Lovers of football may look forward to a great season's program of games this summer.

Dog Lacerates Banker's Hand
A bitter antipathy appears to exist between Mr. W. G. Trummer's dog and Arthur Herrgott's Airedale, and whenever these two canines meet there is usually a scamp. On Monday morning they encountered each other face to face in A. Fedy's store, and they were into it in a jiffy. Mr. Trummer seized his own dog in an effort to part the belligerents, but the Airedale, anxious to have the last bite, got his teeth into the banker's hand, inflicting several bone-deep gashes. A stitch by the doctor was required to close the laceration.

Play was Enjoyed
The three-act comedy "Eyes of Love", given in the town hall last Friday evening by the Young People of the United Church, was worthy of the splendid patronage it received. The hall was filled to the doors, and all thoroughly enjoyed the evening's program. The story of this play is intensely interesting, and each part was well depicted. Miss Ruth Vollick, in the role of Gallya, the adopted daughter of Judge and Mrs. Barry who after nineteen years discovers her real father, Trusty Jim, displayed remarkable talent, and her courtship with Royal Manton, was delightful and charming. The part of Trusty Jim, taken by A. W. Underhill, was excellently done. Trusty Jim was wrongly convicted of forgery, and after spending nineteen years in jail he hears that his daughter is alive, and breaks custody to sea her. To avoid recognition he appears in the guise of an Italian singer, and general handy man, and by his remarkable character he wins the affection of all, and is finally released and pardoned by Judge Barry. J. Fraser Scott, playing the role of Royal Manton, is a gallant lover, and his success in winning Gallya from the designing Burt Wade, met with the entire approval of the audience. Miss Laugretta Hamel as Reeta, and Herb Sovereign in the part of Burt Wade, Harvey Vollick as the butler-detective in disguise, and Miss Dorothy Vollick, the lively housemaid, were particularly good. George Culliton and Miss Irene Harper as Judge and Mrs. Barry, were just as sedate as the characters demanded, and Dorothy Jasper as Caroline, the negro servant, took the part splendidly. Between the acts Miss M. Suggs rendered in her own inimitable manner, two very entertaining readings, and Mr. Godfrey Schuett contributed several piano solos. The total proceeds amounted to about $130. The thanks of the young people are due to J. F. Schuett for lending the furniture required for the play, and to the Litchburg Society for their wonderful improvement of the town hall stage.

He was driving in the rain, and his car slid down an embankment, and Edward was thrown through the windshield. His chin and forehead were badly gashed, and the doctor had to put in several stitches to close up the cuts he sustained. The car was pretty badly wrecked.

Successful Operation
Mrs. Peter Lobsinger, who has been in rather delicate health for some months, underwent an operation at St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, on Tuesday morning of this week for appendicitis and gall bladder trouble. Dr. J. C. McClelland was the specialist who conducted the operation, and we are glad to report that it was highly successful. The patient is doing as well as can be expected, and her many friends now confidently look for her restoration to good health again.

"Was it the collar you were looking for in the cupboard?" said Bill eagerly.

"Of course. 'Why no collar?' I said. For some reason Cayley considered it necessary to hide all Mark's clothes; not just the suit, but everything which he was wearing, or supposed to be wearing, at the time of the murder. But he hadn't hidden the collar. Why? Had he left it out by mistake? So I looked in the cupboard. It wasn't there. Had he left it out on purpose? If so, why?—and where was it? Naturally I began to say to myself, 'Where have I seen a collar lately? A collar all by itself?' And I remembered—what, Bill?"

Bill frowned heavily to himself, and shook his head.

"Don't ask me, Tony. I can't—By Jove!" He threw up his hand. "In the basket in the office bedroom!"

"Exactly?"

"But is that the one?"

"The one that goes with the rest of the clothes? I don't know. Where else can it be? But if so, why send the collar quite casually to the washboard, and on March 21, 1830, after four months and 21 days of travelling, he landed in Bombay.

The return journey was accomplished in less than a third of the time of his outward trip.

Count Ferdinand de Lessops acknowledged that it was after a conversation with Waghorn that he was convinced of the necessity of the construction of the Suez Canal. He erected a bust to Waghorn at the entrance of the canal, and himself wrote the inscription.

of the house and had seen Robert Ablett arrive. He didn't hear the shot—not to notice. He was a little hard of hearing. He had seen a gentleman arrive about five minutes after Mr. Robert.

"Can you see him in court now?" asked the coroner.

Parsons looked round slowly. Antony caught his eye and smiled.

"That's him," said Parsons, pointing.

Everybody looked at Antony.

"That was about five minutes afterward?"

"About that, sir."

"Did anybody come out of the house before this gentleman's arrival?"

"No, sir. That is to say, I didn't see 'em."

Stevens followed. She gave her evidence much as she had given it to the Inspector. Nothing new was brought out by her examination. Then came Elsie. As the reporters scribbled down what she had overheard, they added in brackets "Sensation" for the first time that afternoon.

"How so? after you had heard this did the shot come?" asked the coroner.

"Almost at once, sir."

"Were you still in the hall?"

"Oh, no, sir. I was just outside Mrs. Stevens' room. The housekeeper, sir."

"You didn't think of going back to the hall to see what had happened?"

"Oh, no, sir. I just went in to Mrs. Stevens, and she said, 'Oh, what was that? frightened-like. And I said, 'That was in the house, Mrs. Stevens, that was.' Just like something going off, it was."

"Thank you," said the coroner.

There was another emotional disturbance in the room as Cayley went into the witness-box; not "Sensation" this time, but an eager and, as it seemed to Antony, sympathetic interest. Now they were getting to grips with the drama.

He gave his evidence carefully, unemotionally—the lies with the same slow deliberation as the truth. Antony watched him intently, wondering what it was about him which had this odd sort of attractiveness. For Antony, who knew that he was lying, and lying (as he believed) not for Mark's sake but his own, yet could not help sharing some of that general sympathy with him.

"Was Mark ever in possession of a revolver?" asked the coroner.

"Not to my knowledge. I think I should have known if he had been."

"You were alone with him all that morning. Did he talk about this visit of Robert's at all?"

"I didn't see very much of him in the morning. I was at work in my room, and outside, and so on. We lunched together and he talked of it then a little."

"In what terms?"

"Well—'he hesitated, and then went on, 'I can't think of a better word than 'peevishly.'"

"You didn't hear any conversation between the brothers when they were in the office together?"

"No. I happened to go into the library just after Mark had gone in, and it was there all the time."

"Was the library door open?"

"Oh, yes."

"Did you see or hear the last witness at all?"

"No."

"Would you call Mark a hasty-tempered man?"

Cayley considered this carefully before answering.

"Hasty-tempered, yes," he said. "But not violent-tempered."

"Was he fairly athletic? Active and quick?"

"Active and quick, yes. Not particularly strong."

"Yes... One question more. Was Mark in the habit of carrying any considerable sum of money about with him?"

