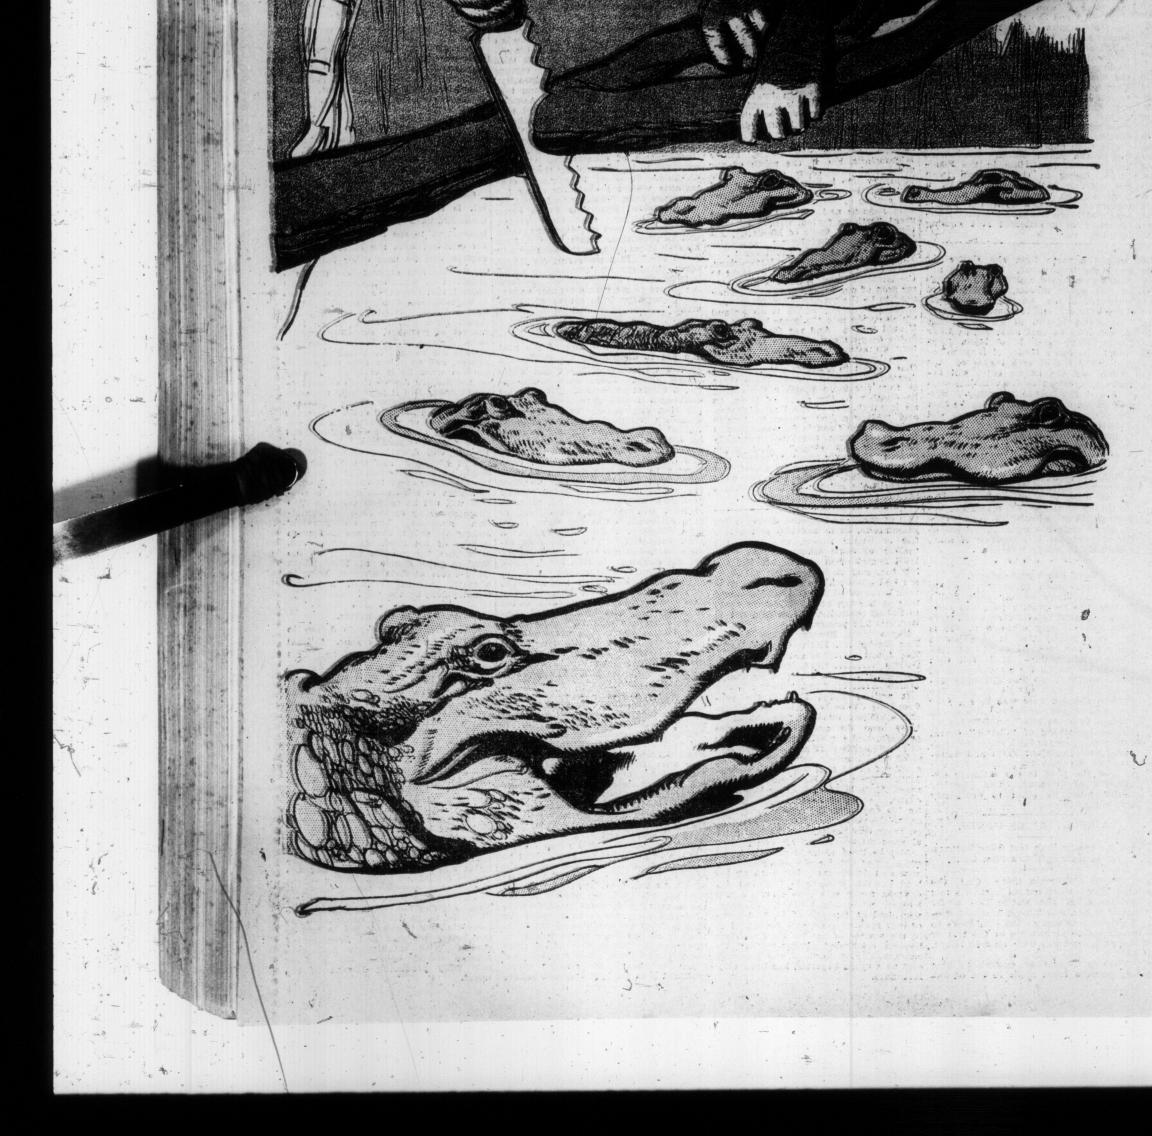

If you know of a man who, honest other-Wise, is still inclined to try to get rich quick by responding to any of the lures of the sharks that prey on his kind, do not try to warn him away by talking of the evil of gambling itself, or the danger of losing. You cannot make him believe that he will lose. Hope springs eternal in the human breast. The hope of winning cannot be stilled in the breast of the gambler. Tell him that he may win, but that his winnings will come out of the pockets of the men and women who must lose. Tell him that the five hundred dollars he expects to get out of some carefully disguised lottery scheme will be taken from the total savings of some poor widow, striving in her ignorance to get a fortune out of the few dollars her husband has left her. Tell him that, no matter how fortunate he may be, his fortune will mean some other man's misfortune, and that his success will bring sorrow, perhaps despair, to others. Then, IF HE IS HONEST, he will stop.

It is easy to say that no honest man will ever gamble; that no self-respecting man will ever drink; that no intelligent man will destroy his future by indolence, or vanity.

