scandal? Go to court; testify all you like in Temple's behalf, and I'll swear you've been living here with him. D'ye think the jury will accept your word in his favor without proof, mind you, when it's your husband who is accusing him and you?"

"You scoundrel!" cried Temple, making a rush upon him. "You skulking, dirty little scoundre!"

Half choking. Granger fought but he was as nothing in the hands of the enraged giant who held him. Then Craven touched his friend firmly on the

"Let him go, Temple. Don't kill him. He isn't worth it."

Granger, released, still choking, managed to stammer: "I'll say it, I'll publish it. What'll you two look like then? I can block any testimony she can give. Pretty good story for the pa-pers, eh? And they're on my side any-

"He's right, Temple." whispered Craven aside. But Granger overheard and with a flash of triumph turned to "Come along, I say. Come alongnow, or I'll telephone my pretty story immediately. Once out, you know, it'll go like wildfire"-

And then, just outside the window, there sounded a low, shrill whistle.

That whistle caused Granger, the momentary cruel dictator, to collapse suddenly into Granger, the cringing "They're following me; they're on my track; they'll get me! Save me! Oh, save me! I haven't been pardoned, Anna; I escaped! Don't you understand? I was a trusty"-

But the woman only stared at him dully. Mrs. Mason furtively left the

"When Mrs. Mason told me what you were doing here I knew I must get you away; I feared you would discover my guilt. That's why I came; that's why I risked getting the pardon. I thought you'd help me to get away. Oh, for God's sake, hide me, sternly. She was adamant now.

In desperation Granger rushed to the door through which Craven had passed out and again locked it. Temple stood passively by, letting Anna work her own will. The knob of the locked door turned twice, then rattled.

The convict crept, shuddering, to his wife's feet. Then from the deep springs of her woman's tenderness there came one last drop of pity. She walked to the window and opened it. He should have his last chance.

He comprehended and, with one last grateful look at her, darted through the window into the blackness of the

Anna dropped tremblingly into a chair and peered fixedly, strainedly, out into the darkness

The sharp report of a pistol rang out, followed by a second and a third. The woman in the chair moaned.

In a few minutes Craven came to the door and rattled again. Temple unlocked it and met him on the "Poor, poor Robert!" murmured she, the pity of her heart surging to her

For an indefinite space there was silence, she praying, he, standing by the mantel, reverently guarding her.

But presently as she began to sob "My boys, oh, I want my boys," he crossed over to her. He laid his hand protectingly on the bent, shining head. "We'll get them, dear," he said sim-

He knelt beside her: he took her little cold hands in his and tried to warm them against his cheek, wet like her own. She seemed so frail now, slight a thing, so helpless to battle against such great odds. He yearned comfort her and gather her to him as he would a child.

But gently she fended him off. "Not yet, not quite yet, not tonight. But, oh, if you knew how the heavens were opening to me, beloved!" Her eyes shone upon him like stars. "I don't think that anything, anything, anything in the whole wide world can ever make me feel tired again. My fighting hope is at rest, and my boys will learn from a man how they shall x

THE END. THE JOKE PROVED FATAL.

It Was a Gray Bearded Gld One That Got In Its Deadly Work.

"What became of Bill Richardson?" I asked of a quaint character I met in one of my travels on a western rail-

"It came about in this way," said the commercial agent who tells the story. The reply of my companion for a day was: 'He died from the effect of the joke that had been played on nearly everybody in that town. It may have been an old one when the morning was sprung by a Maine Yankee who had been living in our burg for several years. His name was Charley Davenport, and he died many years ago. In his shuffling way be went from store to store and said that he bad just heard that a well known citizen had got shot. Then the people who had ilstened asked where the man got shot. Davenport said in his drawling voice, 'He bought 'em.'

"That very night, after everybody who had bit had got through cussin' Davenport, Bill Richardson, the old hotel keeper of the town, was shot. Every one knew Bill Richardson. As soon as the accident occurred a friend of Bill rushed to a nearby doctor. He was a member of one of the big churches and was as well known for his plety as he was for curing nearly everything that come his way. But he was a very sensitive man. Richardson's friend who called on the doctor was greatly excited.

"'Doc was upstairs when he was summoned to the window by loud He raised the window and asked what was wanted. The man below replied that old Bill Richardson had got shot. Now it happened that Davenport had sold doc that day on the old gag, and he was as mad as a harried hornet about it. So when the man below told him that old Bill Richardson had got shot doc forgot about his religion and yelled back: "You go to blazes. I know where he got 'em!' And with that he slammed down the window and went to bed.

"Before the friend of old Bill Richardson could find another doctor old Bill had passed away. He might have died anyway, but if it hadn't been for that old joke he would have had a chance. The joke didn't stop with old Bill's death. It was soon noised about that doc had cussed from his window, and he was haled before the church session and there was a smart scandal for several days, but when it was explained how doc had been sold he was declared not guilty. town several years after that and as long as I did I never heard of anybody playing a joke of any sort."New York Herald.

School Becky Sharp Attended. If one had to select a single Thackeray shrine in London for a pilgrimage it might well be Walpole House, or Chiswick hall. This was not only the house where Thackeray as a nervous, shortsighted boy was placed at school with Dr. Turner and was so miserable that he tried to run away. It possesses that other interest which makes the scenes of Mr. Pickwick's imaginary adventures more historic than those of Dickens' real life, for Walpole House is certainly Miss Pinkerton's academy, and here is the spot where Becky Sharp scandalously hurled back the dictionary. Lloyd Sanders, studying Old Chiswick, admits indeed that Thackeray borrowed some details for Miss Pinkerton from other houses. But Walpole House is the basis. Here, too, when it was a boarding house Daniel O'Connell ate his dinners, and here Charles II.'s Duchess of Cleveland probably ended

John on the Isle of Patmos. Print 1; 4-18.

COMMENTARY—I. The Revelation of Jesus Christ (vs. 1-3). The Revelation is an unfolding or a revealing of the future that God gave to His Son Jesus Christ, who gave it by an angel to John, the apostle. John made a faithful record of what was revealed to him, as being the word of God and the testimony of Jesus A blesting. the testimony of Jesus. A blessing is pronounced upon those who shall read or hear the words written and shall observe them.

II. John's introductory words (vs 4. To the seven churches which are in Asia—The message from Jesus is addressed definitely to the seven churches of Asia. By Asia is meant the extreme western part of Asia Minor governed by a Roman proconsul. The names of the seven churches are given in v. 11. Grace...and peace—Paul used a similar form of greeting in the Epistles which he wrote to seven different churches. From him—From Jehovah. Is. was.. to come. Eternity of existence is here declared. He now exists, he existed in the past and he will exist forever. Seven spirits—This term must certainly mean the Holy Ghost. as it stands between the names of the Father, the Son and the Spirit. The faithful witness—The testimony of Jesus is true and faithful. No part of it can fail of fulfilment. The first begotten of the dead—"The firstborn of the dead."—R. V. Made us kings and priests—Christ has made his followers a kingdom to be priests

7. Behold-The raptured vision of the sacred writer saw the coming of the Lord so clearly that it seemed all but realized. With clouds—See Acts 1: 9-11. Every eye shall see him— His coming will be visible to every member of the race. They also which pierced him—Not only the righteous shall see him, but also those who would not believe in him, and also who were responsible for putting him to death. Shall wail be-cause of him—It is he that tells us that all tribes of the earth must mourn, either now for the woe our sins caused him, or then for the wo they will cause us.—Cam. Bib. 8. -The Lord God is now speaking. Alpha and Omega—These are the first and the last letters of the Greek alphabet, indicating "the beginning and the ending. III. A vision of Jesus vs. 9-20). 9. I John—The writer identifies himself. There is no doubt about his being the Apostle John. Companion in trib ulation—He was suffering persecution in common with his fellow Christians. In the kingdom and patience of Jesus John and those whom he was ad dressing were not only companions in tribulation, but also companions in Christ's kingdom, enjoying all the benefits of citizenship therein. They were also companions in suffering with patience whatever of distress there might be in consequence of their relation of Jesus. Patmos—An island in the Aegean Sea, not far from the western coast of Greece. It is about seven miles in length and about a mile wide. 10. Questions.— Who wrote the Book of Revelation? Under what circumstances was it written? What blessing is pronounced in the third verse? To whom were the messages sent? What is meant by the expession, "I am Alpha and Omega"? Des ribe the appearance of Christ as he appeared to John. What effect had his appearance upon the apostle? What do the ance upon the apostle? What do the seven stars and the seven candle-sticks represent?