"Yes. He always had one £100 note on him, and perhaps ten or twenty pounds in his wall."

"Thank you, Mr. Cayley."

Cayley went back heavily to his seat. "Damn it," said Antony to himself, "why do I like the fellow?"

"Antony Gillingham."

Again the eager interest of the room could be felt. Who was this stranger who had got mixed up in the business so mysteriously?

Antony smiled at Bill and stepped up to give his evidence.

He explained how he came to be staying at the "George" at Woodham, how he had heard that the Red House was in the neighborhood, how he had walked over to see his friend Beverley, and had arrived just after the tragedy. Thinking it over afterward he was fairly certain that he had heard the shot, but it had not made any impression on him at the time.

First India Mail Service Started

Naval Officer's Four Months' Dash 100 Years Ago Recalled

London.—The starting of the Air Mail service to India recalls that, exactly a hundred years ago, the first overland trip was undertaken by Lieut. Thomas Waghorn, R.N., which resulted in the establishment of the overland route to India as used today.

Although Lieut. Waghorn carried through successfully the first journey from London to Bombay and back, he received no aid or recognition from the Government or the East India Company, for he ran the service for 15 years as a private enterprise.

Waghorn, after leaving the Navy, enrolled himself in the service of the East India Company as a "Hooghly" pilot. He took part in the first Burmese war. During these campaigns he had his first experience of steamships, and when peace was signed he turned his attention to the question of steam navigation.

RED SEA ROUTE.

A short experience convinced him that, by the use of steamers, the Red Sea route could be made the fastest practical route for mails between England and India.

Five to six months had been the average time of transit previously.

In order to prove his theory that the Suez route was the quickest, Waghorn was appointed in October, 1829, by Lord Ellenborough as official messenger to convey dispatches from the court of directors of the East India Company to Sir John Malcolm, Governor of Bombay.

He left the Eagle Tavern in Gracechurch-street on October 28. He took carriage from Dunkirk across the Continent through five kingdoms to Trieste, which he reached in six and a half days.

Thence he took boat to Alexandria, and from there he reached Rosetta on donkeyback.

Waghorn travelled to Cairo by boat, and from there on camels to Suez, where he engaged an Arab dhow which took him to Kosseer, and across the Red Sea to Jeddah, a journey of 649 miles without compasses on an uncharted sea, and with a mutinous Arab crew. He reached Jeddah after only six and a half days' sailing.

VICTIM OF FEVER.

Fever laid him low, and for six weeks he was in bed, when the ship, Thetis, of the East India Company, entered the roads and took him on

Lake Nemi May Yield Relics Older Than Galleys of Caligula

TEMPLE OF INDIA

Area Has Already Given Up Bushels of Votive Offerings

Rome—For more than 500 years the secrets of Lake Nemi have stirred the curiosity of artists, historians, archaeologists, treasure hunters, tourists and pilgrims. Since Signor Mussolini gave permission to a group of private firms to drain it, interest has spread to the general public of Europe and the United States. Some are anxious to see what those two ships which are known to have been on the lake 1,000 years ago were really like; for vague memories of poetic descriptions of Cleopatra's " appeal to their imagination.

Archaeologists go further; they also hope to find important remains of sumptuous Roman villas embedded in the mud of the placid lake, and of the Temple where Diana Nemsorensis was worshipped and propitiated when Rome was young. Centuries before Caligula's galleys floated on "Diana's Mirror."

May Hold Treasurers

Though laden pipes with Emperor Sikkula's name on them, and this with that of Tiberius, have been found on or near the hulks during former attempts to raise them, experts are not agreed as to whether the vessels really belonged to the emperor or were merely floating pavilions belonging to the Temple of Diana. Such remains of marble and mosaic decorations as are now in Roman museums are carried out in red, green and white, the symbolic colors of the goddess. Red meant the infernal fires, while the paler of the moon goddess, Luna; green stood for the wooded slopes of Nemi's banks. Oddly enough, they are Italy's flag colors today.

Tradition and old legends have endeavored the idea of great wealth on board both ships. Unfortunately nobody has told a posterity when or how they were sunk. One legend is that Caligula, with all the authority of a Roman despot, had them sunk with his guests on board to crown a perfect day with a remarkable sight.

Efforts to save the ships and secure the real or imaginary treasures have been made several times since. Cardinal Calzona made an attempt to get an supposed treasure chest in the fifteenth century. But the brought sailors from Genoa—both either act on airtight beams or failed to budge the chest, bows of the smaller ship an up-in despair. A century and only the inhabitants of boring towns. Nemi and visited the wrecks, taking they could find for themselves, keeping up the tradition widely.

The second attempt was made by engineers from Milan. They ed the hull of the smaller of pieces of timber and the task when a cable broke weather set in. The lake v ed to keep its secrets then when Annesio Fusconi went found some tiles with the name on them, many copies pieces of mosaic, lead pigments and so forth, but no chest. The most valuable bronze and decoration went Vatican museum, where they and into the courtyard of a looking to Prince Torlonia.

In 1855 Princess Julia Cra owned the lake, allowed Signor Paul Edmunds, in "Peacocks and Pagodas."

Temple of Diana

The Fascist government seems to have doubts about the results of the present experiment and has not encouraged the plan for draining the lake. Much will depend upon what is found on and near the smaller hulk. If it yields fine works of art, Mussolini may allow further operation.

Of even greater interest than the discoveries about Caligula's galley may be those connected with the Temple of Diana, whose remains, partly uncovered in 1885, lie on the northwest shore of the lake, immediately above the galleys.

Nemi is about three miles in circumference and the forest-grown walls of the old crater in which it lies slope upward from the edge of the lake on three sides. In the north there is a level space like the arena of a amphitheatre. When Caligula began his brief and bloody reign 37 years after the crucifixion, this circumscribed theatre already had a sophisticated, even decadent, worship.

In its rites a dramatic homicide had occurred time after time for centuries—the murder of the reigning "King of the Wood," Rex Nemorensis, and the succession of his murderer.

Diana Nemorensis had a curious assortment of divine duties. She was a goddess of fertility, both plant and animal, of childbirth, of hunters and of criminals. Among the many statues which are found over this space, those of Diana always show the virgin goddess in hunting costume. She is clothed in a short tunic and high boots, with quiver and bow or with a bound. Archeological evidences are that the slopes of the hills were held in by retaining walls on the north and west of Diana's shrine, whose principal platform was a series of triangular buttresses 200 yards or more in length and 30 feet high, with Doric columns. The whole structure covered 10 acres.

The edge of this temple is now 100 yards from the edge of the lake, but it is supposed that the waters of the lake formerly came up to it. The area has yielded bushels of votive offerings, lamps, statuettes and tiles.

