BUFFALOONIANS CRY MURDER.

They Demand Punishment of the Shooter of Broderick.

BUFFALO, Aug. 31.—One thousand people last night attended a mass meeting called to petition the district attorney and coroner to prosecute the Twenty-second Regiment militiaman who shot Michael Broderick Thursday night. The wigwag rang with angry speeches.

Among the orators were: City Auditor Amel M. J. Smith, Dr. Grove, who had gained prominence as an agitator against the plans to do away with the railway crossing at the grade; T. Griffin, a hatter, and Lawyer Hynes, who acted as counsel for the strikers.

The speakers demanded that the soldier who fired the fatal shot be brought to justice. It was declared as the sense of the meeting that the coroner and district attorney leave nothing undone to earn the name of the soldier and punish him.

It was announced that Coroner Ransom would begin his inquest to-morrow morning, that he had testimony enough to show that the shooting was a deliberate murder and that the dead boy was not over a dozen feet away from his pursuer when the shots which killed him were fired. Every body in the neighborhood where the shooting occurred had been subpoenaed.

SEPARATE JURISDICTION.

The Question Discussed by the C. M. B. A. Delegates.

HAMILTON, Aug. 31.—There was an increased attendance of delegates at yesterday's session, which was opened with the annual address of the president, who suggested that if the council decided on once again asking the Supreme Council for separate jurisdiction it should immediately express an opinion and prepare instructions for the new executive, telling the board how to act in the event of another refusal by the Supreme Council. New and old delegates were present.

Don't take everything that you hear for gospel, and print it as such. Investigate every fact, and establish its genuineness before using it. Don't let your copy be cut or blue-penciled. Editors do not use blue pencils for fun. They do it to improve copy. Don't expect to become famous at one bound, for you will probably be disappointed. Don't forget that it requires as much brains and ability, if not more, to write a good paragraph as it does to write a column article.

Don't use a nom de plume. Sign your own name to such matter as can be signed. It will be your capital later on. Don't believe men and women who say newspaper work is only drudgery. Some of it is, to be sure, but there are many prizes in the profession, and you may win one if you try.

HIS LETTERS.

"I wrote three letters this morning," he said, with the air of a man who had accomplished much. "Ah, indeed?" responded the young woman; "what were they? I. O. U.?"

Mr. J. R. Allen, upholsterer, Toronto sends us the following: "For six or seven years my wife suffered with Dyspepsia, Constipation, Inward Piles and Kidney Complaint. We tried two physicians and a number of medicines without getting any relief, until we got a bottle of Northrop & Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. This was the first relief she got, and before long she was able to do her usual work. This was the first relief she got, and before long she was able to do her usual work. PELHAM WANTS $3,000,000.

The Claim Based on $6,000 Deposited in the Plymouth Bank in 1771.

RIDGEFIELD, Conn., Aug. 31.—John R. Pelham, a farmer 70 years of age, is endeavoring to recover $3,000,000 from the Plymouth (Mass.) Bank. He is aided by Detective Cronan, of Bridgeport, whose reward, in case the money is obtained, will be one-half the entire sum.

Pelham says way back in 1771, when he claims his great-grandfather deposited in the Plymouth Bank $6,000. When the old man died he left the money to his two daughters, William English, the husband of one of the daughters, was made the administrator of the will. Before the will had been accepted by the courts there was a quarrel among the heirs over the settlement. English, for some reason unknown, tore up the will and all the papers bearing on the case.

A series of suits followed, the money remaining in the bank untouched. Before the case was settled the daughters and their husbands all died, and there being no other near relatives interested enough to take the fight proceeding dropped. Now, after a lapse of 75 years, the case is revived by Pelham, who claims that he has abundant proof that his story is correct.

He claims to have papers in his possession of the original depositor. His neighbors think he is engaged in a hopeless task, but he is confident of success obtaining the fortune.