PRACTICAL SERVEY. Topic. The glorified Christ the centre of the Revelation. P.Patmos.

II. The banished apostle.

III. The glorified Jesus revealed. III. The glorified Jesus revealed.

I Patmos. Patmos, the scene of John's banishment, is a rockey and barren island about twenty-five miles in circumference, situated near the coast of Asia Minor in the Aegean sea. It was used as a place of banishment by the Roman Emperors. The cave which is the traditional scene of the Reveletion is still shown A celthe Revelation is still shown. A celebrated Greek monastry was built above it. The Book of Revelation has been the subject of much controver sy, but the abounding external and internal evidences remove any doubt of its authenticity of canonicity. It asserts itself to have been written by John too plainly to be understood of any other than the apostle. The testimony of the early church seems to fix the date A. D. 94 or 95. Varied methods of iterpretation have been applied to its contents, the kernal o which is however best expressed by the name it gives itself, "The Revelation of Jesus Christ"—the revelation, manifestat!..., apearing of Jesus Christ. It discloses Christ in his Person, offices, and future adminis-trations, when he shall come from heaven (Acts 1: 11). There are two schools of interpreters, the historical and futurist. The former holds that all or nearly all of the prophecies of the book in the history of the Jew-ish race or of pagan Rome; the lat-ter, that most of the book refers to events yet future, and which precede accompany or follow the second ad-II. The banished apostle. It is unanimously agreed that John was ban-ished to Patmos. Tradition says that he was banished after ineffectual attempts had been made to end his life by immersion in boiling oil. The general testimony of ancient authors places it in the latter part of the reign of Domitian, at the date assigned for The Revelation. He was ban-ished "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ." The Master himself declared that the world hated him because of his testimony that "the works thereof are evil." The revelator saw under the altar the souls of those beheaded "for the testimony of Jesus." Evil resents reproof and vents its antagonism on the witness. A pronounced type of piety, which is a living rebuke to wrong doing, will awaken antagonism. The lessen centres in the sublime vision of the glorified Christ given to the velelator. It affords us the first view of him since his ascension. The discription is overwhelmingly magnificent. One is not surprised that the grantitude serve was overnowmagnificent. One is not surprised that the enraptured seer was overpowered with the glory and "fell at his feet as dead." It was too bright for Only the glorified mortal vision. saints will enable men to contemplate it. Glory of person corresponds to the glory of character. Royalty and magistracy combine with priesthood in the disclosure. In the lessen he is revealed as Judge of the churches and of the world in the fuller revelation,

How Mammals Are Hunted in Northern Canada.

The seal sun naps on the Arctic ice are continually disturbed by his dreams of his enemy, the polar bear, or at least that seems a reasonable way of interpreting his behavior, for after sleeping for thirty seconds or perhaps a minute, he will wake up, raise his head as high as he conveniently can, which is fourteen or sixteen inches, and mais a complete survey of the horizon. If nothing suspicious is seen, this survey takes about ten seconds, after which he drops his head on the ice again and sleeps a minute more.

Sometimes the ice is a little rough edly toward a seal until less than four hundred yards away, after which you begin a careful approach. You crawl ahead on all fours while he sleeps and you lie flat and motionless while he is awake. It might seem that something could be gained by wearing white clothing to match the snow, but this is the reverse of wisdom, for the seal's one enemy that he fears is a polar bear, and the polar bear s white. If a seal sees anything that is suspicious and white he takes discretion to be the better part of valor, and dives promptly into his hole,. If the suspicious object is black, he as sumes that it is probably another seal that has come out of another hole to bask in the sun. It is, therefore, the task of the hunter to simulate a seal.

When the seal first sees you his ctions are unmistakable. He turns so as to face you directly: he raises his head a trifle higher than before and instead of bending his nock to survey the complete horizon he looks at you steadily and intently. You must be careful that his first view of you shall be a broadside view, for a man lying flat resembles a seal most in that position. It is best to lie still with one's head on the ice for about half a minute; but the seal knows the habits of his own kind as well as the careful hunter knows them, and if you were to lie motion less for more than a minute at a time he would strengly suspect that you were not a seal, and in two min utes he would prolably be convinced and would go into the water. It is necessary, therefore, after about half a minute of quiescence, to raise your head seal fashion twelve or fifteen inches above the ice, keep it there about eight or ten seconds, and drop it on the ice again. By the time this has been repeated three or four times the seal is commonly convinced that you are one of his kind and will begin again to take his interrupted naps.

If he is more suspicious than ordinary it may be a 's sable to move your feet a little as well. Like many other mals, a seal is and scratches frequently with his hind flippers. If a man lying flat flexer his legs from the knee the motion is similar to that of a seal scratching with his hind flippers. These taction nearly always convince the most sce These tactic tical seal, and when once his regular naps are resumed you move ahead snakewise while he sleeps and play seal whenever he is awake, watching Approaching a seal in this fashion is tedious at best, for it takes an hour and a half or two hours to get within fifty to seventy-five yards.

The elephants are our chief standby in Siam, and without them teak could not be worked as it grows in such inaccessible places that no hauling machine could be brought the trees, says Abby Beatrice the trees, says Abby Beatrice Pra-ther, in Asia Magazine. Elephants can climb like cats. It is marvellous ther, in to see them pick their way up and down steep slopes, but sometimes they lose their foothold. One of our elephants fell down a steep river bank last year, hit her head against a rock and broke her neck. The work of the elephants consists of climbing up to the fallen trees and pushing or rolling them down hill to a spot where it is evel enough for dragging chains to be attached. Then they drag the logs down to the nearest floating creek, often six or seven miles away. An clephant can handle from fifty to seventy logs per season which lasts from about the first of June till the end of February. Then it becomes too hot for them to work. and they go into rest camps until the next rains. The elephants do their best work in foating streams, working the timber with the current, releasing logs from jams and rolling the stranded logs back into the water. The elephant drivers have a special "elephant" language which the animals understand—a special elephant vocabularly with ruch terms as "Push sideways," "Roll," "Pull out," "Stop," Lift your child." It is very interesting and exciting to watch the elephants at work in high water. They are magnificent swimmers. When the sira are magnificent swimmers. When they swim from bank to bank, herd-ing the logs that require their special attention, you see nothing of them, except the tips of their trunks through which they breathe, and the mahouts, or drivers, who are generally in water up to their waists. If a big attack or jam breaks suddenly when the phants are working they know the danger of being overtaken. They trumpet and clear off to either bank trumpet and clear off to either bank or swim down stream as fast as they can go. I once saw an elephant working at the head of a jam slip off a rock and get swept under the stack. We all believed that he was a goner, but corry now and then we were surprised to see his trunk come up through the logs, such in a long breath and disappear. The trunk would reappear each time further down stream. Ho finally emerged at down stream. He finally emerged at the foot of the jam, very much blown, but otherwise none the worse for his accident. But he would not go near a pile of timber in high water for a year afterwards. This particular work is called "hunding."