Burmese Color

A Burmese crowd at a festival is a delightful sight, and as different from, for example, an English crowd on Cup-tic day as light from darkness. . . To see the happy Burman sporting his holiday "pasoh" of ruby silk, his headkerchief of orange (which somehow never seems to clash) and his brightly colored paper umbrella, is to wish for a return of the good old times when we men, as well as women, were not afraid to go abroad in all the bravery of color. . . During my first day or so in Rangoon I was thoroughly absorbed in everything I saw—the movement, life and color, the variety of races, the queer tumble-down shops over-flowing on to the littered pavement, the coolies tugging at freight-carts, the half-naked, laughing children, the bullocks, the lop-eared goats, the elephants (for I saw elephants on my first day), all the riotous and kaleidoscopic confusion of the East epitomised in the small streets and byways of the Burmese capital. . . The whole kit of the high-class Burmese lady is delightful, and it is simplicity itself; just a close-fitting bodice of white with a short jacket of fine white linen over it, and a "lungyi," or skirt, of some bright-colored silk reaching to the feet and fastened merely by being tucked in at the waist, just as one tucks in a bath towel. Embroidered sandals on the bare feet complete the costume, though a fine scarf of gauze silk is sometimes added. In this simple attire the Burmese lady can challenge comparison with any European woman, however well turned out, and she has the additional advantage of being able to wear any amount of jewelry without appearing vulgar or overdressed. One can't explain why, but it is so.

The man's costume is practically the same as the woman's with the exception of the "gaung-baung," or head scarf; but he fastens his "lungyi" with a bunch in front instead of smoothly at the side as is the woman's way. Also on special occasions he wears, instead of a "lungyi," a "pasoh," which is a similar garment,

Aerial Photos Show Old Sites

Aviator, on Routine Flight Over Eastern Desert, Accidentally Photographs Remains of Hatra

London.—Archeological research workers have recently found a new method of infinite value in aerial photography. Some time ago O. G. S. Crawford, editor of "Antiquity," made a tour of the Royal Air Force stations in the Middle East and returned with a collection of aerial pictures now on exhibition in London. These had not been taken with any thought of their archeological value, but were made in the routine patrol flights of the aviators who guard the frontiers of Mesopotamia.

The sites of deserted cities caught the attention when viewed from the air and therefore were snapped as landmarks likely to be useful for mapping purposes.

Thus, quite accidentally, a great deal of valuable information regarding ancient cities, which crumbled away 2,000 years and more ago and now lie almost buried in the desert sands, has come to light. For the camera, when operated from the air, reveals much that is lost to the eye looking at the same object from the ground.

These photographs lay bare the skeletons of the cities, providing in fact pans showing the arrangements of the streets and the layouts of the not large buildings and public spaces. Such pictures are of value to archaeologists who wish to excavate, for they show at just which spots their work may be concentrated most usefully.

Among Mr. Crawford's collection is a series of pictures of Hatra, a "ghost" city some seventy miles from Mosul. Approaching Hatra by air, no sign of life is to be seen for many miles. Then, suddenly, Mr. Crawford says, the city appears, far-spreading and unmistakable in the midst of the bleak desert.

A German archeologist once made a map of this place after infinite labor, but the photographs, taken in a few minutes, show the plan of the city in far more detail and at some points with more clarity. Pictures taken at closer range even show the layouts of individual houses, many of them only one-room affairs.

Another photograph showed Erbil, the oldest inhabited city in the world, and the scene of Alexander the Great's battle. It stands high above the surrounding country, raised on a great mound which, according to Mr. Crawford, "represents centuries of municipal dirt."

It is not only in the Middle East that aerial photography has added to our knowledge of times long ago. Mr. Crawford himself has carried out an air survey of some of the southwestern counties of England which revealed a number of prehistoric works under the bare grass of the Downs.

On one occasion a photograph of what appeared from the ground to be an ordinary ploughed field revealed faint but perfectly clear lines which on investigation proved to be the remains of a stone-age settlement.

In another part of the country the aerial camera has played a great part in the excavations of a Roman camp where a number of discoveries have recently been made.

Irish Judge (to litigant in witness-box): "Look here, sir, tell me no more unnecessary lies. Such lies as your attorney advises you are necessary for the presentation of your fraudulent case I will listen to, but if you tell me another unnecessary lie, I'll put you in the dock."

British Settlers

London Times (Ind.) The State Governments throughout Australia tend, at least in times of Labor administration, to be lukewarm towards schemes of immigrations as attempts to force a pace which will depress the standard of life. Yet Western Australia, which suffers like the rest of the country from having too high a proportion of its citizens in one town, has gone to great expense in the last few years in its bold attempt to find a new method of settlement which would enable whole families to be settled near together on virgin land. The Group Settlement Scheme has been found in ten years to be too expensive for the resources of the State, but the experience, though costly, is still an asset of great value. If the last ten years have not yielded the results hoped for there is plenty to put to the credit side of the ledger. Access to the lands to the South-West has been opened up under the impetus of a large State scheme, and the wonderful initiative of the Kingsley Fairbridge Farm Schools have shown how English children drawn from the poorest quarters to our great cities, may be converted betimes into healthy young Australians.

Six months ago it would have been unthinkable that Queen Mary could have so willingly agreed to the relaxation of the discipline in the royal household as she has done. It is probably true to say that life to King George and Queen Mary will never again mean to either quite what it meant before the King's illness. Should the King regain complete good health life to both will signify something more than it has done hitherto, something that will bring the business of being a king into closer relationship with the ordinary business of living.

Illness Changes King's Outlook On Royal Role

Monarch Now Understands Prince's Dislike for Endless Formality at Court

London.—The psychological effects on King George of his illness are remarkable. They are as distinctly evident as the physical consequences. The King's outlook on life in his position as a monarch has undergone a decided change.

What the change is may be best expressed by the words which he is said to have uttered to one of his nurses: "You have learned, Betsy, as I have, that a king is, after all, just a very ordinary kind of man, but one who has to live in a very extraordinary kind of way that sometimes seems to have so little sense in it."

This is more or less the frequent theme of the sovereign's conversation with his nurses and doctors, who understand him better than any one else, for they have seen him through a long illness and through suffering that could be relieved only by opiates.

Catches Attitude of the Prince

It is not to be wondered at that, after all King George has been through, the artificialities inseparable from his way of life have become clearer to him than they were before his illness. When he went to the sea wall at Craigwell to see the crowd below, which had been allowed by his direction to gather on the shore, he said to one of his staff: "It is good to see real human beings again. I could wish I were one of them."

Now the monarch is able to sympathize with and understand the dislike of the Prince of Wales for ceremony and the endless formality of life at court.

What lasting effect, if any, the King's changed outlook on life, or rather, his own way of life, will have, remains to be seen. Its immediate effect, however, has been to give the servant staff at Buckingham Palace, Windsor Castle and Sandringham the full benefit of an absent court, which hitherto has meant for the royal servants a period of "disciplined idleness."