The bank people told Pelham they would give him the money if he would produce two witnesses who are acquainted with the provisions of the will. This, of course, he cannot do. Detective Cronan will make a visit to Plymouth shortly in the interests of Pelham.

WOMEN IN JOURNALISM.

Foster Conates Offers Some Valuable Suggestions.

"What work in journalism is woman best fitted to do well?" is another question repeatedly asked.

It has long been the custom to think that women were able to write fashion articles only; perhaps now and then society notes, or to describe the opening of a dry goods store. All that is changed now, because the day has gone by when any one person, man or woman, is supposed to be able to do all kinds of newspaper work equally well.

And, as in medicine, the law, and other learned professions, men and women have become specialists in journalism. It depends altogether on the taste and inclination of the writer. Some prefer editorial writing; others devote their time to arts; others to literature, or the drama, music, politics, sports, etc. A woman must follow her own taste. Gail Hamilton is one of the best political writers in this country. So was Anna Dickinson—alas! that she should be incapacitated for work—in her day. The late Middy Morgan made fame and laurels from cattle reporting. Miss Hutchinson, of the New York Tribune, is recognized as one of the most skillful reviewers of books; and so it goes.

The speakers varied. It is not necessary for beginners to have a specialty, indeed, it is better not. To begin by keeping eyes and ears open, doing what is required, until she has mastered a general knowledge of the entire newspaper business, is far better. Then she can choose such work as is best adapted to her pen, and strive to occupy that field better than any one else in that same line.

Here are a few things that the beginner in newspaper work should remember: Don't forget that there is no sex in brains. Don't write upon a hackneyed subject, unless you can treat it in a new and strikingly original manner.

Don't run your sentences together in such a way that an editor cannot understand what you mean. Don't write illegibly. Put a full stop at the end of each sentence. Punctuate properly.

Don't abbreviate; spell out all words plainly, and be sure you use capital letters when necessary.

Don't bother an editor for work. If you have no idea of your own take a little time to read, study, observe and freshen your mind. Then seek him.

Don't forget that typewritten copy is either poor or good, and that most editors prefer it.

Don't use words of any foreign language when good Anglo-Saxon can be employed.

Don't forget that accuracy is one of the necessary elements of success in newspaper writing.

Don't take everything that you hear for gospel, and print it as such. Investigate every fact, and establish its genuineness before using it.

Don't let your copy be cut or blue-penciled. Editors do not use blue pencils for fun. They do it to improve copy.

Don't expect to become famous at one bound, for you will probably be disappointed. Don't forget that it requires as much brains and ability, if not more, to write a good paragraph as it does to write a column article.

Don't use a nom de plume. Sign your own name to such matter as can be signed. It will be your capital later on. Don't believe men and women who say newspaper work is only drudgery. Some of it is, to be sure, but there are many prizes in the profession, and you may win one if you try.

Were the scrofula sores on my poor little boy, sickening and disgusting. They were especially severe on his legs, back of his ears and on his head. His hair was so matted that combing was sometimes impossible. His legs were so bad that sometimes he could not sit down, and when he tried to walk his legs would crack open and the blood start.

Physicians did not effect a cure. I decided to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla. In two weeks the sores commenced to heal up; the scales came off and all over his body new and healthy skin formed. When he had taken two bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla he was entirely free from sores. HARRY K. RUBY, Box 356, Columbia, Pennsylvania.

A GRAVE CHARGE.

Board of Health Members Accused of "Winking."

A Session Devoted to Personal Matters.

Ald. Parnell Jumps on the Chairman and M. E. O. Mr. Ivey Says Dr. Gardner "Stuck the City"—Slighted Dignity—A Public Scavenger Recommended.

At yesterday afternoon's meeting of the Board of Health the chairman, Ald. J. Heaman, read a brief report of what he heard at the seventh annual convention of the Ontario medical health officers, held at Niagara Falls, to which he and Dr. Hutchinson were sent as representatives of the local board. A complete report of the convention would, he said, be submitted to the board in a course of a few weeks. Dr. Hutchinson also read a report of what he heard.