The science of identification is a ascinating one, says London Bits.

Everybody is familiar with the finger print method. Infallibility claimed for this by the police, but there are some experts who refuse to believe that every one of the thou-sands of millions of people who insands of millions of people who in-habit the world has a different design on the under side of his or her thumb. Is it possible that some other sys-tem will be discovered?

There is the eye, for instance. Here we have one of the most wonderful mechanisms known to man. All eyes differ, and in addition to that there is what we might call the setting. There are hazels with deep sockets, blues with prominent brows, browns with soft overhanging skin, and so

Pale, Wan Cheeks A Sign of Anaemia

Have Good Color and Health The Blood Must Be Kept Red and Pure.

Many women who had good color and bright eyes in their girlhood grow pale and coloriess and lose much of their charm when they become wives and mothers. Why is it? When the fading color in the cheeks and lips is accompanied by a loss of brightness in the eyes and an increasing heaviness in the step and a tendency to tire easily, the cause is to be sought in the step of the blood in the state of the blood. Many causes may contribute to the condition of the blood known as anae-

mia. Care of the home, overwork, lack of outdoor exercise, insufficient lack of outdoor exercise, insufficient rest and sleep, improper diet, are a few of them. The important thing is to restore the blood, to build it up so that the color will return to the cheeks and lips, brightness to the eyes, and lightness to the step. To do this, nothing can equal Dr. Williams Pink Pills. They begin at once to increase the red corpusles in the blood, and this new blood carries strength and health to every part of strength and health to every part of the body. The appetite improves, digestion becomes perfect, and energy and ambition return. Proof is given in the statement of Mrs. Alex. Archive. ambo, Cornwall, Ont., who says:—
"Two years ago my health began to fail. I was suffering from headaches, pains in the ber and sides, and a constant tired out feeling. I had used a lot of medicine, but instead of it helping me I seemed to be growing weaker. My friends urged me to try weaker. My friends urged me to tr. Dr. Williams Pink P.'ls, and while felt disheartened at my experience with other medicines, I cecided to de so. To my great joy I soon found the pills were helping me, and their con-tinued use for a time fully restored my health if I did not give my experience with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, in the hope that it may point the way to health to some other poor sufferer."

Now that Chine has decided what kind of cotton seed does best in that country, and is distributing it by the dreams of girls, the war dreams being ton to farmers, cotton growing starts rare with either sex under the age of on a new geographical development. The time may yet come when the Chinese laundryman, far from home, will croon over his collars that he is 'still longing for the old plantation." Work done for several years in four experiment stations indicates that out of forty varieties of seed the kind known as "Trice" is best suited for Chinese cultivation. It appears that "Trice" vields 141 catties to the moe, which is the Chinese way of saying something more than 1 1 pounds per one-sixth more than 1.1 pounds per one-sixth of an acre, for the catty weighs about one-third more than the English pound. The Chinese pound, for that matter, is called "kin," but for some foreigners prefer to call it a catty.

DREAMS SHOW DESIRE.

Those of Children Are Frank While Adults Are Camouflaged.

A London physician has made written records of dreams of over five thousand school children between the ages of eight and sixteen years, and finds that they support the belief that a dream is merely the expression of some desire, but changed in expres sion by one's subconsciousness in order that it may not awaken the sleep er. Frequently sub-consciousness it-self is caught napping, and the sleeper awakens in a fright and says that he has suffered from a nightmare.

Again the subconscious mind does its work so cleverly that the wish or desire of the sleeper is often disguised so that an expert in the study of dreams has difficulty in uncovering the theme, but the London physician found that the dreams of children are fairly frank, while those of students from 18 to 22 years were so thorough-ly camouflaged that he abandoned their study.

The eating element dominated in children between the ages of eight and 14, being more common with the children of the poorer classes than with those well-to-do. It appeared. too, that an appreciable increase was noted toward these dreams was noted toward Christmas. What seemed unusual was that dreams in which predominant was more common among boys than among girls, while with both sexes the fear of an old man was most common. The fear of animals was also common, but type of animals differed with the sex of the dreamers, as the boys were in fear of lions, tigers and bulls, the girls were terrorized by dogs, mice and snakes.

The war had great effect upon the dreams of boys, but little upon the As with adults the dreams ten. were frankly egotistic. It appeared, too, that from the age of ten there came a marked falling off in dreams in which eating figured, and an increase in those which fear dominated.

The result of this careful investigation supports the modern theory dreams in which theory science now greatly interested, especially that which concerns branch of with mental troubles.

On the other hand, it is never too early to mend, either

As a rule, every candidate is more or less hampered by some disadvan-age; but Mr. Hesketh Carton's oponents could discover no blot on his scutcheon; he appeared to be one of those rare men without a past; he was popular with his workmen, and in every way a respected member society: there was really nothing in life which the other side could hold of, and Hesketh went about with an air of smiling modesty and white waistcoat—emblem of a blameless life.

The polling day approached, and the asually quiet Bramley worked itself up to a state of excitement which was as exhilarating as it was novel. Yes, t would be a great thing for him if Clytie would consent to appear on the platform among his supporters, and he experienced a thrill of grati-fication, of pleased vanity, at the rewell that night. A very large majority of the audience would be members of his party; there would be excitement, enthusiasm, in fact, triumph—a foretaste of the great and crowning triumph that awaited him to-morrow. Yes, barring accidents, to-morrow he would be a member of Parliament, another step up the ladder of his ambition. His political succe would be a happy augury of the future. The master of Bramley and the possessor of Sir William's wealth, to what heights, social and political, might he

He changed, dressed carefully, and went up to the Hall. The servants were in a state of excitement and bustle, and Sholes came forward with a smile on his expansive countenance expressive of his delight.

"You've heard the news, I see, sir," he said, as if he were bubbling over with joy. "The young ladies have come home! Come home quite unex-pected and suddenlike. None of us knew, excepting Lord Stanton. His lordship went up to London to meet them. I beg your pardon, sir, I'm keeping you standing!"

"I came up to welcome the young ladies," said Hesketh. "I don't know whether they will be too tired to see me, but I will come in on the chance." He waited in the drawing-room, looking round with half-closed lids, and deciding the style in which he would have it redecorated, when it came into his hands. The door opened and Mollie entered. She had a small parcel in one hand and some flowers in the other, so that it seemed that she could not shake hands. She was very brown, not to say freckled, and her eyes looked at him and then behim, as she said rather hur

"How do you do, Mr. Carton? We've come back, you see. Oh, yes, we are very well—both of us." Her eyes rested on his face for a moment, and she went on still more hurriedly "We've heard of your great doings in Bramley. You are going to be a member of Parliament. How nice! It was very kind of you to spare time to come up, and so soon. I'd ask you to stay to tea, but I am so busy unracking."

Hesketh Carton murmured the proper response, then said:
"I am afraid you will consider my quest an unreasonable one, but I have been hoping—how earnestly, you may guess!—that you and Miss Clytie would be present on the platform at my meeting to-night."

Mollie's eyes flashed for an instant, but she hid them quickly.

"How kind of you!" she exclaimed.
"But I am afraid it is quite impossible. Clytie is rather tired—it has been a long journey.

"You must tell me all about your travels," he said. "Yes," he said.
"Yes," she assented. "Oh, by the way, I have a little present for you, a souvenir. You mustn't open it now. It is only a trifle. And now, I really must go up to Clytie! Good-by! I wish you all the success—you deserve, Mr. Carton." Mr. Carton."

Mr. Carton."