Servant Discipline Relaxed

At King George's request the disciplinary rules at all the royal residences have been relaxed and the servants, more especially those at Buckingham Palace, have been having quite a good time of it recently entertaining their friends in the servants' hall at dances, concerts and supper parties.

That Queen Mary herself should quite cheerfully agree to the suspension of the ordinary rules which have prevailed at the royal residences in the absence of the court, and which forbade the servants to hold any kind of entertainment, is evidence that her husband's illness has had its effect also on her.

Six months ago it would have been unthinkable that Queen Mary could have so willingly agreed to the relaxation of the discipline in the royal household as she has done.

It is probably true to say that life to King George and Queen Mary will never again mean to either quite what it meant before the King's illness. Should the King regain complete good health life to both will signify something more than it has done hitherto, something that will bring the business of being a king into closer relationship with the ordinary business of living.

Bank Rate and Trade

London Evening Standard - (Ind. Cons.): If the gold standard must be managed, let it be managed solely in the interests of our own trade. So far our central bank policy has followed the initiative of America and has humbly adopted what suits the Federal Reserve authorities. Thus we have now a bank rate of 5 1/2 per cent, and our trade has had no cheap money since 1923. It is time for the Bank of England to tell the world that it is no one's servant and to try the experiment of giving our trade money at a cheap rate, no matter what America may say. If, at the same time, steps are taken by both the Bank and the Government to stimulate home industry, courage will pay.

GERMANY'S POPULATION IS GROWING

Germany's population keeps increasing rapidly, and seems to have no argument about the increase being of the right type. Frau Alfred Voellner of Demmin, a young woman, helps the growth of the nation considerably. Twenty-eight years old, she has eighteen children, all under nine years of age. She had a boy in 1920, a girl in 1922, and four sets of quadruplets in 1923, 1925, 1927 and 1929, sixteen children in four births. All are alive, ten boys and eight girls.

Jones was at a dinner party. He was shy and nervous, and could never summon up courage to speak because of his inability to say anything neat. "What a small appetite you have, Mr. Jones," said his hostess with a smile. "To sit next you," he replied glibly, "would cause any man to lose his appetite."

It is noted that some townships have to double their tax rate to pay for damage done by April floods. Apparently, in this bridge game, the rivers dealt the municipality a grand slam.

WIT AND HUMOR

Young lady in the west takes passengers in her plane. Men can feel quite safe, as it would not be the first time a lady had brought a man down to earth.

Misleading Fires
Eyes are the index to the mind. Say sages with delight; But truly, I am sure they err. For my girl's eyes are bright.

Two flies, after coming out of their winter quarters, met in conversation. One fly asked the other, "Where did you spend the winter?" He replied, "In a kitchen clock. The question was then asked him, 'How did you like it?' He said, 'Not very well, there.'" The other fly then asked his friend, "Where did you spend the winter?" He said, "In a Scotchman's pocket-book." He said to him, "How did you like it?" The answer he gave was, "Not very well—there wasn't air enough to breathe in there."

Reading over the replies to his advertisement for an organist the clergyman came across this: "Dear Sir—Noticing you have a vacancy for an organist and choir-master, either lady or gentleman, having been both for several years, I beg to apply for the position."

The Perfect Spouse
"I hear you are going to California with your husband, Jane," said Mrs. Jones to her maid, who was leaving to get married. "Aren't you nervous about the long voyage?" "Well, mum," was Jane's reply, "that's his lookout. I belong to him now and if anything happens to me, it'll be his loss, not mine."

Experienced
"Did you give the man the third degree?" asked the police officer. "Yes, we browbeat and badgered him with every question we could think of."
"What did he do?"
"He dozed off and merely said now and then, 'Yes, my dear, you are perfectly right.'"

Not in Her Contract
"Jump, lady, jump!" shouted the firemen holding the life-net to the movie star, who stood at the sixth story window with the flames raging behind her.
"I'll do nothing of the sort," she shouted back. "Tell the director to send my double here this instant."

JURY TRIAL CHOSEN

Listowel, Ont.—Mr. and Mrs. Arthur J. Wilson and Wallace L. Hamilton here Saturday charged with failing to provide proper care and attention for Alma Oliver Wilson, and that her death was caused by such omission. The charge was laid by Provincial Police Officer R. J. Beatty waived all jury at the General Sessions of the Peace for the County of Perth, which will be held at Stratford on June 11.

The verdict of the jury at the inquest on April 19th, which stated that the little girl's death had been caused by "inadvertent neglect and lack of medical attention" led to the charge being made. Crown Attorney G. G. McPherson of Stratford appeared for the Crown, and H. B. Morphy appeared for Mr. and Mrs. Wilson. Bail of $4000 each was accepted. From Mr. Wilson, Mrs. Wilson, A. K. Delane and James Salter, for $2000 each.

As on the day of the inquest McDonald's Hall was packed to the doors, mostly by residents of Wallace Township.

BAD DRIVERS MUST PAY

Recently we have heard a good deal about the increased rates in automobile insurance, the public generally condemning it as a hold-up and the insurance companies defending the increase on the ground that they were losing money. One insurance firm made it quite plain that they did not care whether the government of Ontario approved of the increase or not. If they did, all well and good, but if they did not the company would simply get out of the auto insurance field as they had lost money in it so far.

According to reports the insurance companies are adopting another plan that seems quite reasonable. Drivers are to be placed on a merit basis, which provides for ten per cent credit under certain qualifications. The driver must take an affidavit that his license has never been suspended, that his brakes are kept in order and that he has not been in an accident or has no conviction with speeding. This would seem to mean that in the course of the next three or four years, if the scheme proves workable, each driver will be accepted on his past record. If he has had no trouble he will be classed as such. If he has been a casualty collector and a consistent liability he will be classed as undesirable from an insurance standpoint and his rates raised accordingly. This might be a good thing for the drivers themselves. They will know that they must be careful drivers or else pay for their recklessness as no insurance company wants them on their list of policy holders.

CROP REPORT

Below will be found a brief synopsis of telegraphic reports received at the Head Office of the Bank of Montreal from its Branches.

General—Seeding is well advanced in the Prairie Provinces and is proceeding satisfactorily under favorable weather conditions, the seed-bed is in good condition, and there is sufficient moisture for germination although the reserve is low and rain would be beneficial. Growth has been retarded by cold backward weather, but early sown wheat is showing through the ground. The acreage will be about the same as last year. In Quebec little seed is being sown, but seeding operations are a least a fortnight later than the average in Ontario. In the Maritime Provinces the winter was moderate, but conditions are backward owing to a cold spring. In British Columbia spring is from three to four weeks late, but crop prospects are generally favourable.