Ald. Parnell characterized the reports of Ald. Heaman and Dr. Hutchinson as very incomplete, and said that there was nothing in them that was worthy of the board. He further said that he had heard that Dr. Hutchinson had not attended all the sessions of the convention.

Ex-Ald. Ivey liked to see business done in a business-like way. He thought that if Ald. Parnell wanted to be Dr. Hutchinson he should do it in a fair way and not from behind the back. He thought that some members of the board had been talking over the matter outside of the meeting, and said he saw winking across the table.

Mr. Skinner and Ald. Parnell had been having a quarrel ever since they had been other members of the board and also having done any winking. They sat opposite Mr. Ivey.

Ald. J. Heaman said that Willis Chipman, of Toronto, had informed him that he had seen Dr. Hutchinson in Toronto on the first day of the convention.

Dr. Hutchinson explained that he went straight through to St. Catharines, where he took sick, and was unable to be at Niagara on the first day of the convention.

After a good deal of wrangling and cross-firing the matter of cleaning Carling's Creek came up once more, and Mr. Ivey accused Dr. Gardner of having "stuck the city" last year for $50 when he made a mistake in causing the course of this same creek to be changed. Therefore, Dr. Gardner did not wish to be put on the committee again this year.

Dr. Hutchinson, Ald. Heaman and Ald. J. Heaman were appointed to have the stream cleaned out whenever required.

The chairman proposed a second inspection of the business portion of the city, and it will be done with a couple of weeks under the supervision of himself and the medical health officer.

Dr. Gardner said that as personal matters had been discussed he would like to know why the members of the Board of Health under his supervision should be invited to attend the last of July demonstration.

Mr. Ivey—Well, I suppose it's too late to receive the invitation now.

Ald. Parnell—I don't think this is a place for public discussion.

Dr. Gardner—This is not public business. He thought every person should have a certain amount of dignity. He felt slighted and hurt, and thought he had not received an invitation to any such event.

Mr. Ivey—Not even to funerals?

The matter then dropped.

NUMBER THREE COMMITTEEMEN

May Now Attend Prayer Meeting—Business Transacted Last Night—Hard on Davis—The Market Clerk's Report.

A young man named Davis, living in Mitchell, arrived in the city yesterday morning on his holiday tour and in his holiday clothes. He was gazing at a few holiday clothes. He was gazing at a few holiday clothes. He was gazing at a few holiday clothes.

Mr. Grey, of King Street, sent a lawyer's letter saying that Chief Williams, then fire limits inspector, had given him permission to erect the building which the engineer had since condemned. The owner said it was not a contravention of the bylaw. A committee will investigate and report.

Ald. Parnell moved that police men inform the engineer of any breach of the fire limits bylaw, which come to their notice. Carried.

Market Clerk Wilson said he had good cases against Mrs. Bell and Miss Hart for infractions of the market bylaw, but as they promised not to offend again the cases were dropped. One grocer sent his son on the market to sell produce, thus breaking the spirit of the act and stopping him. The nuisance caused by people leaving their horses uncurled for in the market would continue until he had orders to run the rigs into a hotel yard and owner's expense. No immediate action was taken on the report.

Ald. W. Heaman moved that the council call for tenders for the city's coal supply from Nov. 1 to July 1, 1903, thus allowing the contract to expire in July, when coal was cheap, instead of as at present.

The committee will reaffirm its report, recommending that a new watering cart cost $255 be purchased from George Heaman.

Chief Roe reported the sale of 100 feet of old hose and some couplings to C. S. Hyman & Co. for $25, and the black horse Jap to Charles Beatty for $20. Adopted.

Tenders will be called for repairs to the market. An account of $50 from W. Thompson for repairs to the horse wagon was referred to the chairman to look into. The foreman said the work had been done by Ald. Parnell. This the latter denied.