She put a small box in his hand, instead of shaking hands, rang the bell for Sholes to show him out, and, with a nod and again that strange, quickly hidden flash in her eyes, ran out of the room. He went back to the house at the works and tossed the box, unopened, on his writing-table.

The dinner at the Chillingfords' wa The dinner at the Chillingfords' was an extremely lively one. Everyone felt so certain of success, and the party drove down to the Hall in carriages liberally decorated with Mr. Hesketh Carton's colors. An immense crowd awaited them at the entrance to the Hall; the interior was packed; a thunder of cheers rose from the mass the next with Mr. Hesketh bring. as the party, with Mr. Hesketh bringing up the rear, ascended the platform. Hesketh Carton, withea charmingly modest smile, sat down and looked over the audience with that all-comprehensive gaze which is so soon acquired by the public speaker. Sud-denly he started, and his eyes grew fixed on a man seated in the middle of the third row. The face of the man was that of "the insolent fellow" with whom he had had a vulgar and unpleasant disagreement at Withycombe but the man was no longer dressed in working attire; he wore the conven-tational clothes of a gentleman, and wore them well. What did it mean? Had the fellow come there to make a disturbance? If so, thought Hesketh, with satisfaction, he would no doubt with satisfaction, he would no doubt very properly, be roughly han-

Lord Chillingford, the chairman was on his feet, made the usual stam-mering speech of the ordinary country gentleman, and was followed by one of the great men from London, who warmed up the audience and prepared the way for the candidate. At this moment, Hesketh Carton saw Mr. Granger come on the platform, and, with a friendly smile, he beckoned him to a seat in front which had been modestly left vacant.

Mr. Granger was passing to it, with a murmured apology for being late, when his eyes fell on a gentleman in the third row. He started, stared and half-unconsciously rose from his seat, as if forgetting the place and the seat, as it forgetting the place and the rest of the audience, and approached the edge of the platform. Before he could recover from his astonishment, it had been noticed by those around him, and many eyes were focused on the young man at whom the old law yer was staring.

Suddenly some one—it was Lady Chillingford—murmured a name; it, was "Sir Wilfrid Carton." It was caught up and ran around the plat-form, some of the occupants of which fose and stared with intense curiosity and interest, which seemed to be con-tagious, for the audience in the back of the hall began to look in the same direction and to murmur the name. The incident had now become so con-spicuous that Mr. Granger was com-pelled, so to speak, to make some movement; so he came down the front steps of the platform, and, going straight up to Jack—for it was he, and will let him bear his old name and, holding out his hand, said, with

Jack had followed Clytie and Mollie by a later train, because he did not wish to appear in public at first, in his proper character, as their fellow traveler; but, on the other hand, he did not wish it to be thought that he had skulked into the town; so Clytie and he, both ignorant of Hesketh Carton's murderous designs, had thought it a good thing for him to at-tend the meeting. If he were recog-nized—well, the excitement which would be caused by his appearance would be swallowed up by the larger one of the election, and Jack would get over the fuss attending his unex-

GHOST HANDS.

Strange Traditions That Are Widely Believed.

Hands from the days of Daniel—when writings appeared so mysteriously on the walls of Belshabzer's palace—have always been connected with the occult, and were regarded by Chaldeans and Egyptians alike to be omens of the greatest moment and significance. The model of a hand, for example, was always carried in the festivals of Isis at the end of a palm branch, and hands figured frequently in the writing on the pyramids and statues, both in Egypt and Mesopotamia. A certain branch of the Douglas family used to see the shadow of a mailed hand always before the death of one of the clan; whilst a branch of the MacDonnells still have bony knuckles rapping on doors or walls invaribly before a similar occurence.

Some years ago a gentlemen wrote to me from Torquay apropos of one of my ghost books and informed me that waking up one night, he had put his hand out of bed to feel it immediately taking hold of by a hand of ice coldness. The following morning, he added, he received tidings of the leath of a Lear relative.

he received tidings of the death of a lear relative.

Later on he wrote to me again. "I have had another experience with the hand," he said, "but this time of a more startling order, as it took hold of me much more emphatically and seemed very reluctant to let go, I wonder what it means."

I had my idea, but did not tell him. And

It means.

I had my idea, but did not tell him. And I was right, for I learned soon afterward he had died. The hand this time had predicted his own death.

The family of Tulloch Gorms was hanned by the glost of a girl with a dreadful hairy hand that she used to point at any member of the clan that was soon destined to die; whilst the Kincardines had the spectre with the blood-stained hand which used to -4 nd still does—haunt Glenmore.

It was formerly very aggressive, and in 1669 met and challeneged three brothers successively to a duel—each of the brothers dying immediately afterwards; but latterly, it has been much more docile and has contented itself with merely waving its blood-red hand—a sure signal, however, of an approaching death or some other kind of disaster.

In Cernfany phantom hands would appear to be even commoner, for nearly all the old families have at one time or another come under the spell or ban of mailed fingers.

There 15-or was before the war-an inn in Saxony that was once a private house, and which was haunted by a huge hand that used to descend at night from the ceiling and impart to whoever was present all the sensations of strangulation.

According to tradition, a certain countess, who originally owned the house, got rid of her infirm husband by having him strangled there by an idiot of monstrous size, and as a punishment for the crime, her family and house were ever after haunted by a hand, inconceivably huge and hideous and cruel.

What Did He Mean?

The minister had caten a very good dinner and was getting ready to leave for a long time. He happened to glance at the eighteen-year-old daugh-

The irrepressible eight-year-old son spoke up:

spoke up:

"Oh, no, you won't," he offered.

"Mary is going to be an old bachelor."

The family laugh told him that he had used the wrong word. So straightway he started to make it right.

"I mean an old witch," he asserted more positively than before.

WHAT FACTORS INFLUENCE SEED YIELDS IN ROOTS?

able quantities of field root seed, including mangel, Swede turnip and carrot seed, have been raised by the Dominion Experimental Farms' System for the purpose of safeguarding against a threatening shortage in the supply. Much valuable information has been accumiated on the subject of root seed production, the more so while engaged in seed grow ing as an emergency undertaking, the Experimental Farms' System at the same time desired to gain reliable data bearing on the possibilities of making root seed growing a permanent agricultural industry in Canada. One of the more important subjects in connection with root seed growing which have been investigated is question of under what conditions the heaviest possible seed yields may be expected. This question is, of course, of particular interest, as the size of the seed yields will largely determine the profit from seed growing.

In the first place, it is necessary that the roots to be used for seed raising are absolutely sound when planted out. Our experience is that planting of roots which show signs of disease or rot, especially at the crown, leads to most disappointing results. Such roots may linger along for some time, but sooner or later they die off, with the result, of course, that the seed field becomes patchy and consequently gives a comparatively low yield per acre.

In the second place, the seed roots should be planted as early as possible in the spring. The earlier they are set out the heavier are the seed yields which may be expected. This applies to all kinds of field root seed crops and has been demonstrated over and over again.

In the third place it is absolutely.

Several experiments conducted the last few years have most decidely shown that the land must be in the last few years have most decidedly shown that the land must be in the best shape if good seed crops are to be expected. An experiment carried out at Ottawa in 1915 gave results to the effect that an application of 20 tons of barnyard manure to the acre, or of a commercial fertilizer, composed of 500 pounds of superphosphate, 200 pounds of nitrate of soda, and 200 pounds of muriate of soda, iscreased the seed yield of mangels with almost 50 per cent. Experiments carried out later have not only substantiated this result, but also shown that a still greater increase in the yield may be realized if the land is given both manure and artificial fertilizers in liberal quantities.

should be added, though, that the yields are also influenced, to a not unimportant degree, by the supply of farm labor that may be available and by the size of the seed fields. Profiltable root seed growing requires plantiful labor at certain periods and under present conditions, the writer would say that to a firmer who the

The Famous River Ganges.