But the man who sees poverty staring him in the face, his children in danger of want, and the cost of living going up at a rate with which his earnings cannot possibly keep pace, may be forgiven if he sometimes yields to the temptation to get something for nothing, so alluringly presented to him by the scoundrels who fatten on that particularly rascally species of robbery. As for the drunkard—the temptations that are offered to him are at first put in so subtle and apparently harmless a form that he is drifting down a terrible current before he fairly realizes where he is going. Indolence, one of the most irresistible means of self-destruction, is inherent in most men. A great and successful man, who himself works eleven or twelve hours every day, and does not spare the men who work under his direction, admits that he is naturally lazy. "Every man," he says, "is as lazy as he dares to be. The only difference between me and some of the men I know who have not got as far as I have is that I have not the courage to be very lazy.' It is so easy to slight the task at hand, or to put it off until to-morrow; so pleasant to do the things you want to do rather than the thing you ought to do, that a man must summon all his will power to resist. In your own experience you have undoubtedly met men of real talent who have proved utter failures because of their indolence, while other men, with half the natural equipment, have far outstripped them. The man who plods gets little applause or admiration while he is plodding, but there comes a time when the brilliant man finds that he has only been sawing away his support by trifling with the gifts that the Creator bestowed upon him, and when the plodder comes to the reward that his long arid toilings have earned for him, then his is the applause and the homage that comes to all success, and the bitterness of despair is for the man who has wasted the gifts that were his by nature.

your business or your and

Here is one diligently at work sawing away his future with the deadly saw we call INTEMPERANCE. Like the imitative monkey, he gets no end of amusement out of drink. He has been told that many great men have been drunkards, and he has also been told, which is not true, that some of them were great men BECAUSE they were drunkards; that is, they never did anything of importance unless they were drunk.

So he plays with intemperance till he cultivates the vice of drinking, and then, when he discovers that his only support has been cut off and that he is rapidly going to destruction, he shouts in vain for help.

Happily, intemperance is decreasing. It is no longer fashionable to be drunk in society. Statesmen no longer consider it just the thing to go into a Senate chamber drunk. Employers have discovered that a useful man is too expensive if he has not the sense to keep sober, and that sober men can be found easily to take the place of those who neglect their work because they like the sensation that comes with intoxication.

As the years go by, the human monkeys who use that means of bringing about their downfall will decrease rapidly in numbers. But the means that men find to destroy themselves are of endless variety.

Men, especially those who have not learned to reflect, are continually meddling with forces they do not understand, and continual. ly getting into trouble because of it.

It is not always the vicious or the dishonest that come to grief. Often the best intentioned discover when it is too late that they have been cutting their support away, and that the chasm of destruction lurks beneath them.

The get rich plaything is a saw that men will use to bring them into trouble as long as the gambling instinct remains a human inheritance, and that promises to be forever.

It is hard to persuade the man who has to work hard for a little money that his prosperous neighbors have not gained their prosperity by lucky chances. For years a great lottery, stretching like a writhing snake about . the country, robbed the people of millions of . dollars weekly. Rich and poor, high and low bought tickets every week, living on the hopes that were kindled by widely published stories of big winnings, never learning of the thousands of cases of despair and suicide occasioned by the losses that went to make up those winnings.