Ald. Parnell asked how Fireman Smith had been getting along with his blacksmith attachment. Chief Roe said the arrangement worked well; a lot of work had been done.

Ald. Hannah moved that the regular meeting of the committee be held on Tuesdays instead of Wednesdays, as prayer meetings and church gatherings were under way on Wednesday evenings. The motion met with no objections and was adopted.

The lot adjoining the Central Fire Hall will be sold and the proceeds to be used for the purchase of a new fire engine. Ald. Fitzgerald (chairman), Monie, John Heaman, Wm. Heaman, Hannah and Parnell, and Chief Roe, Inspector Bell, the engineer and Secretary Bell.

Co-operation at Rockford.

Sixteen years ago a colony of Swedish cabinet makers settled at Rockford, Ill. They were excellent workmen. They had $50,000 between them. They had put up expensive but comfortable houses, some of them with room for live families, but with the ownership so that a man might lose his share in the house when he could do otherwise.

These 25 men then started one factory, the Union furniture factory. Each man was a shareholder. They bought the best machinery. The factory had no foremen, no outside shows. It was built in the plainest manner, simply covered with one thickness of board and one layer of brick over the whole. The stockholders, Mr. W. E. Saunders, J. A. Moffat and Rev. W. M. Rogers, letters of regret at inability to attend were read from H. H. Lyman, Montreal; A. H. Kilman, Ridgeway; J. D. Evans, Sudbury, and Gamble Geddes, Toronto.

A letter was read from F. G. Buckell, of London, Eng., by J. A. Moffat on the expansion of the wings of lepidoptera.

The treasurer's annual report showed a balance of $319.13 to meet the expenses of the society until the end of the year. The librarian's report showed that there were now 1,214 volumes in the library, a large increase since last year.

Rev. Thomas Fyles read an interesting paper on the life of Zoroaster and also an account of some butterflies found in Quebec.

J. Fletcher gave an account of a parasite of the currant worm.

Rev. Mr. Fyles gave an account of a visit to the home of the Canadian naturalist, Gosse.

Evening Session.

In the evening a public meeting was held, at which there was a good attendance of those interested in entomology.

President's Address.

Rev. Dr. Chas. J. S. Bethune, of Port Hope, president of the society, in his annual address welcomed those present.

All had gone well with the society, he said, and the reports of the council and officers and sections had recorded steady progress and continued prosperity. Thirty years had elapsed since Mr. Bethune and Mr. Saunders had issued a circular to the collectors of insects in Canada, who were at that time very few in number, and by that time they were interested in entomology.

On April 10, 1873, the Entomological Society of Canada was formed in Toronto, at a meeting where nine gentlemen were present. These were Rev. Prof. Hinks and Prof. Croft, of Toronto University; Dr. J. H. Sangster, Dr. Beverly R. Morris and James Hubbard, of Toronto; Dr. Thomas Cowley and his son, W. H. Cowley, of York Mills; Wm. Saunders, of London, and Mr. Bethune. Soon the society had fifteen members, and now it is a large and influential body with a well-established reputation and a recognized scientific status.

In dealing with the chief insect attacks of the year Mr. Bethune referred to the eye-spotted bud moth, which had been very injurious to apple trees throughout the country. Canker worms had been very destructive and abundant in various places. The caterpillars of forest trees in many districts. Cut worms had been less abundant. The zebra caterpillar had been unusually abundant and had damaged cabbage, beets, spinach and lettuce. The cabbage butterfly had been plentiful, and a corresponding amount of mischief had been done. Another serious enemy to the cabbage was the root maggot, which was especially injurious this year in several parts of Ontario. The pear-tree blister had been spreading over Ontario and the Maritime Provinces during the season. The fall web worm was more abundant than ever before. The grape vine flea beetle was also very injurious to grapes.

Princess Louise Working for the Fair.