The river Ganges, in India, is fa-mous for two things-its alleged purifying influence on all who bathe in it and its muddlness. For ages there has been a belief among the Hindus that a dip in the Ganges, particularly at Benares, where the water is full of impurities, is a safeguard against the cholera, typhoid fever and other infectious diseases. An analytical examination of the river water at Benares has revealed the interesting fact that the Ganges is fairly alive with bacteria antagonistic to the bacilli of cholera and typhoid. The plague ridden Hindu who plunges into the river to bathe in it and even to swallow a few mouthfuls of the muddy water provides himself with a vast army of useful microbes which will quickly sweep out of existence and out of his system the deadly microbes of disease. So there must be some merit in the reputed medicinal virtues of the Ganges after

On every side the great snow-capped mountains of the range thrust their heads far into the swimming reaches of the sky. As far as the eye could reach jumbled masses of beetling cliffs and gleaming domes arose in height above height like the inconceivably vast waves of a sea. Between these monsters of the range lay canyons that the rays of sunlight never reached the bottom of. And it was in one of these secret hiding places of Nature that there lay veins of rich, yellow ore of a richness to cause the beholder to blink his eyes and his heart to give a great jump when he first contemplated

Such was the secret treasure place found by Old John Carr, lifetime prospector and miner, in the closing days of his life, and known to no living man but him. Above the brink of a precipitous cliff whose walls fell sheer away into dizzy depths, the fur-capped head of a man with a long silver beard slowly arose. Assisting himself up by means of an alpenstock he clambered above the brink and stood upon its edge, tall and straight, a rugged specimen of the fearless tribe that ever has forced its way into the most secret places of nature.

For a full minute he stood straight and sharp cut as a statue outlined against the sky as he ran his eyes slowly over the wide spreading panorama that lay before him. The country was without habitation, not even the smoke of a distant fire being visible, except in one place. This came from a valley in which there stood a substantial log cabin with a huge stone chimpey at one end.

This cabin nestled far below and not a great ways from the crest of the big ridge, or summit of the peak. Close by were sheds and stables for horses, a corral adjoining them. John Carr, ploneer in this wilderness, was paying them a silent farewell.

The sun climbing the eastern sky bathed him in a flood of golden light. He took his alpenstock and thrust it firmly into the rocks so that it stood upright, then fastened his red bandana handkerchief to it after the manner of a flag. Next taking from the breast pocket of fur bordered mackinaw a letter, he fastened it to the base of the staff. As the alpenstock now stood with the red cloth waving from its top in the mountain breeze, it was an object which could be seen for a long distance. Once more he turned his face to the scene below.

From out of the corral an Indian came strolling and passed into the house, while the rough hand of the old miner for an instant swept itself across his face.

"There never was a better Injunthan Rainface," he murmured. Then turning suddenly he leaped straight out into the air and downward beyond the ridge. Thus it was that John Carr departed from the scene which had known him for so many years.

Within the cabin far below Rainface was putting logs upon the fire.

From an adjoining room where they had just finished their breakfast John Davis and Ethel Carr emerged. The man was tall and powerfully built, dressed in winter outing costume, while the girl wore Indian leggings and a short home-made jacket trimmed with fur. The adopted daughter of John Carr, Ethel had been brought up in the mountains almost as uncontrolled as the creatures of the ravines themselves. Her hair falling down her back, was plaited, Indian fashion, and fastened with a bow. Although she was 18 years of age, in her youthful dress she looked far younger.

"It is hard to learn to eat like one of your ladies of the cities, where they think they are so nice," she protested with a little pout. "You are always scolding me because I don't use a fork when a spoon or knife is so much more convenient. I wish you would let me eat the way I want to." John smiled.

"You will get used to it soon enough. And remember that you soon have got to take your place among the other ladies of the world." From the kitchen came the generously proportioned figure of Bridget Wegan, middle aged, cheerful of face, motherly. Reproachfully she turned upon Davis.

"Qh, lave the poor babby alone, Mister Davis. Sure what matter does it make if one uses a spade or a hoe so long as the ditch is dug. And if a body gets the vittles into one's mouth, small matter how they get them there. "Tis a little thing to worry about, is it not, Rainface." The Indian grunted.

"Fingers plenty good enough for me," he returned solemnly. Still smiling Davis took down a pair of snowshoes from the wall, while the girl followed his example. Drawing on his gloves he turned upon his companions.

"Anyway we'll have our last day on "Anyway we'll have our last day on the snow. Where do you suppose Uncle John is, Rainface?" The one addressed shook his head.

"Me not know. But when master go away with the sun sometime he come back with the stars. If he not come pretty soon, me go find him." Eridget once more entering from the kitchen, thrust a well-filled rucksack into his hand.

"Now on your way the two of ye, and don't come back to bother me. You'll be glad enough to eat this with your ten fingers before the day is over, for niver a spoon or fork did I bother to put up with the vittles." Playfully she shoved them out upon the spoor.

Running ahead of him lightly as a rabbit, Ethel shouted back her challenge to the laboring man.

"You may know more about knives and forks than I do, Mister, but I dare you to race me upon snowshoes." At once he accepted the defi, only the next moment to find himself floundering upon his face in the white smother.

She led the way a few yards in advance of him, skimming over the shimmering surface with the lightness of a wind-blown leaf, at last vanishing into a cluster of somber spruce with a defiant wave of her hand. Clumsily Davis passed on in pursuit, gaining confidence and speed as he progressed. Yet so good a start of him did she have that when he entered the thick growth she had mysteriously disappeared. Perplexedly he stared about.

From half a dozen yards away the girl, crouching behind a bowlder, watched him as amusement spread over her face. Then suddenly reaching down she gathered up a handful of the snow, pressed it into a ball and threw it. Fairly upon the side of his fur cap it struck him and burst, powdering his cheek with its virgin whiteness. He cast his glance about.

"Come out," he dared her.
Through the stillness of the mountain air her voice came tauntingly.

"You may know more about knives and forks than I do, but there are other things in this world. Is it possible that you do not even know how to follow a trail in the snow?"

Half provoked that he had not thought of so simple a thing, John dropped his eyes to the tell-tale surface. Close at hand lay the blurred signature of her broad clad feet, leading unerringly to her hiding place. He sprang forward, scooping up a handful of the snow as he ran.

"For that, Miss Impudence, I'm going to wash your face."

Five minutes later, despite his awkwardness upon his laced footgear, he had tired her out, caught her, held her his prisoner. Half laughing, half crying, she struggled in his arms as he prepared to carry out his threat. Entreatingly her face turned itself to his. "I didn't mean it—please don't," she gasped. His hand dropped.

"Very well," he returned gravely.

"For this once you are pardoned."

Noon found them deep in a canyon through which a stream came roaring down from the great peaks. From a dead free the man cut the smaller branches, piling them high and building a roaring blaze. From the rucksack he dragged the coffee pot and thrust it into the coals, while she held a frying pan and slice of bacon aloft. "A fish to go with the bacon," she Inughed.

From the pocket of her jacket she drew a line and hook, while he with his small woodsman's ax lopped off a slender pole. Baiting her hook she cast it into a pool beneath a rock; the next Instant her voice arising excitedly.

"I've got a whopper. Come quick—quick and help me."

quick and help me."

He looked up from the fire which he had been renewing just in time to see her slip and go sliding toward the stream. Frantically he grasped at her, but quick as he had been he was too late and with a despairing cry she threw up her hands and disappeared in the rushing flood.