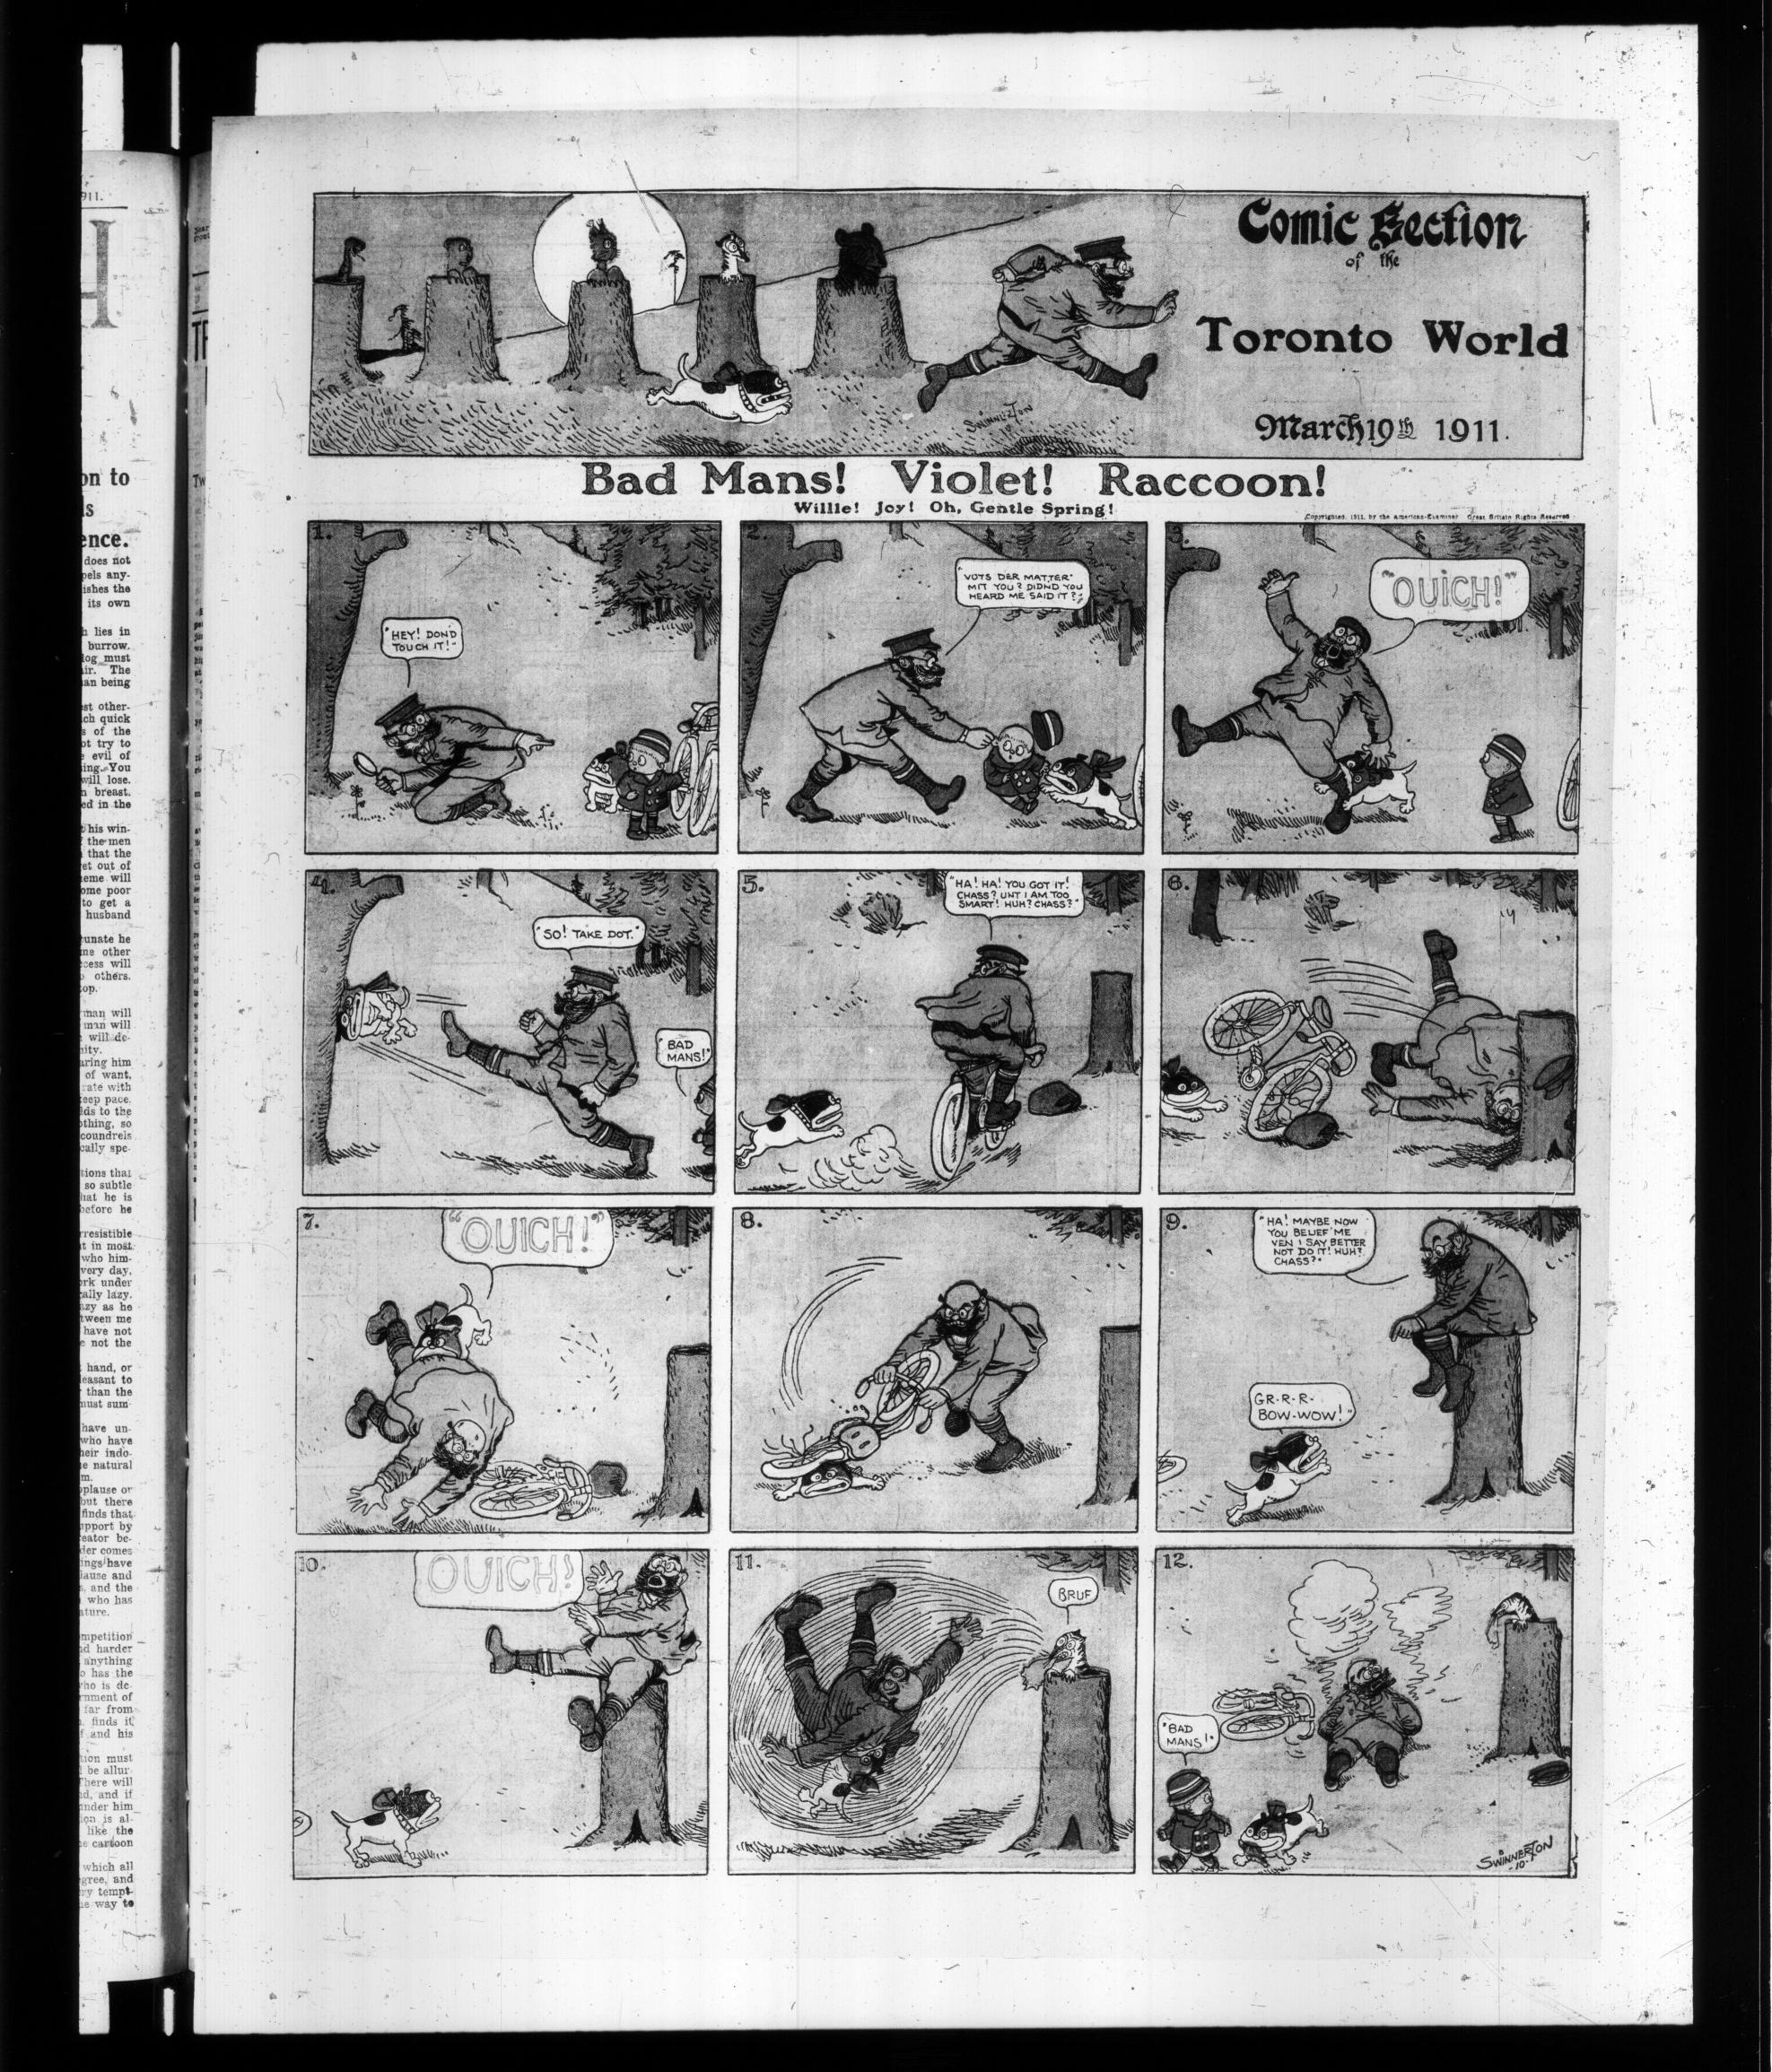

When at last the Government took a hand and drove out the lottery, other forms of gambling rose up to replace it.