The bust of the Queen upon which the Princess Louise has been engaged for some months, and which her Royal Highness has, with her Majesty's consent, promised to send to Chicago for exhibition at the World's Fair, is now complete. It is a notable example of the Princess's skill, and standing in the Queen's shroud at Osborne, it has attracted much attention among the members of the royal family. The Princess has also been at work upon some pictures which are intended for Chicago, and these, it is said, will, after the exhibition, be sold, the proceeds being given to one of the charitable institutions in this country in which she takes so much interest. Of all the daughter of the Queen, Princess Louise is the best artist, though she is closely run by Princess Beatrice.

Adam Graeme, of Mossgrays.

By Mrs. Oliphant.

There were sounds of loud, boyish footsteps on the road, as Helen, stooping down, wrapped up the children as she best could to defend them from the rain.

"Oh!" exclaimed a voice corresponding to the feet, as Hector Maxwell of Firthside and his brother came up out of breath.

"Miss Buchanan! I knew it was Miss Buchanan—and she's drouthy. Here's my aid—take my plaid, Miss Buchanan! We've run a road from the brae, because we saw you on the marsh, and if you had just waited—"

Hector looked indignantly at the little heavy Tamme, and in great haste threw off his plaid.

"Miss Buchanan will not be much better in your plaid, Hector," said Mr. Oswald; "she must take my umbrella; it will be more serviceable, and not so heavy."

Helen answered the somewhat constrained politeness with a little bow.

"Thank you, Hector; you would be very wet before you got home, if I took your plaid from you."

"But I'm not heading," said the generous Maxwell. Hector did not seem to brush up his English for Helen; she was not so easily shocked as his sister.

"And I shall soon be home," said Helen. "I must go with you, as you know, and see that they are not scolded; and I am wet already. Come, Tamme, Hector, good night."

Helen looked up into the banker's face, and her natural frankness struggled for a moment with her shy pride. She was almost inclined to say that she would share his umbrella if he pleased, and the next moment she would say nothing; but finally there was a compromise.

"Good-night, Mr. Oswald," said Helen, as she took little Tamme's hand.

"We are going the same way," said the embarrassed banker; and so they did, and unobtrusively under shelter of one umbrella, with little Jeanie and her brother getting very muddy and wet at their feet, the banker Oswald and Helen Buchanan walked side by side toward the cheerful lights of Fennie.

Mr. Oswald cleared his throat; he rather wanted to begin a conversation, but he did not very well know how.

It was to be his sister, the good man said to himself pleasantly, it was very necessary that he should at least be acquainted with her; but certain it is that with no other prospect than Miss Inches would Mr. Oswald have felt himself so uncomfortably conscious. He made a beginning at last on the easiest subject.

"How foolish people are to permit their children to stray out on that marsh!"

"It is the fault of the bairns themselves," said Helen.

The banker remembered that Miss Swinton, Hope's oracle, applauded her natural Scottish tongue, and it was rather a pretty word, "bairns." In another person, he would have thought it vulgar; perhaps, but no one could call that low voice, with its changeful modulations, vulgar, and he began to like to listen to it.

"Jeanie is afraid her mother will be angry; but when she sees them so wet, she will forget their misdeed, I hope."

Little Tamme had been tied up as well as it was possible to keep him comfortable, but the poor little fellow was very wet notwithstanding, and was getting weary of his shivering, and was getting weary of his shivering, and was getting weary of his shivering.

"It is possible to keep him comfortable, but the poor little fellow was very wet notwithstanding, and was getting weary of his shivering, and was getting weary of his shivering, and was getting weary of his shivering."

"It is possible to keep him comfortable, but the poor little fellow was very wet notwithstanding, and was getting weary of his shivering, and was getting weary of his shivering, and was getting weary of his shivering."

he did not quite know how to answer so honest a statement, for the good man had taken it for granted that the young school-mistress must be very sick of her labor; and eager to escape from it, which indeed she was not, except sometimes, when her wayward moods were upon her.