At the imminent risk of his life he darted down the edge of the stream, slipping, sliding, his eyes glued upon her body as it was swirled en. Close before them was the brink of a cataract, and well he knew that unless he could grasp her before she reached it she would be torn to fragments by the sharp fangs of rock that lay below. With a reckless leap he landed upon a bowlder that stood at the very crest of the wildly downplunging torrent and thrust forth his hand. By great good fortune his fingers closed upon her arm, and bracing his feet in a crevice he dragged her half drowned from the stream. For a moment she lay weakly gasping in his arms.

"Hurt?" he cried as he winted the water from her face. She struggled faintly, escaped his arms and stood upon her feet.

"And just to think I never let go of that line," she said as she be in pulling it in. The next instant a face trout was flopping at their feet. Full of admiration he gased upon her.

her.
"You are as game as thy make them," he said seriously. For hand fell upon his sleeve.

"Anyway, I owe you my life at was magnificent the way you in sled me out. I had no iden you were a strong."

Afternoon found them dry youe the worse for their experience, hoproaching the cabin together. Before the door

Rainface, coming from the corral, stopped them.

"I am going to meet Master," he said. Without giving them a chance to reply he hurried on his way.

Within the cabin Bridget confronted them, arms akimbo.

"And what is the meaning of this?" she demanded as her sharp eyes ran them up and down, their wrinkled clothing telling all too plainly the story of their ducking. "Miss Ethel, 'tis me that's askin' what ye have been up to." The girl's arm stole around the ample walst.

"I fell in, Bridget, and he pulled me out. Otherwise I should have gone over the falls."

"I told Rainface that the pair of ye would get into some divilment," she said with a disapproving sniff." Suddenly the door was thrown open and Rainface stood before them.

"Master no come. See the flag," he said as he pointed to the alpenstock upon the mountain side high above. "You and me must go and see."

Side by side they toiled up the steep ascent. John, bending, picked up the letter which lay at the foot of the staff, and tearing it open read:

"And so having lived long on this mountain I am going to try another life. I leave dear. Ethel and what I have to you, John, and your cousin Hawk Morgan. When you are together in the cabin my faithful Rainface will give you my papers. You will then know what to do. God bless you—and farewell. Your uncle, John Carr."

Silently, he and the Indian strode to the edge of the abyss and looked down, Far below them a pair of wolves were sneaking away from a dark object that lay upon the snow, and still without words they began scrambling down the almost sheer descent. Fifteen minutes later they stood before torn clothing, a gun, a cap and other scattered things. Wolf tracks were everywhere. They uncovered their heads.

They retraced their steps to the cabin and entered. Their looks told the grewsome story. With a little cry Ethel ran to John and buried her face upon his shoulder. Gently his arms stole about her.

"And you are going to leave me now after this dreadful thing has happened?" she asked at length when he had told her all. He nodded.

"I must go tonight. It was John Carr's last wish that I find Hawk Morgan and bring him back here for the reading of the will. These good friends will take care of you, child. until I return." Kissing her lightly upon the brow he turned away.

John Davis, knowing but little of his cousin Hawk Morgan, found him in San Francisco. Drawing him aside from the gambling table at which he had almost lost his last dollar briefly he told him the conditions of John Carr's death. The face of Morgan lit with an evil grin.

"And you don't know what the terms of the will are, or whether he had anything to leave?" John shook his fread.

"No. I had not seen him for years until he sent for me to visit him a week ago. He said he wrote you at the same time."

"I never got the letter," growled Morgan, "Meet my friend, generally and popularly known as Spider Belias, Disapprovingly Davis looked into the ill-favored face of the man who stood before him.

"All I know about the matter is that John Carr left you, Hawk Morgan, and me joint guardians as it were of a little girl." Morgan uttered a brutal laugh.

"Good God! I wash my hands of that part of the inheritance at least. I don't want to be saddled with any female critter—of that age anyway.

But I suppose we have got to go back together and find out what it is all about." Suspicious, already disliking each other, they left the place.

Rainface, entering the cabin, found Ethel sitting moodily upon a couch. A week had gone by, a week without word of Davis and worry had haunted her like an evil spirit. Without speaking the Indian pointed down the trail, and with her heart leaping like a bounded ball she arose and rushed to the door.

"He is coming back. Do you suppose he will like me as well—dressed in this?" For the first time she had taken her hair from its long braid, and gone, too, were the moccasins and leggings. The simple skirt that now came to the top of her neat shoes was that of a woman of the cities; her whole costume and manner wonderfully transformed from the girl of the wilderness to the woman of civilization." Bridget drew back in wonderment.

"The man who wouldn't be after loving a woman like you would not be a man at all, at all, but a haythen without soul or red blood in his veins," she said admiringly. Morgan, throwing open the door, stood gazing first at her and then at the closely following John.
"I thought you said she was a little girl," he laughed.

"I was a little girl when he knew me, but trouble has made me a woman," was her reply. The bold eyes of Morgan devoured her.

"And a blamed fine one at that. Here, come and kiss your guardian."
"If I did not let him kiss me, what right have you to expect such a thing?" she demanded. With an exclamation of disgust John took Morgan by the arm.

"I'd wait a while before proposing such a thing, if I were you," he said sternly.

"Supper," announced Bridget from the other room. Hungry from the journey of the day in the mountain air, Hawk turned from the girl.

"All good things in their time, and supper for us now," he announced.

They finished enting and gathered about the table of the living room, wondering what the last words of John Carr might be. Rainface, producing the will and plan, handed them to Davis and the latter, spreading the map upon the table, began to read from the other

"My Last Will and Testament," it began. Eagerly they bent forward. -therefore my said nephews John Davis and Hawk Morgan are directed to work said mine. After setting apart ten per cent to each of them, and a like amount to my adopted daughter, Ethel Carr, of whom they are made joint guardians, and five per cent for the maintenance of my faithful servants the Indian Rainface and Bridget Wegan, all the other profits are to be devoted to the use and benefit of the John Carr Foundation for the support and assistance of war widows and orphans according to the plan herewith marked exhibit "A," and furthermore it is my wish that in case of the death of one administrator, the other suc ceeds to the double duty of trust and guardianship with double the revenue to himself."

Silently they sat looking into each other's face as the full meaning of the words branded themselves upon their minds, then with a muttered imprecation Morgan bade Bridget take the girl away. Morgan leered after their retreating forms.

"Damn fine girl. I wouldn't mind having her along with my share of the legacy." Ignoring John's look of contempt he went on:

"Of course we won't pay any attention to that widows' and orphans' rot in the will. We'll work the mine, take all for ourselves and fight, play or draw for the girl." Rainface. who had been sitting stolidly in a corner beside the fireplace, raised his head after the manner of a mountain ilon that is wakened from his sleep, Coldly John made his reply.

"I cannot believe that you mean what you have said. The wishes of Uncle John must and shall be carried choose between us if she wishes either one." Hawk Morgan closed his fists.

"All right. If you want to quarrel over it you will have plenty of chance. I wanted to get along quietly with you, but if that don't suit you we will make it war to the knife."

"Go as far as you like," returned

Rainface, though he had said nothing, had not been idle. From the long braid of coarse hair which fell down his breast he loosened a number of hairs, knotted them together into an almost invisible line then drew a fish hook from his pocket. This he fastened to the line; then arising passed to the table and filled his pipe from the to-bacco jar which sat upon it. Seeing that neither of the quarreling men were paying any attention to him he deftly fastened the hook through the plan, then lighting his pipe went back to his seat by the fire. Here while smoking imperturbably he quietly pulled the hair line and dragged the plan from the table and to him across the floor, slipping it into his pocket just as the quarrel came to an end. Morgan abruptly arose.