Prairie Provinces—Alberta Western Area—Wheat seeding is well advanced, with about 50 per cent. seeded. The sugar beet acreage will probably be 9000 acres as compared with 7,000 last year. About 80 per cent has been planted, as compared with 60 per cent at this time last year. Alberta Northeastern Area—Wheat seeding is about 50 per cent. completed, and is well ahead of last year. Alberta Southeastern Area—40 per cent of the seeding has been done under favourable weather conditions. Saskatchewan Northern Area—In most sections where seeding is well advanced, with weather satisfactory, although some localities are backward. Saskatchewan Southern Area—Under favourable conditions good progress has been made, with wheat seeding from 50 to 100 per cent completed. Some headway has been made with seeding other grains. Manitoba—More than the usual fall ploughing was done, and soil is in good condition. Wheat seeding is 80 to 90 per cent completed. Owing to cold weather germination has been slow. There is ample moisture for the present. Seeding of coarse grain is under way.

Province of Ontario—Some work has been done on high light land but low lying land is still too wet to be worked. Reports indicate that fall wheat has wintered well, especially on lighter well-drained land, but is spotty on some low wet ground and in need of warmer weather. Several thousand acres of good land bordering on Lake Erie are now flooded and will be under water until too late for seeding. Hay is of unusual growth for this time of the year. Clover and alfalfa fields wintered well and conditions are promising. Tobacco has been sown in green houses and plants are now showing through. There will be a 50 per cent reduction in acreage of burley and black tobacco this year. Fruit wintered in good condition.

If your girl thinks you are not the only pebble on the beach, try being a little boulder.

Some people never get too old to learn and some others never get old enough to learn anything.

You can get a lot of fun out of folks who take themselves seriously. Making up for lost time doesn't restore it.

Charles Tanner, of Elmwood, in Brant Township, was seen using his auto with a harrow hooked behind it, harrowing a field in quick order. This is a red hot tip for farmers in this section as to the method to use in speeding up the spring operations on the land.

A page advertisement in the Woodstock Sentinel-Review of twenty-five years ago contains illustrations of motor cars resembling either a baby carriage or a top buggy, and the "ad" boasts that they are "a continual surprise to the owner." That was undoubtedly "truth in advertising."

Fire which broke out in the chicken house of Mr. Fred Thompson on Sunday evening last destroyed twenty chickens. The fire had gained quite a start and it was with some difficulty that, with the assistance of neighbors he was able to keep it under control and thus save the barn.—Teeswater News.

A Year of Catastrophes

It was predicted last year that 1929 would be a year of catastrophes and tragedies, and this prediction is not far wrong, for on every hand we see death and destruction. Car accidents, airplane accidents, train wrecks, explosions, floods, suicides, murders, all are appalling, and the end of the year is still young.

A Wet April

There were nine thunderstorms in the first eight days of April. During the past three quarters of a century the average rainfall for April has been 2.15 inches. In the first half of last month we had 4.9 inches. In the first half of last month we had back. It is no wonder, therefore, that such excessive moisture is so evident.

A SEVERE PENALTY

Occasionally it happens that someone gets mail from the post office longed to someone else which has inadvertently been put into the wrong box. In a bulletin issued by the Post Office Department, passing along information and announcement, we note that a man at Holland Landing, Ont., was sentenced to sixty days imprisonment for wilfully keeping a post letter which was not his property. In future, if you should get a letter in your mail to which you are not entitled, see that it is returned to the post office at once.

Ontario's gasoline tax will be removed just as soon as the province's finances are in a more "buoyant condition," Hon. George S. Henry, minister of Highways, announced to the Ottawa Board of Trade.

Shortly before noon last Friday, Perry Anderson, an employee of the Coombe Furniture Factory at Kincardine, was the victim of a serious accident. He was operating a shaper when the two knives, which cut out the material being fed into it, flew off the machine. One crashed into the wall and the other struck Mr. Anderson in the left side toward his chest. He was rushed to the hospital where an operation was performed to remove the blade. It was a very narrow escape for him.

BLAZING BRANDS CARRIED ON THE WIND

A FIRE nearby—a strong wind driving the flames to renewed fury—suddenly, a blazing brand hurled on your roof! How many families have been made homeless through this vicious combination! How many lost their clothes, their furnishings—even their lives!

To remove this hazard once and for all, progressive home owners are now insisting on fire-safe roofs. That is why so many use Brantford Asphalt Slates—because sparks and embers cannot ignite them. Flaming brands die out harmlessly on their slate-coated surface.

This security is vital to your peace of mind—yet you get it at little extra cost when you select Brantford Asphalt Slates. You also get permanence, rich and varied colour harmonies and freedom from roofing trouble.

In most communities the reduced insurance on buildings roofed with Brantford Asphalt Slates is itself a convincing reason for using these handsome, heavy shingles. Inspect them at your dealer's, and write for our booklet "Beauty With Fire Protection"—an authoritative treatise on the proper type, design, finish and colour for your roof.

Sunday School Lesson

May 19. Lesson VII—Jeremiah Calls to Obedience—Jeremiah 7: 1-11; 21-23. Golden Text—Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people. Jeremiah 7: 23.

ANALYSIS.

I. INTRODUCTION AND WARNING, vs. 1-6.
 II. PROTEST AGAINST IDOLATRY, vs. 7-14.
 III. WARNING AGAINST IDOLATRY, vs. 15-26.

INTRODUCTION.—The prophet Jeremiah, delivered in the gate of the Lord's house, is one of the most notable and impressive of all his speeches. It is probably the same as that mentioned in Ch. 26, for which he was accused and tried before the council of the princes. In his earlier addresses he had protested chiefly against the idolatrous worship which he saw practiced everywhere, even in and about the temple itself, and which he regarded as dishonouring to Jehovah. See chs. 2 and 3. Now he declares against the social evils which are destroying all that is best in the nation's life. It was not enough that they should turn from their idols and serve Jehovah only, nor that they should abandon the corrupt local sanctuaries, and centre all worship in the temple at Jerusalem. Trust in the temple and in the forms of worship, however correct and proper those forms might be, was all in vain. Only righteousness could save the people from the terrible evils which were threatening them. In this moral emphasis Jeremiah shows himself closely akin to the great prophets of the past, from Samuel to Isaiah. See 1 Sam. 15: 22; Amos 5: 21-25; Isa. 1: 10-20; Hos. 6: 6; Micah 6: 6-8; s. 40: 6-8; 51: 16, 17.

EXHORTATION AND WARNING, vs. 1-15.
 V. 2. The gate is, no doubt, the court (28: 2), that is the inner court which surrounded the temple and which in those days was accessible to all, and was the place of popular assembly, 1 Kings 6: 36.