"I did not know that you knew Hector Maxwell," said Mr. Oswald, awkwardly.

"Do you admit to him yet?" said Helen, as well as the little girls, Miss Buchanan?

"Hector Maxwell is not rude," said Helen. "He is a genuine boy, and a great friend of mine. Yes, indeed; I like them all very well, until they become young gentlemen and young ladies."

"And what then?" said the banker.

"And then I become a little afraid of them, and they do not suit me any longer," said Helen, smiling, as she paused at an open door, where the mother of Jeanie was looking out anxiously for her little truant.

"I thank you, Mr. Oswald; good-night."

CHAPTER V.

Is she not proud! she does not count her blessing.

Unhappy as she is, that we have wrought so worthy a gentleman to be her husband!

—Romeo and Juliet.

The little roundabout Miss Inches began to grow dissatisfied about the length of her own continuance in office. She saw that very soon her dominion over the dining-room and the drawing-room, and her share of the comforts of the library, must come to a close; and while the good-natured sister anticipated, with considerable relief, her return to the plebeian, unpresumpting home where there was no necessity for being always genteel, she felt also a cool many qualms about resigning Robert, and Robert's beautiful chairs and tables, into the keeping of a stranger.

"For ye see, Miss Buchanan, she's young," said Miss Inches to herself, not daring to have any other confidant, "and for a she's nae better—I'm meaning for a she's a handle purtier than curse, no to speak of Robert—she has got high notions like himsel; and I'm very doubtful that she'll just let me do the big room, and no think of putting to her ain hand. Robert says I should do that too, but he's a young lad for a he's the minister, and does ken a thing."

With his may just be mindful of himsel! His eyes have been used wi' his ain way, purr man and has been muckle made o', and muckle thought o' and I'm sure a better lad."

Miss Inches paused with an impatient tear in her eye. The worshipful minister son of whom the mother at home was so proud the omnipotent brother whose slightest word was law—alas! was he to cease to be an idol—to come down from his absolute throne, and be in lead to a constitutional monarchy like any other man, with perhaps a young, proud wife exacting service from him, instead of rendering it?

Homeage which was Robert's due? Miss Inches' eye again wandered over the shining tables of the sacred drawing-room, and her heart was troubled.

"He's aye had his ain way, purr man!" she repeated, mournfully, as she carefully closed the door and sighed. Poor Robert! he was to be married, as all Fennie said—he was to have his own way no longer.

The Reverend Robert was seated at his writing table in the library; it was a study of his. Miss Inches' sister had been in the room, and took her seat at a constitutional monarchy like any other man, with perhaps a young, proud wife exacting service from him, instead of rendering it?

Homeage which was Robert's due? Miss Inches' eye again wandered over the shining tables of the sacred drawing-room, and her heart was troubled.

"He's aye had his ain way, purr man!" she repeated, mournfully, as she carefully closed the door and sighed. Poor Robert! he was to be married, as all Fennie said—he was to have his own way no longer.

The Reverend Robert was seated at his writing table in the library; it was a study of his. Miss Inches' sister had been in the room, and took her seat at a constitutional monarchy like any other man, with perhaps a young, proud wife exacting service from him, instead of rendering it?

—The city engineer has inspected the police station and says the cells are a disgrace to a city of this standing. The place is in a dirty condition. The engineer recommends that the station be cleaned and repainted. The heating he reports to be totally inadequate, and advises that the hot water system be adopted.

—Work has been resumed on the two new separate schools, one on the corner of York and Lyle streets and the other on the corner of Chesapeake and Waterloo streets. STARTED IN LONDON.

Mr. Phillipot Says His Disloyalty Originated Here

After the Local Barracks Was Burnt—His Charges Against Booth and the Latter's Reply—The Lucan and Alvinston Cases.