"Very well. We will let the matter rest until morning. You take the will and I'll keep the plan." Astonishment lighted his face as he glanced at the vacant place upon the table where until a few moments before the plan had reposed.

"It's gone!"

"Where?" demanded John. Morgan cast his eyes about, letting them rest upon Rainface who seemed to be dozing in his chair.

"You can search me. Neither does the Injun know, for I saw it lying there after he filled his pipe and he has not been near the table since."

"That is another thing we have got to let go until tomorrow. I am going to sleep in the harness room. There's a stove there." Midway in his crossing the floor the fish hook attracted his eye and bending picked it up. No sooner did he see the hair attached to it than he understood all. With a smile and a knowing glance at the Indian he passed from the room. As the door closed behind him the head of Rainface arose from his breast and his black eyes centered themselves upon the face of John Davis.

"Him bad white man," he said with a jerk of his thumb in the direction of the departing one. John smiled.

the departing one. John smiled.

"Maybe we have only seen his bad side, Rainface. I guess he will turn out all right when he has had a chance to think things over." Throwing his cigar aside he said "good hight" and passed into the lean-to room, and seating himself upon the bed drew the will from his pocket and began to read it carefully, all unconscious of the fact that the malignant face of Hawk Morgan was peering at him from the department without darkness without. An hour passed, and Morgan, cautiously opening the door of the harness room, lighted the lamp and stood in the center of the floor as he took quick mental inventory of what the room contained. Saddles and parts of harness hung upon pegs and half a dozen lariats lay about. Selecting one of these he went over its length carefully, then tying a handkerchief across hi face he divested himself of his coat and picked up one which had belonged to John Carr. Creeping back to the cabin he peered in a window. Rainnodding before the fire Securing a ladder the prowler climbed to the roof. Cautiously he peered down Copyright, 1919, Ty Vitagraph the brond chinney, then loosening a piece of mortar dropped it late the smoldering fire below. Awakened by the noise and flying ashes, Rainfece bent forward to see whence the disturbance had come. As his head and shoulders appeared within the range of vision of the downpeering one on the root, Morgan swiftly dropped the loop of his riata about the other's form and drew it taut. Rainface, jeticed upward so that his toes barely touched the floor, was fairly caught, but comprehending the menning of it all he squirmed until he managed to draw forth the plan that he had bidden in his bosom. With a just effort he dropped it upon the coals and the paper, old and dry, burst into a bidge. With a twist of the rope about the chinney, Morgan leaving his victim ecurely trussed up, came clarabering down and entering the cabin swiftly searched the Indian's ciothes. Finding nothing and filled with rage he stepped back just as Rainface with a conclusive kick upset the table, spilling its contents clattering upon the floor. Quick as the dart of a weasel the prowler left the room.

Attracted by the noise of the falling objects Ethel and John rushed into the room. The suspended body of Rainface needed no explanation, and whipping a knife from his pocket John slashed the imprisoned one free, Rainface, sinking to a chair quickly told them all.

"Me not know who he was. Himhave a handkerchief across his face, but wear old coat of master. Anyway me burn the map." Silently he pointed at the few flaky ashes upon the coals.

"Some prowling thief that was passing this way," said John lightly. "He won't come again. All we can do is go back to sleep, little girl." For the first time realizing that she was clothed only as she slept, the girl turned and field from the room.

The door of the harness room again, opened and once more Hawk Morgan entered. His face was dark with angrand disappointment that all his efforts proved unavailing in that no plan had been found, and clenching his fist he shook it in the direction of the cabin.

"I'll get you yet, Pavis, and then the fortune and the girl will be mine," His glance fell upon a heavy bowle knife that hung in its sheath on the wall, and taking it down he tested its edge. Then with a flash of his teeth he picked up a hay rake from the floor and severed it just behind the wooden prongs. Then with a leather strap he bound the handle of the knife fast to it and crept out into the night, his deadly lance firmly gripped. Catilke he crept toward the cabin.

Within the lean-to John, who had been reading by the light of a lamp upon the shelf, had fallen asleep with the glow still falling over him. His bunk was against the lowest side of the lean-to, and in order that he might be ready for instant action should the mysterious prowler return had removed only his coat, vest and boots. A blanket was thrown partly over him and his revolver lay upon the table at his side.

carrying a wooden horse to the side of the lean-to and carefully placing it in position, Morgan again mounted to the roof. With a hatchet he pried up the weather strip and looked through the crack between the shrunken boards and gazing down upon the exposed breast of the sleeping man. Cautious ly he pointed the lance down through the opening.

Slowly, silently the murderous weapon descended, inch by inch drawing nearer to the heart of the sleeping one. A moment more and it would have been buried in the recumbent form, but at that moment the guardian angel, which so often watches over us in our helpless moments, intervened to save a life. Through the crack above a great snowlake sifting down fell upon the cheek of the sleeper, and at its cold impact. John opened his eyes. And though the thrust of Morgan was an quick as the strike of a serpent, the movements of John were even quickly. One upward sweep of his hand and penad grasped the lance just above the murderous knife.

Now ensued a silent struggle to tween the would be assassin upon in roof and the one who was fighting the his life below. South African Ostrich is a True Monogamist.

Fifty-five years ago the ostrich was not a domesticated bird in South Africa. True, a few wild ostriches had been captured and kept in captivity for private or public exhibition, but no attempt appears to have been made to farm them seriously. The few ostrich feathers that reached European markets were from wild ostriches, and, commercially, were considered much damaged. Neverthe-less they fetched over high prices, which naturally drew the attention of South Africa to the possibilities of the ostrich-feather trad

The more venturesome stock-breeders and speculators practically started the present extensive ostrich farming industry by offering very high prices for eggs, chicks, or fullgrown birds. The Kalahari—the favorescent of the started started that the started started started that the started start orite haunt of the wild ostrich—was searched for eggs and chicks, but the demand for some time continued to

Do women commit cold-blooded murder? That there have been thousands of women killers within a gen eration we know. But are their slavings not always either what the rench call crimes passionneis, killings of revenge, or homicide French call crimes passionnels, or casions due to pathological conditions-insanity, neurosis, hysteria or epilepsy? In a word, do women kill, as countless men in every age and clime have killed, for exclusively mer-cenary motives and with calm premeditation?

These old but ever fresh questions are revived by the confession and life-long sentence of Mrs. Amy E. Archer Gilligan in Connecticut. A few days since, this mature woman her self brought to an end a three years' fight against charges of the state which inferentially involved the leaths of perhaps 40 human beings.

This woman was not emotionally or erotically concerned with any of or crotically concerned with any or her victims. At no point was any hatred or passion against any one shown. She tried to plead insanity, but repeated examining boards of physicians found her all too sane. She had simply murdered a number, and perhaps a very large number, of old men and women to profit a few hundred dollars extra on each trucida-

A complete and perfect Borgia one with few parallels.

But if Lucretia Borgia's record, true or fabulous, in no way compares to this story, there are other women along the backwaters of history, old and new, whose doings will add evidence to support the truth that woman may kill and does kill as calmly and consciously as man.

COMBINATION DESSERT.

A very attractive dessert can be made by molding in alternate layers a clear jelly and a blancmange. Wet the mold and add a layer of one of the mixtures and set in a cold place until firm. Then add a layer of the other mixture and set aside until firm. Continue until all is used. A good combination is an orange jelly and a blancmange with banana pulp sirred in. Both mixtures are to be thickened with gelatin.

Da Vinci Thought of Tank.