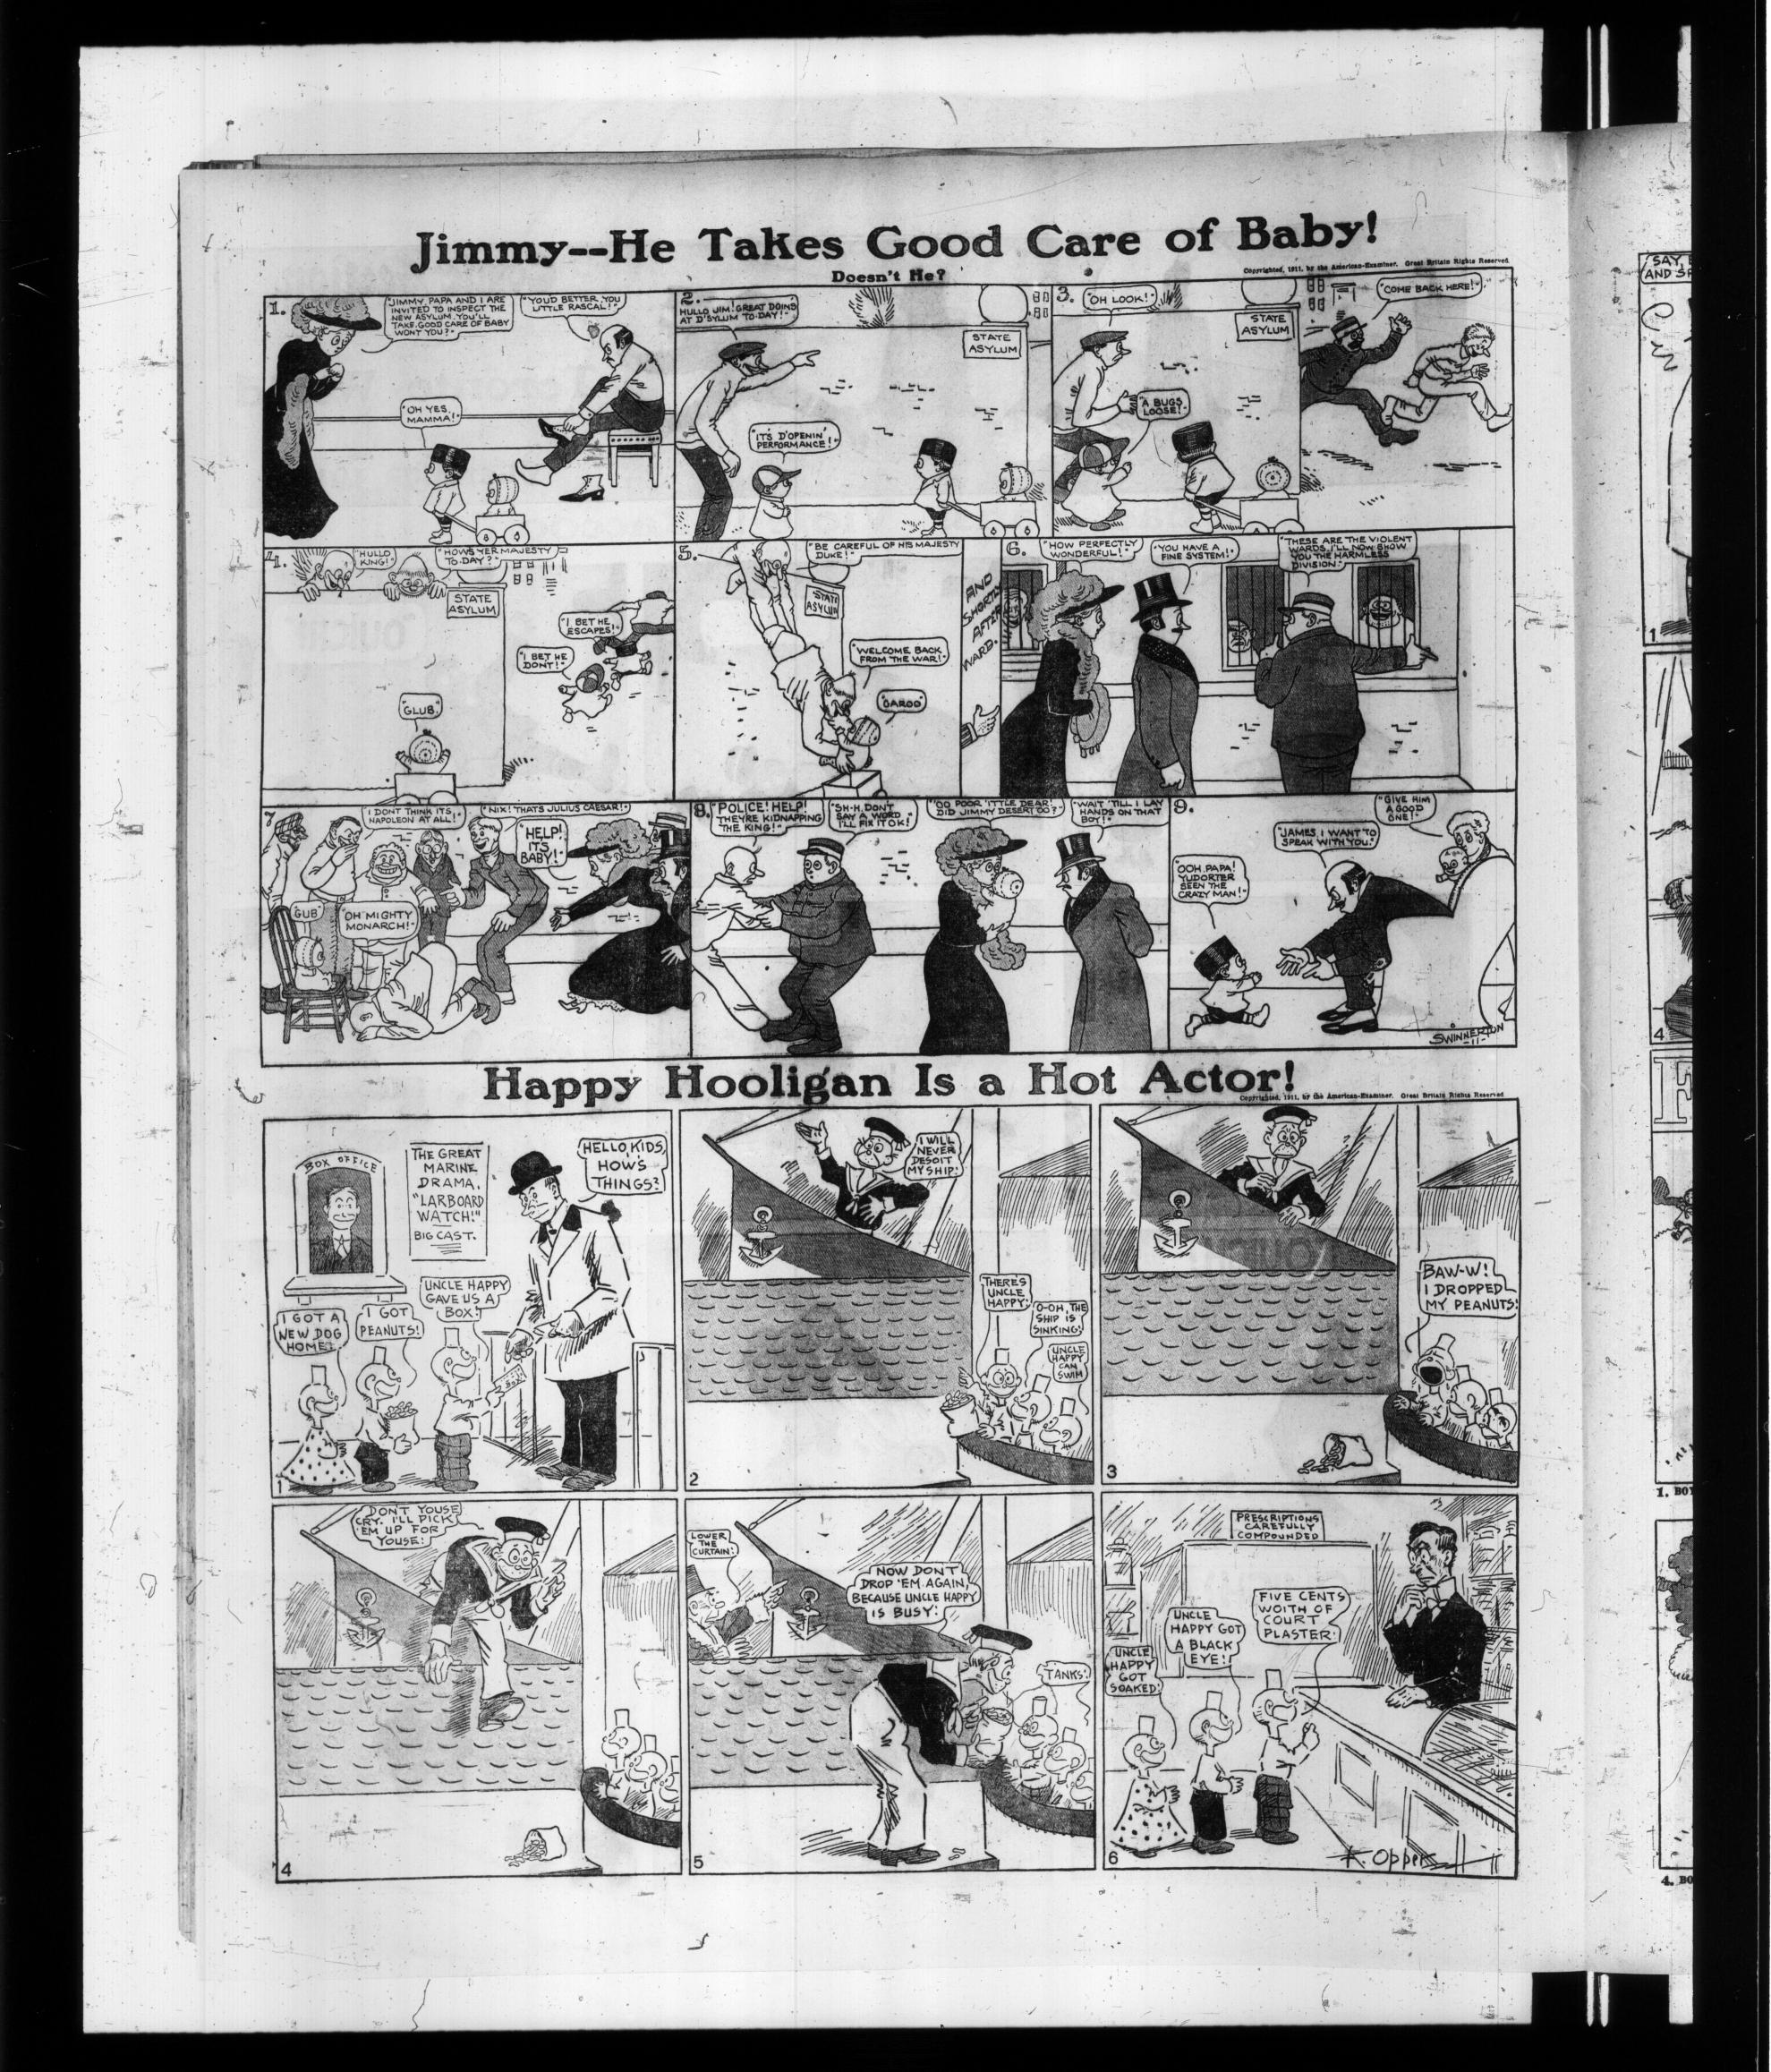

Race track gambling, now lückily almost at an end, served to supply the saw by which the foolish public could plunge itself to its fate. Then came the 520 per cent interest games, and "fake" investment schemes, many of which still flourish despite all that can be done to drive them out of existence.