It would seem that the fires of Phillipot revolt in the Salvation Army, according to Brigadier Phillipot himself, were first kindled in this city. The following is a portion of Brigadier Phillipot's address in Toronto the other evening, in which he laid down his charges against Commandant Booth:

"It was twelve months ago, that he (the speaker) was accused of having started on his course of disloyalty. He thought, however, that they would find that it was some time before that. It was shortly after the London barracks were burned down. He was in command there then. The London barracks were wild to have the barracks raised, and were making every effort to raise the money necessary. One day, however, he got a letter from headquarters telling him to have the land on which the barracks had stood valued and sold. He was astonished and grieved, and wrote for an explanation. No explanation was vouchsafed, but Capt. Wyse was sent up a little later and sold the property for $4,000 at a time when he (Phillipot) was absent. The money went to headquarters, but how it was disposed of he did not know. The same plan of realizing on the property of the army had been pursued in twenty places during the past year. He knew of two cases at least, for they were in divisions over which he was in command. The places were Lucan and Alvinston. In these two places there is no Salvation Army now. Why was this? Why were they withdrawing their officers and selling their property in these places in Canada? This was the first thing that shocked him in looking at the conduct of the army."

Commandant Booth, in his reply to Mr. Phillipot's charges, says:

"As to Lucan, Mr. Phillipot is entirely wrong in his facts here. He is, to be sure, out in his figures by nearly $1,000. This property was sold for reasons which were fully stated to Mr. Phillipot by the commissioner for the time being. He denies this; yet a copy of the letter addressed to him upon the subject is before us. The sum paid for the land was $3,280, $2,005 of this went to pay off the mortgage and interest. There were other liabilities on the properties, which were also met, and the balance is still recognized to the credit of the property fund as being available to assist in purchasing property in London should such a course be decided upon. Since my arrival in Canada I have had under consideration a proposal to purchase property in this city."

"As to Alvinston, it is correct that this property has been sold. The army is not the only religious institution in the Dominion which has found it impossible to support a society in a village, and has in consequence withdrawn and sold its property; churches have been sold as well as barracks. The army withdrew from Lucan on the express wish of Mr. Phillipot, as is shown by his own papers now at headquarters. The property here was sold with Mr. Phillipot's concurrence, as the following extract from one of his letters, written to headquarters at the time, will show:

"I have had several offers for the property at Lucan. The best offer is from Mr. —. I think this is the best you can do, and would advise you to let it to that amount."

"As to Alvinston, the building is not yet sold, but the army's withdrawal from that village was the result of Mr. Phillipot's express wishes, as is conclusively proved by the following extract from another letter written by him at the time to headquarters:

"I will not take the responsibility of supporting officers there. The railroad will no doubt run through the barracks, and this will do away with our property, which is a Godsend."

"These are not the only two places in which Mr. Phillipot suggested that the army property should be sold, and urged headquarters to adopt that course."

Three Months for Jumping from High Bridge.
New York, Sept. 1.—Frank Gaylord of 17 Renwick street, who jumped from High Bridge on Friday last, was well enough on Tuesday to be arraigned in the Harlem Court. He told Justice Welde that he couldn't say what impelled him to jump from the bridge. Justice Welde sent him to the island for three months.

Mr. Job Seales, of Toronto, writes: "A short time ago I was suffering from Kidney Complaint and Dyspepsia, sour stomach and lame back; in fact, I was completely prostrated and suffering intense pain. While in this state a friend recommended me to try a bottle of Northrup and Lyman's Vegetable Discovery. I used one bottle, and the permanent manner in which it has cured and made a new man of me is such that I cannot withhold from the proprietors this expression of my gratitude."

Seeking an Opportunity—Here I have something to say to you, but there are so many people in the room I am afraid I won't have a chance. She—Wait a moment and I will ask one of the young ladies to play on the piano.

Henry—I meant to call on you last evening, Mary, but really, I—fact is, I don't know what to offer as an excuse. Mary—Oh, don't feel annoyed, Henry. Any excuse you care to offer will be amply sufficient.
