In concluding their report they state that their experiments convince them that the use of black pepsin will more than double the yield of butter; that the butter is more healthful than the butter churned in the old way, because it contains all the healthful elements of milk, and it will keep longer, ship better, sell better, and give better satisfaction.

This report is certainly well worthy the best consideration and attention of all interested, and it will not cost much trouble or expense to give the matter a thorough test.—Scottish Journal.

KEEPING CABBAGE IN WINTER.

The heads of cabbage which will winter best are these just full formed, not over ripe ones. Those wanted for use during winter can be pulled roots and all and transplanted in shallow earth on the cellar bottom. They must not be set too deep or they will grow; use just enough depth of earth to keep the roots moist and no more, and the cabbage will remain crisp. For spring use burying is considered best. Before the ground freezes hard, dig a trench, place straw in the bottom and put in the cabbageof dirt without adding straw - too much Valencia Raisins. cover will cause them to rot. Some leave the roots exposed, but during a winter where there is alternate freezing and rot may go down into the head.

No ventilation of the pit is needed; keep all air out, and if it freezes solid the cabbage will not be injured. If not wanted until late in spring cover the earth while frozen with a foot of straw and weigh down. Another method very Valencia Layer Raisins. similar and equally good is the following: A pit 8 inches deep, 3½ to 4 feet wide, and of desired length, is first dug, and boards or slabs placed at the bottom. Cabbages are cut and trimmed, and packed in the pit. Frames of 2 by 4 inch scantling are made in the form of a roof - for a pit 15 feet long, three of these are needed then nail fence boards to these frames, making a complete cover. Put this frame over the cabbages in the pit, then cover lightly with straw and four inches of dirt. The ends should be stuffed with straw, which can be removed when cab-

COME people in this town seem utterly incapable of appreciating a generous act, merely because a young man calls on a young lady half a dozen evenings during the week, and occasionally drops in between meals.

There are people mean enough to insinuate that it means something besides anxiety about the health of the sick mother or to see how the kitchen range is working.

But speaking of ranges that reminds me of the large stock I saw up in Chestnuts store of cooking ranges and stoves, judging by the stock on hand we came to the conclusion that firm does not intend to take any back seat in that line. Should you require anything in that line jus give Chestnut & Sons a call they can satisfy mos any one. FREDERICTON, N. B. BLANKETS.

"BE GOOD TO YOURSELF."

"Good-bye! Good-bye!" the driver said. As the coach went off in a whirl (And the coachman bowed his hands

"Be good to yourself, my girl!" Ah, many a fond good-bye I've heard From many an aching heart; And many a friendly farewell word, When strangers come to part.

And I've heard a thousand merry quips. And many a senseless joke, And many a fervent prayer from lips That all a tremble spoke;

And many a bit of good advice In smooth proverbial phrase: And many a wish-of little price-

For health and happy days; But, musing how the human soul (What'er the fates may will) Still measures by its self-control

Its greatest good or ill. Of benedictions, I protest. 'Mid many a shining pearl, I like the mery coachman's best:

We have tune?" our clothes, some more splendid than dies he has only his skin; in the same three or four times, will cause death; so shuffling cards or rattling the dice." pay attention to it M. Danglars. Do you want money? Do you wish me to lend

"What a bad calculator you are!" exclaimed Danglars, calling to his assistance all his philosophy and dissimulation. "I have made money at the same time by speculations which have succeeded. I have made up for the loss of blood by nutrition. I lost a battle in Spain, I have been defeated in Trieste, but my naval army in India will have taken some galleons, and my Mexican pioneers will have discovered some mine." "Very good! very good! But the leak remains, and will reopen at the first loss." "No! for I am only embarked in certainties," replied Danglars, with the air of a montebank sounding out his own praises; "to involve me, three governments must crumble to dust."

"Well! such things have been!" "That there should be a famine!"

"Recollect the seven fat and seven lean "Or, that the sea should become dry, as in the days of Pharaoh; and even then

"I think I may aspire to that honor," said Danglars with a smile, which reminded Monte-Cristo of one of those sickly moons which bad artists are fond of daubing into their pictures of ruins; "but while we are speaking of business," he added, pleased to find an opportunity of changing the subject, "tell me what I am to do for M. Cavalcanti."

of assent. "But that is not all," continued Danglars: "he has opened an account with my house for his son."

"May I ask how much he allows the young man?"

"Five thousand francs per month." "Sixty thousand francs per year. I thought I was right in believing that Cavalcanti to be a stingy fellow. How can a young man live upon 5000 francs per month?"

"But you understand that if the young man should want a few thousands more

"The young man is better," said Dan-"Yes; a little nervous, perhaps, but, upon the whole, he appears tolerable. I was uneasy about him." "Why?" "Because you met him at my house just after his introduction into the world, as they told me. He has been travelling with a very severe tutor, and had never

"Well, and it is that-"

"My opinion is, that all these podestats, these ancient condottieri, for the Cavalcanti have commanded armies and governed provinces, my opinion, I say, is that they have buried their millions in corners, the secret of which they have only transmitted to their eldest sons, who have done the same from generation to generation, and the proof of this is seen in the vellow and dry appearance, like the florins of the republic which, from being constantly gazed upon, have become reflected in them.' "Certainly," said Danglars, "and this is further supported by the fact of their not possessing an inch of land."

"Very little, at least; I know of none which Cavalcanti possesses excepting his palace in Lucca."

"So he has; but I like mine as well." "Certainly; your name is popular, and does honor to the title they intended to adorn you with; but you are too intelligent not to know, that according to a prejudice, too firmly rooted to be exterminated, a nobility which dates back five centuries is worth more than one that