Italy has just celebrated the fourth ary of Leonardo du Vinci's His name has often been mentioned during the war and his prophetic genius recalled. It is known that he intended to build airplanes for war purposes, but it is now claim for war purposes, but it is now claimed also that he was the first to think of the tank. In his letters to Il Moro he speaks of armored cars which could shelter the occupants and drive right amongst the enemy's masses, slaying and shattering all opposition. It is unfortunate that more is not known of Leonardo's intentions, and known of Leonardo's intentions, and of the way in which he proposes to propel his craft. Horses might pos-sibly have been intended, for if a horse could carry less weight than the armored motor, protection in these days was more easily got than now. But it is certainly very singular to read that his cars were to charge ahead while the infantry would follow behind—for this is exactly what happened four hundred years after death.—Manchester Guardian.

The city man who journeys thirty miles a day to and from his office would probably be astonished to learn that a single year's travelling would take him as far as Calcutta and that every three years he covers a distance greater than that around the earth at the equator, says Lon-

Another express driver on the L. & N. W. Railway, Thomas Beck, had completed a record of 2,000,000 miles when he retired.

Placing the Whale

Scientists class the whale as a mammal, but the Board of United States general appraisers in New York has ruled that whale meat is lish, for purpose of levying import taxes. The whale meat which was the subject of the discussion was imported at Seattle, and was classified by the customs officers as "fish in tin packages not specially provided for," and duty was levied at the rate of 15 per cent. ad valorem. Importers contend-ed that the merchandise was meat, and in a lengthy decision there was not a single fact to support state-ments that the flesh of the whale, if it is meat, is ordinarily accepted as a meat of commerce.

"Its use as meat," said the board,
"is so limited that we have the right to accept it as conclusive that commerce has not placed it in the domain of meat; therefore we must give it the meaning understood by ordinary people of common intelligence. Nation's Business.

"SIR JOHN MOORE"

On October 10th, six geese came into my place. I went out and called to these six geese, and the old gander anmy place. I went out and called to these six geese, and the old gander answered. He knew me. I got twelve ears of corn, and threw one of them at him. Just as I did so the four baby geese jumped in the air, but he called them and they dropped down. Their I threw more ears of corn, and each time the same thing would happen; he would sound /that low note, and every time he did so the geese would come down. By the time I had thrown the eighthear he had convinced them that all was well, and they did not fly up any more. It was interesting to watch him trying to educate them to take the kernel off the ear, but it was strange to them. He would get a kernel off and drop it down, but it was fully lifteen minutes before he got those goslings to take the corn; when they did start, they cleaned off every kernel of the twelve ears. That told me these young goslings had never seen an ear of corn before, and that they had come all the way from Hudson Eay without a mouthful and had dropped down there. The old gander had led them all the way down.

dropped down there. The old gander had lied them all the way down.

My mother-in-law's daughter and I coaxed the old gander and his five goslings into the coop and she held the door while I went in and clamped a tag on his leg. After I tagged him I took him to the door and threw him outthis same old gander that had been telling the boys and girls to eat the corn and stay there and not he afraid. When I threw the gander out, did he fly to the lake? To know the Caneda goose is to love him forever. You cannot show me any of his actions that one need be a shamed of, not one.

This old gander went out, and when he was about two rods away he turned around and looked back. You can lear him calling for the rest of his family in that little catch pen. He came right back to the door until every one of his family had been liberated; he stood right there and fought for them. We caught him the second time, put a cuff on each leg and named him "Sir John Moore" and we put on the tag this verse of scripture: "No good thing will He withhold from them that wilk uprightly."

They migrated as usual and, on March 17th following, the boys said, "Look, Dad," with the two cuffs on his legs, looking for more corn. Five of his family had returned; he had taken care of them down in the southern states all winter, and brought them back. The last week in April they disappeared and my heart sank when I opened a letter from Fort George, James Bay, and found four of the tags. The letter read: "The indian says that seven geese came into their decoys, and they killed four, of them. Each one had a tag on it." You know just how I would feel, although that is part of the game. To the fellow who wants to shoot, let him say this I am not opposed to a inan shooting a bird or two, but will you not join with us in limiting your bag? Remember, the bird that falls out of the air from our deadly aim gives you and me a little pleasure, but deprives thousands of people of pleasure and recreation. In seeing it alive. Let us consider that: let us think it ove

IMMIGRANTS TOTAL 57,702

Who Came to Canada During Last Fiscal Year.

Stiffer Selection for the Future.

Ottawa Despatch - A total of 57,-702 immigrants to Canada during the last fiscal year is reported in the annual report of the Department of Immigration and Colonization, tabled in the House of Commons to-day. Of these 40,715 came from the United States, 9,914 from the United Kingdon and 1,073 from other auropean countries. This compares with immigration in the preceding year of 71,314 from the United States, 3,178 from the United Kingdom, and $4,853 from Continental countries. The decrease in the immigration from the United States is therefore 43 per cent, over that of the preceding year.

The closing of a number of immigration halls and the retirement of 100 employees whose usefulness was past is reported. The immigration of unaccompanied

British 'hildren is expected to be resumed this year, after being suspended since 1916. Since then 29,634 applications have been received, chiefly through children's homes, for permission to enter Canada.

The congestion of shipping consequent on the return of dependents of quent on the return of dependents of Canadian soldiers from Europe is ex-pected to obtain for another year; 26,-468 dependents have been returned since July, 1917, and it is estimated that between 30,000 and 35,000 remain to be repatriated.

The report states that there has been no relaxaion in regulations gov been no relaxation in regulations governing the admission and rejection of passengers into Canada along the international boundary, and closer attention will be paid in the future to the selection of intending settlers in

SLIPPERS GIVE HORRID DREAMS

Are to Be Probed by Psychical Researchers.

Are Eastern, and Obviously

London Cable-A pair of "haunted" slippers, which give the wearer harrowing dreams, will be investigated by the British Psychist Research Society at an early date.

Mrs. Clara Swinton, a London wo-man bought the slippers, which are crimson and have curled-up toes, at a Caledonia market. They are obvious ly very old.

"The first night I wore them" she says, "I had a horrible dream. I imagined I had committed murder at a bazaar in some Eastern city. I fled in wild panic, and the terror fin-

ENVER PASHA IS SEEKING PEACE

Young Turk Leader is Now in Berlin

And After Terms With the Allies.

London Cable - The Times' Berlin correspondent has received confirmation from a wholly independent source of the presence in Berlin of Enver Pasha, the for-mer Turkish War Minister and leader of the Young Turks. He is credited with a desire to enter into elations with the Entente representatives. There is no indication, how ever, of a reciprocal desire on the Entente's side.

"It would be surprising," says the correspondent, "If the Entente showed a disposition to respond to Enver's advances, seeing that he is a figure in the extradition list presented to Germany. Possibly partly for this reason Enver Pasha is anxoius to leave Germany. He no longer enjoys the popularity which ish Napoleon."

W. FRANCIS, President.

Toronto, 31st January, 1920.

Auditor's Report to the Shareholders.

I have compared the above Buiance Sheet with the books and accounts at the chief office of The Standard Bank of Canada, and the certified returns received from its branches, and after checking the cash and verifying the securities at the chief office and certain of the principal branches on 31st January, 1920. I certify that in my opinion such Balance Sheet exhibits a true and correct view of the state of the Bank affairs according to the best of my information, the explanations given to me, and as shown, by the books of the Bank.

In addition to the examination mentioned, the cash and securities at the chief office and certain of the principal branches were checked and verified by me at another time during the year, and found to be in accord with the books of the Bank.

All information and explanations required have been given to me, and all transactions of the Bank which have come under my notice have, in my opinion, been within the powers of the Bank.

G. T. CLARKSON, F.C.A., of Clarkson, Gordon & Dilworth, Toronto, Canada. Auditor's Report to the Shareholders.