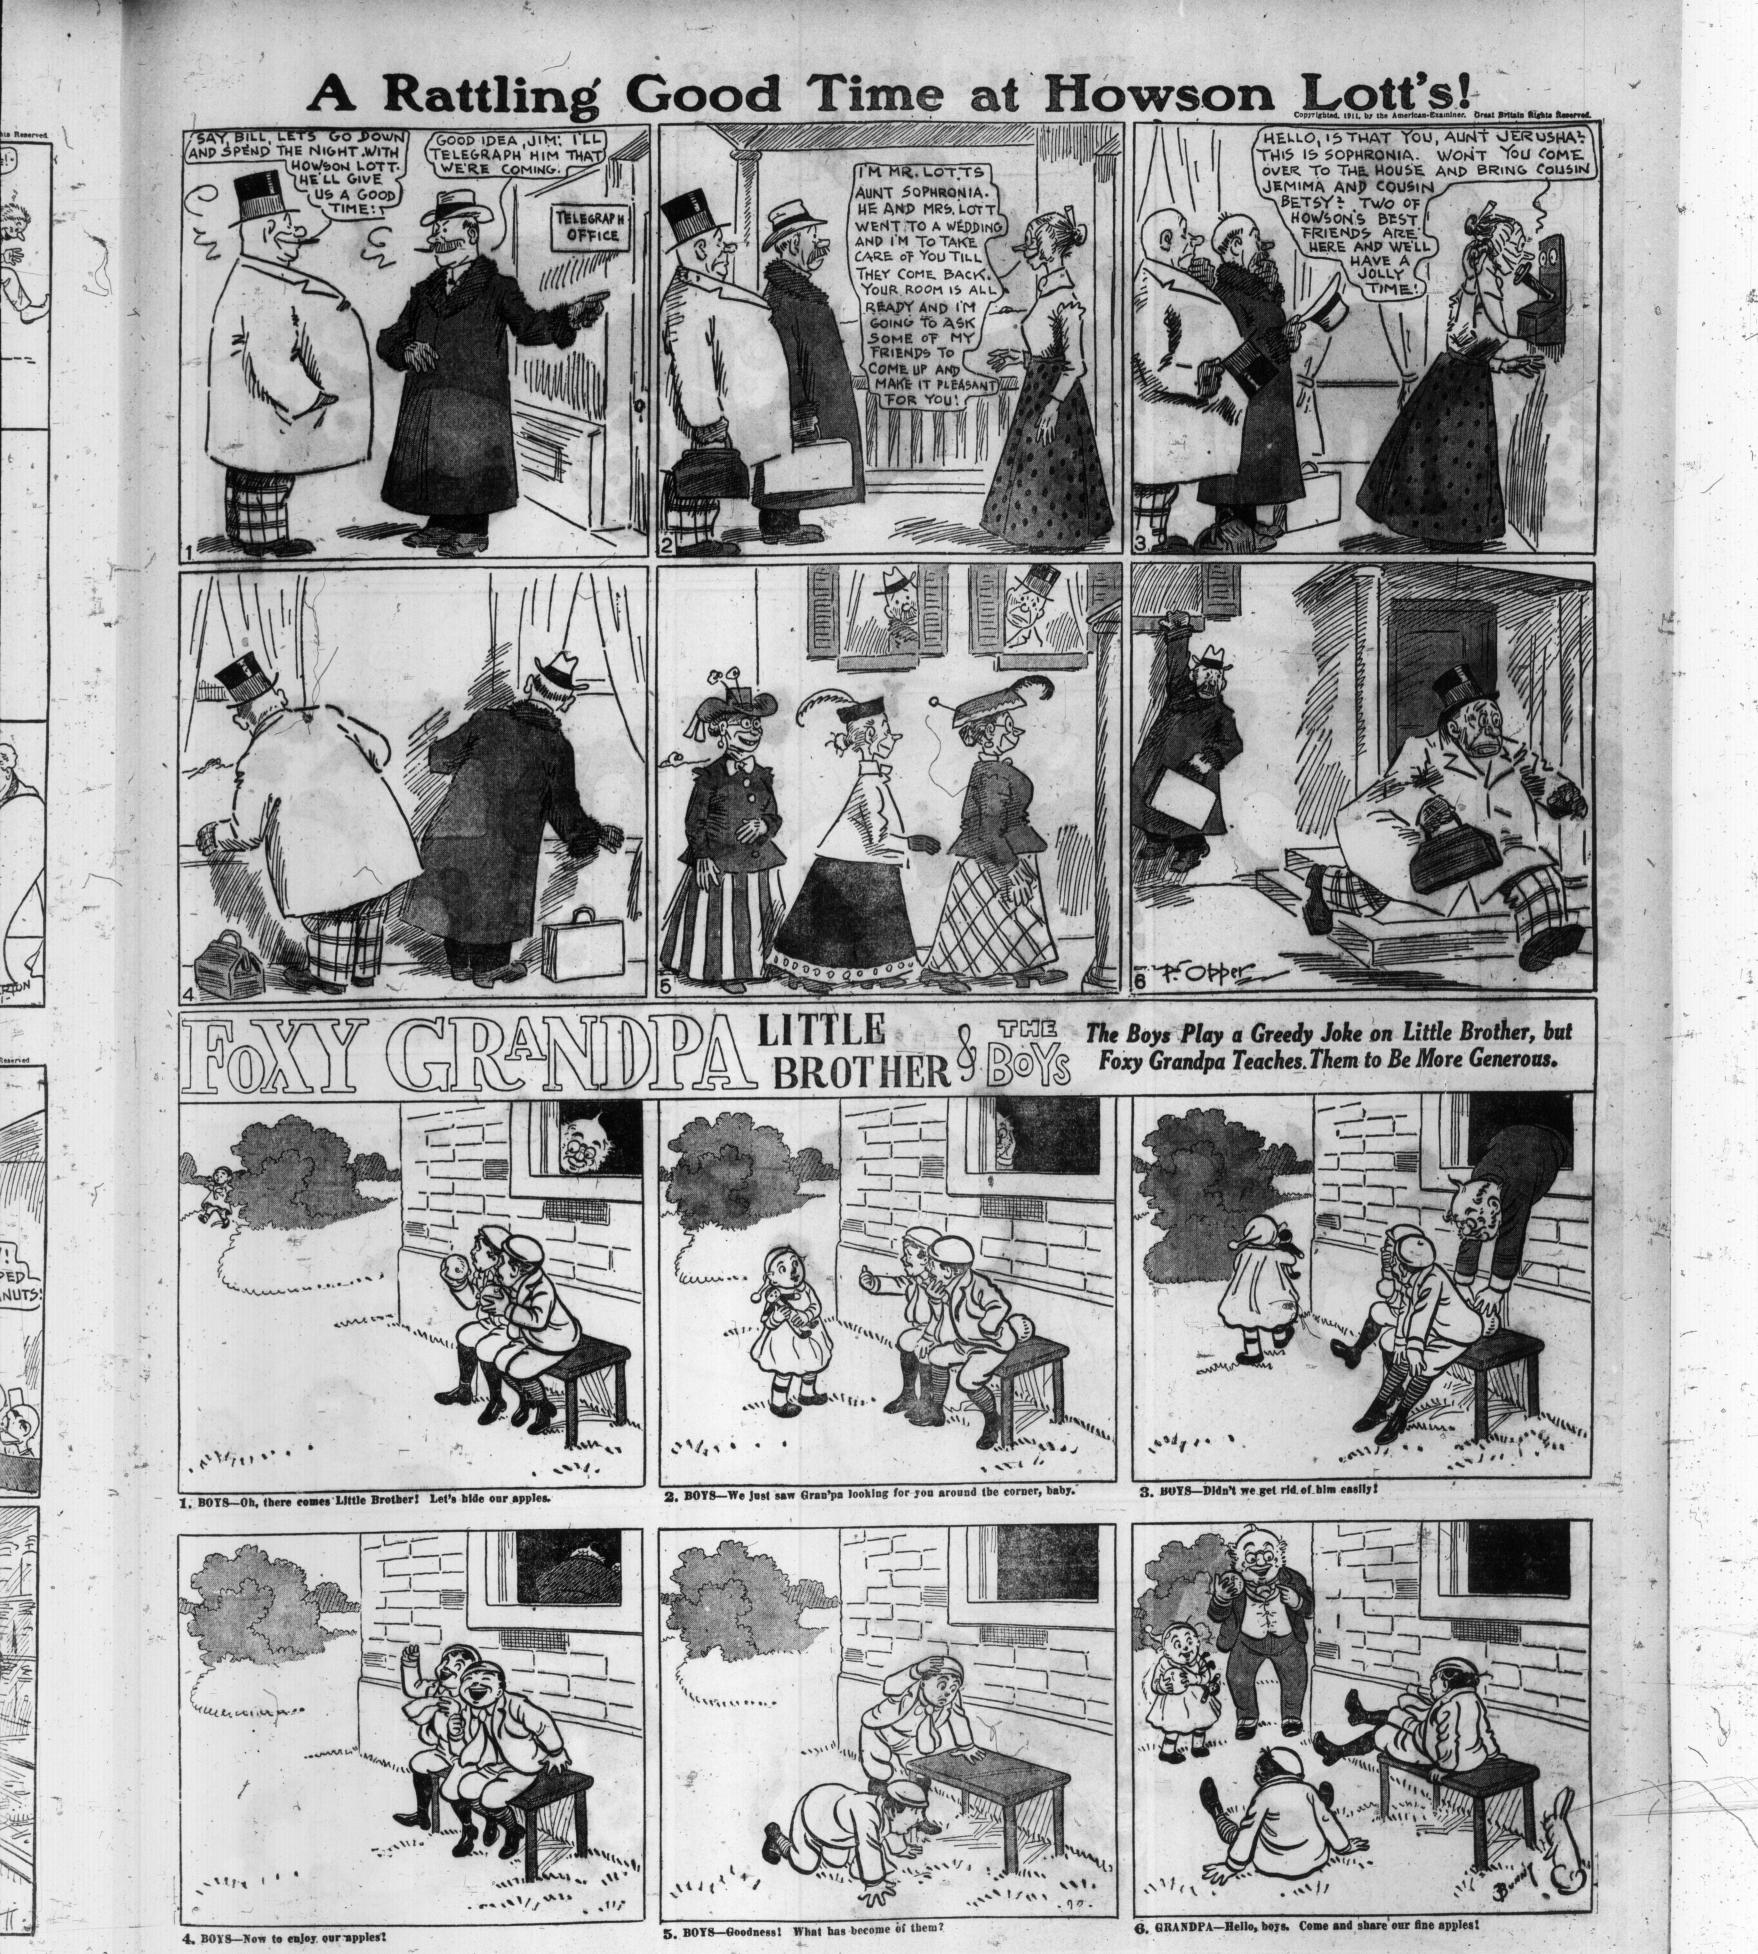

As the world grows larger and competition grows keener, it becomes harder and harder to rise above the general level, to be anything but the commonplace citizen, who has the price of his living fixed for him, who is denied any real voice in the government of which he ought to be a part, who, far from doing anything for his fellow men, finds it difficult to do anything for himself and his family

As his difficulties grow his caution must increase. There are and always will be alluring temptations to beset his way. There will be plenty of saws ready to his hand, and if he chooses to use them to cut from under him the only support he has, destruction is always ready to swallow him up, like the grimly humorous crocodiles in the cartoon that accompanies this editorial.

But if he uses his JUDGMENT, which all men possess in a greater or less degree, and thinks before he allows himself to try tempting experiments, he will not find the way to usefulness so hard, after all.