Jeremiah had already warned the people of Judah, and Jerusalem of the coming of a terrible enemy who would lay waste and destroy their land and carry them into captivity. 1: 11-14; 5: 15-17, 19. He had exhorted them to repentance that the anger of the Lord might be turned from them, and that they might be saved. 3: 12, 13; 4: 1-4. Now he pleads with them again, "Amend your ways and your doings." It is only in such amendment that deliverance and safety lies—not in pointing to the temple and false confidence in its protection. Those who would prosper, whom that Jehovah will surely take care of his temple, and so of his temple worship, and speak living words. He declares that Jehovah will abandon his temple and give it over to destruction, as he did his sanctuary at Shiloh in a time long past, if there is no repentance and turning from their evil ways, vs. 12-14. For the story of Shiloh see Josh. 18: 1; 19: 51; 21: 1, 2; 22: 12; Judges 18: 31; Sam. 1: 1-4, 22.

Justice, and not oppression. Jehovah requires, as well as turning away from other gods, that men should be just, and not oppress, and that they should not steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and serve Baal and other gods formerly unknown, please God or offer him acceptable worship? Will the temple deliver them that they may continue to do all these abominations? They are making the house of God a den of robbers, v. 11. Compare Matt. 21: 13. Jehovah had warned them repeatedly, and earnestly by his prophets, but they had been heedless of his warning, v. 13. The fate that had befallen Shiloh will be the fate of their temple, and the doom of the kingdom and people of Israel will be the doom of Judah.

PROTEST AGAINST IDOLATRY, vs. 16-20.
 The words "pray not" (v. 16) cannot be understood as forbidding the prophet to intercede for this erring and foolish people. As a matter of fact he did continue to pray for them (see 14: 7-9, 19-22; and compare 11: 14 and 14: 11-12). Rather is this an emphatic way of saying that their unrepented sin is past forgiveness, that their evil stubbornness has made forgiveness impossible, and prayer on their behalf useless. But if they would repent and amend their ways, how different it would all be! Then they would know the Lord's abounding mercy.

The false worship referred to in vs. 17, 18 was that of Ashtoreth, or Astarte, the Babylonian Ishtar, the queen of heaven. Her visible symbol was the planet Venus (compare 1 Kings 11: 5). Her worship was still persisted in by Jews who fled to Egypt after the fall of Jerusalem, taking Jeremiah with them (44: 15-28). This perverse folly brings its inevitable punishment upon themselves to the confusion of their own faces.

III. WHAT GOD REQUIRES, vs. 21-26.
 The words of v. 21 are filled with scorn for the empty and insincere worship with which they seek to approach God. The law required that burnt-offerings should be all burnt upon the altar, Lev. 1: 3-9. The peace-offerings were partly burnt upon the altar and partly served up as material for a feast to be eaten by the offerer and his family, or friends, Lev. 7: 11-15. The prophet ironically calls upon these vain worshippers to eat the burnt-offerings themselves. It will make no difference. These empty formalities of religion are not what God requires. It is difficult, perhaps impossible, to understand the statement of v. 22 if we believe that the entire Levitical law was laid down by Moses as the command of God. For that law prescribes minutely and strictly the ritual of burnt-offerings and sacrifices. Compare with Jeremiah's statement the passages quoted above (in the introduction). The probability, amounting almost to a certainty, is that large additions were made in the Pentateuch to the original laws of Moses by the laws of later ages, and that among them were those laws governing the offerings to be made upon the altar of sacrifice.

The Lord's supreme requirement is obedience. "Behold," said Samuel, "to obey is better than sacrifice." For he says by the prophet Hosea, "I desired mercy and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings." Hos. 6: 6.

Trade With Russia

London Daily News and Westminster (Lib.): The British Trade Delegation to Russia emphasizes that "a satisfactory basis for trade relations between Great Britain and Russia can be found." Presumably, if the official Russian view stands, a preliminary condition must be the resumption of diplomatic relations. But it is fairly obvious that the British Government which brought about the rupture would not humiliate itself by accepting M. Piatakov's condition. . . . Until the Baldwin Administration goes west trade with Russia on a permanent basis and on a large scale must be begging.

Unemployment

Manchester Guardian (Lib.): In the last few months the country has come to understand that the situation in the mining industry is not only an economic problem but a human tragedy. The scenes at Liverpool and Barmouth should make it plain to the most careless that that distress is not confined to the coalfields. It is national wide. We have become so used to the fact that there are over 1,000,000 men in this country without work that the weekly figures no longer shock us as they used to do. But the problem remains as acute as ever.

"A tall man may stand on tiptoe and still not be able to reach an agreement."

At the annual meeting of the Council board, the chairman called it a curious fact that passengers first class across the Atlantic by any line had not in ten years attained the pre-war level.

SOME CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION LEADERS

Fully cognizant of the part they must play to maintain the record of progress of the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto, August 23rd to September 7th, the gentlemen pictured herewith have gone into their various tasks with characteristic enthusiasm. Agriculture and its allied industries will be strongly emphasized, as usual, and "Empire Year" unquestionably will surpass all its predecessors. The two weeks' program, quite aside from its agricultural phases, will be one of deep and diversified interest.

Popular Undies

Spring lingerie has all the verve and gaiety of frocks. The newest models flaunt splashy little print designs in colors as fresh and vivid as spring itself, and the styles are delightfully frivolous. In spite of all this newness, however, this season brings no changes which might be labeled "extreme novelties," and so eliminated by the woman of good taste. Whatever is new in material or design is a contribution either to the artistic or practical aspect of feminine intimate garments, and sometimes to both.

PRINTS SUBDUE BY PLAIN GOODS

In pajama suits and nightgowns this same attention to detail is shown by the restrained way prints are used. To most women, garments made of striking modernistic prints do not appeal except for lounging. For actual wear, women prefer their silken things delicately colored and restful looking. The new pajama suits are, therefore, not as bizarre as those displayed during the winter, and although vivid prints are used, they are tempered by the judicious combination of plain materials. An example of this was seen in one of the newest models from France. The top of the pajama suit was startling—bright yellow and pink wild roses appeared on a deep blue background—but the pajamas themselves were fashioned of plain blue crepe de chine, matching the blue of the top. The print material was used only for the bands, hems and cuffs at the bottom of the sleeves.

Nightgowns and negligees are treated in the same way, by the combination, that is, of plain material with print; while the three-piece pajama suits are often composed of jacket and trousers in one plain material, the dash of color being supplied by the three-quarter length coat of print goods.

GLOVE-SILK.

This spring, glove-silk underwear, also, has appeared in a more attractive guise than ever before. The practicality of this lingerie is well known and now it may be had in models which are artistic enough to please women who require beneath their fluttering chiffons and laces, dainty, fully undergarments. The favorite thing, one-piece styles remain, of course, the favorites of the sportswoman, the business girl and of anyone, in fact, who has to think first of all about the practicality of clothes.

While selecting her spring and summer lingerie, the woman of average means will find it particularly easy this season to buy exactly what she wants for each occasion. Between each type of undergarment there are definite lines of demarcation, and the sharpest division lies in that between sports and dress underwear.

The younger girl evinces a preference for the one-piece glove-silk suit combining the brassiere top with the bloomer bottom. This model is also made of crepe de chine, trimmed with fine lace and tiny roses, for the pretty frock of crisp tulle.

Other varieties of the one-piece suit show the yoke fitted in a V to the shorts or attached in curving lines. Both of these styles have the flat contour so desired, and, additionally, reveal the entire absence of elastic, for even the knicker bottoms have cuffs.

Another thing observed about these combinations is that they are showing the new type of shoulder strap, which is a tiny, hand-rolled seam, one-fourth as wide as the strap of other seasons. These were formerly seen only in fine handmade French lingerie. The built-up shoulder strap in certain models is attached to a knicker and petticoat bottom so no other lingerie is necessary. These are evidently made to appeal to the younger set for tennis and other active sports with knicker tops.

All these undies are definitely practical, but of the other extreme, they are intended for dress occasions is primarily

In the Australian Bush

We reached Hollymount, the homestead on the cattle station, by moonlight, and made a camp beneath a tall blue-gum, the wind-stirred leaves of which seemed to whisper a friendly greeting. The rustling of the trees and the crackling of the sticks as they burned with bright red flames which licked the smoke-blackened billy stirred me deeply. The faint, clean, penetrating smell of the scorching eucalyptus leaves awakened memories of early years when as a boy I roamed the paddocks on a sheep station. I realized then that in spite of all attractions and pleasures experienced in other lands there is that about the Australian bush which calls one home.

The country was, at the time of my visit, in the grip of drought. The tall gum-trees and the dry red dust beneath them called for moisture, but moving above were the leaves still bravely green. The roots of the trees are deep down, and with a firm, tight hold they live on and defy the drought conditions. When I see the stout-hearted settler holding grimly on while the grass gets dry and withers, and the stock get thin, I cannot help but think that he must gain some courage and sympathy from these green-leaved trees.

After the seasonal rains there came a transformation of the country that was startling in its rapidity. . . . Flocks shot forth and flowers formed and bloomed with such rapidity that it looked as if the whole of nature were running a race with time. Following the bursting of the blossoms came the hatching of grubby caterpillars and soon thousands of brilliant butterflies, intoxicated with the subtle scent of flowers, flitted in the sunbeams that peeped through the loose-leaved foliage. . . .

Every knock one man gives another is intended for a boost to himself.

Mr. Lloyd George's panacea for unemployment is no cure at all. Even his henchman, Sir Herbert Samuel, agrees with Mr. Runciman that a permanent cure for unemployment can only be found in a revival of trade. How Mr. Lloyd George's scheme is going to revive trade passes the comprehension of anyone who gives a moment's thought to the subject, and 10,000 windy orations will not convince a single shrewd worker that the way to end a period of difficulty is to go in for unlimited borrowing.

aesthetic. It is flowerlike in its loveliness, for the delicate colors such as lilac-green, peach, coral and rosebud pink are enhanced by quantities of filmy lace. Several materials are combined in sets of chemises, slips and nightgowns and in many combinations the two favorite materials, satin and georgette, appear together and also crepe de chine and georgette.

The sets which appeal most to women, according to a buyer of a smart apparel shop, are those which are profusely trimmed with ruffles, lace, Bandeaux, also, are seen which appear to be nothing but frivolous wisps of net and roses, but which are saved from needlessness by their thoughtful forethoughts. From each leading manufacturer models come in a variety of styles, among which are the straight type of bandeaux, the long form brassiere, and the uplift bandeau, the last of which achieves a lifted effect by the inner packets of net. Other brassieres are made to model the upper part of the figure into the lifted bust and nipped-in waist of the Princess mode. The materials of which these brassieres are fashioned range from net, satin and crepe de chine, down through the less dainty materials to the really heavy ones.

All lingerie sets simulate the simple, athletic underwear in that they follow the contours of the figure. In spite of the elaboration of lace and the new flaring skirt of panties and chemises, the hip-line is snug-fitting and absolute flatness is achieved by relegating the fullness of the garment to the sides. A French set of white georgette and satin illustrates how a model may be intricate without being bulky. The yoke across the front of the pantie is made of white satin, perfectly flat. The flared, scalloped tiers of georgette are set in below the yoke on either side.

NOVELTIES.

Other novelties in spring lingerie are the various slips with U and V-shaped backs. These, no doubt, will fare into prominence for everyday wear. This summer slace sports and evening dresses will display both necks.

A new development also is the featuring of foundation garments of the soft type which appear nothing more than tailored crepe de chine lingerie. The restraining features are effectually concealed. Some of these garments combine a brassiere with a bloomer or pantie, and a light girdle. Others, fashioned like the athletic, one-piece suit, have light boning across the diaphragm.

NEW ELEGANCE.

A simple dress of printed silk crepe for the youthfully smart woman, in combination with plain silk crepe with swathe girdle and flaring godet, caught at waistline with ornament of brilliants. The shoulder bow, with long loose end at back, adds individual smartness. Experience isn't at all necessary to make it, for it is merely a two-piece skirt attached to two-piece waist with tucks at each shoulder at front. The godet, a separate piece of material, shaped to give dipping flared effect, is shirred at top and stitched to dress. It is irresistible in new shade of red dull flat silk crepe, prune shade sheer velvet, black crepe satin, claret-red canton-faille crepe or navy blue wool crepe. Style No. 303 can be had in sizes 16, 18, 20 years, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure, for the 36-inch size, 2 1/4 yards of 40-inch material with 1 1/4 yards of 40-inch contrasting is sufficient to make it, as pictured, or 3 3/4 yards of one material. "A HOUSEHOLD NAME IN 34 COUNTRIES"

Left-Handedness

It appears quite clearly from statistics published by Herbert D. Chamberlain, of Ohio State University, in "The Journal of Heredity" (Washington) that left-handedness is inherited.

"From families in which one or both of the parents are left-handed we get a percentage of 17.34 per cent. of the children left-handed, while in families in which neither of the parents are left-handed only 2.1 per cent. of the children are left-handed. If left-handedness is not inherited we would not find over 5 per cent. of the children left-handed in any of these families, regardless of the handedness of their parents. It is very evident that there is some sex influence manifested in the inheritance of left-handedness as shown by the larger number of left-handed boys in this population. It is also apparently transmitted differently where the father is left-handed, as noted the small number of left-handed girls in these families. There can be no doubt that the trait is inherited."

Siemens presents twenty-one cases of apparent identical twins in which one was left-handed and the other right-handed, and cites this as evidence that left-handedness is not a hereditary factor. The probable explanation of this is mirror imaging, so often found in identical twins, or it may possibly be the parental position of the right-handed twin, which would prevent it from developing into a left-handed one.

Publicity

G.G. in the Nation and Athenaeum (London). The trade of a publicity agent is apparently a lucrative one. The trained eye can detect in the columns of newspapers and magazines much that is apparently news but is really advertisement. The late C. E. Montague recorded that during the War many things that would have been regarded as "unsporting" at the beginning became the regular practice later on. A similar deterioration seems to have taken place in this matter of self-advertisement. Much that would have been regarded as gross and ungentlemanly by fathers seems to have become the common usage of to-day.

As England Sees Passing of Foch

It Was Given to Him to Save the Allied Cause and He Saved It

GREATEST SOLDIER

"In his own medium he was a genius of the first order. Englishmen of the war generation will never forget the debt they owe to his genius. And in military history his place is definitely assured."—Daily News.

"Marshal Foch is the second figure of the World War. The first is, and always will be, the 'Unknown Soldier.' And perhaps it is the fairest commentary on Foch, as soldier, that he will always remain second to this myriad unknown."—Birmingham Post.

"There can be little doubt that Marshal Foch was the greatest soldier of the war. The theories which he held and preached in time of peace were justified in practice, and all that, as Professor of the Ecole de Guerre, he had urged on the young soldier proved to be the essential doctrine in modern warfare," says the Yorkshire Post, and all the tributes to his memory bear testimony that of the great military figures he stands out pre-eminent.

This admission does not lessen the British regard and appreciation of the late Lord Haig, but when the "unified command" was agreed to, the fact that Foch was made the head of the combined forces gave him first place in his lifetime, and it is not likely to be taken from him by historians now that he is dead. As the Times says: "The inevitable Commander

"It was Foch, the Frenchman, who was the ordained, the inevitable commander. The German breakthrough was the German undoing. It mobilized the trench-imprisoned armies it had gone near to shattering, and it freed trench-ridden minds. Above all, it liberated the aggressive genius of Foch. He was the man for his opportunity. It was given to him so save the Allied cause, and he saved it."

"What soldier could ask a more magnificent epitaph? No soldier of his day had a higher intellectual conception of the conduct of war. His practice, like his teaching, was a model—from the classic mould of the Latin mind—of logic and of fervour. He not only believed in the "impalpables" as the arbiters of war. He embodied them—the will, the self-confidence, the passionate concentration upon mastery of the enemy commander's mind. They were felt throughout his own command. They were felt, as German memoirs have testified, among the enemy."

"The doctrine of the attack at all cost had some crude practitioners and some disastrous illustrations. It was susceptible of modification by mud, barbed wire, concrete, and machine-guns. But there has been in military history no clearer, no more consistent, and, in the end, no more triumphant exponent of the weight of moral factors in battle than the soldier of genius, the simple, chivalrous gentleman whose memory France and England proudly and sadly salute and honor to-day."

"Foch is no more," says the Morning Post. "The greatest Frenchman of this age has passed away—greatest in an age of great men; an age that knew great discoverers, inventors, authors, artists; an age essentially great in itself that saw France rise again from the bitterness of utter defeat. Foch was greatest because most needed in France's dark hour, greatest because he turned darkness into abounding light."

"A soldier all through, he was also a student," comments the Daily Chronicle, "deeply read, continually testing theories, though keenly alive to what no theory can give. One of his greatest qualities was his power to learn from his mistakes."

Error of Offensive at all Costs "At the outset of the War he was up to the neck in the disastrous error of the French High Command—the offensive at all costs and in any situation—which entailed over half France's casualties and nearly lost her the War. Gradually, through the War years, he unlearned it; and so slowly climber to that wonderful equipoise between patience and audacity, which so signally triumphed in 1918."

"Many of the world's great soldiers," points out the Daily Telegraph, "have been blighted by an ambition to play the role of the conqueror. Not so the General who, before his last summer campaign, publicly asked for the prayers of the children of France, and when the victory was won took his triumphs modestly and almost meekly. Ave atque vale. The perfect knight of a noble cause is dead, and the whole world springs to a last salute."

"Crowned with honor, fame, and the respect of the whole world, Ferdinand Foch has passed to his rest," says the Glasgow Herald. "For him, the latest and not the least in greatness of France's departed Marshals, how shall the oration funebre be most worthily framed?"

"His merits and achievements as a General of France and as Commander-in-Chief and leader of the congregated armies of the Allies to victory would seem to call for the breadth and the weight of Miltonic vowels. Or shall a few words of simple eloquence suffice, such as any child in Picardy and Artois can understand? With such the great Commander would himself be most pleased, for he, the 'foremost Captain of his time,' was also

Illness Kept Her From Work

"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was so sick every month that I had to keep my bed for two days and I suffered so that I felt badly all the time. I had been working in a factory but for a long time was not able to work as I was so run-down and nervous. My friends told me of the Vegetable Compound. I am now sound and well and have gone back to work. I have a good appetite, my color is good and I am in good spirits."—Evelyn Bourque, 132 Alma Street, Moncton, New Brunswick.

Dear Mick—O! have lost yer address, and as O! can't find it, will ye send it on to me as soon as possible, if not sooner. O! want to tell ye that poor Uncle Dan died yer suddint after a long and serious illness. He laid for many days quiet and speechless all the time asking for water with a little whiskey. The doctor tells me he died through illness, but, Mickey, me bhoy, between ourselves, stoppage of the heart was the cause of his death. He was eighty-five years of age last March, all but fifteen months, and had he lived till now he would have been dead a fortnight. O! would beg of ye not to break the seal of this letter until two or three days after ye have read it, by which time ye will be more prepared for the sorrowful news.—With love, from Pat.

Reduce the Acid

Sick stomachs, sour stomachs and indigestion usually mean excess acid. The stomach nerves are over-stimulated. Too much acid makes the stomach and intestines sour.

Alkali kills acid instantly. The best form is Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, because one harmless, tasteless dose neutralizes many times its volume in acid. Since its invention, 50 years ago, it has remained the standard with physicians everywhere.

Take a spoonful in water and your unhappy condition will probably end in five minutes. Then you will always know what to do. Crude and harmful methods will never appeal to you. Go prove this for your own sake. It may save a great many disagreeable hours.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. Each bottle contains full directions—any drugstore.

The invisible difference

Many motor oils look alike, but there is a vast difference in the way they perform. Unfortunately this difference is difficult to detect.

The invisible difference which makes one motor oil better than another must be inherent in the crude from which it is made.

There you have the reason why Marvelube gives better engine lubrication than oils refined from ordinary crudes. Imperial Oil searched the world over for a better crude—and in South America they found it. From it they make Marvelube—a pure, carbon-free, full-bodied oil that resists the extreme heats and pressures of modern engine operation.

Aircraft operators prefer Marvelube because better lubrication means greater safety and longer intervals between overhauls. Motorists prefer Marvelube because it is the ideal oil for modern motors. It ensures greater power, greater flexibility and greater economy.

There is a grade of Marvelube refined to meet exactly the specifications of your car. Consult the Marvelube Chart at Imperial Oil service stations and dealers.

Shaw was unarmed, but put up a great fight against the officers before he was subdued. He was very sullen over his arrest, and he literally filled the air with profanity when the officers were removing him to London jail.
